Under 5(b) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 16\(b\)), which suspends the running of the statute of limitations on any private antitrust claim based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in a government antitrust proceeding "during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter," the running of the statute of limitations on an antitrust claim against a nonparty to the government action is tolled until one year after the entry of a consent decree against the last defendant named in the government action.

ACTIONS §223 > suspension -- antitrust proceedings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

If a government antitrust proceeding commenced on November 24, 1958 is terminated on November 1, 1962, and by virtue of 5(b) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 16\(b\)) the running of the 4-year limitations period of 4B of the Clayton Act (15 USC 15b) is suspended during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter, the private antitrust claimant is entitled to sue before November 1, 1963 for any damage to his business occurring by reason of conspiratorial conduct at any time after November 24, 1954.

PLEADING §134 > tolling -- statute of limitations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

Where a plaintiff has no reason to anticipate that a claim of limitations will be raised against him, he need not set forth his claim of tolling until the limitations claim is raised.

PLEADING §134 > tolling -- statute of limitations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

An antitrust claimant's failure to enter a formal plea that the running of the statute of limitations on his claim was tolled does not preclude him from raising such a claim where the statute of limitations was first pleaded by a posttrial amendment of his opponent's pleadings, the antitrust claimant could not be blamed for reading the trial judge's remarks as a rejection of the limitations defense on the ground of waiver, and he was never unambiguously called upon to submit a formal plea.

PLEADING §1 > nature -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

Pleading is not a game of skill in which one misstep by counsel may be decisive to the outcome.

ACTIONS §223 > suspension -- antitrust proceedings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Under 5(b) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 16\(b\)), which provides for tolling of the statute of limitations in respect of every private antitrust right of action "based in whole or in part on any matter complained of" in a government antitrust proceeding, a private party who sues for a conspiracy in whole or in part against which the government has already brought suit bases his claim in whole or in part upon the matter complained of in the government suit, even if the defendant in the private suit was not named in the government suit as a defendant or as a coconspirator and was not shown to be a coconspirator by the evidence in the government suit, but was proved to be such in the subsequent private suit.

STATUTES §136 > reenactment -- interpretation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

Congressional silence in reenactment of a statute does not necessarily show congressional approval of the lower federal courts' interpretation of the statute.

ACTIONS §223 > suspension -- antitrust proceedings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

The purpose of 5(b) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 16\(b\)), providing for the tolling, by the government's institution of antitrust proceedings, of the statute of limitations on private antitrust actions, is to assist private litigants in utilizing any benefits they might cull from government antitrust actions.

ACTIONS §157 > antitrust claims -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

Damages are recoverable under the federal antitrust acts only if suit therefor is commenced within 4 years after the cause of action accrued, plus any additional number of years during which the statute of limitations was tolled.

ACTIONS §153.5 > antitrust claim -- accrual -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18]

Generally, a private antitrust cause of action accrues and the statute of limitations begins to run when a defendant commits an act which injures a plaintiff's business.

ACTIONS §153.5 > antitrust conspiracy -- accrual of claim -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[19\]](#) [19]

401 U.S. 321, *321; 91 S. Ct. 795, **795; 28 L. Ed. 2d 77, ***77; 1971 U.S. LEXIS 153, ****1

In the context of a continuing conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws, each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants, a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by that act, and as to those damages the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act.

DAMAGES §170 > antitrust conspiracy -- prospective damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[20\]](#) [20]

Where there is a continuing conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws, giving rise to a separate cause of action for damages accrued each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants, each separate cause of action which so accrues entitles a plaintiff to recover not only those damages which he has suffered at the date of accrual but also those which he will suffer in the future from the particular invasion, including what he has suffered during and will predictably suffer after trial.

DAMAGES §170 > future damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[21\]](#) [21]

Even if injury and a cause of action have accrued as of a certain date, future damages which might arise from the conduct sued on are unrecoverable if the fact of their accrual is speculative or their amount and nature are unprovable.

ACTIONS §153.5 > antitrust claim -- accrual -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[22\]](#) [22]

In antitrust and treble damage actions, refusal to award future profits as too speculative is equivalent to holding that no cause of action has yet accrued for any but those damages already suffered; in such instances, the cause of action for future damages, if they ever occur, accrues only on the date they are suffered, and thereafter the plaintiff may sue to recover them at any time within 4 years from the date they were inflicted.

DAMAGES §170 > future damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[23\]](#) [23]

Ordinarily, the recoverability of future damages depends very much on the trial court's informed discretion.

ERROR §1667.5 > findings by appellate court -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[24\]](#) [24]

401 U.S. 321, *321; 91 S. Ct. 795, **795; 28 L. Ed. 2d 77, ***77; 1971 U.S. LEXIS 153, ****1

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States lacks power to make findings, if the trial court has made no such findings, as to whether damages sustained by an antitrust claimant resulted from conspiratorial conduct as of a certain time.

DAMAGES §170 > ACTIONS §153.5 > antitrust claim -- accrual -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[25\]](#) [25]

An antitrust claimant who could not have convinced a District Court sitting in 1954 that it would still be suffering from provable injury more than 5 years later could not recover such damages in 1954; and since it could not recover such damages in 1954, its cause of action did not accrue then for such damages so as to begin the running of the statute of limitations on that claim.

DEBTORS §8 > release -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[26\]](#) [26]

Under the ancient common-law rule, which was grounded upon a formalistic doctrine that a release extinguishes the cause of action to which it relates, a release of one joint tortfeasor released all other parties jointly liable, regardless of the intent of the parties.

DEBTORS §8 > release -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[27\]](#) [27]

The effect of a release upon antitrust coconspirators must be determined in accordance with the intentions of the parties.

EVIDENCE §551 > RELEASE §3 > parol evidence rule -- nonparty -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[28\]](#) [28]

In determining whether the parties to a release intended to release a nonparty, resort may be had to the parties' underlying contract to exchange releases, because the parol evidence rule is operative only as to parties to a document.

DEBTORS §8 > release -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[29\]](#) [29]

A release executed pursuant to a contract for releases "to bind or benefit" the party and "the parent and subsidiaries of the party giving or receiving such release" does not release one who is an antitrust coconspirator with the parties thereto but is not a party to the release or a party's parent or subsidiary.

DAMAGES §7 > double recovery -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[30] [30]

Entirely apart from any release, a plaintiff who has recovered any item of damage from one antitrust coconspirator may not again recover the same item from another coconspirator; that is, the law does not permit a plaintiff to recover double payment.

Syllabus

---

Respondent (HRI) brought a patent infringement suit against petitioner (Zenith) in 1959, and in 1963 Zenith counterclaimed for damages alleging violations of the Sherman and Clayton Acts by HRI's participation in patent pools in Canada, Great Britain, and Australia, restricting Zenith's operations in those countries. A year after evidence was closed, the trial judge entered preliminary findings of fact and conclusions of law favoring Zenith. HRI then moved to amend its reply to the counterclaim and to reopen the record for taking additional evidence. HRI sought to assert defenses of the statute of limitations, and release, claiming that part of the damages awarded Zenith for 1959-1963 were caused by pre-1959 conduct and thus barred by the statute of limitations, or were barred by a 1957 release given by Zenith to certain American companies in settlement of a civil treble-damage action. The trial judge permitted the defenses to be filed [****2] but refused to reopen the record or modify his findings and conclusions concerning the Canadian market. The Court of Appeals reversed on the ground that Zenith had failed to prove injury to its business. This Court reversed with respect to Canada, holding that there was ample evidence of damage in the Canadian market and noting that the trial judge had either rejected the limitations and release defenses on the merits or deemed them waived, 395 U.S. 100. On remand the Court of Appeals held that the trial judge erroneously rejected the defenses on their merits. That court, while doubting that Zenith's claim that the statute of limitations was tolled (by reason of a Government antitrust suit pending from 1958 to 1963 against various companies participating along with HRI in the Canadian patent pool), was properly before it, since no formal plea had been entered, rejected the tolling argument, concluding that tolling takes place only with respect to parties to a Government suit and HRI was not such a party. The court further ordered evidence to determine the extent of reduction of damages by virtue of the defenses it sustained. Held:

1. Under the circumstances [****3] of this case, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion if his rejection of the limitations and release defenses was based on HRI's waiver due to untimeliness of their presentation. Pp. 328-333.
2. The Court of Appeals erroneously rejected Zenith's claim that the statute of limitations was tolled during the pendency of the Government's antitrust suit against the other participants in the patent pool. Pp. 333-338.
  - (a) Where, as here, a plaintiff has no reason to anticipate that a claim of limitations will be raised against him, he need not set forth his claim of tolling until the limitations claim is raised. P. 334.
  - (b) Under 28 U. S. C. § 16 (b) the statute of limitations is tolled against all participants in a conspiracy that is the object of a Government suit, whether or not they are named as defendants or conspirators therein. Pp. 335-338.
3. A plaintiff in an antitrust action may recover damages occurring within the statutory limitation period that are the result of conduct occurring prior to that period if, at the time of the conduct, those damages were speculative, uncertain, or otherwise incapable of proof. Pp. 338-342.
4. The effect of a release [****4] upon coconspirators is to be determined in accordance with the intention of the parties, and here HRI, which was neither a party to the 1957 release nor a parent or subsidiary of a party, is not entitled to the benefit of the release, as the agreement to exchange releases provided expressly that they were "to bind or benefit" the party and "the parent and subsidiaries of the party giving or receiving such release." Pp. 342-348.

Counsel: Thomas C. McConnell argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Philip J. Curtis and Francis J. McConnell.

Victor P. Kayser argued the cause for respondent. With him on the briefs were John T. Chadwell, C. Lee Cook, Jr., Joseph V. Giffin, Robert F. Ward, and Laurence B. Dodds.

Judges: White, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which Burger, C. J., and Black, Douglas, Brennan, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., joined. Harlan, J., filed an opinion concurring in the result, in which Stewart, J., joined, post, p. 349.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[*323] [***83] [**798] MR. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is the second time this marathon litigation has been before us. It began in 1959 as a suit for patent [****5] infringement brought by Hazeltine Research, Inc. (hereafter HRI), against Zenith. In 1963, Zenith filed a counterclaim against HRI alleging violations of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, as amended, 26 Stat. 209, 38 Stat. 731, 737, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, 15, 26, by reason of HRI's participation in patent pools in Canada, Great Britain, and Australia. These pools, it was claimed, operated to exclude Zenith from those foreign markets by refusing to grant patent licenses to American manufacturers seeking to export American-made radio and television sets. Trial was had without a jury. Zenith submitted telling evidence as to the existence and operation of the conspiracy and HRI's participation in each of the markets. Zenith demonstrated the fact and extent of its business injury by estimating the percentage of the foreign market it would have enjoyed absent the conspiracy during the four years prior to 1963 and showing the portion it actually enjoyed during those years. The difference between the profits it actually made and the profits it would have made in a free market during the four years was the measure of the damages demanded.

[**799] A year after evidence [****6] was closed, the trial judge entered preliminary findings of fact and conclusions of law favoring Zenith. He concluded that Zenith had been damaged $ 6,297,371 in the Canadian market, $ 9,248,926 in the English, and $ 692,555 in the Australian, a total of $ 16,238,872 before trebling. HRI then moved to amend its reply to Zenith's counterclaim and to reopen the record for the taking of additional evidence. The motion sought leave to assert the defenses of limitations and release; the claim was that part or all of the damages [*324] awarded to Zenith for the four years 1959-1963 were caused by pre-1959 [***84] conduct and to that extent were barred by the statute of limitations, 15 U. S. C. § 15b, or by a release given by Zenith to certain American companies in 1957. HRI also sought leave to prove that until specified dates Zenith's exclusion from the English and Australian markets had been due, not to the operation of the alleged patent pools, but to such matters as official embargoes, tariffs, and technical factors. The trial judge agreed to take additional evidence with respect to England and Australia but refused to reopen the record for other [***7] purposes or to modify his findings and conclusions concerning the Canadian market. He did, however, permit the limitations and release defenses to be filed and, after hearing evidence with respect to the English and Australian markets, reduced his award of damages with respect to them. 239 F.Supp. 51 \(1965\).

In the Court of Appeals, HRI asserted error on various grounds. Putting aside other issues, the Court of Appeals reversed on the ground that Zenith had failed to prove injury to its business in any of the three markets. 388 F.2d 25 \(1967\). We, in turn, affirmed the judgment denying recovery for the alleged injury in the English and Australian markets, but reversed with respect to Canada, holding that Zenith's evidence amply demonstrated the fact of damage in the Canadian market. 395 U.S. 100 \(1969\). We also noted that some portion of the damages proved and awarded resulted from conspiratorial conduct prior to 1959 and that the trial judge had either rejected on the merits the defenses of limitations and release or deemed them waived. Id., at 117 n. 13. We went no further, however, with respect to the issues surrounding [****8] either defense.

The Court of Appeals on remand accepted as duly proved that absent the conspiracy Zenith would have [*325] enjoyed a 16% share of the Canadian market and that the difference between 16% and the share it actually had was the measure of the total damages inflicted by the conspiracy during the four years 1959-1963. But recognizing that some portion of Zenith's business injury resulted from conspiratorial conduct prior to 1959, the court went on to hold that the trial judge had not rejected the defenses of limitations and release on waiver grounds but had erroneously rejected them on their merits, and further that Zenith's claim that the statute had been tolled had been waived by Zenith and was in any event unsound. Finally, the court ordered further evidence to be taken in the trial court to determine the extent to which, if any, the damages awarded by the trial court should be reduced by virtue of the defenses sustained in the Court of Appeals. 418 F.2d 21 (1969).

We granted certiorari. 397 U.S. 979 (1970). Zenith's principal contentions here are that the trial judge properly deemed the limitations and release defenses to have been [****9] waived, that if not waived, the defenses were without merit, and that in any event the statute of limitations was tolled by the pendency of a Government suit against HRI's coconspirators. We need not decide whether the trial judge held the defenses waived or rejected them on the merits, since in our view, either course would have been legally sound. We therefore reverse the Court of Appeals.

[**800] I

We deal first with Zenith's claim that the defenses of limitations and [***85] release were properly held by the trial court to have been waived. To do so it is essential briefly to outline the course of the trial and evidence. Zenith's 1963 counterclaim alleged the existence of the conspiracy and the impact on its business and prayed for damages and injunctive relief, but made no allegations as to the time period as to which damages were sought. [*326] These latter matters became clear during the pretrial proceedings and during the course of the trial itself. In its pretrial brief and opening statement Zenith asserted that the illegal pools had existed for many years; that Zenith had conspiratorially been refused a license to import into Canada; and that litigation had [****10] been threatened and potential distributors discouraged. The conspiracy was said to have been not only a longstanding but also a worldwide one, against certain members of which the United States Government had brought an antitrust action and Zenith itself had recovered $ 10,000,000 in 1957 in settlement of a civil treble-damage action. But Zenith disclosed that, although the conspiracy had been worldwide and long existing, it would seek to recover damages for restraint of its trade in the three foreign markets only during the "four-year statutory damage period."

At trial Zenith introduced voluminous evidence with respect to the operations of the conspiracy and its impact on its business. The testimony with respect to Canada was that in a free market Zenith would have had the same share of the Canadian market as it enjoyed in the United States and that the existence and operation of the conspiracy had restricted its Canadian business. Specifically, Zenith claimed that in the four years after June 1, 1959, it had lost profits aggregating some $ 6,300,000 as the result of conspiratorial conduct by the Canadian patent pool during and prior to that period. Counsel made Zenith's position [****11] perfectly clear in his summation and post-trial brief: except for the Canadian pool, Zenith would have had a 16% share of the Canadian market, but as a result of the pool it had only a 3% share. Zenith thus argued that it was entitled to the full difference between 16% and 3% for the entire four-year period. It also made similar claims with respect to the English and Australian markets.

[*327] LEdHN[1] [1]Although Zenith's counterclaim on its face sought to recover all damages suffered in past years without restriction,<sup>1</sup> [****13] HRI pleaded neither limitations nor release in its reply to the counterclaim.

---

<sup>1</sup> It is true that in its motion for leave to file its counterclaim, Zenith stated that the counterclaim arose out of conduct of HRI "occurring since the filing of the answer" in 1960. On the basis of this statement, HRI argues that Zenith precluded itself from recovering damages resulting from pre-answer conduct. This argument is not persuasive. The counterclaim itself was not so limited, and Zenith made its position on damages absolutely clear by the opening of trial. HRI was thereby given both ample notice of the substance of Zenith's claim and ample opportunity to respond, but made no effort during trial to do so.

Zenith instead revealed its own awareness of the statutory limitation period during the trial and expressly restricted its proof to damages suffered during the statutory four-year damage period. However, Zenith sought to recover all damages suffered during those years even though it was unmistakably clear that some of this damage had been [***86] caused by conspiratorial action prior to 1959. Yet, at no time during the trial did HRI suggest that the statute barred Zenith's recovery of any part of its total [****12] damage suffered during that period. HRI did challenge Zenith's claim that it would have had a 16% share of the Canadian market on the ground that the evidence was speculative -- indeed, that it was so speculative that Zenith had failed entirely to sustain its burden of proving damage, but it interposed no objection to Zenith's demand for all damages sustained during the four-year period, no [**801] matter when the operative acts had occurred. Not until one year after trial, when it learned that the judge's findings and conclusions were unfavorable, did HRI assert that part of the post-1959 damage was the result of pre-1959 conduct and was barred either by the statute of limitations or by the [*328] release given by Zenith in 1957 in settlement of its suit against other American companies.<sup>2</sup>

Other than a general attack on the sufficiency of Zenith's proof of damages and a demand that the matter be relitigated, HRI's post-trial motion had three principal branches. First, it sought leave to file the defense of limitations. The motion in effect asserted that the conspiracy, even if it had continued during the damage period, had committed no damaging overt acts during that period, all of Zenith's damage being caused by pre-1959 operations of the pool. HRI asserted [****14] as a legal matter that the statute of limitations would therefore bar Zenith's entire claim on the record then before the Court. Second, HRI sought to interpose the defense of release. The argument was that some or all of Zenith's post-1959 damages were the consequence of pool activity occurring prior to the date of a 1957 release given to American companies which were coconspirators of HRI in the Canadian pool. That release, it was claimed, also released HRI. Third, HRI sought to reopen the record to show that until well into the four-year damage period Zenith's inability to enter the English and Australian markets was due to official embargoes, other governmental policies and technical difficulties rather than to the operations of the patent pools.

LEdHN21 [2]The motion was thoroughly and extensively argued. With respect to the defenses of limitations and release, [*329] the trial court's ruling, after Zenith objected to them as being "too late," was expressed as follows: "Well, the record will show that leave is given to file them at this time, after proofs are closed and after findings have been made. [****15]"<sup>3</sup> This ruling was immediately followed by the court's refusal either to reopen the record for additional evidence with respect to Canada or [***87] to modify its judgment in any way as to that market. The record as to England and Australia, however, was reopened for further proof as to the operative forces other than the patent pools which in fact had prevented importation of Zenith's products into those markets.

Arguably, since the trial judge permitted the limitations and release defenses to be filed but then rejected them by refusing to amend the judgment with respect to Canada, rejection was necessarily on the merits. But the record also yields to the construction that the two defenses [****16] were overruled because a just and sensible ruling on their merits would have required a reopening of the record for a virtual retrial of the issue of damages, an eventuality which the trial court deemed unwarranted in view of HRI's delinquency in raising the defenses. If this was the course the trial judge took, we would not disturb his judgment.

At the time of the trial Rule 8 (c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure HN1[<sup>1</sup>] required that "in pleading to a [**802] preceding pleading, a party shall set forth affirmatively . . . release . . . statute of limitations . . . and any other matter constituting an avoidance or affirmative defense." Rule 12 (h) at that time provided that HN2[<sup>2</sup>] "[a] party waives all defenses and objections which he does not present" [*330] either by motion or in answer or reply. Based on these rules, Zenith claims that the trial court was required to, and did, hold the two defenses waived.

<sup>2</sup> Zenith similarly limited its claim for damages in the English and Australian markets to the years 1959-1963 and similarly sought to recover all damages suffered in those years without regard to the date of the conduct causing the damages. HRI again did not plead or argue that Zenith was not entitled to its full damages during those years in the two markets, until it moved after trial to set aside the judge's findings and to reopen the proof so that it could show that Zenith's exclusion from the markets prior to 1959 was a consequence of governmental restrictions and technical difficulties rather than of pool conduct.

<sup>3</sup> The District Court gave HRI five days to file its amendments to the pleadings "nunc pro tunc as of" the date of the argument on HRI's motion. As a result, the defenses were technically filed prior to the entry of judgment and the taking of appeal, while the District Court still retained jurisdiction over the suit.

HRI contends that the District Court should have granted it leave to amend its answer [****17] under HN3↑ Rule 15 (a), which provides that such "leave shall be freely given when justice so requires." HRI's position is that the evidence in the record at the time it offered its defenses showed that all of the acts causing damage during the 1959-1963 period had occurred prior to 1959; from this it follows that Zenith had failed, according to HRI, to offer any evidence upon which an award of damages could have been sustained. In the alternative, HRI argues that the record showed that it had been released from all liability for damages flowing from pre-1957 acts.<sup>4</sup> In either case, HRI urges that the damage award be set aside.

[****18] [LEdHN\[3\]](#)↑ [3][LEdHN\[4\]](#)↑ [4][LEdHN\[5\]](#)↑ [5]It is settled that HN4↑ the grant of leave to amend the pleadings pursuant to Rule 15 (a) is within the discretion of the trial court. Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182 \(1962\) (dictum). In a matter as substantial and complex as this one, where HRI claimed it had been misled or at the very least asked to be relieved of mistake or oversight, it might have been within the discretion of the trial judge to have permitted HRI to amend its pleadings to include therein the defenses of limitations and release. But, in deciding whether to permit such an amendment, [*331] the trial court was required to take into account any prejudice that [***88] Zenith would have suffered as a result, see Kanelos v. Kettler, 132 U. S. App. D. C. 133, 136-137, n. 15, 406 F.2d 951, 954-955, n. 15 \(1968\); United States v. 47 Bottles, More or Less, 320 F.2d 564, 573-574 \(CA3 1963\); [****19] Caddy-Imler Creations v. Caddy, 299 F.2d 79, 84 \(CA9 1962\); 3 J. Moore, Federal Practice para. 15.08 [4] (2d ed. 1968), and here the prejudice to Zenith would have been substantial. Zenith's theory that all of its damages suffered during the four-year period were legally recoverable had been made quite clear during the trial, and Zenith had proved up its damages in accordance with that theory. Meanwhile HRI had neither pleaded its defenses, objected to Zenith's evidence, nor otherwise hinted that post-1959 damages caused by pre-1959 conduct were for any reason barred until long after the record had been closed. To have then sustained HRI's defenses would have been to deny Zenith the opportunity to prove its recoverable damages -- a denial that hardly comports with the letter or the spirit of Rule 15 (a). At the very minimum, if the defense of limitations or release was to be entertained and deemed to bar that part of Zenith's damages resulting from the lingering consequences of past acts, Zenith would have been entitled to perfect its proof as to damage resulting from pool operations during the four-year period, as well as to prove, if it could, what damages [****20] it might have suffered in the future from those acts. To have permitted Zenith to perfect its proof would, of course, have required reopening of the record and a virtual retrial of the issue of damages.

[LEdHN\[6\]](#)↑ [6][LEdHN\[7\]](#)↑ [7]The trial judge here might have permitted reopening. Like a motion [**803] under Rule 15 (a) to amend the pleadings, HN5↑ a motion to reopen to submit additional proof is addressed to his sound discretion. See, e. g., Swartz v. New York Central R. Co., 323 F.2d 713, 714 \(CA7 1963\); [*332] Locklin v. Switzer Bros., 299 F.2d 160, 169-170 \(CA9 1961\); Gas Ridge, Inc. v. Suburban Agricultural Properties, Inc., 150 F.2d 363, 366, rehearing denied, 150 F.2d 1020 (CA5 1945); 6A J. Moore, Federal Practice para. 59.04 [13] (2d ed. 1966). But the record is clear that he refused to reopen with respect to damages in the Canadian market or otherwise to modify the [****21] Canadian judgment, and that he thereby rejected HRI's proffered defenses. Although we are not privy to his unexpressed thinking and although his refusal can be read as a rejection of the defenses on the merits, it can also be read as a holding that the defenses were, in effect, waived by the untimeliness of their presentation and hence that the pleadings would not be amended, except as a matter of form, and that the trial would not be reopened.

---

<sup>4</sup> At the time HRI raised its defenses, the release on which it relied was not part of the record, although the record did contain a contract between the parties to the release in which they agreed to exchange releases, and frequent reference had been made during trial to the settlement of which the exchange of releases was a part. The record also belied HRI's claim that the conspiracy had been dormant during 1959-1963, for it contained a letter written in 1962 from the pool to a distributor of Motorola products in Canada threatening infringement suits if he continued to distribute American-made products of Motorola.

LEdHN[8] [8] On the assumption that the trial court did hold the defenses of limitations and release to have been waived, we cannot say that the judge abused his discretion or stressed too much the value of avoiding reopening a trial to litigate matters that HRI had had an opportunity, but neglected, to litigate. Nor is it irrelevant in this connection that HRI's central claims during trial were that there was no conspiracy and that Zenith had suffered no damage at all. The defenses that HRI set out in the post-trial motions were in a sense inconsistent with these trial claims, for the defenses conceded, albeit only arguendo, that a conspiracy did exist and that Zenith, [****22] absent the conspiracy, would have controlled a sizable share of the Canadian market. HRI's post-trial argument, in effect, was one of confession and avoidance showing that [***89] the conspiracy had been so successful in the pre-1959 period that it could be relatively or entirely quiescent from 1959 to 1963 and nonetheless cause Zenith substantial damages in those years. It is quite possible that HRI knew exactly what it was doing in not presenting this argument during trial and that it realized a [*333] need to present it only after it learned that its original arguments had not induced the court to hold in its favor.

Whatever HRI's reasons for not offering its limitations and release defenses during trial, however, the trial court would not have erred in concluding that they were waived.

II

Assuming, however, that the District Judge rejected the defenses of limitations and release on the merits, as the Court of Appeals held, we confront the issue of whether it is consistent with the controlling limitations statute, 15 U. S. C. § 15b, to permit Zenith to recover all of the damages it suffered during the years 1959-1963 even though some undetermined [****23] portion of those damages was the proximate result of conduct occurring more than four years prior to the filing of the counterclaim. HRI contends, and the Court of Appeals held, that the statute permits the recovery only of those damages caused by overt acts committed during the four-year period. We do not agree.

A

LEdHN[9] [9] LEdHN[10] [10] We turn first to Zenith's argument that, even if the statute of limitations were to be held applicable in this case, the statute was nonetheless tolled from November 24, 1958, to November 1, 1963,<sup>5</sup> pursuant to 15 U. S. C. § 16 (b) [**804] by reason of a Government antitrust action brought against various American companies [*334] participating along with HRI in the Canadian pool.<sup>6</sup> If Zenith is correct in this respect and the running of the statute of limitations was suspended during the pendency of the Government suit, then it was entitled at the very least to sue in 1963 for any damage to its business occurring by reason of conspiratorial conduct at any time after November 24, 1954. [****24]

LEdHN[11] [11] LEdHN[12] [12] [****25] LEdHN[13] [13] The Court of Appeals rejected the tolling argument. It had some doubt whether tolling was properly before it since Zenith had never entered a formal plea of tolling, and HRI now contends that Zenith's failure to so plead in its original complaint bars it forever from raising such a claim. This contention is without merit. The cases on which HRI relies themselves establish that HN6 where, as here, a plaintiff has no reason to anticipate that a claim of limitations will be raised against him, he need not set forth his claim of tolling until the limitations claim is raised. See National & Transcontinental Trading Corp. v. International General Elec. Co., 15 F.R.D. 379, 382 (SDNY 1954). Cf. Moviecolor Ltd. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 288 F.2d 80, 88 (CA2 1961). Nor should Zenith be penalized for failing to enter a formal plea of tolling in response to HRI's belated limitations plea, for Zenith can hardly be blamed for reading the remarks of the trial judge as a rejection [****26] of the limitations defense on the ground of waiver. Zenith was never unambiguously called upon to submit a formal plea; to hold under such circumstances that want of a submission amounts to a waiver would be to treat pleading as "a game of skill in [*335] which one misstep by counsel may be decisive to the outcome" -- an approach we have consistently rejected. See Foman v. Davis, supra, at 181-182; United States v. Hougham, 364 U.S. 310, 317 (1960); Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 48 (1957). The interests of justice thus clearly require that if HRI's limitations defense is to be considered on its merits, Zenith's claim of tolling must be dealt with as well.

<sup>5</sup> On November 1, 1962, a consent decree was entered against the last defendant named in the Government action, which had been commenced on November 24, 1958, thereby terminating that action as to all parties. See Barnett v. Warner Bros. Pictures Dist. Corp., 112 F.Supp. 5, 7 (ND Ill. 1953). For purposes of the present suit against HRI, which was not a party to the Government action, the running of the statute of limitations was thus tolled until November 1, 1963 -- one year after the entry of the consent decree. See 15 U. S. C. § 16 (b).

<sup>6</sup> The Government suit was United States v. General Electric Co., Civil Action No. 140-157, which was brought in the Southern District of New York. The complaint and the final judgment were introduced in evidence in the present proceedings as Plaintiff's Exhibits Nos. 44-47.

LEdHN[14] [14] The Court of Appeals did, in fact, consider the tolling issue on the merits, but concluded that tolling takes place only with respect to parties to a Government suit and hence that tolling did not occur here because HRI was not such a party. This was error. HNT [1] The language of 15 U. S. C. § 16 [****27] (b) expressly provides for tolling of the statute of limitations "in respect of every private right of action . . . based in whole or in part on any matter complained of" in the proceeding instituted by the Government. (Emphasis added.) HN8 [1] On the face of this section, a private party who brings suit for a conspiracy against which the Government has already brought suit is undeniably basing its claim in whole or in part upon the matter complained of in the Government suit, even if the defendant named in the private suit was named neither as a defendant nor as a coconspirator by the Government. If, that is, the Government sues only certain conspirators, but also alleges and proves during trial that others were conspirators, the fact of the tolling of the statute against those so proved but not sued can hardly be denied. Nor could tolling be denied if a defendant had never been shown to be a conspirator by the evidence offered in the earlier Government suit, but then had been proved to be such in the subsequent private suit.

[**805] LEdHN[15] [15] [****28] LEdHN[16] [16] We find no indication in the legislative history of § 16 (b) that Congress intended it to toll the statute of limitations only against parties defendant in the Government [*336] action. Nor is anything cited to us in this respect.<sup>7</sup> On the contrary, as we have said earlier, Congress, [***91] believing that "private antitrust litigation is one of the surest weapons for effective enforcement of the antitrust laws," enacted § 16 (b) in order to "assist private litigants in utilizing any benefits they might cull from government antitrust actions." Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co., 381 U.S. 311, 317-318 (1965). We see nothing destructive of Congress' purpose in holding that § 16 (b) tolls the statute of limitations against all participants in a conspiracy which is the object of a Government suit, whether or not they are named as defendants or conspirators therein; indeed, to so hold materially furthers congressional policy by permitting private litigants to await the outcome of Government suits and use the benefits accruing therefrom.

[****29] It is true that the lower federal courts have until recently confined the operation of the section and held it applicable only to defendants named in the Government suit. See, e. g., Sun Theatre Corp. v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 213 F.2d 284, 290-292 (CA7 1954); Momand v. Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., 172 F.2d 37, [*337] 48 (CA1 1948). But these cases and others like them, as we have indicated, fly in the face of the language of the statute, are antithetical to its aims, and cannot be squared with our recent decisions in Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co., supra, and Leh v. General Petroleum Corp., 382 U.S. 54 (1965). Minnesota Mining held that § 16 (b)'s tolling provision was not confined to those situations in which a Government decree, by virtue of § 16 (a), would be prima facie evidence against defendants in a private suit who had also been named as defendants in a Government suit. It rejected the view that §§ 16 (a) and 16 (b) are wholly interdependent and coextensive; on the contrary, § 16 (b) was given its full sweep. Leh, following Minnesota [****30] Mining, held that a private litigant was entitled to the benefit of tolling although the conspiracy he alleged covered a different time, named additional parties, and excluded some parties named in the prior Government suit. While Leh did not explicitly decide whether the statute would be tolled when the sole defendant in a private action covering the same ground as an earlier Government suit had been named neither as a conspirator nor as a party in the Government suit, we do not believe that such a case could be distinguished from Leh. Cases in the lower federal courts since Leh have also come to this conclusion. See New Jersey v. Morton Salt Co., 387 F.2d 94 (CA3 1967); Vermont v. Cayuga Rock Salt Co., 276 F.Supp. 970 (Me. 1967); Michigan v. Morton Salt Co., 259 F.Supp. 35, 53-56 (Minn. 1966), aff'd sub nom. Hardy Salt Co. v. Illinois, 377 F.2d 768 (CA8 1967).

---

<sup>7</sup> HRI does suggest that the 1955 amendment of § 16, see 69 Stat. 283, must be understood as an indication of Congress' approval of earlier cases in the lower federal courts confining the operation of § 16 (b) to parties defendant in Government suits. See text infra, this page and 337. We are unpersuaded. HRI can point to no direct evidence that Congress ever considered the issue now before us or voiced any views upon it; on the contrary, it appears that Congress left the matter for authoritative resolution in the courts. The true thrust of HRI's argument is that we must find congressional approval of the earlier cases in Congress' silence when it re-enacted the statute. We did not take such an approach, however, in Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co., 381 U.S. 311 (1965), and Leh v. General Petroleum Corp., 382 U.S. 54 (1965), and we do not do so here.

We therefore hold that Zenith, although suing HRI, which was named neither as a party nor as a coconspirator in the Government suit, is not barred [**806] from obtaining the benefits of the tolling statute, since it [****31] is undisputed that the conspiracy in which HRI participated was at [*338] least in part the same conspiracy as was the object of the Government's suit. From this it follows that the only issue still remaining upon HRI's limitations claim is whether Zenith can recover in its 1963 suit for damages suffered after June 1, 1959, as the consequence of pre-1954 conspiratorial conduct.

[***92] B

LEdHN[17] ↑ [17] LEdHN[18] ↑ [18] LEdHN[19] ↑ [19] LEdHN[20] ↑ [20] LEdHN[21] ↑ [21] The basic rule is that HN9 ↑ damages are recoverable under the federal antitrust acts only if suit therefor is "commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued," 15 U. S. C. § 15b, plus any additional number of years during which the statute of limitations was tolled. [****32] Generally, HN10 ↑ a cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business. See, e. g., Suckow Borax Mines Consolidated, Inc. v. Borax Consolidated, Ltd., 185 F.2d 196, 208 (CA9 1950); Bluefields S. S. Co. v. United Fruit Co., 243 F. 1, 20 (CA3 1917), appeal dismissed, 248 U.S. 595 (1919); 2361 State Corp. v. Sealy, Inc., 263 F.Supp. 845, 850 (ND Ill. 1967). This much is plain from the treble-damage statute itself. 15 U. S. C. § 15. In the context of a continuing conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws, such as the conspiracy in the instant case, this has usually been understood to mean that each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by that act and that, as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act. See, e. g., Crummer Co. v. Du Pont, 223 F.2d 238, 247-248 (CA5 1955); Delta Theaters, Inc. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 158 F.Supp. 644, 648 (ED La. 1958); [****33] Momand v. Universal Film Exchange, Inc., 43 F.Supp. 996, 1006 (Mass. 1942), aff'd, 172 F.2d, at 49. However, each separate cause of action that so accrues entitles a plaintiff to [*339] recover not only those damages which he has suffered at the date of accrual, but also those which he will suffer in the future from the particular invasion, including what he has suffered during and will predictably suffer after trial. See, e. g., Farbenfabriken Bayer, A. G. v. Sterling Drug, Inc., 153 F.Supp. 589, 593 (NJ 1957); Momand v. Universal Film Exchange, Inc., supra, at 1006. Cf. Lawlor v. Loewe, 235 U.S. 522, 536 (1915). Thus, HN11 ↑ if a plaintiff feels the adverse impact of an antitrust conspiracy on a particular date, a cause of action immediately accrues to him to recover all damages incurred by that date and all provable damages that will flow in the future from the acts of the conspirators on that date. To recover those damages, he must sue within the requisite number of years from the [****34] accrual of the action. On the other hand, it is hornbook law, in antitrust actions as in others, that even if injury and a cause of action have accrued as of a certain date, future damages that might arise from the conduct sued on are unrecoverable if the fact of their accrual is speculative or their amount and nature unprovable. Moe Light, Inc. v. Foreman, 238 F.2d 817, 818 (CA6 1956); Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. De Clow, 124 F. 142, 143 (CA8 1903); Culley v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 244 F.Supp. 710, 715 (Del. 1965). Cf. Howard v. Stillwell & Bierce Mfg. Co., 139 U.S. 199, 206 (1891).

[LEdHN\[22\]](#) [22] HN12 In antitrust and treble-damage actions, refusal to award future profits as too speculative is equivalent to holding that no cause of action has yet accrued for any but those damages already suffered. In these instances, the cause of action for future damages, if they ever occur, will accrue only on the date they are suffered; thereafter [****35] the plaintiff may sue to recover them at any time within four years from the date they were inflicted. Cf. Schenley Industries v. N. J. Wine & Spirit [***93] Wholesalers Assn., 272 F.Supp. 872, 887-888 [*807] (NJ 1967); [*340] Delta Theaters, Inc. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., supra, at 648-649. Otherwise future damages that could not be proved within four years of the conduct from which they flowed would be forever incapable of recovery, contrary to the congressional purpose that private actions serve "as a bulwark of antitrust enforcement," Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139 (1968), and that the antitrust laws fully "protect the victims of the forbidden practices as well as the public," Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 454 (1957). See also Lawlor v. National Screen Serv. Corp., 349 U.S. 322, 329 (1955).

As we have already seen, acceptance of Zenith's tolling argument requires further consideration only of that portion of Zenith's damages suffered during the 1959-1963 period as a result of pre-1954 [****36] conduct of the conspiracy. We must now determine whether Zenith could have recovered those damages if it had brought suit for them in 1954, for if it could not, it would follow for the reasons stated above that it must be permitted to recover them now.

[LEdHN\[23\]](#) [23] [LEdHN\[24\]](#) [24] We do not, of course, have the thinking of the district judge on this issue, and ordinarily the matter of future damages would very much depend on his informed discretion.<sup>8</sup> But we are reluctant to return any issue in this litigation for another round of proceedings in the trial or appellate courts if we can fairly dispose of it [*341] at this juncture. After due consideration, we have determined that in the circumstances of this case, § 15b was no bar to any part of the damages awarded Zenith by the District Court insofar as the Canadian market was concerned.

[****37] Let us assume that Zenith in a treble-damage suit brought in 1954 had presented evidence similar to that which it presented in the instant suit, indicating that it would have had the same share of a free Canadian market as it did in the United States market. Assume also that it had presented evidence to the effect that, starting in 1954, when it had no sales in the Canadian market, it would have taken 10 years to reach that share in a free market. Given such evidence, the question would be whether a district court would have permitted Zenith to recover estimated profits upon 90% of its share of the hypothetical free Canadian market for its anticipated losses in 1955, 80% for its losses in 1956, and 70% for its 1957 losses, and so on.<sup>9</sup>

[****38] [LEdHN\[25\]](#) [25] We [**94] find it difficult to believe that Zenith could have convinced a District Court sitting in 1954 that, although it contemplated a free market from that time forward, it would still be suffering from provable injury more than five years later. It is true that the damages awarded Zenith in this case were based on estimates of its volume of business in a free market. But those estimates were for a past period of time; the size and conditions in the market were known [*808] and the competitive [*342] forces were identifiable. Zenith's performance during the same period and under comparable conditions was a matter of record. It is quite another matter to predict market conditions and the performance of one competitor in that market five to 10 years hence. The proceedings before us put in stark relief the difficulties of proving the fact and the amount of damage during a

---

<sup>8</sup> If the trial judge had passed upon the question, he well might have concluded that none of the damages sustained by Zenith in the Canadian market between 1959 and 1963 was a consequence of pre-1954 conspiratorial conduct. The trial judge in effect found that, as to England and Australia, the effects of conspiratorial conduct were no longer felt by Zenith more than four years after the conduct had occurred, and there is no reason to infer that his findings would have been different in regard to Canada either in the present suit or in a suit brought in 1954. But the trial judge made no such findings as to Canada, and we lack power to make them for him.

<sup>9</sup> Of course, these percentages are purely hypothetical. They rest upon an assumption that, if Zenith had sued in 1954 for future damages in the Canadian market and had claimed that it would take 10 years for it to attain its full share of that market under free competitive conditions, then it would have proved that in 1955 it would have reached 10% of that share, in 1956, 20%, and so on. In each year it would have recovered damages for that percentage of the share which it had not yet attained.

period in the immediate past. Claims of future damage would have probably gotten short shrift in the lower courts if they had been pressed in this case. In our view, this is the very treatment such claims would [****39] have received had Zenith sued in 1954, and claimed damages for the decade of the sixties. The short of it is that Zenith asserted its cause of action for 1959-1963 damages well within the period during which § 15b entitled it to sue.

III

Entirely apart from its statute of limitations defense, HRI claims that whatever part of the 1959-1963 damages was caused by conspiratorial conduct prior to 1957 is unrecoverable because of a release executed in that year by Zenith in settlement of an antitrust action against other coconspirators in the Canadian patent pool.<sup>10</sup> The [*343] release extended not only to past but also to all future damages arising out of pre-1957 conspiratorial acts. However, while it was a coconspirator in the Canadian pool, HRI was neither a party to the 1957 suit nor a party to the [***95] release, nor was it named in the release as one of the parties affected thereby. Nonetheless, the Court of Appeals held HRI entitled to the benefits of the release on the ground that Zenith had failed expressly to reserve any rights against HRI, and it therefore remanded the case to the District Court with directions to exclude from the judgment any damages caused by [****40] pre-1957 conduct. We again conclude that the Court of Appeals erred.

[****41] [LEdHN\[26\]](#) [26]Three rules have developed to deal with the question whether the release of one joint tortfeasor releases other tortfeasors who are not parties to or named in the release. The ancient common-law rule, which was grounded upon a formalistic doctrine that a release extinguished the cause of action to which it related, was that a release of one joint tortfeasor released all other parties jointly liable, regardless of the intent of the parties. See, e. g., Western Express Co. v. Smeltzer, 88 F.2d 94, 95 (*3441) (CA6 1937); American Ry. Express [**809] Co. v. Stone, 27 F.2d 8, 10 (CA1 1928); Barrett v. Third Avenue R. Co., 45 N. Y. 628, 635 (1871); Ellis v. Esson, 50 Wis. 138, 146, 6 N. W. 518, 519 (1880). While this Court has referred to this rule in cases where the rights of the litigants were controlled by state or federal common law, see Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. Wagner, 239 U.S. 452, 456-457 (1915); United States v. Price, 9 How. 83, 92 (1850); Hunt v. Rhodes, 1 Pet. 1, 16 (1828); [****42] we are cited to no case where we have applied the rule to a statutory cause of action created under federal law. Indeed, we have expressly repudiated the rule. See Aro Mfg. Co. v. Convertible Top Co., 377

---

<sup>10</sup> The text of the release was as follows:

"To All To Whom These Presents Shall Come Or May Concern, Greeting: Know ye, That Zenith Radio Corporation and The Rauland Corporation, each a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, for and in consideration of the sum of One Dollar ($ 1.00) lawful money of the United States of America and other good and valuable consideration, to them in hand paid by * . . . . . , the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, have each remised, released and forever discharged, and by these presents does each for itself and its respective subsidiaries, successors and assigns remise, release and forever discharge the said * . . . . . and its subsidiaries and their respective successors and assigns of and from all, and all manner of action and actions, cause and causes of action, suits, debts, dues, sums of money, accounts, reckoning, bonds, bills, specialities, covenants, contracts, controversies, agreements, promises, variances, trespasses, damages, judgments, extents, executions, claims and demands whatsoever, in law, in admiralty, or in equity, which against said * . . . . . , its subsidiaries and their respective successors and assigns, said Zenith Radio Corporation and The Rauland Corporation and each of them ever had, now has or which each of them and their respective subsidiaries, successors and assigns, hereafter can, shall or may have for, upon or by reason of any matter, cause or thing whatsoever from the beginning of the world to the day of the date of these presents, not including however, claims, if any, for unpaid balances on any goods sold and delivered.

*Insert

"Radio Corporation of America,' or

"General Electric Company,' or

"Western Electric Company.'

"This release may not be changed orally."

U.S. 476, 501 (1964). Cf. Birdsell v. Shaliol, 112 U.S. 485, 489 (1884). Moreover, in the lower federal courts, causes of action based upon federal statutes have generally been governed by one of the other two rules. The first of these rules provides that, although a release of one coconspirator normally releases all others, it will not have such an effect if a plaintiff expressly reserves his rights against the others. This rule, which has been adopted with some variation by statute in 21 States,<sup>11</sup> [***96] by judicial decision in others, see, e. g., McKenna [*345] v. Austin, 77 U.S. App. D. C. 228, 233-234, 134 F.2d 659, 664-665 (1943) (announcing D. C. law); Riley v. Industrial Finance Service Co., 157 Tex. 306, 311, 302 S. W. 2d 652, 655 (1957); and by the First Restatement, see Restatement, Torts § 885 (1) (1939); has been applied in a number of antitrust cases. See, e. g., [****43] Miami Parts & Spring, Inc. v. Champion Spark Plug Co., 402 F.2d 83, 84 (CA5 1968); Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. v. Winchester Drive-In Theatre, Inc., 351 F.2d 925, 931 (CA9 1965); Dura Electric Lamp Co. v. Westinghouse Electric Corp., 249 F.2d 5, 6-7 (CA3 1957). It was this rule that the Court of Appeals followed in the opinion below. A final rule, which has gained support in several recent decisions and been adopted by the American Law Institute in a tentative draft of the Second Restatement of Torts, provides that the effect [**810] of a release upon coconspirators shall be determined in accordance with the intentions of the parties. See Winchester Drive-In Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Co., 232 F.Supp. 556, 561-563 (ND Cal. 1964), [*346] rev'd, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. v. Winchester Drive-In Theatre, Inc., supra; Young v. State, 455 P. 2d 889 (Alaska, 1969); Breen v. Peck, 28 N. J. 351, 146 A. 2d 665 (1958); Restatement (Second), Torts § 885 (1) (Tent. Draft No. 16, 1970); 12 Vand. L. Rev. 1414, 1416-1417 (1959). [****44]

[****45] We recently adopted the final rule giving effect to the intentions of the parties in Aro Mfg. Co. v. Convertible Top Co., supra, a patent infringement case. The agreement in that case expressly provided for the release of "Ford, its associated companies . . . [and] its and their dealers, customers and users of its and their products" from all past and future infringement claims. 377 U.S., at 493. The document, however, did not expressly reserve the releasor's rights against anyone. The issue in the case was whether Aro, a contributory infringer which did not fit within any of the special categories enumerated in the release, was nonetheless liable for its past contribution to infringements. The District Court had found that the parties had not intended to release contributory infringers such as Aro, and, despite the absence of an express reservation of rights against such infringers, we accordingly held that Aro was not entitled to benefit from the release. We concluded that HN13[ a release, "which clearly intends to save the releasor's rights against [****46] a past contributory infringer, does not automatically surrender those rights." Id., at 501.

<sup>11</sup> The Model Joint Obligations Act, 9B U. L. A. 355, which has been adopted in regard to tort claims by four States, is most similar to the rule stated in the text. It provides that a release of an obligor shall release co-obligors to the full extent of the obligor's original liability, § 5 (a), unless the amount of that liability is not known to the obligee, § 5 (b), or the obligee expressly reserves his rights against the co-obligors. § 4. The four States adopting the act are Nevada, Nev. Rev. Stat., c. 101 (1967); New York, N. Y. General Obligations Law §§ 15-101 to 15-109 (1964); Utah, Utah Code Ann. §§ 15-4-1 to 15-4-7 (1953); Wisconsin, Wis. Stat. §§ 113.01 to 113.10 (1967).

The Uniform Contribution among Tortfeasors Act, 9 U. L. A. 233, reverses the presumption arising from the absence of an express provision in the release. It enacts that "[a] release by the injured person of one joint tortfeasor . . . does not discharge the other tortfeasors unless the release so provides . . ." § 4. The eight States that have adopted the Uniform Act are Arkansas, Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 34-1001 to 34-1009 (1947); Delaware, Del. Code Ann., Tit. 10, §§ 6301-6308 (1953); Hawaii, Hawaii Rev. Laws §§ 246-10 to 246-16 (1955); Maryland, Md. Ann. Code, Art. 50, §§ 16 to 24 (1957); New Mexico, N. M. Stat. Ann. §§ 24-1-11 to 24-1-18 (1953); Pennsylvania, Pa. Stat. Ann., Tit. 12, §§ 2082-2089 (1967); Rhode Island, R. I. Gen. Laws Ann. §§ 10-6-1 to 10-6-11 (1956); South Dakota, S. D. Comp. Laws §§ 15-8-11 to 15-8-22 (1967). Two States -- Massachusetts and North Dakota -- have adopted a slightly different 1955 revision of the Act. See Mass. Gen. Laws Ann., c. 231B, §§ 1-4 (Supp. 1971); N. D. Cent. Code §§ 32-38-01 to 32-38-04 (1960). Other States adopting statutes affecting the common law of release are Alabama, Ala. Code, Tit. 7, § 381 (1940); California, Cal. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 875-880 (Supp. 1970); Louisiana, La. Civ. Code Ann., Art. 2203 (1952); Michigan, Mich. Stat. Ann. § 27A.2925 (1962); Missouri, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 537.060 (1953); Montana, Mont. Rev. Codes Ann. § 93-8108 (1964); West Virginia, W. Va. Code Ann. § 55-7-12 (1966). The statutes last listed deal generally with the construction of instruments in suit and with the effect and form of releases in particular.

[LEdHN\[27\]](#) [27] We perceive no reason to follow a different rule in antitrust litigation. Indeed, of the three available rules, the rule adopted in Aro is most consistent with the aims and purposes of the treble-damage remedy under the antitrust laws. We must keep in mind the multistate and multiparty character of much private antitrust litigation; often, defendants who have conspired [***97] together must be sued in a number of different States if all are to be reached, and, while defendants in some States may [*347] be willing to enter into settlements, defendants in others may not. To adopt the ancient common-law rule would frustrate such partial settlements, and thereby promote litigation, while adoption of the First Restatement rule would create a trap for unwary plaintiffs' attorneys. The straightforward rule is that HN14 [a party releases only those other parties whom he intends to release. Our [****47] conclusion that this is the appropriate rule for giving effect to releases under the antitrust laws is further buttressed by the Restatement's abandonment in a tentative draft of the rule requiring express reservation of rights in order to save them, and its adoption of the rule to which we adhere. See Restatement (Second), Torts § 885, Comments a-d (Tent. Draft No. 16, 1970).

[LEdHN\[28\]](#) [28] [LEdHN\[29\]](#) [29] The intention of the parties to the 1957 release is absolutely clear from the contract made prior thereto in which they agreed to exchange releases.<sup>12</sup> [****48] That contract expressly provided for releases "to bind or benefit" the party and "the parent and subsidiaries of the party giving or receiving such release ('subsidiaries' to include corporations in which the party has stock ownership of 50% or more)." <sup>13</sup> We accordingly have no hesitancy [**811] in [*348] holding that HRI, which was neither a party to the 1957 release nor a parent or subsidiary of a party, is not now entitled to the benefits of that release.

[LEdHN\[30\]](#) [30] Of course, to the extent that the $ 10,000,000 settlement which Zenith received in return for the 1957 release was understood by the parties to provide compensation for future damages that Zenith anticipated it would suffer during 1959-1963 as a result of the pre-1957 conduct of the Canadian pool, HRI would have available to it a defense of payment, for it is being ordered by the District Court to make full payment for all the 1959-1963 damages inflicted by all the members of the pool. [****49] It is settled that, HN15 [entirely apart from any release, a plaintiff who has recovered any item of damage from one coconspirator may not again recover the same item from another conspirator; the law, that is, does not permit a plaintiff to recover double payment. See Aro Mfg. Co. v. Convertible Top Co., supra, at 502-503 (plurality view); McKenna v. Austin, supra, at 234, 134 F.2d, at 665; Restatement, Torts § 885 (3) (1939); W. Prosser, Torts § 46 (3d ed. 1964). However, the record below indicates that a defense of payment [***98] could not here be sustained for, while the 1957 release did extend to future damages, the undisputed and unimpeached testimony of Zenith's witnesses was that the $ 10,000,000 settlement was understood by the parties as compensation only for Zenith's damages up to the date of the release. Thus, it is not surprising that, although HRI did advance a claim of payment upon its post-trial motion in the District Court, it has made no such argument in this Court. Since the claim was untimely presented below, was not pressed here, and is not sustainable on the facts [****50] contained in the record, we see no basis for its further consideration.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and [*349] the case is remanded, with instructions that the Court of Appeals reinstate the judgment of the District Court with respect to the Canadian market.

<sup>12</sup> Resort may be had to the contract in construing the release since the parole evidence rule is usually understood to be operative only as to parties to a document, and HRI here was not a party to the release. See Stern v. Commissioner, 137 F.2d 43, 46 (CA2 1943); O'Shea v. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co., 105 F. 559, 562-563 (CA7 1901); Restatement (Second), Torts § 885, Comment d (Tent. Draft No. 16, 1970). See generally 9 J. Wigmore, Evidence § 2446 (3d ed. 1940).

<sup>13</sup> The contract provided in relevant part:

"1. . . . RCA, GE and Western Electric each to grant Zenith and Rauland, respectively, a general release and Zenith and Rauland each to grant RCA, GE and Western Electric, respectively, a general release, each such release, to the extent either party may request, to bind or benefit the parent and subsidiaries of the party giving or receiving such release ('subsidiaries' to include corporations in which the party has stock ownership of 50% or more)."

Concur by: HARLAN

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, with whom MR. JUSTICE STEWART joins, concurring in the result.

My review of the record in this case has left me with the firm conviction that the trial judge rejected Hazeltine's proffered defenses of release and the statute of limitations on the ground that they were too belatedly raised. I agree with the Court that such a course was within the trial judge's sound discretion. I therefore find it unnecessary to express any view on the remaining, difficult issues which the Court discusses.

A consideration of the posture of the case at the time of the trial judge's ruling facilitates an understanding of the record. Two years after the filing of Zenith's counterclaim, one year after the close of evidence, nine months after the filing of Hazeltine's post-trial brief, and two months after the trial judge had made preliminary findings of fact and conclusions of [****51] law, Hazeltine, represented by new counsel, raised for the first time its defenses of release and the statute of limitations. It also sought to dispute the quality and the sufficiency of the proof of damages with respect to the Canadian market, and it raised the issue of governmental embargoes in the English and Australian markets.

The District Judge heard two days of argument, covering nearly 200 pages of the Appendix, on both the merits of the contentions and the equity of allowing Hazeltine to raise them so belatedly. There were three main links in the chain of Hazeltine's reasoning in support of its [**812] contention that it should be allowed the benefit of the release and the statute of limitations. First, the defenses were meritorious and would bar a large portion of the enormous potential recovery. Second, Hazeltine's lateness [*350] in raising the defenses should be excused because Zenith's counterclaim and supporting affidavit gave no notice that Zenith intended to rely on any activities occurring before the filing of the answer in 1961, which was well within the limitation period under any theory. Third, Hazeltine should be excused for failing to spot the alleged [****52] shift in Zenith's theory of recovery during the course of the trial because Hazeltine's trial counsel was primarily a patent lawyer who was not completely at home in the antitrust field. App. 68-69, 72-74, 156-162.

[***99] The District Judge on at least three occasions observed that Hazeltine had been put on notice of Zenith's theory by the allegations of the counterclaim itself and by the pretrial briefs.<sup>1</sup> [****53] He repeatedly commented on trial counsel's failure to raise the defenses of release and the statute of limitations,<sup>2</sup> [****54] and in the course of

---

<sup>1</sup> For example: "Mr. Kayser [Hazeltine's counsel]: . . . it was not until during the trial, after we had the long Dodds affidavit and all of this testimony that suddenly, gradually this new theory starts to creep in, this new theory where we go back and try to recover again based on these allegedly wrongful acts many, many years ago."

"The Court: I must assume, to go along with that, that counsel at that time didn't read the pretrial brief which clearly set out, prior to the trial, this theory that you were taken by surprise by during the course of the trial." App. 158. See also App. 87, 144.

<sup>2</sup> For example: "The Court: . . . [Reads from Hazeltine's post-trial brief.]

"Do you differ with counsel's statement, your prior counsel's statement 90 days after proofs were closed?

"Mr. Kayser: As to what the issues were that were presented in this case, yes, your Honor, I do. I most definitely do.

"The Court: Of course, you know by now that this is a new theory on your behalf.

"Mr. Kayser: Your Honor, I don't think it is a new theory. I think that --

"The Court: I mean, at least it wasn't advanced in this brief filed June 8, 90 days after the proofs closed.

"Mr. Kayser: Your Honor, we fully recognize the fact that the trial counsel did not realize what was happening to him. We fully realize that fact. If we had realized it --

"The Court: I mean, he didn't even realize it 90 days after the proofs were over.

colloquy more [*351] directly addressed to Hazeltine's other contentions he emphasized the necessity for trial counsel to [**813] prepare his case if the client was not to suffer.<sup>3</sup> [****55] [***100] After counsel for [*352] Zenith had presented his argument,<sup>4</sup> the District Judge heard Hazeltine's rebuttal, App. 223-250, with only one substantive question: "You do agree that the statute of limitations can be waived. You agree to that, don't you?" App. 237.

At the conclusion of his rebuttal argument, Hazeltine's attorney moved for leave to file "our affirmative defenses as a formal pleading of release and statute of limitations," and also moved to dismiss the counterclaim on the basis of those defenses. App. 250. The following colloquy then occurred:

"The Court: Mr. McConnell [Zenith's counsel], do you care to address yourself very briefly to those two motions he just made? You will be limited to that.

---

"Mr. Kayser: Yes, your Honor. I quite agree." App. 72.

Later the following colloquy occurred:

"The Court: Do you agree with the theory that sometime litigation must end?

"Mr. Kayser: Yes, your Honor.

"The Court: And these offers of proof [with respect to embargoes by the English and Australian Governments] are now being made more than one year after the proof closed on this case?

"Mr. Kayser: Your Honor, this I think is one of the most unusual cases that will come into a Courtroom, in that we have here, as I think we can demonstrate -- without basis we have here the danger of a judgment of almost forty-nine million dollars which will spell corporate death, which is subject to the affirmative defenses of limitations and of releases. . . .

"The Court: I just got through instructing a jury that in deliberating on their verdict, they should not take into consideration either sympathy or prejudice.

. . . .

"Mr. Kayser: I submit most respectfully to this court that this court should take into account equity. This is not a matter of sympathy. This is a matter of equity and a matter of justice; that this judgment, which will spell the death of this corporation, has had absolutely no basis whatsoever. It is subject to affirmative defenses. It was accomplished by a subtle switch in theory. Maybe it should have been caught; maybe it shouldn't. But is your Honor going to penalize this corporation --

"The Court: I mean, it wasn't even caught 90 days after the proofs closed.

"Mr. Kayser: I agree, that's true. I agree. This is a very unusual case; we recognize that.

"The Court: You may proceed." App. 108-109. See also App. 71-76 passim, 158-161.

<sup>3</sup> For example: "The Court: . . . underlying what you are saying [with respect to the embargoes] is what is said so frequently in appeals in criminal cases, that they are where they are by virtue of incompetence of counsel.

"Now, there a person's liberty is involved, and what do the courts say in regard to this plea of incompetency of counsel?

"They say, first, was he counsel of your choice rather than appointed counsel? And if he was, the courts say, in regard to keeping men incarcerated and depriving them of their liberty, that unless the trial conducted by counsel of the prisoner's choice was such a farce, such a fraud that justice would be horrified by the result, that since you are represented by counsel of your choice, why, agreed that he might not be the greatest in the world, but he was your lawyer and you picked him out. You are going to have to remain incarcerated for the balance of your term.

"Now, how do we get around that analogy in this case?" App. 140-141.

Hazeltine's attorney responded in terms of his theory of surprise, whereupon the District Judge answered that federal procedure was based on notice pleading and in his opinion Hazeltine had been put on notice. App. 141-144.

See also, e. g., App. 116, 121-123, 146, 155.

<sup>4</sup> App. 169-223. The District Judge asked for Zenith's views on the merits of the proposed defenses, but he did not press counsel on his reply. App. 186, 189, 193.

"Mr. Kayser: Sir?

[*353] "The Court: Mr. McConnell -- the ones that have to do with seeking to file these new pleadings on the statute of limitations.

"Mr. McConnell: Well, the statute of limitations -- this case is clearly distinguishable from the Emich case --

"The Court: All he is doing is asking leave to file, and that is the only thing I wish to have you address yourself to.

"Mr. McConnell: I think it's too late. He can make it for the record, but to actually [****56] file them in this case, the record is made. The case has been closed.

"The Court: Well, the record will show that leave is given to file them at this time, after proofs are closed and after findings have been made."

[The District Judge then stated how much he had enjoyed the argument of the past two days and complimented counsel on their presentations.]

"The Court at this time is prepared to enter the final judgment and decree offered with the exception of . . . [the damages allegedly suffered in England and Australia]." App. 250-251.

The judge then indicated that he would reopen the record to receive additional evidence with regard to the embargoes in England and Australia, but that the scope of the inquiry would be narrowly limited, and in particular no relitigation of facts adduced at trial would be permitted. The judge explained, "I do feel that in order to satisfy myself, in order to do equity in this matter, that I would like, to the limited extent expressed, a reopening in regard to the matters that I have indicated that do trouble me by virtue of the offers of proof that have been made and the statements that have been made [*101] in regard solely to Australia [****57] and England." App. 252-253. Except [*814] for giving Hazeltine's counsel five days [*354] in which to file his affirmative defenses, the judge made no other relevant comments in ruling on the motions.

I find it impossible to believe that the judge ruled thus summarily on the merits of the complicated issues of antitrust law to which this Court devotes 15 printed pages. I also find it highly unlikely that, without a word of explanation for departing from the sentiments he expressed during argument, the judge intended to forgive Hazeltine's failure to raise the defenses earlier. To be sure, he must have considered the merits sufficiently to satisfy himself that refusal to allow Hazeltine to raise these defenses worked no gross inequity. See Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 15 (a). I remain convinced, however, that he rejected the defenses only as untimely raised.

Believing that the Court of Appeals clearly erred in reaching the opposite conclusion,<sup>5</sup> I concur in the judgment of the Court on that ground.

[****58]

References

---

<sup>5</sup> The opinion of the Court of Appeals gives no indication that its attention was drawn to the remarks of the District Judge during Hazeltine's argument in chief, which cast light on his ruling on the motion for leave to file. Its entire discussion of the basis for the District Court's action reads as follows:

"Zenith's counsel objected to the filing of the defenses on the ground that they came too late and were waived. The district court, however, permitted the defenses to be filed and thereafter denied HRI's motion for judgment based on the defenses. . . . [The Supreme Court left open the question whether this ruling was on the merits.] It is our view that the court's ruling was not on the basis of waiver, but because the defenses on their merits did not bar Zenith's recovery." 418 F.2d, at 23-24.

401 U.S. 321, *354; 91 S. Ct. 795, **814; 28 L. Ed. 2d 77, ***101; 1971 U.S. LEXIS 153, ****58

22 Am Jur 2d, Damages 26; 51 Am Jur 2d, Limitation of Actions 471; 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade and Unfair Trade Practices 313, 325, 326, 361; Am Jur, Pleading (1st ed 297); Am Jur, Release (1st ed 33-39); Am Jur, Trial (1st ed 126)

US L Ed Digest, Damages 170; Joint Creditors and Debtors 8; Limitation of Actions 153.5, 157, 223; Pleading 71, 87, 88; Trial 15

ALR Digests, Damages 383; Joint Creditors and Debtors 22; Limitation of Actions 133, 222; Pleading 139, 164, 236; Trial 23

L ED Index to Anno, Damages; Joint Liability; Limitation of Actions; Pleading; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; Trial

ALR Quick Index, Amendment of Pleading; Damages; Joint and Several Liability; Limitation of Actions; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Amendment of Pleadings; Joint Liability; Limitation of Actions; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Timeliness of amendments to pleadings made by leave of court under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a). 4 ALR Fed 123.

Release of one joint tortfeasor as [****59] discharging liability of others: modern trends. 73 ALR2d 403.

When does statute of limitations begin to run against civil action or criminal prosecution for conspiracy. 62 ALR2d 1369.

Amendment of pleadings to assert statute of limitations. 59 ALR2d 169.

Presumption that, in reenacting statutes, legislature adopted previous judicial construction thereof, as applied to construction by trial or intermediate appellate court. 146 ALR 923.

---

End of Document

FTC v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

November 15, 1971, Argued ; March 1, 1972, Decided

No. 70-70

Reporter

405 U.S. 233 *; 92 S. Ct. 898 **; 31 L. Ed. 2d 170 ***; 1972 U.S. LEXIS 154 ****; 1972 Trade Cas. (CCH) P73,861

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. SPERRY & HUTCHINSON CO.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 432 F.2d 146, modified and remanded.

Core Terms

---

stamps, unfair, practices, consumers, anti trust law, exchanges, redemption, deceptive, unfair methods of competition, unfair practice, merchants, trading stamp, competitors, commerce, Federal Trade Commission Act, proscribe, redeemed, retail, restrain, violates

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > Unfair Competition & Practices

**HN1** [ Antitrust & Trade Law, Federal Trade Commission Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 45\(a\)\(6\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Judicial Review

**HN2** [ Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The Federal Trade Commission has broad powers to declare trade practices unfair.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

**HN3** [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Unfair competitive practices are not limited to those likely to have anticompetitive consequences after the manner of the antitrust laws; nor are unfair practices in commerce confined to purely competitive behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

**HN4** [down] US Federal Trade Commission Actions, Remedial Powers

The Federal Trade Commission does not arrogate excessive power to itself if, in measuring a practice against the elusive, but congressionally mandated standard of fairness, it, like a court of equity, considers public values beyond simply those enshrined in the letter or encompassed in the spirit of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

**HN5** [down] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The Federal Trade Commission has described the factors it considers in determining whether a practice that is neither in violation of the antitrust laws nor deceptive is nonetheless unfair: (1) whether the practice, without necessarily having been previously considered unlawful, offends public policy as it has been established by statutes, the common law, or otherwise -- whether, in other words, it is within at least the penumbra of some common-law, statutory, or other established concept of unfairness; (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous; (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers (or competitors or other businessmen).

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Judicial Review

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > Unfair Competition & Practices

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > Discretion

Environmental Law > Administrative Proceedings & Litigation > Judicial Review

**HN6** [down] Administrative Law, Judicial Review

The orderly functioning of the process of review requires that the grounds upon which an administrative agency acted be clearly disclosed and adequately sustained. A court cannot label a practice "unfair" under 15 U.S.C.S. § 45\(a\)\(1\). It can only affirm or vacate an agency's judgment to that effect. If an order is valid only as a determination of policy or judgment which the agency alone is authorized to make and which it has not made, a judicial judgment cannot be made to do service for an administrative judgment. For the courts to substitute their or counsel's discretion for that of the Federal Trade Commission is incompatible with the orderly functioning of the process of judicial review. This is not to deprecate, but to vindicate the administrative process, for the purpose of the rule is to avoid propelling the court into the domain which Congress has set aside exclusively for the administrative agency.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The Federal Trade Commission held that a trading stamp company violated 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act by attempting to suppress the operation of trading stamp exchanges and other "free and open" redemption of stamps, because the company's practices restrained trade and injured competition. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed on the ground that the FTC had not demonstrated that the company's conduct violated either the letter or the spirit of the antitrust laws (432 F2d 146).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court modified the Court of Appeals' judgment with respect to the Court of Appeals' construction of the Act, and remanded the case to the Court of Appeals with instructions to remand it to the FTC for such further proceedings as might be appropriate. In an opinion by White, J., expressing the unanimous views of the court, it was held that (1) the Act empowers the FTC to (a) define and proscribe an unfair competitive practice even though the practice does not infringe either the letter or the spirit of the antitrust laws and (b) proscribe practices as unfair or deceptive in their effect on consumers, regardless of their nature or quality as competitive practices or their effect on competition; (2) since the FTC's order was predicated only on the classic rationale of restraint of trade and injury to competition, it could not be upheld on the ground stated in (1); (3) since the Court of Appeals' judgment that the company's practices did not violate the letter or the spirit of the antitrust laws was not challenged in the Supreme Court, and the FTC's order could not properly be sustained on other grounds, the Court of Appeals' judgment would be affirmed; but (4) since the Court of Appeals erred in its construction of the Act, its judgment would be modified to that extent.

Powell and Rehnquist, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

JUDGMENT §130 > effect -- unfair trade practices -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

State and federal court decisions holding that certain business practices are lawful do not foreclose a decision by the Federal Trade Commission that such practices violate 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45), which outlaws unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce.

PRACTICES §47 > unfair trade practices -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45), which outlaws unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, empowers the Federal Trade Commission to (1) define and proscribe an unfair competitive practice even though the practice does not infringe either the letter or the spirit of the antitrust laws, and (2) proscribe practices as unfair or deceptive in their effect on consumers, regardless of their nature or quality as competitive practices or their effect on competition.

I É ÁMÉRÍKA HÀNG KHẨU JÌ LÀM THIẾU TỐ CỦA MÌNH

PRACTICES §47 > unfair trade practices -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The 1938 Wheeler-Lea Amendment (52 Stat 111) to 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45), adding the phrase "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" to the Federal Trade Commission Act's original ban on "unfair methods of competition," makes it clear that 5 charges the Commission with protecting consumers as well as competitors.

PRACTICES §56 > FTC order -- review -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

For the underpinnings of a Federal Trade Commission order, a court must look to the FTC's opinion, not to the arguments of its counsel.

LAW §289 > review -- orders -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Congress has delegated to the administrative official, and not to appellate counsel, the responsibility for elaborating and enforcing statutory commands.

PRACTICES §53 > FTC order -- basis -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

In a Federal Trade Commission proceeding for alleged violation of 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45), which outlaws unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, in which the FTC's order finding a violation is not premised on anything other than the classic antitrust rationale of restraint of trade and injury to competition, the FTC's observation that the respondent's conduct limited "stamp collecting consumers' ... freedom of choice in the disposition of trading stamps" will not alone support a conclusion that the FTC has found the respondent guilty of unfair practices because of damage to consumers.

PRACTICES §53 > FTC -- linking findings and conclusions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Even if the Federal Trade Commission's findings, in contrast to its opinion, go beyond concern with competition and address themselves to noncompetitive and consumer injury as well, and even if such findings have evidentiary support in the record, they still fail to sustain the FTC's order where the FTC does not render an opinion linking its findings and its conclusion.

I É ÁMÉRÍKA HÀNG KHÁM HÀNG TÙNG JÌ LÀM JÌ LÀM FÁT DÀI CÁC ÁI CÁC FÍ CÁC JÌ GÁM HÀNG SÓY CÁI I ÁI

LAW §159 > orders -- conclusions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

An administrative agency cannot support an order on considerations which it urges in court, but did not base its action on below; it must articulate a rational connection between the facts found and the choice made.

LAW §159 > necessity of disclosing grounds for action -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

The orderly function of the process of review of the action of an administrative agency requires that the grounds upon which the agency acted be clearly disclosed and adequately sustained.

PRACTICES §55 > decision on review -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

A court cannot label a practice "unfair" under 15 USC 45\(a\)\(1\), which outlaws unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce; it can only affirm or vacate an agency's judgment to that effect.

LAW §249 > review -- agency order -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

If an administrative order is valid only as a determination of policy or judgment which the agency alone is authorized to make and which it has not made, a judicial judgment cannot be made to do service for an administrative judgment.

LAW §249 > discussion -- review -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

For the courts to substitute their or counsel's discretion for that of an administrative agency is incompatible with the orderly functioning of the process of judicial review; the purpose of this rule is to avoid propelling the court into the domain which Congress set aside exclusively for the administrative agency.

ERROR §1692.2 > remand -- misconception of law -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

A Court of Appeals' judgment setting aside a Federal Trade Commission order will be affirmed where the Court of Appeals' judgment that the respondent's practices did not violate either the letter or the spirit of the antitrust laws is not attacked and remains undisturbed before the Supreme Court, and the FTC's order cannot properly be sustained on other grounds; but where the Court of Appeals erred in its construction of the statute, the Court of Appeals' judgment will be modified to that extent, and the case remanded to the Court of Appeals with instructions to remand it to the FTC for such further proceedings as may be appropriate.

Syllabus

---

The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) entered a cease-and-desist order against Sperry & Hutchinson Co. (S&H), the largest and oldest trading stamp company, on the ground that it unfairly attempted to suppress the operation of trading stamp exchanges and other "free and open" redemption of stamps. S&H argued in the Court of Appeals that its conduct was beyond the reach of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, which it claimed permitted the FTC to restrain only such practices as are either in violation of the antitrust laws, deceptive, or repugnant to public morals. The Court of Appeals reversed the FTC, holding that the FTC had not demonstrated that S&H's conduct violated § 5 because it had not shown that the conduct contravened either the letter or the spirit of the antitrust laws. Held:

1. The Court of Appeals erred in its construction of § 5. Congress, as previously recognized by this Court, see FTC v. R. F. Keppel & Bro., 291 U.S. 304, [****2] defines the powers of the FTC to protect consumers as well as competitors and authorizes it to determine whether challenged practices, though posing no threat to competition within the letter or spirit of the antitrust laws, are nevertheless either unfair methods of competition, or unfair or deceptive acts or practices. The Wheeler-Lea Act of 1938 reaffirms this broad congressional mandate. Pp. 239-244.
2. Nonetheless the FTC's order cannot be sustained. The FTC does not challenge the Court of Appeals' holding that S&H's conduct violates neither the letter nor the spirit of the antitrust laws and its opinion is barren of any attempt to rest its order on the unfairness of particular competitive practices or on considerations of consumer interests. Nor did the FTC articulate any standards by which such alternative assessments might be made. Pp. 245-249.
3. The judgment of the Court of Appeals setting aside the FTC's order is affirmed, but because that court erred in its construction of § 5, its judgment is modified to the extent that the case is remanded with instructions to return it to the FTC for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion. Pp. 249-250.

Counsel: [****3] Assistant Attorney General McLaren argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Solicitor General Griswold, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Karl H. Buschmann, and Richard H. Stern.

Harold L. Russell argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Samuel K. Abrams, Claus Motulsky, J. Sam Winters, Alan R. Wentzel, and Wayne T. Elliott.

Judges: White, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which all Members joined except Powell and Rehnquist, JJ., who took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[*234] [**173] [**900] MR. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

I É ÁMÉRÍKA HÉTHI LÁGUÓDA JÌ ÉEJÉLÁFÁSÓA ÓCA ÁÍ ÉÁTTFÍ HLÁJÍ GÁVÉSÓYÓCA ÁÍ I ÉAEEH

In June 1968 the Federal Trade Commission held that the largest and oldest company in the trading stamp industry,<sup>1</sup> Sperry & Hutchinson (S&H), was violating § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 719, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 45 \(a\)\(1\), in three respects. The Commission found that S&H improperly regulated the maximum rate at which trading stamps were [***174] dispensed by its retail licensees; that it combined with others to regulate the rate of stamp dispensation throughout the industry; and that it [****4] attempted (almost [**901] invariably successfully) to suppress the operation of trading stamp exchanges and other "free and open" redemption of stamps. The Commission entered cease-and-desist orders accordingly.

[*235] S&H appealed only the third of these orders. Before the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit it conceded that it acted as the Commission found, but argued that its conduct is beyond the reach of § 5 of the Act. That section provides, in pertinent part, that:

HN1 "The Commission is empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations . . . from [***5] using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce." 15 U. S. C. § 45 \(a\)\(6\).

As S&H sees it, § 5 empowers the Commission to restrain only such practices as are either in violation of the antitrust laws, deceptive, or repugnant to public morals. In S&H's view, its practice of successfully prosecuting stamp exchanges in state and federal courts cannot be restrained under any of these theories.

The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit agreed and reversed the Commission, Judge Wisdom dissenting. 432 F.2d 146 \(1970\). In the lower court's view:

"To be the type of practice that the Commission has the power to declare 'unfair' the act complained of must fall within one of the following types of violations: (1) a per se violation of antitrust policy; (2) a violation of the letter of either the Sherman, Clayton, or Robinson-Patman Acts; or (3) a violation of the spirit of these Acts as recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States." Id., at 150 (footnote omitted).

Holding that the FTC had not demonstrated that S&H's conduct violated either the letter or the spirit [***6] of the antitrust laws, the Court of Appeals vacated the Commission's order.

The FTC petitioned for review in this Court. We granted certiorari to determine the questions presented in the petition. 401 U.S. 992 \(1971\).

[*236] !

The Challenged Conduct

S&H has been issuing trading stamps -- small pieces of gummed paper about the size of postage stamps -- since 1896. In 1964, the year from which data in this litigation are derived, the company had about 40% of the business in an industry that annually issued 400 billion stamps to more than 200,000 retail establishments for distribution in connection with retail sales of some 40 billion dollars. In 1964, more than 60% of all American consumers saved S&H Green Stamps.

In the normal course, the trading stamp business operates as follows. S&H sells its stamps to retailers, primarily to supermarkets and gas stations, at a cost of about $ 2.65 per 1200 stamps; retailers give the stamps to consumers (typically at a rate of one for each 10 cent worth of purchases) as a bonus for their patronage; consumers paste the stamps in books of 1,200 and exchange [***175] the books for "gifts" at any of 850 S&H Redemption [***7] Centers maintained around the country. Each book typically buys between $ 2.86 and $ 3.31 worth of merchandise depending on the location of the redemption center and type of goods purchased. Since its development of this cycle 75 years ago, S&H has sold over one trillion stamps and redeemed approximately 86% of them.

<sup>1</sup> On the nature of the industry, see generally Comment, Trading Stamps, 37 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 1090 (1962). The Commission proceedings in the instant case are discussed in Comment, The Attack on Trading Stamps -- An Expanded Use of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 57 Geo. L. J. 1082 (1969).

I ÉÍ ÁMÉRÍKA HÉTCHI LÁGÚAÓDA JÍ ÉÉJÉFLÁFSEÓAÉCAÁFI ÉÉTTIFI Í LAFJÍ GÁMEÉSÓYÓUÁFI I ÉÉTTIFI

A cluster of factors relevant to this litigation tends to disrupt this cycle and, in S&H's view, to threaten its business. An incomplete book has no redemption value. Even a complete book is of limited value because most "gifts" may be obtained only on submission of more than one book. For these reasons a collector of another type of stamps who has acquired a small number of green stamps [**902] may benefit by exchanging [*237] with a green stamp collector who has opposite holdings and preferences. Similarly, because of the seasonal usefulness or immediate utility<sup>2</sup> of an object sought, a collector may want to buy stamps outright and thus put himself in a position to secure redemption merchandise immediately though it is "priced" beyond his current stamp holdings. Or a collector may seek to sell his stamps in order to use the resulting cash to make more [****8] basic purchases (food, shoes, etc.) than redemption centers normally provide.

Periodically over the past 70 years professional exchanges have arisen to service this demand. Motivated by the prospect of profit realizable as a result of serving as middlemen in swaps, the exchanges will sell books of S&H stamps previously acquired from consumers, or, for a fee, will give a consumer another company's stamps for S&H's or vice versa. Further, some regular merchants have offered discounts on their own goods in return for S&H stamps. Retailers do this as a means of competing with merchants in the area who issue stamps. By offering a price break in return for stamps, the redeeming merchant replaces the incentive to return to the issuing merchant (to secure more stamps so as to be able to obtain a gift at a redemption center) with the attraction of securing immediate benefit from the stamps by exchanging them for a discount at his store.<sup>3</sup>

[***9] S&H fears these activities because they are believed to reduce consumer proclivity to return to green-stamp-issuing stores and thus lower a store's incentive to buy and distribute stamps. The company attempts to preempt "trafficking" in its stamps by contractual provisions [*238] reflected in a notice on the inside cover of every S&H stamp book. The notice reads:

"Neither the stamps nor the books are sold to merchants, collectors or any other persons, at all times the title thereto being expressly reserved in the Company. . . . The stamps are issued to you as evidence of cash payment to the merchants issuing the same. The only right which you acquire in said stamps is to paste them in books like this and present them to us for redemption. You must not dispose of them or make any further use of them [***176] without our consent in writing. We will in every case where application is made to us give you permission to turn over your stamps to any other bona-fide collector of S&H Green . . . Stamps; but if the stamps or the books are transferred without our consent, we reserve the right to restrain their use by, or take them from other parties. It is to your interest [***10] that you fill the book, and personally derive the benefits and advantages of redeeming it." (Reproduced at 2 App. 230.)

S&H makes no effort to enforce this condition when consumers casually exchange stamps with each other, though reportedly some 20% of all the company's stamps change hands in this manner. But S&H vigorously moves against unauthorized commercial exchanges and redeemers. Between 1957 and 1965, by its own account the company filed for 43 injunctions against merchants who redeemed or exchanged its stamps without authorization, and it sent letters threatening legal action to 140 stamp exchanges and 175 businesses that redeemed S&H stamps. In almost all instances the threat or the reality of suit forced the businessmen to abandon their unauthorized practices.

[*239] [**903] II

The Reach of Section 5

<sup>2</sup> Often merchandise obtained by redemption is used as a gift.

<sup>3</sup> The efforts of some retailers to reissue S&H stamps are not involved in this case. The FTC explicitly left S&H free to seek injunctions against reissuance. 1 App. 169.

I É ÁNÈJÉGHÉEGHULÁGÁUÉDÀ JÌ ÉEÉCHÁFÁSÓAÉGÀFÍ ÉAÉFFI Í LÁJÍ GÁMÉÉSÓYÓQAFÍ I ÉÉÉÉ

LEdHN[1] [1]The Commission presented two questions in its petition for certiorari, the first being "whether Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, which directs the Commission to prevent 'unfair methods of competition . . . and unfair or deceptive acts or practices,' is limited to conduct [****11] which violates the letter or spirit of the antitrust laws." The other issue relates to the significance of state court holdings that the practices challenged here are lawful.<sup>4</sup> Neither question requests review of the Court of Appeals' decision that the business conduct proscribed by the Commission violates neither the letter nor spirit of the antitrust laws. Accordingly, we intimate no opinion on that issue and turn to the question of the reach of § 5.

LEdHN[2] [2]In reality, the question is a double one: First, does § 5 empower the Commission to define and [****12] proscribe an unfair competitive practice, even though the practice does not infringe either the letter or the spirit of the antitrust laws? Second, does § 5 empower the Commission to proscribe practices as unfair or deceptive in their effect upon consumers regardless of their nature or quality as competitive practices or their effect on competition? We think the statute, its legislative history, and prior cases compel an affirmative answer to both questions.

When Congress created the Federal Trade Commission in 1914 and charted its power and responsibility [*240] under § 5, it explicitly considered, and rejected, the notion that it reduce the ambiguity of the phrase "unfair methods of competition" by tying the concept of unfairness to a common-law or statutory standard or by enumerating the particular practices to which it was intended to apply. Senate Report No. [**177] 597, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 13 (1914), presents the reasoning that led the Senate Committee to avoid the temptations of precision when framing the Trade Commission Act:

"The committee gave careful consideration to the question as to whether it would attempt to define the many and variable unfair practices [****13] which prevail in commerce and to forbid their continuance or whether it would, by a general declaration condemning unfair practices, leave it to the commission to determine what practices were unfair. It concluded that the latter course would be the better, for the reason, as stated by one of the representatives of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, that there were too many unfair practices to define, and after writing 20 of them into the law it would be quite possible to invent others."

The House Conference Report was no less explicit. "It is impossible to frame definitions which embrace all unfair practices. There is no limit to human inventiveness in this field. Even if all known unfair practices were specifically defined and prohibited, it would be at once necessary to begin over again. If Congress were to adopt the method of definition, it would undertake an endless task." H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 1142, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 19 (1914). See also Rublee, The Original Plan and Early History of the Federal Trade Commission, 11 Acad. Pol. Sci. Proc. 666, 667 (1926); Baker & Baum, Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act: A Continuing Process of Redefinition, 7 Vill. L. Rev. 517 (1962). [****14]

[*241] Since the sweep and flexibility of this approach were thus made crystal clear, there have twice been judicial attempts to fence in the grounds upon which the FTC might rest a finding of unfairness. In FTC v. Gratz, 253 U.S. 421 (1920), the Court over [**904] the strong dissent of Mr. Justice Brandeis (who had been involved in drafting the Trade Commission Act), wrote that while the "exact meaning" of the phrase "'unfair method of competition' . . . is in dispute," the only practices that were subject to this characterization were those that were "heretofore regarded as opposed to good morals because characterized by deception, bad faith, fraud or oppression, or as against public policy because of their dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly." Id., at 427. This view was reiterated in other opinions over the next decade. See, e. g., FTC v. Curtis Publishing Co., 260 U.S. 568 (1923), and FTC v. Sinclair Refining Co., 261 U.S. 463, 475-476 (1923). The opinion of the Court of Appeals' majority, citing Sinclair in support of its narrow view of the FTC's leeway, [****15] is in the tradition of these authorities.

---

<sup>4</sup>Though the Court of Appeals referred to state and federal court decisions that approved S&H's practice, our reading of its opinion leaves no doubt that it did not reverse the FTC order on the erroneous theory that such determinations might foreclose a contrary FTC § 5 decision. We therefore put aside the Government's second question as irrelevant and focus on its first contention.

I É ÁNÈJÉGHÉG FLÁGÁUÉÓDÀ JÌ ÉEJÉ LÁFÁSÓAÉGÁFÍ ÉAIFI Í LÁJÍ GÁMÉÉSÓYÓQÁFÍ I ÉAIFI

In FTC v. Raladam Co., 283 U.S. 643 \(1931\), a unanimous Court held that: "The paramount aim of the act is the protection of the public from the evils likely to result from the destruction of competition or the restriction of it in a substantial degree. . . . Unfair trade methods are not per se unfair methods of competition." (Italics in original.) "It is obvious," the Court continued,

"that the word 'competition' [***178] imports the existence of present or potential competitors, and the unfair methods must be such as injuriously affect or tend thus to affect the business of these competitors -- that is to say, the trader whose methods are assailed as unfair must have present or potential rivals in trade whose business will be, or is likely to be, [*242] lessened or otherwise injured. It is that condition of affairs which the Commission is given power to correct, and it is against that condition of affairs, and not some other, that the Commission is authorized to protect the public. . . . If broader powers be desirable they must be conferred by Congress." Id. at 647-649. [***16]

Neither of these limiting interpretations survives to buttress the Court of Appeals' view of the instant case. Even if the first line of cases, Gratz and its progeny, stood unimpaired, their deference to action taken to constrain "deception, bad faith, fraud or oppression" would grant the FTC greater power to set right what it perceives as wrong than the panel of the Court of Appeals acknowledges. But frequent opportunity for reconsideration has consistently and emphatically led this Court to the view that the perspective of Gratz is too confined. As we recently unanimously observed: "Later cases of this Court . . . have rejected the Gratz view and it is now recognized in line with the dissent of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Gratz that HN2↑ the Commission has broad powers to declare trade practices unfair." FTC v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316, 320-321 \(1966\).

The leading case that recognized a role for the FTC beyond that mapped out in Gratz, FTC v. R. F. Keppel & Bro., Inc., 291 U.S. 304 \(1934\), also brought Raladam into question; on both counts it sets the standard by which the range of FTC jurisdiction is to be measured [***17] today. Keppel & Brothers sold penny candies in "break and take" packs, a form of merchandising that induced children to buy lesser amounts of concededly inferior candy in the hope of by luck hitting on bonus packs containing extra candy and prizes. The FTC issued a cease-and-desist order under § 5 on the theory that the popular marketing scheme contravened [*243] public policy insofar as it tempted children to gamble and compelled those who would successfully compete with Keppel to abandon their scruples by similarly tempting children.

The Court had no difficulty in sustaining the FTC's conclusion that the [*905] practice was "unfair," though any competitor could maintain his position simply by adopting the challenged practice. "Here," the Court said, "the competitive method is shown to exploit consumers, children, who are unable to protect themselves. . . . It is clear that the practice is of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy." Id. at 313.

En route to this result the Court met Keppel's arguments that, absent an antitrust violation or at least incipient injury to competitors, Gratz [***18] and Raladam so straitjacketed the FTC that the Commission could not issue a cease-and-desist [***179] order proscribing even an immoral practice. It held:

"Neither the language nor the history of the Act suggests that Congress intended to confine the forbidden methods to fixed and unyielding categories. The common law afforded a definition of unfair competition and, before the enactment of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Sherman Act had laid its inhibition upon combinations to restrain or monopolize interstate commerce which the courts had construed to include restraints upon competition in interstate commerce. It would not have been a difficult feat of draftsmanship to have restricted the operation of the Trade Commission Act to those methods of competition in interstate commerce which are forbidden at common law or which are likely to grow into violations of the Sherman Act, if that had been the purpose of the legislation." Id. at 310.

I É ÁNÈJÉGHÉG HÁGÁUÉÓdÀ JÌ ÉEJÉ LÁFÁSÓaÉGáFÍ ÉAÉFÍ JIÁJÍ GÁMÉÉSÓYÓQÁFÍ I ÉAÉFÍ

[*244] Thenceforth, HN3<sup>1</sup> unfair competitive practices were not limited to those likely to have anticompetitive consequences after the manner of the antitrust laws; nor were unfair practices in commerce confined [****19] to purely competitive behavior.

[LEdHN\[3\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [3]The perspective of Keppel, displacing that of Raladam, was legislatively confirmed when Congress adopted the 1938 Wheeler-Lea amendment, 52 Stat. 111, to § 5. The amendment added the phrase "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" to the section's original ban on "unfair methods of competition" and thus made it clear that Congress, through § 5, charged the FTC with protecting consumers as well as competitors. The House Report on the amendment summarized congressional thinking: "This amendment makes the consumer, who may be injured by an unfair trade practice, of equal concern, before the law, with the merchant or manufacturer injured by the unfair methods of a dishonest competitor." H. R. Rep. No. 1613, 75th Cong., 1st Sess., 3 (1937). See also S. Rep. No. 1705, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., 2-3 (1936).

Thus, legislative and judicial authorities alike convince us that HN4<sup>1</sup> the Federal Trade Commission does not arrogate excessive power to itself if, in measuring a practice against the elusive, but congressionally mandated standard of fairness, it, like a court of equity, [****20] considers public values beyond simply those enshrined in the letter or encompassed in the spirit of the antitrust laws.<sup>5</sup>

[****21] [*245] III

[***180] [**906] The general conclusion just enunciated requires us to hold that the Court of Appeals erred in its construction of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Ordinarily we would simply reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals insofar as it limited the unfair practices proscribed by § 5 to those contrary to the letter and spirit of the antitrust laws and we would remand the case for consideration of whether the challenged practices, though posing no threat to competition within the precepts of the antitrust laws, are nevertheless either (1) unfair methods of competition or (2) unfair or deceptive acts or practices.

What we deem to be proper concerns about the interaction of administrative agencies and the courts, however, counsels another course in this case. In this Court the Commission argues that, however correct the Court of Appeals may be in holding the challenged S&H practices beyond the reach of the letter or spirit of the antitrust laws, the Court of Appeals nevertheless [*246] erred in asserting that the FTC could measure and ban conduct only according to such narrow criteria. Proceeding from this premise, with which we [****22] agree, the Commission's major submission is that its order is sustainable as a proper exercise of its power to proscribe practices unfair to consumers. Its minor position is that it also properly found S&H's practices to be unfair competitive methods apart from their propriety under the antitrust laws.

[LEdHN\[4\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [4][LEdHN\[5\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [5]The difficulty with the Commission's position is that we must look to its opinion, not to the arguments of its counsel, for the underpinnings of its order. "Congress has delegated to the

<sup>5</sup> HN5<sup>1</sup> The Commission has described the factors it considers in determining whether a practice that is neither in violation of the antitrust laws nor deceptive is nonetheless unfair:

"(1) whether the practice, without necessarily having been previously considered unlawful, offends public policy as it has been established by statutes, the common law, or otherwise -- whether, in other words, it is within at least the penumbra of some common-law, statutory, or other established concept of unfairness; (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous; (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers (or competitors or other businessmen)." Statement of Basis and Purpose of Trade Regulation Rule 408, Unfair or Deceptive Advertising and Labeling of Cigarettes in Relation to the Health Hazards of Smoking. 29 Fed. Reg. 8355 (1964).

S&H argues that a later portion of this statement commits the FTC to the view that misconduct in respect of the third of these criteria is not subject to constraint as "unfair" absent a concomitant showing of misconduct according to the first or second of these criteria. But all the FTC said in the statement referred to was that "the wide variety of decisions interpreting the elusive concept of unfairness at least makes clear that a method of selling violates Section 5 if it is exploitative or inequitable and if, in addition to being morally objectionable, it is seriously detrimental to consumers or others." Ibid. (emphasis added).

I É ÁMÈJÉG HÉG Í LÁGÚÉDÉ JÌ ÉEJÉ LÁFÁSÉOÀÉGÀFÍ ÉAIFI ÉAFJÍ GÁMÉÉSÓYÓQÀFÍ I ÉHÉGG

administrative official and not to appellate counsel the responsibility for elaborating and enforcing statutory commands." Investment Co. Institute v. Camp, 401 U.S. 617, 628 (1971). We cannot read the FTC opinion on which the challenged order rests as premised on anything other than the classic antitrust rationale of restraint of trade and injury to competition.

The Commission urges reversal of the Court of Appeals and approval of its own order because, in its words, "the Act gives the Commission comprehensive power to prevent [****23] trade practices which are deceptive or unfair to consumers, regardless of whether they also are anticompetitive." Brief for the FTC 15. It says the Court of Appeals was "wrong in two ways: you can have an anticompetitive impact that is not a violation of the antitrust laws and violate Section 5. You can also have an impact upon consumers without regard to competition and you can uphold a Section 5 violation on that ground." Tr. of Oral Arg. 18. Though completely accurate, these statements cannot be squared with the Commission's holding that "it is essential in this matter, we believe, and as we have heretofore indicated, to determine whether or not there has been or may be an [*247] impairment of competition," [***181] Opinion of Commission, 1 App. 175; its conclusion that "respondent . . . prevents . . . competitive reaction[s] and thereby it has restrained trade. We believe this is an unfair method of competition and an unfair act and practice in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and so hold," 1 App. 178; its observation that:

"Respondent's individual acts and its acts with others taken to suppress trading stamp exchanges and other stamp [****24] redemption activity are all part of a clearly defined restrictive policy pursued by the respondent. In the [**907] circumstances surrounding this particular practice it is difficult to wholly separate the individual acts from the collective acts for the purpose of making an analysis of the consequences under the antitrust laws." 1 App. 179; and like statements throughout the opinion, see, e. g., 1 App. 176-178, passim.

LEdHN[6] [6] There is no indication in the Commission's opinion that it found S&H's conduct to be unfair in its effect on competitors because of considerations other than those at the root of the antitrust laws.<sup>6</sup> For its part, the [*248] theory that the FTC's decision is derived from its concern for consumers finds support in only one line of the Commission's opinion. The Commission's observation that S&H's conduct limited "stamp collecting consumers' . . . freedom of choice in the disposition of trading stamps," 1 App. 176, will not alone support a conclusion that the FTC has found S&H guilty of unfair practices because of damage to consumers.

[***25] LEdHN[7] [7] Arguably, the Commission's findings, in contrast to its opinion, go beyond concern with competition and address themselves to noncompetitive and consumer injury as well. It may also be that such findings would have evidentiary support in the record. But even if the findings were considered to be adequate

<sup>6</sup> The Commission did explicitly decline to assess S&H's conduct in light of one leading antitrust case. In United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 379 (1967), this Court held that:

"Under the Sherman Act, it is unreasonable without more for a manufacturer to seek to restrict and confine areas or persons with whom an article may be traded after the manufacturer has parted with dominion over it. White Motor [v. United States, 372 U.S. 253 (1963)]; Dr. Miles [Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373 (1911)]. Such restraints are so obviously destructive of competition that their mere existence is enough. If the manufacturer parts with dominion over his product or transfers risk of loss to another, he may not reserve control over its destiny or the conditions of its resale."

Arguably, S&H's practice is proscribed by this doctrine. When the FTC declined to rely on this precedent, however, it did so not to turn to considerations other than those embedded in the antitrust laws, but instead to look for considerations less "technical" and more deeply rooted in antitrust policy:

"We do not believe it appropriate to decide the broad competitive questions presented in this record on the narrow and technical basis of a restraint on alienation. The circumstances here are much different from that where products are transferred to a dealer for resale. They are complicated by the nature of the trading stamp scheme. It is essential in this matter, we believe, and as we have heretofore indicated, to determine whether or not there has been or may be an impairment of competition. Thus, we intend to look at the substance of the allegedly illegal practice rather than to decide the case by application of a technical formula." 1 App. 175-176.

I É ÁNÉÜÉGHÉEG I LÁGÁUÉÓDÀ JÌ ÉEJÉ LÁFÁSÉOÀÉGÀÁÍ ÉAÉFFI FLÁJÍ GÁMÉÉSÓYÓQÁÍ I ÉEÉGG

foundation for an opinion and order resting on unfair consequences to [***182] consumer interests, they still fail to sustain the Commission action; for the Commission has not rendered an opinion which, by the route suggested, links its findings and its conclusions. The opinion is barren of any attempt to rest the order on its assessment of particular competitive practices or considerations of consumer interests independent of possible or actual effects on competition. Nor were any standards for doing so referred to or developed.

[*249] [LEdHN\[8\]](#) [↑] [8]Our view is that "the considerations urged here in support of the Commission's order were not those upon which its action was based." SEC v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80, 92 \(1943\). [****26] At the least the Commission has failed to "articulate any rational connection between the facts found and the choice made." Burlington Truck Lines v. United States, 371 U.S. 156, 168 \(1962\).

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [↑] [9] [LEdHN\[10\]](#) [↑] [10] [LEdHN\[11\]](#) [↑] [11] [LEdHN\[12\]](#) [↑] [12]The Commission's action being flawed in this respect, we cannot sustain its order. HN6 [↑] "The orderly functioning [**908] of the process of review requires that the grounds upon which the administrative agency acted be clearly disclosed and adequately sustained." Chenery, supra, at 94. Burlington Truck Lines, supra, at 169. A court cannot label a practice "unfair" under 15 U. S. C. § 45 \(a\)\(1\). It can only affirm or vacate an agency's judgment to that effect. "If an order is valid only as a determination of policy [***27] or judgment which the agency alone is authorized to make and which it has not made, a judicial judgment cannot be made to do service for an administrative judgment." Chenery, supra, at 88. And as was repeated on other occasions:

"For the courts to substitute their or counsel's discretion for that of the Commission is incompatible with the orderly functioning of the process of judicial review. This is not to deprecate, but to vindicate (see Phelps Dodge Corp. v. Labor Board, 313 U.S. 177, 197), the administrative process, for the purpose of the rule is to avoid 'propel[ling] the court into the domain which Congress has set aside exclusively for the administrative agency.' 332 U.S., at 196." Burlington Truck Lines, supra, at 169.

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [↑] [13]In these circumstances, because the Court of Appeals' judgment that S&H's practices did not violate either the letter or the spirit of the antitrust laws was not attacked and remains undisturbed here, and because the Commission's [*250] order could not properly be sustained on other grounds, [****28] the judgment of the Court of Appeals setting aside the Commission's order is affirmed. The Court of Appeals erred, however, in its construction of § 5; had it entertained the proper view of the reach of the section, the preferable course would have been to remand the case to the Commission for further proceedings. Chenery, supra, at 95; Burlington, supra, at 174; FPC v. United Gas Pipe Line Co., 393 U.S. 71 \(1968\). Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is modified to this extent and the case is remanded to the Court of Appeals with instructions to remand it to the Commission for such further [***183] proceedings, not inconsistent with this opinion, as may be appropriate.

So ordered.

MR. JUSTICE POWELL and MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

References

---

55 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, 738-746

US L Ed Digest, Trademarks, Tradenames, and Unfair Trade Practices 47

I É ÁNÈJÉGHÉG ÉLÁGÚÉDÀ JÌ ÉEJÉ LÁFÁSÉOÀÉGÀFÍ ÉAFFFÍ HÁJÍ GÁWÉÉSÓYÓQAFÍ I ÉEKG

ALR Digests, Trademarks, Tradenames, and Unfair Trade Practices 31.5(3)

L Ed Index to Anno, Federal [****29] Trade Commission; Unfair Competition

ALR Quick Index, Federal Trade Commission; Trademarks, Tradenames, and Unfair Trade Practices

Federal Quick Index, Federal Trade Commission; Trademarks, Tradenames, and Unfair Trade Practices

---

End of Document

United States v. Topco Assocs.

Supreme Court of the United States

November 16, 1971, Argued ; March 29, 1972, Decided

No. 70-82

Reporter

405 U.S. 596 *; 92 S. Ct. 1126 **; 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 ***; 1972 U.S. LEXIS 167 ****; 173 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 193; 1972 Trade Cas. (CCH) P73,904

UNITED STATES v. TOPCO ASSOCIATES, INC.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS.

Disposition: 319 F.Supp. 1031, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

territory, chains, products, Sherman Act, per se rule, horizontal, brands, licensed, label, per se violation, practices, trademarked, marketing, rule of reason, manufacturers, cooperative, restraint of trade, territorial limits, restrictions, compete, cases, anti trust law, combinations, supermarket, grocery, courts, prices, allocated, consumer, regional

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN1** [ Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN2** [ Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

The U.S. Supreme Court adopts a "rule of reason" analysis for determining whether most business combinations or contracts violate the prohibitions of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. An analysis of the reasonableness of particular restraints includes consideration of the facts peculiar to the business in which the restraint is applied, the nature of the restraint and its effects, and the history of the restraint and the reasons for its adoption.

405 U.S. 596, *596; JGÁUÉODÁFFGÍ ÁFFGÍ LÁFSEÓaÉGAÁ FÍ ÁFFÍ FÍ LÁJÍ GÁVÉSÓYÓÁÍ Í ÁFFÍLÁ 73 U.S.P.Q.
 (BNA) 193, *****193

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > General Overview

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

A per se violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is an agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in order to minimize competition. Such concerted action is usually termed a horizontal restraint, in contradistinction to combinations of persons at different levels of the market structure, e. g., manufacturers and distributors, which are termed vertical restraints. Horizontal territorial limitations are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition. Such limitations are per se violations of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

With respect to price fixing, another per se violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the reasonable price fixed today may through economic and business changes become the unreasonable price of tomorrow. Once established, it may be maintained unchanged because of the absence of competition secured by the agreement for a price reasonable when fixed. A similar observation can be made with regard to territorial limitations.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

I É ÁMÈÉ JÍ ÉÉ JÍ LÁGÀUÉOÉÉFG ÉÉFFG LÁFÉÉSÉOáÉGáÁ FÍ ÉÉÉÉ FÍ LÁJÍ GÁÉÉSÓYÓÁÉÉÉÉLÁ73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, *****193

The government instituted an action in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois against a co-operative association of approximately 25 small-and medium-sized regional supermarket chains, alleging that 1 of the Sherman Act was violated by the association's operations whereby association members, who controlled the operations of the association and who had a veto power of sorts as to new members, were given exclusive territories for the sale at retail of the association's private label products, and whereby the members, upon obtaining the association's permission to sell such products at wholesale, were required to agree to restrict such sales to a specific geographic area and to sell under any conditions imposed by the association. After trial on the merits, the District Court, applying the "rule of reason" pertinent in most restraint of trade cases, entered judgment for the association, concluding that the association's restrictions as to exclusive market territories and wholesaling of its private label products were procompetitive as fostering competition between the association's members and national chains or other larger supermarket chains, even though such restrictions prevented competition between association members in the sale of the association's private label goods (319 F Supp 1031).

On direct appeal, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded for entry of an appropriate decree. In an opinion by Marshall, J., expressing the views of five members of the court, it was held that (1) certain business relationships, such as "horizontal restraints" between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate market territories, were per se violations of the Sherman Act without regard to their reasonableness, (2) horizontal territorial limitations, even though unaccompanied by price fixing, were per se violations of the Act, (3) in the case at bar, the territorial restrictions as to retailing and wholesaling of the association's private label products constituted horizontal restraints and thus were per se violations of the Act, and (4) the association's other restrictions on the right of members to wholesale the association's private label goods violated the Act as improper regulations of the customers to whom association members might sell the association's private label goods.

Blackmun, J., concurring in the result, noted that although the court's conclusion had anomalous aspects since it tended to stultify competition between the association's members and larger chains, contrary to public interest, nevertheless the per se rule was firmly established and any relief therefrom must come by way of legislation.

Burger, Ch. J., dissented, expressing the views that (1) the territorial restrictions of the supermarket association had the lawful principal purpose of enhancing the members' abilities to compete with larger chains, and the District Court, after reviewing the relevant economic considerations and after examining the association's practices under the "rule of reason," had concluded that the relief sought by the government would substantially diminish competition in the supermarket field, (2) horizontal divisions of markets, without more, had not previously been held to constitute per se violations of the Sherman Act, (3) such a per se rule should not be laid down without regard to the impact which the condemned practices might have on competition, and (4) a per se rule should not be promulgated to govern cases, such as the instant case, involving division of market agreements which contain no price-fixing features and which are concerned only with trademark products that are not in a monopoly or near-monopoly position with respect to competing brands.

Powell and Rehnquist, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §53 > market territories -- horizontal restraints -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

The operations of a co-operative association of approximately 25 small- and medium-sized regional supermarket chains whereby the members, who controlled the operations of the association and who had a veto power of sorts as to new members, were given exclusive territories for the sale at retail of the association's private label products, constitute a horizontal restraint of trade and therefore a per se violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1), and a Federal District Court errs in applying a "rule of reason" in concluding that such restraint is not illegal, since, even though the territorial limitations prevented competition between members of the association in the sale of the association's private label goods, nevertheless they fostered competition between the members of the association and national chains or other large supermarket chains; similar restrictions limiting sales at wholesale of the association's private label goods to the member's exclusive territory must also fall as violative of the Sherman Act for the same reasons.

I É ÁMÈÉÁ JÍ ÉÉ JÍ LÁGÀÉOÉÉFG ÍÉÉFG ÍÁFÉÉÓaÉGá Á FÍ ÉÉÉ FÍ LÁJÍ GÁÉÉSÓYÓÁÍ I ÉÉÉLÁ73 U.S.P.Q.
 (BNA) 193, *****193

APPEAL AND ERROR §1340 > antitrust suit -- reviewable issues -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

On appeal from a Federal District Court's judgment for an association of supermarket chains in a suit by the government alleging violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1) by the association's designation of exclusive territories for retail and wholesale sale by its members of the association's private label products, the United States Supreme Court is not barred from considering the issue whether a requirement that the association's permission be obtained before a member could sell at wholesale in designated territories violated the Sherman Act as a restriction on customers as well as an unlawful territorial restriction, where (1) the District Court permitted the government to pursue such point on the basis that even though the complaint did not cover customer limitations, the complaint could be amended if the limitations were proved, (2) the defendant association acquiesced in such procedure and both sides dealt with customer limitations in examining witnesses, and (3) the District Court made specific findings and conclusions with respect to the totality of the restraints on wholesaling--it being immaterial that the complaint was never formally amended.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §16 > Sherman Act -- reasonableness of restraint -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Under the "rule of reason" analysis for determining whether most business combinations or contracts violate the prohibitions of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1-7), the analysis of the reasonableness of particular restraints includes consideration of the facts peculiar to the business in which the restraint is applied, the nature of the restraint and its effect, and the history of the restraint and the reasons for its adoption.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §16 > per se unreasonableness -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The principle of per se unreasonableness, under which certain agreements or practices which, because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue, are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal under the Sherman Act (15 USC 1-7) without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use, not only makes the type of restraints which are proscribed by the Sherman Act more certain to the benefit of everyone concerned, but also avoids the necessity for complicated and prolonged economic investigation into the entire history of the industry involved, as well as related industries, in an effort to determine at large whether a particular restraint has been unreasonable.

I É ÁMÈÉÁ JÍ ÉÉ JÍ LÁGÀUÉÓÉÉFG ÍÉÉFG LÁFÉÉÓdÉGÁ Á FÍ ÉÉÉ FÍ LÁJÍ GÁWÉÉSÓYÓÁÍ ÍÉÉFLÁ73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, *****193

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §53 > market territories -- horizontal and vertical restraints -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

An agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in order to minimize competition is a per se violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1); such concerted action is a "horizontal" restraint, in contradistinction to combination of persons at different levels of the market structure, for example, manufacturers and distributors, which are "vertical restraints."

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §53 > horizontal territorial limitations -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Horizontal territorial limitations are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition, and such limitations are per se violations of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1-7).

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §53 > horizontal territorial limitations -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

Horizontal territorial limitations--even though unaccompanied by price fixing--are per se violations of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1-7).

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §16 > per se unreasonableness -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

An important reason for the formulation of rules of per se unreasonableness under the Sherman Act (15 USC 1-7) of certain agreements or practices is the inability of courts to weigh, in any meaningful sense, destruction of competition in one sector of the economy against promotion of competition in another sector.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §15 > intent or purpose of restraint -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

Naked restraints of trade are not to be tolerated merely because they are well intended or because they are allegedly developed to increase competition.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADES AND MONOPOLIES §4 > antitrust laws -- freedom to compete -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

The freedom guaranteed under antitrust laws in general, and the Sherman Act (15 USC 1-7) in particular, to each and every business, no matter how small, is the freedom to compete, that is, to assert with vigor, imagination,

I É ÁMÈÉÁ JÍ ÁMÈÉÁ JÍ LÁGÀUÉÓdÉFG ÍFFG LÁFSEÓaÉGá Á FÍ ÁMÈÉÁ FÍ LÁJÍ GÁMÈÉSÓYÓÁFÍ Í ÁMÈÉÁ 73 U.S.P.Q.
 (BNA) 193, *****193

devotion, and ingenuity whatever economic muscle it can muster; implicit in such freedom is the notion that it cannot be foreclosed with respect to one sector of the economy because certain private citizens or groups believe that such foreclosure might promote greater competition in a more important sector of the economy.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §36 > price fixing -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [↓] [11]

Price fixing is a per se violation of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1-7).

COURTS §141 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §1 > controlling competition -- Congress -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [↓] [12]

Any decision to sacrifice competition in one portion of the economy for greater competition in another portion, must be made by Congress, not by private forces or by the courts.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §51 > selection of customers -- territorial restrictions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [↓] [13]

The restrictions of a co-operative association of approximately 25 small- and medium-sized regional supermarket chains concerning sales at wholesale of the association's private label products--members being required to obtain the association's wholesale, and if permission is obtained, being required to agree to restrict such sales to a specific geographic area and to sell under any conditions imposed by the association--violate 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1) as improper regulations of the customers to whom members of the association may sell the association's private label goods.

Syllabus

---

The United States brought this injunction action charging a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act by appellee, Topco, a cooperative association of about 25 small and medium-sized independent regional supermarket chains operating in 33 States. As its members' purchasing agent appellee procures more than 1,000 different items, most of which have brand names owned by Topco. The members' combined retail sales in 1967 were $ 2.3 billion, exceeded by only three national grocery chains. A member's average market share in its area is about 6% and its competitive position is frequently as strong as that of any other chain. The members own equal amounts of Topco's common stock (the voting stock), choose its directors, and completely control the association's operations. Topco's bylaws establish an "exclusive" category of territorial licenses, under which most members' licenses are issued and the two other membership categories have [****2] proved to be de facto exclusive. Since no member under this system may sell Topco-brand products outside the territory in which it is licensed, expansion into another member's territory is in practice permitted only with the other member's consent, and since a member in effect has a veto power over admission of a new member, members can control actual or potential competition in the territorial areas in which they are concerned. Topco members are prohibited from selling any products supplied by the association at wholesale, whether trade-marked or not, without securing special permission, which is not granted without the consent of other interested licensees (usually retailers) and then the member must agree to restrict Topco product sales to a specific area and under certain conditions. The Government charged that Topco's scheme of dividing markets violates the Sherman Act because it operates to prohibit competition in Topco-brand products among retail grocery chains, and also challenged Topco's restrictions on wholesaling. Topco contended that it needs territorial divisions to maintain its private-label program and to enable it to compete with the larger chains; that the [****3] association could not exist if the territorial divisions were not exclusive; and that the restrictions on competition in Topco-brand sales enable members to meet larger chain competition. The District Court, agreeing with Topco, upheld the restrictive practices as reasonable and pro-competitive. Held: The Topco scheme of allocating territories to minimize competition at the retail level is a horizontal restraint constituting a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and the District Court erred in applying a rule of reason to the restrictive practices here involved. United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S. 350. Topco's limitations upon reselling at wholesale are for the same reason per se invalid under § 1. Pp. 606-612.

I É ÁMÈÉÁ JÍ ÉÉ JÍ LÁGÁUÉÓÉÉFG ÉÉFFG LÁFÉÉÓaÉGá Á FÍ ÉÉÉ FÍ LÁJÍ GÁVÉÉSÓYÓÁÍ I ÉÉÉGLA 73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, ****193

Counsel: Howard E. Shapiro argued the cause for the United States. With him on the briefs were Solicitor General Griswold and Deputy Assistant Attorney General Comegys.

Victor E. Grimm argued the cause for appellee. With him on the brief were John T. Loughlin and William R. Carney.

Judges: Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which Douglas, Brennan, Stewart, and White, JJ., joined. Blackmun, J., filed an opinion [****4] concurring in the result, post, p. 612. Burger, C. J., filed a dissenting opinion, post, p. 613. Powell and Rehnquist, JJ., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: MARSHALL

Opinion

---

[193] [*597] [**520] [**1128] MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the Court.

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A]The United States brought this action for injunctive relief against alleged violation by Topco Associates, Inc. (Topco), of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1. Jurisdiction was grounded in § 4 of the Act, 15 U. S. C. § 4. Following a trial on the merits, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois entered judgment for Topco, 319 F.Supp. 1031, and the United States appealed directly to this Court pursuant to § 2 of the Expediting Act, 32 Stat. 823, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 29. We noted probable jurisdiction, 402 U.S. 905 (1971), and we now reverse the judgment of the District Court.

[*598] I

Topco is a cooperative association of approximately [****5] 25 small and medium-sized regional supermarket chains that operate [**1129] stores in some 33 States.<sup>1</sup> Each of the member chains operates independently; there is no pooling of earnings, profits, capital, management, or advertising resources. No grocery business is conducted under the Topco name. Its basic function is to serve as a purchasing agent for its members.<sup>2</sup> In this capacity, it procures and distributes to the members more than 1,000 different food and related nonfood items, most of which are distributed under brand names owned by Topco. The association does not itself own any manufacturing, processing, or warehousing facilities, and the items that it procures for members are usually shipped directly from the packer or manufacturer to the members. Payment is made either to Topco or directly to the manufacturer at a cost that is virtually the same for the members as for Topco itself.

---

<sup>1</sup> Topco, which is referred to at times in this opinion as the "association," is actually composed of 23 chains of supermarket retailers and two retailer-owned cooperatives.

<sup>2</sup> In addition to purchasing various items for its members, Topco performs other related functions: e. g., it insures that there is adequate quality control on the products that it purchases; it assists members in developing specifications on certain types of products (e. g., equipment and supplies); and it also aids the members in purchasing goods through other sources.

I É ÁMÈÉÁ JÍ ÉÉ JÍ LÁGÁUÉÓÉÉFG ÉÉFFGJLÁFÉÉÓaÉGáÁ FÍ ÉÉÉ GELÁJÍ GÁVÉÉSÓYÓÁFÍ ÉÉÉ LÁ73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, *****193

[****6] All of the stock in Topco is owned by the members, with the common stock, the only stock having voting rights, being equally distributed. The board of directors, which controls the operation of the association, is drawn from the members and is normally composed [194] of high-ranking executive officers of member chains. It is the board that elects the association's officers and appoints [*599] committee members, and it is from the board that the principal executive officers of Topco must be drawn. Restrictions on the alienation of stock and the procedure for selecting all important officials of the association from within the ranks of its members give the members complete and unfettered control over the operations of the association.

Topco was founded in the 1940's by a group of small, local grocery chains, independently owned and operated, that desired to cooperate to obtain high quality merchandise under private labels in order to compete [***521] more effectively with larger national and regional chains.<sup>3</sup> [****8] With a line of canned, dairy, and other products, the [*600] association began. It added frozen foods in 1950, fresh produce in 1958, more general merchandise equipment [****7] and supplies in 1960, and a branded bacon and carcass beef selection program in 1966. By 1964, Topco's members had combined retail sales of more than $ 2 [*1130] billion; by 1967, their sales totaled more than $ 2.3 billion, a figure exceeded by only three national grocery chains.<sup>4</sup>

Members of the association vary in the degree of market share that they possess in their respective areas. The range is from 1.5% to 16%, with the average being approximately 6%. While it is difficult to compare these figures with the market shares of larger regional and national chains because of the absence in the record of accurate statistics for these chains, there is much evidence in the record that Topco members are frequently in as strong a competitive position in their respective areas as any other chain. The strength of this competitive position is due, in some measure, to the success of Topco-brand products. Although only 10% of the total goods sold by Topco members bear the association's brand names, the profit on these goods is substantial and their very existence has improved the competitive potential of Topco members with respect to other large and powerful chains.

It is apparent that from meager beginnings approximately a quarter of a century ago, Topco has developed into a purchasing association wholly owned and operated [****9] by member chains, which possess much economic muscle, individually as well as cooperatively.

II

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides, in relevant part:

HN1 [↑] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of [*601] trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. . . ."

<sup>3</sup>The founding members of Topco were having difficulty competing with larger chains. This difficulty was attributable in some degree to the fact that the larger chains were capable of developing their own private-label programs.

Private-label products differ from other brand-name products in that they are sold at a limited number of easily ascertainable stores. A&P, for example, was a pioneer in developing a series of products that were sold under an A&P label and that were only available in A&P stores. It is obvious that by using private-label products, a chain can achieve significant cost economies in purchasing, transportation, warehousing, promotion, and advertising. These economies may afford the chain opportunities for offering private-label products at lower prices than other brand-name products. This, in turn, provides many advantages of which some of the more important are: a store can offer national-brand products at the same price as other stores, while simultaneously offering a desirable, lower priced alternative; or, if the profit margin is sufficiently high on private-brand goods, national-brand products may be sold at reduced price. Other advantages include: enabling a chain to bargain more favorably with national-brand manufacturers by creating a broader supply base of manufacturers, thereby decreasing dependence on a few, large national-brand manufacturers; enabling a chain to create a "price-mix" whereby prices on special items can be lowered to attract customers while profits are maintained on other items; and creation of general goodwill by offering lower priced, higher quality goods.

<sup>4</sup>The three largest chains are A&P, Safeway, and Kroger.

I É ÁMÉRÍKÁ JÍ ÍFLÁGÁUÉODFFG ÍFFHEÁFSEÓAÉGA Á FÍ ÍFLÁJÍ GÁMEASÓYÓÁÍ I ÉLÁ73 U.S.P.Q.
 (BNA) 193, ****193

The United States charged that, beginning at least as early as 1960 [***522] and continuing up to the time that the complaint was filed, Topco had combined and conspired with its members to violate S.1<sup>5</sup> in two respects. First, the Government alleged that there existed:

"a continuing agreement, understanding and concert of action among the co-conspirator member firms acting through Topco, the substantial terms of which have been and are that each co-conspirator member firm will sell Topco-controlled brands only within the marketing territory allocated to it, and will refrain from selling Topco-controlled brands outside such marketing territory."

The division of marketing territories to which the complaint refers [****10] consists of a number of practices by the association.

Article IX, § 2, of the Topco bylaws establishes [195] three categories of territorial licenses that members may secure from the association:

"(a) Exclusive -- An exclusive territory is one in which the member is licensed to sell all products bearing specified trademarks of the Association, to the exclusion of all other persons.

"(b) Non-exclusive -- A non-exclusive territory is one in which a member is licensed to sell all products bearing specified trademarks of the Association, but not to the exclusion of others who may also be licensed to sell products bearing the same trademarks of the Association in the same territory.

"(c) Coextensive -- A coextensive territory is one [*602] in which two (2) or more members are licensed to sell all products [****11] bearing specified trademarks of the Association to the exclusion of all other persons. . ."

When applying for membership, a chain must designate the type of license that it desires. Membership must first be approved by the board of directors, and thereafter by an affirmative vote of 75% [**1131] of the association's members. If, however, the member whose operations are closest to those of the applicant, or any member whose operations are located within 100 miles of the applicant, votes against approval, an affirmative vote of 85% of the members is required for approval. Bylaws, Art. I, § 5. Because, as indicated by the record, members cooperate in accommodating each other's wishes, the procedure for approval provides, in essence, that members have a veto of sorts over actual or potential competition in the territorial areas in which they are concerned.

Following approval, each new member signs an agreement with Topco designating the territory in which that member may sell Topco-brand products. No member may sell these products outside the territory in which it is licensed. Most licenses are exclusive, and even those denominated "coextensive" or "non-exclusive" prove [****12] to be de facto exclusive. Exclusive territorial areas are often allocated to members who do no actual business in those areas on the theory that they may wish to expand at some indefinite future time and that expansion would likely be in the direction of the allocated territory. When combined with each member's veto power over new members, provisions for exclusivity work effectively to [***523] insulate members from competition in Topco-brand goods. Should a member violate its license agreement and sell in areas other than those in which it is licensed, its membership can be terminated under Art. IV, §§ 2 (a) and 2 (b) of the [*603] bylaws. Once a territory is classified as exclusive, either formally or de facto, it is extremely unlikely that the classification will ever be changed. See Bylaws, Art. IX.

LEdHN[2A] [2A]The Government maintains that this scheme of dividing markets violates the Sherman Act because it operates to prohibit competition in Topco-brand products among grocery chains engaged in retail operations. The Government also makes a subsidiary challenge to Topco's practices regarding [****13] licensing members to sell at wholesale. Under the bylaws, members are not permitted to sell any products supplied by the association at wholesale, whether trademarked or not, without first applying for and receiving special permission from the association to do so.<sup>6</sup> [***14] Before permission is granted, other licensees (usually retailers), whose

---

<sup>5</sup>Topco was named in the complaint as the sole defendant, but the complaint clearly charged that its members, while not defendants, were coconspirators in Topco's violation of the Sherman Act.

I ē ÁMĀJÍ ē HÁGÚDZFFG ē FFFFLÁFSEoAEGÁFÍ ē GLÁJÍ GÁMÉSÓYQÁFÍ ē LÁ73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, *****193

interests may potentially be affected by wholesale operations, are consulted as to their wishes in the matter. If permission is obtained, the member must agree to restrict [*604] the sale of Topco products to a specific geographic area and to sell under any conditions imposed by the association. Permission to wholesale has often been sought by members, only to be denied by the association. The Government contends that this amounts not only to a territorial restriction violative of the Sherman Act, but also to a restriction on [**1132] customers that in itself is violative of the Act.<sup>7</sup>

LEdHN[2B] [↑] [2B]

[196] From the inception of this lawsuit, Topco accepted as true most of the Government's allegations regarding territorial divisions and restrictions on wholesaling, although [***524] it differed greatly with the Government on the conclusions, both factual and legal, to be drawn from these facts.

Topco's answer to the complaint is [****15] illustrative of its posture in the District Court and before this Court:

"Private label merchandising is a way of economic life in the food retailing industry, and exclusivity is the essence of a private label program; without exclusivity, a private label would not be private. Each national and large regional chain has its own exclusive private label products in addition to the nationally advertised brands which all chains sell. Each such chain relies upon the exclusivity of its own private label line to differentiate its private [*605] label products from those of its competitors and to attract and retain the repeat business and loyalty of consumers. Smaller retail grocery stores and chains are unable to compete effectively with the national and large regional chains without also offering their own exclusive private label products.

....

"The only feasible method by which Topco can procure private label products and assure the exclusivity thereof is through trademark licenses specifying the territory in which each member may sell such trademarked products." Answer, App. 11.

Topco essentially maintains that it needs territorial divisions to compete with larger chains; [***16] that the association could not exist if the territorial divisions were anything but exclusive; and that by restricting competition in the sale of Topco-brand goods, the association actually increases competition by enabling its members to compete successfully with larger regional and national chains.

<sup>6</sup> Article IX, § 8, of the bylaws provides, in relevant part:

"Unless a member's membership and licensing agreement provides that such member may sell at wholesale, a member may not wholesale products supplied by the Association. If a membership and licensing agreement permits a member to sell at wholesale, such member shall control the resale of products bearing trademarks of the Association so that such sales are confined to the territories granted to the member, and the method of selling shall conform in all respects with the Association's policies."

Shortly before trial, Topco amended this bylaw with an addition that permitted any member to wholesale in the exclusive territories in which it retailed. But the restriction remained the same in all other cases.

It is apparent that this bylaw on its face applies whether or not the products sold are trademarked by Topco. Despite the fact that Topco's general manager testified at trial that, in practice, the restriction is confined to Topco-branded products, the District Court found that the bylaw is applied as written. We find nothing clearly erroneous in this finding. Assuming, arguendo, however, that the restriction is confined to products trademarked by Topco, the result in this case would not change.

<sup>7</sup> When the Government first raised this point in the District Court, Topco objected on the ground that it was at variance with the charge in the complaint. The District Court apparently agreed with Topco that the complaint did not cover customer limitations, but permitted the Government to pursue this line on the basis that if the limitations were proved, the complaint could later be amended. App. 141. Topco acquiesced in this procedure, and both sides dealt with customer limitations in examining witnesses. The District Court made specific findings and conclusions with respect to the totality of the restraints on wholesaling. In light of these facts, the additional fact that the complaint was never formally amended should not bar our consideration of the issue.

I É ÁMÉRÍKA JÍ ÉS É LÁGÚNÓDÉGGÉ EIFFHGLÁFÉSÖAEGÁ FÍ ÉSÉG LÁFJÍ GÁMEJESÓYÓJÁFÍ I ÉSÉG LÁ 73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, *****193

The District Court, considering all these things relevant to its decision, agreed with Topco. It recognized that the panoply of restraints that Topco imposed on its members worked to prevent competition in Topco-brand products,<sup>8</sup> but concluded that

"whatever anti-competitive effect these practices may have on competition [**1133] in the sale of Topco private [*606] label brands is far outweighed by the increased ability of Topco members to compete both with the national chains and other supermarkets operating in their respective territories." 319 F.Supp. 1031, 1043 \(1970\).

The court held that Topco's practices were procompetitive and, therefore, consistent with the purposes of the [***525] antitrust laws. But we conclude that the District Court used an improper analysis in reaching its result.

[****17] III

LEdHN[3] [3]On its face, § 1 of the Sherman Act appears to bar any combination of entrepreneurs so long as it is "in restraint of trade." Theoretically, all manufacturers, distributors, merchants, sellers, and buyers could be considered as potential competitors of each other. Were § 1 to be read in the narrowest possible way, any commercial contract could be deemed to violate it. Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238 \(1918\) (Brandeis, J.). The history underlying the formulation of the antitrust laws led this Court to conclude, however, that Congress did not intend to prohibit all contracts, nor even all contracts that might in some insignificant degree or attenuated sense restrain trade or competition. In lieu of the narrowest possible reading of § 1, HN2 [4] the Court adopted a "rule of reason" analysis for determining [*607] whether most business combinations or contracts violate the [197] prohibitions of the Sherman Act. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1 \(1911\). [****18] An analysis of the reasonableness of particular restraints includes consideration of the facts peculiar to the business in which the restraint is applied, the nature of the restraint and its effects, and the history of the restraint and the reasons for its adoption. Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, supra, at 238.

LEdHN[4] [4]While the Court has utilized the "rule of reason" in evaluating the legality of most restraints alleged to be violative of the Sherman Act, it has also developed the doctrine that certain business relationships are per se violations of the Act without regard to a consideration of their reasonableness. In Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 \(1958\), Mr. Justice Black explained the appropriateness of, and the need for, per se rules:

"There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse [****19] for their use. This principle of per se unreasonableness not only makes the type of restraints which are proscribed by the Sherman Act more certain to the benefit of everyone concerned, but it also avoids the necessity for an incredibly complicated and prolonged economic investigation into the entire history of the industry involved, as well as related industries, in an effort to determine at large whether a particular restraint has been unreasonable -- an inquiry so often wholly fruitless when undertaken."

<sup>8</sup>The District Court recognized that "the government has introduced evidence indicating that some applications by Topco members to expand into territories assigned to other members have been denied," 319 F.Supp. 1031, 1042, but concluded that these decisions by Topco did not have an appreciable influence on the decision of members as to whether or not to expand. Topco expands on this conclusion in its brief by asserting that "the evidence is uncontradicted that a member has never failed to build a new store because it was unable to obtain a license." Brief for Appellee 18 n. 18. The problem with the conclusion of the District Court and the assertion by Topco is that they are wholly inconsistent with the notion that territorial divisions are crucial to the existence of Topco, as urged by the association and found by the District Court. From the filing of its answer to the argument before this Court, Topco has maintained that without a guarantee of an exclusive territory, prospective licensees would not join Topco and present licensees would leave the association. It is difficult to understand how Topco can make this argument and simultaneously urge that territorial restrictions are an unimportant factor in the decision of a member on whether to expand its business.

I É ÁMÉRÍKA JÍ ÉS É LÁGÚNÓDÉTTFFG ÉFFFHÁFSEÓAEGÁ FÍ ÉTÉ GÍ LÁFJÍ GÁNEJESÓYQÁFÍ ÉFFFJLÁ 73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, *****193

LEdHN[5] [5] LEdHN[6] [6] It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se [*608] violations of the Sherman Act. See generally Van Cise, The Future of Per Se in Antitrust Law, 50 Va. L. Rev. 1165 (1964). One of the classic examples of HN3 [1] a per se violation of § 1 is an agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in [***20] order to minimize competition. [***526] Such concerted action is usually termed a "horizontal" restraint, in contradistinction to combinations of persons at different levels of the market structure, e. g., manufacturers and distributors, which are termed "vertical" restraints. This Court has reiterated time and time again that "horizontal territorial limitations . . . are naked restraints of trade with no purpose [**1134] except stifling of competition." White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263 (1963). Such limitations are per se violations of the Sherman Act. See Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211 (1899), aff'd 85 F. 271 (CA6 1898) (Taft, J.); United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U.S. 319 (1947); Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593 (1951); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, supra; Citizen Publishing Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131 (1969); United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S. 350 (1967); United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 390 (1967) [***21] (STEWART, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); Serta Associates, Inc. v. United States, 393 U.S. 534 (1969), aff'd 296 F.Supp. 1121, 1128 (ND Ill. 1968).

LEdHN[1B] [1B] We think that it is clear that the restraint in this case is a horizontal one, and, therefore, a per se violation of § 1. The District Court failed to make any determination as to whether there were per se horizontal territorial restraints in this case and simply applied a rule of reason in reaching its conclusions that the restraints were not illegal. See, e. g., Comment, Horizontal Territorial Restraints and the Per Se Rule, 28 Wash. & Lee L. Rev. 457, 469 (1971). In so doing, the District Court erred.

[*609] LEdHN[7A] [7A] United States v. Sealy, Inc., supra, is, in fact, on all fours with this case. Sealy licensed manufacturers of mattresses and bedding to make and sell products using the Sealy trademark. Like Topco, Sealy was a corporation owned almost entirely by its licensees, [***22] who elected the Board of Directors and controlled the business. Just as in this case, Sealy agreed with the licensees not to license other manufacturers or sellers to sell Sealy-brand products in a designated territory in exchange for the promise of the licensee who sold in that territory not to expand its sales beyond the area demarcated by Sealy. The Court held that this was a horizontal territorial restraint, which was per se violative of the Sherman Act.<sup>9</sup>

LEdHN[7B] [7B]

LEdHN[8] [8] Whether or not we would decide this case the same way under the rule of reason used by the District [***23] Court is irrelevant to the issue before us. The fact is that courts are of limited utility in examining difficult economic problems.<sup>10</sup> Our inability to weigh, in [***527] any meaningful [*610] [198] sense, destruction

<sup>9</sup> It is true that in Sealy the Court dealt with price fixing as well as territorial restrictions. To the extent that Sealy casts doubt on whether horizontal territorial limitations, unaccompanied by price fixing, are per se violations of the Sherman Act, we remove that doubt today.

<sup>10</sup> There has been much recent commentary on the wisdom of per se rules. See, e. g., Comment, Horizontal Territorial Restraints and the Per Se Rule, 28 Wash. & Lee L. Rev. 457 (1971); Averill, Sealy, Schwinn and Sherman One: An Analysis and Prognosis, 15 N. Y. L. F. 39 (1969); Note, Selected Antitrust Problems of the Franchisor: Exclusive Arrangements, Territorial Restrictions, and Franchise Termination, 22 U. Fla. L. Rev. 260, 286 (1969); Sadd, Antitrust Symposium: Territorial and Customer Restrictions After Sealy and Schwinn, 38 U. Cin. L. Rev. 249, 252-253 (1969); Bork, The Rule of Reason and the Per Se Concept, pt. 1, Price Fixing and Market Division, 74 Yale L. J. 775 (1965).

Without the per se rules, businessmen would be left with little to aid them in predicting in any particular case what courts will find to be legal and illegal under the Sherman Act. Should Congress ultimately determine that predictability is unimportant in this area of the law, it can, of course, make per se rules inapplicable in some or all cases, and leave courts free to ramble through the wilds of economic theory in order to maintain a flexible approach.

I É ÁMÉRÍ JÍ ÉÉ FELÁGÚÉDÁFFGÉÉFHÍ LÁFSEÓAÉGÁFÍ ÉÉÉGÍ LÁJÍ GÁMÉRÉSÓYQÁFÍ ÉÉÉGHÁ73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, *****193

of competition in one sector of the economy against promotion of competition in another sector is one important reason we have formulated per se rules.

[****24] LEDHN[9] [9] In applying these rigid rules, the Court has consistently rejected the notion that [**1135] naked restraints of trade are to be tolerated because they are well intended or because they are allegedly developed to increase competition. E. g., United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 146-147 (1966); United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265 (1942); Fashion Originators' Guild v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457 (1941).

LEdHN10 [10] Antitrust laws in general, and the Sherman Act in particular, are the Magna Carta of free enterprise. They are as important to the preservation of economic freedom and our free-enterprise system as the Bill of Rights is to the protection of our fundamental personal freedoms. And the freedom guaranteed each and every business, no matter how small, is the freedom to compete -- to assert with vigor, imagination, devotion, and ingenuity whatever economic muscle it can muster. Implicit in such freedom is the notion that it cannot be foreclosed [****25] with respect to one sector of the economy because certain private citizens or groups believe that such foreclosure might promote greater competition in a more important sector of the economy. Cf. United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 371 (1963).

The District Court determined that by limiting the freedom of its individual members to compete with each other, Topco was doing a greater good by fostering competition between members and other large supermarket chains. But, the fallacy in this is that Topco has no authority under the Sherman Act to determine the [*611] respective values of competition in various sectors of the economy. On the contrary, the Sherman Act gives to each Topco member and to each prospective member the right to ascertain for itself whether or not competition with other supermarket chains is more desirable than competition in the sale of Topco-brand products. Without territorial restrictions, Topco members may indeed "[cut] each other's throats." Cf. White Motor Co., supra, at 278 (Clark, J., dissenting). But, we have never found this possibility sufficient to warrant condoning horizontal restraints of trade.

[***26] LEdHN11 [↑] [11] The Court has previously noted HN4 [↑] with respect to price fixing, another per se violation of the Sherman Act, that:

"[***528] The reasonable price fixed today may through economic and business changes become the unreasonable price of tomorrow. Once established, it may be maintained unchanged because of the absence of competition secured by the agreement for a price reasonable when fixed." United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 397 (1927).

A similar observation can be made with regard to territorial limitations. White Motor Co., supra, at 265 n. 2 (BRENNAN, J., concurring).

L*E*d*H*N*[12] [12] There have been tremendous departures from the notion of a free-enterprise system as it was originally conceived in this country. These departures have been the product of congressional action and the will of the people. If a decision is to be made to sacrifice competition in one portion of the economy for greater competition in another portion, this too is a decision that must be made [****27] by Congress and not by private forces or by the courts. Private forces are too keenly aware of their own interests in making such decisions and courts are ill-equipped and ill-situated for such decisionmaking. To analyze, interpret, and evaluate the myriad of competing interests and the endless data that would surely be brought to [*612] bear on such decisions, and to make the delicate judgment on the relative values to society of competitive areas of the economy, the judgment of the elected representatives of the people is required.

LEdHN[1C] [1C] Just as the territorial restrictions on retailing Topco-brand products must fall, so must the territorial restrictions on wholesaling. The considerations are [**1136] the same, and the Sherman Act requires identical results.

I ÉÍ ÁNÉJÁ JÍ ÉÍ FGÁGÚÉDÉÉFGÍ ÉÍFFHÍ LÁFSEÓAÉGÁFÍ ÉÍGÍ LÁFJÍ GÁNEÉSÓYQÁFÍ ÉÍFGÍ LÁ 73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, *****193

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13] We also strike down Topco's other restrictions on the right of its members to wholesale goods. These restrictions amount to regulation of the customers to whom members of Topco may sell Topco-brand goods. Like territorial restrictions, limitations on customers [****28] are intended to limit intra-brand competition and to promote inter-brand competition. For the reasons previously discussed, the arena in [199] which Topco members compete must be left to their unfettered choice absent a contrary congressional determination. United States v. General Motors Corp., *supra*; cf. United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., *supra*; United States v. Masonite Corp., *supra*; United States v. Trenton Potteries, *supra*. See also, White Motor Co., *supra*, at 281-283 (Clark, J., dissenting).

We reverse the judgment of the District Court and remand the case for entry of an appropriate decree.

It is so ordered.

MR. JUSTICE POWELL and MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Concur by: BLACKMUN

Concur

MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN, concurring in the result.

The conclusion the Court reaches has its anomalous aspects, for surely, as the District Court's findings make clear, today's decision in the Government's favor will tend to stultify Topco members' competition with the great and larger chains. The bigs, therefore, should [***529] find it easier to get [****29] bigger and, as a consequence, reality [*613] seems at odds with the public interest. The per se rule, however, now appears to be so firmly established by the Court that, at this late date, I could not oppose it. Relief, if any is to be forthcoming, apparently must be by way of legislation.

Dissent by: BURGER

Dissent

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER, dissenting.

This case does not involve restraints on interbrand competition or an allocation of markets by an association with monopoly or near-monopoly control of the sources of supply of one or more varieties of staple goods. Rather, we have here an agreement among several small grocery chains to join in a cooperative endeavor that, in my view, has an unquestionably lawful principal purpose; in pursuit of that purpose they have mutually agreed to certain minimal ancillary restraints that are fully reasonable in view of the principal purpose and that have never before today been held by this Court to be per se violations of the Sherman Act.

In joining in this cooperative endeavor, these small chains did not agree to the restraints here at issue in order to make it possible for them to exploit an already established line of products [****30] through noncompetitive pricing. There was no such thing as a Topco line of products until this cooperative was formed. The restraints to which the cooperative's members have agreed deal only with the marketing of the products in the Topco line, and the only function of those restraints is to permit each member chain to establish, within its own geographical area and through its own local advertising and marketing efforts, a local consumer awareness of the trademarked family of products as that member's "private label" line. The goal sought was the enhancement of the individual members' abilities to compete, albeit to a modest degree, with the large national chains which had been successfully marketing private-label lines for [*614] several years. The sole reason for a cooperative endeavor was to make economically feasible such things as quality control, large quantity purchases at bulk prices, the development of attractively printed labels, and the ability to offer a number of different lines of trademarked products. All these things, of course, are feasible for the large national chains operating individually, but [**1137] they are beyond the reach of the small operators [****31] proceeding alone.<sup>1</sup>

I É ÁMÉRÍKA JÍ Í FI LÁGUÉODA ZFFG ÉEFFHÍ LÁFSEÓA EGA Á FÍ ÉEFF GJLÁFJÍ GÁMEESÓYQÁFÍ Í ÉEFFHÍ CLÁ 73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, ****193

After a careful review of the economic considerations bearing upon this case, the District Court determined that "the relief which the government here seeks would not increase competition in Topco private label brands"; on the contrary, such relief "would substantially diminish competition in the supermarket field." 319 F.Supp. 1031, 1043. This Court has not today determined, on the basis of an examination of the underlying economic realities, that the District Court's conclusions are incorrect. Rather, the majority holds that the [***530] District Court had no business examining Topco's [****32] practices under the "rule of reason"; it should not have sought to determine whether Topco's practices did in fact restrain trade or commerce within the meaning of § 1 of the Sherman Act; it should have found no more than that those practices involve a "horizontal division of markets" and are, by that very fact, per se violations of the Act.

I do not believe that our prior decisions justify the result reached by the majority. Nor do I believe that a new per se rule should be established in disposing of this case, for the judicial convenience and ready predictability [*615] that are made possible by per se rules are not such overriding considerations in antitrust law as to justify their promulgation without careful prior consideration of the relevant economic realities in the light of the basic policy and goals of the Sherman Act.

I

I deal first with the cases upon which the majority relies in stating that "this Court has reiterated time and time again that 'horizontal territorial limitations . . . are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition.' White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263 \(1963\)." [***33] White Motor, of course, laid down no per se rule; nor were any horizontal territorial limitations involved in that case. Indeed, it was in White Motor that this Court reversed the District Court's holding that vertically imposed territorial limitations were per se violations, explaining that "we need to know more than we do about the actual impact of these arrangements [200] on competition to decide whether they . . . should be classified as per se violations of the Sherman Act." 372 U.S., at 263. The statement from the White Motor opinion quoted by the majority today was made without citation of authority and was apparently intended primarily to make clear that the facts then before the Court were not to be confused with horizontally imposed territorial limitations. To treat dictum in that case as controlling here would, of course, be unjustified.

Having quoted this dictum from White Motor, the Court then cites eight cases for the proposition that horizontal territorial limitations are per se violations of the Sherman Act. One of these cases, Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1 \(1958\), dealt exclusively [****34] with a prohibited tying arrangement and is improperly cited as a case concerned with a division of [*616] markets.<sup>2</sup> Of the remaining seven cases, four involved an aggregation of trade restraints that included price-fixing agreements. Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593 [**11381] (1951); United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S. 350 \(1967\);<sup>3</sup> [***531] Serta Associates, Inc. v. United

<sup>1</sup> The District Court's findings of fact include the following:

"33. A competitively effective private label program to be independently undertaken by a single retailer or chain would require an annual sales volume of $ 250 million or more and in order to achieve optimum efficiency, the volume required would probably have to be twice that amount." 319 F.Supp. 1031, 1036.

<sup>2</sup> There is dictum in the case to the effect that United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271 \(CA6 1898\), aff'd, 175 U.S. 211 \(1899\), established a "division of markets" as unlawful in and of itself. 356 U.S., at 5. As I will show, however, Addyston Pipe established no such thing; it was primarily a price-fixing case.

<sup>3</sup> I cannot agree with the Court's description of Sealy as being "on all fours with this case." Ante, at 609. Sealy does support the proposition that the restraints on the Topco licensees are horizontally imposed. Beyond that, however, Sealy is hardly controlling here. The territorial restrictions in Sealy were found by this Court to be so intimately a part of an unlawful price-fixing and policing scheme that the two arrangements fell together:

I ē ÁVUĀ JÍ ÉÉ FÍ LÁGUAÉDÉFFG ÊÉFFHÌ LÁFÄÓAÉGA Á FÍ ÉÉ HFLAFJÍ GÁNÉESÓYQÁFÍ I ÉÉHÌ LÁ 73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, *****193

States, 393 U.S. 534 (1969), aff'g 296 F.Supp. 1121 (ND Ill. 1968). Price fixing is, of course, not a factor in the instant case.

[****35] Another of the cases relied upon by the Court, United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U.S. 319 (1947), involved a world-wide arrangement<sup>4</sup> [****36] for dividing territories, [*617] pooling patents, and exchanging technological information. The arrangement was found illegal by the District Court without any reliance on a per se rule;<sup>5</sup> this Court, in affirming, was concerned almost exclusively with the remedies ordered by the District Court and made no attempt to declare a per se rule to govern the merits of the case.

In still another case on which the majority relies, United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365 (1967), the District Court had, indeed, held that the agreements between the manufacturer and certain of its distributors, providing the latter with exclusive territories, were horizontal in nature and that they were, as such, per se violations of the [****37] Act. 237 F.Supp. 323, 342-343. Since no appeal was taken from this part of the District Court's order,<sup>6</sup> that issue was not before this Court in its review of the case. Indeed, in dealing with the issues that were before it, this Court followed an approach markedly different from that of the District Court. First, in reviewing the case here, the Court made it clear that it was proceeding under the "rule of [*618] reason," and not by per se rule;<sup>7</sup> [****38] second, [***532] the Court saw the issues [201] presented as involving 13 [**1139] vertical, not horizontal, restraints.<sup>8</sup> It can hardly be contended, therefore, that this Court's decision in Schwinn is controlling precedent for the application in the instant case of a per se rule that prohibits horizontal restraints without regard to their market effects.

"This unlawful resale price-fixing activity refutes appellee's claim that the territorial restraints were mere incidents of a lawful program of trademark licensing. Cf. Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 1341 U.S. 593 (1951). The territorial restraints were a part of the unlawful price-fixing and policing." 388 U.S., at 356.

<sup>4</sup> In summarizing its findings, the District Court made the following statements:

"When the story is seen as a whole, there is no blinking the fact that there is no free commerce in titanium. Every pound of it is trammelled by privately imposed regulation. The channels of this commerce have not been formed by the winds and currents of competition. They are, in large measure, artificial canals privately constructed. . . .

....

". . . No titanium pigments enter the United States except with the consent of NL [defendant National Lead]. No foreign titanium pigments move in interstate commerce except with like approval. No titanium pigment produced by NL may leave the ports of the United States for points outside the Western Hemisphere." 63 F.Supp. 513, 521-522.

<sup>5</sup> The District Court clearly decided the case under the "rule of reason." It found that there was "a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade; and the restraint is unreasonable. As such it is outlawed by Section 1 of the Sherman Act." 63 F.Supp., at 523 (emphasis added). The court rejected the argument made by the defense that the basic agreement on which the arrangement was founded was permissible under "the doctrine which validates covenants in restraint of trade when reasonably ancillary to a lawful principal purpose . . . . The world-wide territorial allocation was unreasonable in scope when measured against the business actualities." Id., at 524 (emphasis added).

<sup>6</sup> "The appellees did not appeal from the findings and order invalidating [territorial] restraints on resale by distributors. . . ." 388 U.S., at 368.

<sup>7</sup> "The Government does not contend that a per se violation of the Sherman Act is presented by the practices which are involved in this appeal . . . . Accordingly, we are remitted to an appraisal of the market impact of these practices.

". . . We must look to the specifics of the challenged practices and their impact upon the marketplace in order to make a judgment as to whether the restraint is or is not 'reasonable' in the special sense in which § 1 of the Sherman Act must be read for purposes of this type of inquiry." 388 U.S., at 373-374.

<sup>8</sup> "We are here confronted with challenged vertical restrictions as to territory and dealers. . . . These are not horizontal restraints, in which the actors are distributors with or without the manufacturer's participation." 388 U.S., at 372.

I ÉÍ ÁNUÉJÁ JÍ ÉÍ FÍ LÁGÚÉDÓÉFGÍ ÉÍFFHULÁFSEÓAÉGÁ FÍ ÉÍ HGLÁJÍ GÁNEÉSÓYQÁFÍ ÉÍ LÁ 73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, *****193

Finally, there remains the eighth of the cases relied upon by the Court -- actually, the first in its list of "authorities" for the purported per se rule. Circuit Judge (later Chief Justice) Taft's opinion for the court in United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271 (CA6 1898), aff'd, 175 U.S. 211 (1899), has generally been recognized -- and properly so -- as a fully authoritative exposition of antitrust law. But neither he, nor this Court in affirming, made any pretense of establishing a per se rule against all agreements involving horizontal territorial limitations. The defendants in that case were manufacturers and vendors of cast-iron pipe who had "entered into a combination to raise the prices for pipe" throughout a number of States "constituting considerably more than three-quarters [***39] of the territory of the United States, and significantly called . . . 'pay territory.'" 85 F., at 291. The associated defendants in [*619] combination controlled two-thirds of the manufactured output of such pipe in this "pay territory"; certain cities ("reserved" cities) within the territory were assigned to particular individual defendants who sold pipe in those cities at prices fixed by the association, the other defendants submitting fictitious bids and the selling defendants paying a fixed "bonus" to the association for each sale. Outside the "reserved" cities, all sales by the defendants to customers in the "pay territory" were, again, at prices determined by the association and were allocated to the association member who offered, in a secret auction, to pay the largest "bonus" to the association itself. The effect was, of course, that the buying public lost all benefit of competitive pricing. Although the case has frequently -- and quite properly -- been cited as a horizontal allocation-of-markets case, the sole purpose of the secret customer allocations was to enable the members of the association to fix prices charged to the public at noncompetitive [***40] levels. Judge Taft rejected the defendants' argument that the prices actually charged were "reasonable"; he held that it was sufficient for a finding of a Sherman Act violation that the combination and agreement of the defendants gave them such monopoly power that they, rather than market forces, fixed the prices of all cast-iron pipe in three-fourths of the Nation's territory. The case unquestionably laid important groundwork for the subsequent establishment [***533] of the per se rule against price fixing. It did not, however, establish that a horizontal division of markets is, without more, a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

11

The foregoing analysis of the cases relied upon by the majority indicates to me that the Court is not merely following prior holdings; on the contrary, it is establishing [*620] a new per se rule. In the face of the District Court's well supported findings that the effects of such a rule in this case will be adverse to the public welfare,<sup>9</sup> the Court lays down that [**1140] rule without regard to the impact that the condemned practices may have on competition. In doing so, the Court virtually invites Congress to undertake [****41] to determine that impact. Ante, at 611-612. I question whether the Court is fulfilling the role assigned to it under the statute when it declines to make this determination; in any event, if the Court is unwilling on this record to assess the economic impact, it surely should not proceed to make a new rule to govern the economic activity. White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S., at 263.

[****42] When one of his versions of the proposed Act was before the Senate for consideration in 1890, Senator Sherman, in a lengthy, and obviously carefully prepared, address to that body, said that the bill sought "only to prevent and control combinations made with a view to prevent competition, or for the restraint of trade, or to increase the profits of the producer at the cost of the consumer. It is the unlawful combination, [202] tested by the rules of common law and human experience, that is aimed at [*621] by this bill, and not the lawful and useful combination.

... ■ ■ ■ ■

<sup>9</sup> Among the facts found by the District Court are the following: private-label brand merchandising, which is beyond the reach of the small chains acting independently and which by definition depends upon local exclusivity, permits the merchandiser to offer the public "lower consumer prices on products of high quality" and "to bargain more favorably with national brand manufacturers"; such merchandising fosters "the establishment of a broader supply base of manufacturers, thereby decreasing dependence upon a relatively few, large national brand manufacturers"; it also enables "smaller manufacturers, the most common source of private label products, who are generally unable to develop national brand name recognition for their products, [to] benefit . . . by the assurance of a substantial market for their products. . . ." 319 F.Supp., at 1035.

I É ÁMÉRÍKA JÍ ÚT OFLÁGÚDÖÖFFÍ ELÁFSEÓAEGÁ FÍ ÚT HHLÁFJÍ GÁMEJESÓYQÁFÍ ÚT GLÁ 73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, *****193

"I admit that it is difficult to define in legal language the precise line between lawful and unlawful combinations. This must be left for the courts to determine in each particular case. All that we, as lawmakers, can do is to declare general principles, and we can be assured that the courts will apply them so as to carry out the meaning of the law . . ." 21 Cong. Rec. 2457, 2460.

In "carry[ing] out the meaning of the law" by making its "determin[ations] in each particular case," this Court early concluded that it was Congress' intent that a "rule of reason" be applied in making such case-by-case [****43] determinations. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 60 (1911). And that rule of reason was to be applied in light of the Act's policy to protect the "public interests." United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 179 (1911). [***534] The per se rules that have been developed are similarly directed to the protection of the public welfare; they are complementary to, and in no way inconsistent with, the rule of reason. The principal advantages that flow from their use are, first, that enforcement and predictability are enhanced and, second, that unnecessary judicial investigation is avoided in those cases where practices falling within the scope of such rules are found. As the Court explained in Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, supra, at 5,

"There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use."

[*622] In formulating a new per se rule today, [****44] the Court does not tell us what "pernicious effect on competition" the practices here outlawed are perceived to have; nor does it attempt to show that those practices "lack . . . any redeeming virtue." Rather, it emphasizes only the importance of predictability, asserting that "courts are of limited utility in examining difficult economic problems" and have not yet been left free by Congress [**1141] to "ramble through the wilds of economic theory in order to maintain a flexible approach." <sup>10</sup>

With all respect, I believe that there are two basic fallacies in the Court's approach here. First, while I would not characterize our role under [****45] the Sherman Act as one of "rambl[ing] through the wilds," it is indeed one that requires our "examin[ation of] difficult economic problems." We can undoubtedly ease our task, but we should not abdicate that role by formulation of per se rules with no justification other than the enhancement of predictability and the reduction of judicial investigation. Second, from the general proposition that per se rules play a necessary role in antitrust law, it does not follow that the particular per se rule promulgated today is an appropriate one. Although it might well be desirable in a proper case for this Court to formulate a per se rule dealing with horizontal territorial limitations, it would not necessarily be appropriate for such a rule to amount to a blanket prohibition against all such limitations. More specifically, it is far from clear to me why such a rule should cover those division-of-market agreements that involve no price fixing and which are concerned [*623] only with trademarked products that are not in a monopoly or near-monopoly position with respect to competing brands. The instant case presents such an agreement; I would not decide it upon the [****46] basis of a per se rule. <sup>11</sup>

The [***535] District Court specifically found that the horizontal [****47] restraints involved here tend positively to promote competition in the supermarket field and to produce lower costs for the consumer. The Court seems implicitly to accept this determination, but says that the Sherman Act does not give Topco the authority to determine <sup>10</sup> It seems ironical to me that in another antitrust case decided today, Ford Motor Co. v. United States, ante, p. 562, the Court, in contrast to its handling of the instant case, goes out of its way to commend another District Court for its treatment of a problem involving "predictions and assumptions concerning future economic and business events." Id., at 578.

<sup>11</sup> The national chains market their own private-label products, and these products are available nowhere else than in the stores of those chains. The stores of any one chain, of course, do not engage in price competition with each other with respect to their chain's private-label brands, and no serious suggestion could be made that the Sherman Act requires otherwise. I fail to see any difference whatsoever in the economic effect of the Topco arrangement for the marketing of Topco-brand products and the methods used by the national chains in marketing their private-label brands. True, the Topco arrangement involves a "combination," while each of the national chains is a single integrated corporation. The controlling consideration, however, should be that in neither case is the policy of the Sherman Act offended, for the practices in both cases work to the benefit, and not to the detriment, of the consuming public.

I É ÁMÉRÍKA JÍ ÍNÍ CHÁÍGÁUODZFFG ÉIFFI FLÁFSEÓAEGÁ FÍ ÍNÍ HÍ LÁFJÍ GÁNEESÓYQÁFÍ Í NÍLÁ 73 U.S.P.Q.
(BNA) 193, *****193

for itself "whether or not competition with other supermarket chains is more desirable than competition in the sale of Topco-brand products." Ante, at 611. But the majority overlooks a further specific determination of [203] the District Court, namely, that the invalidation of the restraints here at issue "would not increase competition in Topco private label brands." 319 F.Supp., at 1043. Indeed, the District Court seemed to believe that it would, on the contrary, lead to the likely demise of those brands in time. And the evidence before the District Court would appear to justify that conclusion.

[*624] There is no national demand for Topco brands, nor has there ever been any national advertising of those brands. It would be impracticable for Topco, with its limited financial resources, to convert itself into a national brand distributor in competition with distributors of existing national brands. [****48] Furthermore, without the right to grant exclusive licenses, it could not attract and hold new members as replacements for those of its present members who, following the pattern of the past, eventually grow sufficiently in size to be able to leave the [*1142] cooperative organization and develop their own individual private-label brands. Moreover, Topco's present members, once today's decision has had its full impact over the course of time, will have no more reason to promote Topco products through local advertising and merchandising efforts than they will have such reason to promote any other generally available brands.

The issues presented by the antitrust cases reaching this Court are rarely simple to resolve under the rule of reason; they do indeed frequently require us to make difficult economic determinations. We should not for that reason alone, however, be overly zealous in formulating new per se rules, for an excess of zeal in that regard is both contrary to the policy of the Sherman Act and detrimental to the welfare of consumers generally. Indeed, the economic effect of the new rule laid down by the Court today seems clear: unless Congress intervenes, grocery [****49] staples marketed under private-label brands with their lower consumer prices will soon be available only to those who patronize the large national chains.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 32, 73-75

14 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms, Monopolies, Combinations, and Restraints of Trade, Forms 14:316, 14:324

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 51, 53

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 21, 24, 38

L Ed Index to Anno, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Validity under federal antitrust laws of agreement conferring exclusive sales agency for designated territory. 9 L Ed 2d 1235.

Flood v. Kuhn

Supreme Court of the United States

March 20, 1972, Argued ; June 19, 1972, Decided

No. 71-32

Reporter

407 U.S. 258 *; 92 S. Ct. 2099 **; 32 L. Ed. 2d 728 ***; 1972 U.S. LEXIS 138 ****; 1972 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,041

FLOOD v. KUHN ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 443 F.2d 264, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

baseball, anti trust law, antitrust, players, exemption, cases, League, commerce, boxing, sport, overrule, Flood, decisions, team, major league, exhibitions, professional baseball, interstate commerce, stare decisis, re-examination, season, professional sports, Sherman Act, bargaining, football, inaction, Appeals, ball, major league baseball, no intention

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Baseball

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

**HN1** [down arrow] Sports, Baseball

Professional baseball is a business and it is engaged in interstate commerce. With its reserve system enjoying exemption from the federal antitrust laws, baseball is, in a very distinct sense, an exception and an anomaly. Even though others might regard this as unrealistic, inconsistent, or illogical, the aberration is an established one. It is an aberration that has been with us now for half a century, one heretofore deemed fully entitled to the benefit of stare decisis, and one that has survived the court's expanding concept of interstate commerce. It rests on a recognition and an acceptance of baseball's unique characteristics and needs. Other professional sports operating interstate are not so exempt.

I € ÁNÆÐEJÍ ÞÁRG Í LÁI GÁUÐEÐEJÍ ÞÁRG Í LÁI GÁUÐEÐEJÍ

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Regulated Industries, Sports

Since 1922 baseball, with full and continuing congressional awareness, has been allowed to develop and to expand unhindered by federal legislative action. Remedial legislation has been introduced repeatedly in Congress but none has ever been enacted. The court, accordingly, has concluded that Congress as yet has had no intention to subject baseball's reserve system to the reach of the antitrust statutes. This, obviously, has been deemed to be something other than mere congressional silence and passivity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Baseball

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

HN3 [] Sports, Baseball

State antitrust regulation would conflict with federal policy, and national uniformity is required in any regulation of baseball and its reserve system.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Baseball

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Judicial Estoppel

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Ge

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

4 [blue icon] Sports, Baseball

As the burden on interstate

Commerce Clause precludes the application of state antitrust law.

© 2013 Pearson Education, Inc.

major league team without being consulted about the trade, complained to the Commissioner of Baseball and sought to be made a free agent to bargain with any other major league team. After denial of his request, the player instituted an action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York against the Commissioner and the presidents and clubs of the two major leagues, challenging baseball's reserve system as, inter alia, violative of federal and state antitrust laws. The District Court found for the defendants (316 F Supp 271), and the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed (443 F2d 264), both courts ruling that the question was controlled by the United States Supreme Court decisions in (1) *Federal Baseball Club v National League, 259 US 200, 66 L Ed 898, 42 S Ct 465, 26 ALR 357*, which held that the business of professional baseball was not within the scope of federal antitrust laws, because it did not constitute interstate commerce, and (2) *Toolson v New York Yankees, Inc., 346 US 356, 98 L Ed 64, 74 S Ct 78*, which held that the decision in the Federal Baseball Club Case would not be overruled, since Congress, in the intervening 30-year period, had not brought baseball under the antitrust laws by legislation, but had instead allowed the business to develop on the understanding that it was not subject to antitrust laws.

I ē ÁMEĀG I ēG I LÁGUAÉG JÉGEGJ LÁGSEÓaÉG A Gí ÉTÉG I LAFJÍ GÁNÉSÓYQÁFHÍ ÉTÉF

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Blackmun, J., it was held, expressing the views of five members of the court, that (1) any change in the long-established judicial exemption of professional baseball, unlike other professional sports, from the federal antitrust laws, was a matter for Congress, not the Supreme Court, and (2) state antitrust laws did not apply to professional baseball.

Burger, Ch. J., concurring, expressed grave reservations as to the correctness of *Toolson v New York Yankees, Inc., supra*, but stated that the least undesirable course was to let the matter rest with Congress.

Douglas, J., joined by Brennan, J., dissented on the grounds that (1) under the modern concept of commerce, baseball was subject to federal antitrust regulation, and (2) the Supreme Court, having created the judicial exemption for baseball, should remove it.

Marshall, J., joined by Brennan, J., dissented, expressing the views that (1) the Supreme Court should admit the error in the Federal Baseball Club Case decision, and should correct it, making baseball prospectively subject to the antitrust laws unless Congress decided otherwise, and (2) the case should be remanded to determine whether there was a violation of the antitrust laws, and to further consider the unresolved questions whether baseball's reserve system was part of a collective bargaining agreement, and because it was a mandatory subject of bargaining, federal labor statutes, rather than antitrust laws, were applicable.

Powell, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

COURTS §141 > judicial antitrust exemption -- professional baseball -- legislative remedy -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

Any change in the long-established judicial exemption of professional baseball and its reserve system, unlike other professional sports, from the federal antitrust laws--which exemption was established in *Federal Baseball Club v National League, 259 US 200, 66 L Ed 898, 42 S Ct 465, 26 ALR 357*, and followed in *Toolson v New York Yankees, Inc., 346 US 356, 98 L Ed 64, 74 S Ct 78*, with Congress, by positive inaction, allowing the decisions to stand and evincing a desire not to disapprove of them legislatively--is a matter for Congress, and the United States Supreme Court will not overturn such judicial exemption.

MONOPOLIES §11 > professional baseball -- judicial exemption -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

I € ÁNÆÐÍG I ÆRG I LÁI GÁUÐÓÐEÐEJ ÆRGÆJJ LÁHGÆSSÓÐA ÆGAÅ G ÆAÐI G LAFJÍ CÁWÆÐASÓY QUÁFHÍ ÆAÐI

Although professional baseball is a business engaged in interstate commerce, nevertheless with its reserve system enjoying a judicially established exemption from the federal antitrust laws, unlike other professional sports, baseball is an exception and an anomaly--such exemption being an aberration confined to baseball.

MONOPOLIES §11 > professional baseball -- judicial exemption -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[3] [  ] [3]

The long established exemption of professional baseball and its reserve system from the federal antitrust laws, which exemption was established in United States Supreme Court decisions, rests on a recognition and an acceptance of baseball's unique characteristics and needs.

MONOPOLIES §11 > interstate commerce -- professional sports -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[4] [  ] [4]

Unlike professional baseball, other professional sports operating interstate--football, boxing, basketball, and, presumably, hockey and golf--are not exempt from federal antitrust laws.

COMMERCE §143 > MONOPOLIES §4 > professional baseball -- state antitrust laws -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[5] [  ] [5]

State antitrust laws do not apply to professional baseball because state antitrust regulation would conflict with federal policy exempting baseball from federal antitrust laws, and because national uniformity is required in any regulation of baseball and its reserve system; as the burden on interstate commerce outweighs the state's interest in regulating baseball's reserve system, the commerce clause precludes the application of state antitrust law.

Syllabus

Petitioner, a professional baseball player "traded" to another club without his previous knowledge or consent, brought this antitrust suit after being refused the right to make his own contract with another major league team, which is not permitted under the reserve system. The District Court rendered judgment in favor of respondents, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. Held: The longstanding exemption of professional baseball from the antitrust laws, Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U.S. 200 (1922); Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 346 U.S. 356 (1953), is an established aberration, in the light of the Court's holding that other interstate professional sports are not similarly exempt, but one in which Congress has acquiesced, and that is entitled to the benefit of stare decisis. Removal of the resultant inconsistency at this late date is a matter for legislative, not judicial, resolution. [****2] Pp. 269-285.

Counsel: Arthur J. Goldberg argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs was Jay H. Topkis.

Paul A. Porter argued the cause for respondent Kuhn. Louis F. Hoynes, Jr., argued the cause for respondents Feeney, President of National League of Professional Baseball Clubs, et al. With them on the brief were Mark F. Hughes, Alexander H. Hadden, James P. Garner, Warren Daane, and Jerome I. Chapman.

I € ÁNÆJEG I ÆRG I LÁGÁUÆÐGEJ ÆRGÆJ LÁHÆSEÐA ÆGAÅ G ÆRG I LÁFJÍ GÁNÆJESÓYQJAFHÍ ÆRG

Judges: Blackmun, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which Stewart and Rehnquist, JJ., joined, and in all but Part I of which Burger, C. J., and White, J., joined. Burger, C. J., filed a concurring opinion, post, p. 285. Douglas, J., post, p. 286, and Marshall, J., post, p. 288, filed dissenting opinions, in which Brennan, J., joined. Powell, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: BLACKMUN

Opinion

[*259] [***731] [**2100] MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A]For the third time in 50 years the Court is asked specifically to rule that professional baseball's reserve system is within the reach of the federal antitrust [***3] laws.<sup>1</sup> [260] Collateral [**732] issues of state law and of federal labor policy are also advanced.

<sup>1</sup> The reserve system, publicly introduced into baseball contracts in 1887, see Metropolitan Exhibition Co. v. Ewing, 42 F. 198, 202-204 (CC SDNY 1890), centers in the uniformity of player contracts; the confinement of the player to the club that has him under the contract; the assignability of the player's contract; and the ability of the club annually to renew the contract unilaterally, subject to a stated salary minimum. Thus

A. Rule 3 of the Major League Rules provides in part:

"(a) UNIFORM CONTRACT. To preserve morale and to produce the similarity of conditions necessary to keen competition, the contracts between all clubs and their players in the Major Leagues shall be in a single form which shall be prescribed by the Major League Executive Council. No club shall make a contract different from the uniform contract or a contract containing a non-reserve clause, except with the written approval of the Commissioner. . . .

"(g) TAMPERING. To preserve discipline and competition, and to prevent the enticement of players, coaches, managers and umpires, there shall be no negotiations or dealings respecting employment, either present or prospective, between any player, coach or manager and any club other than the club with which he is under contract or acceptance of terms, or by which he is reserved, or which has the player on its Negotiation List, or between any umpire and any league other than the league with which he is under contract or acceptance of terms, unless the club or league with which he is connected shall have, in writing, expressly authorized such negotiations or dealings prior to their commencement."B. Rule 9 of the Major League Rules provides in part:

"(a) NOTICE. A club may assign to another club an existing contract with a player. The player, upon receipt of written notice of such assignment, is by his contract bound to serve the assignee.

"After the date of such assignment all rights and obligations of the assignor clubs thereunder shall become the rights and obligations of the assignee club . . ."C. Rules 3 and 9 of the Professional Baseball Rules contain provisions parallel to those just quoted.

D. The Uniform Player's Contract provides in part:

"4. (a) . . . The Player agrees that, in addition to other remedies, the Club shall be entitled to injunctive and other equitable relief to prevent a breach of this contract by the Player, including, among others, the right to enjoin the Player from playing baseball for any other person or organization during the term of this contract."

"5. (a) The Player agrees that, while under contract, and prior to expiration of the Club's right to renew this contract, he will not play baseball otherwise than for the Club, except that the Player may participate in post-season games under the conditions prescribed in the Major League Rules. . . ."

"6. (a) The Player agrees that this contract may be assigned by the Club (and reassigned by any assignee Club) to any other Club in accordance with the Major League Rules and the Professional Baseball Rules."

I ē ÁMEÐAG Í ÆG ËLÁGUAÐO ÐAEJ ÞEGFELÁGSEÐA ÆGA Á GI ÞEÐ HGLÁFJÍ GÁNÐEÐSÓY QUÁFHÍ ÞEÐH

[***4] [**2101] |

The Game

It is a century and a quarter since the New York Nine defeated the Knickerbockers 23 to 1 on Hoboken's [*261] Elysian Fields June 19, 1846, with Alexander Jay Cartwright as the instigator and the umpire. The teams were amateur, but the contest marked a significant date in baseball's beginnings. That early game led ultimately to the development of professional baseball and its tightly organized structure.

The Cincinnati Red Stockings came into existence in 1869 upon an outpouring of local pride. With only one Cincinnatian on the payroll, this professional team traveled over 11,000 miles that summer, winning 56 games and tying one. Shortly thereafter, on St. Patrick's Day in 1871, the National Association of Professional Baseball Players was [**2102] founded and the professional league was born.

The ensuing colorful days are well known. The ardent follower and the student of baseball know of General Abner Doubleday; the formation of the National League in 1876; Chicago's supremacy in the first year's competition under the leadership of Al Spalding and with Cap Anson at third base; the formation of the American Association and then of the Union [****5] Association in the 1880's; the introduction of Sunday baseball; interleague warfare with cut-rate admission prices and player raiding; the development of the reserve "clause"; the emergence in 1885 of the Brotherhood of Professional Ball Players, and in 1890 of the Players League; the appearance of the American League, or "junior circuit," in 1901, rising from the minor Western Association; the first World [*262] Series in 1903, disruption in 1904, and the Series' resumption in 1905; the short-lived Federal League on the majors' scene during World War I years; the troublesome and discouraging episode of the 1919 Series; the home run ball; the shifting of franchises; the expansion of the leagues; the installation in 1965 of the major league draft of potential new players; and the formation of the Major League Baseball Players Association in 1966.<sup>2</sup>

[****6] Then there are the many names, celebrated for one reason or another, that have sparked the diamond and its environs and that have provided tinder for recaptured thrills, for reminiscence and comparisons, and for conversation and anticipation in-season and off-season: Ty Cobb, Babe Ruth, Tris Speaker, Walter Johnson, Henry Chadwick, Eddie Collins, Lou Gehrig, Grover Cleveland Alexander, Rogers Hornsby, Harry Hooper, Goose Goslin, Jackie Robinson, Honus Wagner, Joe McCarthy, John McGraw, Deacon Phillippe, Rube Marquard, Christy [****733] Mathewson, Tommy Leach, Big Ed Delahanty, Davy Jones, Germany Schaefer, King Kelly, Big Dan Brouthers, Wahoo Sam Crawford, Wee Willie Keeler, Big Ed Walsh, Jimmy Austin, Fred Snodgrass, Satchel Paige, Hugh Jennings, Fred Merkle, Iron Man McGinnity, Three-Finger Brown, Harry and Stan Coveleski, Connie Mack, Al Bridwell, Red Ruffing, Amos Rusie, Cy Young, Smokey Joe Wood, Chief Meyers, Chief Bender, Bill Klem, Hans Lobert, Johnny Evers, Joe Tinker, Roy Campanella, Miller Huggins, Rube Bressler, Dazzy Vance, Edd Roush, Bill Wambsganss, Clark Griffith, Branch Rickey, Frank Chance, Cap Anson, [*263] Nap Lajoie, Sad Sam Jones, Bob O'Farrell, Lefty [****7] O'Doul, Bobby Veach, Willie Kamm, Heinie Groh, Lloyd and Paul Waner, Stuffy McInnis, Charles Comiskey, Roger Bresnahan, Bill Dickey, Zack Wheat, George Sisler, Charlie Gehringer, Eppa Rixey,

"10. (a) On or before January 15 (or if a Sunday, then the next preceding business day) of the year next following the last playing season covered by this contract, the Club may tender to the Player a contract for the term of that year by mailing the same to the Player at his address following his signature hereto, or if none be given, then at his last address of record with the Club. If prior to the March 1 next succeeding said January 15, the Player and the Club have not agreed upon the terms of such contract, then on or before 10 days after said March 1, the Club shall have the right by written notice to the Player at said address to renew this contract for the period of one year on the same terms, except that the amount payable to the Player shall be such as the club shall fix in said notice; provided, however, that said amount, if fixed by a Major League Club, shall be an amount payable at a rate not less than 80% of the rate stipulated for the preceding year.

"(b) The Club's right to renew this contract, as provided in subparagraph (a) of this paragraph 10, and the promise of the Player not to play otherwise than with the Club have been taken into consideration in determining the amount payable under paragraph 2 hereof."

<sup>2</sup> See generally The Baseball Encyclopedia (1969); L. Ritter, The Glory of Their Times (1966); 1 & 2 H. Seymour, Baseball (1960, 1971); 1 & 2 D. Voigt, American Baseball (1966, 1970).

I ē ÁMEÉG I ÉGG HÁGUAÉG JÉEG EGLÁG SEÓaÉGA Á GÍ ÉGG HLFJÍ GÁNÉSÓYQÁFHÍ ÉGG

Harry Heilmann, Fred Clarke, Dizzy Dean, Hank Greenberg, Pie Traynor, Rube Waddell, Bill Terry, Carl Hubbell, Old Hoss Radbourne, Moe Berg, Rabbit Maranville, Jimmie Foxx, Lefty Grove.<sup>3</sup> The list seems endless.

And one recalls the appropriate reference to the "World Serious," attributed to Ring Lardner, Sr.; Ernest L. Thayer's "Casey at the Bat";<sup>4</sup> [***8] the ring of "[**2103] Tinker to [*264] Evers to Chance";<sup>5</sup> and all the other happenings, habits, and superstitions about and around baseball that made it the "national pastime" or, depending upon the point of view, "the great American tragedy."<sup>6</sup>

II

---

<sup>3</sup>These are names only from earlier years. By mentioning some, one risks unintended omission of others equally celebrated.

<sup>4</sup>Millions have known and enjoyed baseball. One writer knowledgeable in the field of sports almost assumed that everyone did until, one day, he discovered otherwise:

"I knew a cove who'd never heard of Washington and Lee,
Of Caesar and Napoleon from the ancient jamboree,
But, bli'me, there are queerer things than anything like that,
For here's a cove who never heard of 'Casey at the Bat'!

....

"Ten million never heard of Keats, or Shelley, Burns or Poe;
But they know 'the air was shattered by the force of Casey's blow';

They never heard of Shakespeare, nor of Dickens, like as not,
But they know the somber drama from old Mudville's haunted lot.

"He never heard of Casey! Am I dreaming? Is it true?
Is fame but windblown ashes when the summer day is through?
Does greatness fade so quickly and is grandeur doomed to die
That bloomed in early morning, ere the dusk rides down the sky?"

"He Never Heard of Casey" Grantland Rice, The Sportlight, New York Herald Tribune, June 1, 1926, p. 23.

<sup>5</sup>"These are the saddest of possible words,

'Tinker to Evers to Chance.'

Trio of bear cubs, and fleeter than birds,

'Tinker to Evers to Chance.'

Ruthlessly pricking our gonfalon bubble,

Making a Giant hit into a double --

Words that are weighty with nothing but trouble:

'Tinker to Evers to Chance.'"

Franklin Pierce Adams, Baseball's Sad Lexicon.

<sup>6</sup>George Bernard Shaw, The Sporting News, May 27, 1943, p. 15, col. 4.

I € ÁMEÑAG I ËAG I LÁGUAÑO ÑEJ ÑEGEHÁGSE ÑAËGA Á GI ËAHH HHLÁFJÍ GÁNEÑOSÓYQÁFHÌ ËAHH

The Petitioner

The petitioner, Curtis Charles Flood, born in 1938, began his major league career in 1956 when he signed a contract with the Cincinnati Reds for a salary of $ 4,000 for the season. He had no attorney or agent to advise him on that occasion. [***734] He was traded to the St. Louis Cardinals before the 1958 season. Flood rose to fame as a center fielder with the Cardinals during the years 1958-1969. In those 12 seasons he compiled a batting average of .293. His best offensive season was 1967 when he achieved .335. He was .301 or better in six of the 12 St. Louis years. He participated in the 1964, 1967, and 1968 World Series. He played errorless [***9] ball in the field in 1966, and once enjoyed 223 consecutive errorless games. Flood has received seven Golden Glove Awards. He was co-captain of his team from 1965-1969. He ranks among the 10 major league outfielders possessing the highest lifetime fielding averages.

[*265] Flood's St. Louis compensation for the years shown was:

1961	$
	13,
	50
	0
	(in clu
	din
	g a bo
	nu
	s for sig
	nin
	g)
1962	$
	16,
	00
	0
1963	$
	17,
	50
	0
1964	$
	23,
	00
	0
1965	$
	35,
	00
	0
1966	$
	45,
	00
	0
1967	$
	50, 00
	0
1968	$
	72,
	50
	0
1969	$
	90,
	00

These figures do not include any so-called fringe benefits or World Series shares.

But at the age of 31, in October 1969, Flood was traded to the Philadelphia Phillies of the National League in a multi-player transaction. He was not consulted about the trade. He was informed by telephone and received formal notice only after the deal had been consummated. In December he complained to the Commissioner of Baseball and asked that he be made a free agent and be placed at liberty to strike his own bargain with any other major league team. His request was denied.

Flood then instituted this antitrust suit <sup>7</sup> in January 1970 in federal court for the Southern District [****10] of New York. The defendants (although not all were named in each cause of action) were the Commissioner of Baseball, the presidents of the two major leagues, and the 24 major league clubs. In general, the complaint charged violations of the federal antitrust laws and civil rights statutes, violation of state statutes and the common law, and the imposition of a form of peonage and involuntary [<sup>266</sup>] servitude contrary to the Thirteenth Amendment [**2104] and 42 U. S. C. § 1994, 18 U. S. C. § 1581, and 29 U. S. C. §§ 102 and 103. Petitioner sought declaratory and injunctive relief and treble damages.

Flood declined to play for Philadelphia in 1970, despite a $ 100,000 salary offer, and he sat out the year. After the season was concluded, Philadelphia sold its rights to Flood to the Washington [****11] Senators. Washington and the petitioner were able to come to terms for 1971 at a salary of $ 110,000.<sup>8</sup> Flood started the season but, apparently because he was dissatisfied with his performance, he left the Washington club on April 27, early in the campaign. He has not played baseball since then.

III

The Present Litigation

Judge Cooper, in a detailed opinion, [***735] first denied a preliminary injunction, 309 F.Supp. 793 \(SDNY 1970\), observing on the way:

"Baseball has been the national pastime for over one hundred years and enjoys a unique place in our American heritage. Major league professional baseball is avidly followed by millions of fans, looked upon with fervor and pride and provides a special source of inspiration and competitive team spirit especially for the young."

"Baseball's status in the life of the nation is so pervasive that it would not strain credulity to say [***12] the Court can take judicial notice that baseball is everybody's business. To put it mildly and with restraint, it would be unfortunate indeed if a fine sport and profession, which brings surcease from daily travail and an escape from the ordinary to [<sup>267</sup>] most inhabitants of this land, were to suffer in the least because of undue concentration by any one or any group on commercial and profit considerations. The game is on higher ground; it behooves every one to keep it there." 309 F.Supp., at 797.

Flood's application for an early trial was granted. The court next deferred until trial its decision on the defendants' motions to dismiss the primary causes of action, but granted a defense motion for summary judgment on an additional cause of action. 312 F.Supp. 404 \(SDNY 1970\).

Trial to the court took place in May and June 1970. An extensive record was developed. In an ensuing opinion, 316 F.Supp. 271 \(SDNY 1970\), Judge Cooper first noted that:

<sup>7</sup> Concededly supported by the Major League Baseball Players Association, the players' collective-bargaining representative. Tr. of Oral Arg. 12.

<sup>8</sup> The parties agreed that Flood's participating in baseball in 1971 would be without prejudice to his case.

I ē ÁNÈJEG Í ÆG Í LÁGÁUÉDÆGUJ ÆGFEL LÁGSEØAÆGA G ÆHÍ HÍ LAFJÍ GÁWÈJÆSÓYQÁFH ÆHFG

"Plaintiff's witnesses in the main concede that some form of reserve on players is a necessary element of the organization of baseball as a league sport, but contend that the present [***13] all-embracing system is needlessly restrictive and offer various alternatives which in their view might loosen the bonds without sacrifice to the game. . . .

"Clearly the preponderance of credible proof does not favor elimination of the reserve clause. With the sole exception of plaintiff himself, it shows that even plaintiff's witnesses do not contend that it is wholly undesirable; in fact they regard substantial portions meritorious. . . ." 316 F.Supp., at 275-276.

He then held that Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U.S. 200 \(1922\), and Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 346 U.S. 356 \(1953\), were controlling; that it was not necessary to reach the issue whether exemption from the antitrust laws would result because aspects of [*268] baseball now are a subject of collective bargaining; that the plaintiff's state-law claims, those based on common law as well as on statute, were to be denied because baseball was not "a matter which admits of diversity of [**2105] treatment," 316 F.Supp., at 280; that the involuntary servitude claim failed because of the absence of "the essential [***14] element of this cause of action, a showing of compulsory service," 316 F.Supp., at 281-282; and that judgment was to be entered for the defendants. Judge Cooper included a statement of personal conviction to the effect that "negotiations could produce an accommodation on the reserve system which would be eminently fair and equitable to all concerned" and [***736] that "the reserve clause can be fashioned so as to find acceptance by player and club." 316 F.Supp., at 282 and 284.

On appeal, the Second Circuit felt "compelled to affirm." 443 F.2d 264, 265 \(1971\). It regarded the issue of state law as one of first impression, but concluded that the Commerce Clause precluded its application. Judge Moore added a concurring opinion in which he predicted, with respect to the suggested overruling of Federal Baseball and Toolson, that "there is no likelihood that such an event will occur."<sup>9</sup> 443 F.2d, at 268, 272.

[***15] [*269] We granted certiorari in order to look once again at this troublesome and unusual situation. 404 U.S. 880 \(1971\).

IV

The Legal Background

A. Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U.S. 200 \(1922\), was a suit for treble damages instituted by a member of the Federal League (Baltimore) against the National and American Leagues and others. The plaintiff obtained a verdict in the trial court, but the Court of Appeals reversed. The main brief filed by the plaintiff with this Court discloses that it was strenuously argued, among other things, that the business in which the defendants were engaged was interstate commerce; that the interstate relationship among the several clubs, located as they were in <sup>9</sup> "And properly so. Baseball's welfare and future should not be for politically insulated interpreters of technical antitrust statutes but rather should be for the voters through their elected representatives. If baseball is to be damaged by statutory regulation, let the congressman face his constituents the next November and also face the consequences of his baseball voting record." 443 F.2d, at 272.

Cf. Judge Friendly's comments in Salerno v. American League, 429 F.2d 1003, 1005 \(CA2 1970\), cert. denied, sub nom. Salerno v. Kuhn, 400 U.S. 1001 (1971):

"We freely acknowledge our belief that Federal Baseball was not one of Mr. Justice Holmes' happiest days, that the rationale of Toolson is extremely dubious and that, to use the Supreme Court's own adjectives, the distinction between baseball and other professional sports is 'unrealistic,' 'inconsistent' and 'illogical.' . . . While we should not fall out of our chairs with surprise at the news that Federal Baseball and Toolson had been overruled, we are not at all certain the Court is ready to give them a happy despatch."

I ē ÁNÈJÉG Í ÉEG JLÁGÁUÉDÉGÉUJ ÉEGÉI LÁGSEÓAÉGÁG Ì ÉEE HÍ LAFJÍ GÁWEÉSÓYÓÁFH ÉEEFÍ

different States, was predominant; that organized baseball represented an investment of colossal wealth; that it was an engagement in moneymaking; that gate receipts were divided by agreement between the home club and the visiting club; and that the business of baseball was to be distinguished from the mere playing of the game as a sport for physical exercise and diversion. See also 259 U.S., at 201-206.

Mr. Justice [****16] Holmes, in speaking succinctly for a unanimous Court, said:

"The business is giving exhibitions of base ball, which are purely state affairs. . . . But the fact that in order to give the exhibitions the Leagues must induce free persons to cross state lines and [*270] must arrange and pay for their doing so is not enough to change the character of the business. . . . The transport is a mere incident, not the essential thing. That to which it is incident, the exhibition, although made for money would not [***737] be called trade or commerce [**2106] in the commonly accepted use of those words. As it is put by the defendants, personal effort, not related to production, is not a subject of commerce. That which in its consummation is not commerce does not become commerce among the States because the transportation that we have mentioned takes place. To repeat the illustrations given by the Court below, a firm of lawyers sending out a member to argue a case, or the Chautauqua lecture bureau sending out lecturers, does not engage in such commerce because the lawyer or lecturer goes to another State.

"If we are right the plaintiff's business is to be described in the same [****17] way and the restrictions by contract that prevented the plaintiff from getting players to break their bargains and the other conduct charged against the defendants were not an interference with commerce among the States." 259 U.S., at 208-209.<sup>10</sup>

[****18] [*271] The Court thus chose not to be persuaded by opposing examples proffered by the plaintiff, among them (a) Judge Learned Hand's decision on a demurrer to a Sherman Act complaint with respect to vaudeville entertainers traveling a theater circuit covering several States, H. B. Marienelli, Ltd. v. United Booking Offices, 227 F. 165 (SDNY 1914); (b) the first Mr. Justice Harlan's opinion in International Textbook Co. v. Pigg, 217 U.S. 91 (1910), to the effect that correspondence courses pursued through the mail constituted commerce among the States; and (c) Mr. Justice Holmes' own opinion, for another unanimous Court, on demurrer in a Sherman Act case, relating to cattle shipment, the interstate movement of which was interrupted for the finding of purchasers at the stockyards, Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375 (1905). The only earlier case the parties were able to locate where the question was raised whether organized baseball was within the Sherman Act was American League Baseball Club v. Chase, 86 Misc. 441, 149 N. Y. S. 6 (1914). That court had answered the question in the [****19] negative.

B. Federal Baseball was cited a year later, and without disfavor, in another opinion by Mr. Justice Holmes for a unanimous Court. The complaint charged antitrust violations with respect to vaudeville bookings. It was held, however, that the claim was not frivolous and that the bill should not have been dismissed. Hart v. B. F. Keith Vaudeville Exchange, 262 U.S. 271 (1923).<sup>11</sup>

[***738] It has also been cited, not unfavorably, with respect to the practice of law, United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 573 (1944) (Stone, C. J., dissenting); with respect to [***20] out-of-

<sup>10</sup> "What really saved baseball, legally at least, for the next half century was the protective canopy spread over it by the United States Supreme Court's decision in the Baltimore Federal League anti-trust suit against Organized Baseball in 1922. In it Justice Holmes, speaking for a unanimous court, ruled that the business of giving baseball exhibitions for profit was not 'trade or commerce in the commonly-accepted use of those words' because 'personal effort, not related to production, is not a subject of commerce'; nor was it interstate, because the movement of ball clubs across state lines was merely 'incidental' to the business. It should be noted that, contrary to what many believe, Holmes did call baseball a business; time and again those who have not troubled to read the text of the decision have claimed incorrectly that the court said baseball was a sport and not a business." 2 H. Seymour, Baseball 420 (1971).

<sup>11</sup> On remand of the Hart case the trial court dismissed the complaint at the close of the evidence. The Second Circuit affirmed on the ground that the plaintiff's evidence failed to establish that the interstate transportation was more than incidental. 12 F.2d 341 \(1926\). This Court denied certiorari, 273 U.S. 703 \(1926\).

I ē ÁNÈJÄG I ÆG GLÁGÁUÉDÄGEUJ ÆGFEI LÁGSEØAÆGAÄ G ÆH HÌ LAFJÍ GÁWEÆSØYQÄFH ÆHFE

state contractors, United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn., 347 U.S. 186, 196-197 [**2107] (1954) (Minton, J., dissenting); and upon a general comparison reference, North American Co. v. SEC, 327 U.S. 686, 694 (1946).

In the years that followed, baseball continued to be subject to intermittent antitrust attack. The courts, however, rejected these challenges on the authority of Federal Baseball. In some cases stress was laid, although unsuccessfully, on new factors such as the development of radio and television with their substantial additional revenues to baseball.<sup>12</sup> For the most part, however, the Holmes opinion was generally and necessarily accepted as controlling authority.<sup>13</sup> And in the 1952 Report of the Subcommittee on Study of Monopoly Power of the House Committee on the Judiciary, H. R. Rep. No. 2002, 82d Cong., 2d Sess., 229, it was said, in conclusion:

"On the other hand the overwhelming preponderance of the evidence established baseball's need for some sort of reserve clause. Baseball's history shows that chaotic conditions prevailed when there was no reserve clause. Experience points to no feasible [****21] substitute to protect the integrity of the game or to guarantee a comparatively even competitive [*273] struggle. The evidence adduced at the hearings would clearly not justify the enactment of legislation flatly condemning the reserve clause."

[****22] C. The Court granted certiorari, 345 U.S. 963 (1953), in the Toolson, Kowalski, and Corbett cases, cited in nn. 12 and 13, supra, and, by a short per curiam (Warren, C. J., and Black, Frankfurter, DOUGLAS, Jackson, Clark, and Minton, JJ.), affirmed the judgments of the respective courts of appeals in those three cases. Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 346 U.S. 356 (1953). Federal Baseball was cited as holding "that the business of providing public baseball games for profit between clubs of professional baseball players was not within the scope of the federal [***739] antitrust laws," 346 U.S., at 357, and:

"Congress has had the ruling under consideration but has not seen fit to bring such business under these laws by legislation having prospective effect. The business has thus been left for thirty years to develop, on the understanding that it was not subject to existing antitrust legislation. The present cases ask us to overrule the prior decision and, with retrospective effect, hold the legislation applicable. We think that if there are evils in this field which now warrant application to it of [****23] the antitrust laws it should be by legislation. Without re-examination of the underlying issues, the judgments below are affirmed on the authority of Federal Baseball Club of Baltimore v. National League of Professional Baseball Clubs, supra, so far as that decision determines that Congress had no intention of including the business of baseball within the scope of the federal antitrust laws." Ibid.

This quotation reveals four reasons for the Court's affirmation of Toolson [**2108] and its companion cases: (a) Congressional awareness for three decades of the Court's ruling in Federal Baseball, coupled with congressional [*274] inaction. (b) The fact that baseball was left alone to develop for that period upon the understanding that the reserve system was not subject to existing federal antitrust laws. (c) A reluctance to overrule Federal Baseball with consequent retroactive effect. (d) A professed desire that any needed remedy be provided by legislation rather than by court decree. The emphasis in Toolson was on the determination, attributed even to Federal Baseball, that Congress had no intention to include baseball within the reach of the [****24] federal antitrust laws. Two Justices (Burton and Reed, JJ.) dissented, stressing the factual aspects, revenue sources, and the absence of an express exemption of organized baseball from the Sherman Act. 346 U.S., at 357. The 1952 congressional study was mentioned. Id., at 358, 359, 361.

<sup>12</sup> Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 101 F.Supp. 93 (SD Cal. 1951), aff'd, 200 F.2d 198 (CA9 1952); Kowalski v. Chandler, 202 F.2d 413 (CA6 1953). See Salerno v. American League, 429 F.2d 1003 (CA2 1970), cert. denied, sub nom. Salerno v. Kuhn, 400 U.S. 1001 (1971). But cf. Gardella v. Chandler, 172 F.2d 402 (CA2 1949) (this case, we are advised, was subsequently settled); Martin v. National League Baseball Club, 174 F.2d 917 (CA2 1949).

<sup>13</sup> Corbett v. Chandler, 202 F.2d 428 (CA6 1953); Portland Baseball Club, Inc. v. Baltimore Baseball Club, Inc., 282 F.2d 680 (CA9 1960); Niemiec v. Seattle Rainier Baseball Club, Inc., 67 F.Supp. 705 (WD Wash. 1946). See State v. Milwaukee Braves, Inc., 31 Wis. 2d 699, 144 N. W. 2d 1, cert. denied, 385 U.S. 990 (1966).

I ē ÁNÈJÄG Í ÆGG I LÁGÁUÉDÄGEUJ ÆGG ËLÁGSEØAÉGÅÄ G ÆGG HJÁFJÍ GÁWÆSØYØAFH ÆGG

It is of interest to note that in Toolson the petitioner had argued flatly that Federal Baseball "is wrong and must be overruled," Brief for Petitioner, No. 18, O. T. 1953, p. 19, and that Thomas Reed Powell, a constitutional scholar of no small stature, urged, as counsel for an amicus, that "baseball is a unique enterprise," Brief for Boston American League Base Ball Co. as Amicus Curiae 2, and that "unbridled competition as applied to baseball would not be in the public interest." Id. at 14.

D. United States v. Shubert, 348 U.S. 222 (1955), was a civil antitrust action against defendants engaged in the production of legitimate theatrical attractions throughout the United States and in operating theaters for the presentation of such attractions. The District Court had dismissed the complaint on the authority of Federal Baseball [****25] and Toolson. 120 F.Supp. 15 (SDNY 1953). This Court reversed. Mr. Chief Justice Warren noted the Court's broad conception of "trade or commerce" in the antitrust statutes and the types of enterprises already held to be within the reach of that phrase. [*275] He stated that Federal Baseball and Toolson afforded no basis for a conclusion that businesses built around the performance of local exhibitions are exempt from the antitrust laws. 348 U.S., at 227. He then went on to elucidate the holding in Toolson by meticulously spelling out the factors mentioned above:

[***740] "In Federal Baseball, the Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Holmes, was dealing with the business of baseball and nothing else. . . . The travel, the Court concluded, was 'a mere incident, not the essential thing.' . . .

....

"In Toolson, where the issue was the same as in Federal Baseball, the Court was confronted with a unique combination of circumstances. For over 30 years there had stood a decision of this Court specifically fixing the status of the baseball business under the antitrust laws and more particularly the validity of the so-called [****26] 'reserve clause.' During this period, in reliance on the Federal Baseball precedent, the baseball business had grown and developed. . . . And Congress, although it had actively considered the ruling, had not seen fit to reject it by amendatory legislation. Against this background, the Court in Toolson was asked to overrule Federal Baseball on the ground that it was out of step with subsequent decisions reflecting present-day concepts of interstate commerce. The Court, in view of the circumstances of the case, declined to do so. But neither did the Court necessarily reaffirm all that was said in Federal Baseball. Instead, 'without re-examination of the underlying issues,' the Court adhered to Federal Baseball 'so far as that decision determines that Congress had no intention of including the business of baseball within the scope of the federal antitrust laws.' *346 [*276] U.S., at 357*. In short, [**2109] Toolson was a narrow application of the rule of stare decisis.

". . . If the Toolson holding is to be expanded -- or contracted -- the appropriate remedy lies with Congress." 348 U.S., at 228-230.

E. United States v. International Boxing Club, 348 U.S. 236 (1955), [****27] was a companion to Shubert and was decided the same day. This was a civil antitrust action against defendants engaged in the business of promoting professional championship boxing contests. Here again the District Court had dismissed the complaint in reliance upon Federal Baseball and Toolson. The Chief Justice observed that "if it were not for Federal Baseball and Toolson, we think that it would be too clear for dispute that the Government's allegations bring the defendants within the scope of the Act." 348 U.S., at 240-241. He pointed out that the defendants relied on the two baseball cases but also would have been content with a more restrictive interpretation of them than the Shubert defendants, for the boxing defendants argued that the cases immunized only businesses that involve exhibitions of an athletic nature. The Court accepted neither argument. It again noted, 348 U.S., at 242, that "Toolson neither overruled Federal Baseball nor necessarily reaffirmed all that was said in Federal Baseball." It stated:

"The controlling consideration in Federal Baseball and Hart was, instead, a very practical [****28] one -- the degree of interstate activity involved in the particular business under review. It follows that stare decisis cannot help the defendants here; for, contrary to their argument, Federal Baseball did not hold that all businesses based on professional sports were outside the scope of the antitrust laws. The issue confronting us is, therefore, not whether a previously granted exemption should continue, [**277] but whether an exemption should be granted in the [***741] first instance. And that issue is for Congress to resolve, not this Court." 348 U.S., at 243.

I ē ÁNÈJÄG Í ÆGG Í LÁGÁUÉDÄGEUJ ÆGGFÉLÁGÁSÉOÄGÅÄG ÄTTI I ELÄJÍ GÁWEÄSÖYÖÄFH ÄTTIG

The Court noted the presence then in Congress of various bills forbidding the application of the antitrust laws to "organized professional sports enterprises"; the holding of extensive hearings on some of these; subcommittee opposition; a postponement recommendation as to baseball; and the fact that "Congress thus left intact the then-existing coverage of the antitrust laws." 348 U.S., at 243-244.

Mr. Justice Frankfurter, joined by Mr. Justice Minton, dissented. "It would baffle the subtlest ingenuity," he said, "to find a single differentiating factor between other sporting [****29] exhibitions . . . and baseball insofar as the conduct of the sport is relevant to the criteria or considerations by which the Sherman Law becomes applicable to a 'trade or commerce.'" 348 U.S., at 248. He went on:

"The Court decided as it did in the Toolson case as an application of the doctrine of stare decisis. That doctrine is not, to be sure, an imprisonment of reason. But neither is it a whimsy. It can hardly be that this Court gave a preferred position to baseball because it is the great American sport. . . . If stare decisis be one aspect of law, as it is, to disregard it in identic situations is mere caprice.

"Congress, on the other hand, may yield to sentiment and be capricious, subject only to due process. . . .

"Between them, this case and Shubert illustrate that nice but rational distinctions are inevitable in adjudication. I agree with the Court's opinion in Shubert for precisely the reason that constrains me to dissent in this case." 348 U.S., at 249-250.

[*278] Mr. Justice Minton also separately dissented on the ground that boxing is not trade or commerce. He added the comment that "Congress has [****30] not attempted" [\[\*\*2110\]](#) to control baseball and boxing. 348 U.S., at 251, 253. The two dissenting Justices, thus, did not call for the overruling of Federal Baseball and Toolson; they merely felt that boxing should be under the same umbrella of freedom as was baseball and, as Mr. Justice Frankfurter said, 348 U.S., at 250, they could not exempt baseball "to the exclusion of every other sport different not one legal jot or tittle from it." <sup>14</sup>

F. The parade marched on. Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445 \(1957\), was a civil Clayton Act case testing the application of the antitrust laws to professional football. The District Court dismissed. The Ninth Circuit affirmed in part on the basis of Federal Baseball and Toolson. The court did not hesitate to "confess that the strength of the pull" of the baseball cases [****31] and of International Boxing "is about equal," but then observed that "football is a team sport" and boxing an individual one. 231 F.2d 620, 622.

This Court reversed with an opinion by Mr. Justice Clark. He said that the Court made its ruling in Toolson "because it was concluded that more harm would be done in overruling Federal Baseball than in upholding a ruling which at best was of dubious validity." 352 U.S., at 450. He noted [***742] that Congress had not acted. He then said:

"All this, combined with the flood of litigation that would follow its repudiation, the harassment that would ensue, and the retroactive effect of such a decision, led the Court to the practical result that [*279] it should sustain the unequivocal line of authority reaching over many years.

"Since Toolson and Federal Baseball are still cited as controlling authority in antitrust actions involving other fields of business, we now specifically limit the rule there established to the facts there involved, i. e., the business of organized professional baseball. As long as the Congress continues to acquiesce we should adhere to -- but not [***32] extend -- the interpretation of the Act made in those cases. . . .

---

<sup>14</sup> The case's final chapter is International Boxing Club v. United States, 358 U.S. 242 \(1959\).

I ē ÁNÈJÄG I ÆG JIÁGÁUÉDÆG EUJ ÆGFFELÁGSEØAÆGA G ÆH I GLÆJÍ GÁWEÆSØYØAÆH ÆH

"If this ruling is unrealistic, inconsistent, or illogical, it is sufficient to answer, aside from the distinctions between the businesses, that were we considering the question of baseball for the first time upon a clean slate we would have no doubts. But Federal Baseball held the business of baseball outside the scope of the Act. No other business claiming the coverage of those cases has such an adjudication. We, therefore, conclude that the orderly way to eliminate error or discrimination, if any there be, is by legislation and not by court decision. Congressional processes are more accommodative, affording the whole industry hearings and an opportunity to assist in the formulation of new legislation. The resulting product is therefore more likely to protect the industry and the public alike. The whole scope of congressional action would be known long in advance and effective dates for the legislation could be set in the future without the injustices of retroactivity and surprise which might follow court action." 352 U.S., at 450-452 (footnote omitted).

Mr. Justice Frankfurter dissented [***33] essentially for the reasons stated in his dissent in International Boxing, [*280] 352 U.S., at 455. Mr. Justice Harlan, joined by MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, also dissented because he, too, was "unable to distinguish football from baseball." 352 U.S., at 456. Here again the dissenting Justices did not call for the overruling of the baseball decisions. They merely could not [**2111] distinguish the two sports and, out of respect for stare decisis, voted to affirm.

G. Finally, in Haywood v. National Basketball Assn., 401 U.S. 1204 \(1971\), MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, in his capacity as Circuit Justice, reinstated a District Court's injunction pendente lite in favor of a professional basketball player and said, "Basketball . . . does not enjoy exemption from the antitrust laws." 401 U.S., at 1205.<sup>15</sup>

[***34] H. This series of decisions understandably spawned extensive commentary,<sup>16</sup> some of it mildly critical [***743] and [*281] much of it not; nearly all of it looked to Congress for any remedy that might be deemed essential.

[***35] I. Legislative proposals have been numerous and persistent. Since Toolson more than 50 bills have been introduced in Congress relative to the applicability or nonapplicability of the antitrust laws to baseball.<sup>17</sup> [***36] A

<sup>15</sup> See also Denver Rockets v. All-Pro Management, Inc., 325 F.Supp. 1049, 1060 (CD Cal. 1971); Washington Professional Basketball Corp. v. National Basketball Assn., 147 F.Supp. 154 (SDNY 1956).

<sup>16</sup> Neville, Baseball and the Antitrust Laws, 16 Fordham L. Rev. 208 (1947); Eckler, Baseball -- Sport or Commerce?, 17 U. Chi. L. Rev. 56 (1949); Comment, Monopsony in Manpower: Organized Baseball Meets the Antitrust Laws, 62 Yale L. J. 576 (1953); P. Gregory, The Baseball Player, An Economic Study, c. 19 (1956); Note, The Super Bowl and the Sherman Act: Professional Team Sports and the Antitrust Laws, 81 Harv. L. Rev. 418 (1967); The Supreme Court, 1953 Term, 68 Harv. L. Rev. 105, 136-138 (1954); The Supreme Court, 1956 Term, 71 Harv. L. Rev. 94, 170-173 (1957); Note, 32 Va. L. Rev. 1164 (1946); Note, 24 Notre Dame Law. 372 (1949); Note, 53 Col. L. Rev. 242 (1953); Note, 22 U. Kan. City L. Rev. 173 (1954); Note, 25 Miss. L. J. 270 (1954); Note, 29 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 213 (1954); Note, 105 U. Pa. L. Rev. 110 (1956); Note, 32 Texas L. Rev. 890 (1954); Note, 35 B. U. L. Rev. 447 (1955); Note, 57 Col. L. Rev. 725 (1957); Note, 23 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 606 (1955); Note, 1 How. L. J. 281 (1955); Note, 26 Miss. L. J. 271 (1955); Note, 9 Sw. L. J. 369 (1955); Note, 29 Temple L. Q. 103 (1955); Note, 29 Tul. L. Rev. 793 (1955); Note, 62 Dick. L. Rev. 96 (1957); Note, 11 Sw. L. J. 516 (1957); Note, 36 N. C. L. Rev. 315 (1958); Note, 35 Fordham L. Rev. 350 (1966); Note, 8 B. C. Ind. & Com. L. Rev. 341 (1967); Note, 13 Wayne L. Rev. 417 (1967); Note, 2 Rutgers-Camden L. J. 302 (1970); Note, 8 San Diego L. Rev. 92 (1970); Note, 12 B. C. Ind. & Com. L. Rev. 737 (1971); Note, 12 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 859 (1971).

<sup>17</sup> Hearings on H. R. 5307 et al. before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 85th Cong., 1st Sess. (1957); Hearings on H. R. 10378 and S. 4070 before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 85th Cong., 2d Sess. (1958); Hearings on H. R. 2370 et al. before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. (1959) (not printed); Hearings on S. 616 and S. 886 before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. (1959); Hearings on S. 3483 before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 86th Cong., 2d Sess. (1960); Hearings on S. 2391 before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, few of these passed one house or the other. Those that did would have expanded, not restricted, the reserve system's exemption to other professional league sports. And the Act of Sept. 30, 1961, Pub. L. 87-331, 75 Stat. 732, and the merger addition thereto effected by the Act of Nov. 8, 1966, Pub. L. 89-800, § 6 (b), [*282] 80 Stat. 1515, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1291-1295, were also expansive rather than restrictive as to antitrust exemption.<sup>18</sup>

I ē ÁNÈJÄG Í ÆG FLÁGÁUÉDÄGEUJ ÆGFFFLÁGÅSEÖAÉGÅÄ G ÆHÍ I HÁFJÍ GÁWÆSÖYÓFAH ÆHÍ

[**2112] V

In view of all this, it seems appropriate now to say that:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [↑] [2]HN1 [↑] 1. Professional baseball is a business and it is engaged in interstate commerce.

2. With its reserve system enjoying exemption from the federal antitrust laws, baseball is, in a very distinct sense, an exception and an anomaly. Federal Baseball and Toolson have become an aberration confined to baseball.

[***37]

[***744] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [↑] [3]3. Even though others might regard this as "unrealistic, inconsistent, or illogical," see Radovich, 352 U.S., at 452, the aberration is an established one, and one that has been recognized not only in Federal Baseball and Toolson, but in Shubert, International Boxing, and Radovich, as well, a total of five consecutive cases in this Court. It is an aberration that has been with us now for half a century, one heretofore deemed fully entitled to the benefit of stare decisis, and one that has survived the Court's expanding concept of interstate commerce. It rests on a recognition and an acceptance of baseball's unique characteristics and needs.

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4]4. Other professional sports operating interstate -- football, [*283] boxing, basketball, and, presumably, hockey<sup>19</sup> [***38] and golf<sup>20</sup> -- are not so exempt.

5. The advent of radio and television, with their consequent increased coverage and additional revenues, has not occasioned an overruling of Federal Baseball and Toolson.

6. The Court has emphasized that HN2 [↑] since 1922 baseball, with full and continuing congressional awareness, has been allowed to develop and to expand unhindered by federal legislative action. Remedial legislation has been introduced repeatedly in Congress but none has ever been enacted. The Court, accordingly, has concluded that Congress as yet has had no intention to subject baseball's reserve system to the reach of the antitrust statutes. This, obviously, has been deemed to be something other than mere congressional silence and passivity. Cf. Boys Markets, Inc. v. Retail Clerks Union, 398 U.S. 235, 241-242 (1970).

88th Cong., 2d Sess. (1964); S. Rep. No. 1303, 88th Cong., 2d Sess. (1964); Hearings on S. 950 before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. (1965); S. Rep. No. 462, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. (1965). Bills introduced in the 92d Cong., 1st Sess., and bearing on the subject are S. 2599, S. 2616, H. R. 2305, H. R. 11033, and H. R. 10825.

<sup>18</sup> Title 15 U. S. C. § 1294 reads:

"Nothing contained in this chapter shall be deemed to change, determine, or otherwise affect the applicability or nonapplicability of the antitrust laws to any act, contract, agreement, rule, course of conduct, or other activity by, between, or among persons engaging in, conducting, or participating in the organized professional team sports of football, baseball, basketball, or hockey, except the agreements to which section 1291 of this title shall apply." (Emphasis supplied.)

<sup>19</sup> Peto v. Madison Square Garden Corp., 1958 Trade Cases, para. 69,106 (SDNY 1958).

<sup>20</sup> Deesen v. Professional Golfers' Assn., 358 F.2d 165 (CA9), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 846 (1966).

I ē ÁNÈJÉG Í ÉÉG HÁGÁUÉDÉGÉU JÉÉGGGLÁGÁSÉOÀÉGÁ G ÉÉHÉ I I LÉJÍ GÁWÉÉSÓYÓÁHÉ ÉÉHÉ

7. The Court has expressed concern about the confusion [***39] and the retroactivity problems that inevitably would result with a judicial overturning of Federal Baseball. It has voiced a preference that if any change is to be made, it come by legislative action that, by its nature, is only prospective in operation.

8. The Court noted in Radovich, 352 U.S., at 452, that the slate with respect to baseball is not clean. Indeed, it has not been clean for half a century.

This emphasis and this concern are still with us. We continue to be loath, 50 years after Federal Baseball and almost two decades after Toolson, to overturn those cases judicially when Congress, by its positive inaction, [*284] has allowed those decisions to stand for so long and, far beyond mere inference and implication, has clearly evinced a desire not to disapprove them legislatively.

LEdHN[1B] [1B] Accordingly, we adhere once again to Federal Baseball and Toolson and to their application to professional baseball. We adhere also to International Boxing and Radovich and to their respective applications to professional boxing and professional football. If [***40] there [**2113] is any inconsistency or illogic in all this, it is an inconsistency and illogic of long standing that is to be remedied by the Congress and not by this Court. If we were to act otherwise, we would be withdrawing from the conclusion as to congressional intent made in Toolson and from the concerns as to retrospectivity therein expressed. Under these circumstances, [***745] there is merit in consistency even though some might claim that beneath that consistency is a layer of inconsistency.

LEdHN[5] [5] The petitioner's argument as to the application of state antitrust laws deserves a word. Judge Cooper rejected the state law claims because HN3 state antitrust regulation would conflict with federal policy and because national "uniformity [is required] in any regulation of baseball and its reserve system." 316 F.Supp., at 280. The Court of Appeals, in affirming, stated, HN4 "As the burden on interstate [***41] commerce outweighs the states' interests in regulating baseball's reserve system, the Commerce Clause precludes the application here of state antitrust law." 443 F.2d, at 268. As applied to organized baseball, and in the light of this Court's observations and holdings in Federal Baseball, in Toolson, in Shubert, in International Boxing, and in Radovich, and despite baseball's allegedly inconsistent position taken in the past with respect to the application of state law,<sup>21</sup> [*285] these statements adequately dispose of the state law claims.

The conclusion we have reached makes it unnecessary for us to consider the respondents' additional argument that the reserve system is a mandatory subject of collective [***42] bargaining and that federal labor policy therefore exempts the reserve system from the operation of federal antitrust laws.<sup>22</sup>

We repeat for this case what was said in Toolson:

"Without re-examination of the underlying issues, the [judgment] below [is] affirmed on the authority of Federal Baseball Club of Baltimore v. National League of Professional Baseball Clubs, supra, so far as that decision determines that Congress had no intention of including the business of baseball within the scope of the federal antitrust laws." 346 U.S., at 357.

And what the Court said in Federal Baseball in 1922 and what it said in Toolson in 1953, we say again here in 1972: the remedy, if any is indicated, is for congressional, and not judicial, action.

<sup>21</sup> See Brief for Respondent in Federal Baseball, No. 204, O. T. 1921, p. 67, and in Toolson, No. 18, O. T. 1953, p. 30. See also State v. Milwaukee Braves, Inc., 31 Wis. 2d 699, 144 N. W. 2d 1, cert. denied, 385 U.S. 990 (1966).

<sup>22</sup> See Jacobs & Winter, Antitrust Principles and Collective Bargaining by Athletes: Of Superstars in Peonage, 81 Yale L. J. 1 (1971), suggesting present-day irrelevancy of the antitrust issue.

I ē ÁNÈJEG Í ÉEG Í LÁGÚÉDÉEJÉUJÉEGFFHLÁGSEÓaÉGáG Í ÉEE I Í LÁJÍ GÁWÉÉSÓYÓÁFH Í ÉEE G

The judgment of the Court [****43] of Appeals is

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE WHITE joins in the judgment of the Court, and in all but Part I of the Court's opinion.

MR. JUSTICE POWELL took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Concur by: BURGER

Concur

---

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER, concurring.

I concur in all but Part I of the Court's opinion but, like MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, I have grave reservations [*286] as to the correctness of *Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 346 U.S. 356 \(1953\)*; as he notes in his dissent, he joined [***746] that holding but has "lived to regret it." The error, if such it be, is one on which the affairs of a great many people have rested for a long time. Courts are not the forum in which this tangled web ought to be unsnarled. [**2114] I agree with MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS that congressional inaction is not a solid base, but the least undesirable course now is to let the matter rest with Congress; it is time the Congress acted to solve this problem.

Dissent by: DOUGLAS; MARSHALL

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, with whom MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN concurs, dissenting.

[***44] This Court's decision in *Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U.S. 200*, made in 1922, is a derelict in the stream of the law that we, its creator, should remove. Only a romantic view <sup>1</sup> of a rather dismal business account over the last 50 years would keep that derelict in midstream.

In 1922 the Court had a narrow, parochial view of commerce. With the demise of the old landmarks of that era, particularly *United States v. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1*, *Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247 U.S. 251*, and *Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168*, the whole concept of commerce has changed.

Under the modern decisions such as *Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219*; *United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100*; [***45] *Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111*; *United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533*, the power of Congress was recognized as broad enough to reach all phases of the vast operations of our national industrial system. [*287] An industry so dependent on radio and television as is baseball and gleaning vast interstate revenues (see H. R. Rep. No. 2002, 82d Cong., 2d Sess., 4, 5 (1952)) would be hard put today to say with the Court in the Federal Baseball Club case that baseball was only a local exhibition, not trade or commerce.

Baseball is today big business that is packaged with beer, with broadcasting, and with other industries. The beneficiaries of the Federal Baseball Club decision are not the Babe Ruths, Ty Cobbs, and Lou Gehrigs.

The owners, whose records many say reveal a proclivity for predatory practices, do not come to us with equities. The equities are with the victims of the reserve clause. I use the word "victims" in the Sherman Act sense, since a contract which forbids anyone to practice his calling is commonly called an unreasonable restraint of trade.<sup>2</sup> Gardella v. Chandler, 172 F.2d 402 [****46] (CA2). And see Haywood v. National Basketball Assn., 401 U.S. 1204 (DOUGLAS, J., in chambers).

---

<sup>1</sup> While I joined the Court's opinion in *Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 346 U.S. 356*, I have lived to regret it; and I would now correct what I believe to be its fundamental error.

I ē ÁNÈJEG Í ÆG Í LÁGÁUÉDÆGEUJ ÆGFFI LÁGSEØAÆGA G ÆTÍ I Í LÆJÍ GÁWÆSØYØAFTÍ ÆTÍ I

If congressional inaction is our [***747] guide, we should rely upon the fact that Congress has refused to enact bills broadly exempting professional sports from antitrust regulation.<sup>3</sup> H. R. Rep. No. 2002, [**2115] 82d Cong., 2d Sess. [*288] (1952). The only statutory exemption granted by Congress to professional sports concerns broadcasting [****47] rights. 15 U. S. C. §§ 1291-1295. I would not ascribe a broader exemption through inaction than Congress has seen fit to grant explicitly.

[****48] There can be no doubt "that were we considering the question of baseball for the first time upon a clean slate"<sup>4</sup> we would hold it to be subject to federal antitrust regulation. Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 452. The unbroken silence of Congress should not prevent us from correcting our own mistakes.

MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, with whom MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN joins, dissenting.

Petitioner was a major league baseball player from 1956, when he signed a contract with the Cincinnati Reds, until 1969, when his 12-year career with the St. Louis Cardinals, which had obtained him from the Reds, ended and he was traded to the Philadelphia Phillies. He had no notice that the Cardinals were contemplating a trade, no opportunity to indicate the teams with which he would prefer playing, and no desire to go to Philadelphia. After receiving formal notification of the trade, petitioner [****49] wrote to the Commissioner of Baseball protesting that he was not [*289] "a piece of property to be bought and sold irrespective of my wishes,"<sup>1</sup> and urging that he had the right to consider offers from other teams than the Phillies. He requested that the Commissioner inform all of the major league teams that he was available for the 1970 season. His request was denied, and petitioner was informed that he had no choice but to play for Philadelphia or not to play at all.

To non-athletes it might appear that petitioner was virtually enslaved by the owners of major league baseball clubs who bartered among themselves for his services. But, athletes know that it was not servitude that bound petitioner to the club owners; it was the reserve system. The essence of that system is that a player is bound to the club with which he first signs a contract for the rest of his playing days.<sup>2</sup> He [***748] cannot escape from the club except by retiring, [****50] and he cannot prevent the club from assigning his contract to any other club.

<sup>2</sup> Had this same group boycott occurred in another industry, Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207; United States v. Shubert, 348 U.S. 222; or even in another sport, Haywood v. National Basketball Assn., 401 U.S. 1204 (DOUGLAS, J., in chambers); Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445; United States v. International Boxing Club, 348 U.S. 236; we would have no difficulty in sustaining petitioner's claim.

<sup>3</sup> The Court's reliance upon congressional inaction disregards the wisdom of Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U.S. 106, 119-121, where we said:

"Nor does want of specific Congressional repudiations . . . serve as an implied instruction by Congress to us not to reconsider, in the light of new experience . . . those decisions . . . . It would require very persuasive circumstances enveloping Congressional silence to debar this Court from re-examining its own doctrines. . . . Various considerations of parliamentary tactics and strategy might be suggested as reasons for the inaction of . . . Congress, but they would only be sufficient to indicate that we walk on quicksand when we try to find in the absence of corrective legislation a controlling legal principle."

And see United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 556-561.

<sup>4</sup> This case gives us for the first time a full record showing the reserve clause in actual operation.

<sup>1</sup> Letter from Curt Flood to Bowie K. Kuhn, Dec. 24, 1969, App. 37.

<sup>2</sup> As MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN points out, the reserve system is not novel. It has been employed since 1887. See Metropolitan Exhibition Co. v. Ewing, 42 F. 198, 202-204 (CC SDNY 1890). The club owners assert that it is necessary to preserve effective competition and to retain fan interest. The players do not agree and argue that the reserve system is overly

I ē ÁNÈJÉG Í ÉÉG JLÁGÁUÉDÉGEUJ ÉÉGGFÍ LÁGSEÓAÉGÁG Í ÉÉH I Í LÁJÍ GÁWEÉSÓYÓÁFH Í ÉÉH Í €

Petitioner brought this action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. He alleged, among other things, that the reserve system was an unreasonable [****51] restraint of trade in violation of [*290] federal antitrust laws.<sup>3</sup> The District Court [**2116] thought itself bound by prior decisions of this Court and found for the respondents after a full trial. 309 F.Supp. 793 (1970). The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed. 443 F.2d 264 (1971). We granted certiorari on October 19, 1971, 404 U.S. 880, in order to take a further look at the precedents relied upon by the lower courts.

This is a difficult case because we are [****52] torn between the principle of stare decisis and the knowledge that the decisions in Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U.S. 200 (1922), and Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 346 U.S. 356 (1953), are totally at odds with more recent and better reasoned cases.

In Federal Baseball Club, a team in the Federal League brought an antitrust action against the National and American Leagues and others. In his opinion for a unanimous Court, Mr. Justice Holmes wrote that the business being considered was "giving exhibitions of base ball, which are purely state affairs." 259 U.S., at 208. Hence, the Court held that baseball was not within the purview of the antitrust laws. Thirty-one years later, the Court reaffirmed this decision, without re-examining it, in Toolson, a one-paragraph per curiam opinion. Like this case, Toolson involved an attack on the reserve system. The Court said:

"The business has . . . been left for thirty years to develop, on the understanding that it was not [*291] subject to existing antitrust legislation. The present cases ask us to overrule the prior decision and, [****53] with retrospective effect, hold the legislation applicable. We think that if there are evils in this field which now warrant application to it of the antitrust laws it should be by legislation." Id., at 357.

Much more time has passed since Toolson and Congress has not acted. We must now decide whether to adhere to the reasoning of Toolson -- i. e., to refuse to re-examine the underlying basis of Federal Baseball Club -- or to proceed with a re-examination and let the chips fall where they may.

In his answer to petitioner's complaint, the Commissioner of Baseball "admits that under present concepts of interstate commerce defendants are engaged therein." App. 40. There can be no doubt that the [***749] admission is warranted by today's reality. Since baseball is interstate commerce, if we re-examine baseball's antitrust exemption, the Court's decisions in United States v. Shubert, 348 U.S. 222 (1955), United States v. International Boxing Club, 348 U.S. 236 (1955), and Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445 (1957), require that we bring baseball within the coverage of the antitrust [****54] laws. See also, Haywood v. National Basketball Assn., 401 U.S. 1204 (DOUGLAS, J., in chambers).

We have only recently had occasion to comment that:

"Antitrust laws in general, and the Sherman Act in particular, are the Magna Carta of free enterprise. They are as important to the preservation of economic freedom and our free-enterprise system as the Bill of Rights is to the protection of our fundamental personal freedoms. . . . Implicit in such freedom is the notion that it cannot be foreclosed with respect to one sector of the economy [*292] because certain private citizens or groups believe that such foreclosure [**2117] might promote greater competition in a more important sector of the economy." United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 610 (1972).

---

restrictive. Before this lawsuit was instituted, the players refused to agree that the reserve system should be a part of the collective-bargaining contract. Instead, the owners and players agreed that the reserve system would temporarily remain in effect while they jointly investigated possible changes. Their activity along these lines has halted pending the outcome of this suit.

<sup>3</sup> Petitioner also alleged a violation of state antitrust laws, state civil rights laws, and of the common law, and claimed that he was forced into peonage and involuntary servitude in violation of the Thirteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. Because I believe that federal antitrust laws govern baseball, I find that state law has been pre-empted in this area. Like the lower courts, I do not believe that there has been a violation of the Thirteenth Amendment.

I ē ÁNÈJÉG Í ÉEGJ GLÁGÁUÉDÉGEUJ ÉEGFFI LÁGSEÓAÉGÁ G ÉEÉI I JLÁFJÍ GÁWÉÉSÓYÓQÁFH ÉEÉI I

The importance of the antitrust laws to every citizen must not be minimized. They are as important to baseball players as they are to football players, lawyers, doctors, or members of any other class of workers. Baseball players cannot be denied the benefits of competition merely because club owners view other economic interests as being more important, unless [****55] Congress says so.

Has Congress acquiesced in our decisions in Federal Baseball Club and Toolson? I think not. Had the Court been consistent and treated all sports in the same way baseball was treated, Congress might have become concerned enough to take action. But, the Court was inconsistent, and baseball was isolated and distinguished from all other sports. In Toolson the Court refused to act because Congress had been silent. But the Court may have read too much into this legislative inaction.

Americans love baseball as they love all sports. Perhaps we become so enamored of athletics that we assume that they are foremost in the minds of legislators as well as fans. We must not forget, however, that there are only some 600 major league baseball players. Whatever muscle they might have been able to muster by combining forces with other athletes has been greatly impaired by the manner in which this Court has isolated them. It is this Court that has made them impotent, and this Court should correct its error.

We do not lightly overrule our prior constructions of federal statutes, but when our errors deny substantial federal rights, like the right to compete freely [****56] and effectively to the best of one's ability as guaranteed by the [*293] antitrust laws, we must admit our error and correct it. We have done so before and we should do so again here. See, e. g., Blonder-Tongue Laboratories, Inc. v. University of Illinois Foundation, 402 U.S. 313 (1971); Boys Markets, Inc. v. Retail Clerks Union, 398 U.S. 235, 241 [**750] (1970).<sup>4</sup>

[****57] To the extent that there is concern over any reliance interests that club owners may assert, they can be satisfied by making our decision prospective only. Baseball should be covered by the antitrust laws beginning with this case and henceforth, unless Congress decides otherwise.<sup>5</sup>

Accordingly, I would overrule Federal Baseball Club and Toolson and reverse the decision of the Court of Appeals.
6

[****58] This does not mean that petitioner would necessarily prevail, however. Lurking in the background is a hurdle of recent vintage that petitioner still must overcome. [*294] In 1966, the Major League [**2118] Players Association was formed. It is the collective-bargaining representative for all major league baseball players. Respondents argue that the reserve system is now part and parcel of the collective-bargaining agreement and that because it is a mandatory subject of bargaining, the federal labor statutes are applicable, not the federal antitrust laws.<sup>7</sup> The lower courts did not rule on this argument, having decided the case solely on the basis of the antitrust exemption.

<sup>4</sup> In the past this Court has not hesitated to change its view as to what constitutes interstate commerce. Compare United States v. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1 (1895), with Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219 (1948), and United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100 (1941).

"The jurist concerned with 'public confidence in, and acceptance of the judicial system' might well consider that, however admirable its resolute adherence to the law as it was, a decision contrary to the public sense of justice as it is, operates, so far as it is known, to diminish respect for the courts and for law itself." Szanton, Stare Decisis; A Dissenting View, 10 Hastings L. J. 394, 397 (1959).

<sup>5</sup> We said recently that "in rare cases, decisions construing federal statutes might be denied full retroactive effect, as for instance where this Court overrules its own construction of a statute . . ." United States v. Estate of Donnelly, 397 U.S. 286, 295 (1970). Cf. Simpson v. Union Oil Co. of California, 377 U.S. 13, 25 (1964).

<sup>6</sup> The lower courts did not reach the question of whether, assuming the antitrust laws apply, they have been violated. This should be considered on remand.

<sup>7</sup> Cf. United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219 (1941).

I ē ÁNÈJÉG Í ÉEGJI LÁGÚÉDÉGÉUJ ÉEGFFI LÁGSEÓAÉGÁ G ÉEÉI Í ÉAFJÍ GÁWÉÉSÓYÓÁFH ÉEÉI Í

This Court has faced the interrelationship between the antitrust laws and the labor laws before. The decisions make several things clear. First, "benefits to organized labor cannot be utilized as a cat's-paw to pull employer's chestnuts out of the [****59] antitrust fires." United States v. Women's Sportswear Manufacturers Assn., 336 U.S. 460, 464 (1949). See also Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, 325 U.S. 797 (1945). Second, the very nature of a collective-bargaining agreement mandates that the parties be able to "restrain" trade to a greater degree than management could do unilaterally. United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219 (1941); United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657 (1965); Amalgamated Meat Cutters v. Jewel Tea, 381 U.S. 676 (1965); cf., Teamsters Union v. Oliver, 358 U.S. 283 (1959). Finally, it is clear that some cases can be resolved only by examining the purposes and the competing interests of the labor and antitrust statutes and by striking a balance.

[***751] It is apparent that none of the prior cases is precisely in point. They involve union-management agreements that work to the detriment of management's competitors. In this case, petitioner urges that the reserve system works to the detriment of labor.

[*295] While there was evidence at trial concerning the [****60] collective-bargaining relationship of the parties, the issues surrounding that relationship have not been fully explored. As one commentary has suggested, this case "has been litigated with the implications for the institution of collective bargaining only dimly perceived. The labor law issues have been in the corners of the case -- the courts below, for example, did not reach them -- moving in and out of the shadows like an uninvited guest at a party whom one can't decide either to embrace or expel."<sup>8</sup>

It is true that in Radovich v. National Football League, supra, the Court rejected a claim that federal labor statutes governed the relationship between a professional athlete and the professional sport. But, an examination of the briefs and record in that case indicates that the issue was not squarely faced. The issue is once again before [***61] this Court without being clearly focused. It should, therefore, be the subject of further inquiry in the District Court.

There is a surface appeal to respondents' argument that petitioner's sole remedy lies in filing a claim with the National Labor Relations Board, but this argument is premised on the notion that management and labor have agreed to accept the reserve clause. This notion is contradicted, in part, by the record in this case. Petitioner suggests that the reserve system was thrust upon the players by the owners and that the recently formed players' union has not had time to modify or eradicate it. If this is true, the question arises as to whether there would then be any exemption from the antitrust laws in this case. Petitioner also suggests that there are limits [*296] to the antitrust violations to which labor and management can agree. These limits should also be explored.

[**2119] In light of these considerations, I would remand this case to the District Court for consideration of whether petitioner can state a claim under the antitrust laws despite the collective-bargaining agreement, and, if so, for a determination of whether there has been an antitrust [***62] violation in this case.

References

---

20 Am Jur 2d, Courts 183, 186, 231-235; 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 5

US L Ed Digest, Courts 141, 775; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 11, 23

ALR Digests, Courts 140, 150, 349; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 12, 47

L Ed Index to Anno (Rev ed), Amusements; Courts; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Baseball; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; Stare Decisis

Federal Quick Index, Baseball; Courts; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

---

<sup>8</sup> Jacobs & Winter, Antitrust Principles and Collective Bargaining by Athletes: Of Superstars in Peonage, 81 Yale L. J. 1, 22 (1971).

I ÆÍ ÁNÈJEG Í ÆÍGJÍ LÁGÚÆÓÐÆGUJ ÆÍGFFJLÁGÆÓÐÆGAÅ G ÆÍB Í FLÁJÍ GÁWÈÆÓÝÓÁH ÆÍB G

Annotation References:

Professional sports as within federal antitrust laws. 98 L Ed 73, 99 L Ed 301.

Amusement or educational enterprise as interstate commerce. 26 ALR 359, 47 ALR 782.

---

End of Document

Tidewater Oil Co. v. United States

Supreme Court of the United States

October 11, 1972, Argued ; December 6, 1972, Decided

No. 71-366

Reporter

409 U.S. 151 *; 93 S. Ct. 408 **; 34 L. Ed. 2d 375 ***; 1972 U.S. LEXIS 159 ****; 1972 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,258

TIDEWATER OIL CO. v. UNITED STATES ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

Expediting, court of appeals, cases, antitrust case, interlocutory order, interlocutory appeal, final judgment, district court, appeals, injunction, antitrust, appellate jurisdiction, controlling question, decree, direct appeal, civil action, interlocutory, questions, legislative history, direct review, termination, provisions, orders, screening, revision

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN1 Legislation, Interpretation

While the clear meaning of statutory language is not to be ignored, words are inexact tools at best, and hence it is essential that courts place the words of a statute in their proper context by resort to the legislative history.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Divestiture

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

HN2 Civil Actions, Injunctions

I €JÁWEÉÍ FÉÉÍ FLÁHUAÓDÀ È ÉÉ Ë LÁH ÁSEØAÉCAÁÍ I ÉÉHÍ I LAFJÍ GÁWEÉSÓYÓÁÍ JÉÉHÍ

28 U.S.C.S. § 1292\(a\)\(1\) allows interlocutory orders of the district courts granting, continuing, modifying, refusing or dissolving injunctions to be appealed to the courts of appeals except where a direct review may be had in the Supreme Court.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

**HN3** Appellate Jurisdiction, Interlocutory Orders

See 28 U.S.C.S. § 1292\(b\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

**HN4** US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

The consistent construction that had been accorded 15 U.S.C.S. § 29 prior to the enactment of 28 U.S.C.S. § 1292\(b\) cannot simply be ignored in determining the impact of that section on government civil antitrust cases.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Final Judgment Rule

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

**HN5** Appellate Jurisdiction, Final Judgment Rule

28 U.S.C.S. § 1292 is intended to apply only to interlocutory orders, not otherwise appealable under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1292\(a\), in civil actions in which the courts of appeals would have jurisdiction over an appeal from the final judgment under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1291.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

**HN6** Appellate Jurisdiction, Interlocutory Orders

28 U.S.C.S. § 1292\(a\) provides for an appeal as a matter of right from a number of specified types of interlocutory orders -- in particular, interlocutory orders granting or denying injunctions. Those interlocutory orders not within subsection (a), however, are made appealable in 28 U.S.C.S. § 1292 \(b\), subject to the judgment and discretion of the district court and the court of appeals. Greater importance obviously is attached to those types of interlocutory orders specified in subsection (a) than to those covered by (b).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Final Judgment Rule

**HN7** US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

Appeals in government civil antitrust cases can be taken only from final judgments and only to the appellate court.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

Pursuant to the provisions of 28 USCS 1292\(b\)--which authorizes a United States Court of Appeals, in its discretion, to permit an appeal from a District Court's interlocutory order in a civil action when the District Court certifies that its order involves a controlling question of law and that immediate appeal may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation--a United States District Court, in a civil antitrust action brought by the United States, certified that its denial of a motion to dismiss one of the defendants involved a controlling question of law and that an immediate appeal might materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. However, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit denied the application for leave to appeal, on the ground that the Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction in view of the provisions of 2 of the Expediting Act of 1903, which provides that an appeal from a final judgment of a District Court in a government civil antitrust action will lie only to the United States Supreme Court.

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Marshall, J., expressing the view of six members of the court, it was held that 28 USCS 1292\(b\) did not establish jurisdiction in the Courts of Appeals over interlocutory orders in government civil antitrust actions, since 2 of the Expediting Act created exclusive jurisdiction of appeals in such actions in the Supreme Court and precluded appeals from interlocutory orders--it being noted that the views of individual Justices critical of the wisdom of 2 of the Expediting Act, particularly because of the burden it placed on the Supreme Court, afforded no basis for disregarding the plain intent of Congress.

White, J., joined the court's opinion except for the advisory to Congress reflecting a view of the relative merits of the Expediting Act.

Douglas, J., dissenting, stated that while he agreed with Stewart, J., that 28 USCS 1292\(b\) should be construed to allow interlocutory appeals to the Courts of Appeals in government civil antitrust actions, nevertheless he did not agree with the intimations in both the majority and the minority opinions that the Supreme Court was overworked.

Stewart, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., and joined in part by Douglas, J., dissented, expressing the view that since the Expediting Act of 1903 applied only to final judgments, and since 28 USCS 1292\(b\), enacted in 1958, applied only to interlocutory orders, the statutes were not inconsistent and the Expediting Act should not be construed as prohibiting Court of Appeals jurisdiction under 1292(b) of interlocutory appeals in government civil antitrust actions.

Headnotes

---

APPEAL AND ERROR §21.9 > certiorari -- important question -- conflict of decisions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

The United States Supreme Court will grant certiorari to review a Federal Court of Appeals' decision that it had no jurisdiction under 28 USCS 1292\(b\) to review a District Court's interlocutory order in a civil antitrust action brought by the government, where the decision raises an important question of federal appellate jurisdiction, and where a conflict among the circuits had subsequently developed on the question.

APPEAL AND ERROR §31 > government civil antitrust actions -- interlocutory orders -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

I €JÁWÉÍ FÉÍ FLÁHÚÓDA Ë Í ÓA Ë LÁH ÁSEÓaÉCAÁI Í ÉEHI Í LAFJÍ GÁWÉSÓYÓÁÍ JÉE

28 USCS 1292\(b\)--which provides that a Court of Appeals may, in its discretion, permit an appeal from a District Court's interlocutory order in a civil action when the District Court, in making an order not otherwise appealable under the provisions of 1292(a) authorizing appeals from specified types of interlocutory orders, shall certify that the order involves a controlling question of law and that immediate appeal may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation--does not establish jurisdiction in a Court of Appeals over interlocutory orders in antitrust actions brought by the United States, since 2 of the Expediting Act of 1903 (15 USCS 29), which provides that an appeal from a final judgment of a District Court in a government civil antitrust action will lie only to the United States Supreme Court, creates exclusive jurisdiction of appeals in such cases in the Supreme Court.

APPEAL AND ERROR §286 > Expediting Act -- purpose -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The purpose of 2 of the Expediting Act of 1903 (15 USCS 29), which provides that in civil antitrust actions brought by the United States, an appeal from the final judgment of the District Court will lie only to the United States Supreme Court, is to expedite litigation of great and general importance, and to withdraw all intermediate appellate jurisdiction in government civil antitrust cases.

COURTS §225.4 > three-judge District Court -- Expediting Act -- purpose -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

The purpose of 1 of the Expediting Act of 1903 (15 USCS 28), which requires that a three-judge District Court be convened to hear a government civil antitrust case which the Attorney General certifies to be of general public importance, is to provide a mechanism for full consideration of such cases by a panel of judges before presentation on appeal to the United States Supreme Court as if heard by a United States Court of Appeals.

STATUTES §145 > construction -- legislative history -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

While the clear meaning of statutory language is not to be ignored, words are inexact tools at best, and hence it is essential that the words of a statute be placed in their proper context by resort to the legislative history.

APPEAL AND ERROR §31 > government civil antitrust suit -- interlocutory order -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

An application under the All Writs Act (28 USCS 1651\(a\)) for an extraordinary writ to review an interlocutory order in a government civil antitrust case must be made to the United States Supreme Court, which has sole appellate jurisdiction in such cases under 2 of the Expediting Act of 1903 (15 USCS 29).

I EU ÁNDEJÆFÍ FÆSÍ FLÁI HÁUÐÓÐA Æ ÞÆT Æ LÁH ÁSEÐA ÆGA ÁHÍ I ÞÆTHÍ I LAFJÍ GÁNEÐASÓY QUÁFI J ÞÆTHÍ

APPEAL AND ERROR §31 > government civil antitrust case -- interlocutory order -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[7A] [ ] [7A] LEdHN[7B] [ ] [7B]

Under 2 of the Expediting Act of 1903 (15 USCS 29), which provides that in civil antitrust actions brought by the United States, an appeal from the final judgment of the District Court will lie only to the United States Supreme Court, appeals of interlocutory orders in such cases cannot be taken to the Supreme Court.

APPEAL AND ERROR §31 > government civil antitrust case -- interlocutory order -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[8] [  ] [8]

Under 2 of the Expediting Act of 1903 (15 USCS 29), which provides that in civil antitrust actions brought by the United States, an appeal from the "final judgment" of the District Court will lie only to the United States Supreme Court, review of interlocutory orders may be had in the Supreme Court upon appeal from the final judgment, but direct review may not be had when the interlocutory order is entered, since there is then no "final judgment."

APPEAL AND ERROR §31 > review of interlocutory injunctions -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[9] [  ] [9]

The exception clause in 28 USCS 1292\(a\)\(1\)--which allows interlocutory orders of the Federal District Courts, granting, continuing, modifying, refusing, or dissolving injunctions, to be appealed to the Courts of Appeals, "except where a direct review may be had in the Supreme Court"--applies so as to bar interlocutory appeals to the Court of Appeals not only in instances where the District Court's interlocutory order itself may be appealed to the Supreme Court, but also in instances where the District Court's interlocutory order, though not itself appealable to the Supreme Court, may be reviewed in the Supreme Court on appeal from a final judgment.

STATUTES §139 > United States Code -- interpretation -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[10] [  ] [10]

Since the function of the Revisers of the 1948 United States Code was generally limited to that of consolidation and codification, the interpretation of provisions altered in the 1948 revision is governed by the principle that no change is to be presumed unless clearly expressed.

APPEAL AND ERROR §31 > government civil antitrust cases -- interlocutory injunctions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [  ] [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [  ] [11B] [LEdHN\[11C\]](#) [  ] [11C]

The provisions of 28 USCS 1292\(a\)\(1\)--which authorize appeals to the Courts of Appeals of interlocutory orders of the Federal District Courts granting or denying injunctions, except where direct review may be had in the United States Supreme Court--may not be invoked in civil antitrust actions brought by the United States, since 2 of the Expediting Act of 1903 (15 USCS 29), which provides that an appeal from the final judgment of a District Court in a government civil antitrust action will lie only to the Supreme Court, limits the right of appeal in such cases to a final judgment and establishes exclusive jurisdiction of such appeals in the Supreme Court.

I EUÁWÉÉÍ FÉÉÍ FLÁHÁÉDÁ É ÉÉÉ Ë LÁH ÁSEÓAÉCAÁÍ ÉÉÉHÍ LAFJÍ GÁWEÉSÓYÓÁÍ JÉÉÉ

APPEAL AND ERROR §31 > appealability of interlocutory orders -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

28 USCS 1292(b)--which provides that a Court of Appeals may, in its discretion, permit an appeal from a District Court's interlocutory order in a civil action when the District Court, in making an order not otherwise appealable under provisions of 1292(a) authorizing appeals from specified types of interlocutory orders, shall certify that the order involves a controlling question of law and that immediate appeal may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation--does not create a general right of interlocutory appeal; rather, it only extends the availability of such appeals to a limited group of orders, not otherwise covered by 1292, that involve "a controlling question of law" the immediate appeal of which "may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation."

APPEAL AND ERROR §22 > government civil antitrust actions -- appeals to Supreme Court -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

The purposes of 2 of the Expediting Act of 1903 (15 USCS 29)--which provides that in civil antitrust actions brought by the United States, an appeal from the final judgment of the District Court will lie only to the United States Supreme Court--include the avoiding of piecemeal appeal, and the limiting of review of important questions of antitrust law to the Supreme Court.

APPEAL AND ERROR §31 > interlocutory orders -- purpose of statute -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

28 USCS 1292(b)--which provides that a Court of Appeals may, in its discretion, permit an appeal from a District Court's interlocutory order in a civil action when the District Court, in making an order not otherwise appealable under the provisions of 1292(a) authorizing appeals from specified types of interlocutory orders, shall certify that the order involves a controlling question of law and that immediate appeal may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation--was intended to apply only to interlocutory orders, not otherwise appealable under 1292(a), in civil actions in which the Courts of Appeals would have jurisdiction over an appeal from the final judgment under 28 USCS 1291.

APPEAL AND ERROR §31 > interlocutory orders -- purpose of statute -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15A\]](#) [15A] [LEdHN\[15B\]](#) [15B]

28 USCS 1292(b)--which provides that a Court of Appeals may, in its discretion, permit an appeal from a District Court's interlocutory order in a civil action when the District Court, in making an order not otherwise appealable under the provisions of 1292(a) authorizing appeal from specified types of interlocutory orders, shall certify that the order involves a controlling question of law and that immediate appeal may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation--was intended to supplement 1292(a), not to provide a substitute for it.

APPEAL AND ERROR §24 > COURTS §141 > government civil antitrust actions -- appeals to Supreme Court -- wisdom of statute -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [▼] [16]

The personal views of the Justices of the United States Supreme Court, critical of the wisdom of 2 of the Expediting Act of 1903 (15 USCS 29)--which provides that in civil antitrust actions brought by the United States, an appeal from the final judgment of the District Court will lie only to the Supreme Court--are no basis for disregarding what the Supreme Court is bound to recognize as the plain and unaltered intent of Congress to require that appeals in government civil antitrust cases be taken only from final judgments and only to the Supreme Court.

Syllabus

---

The Expediting Act, providing that in a civil antitrust action brought by the United States in a federal district court an appeal from that court's final judgment will lie only to this Court, lodged exclusive appellate jurisdiction over such actions in this Court and thus bars the courts of appeals from asserting jurisdiction over interlocutory orders covered by 28 U. S. C. § 1292 \(b\), as well as over other interlocutory orders specified in § 1292 \(a\). The legislative history of those provisions contains no indication of a congressional intent to impair the original exclusivity of this Court's jurisdiction under the Expediting Act. Pp. 154-174.

Counsel: Moses Lasky argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs was C. Lansing Hays, Jr.

A. Raymond Randolph, Jr., argued the cause for the United States pro hac vice. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Griswold and Assistant Attorney General Kauper.

Judges: Marshall, J., delivered the opinion [***2] of the Court, in which Burger, C. J., and Brennan, White, Blackmun, and Powell, JJ., joined. White, J., filed a concurring statement, post, p. 174. Douglas, J., filed a dissenting opinion, post, p. 174. Stewart, J., filed a dissenting opinion, which Rehnquist, J., joined, and Douglas, J., joined in part, post, p. 178.

Opinion by: MARSHALL

Opinion

---

[*151] [***379] [**410] MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the Court.

On July 13, 1966, the United States filed a civil antitrust suit against Phillips Petroleum Co. (Phillips) and petitioner Tidewater Oil Co. (Tidewater). The complaint alleged that Phillips' acquisition of certain [*152] assets and operations of Tidewater violated § 7 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 18. The District Court denied the United States' motion for a temporary restraining order to prevent consummation of the acquisition,<sup>1</sup> and its subsequent motion for a preliminary injunction to require either rescission of the acquisition or maintenance by Phillips of the going-concern value of the transferred assets and operations.

---

<sup>1</sup> Tidewater then transferred title to its Western Marketing and Manufacturing Division to Phillips.

I €JÁMEÉÍ FÉÍ GLÁHÚDÁ Í ÉÉÉ FELÁH ÁSEÓaÉCAÁÍ I ÉÉÉ JLÁFJÍ GÁMEÉSÓYÓÁÍ JÉÉÉG

[***3] [LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1] [LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] Petitioner continued as a party to the suit during some five years of pretrial discovery and preparation.<sup>2</sup> [***5] [***380] Then in April 1971, following the Government's announcement that it was ready for trial, petitioner moved to be dismissed as a party.<sup>3</sup> The District Court denied the motion, but found that it involved "a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from [the] order may materially advance the ultimate termination of this litigation." It therefore certified "its order denying defendant's motion to dismiss for interlocutory appeal under Section 1292 \(b\) of Title 28 of the United States Code." As required by the statute, Tidewater then applied to the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit for leave to prosecute the appeal. That court, however, denied the application relying solely on its previous [*153] decision in United States v. FMC Corp., 321 F.2d 534 \(1963\). There an attempt was made to appeal an [*4] interlocutory order denying a preliminary injunction in a Government civil antitrust case. Notwithstanding that 28 U. S. C. § 1292 \(a\)\(1\) provides for an appeal of right to the courts of appeals from an order granting or denying preliminary injunctions, the Ninth Circuit held that it lacked jurisdiction over such an appeal in a Government civil antitrust case because of § 2 of the Expediting Act of 1903, 32 Stat. 823, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 29, which provides that "in every civil action brought in any district court of the United States under any of [the Antitrust] Acts, wherein the United States is complainant, an appeal from the final judgment of the district court will lie only to the Supreme Court." In this case, then, the Court of Appeals extended its prior ruling to interlocutory orders within § 1292 \(b\). Because this decision raises an important question of federal appellate jurisdiction and because a conflict [*411] among the circuits subsequently developed on this question,<sup>4</sup> we granted certiorari.<sup>5</sup> For the reasons that follow, we affirm the decision of the Court of Appeals.

[***6] [*154] I

To determine the relevance of 28 U. S. C. § 1292 \(b\) for Government civil antitrust cases, it is necessary first to consider the original purpose of § 2 of [*381] the Expediting Act and the over half-century of experience with that section in the context of interlocutory appeals provisions that preceded the enactment of § 1292 \(b\) in 1958.<sup>6</sup>

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3] [LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] In an effort to "expedite [certain] litigation of great and general importance," 36 Cong. Rec. 1679 (remarks of Sen. Fairbanks),<sup>7</sup> [*8] Congress enacted § 2 of the Expediting Act in 1903<sup>8</sup> to

<sup>2</sup> Tidewater merged with Getty Oil Co. on September 30, 1967. It has never been contended that that merger altered Tidewater's legal status in this case.

<sup>3</sup> In its motion to be dismissed, Tidewater contended "that Section 7 of the Clayton Act is directed only against the acquiring corporation and not against the seller, that the sale of assets by defendant Tidewater Oil Company to Phillips Petroleum Company has long ago been consummated, that no relief is obtainable against Tidewater Oil Company, and that its presence in the suit is no longer necessary or appropriate."

<sup>4</sup> Subsequent to the decision by the Ninth Circuit in this case, the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit held that § 1292 \(b\) could be used to take an interlocutory appeal in a Government civil antitrust case. See Fisons Ltd. v. United States, 458 F.2d 1241, 1244-1248, cert. denied, 405 U.S. 1041 \(1972\). The only other court of appeals to consider the question, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, reached the same result as the Ninth Circuit in this case. See Farbenfabriken Bayer, A. G. v. United States, 1968 CCH Trade Cas. para. 72,570, cert. denied, 393 U.S. 959 \(1968\); Glaxo Group, Ltd. v. United States, Misc. No. 3261 (June 25, 1968).

<sup>5</sup> 405 U.S. 986 \(1972\). We had originally denied certiorari, 404 U.S. 941 \(1971\).

<sup>6</sup> Act of Sept. 2, 1958, Pub. L. 85-919, 72 Stat. 1770.

<sup>7</sup> See also Shenandoah Valley Broadcasting v. ASCAP, 375 U.S. 39, 40 \(1963\), modified, 375 U.S. 994 \(1964\). Section 1 of the Expediting Act, 15 U. S. C. § 28, requires that a three-judge district court be convened to hear any Government civil antitrust case that the Attorney General certifies to be of "general public importance." See also 49 U. S. C. § 44. This three-judge court provision is also a reflection of the "great importance" attached to Government civil antitrust cases and was intended to provide a mechanism for full consideration of such cases by a panel of judges "before presentation to the Supreme Court as if heard by the United States circuit court of appeals." H. R. Rep. No. 3020, 57th Cong., 2d Sess., 2 (1903). But this provision has been seldom used.

I €JÁWÜÉÍ FÉÍ I LÁHÜÉÓÄ Ë FFLÁH ÁSEÓaÉcaÁÍ I ÉEHI FLÁFJÍ GÁWÉÉSÓYÓÁÍ JÉE

withdraw all intermediate appellate jurisdiction in Government civil antitrust [*155] cases. At the time of the passage of the Expediting Act, the then recently established circuit courts of appeals<sup>9</sup> had jurisdiction [***7] under the Evarts Act over an appeal not only from a "final decision"<sup>10</sup> but also from "an interlocutory order or decree" granting or continuing an injunction or appointing a receiver "in a cause in which an appeal from a final decree may be taken . . . to the circuit court of appeals."<sup>11</sup> Hence, by [**412] lodging exclusive appellate jurisdiction over the "final judgment of the district court" in this Court, the Expediting Act necessarily eliminated court of appeals jurisdiction over appeals from interlocutory, as well as final, decrees in Government civil antitrust cases.

LEdHN[4B] [4B]

Congress thus initially determined to speed appellate review [***9] by channeling appeals in Expediting Act cases directly to this Court and to avoid the delay inherent in piecemeal appeal by conditioning appeal upon the presence of a "final judgment."<sup>12</sup> [***10] But mere speed in [*156] the disposition of Government civil antitrust cases was not Congress' only [***382] concern; that result might have been achieved simply by establishing procedures for the expeditious handling of such cases in the courts of appeals. Congress was also intent upon facilitating review by this Court "of a class of antitrust cases deemed particularly important."<sup>13</sup> Because of the importance of uniform interpretation of the antitrust law,<sup>14</sup> which was still in its infancy in 1903, it is understandable that Congress chose to establish this special appellate procedure for Government civil antitrust cases, which were thought generally to involve issues of wide importance.<sup>15</sup>

<sup>8</sup> Act of Feb. 11, 1903, § 2, 32 Stat. 823, as amended, Act of Mar. 3, 1911, § 291, 36 Stat. 1167; Act of June 9, 1944, c. 239, 58 Stat. 272; Act of June 25, 1948, § 17, 62 Stat. 989. As originally enacted, the statute read in relevant part as follows:

"That in every suit in equity pending or hereafter brought in any circuit court of the United States under any of said Acts, wherein the United States is complainant, . . . an appeal from the final decree of the circuit court will lie only to the Supreme Court and must be taken within sixty days from the entry thereof . . . ."

There is no contention here that the very minor changes in wording effected by the subsequent amendments and codifications of the statute in any way altered the original meaning of the Act.

<sup>9</sup> Act of Mar. 3, 1891, § 2, 26 Stat. 826.

<sup>10</sup> Act of Mar. 3, 1891, § 6, 26 Stat. 828.

<sup>11</sup> Act of June 6, 1900, c. 803, 31 Stat. 660, amending Act of Mar. 3, 1891, § 7, 26 Stat. 828, as amended, Act of Feb. 18, 1895, 28 Stat. 666 (emphasis added).

<sup>12</sup> In United States v. California Cooperative Canneries, 279 U.S. 553, 558 (1929), Mr. Justice Brandeis, speaking for the Court, detailed the causes of delay that prompted the Expediting Act:

"Congress sought by the Expediting Act to ensure speedy disposition of suits in equity brought by the United States under the Anti-Trust Act. Before the passage of the Expediting Act the opportunities for delay were many. From a final decree in the trial court under the Anti-Trust Act an appeal lay to the Circuit Court of Appeals; and six months were allowed for taking the appeal. From the judgment of the Court of Appeals an appeal lay to this Court; and one year was allowed for taking that appeal. Act of March 3, 1891, c. 517, §§ 6, 11, 26 Stat. 826, 828, 829. See United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 60 Fed. 306; 60 Fed. 934; 156 U.S. 1; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 53 Fed. 440; 58 Fed. 58; 166 U.S. 290. Moreover, there might be an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals from a decree granting or denying an interlocutory injunction, Act of June 6, 1900, c. 803, 31 Stat. 660."

See also United States Alkali Export Assn. v. United States, 325 U.S. 196, 203 (1945).

<sup>13</sup> United States v. Cities Service Co., 410 F.2d 662, 664 (CA1 1969); see Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 364 (1962) (Harlan, J., dissenting in part and concurring in part); 36 Cong. Rec. 1679 (remarks of Sen. Fairbanks); cf. n. 7, supra.

<sup>14</sup> Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209.

<sup>15</sup> In saying this, we are not to be understood as necessarily accepting today an important premise that underlies § 2 -- namely, that the courts of appeals, subject to review on certiorari in this Court, are incapable of providing the uniformity of interpretation

[****11] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5] During the 25 years following the enactment of the Expediting Act, Congress amended the Evarts Act provision governing interlocutory appeals to the courts of [*157] appeals on four separate occasions -- in 1906,<sup>16</sup> 1911,<sup>17</sup> 1925,<sup>18</sup> and 1928.<sup>19</sup> [****13] It can be argued that on its face the very first of these amendments once again made interlocutory appeals [*413] available to the courts of appeals in Government civil antitrust cases and that the language of each successive amendment, where relevant, perpetuated that state of affairs.<sup>20</sup> [****14] But, HN1 while the clear meaning of statutory language is not to be ignored, "words are inexact tools at best," Harrison v. Northern Trust Co., 317 U.S. 476, 479 \(1943\), [***383] and hence it is essential that we place the words of a statute in their proper context by resort to the legislative history. Nowhere is this better illustrated than in this case. For we find it inconceivable [*158] that Congress, having purposefully withdrawn the jurisdiction [****12] of the courts of appeals in certain antitrust cases in 1903, would re-establish it in the same cases -- but only for interlocutory orders -- just three years later in 1906, without making any reference to that purpose. Yet no mention of either the Expediting Act or Government civil antitrust cases is to be found in the legislative history of the 1906 amendment to the interlocutory appeals provision<sup>21</sup> -- or, for that matter, in that of the successive amendments insofar as they are relevant;<sup>22</sup> rather, for each amendment some purpose wholly unrelated to Expediting Act cases is apparent from the relevant legislative materials.<sup>23</sup> In light of this, we find necessary to the administration of the antitrust laws. See infra, at 170. In 1903, the courts of appeals had been in existence for only 12 years and various reservations about them had not yet been dispelled. See F. Frankfurter & J. Landis, The Business of the Supreme Court 258 (1927). Since that time, we have had over a half-century of experience with the courts of appeals -- including experience in the field of private antitrust litigation -- which has resolved any initial doubts. See ibid.

---

<sup>16</sup> Act of Apr. 14, 1906, c. 1627, 34 Stat. 116.

<sup>17</sup> Act of Mar. 3, 1911, § 129, 36 Stat. 1134.

<sup>18</sup> Act of Feb. 13, 1925, amending § 129, 43 Stat. 937.

<sup>19</sup> Act of Apr. 11, 1928, c. 354, 45 Stat. 422.

<sup>20</sup> The 1906 amendment removed the limitation on interlocutory appeal to causes "in which an appeal from a final decree may be taken . . . to the circuit court of appeals" and provided simply that such an appeal may be taken to the court of appeals "in any cause." Act of Apr. 14, 1906, c. 1627, 34 Stat. 116. In codifying the Evarts Act interlocutory appeals provision in 1911, "in any cause" was struck, and the provision was amended to allow the courts of appeals to entertain appeals from interlocutory orders "notwithstanding an appeal in such case might, upon final decree under the statutes regulating the same, be taken directly to the Supreme Court." Act of Mar. 3, 1911, § 129, 36 Stat. 1134. Finally, the famous Judges' Bill of 1925, in turn struck the "notwithstanding" language, with the result that the codified provision, § 129, simply allowed an appeal to be "taken from [an] interlocutory order or decree [granting or denying an injunction or appointing a receiver] to the circuit court of appeals . . ." Act of Feb. 13, 1925, amending § 129, 43 Stat. 937.

The 1928 amendment is completely without relevance here since it merely extended the applicability of the statute to interlocutory orders issued by the District Courts of Alaska, Hawaii, the Virgin Islands, and the Canal Zone. Act of Apr. 11, 1928, c. 354, 45 Stat. 422.

<sup>21</sup> See S. Rep. No. 2192, 59th Cong., 1st Sess. (1906); H. R. Rep. No. 542, 59th Cong., 1st Sess. (1906); 40 Cong. Rec. 1723, 1742, 4429, 4856-4857, 5056.

<sup>22</sup> As to the 1911 amendment, see S. Rep. No. 388, 61st Cong., 2d Sess., pt. 1, p. 53 (1910); H. R. Doc. No. 783, 61st Cong., 2d Sess., 57 (1910); H. R. Rep. No. 818, 61st Cong., 2d Sess. (1910); S. Doc. No. 848, 61st Cong., 3d Sess. (1911); 45 Cong. Rec. 4001. As to the 1925 amendment, see S. Rep. No. 362, 68th Cong., 1st Sess., 3 (1924); H. R. Rep. No. 1075, 68th Cong., 2d Sess., 4-5 (1925); Hearing on S. 2060 and S. 2061 before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 68th Cong., 1st Sess., 12 (1924).

<sup>23</sup> Thus, the 1906 amendment, see n. 20, supra, was intended to render ineffective certain evasive pleading tactics that had theretofore been employed to take advantage of the fact that under the Evarts Act an interlocutory appeal could be taken where only a nonconstitutional issue was at stake but not where a constitutional issue was involved. See H. R. Rep. No. 542, 59th Cong., 1st Sess., 2-3 (1906); 40 Cong. Rec. 1723 (remarks of Rep. Brantley); id., at 4856 (remarks of Sen. Bacon).

I € JÁNEJAFÍ FÆFÍ Í LÁHÚÈÓðA Æ FHÁH ÁSEÓa ÈGÁH Í HÁH Í HÁJÍ GÁMEÉSÓYQAFÍ JÁHFFG

[*159] it impossible to ascribe to Congress an [**414] intent to impair the original exclusivity of this Court's [***384] jurisdiction under § 2 through any of these amendments to the interlocutory appeals provision.

[****15]

[*160] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [↑] [6][LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [↑] [7A] This clearly was the view of the seven members of the unanimous Court in United States v. California Cooperative Canneries, 279 U.S. 553 (1929). There, in rejecting the argument that an appeal lay to the court of appeals from an order denying a motion to intervene in a Government civil antitrust case, the Court stated:<sup>24</sup>

"[The Evarts Act] provisions governing appeals in general were amended by the Expediting Act so that in suits in equity under the Anti-Trust Act 'in which the United States is complainant,' the appeal should be direct to this Court from the final decree in the trial court. Thus, Congress limited the right of review to an appeal from the decree which disposed of all matters . . . ; and it precluded the possibility of an appeal to either [this Court or the court of appeals] from an interlocutory decree." Id., at 558 (emphasis added).

And a decade and a half later, in Allen Calculators v. National Cash Register Co., 322 U.S. 137, 142 (1944), [****16] the Court reiterated "that jurisdiction to review District Court decrees was not vested in the Circuit Courts of Appeals but solely in this court, and [the Expediting Act] limited the right of appeal to final decrees." It is true that interlocutory orders in Government civil anti-trust cases were subsequently held reviewable by way of extraordinary writs under the All Writs Act, 28 U. S. C. § 1651 \(a\), but application for the extraordinary writ must be made to this Court where "sole appellate jurisdiction lies" in such cases. United States Alkali Export Assn. v. United

The legislative history concerning the 1911 amendment, see n. 20, supra, indicates that the "notwithstanding" language was designed to "remove any doubt" that the limitation -- initially struck by the 1906 amendment -- on interlocutory appeals to those cases in which an appeal might be taken to the court of appeals after a final decree had been eliminated. But this merely suggests an intent finally to resolve with even more specific language the problem of evasive pleading which had motivated the 1906 amendment. See S. Rep. No. 388, 61st Cong., 2d Sess., pt. 1, p. 53 (1910). Thus, in response to inquiry whether this amendment constituted "a change in the existing law," Senator Heyburn, a sponsor of the legislation, said on the Senate floor, "This is the existing law." 45 Cong. Rec. 4001.

As to the 1925 version of the interlocutory appeals provision, see n. 20, supra, the analysis prepared by the committee of this Court which drafted it explained that the "notwithstanding" language was "eliminated as having no further application in view of the repeal of" the provisions that had necessitated the initial 1906 amendment. Hearing on S. 2060 and S. 2061 before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 68th Cong., 1st Sess., 12 (1924). And if the addition of the "notwithstanding" language in 1911 did not establish court of appeals jurisdiction over interlocutory orders in Expediting Act cases, we fail to see how dropping that language in 1925 did so. At the same time, elsewhere in the Judges' Bill, § 2 of the Expediting Act was carried forward without alteration. See Act of Feb. 13, 1925, amending § 238 (1), 43 Stat. 938. In doing so, it was stated: "A direct review by the Supreme Court of an interlocutory or final judgment or decree of a district court may be had where it is so provided in the following Acts or parts of Acts, and not otherwise: (1) Section 2 of the Act of February 11, 1903, 'to expedite the hearing and determination' of certain suits brought by the United States under the antitrust . . . laws . . ." Ibid. (emphasis added). Section 2, of course, has never contained a provision allowing appeal of interlocutory orders. Moreover, Mr. Justice Van Devanter, a member of this Court's committee that prepared the bill, testified before the Senate Committee that the character of Expediting Act cases "suggest[s] that they should go directly to the Supreme Court rather than through the circuit courts of appeals" without any indication that an exception was being introduced for interlocutory appeals to the courts of appeals. Hearing on S. 2060 and S. 2061 before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 68th Cong., 1st Sess., 33 (1924). See also S. Rep. No. 362, 68th Cong., 1st Sess., 3 (1924).

<sup>24</sup> Certainly the Court spoke fully cognizant of at least the amendment contained in the Judges' Bill of just four years before, see n. 20, supra, since all seven sitting Justices had been on the Court when its committee submitted the bill to Congress.

I ĚJĀNĒJĀFÍ FĒFÍ ēLĀHŪĒDĀ ē ēE FI LĀH ĀSEOāĒGĀHĪ ī ēEHHI I LĀJĪ GĀMĒĒSÓYQĀFÍ JĀEHHFÍ

States, 325 U.S. 196, 201-203 (1945); [*161] De Beers Consolidated Mines v. United [**415] States, 325 U.S. 212, 217 (1945).<sup>25</sup>

LEdHN[7B] [↑] [7B] [****17]

[****18]

[***385] LEdHN[8] [↑] [8] LEdHN[9] [↑] [9] LEdHN[10] [↑] [10] The wording of the interlocutory appeals provision was again altered in the 1948 revision of the Judicial Code.<sup>26</sup> The result -- after certain subsequent minor changes not here relevant<sup>27</sup> -- was the present HN2 [↑] 28 U. S. C. § 1292 (a)(1), which allows "interlocutory orders of the district courts . . . granting, continuing, modifying, refusing [*162] or dissolving injunctions . . ." <sup>28</sup> to be appealed to the courts of appeals "except where a direct review may be had in the Supreme Court." (Emphasis added.) This final clause is susceptible of two plausible constructions that yield opposite results in cases subject to the Expediting Act. A direct review of interlocutory orders in Government civil antitrust cases clearly may be had in this Court, thus barring resort to § 1292 (a)(1) -- or so it would seem. But direct [****19] review may not be had when the interlocutory order is entered since there is no "final judgment," the predicate of an appeal under the Expediting Act. Therefore, were the final clause construed as directed only at the present availability of review in this Court, it would not, on its face, bar an interlocutory appeal. However, the function of the Revisers of the 1948 Code was generally limited to that of consolidation and codification.<sup>29</sup> Consequently, a well-established principle governing the interpretation of provisions altered in the 1948 revision is that "no change is to be presumed unless clearly expressed." Fourco Glass Co. v. Transmira Products Corp., 353 U.S. 222, 228 (1957). We find no such clear expression here. To the contrary, the Revisers' Notes fail to reveal [***386] any intention to expand the scope of the pre-existing jurisdiction of the courts of appeals over interlocutory appeals; the new § 1292 is described merely

<sup>25</sup> In Alkali Export Assn., the Court went on to say:

"[Extraordinary] writs may not be used as a substitute for an authorized appeal; and where, as here, the statutory scheme [the Expediting Act] permits appellate review of interlocutory orders only on appeal from the final judgment, review by certiorari or other extraordinary writ is not permissible in the face of the plain indication of the legislative purpose to avoid piecemeal reviews." 325 U.S., at 203 (emphasis added).

Nevertheless, the Court found that exigent circumstances associated with the District Court's denial of the defendant's motion to dismiss the action justified immediate review by common-law certiorari in the particular case. Id., at 203-204.

The Court in De Beers, stating that "what is . . . said [in Alkali Export Assn.] applies in this instance," 325 U.S., at 217, granted review under the All Writs Act of a preliminary injunction, although normally review would have been to the court of appeals under what is now 28 U. S. C. § 1292 (a)(1). Of course, nothing we say today signifies a retreat from our previous statements that appeals of interlocutory orders in Government civil antitrust cases cannot be taken even to this Court.

<sup>26</sup> Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 929.

<sup>27</sup> In 1951 reference to the District Court of Guam was inserted in the section, Act of Oct. 31, 1951, § 49, 65 Stat. 726, and reference to the District Court for the Territory of Alaska was removed from the section effective upon the admission of Alaska into the Union in 1959, Act of July 7, 1958, S. 12 (e), 72 Stat. 348. Finally, when subsection (b) was added to the section, the former entire section was designated subsection (a). Act of Sept. 2, 1958, Pub. L. 85-919, 72 Stat. 1770.

<sup>28</sup> The portion of the provision governing appeal of interlocutory orders appointing receivers and related matters became 28 U. S. C. § 1292 (2) (1946 ed., Supp. II), now 28 U. S. C. § 1292 (a)(2).

<sup>29</sup> See S. Rep. No. 1559, 80th Cong., 2d Sess., 1-2 (1948) ("great care has been exercised to make no changes in the existing law which would not meet with substantially unanimous approval"); H. R. Rep. No. 308, 80th Cong., 1st Sess., 1-8 (1947).

I € JÁNEJÉFÍ FÉFÍ GLÁHÚÉÓðA € FÍ LÁH ÁSEÓaÉGÁHÍ Í ÉRHÍ Í LÁJÍ GÁMÉÉSÓYÓJÁÍ JÉHÉFÍ

as a consolidation of a number of previously separate code provisions -- including the general [*163] interlocutory appeals [**416] provision -- "with necessary changes in phraseology to effect the consolidation. [***20]"<sup>30</sup>

[***21] In sum, then, our examination of the history and evolution of the present § 1292 (a)(1) -- the direct descendant of the original interlocutory appeals provision contained in the Evarts Act -- has convinced us that at least up to the passage of § 1292 (b) in 1958, Congress had not impaired the original exclusivity of this Court's jurisdiction under § 2 of the Expediting Act. As is usually true of questions of statutory construction, the issue is not totally free from doubt.<sup>31</sup> [***22] Yet, in the last analysis, whatever ambiguity may exist in the lengthy history of the original interlocutory appeals provision relative to the Expediting Act, it results primarily from the absence of any consideration of Government civil antitrust cases in that history and thus emphasizes the extent to which appellate jurisdiction in such cases has long been viewed as a peculiarly distinct matter. Cf. United States Alkali Export Assn. v. United States, 325 U.S., at 202-203. Certainly, this conclusion finds substantial support in our prior decisions in which we have consistently interpreted our appellate jurisdiction under § 2 as exclusive.<sup>32</sup>

[*164] II

LEdHN[2B] [2B]With this background, the question becomes what effect, if any, the enactment of § 1292 (b) in 1958 had upon this Court's theretofore exclusive appellate jurisdiction in Government civil antitrust cases. Section 1292 (b) provides in relevant part:

HN3 [2] "When a district judge, in making in a civil action an order not otherwise appealable under this section, shall be of the opinion that such order involves a controlling question of law as [***23] to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation, he shall so state in writing in such order. The Court of Appeals may thereupon, in its discretion, permit an appeal to be taken from such order, if application is made to it within ten days after the entry of the order . . . ."

At the outset petitioner contends that there is simply no conflict between this provision and § 2 of the Expediting Act. It suggests that [***387] "civil action" must be read as an all-inclusive phrase that covers, inter alia, Government civil antitrust cases. At the same time, it points out that § 1292 (b) is concerned only with interlocutory orders, while the Expediting Act deals only with final judgments. Thus, petitioner concludes that the enactment of § 1292 (b) is concerned only with interlocutory orders, while the Expediting Act deals only with final judgments. Thus, petitioner concludes that the enactment of § 1292 (b) made discretionary interlocutory appeals available where none had previously existed, and that the two statutes are in complete harmony with one another.

[***24] LEdHN[11A] [11A] LEdHN[12] [12] LEdHN[13] [13]Such a facile argument could also be made to support the contention that § 1292 (a)(1) can be invoked in Expediting Act cases -- were it not for the fact that, as we have already seen, § 2 does not merely apply solely to a "final judgment" but also limits the right of appeal to a [*165] "final judgment." Likewise, we can hardly accept petitioner's suggestion that when Congress enacted § 1292 (b), it wrote upon a clean slate insofar as appeals [**417] from interlocutory orders in Expediting Act cases are concerned. Nor do we find in § 1292 (b) the "sharp break with the traditional policy" of limited availability of interlocutory appeal so apparent to the dissent. The new provision hardly created a general right of interlocutory

---

<sup>30</sup> H. R. Rep. No. 2646 of the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the House of Representatives to accompany H. R. 7124, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., App. A107-108 (1946). See also H. R. Rep. No. 308 of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives to accompany H. R. 3214, 80th Cong., 1st Sess., App. A110-111 (1947).

<sup>31</sup> Compare n. 20, supra, with n. 23, supra.

<sup>32</sup> See supra, at 160-161. Similarly, two of three courts of appeals which have considered the question have concluded that an interlocutory appeal does not lie under § 1292 (a)(1) in Expediting Act cases. See United States v. Cities Service Co., 410 F.2d 662 (CA1 1969); United States v. FMC Corp., 321 F.2d 534 (CA9 1963). But see United States v. Ingersoll-Rand Co., 320 F.2d 509, 511-517 (CA3 1963).

I € JÁNEJÉFÍ FÉFÍ Í LÁHÚÉÓð Á Í FÍ LÁH ÁSEÓaÉGÁHÍ Í ÉRHÍ Í LÁJÍ GÁMÉÉSÓYÓJÁÍ JÉHÉG appeal; rather, it only extended the availability of such appeals to a limited group of orders -- not previously covered by § 1292 (a) -- that involve "a controlling question of law" the immediate [****25] appeal of which "may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation." <sup>33</sup>HN4[↑] In short, the consistent construction that had been accorded § 2 prior to the enactment of § 1292 (b) <sup>34</sup> cannot simply be ignored in determining the impact of that section on Government civil antitrust cases, cf. Universal Interpretive Shuttle Corp. v. Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Comm'n, 393 U.S. 186, 191-194 (1968). Acceptance of petitioner's contention would require us to conclude that § 1292 (b) was intended to revise the policies underlying the Expediting Act for the first time -- that it was intended as the first departure from the purposes of avoiding piecemeal appeal and of limiting review of important questions of antitrust law to this Court. We have been unable to discern any such intention.

[****26]

[*166] LEdHN1/14[↑] [14]The legislative history associated with § 1292 (b) contains no mention of cases within the Expediting Act. <sup>35</sup> [****28] Reference, to be sure, [***388] was made to antitrust cases, but it is clear on the face of these statements <sup>36</sup> that they refer only to private treble-damages actions. <sup>37</sup> In fact, rather than indicating that § 1292 (b) was intended to apply to antitrust cases subject to final review in this Court under the Expediting Act, the legislative history strongly suggests an essentially contrary conclusion: HN5[↑] the subsection was intended to apply only to interlocutory orders, "not otherwise appealable under" § 1292 (a), in civil actions in which the courts of appeals would have jurisdiction over [**418] an appeal from the final judgment [*167] under 28 U. S. C. § 1291. For instance, in explaining the proposed statute, the Senate Report on § 1292 (b) states:<sup>38</sup>

"The bill results from a growing awareness of the need for expedition of cases pending [****27] before the district courts. Many cases which are filed in the Federal district courts require the district judge to entertain motions at an early stage in the proceedings which, if determined, against the plaintiff, result in a final order which would then be appealable to the circuit courts of appeals of the United States. However, such motions, if determined in the plaintiff's favor, are interlocutory since they do not end the litigation and are not therefore, under existing provisions of law, appealable."

<sup>33</sup> Cf. S. Rep. No. 2434, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 3 (1958); H. R. Rep. No. 1667, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 2 (1958).

<sup>34</sup> It was only subsequent to the enactment of § 1292 (b) that a single Court of Appeals concluded -- despite the unqualified statements by this Court since United States v. California Cooperative Canneries, 279 U.S., at 558, to the contrary -- that an interlocutory appeal would lie under § 1292 (a)(1) in a Government civil antitrust case. See United States v. Ingersoll-Rand Co., 320 F.2d, at 511-517. See also Fisons Ltd. v. United States, 458 F.2d, at 1244-1248, cert. denied, 405 U.S. 1041 (1972) (§ 1292 (b)).

<sup>35</sup> See S. Rep. No. 2434, 85th Cong., 2d Sess. (1958); H. R. Rep. No. 1667, 85th Cong., 2d Sess. (1958); Hearings on H. R. 6238 before Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 85th Cong., 2d Sess. (1958); 104 Cong. Rec. 8002 (remarks of Rep. Keating). See also Report of the Proceedings of the Regular Annual Meeting of the Judicial Conference of the United States 32-33 (1951); Report of the Proceedings of a Special Meeting of the Judicial Conference of the United States 7 (1952); Report of the Proceedings of the Regular Annual Meeting of the Judicial Conference of the United States 27-28 (1953).

<sup>36</sup> The Senate Report suggests the denial of a motion to dismiss an antitrust action as barred by the statute of limitations as one instance in which an interlocutory appeal might be desirable. But it goes on to state:

"Disposition of antitrust cases may take considerable time, yet upon appeal following final disposition of such cases, the court of appeals may well determine that the statute of limitations had run and for that reason the district court did not have jurisdiction."

S. Rep. No. 2434, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 3 (1958) (emphasis added). The reference to antitrust cases in Chief Judge John J. Parker's testimony at the hearings on § 1292 (b) was also clearly limited to private treble-damages actions. See Hearings on H. R. 6238 before Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 9 (1958).

<sup>37</sup> 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15.

<sup>38</sup> S. Rep. No. 2434, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 2 (1958) (emphasis added).

I € JÁNEJÉFÍ FÉFÍ Í LÁHÁUÉDÉ Ë FÉFÍ FÍ LÁH ÁSEÓAÉGÁHÍ Í FÉFÍ Í LÁJÍ GÁMÉÉSÓYÓJÁFÍ JÉFÍ

This is hardly supportive of petitioner's position, and yet throughout the legislative materials the focus similarly remains on interlocutory orders in civil cases that would be appealable to the courts of appeals upon final judgment.
39

[****29] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [↑] [11B] [LEdHN\[15A\]](#) [↑] [15A] Petitioner's case is further weakened by the extraordinary result that acceptance of its position would yield. Section 1292 \(a\) HN6 [↑] provides for an appeal as a matter of right from a number of specified types of interlocutory orders -- in particular, interlocutory orders granting or denying injunctions. Those interlocutory orders not within subsection (a), however, were made appealable in § 1292 \(b\), subject to the judgment and discretion of the district court and the court of appeals. Greater importance obviously was attached to those [*168] types of interlocutory orders specified in subsection (a) than to those covered by (b).
40 Nevertheless, petitioner [***389] would have us conclude that Congress intended to establish court of appeals jurisdiction for all interlocutory orders in Expediting Act cases, except those orders for which an appeal of right is provided in § 1292 \(a\)\(1\).<sup>41</sup> [****31] As the Government notes, [****30] such a result would effectively turn § 1292 on its head.<sup>42</sup> Consistent with the evident thrust of the statute's legislative history, the much more sensible conclusion is that § 1292 \(b\) was intended to establish jurisdiction in the courts of appeals to review interlocutory orders, other than those specified in § 1292 \(a\), in civil cases in which they would have jurisdiction were the judgments final.<sup>43</sup>

[LEdHN\[11C\]](#) [↑] [11C] [LEdHN\[15B\]](#) [↑] [15B]

---

[*169] [LEdHN\[16\]](#) [↑] [16] [****32] At [*419] the foundation of the petitioner's position in this case is the contention that § 1292 \(b\) is the panacea for the special burdens imposed on this Court by § 2 of the Expediting Act. Both the Court and various individual Members have on occasion commented that "whatever may have been the wisdom of the Expediting Act in providing direct appeals in antitrust cases at the time of its enactment in 1903, time has proven it unsatisfactory," for "direct appeals not only place a great burden on the Court but also deprive us

---

<sup>39</sup> See id., at 2-3; H. R. Rep. No. 1667, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 1 (1958); Hearings on H. R. 6238 before Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 8 (1958).

<sup>40</sup> Cf. H. R. Rep. No. 1667, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 1-2 (1958).

<sup>41</sup> Petitioner suggests two avenues of escape from this anomalous situation: (1) that under § 1292 \(a\)\(1\) an interlocutory appeal may in fact lie from an injunctive order in a Government civil antitrust case; (2) that if an appeal from such an order cannot be taken under § 1292 \(a\), it may nevertheless be taken under § 1292 \(b\) since, the argument goes, the latter applies to all orders not appealable under the former, "whatever the nature of the order and whatever the reason for its non-appealability." Reply Brief for Petitioner 7-8. Our discussion in Part I of this opinion is sufficient to dispose of petitioner's first contention. As to the second argument, while the language of § 1292 \(b\) is unqualified on its face, the legislative history indicates that Congress was concerned only with orders of types other than those specified in § 1292 \(a\); in other words, § 1292 \(b\) was intended to supplement § 1292 \(a\), not to provide a substitute for it. See n. 35, supra. Moreover, it would be, to say the least, extraordinary for Congress to have resorted to such a subtle method of establishing for the first time in Government civil antitrust cases interlocutory appeals for orders of the type specified in § 1292 \(a\) without giving any hint whatsoever that this was its purpose.

<sup>42</sup> Brief for United States 18.

<sup>43</sup> Nor can it be ignored that subsequent to both the 1948 revision which resulted in § 1292 \(a\) and the enactment of § 1292 \(b\), we have reaffirmed that a final judgment is an essential prerequisite to an appeal of an order issued in a government civil antitrust case since "Congress . . . limited the right of review in such cases to an appeal from a decree which disposed of all matters, and it precluded the possibility of an appeal either to this Court or to a Court of Appeals from an interlocutory decree." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 305 n. 9. Section 1292 was not, to be sure, specifically at issue in Brown Shoe. But in holding, as it did, that the District Court's decree was appealable only because it was "final," id., at 306-309, the Court necessarily foreclosed the possibility of an interlocutory appeal to any court, and thus its remark concerning the preclusion of interlocutory appeals cannot be lightly dismissed.

I €JÁNEJÉFÍ FÉFÍ JLÁHÁUÉÓðA ì FJLÁH ÁSEÓaÉGÁHÍ Í JÁFÍ JIÁFÍ GÁMÉÉSÓYÓJÁFÍ JÉFHÍG

of the valuable assistance of the Courts of Appeals." United States v. Singer Mfg. Co., 374 U.S. 174, 175 n. 1 (1963); see Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 595 n. 5 (1972) (BURGER, C. J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); United States v. Borden Co., 370 U.S. 460, 477 n. (1962) (Harlan, J., dissenting); Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 355 (1962) (Clark, J., concurring); id. at 364-365 (Harlan, J., [***390] dissenting in part and concurring in part). Further, in light of the present size of our docket, direct [****33] review "seldom results in much expedition" since we normally must examine the entire record and resolve all questions however unsubstantial. Id. at 355 (Clark, J., concurring); see id. at 364 (Harlan, J., dissenting in part and concurring in part); United States v. Borden Co., supra, at 477 n. (Harlan, J., dissenting). [*170] Our action today should not be construed as a retreat from these previous remarks. On the contrary, we remain convinced that under present circumstances the Expediting Act fails to hasten substantially the final disposition of important antitrust actions while it unjustifiably burdens this Court with inadequately sifted records and with cases that could be disposed of by review in the courts of appeals. Uniformity in the interpretation and administration of the antitrust laws continues to be an important consideration. But such uniformity could be adequately ensured by the availability of review in this Court on certiorari of cases involving issues of general importance -- together with the "limited expediting of such cases, under the discretion of this Court," Ford Motor Co. v. United States, supra, at 595 n. 5 [***34] (BURGER, C. J., concurring in part and dissenting in part), where time is a factor. The simple fact is that "the legal issues in most [Government] civil antitrust cases are no longer so novel or unsettled as to make them especially appropriate for initial appellate consideration by this Court, as compared with those in a variety of other areas of federal law," Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, at 364 (Harlan, J., dissenting in part and concurring in part). Yet, despite all of these criticisms, our personal views as to the wisdom of § 2 are, of course, no basis for disregarding what we are bound to recognize as the plain and unaltered intent of Congress to require that HNT[↑] appeals in Government civil antitrust cases be taken only from final judgments and only to this Court.

In any event, petitioner has failed to convince us that permitting appeals under § 1292 (b) would provide a meaningful solution -- if any solution at all -- to the various problems created for the Court by the Expediting Act. In the [**420] first place, the availability of interlocutory [***35] appeals under § 1292 (b) would not reduce the number of Government civil antitrust cases that could be brought [*171] to this Court on direct appeal upon the entrance of a final judgment. Nor would it reduce the number of issues subject to review by this Court; any issue determined on interlocutory appeal would normally be open to consideration on final appeal,<sup>44</sup> and doubtless some party would raise an issue appealed under § 1292 (b) since it must have involved "a controlling question of law." Also, there would be the added problem of applications for certiorari following a certified appeal in Expediting Act cases. By definition, the issue will be a substantial one and, where the appellate decision is questionable, it would be necessary to decide whether to grant certiorari, which might require the Court to consider a particular case, on two separate [***391] occasions,<sup>45</sup> [***37] or to deny certiorari, which might mean allowing the district court to proceed to final judgment on an erroneous basis. Given the potential waste of limited judicial resources -- those either of this Court or of the district court -- associated with each choice, neither can be considered attractive. [***36] Finally, in emphasizing the value of the screening function that court of appeals review would provide in Expediting Act cases, we have consistently focused upon the lengthy records and complex factual issues common to such cases. Yet, as is illustrated by this very case, in which the certified question relates to a motion to dismiss a party, questions that would be presented to the courts of appeals under § 1292 (b) would often involve threshold procedural issues not [*172] requiring extensive analysis of the record.<sup>46</sup> With respect to such issues the screening function performed by intermediate appellate review is of far less significance than it would be with

<sup>44</sup> The sole exception to this would be if the certified question had previously been considered by way of certiorari.

<sup>45</sup> Only if we were to dispose of a controlling question in such a way as to end all proceedings would the possibility of a subsequent appeal be foreclosed. A threshold issue of jurisdiction might present such a controlling question; but even that type of issue will often not end an entire Government civil antitrust case which might involve a number of parties -- as is true in this case where the certified question relates to only one of the two defendants.

<sup>46</sup> See also Fisons Ltd. v. United States, 458 F.2d 1241 (CA7), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 1041 (1972) (service of process); Farbenfabriken Bayer, A. G. v. United States, 1968 CCH Trade Cas. para. 72,570 (CADC), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 959 (1968) (quasi in rem jurisdiction).

I € JÁNEJÁFÍ FÉAFÍ GLÁHÁUÉÓðA Í ÁEAE GELÁH ÁSEÓaÉGÁHÍ Í ÁEAEFLÁJÍ GÁMEÉSÓYÓðA JÁEAEHÍ respect to questions of, say, relevant market, competition, or agreement. But these latter questions can be properly decided only after full development of the evidence, and it is therefore doubtful at best that interlocutory appeals would aid this Court in dealing with them on final review.<sup>47</sup> [****38] Nor are we even certain that the expeditious termination of litigation in the [**421] district courts -- the express purpose of § 1292 (b)<sup>48</sup> -- would be materially advanced in the context of Government civil antitrust cases by acceptance of petitioner's contention. Permitting interlocutory appeals under § 1292 (b) in Expediting Act [*173] cases would result in an anomalous situation: the court of appeals would have jurisdiction over certain interlocutory orders but not over the final judgment, which would be appealable only to this Court. An interlocutory appeal taken under § 1292 (b) must, of course, involve "a controlling question of law" the immediate appeal of which "may [***392] materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation." In the normal case, the decision of such a question on interlocutory appeal is final since the same court reviews the final judgment, and the likelihood of review in this Court on certiorari is very small. Here, however, the decision of the court of appeals on the interlocutory order would essentially be only an advisory opinion to the district court since the issue would usually be open to relitigation on appeal of the [****39] final judgment to this Court.<sup>49</sup> The net result would be added work for the courts of appeals,<sup>50</sup> with no assurance that there would ultimately be a saving of district court time.

[****40] III

Hence, we conclude that § 1292 (b) did not establish jurisdiction in the Court of Appeals over interlocutory orders in Expediting Act cases. The exclusive nature of [*174] the jurisdiction created in § 2 of the Expediting Act has consistently been recognized by this Court, and we hold today that that exclusivity remains unimpaired. Despite our interest in a restructuring of our jurisdiction under the Expediting Act, we are neither willing nor able to adopt the ungainly half measure offered by the petitioner in this case.

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE WHITE joins the Court's opinion except for the advisory to Congress reflecting one view of the relative merits of the Expediting Act.

Dissent by: DOUGLAS; STEWART

<sup>47</sup> Other than threshold procedural issues, the question consistently sought to be raised on interlocutory appeal has been the propriety of orders granting or denying preliminary injunctions with respect to proposed acquisitions. See United States v. Cities Service Co., 410 F.2d 662 (CA1 1969); United States v. FMC Corp., 321 F.2d 534 (CA9 1963); United States v. Ingersoll-Rand Co., 320 F.2d 509 (CA3 1963). Although appeals of such orders would involve the merits of the antitrust actions, the fact is that permitting interlocutory appeal under § 1292 (b) would not bring these orders and the related evidence before the courts of appeals since they come within § 1292 (a)(1). Cf. n. 41, supra. Moreover, because of the need for speed if an acquisition is to be enjoined before accomplished, requests for such interlocutory orders must be determined after, at most, only an initial hearing and without full development of the record. Consequently, appeals from such orders would not necessarily bring before the courts of appeals the lengthy records and numerous documents with which we have often been forced to deal after final judgment.

<sup>48</sup> See S. Rep. No. 2434, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 1-2 (1958).

<sup>49</sup> Of course, this problem would not exist if the interlocutory decision were reviewed immediately on certiorari in this Court; but, as we have already seen, this alternative entails serious problems of its own.

<sup>50</sup> In this respect, it must be recalled that interlocutory appeal under § 1292 (b) is subject to the decision of the court of appeals in the exercise of its discretion, to allow appeal of the question certified by the district court. Thus, the effectiveness of § 1292 (b) in Government civil antitrust cases would be dependent upon the willingness of the courts of appeals to assume this new burden aware of the limited import of their decisions and of the fact that interlocutory appeals in such cases would represent only added work for them, since they would not otherwise consider any appeal.

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, dissenting.

I agree with MR. JUSTICE STEWART that the appeal of the interlocutory order in this case to the Court of Appeals under 28 U. S. C. § 1292 \(b\) was not barred by the Expediting Act. But I disagree with the intimations in both the majority opinion and the other dissenting opinion that because of our overwork the antitrust cases should first be routed to the courts of appeals and only then brought here.<sup>1</sup> [***41]

The case for our "overwork" is a myth. The total number of cases filed has increased from 1063 cases in the 1939 Term to 3643 in the 1971 Term. That increase has largely been in the in [**422] forma pauperis [***393] cases, 117 being filed in the 1939 Term and 1930 in the 1971 Term. But we grant certiorari or note probable jurisdiction in very few cases. The signed opinions of the Court (which are only in argued cases) totaled 137 in the 1939 Term with [*175] six per curiams<sup>2</sup> or a total of 143 Court [****42] opinions, while in the 1971 Term we had 129 signed opinions of the Court and 20 per curiams<sup>3</sup> or a total of 149 Court opinions. So in terms of petitions for certiorari granted and appeals noted and set for argument our load today is substantially what it was 33 years ago.

The load of work so far as processing cases is concerned has increased. That work is important; and in many ways it is the most important work we do. For the selection of cases across the broad spectrum of issues presented is the very heart of the judicial process. Once our jurisdiction was largely mandatory and the backlog of cases piled high. The 1925 Act<sup>4</sup> changed all that, leaving to the Court the selection of those certiorari cases which seem important to the public interest. The control of the docket was left to the minority, only four votes out of nine being necessary to grant a petition. The review or sifting of these [***43] petitions is in many respects the most important and, I think, the most interesting of all our functions. Across the screen each Term come the worries and concerns of the American people -- high and low -- presented in concrete, tangible form. Most of these cases have been before two or more courts already; and it is seldom important that a third or fourth review be granted. But we have national standards for many of our federal-state problems and it is important, where they control, that the national standards be uniform; and it is equally important where state law is supreme, that the States be allowed to experiment with various approaches and solutions.

Neither taking that jurisdiction from us nor the device of reducing our jurisdiction is necessary for the performance [*176] of our duties. We are, if anything, underworked, not overworked. Our time is largely spent in the fascinating task of reading petitions for certiorari and jurisdictional statements. [****44] The number of cases taken or put down for oral argument has not materially increased in the last 30 years.

The Expediting Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 28, 29, involved in the present case, does not contribute materially to our caseload. In the 1967 Term we had 12 such cases but only three of them were argued, the others being disposed of summarily. In the 1968 Term we had eight, but only three were argued. On the 1969 Term we had four; only two being argued. In the 1970 Term only two such cases reached us and each was argued. In the 1971 Term four such cases reached us, two of them being argued.<sup>5</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> It is true that several Justices over the years have expressed the desire that the antitrust cases come to us only by certiorari to the courts of appeals. So far as I am aware the only opinion speaking for the Court containing that suggestion is United States v. Singer Mfg. Co., 374 U.S. 174. But there the idea was contained only in a footnote (*id.* at 175 n. 1); and as Mr. Chief Justice Hughes was wont to say, "Footnotes do not really count."

<sup>2</sup> Not including orders of dismissal or affirmance.

<sup>3</sup> Including orders of dismissal or affirmance.

<sup>4</sup> Judiciary Act of Feb. 13, 1925, 43 Stat. 936.

<sup>5</sup> Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562; United States v. Topco Associates, 405 U.S. 596.

I €JÁNEJÁFÍ FÆFI Í LÁHÁUÐÓÐA Æ OGÁH ÁSEÐA ÆGAÁHÍ Í ÆGUHÁFÍ GÁMEÐSÓYÓÐAÍ JÆGUHÁFÍ

[***45] [***394] If [**423] there are any courts that are surfeited, they are the courts of appeals. In my Circuit -- the Ninth -- it is not uncommon for a judge to write over 50 opinions for the court in one term. That Circuit has at the present time a 15-month backlog of civil cases, while we are current. The average number of signed opinions for the Court in [*177] this Court is close to 12 per Justice; only occasionally does anyone write even as many as 18; and we have no backlog.

Separate opinions -- including dissents and concurring opinions -- multiply. If they are added to the total of 149 for the 1971 Term, the overall number would be 328. But the writing of concurrences, dissents, or separate opinions is wholly in the discretion of the Justice. It is not mandatory work; it is writing done in the vast leisure time we presently have.

The antitrust cases are only small fractions of our caseload. Yet they represent large issues of importance to the economy, to consumers, and to the maintenance of the free-enterprise system. Congress has expressed in the Sherman Act,<sup>6</sup> the Clayton Act,<sup>7</sup> the Robinson-Patman Act,<sup>8</sup> and the Celler-Kefauver Act<sup>9</sup> a clear policy [***46] to keep the avenues of business open, to bar monopolies, and to save the country from the cartel system which is the product of gargantuan growth.

It is of course for Congress and Congress alone to determine whether the Expediting Act<sup>10</sup> should bring the [*178] antitrust cases directly here. While I join the statutory construction in MR. JUSTICE STEWART's dissent, I do not join that part which expresses to me an inaccurate account of the "overwork" of the Court. We are vastly underworked. One interested in history will discover that once upon a time Hugo Black wrote [***47] over 30 opinions for the Court in a Term where only 135 opinions were written for the Court, a few more than we all wrote last Term.

MR. JUSTICE STEWART, with whom MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST concurs, and [***395] MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS concurs in part, dissenting.

The Expediting Act, enacted in 1903, provides that in civil antitrust actions brought by the United States "an appeal from the final judgment of the district court will lie only to the Supreme Court. [***48] " (Emphasis added.) Section 1292 (b), enacted in 1958, provides that when a district court, "in making in a civil action an order not otherwise appealable under this section," shall appropriately certify the question involved, the court of appeals has

The antitrust cases not argued in the 1967-1971 Terms were either reversed out of hand or affirmed out of hand (some of these being companion cases to those that were argued), or dismissed as moot, or dismissed for want of jurisdiction. There were three dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Farbenfabriken Bayer A. G. v. United States, 393 U.S. 216, involved an interlocutory order in which we ruled that we had no jurisdiction. Standard Fruit & S. S. Co. v. United Fruit Co., 393 U.S. 406, involved an effort of a corporation, not a party, to inspect the divestiture plans being submitted to the District Court pursuant to a consent judgment. Garrett Freightlines v. United States, 405 U.S. 1035, involved an appeal from a defendant dismissed from the antitrust case because of the primary jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission over the acquisition in question.

<sup>6</sup> Sherman Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1-7.

<sup>7</sup> Clayton Act of Oct. 15, 1914, 38 Stat. 730, 15 U. S. C. § 12 et seq., § 44.

<sup>8</sup> Robinson-Patman Act of June 19, 1936, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. §§ 13, 13a, 13b, 21a, 1013.

<sup>9</sup> Celler-Kefauver Act of Dec. 29, 1950, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. §§ 18, 21.

<sup>10</sup> For the legislative history of the Act see H. R. Rep. No. 3020, 57th Cong., 2d Sess.

Senator Fairbanks, leading exponent of the Act, said in reporting it to the Senate: "The far-reaching importance of the cases arising under antitrust laws now upon the statute books or hereafter to be enacted, and the general public interest therein, are such that every reasonable means should be provided for speeding the litigation. It is the purpose of the bill to expedite litigation of great and general importance. It has no other object." 36 Cong. Rec. 1679.

I €JÁNEJAFÍ FÆFI Í LÁHÚÈÓðA Æ GHÁI ÁSEÓaÈGÁHÍ Í ÁEHHÚ LÁFJÍ GÁMEÉSÓYQAFÍ JÆHHÍ ì

discretionary jurisdiction to hear an interlocutory appeal from that order. Thus, the Expediting Act, by its terms, relates only to appeals from final judgments in a limited category of cases, while § 1292 (b) applies to appeals from certain interlocutory orders in all civil actions. The Expediting Act does not prohibit court of appeals jurisdiction under § 1292 (b), for the former applies only to final judgments, while the latter applies only to interlocutory orders. To find any inconsistency whatever between the two statutes thus requires rejection of the [**424] plain meaning of each of them -- rejection, in short, of a most basic principle of statutory construction. As the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit recognized in Fisons Ltd. v. United States, 458 F.2d 1241, 1245 (1972), "the language of each [can] be given full effect without limiting the scope of the other."

[*179] [*49] Moreover, the purpose of § 1292 (b) is wholly consistent with that of the Expediting Act. The 1903 statute was motivated by the view that Government antitrust actions are so important that they should be expedited. Shenandoah Valley Broadcasting v. ASCAP, 375 U.S. 39, 40 (1963).<sup>1</sup> [*50] So, too, the motivation behind § 1292 (b), enacted 55 years later, was the contemporary view that interlocutory appeals involving important and controlling questions of law are a useful means of expediting litigation. Although § 1292 (b) authorizes a departure from the general rule against interlocutory appeals, it does so only for the purpose of materially advancing the ultimate termination of the litigation.<sup>2</sup> Thus, the Expediting [*180] Act [*396] and § 1292 (b) are animated by precisely the same objectives and warranted by precisely the same circumstances, and they should be read together as supplementing one another, not as antagonistic.

[*51] The legislative history of § 1292 (b) indicates that its primary benefit was expected to occur in the protracted or "big" cases, including civil antitrust litigation.<sup>3</sup> [*52] Yet, if no appeal can be taken to a court of appeals under § 1292 (b) in a civil antitrust suit where the Government is plaintiff, then the purpose behind the statute cannot be served at all in these cases, for no statute provides for such an interlocutory appeal directly to this

<sup>1</sup> In reporting the bill that became the Expediting Act, Senator Fairbanks stated that:

"Every reasonable means should be provided for speeding the litigation. It is the purpose of the bill to expedite litigation of great and general importance. It has no other object." 36 Cong. Rec. 1679.

<sup>2</sup> The Senate Report on the bill that became § 1292 (b) stated:

"This legislation results from a considerable study by committees of the Judicial Conference. The legislation itself was introduced at the request of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts pursuant to the direction of the Judicial Conference of the United States. . . . The bill results from a growing awareness of the need for expedition of cases pending before the district courts. Many cases which are filed in the Federal district courts require the district judge to entertain motions at an early stage in the proceedings which, if determined, against the plaintiff, result in a final order which would then be appealable to the circuit courts of appeals of the United States. However, such motions, if determined in the plaintiff's favor, are interlocutory since they do not end the litigation and are not therefore, under existing provisions of law, appealable. . . .

....

"The committee believes that this legislation constitutes a desirable addition to the existing authority to appeal from interlocutory orders of the district courts of the United States. . . . Any legislation, therefore, appropriately safeguarded, which might aid in the disposition of cases before the district courts of the United States by saving useless expenditure of court time is such as to require the approbation of all those directly concerned with the administration of justice in the United States." S. Rep. No. 2434, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 2, 4 (1958).

<sup>3</sup> The Senate Report stated:

"There are many civil actions from which similar illustrations could be furnished. For example, in an antitrust action a plea may be entered that the claim is barred by the statute of limitations. If this motion is denied, under existing law the matter is not appealable and the case then goes forward to trial. Disposition of antitrust cases may take considerable time, yet upon appeal following final disposition of such cases, the court of appeals may well determine that the statute of limitations had run and for that reason the district court did not have jurisdiction." Id., at 3.

I €JÁNEÜÍ FÉFI €LÁHÚÈÖDÄ € ËE G LÁI ÅSEÖAÈGÅÄI Í ÈEHEUÍ LAFJÍ GÅEÜÈSÖYØAÍ JÅEHEUÍ G

Court. It seems to me that if Congress had wanted to exclude cases like this one from the beneficent provisions [**425] of § 1292 (b), it would have said so.<sup>4</sup>

[*181] The Expediting Act originally provided that Government antitrust cases would be heard by a panel of judges upon the certification of the Attorney General. That provision is now 15 U. S. C. § 28, which provides for a panel of three. The purpose of the provision was to ensure that cases would receive full consideration by a panel of judges before presentation to this Court.<sup>5</sup> The Expediting Act, of course, has been criticized because it routes complex cases directly here without benefit of screening by the courts of appeals. As we stated in United States v. Singer Mfg. Co., 374 U.S. 174, 175 n. 1 (1963): [***53]

"Whatever may have been the wisdom of the Expediting Act in providing direct appeals in antitrust cases at the time of its enactment in 1903, time has proven it unsatisfactory. . . . Direct appeals not only place a great burden on the Court but also deprive us of the valuable assistance of the Courts of Appeals."

See also Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 355 (1962) (Clark, J., concurring); id., at 364-365 (Harlan, J., dissenting in [***397] part and concurring in part); United States v. Borden Co., 370 U.S. 460, 477 n. (1962) (Harlan, [*182] J., dissenting); Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 595 n. 5 (1972) (BURGER, C. J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). Interlocutory appeals under § 1292 (b) in Government antitrust cases would provide screening of at least some issues in at least some cases by courts of appeals before those issues reach this Court; and this, as shown above, would be consistent with the original policy of the Expediting Act. The Court's decision today precludes, in cases like this, both the useful expediting effect of § 1292 [***54] (b) and the equally desirable potential of intermediate review by the courts of appeals of important legal issues.

It is said that a ban on court of appeals jurisdiction under § 1292 (b) in Government antitrust cases is to be derived from the provisions of § 1292 (a)(1). The latter section provides that the courts of appeals shall [***55] have jurisdiction of appeals from interlocutory orders of district courts granting or denying injunctions "except where a direct review may be had in the Supreme Court." The argument is that that language expressly excludes court of appeals jurisdiction in Expediting Act cases; and since there is nothing in the language of § 1292 (b) that contradicts this express exclusion, interlocutory orders in Expediting Act cases are likewise not appealable under § 1292 (b). If § 1292 (b) did allow court of appeals jurisdiction in this case, it is said, the result would be that an interlocutory order in a Government antitrust case could be appealed to a court of appeals only if it did not involve an injunction; and that result [**426] would effectively turn § 1292 on its head, because in non-Expediting Act cases, § 1292 gives priority to injunctive orders, which may be appealed as of right.

There are several answers to this argument. At the outset, it is not clear that the major premise -- that § 1292 (a)(1) expressly excludes court of appeals jurisdiction in Expediting Act cases -- is valid. On that question, the [*183]

<sup>4</sup> Although the antitrust cases referred to in the Senate Committee Report on § 1292 (b) were apparently private cases, rather than Government litigation, the proposed legislation was introduced, after considerable study, at the direction of the Judicial Conference of the United States (n. 2, supra), whose members -- all eminent federal judges -- were surely familiar with the appellate procedure in civil antitrust cases brought by the Government.

<sup>5</sup> The House Report on the bill explains this provision by quoting a letter of the Attorney General as follows:

"There are a number of cases now provided by statute where appeals may be made directly to the Supreme Court from the district and circuit courts . . . .

"The class of cases that I suggest should be brought within this rule, it seems to me, is of as great importance as any of those referred to. The suggested provision requiring a full bench of the circuit judges would insure the cases receiving as full consideration before presentation to the Supreme Court as if heard by the United States circuit court of appeals." H. R. Rep. No. 3020, 57th Cong., 2d Sess., 2 (1903).

Circuits are divided, the First and the Ninth denying [****56] their jurisdiction,<sup>6</sup> and the Third upholding appealability.<sup>7</sup> We have never before faced the question nor resolved the conflict.

[****57] But even if the Expediting Act does bar court of appeals jurisdiction to review interlocutory injunctive orders under § 1292 (a)(1) in Government antitrust cases, it does [***398] not follow that there must be a similar bar to § 1292 (b) jurisdiction. The very fact that § 1292 (a)(1) contains express language which at least arguably creates an exception to court of appeals jurisdiction, while § 1292 (b) contains no such language, is reason enough to treat the two differently. Beyond that, § 1292 (a)(1) has a history dramatically different from § 1292 (b). That history was thoroughly reviewed in United States v. Cities Service Co., 410 F.2d 662 (CA1 1969), in United States v. Ingersoll-Rand Co., 320 F.2d 509 (CA3 1963), and in the Court's opinion today, ante, at 155-163, and need not be discussed in detail here. Suffice it to say that the original version of § 1292 (a)(1) was [*184] enacted in 1891, and that the provision went through several changes in language in succeeding years, during which its relationship to the 1903 Expediting Act was often unclear. See United States v. Cities Service Co., 410 F.2d, at 666-669. [****58] The provision was finally codified in its present form in 1948, although, as the above-mentioned conflict among the circuits demonstrates, that codification did not make its relationship to the Expediting Act any clearer. Section 1292 (b), on the other hand, was an entirely new statute, written on a clean slate in 1958, and representing a sharp break with the traditional policy against appeals from noninjunctive interlocutory orders. At that time, there was already growing doubt about the wisdom of the Expediting Act; and the fact that Congress conferred § 1292 (b) jurisdiction without making any express exception for cases where direct review may be had in this Court -- such as had been in § 1292 (a)(1) for some years -- is surely some indication that Congress in 1958 was expressing the contemporary view that interlocutory appeals to the courts of appeals on controlling questions of law provide a desirable tool that should not be denied even in Expediting Act cases.

As to the point that this interpretation would "turn § 1292 on its head," it is certainly arguable that if an appeal from an injunctive order in an Expediting Act case cannot be had under § 1292 (a)(1), it may [****59] still be taken under § 1292 (b). Section 1292 (b) relates to orders "not otherwise appealable under this section," whatever the nature of the order and whatever the reason for [**427] its nonappealability. Hence, if, in Government antitrust cases, courts of appeals have no jurisdiction under § 1292 (a)(1), then an interlocutory injunctive order would be an order "not otherwise appealable," and § 1292 (b)'s discretionary jurisdiction might well be held to apply.

[*185] In short, there is no validity to the argument that the terms of § 1292 (a)(1), whatever they may mean, have any bearing upon the proper interpretation of § 1292 (b).

It is also argued that the basic policy of the Expediting Act was to remove all court of appeals jurisdiction in Government antitrust cases. According to this argument, although the Act speaks only of final judgments, it must be understood to include interlocutory appeals, since, at the time the Act was passed, the courts of appeals could review interlocutory orders only in cases where they could review final judgments. From United States v. California Cooperative Canneries, 279 U.S. 553, 558 (1929), to Brown [***60] Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 305 n. 9, [***399] the argument goes, this Court has consistently indicated that courts of appeals may not exercise jurisdiction in Expediting Act cases, regardless of whether the appeal is from a final or interlocutory order; and it

<sup>6</sup> United States v. Cities Service Co., 410 F.2d 662 (CA1 1969); United States v. FMC Corp., 321 F.2d 534 (CA9 1963).

<sup>7</sup> United States v. Ingersoll-Rand Co., 320 F.2d 509 (CA3 1963). The reasoning of the Third Circuit in this case was as follows: Section 1292 (a)(1) permits an appeal to a court of appeals of interlocutory injunctive orders "except where a direct review may be had in the Supreme Court." Since the Supreme Court has direct review in Expediting Act cases only from final judgments, it has none from interlocutory orders. Hence, the exception in § 1292 (a)(1) does not bar court of appeals jurisdiction over interlocutory injunctive orders in Government antitrust cases. The court then concluded:

"In fact, it is extremely difficult and requires doing violence to the language of the statute to escape the conclusion that interlocutory orders, such as the one at bar, are reviewable by a court of appeals excepting and only excepting those types of cases in which an interlocutory order is directly reviewable by the Supreme Court." 320 F.2d, at 517.

I €JÁNEJÁFÍ FÉFÍ Í LÁHÁUÉÓðA € FÉFÍ GÍ LÁH ÁSEÓaÉGÁHÍ Í FÉFÍUJLÁJÍ GÁMÉÉSÓYÓðA JÉFÍ €

should not be assumed that Congress in 1958 repealed this longstanding interpretation by legislation that is not addressed specifically to appeals in these cases.

I fail to see how we effect anything like a repealer of the Expediting Act by construing § 1292 \(b\) to permit court of appeals jurisdiction thereunder in Expediting Act cases. As demonstrated above, there is no inconsistency whatever between this construction of § 1292 \(b\) and the plain language of the Expediting Act. It is equally clear that the reason why in 1903, and indeed for 55 years thereafter, courts of appeals could not review noninjunctive interlocutory orders in cases where they could not review the final judgment is not that the Expediting Act forbade such review, but that there was no statutory authority for such review in any cases whatsoever. In 1958, however, Congress broke with the old policy against interlocutory [\[\*\*\*\*61\]](#) appeals from noninjunctive orders and specifically provided that such appeals [\[\*186\]](#) may be taken to the courts of appeals in their discretion in all civil actions, where the question is properly certified. I see no reason, in the absence of some statutory prohibition, to refrain from applying that clear language, whether or not the court of appeals can review the final judgment.

The cases cited by the Government do not persuade me otherwise. California Canneries, of course, was decided 29 years before the enactment of § 1292 \(b\); and whatever was said there was a judgment on what Congress had done, not on what it could do or on the meaning of what it was to do 29 years later. Brown Shoe does postdate the enactment of § 1292 \(b\); but that case involved a direct appeal to this Court, and the only question about appealability was whether the appealed order was final. The issue of court of appeals jurisdiction under § 1292 \(b\) was not involved there, nor was the 1958 Act even mentioned in the short footnote dictum so heavily relied on by the Government. That dictum did little more than quote the language of California Canneries, and it surely cannot be understood [\[\*\*\*\*62\]](#) to decide the issue now before us.

Finally, it is said that it would be anomalous for a court of appeals that is without jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from a final judgment to decide an interlocutory issue that could control the outcome of the case. But there is no case in which the judgment of a court of appeals is necessarily final. Whenever a court of appeals decides a controlling question of law in any litigation, its views are subject to review here. Far from being anomalous, interlocutory review of potentially dispositive questions by the courts of appeals in Government antitrust cases would be helpful [\[\*\*428\]](#) to this Court, giving us the benefit of intermediate appellate consideration in these cases. We could then exercise our certiorari power informed by the reasoning of an appellate [\[\*187\]](#) court, and there might be no later direct appeal at all from the final judgment. And surely interlocutory appeals under § 1292 \(b\) in [\[\*\*\*400\]](#) Government antitrust cases would serve to lighten the burden on trial courts and litigants alike.

We cannot, of course, create an appellate jurisdiction not created by Congress, however desirable. But what Congress has [\[\*\*\*\*63\]](#) conferred, we should not reject.

I would reverse the order of the Court of Appeals denying Tidewater's petition to appeal under § 1292 \(b\) for lack of jurisdiction, and I would remand this case to that court with directions to consider the merits of the petition to appeal.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 402- 405

US L Ed Digest, Appeal and Error 31, 325

ALR Digests, Appeal and Error 7, 45

L Ed Index to Anno, Appeal and Error; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Appeal and Error; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Appeal and Error; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

I EUÁNEÜÉAFÍ FÆFI Í LÁHÁUEÓðA Æ GÌ LÁH ÁSEÓðAÉGÁHÍ Í EELÁJÍ GÁWÜÉSÓYÓðAÍ JÆH H

Direct review by Federal Supreme Court of District Court judgments or decrees. 46 L Ed 741, 56 L Ed 894, 63 L Ed 877, 71 L Ed 273.

Appealability of orders in government civil antitrust actions. 10 ALR Fed 607.

---

End of Document

United States v. Glaxo Group, Ltd.

Supreme Court of the United States

November 9, 1972, Argued ; January 22, 1973, Decided

No. 71-666

Reporter

410 U.S. 52 *; 93 S. Ct. 861 **; 35 L. Ed. 2d 104 ***; 1973 U.S. LEXIS 26 ****; 176 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 289; 1973 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,323; 1973-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,323

UNITED STATES v. GLAXO GROUP LTD. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Disposition: 328 F.Supp. 709, reversed; see also 302 F.Supp. 1.

Core Terms

---

patent, griseofulvin, bulk, district court, licensees, antitrust, bulk-form, licensing, sales, manufacture, invalid, antitrust violation, dosage-form, dosage, restrictions, bulk-sales, cancellation, sublicense, patentee, cases, violations, microsize, public interest, invention, mandatory, wholesale, leverage, courts, deceit

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN1 Remedies, Injunctions

I FÉÁMÉÉÁ GÁÍ GLÁÍ HÁÉÉDÁ Í FÉÁMÉÉÁ Í FLÁÍ ÁSÓ ÉGÁ ÁFÉ ÁÉÉÉGÁ LÁJÍ HÁÉÉSÓYÓQÁG ÁÉÉÉFLÁ 76 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
G JÁÉÉÉG J

While the United States is without standing to bring a suit in equity to cancel a patent on the ground of invalidity, the United States is entitled to attack the validity of patents relied upon to justify anticompetitive conduct otherwise violative of the law to vindicate the public interest in enjoining violations of the Sherman Act.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Lower Court Jurisdiction

HN2 [down arrow] Appellate Jurisdiction, Interlocutory Orders

The framing of decrees should take place in the District rather than in Appellate Courts. District courts are invested with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case. The appellate court does not, however, treat that power as one of discretion, subject only to reversal for gross abuse, but has recognized an obligation to intervene in this most significant phase of the case when necessary to assure that the relief will be effective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN3 [down arrow] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

Mandatory selling on specified terms and compulsory patent licensing at reasonable charges are recognized antitrust remedies.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

A British drug manufacturer held an American patent on the dosage form of griseofulvin, a fungicide, and another British drug manufacturer held an American patent on a microsize dosage form of griseofulvin. The two manufacturers made a patent pooling agreement containing certain restrictions on the sale of bulk-form griseofulvin. Similar bulk-sale restrictions were contained in sublicensing agreements made by the two manufacturers with three American drug companies. In a civil antitrust action in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, the United States Government sought to enjoin enforcement of the bulk-sale restrictions on the ground that they involved unreasonable restraints of trade, in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act. Also, the government challenged the validity of the American patents which had been obtained by the British manufacturers. The District Court held that the bulk-sales restrictions constituted per se violations of 1 of the Sherman Act, but that since the manufacturers were not relying on the patents in defense of the government's antitrust claims, the government could not challenge the validity of the patents (302 F Supp 1). Although the District Court granted the government's request for injunctive relief against future violations, the District Court denied the government's request that the manufacturers be ordered (1) to make bulk sales on reasonable and nondiscriminatory terms and prices to all bona fide applicants, and (2) to grant reasonable-royalty licenses for the manufacture of griseofulvin (328 F Supp 709).

I FÉÁMÉÉÁ GÁÍ GLÁ HÁÉDÁ Í FÉÁ Í FLÁÍ ÁSÓ DÉGÁ ÁFÉ ÁTÉTÉGÁ LÁJÍ HÁÉÉSÓYÓQÁG ÁTÉTÉLÁ 76 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
G JÁÉÉEG J

On direct appeal by the government pursuant to the Expediting Act, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by White, J., expressing the views of six members of the court, it was held (1) that the government could challenge the validity of the defendants' patents even if the defendants did not rely upon the patents in defense of their conduct, and (2) that the District Court should have granted the government's request for orders requiring mandatory bulk sales and compulsory reasonable-royalty licensing.

Rehnquist, J., joined by Stewart and Blackmun, JJ., dissenting, would affirm the judgment below on the grounds (1) that the patents challenged by the government bore no relationship whatever to the defendants' unreasonable restraint of trade, and (2) that the Supreme Court's factual assumptions in determining the appropriate remedy were completely contrary to the District Court's findings.

Headnotes

---

PATENTS §362 > right to challenge -- antitrust action by United States -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

In a civil antitrust action by the United States Government, the government may challenge the validity of the defendants' patents even if the defendants do not rely upon the patents in defense of their conduct, where (1) according to the allegations of the complaint, the defendants had issued licenses under their patents which unreasonably restrained trade by prohibiting the licensees from making bulk sales, and had included in a patent pooling agreement a covenant to impose such restrictions on licensees, and (2) in response to the government's assertion of substantial claims for relief consisting of orders requiring mandatory bulk sales and compulsory reasonable-royalty licensing, the defendants have asserted that such relief would deny the defendants an essential ingredient of their rights under the patent system, and that there is no warrant for such a drastic forfeiture of their rights.

COURTS §282 > jurisdiction -- antitrust actions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

The Federal District Courts have jurisdiction to entertain and decide antitrust suits brought by the government and to fashion effective relief where a violation is found.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §77 > remedy for patent pooling agreement restrictions -- mandatory bulk sales -- compulsory reasonable-royalty licensing -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

In a civil antitrust action by the United States Government, the government is entitled to relief consisting of orders requiring that the defendants, British drug manufacturers, make bulk sales of griseofulvin, a fungicide, on reasonable and nondiscriminatory terms and prices to all bona fide applicants, and that the defendants grant reasonable- royalty licenses for the manufacture of griseofulvin, where (1) the defendants' patents involving griseofulvin have given them economic leverage with which to insist upon and enforce bulk sales restrictions imposed upon their three American licensees pursuant to the defendants' patent pooling agreement; (2) the patents have been intimately associated with and have contributed to effectuating conduct which has been held to be a per se restraint of trade in griseofulvin; (3) the effect of the defendants' refusal to sell in bulk and of prohibition of bulk sales by the licensees has been that bulk griseofulvin has not been available to any but the defendants' three licensees, and that these three are the only sources of dosage-form griseofulvin in the United States; (4) only by requiring the defendants to sell bulk-form griseofulvin on nondiscriminatory terms to all bona fide applicants will the dosage-form, wholesale market become competitive; and (5) unless American firms other than the three licensees are licensed to manufacture griseofulvin, competition in the United States market will depend entirely upon the defendants' willingness to continue to supply their present licensees with the bulk form of the drug.

I FÉÁMÉÉÁ GÁÍ GLÁÍ HÁÉÉDÁ Í FÉÁI Í FLÁÍ ÁSÓA EGÁ ÁFÉ ÁFÉ A LÁJÍ HÁÉÉSÓYÓQÁG ÁFÉFLÁ 76 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
G JÁÉÉEG J

RERAINTS OF TRADES AND MONOPOLIES §75 > relief -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

In civil antitrust actions, the framing of decrees should take place in the Federal District Courts rather than in appellate courts, and District Courts are invested with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case.

APPEAL AND ERROR §1382 > discretion of District Court -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The power of a Federal District Court to model its judgment to fit the exigencies of a particular antitrust case is not one of discretion, subject only to reversal for gross abuse; rather, the United States Supreme Court has an obligation to intervene in this most significant phase of the case when necessary to assure that the relief will be effective.

RERAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §75 > relief -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The purpose of relief in an antitrust case is, so far as practicable, to cure the ill effects of the illegal conduct, and assure the public freedom from its continuance.

Syllabus

---

Appellees, Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd. and Glaxo Group Ltd., British drug companies engaged in the manufacture and sale of the fungicide griseofulvin, pooled their bulk- and dosage-form patents and sublicensed certain firms in the United States to practice the patents. The pooling agreement contained a covenant to restrict bulk sales and resales, and sublicensing agreements prohibited bulk resales to third parties without the licensors' prior consent. The United States filed a civil antitrust suit against appellees to restrain alleged violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and the Government also attacked the validity of the dosage-form patents, and sought the relief of mandatory, nondiscriminatory bulk-form sales and reasonable-royalty licensing of the patents. The District Court held that bulk-sales restrictions were per se violations of § 1 and enjoined their future use, [\[\*\*\*\]2](#) but refused the Government's request to order mandatory, nondiscriminatory sales of the bulk form of the drug and reasonable-royalty licensing of appellees' patents as part of the relief. The court also refused to entertain the Government's claim of patent invalidity, since appellees did not rely on their patents in defense of the antitrust claims. Held:

I FÉÁMÉÉÁ GÁÍ GLÁÍ HÁÉÉDÁ Í FÉÁMÉÉ ÁÍ FLÁÍ ÁSÓ ÉGA ÁFE ÁÍ FÉÁMÉÉ LÁJÍ HÁÉÉSÓYÓQÁG ÁÍ FÉÁMÉÉ 76 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
G JÁÉÉÉG J

1. Where patents are directly involved in antitrust violations and the Government presents a substantial case for relief in the form of restrictions on the patents, the Government may challenge the validity of the patents regardless of whether the owner relies on the patents in defending the antitrust action. Pp. 57-60.
2. In order to "pry open to competition" the market closed by the antitrust violations, an order for mandatory, nondiscriminatory sales to all bona fide applicants is appropriate relief, and where, as in this case, the manufacturer may choose not to make bulk-form sales, and the licensees are not bound by the court's order for mandatory sales, further relief in the form of reasonable-royalty licensing of the patents is also proper. Pp. 60-64.

Counsel: Deputy Solicitor General Friedman argued the cause for the [****3] United States. With him on the briefs were Solicitor General Griswold, Assistant Attorney General Kauper, Acting Assistant Attorney General Comegys, Wm. Terry Bray, Howard E. Shapiro, and Richard H. Stern.

Henry P. Sailer argued the cause for appellee Glaxo Group Ltd. With him on the brief was Francis D. Thomas, Jr. Sigmund Timberg argued the cause for appellee Imperial Chemical Industries, Ltd. With him on the brief were Paul N. Kokulis and Lawrence A. Hymo.

Judges: White, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which Burger, C. J., and Douglas, Brennan, Marshall, and Powell, JJ., joined. Rehnquist, J., filed a dissenting opinion in which Stewart and Blackmun, JJ., joined, post, p. 64.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[289] [*53] [**107] [**863] MR. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

The United States appeals pursuant to § 2 of the Expediting Act, as amended, 62 Stat. 989, 15 U. S. C. § 29, from portions of a decision by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia in a civil antitrust suit. We are asked to decide whether the Government may challenge the validity of patents involved in illegal restraints of trade, when [****4] the defendants do not rely upon the patents in defense of their conduct, and whether the District Court erred in refusing certain relief requested by the Government.

I

Appellees, Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd. (ICI) and Glaxo Group Ltd. (Glaxo), are British drug companies engaged in the manufacture and sale of griseofulvin. Griseofulvin is an antibiotic compound that may be cut with inert ingredients and administered [*54] orally in the form of capsules or tablets to humans or animals for the treatment of external fungus infections. There is no substitute for dosage-form griseofulvin in combating certain infections. Griseofulvin itself is unpatented and unpatentable. ICI owns various patents on the dosage form of the drug.<sup>1</sup> [****5] Glaxo owns various patents on a method for manufacturing the drug in bulk form, as well as a patent on the finely ground, "microsize" dosage form of the drug.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Specifically at issue in the present litigation is U.S. Patent No. 2,900,304, issued August 18, 1959. The patent embodies two types of claims -- (1) a method of curing humans or animals of external fungus diseases by administering "an effective amount of griseofulvin" to them internally and (2) a capsule, tablet, or pill containing an effective amount of griseofulvin.

<sup>2</sup> Specifically at issue in the present litigation is U.S. Patent No. 3,330,727, issued July 11, 1967. This patent covers the improved (finely ground or "microsize") dosage form of griseofulvin. This form has proved more effective and more marketable than other dosage forms of the drug.

I FÉÁMÉÉÁ GÁÁ I LÁÍ HÁJÉÓDÁ ÁÍ FÁÁÁ ÁÍ HÁÍ ÁSÓ DÁEGÁ ÁFÉ ÁÁÁÁ ÁÍ LÁJÍ HÁMÉÉSÓYÓQÁG ÁÁÁÁ ÁÍ LÁ 76 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
G JÁÁÁÁG J

[***108] [290] On April 26, 1960, ICI and Glaxo entered into a formal agreement pooling their griseofulvin patents. At the time of the execution of the agreement, ICI held patents on the dosage form of the drug, and Glaxo held bulk-form manufacturing patents. Pursuant to the agreement, ICI acquired the right to manufacture bulk-form griseofulvin under Glaxo's patents, to sell bulk-form griseofulvin, and to sublicense under Glaxo's patents. Glaxo was authorized to manufacture dosage-form griseofulvin and to sublicense under ICI's patents. As part of the agreement, ICI undertook "not to sell and to use its best endeavors" [**864] to prevent its subsidiaries and associates from selling any griseofulvin in bulk to any independent third party without Glaxo's express consent in writing."

Subsequent to the pooling [***6] of the griseofulvin patents, ICI granted a sublicense to American Home Products [*55] Corp. (AMHO), ICI's exclusive distributor in the United States. ICI agreed to sell bulk-form griseofulvin to AMHO. AMHO was authorized to process the bulk form into dosage form and to sell the drug in that form. With respect to bulk sales the agreement stated: "You [AMHO] will not, without first obtaining our [ICI's] consent, resell, or redeliver in bulk supplies of griseofulvin." Glaxo had previously entered into similar sublicensing agreements with two United States companies -- Schering Corp. (Schering) and Johnson & Johnson (J & J). The agreements contained a covenant on the part of the licensees "not to sell or to permit its Affiliates to sell any griseofulvin in bulk to any independent third party without Glaxo's express consent in writing."<sup>3</sup>

[***7] On March 4, 1968, the United States filed a civil antitrust suit against ICI and Glaxo, pursuant to § 4 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 4, to restrain alleged violations of § 1 of the Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1. The Government charged that the restrictions on the sale and resale of bulk-form griseofulvin, contained in the 1960 ICI-Glaxo agreement and the various sublicensing agreements, were unreasonable restraints of trade. The Government also challenged the validity of ICI's dosage-form patent.<sup>4</sup>

[***8] [*56] The District Court, citing this Court's decision in United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365 \(1967\), held that the bulk-sales restrictions contained in the ICI-AMHO agreement were per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act.<sup>5</sup> [***109] 302 F.Supp. 1 \(DC 1969\). Because ICI had filed an affidavit disclaiming any desire to rely on its patent in defense of the antitrust claims, the District Court struck the claims of patent invalidity from the Government's complaint, ruling that the Government could not challenge ICI's patent when it was not relied upon as a defense to the antitrust claims. The District Court also denied the Government's motion to amend its complaint to allege the invalidity of Glaxo's patent on "microsize" griseofulvin.<sup>6</sup>

[***9] Subsequently, in separate, unreported orders, the bulk-sales restrictions in the Glaxo-J & J, the Glaxo-Schering, and the Glaxo-ICI agreements were found to be per se violations of § 1. The court enjoined future use of the bulk-sales restrictions, but refused the Government's request to order mandatory, nondiscriminatory sales of the bulk form of the drug and reasonable-royalty licensing of the ICI and Glaxo patents as part of the relief. 328

<sup>3</sup> Although AMHO, Schering, and J & J could have manufactured bulk-form griseofulvin under Glaxo's patents, in practice they purchased the bulk form of the drug from ICI and Glaxo and themselves performed the processes to convert the drug to dosage form.

<sup>4</sup> See, supra, n. 1. The Government contended that the "method" portion of the patent did not disclose how to practice the invention in that it failed to specify what is an "effective amount" of the drug. See 35 U. S. C. § 112. The Government also argued that ICI's product claims were invalid because the dosage form that they covered did not specify an "effective amount" of the drug, did not specify the diseases that could be cured, and claimed a patent monopoly over a substance long in the public domain. See 35 U. S. C. §§ 100 and 101.

<sup>5</sup> The case was decided on the basis of various motions concerning the merits and the relief. Testimony was not received; the facts were developed in affidavits, exhibits, and interrogatories accompanying the motions.

<sup>6</sup> See n. 2. The Government had sought to challenge the patent on the basis that the patent purported to monopolize a product long in the public domain, on the basis of prior disclosure, and on the basis of prior public use. See 35 U. S. C. §§ 100, 101, 102 \(a\), 102 \(b\).

I FÉÁMÉÉÁ GÁÁ Í LÁÍ HÁÉÓDÁ Í FÁÁ Í I LÁÍ ÁSÓ DÁ ÉGÁ ÁE ÁÁFÉJLÁFJÍ HÁMÉÉSÓYÓQÁG ÁÁFÉJLÁ 76 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
G JÁÁHÉG J

F.Supp. 709 (DC 1971). The United States took a direct [**865] appeal under the Expediting Act and we noted probable jurisdiction. 405 U.S. 914. [*57] //

LEdHN[1] [1]The major issue before us is whether the District Court erred in ruling that the United States could challenge the validity of a patent in the course of prosecuting an antitrust action only when the patent is relied on as a defense, which was not the case here. We agree with the United States that this was an unduly narrow view of the controlling cases.

United States v. Bell Telephone Co., 167 U.S. 224 (1897), acknowledged prior decisions permitting [****10] the United States to sue to set aside [291] a patent for fraud or deceit associated with its issuance, but held that the federal courts should not entertain suits by the Government "to set aside a patent for an invention on the mere ground of error of judgment on the part of the patent officials," at least where the United States "has no proprietary or pecuniary [interest] in the setting aside of the patent [and] is not seeking to discharge its obligations to the public . . ." 167 U.S., at 269, 265. Subsequently, United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364 (1948), referred to Bell Telephone as holding that HN1 [1] the United States was "without standing to bring a suit in equity to cancel a patent on the ground of invalidity," id., at 387, but went on to declare that, to vindicate the public interest in enjoining violations of the Sherman Act, the United States is entitled to attack the validity of patents relied upon to justify anticompetitive conduct otherwise violative of the law. The Court noted that, because of the public interest in free competition, it had repeatedly held that the private licensee-plaintiff in an [****11] antitrust suit may attack the validity of the patent under which he is licensed even though he has agreed not to do so in his license. The authorities [***110] for this proposition were Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric [*581] Co., 317 U.S. 173 (1942); Edward Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Metallic Mfg. Co., 329 U.S. 394 (1947); and MacGregor v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 329 U.S. 402 (1947). The essence of those cases is best revealed in Katzinger where the Court held that, although a patent licensee (under the then-controlling law) was normally foreclosed from questioning the validity of a patent he is privileged to use, the bar is removed when he alleges conduct by the patentee that would be illegal under the antitrust laws, absent the patent. The licensee was free to challenge the patent in these circumstances because the "federal courts must, in the public interest, keep the way open for the challenge of patents which are utilized for price-fixing . . ." Id., at 399. Katzinger and Gypsum were much in the tradition of Pope Mfg. Co. v. Gormully, 144 U.S. 224, 234 (1892): [***12] "It is as important to the public that competition should not be repressed by worthless patents, as that the patentee of a really valuable invention should be protected in his monopoly . . .," a view most recently echoed in Lear, Inc. v. Adkins, 395 U.S. 653, 670 (1969).

We think that the principle of these cases is sufficient authority for permitting the Government to raise and litigate the validity of the ICI-Glaxo patents in this antitrust case. According to the record, appellees had issued licenses under their patents that unreasonably restrained trade by prohibiting the licensees from selling or reselling bulk-form griseofulvin and had included in the pooling agreement a covenant to impose such restrictions on licensees. These charges were sustained, the court concluding that the covenant and the patent license provisions were per se restraints of trade in the griseofulvin product market.

[**866] The District Court was then faced with the Government's attack on the pertinent patents as well as its [*59] demand for mandatory sales and reasonable-royalty licensing, the latter being well-established forms of relief when necessary to an effective [***13] remedy, particularly where patents have provided the leverage for or have contributed to the antitrust violation adjudicated. See for example, Besser Mfg. Co. v. United States, 343 U.S. 444 (1952); United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 340 U.S. 76 (1950); International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392 (1947); Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U.S. 386 (1945). Appellees opposed mandatory sales and compulsory licensing, asserting that the Government would "deny defendants an essential ingredient of their rights under the patent system," and that there was no warrant for "such a drastic forfeiture of their rights." In this context, where the court would necessarily be dealing with the future enforceability of the patents, we think it would have been appropriate, if it appeared that the Government's claims for further relief were substantial, for the court to have also entertained the Government's challenge to the validity of those patents.

I FÉÁWÉJÉÁ GÉÁ JLÁHÙÉÓCA Í FÉÁL Í LÁÍ ÁSEÓAÉGÁFÉ ÁÉÉÉFÉLÁJÍ HÁWÉJÉSÓYÓÁG ÁÉÉÉFHÁL76 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
G JÁÉÉEG J

LEdHN[2] [2]In arriving at this conclusion, we do not recognize unlimited [***14] authority [***111] in the Government to attack a patent by basing an antitrust claim on the simple assertion that the patent is invalid. Cf. Walker Process Equipment v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172 (1965).Nor do we invest the Attorney General with a roving commission to question the validity of any patent lurking in the background of an antitrust case. But the district courts have jurisdiction to entertain and decide antitrust suits brought by the Government and, where a violation is found, to fashion effective relief. This often involves a substantial question as to whether it is necessary to limit the rights normally vested in the owners of patents, which in itself can be a complex [*60] and difficult issue. The litigation would usually proceed on the assumption that valid patents are involved, but if this basic assumption is itself challenged, we perceive no good reason, either in terms of the patent system or of judicial administration, for refusing to hear and decide it.

[292] The District Court, therefore, erred in striking the allegations of the Government's complaint dealing with the patent validity issue and in refusing to permit [***15] the Government to amend its complaint with respect to this issue. On remand, the District Court should consider the validity of the ICI dosage-form patent and the Glaxo microsize patent.

III

LEdHN[3] [3]The question remains whether the Government's case for additional relief was sufficient to provide the appropriate predicate for a consideration of its challenge to the validity of these patents. For this purpose, as we have said, its case need not be conclusive, but only substantial enough to warrant the court's undertaking what could be a large inquiry, one which could easily obviate other questions of remedy if the patent is found invalid and which, if the patent is not invalidated, would lend substance to a defendant's claim that a valid patent should not be limited, absent the necessity to provide effective relief for an antitrust violation to which the patent has contributed. Here, we think not only that the United States presented a substantial case for additional relief, but that it was sufficiently convincing that the District Court, wholly aside from the question of patent validity, should have ruled favorably [***16] on the demand for mandatory sales and compulsory licensing.

In the first place, it is clear from the evidence that the ICI dosage-form patent, along with other ICI and Glaxo patents, gave the appellees the economic leverage with which to insist upon and enforce the bulk-sales [*61] restrictions imposed on the [*867] licensees.<sup>7</sup> Glaxo apparently [***112] considered the bulk-sales restriction to be a prerequisite to the granting of a sublicense, for it rejected a draft of the ICI-AMHO agreement because, among other things, it would have permitted AMHO to sell griseofulvin in bulk form. There are indications, also, that Glaxo refused a sublicense to others than Schering and J & J because of fears that the companies would sell in bulk form or pressure Glaxo to allow such sales. The [*62] source of the patent-pooling agreement pursuant to which such

<sup>7</sup> The Government argued in the District Court:

"We submit that [ United States v. Gypsum [333 U.S. 364 (1948)] should be understood more broadly to support challenge to any patent used by antitrust defendants in furtherance of their illegal program. The importance of the Imperial patent to the defendants' scheme to violate the antitrust laws is plain. It was, according to ICI's contentions, the reason for the patent pool agreement in the first place; Glaxo's grant of rights to ICI was paid for with the Imperial patent. Without the Imperial patent the defendants could not maintain their monopoly in the United States over the drug, for then anyone who could secure bulk form griseofulvin could make it up into pills and sell them without a patent to stop him; bulk form griseofulvin is, as ICI points out, unpatented. The Imperial patent thus bolsters the effectiveness of the illegal restraint on alienation ICI imposes on the resale of bulk form griseofulvin: if a small drug company somehow manages to get the unpatented bulk form drug despite ICI's restraint on alienation designed to prevent it or anyone else from doing so, the defendants may still suppress the manufacture of the drug by threat of patent infringement suit. In this context, vindication of the public interest in competition in unpatentable goods is doubly important -- for there is a double impediment to commerce -- the patent and the conspiracy."

The Government, throughout its brief in this Court, emphasizes the importance of the patents to the antitrust violation.

"In cases like this, the patents involved generally are of major importance in furthering the allegedly unlawful patent licensing practices; they give the defendants the power which enables them to impose the restraints of trade. That is the situation here. The patents were essential to the appellees' scheme to violate the antitrust laws."

I FÉÁWEJÉÁ GÉÁ GLÁ HÀEÓCÁ Í FÉÁ Í I LÁÍ ÁSEÓAÉGÁ ÁFÉ ÁFFFGLÁJÍ HÁWÉJESÓYÓÁG ÁFFFÍ LÁ76 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
G JÁFFFEG J

licenses were permitted and which contained the bulk-sales restriction was simple: Glaxo needed the ICI dosage-form patent to assure its licensees the right to use the patent and sell in dosage form. Pooling permitted ICI to engage in bulk manufacture, and, in exchange, ICI imposed the bulk-sales restrictions upon its [****17] licensees. There can be little question that the patents involved here were intimately associated with and contributed to effectuating the conduct that the District Court held to be a per se restraint of trade in griseofulvin.

[****18] Secondly, we think that ICI and Glaxo should have been required to sell bulk-form griseofulvin on reasonable and nondiscriminatory terms and to grant patent licenses at reasonable-royalty rates to all bona fide applicants in order to "pry open to competition" the griseofulvin market that "has been closed by defendants' illegal restraints." International Salt Co., 332 U.S., at 401.

The United States griseofulvin market consists of three wholesalers, all licensees of appellees, that account for nearly 100% of United States sales totaling approximately eight million dollars. Glaxo and ICI have never sold in bulk to others than the licensees and have prohibited bulk sales and resales by the licensees. In practice, the licensees have not manufactured griseofulvin under the bulk-form patents, preferring instead to purchase in bulk form from ICI and Glaxo. The licensees sell the drug in dosage and microsize form to retail outlets at virtually identical prices. The effect of appellees' refusal to sell in bulk and prohibition [293] of such sales by the licensees has been that bulk griseofulvin has not been available to any but appellees' three licensees and that these three [****19] are the only sources of dosage-form griseofulvin in the United States.

There is little reason to think that the appellees or their licensees, now that the bulk-sales restrictions have been declared illegal, will begin selling in bulk. It is in [*63] their economic self-interest to [**868] maintain control of [***113] the bulk form of the drug in order to keep the dosage-form, wholesale market competition-free. Bulk sales would create new competition among wholesalers, by enabling other companies to convert the bulk drug into dosage and microsize forms and sell to retail outlets, and would presumably lead to price reductions as the result of normal competitive forces. There is, in fact, substantial evidence in the record to the effect that other drug companies would not only have entered the market, had they been able to make bulk purchases, but also would have charged substantially lower wholesale prices for the dosage and microsize forms of the drug. Only by requiring the appellees to sell bulk-form griseofulvin on nondiscriminatory terms to all bona fide applicants will the dosage-form, wholesale market become competitive.

Relief in the form of compulsory sales may [****20] not, however, alone insure a competitive market. Glaxo and ICI could choose to discontinue bulk-form manufacturing or the sale of griseofulvin in bulk form. The patent licensees might then begin to practice the bulk-form manufacturing patents pursuant to the patent licenses to fill their needs for the bulk drug. The licensees, of course, are not parties to this action, and a mandatory-sales order would not affect them. They would not be required to make the economically less advantageous bulk sales. The bulk form of the drug would be controlled by the licensees, and the appellees, because they would be required under the Government's proposed relief to sell to all applicants only so long as they sell to any United States purchasers, could easily avoid the mandatory-sales requirement. Unless other American firms are licensed to manufacture griseofulvin, competition in the United States market will depend entirely upon appellees' willingness to continue to supply their present licensees with the bulk form of the drug.

[*64] [LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4][LEdHN\[5\]](#) [↑] [5] [****21] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [↑] [6]This Court has repeatedly recognized that "HN2" the framing of decrees should take place in the District rather than in Appellate Courts" and has generally followed the principle that district courts "are invested with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case." International Salt Co., supra, at 400-401; accord, Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 573 (1972). The Court has not, however, treated that power as one of discretion, subject only to reversal for gross abuse, but has recognized "an obligation to intervene in this most significant phase of the case" when necessary to assure that the relief will be effective. United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 340 U.S., at 89. Accordingly, we have ordered the affirmative relief that the District Court refused to implement. See, e.g., United States v. United States Gypsum Co. The purpose of relief in an antitrust case is "so far as practicable,

I FÉÁWEJÉÁ GÉÁÍ I LÁÍ HÀÉÓCAÍ FÉÁÍ Í LÁÍ ÁSEÓAÉGÁÍ FÉÁÍ FFHÁFJÍ HÁWEJÉSÓYÓÁÍ ÉÁÍOFLÁ 76 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
G JÁÍFFG J

[to] [***22] cure the ill effects of the illegal conduct, and assure the public freedom from its continuance." Id., at 88. HN3↑ Mandatory selling on specified terms and compulsory patent licensing at reasonable charges are recognized antitrust remedies. See, e. g., Besser Mfg. Co. v. United States, 343 U.S. 444 (1952); International Salt [***114] Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392 (1947); Hartford- Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U.S. 386 (1945). The District Court should have ordered those remedies in this case.

To the extent indicated in this opinion, the judgment of the District Court is reversed.

So ordered.

Dissent by: REHNQUIST

Dissent

---

[**114contd] [EDITOR'S NOTE: The page numbers of this document may appear to be out of sequence; however, this pagination accurately reflects the pagination of the original published document.]

MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST, with whom MR. JUSTICE STEWART and MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN concur, dissenting.

The Court has undertaken to substitute its judgment for that of Congress [***23] in the initiation of novel procedures for the [**869] determination of patent validity, and in so doing [*65] has blandly disregarded the procedural history of this case.

|

There is neither statutory nor case authority for the existence of a general right of either private individuals or the Government to collaterally challenge the validity of issued patents. In the Patent Act of 1790, Congress provided that private citizens could, upon motion alleging fraudulent procurement, prompt a district court to issue to a patentee an order to show cause why his letters patent should not be repealed.<sup>1</sup> [***24] A substantially identical provision was carried over in the Patent Act of 1793.<sup>2</sup> But the Patent Act of 1836 contained no provision for such individual actions although it increased the number of statutory [294] defenses in infringement actions.<sup>3</sup> The effect of this omission was determined by Mowry v. Whitney, 14 Wall. 434 (1872), to be the preclusion of private actions to cancel patents, even when fraudulently procured.

As part of the rationale in Mowry, the Court reasoned that the equitable suit for cancellation of a patent because it was fraudulently procured was a substitute for the writ of scire facias and, accordingly, it should have the same limitations. In dictum, the Court stated: "The fraud, if one exists, has been practiced on the government, and as the party injured, it is the appropriate party to assert the remedy or seek relief." Id., at 441. When the United States later sued to set aside two patents issued to Alexander Graham Bell subsequent to several purported [*66] acts of fraud by him on the Patent Office, this Court relied heavily on the dictum in Mowry, supra, in recognizing the right of the Federal Government to sue for the cancellation of letters patent obtained by fraud:

---

<sup>1</sup> Stat. 109. For an excellent review of the history briefly summarized here, see Cullen & Vickers, Fraud in the Procurement of a Patent, 29 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 110 (1960).

<sup>2</sup> Stat. 318.

<sup>3</sup> Stat. 117.

I FÉÁWÈJÉÁ GÉÉH Í LÁÍ HÀUÉOÓH Í FÉÉH Í JLÁÍ ÁSÉDÀÉGÁ ÁFÉ ÉÁFFFÍ LÁFJÍ HÁWÈJÉSÓYÓQÁG ÉÁFFFÍ LÁ176 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
G JÁFFFÍG J

"That the government, authorized both by the Constitution and the statutes to bring suits at law and in equity, should find it to be its duty to correct this evil, to recall these patents, to get a remedy for this fraud, is so clear that it [****25] needs no argument . . . ." United States v. Bell Telephone Co., 128 U.S. 315, 370 \(1888\) (Bell I). [***115] The Government asserts that the breadth of this holding was established in the dictum in United States v. Bell Telephone Co., 159 U.S. 548 \(1895\) (Bell II), wherein the Court upheld its appellate jurisdiction in such patent cancellation cases. There, it was stated:

"In [United States v. Telephone Company, \[128 U.S. 315\]](#), it was decided that where a patent for a grant of any kind issued by the United States has been obtained by fraud, by mistake or by accident, a suit by the United States against the patentee is the proper remedy for relief, and that in this country, where there is no kingly prerogative but where patents for land and inventions are issued by the authority of the government, and by officers appointed for that purpose who may have been imposed upon by fraud or deceit, or may have erred as to their power, or made mistakes in the instrument itself, the appropriate remedy is by proceedings by the United States against the patentee." Id., at 555.

But in United States v. Bell Telephone Co., 167 U.S. 224 \(1897\) [****26] (Bell III), the Court characterized the above-quoted language as a "general statement" of the [**870] power [*67] of the Government to maintain a suit and, again in dictum, limited its effect, saying:

"But while there was thus rightfully affirmed the power of the Government to proceed by suit in equity against one who had wrongfully obtained a patent for land or for an invention, there was no attempt to define the character of the fraud, or deceit or mistake, or the extent of the error as to power which must be established before a decree could be entered cancelling the patent. It was not affirmed that proof of any fraud, or deceit, or the existence of any error on the part of the officers as to the extent of their power, or that any mistake in the instrument was sufficient to justify a decree of cancellation. Least of all was it intended to be affirmed that the courts of the United States, sitting as courts of equity, could entertain jurisdiction of a suit by the United States to set aside a patent for an invention on the mere ground of error of judgment on the part of the patent officials. That would be an attempt on the part of the courts in collateral attack to [****27] exercise an appellate jurisdiction over the decisions of the Patent Office, although no appellate jurisdiction has been by the statutes conferred. . . ." Id., at 269.

The plain import of the Bell cases is that the authority of the Government to bring an independent action to cancel a patent is confined to the traditional equitable grounds of fraud, mistake, and deceit. The Government makes two arguments to support its position that it should not be as limited here. It contends that since this is an antitrust action, its right to attack the validity of the patent is established by the rationale of United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364 \(1948\), and is therefore not subject to the limitations of Bell III. Alternatively, it argues that Bell III has been so undercut [*68] by subsequent decisions, including Gypsum, that it should no longer be followed.

In Gypsum Co., supra, the Court stated in "deliberate dicta" that the [***116] Government may challenge the validity of a patent which has been asserted by an antitrust defendant to be a defense to the Government's claim of antitrust [****28] violations. It reasoned that in a suit to vindicate the public interest by enjoining violations of the Sherman Act, the United States should have the opportunity, similar to that afforded licensees in an action for royalties, to show that an asserted shield of patentability does not exist. Id., at 386-388.

The Bell cases enunciate the range of the Government's authority, quite independent of any other litigation it may have with a patentee, to attack a governmental grant from the Patent Office obtained by the sort of fraud or mistake there described. The Gypsum doctrine, [295] on the other hand, sprang from the right of the Government as a civil plaintiff under the antitrust laws to assert the invalidity of a patent grant set up as a defense to its civil complaint. Since a private licensee may attack the validity of a patent that is made the basis of an action against him for royalties, the Government should, equally, have the right to attack a patent that is set up as a defense by the patentee in the Government's action.

I FÉÁWÉJÉA GÉÉÉ I LÁÍ HÀÈOÓÉA Í FÉÉÉ I ÉLÁÍ ÁSÉDÀÉGÁ ÁFÉ ÉÁÉÉÉÉI LÁFJÍ HÁWÉJÉSÓYÓÁG ÉÁÉÉÉI LÁ76 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
G JÉÉÉÉG J

The Government's claim here essentially falls between these two limited grants of authority. A claim of lack of patentability, without [****29] more, is not within the Government's authority qua government to set aside a patent for fraud or mistake. And since the decision of the merits of the Government's claim of antitrust violation against these appellees in no way required the court to determine the validity of their patents, the reasoning of Gypsum is not applicable. The Government may, therefore, prevail only if we are to blur the distinction between [*69] these separate grants of authority, and extend such authority to circumstances that are within the rationale of neither. [**871] Certainly, it is true, as the Court states, that there is a public interest favoring the judicial testing of patent validity and the invalidation of specious patents. See, e. g., Blonder-Tongue v. University Foundation, 402 U.S. 313, 343-344 (1971); Lear, Inc. v. Adkins, 395 U.S. 653, 657, 664 (1969). For when a patent is invalid, "the public parts with the monopoly grant for no return, the public has been imposed upon and the patent clause subverted." United States v. Singer Mfg. Co., 374 U.S. 174, 197, 199-200 (1963) (WHITE, J., concurring).

Significant [****30] recognition is given to this interest by both the Bell and Gypsum doctrines. Additional authority resides in the Government to obtain judicially decreed restrictions on patent monopoly in appropriate cases where the defendant's antitrust violations have consisted, at least in part, of patent misuse. International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392 (1947); Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U.S. 386 (1945); Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co., 314 U.S. 488 (1942). But the sort of roving commission that the majority now authorizes whereby the Government may request a court to invalidate any patent owned by an antitrust defendant that in any way related to the factual background of the claimed antitrust violation cannot be regarded as a reasonably necessary extension of any of these principles. [***117] It is, therefore, more properly the creature of statute than of judicial innovation.

II

Although the Court purports to limit its holding to avoid giving the Government such a roving commission, the range of the new authority is pointed up by the facts in this case. [*70] The Government [****31] submitted its case to the District Court in three motions for partial summary judgment on the very narrow issue that the vertical restrictions on the resale of bulk-form griseofulvin constituted per se violations of the antitrust laws under the Schwinn doctrine.<sup>4</sup> United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365 (1967). Although common bulk-form griseofulvin is the subject of a British manufacturing patent owned by Glaxo, it is neither patented nor patentable in the United States.

The two patents that this Court is now authorizing the Government to challenge bear no relationship whatsoever to the illegal [****32] restraint found. The ICI patent relates only to the dosage form of the drug. The majority states that "it is clear from the evidence that the ICI dosage-form patent . . . gave the appellees the economic leverage with which to insist upon and enforce the bulk-sales restrictions imposed on the licensees." Ante, at 60-61. But no such evidence was submitted in the Government's statement of undisputed facts that accompanied its motions for partial summary judgment on the restraint-of-alienation issue. And no such fact was included in the District Court's findings of undisputed or ultimate facts. The District Court found precisely the opposite:

"Plaintiff has not shown on this record that defendants' current licensing practices are related to the adjudged antitrust violation nor are they methods to circumvent the prohibition of restraints on resale. . . ." 328 F.Supp. 709, 713. [*71]

Since the Court's factual assumption as to economic leverage is completely contrary to the finding of the District [**872] Court, presumably the Court without saying so is holding that finding to be clearly erroneous. Yet the only

---

<sup>4</sup> The majority inaccurately states that the lower court sustained the allegations in the complaint that appellees had unreasonably restrained trade by prohibiting the licensee from selling or reselling bulk-form griseofulvin. In fact, the District Court only found that the restraint on reselling bulk-form griseofulvin constituted the per se antitrust violations found.

I FÉÁWEJÉÁ GÉÉ FLÁHÙÈÓÉÁ Í FÉÁ Í GLÁ ÁSÉDÁÉGÁ ÁFÉ ÁÉÉÉFFÍ LÁFJÍ HÁWÉJÉSÓYÓÁG ÁÉÉÉGLÁ 76 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
G JÉÉÉG J

support for such a holding, to which [***33] the Court refers, is an unverified statement contained in the Government's argument to the District Court on this issue. While the Government has an impressive batting average in this Court as an antitrust litigant, it has not heretofore [296] had the benefit of having unverified assertions of its counsel treated as being of sufficient evidentiary weight to upset a considered factual finding of the District Court in which that argument was made. Nothing in the antitrust laws or in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure exempts the Government from having to make its case in the trial court in the same manner as any other litigant. The Court's conclusion that there "can be little question that the patents involved here were intimately associated with and contributed to effectuating the conduct that the District Court held to [**118] be a per se restraint of trade in griseofulvin," ante, at 62, is thus reached only by a substantial departure from the settled usages of appellate review.

Similarly, the other patent which the Government may now have declared invalid was not even granted until 1967, and it, too, relates to the dosage form of the drug. Since the restraints on alienation [***34] were imposed in the early 1960's, there cannot be a plausible contention that it in any way provided "economic leverage" for the antitrust violations. And there was no other proof of its relationship to the bulk-form market and the antitrust violations.<sup>5</sup> Thus, the scope of the new authority extends [*72] to any patent that happens to be present in a patent-licensing agreement that contains a restraint on alienation in a different market, regardless of its relationship to such restraint.

Since there is no congressional authorization [***35] for the challenge by the Government to the validity vel non of patents without regard to the relationship to antitrust violations, and since there was no proved relationship between these violations and the patents in question, I would affirm the judgment and orders of the District Court. I therefore dissent.

References

---

- 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 97, 98, 383; 60 Am Jur 2d, Patents 328
- US L Ed Digest, Patents 362; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 75, 77
- ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 15, 18
- L Ed Index to Anno, Patents; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies
- ALR Quick Index, Patents; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies
- Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade; Patents

---

End of Document

---

<sup>5</sup> This total lack of proof of any relationship also defeats for me the granting of compulsory licensing of the United States patents. Compulsory licensing is a recognized remedy in patent misuse cases, see, e. g., International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392 (1947), Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U.S. 386 (1945), but here the District Court specifically found there was no patent misuse or other abuse of patent rights.

United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

October 17, 1972, Argued ; February 28, 1973, Decided

No. 71-873

Reporter

410 U.S. 526 *; 93 S. Ct. 1096 **; 35 L. Ed. 2d 475 ***; 1973 U.S. LEXIS 130 ****; 1973 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,377; 1973-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,377

UNITED STATES v. FALSTAFF BREWING CORP. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF RHODE ISLAND.

Disposition: 332 F.Supp. 970, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

acquisition, de novo, entrant, merger, beer, competitor, brewers, district court, anticompetitive, breweries, largest, cases, concentration, acquiring, regional, objective evidence, sales, eliminated, effects, exerted, seller, firms, probabilities, capability, geographic, antitrust, trier of fact, no intention, procompetitive, credible

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

**HN1** [] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

I FÉÁWEÜÄ G Í ÁÍ G LÁHÁÜÖÄFÉJÍ ÁÍFÉJÍ LÁHÍ ÁSEÓaÉGÁÍ I ÁÍ ÁÍ LÁFJÍ HÁNÈÉSÓYÓÁFÉCÁÍ

HN2 [down] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, forbids mergers in any line of commerce where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. The section proscribes many mergers between competitors in a market, it also bars certain acquisitions of a market competitor by a noncompetitor, such as a merger by an entrant who threatens to dominate the market or otherwise upset market conditions to the detriment of competition. Suspect also is the acquisition by a company not competing in the market but so situated as to be a potential competitor and likely to exercise substantial influence on market behavior. Entry through merger by such a company, although its competitive conduct in the market may be the mirror image of that of the acquired company, may nevertheless violate § 7 because the entry eliminates a potential competitor exercising present influence on the market.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

In a government civil antitrust suit to enjoin the nation's fourth largest brewer from acquiring a brewer which was the largest seller of beer in New England, the United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island entered judgment for the defendant and dismissed the complaint on the ground that the acquiring company had no intent to enter the New England market except through acquisition and that it therefore could not be considered a potential competitor in that market (332 F Supp 970).

On direct appeal, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a proper assessment of the acquiring company as a potential competitor in the New England market. In an opinion by White, J., expressing the views of four members of the court, it was held that an acquisition by a company not competing in the same market as the acquired company is not legal merely because the acquiring company would never have entered the market de novo, but only by acquisition, and that the court must give separate consideration to whether the acquiring company was a potential competitor in the sense that it was so positioned on the edge of the market that it exerted beneficial influence on competitive conditions in the market.

Douglas, J., while joining in the court's opinion in this respect, filed a concurring opinion declaring that it was not a prerequisite to the government's case to prove that the acquisition had present anticompetitive effects.

Marshall, J., concurred in the result on the ground that where strong objective evidence indicates that a firm is a potential entrant into a market, it is error for the trial judge to rely solely on the firm's subjective prediction of its own future conduct.

Rehnquist, J., joined by Stewart, J., dissented on the ground that the theory on which the court reversed was never advanced by the government.

Brennan and Powell, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

APPEAL AND ERROR §338 > antitrust suit -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [down] [1]

Under 2 of the Expediting Act (15 USCS 29), providing that in every civil antitrust action brought in any Federal District Court wherein the United States is complainant, an appeal from the court's final judgment will lie only to the

I FÉÁWEA G Í ÁÍ G LÁHÚÓÓÉ Í ÁÍFÉJÍ LÁH ÁÍ ÁÍ ÓAÉGÁ ÁÍ ÁÍ Í LÁFJÍ HÁNÉSÓYÓÁFHÉ

Supreme Court, the Supreme Court has jurisdiction of a direct appeal to it from a Federal District Court's judgment for the defendant dismissing the complaint in a government civil action alleging a violation of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18).

RERAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §34.5 > mergers -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), which forbids mergers in any line of commerce where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, proscribes many mergers between competitors in a market and also bars certain acquisitions of a market competitor by a noncompetitor, such as a merger by an entrant who threatens to dominate the market or otherwise upset market conditions to the detriment of competition.

RERAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §34.5 > mergers -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Market entry through merger by a company not competing in the market, but so situated as to be a potential competitor and likely to exercise substantial influence on market behavior, may violate 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), which forbids mergers in any line of commerce where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, although the entrant's competitive conduct in the market may be the mirror image of that of the acquired company, because the entry eliminates a potential competitor exercising present influence on the market.

RERAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §34.5 > mergers -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), which forbids mergers in any line of commerce where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, an acquisition by a company not competing in the same market as the acquired company is not legal merely because the acquiring company would never have entered the market de novo; the court must give separate consideration to whether the acquiring company was a potential competitor in the sense that it was so positioned on the edge of the market that it exerted beneficial influence on competitive conditions in the market.

RERAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §34.5 > mergers -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

In determining the anticompetitive effect of a merger under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), which forbids mergers in any line of commerce where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, in a case involving an acquisition by a company not competing in the relevant market, the critical question is not the acquiring company's internal company decisions with respect to entering the market but whether, given its financial capabilities and the market conditions, it could reasonably be considered a potential entrant into that market.

I FÉÁWEÁG Í ÉÉG Í LÁHÚÉDÉJ Í ÉÉFÉJ Í LÁH ÁSEÓaÉGÁ Í ÉÉT Í LÁFJÍ HÁNÉSÓYÓUÁFHÉ

PLEADING §176 > antitrust complaint -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

In a government civil antitrust suit under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), which forbids mergers in any line of commerce where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, an allegation in the complaint that the acquisition violated 7 because it eliminated potential competition encompasses the acquiring company's influence on existing competition as an on-the-fringe potential competitor, and the government need not be more specific in its allegation.

EVIDENCE §979 > sufficiency -- antitrust -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Circumstantial evidence is the life blood of antitrust law, especially for 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), which forbids mergers in any line of commerce where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, and which is concerned with probabilities, not certainties.

Syllabus

---

Respondent Falstaff, the Nation's fourth largest beer producer, which was desirous of achieving national status, agreed to acquire the largest seller of beer in the New England market rather than enter de novo. The District Court dismissed the Government's resultant suit charging violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, finding that entry by acquisition, which the court found was the only way that respondent intended to penetrate the New England market, would not result in a substantial lessening of competition. Held: The District Court erred in assuming that, because respondent would not have entered the market de novo, it could not be considered a potential competitor. The court should have considered whether respondent was a potential competitor in the sense that its position on the edge of the market exerted a beneficial influence on the market's competitive conditions. Pp. 531-538.

Counsel: Assistant Attorney General [****2] Kauper argued the cause for the United States. With him on the briefs were Solicitor General Griswold, Acting Assistant Attorney General Comegys, William Bradford Reynolds, and Howard E. Shapiro.

Matthew W. Goring argued the cause for appellees. With him on the brief were James S. McClellan, Jerome M. McLaughlin, and Stephen J. Carlotti.

Judges: White, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which Burger, C. J., and Blackmun, J., joined, and in Part I of which Douglas, J., joined. Douglas, J., filed an opinion concurring in part, post, p. 538. Marshall, J., filed an opinion concurring in the result, post, p. 545. Rehnquist, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which Stewart, J., joined, post, p. 572. Brennan, J., took no part in the decision of the case. Powell, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

I FÉÁWEÁG Í ÉÉG Í LÁHÚÉDÉG Í ÉÉFÉJÍ LÁH ÁÉSÉOÁÉGÁÍ Í ÉÉTÍ LÁFJÍ HÁNÉSÓYÓUÁFHÉE

[*527] [***478] [**1097] MR. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

[**1098] LEdHN/1<sup>1</sup> [1]Alleging that Falstaff Brewing Corp.'s acquisition of the Narragansett Brewing Co. in 1965 violated § 7 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, [****3] 15 U. S. C. § 18,<sup>1</sup> [****4] the United States brought this antitrust suit under the theory that potential competition in the New England beer market may be substantially lessened by the acquisition. The District Court held to the contrary, 332 F.Supp. 970 \(1971\), and we noted probable jurisdiction<sup>2</sup> to determine whether the trial court applied an erroneous legal standard in so deciding, 405 U.S. 952 \(1972\). We remand to the District Court for a proper assessment of Falstaff as a potential competitor.

As stipulated by the parties, the relevant product market is the production and sale of beer, and the six New England States<sup>3</sup> compose the geographic market. While beer sales in New England increased approximately 9.5% in the four years preceding the acquisition, the eight largest sellers increased their share of these sales from approximately 74% to 81.2%. In 1960, approximately 50% of the sales were made by the four largest sellers; by 1964, their share of the market was 54%; and [*528] by 1965, the year of acquisition, their share was 61.3%. The number of brewers operating plants in the geographic market decreased from 32 in 1935, to 11 in 1957, to six in 1964.<sup>4</sup>

[****5] Of the Nation's 10 largest brewers in 1964, only Falstaff and two others did not sell beer in New England; Falstaff was the largest of the three and had the closest brewery.<sup>5</sup> [***479] In relation to the New England market, Falstaff sold its product in western Ohio, to the west and in Washington, D. C., to the south.

The acquired firm, Narragansett, was the largest seller of beer in New England at the time of its acquisition, with approximately 20% of the market; had been the largest seller for the five preceding years; had constantly expanded its brewery capacity between 1960 and 1965; and had acquired either the assets or the trademarks of several smaller brewers [****6] in and around the geographic market.

The fourth largest producer of beer in the United States at the time of acquisition, Falstaff was a regional brewer<sup>6</sup> with 5.9% of the Nation's production in 1964, having grown steadily since its beginning as a brewer in 1933 through acquisition and expansion of other breweries. As of January 1965, Falstaff sold beer in 32 States, but did not sell in the Northeast, an area composed of New England and States such as New York and New Jersey; the area [**1099] being the highest beer consumption region in the [*529] United States. Between 1955 and 1966, the company's net sales and net income almost doubled, and in 1964 it was planning a 10-year, $ 35 million program to expand its existing plants.

<sup>1</sup> HN1<sup>1</sup> Section 7 provides in relevant part:

"No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." 15 U. S. C. § 18.

For the legislative history of the amendment in 1950 that greatly expanded the section's scope, 64 Stat. 1125, see Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 311-323 \(1962\).

<sup>2</sup> Jurisdiction lies under § 2 of the Expediting Act, 32 Stat. 823, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 29.

<sup>3</sup> Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island.

<sup>4</sup> Nationally, the number of brewers decreased from 663 in 1935 to 140 in 1965.

<sup>5</sup> Of the three "top ten" brewers that were not selling in New England, Falstaff ranked fourth nationally, the other two ranking eighth and ninth. From Boston, Massachusetts, the distance to Falstaff's closest brewery was 844 miles, while the distance to the eighth and ninth largest sellers' breweries was 1,385 and 2,000 miles respectively.

<sup>6</sup> A "regional," as contrasted with a "national" brewer, is one that is not selling in all the significant national markets.

I FÉMÉJÉG ÉÉG GULÁHÚDÉÉJÍ ÉÉFÉJLÁH ÁÉSÉOÁÉGÁ ÉÉI ÉÉI JLAJÍ HÁÉÉSÓYÓÁÉHÉÉÉ

Falstaff met increasingly strong competition in the 1960's from four brewers who sold in all of the significant markets. National brewers possess [***7] competitive advantages since they are able to advertise on a nationwide basis, their beers have greater prestige than regional or local beers, and they are less affected by the weather or labor problems in a particular region. Thus Falstaff concluded that it must convert from "regional" to "national" status, if it was to compete effectively with the national producers.<sup>7</sup> For several years Falstaff publicly expressed its desire for national distribution<sup>8</sup> and after making several efforts in the early 1960's to enter the Northeast by acquisition, agreed to acquire Narragansett in 1965.

[***8] Before the acquisition was accomplished, the United States brought suit<sup>9</sup> alleging that the acquisition would violate § 7 because its effect may be to substantially lessen competition in the production and sale of beer in the New England market. This contention was based on two grounds: because Falstaff was a potential entrant [*530] and because the acquisition eliminated competition that would have existed had Falstaff entered the market de novo or by acquisition and expansion of a smaller firm, a so-called "toe-hold" acquisition.<sup>10</sup> The acquisition was [***480] completed after the Government's motions for injunctive relief were denied, and Falstaff agreed to operate Narragansett as a separate subsidiary until otherwise ordered by the court.

After a trial on the merits, [***9] the District Court found that the geographic market was highly competitive; that Falstaff was desirous of becoming a national brewer by entering the Northeast; that its management was committed against de novo entry; and that competition had not diminished since the acquisition.<sup>11</sup> The District Court then held:

"The Government's contentions that Falstaff at the time of said acquisition was a potential entrant into said New England market, and that said acquisition deprived the New England market of additional competition are not supported by the evidence. On the contrary, the credible evidence establishes beyond a reasonable doubt that the executive management of Falstaff had consistently decided not to attempt to enter said market unless it could acquire a brewery with a strong and viable distribution system such as that possessed by Narragansett. Said executives had carefully considered such possible alternatives as (1) acquisition of a small brewery on the east coast, (2) the shipping of beer from its [*531] existing breweries, the nearest of which was located in Ft. Wayne, [**1100] Indiana, (3) the building of a new brewery on the east coast and other possible [***10] alternatives, but concluded that none of said alternatives would have effected a reasonable probability of a profitable entry for it in said New England market. In my considered opinion the plaintiff has failed to establish by a fair preponderance of the evidence that Falstaff was a potential competitor in said New England market at the time it acquired Narragansett. The credible evidence establishes that it was not a potential entrant into said market by any means or way other than by said acquisition. Consequently it cannot be said that its acquisition of Narragansett eliminated it as a potential competitor therein." 332 F.Supp., at 972.

Also finding that the Government had failed to establish that the acquisition [***11] would result in a substantial lessening of competition, the District Court entered judgment for Falstaff and dismissed the complaint.

<sup>7</sup> In 1958, Falstaff commissioned a study of actions it should take to maximize profits. The study recommended, inter alia, that Falstaff become a national brewer by entering those areas where it was not then marketing its product, especially the Northeast, and that Falstaff should build a brewery on the East Coast rather than buy.

<sup>8</sup> For example, Falstaff in several press releases and in the company publication expressed its desire for national distribution, and at a panel discussion in October 1964 the president of Falstaff, in response to a question as to Falstaff's reaction to industry trends in beer sales, stated: "For long range planning we are aiming for national distribution. Naturally this involves coming East." App. 82.

<sup>9</sup> Suit was filed against both Falstaff and Narragansett, but as to the latter, the complaint was dismissed shortly after it was filed.

<sup>10</sup> Hereinafter, reference to de novo entry includes "toe-hold" acquisition as well.

<sup>11</sup> Over the objections of the Government, the District Court allowed post-acquisition evidence and noted in the opinion that the market share of Narragansett dropped from 21.5% in 1964 to 15.5% in 1969, while the shares of the two leading national brewers increased from 16.5% to 35.8%.

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3] HN2 Section 7 of the Clayton Act forbids mergers in any line of commerce where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. The section proscribes many mergers between competitors in a market, United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441 (1964); Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294 (1962); it also bars certain acquisitions of a market competitor by a noncompetitor, such as a merger by an entrant who threatens to dominate the market or otherwise upset market conditions [\[\*\*\*481\]](#) to the detriment of competition, FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 578-580 (1967). Suspect also is the acquisition by a company not competing in the market but so situated [\[\*532\]](#) as to be a potential [\[\*\*\*\*12\]](#) competitor and likely to exercise substantial influence on market behavior. Entry through merger by such a company, although its competitive conduct in the market may be the mirror image of that of the acquired company, may nevertheless violate § 7 because the entry eliminates a potential competitor exercising present influence on the market. Id., at 580-581; United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 173-174 (1964). As the Court stated in United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., supra, at 174, "The existence of an aggressive, well equipped and well financed corporation engaged in the same or related lines of commerce waiting anxiously to enter an oligopolistic market would be a substantial incentive to competition which cannot be underestimated."

In the case before us, Falstaff was not a competitor in the New England market, nor is it contended that its merger with Narragansett represented an entry by a dominant market force. It was urged, however, that Falstaff was a potential competitor so situated that its entry by merger rather than de novo violated § 7. The District Court, however, relying heavily [\[\*\*\*\*13\]](#) on testimony of Falstaff officers, concluded that the company had no intent to enter the New England market except through acquisition and that it therefore could not be considered a potential competitor in that market. Having put aside Falstaff as a potential de novo competitor, it followed for the District Court that entry by a merger would not adversely affect competition in New England.

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4] The District Court erred as a matter of law. The error lay in the assumption that because Falstaff, as a matter of fact, would never have entered the market de novo, it could in no sense be considered a potential competitor. More specifically, the District Court failed to give separate consideration to whether Falstaff was a potential competitor in the sense that it was so positioned [\[\*533\]](#) on the edge of the market that it exerted [\[\*\*1101\]](#) beneficial influence on competitive conditions in that market.

A similar error was committed by the Court of Appeals in FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., supra, where one of the reasons for the Commission's finding the acquisition in violation [\[\*\*\*\*14\]](#) of § 7 was that the merger eliminated Procter as a potential entrant, not because Procter would have entered independently, but because the acquisition eliminated the procompetitive effect Procter exerted from the fringe of the market. Id., at 575. The Court of Appeals struck down this finding because there was no evidence that Procter ever intended de novo entry, but we held the Commission's finding was "amply supported by the evidence," id., at 581, because the evidence "clearly show[ed] that Procter was the most likely entrant," id., at 580, and it was "clear that the existence of Procter at the edge of the industry exerted considerable influence on the market," id., at 581. Thus, the fact that [\[\*\*\*482\]](#) Falstaff and its management had no intent to enter de novo, and would not have done so, does not ipso facto dispose of the potential-competition issue.

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6] [LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7] The specific [\[\*\*\*\*15\]](#) question with respect to this phase of the case is not what Falstaff's internal company decisions were but whether, given its financial capabilities and conditions in the New England market, it would be reasonable to consider it a potential entrant into that market. Surely, it could not be said on this record that Falstaff's general interest in the New England market was unknown; <sup>12</sup> and if it would appear to rational beer merchants in New England that Falstaff might well build a new brewery to supply the northeastern market then its entry by merger becomes suspect under § 7. The District Court should therefore have appraised the economic facts about Falstaff and the New England market [\[\*534\]](#) in order to determine whether in any realistic sense Falstaff could be said to be a potential competitor on the fringe of the market with likely influence on existing competition.<sup>13</sup> This does [\[\*\*\*483\]](#) not mean that the [\[\*\*1102\]](#) testimony

---

<sup>12</sup> See n. 8, supra, and accompanying text.

I FÉÁINEÁG ÓLÁH LÁUÉDÖFÉJ ÓLÉFFÉGLÁÍ ÁSEÓAÉGÁÍ ÓLÉH ÓLÁJÍ HÁUÉSÓYÓÁTHEÁTÍ

[*535] of company officials about actual intentions of the company is irrelevant or is to be looked upon with

---

<sup>13</sup> In FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 581 (1967), we found the acquiring company at the edge of the market exerted "considerable influence" on the market because "market behavior . . . was influenced by each firm's predictions of the market behavior of its competitors, actual and potential"; because "barriers to entry . . . were not significant" as to the acquiring company; because "the number of potential entrants was not so large that the elimination of one would be insignificant"; and because the acquiring firm was the most likely entrant.

It is suggested that the District Court failed to consider whether Falstaff was an on-the-fringe potential competitor with influence on existing competition because the Government never alleged in its complaint that Falstaff was exerting a present procompetitive influence, never proceeded under this theory, and further failed to introduce any evidence to support this view. But this position merely ascribes an arbitrary meaning to the language of the complaint. The Government in its complaint alleged that the acquisition violated § 7 because it eliminated potential competition; since potential competition may stimulate a present procompetitive influence, the allegation certainly encompassed the "on-the-fringe influence" that the District Court failed to consider, and the Government was not required to be more specific in its allegation.

The Government did not produce direct evidence of how members of the New England market reacted to potential competition from Falstaff, but circumstantial evidence is the lifeblood of antitrust law, see Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100 (1969); Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 221 (1939); Frey & Son, Inc. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 256 U.S. 208, 210 (1921), especially for § 7 which is concerned "with probabilities, not certainties," Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 323. As was stated in United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 174 (1964), "potential competition cannot be put to a subjective test. It is not 'susceptible of a ready and precise answer.'"

Nor was there any lack of circumstantial evidence of Falstaff's on-the-fringe competitive impact. As the record shows, Falstaff was in the relevant line of commerce, was admittedly interested in entering the Northeast, and had, among other ways, see n. 8, supra, made its interest known by prior-acquisition discussions. Moreover, there were, as my Brother MARSHALL would put it, objective economic facts as to Falstaff's capability to enter the New England market; and the same facts which he would have the District Court look to in determining whether the particular theory of potential competition we do not reach has been violated, would be probative of violation of § 7 through loss of a procompetitive on-the-fringe influence. See FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., supra, at 580-581; United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., supra, at 173-177; United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651, 660 (1964).

And as for the contention that the Government did not proceed under this on-the-fringe influence view, the record is to the contrary. At one point in the trial, the Government informed the trial judge that a deposition was being introduced into evidence "to establish that Falstaff was a company that was on the wings or at the edge of the New England market. . . . What I mean by that is that Falstaff was capable and interested in entering the New England market and would be waiting for the opportunity to develop, but that Falstaff, over the long term, would eventually or could eventually or was a likely entrant into the New England market, to use the terminology in FTC v. Procter & Gamble Company." App. 124. Further into its presentation of proof, the Government was introducing evidence of the trend toward concentration in the market, and stated: "It is this concentration, your Honor, which, as we attempted to point out in our pretrial brief, makes potential competition. . . . The concentration of sales within a small number of firms in New England. This is what makes the potential competition . . . so very, very important to this market. . . . In such a situation the potential entry of a fresh competitive factor is of extreme importance." App. 170.

That the on-the-fringe influence theory was one of the theories the Government was proceeding under was apparent to Falstaff. In its opening statement, Falstaff stated:

"Now, the Government has a theory which is, so far as the judicial determinations on the point are concerned, comparatively new. You were handed the other day a portion of the record in FTC against Bendix-Fram Corporation, and you were handed at the same time a typed or otherwise reproduced copy of the opinion of Commissioner Elman of the FTC in that case."

"That opinion is not yet officially reported. The case is on its way to an appeal. . . . The Commissioner announced a theory upon which the Government relies and which they say lies within the ambit of this vague, undefined creature, potential competition. What that decision, on appeal as I say, what that decision announces is the doctrine which is called the toe-hold doctrine, and it goes like this:

"If a producer of Product A is standing in the wings, as the Commissioner says, outside the market, merely standing there, but in a position to move into the market if he chooses. He must remain there in the wings and forbear acquiring the producer of a like product within the market area.

I FÉÁINEÁÍ G ÓÚ HÍ LÁÍ HÁUÉDÁFÉJ ÓÚ EIFFÉGLÁÍ ÁSEÓAÉGÁÍ ÓÚ ÓÚ ÓÚ ÓÚ ÓÚ ÓÚ ÓÚ ÓÚ

suspicion; but it does mean that theirs is not necessarily the last [*536] word in arriving at a [***484] conclusion about [****16] how Falstaff should be considered in terms of its status as a potential entrant into the market in issue.

[****17] [*537] [**1103] Since it appears that the District Court entertained too narrow a view of Falstaff as a potential competitor and since it appears that the District Court's conclusion that the merger posed no probable threat to competition followed automatically from the finding that Falstaff had no intent to enter de novo, we remand this case for the District Court to make the proper assessment of Falstaff as a potential competitor.

II

Because we remand for proper assessment of Falstaff as an on-the-fringe potential competitor, it is not necessary to reach the question of whether § 7 bars a market-extension merger by a company whose entry into the market would have no influence whatsoever on the present state of competition in the market -- that is, the entrant will not be a dominant force in the market and has no current influence in the marketplace. We leave for another day the question of the applicability of § 7 to a merger that will leave competition in the marketplace exactly as it was, neither hurt nor helped, and that is challengeable under § 7 only on grounds that the company could, but did not, enter de novo or through "toe-hold" acquisition and that [****18] there is less competition than there would have been had entry been in such a manner. There are traces of this view in our cases, see Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 567 (1972); id. at 587 (BURGER, C. J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S., at 580; id. at 586 (Harlan, J., concurring); United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S., at 173, but the Court has not squarely faced the question,<sup>14</sup> if for no other reason than because there has [*538] been no necessity to consider it. See Ford Motor Co. v. United States, supra; FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., supra; United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., supra; United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651 (1964).

[****19] The judgment of the District Court dismissing the complaint against Falstaff is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

So ordered.

---

"The Commissioner fancies that the mere presence of such a manufacturer or seller close to the market area had some effect which could fall within his ill-defined concept of potential competition. And he found in Bendix-Fram that Bendix was in such a position. He found that Bendix could have acquired a small company rather than Fram, a relatively larger one, beefed it up by expenditures of money which Bendix could afford, and develop it into a full-blown competitor within the market area. I do not know whether that notion will gain substantial acceptance in the theory of antitrust law. I do not know that it will have the approval of the Supreme Court if and when it ever reaches it. I do know, however, that that is an entirely different situation [than] we have here.

.....

"If there is any sense to this total theory at all it must be that the acquiring company was in fact so closely located to the market served by the acquired company that its entrance into the market unilaterally, under its own steam, without motivation was a distinct threat to those who were competing in the market." App. 182-183. (Emphasis added.)

Falstaff then proceeded to state why it felt that the on-the-fringe influence theory did not apply in this case.

During its proof, Falstaff had both its expert witness on economics, App. 257, and an officer of Narragansett, App. 376, testify as to whether Falstaff's presence had a procompetitive effect, both stating that it did not.

<sup>14</sup> It is suggested that certain language in the Court's opinion in United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 464 (1964), is to the contrary. But there the merger was held proved prima facie anticompetitive because the acquiring and acquired companies were engaged in the same overall line of commerce in the same geographic market. This notwithstanding, it is again only arbitrary to assume that the quoted language was not referring to the acquired company's on-the-fringe influence as a potential competitor for certain end uses for containers.

I FÉÁINEÁG ÓLÁÍ HÌ LÁJÍ HÁUÉDÓF ÓJÍ ÓLÉFFCHÁÍ ÁSÉOÁEÁGÁÍ ÓLÉI Ì I LÁJÍ HÁUÉSÓYÓAÍTHEÁÍFJ

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN took no part in the decision of this case. MR. JUSTICE POWELL took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Concur by: DOUGLAS (In Part); MARSHALL

Concur

---

[***485] MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, concurring in part.

Although I join Part I of the Court's opinion and its judgment remanding the [**1104] case to the District Court for further proceedings consistent with the opinion, I offer the following observations with respect to the question which the Court does not reach.

There can be no question that it would be sufficient for the Government to prove its case to show that Falstaff would have made a de novo entry but for the acquisition of Narragansett or that Falstaff was a potential competitor exercising present influence on the market. See Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562; FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568; United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158; United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651. [***20] But, I do not believe that it was a prerequisite to the Government's [*539] case to prove that the acquisition had marked immediate, i. e., present, anticompetitive effects.

Section 7 evidences a definite concern for protecting competitive markets. It does not require "merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future . . ." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362. In United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., supra, at 170-171, the Court said:

"The grand design of the original § 7, as to stock acquisitions, as well as the Celler-Kefauver Amendment, as to the acquisition of assets, was to arrest incipient threats to competition which the Sherman Act did not ordinarily reach. It follows that actual restraints need not be proved. The requirements of the amendment are satisfied when a 'tendency' toward monopoly or the 'reasonable likelihood' of a substantial lessening of competition in the relevant market is shown."

Moreover, we are concerned with probabilities, not certainties. See Brown Shoe [***21] Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 323.

Falstaff acquired Narragansett in 1965. Prior to that time, Falstaff was the largest brewer in the country that did not sell in the New England market. It had stated publicly that it wanted to become a national brewer to allow it to compete more effectively with the existing national brewers. Falstaff has conceded in its brief that "given an acceptable level of profit it had the financial capability and the interest to enter the New England beer market."

During the four years preceding 1965, beer sales in New England had increased approximately 9.5%. Nevertheless, the market had become more concentrated. In 1960, the eight largest sellers accounted for approximately [*540] 74% of the beer sales; by 1964, they accounted for 81.2%. From 1957 to 1964, the number of breweries decreased from 11 to 6. In addition, there is evidence that two of the remaining [***486] breweries were interested in being acquired. And, by Falstaff's own admission, "at the time of the acquisition, the substantial growth in the market shares of the national brewers was just beginning to occur."

One of the principal purposes of § 7 [***22] was to stem the "rising tide" of concentration in American business." United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 552. When an industry or a market evidences signs of decreasing competition, we cannot allow an acquisition which may "tend to accelerate concentration." Ibid.; Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, at 346.

I FÉÁÈJÁ G Í ÉLÁHÚÈÓDÆF Ú Í ÁFFELÁH ÁSEÓaÈGÁÍ I Í ÁFFELÁH JÍ HÁWÈSÓYÓA THÉE

The implications of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Celler-Kefauver Act, 15 U. S. C. § 18, are much, much broader than the customary restraints of competition and the power of monopoly. Louis D. Brandeis testified in favor of the bill that became the Clayton Act in 1914. "You cannot have true American citizenship, you cannot preserve political liberty, you cannot secure American standards of living unless some degree [**1105] of industrial liberty accompanies it."<sup>1</sup> He went on to say<sup>2</sup> in answer to George W. Perkins, who testified against the bill:

"Mr. Perkins' argument in favor of the efficiency of monopoly proceeds upon the assumption, in the first place, and mainly upon the assumption, that with increase of size comes increase of efficiency. If any general proposition could [****23] be laid down on that subject, it would, in my opinion, be the opposite. It is, of course, true that a business unit may be too small to be efficient, but it is equally [*541] true that a unit may be too large to be efficient. And the circumstances attending business to-day are such that the temptation is toward the creation of too large units of efficiency rather than too small. The tendency to create large units is great, not because larger units tend to greater efficiency, but because the owner of a business may make a great deal more money if he increases the volume of his business tenfold, even if the unit profit is in the process reduced one-half. It may, therefore, be for the interest of an owner of a business who has capital, or who can obtain capital at a reasonable cost, to forfeit efficiency to a certain degree, because the result to him, in profits, may be greater by reason of the volume of the business. Now, not only may that be so, but in very many cases it is so.

"And the reason why . . . increasing the size of a business may tend to inefficiency is perfectly obvious when one stops to consider. Anyone who critically analyzes a business learns this: That success [****24] or failure of an enterprise depends usually upon one man; upon the quality of one man's judgment, and, above all things, his capacity to see what is needed and his capacity to direct others."

That is why the Celler Committee reporting in 1971 on conglomerates and other types of mergers<sup>3</sup> said that "Preservation of a competitive [***487] system was seen as essential to avoid the concentration of economic power that was thought to be a threat to the Nation's political and social system."<sup>4</sup> Control of American business is being transferred from local communities to distant cities [*542] where men on the 54th floor with only balance sheets and profit and loss statements before them decide the fate of communities with which they have little or no relationship. As a result of mergers and other acquisitions, some States are losing major corporate headquarters and their local [****25] communities are becoming satellites of a distant corporate control.<sup>5</sup> The antitrust laws favored a wide diffusion of corporate control; and that aim has been largely defeated with serious consequences. Thus, a recent Wisconsin study shows that "the growth of aggregate Wisconsin employment of companies acquired by out-of-state corporations declined substantially more than that of those acquired by in-state corporations."<sup>6</sup> In this connection, the Celler Report states:<sup>7</sup>

"The Wisconsin study found, also, that 53 percent of acquired companies after the merger had a slower rate of payroll growth. Payroll growth, notably in large firms acquired by out-of-State corporations, was depressed by mergers. Inflation in recent years has markedly raised wages and salaries. It would be reasonable to expect that payrolls in acquired companies, [**1106] because of the inflation, would have advanced more than employment. In this connection, the report states: 'The fact that this frequently did not happen in companies acquired by out-of-

<sup>1</sup> Hearings on S. Res. 98 before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, 62d Cong., Vol. 1, p. 1155.

<sup>2</sup> Id., at 1147.

<sup>3</sup> Investigation of Conglomerate Corporations, Report by the Staff of Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary on H. Res. 161, 92d Cong., 1st Sess. (Comm. Print).

<sup>4</sup> Id., at 18.

<sup>5</sup> Id., at 52-53.

<sup>6</sup> Id., at 53.

<sup>7</sup> Id., at 54.

I FÉÁINEÁÍ G ÉEÍ I GLÁ HÁUÉDÉFÉJ Í ÉEFEÍ LÁH ÁSEÓAÉGÁÍ I ÉEÍ I Í LÁJÍ HÁUÉSÓYÓÁTHEÉEÉGÍ

state firms would lead one to believe that their acquirers have transferred a portion of the higher salaried employees to a location outside Wisconsin. [****26] Such transfers mean a loss of talent, retail expenditures, and personal income taxes in the economies of Wisconsin's communities and the state."

[*543] The adverse influence on local affairs of out-of-state acquisitions has not gone unnoticed in our opinions. Thus "the desirability of retaining 'local control' over industry and the protection of small businesses" was our comment in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 315-316, on one of the purposes of strengthening § 7 of the Clayton Act through passage of the Celler-Kefauver Act.

By reason of the antitrust laws, efficiency in terms of the accounting of dollar costs and profits is not the measure of the public interest nor is growth in size [****27] where no substantial competition is curtailed. The antitrust laws look with suspicion on the acquisition of local business units by out-of-state companies. For then local employment is apt to suffer, local payrolls are likely to drop off, and responsible entrepreneurs in counties and States are replaced by clerks.

A case in point is Goldendale in my State of Washington. It was a thriving community -- an ideal place to raise a family -- until the company that owned the sawmill was bought by an out-of-state giant. In a year or so, auditors in faraway New York City, who never knew the glories of Goldendale, decided to close the local mill and truck all the logs to Yakima. Goldendale became greatly crippled. It is Exhibit A to the Brandeis concern, [**488] which became part of the Clayton Act concern, with the effects that the impact of monopoly often has on a community, as contrasted with the beneficent effect of competition.

A nation of clerks is anathema to the American antitrust dream. So is the spawning of federal regulatory agencies to police the mounting economic power. For the path of those who want the concentration of power to develop unhindered leads predictably [****28] to socialism that is antagonistic to our system. See Blake & Jones, The Goals of Antitrust: A Dialogue on Policy -- In Defense of Antitrust, 65 Col. L. Rev. 377 (1965).

[*544] It is against this background that we must assess the acquisition by Falstaff, the largest producer of beer in the United States that did not sell in the New England market, of the leading seller in that market.

In United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S., at 660, we indicated that "the effect on competition in a particular market through acquisition of another company is determined by the nature or extent of that market and by the nearness of the absorbed company to it, that company's eagerness to enter that market, its resourcefulness, and so on." Falstaff's president testified below that Falstaff for some time had wanted to enter the New England market as part of its interest in becoming a national brewer. And Falstaff has conceded in its brief before this Court that "given an acceptable level of profit it had the financial capability and the interest to enter the New England beer market." With both the interest and the capability to enter the market, Falstaff [****29] was "the most likely entrant." FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S., at 581. Thus, although Falstaff might not have made a de novo entry if it had not been allowed to acquire Narragansett,<sup>8</sup> we cannot say that it would be unwilling [**1107] to make such an entry in the future when the New England market might be ripe for an infusion of new competition. At this point in time, it is the most likely new competitor. Moreover, there can be no question that replacing the leading seller in the market, a regional brewer, with a seller [*545] with national capabilities increased the trend toward concentration.

[****30] I conclude that there is "reasonable likelihood" that the acquisition in question "may be substantially to lessen competition." Accordingly, I would be inclined to reverse and direct the District Judge to enter judgment for the Government and afford appropriate relief. Nevertheless, since the Court will not reach this question and I agree with the legal principles set forth in Part I of its opinion, I join the judgment remanding the case for further proceedings.

MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, concurring in the result.

<sup>8</sup> Falstaff contended below that a de novo entry would not be profitable. Management stated that an established distribution system was a prerequisite to entry. The District Judge concluded that "the credible evidence establishes that [Falstaff] was not a potential entrant into said market by any means or way other than by said acquisition." 332 F.Supp. 970, 972.

I FÉÁÈJÁ G ÉÉ I Í LÁHÁÉDÉFÉJÍ ÉÉFFÉ LÁH ÁÉOÀÉGÁÍ I ÉÉ I Í LÁJÍ HÁWÉÉSÓYÓÁHÉÉÉ

I share the majority's view that the District Judge erred as a matter of law and that the case must be remanded for further proceedings. I cannot agree, however, with the theory upon which the majority bases the remand.

[***489] The majority accuses the District Judge of neglecting to assess the present procompetitive effect which Falstaff exerted by remaining on the fringe of the market. The explanation for this failing is rather simple. The Government never alleged in its complaint that Falstaff was exerting a present procompetitive influence,<sup>1</sup> it introduced not a scrap of evidence to support this view,<sup>2</sup> [***32] and [*546] even at this stage of the proceedings, [***31] it seemingly disclaims reliance on this theory.<sup>3</sup>

Thus, [**1108] our remand leaves the hapless District Judge with the unenviable task of reassessing nonexistent evidence under a theory advanced by neither of the parties. I submit that civil antitrust litigation is complicated enough when the trial judge confines his attention to the legal arguments and evidence offered by the parties and avoids investigation of hypothetical lawsuits which might have been brought.

[*547] The majority's departure from this self-evident proposition is all the more startling when one realizes that the Court eschews reliance on a well-established, plainly applicable body of law in order to reach questions not properly before it. As MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS ably demonstrates, see ante, at 539-540, many decisions by this Court hold that § 7 is violated when a merger is reasonably likely [***33] to eliminate future or potential competition. See also infra, at 560-562. I know of no case suggesting that this principle [***490] is only applicable when the plaintiff can show that the merger will have present anticompetitive consequences, and the majority cites no authority for this proposition.

In the course of a nine-day trial, the Government introduced voluminous evidence to support its potential competition theory. But at the conclusion of the trial, the District Judge dismissed the Government's action in an opinion covering a scant two and one-half pages in the Federal Supplement<sup>4</sup> [***34] and without making any findings of fact or conclusions of law.<sup>5</sup> See United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 332 F.Supp. 970 \(RI 1971\).

<sup>1</sup> The Government's complaint alleged that the merger violated § 7 because "potential competition in the production and sale of beer between Falstaff and Narragansett will be eliminated." (Emphasis added.) While it is true, as the majority asserts, that "potential competition may stimulate a present procompetitive influence," see ante, at 534 n. 13, the complaint nowhere alleges that such a procompetitive influence occurred in this case.

<sup>2</sup> Significantly, the majority cites no evidence at all from the record indicating that firms within the New England market were deterred from anticompetitive practices by Falstaff's presence at the market fringe. Indeed, my Brethren concede that "the Government did not produce direct evidence of how members of the New England market reacted to potential competition from Falstaff," ibid. While the majority contends that there was "circumstantial evidence" relevant to determining whether there was a loss of procompetitive influence, the evidence it points to suggests only that Falstaff might have been perceived as a potential entrant -- not that this perception produced a present procompetitive effect. In fact, the little evidence on the question which does appear in the record strongly suggests that Falstaff was exerting no procompetitive influence. Thus, an economist testifying for the defense stated that, in his expert judgment, Falstaff's presence on the fringe of the market "had no effect" on the practices of firms within the market (App. 257). Similarly, the director of marketing for Narragansett testified that those within the market did not view Falstaff as a threat and that it never occurred to them that Falstaff would attempt a de novo entry (App. 376).

To be sure, this testimony may well have been biased and might properly have been discounted by the trier of fact. But it is harder to dismiss the documentary evidence showing continued vigorous competition after Falstaff's entry by acquisition. If Falstaff was exerting a substantial procompetitive influence by threatening entry, it would seem to follow that anticompetitive practices should have emerged when this threat was removed. The majority nowhere accounts for the continuing absence of such practices.

<sup>3</sup> In its brief before this Court, the Government characterizes its cause of action as follows:

"The theory of the suit was that potential competition in the New England beer market may be substantially lessened by the acquisition." Brief for United States 2-3.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651, 663 \(1964\) (opinion of Harlan, J.):

I FÉÁNÉJÁ G ÉÉL I Í LÁHÁUÉDÄFÉJÍ ÉÉFFÉ LÁH ÁSEÓaÉGÁI Í ÉÉL JÉÁJÍ HÁWÉÉSÓYÓAÉHÉÉHÉ

The court held that Falstaff "was not a potential entrant into said market by any means or way other than by said acquisition. Consequently, it cannot be [*548] said that its acquisition of Narragansett eliminated it as a potential competitor therein." Id., at 972. The District Judge based this conclusion on testimony by Falstaff executive personnel that "Falstaff had consistently decided not to attempt to enter said market unless it could acquire a brewery with a strong and viable distribution system such as that possessed by Narragansett." Ibid.

Inasmuch as the District Court grounded its dismissal on these conclusions, I think we have a responsibility to assess the validity of the legal standard from which they are derived. I would hold that where, as here, strong objective evidence indicates that a firm is a potential entrant into a market, it is error for the trial judge to rely solely on the firm's subjective prediction of its own future conduct. [****35] While such subjective evidence is probative on the issue of potential entry, it is inherently unreliable and must be used with great care. Ordinarily, the district court should presume that objectively measurable market forces will govern a firm's future conduct. Only when there is a compelling demonstration that a firm will not follow its economic self-interest may the district court consider subjective evidence in predicting that conduct. Even then, subjective evidence should be preferred only when the objective evidence is weak or contradictory. Because the District Court failed to apply these standards, I [**1109] would remand the case for further consideration.

I

Although this case ultimately turns on a point of law, it cannot be satisfactorily understood without some appreciation of the factual context in which it arises. A somewhat more detailed description of the relevant line of commerce, the relevant geographic market, and the market structure than that provided by the majority is therefore in order.

[*549] [***491] A. The Product Market

The relevant product market is the production and sale of beer. The firms competing for this market can be divided [****36] into three categories: national, regional, and local. The national firms, Anheuser-Busch, Schlitz, Pabst, and Miller, sell their product throughout the country and advertise on a national basis. In contrast, the regional firms, the largest of which are Hamm's, Carling, Coors, Falstaff, and National Bohemian, market their beer in narrower geographical areas of varying size. Local brewers sell their product in a small area, sometimes no larger than a single State.

Originally, most of the market was held by a large number of small local and regional brewers. The high cost of transporting beer favored the local distributor in early years. But more recently, the national brewers have been able to overcome this difficulty to some extent by decentralizing their production facilities. Moreover, any remaining extra transportation costs associated with national distribution are now outweighed by the advantages of centralized management and, especially, national advertising. Thus, in recent years, while the beer market as a whole has expanded, the number of breweries has declined dramatically. See United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 550 (1966). Whereas [****37] in 1935 there were 684 brewing plants operating in the United States, by 1965 the number had been reduced to 178. Economies of scale, a relatively low profit margin, and significant barriers to market entry have all led to a concentration of beer production among the few national and large regional brewers.

B. The Geographic Market

"Both as a practitioner and as a judge I have more than once felt that a closely contested government antitrust case, decided below in favor of the defendant, has founderered in this Court for lack of an illuminating opinion by the District Court. District Courts should not forget that such cases, the trials of which usually result in long and complex factual records, come here without the benefit of any sifting by the Courts of Appeals. The absence of an opinion by the District Court has been a handicap in this instance."

<sup>5</sup> See Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 52 (a). Cf. United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., supra, at 656-657.

FÉÁMEÚÍA GÍ FÁÍ | JIÁÍ HÁUÉÓ ÓÉFÉJÍ FÁÍFFÉJU LÁHÍ ÁSÉDÓa FÉGÁÍÍ FÁÍ JFLÁFJÍ HÁMÉUÉSÓYÓUÁFHÉAÍHÍ

These national trends are reflected in the six New England States, which constitute the relevant geographic market. In the four years preceding Falstaff's acquisition [*550] of Narragansett, New England beer sales increased 9.5% -- a substantial gain, although somewhat below the increase in national sales for the same period. At the same time, however, the number of brewers operating plants in the region declined precipitately. Thus, in 1957, there were 11 breweries in the New England States, but by 1964 the number had declined to six, and of those six, two of the three smallest had publicly expressed an interest in merging with a larger competitor.

Not surprisingly, this decline in the number of breweries in New England was accompanied by an increase in the market shares of those selling in the region. In 1960, the eight largest participants [****38] in the New England market claimed 74% of all beer sales, and by 1964 this figure had risen to 81.2%. Examination of the four largest brewers shows that their share of the market rose from about 50% in 1960 to 54% in 1964, to 61.3% in 1965. In large part, these figures are probably explicable in terms of the nationwide trend in favor of the large national and regional brewers. Seven of the Nation's 10 largest breweries, including, of course, all the national breweries, sell beer in New England, and their share of the market has increased as the small, local breweries disappeared.

At the same time, however, the concentration of the market does not yet seem to have produced blatantly anticompetitive effects. In recent years, prices have remained fairly stable despite rising costs, and competition [***492] seems relatively intense among the few large firms which dominate the market. Still, [**1110] there is no doubt that the seeds of anticompetitive conduct are present, since "as [an oligopolistic] condition develops, the greater is the likelihood that parallel policies of mutual advantage, not competition, will emerge." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 280 (1964). [****39] One commentator's description of the national beer market aptly characterizes the situation in New England: "The [*551] increasing concentration . . . and the unlikely entrance of new rivals poses a threat to the future level of competition in this industry. Thus far, there is no evidence of collusion in the beer industry. But as the industry becomes populated by fewer and fewer companies, the possibility and likelihood will be enhanced of their engaging in tacit or direct collusion -- given the inelastic nature of demand -- to establish a joint profit maximizing price and output. Similarly, the chances will become slimmer that individual firms in the industry will follow a truly independent price and production strategy, vigorously striving to take sales away from rival brewers. With only a few sellers will come the increasing awareness that parallel business behavior might be feasible." Elzinga, The Beer Industry, in W. Adams, The Structure of American Industry 189, 213 (4th ed. 1971).

C. Narragansett -- The Acquired Firm

Narragansett is a regional brewery with only minuscule sales outside of New England. Within the New England market, however, the firm has been highly [****40] successful. Although only twenty-first in national sales and accounting for only 1.4% of the beer sales in the United States, Narragansett was the largest seller of beer in New England for the five years preceding its acquisition. In recent years, the firm has expanded steadily until, in 1964, the year before acquisition, it sold 1.275 million barrels, which was about 20% of the New England market. Net profits had increased from $ 417,284 in 1960 to a record level of $ 713,083 in 1964.

Notwithstanding this growth, Narragansett felt itself under some pressure from the national brewers.<sup>6</sup> The [*552] corporation was closely held by the Haffenreffer family, and the stockholders apparently concluded that it was in their interest to diversify their personal holdings by selling Narragansett.

[****41] D. Falstaff -- The Acquiring Firm

<sup>6</sup>This pressure continued during the post-acquisition period. From 1964 to 1969, Narragansett's share of the market slipped from 21.5% to 15.5%, while Anheuser-Busch and Schlitz, two large national firms, increased their combined share from 16.5% to 35.8%.

I FÉÁÈJÄ G ÆÍ GLÁHÁÜÖDÄFÉJÍ ÆFFFCLÁÍ ÅSEØAËGÁÍ ÆÍ ÆÍ JGLÄJÍ HÁWÜÈSÓYÓÄTHEÄÍ F

Like Narragansett, Falstaff has been highly successful in recent years. Beginning with a 100,000-barrel plant in St. Louis shortly after the repeal of Prohibition, the firm has steadily grown. By 1964, it was the Nation's fourth largest producer, marketing 5.8 million barrels, or 5.9% of the total national production.

Throughout its history, Falstaff has followed a pattern of acquiring weak breweries and expanding them so as to extend its influence to new markets. Although still a regional brewer, by 1965 the company had [***493] expanded its network of plants and distributorships over an area far larger than that in which Narragansett competed. In that year, Falstaff operated eight plants and sold its product in 32 States in the West, Midwest, and South. Sixteen of these States were added in the period after 1950. However, as of 1965, Falstaff sold virtually no beer in any of the Northeastern States, including the six composing the New England area. Falstaff marketed its product both through company-owned branches and through some 600 independent distributorships.<sup>7</sup>

[****42] [*553] In [**1111] the years immediately prior to its acquisition of Narragansett, Falstaff's steady pattern of growth had continued. Between 1955 and 1964, its sales increased from $ 77 million to $ 139.5 million and its net profits grew from $ 4.3 million to $ 7 million. In the year before acquisition, the company announced a 10-year expansion program in which it was prepared to invest $ 35 million.

Yet, despite this encouraging trend, Falstaff, like Narragansett, was to some extent handicapped by the competitive advantages -- in particular, national advertising -- enjoyed by national distributors. For years, the company had publicly expressed the desire to become a national brewer, and the logical region for market extension was the Northeast. New England seemed a particularly appropriate area to initiate expansion. As indicated above, seven of the 10 largest manufacturers already sold beer in New England, and Falstaff was the largest of the three remaining outside the market. The New England market was expanding at a healthy rate, and it appeared to be a fertile area for growth.

In 1958, Falstaff commissioned a study from Arthur D. Little, Inc., to determine the [****43] feasibility of future expansion. The Little Report, two years in the making, concluded that Falstaff should enter the northeastern market sometime within the next five years. But although it was clear that Falstaff should move into the northeast market, the method of entry was less obvious. After a careful review of cost estimates and the ratio of earnings to net worth, the Little Report recommended de novo entry through the construction of a new plant to serve the Northeast. The report concluded that "there appears to be ample reason . . . for building rather than buying . . . [and] that major new market entrances need [*554] not be predicated on the availability of a brewery Falstaff could purchase."

Despite this analysis, Falstaff's own management personnel apparently concluded that the profit return on a de novo entry would be inordinately low.<sup>8</sup> Falstaff argued [***494] at trial that it needed a strong, pre-existing distribution system to make a profitable entry. But cf. n. 7, supra. An independent economist, Dr. Ira Horowitz, testified on behalf of Falstaff that de novo entry would result in a 6.7% return which he characterized as "a very, very [***44] poor investment indeed." However, it should be noted that the 6.7% figure failed to account for the increment in Falstaff's profit margin which would result from its newly gained status as a national brewer with modern plants to serve the eastern part of the Nation -- the very increment which provided the primary motivation for expansion in the first place. While Dr. Horowitz apparently recognized that such an increment might materialize, <sup>7</sup> At trial, Falstaff argued that it was unlikely to make a de novo entry into the New England market since it had learned through experience that a strong, pre-existing organization of distributors was essential to success. It is true that Falstaff sold most of its beer through independent distributors. However, it should be noted that between 20% and 25% of its sales were made through company branches which Falstaff had established itself. As might be expected, Falstaff's profit margin was significantly higher in areas where it used its own distribution facilities. Moreover, Falstaff's assertion is belied by its own prior history. As noted above, for years Falstaff had successfully expanded by purchasing failing breweries with weak distribution facilities and turning them into effective competitors.

<sup>8</sup> At trial, Falstaff also argued that the other Little recommendations which Falstaff did follow led to disastrous consequences, that Little's estimate of construction costs were unrealistic, and that the Little Report was premised on Falstaff's penetration of the mid-Atlantic as well as the New England market.

I FÁNÈJÀ G ÁÍ I LÁHÙÉÓÄFÉJÍ ÁÉFFFFLÁÍ ÁÉOáÉGÁÍ I ÁÍ JI LÁJÍ HÁWÜÉSÓYÓÁHÉÍ I

he stated that he was unable to estimate its size.<sup>9</sup> [**1112] Moreover, even the 6.7% return rate compares favorably with Falstaff's actual rate of return on its Narragansett purchase, which was a mere 3.7%.

[****45] In any event, whatever the abstract merits of this dispute, it is clear that Falstaff's management personnel determined that entry by acquisition offered the preferable avenue for expansion. Beginning in 1962, the company held discussions with Liebmann, P. Ballantine [*555] & Sons,<sup>10</sup> Piel Brothers, and Dawsons, all of which did a significant percentage of their business in the New England market. All of these possibilities were eventually rejected, and in 1965, Falstaff finally settled on Narragansett as the most promising available brewery.

II

With this factual background, it becomes possible to articulate the legal standards which should govern the resolution of this case.

A. The Purposes of § 7

As is clear from its face, § 7 was designed to deal with the anticompetitive effects of excessive industrial concentration caused by the corporate marriage of two competitors. "It is the basic [****46] premise of [§ 7] that competition will be most vital 'when there are many sellers, none of which has any significant market share.'" United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S., at 280.

But § 7 does more than prohibit mergers with immediate anticompetitive effects. The Act by its terms prohibits acquisitions which "may . . . substantially . . . lessen competition, or . . . tend to create a monopoly." The use of the subjunctive indicates that Congress was concerned with the potential effects of mergers even though, at the time they occur, they may cause no present anticompetitive consequences. See, e. g., FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 577 \(1967\). To be sure, remote possibilities are not sufficient to satisfy the test set forth in § 7. Despite substantial concern with halting a trend toward concentration in its incipiency, Congress did not intend to prohibit all expansion and growth [***495] through acquisition [*556] and merger. The predictive judgment often required under § 7 involves a decision based upon a careful scrutiny and a reasonable assessment of the future consequences of a merger without [****47] unjustifiable, speculative interference with traditional market freedoms. As we stated in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 323 (1962): "Congress used the words 'may be substantially to lessen competition' (emphasis supplied), to indicate that its concern was with probabilities, not certainties. Statutes existed for dealing with clear-cut menaces to competition; no statute was sought for dealing with ephemeral possibilities. Mergers with a probable anticompetitive effect were to be proscribed by this Act." See also United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S., at 552; United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 171 \(1964\).

The legislative history of § 7 makes plain that this was the intent of Congress. Before 1950, § 7 prohibited only those mergers which lessened competition "between the corporation whose stock is so acquired and the corporation making the acquisition."<sup>11</sup> [****49] The Celler-Kefauver [**1113] Amendment, added in 1950, deleted these words and provided instead that all mergers which substantially lessened competition "in any line of commerce in any section of the country" [****48] were to be outlawed. See 64 Stat. 1126. Thus, whereas before <sup>9</sup> Dr. Horowitz' estimates were based on the assumption that Falstaff's profit margin would be $ 1.16 per barrel, which was the margin currently enjoyed by the company. However, Anheuser-Busch and Pabst, two of the larger national breweries, both earned more than $ 2.50 per barrel in their modern plants.

<sup>10</sup> Ultimately, on March 6, 1972, Falstaff announced plans to acquire Ballantine's trademarks and tradename.

<sup>11</sup> The original § 7 provided in relevant part: "No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where the effect of such acquisition may be to substantially lessen competition between the corporation whose stock is so acquired and the corporation making the acquisition, or to restrain such commerce in any section or community, or tend to create a monopoly of any line of commerce." 38 Stat. 731.

I FÉÁNÈJÁ G Í LÁÍ HÀUÉDÖFÉJÚ Í ÁÉFFFHLÁÍ ÁSEÓaÉGÁÍÍ ÁÉJÍ JÍ LÁFJÍ HÁWÉÉSÓYÓÁHÉÉÉÉ É

1950, § 7 proscribed only [*557] those mergers which eliminated present, actual competition between the merging firms, the Celler-Kefauver Amendment reached cases where future or potential competition in the entire relevant market might be adversely affected by the merger.<sup>12</sup> "Section 7 of the Clayton Act was intended to arrest the anticompetitive effects of market power in their incipency. The core [***496] question is whether a merger may substantially lessen competition, and necessarily requires a prediction of the merger's impact on competition, present and future. . . . The section can deal only with probabilities, not with certainties. . . . And there is certainly no requirement that the anticompetitive power manifest itself in anticompetitive [*558] action before § 7 can be called into play. If the enforcement of § 7 turned on the existence of actual anticompetitive practices, the congressional policy of thwarting such practices in their incipency would be frustrated." FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S., at 577.

[****50] B. Modes of Potential Competition

Since 1950, we have repeatedly applied § 7 to cases where the merging firms competed in the same line of commerce, and we have been willing to define the line of commerce liberally so as to reach anticompetitive practices in their "incipency." See, e. g., United States v. Phillipsburg National Bank, 399 U.S. 350 \(1970\); United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546 \(1966\); United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271 \(1964\); United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321 \(1963\); Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294 \(1962\). But in keeping with the spirit of the Celler-Kefauver Amendment, we have also applied § 7 to cases where the acquiring firm is outside the market in which the acquired firm competes. These cases fall into three broad categories which, while frequently overlapping, can be dealt with separately for analytical purposes.

1. The Dominant Entrant. -- In some situations, a firm outside the market [**1114] may have overpowering resources which, if brought to bear within the market, [****51] could ultimately have a substantial anticompetitive effect. If such a firm were to acquire a company within the relevant market, it might drive other marginal companies out of business, thus creating an oligopoly, or it might raise entry barriers to such an extent that potential new entrants would be discouraged from entering the market. Cf. Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 567-568 (1972); FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S., at 575.<sup>13</sup> [*559] Such a danger is especially intense when the market is already highly concentrated or entry barriers are already unusually high before the dominant firm enters the market.

<sup>12</sup> The legislative history of the 1950 amendment was traced in detail in our opinion in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294 (1962). "The deletion of the 'acquiring-acquired' test was the direct result of an amendment offered by the Federal Trade Commission. In presenting the proposed change, Commission Counsel Kelley made the following points: this Court's decisions had implied that the effect on competition between the parties to the merger was not the only test of the illegality of a stock merger; the Court had applied Sherman Act tests to Clayton Act cases and thus judged the effect of a merger on the industry as a whole; this incorporation of Sherman Act tests, with the accompanying 'rule of reason,' was inadequate for reaching some mergers which the Commission felt were not in the public interest; and the new amendment proposed a middle ground between what appeared to be an overly restrictive test insofar as mergers between competitors were concerned, and what appeared to the Commission to be an overly lenient test insofar as all other mergers were concerned. Congressman Kefauver supported this amendment and the Commission's proposal was then incorporated into the bill which was eventually adopted by the Congress. See Hearings [before Subcommittee No. 2 of the House Committee on the Judiciary] on H. R. 515, [80th Cong., 1st Sess.] at 23, 117-119, 238-240, 259; Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee on H. R. 2734, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. . . . 147." 370 U.S., at 317 n. 30.

<sup>13</sup> To be sure, in terms of anticompetitive effects, the dominant firm's acquisition of another firm within the market might be functionally indistinguishable from a de novo entry, which § 7 does not forbid. But "surely one premise of an antimerger statute such as § 7 is that corporate growth by internal expansion is socially preferable to growth by acquisition." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 370 \(1963\). Moreover, entry by acquisition has the added evil of eliminating one firm in the market and thus increasing the burden on the remaining firms which must compete with the dominant entering firm.

I FÉÁNÈJÀ G ÆÍ JLÁHÙÉÓDÆF ÆÍ ÆFFFÍ LÁH ÁSEÒAÆGÁ ÆÍ ÆÍ JÍ LÆJÍ HÁWÆSÓYÓAÆHÆÍ F

[****52] 2. The Perceived Potential Entrant. -- Even if the entry of a firm does not upset the competitive balance within the market, it may be that the removal of the firm from the fringe of the market has a [***497] present anticompetitive effect. In a concentrated oligopolistic market, the presence of a large potential competitor on the edge of the market, apparently ready to enter if entry barriers are lowered, may deter anticompetitive conduct within the market. As we pointed out in United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S., at 174: "The existence of an aggressive, well equipped and well financed corporation engaged in the same or related lines of commerce waiting anxiously to enter an oligopolistic market [is] a substantial incentive to competition which cannot be underestimated." From the perspective of the firms already in the market, the possibility of entry by such a lingering firm may be an important consideration in their pricing and marketing decisions. When the lingering firm enters the market by acquisition, the competitive influence exerted by the firm is lost with no offsetting gain through an increase in the number of companies seeking [****53] a share of the relevant market. The result is a net decrease [*560] in competitive pressure.<sup>14</sup> Cf. United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651, 659-660 \(1964\).

3. The Actual Potential Entrant. -- Since the effect of a perceived potential entrant depends upon the perception of those already in the market, it [****54] may in some cases be difficult to prove. Moreover, in a market which is already competitive, the existence of a perceived potential entrant will have no present effect at all.<sup>15</sup> The entry by acquisition of [*1115] such a firm may nonetheless have an anticompetitive effect by eliminating an actual potential competitor. When a firm enters the market by acquiring a strong company within the market, it merely assumes the position of that company without necessarily increasing competitive pressures. Had such a firm not entered by acquisition, it might at some point have entered *de [*561] novo*. An entry de novo would increase competitive pressures within the market, and an entry by acquisition eliminates the possibility that such an increase will take place in the future. Thus, even if a firm [***498] at the fringe of the market exerts no present procompetitive effect, its entry by acquisition may end for all time the promise of more effective competition at some future date.

[****55] Obviously, the anticompetitive effect of such an acquisition depends on the possibility that the firm would have entered de novo had it not entered by acquisition. If the company would have remained outside the market but for the possibility of entry by acquisition, and if it is exerting no influence as a perceived potential entrant, then there will normally be no competitive loss when it enters by acquisition. Indeed, there may even be a competitive gain to the extent that it strengthens the market position of the acquired firm.<sup>16</sup> Thus, mere entry by acquisition would not prima facie establish a firm's status as an actual potential entrant. For example, a firm, although able to enter the market by acquisition, might, because of inability to shoulder the de novo start-up costs, be unable to enter de novo. But where a powerful firm is engaging in a related line of commerce at the fringe of the relevant market, where it has a strong incentive to enter the market de novo, and where it has the financial capabilities to do so, we have not hesitated to ascribe to it the role of an actual potential entrant. In such cases, we have held that § 7 prohibits an <sup>14</sup> Thus, whereas the practical difference between entry by acquisition and entry de novo may be marginal in the case of a dominant entrant, see n. 13, supra, it is crucial in the case of a perceived potential entrant. If the perceived potential entrant enters de novo, its deterrent effect on anticompetitive practices remains and the total number of firms competing for market shares increases. But when such a firm enters by acquisition, it merely steps into the shoes of the acquired firm. The result is no net increase in the actual competition for market shares and the removal of a threat exerting procompetitive influence from outside the market.

<sup>15</sup> Still, even if the market is presently competitive, it is possible that it might grow less competitive in the future. For example, a market might be so concentrated that even though it is presently competitive, there is a serious risk that parallel pricing policies might emerge sometime in the near future. In such a situation, an effective competitor lingering on the fringe of the market -- what might be called a potential perceived potential entrant -- could exert a deterrent force when anticompetitive conduct is about to emerge. As its very name suggests, however, such a firm would be still a further step removed from the exertion of actual, present competitive influence, and the problems of proof are compounded accordingly -- particularly in light of the showing of reasonable probability required under § 7.

<sup>16</sup> However, if the acquired firm is strengthened to such an extent that it upsets the market balance and drives its competitors out of the market, the acquiring firm takes on the characteristics of a dominant entrant, and the merger may therefore violate § 7 under that theory. See supra, at 558-560 and n. 14.

I FÉÁÈJÀ G ÊÉÍ FLÁHÁÜÉÓÄFÉJÍ ÊÉFFFÍ LÁÍ ÁSEÓaÉGÁÍÍ ÊÉJÍ JÌ LÁJÍ HÁWÉÉSÓYÓÁHÉÉÉÍ entry by [****56] acquisition since such an entry eliminates the possibility of future actual competition which would occur if there were an entry de novo.

[*562] In light of the many decisions to this effect, the majority's assertion that "the Court has not squarely faced [this] question" is inexplicable. In United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441 \(1964\), for example, the defendant argued that "the types of containers produced by Continental and Hazel-Atlas [the acquired firm] at the time of the merger were for the most part not in competition with each other and hence the merger could have no effect on competition." *Id.* at 462. But MR. JUSTICE WHITE, [*57] writing for the Court, rejected that argument, holding that "it is not at all self-evident that the lack of current competition between Continental and Hazel-Atlas for some important end uses of metal and glass containers significantly diminished the adverse effect of the merger on competition. Continental might have concluded that it could effectively insulate itself from competition by acquiring a major firm not presently directing its market acquisition efforts toward the same end uses as Continental, but possessing the potential to do so." *Id.* at 464 (emphasis added). The majority says it is "only arbitrary" to read this language as not referring to Hazel-Atlas' present procompetitive influence on the market. But the Continental Can Court said not a word about present procompetitive effects, and, indeed, made clear that it was relying on [**1116] the future anticompetitive impact of the merger. The Court held, for example, that "the fact that Continental and Hazel-Atlas were not substantial competitors [***499] of each other for certain end uses at the time of the merger may actually enhance the long-run tendency of the merger to lessen competition. [*58]" *Id.* at 465 (emphasis added). See also Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562 (1972); FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568 (1967); United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158 (1964); United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651 (1964).

[*563] C. Problems of Proof -- The Role of Subjective Evidence

Although § 7 deals with probabilities, not ephemeral possibilities, all forms of potential competition involve future events and all of them are, therefore, to some extent speculative and uncertain. Whether future competition will be reduced by a present merger is clearly "not the kind of question which is susceptible of a ready and precise answer in most cases. It requires not merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future; this is what is meant when it is said that the amended § 7 was intended to arrest anticompetitive tendencies in their 'incipiency.'" United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S., at 362. [***59]

The unavoidable problems of proof are compounded in some cases by the relevance of subjective statements of future intent by the managers of the acquiring firm. Although not susceptible of precise analysis, the objective conditions of the market may at least be measured and quantified. But there exists no very good way of evaluating a subjective statement by the manager of a firm that the firm does or does not intend to enter a given market at some future date.

Fortunately, in two of the three forms of potential competition, such subjective evidence has no role to play. Clearly, in the case of a dominant entrant, the only issue is whether the firm's entry by acquisition will so upset objective market forces as to substantially reduce future competition. Since the firm will have already taken steps to enter the market by the time a § 7 action is filed, its statements of subjective intent are irrelevant.

[*564] Similarly, when the Government proceeds on the theory that the acquiring firm is a perceived potential entrant, testimony as to the subjective intent of the acquiring firm is not probative. The perceived potential entrant exerts a procompetitive effect because [***60] companies in the market perceive it as a potential entrant. The companies in the market may entertain this perception whether the perceived potential entrant is in fact a potential entrant or not. Thus, a firm on the fringe of the market may exert a procompetitive effect even if it has no intention of entering the market, so long as it seems to those within the market that it may have such an intention.<sup>17</sup> [***61]

---

<sup>17</sup> Thus, in United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158 \(1964\), for example, management testified that the company had no intention of making a de novo, nonacquisitive entry, *id.* at 166, and in part on the basis of this testimony, the District

I FÉÁNEÚ É A G Á ÁÍ Í LÁH JÁE Ó DÉ Ú Í FÁLFFÍ LÁH ÁSEÓdA ECA Á I Í Á Á Á JJLÁFJÍ HÁMÉ ÚSÓY QÁFHEÁUÍ F

It follows that subjective [***500] testimony by the [**1117] managers of the perceived potential entrant is irrelevant.<sup>18</sup>

However, subjective statements of management are probative in cases where the acquiring firm is alleged to be an actual potential entrant. First, management's statements that it does not intend to make a de novo market entry, together with its associated reasons, provide an expert judgment on the conclusions to be drawn [*565] by the trier of fact from the objective market forces. Just as the Government may introduce expert testimony to inform and guide the trial court with respect to the appropriate business judgments to be derived from the objective data, so too the defendant is entitled to present the evaluation of its [****62] own "experts" who may include its management personnel. Although such evidence from management is obviously biased and self-serving, it is nonetheless admissible to prove that the objective market pressures do not favor a de novo entry.

More significantly, management's statement of subjective intent, if believed, affects the firm's status as an actual potential entrant. As indicated above, the actual potential entrant's entry by acquisition is anticompetitive only if it eliminates some future possibility that it might have entered de novo. An unequivocal statement by management that it has absolutely no intention of entering the market de novo at any time in the future is relevant to the issue of whether the possibility of such an entry exists. After all, the character of management is itself essentially an objective factor in determining whether the acquiring firm is an actual potential entrant.

But although subjective evidence is probative and admissible in actual potential-entry cases, its utility is sharply limited. We have certainly never suggested that subjective evidence of likely future entry is required to make out a § 7 case. On the contrary, in [****63] United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S., at 175, where the objective evidence of potential entry was strong, we said, "Unless we are going to require subjective evidence, this array of probability certainly reaches the prima facie stage. As we have indicated, to require more would be to read the statutory requirement of reasonable probability into a requirement of certainty. This we will not do." (Emphasis added.)

[*566] Nor do our prior cases hold that the district courts are bound by subjective statements of company officials that they have no intention of making a de novo entry. We have emphasized that the decision whether the acquiring firm is an actual potential entrant is, in the last analysis, an independent one to be made by the trial court on the basis of all relevant evidence properly weighted [***501] according to its credibility. Thus, in FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., for example, managers of Procter & Gamble testified that they had no intention of making a de novo entry, and the Court of Appeals thought itself bound by that testimony. See 386 U.S., at 580, and id., at 585 (Harlan, [****64] J., concurring). We reversed, holding that "the evidence . . . clearly shows that Procter was the most likely entrant." Id., at 580.

As these cases indicate, subjective evidence has, at best, only a marginal role to play in actual potential-entry cases. In order to make out a prima facie case, the Government need only show that objectively measurable market data favor a de novo entry and that the alleged potential entrant has the economic capability to make such an entry. To be sure, the [**1118] defendant may then introduce subjective testimony in rebuttal, and in the rare case where the objective evidence is evenly divided, it is conceivable that extremely credible subjective evidence might tip the balance. But where objectively measurable market forces make clear that it is in a firm's economic self-interest to make a de novo entry and that the firm has the economic capability to do so, I would hold that it is

Court found that such an entry was unlikely, id. at 173. But we rejected this finding as irrelevant to the company's status as a perceived potential entrant since "the corporation . . . might have remained at the edge of the market, continually threatening to enter," ibid., and so affected competition within the market.

<sup>18</sup> Public statements by management that the firm does not intend to enter the market may be relevant. To the extent that such statements are believed by the firms within the market, they affect their perception of the firm outside the market as a potential entrant. But in that event, the statements of intent are admissible, not to show subjective state of mind, but, rather, as one of the objective factors controlling the perception of the firms within the market.

I FÉÁÈJÄ G ÆÍ Í LÁHÙÈÓÖÆUÍ ÆFFFÍ LÁH ÁSEØAÈGÁÍ ÆÍ ÆFLÁJÍ HÁWÈÈSÓYÓÁHÉÈÍ I error for the District Court to conclude that the firm is not an actual potential entrant on the basis of testimony by company officials as to the firm's future intent.<sup>19</sup>

[****65] [*567] The reasons for so limiting the role of subjective evidence are not difficult to discern. Such evidence should obviously be given no weight if it is not credible. But it is in the very nature of such evidence [***502] that in the [*568] usual case it is not worthy of credit.<sup>20</sup> First, any statement of future intent will be inherently self-serving. A defendant in a § 7 case such as this wishes to enter the market by acquisition and its managers know that its ability to do so depends upon whether it can convince a court that it would not have entered de novo if entry by acquisition were prevented. It is thus strongly in management's interest to represent that it has no intention of entering de novo -- a representation which is not subject to external verification and which is so speculative in nature that it could virtually never serve as the predicate for a perjury charge.

[****66] Moreover, in a case where the objective evidence strongly favors entry de novo, a firm which asks us to believe that it does not intend to enter de novo by implication asks us to believe that it does not intend to act in its own economic self-interest. But corporations are, after all, profit-making institutions, and, absent special circumstances, they can be expected to follow courses of action most likely to maximize profits.<sup>21</sup> The [*569] trier of fact should, therefore, look with great suspicion upon a suggestion that a company with an opportunity to expand

<sup>19</sup> It might be argued that economic decisions are "inherently subjective" and that any attempt to derive objective conclusions from economic data is futile. If this observation means that different people reach different conclusions from the same objective data, then the point must, of course, be conceded. Similarly, if the point is that economic predictions are difficult and fraught with uncertainty, it is well taken. As we recognized in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, such questions are "not . . . susceptible of a ready and precise answer in most cases." 374 U.S., at 362. But although the factual controversies in § 7 cases may prove difficult to resolve, the statutory scheme clearly demands their resolution. As this Court held years ago, in response to a similar argument: "So far as the arguments proceed upon the conception that in view of the generality of the statute it is not susceptible of being enforced by the courts because it cannot be carried out without a judicial exertion of legislative power, they are clearly unsound. The statute certainly generically enumerates the character of acts which it prohibits and the wrong which it was intended to prevent. The propositions therefore but insist that . . . it never can be left to the judiciary to decide whether in a given case particular acts come within a generic statutory provision. But to reduce the propositions, however, to this their final meaning makes it clear that in substance they deny the existence of essential legislative authority and challenge the right of the judiciary to perform duties which that department of the government has exerted from the beginning." Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 69-70 \(1911\). Section 7 by its terms requires the trial judge to make a prediction, and it is entirely possible that others may reasonably disagree with the conclusion he reaches. But a holding that the fact of such disagreement requires the judge to delegate his decisionmaking authority to one of the parties would strike at the heart of the very notion of judicial conflict resolution. While it may be true that different people see economic facts in different light, § 7 gives federal judges and juries the responsibility to reach their conclusions as to the economic facts. And "if justice requires the fact to be ascertained, the difficulty of doing so is no ground for refusing to try." O. Holmes, The Common Law 48.

<sup>20</sup> The Government directs our attention to a case which dramatically illustrates the unreliable character of such evidence. When the Government challenged Bethlehem Steel's acquisition of Youngstown Steel in a § 7 proceeding, Bethlehem vigorously argued that it would never enter the Midwestern steel market de novo. But when the merger was disallowed, see United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F.Supp. 576 \(SDNY 1958\), Bethlehem nonetheless elected to make a de novo entry. See Moody's Industrial Manual 2861 (1966).

<sup>21</sup> It is possible to imagine a small, closely held corporation which is not solely concerned with profit maximization and which through excessive conservatism or inertia would not seize upon an opportunity to expand its profits. But such a corporation is exceedingly unlikely to become the defendant in a § 7 lawsuit. Section 7 suits of this type are triggered when a firm tries to expand its market by entering hitherto foreign territory by acquisition. A firm caught in the act of expanding by acquisition can hardly be heard to say that it is uninterested in expansion.

It is also possible that a firm might make a good-faith error as to the nature of objective market forces. Thus, even though the objective factors favor entry de novo, the firm's managers might think that the same factors are unfavorable. But as the objective evidence favoring entry becomes stronger, the possibility of good-faith error correspondingly decreases, so that if the objective forces favoring entry are clear, the chance of good-faith error becomes de minimis. Moreover, the mere fact that a firm is presently making a good-faith error does not demonstrate that it will continue to do so in the future. See supra, this page.

I FÉÁÈJÁ G Í JLÁHÁÜÖDÄFJÍ ÚFFFJLÁH ÁSEÓaÉGÁÍ I ÉÍ ÉGLÁJÍ HÁWÜÉSÓYÓÁTHEÍÍ I

its market and the means to seize upon that opportunity will follow a deliberate policy of self-abnegation if the route of expansion first selected is legally foreclosed to it.

[***67] Thus, in most cases, subjective statements contrary to the objective evidence simply should not be believed. But even if the threshold credibility gap is breached, it still does not follow that subjective statements of future intent should outweigh strong objective evidence to the contrary. Even if it is true that management has no present intent of entering the market de novo, the possibility remains that it may change its mind as the objective factors favoring such entry are more clearly perceived. Of course, it is possible that management will adamantly continue to close its eyes to the company's own self-interest. But in that event, the chance remains that the stockholders will install [***503] new, more competent officers who will better serve their interests. All of these possibilities are abruptly and irrevocably aborted when the firm is allowed to enter the market by acquisition. And while it is conceivable that none of the possibilities will materialize if entry by acquisition [*570] is prevented, it is absolutely certain that they will not materialize if such entry is permitted. All that is necessary to trigger a § 7 violation is a finding by the trial [***68] court of a reasonable chance of future competition. In most cases, strong objective evidence will be sufficient to create such a chance despite even credible subjective statements to the contrary.<sup>22</sup>

[***69] To summarize, then, I would not hold that subjective evidence may never be considered in the context of an actual potential-entry case. Such evidence should always be admissible as expert, although biased, commentary on the nature of the objective evidence. And in a rare case, the subjective evidence may serve as a counterweight to weak or inconclusive objective data. But when the district court can point to no compelling reason why the subjective testimony should be believed or when the objective evidence strongly points to the feasibility of entry de novo, I would hold that it is error for the court to rely in any way upon management's subjective statements as to its own future intent.

III

As indicated above, the Government failed to press the argument that Falstaff was a dominant or perceived potential entrant. Since there is virtually no evidence in the record to support either of these theories, I cannot [*571] say that the District Judge erred in rejecting them. It does appear, however, that he applied an erroneous standard in evaluating the subjective evidence relevant to Falstaff's position as an actual potential entrant and that this error infected the court's [***70] factual determinations. I would therefore remand the cause so that a proper fact-finding can be made.

The record shows that the New England market is highly concentrated with a few large firms gaining a greater and greater share of the market. Although this market structure has yet to produce overtly anticompetitive behavior, there is a real danger that parallel pricing and marketing policies will soon emerge if new competitors do not enter the field.

The objective evidence in the record strongly suggests that Falstaff had both the capability and the incentive to enter the New England market de novo. It is undisputed that it was in Falstaff's interest to gain the status of a national brewer in the near future and that New England was a logical area to begin [***504] its expansion. Indeed, Falstaff's own actions in entering the New England market support this conclusion. Nor can it be doubted that Falstaff had the economic capability to enter New England. Falstaff is the Nation's fourth largest brewer and the largest still outside of New England. It has been consistently profitable in recent years, has an excellent credit rating, and had, in 1964, enough excess capital [***71] to finance a 10-year, $ 35 million expansion project. The Little Report concluded that de novo entry into the Northeast was feasible and, although Falstaff attacks these findings, the trier of fact might well have accepted them had he relied upon the objective evidence.

<sup>22</sup> The distinction between subjective statements of intent and objectively verifiable facts is not unknown in other areas of the law. See, e. g., Wright v. Council of City of Emporia, 407 U.S. 451, 460-462 (1972); NLRB v. Erie Resistor Corp., 373 U.S. 221, 227-228 (1963). Indeed, perhaps the oldest rule of evidence -- that a man is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his acts -- is based on the common law's preference for objectively measurable data over subjective statements of opinion and intent. Nor have we hesitated to apply this principle to antitrust law. See, e. g., Utah Pie Co. v. Continental Baking Co., 386 U.S. 685, 702-703 (1967); United States v. Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 394 (1948).

To be sure, Falstaff introduced a great deal of evidence tending to show that entry de novo would have been less profitable for it than entry by acquisition. [*572] I have no doubt that this is true. Indeed, if it can be assumed that Falstaff is a rational, profit-maximizing corporation, its own decision offers strong proof that entry by acquisition was the preferable alternative. But the test in § 7 cases is not whether anticompetitive conduct is profit maximizing. The very purpose of § 7 is to direct the profit incentive into channels which are procompetitive. Thus, the proper test is whether Falstaff would have entered the market de novo if the preferable alternative of entry by acquisition had been denied it. The objective evidence strongly suggests that such an entry would have occurred.

The District Court, however, chose to ignore this objective evidence almost totally. Instead, the [****72] trial judge seems to have considered himself bound by Falstaff's subjective representations that it had no intention of entering the market de novo. As noted above, even if these subjective statements are credible, they appear to be insufficient to outweigh the strong objective evidence to the contrary.

Findings of fact are, of course, for the trial judge in the first instance, and even in antitrust cases where the evidence is largely documentary, appellate courts should be reluctant to set them aside. But when the facts are found under a standard which is legally deficient, the situation is fundamentally different. It is the duty of appellate courts to establish the legal standards by which the facts are to be judged. The facts in this case were judged by a wrong standard, and the cause should therefore be remanded for a new, error-free determination.

Dissent by: [**1120] REHNQUIST

Dissent

[***504contd] [EDITOR'S NOTE: The page numbers of this document may appear to be out of sequence; however, this pagination accurately reflects the pagination of the original published document.]

MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST, with whom MR. JUSTICE STEWART concurs, dissenting.

[***73] Civil litigation in our common-law system is conducted within the framework of the time-honored principle that the plaintiff must introduce sufficient evidence to convince [*573] the trier of fact that his claim for relief is factually meritorious. However large [**1121] the societal interest in the area of antitrust law, so long as Congress assigns the vindication of those interests to civil litigation in the federal courts, antitrust litigation is no exception to that rule. The plaintiff, whether public or private, must prove to the satisfaction of the judge or jury that the defendant violated the antitrust laws. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 338 U.S. 338 (1949). It is the exclusive responsibility of the trier of fact to weigh, as he sees fit, all admissible evidence in resolving disputed issues of fact, [***505] ibid., and his findings of fact cannot be overturned on appeal unless "the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." United States v. Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395 (1948). Cf. FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568 (1967). [***74] The Court today simply disregards these principles.

The Court remands this case to the District Court to consider "whether Falstaff was a potential competitor in the sense that it was so positioned on the edge of the market that it exerted beneficial influence on competitive conditions in that market." Ante, at 532-533. The antitrust theory underlying the remand is that the competitors in the relative geographic market, aware of Falstaff's presence on the periphery, would not exercise their ostensible market power to raise prices because of the possibility that Falstaff, sufficiently tempted by the high prices in that market, would enter. A Government suit challenging a merger or acquisition can, of course, be premised on this theory, and, if sufficient evidence to convince the trier of fact is introduced, the determination that the merger or acquisition violated § 7 would not be reversed on appeal.

I FÉÁINEÁÍ Ó ÉI HÁÍ HÁÉÓDÁFÉJÍ ÁÉFFGFLÁÍ ÁÉÓAÉGÁÍ Í ÁÉÍ ÉI LÁJÍ HÁÉÉSÓYÓÁTHEÁÍ I

As my Brother MARSHALL convincingly demonstrates, however, in this case the Government neither proceeded on the theory advanced by the Court nor introduced any [*574] evidence that would support that theory. The theory that the Government did advance, and upon which it [***75] offered its evidence, is concisely summarized in the Government's statement in opposition to Falstaff's motion to dismiss.

"In our opening statement we attempted to show that the Government would prove -- and I believe we have -- that Falstaff, the fourth largest brewing corporation in the nation, had a continuous intensive interest in entering New England; that it carried on negotiations for five years with companies serving New England; that alternative methods of entry other than the acquisition of the largest New England brewer were available to Falstaff; and that it was in fact one of a few and the most likely entrant into this market; that its entrance into this market was especially important because the market is concentrated; that is, the sales of beer in New England are highly concentrated in the hands of the relatively few number of brewers.

"The entry by Falstaff by building a brewery, by shipping into this market, and opening it up, by the acquisition of a company less than number 1, thereby eliminating its most significant potential competitor, were all available to it. Because of the concentration [**1122] in the market and because of Falstaff's being the [***76] most potential entrant, the acquisition by Falstaff of the leading firm in this market eliminated what we consider to be one of a few potential competitive effects that this market could expect for years." Transcript, Vol. 3, p. 7.

For this Court to reverse and to remand for consideration of a possible factual basis for a theory never advanced by the plaintiff is a drastic and unwarranted departure from the most basic principles of civil litigation [*575] and appellate review. In [***506] this case, the Government originally advanced one theory, but failed to introduce sufficient evidence to convince the trier of fact. That failure is "a not uncommon form of litigation casualty, from which the Government is no more immune than others." United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 338 U.S., at 341. The Court now resuscitates this "casualty" by use of a theory transplant, allowing the Government a second opportunity to vindicate its position by arguing a different theory not originally propounded before the District Court or on appeal. I cannot join in the Court's rescue operation for this "litigation casualty," an operation which succeeds only by flagrantly disregarding [***77] some of the axioms upon which our judicial system is founded.

Although agreeing with my Brother MARSHALL's criticism of the Court's reason for remanding this case, I cannot agree with his grounds for remanding to the District Court for reconsideration. That theory is based, erroneously I believe, on the notion that there is an identifiable difference between "objective" and "subjective" evidence in an antitrust case such as this. My Brother MARSHALL would have the District Court weigh "objective" evidence more heavily than "subjective" evidence. In the field of economic forecasting in general, and in the area of potential competition in particular, however, the distinction between "objective" and "subjective" evidence is largely illusory. It is, I believe, incorrect to state that a trier of fact can determine "objectively" what "is in a firm's economic self-interest." Such a determination is guesswork. The term "economic self-interest" is a convenient shorthand for describing the economic decision reached by an individual or firm, but does not connote some simple, mechanical formula which determines the input values, or their assigned weight, in the process of economic decisionmaking. [***78] The simple fact is that any economic decision is largely subjective. [*576] In the instant case, Falstaff sought to prove why it was not in the "economic self-interest" of that firm to enter a new geographic market without an established distribution system. Its explanation is as "objective" as any of the evidence offered by the Government to show why a hypothetical Falstaff should enter the market. The question of who is an "actual potential competitor" is entirely factual. In deciding questions of fact, it is the province of the trier to weigh all of the evidence; but it is peculiarly his province to determine questions of credibility.

"Findings as to the design, motive and intent with which men act depend peculiarly upon the credit given to witnesses by those who see and hear them. . . .

". . . There is no exception [to the 'clearly erroneous' rule of appellate review] which permits [the Government], even in an antitrust case, to come to this Court for what virtually amounts to a trial de novo on the record of such findings as intent, motive and design." United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 338 U.S., at 341-342.

I FÉÁINEÁG ÓLÁÍ LÁÍ HÁI ÉODAÍF ÚI ÁÍFFOGLÁÍ ÁSE ÓAÉGÁÍÍ ÁÍLÉÍ ÓÍ LÁJÍ HÁI ÉSÓYÓAÍFHÉAÍÍ I

I would not ignore our prior [****79] decisions or rewrite the rules of evidence simply to afford the Government a second chance, which is uniformly denied to other litigants, to convince the trier of fact.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 134

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 34.5

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 13

L Ed Index to Anno, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Construction, by Supreme Court of the United States, of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), dealing with acquisition by one corporation of stock of another. 14 L Ed 2d 784.

Appealability of orders in government civil antitrust actions. 10 ALR Fed 607.

---

End of Document

Missouri Portland Cement Co. v. Cargill, Inc.

Supreme Court of the United States

July 25, 1974, Dismissed

No. A-1265 (73-2014)

Reporter

418 U.S. 919 *; 94 S. Ct. 3210 **; 41 L. Ed. 2d 1161 ***; 1974 U.S. LEXIS 2185 ****; 1974-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,171

MISSOURI PORTLAND CEMENT CO. v. CARGILL, INC.

Prior History: [****1] C. A. 2d Cir.

Reported below: 498 F.2d 851.

Core Terms

---

conglomerate, acquisition, anti trust law, injunction, cement

Opinion

---

[*919] [**3210] Motion of respondent to vacate stay heretofore entered by MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS on July 12, 1974, granted. MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN took no part in the consideration or decision of this motion.

Dissent by: DOUGLAS

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, dissenting.

Cargill, desirous of acquiring control of petitioner, made a cash offer for all of petitioner's common stock. Petitioner thereupon filed this suit in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York to enjoin that tender offer, alleging that acquisition of control of petitioner would violate § 7 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 18. That court issued the injunction stating in a detailed opinion its view that the acquisition of stock control by Cargill raises serious antitrust issues.

The sole question here is whether Cargill's attempts to take over Missouri Portland will be enjoined, pending the outcome of a trial on the merits of Missouri Portland's claim that a merger of these two companies would violate the antitrust laws. The District Court granted such an injunction, 375 F.Supp. 249, but the Court of Appeals [****2] reversed. 498 F.2d 851. Missouri Portland sought and received a stay of the Court of Appeals' mandate, thus reinstating the injunction issued by the District Court. Today the Court vacates that stay.

The Court treats the case as if we were in the sensitive First Amendment field where relatively minor restraints may have a "chilling" effect on an important constitutional [*920] right. But as I read the Constitution and Bill of Rights, a corporation has no constitutional right to merge, consolidate, or acquire the assets of another company. The old Court in the days of "substantive due process" built an expansive corporate Bill of Rights by reading "liberty" in the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment as including the "liberty" to exploit people, our resources, and our environment. The Court trifles with the antitrust laws when it vacates a stay that only requires Cargill to wait until there is a ruling on the merits before it swallows up Missouri Portland. What the Court does today is a shocking example of the disregard of law to please the management of huge conglomerates. Denial of a stay means a decision on the merits. For once the companies [***3] and their personnel are mixed, the momentum to complete the acquisition is almost irresistible. By careless neglect we actually decide that what appears to be a monstrous violation of the law may go on unremedied.

I FÌ ÁMEÑUFJÆGELÁ ÆUÔDÄNGÆHGELÁ FÆSOAÉGAFFÍ FLÄFFÍ FLÁJÍ I ÁMEÑSÓYQÁFÌ I ÄHIG

[**3211] I

The Court of Appeals did not hold that the findings of the District Court were "clearly erroneous." The Court of Appeals considered the issue on the merits to be frivolous and only required Cargill to agree to hold the assets of Missouri Portland in a separate corporation or division so that it can be divested under any subsequent decree of the Court. But that misses the whole point, as I will make clear.

II

Missouri Portland is the Nation's 20th largest producer of Portland cement with 2% of the national capacity and 8% in the 11-state region it serves. The District [***1162] Court defined the relevant markets here as four [*921] metropolitan areas in which Missouri Portland ranks either first or second in market share. In all of these markets the top four firms have at least 88% of the market.<sup>1</sup>

[***4] Cargill is a huge, privately held conglomerate with headquarters in Minneapolis. In fiscal 1973 it had sales of $ 5.3 billion. Cargill specializes in commodities and thus has special skills in the transportation of heavy, bulk products and in the sale of fungible products. Cement is a heavy, bulky, fungible product, but Cargill is not involved in the cement industry.

Substantial antitrust issues are raised by the proposed takeover of Missouri Portland by Cargill. The District Court found that Cargill is the most likely potential entrant into the cement industry and concluded that a significant anticompetitive effect would result from Cargill's entry via a takeover of an already dominant firm rather than by de novo entry or by "toehold" acquisition. Furthermore, the District Court found that the addition of Cargill's huge financial resources to Missouri Portland's already substantial assets will raise significant barriers to entry of others in the relevant markets and will tend to increase the dominance of Missouri Portland in markets which are already heavily concentrated. Finally, the District Court noted that the challenged acquisition would eliminate a potential competitor [***5] from the fringe of the market, thereby possibly resulting in an additional anticompetitive effect.

The Court of Appeals disputed all of these conclusions by the District Court. Yet the very fact that disagreement exists between the two lower courts on these points indicates the likely existence of a substantial question. If the District Court's version of the facts is the correct [*922] one, it seems that the takeover would violate the Clayton Act. See United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526 (1973); Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562 (1972); FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568 (1967); United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158 (1964); United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651 (1964).

[**3212] III

The issues raised by the petition for certiorari present a substantial question that involves a conflict between the decisions below and another Court of Appeals. In Kennecott Copper Corp. v. FTC, 467 F.2d 67 (CA10 1972), the court held that anticompetitive effect could occur even though [***6] the acquiring and acquired corporations did not produce related products but did have related skills.<sup>2</sup> The court below was confronted with facts strikingly similar to those of Kennecott as regards the lack of related products but the presence of related skills. That court, however, candidly admitted that it was declining to follow the Kennecott decision. 498 F.2d, at 860 n. 14. In our decision in United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., supra, at 537, we left open the extent to which potential anticompetitive effect will be considered determinative in "conglomerate mergers" such as this one where entry could have been de novo or via "toehold" acquisition. [*923] Given the conflict between the Circuits on this matter, the present case presents a good vehicle in which we should consider this problem.

<sup>1</sup> The four metropolitan markets are St. Louis, Kansas City, Memphis, and Omaha.

<sup>2</sup> In addition, the opinion of the court below conflicts with decisions of other Courts of Appeals on the significance of the acquiring corporation's "deep pocket." According to the court below, the facts that the acquiring corporation has great financial resources and that it intends to use these resources are not enough to show potential anticompetitive effect. But see General Foods Corp.

I FÌ ÁMEJÁNFI ÆEJGLÁI ÁUÉODÁNGFÉHGFGLÁ FÅSEØAÉGÁAFFÍ FÅEFFÍ GLÁJÍ I ÁMEJÄSØYQÁAFÍ I ÄFFFÍ

[****7] IV

Cargill had acquired 18% of the common stock of Missouri Portland before the injunction issued. Now that the injunction has been lifted by the Court of Appeals and this Court, Cargill is free to acquire the controlling interest in Missouri Portland. That means that it can dictate what its subsidiary will do. We are foolhardy to assume that the litigation will then go on. Cargill in control of its subsidiary [***1163] will make the subsidiary toe the line and be obedient to Cargill's wishes. The substantial antitrust issue apparent in the conflict between the Courts of Appeals will now not likely be resolved. The internal segregation of assets of the two companies is only an idle gesture.

If we fail to live under a rule of law and instead leave the field open to the uncontrolled machinations of conglomerates, Cargill will follow the infamous pattern of IT&T, uncontrolled and uncontrollable. Behind this motion to vacate the stay are very large questions of law and public policy. What is the place of antitrust law in the conglomerate field? Are conglomerates immune as some suggest? If not, what controls over them exist under present antitrust laws? These are questions [****8] that are substantial and pressing. The Circuits are in conflict; and the Court goes pell-mell for an escape for this conglomerate from a real test under existing antitrust law.

I repeat, there is no constitutional right to take over other companies. Cargill should be required to accept delay as one of the risks it incurred by [**3213] seeking to gain control of so dominant a firm in the cement industry [*924] rather than being content with a "toehold" acquisition or de novo entry.

I would continue the stay in force until the merits of the case have been adjudicated.

End of Document

v. FTC, 386 F.2d 936 \(CA3 1967\); United States Steel Corp. v. FTC, 426 F.2d 592 \(CA6 1970\); Ecko Products Co. v. FTC, 347 F.2d 745 \(CA7 1965\); Kennecott Copper Co. v. FTC, 467 F.2d 67 \(CA10 1972\).

GULF OIL CORP. v. COPP

Supreme Court of the United States

October 21-22, 1974, Argued ; December 17, 1974, Decided

No. 73-1012

Reporter

419 U.S. 186 *; 95 S. Ct. 392 **; 42 L. Ed. 2d 378 ***; 1974 U.S. LEXIS 47 ****; 1974-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,402

GULF OIL CORP. ET AL. v. COPP PAVING CO., INC., ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 487 F.2d 202, reversed.

Core Terms

---

commerce, asphaltic, concrete, interstate commerce, Clayton Act, Sherman Act, interstate, sales, Oil, liquid, interstate highway, anti trust law, effects, Robinson-Patman Act, provisions, markets, engaged in commerce, practices, acquisitions, monopoly, purposes, instrumentalities, employees, prices, cases, legislative history, Fair Labor Standards Act, regulation, highways, lessen

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 14.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Jurisdiction

HN4 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The distinct "in commerce" language of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Act provisions appears to denote only persons or activities within the flow of interstate commerce -- the practical, economic continuity in the generation of goods and services for interstate markets and their transport and distribution to the consumer.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The plaintiff, a producer of asphaltic concrete, brought suit in a United States District Court in California, alleging that the defendant oil companies had committed various violations of the federal antitrust laws. The alleged violations relating to the sale of asphaltic concrete included price discrimination in violation of 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), exclusive dealing and tying arrangements in violation of 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 14), and corporate acquisitions in violation of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18). The District Court held that although the asphaltic concrete was used in the construction of interstate highways, the sales of such concrete were entirely intrastate and were not "in commerce" within the meaning of the Robinson-Patman Act or the Clayton Act, and that jurisdiction over the plaintiff's claims under such Acts was therefore lacking. However, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed, holding that the sales of asphaltic concrete for use in the construction of interstate highways were "in commerce," and that the jurisdictional requirements of the Robinson-Patman Act and Clayton Act were therefore satisfied (487 F2d 202).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by Powell, J., expressing the views of six members of the court, it was held that although sales of asphaltic concrete were made for use in construction of interstate highways, such sales, by a firm engaged in entirely intrastate sales of asphaltic concrete which could be marketed only locally, were not "in commerce" within the jurisdictional ambit of either 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act or 3 or 7 of the Clayton Act.

Marshall, J., concurring, joined in the court's judgment and opinion, but disagreed with a characterization used in one of the court's dicta.

Douglas, J., joined by Brennan, J., dissented on the grounds that jurisdiction was sustainable on an "in commerce" theory, and that jurisdiction was also sustainable on the alternative ground that even if the sales of asphaltic concrete were not in the flow of commerce, the plaintiff's pleadings sufficiently alleged that interstate commerce was affected.

Headnotes

---

I FJÁMEŪEFÍ Í ÆFÍ Í LÁÍ ÁUÉODÆHUGAÉHUGA GLÁ GÁSEÓAÉGÁ ÁI Í ÆFHÍ Í LÁJÍ I ÁMÈEŠÓYÓÁ ÁI Í ÆFHÍ

MONOPOLIES §21 > relation to interstate commerce -- Robinson-Patman Act -- Clayton Act -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

Although entirely intrastate sales of asphaltic concrete, which can be marketed only locally, are made for use in construction of interstate highways, such sales are not "in commerce" as a matter of law within the jurisdictional ambit of either 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)) or 3 or 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 14, 18).

MONOPOLIES §21 > relation to interstate commerce -- Sherman Act -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

However local its immediate object, a contract, combination, or conspiracy nonetheless may constitute a restraint within the meaning of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) if it substantially and adversely affects interstate commerce; if it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how local the operation which applies the squeeze.

MONOPOLIES §21 > relation to interstate commerce -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

In contrast with 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), which prohibits certain conduct "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States," the distinct language "in commerce," as used in 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)) and in 3 and 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 14, 18), appears to denote only persons or activities within the flow of interstate commerce--the practical, economic continuity in the generation of goods and services for interstate markets and their transport and distribution to the consumer; thus, the jurisdictional requirements of the latter provisions cannot be satisfied merely by showing that allegedly anticompetitive acquisitions and activities affect commerce.

MONOPOLIES §21 > relation to interstate commerce -- Robinson-Patman Act -- Clayton Act -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

For a corporate acquisition to violate 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), the acquired corporation must be one which engages in interstate commercial activities; for a corporation's alleged exclusive dealing arrangements to violate 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 14) or for its allegedly discriminatory sales to violate 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), such arrangements or sales must occur in the course of its interstate activities; and for a corporation's allegedly discriminatory sales to violate 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), at least one such sale must have been made in interstate commerce.

MONOPOLIES §21 > relation to interstate commerce -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Although Congress has deemed interstate highways critical to the national economy and has authorized extensive federal participation in their financing and regulation, nothing in the Federal Aid Highway Act (23 USCS 101 et seq.)

I FJÁNEFÁFI Í ÞÆFI Í LÁFI ÁJÆÓÐA U GÆFHU GLÁ GÆSÓÐA ÞÆGA ÁFI Í ÞÆFHU Í LÁFI Í ÁNÆFASÓY QUÁI Í ÞÆFHU

or other legislation evinces an intention to apply the full range of antitrust laws to persons who, as part of their local business, supply materials used in construction of local segments of interstate roads, nor does the fact that interstate highways are instrumentalities of commerce somehow render the suppliers of materials instrumentalities of commerce as well.

ERROR §1537 > MONOPOLIES §21 > relation to interstate commerce -- "nexus" theory -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[6A] [▼] [6A] LEdHN[6B] [▼] [6B] LEdHN[6C] [▼] [6C]

Even if interstate highways are instrumentalities of interstate commerce, conduct with respect to an ingredient of an interstate highway does not have such a "nexus" to commerce as to be per se "in commerce," within the meaning of either 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)) or 3 or 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 14, 18); assuming arguendo that the facially narrow language of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts was intended to denote something more than the relatively restrictive "flow of commerce" concept, the "nexus" approach would be an irrational way to proceed, and a United States Court of Appeals judgment based on this "nexus to commerce" theory will be reversed by the United States Supreme Court.

MONOPOLIES §21 > STATUTES §147 > interstate commerce -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[7] [  ] [7]

Since the Conference Committee deleted the phrase "whether in commerce or not" from 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)) and left the language "in commerce" in 2(a), and since the United States Courts of Appeals have read the "in commerce" language of 2(a) to mean that 2(a) applies only where at least one of the transactions which, when compared, generate a discrimination, cross a state line, the legislative history does not warrant, in the face of this long-standing interpretation and the continued Congressional silence, that the United States Supreme Court extend 2(a) beyond its clear language to reach a multitude of local activities which hitherto have been left to state and local regulation.

MONOPOLIES §6 > purpose of legislation -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[8] [  ] [8]

Sections 3 and 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 14, 18) were intended to complement the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) and to facilitate achievement of its purposes by reaching, in their incipiency, acts and practices which promise, in their full growth, to impair competition in interstate commerce.

EVIDENCE §403 > MONOPOLIES §21 > interstate commerce -- burden of proof -- > Headnote:

LEdHN [9]  [9]

Even if 3 and 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 14, 18) extend to acquisitions and sales having substantial effects on interstate commerce, a court cannot presume that such effects exist; the plaintiff must allege and prove that apparently local acts in fact have adverse consequences on interstate markets and the interstate flow of goods in order to invoke federal antitrust prohibitions.

I FJÁMEÐFI Í ÆFÍ Í LÁVÍ ÁUÆÐÆHUGAÐU GLÁ GÁSEÐGAÐAÍI Í ÆFÍ Í LÁJÍ I ÁMÆÐSOÝÐAÍ ÆFÍ

EVIDENCE §963 > MONOPOLIES §21 > effects on interstate commerce -- insufficiency of proof -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

In an antitrust case involving an issue whether "in commerce" requirements of 3 and 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 14, 18) are satisfied, the plaintiff's "effects on commerce" theory, even if legally correct, must fail for want of proof, where (1) the plaintiff has presented no evidence of effects on interstate commerce, but has argued merely that such effects could be presumed from the use of asphaltic concrete in the construction of interstate highways, although such concrete could be marketed only locally and was sold in entirely intrastate sales, (2) a United States District Court, in summary judgment proceedings, concluded, on the basis of the record before it, that the defendants' alleged antitrust violations had no substantial impact on interstate commerce, and (3) the District Court's conclusion cannot be considered erroneous.

COURTS §246 > PLEADINGS §48.5 > jurisdictional issues -- summary judgment -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [11B]

Assuming that the interstate commerce requirements of 3 and 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 14, 18) are properly deemed issues of subject matter jurisdiction, rather than simply necessary elements of federal antitrust claims, there is an identity between the "jurisdictional" issues and certain issues on the merits, and hence no objection to reserving the jurisdictional issues until a hearing on the merits, but by the same token, there is no objection to the use, in appropriate cases, of summary judgment procedure to determine whether there is a genuine issue of material fact as to the interstate commerce elements.

Syllabus

---

Respondent operators of a California "hot plant," at which asphaltic concrete for surfacing highways is manufactured and sold entirely intrastate, alleging violations of, inter alia, § 2 \(a\) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (hereafter § 2 \(a\)), and §§ 3 and 7 of the Clayton Act, brought suit against petitioner liquid asphalt producers and two of their subsidiaries, to which such asphalt is sold and which use it to manufacture and sell asphaltic concrete in competition with respondents. Section 2 \(a\) forbids "any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce" to discriminate in price "where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce" and the discrimination has substantial anticompetitive effects "in any line of commerce." Section 3 makes it unlawful "for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce" to make tie-in sales or enter exclusive-dealing arrangements [\[\*\*\*\*2\]](#) where the effect "may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." And § 7 forbids certain acquisitions by a corporation "engaged in commerce" of the assets or stock "of another corporation engaged also in commerce" where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition "in any line of commerce in any section of the country." The District Court held that it had no jurisdiction of the claims because the market for asphaltic concrete is exclusively and necessarily local, but the Court of Appeals reversed, holding that the jurisdictional requirements of §§ 2 \(a\), 3, and 7 were satisfied by the fact that sales of asphaltic concrete are made for use in interstate highways. Held:

1. The fact that interstate highways are instrumentalities of commerce does not render petitioners' conduct with respect to a material sold for use in constructing these highways "in commerce" as a matter of law for purposes of §§ 2 \(a\), 3, and 7 of the Clayton Act. Overstreet v. North Shore Corp., 318 U.S. 125, and Alstate Construction Co. v. Durkin, 345 U.S. 13, distinguished. Pp. 193-199.

I FJÁNEÙÉFI Í ÉAFI Í LÁÍ ÁUÉOÉHUGÁÉHUGÁ GÁÉHUGÁ GÁÉHUGÁ Í ÉAFI Í LÁJÍ Í ÁUÉEÓYÓQÁ Í ÉAFI

2. The "in commerce" [***3] language of the Robinson-Patman and Clayton Act provisions in question does not extend on an "effects on commerce" theory to petitioners' sales and acquisitions. Pp. 199-203.

(a) In face of the longstanding judicial interpretation of the language of § 2 \(a\) requiring that "either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination [be] in commerce," as meaning that § 2 \(a\) applies only where "at least one of the two transactions which, when compared, generate a discrimination . . . [crosses] a state line," Hiram Walker, Inc. v. A & S Tropical, Inc., 407 F.2d 4, 9; Belliston v. Texaco, Inc., 455 F.2d 175, 178, and the continued congressional silence on the subject, this Court is not warranted in extending § 2 \(a\) beyond its clear language to reach a multitude of local activities hitherto left to state and local regulation. Pp. 199-201.

(b) The "effects on commerce" theory, whereby §§ 3 and 7 of the Clayton Act would be held to extend to acquisitions and sales having substantial effects on commerce, even if legally correct, fails here for want of proof, since respondents presented no evidence of effect on interstate commerce [***4] from the use of asphaltic concrete in interstate highways. Pp. 201-203.

Counsel: Moses Lasky argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Richard Haas and George A. Cumming, Jr.

Martin M. Shapero argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief was Jack Corinblit. *

Judges: POWELL, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and STEWART, WHITE, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined. MARSHALL, J., filed a concurring opinion, post, p. 203. DOUGLAS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which BRENNAN, J., joined, post, p. 204.

Opinion by: POWELL

Opinion

---

[*188] [**395] [***382] MR. JUSTICE POWELL delivered the opinion of the Court.

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] This case concerns the jurisdictional requirements of § 2 \(a\) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, <sup>1</sup> 15 U. S. C. § 13 \(a\), and of §§ 3 and 7 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U. S. C. §§ 14 [***5] and 18. It presents the questions whether a firm engaged in entirely intrastate sales of asphaltic concrete, a product that can be marketed only locally, is a corporation "in commerce" within the meaning of each of these sections, and whether such sales are "in commerce" and "in the course of such commerce" within the meaning of § 2 \(a\) and 3 respectively. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held these jurisdictional requirements satisfied, without more, by the fact that sales of asphaltic concrete are made for use in construction of interstate highways. 487 F.2d 202 \(1973\). We reverse.

|

[***383] Asphaltic concrete is a product used to surface roads and highways. It is manufactured at "hot plants" by combining, at temperatures of approximately 375 degrees F, about 5% liquid petroleum asphalt with about 95% aggregates and fillers. The substance is delivered by truck to construction sites, where it is placed [***6] at temperatures of about 275 degrees F. Because it must be hot when placed and because of its great weight and relatively low value, asphaltic concrete can be sold and delivered profitably only within a radius of 35 miles or so from the hot plant.

---

* Solicitor General Bork, Assistant Attorney General Kauper, William L. Patton, and Carl D. Lawson filed a brief for the United States as amicus curiae.

<sup>1</sup> Hereafter, for simplicity, cited as § 2 \(a\) of the Robinson-Patman Act.

I FJÁMEÐFI Í ÆFÌ Í LÁVÍ ÁUÆÐEÐHUGAÐUÍ LÁ GÆÐOÐEGÁAÍ Í ÆFHÌ HÁJÍ Í ÁMÆÐSOÝÓÐAÍ ÆFHÌ

Petitioners Union Oil Co., Gulf Oil Corp., and Edgington Oil Co., defendants below, produce liquid petroleum [**189] asphalt from crude oil at their California refineries. The companies sell liquid asphalt to their subsidiaries and other firms throughout the Western States. The market in liquid asphalt is interstate, and each oil company concedes that it engages in interstate commerce.

Petitioner Union Oil sells some of its liquid asphalt to its wholly owned subsidiary, Sully-Miller Contracting Co., which uses it to manufacture asphaltic concrete at 11 hot plants in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, Cal. Gulf Oil sells all of its liquid asphalt to its wholly owned subsidiary, petitioner Industrial Asphalt, Inc. Industrial distributes the liquid asphalt to third parties and also uses it to produce asphaltic concrete at 55 hot plants in California, Arizona, and Nevada. Edginton Oil sells its liquid asphalt to, inter alia, Sully-Miller, [***7] Industrial, and respondents.

Respondents, Copp Paving Co., Inc., Copp Equipment Co., Inc., and Ernest A. Copp,<sup>1a</sup> operate a hot plant in Artesia, Cal., where they produce asphaltic concrete both for Copp's own use as a paving contractor and for sale to other contractors. Copp's operations and asphaltic concrete sales are limited to the southern half of Los Angeles County, where it competes with Sully-Miller and [**396] Industrial in the asphaltic concrete market. All three firms sell a more than de minimis share of their asphaltic concrete for use in the construction of local segments of the interstate highway system. Neither Copp, Industrial, nor Sully-Miller makes any interstate sales of the product.<sup>2</sup> [*190] [***8] Copp filed this complaint in the District Court for the Central District of California against the oil companies, Sully-Miller, and Industrial, seeking injunctive relief and treble damages.<sup>3</sup> The complaint, as amended, alleged that the various defendants had committed a catalog of antitrust violations with respect to both the asphalt oil and asphaltic concrete markets. Claiming harm to itself as a consumer of liquid asphalt, Copp alleged: that the defendants had fixed prices and allocated the asphalt oil market geographically, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1; [***384] that they had sold liquid asphalt at discriminatory prices to Copp and other purchasers, in violation of § 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act; and that Gulf Oil had violated § 7 of the Clayton Act by acquiring Industrial. Also claiming harm to itself as a competitor in the asphaltic concrete market, Copp further alleged: that the defendants had fixed prices, divided the market geographically, and employed various methods of monopolizing and attempting to gain a monopoly in the Los Angeles area market, in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman [***9] Act; that, in violation of § 3 of the Clayton Act, Industrial and Sully-Miller had conditioned sales of asphaltic concrete in areas where Copp did not compete on customers' agreeing to buy only from the defendants in areas where Copp did compete, and had "tied" sales of asphaltic concrete to sales of other commodities and to favorable extensions of credit; that, in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, Gulf Oil had acquired Industrial and Union Oil had acquired Sully-Miller, these acquisitions apparently having the effect of lessening competition in the Los Angeles asphaltic concrete market; and, finally, that Industrial and Sully-Miller had discriminated in the prices at which they sold asphaltic concrete, charging [*191] higher prices in areas where Copp did not compete, this in violation of § 2(a).

Because of the liquid asphalt claims, the case was one of the Western Liquid Asphalt cases transferred, pursuant to 28 U. S. C. § 1407, [***10] to the District Court for the Northern District of California for coordinated pretrial proceedings.<sup>4</sup> The defendants thereafter moved for summary judgment in favor of Sully-Miller, against which Copp had alleged only violations arising from conduct in the asphaltic concrete market. The motion also sought to limit the issues as to the other defendants to those involving liquid asphalt.

<sup>1a</sup> Respondents are collectively referred to hereinafter as Copp.

<sup>2</sup> Although Industrial's Nevada hot plant is sufficiently close to the California and Arizona borders to allow sales and deliveries to those States, Industrial has disavowed such sales, without contradiction. App. 117.

<sup>3</sup> 15 U. S. C. § 15.

<sup>4</sup> In re Western Liquid Asphalt, 303 F.Supp. 1053 (JPML 1969); In re Western Liquid Asphalt, 309 F.Supp. 157 (JPML 1970). As explained infra, the case here concerns only asphaltic concrete, not liquid asphalt.

I FJÁMEÍ Í ÁFJFLÁÍ ÁUÐAÐUGHEHÚ LÁGSEÐAÐCAÁ Í ÁFHEHÍ I LAFJÍ I ÁMEÐSÓYÓAÍ ÁFHEHÉ

The District Court ordered full discovery as to jurisdiction over Copp's asphaltic concrete claims. At the conclusion of discovery, Copp's jurisdictional showing rested solely on the fact that some of the streets and roads in the Los Angeles area are segments of the federal interstate highway system, and on a stipulation that a greater than de minimis amount of asphaltic concrete [****11] is used in their construction and repair. The District Court thereupon entered an order dismissing all claims against Sully-Miller and those claims against the other defendants involving the marketing of asphaltic concrete.

In its opinion accompanying this order the court explicitly discussed only the jurisdictional requirements of the [**397] Sherman Act.<sup>5</sup> On the facts presented to it, the court found that asphaltic concrete is made wholly from components produced and purchased intrastate and that [*192] the product's market is exclusively and necessarily local. Because of these factors, the court concluded that the [***385] alleged restraints of trade in asphaltic concrete could not be deemed within the flow of interstate commerce, despite use of the product in interstate highways. Moreover, Copp had failed to show, either by deduction from the evidence or by the evidence itself, that the alleged restraints as to asphaltic concrete would affect any interstate market. It had neither shown a necessary or probable adverse consequence to the construction of interstate highways and hence to the flow of commerce, nor had it suggested or supported a theory by which restraints [***12] on local trade in asphaltic concrete affect the interstate liquid asphalt market. The court held that it lacked jurisdiction of Copp's asphaltic concrete claims under the Sherman Act and therefore that Copp also had failed to support jurisdiction under the Robinson-Patman and Clayton Acts.

On Copp's interlocutory appeal, 28 U. S. C. § 1292 \(b\), the Ninth Circuit reversed, holding as to the Sherman Act claims "that the production of asphalt for use in interstate highways rendered the producers 'instrumentalities' of interstate commerce and placed them 'in' that commerce as a matter of law." 487 F.2d, at 204. Having so concluded, the court held that jurisdiction properly attached to Copp's Clayton and Robinson-Patman Act claims as well, [***13] since those Acts were intended to supplement the purpose and effect of the Sherman Act. *Id. at 205-206.*<sup>6</sup>

We granted certiorari, despite the interlocutory character of the Ninth Circuit's judgment, because of the importance of the issues both to this litigation and to [*193] proper interpretation of the jurisdictional reach of the antitrust laws, and because of ostensible conflicts with decisions of other circuits.<sup>7</sup> We limited the grant, however, to the questions arising under the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts.<sup>8</sup> 415 U.S. 988 \(1974\).

[***14] II

The text of each of the statutory provisions involved here is set forth in the margin.<sup>9</sup> In brief, § 2 (a) of the [*194] [***386] Robinson-Patman [**398] Act forbids "any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such

<sup>5</sup> 1972 CCH Trade Cases para. 74,013.

The court held the asphalt oil claims against the oil companies and Industrial within its jurisdiction because of the interstate character of that market. That ruling is not before us.

<sup>6</sup> The court reserved the question of summary judgment in favor of defendant Sully-Miller, holding that question not properly before it under Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 54 \(b\).

<sup>7</sup> 28 U. S. C. § 1254 \(1\). See Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co. of California, 405 U.S. 251 \(1972\).

<sup>8</sup> Because of our limited grant and because of the Ninth Circuit's reservation of judgment as to Sully-Miller, see n. 6, supra, Union Oil and Industrial are the only defendants who have participated in argument here.

<sup>9</sup> Robinson-Patman Act, § 2 (a), Act of June 19, 1936, c. 592, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. § 13 \(a\):

HN1 [↑] "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the commerce" to discriminate in price "where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce" and where the discrimination has substantial anticompetitive effects "in any line of commerce." Section 3 of the Clayton Act makes it unlawful "for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce" to make tie-in sales or enter exclusive-dealing arrangements, where the effect "may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." Section 7 of the Clayton Act forbids certain acquisitions by a corporation "engaged in commerce" of the assets or stock "of another corporation engaged also in commerce," where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition "in any line of commerce in any section of the country."

I FJÁMEÉFI Í ÁEFJI LÁÍ ÁUÉDÀUGÉEJU Í LÁ GÆSEÓAÉCAÁ Í ÁEHEH Í LAFJÍ I ÁMEÉSÓYÓAÍ ÁEHEH

[****15] [LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]The explicit reach of these provisions extends only to persons and activities that are themselves "in commerce," the term "commerce" being defined in § 1 of the Clayton Act, insofar as relevant here, as "trade or commerce among the several States and with foreign nations . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 12. This "in commerce" language differs distinctly from that of § 1 of the Sherman Act, which includes within its scope all prohibited conduct "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations . . ." The jurisdictional reach of § 1 thus is keyed directly to effects on interstate markets and the interstate flow of goods. Moreover, our cases have recognized that in enacting § 1 Congress "wanted to go to the utmost extent of its Constitutional power in restraining trust and monopoly agreements . . ." [*195] United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 558 \(1944\). Consistently with this purpose and with the plain thrust of the statutory language, the Court has held that, however local its immediate object, [****16] a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" nonetheless may constitute a restraint within the meaning of § 1 if it substantially and adversely affects interstate commerce. E. g., Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 234 \(1948\). "If it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how local the operation which applies the squeeze." United States v. Women's Sportswear Mfrs. Assn., 336 U.S. 460, 464 \(1949\).

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3] [LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]In contrast to § 1, HN4 the distinct "in commerce" language of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Act provisions with which we are concerned here appears to denote only persons or activities within the flow of interstate commerce -- the practical, economic continuity in the generation of goods and services for [***387] interstate markets and their transport and distribution to the consumer. If this is so, the jurisdictional requirements of these provisions cannot be satisfied merely by showing that allegedly anticompetitive acquisitions [****17] and activities affect commerce. Unless it appears (i) that Sully-Miller engages in interstate commercial activities (§ 7), (ii) that Industrial's alleged exclusive-dealing arrangements and discriminatory sales occur in the course of its interstate activities (§§ 2 \(a\) and 3), and (iii) that at least one of Industrial's allegedly discriminatory sales was made in interstate commerce (§ 2 \(a\)), Copp's claims must fail.

purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce . . ."

Clayton Act, Act of Oct. 15, 1914, c. 323, 38 Stat. 730, as amended:

Section 3 \(15 U. S. C. § 14\):

HN2 "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

Section 7 \(15 U. S. C. § 18\):

HN3 "No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital . . . of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly . . ."

I FJÁMEÍ Í ÁFJÍ LÁÍ ÁUÐAUGÍHÚ LÁ GSEÓA ÓCAÁ Í ÁFHÍ Í LAFJÍ I ÁMEÍSÓYÓA Á Í ÁFHÍ

Copp argues, and the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit agreed, that [**399] it had made exactly this sort of "in commerce" showing. Copp does not contend that Industrial and Sully-Miller in fact make interstate asphaltic concrete sales or are otherwise directly involved in national [*196] markets. Cf. United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 336 n. 12 \(1963\). Nor does it contend that the local market in asphaltic concrete is an integral part of the interstate market in other component commodities or products. Instead, Copp's "in commerce" argument turns entirely on the use of asphaltic concrete in the construction of interstate highways.

In support of this argument, Copp relies primarily on cases decided [***18] under the Fair Labor Standards Act.<sup>10</sup> In the first of these, Overstreet v. North Shore Corp., 318 U.S. 125 \(1943\), the Court held that because interstate roads and railroads are indispensable instrumentalities of interstate commerce, employees engaged in the construction or repair of such roads are employees "in commerce" to whom, by its terms, the Fair Labor Standards Act extends. Subsequently in Alstate Construction Co. v. Durkin, 345 U.S. 13 \(1953\), the Court held that since interstate highways are instrumentalities of commerce, employees engaged in the manufacture of materials used in their construction are properly deemed to be engaged "in the production of goods for commerce," within the meaning of that phrase in the Fair Labor Standards Act. Copp reasons that since the connection between manufacture of road materials and interstate commerce was enough for application of the Fair Labor Standards Act, it also should be sufficient to warrant invocation of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Act provisions against sellers and sales of such materials.

[***19] But we are concerned in this case with significantly different statutes. As in Overstreet and Alstate, there is no question of Congress' power under the Commerce Clause to include otherwise ostensibly local activities within the reach of federal economic regulation, when [*197] such activities sufficiently implicate interstate commerce.<sup>11</sup> The question, rather, is how far Congress intended to extend its mandate under the Clayton and Robinson-Patman [***388] Acts.<sup>12</sup> The answer depends on the statutory language, read in light of its purposes and legislative history. See FTC v. Bunte Bros., 312 U.S. 349 \(1941\).

[***20] LEdHN/5 [5]Congress has deemed interstate highways critical to the national economy and has authorized extensive federal participation in their financing and regulation. Nothing, however, in the Federal-Aid Highway Act<sup>13</sup> or other legislation evinces an intention to apply the full range of antitrust laws to persons who, as part of their local business, supply materials used in construction of local segments of interstate roads. Nor does the fact that interstate highways are instrumentalities of commerce somehow [**400] render the suppliers of materials instrumentalities of commerce as well, in the sense used in Overstreet. No different conclusion can be drawn from Alstate. The statute involved there explicitly reached persons employed "in the production of goods for commerce." Congress could and, according to the Court in Alstate, did find that the federal concerns embodied in the Fair Labor Standards Act required its application to employees producing [*198] materials for use in interstate highways. But neither this nor the Court's holding in Alstate places such employees, or the sellers [***21] and sales of such materials, "in commerce" as a matter of law for purposes of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts.

LEdHN/6A [6A] [6A]Copp's "in commerce" argument rests essentially on a purely formal "nexus" to commerce: the highways are instrumentalities of interstate commerce; therefore any conduct of petitioners with respect to an ingredient of a highway is per se "in commerce." Copp thus would have us expand the concept of the flow of

<sup>10</sup> 52 Stat. 1060, as amended, 29 U. S. C. § 201 et seq.

<sup>11</sup> E. g., Heart of Atlanta Motel v. United States, 379 U.S. 241, 249-258 \(1964\).

<sup>12</sup> The jurisdictional inquiry under general prohibitions like these Acts and § 1 of the Sherman Act, turning as it does on the circumstances presented in each case and requiring a particularized judicial determination, differs significantly from that required when Congress itself has defined the specific persons and activities that affect commerce and therefore require federal regulation. Compare United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 232-233 \(1947\), with, e. g., Perez v. United States, 402 U.S. 146 \(1971\); Maryland v. Wirtz, 392 U.S. 183 \(1968\); and Katzenbach v. McClung, 379 U.S. 294 \(1964\).

<sup>13</sup> 23 U. S. C. § 101 et seq.

I FJÁMEĀFÌ Ì ÁEFJÌ LÁVÍ ÁUÉDÀUGÉE EELÁ GÄSEÖAÉCAÁÌ ËEËHÌ Ì LAFJÌ I ÁMEÉSÓYÓAÍ ÁEEFG

commerce by incorporating categories of activities that are perceptibly connected to its instrumentalities. But whatever merit this categorical inclusion-and-exclusion approach may have when dealing with the language and purposes of other regulatory enactments, it does not carry over to the context of the Robinson-Patman and Clayton Acts. The chain of connection has no logical endpoint. The universe of arguably included activities would be broad [****22] and its limits nebulous in the extreme. See Alstate Construction Co. v. Durkin, supra, at 17-18 (DOUGLAS, J., dissenting). More importantly, to the extent that those limits could be defined at all, the definition would in no way be anchored in the economic realities of interstate markets, the intensely practical concerns that underlie the purposes of the antitrust laws. See United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 231 (1947).

LEdHN[1B] [↑] [1B] LEdHN[6B] [↑] [6B] In short, assuming, arguendo, [***389] that the facially narrow language of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts was intended to denote something more than the relatively restrictive flow-of-commerce concept, we think the nexus approach would be an irrational way to proceed. The justification for an expansive interpretation of the "in commerce" language, if such an interpretation is viable at all, must rest on a congressional intent that the Acts [*199] reach all practices, even those of local character, harmful to the national marketplace. [***23] This justification, however, would require courts to look to practical consequences, not to apparent and perhaps nominal connections between commerce and activities that may have no significant economic effect on interstate markets. We hold, therefore, that Sully-Miller's and Industrial's sales to interstate highway contractors are not sales "in commerce" as a matter of law within the jurisdictional ambit of Robinson-Patman Act § 2 (a) and Clayton Act §§ 3 and 7.

III

LEdHN[6C] [↑] [6C] Our rejection of the "nexus to commerce" theory requires that the Ninth Circuit's judgment be reversed. Copp also advances, somewhat obliquely, a second theory to support that judgment. It contends that, despite the facially narrow "in commerce" language of the Robinson-Patman and Clayton Act provisions, Congress intended those provisions to manifest the full degree of its commerce power. Therefore, it is argued, the language should not be limited to the flow-of-commerce concept defined by this Court and other courts, but rather should be held to extend, as does § 1 of the Sherman Act, to all persons and activities that have a substantial [***24] effect on interstate commerce. We find this theory equally unavailing on the record here.

A

LEdHN[7] [↑] [7] As to § 2 (a) of the Robinson-Patman Act at least, the extraordinarily [**401] complex legislative history fails to support Copp's argument. When the Patman bill was passed by the House, it contained, in addition to the present narrow language of § 2 (a), the following provision:

"[It] shall also be unlawful for any person, whether in commerce or not, either directly or indirectly, to [*200] discriminate in price between different purchasers . . . where . . . such discrimination may substantially lessen competition . . ." <sup>14</sup>

The Conference Committee, however, deleted this "effects on commerce" provision, leaving only the "in commerce" language of § 2 (a). <sup>15</sup> Whether Congress took this action because it wanted to reach only price discrimination in interstate markets or because of its then understanding of the reach of the commerce power, <sup>16</sup> [***26] its action strongly militates against a judgment that Congress intended a result that it expressly declined to enact. Moreover, even if [****25] the legislative history were ambiguous, the courts in nearly four decades of litigation [***390] have interpreted the statute in a manner directly contrary to an "effects on commerce" approach. With almost perfect consistency, the Courts of Appeals have read the language requiring that "either or any of the purchases involved in

<sup>14</sup> H. R. 8442, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. (1936) (emphasis added).

<sup>15</sup> H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 2951, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. (1936).

<sup>16</sup> Compare F. Rowe, Price Discrimination under the Robinson-Patman Act 77-83 (1962) with Note, Restraint of Trade -- Robinson-Patman Act, 86 Harv. L. Rev. 765, 770-772 (1973).

I FJÁMEÐA Í ÁREYLAÍ ÁUÐAÐUGA ÆFLÁ GÁSEÐA ÓCAÁ Í ÁREYLAÍ ÁUÐAÐUGA ÆFLÁ GÁSEÐA ÓCAÁ Í ÁREYLAÍ ÁUÐAÐUGA

such discrimination [be] in commerce" to mean that § 2 (a) applies only where "at least one of the two transactions which, when compared, generate a discrimination . . . [crosses] a state line."<sup>17</sup> In the face of this longstanding [*201] interpretation and the continued congressional silence, the legislative history does not warrant our extending § 2 (a) beyond its clear language to reach a multitude of local activities that hitherto have been left to state and local regulation. See FTC v. Bunte Bros., 312 U.S. 349 (1941).

[***27] B

LEdHN[8] [8]With respect to §§ 3 and 7 of the Clayton Act, the situation is not so clear. Both provisions were intended to complement the Sherman Act and to facilitate achievement of its purposes by reaching, in their incipiency, acts and practices that promise, in their full growth, to impair competition in interstate commerce. E. g., United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 589 (1957); Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co., 258 U.S. 346 (1922). The United States argues in its amicus brief that, given this purpose, the "in commerce" [*202] language of §§ 3 and 7 should be seen as no more than a historical anomaly. When these sections were originally enacted, it was thought that Congress' Commerce Clause power reached only those subjects within the flow of commerce, then defined rather narrowly by the Court. Thus, it is argued, the "in commerce" language was thought to be coextensive with the reach of the Commerce Clause and to bring within the ambit of the Act all activities over which Congress could exercise its constitutional [***28] authority. Since passage of the Act, this Court's decisions [*202] have read Congress' power under the Commerce Clause more expansively, extending it beyond the flow of commerce to all activities having a substantial effect on interstate commerce. See Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S., at 229-233. The United States concludes that the scope of the Clayton Act, like that of the Sherman Act, should be held to have expanded correspondingly, both because of Congress' clear intention to reach as far as it could and because [***391] Congress' purpose to foster competition in interstate commerce could not otherwise wholly be achieved.

LEdHN[9] [9]This argument from the history and practical purposes of the Clayton Act is neither without force nor without at least a measure of support.<sup>18</sup> But whether it would justify radical expansion of the Clayton Act's scope beyond that which the statutory language defines -- expansion, moreover, by judicial decision rather than amendatory legislation -- is doubtful. In any event, this case does not present an occasion to decide [***29] the question. Even if the Clayton Act were held to extend to acquisitions and sales having substantial effects on commerce, a court cannot presume that such effects exist. The plaintiff must allege and prove that apparently local acts in fact have adverse consequences on interstate markets and the interstate flow of goods in order to invoke federal antitrust prohibitions. See United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S., at 230-234.

LEdHN[10] [10] LEdHN[11A] [11A]Copp was allowed full discovery as to all interstate commerce issues. It relied primarily on the nexus theory rejected above, and presented no evidence of effect on interstate commerce. Instead it argued merely that such effects could be presumed from the use of asphaltic concrete in interstate highways. [*30] The District Court concluded, [*203] on the basis of the record before it, that petitioners' alleged antitrust violations had no "substantial impact on interstate commerce."<sup>19</sup> There may be circumstances <sup>17</sup> Hiram Walker, Inc. v. A & S Tropical, Inc., 407 F.2d 4, 9 (CA5), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 901 (1969); Belliston v. Texaco, Inc., 455 F.2d 175, 178 (CA10), cert. denied, 408 U.S. 928 (1972).

No decision of this Court implies any contrary approach. In Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread Co., 348 U.S. 115 (1954), the plaintiff sold bread locally, in competition with Mead's, a firm with bakeries in several States. Moore alleged that Mead's sold bread in his town at a price lower than that which it charged for bread delivered from its in-state plant to customers in an adjoining State. The Tenth Circuit held that Mead's activities were essentially local, and that if § 2 (a) applied to them it would exceed Congress' commerce power. The Court (DOUGLAS, J.) unanimously reversed, stating that Congress clearly has power to reach the local activities of a firm that finances its predatory practices through multistate operations. This language, however, spoke to the commerce power rather than to jurisdiction under § 2 (a). In fact, Mead's did have interstate sales and its price discrimination thus fell within the literal language of the statute.

<sup>18</sup> See Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 314-315 (1949).

I FJÁMEÐA Í ÆGÚSLÁI ÁUÐAUGA EGLÁ GÁSEÐA ÁUÐA Í ÆGUFLÁFJÍ ÁUÐEÐSÓYÓÐA Í ÆGUFLÁFJÍ

[**403] in which activities, like those of Sully-Miller and Industrial, would have such effects on commerce. On the record in this case, however, the conclusion of the District Court that no such circumstances existed here cannot be considered erroneous. This being so, the "effects on commerce" theory, even if legally correct, must fail for want of proof.

[***31] The judgment of the Court of Appeals is Reversed.

Concur by: MARSHALL

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, concurring.

I join in the judgment and opinion of the Court, with one qualification. Part III-B of the opinion correctly notes that we have no occasion today [***392] to pass upon the [*204] applicability of the Clayton Act to activities having a substantial effect on commerce although not "in commerce," since no such effects are present in this case. For the same reason, we ought not to characterize the construction offered by the United States as a "radical expansion of the Clayton Act's scope." As the Court itself says, "the situation is not so clear." Until the issue is properly presented by a case requiring its resolution, I would express no opinion on it.

Dissent by: DOUGLAS

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, with whom MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN joins, dissenting.

I suppose it would be conceded that if one person or company acquired all the asphaltic concrete plants in the United States, there might well be a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, which makes unlawful a monopoly of "any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 2. [***32] Moreover, even though their sales were all intrastate, they would come within the ban of § 1 of the Sherman Act, if they substantially affected interstate commerce. For in the Sherman Act, we held, "Congress wanted to go to the utmost extent of its Constitutional power in restraining trust and monopoly agreements . . ." United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 558 (1944).

---

<sup>19</sup> LEdHN[11B] [11B]

1972 CCH Trade Cases para. 74-013, p. 92,208. Copp makes no specific objection here to the District Court's use of summary judgment procedure, see Brief for Respondents 11-12, nor to the form of the judgment. Moreover, there is no indication that Copp was foreclosed from presenting all available evidence concerning the interstate commerce issues, at least as to §§ 3 and 7. Cf. McBeath v. Inter-American Citizens for Decency Comm., 374 F.2d 359, 363 (CA5 1967). In any event, assuming that the interstate commerce requirements of §§ 3 and 7 are properly deemed issues of subject-matter jurisdiction, rather than simply necessary elements of the federal claims, cf., e. g., United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn., 347 U.S. 186 (1954); Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219 (1948); 5 J. Moore, Federal Practice para. 38.36 [2.-2], p. 299 (2d ed. 1974), there is, as the dissenting opinion by MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS notes, an identity between the "jurisdictional" issues and certain issues on the merits, and hence, under Land v. Dollar, 330 U.S. 731 (1947), no objection to reserving the jurisdictional issues until a hearing on the merits. By the same token, however, there is no objection to use, in appropriate cases, of summary judgment procedure to determine whether there is a genuine issue of material fact as to the interstate commerce elements.

I FJÁMEÍ Í ÁEGLA LÁÍ ÁUÐAUGA ÓLÁ GÁSEÓA ÓCAÁI Í ÁEHLUGÁFJÍ I ÁMÆSÓYÓCAÍ ÁEHLHG

While the Clayton Act modified the Sherman Act by restricting possible application of the antitrust laws to labor unions,<sup>1</sup> and by expanding the scope of those laws to cover the aggregation of economic power through stock acquisitions,<sup>2</sup> there is not a word to suggest that [*205] when Congress defined the term "commerce" it desired to contract the scope of that term.<sup>3</sup> [****35] The legislative history does not furnish even a bare suggestion or inference that "commerce" under the Clayton Act meant something [**404] less than it meant under the Sherman Act. The Clayton Act became the law in 1914; and prior to that time the Court had held over and over again that acts or conduct wholly intrastate might be "in restraint of trade or commerce" as that phrase was used [****33] in the Sherman Act. Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 397 (1905); United States v. Patten, 226 U.S. 525, 541-543 [***393] (1913). These holdings were reflected in the "affecting commerce" standard of the Shreveport Rate Cases, Houston & Texas R. Co. v. United States, 234 U.S. 342, 353-355 (1914). The primary definition of commerce, for Clayton Act purposes, is "trade or commerce among the several States."<sup>4</sup> In the years just preceding passage of [*206] that Act, this Court had held on several occasions that the phrase "among the several States" embraces all commerce save that "which is confined to a single State and does not affect other States." Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U.S. 1, 46-47 (1912) (emphasis added); The Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U.S. 352, 398-399 (1913). In applying the Clayton Act prohibitions to persons and corporations "engaged in commerce [among the several States]," Congress thus may reasonably be said to have intended to reach persons or corporations whose activities, while wholly intrastate in nature, affect other States through [****34] their effects on interstate commerce.

The holding in Transamerica Corp. v. Board of Governors, 206 F.2d 163, 166 (CA3 1953), that Congress, when it enacted the Clayton Act, desired "to exercise its power under the commerce clause of the Constitution to the fullest extent," has nothing to rebut it. Congress apparently was not as timorous as the present Court in moving against centers of economic power and practices [****36] that aggrandize it. Heretofore that is the way we have read the Clayton Act: that Act was intended to complement the Sherman Act by regulating in their incipency actions which might irreparably damage competition before reaching the level of actual restraint proscribed by the Sherman Act, and, in the absence of some indication of legislative intent to the contrary, we should not lightly assume that Congress intended to undercut that complementary function by circumscribing the jurisdictional reach of the Clayton Act more narrowly than that of the [*207] Sherman Act.<sup>5</sup> See *United States v. ***3941 [**405] Penn-Olin*

<sup>1</sup> 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 17. See H. R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 14-16 (1914); United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219 (1941).

<sup>2</sup> 15 U. S. C. § 18; H. R. Rep. No. 627, supra, at 17. See also United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 170-171 (1964); United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 597 (1957).

<sup>3</sup> The definition of "antitrust laws" as used in the Clayton Act includes the Sherman Act. 15 U. S. C. § 12. The definition of "commerce" was actually "broadened so as to include trade and commerce between any insular possessions or other places under the jurisdiction of the United States, which at present do not come within the scope of the Sherman antitrust law or other laws relating to trusts." H. R. Rep. No. 627, supra, at 7.

The Sherman Act declares illegal every contract, combination, or conspiracy "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 1. It also makes a misdemeanor a monopoly of "any part of the trade or commerce among the several States . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 2.

<sup>4</sup> "Commerce" as used in the Clayton Act is defined in § 1 as follows:

"Commerce," as used herein, means trade or commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States and any State, Territory, or foreign nation, or between any insular possessions or other places under the jurisdiction of the United States, or between any such possession or place and any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or any foreign nation, or within the District of Columbia or any Territory or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States." 15 U. S. C. § 12.

I FJÁMEÍ Í ÁEGLI LÁÍ ÁUÐAUGAÉ Í LÁ GÁSEÓA ÉCAÁ Í ÁEGLI LÁFJÍ I ÁMEJESÓYÓAÍ ÁEGLI

Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 170-171 (1964); United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 589, 597 (1957); Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co., 258 U.S. 346, 355-356 (1922); S. Rep. No. 698, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 1 (1914). And that is the way in which we assumed that the Celler-Kefauver Act in 1950, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 18, addressed itself to the problem. For we said in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 315-323 (1962), [****37] that the legislative history showed congressional concern over the "desirability of retaining 'local control' over industry and the protection of small businesses." Id., at 315-316. One dramatic way of leveling local business is pulling it into a vast interstate business regime of the nature alleged in this complaint.

[****38] [*208] !

I agree with the court below that jurisdiction may be sustained on an "in commerce" theory.<sup>6</sup> Clayton Act §§ 3 and 7 apply to persons or corporations "engaged in commerce"; we have held, in a line of cases arising under the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), 52 Stat. 1060, as amended, 29 U. S. C. § 201 et seq., that persons or enterprises engaged in building or repairing toll roads, bridges, and canal locks are "engaged in commerce" and therefore within the reach of the commerce power, by virtue of their relationship to indispensable instrumentalities of our system of interstate commerce. Mitchell v. Vollmer & Co., 349 U.S. 427 (1955); Fitzgerald Co. v. Pedersen, 324 U.S. 720 (1945); Overstreet v. North Shore Corp., 318 U.S. 125 (1943). It is true, as the majority notes, that the FLSA and the antitrust laws are different statutes, but the critical difference between the statutes arises in an area which in no way weakens the applicability of the FLSA cases to the present inquiry.

[****39] In the FLSA and in many other regulatory enactments, Congress itself has determined that certain classes of activities have a sufficient impact upon interstate commerce to warrant regulation of the entire class, regardless of whether an individual instance of the activity in question can be shown to be in or to affect commerce. See generally Perez v. United States, 402 U.S. 146, 152-154 (1971); United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, 119-121, I*2091 (1941). The FLSA represents such a congressional determination with respect to the payment of wages below a specified level and with respect to employment exceeding a specified number of hours [***395] per week (under specified conditions). 29 U. S. C. §§ 206, 207. Once either of these practices is found to exist with respect to an employer or employee covered by the FLSA, the regulatory provisions of that Act are called into play without further inquiry into the possible effect of the individual employer's practices on interstate commerce.

[**406] In the antitrust laws, Congress has provided a different sort of treatment. The Sherman Act broadly prohibits [****40] practices in restraint of trade or commerce, and the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts bar price discrimination, tie-ins, and corporate stock or assets acquisitions where "the effect of" such practices "may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." The finding that a person or corporation is covered by these Acts does not trigger automatic application of the regulatory prohibition; instead, <sup>5</sup> Indeed, we would have to sit as a Committee of Revision over Congress, shaping the law to fit our prejudices against antitrust regulations, to hold that "in commerce" as used in the Clayton Act was intended to provide less comprehensive coverage than the language of the Sherman Act. Prior to passage of the Clayton Act, labor union practices had been held by this Court to affect commerce and thus to fall within the reach of the Sherman Act, despite the fact that the union activities could not be regarded as being in the flow of commerce. Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274, 300-301 (1908). See also Teamsters Local 167 v. United States, 291 U.S. 293, 297 (1934); Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469 (1940); United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn., 347 U.S. 186, 189 (1954). If the Court is right today in saying that "in commerce" as used in the Clayton Act is to be read more restrictively than the Sherman Act, then those who drafted the Clayton Act (including Louis D. Brandeis) to protect labor were needlessly concerned -- no express exemption of labor would have been necessary, since the "in commerce" language of the Clayton Act (if narrowly read) would not have supported judicial attempts to reach labor activities on an "affecting commerce" theory. The drafters obviously thought otherwise.

<sup>6</sup> The decision of the Court of Appeals on the Sherman Act issue, which remains intact by virtue of our limited grant of certiorari, held that petitioners and their alleged activities were sufficiently "in commerce" to support Sherman Act jurisdiction. 487 F.2d 202, 205 (1973). The majority now holds, however, that petitioners and their alleged activities were not sufficiently "in commerce" to support Clayton and Robinson-Patman Act coverage. In light of the latter holding, it is difficult to imagine the reception that Copp's Sherman Act claims will receive on remand.

I FJÁMEÍ Í ÁEGLÁÍ ÁEODÁGÉT Í LÁ GÁSEÓA ÉCÁÍ Í ÁEGLÁÍ LAFÍ I ÁEJESÓYÓA Í ÁEGLÁÍ € a court must go on to make an individualized determination of the actual or potential impact of that particular person's or corporation's activities on competition or on interstate commerce.<sup>7</sup>

[****41] It is in this respect that the antitrust laws differ from the FLSA and other regulatory enactments. The present case, however, does not turn on that difference, because it does not raise the issue of whether the actions of the [*210] named defendants had a sufficiently adverse effect on interstate commerce to make out a violation of the antitrust laws; that issue goes to the merits of Copp's claims, and cannot properly be reached at this stage. Instead, the case as now presented raises the threshold issue of whether the named defendants are within the jurisdictional reach of the antitrust laws, and our inquiry on that point does not differ significantly from our inquiry under the FLSA or any other regulatory statute. The FLSA covers employers of employees "engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce"; the Clayton Act and Robinson-Patman Act provisions at issue here cover persons or corporations "engaged in commerce." We have held, in FLSA and Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) cases, that Congress' use of the phrase "engaged in commerce" is sufficiently broad to reach employees engaged in repairing highways or in carrying bolts to be used for bridge [****42] repairs, Overstreet v. North Shore Corp., supra; in light of the purposes of the Clayton Act, I see no reason why the phrase "engaged in commerce" as used in that Act should not be read equally broadly, and should not thereby be deemed sufficient to reach corporations engaged in building highways or in producing and supplying the very materials used in such construction. As the Court of Appeals aptly noted: "Regulation of business practices through the antitrust laws . . . may justifiably reach further than some other types of regulation because the antitrust laws are concerned directly with aiding the flow of commerce." 487 F.2d 202, 204 \(1973\).

[**396] II

An alternative ground for affirming the judgment below, likewise rejected by the majority, is that the Clayton Act's "engaged in commerce" jurisdictional language is sufficiently broad to encompass corporations which are [*211] not in the flow of commerce itself but which, through their activities, affect commerce. For the reasons stated in the introductory portion of this opinion, I, for one, am persuaded that Clayton Act §§ 3 and 7 are as broad as the Sherman Act in this respect. [****43] The majority expressly disclaims any intent to resolve that issue on the ground that Copp has failed to produce any "proof" of such effects, and [**407] is therefore not entitled to continue this suit even under a broad reading of the jurisdictional phrase; in my view, the burden of proof which the Court thereby imposes upon Copp is one which may not properly be imposed at this stage of the litigation.

The complaint alleges the acquisition by Gulf of named companies with the purpose and effect of creating a monopoly under the Sherman Act and likewise substantially lessening competition and creating a monopoly in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. Like allegations are made respecting certain acquisitions of Union Oil. Allegations are made that the petitioners divide the geographic areas of competition for the purpose of eliminating competition. The petitioners are alleged to indulge in tie-in practices, whereby base rock material would be sold substantially more cheaply to contractors who buy their asphaltic concrete from the named petitioners. The complaint alleges that the petitioners have maintained high prices in areas where there is no competition and that where competition [****44] exists, they sell their products at artificially low prices -- below cost -- and that that is the practice of petitioners where they compete with Copp. Thus, violations of the Sherman Act, Clayton Act, and Robinson-Patman Act are alleged.

There has been no trial. The case was disposed of on pleadings and affidavits. The District Judge ordered discovery so that all the parties could "develop the facts bearing upon the question of whether the alleged conspiracy [*212] was one affecting interstate commerce." At the end of the time allotted for discovery, the District Court ruled that "the local activities of the defendants with regard to asphaltic concrete did not have a substantial <sup>7</sup> Of course, in a limited range of Sherman Act cases, this Court has held that certain practices are per se violations of the antitrust laws; that is to say, these practices are conclusively presumed to be illegal without the need for any particularized inquiry into their effects. See generally White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 259-262 \(1963\), and cases collected therein. These cases may be viewed as limited exceptions to the individualized approach described in the text above.

I FJÁMEÐA Í ÆRGGLÁÍ ÁUÐAÐUGA Æ LÁGSEÐA ÆGA Á ÞEÐU LÁFJÍ I ÁMÆÐASÓYÓÐA Í ÞEÐI impact on interstate commerce," and as respects one of the defendants (who is not a party in the case now before us) granted its motion for summary judgment.<sup>8</sup>

[****45] The Court of Appeals speaking [***397] through Judge Alfred T. Goodwin said -- properly, I think:

"Nor can we accept defendants' argument that the plaintiffs must show not only that the parties and sales are 'in' commerce but must show that competition was injured before the court has jurisdiction. This is the result of confusing the substantive with the jurisdictional requirements of the antitrust laws. It is not necessary for a plaintiff to prove his whole case in order to give the courts jurisdiction to hear it." 487 F.2d, at 206.

The allegations and the complaint plainly gave the District Court jurisdiction.<sup>9</sup> [****46] What a trial on the merits might [*213] [*213] [*213] produce no one knows. The District Judge said: "I conclude that the local activities of the defendants with regard to asphaltic concrete did not have a substantial impact on interstate commerce." That could not possibly be said until at least the plaintiffs had offered their proof; yet, as the Court of Appeals said, the plaintiffs need not prove, on a motion that goes to the jurisdiction of the court, the merits of their case in order to obtain an opportunity to try it.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>8</sup> Federal Rule Civ. Proc. 56 "deals with the merits" of a claim and if in favor of the defendant is "in bar and not in abatement," 6 J. Moore, Federal Practice para. 56.03, p. 2051 (2d ed. 1974). Lack of jurisdiction of the court is a matter in abatement and thus is not usually appropriate for a summary judgment, which is not a substitute for a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction. Id., at 2052-2053.

On the general propriety of discovery orders of this sort, see 4 id., para. 26.56 [6]; but "[there] are cases . . . in which the jurisdictional questions are so intertwined with the merits that the court might prefer to reserve judgment on the jurisdiction until after discovery has been completed." Id. at 26-191. See also the discussion in n. 10, infra.

<sup>9</sup> The issue of whether there is subject-matter jurisdiction raises the question whether the complaint, on its face, asserts a nonfrivolous claim "arising under" federal law. Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 199-200 \(1962\); Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 682-683 \(1946\). If such a claim is stated, the District Court is then empowered to assume jurisdiction and to determine whether the claim is good or bad, on the basis of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim or cause of action. Romero v. International Terminal Operating Co., 358 U.S. 354, 359 \(1959\); Montana-Dakota Utilities Co. v. Northwestern Public Service Co., 341 U.S. 246, 249 \(1951\). Such a dismissal is on the merits, not for want of jurisdiction. Bell v. Hood, supra.

<sup>10</sup> It is sometimes said that where the district court's jurisdiction is challenged, that court has the power, either on its own motion or on motion of a party, to inquire into the facts as they exist for purposes of resolving the jurisdictional issue. Land v. Dollar, 330 U.S. 731, 735 n. 4 \(1947\), and cases cited; Local 336, American Federation of Musicians v. Bonatz, 475 F.2d 433, 437 \(CA3 1973\). On the other hand, if the jurisdictional issue is closely intertwined with or dependent on the merits of the case, the preferred procedure is to proceed to a determination of the case on the merits. McBeath v. Inter-American Citizens for Decency Comm., 374 F.2d 359, 362-363 \(CA5\), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 896 \(1967\); Jaconski v. Avisun Corp., 359 F.2d 931, 935-936 \(CA3 1966\).

The cases cited for the proposition that a district court may inquire into jurisdictional facts on a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction are cases in which the jurisdictional issue was whether the plaintiff met the amount-in-controversy requirement. That jurisdictional issue is sufficiently independent of the merits of the claim to warrant independent examination, if challenged. Where the jurisdictional issue is more closely linked to the merits, disposition of the jurisdictional issue on motion becomes inappropriate. Thus in Land v. Dollar, where the complaint alleged that members of the United States Maritime Commission were unlawfully holding shares of Dollar stock under a claim that the stock belonged to the United States, the District Court dismissed on the ground that the suit was against the United States. In affirming a reversal of that dismissal, the Court said: "[Although] as a general rule the District Court would have authority to consider questions of jurisdiction on the basis of affidavits as well as the pleadings, this is the type of case where the question of jurisdiction is dependent on decision of the merits." 330 U.S., at 735. This was true because if the plaintiffs prevailed on either of their theories on the merits (that the Commission was without authority to acquire the shares, or that the contract was simply a pledge of the shares rather than an outright transfer),

[****47]

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 5-7, 111, 119, 142, 143

15 USCS 13\(a\), 14, 18

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 21

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 11-15

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade; Robinson-Patman Act

Annotation References:

Robinson-Patman Act as construed by Supreme Court. 2 L Ed 2d 1737.

Construction, by Supreme Court of the United States, of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), dealing with acquisition by one corporation of stock of another. 14 L Ed 2d 784.

---

End of Document

---

then they would also prevail on the jurisdictional issue. And in the McBeath case, supra, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed a pretrial dismissal of a Sherman Act claim on grounds of lack of jurisdiction (for failure to show an effect on interstate commerce). Relying on Land v. Dollar, it held that the issue of effects on interstate commerce was so intertwined with the merits of the claim that it was error for the District Court to dismiss without giving the plaintiff a full chance to prove his case on the merits.

In cases such as United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn., 347 U.S. 186 (1954); Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219 (1948); and United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218 (1947), this Court has reviewed "interstate commerce" issues in the context of dismissals of antitrust suits prior to trial on the merits. Those dismissals, however, were based, not upon motions for summary judgment or for dismissal for want of jurisdiction, but rather upon motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim. In such cases, of course, the allegations of the complaint must be taken as true. Id., at 224. In the case now before us, the District Court clearly went beyond the face of the complaint and required respondents to produce proof of interstate effects.

Connell Constr. Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued November 19, 1974 ; June 2, 1975

No. 73-1256

Reporter

421 U.S. 616 *; 95 S. Ct. 1830 **; 44 L. Ed. 2d 418 ***; 1975 U.S. LEXIS 17 ****; 77 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P10,873; 1975-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P60,341; 89 L.R.R.M. 2401

CONNELL CONSTRUCTION CO., INC. v. PLUMBERS & STEAMFITTERS LOCAL UNION NO. 100, UNITED ASSOCIATION OF JOURNEYMEN & APPRENTICES OF THE PLUMBING & PIPEFITTING INDUSTRY OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA, AFL-CIO

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

Core Terms

---

subcontracting, secondary, antitrust, anti trust law, subcontractors, contractor, proviso, nonunion, exemption, picketing, organizing, general contractor, employees, sanctions, remedies, mechanical, provisions, construction industry, labor policy, firms, federal labor, boycotts, jobsite, labor union, hot cargo, organizational, campaign, damages, parties, wages

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Employer Violations > Interference With Protected Activities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption > Primacy of Labor Policy

HN1[] Labor, Statutory Exemptions

The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 17 and the Norris-La Guardia Act, 29 U.S.C.S. §§ 104, 105, and 113 declare that labor unions are not combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, and exempt specific union activities, including secondary picketing and boycotts, from the operation of the antitrust laws. They do not exempt concerted action or agreements between unions and nonlabor parties.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN2 Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

A proper accommodation between the congressional policy favoring collective bargaining under the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158, and the congressional policy favoring free competition in business markets requires that some union-employer agreements be accorded a limited nonstatutory exemption from antitrust sanctions. The nonstatutory exemption has its source in the strong labor policy favoring the association of employees to eliminate competition over wages and working conditions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

HN3 Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

Labor policy requires tolerance for the lessening of business competition based on differences in wages and working conditions. Labor policy clearly does not require, however, that a union have freedom to impose direct restraints on competition among those who employ its members. Thus, while the statutory exemption allows unions to accomplish some restraints by acting unilaterally, the nonstatutory exemption offers no similar protection when a union and a nonlabor party agree to restrain competition in a business market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN4 Jurisdiction, Exclusive Jurisdiction

The federal courts may decide labor law questions that emerge as collateral issues in suits brought under independent federal remedies, including the antitrust laws.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN5 Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Unfair Labor Practices

See 29 U.S.C.S. § 158.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

HN6 Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Federal Preemption

Federal law pre-empts state remedies that interfere with federal labor policy or with specific provisions of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The defendant building trades union supported its efforts to organize mechanical subcontractors by picketing, among others, the plaintiff general building contractor. The union's sole objective was to compel the general contractors to agree that in letting subcontracts for mechanical work they would deal only with firms that were parties to the union's current collective-bargaining agreement. The union disclaimed any interest in representing the general contractors' employees. The plaintiff contractor filed suit in a Texas state court to enjoin the picketing as a violation of the state antitrust laws and the union removed the case to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas. The contractor then signed the subcontracting agreement under protest and amended its complaint to claim that the agreement violated 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1, 2) and was therefore invalid. The contractor sought a declaration to this effect and an injunction against any further efforts to force it to sign such an agreement. The District Court held that the subcontracting agreement was exempt from federal antitrust laws and that federal labor legislation pre-empted the state's antitrust laws (78 LRRM 3012). The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit affirmed (483 F2d 1154).

On certiorari the United States Supreme Court affirmed the ruling on state law pre-emption and reversed on the question of federal antitrust immunity. In an opinion by Powell, J., expressing the view of five members of the court it was held that (1) the agreement was not exempt from the federal antitrust laws and may be the basis of a federal antitrust suit, and (2) the case should be remanded for consideration of the question, not decided by the courts below and not briefed nor fully argued in the Supreme Court, whether the agreement violated the Sherman Act.

Stewart, J., also joined by Brennan and Marshall, JJ., dissented on the ground that Congress did not intend to impose antitrust sanctions for the union's secondary boycott activities.

While joining the dissenting opinion of Stewart, J., Douglas, J., emphasized that the union's conduct was regulated exclusively by federal labor laws, since the plaintiff contractor based its complaint on the ground that the union coerced it into signing the subcontracting agreement.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §46 > union agreement with building contractor -- ceasing doing business with nonunion subcontractors -- applicability of federal antitrust laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]

An agreement, obtained by a building trades union from a general building contractor by picketing the contractor, under which the contractor would subcontract mechanical work at the construction site only to firms that have a current collective bargaining contract with the union is not exempt from the federal antitrust laws and may be the basis of a federal antitrust suit by the contractor where (1) the union used direct restraints on the business market to support its campaign for organizing mechanical subcontractors and the agreements with the contractor and other general contractors indiscriminately excluded nonunion subcontractors from a portion of the market, even if their competitive advantages were not derived from substandard wages and working conditions but rather from more efficient operating methods; (2) the "most favored nation" clause in a multiemployer bargaining agreement between the union and a mechanical contractor association promised to eliminate competition between association members and any other subcontractor that the union might organize, and in that portion of the market, the restriction on subcontracting would eliminate competition on all subjects covered by the multiemployer agreement, even on subjects unrelated to wages, hours, and working conditions; (3) success in exacting agreements from general contractors would also give the union power to control access to the market for mechanical subcontracting work, enabling the union to create a geographical enclave for local contractors; (4) the union had no interest in representing the contractor and hence the federal policy favoring collective bargaining can offer no shelter for the union's coercive action against the contractor or its campaign to exclude nonunion firms from the subcontracting market; and (5) the agreement between the union and the contractor was outside the context of a collective-bargaining relationship and not restricted to a particular jobsite, but nonetheless obligated the contractor to subcontract work only to firms that have a contract with the union, the agreement between the union and the contractor having a potential for restraining competition in the business market in ways that would not follow naturally from elimination of competition over wages and working conditions.

MONOPOLIES §46 > labor unions -- combinations with nonlabor parties -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Sections 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 17, 29 USCS 52) and the Norris-LaGuardia Act (29 USCS 104, 105, 113), which statutes declare that labor unions are not combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, and exempt specific union activities, including secondary picketing and boycotts, from the operation of the antitrust laws, do not exempt concerted action or agreements between unions and nonlabor parties.

MONOPOLIES §46 > labor unions -- nonstatutory exemption -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

A proper accommodation between the congressional policy favoring collective bargaining under the National Labor Relations Act (29 USCS 151 et seq.) and the congressional policy favoring free competition in business markets requires that some union-employer agreements be accorded a limited nonstatutory exemption from antitrust sanctions.

MONOPOLIES §46 > labor unions -- scope of exemptions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

While labor policy requires tolerance for the lessening of business competition based on differences in wages and working conditions, the policy does not require that a union have freedom to impose direct restraints on competition among those who employ its members.

MONOPOLIES §46 > labor unions -- scope of statutory and nonstatutory exemptions -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

While organized labor's statutory exemption from the antitrust laws (15 USCS 17, 29 USCS 52) allows unions to accomplish some restraints by acting unilaterally, the nonstatutory exemption offers no similar protection when a union and a nonlabor party agree to restrain competition in a business market.

MONOPOLIES §46 > federal labor policy -- curtailment of competition -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Curtailment of competition based on efficiency is neither a goal of federal labor policy nor a necessary effect of the elimination of competition among workers.

MONOPOLIES §5 > federal legislation -- aim -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Competition based on efficiency is a positive value that the antitrust laws strive to protect.

MONOPOLIES §46 > building trades union -- organizing subcontractors -- illegality of means -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

The fact that a building trade union's goal to organize as many subcontractors as possible is legal even though a successful organizing campaign ultimately would reduce the competition that unionized employers face from nonunion firms, does not render the methods of the union chosen to accomplish this goal immune from antitrust actions where the union, by agreement with several contractors, made nonunion subcontractors ineligible to compete for a portion of the available work, and this kind of direct restraint on the business market has substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential, that would not follow naturally from the elimination of competition over wages and working conditions; the union's method contravenes antitrust policies to a degree not justified by congressional labor policy, and therefore cannot claim a nonstatutory exemption from the antitrust law.

COURTS §278.5 > federal -- power -- labor law questions -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

Federal courts may decide labor law questions that emerge as collateral issues in suits brought under independent federal remedies, including the antitrust laws.

421 U.S. 616, *616; 95 S. Ct. 1830, **1830; 44 L. Ed. 2d 418, ***418; 1975 U.S. LEXIS 17, ****1

LABOR §116 > MONOPOLIES §46 > NLRA -- construction industry proviso -- scope -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B] [LEdHN\[10C\]](#) [10C]

The construction industry proviso to 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act (29 USCS 158\(e\)) that nothing in subsection (e), dealing with unfair labor practices of labor organizations, shall apply to an agreement between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting of work to be done at the site of the construction, does not allow an agreement, not exempt from the federal antitrust laws, between a building trades union and a building contractor that the contractor would subcontract mechanical work at the construction site only to firms that have a current collective bargaining contract with the union; the construction industry proviso does not authorize subcontracting agreements with "stranger" contractors, not limited to any particular jobsite, and its authorization extends only to agreements in the context of collective-bargaining relationship and possibly to common-situs relationships on particular jobsites as well.

LABOR §47 > NLRA -- construction industry proviso -- interpretation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

The construction industry proviso to 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act (29 USCS 158\(e\)) that nothing in subsection (e), dealing with unfair labor practices of labor organizations, shall apply to an agreement between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting of works to be done at the site of the construction, must be interpreted in the light of the statutory setting and the circumstances surrounding its enactment.

STATUTES §167.5 > interpretation -- literal meaning -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

A thing may be within the letter of the statute and yet not within the statute, because not within its spirit, nor within the intention of its makers.

STATES §38 > union agreement subject to federal antitrust laws -- inapplicability of state antitrust laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

Although subject to federal antitrust laws, an agreement between a building trades union and a general building contractor under which the contractor would subcontract mechanical work at the construction site only to firms that have a current collective bargaining contract with the union is not subject to state antitrust laws.

COMMERCE §129 > labor -- federal law -- pre-empting state law -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Federal law pre-empts state remedies that interfere with federal labor policy or with specific provisions of the National Labor Relations Act (29 USCS 151 et seq.); the use of state antitrust law to regulate union activities in aid of organization must also be pre-empted because it creates a substantial risk of conflict with policies central to federal labor law.

LABOR §48 > pre-emption of state laws -- remedies -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15A\]](#) [15A] [LEdHN\[15B\]](#) [15B]

While in most cases a decision that state law is pre-empted by federal labor law leaves the parties with recourse only to the federal labor law as enforced by the National Labor Relations Board, in cases where there is an independent federal remedy that is consistent with the National Labor Relations Act (29 USCS 151 et seq.), such as an antitrust suit, the parties may have a choice of federal remedies.

STATES §38 > union organizational activities -- federal or state law -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

Because employee organization is central to federal labor policy and regulations of organizational procedures is comprehensive, federal law does not admit the use of state antitrust laws to regulate union activity that is closely related to organizational goals; while other agreements between unions and nonlabor parties may yet be subject to state antitrust laws, the governing factor is the risk of conflict with the National Labor Relations Act (50 USCS 151 et seq.) or with federal labor policy.

ERROR §1088 > remand -- question not decided below nor briefed and argued in Supreme Court -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

The United States Supreme Court will remand a case for consideration of the question whether the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1, 2) is violated by an agreement between a building trades union and a general building contractor under which the contractor would subcontract mechanical work at the construction site only to firms that have a current collective bargaining contract with the union, where this question was decided neither by the United States District Court nor by the Court of Appeals and where the issue was not briefed and argued fully in the Supreme Court.

Syllabus

---

Respondent union, representing the plumbing and mechanical trades in Dallas, was a party to a multiemployer collective-bargaining agreement with a mechanical contractors association. The agreement contained a "most favored nation" clause, by which the union agreed that if it granted a more favorable contract to any other employer it would extend the same terms to all association members. Respondent picketed petitioner, a general building contractor which subcontracted all plumbing and mechanical work and had no employees respondent wished to represent, to secure a contract whereby petitioner agreed to subcontract such work only to firms that had a current contract with respondent. Petitioner signed under protest and, claiming that the agreement violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and state antitrust laws, brought suit against respondent seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. By the time this case went to trial, respondent had secured identical agreements from other general contractors and was selectively picketing those [****2] who resisted. The District Court held (1) that the subcontracting agreement was exempt from federal antitrust laws because it was authorized by the first proviso in § 8 (e) of the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA), which exempts jobsite contracting agreements in the construction industry from the statutory ban on secondary agreements requiring employers to cease doing business with other persons, and (1) that federal labor legislation pre-empted the State's antitrust laws. The Court of Appeals affirmed. Held:

1. Respondent union's agreement with petitioner is not entitled to the nonstatutory exemption from the federal antitrust laws recognized in Meat Cutters v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676, because it imposed direct restraints on competition among subcontractors that would not have resulted from the elimination of competition based on differences in wages and working conditions. Pp. 621-626.

(a) The agreement indiscriminately excluded nonunion subcontractors from a portion of the market, even if their competitive advantages were derived from efficient operating methods rather than substandard wages and working conditions P. 623.

(b) The "most-favored nation" [****3] clause in the multiemployer bargaining agreement, by insuring that no union subcontractor would have a competitive advantage on any matters covered by the agreement, gave respondent's agreements with petitioner and other general contractors the effect of creating a sheltered market for union subcontractors in that portion of the subcontracting market controlled by signatory general contractors. Pp. 623-624.

(c) Since the agreement did not simply prohibit subcontracting to any nonunion firm but to any firm that did not have a contract with respondent, it gave the union complete control over subcontract work offered by general contractors that had signed the agreement and empowered the union to exclude certain subcontractors from that portion of the market by refusing to deal with them. Pp. 624-625.

2. The first proviso to § 8 (e) of the NLRA does not shelter the challenged agreement from the federal antitrust laws, since that proviso was not intended to authorize subcontracting agreements that are neither within the context of a collective-bargaining relationship nor limited to any particular jobsite. Here respondent, which has never sought to represent petitioner's employees or [****4] bargain with petitioner on their behalf, makes no claim to be protecting those employees from working with nonunion men; the agreement was not limited to any particular jobsite; and respondent concededly sought the agreement solely as a means of pressuring Dallas mechanical subcontractors to recognize it as their employees' representative. Pp. 626-633.

3. There is no indication that Congress in the Taft-Hartley amendments or later meant to make NLRA remedies for "hotcargo" agreements exclusive, thus precluding liability for such agreements under the antitrust acts. Pp. 633-634.

4. The agreement is not subject to the state antitrust laws, the use of which to regulate union activities in aid of union organization would risk substantial conflict with policies central to federal labor law. Pp. 635-637.

. Whether the subcontracting agreement violated the Sherman Act, an issue not fully briefed or argued in this Court, must be decided on remand. P. 637.

483 F.2d 1154, reversed in part, affirmed in part, and remanded.

POWELL, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and WHITE, BLACKMUN, and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined. DOUGLAS, J., filed a dissenting [****5] opinion, post, p. 638. STEWART, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which DOUGLAS, BRENNAN, and MARSHALL, JJ., joined, post, p. 638.

Counsel: Joseph F. Canterbury, Jr., argued the cause and filed briefs for petitioner.

David R. Richards argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent.*

---

*Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed by Gerard C. Smetana, Lawrence D. Ehrlich, Jerry Kronenberg, and Milton Smith for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States; by Vincent J. Apruzzese, Francis A. Mastro, and William L. Keller for

[****6]

Judges: Burger, Douglas, Brennan, Stewart, White, Marshall, Blackmun, Powell, Rehnquist

Opinion by: POWELL

Opinion

---

[*618] [***423] [**1833] MR. JUSTICE POWELL delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A]The building trades union in this case supported its efforts to organize [***424] mechanical subcontractors by picketing certain general contractors, including petitioner. The union's sole objective was to compel the general contractors to agree that in letting subcontracts for mechanical work they would deal only with firms that were [*619] parties to the union's current collective-bargaining agreement. The union disclaimed any interest in representing the general contractors' employees. In this case the picketing succeeded, and petitioner seeks to annul the resulting agreement as an illegal restraint on competition under federal and state law. The union claims immunity from federal antitrust statutes and argues that federal labor regulation pre-empts state law.

|

Local 100 is the bargaining representative for workers in the plumbing and mechanical trades in Dallas. When this litigation began, [***7] it was party to a multiemployer bargaining agreement with the Mechanical Contractors Association of Dallas, a group of about 75 mechanical contractors. That contract contained a "most favored nation" clause, by which the union agreed that if it granted a more favorable contract to any other employer it would extend the same terms to all members of the Association.

Connell Construction Co. is a general building contractor in Dallas. It obtains jobs by competitive bidding and subcontracts all plumbing and mechanical work. Connell has followed a policy of awarding these subcontracts on the basis of competitive bids, and it has done business with both union and nonunion subcontractors. Connell's employees are represented by various building [**1834] trade unions. Local 100 has never sought to represent them or to bargain with Connell on their behalf.

In November 1970, Local 100 asked Connell to agree that it would subcontract mechanical work only to firms that had a current contract with the union. It demanded that Connell sign the following agreement: S

"WHEREAS, the contractor and the union are engaged in the construction industry, and [*620] "WHEREAS, the contractor [***8] and the union desire to make an agreement applying in the event of subcontracting in accordance with Section 8 (e) of the Labor-Management Relations Act;

"WHEREAS, it is understood that by this agreement the contractor does not grant, nor does the union seek, recognition as the collective bargaining representative of any employees of the signatory contractor; and

"WHEREAS, it is further understood that the subcontracting limitation provided herein applies only to mechanical work which the contractor does not perform with his own employees but uniformly subcontracts to other firms; the Associated General Contractors of America et al.; and by Kenneth C. McGuiness and Robert E. Williams for the Air-Conditioning and Refrigeration Institute et al.

---

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed by Solicitor General Bork, Peter G. Nash, John S. Irving, Patrick Hardin, Norton J. Come, and Linda Sher for the National Labor Relations Board, and by J. Albert Woll, Laurence Gold, and Thomas E. Harris for the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations.

"THEREFORE, the contractor and the union mutually agree with respect to work falling within the scope of this agreement that is to be done at the site of construction, alteration, painting or repair of any building, structure, or other works, that [if] the contractor should contract or subcontract [***425] any of the aforesaid work falling within the normal trade jurisdiction of the union, said contractor shall contract or subcontract such work only to firms that are parties to an executed, current collective bargaining agreement with Local Union 100 of the United Association of Journeymen and [****9] Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry."<sup>1</sup>

When Connell refused to sign this agreement, Local 100 stationed a single picket at one of Connell's major construction sites. About 150 workers walked off the job, and construction halted. Connell filed suit in state court to enjoin the picketing as a violation of Texas antitrust laws. Local 100 removed the case to federal court. Connell then signed the subcontracting agreement under protest. It amended its complaint to claim that the [*621] agreement violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, and was therefore invalid. Connell sought a declaration to this effect and an injunction against any further efforts to force it to sign such an agreement.

By the time the case went to trial, Local 100 had submitted identical agreements to a number of other general contractors in Dallas. Five others had signed, and the union was waging a selective picketing campaign against those who resisted.

The District Court held that the subcontracting agreement was exempt from federal antitrust laws because it was authorized by the construction industry proviso to § 8 (e) [****10] of the National Labor Relations Act, 49 Stat. 452, as added, 73 Stat. 543, 29 U.S.C. § 158 (e). The court also held that federal labor legislation pre-empted the State's antitrust laws. 78 L.R.R.M. 3012 (ND Tex. 1971). The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit affirmed, 483 F. 2d 1154 (1973), with one judge dissenting. It held that Local 100's goal of organizing nonunion subcontractors was a legitimate union interest and that its efforts toward that goal were therefore exempt from federal antitrust laws. On the second issue, it held that state law was pre-empted under San Diego Building Trades Council v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236 (1959). We granted certiorari on Connell's petition. 416 U.S. 981 (1974). We reverse on the question of federal antitrust immunity and affirm the ruling on state law pre-emption.

II

LEdHN[2] [↑] [2]LEdHN[3] [↑] [3]The basic sources of organized labor's exemption from federal antitrust [**1835] laws are §§ 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731 and [****11] 738, 15 U.S.C. § 17 and 29 U.S.C. § 52, and the Norris-La Guardia Act, 47 Stat. 70, 71, and 73, 29 U.S.C. §§ 104, 105, and 113. HN1 [↑] These statutes declare [*622] that labor unions are not combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, and exempt specific union activities, including secondary picketing and boycotts, from the operation of the antitrust laws. See United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219 (1941). They do not exempt concerted action or agreements between unions and nonlabor parties. Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 662 (1965). The Court has recognized, however, that HN2 [↑] a proper accommodation between the congressional policy favoring collective bargaining under the NLRA and the congressional [***426] policy favoring free competition in business markets requires that some union-employer agreements be accorded a limited nonstatutory exemption from antitrust sanctions. Meat Cutters v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676 (1965).

[****12] LEdHN[4] [↑] [4]LEdHN[5] [↑] [5]The nonstatutory exemption has its source in the strong labor policy favoring the association of employees to eliminate competition over wages and working conditions. Union success in organizing workers and standardizing wages ultimately will affect price competition among employers, but the goals of federal labor law never could be achieved if this effect on business competition were held a violation of the antitrust laws. The Court therefore has acknowledged that HN3 [↑] labor policy requires tolerance for the lessening of business competition based on differences in wages and working conditions. See Mine Workers v. Pennington, supra, at 666; Jewel Tea, supra, at 692-693 (opinion of WHITE, J.). Labor policy clearly does not require, however, that a union have freedom to impose direct restraints on competition among those who employ its members. Thus, while the statutory exemption allows unions to accomplish some restraints by acting unilaterally, e.g., Federation of Musicians v. Carroll, 391 U.S. 99 \(1968\), [***13] the nonstatutory exemption offers no similar protection when a union and a nonlabor [*623] party agree to restrain competition in a business market. See Allen Bradley Co. v. Electrical Workers, 325 U.S. 797, 806-811 \(1945\); Cox, Labor and the Antitrust Laws - A Preliminary Analysis, 104 U. Pa. L. Rev. 252 (1955); Meltzer, Labor Unions, Collective Bargaining, and the Antitrust Laws, 32 U. Chi. L. Rev. 659 (1965).

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B][LEdHN\[6\]](#) [↑] [6][LEdHN\[7\]](#) [↑] [7]In this case Local 100 used direct restraints on the business market to support its organizing campaign. The agreements with Connell and other general contractors indiscriminately excluded nonunion subcontractors from a portion of the market, even if their competitive advantages were not derived from substandard wages and working conditions but rather from more efficient operating methods. Curtailment of competition based on efficiency is neither a goal of federal labor policy nor a necessary effect [***14] of the elimination of competition among workers. Moreover, competition based on efficiency is a positive value that the antitrust laws strive to protect.

The multiemployer bargaining agreement between Local 100 and the Association, though not challenged in this suit, is relevant in determining the effect that the agreement between Local 100 and Connell would have on the business market. The "most favored nation" clause in the multiemployer agreement promised to eliminate competition between members of the Association and any other subcontractors that Local 100 might organize. By giving members of the Association a contractual right to insist on terms as favorable as those given any competitor, it guaranteed that the union would make no agreement that would give an unaffiliated contractor a competitive advantage over members [***427] of [**1836] the Association.<sup>1</sup> Subcontractors in the Association thus [*624] stood to benefit from any extension of Local 100's organization, but the method Local 100 chose also had the effect of sheltering them from outside competition in that portion of the market covered by subcontracting agreements between general contractors and Local [***15] 100. In that portion of the market, the restriction on subcontracting would eliminate competition on all subjects covered by the mutiemployer agreement, even on subjects unrelated to wages, hours, and working conditions.

Success in exacting [***16] agreements from general contractors would also give Local 100 power to control access to the market for mechanical subcontracting work. The agreements with general contractors did not simply prohibit subcontracting to any nonunion firm; they prohibited subcontracting to any firm that did not have a contract with Local 100. The union thus had complete control over subcontract work offered by general contractors that had signed these agreements. Such control could result in significant adverse effects on the market and on consumers - effects unrelated to the union's legitimate goals of organizing workers and standardizing working conditions. For example, if the union thought the interests of its members would be served by having fewer subcontractors competing for the available work, [*625] it could refuse to sign collective-bargaining agreements with marginal firms. Cf. Mine Workers v. Pennington, supra. Or, since Local 100 has a well-defined geographical jurisdiction, it could exclude "traveling" subcontractors by refusing to deal with them. Local 100 thus might be able to create a geographical enclave for local contractors, similar to the closed market in Allen Bradley, supra.

<sup>1</sup> The primary effect of the agreement seems to have been to inhibit the union from offering any other employer a more favorable contract. When asked at trial whether another subcontractor could get an agreement on any different terms, Local 100's business agent answered:

"No. The agreement says that no one will be given a more favorable agreement. I couldn't, if I desired, as an agent, sign an agreement other than the ones in existence between the local contractors and the Local 100.

.....

"Q. I see. So that's - in other words, once you sign that contract with the Mechanical Contractors' Association, that sets the only type of agreement which your Union can enter into with any other mechanical contractors; is that correct, sir?

"A. That is true." Tr. 45-46.

[****17] [LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8] This record contains no evidence that the union's goal was anything other than organizing as many subcontractors as possible.<sup>2</sup> This goal was legal, even though a successful organizing campaign ultimately would reduce the competition that unionized employers face from nonunion firms. But the methods the union chose are not immune from antitrust sanctions simply because the goal is legal. Here Local 100, by agreement with several contractors, made nonunion subcontractors ineligible [***428] to compete for a portion of the available work. This kind of direct restraint on the business market has substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential, that would not follow naturally from the elimination of competition over wages and working conditions. It contravenes antitrust policies to a degree not justified by congressional labor policy, and therefore cannot claim a nonstatutory exemption from the antitrust laws.

[****18] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] There can be no argument in this case, whatever its force in other contexts, that a restraint of this magnitude [*626] might be entitled to an antitrust exemption [**1837] if it were included in a lawful collective-bargaining agreement. Cf. Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S., at 664-665; Jewel Tea, 381 U.S., at 689-690 (opinion of WHITE, J.); id., at 709-713, 732-733 (opinion of Goldberg, J.). In this case, Local 100 had no interest in representing Connell's employees. The federal policy favoring collective bargaining therefore can offer no shelter for the union's coercive action against Connell or its campaign to exclude nonunion firms from the subcontracting market.

III

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9] [LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] Local 100 nonetheless contends that the kind of agreement it obtained from Connell is explicitly allowed by the construction-industry proviso to § 8(e) and that antitrust policy therefore must defer to the NLRA. The [****19] majority in the Court of Appeals declined to decide this issue, holding that it was subject to the "exclusive jurisdiction" of the NLRB. 483 F. 2d, at 1174. This Court has held, however, that HN4 [↑] the federal courts may decide labor law questions that emerge as collateral issues in suits brought under independent federal remedies, including the antitrust laws.<sup>3</sup> We conclude that § 8 (e) does not allow this type of agreement.

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11] [LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12] Local 100's argument is straightforward: [****20] the first proviso to § 8 (e) allows "an agreement between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting of work to be done at the site of the construction, alteration, painting, or repair of a building, structure, or other [*627] work."<sup>4</sup> Local [***429] 100 is a labor organization, Connell is an employer in <sup>2</sup> There was no evidence that Local 100's organizing campaign was connected with any agreement with members of the multiemployer bargaining unit, and the only evidence of agreement among those subcontractors was the "most favored nation" clause in the collective-bargaining agreement. In fact, Connell has not argued the case on a theory of conspiracy between the union and unionized subcontractors. It has simply relied on the multiemployer agreement as a factor enhancing the restraint of trade implicit in the subcontracting agreement it signed.

<sup>3</sup> Meat Cutters v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676, 684-688 (1965) (opinion of WHITE, J.); id., at 710 n. 18 (opinion of Goldberg, J.); cf. Vaca v. Sipes, 386 U.S. 171, 176-188 (1967); Smith v. Evening News Assn., 371 U.S. 195 (1962).

<sup>4</sup> Section 8 (e) provides:

HN5 [↑] "It shall be an unfair labor practice for any labor organization and any employer to enter into any contract or agreement, express or implied, whereby such employer ceases or refrains or agrees to cease or refrain from handling, using, selling, transporting or otherwise dealing in any of the products of any other employer, or to cease doing business with any other person, and any contract or agreement entered into heretofore or hereafter containing such an agreement shall be to such extent unenforceable and void: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall apply to an agreement between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting of work to be done at the site of the the construction industry, and the agreement covers only work "to be done at the site of construction, alteration, painting or repair of any building, structure, or other works." Therefore, Local 100 says, the agreement comes within the proviso. Connell responds by arguing that despite the unqualified language of the proviso, Congress intended only to allow subcontracting agreements within the context of a collective-bargaining relationship; that is, Congress did not intend to permit a union to approach a "stranger" contractor and obtain a binding agreement not to deal with nonunion [*628] subcontractors. On its face, the proviso suggests no such limitation. This Court has held, however, that § 8 (e) must [****21] be interpreted in [**1838] light of the statutory setting and the circumstances surrounding its enactment: S

"It is a 'familiar rule, that a thing may be within the letter of the statute and yet not within the statute, because not within its spirit, nor within the intention of its makers. Holy Trinity Church v. United States, 143 U.S. 457, 459." National Woodwork Mfrs. Assn. v. NLRB, 386 U.S. 612, 619 \(1967\).l

[****22] Section 8 (e) was part of a legislative program designed to plug technical loopholes in § 8 (b)(4)'s general prohibition of secondary activities. In § 8 (e) Congress broadly proscribed using contractual agreements to achieve the economic coercion prohibited by § 8 (b)(4). See National Woodwork Mfrs. Assn., supra, at 634. The provisos exempting the construction and garment industries were added by the Conference Committee in an apparent compromise between the House bill, which prohibited all "hot cargo" agreements, and the Senate bill, which prohibited them only in the trucking industry.<sup>5</sup> [****24] Although the garment-industry proviso was supported by detailed explanations in both Houses,<sup>6</sup> the construction-industry proviso was explained only by bare references to "the pattern of collective [*629] bargaining" in the industry.<sup>7</sup> It seems, however, to have been adopted as a partial substitute for an attempt to overrule this Court's decision in NLRB v. Denver Building & Construction Trades Council, 341 U.S. 675 \(1951\) [***430]<sup>8</sup> [****25] Discussion of "special problems" in the construction industry, construction, alteration, painting, or repair of a building, structure, or other work: Provided further, That for the purposes of this subsection and subsection (b)[(4)(B)] of this section the terms 'any employer,' 'any person engaged in commerce or an industry affecting commerce,' and 'any person' when used in relation to the terms 'any other producer, processor, or manufacturer,' 'any other employer,' or 'any other person' shall not include persons in the relation of a jobber, manufacturer, contractor, or subcontractor working on the goods or premises of the jobber or manufacturer or performing parts of an integrated process of production in the apparel and clothing industry: Provided further, That nothing in this subchapter shall prohibit the enforcement of any agreement which is within the foregoing exception." 29 U.S.C. § 158 \(e\).

<sup>5</sup> See H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 1147, 86th Cong., 1st Sess., 39-40 (1959).

<sup>6</sup> 105 Cong. Rec. 17327 (1959) (remarks by Sen. Kennedy); id., at 17381 (remarks by Sens. Javits and Goldwater); id., at 15539 (memorandum by Reps. Thompson and Udall); id., at 16590 (memorandum by Sen. Kennedy and Rep. Thompson). These debates are reproduced in 2 NLRB, Legislative History of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, pp. 1377, 1385, 1576, 1708 (1959) (hereinafter Leg. Hist. of LMRDA).

<sup>7</sup> 105 Cong. Rec. 17899 (1959) (remarks by Sen. Kennedy); id., at 18134 (remarks by Rep. Thompson); 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1432, 1721.

<sup>8</sup> President Eisenhower's message to Congress recommending labor reform legislation urged amendment of the secondary-boycott provisions to permit secondary activity "under certain circumstances, against secondary employers engaged in work at a common construction site with the primary employer." S. Doc. No. 10, 86th Cong., 1st Sess., 3 (1959) (emphasis added). Various bills introduced in both Houses included such provisions, see 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1912-1915, but neither the bill that passed the Senate nor the one that passed the House contained a Denver Building Trades provision. The Conference Committee proposed to include such an amendment to § 8 (b)(4)(B) in the Conference agreement, along with a closely linked construction-industry exemption from § 8 (e). 105 Cong. Rec. 17333 (1959) (proposed Senate resolution), 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1383. But a parliamentary obstacle killed the § 8 (b)(4)(B) amendment, and only the § 8 (e) proviso survived. See 150 Cong. Rec. 17728-17729, 17901-17903, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1397-1398, 1434-1436. References to the proviso suggest that the Committee may have intended the § 8 (e) proviso simply to preserve the status quo under Carpenters' v. NLRB \(Sand Door\), 357 U.S. 93 \(1958\), pending action on the Denver Building Trades problem in the following session. See H.R. Rep. No. 1147, supra, n. 5, at 39-40; 105 Cong. Rec. 17900 (1959) (report of Sen. Kennedy on Conference agreement), 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1433. Although Senator Kennedy introduced a bill to amend § 8 (b)(4), S. 2643, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. (1959), it was never reported out of committee.

applicable to both the § 8 (e) proviso and the attempt to [****23] overrule Denver Building Trades, focused on the problems of picketing a single nonunion subcontractor on a multiemployer building project, and the close relationship between contractors and subcontractors [*630] at the jobsite.<sup>9</sup> Congress [**1839] limited the construction-industry proviso to that single situation, allowing subcontracting agreements only in relation to work done on a jobsite. In contrast to the latitude it provided in the garment-industry proviso, Congress did not afford construction unions an exemption from § 8 (b)(4)(B) or otherwise indicate that they were free to use subcontracting agreements as a broad organizational weapon. In keeping with these limitations, the Court has interpreted the construction-industry proviso as S

"a measure designed to allow agreements pertaining to certain secondary activities on the construction site because of the close community of interests there, but to ban secondary-objective agreements concerning nonjobsite work, in which respect the construction industry is no different from any other." National Woodwork Mfrs. Assn., 386 U.S., at 638-639 (footnote omitted).I

Other courts have suggested that it serves an even narrower function:

"[T]he purpose of the section 8 (e) proviso was to alleviate the frictions that may arise when union men work continuously alongside nonunion men on the same construction site." Drivers Local 695 v. NLRB, 124 U.S. App. D.C. 93, 99, 361 F. 2d 547, 553 \(1966\).

See also Denver Building Trades, 341 U.S., at 692-693 (DOUGLAS, J., dissenting); [Essex County & Vicinity \[\*631\] District Council of Carpenters v. NLRB, 332 F. 2d 636, 640 \(CA3 1964\)](#).

[***431] Local 100 does not suggest that its subcontracting agreement is related to any of these policies. It does not claim to be protecting Connell's employees from having to work alongside nonunion men. [***26] The agreement apparently was not designed to protect Local 100's members in that regard, since it was not limited to jobsites on which they were working. Moreover, the subcontracting restriction applied only to the work Local 100's members would perform themselves and allowed free subcontracting of all other work, thus leaving open a possibility that they would be employed alongside nonunion subcontractors. Nor was Local 100 trying to organize a nonunion subcontractor on the building project it picketed. The union admits that it sought the agreement solely as a way of pressuring mechanical subcontractors in the Dallas area to recognize it as the representative of their employees.

[LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [↑] [10B]If we agreed with Local 100 that the construction-industry proviso authorizes subcontracting agreements with "stranger" contractors, not limited to any particular jobsite, our ruling would give construction unions an almost unlimited organizational weapon.<sup>10</sup> The unions [*632] would be free to enlist any general contractor to bring economic pressure on nonunion subcontractors, as long as the [**1840] agreement [***27] recited that it only covered work to be performed on some jobsite somewhere. The proviso's jobsite restriction then would serve only to prohibit agreements relating to subcontractors that deliver their work complete to the jobsite.

<sup>9</sup> See 105 Cong. Rec. 17881 (1959) (remarks by Sen. Morse); id., at 15541 (memorandum by Reps. Thompson and Udall); id., at 15551-15552 (memorandum by Sen. Elliott); id., at 15852 (remarks by Rep. Goodell); See also id., at 20004-20005 (post-legislative remarks by Rep. Kearns); 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1425, 1577, 1588, 1684, and 1861.

<sup>10</sup> Local 100 contends, unsoundly we think, that the NLRB has decided this issue in its favor. It cites Los Angeles Building & Construction Trades Council \(B & J Investment Co.\), 214 N.L.R.B. No. 86, 87 L.R.R.M. 1424 \(1974\), and a memorandum from the General Counsel explaining his decision not to file unfair labor practice charges in a similar case, Plumbers Local 100 (Hagler Construction Co.), No. 16-CC-447 (May 1, 1974). In B & J Investment the Board approved, without comment, an administrative law judge's conclusion that the § 8 (e) proviso authorized a subcontracting agreement between the Council and a general contractor who used none of his own employees in the particular construction project. The agreement in question may have been a prehire contract under § 8 (f), and it is not clear that the contractor argued that it was invalid for lack of a collective-bargaining relationship. The General Counsel's memorandum in Hagler Construction is plainly addressed to a different argument - that a subcontracting clause should be allowed only if there is a pre-existing collective-bargaining relationship with the general contractor or if the general contractor has employees who perform the kind of work covered by the agreement.

[****28] It is highly improbable that Congress intended such a result. One of the major aims of the 1959 Act was to limit "top-down" organizing campaigns, in which unions used economic weapons to force recognition from an employer regardless of the wishes of his employees.<sup>11</sup> [****29] Congress accomplished this goal by enacting § 8(b)(7), which restricts primary recognitional picketing, and by further tightening § 8(b)(4)(B), which prohibits the use of most secondary tactics in organizational campaigns. Construction unions are fully covered by these sections. The only special consideration given them in organizational campaigns is § 8(f), which allows "prehire" agreements in the construction industry, but only under [***432] careful safeguards preserving workers' rights to decline union representation. The legislative history accompanying § 8(f) also suggests that Congress may not [*633] have intended that strikes or picketing could be used to extract prehire agreements from unwilling employers.<sup>12</sup>

[LEdHN\[10C\]](#) [↑] [10C] These careful limits on the economic pressure unions may use in aid of their organizational campaigns would be undermined seriously if the proviso to § 8(e) were construed to allow unions to seek subcontracting agreements, at large, from any general contractor vulnerable to picketing. Absent a clear indication that Congress intended to leave such a glaring loophole in its restrictions on "top-down" organizing, we are unwilling to read the construction industry proviso as broadly as Local 100 suggests.<sup>13</sup> Instead, we think its authorization extends only to agreements in the context of collective-bargaining relationships and, in light of congressional [***30] references to the Denver Building Trades problem, possibly to common-situs relationships on particular jobsites as well.<sup>14</sup>

[***31] Finally, Local 100 contends that even if the subcontracting agreement is not sanctioned by the construction- [*634] industry proviso and therefore is illegal under § 8(e), it cannot be the basis for antitrust liability because the remedies in the NLRA are exclusive. This argument is grounded in the legislative history of the 1947 Taft-Hartley amendments. Congress rejected attempts to regulate secondary activities by repealing the antitrust exemptions in the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia Acts, and created special remedies under the labor law instead.<sup>15</sup> It made secondary activities [**1841] unfair labor practices under § 8(b)(4), and drafted special provisions for preliminary injunctions at the suit of the NLRB and for recovery of actual damages in the district courts. § 10(l) of the NLRA, 49 Stat. 453, as added, 61 Stat. 149, as amended, 29 U.S.C. § 160 (l), and § 303 of the Labor Management Relations Act, 61 Stat. 158, as amended, 29 U.S.C. § 187. But whatever significance this legislative choice has for antitrust suits based on those secondary activities prohibited by § 8(b)(4), it has no relevance to the question [***32] whether Congress meant to preclude antitrust suits based on the "hot cargo" agreements that it outlawed in 1959. There is no legislative [***433] history in the 1959 Congress suggesting that labor-law remedies

<sup>11</sup> 105 Cong. Rec. 6428-6429 (1959) (remarks of Sen. Goldwater); id., at 6648-6649 (remarks of Sen. McClellan); id., at 6664-6665 (remarks of Sen. Goldwater); id., at 14348 (memorandum of Rep. Griffin); 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1079, 1175-1176, 1191-1192, 1523.

<sup>12</sup> H.R. Rep. No. 1147, supra, n. 5, at 42; 105 Cong. Rec. 10104 (1959) (memorandum of Sen. Goldwater); id., at 18128 (remarks by Rep. Barden); 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1289, 1715. The NLRB has taken this view. Operating Engineers Local 542, 142 N.L.R.B. 1132 (1963), enforced, 331 F. 2d 99 (CA3), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 889 (1964).

<sup>13</sup> As noted above, supra, at 628-630, the garment-industry proviso reflects different considerations. The text of the proviso and the treatment in congressional debates and reports suggest that Congress intended to authorize garment workers' unions to continue using subcontracting agreements as an organizational weapon. See Danielson v. Joint Board, 494 F. 2d 1230 (CA2 1974) (Friendly, J.).

<sup>14</sup> Connell also has argued that the subcontracting agreement was subject to antitrust sanctions because the construction-industry proviso authorizes only voluntary agreements. The foundation of this argument is a contention that § 8(b)(4)(B) forbids picketing to secure an otherwise lawful "hot cargo" agreement in the construction industry. Because we hold that the agreement in this case is outside the § 8(e) proviso, it is unnecessary to consider this alternative contention.

<sup>15</sup> See H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 510, 80th Cong., 1st Sess., (House Managers' statement), 65-67 (1947); 93 Cong. Rec. 4757, 4770, 4834-4874 (1947) (debates over Sen. Ball's proposal for antitrust sanctions and Sen. Taft's compromise proposal for actual damages, which became § 303 of the NLRA).

for § 8(e) violations were intended to be exclusive, or that Congress thought allowing antitrust remedies in cases like the present one would be inconsistent with the remedial scheme of the NLRA.<sup>16</sup>

[****33] [*635] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] We therefore hold that this agreement, which is outside the context of a collective-bargaining relationship and not restricted to a particular jobsite, but which nonetheless obligates Connell to subcontract work only to firms that have a contract with Local 100, may be the basis of a federal antitrust suit because it has a potential for restraining competition in the business market in ways that would not follow naturally from elimination of competition over wages and working conditions.

IV

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13] [LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14] [LEdHN\[15A\]](#) [15A] Although we hold that the union's agreement with Connell is subject to the federal antitrust laws, it does not follow that state antitrust law may apply as well. The Court has held repeatedly that HN6 federal law pre-empts state remedies that interfere with federal labor [****34] policy or with specific provisions of the NLRA. E.g., Motor Coach Employees v. Lockridge, 403 U.S. 274 \(1971\); Teamsters v. Morton, 377 U.S. 252 \(1964\); Teamsters v. Oliver, 358 U.S. 283 \(1959\).<sup>17</sup> The use of state antitrust law to [*636] regulate union activities in aid of organization must also be pre-empted because it creates a substantial risk of conflict with policies central to federal labor law.

[LEdHN\[15B\]](#) [15B] [15B]

[****35] In [**1842] this area, the accommodation between federal labor and antitrust policy is delicate. Congress and this Court have carefully tailored the antitrust statutes to avoid conflict with the labor policy favoring lawful [***434] employee organization, not only by delineating exemptions from antitrust coverage but also by adjusting the scope of the antitrust remedies themselves. See Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469 \(1940\). State antitrust laws generally have not been subjected to this process of accommodation. If they take account of labor goals at all, they may represent a totally different balance between labor and antitrust policies.<sup>18</sup> Permitting state

---

<sup>16</sup> The dissenting opinion of MR. JUSTICE STEWART argues that § 303 provides the exclusive remedy for violations of § 8(e), thereby precluding recourse to antitrust remedies. For that proposition the dissenting opinion relies upon "considerable evidence in the legislative materials." Post, at 650. In our view, these materials are unpersuasive. In the first place, Congress did not amend § 303 expressly to provide a remedy for violations of § 8(e). See Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, §§ 704(d), (e), 73 Stat. 544-545. The House in 1959 did reject proposals by Representatives Hiestand, Alger, and Hoffman to repeal labor's antitrust immunity. Post, at 650-654. Those proposals, however, were much broader than the issue in this case. The Hiestand-Alger proposal would have repealed antitrust immunity for any action in concert by two or more labor organizations. The Hoffman proposal apparently intended to repeal labor's antitrust immunity entirely. That the Congress rejected these extravagant proposals hardly furnishes proof that it intended to extend labor's antitrust immunity to include agreements with nonlabor parties, or that it thought antitrust liability under the existing statutes would be inconsistent with the NLRA. The bill introduced by Senator McClellan two years later provides even less support for that proposition. Like most bills introduced in Congress, it never reached a vote.

<sup>17</sup> In most cases a decision that state law is pre-empted leaves the parties with recourse only to the federal labor law, as enforced by the NLRB. See Motor Coach Employees v. Lockridge, 403 U.S. 274 \(1971\); San Diego Building Trades Council v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236 \(1959\). But in cases like this one, where there is an independent federal remedy that is consistent with the NLRA, the parties may have a choice of federal remedies. Cf. Vaca v. Sipes, 386 U.S. 171, 176-188 \(1967\); Smith v. Evening News Assn., 371 U.S. 195 \(1962\).

<sup>18</sup> Texas law is a good example. Texas Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann., Arts. 5152 and 5153 (1971), declare that it is lawful for workers to associate in unions and to induce other persons to accept or reject employment. Article 5154, however, referring to the preceding articles, provides: "Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal, affect or diminish the force and effect of any statute now existing on the subject of trusts, conspiracies against trade, pools and monopolies." The Texas antitrust statutes prohibit, among other specified agreements, trusts, and monopolies, any combination of two or more persons to restrict "the free pursuit of a lawful business." Tex. Bus. & Comm. Code §§ 15.02-15.04 (1968).

antitrust law to operate in this field could frustrate the basic federal policies favoring employee organization and allowing elimination of competition among wage earners, and interfere with the detailed system Congress has created for regulating organizational techniques.

[****36] [*637] [LEdHN\[16\]](#) [↑] [16]Because employee organization is central to federal labor policy and regulation of organizational procedures is comprehensive, federal law does not admit the use of state antitrust law to regulate union activity that is closely related to organizational goals. Of course, other agreements between unions and nonlabor parties may yet be subject to state antitrust laws. See Teamsters v. Oliver, supra, at 295-297. The governing factor is the risk of conflict with the NLRA or with federal labor policy.

V

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [↑] [17]Neither the District Court nor the Court of Appeals decided whether the agreement between Local 100 and Connell, if subject to the antitrust laws, would constitute an agreement that restrains trade within the meaning of the Sherman Act. The issue was not briefed and argued fully in this Court. Accordingly, we remand for consideration whether the agreement violated the Sherman Act.<sup>19</sup>

[****37] Reversed in part, affirmed in part, and remanded.

Dissent by: DOUGLAS

Dissent

---

[*638] [***435] MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, dissenting.

While I join the opinion of MR. JUSTICE STEWART, I write to emphasize what is, for me, the determinative feature of the case. Throughout this litigation, Connell has maintained only that Local 100 coerced it into signing the subcontracting agreement. With the complaint so drawn, I have no difficulty [**1843] in concluding that the union's conduct is regulated solely by the labor laws. The question of antitrust immunity would be far different, however, if it were alleged that Local 100 had conspired with mechanical subcontractors to force nonunion subcontractors from the market by entering into exclusionary agreements with general contractors like Connell. An arrangement of that character was condemned in Allen Bradley Co. v. Electrical Workers, 325 U.S. 797 \(1945\), which held that Congress did not intend "to immunize labor unions who aid and abet manufacturers and traders in violating the Sherman Act," id., at 810. Were such a conspiracy alleged, the multiemployer bargaining agreement between Local 100 and the mechanical [****38] subcontractors would unquestionably be relevant. See Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 673 \(1965\) (concurring opinion); Meat Cutters v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676, 737 \(1965\) (dissenting opinion). But since Connell has never alleged or attempted to show any conspiracy between <sup>19</sup> In addition to seeking a declaratory judgment that the agreement with Local 100 violated the antitrust laws, Connell sought a permanent injunction against further picketing to coerce execution of the contract in litigation. Connell obtained a temporary restraining order against the picketing on January 21, 1971, and thereafter executed the contract - under protest - with Local 100 on March 28, 1971. So far as the record in this case reveals, there has been no further picketing at Connell's construction sites. Accordingly, there is no occasion for us to consider whether the Norris-LaGuardia Act forbids such an injunction where the specific agreement sought by the union is illegal, or to determine whether, within the meaning of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, there was a "labor dispute" between these parties. If the Norris-LaGuardia Act were applicable to this picketing, injunctive relief would not be available under the antitrust laws. See United States v. Huteson, 312 U.S. 219 \(1941\). If the agreement in question is held on remand to be invalid under federal antitrust laws, we cannot anticipate that Local 100 will resume picketing to obtain or enforce an illegal agreement.

---

Local 100 and the subcontractors, I agree that Connell's remedies, if any, are provided exclusively by the labor laws.

MR. JUSTICE STEWART, with whom MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, and MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL join, dissenting.

As part of its effort to organize mechanical contractors in the Dallas area, the respondent Local Union No. 100 [*639] engaged in peaceful picketing to induce the petitioner Connell Construction Co., a general contractor in the building and construction industry, to agree to subcontract plumbing and mechanical work at the construction site only to firms that had signed a collective-bargaining agreement with Local 100. None of Connell's own employees were members of Local 100, and the subcontracting agreement contained the union's express disavowal of any intent to organize or represent them. The picketing at Connell's construction [****39] site was therefore secondary activity, subject to detailed and comprehensive regulation pursuant to § 8(b)(4) of the National Labor Relations Act, as added, 61 Stat. 141, 29 U.S.C. § 158\(b\)\(4\), and § 303 of the Labor Management Relations Act, 61 Stat. 158, as amended, 29 U.S.C. § 187. Similarly, the subcontracting agreement under which Connell agreed to cease doing business with nonunion mechanical contractors is governed by the provisions of § 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 158\(e\). The relevant legislative history unmistakably demonstrates that in regulating secondary activity and "hot cargo" agreements in 1947 and 1959, Congress selected with great care the sanctions to be imposed if proscribed union activity should occur. In so doing, Congress rejected efforts to give private parties injured by union ***436 activity such as that engaged in by Local 100 the right to seek relief under federal antitrust laws. Accordingly, I would affirm the judgment before us.

I

For a period of 15 years, from passage of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 47 Stat. 70, in 1932 <sup>1</sup> until enactment of [*40] [*640] the Labor Management Relations Act (the Taft-Hartley Act), 61 Stat. 136, in 1947, union economic pressure directed against a neutral, secondary employer was not subject to sanctions under either federal labor law or antitrust law, at least in the absence of proof that the union was coercing the secondary employer ***1844 in furtherance of a conspiracy with a nonlabor group. See United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219; Allen Bradley Co. v. Electrical Workers, 325 U.S. 797. "Congress abolished, for purposes of labor immunity, the distinction between primary activity between the 'immediate disputants' and secondary activity in which the employer disputants and the members of the union do not stand 'in the proximate relation of employer and employee....'" National Woodwork Mfrs. Assn. v. NLRB, 386 U.S. 612, 623.

[****41] In Hunt v. Crumboch, 325 U.S. 821, for example, the Court found that union conduct in forcing a freight carrier out of business was protected activity beyond the reach of the federal antitrust laws even though it involved secondary pressure that culminated in the union's compelling the carrier's principal patron to break its contract with the carrier and to discharge the carrier from further service. "That which Congress has recognized as lawful," the Court noted, "this Court has no constitutional power to declare unlawful, by arguing that Congress has accorded too much power to labor organizations." Id., at 825 n. 1.

Congressional concern over labor abuses of the broad immunity granted by the Norris-LaGuardia Act was one of the considerations that resulted in passage of the Taft- [*641] Hartley Act in 1947, which, among other things, prohibited specified union secondary activity. See National Woodwork Mfrs. Assn. v. NLRB, supra, at 623. The central thrust of that statutory provision was to forbid "a union to induce employees to strike against or to refuse to handle goods for their employer when an object is to force him or another ***42 person to cease doing business with some third party." Carpenters' Union v. NLRB, 357 U.S. 93, 98. <sup>2</sup> In condemning ***437 "specific union conduct directed to specific objectives," ibid., however, Congress deliberately chose not to subject unions engaging in prohibited secondary activity to the sanctions of the antitrust laws.

<sup>1</sup> Before 1932 this Court had held that secondary strikes and boycotts were not exempt from the coverage of the antitrust laws. E.g., Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443; Bedford Cut Stone Co. v. Journeymen Stone Cutters' Assn., 274 U.S. 37. Duplex and its progeny were overruled by Congress with passage of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 47 Stat. 70. See Milk Wagon Drivers' Union v. Lake Valley Farm Products, Inc., 311 U.S. 91, 100-103; United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 229-231, 235-237.

[****43] Section 12(a)(3) of the Hartley bill, H.R. 3020, 80th Cong., 1st Sess., as initially passed by the House, defined "unlawful concerted activities" to include an "illegal boycott." 1 NLRB Legislative History of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, p. 205 (hereinafter Leg. Hist. of LMRA). Section 12(c) provided that the Norris-LaGuardia Act should have no "application in any action or proceeding in a court of the United States involving any activity defined in this section as unlawful." [*642] 1 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 206-207. The Committee on Education and Labor explained in its report on the Hartley bill: S

"Illegal boycotts take many forms.... Sometimes they are direct restraints of trade, designed to compel people against whom they are engaged in to place their business with some other than those they are dealing with at the time.... [§ 12], these practices are called by their correct name, 'unlawful concerted activities.' It is provided that any person injured in his person, property, or business by an unlawful concerted activity affecting commerce may sue the [**1845] person or persons responsible for the injury in any district court having jurisdiction of the parties [****44] and recover damages. The bill makes inapplicable in such suits the Norris-LaGuardia Act, which heretofore has protected parties to industrial strife from the consequences of their lawlessness, no matter how violent their disputes became. Persons who engage in unlawful concerted activities are subject to losing their rights and privileges under the act." H.R. Rep. No. 245, 80th Cong., 1st Sess., 24, 44, 1 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 315, 335.I

The Senate, however, refused to adopt the House's removal of antitrust immunity for prohibited secondary activity, choosing instead to make the remedies available under federal labor law exclusive. The Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare approved S. 1126, 80th Cong., 1st Sess., which provided that proscribed secondary conduct would be an unfair labor practice and could be enjoined on application of the National Labor Relations Board. No private remedy for an injured employer was authorized in the bill approved by the Committee. See S. Rep. No. 105, 80th Cong., 1st Sess., 7-8, 22, 1 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 413-414, 428.

Four members of the Senate Committee, although [*643] supporting the provisions of S. 1126 as reported by the Committee, [****45] felt that a number of the provisions of the bill could be stronger. S. Rep. No. 105, supra, at 50, 1 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 456. In particular, the minority Senators proposed: S

[***438] "An amendment reinserting in the bill a section making secondary boycotts and jurisdictional strikes unlawful and providing for direct suits in the courts by any injured party.

.....
"The amendment proposes that [the injured party] be entitled to file a suit for damages and obtain a temporary injunction while that suit is being heard.

.....
"The amendment, furthermore, removes the protection of the Clayton Act from monopoly agreements to fix prices, allocate customers, restrict production, distribution, or competition, or impose restrictions or conditions on the purchase, sale, or use of material, machines, or equipment. While the existence of the union should not be a combination in restraint of trade, we see no reason why unions should not be subject in this field to the same restriction as are competing employers." S. Rep. No. 105, supra, at 54-55, 1 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 460-461.I

---

<sup>2</sup> The Act added § 8(b)(4) to the National Labor Relations Act, making it an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents "to engage in, or to induce or encourage the employees of any employer to engage in, a strike or a concerted refusal in the course of their employment to use, manufacture, process, transport, or otherwise handle or work on any goods, articles, materials, or commodities or to perform any services, where an object thereof is: (A) forcing or requiring any employer or self-employed person to join any labor or employer organization or any employer or other person to cease using, selling, handling, transporting, or otherwise dealing in the products of any other producer, processor, or manufacturer, or to cease doing business with any other person...." 61 Stat. 141.

Senator Ball, one of the four minority Senators on the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, [****46] did in fact offer an amendment on the Senate floor that was "designed to correct the interpretation of the Norris-LaGuardia and Clayton acts made by the Supreme Court in the Hutchinson [sic] case, and a number of other cases brought by former Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, when he attempted to break up monopolistic practices on [*644] the part of labor unions, sometimes acting on their own, sometimes in conspiracy with employers." 93 Cong. Rec. 4838, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 1354.<sup>3</sup>

[****47] Although stating that he personally agreed with the changes proposed by Senator Ball, Senator Taft argued for defeat of the Ball amendment, explaining that resistance to providing a private injunctive remedy in cases of secondary boycotts was so strong that an [**1846] attempt to eliminate the labor exemption from the antitrust laws would lead to the defeat of any effort to provide for a private damages remedy for injured parties. Senator Taft proposed as a substitute that private parties be given only the right to sue for actual damages. 93 Cong. Rec. at 4843-4844, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 1365. The Ball amendment was thereafter defeated, 93 Cong. Rec. at 4847, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 1369-1370, and Senator Taft introduced his proposal "to restore to people who lose something because of boycotts and jurisdictional strikes the money which they have lost." 93 Cong. Rec. at 4858, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 1370-1371.

In response to Senator Morse's claim that the proposal would impose virtually unlimited liability on unions, Senator Taft made plain that he was not advocating the use of antitrust sanctions against prohibited secondary activity. "Under the Sherman Act the same question of boycott [****48] damage is subject to a suit [***439] for [treble] damages [*645] and attorneys' fees. In this case we simply provide for the amount of the actual damages." 93 Cong. Rec. 4872-4873, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 1398; see Teamsters v. Morton, 377 U.S. 252, 260 n. 16. Senator Taft's proposal for a private damages remedy under federal labor law was adopted by the Senate. 93 Cong. Rec. 4874-4875, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 1399-1400.

In Conference, the House members agreed to eliminate the provisions of the Hartley bill which, like the Ball amendment, provided that the Norris-LaGuardia Act should have no application to private suits for unlawful secondary activity. See H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 510, 80th Cong., 1st Sess. (House Manager's statement), 58-59, 1 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 562-563. With only "clarifying changes," H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 510, supra, at 67, 1 Leg. Hist. of LMRA 571, the House-Senate Conferencees and then both Houses of Congress agreed to regulate union secondary activity by making specified activity an unfair labor practice under § 8(b)(4) of the National Labor Relations Act, authorizing the Board to seek injunctions against such activity, 29 U.S.C. § 160 [****49] (I), and providing for recovery of actual damages in a suit by a private party under Senator Taft's compromise proposal, which became § 303 of the Labor Management Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 187.<sup>4</sup> Congress in 1947 did not prohibit all [*646]

<sup>3</sup>The amendment introduced by Senator Ball provided in part that the Clayton Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Act "shall not be applicable in respect of violations of subsection (a) [defining prohibited secondary conduct], or in respect of any contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of commerce, to which a labor organization is a party, if one of the purposes of such contract, combination, or conspiracy is to fix prices, allocate customers, restrict production, distribution, or competition, or impose restrictions or conditions upon the purchase, sale or use of any material, machines, or equipment." 93 Cong. Rec. 4757 (1947).

<sup>4</sup> Section 303 of the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947, 61 Stat. 158-159, provided:

"(a) It shall be unlawful, for the purposes of this section only, in an industry or activity affecting commerce, for any labor organization to engage in, or to induce or encourage the employees of any employer to engage in, a strike or a concerted refusal in the course of their employment to use, manufacture, process, transport, or otherwise handle or work on any goods, articles, materials, or commodities or to perform any services, where an object thereof is -

"(1) forcing or requiring any employer or self-employed person to join any labor or employer organization or any employer or other person to cease using, selling, handling, transporting, or otherwise dealing in the products of any other producer, processor, or manufacturer, or to cease doing business with any other person; secondary activity by labor unions, see Carpenters v. NLRB, 357 U.S. 93; and those practices which it did outlaw were to be remedied only by seeking relief from the Board or by pursuing the newly created, exclusive federal damages remedy provided by § 303. Teamsters v. Morton, supra.

.....

[****50] II

Contrary to the assertion in the Court's opinion, ante, at 634, the deliberate congressional decision to [**1847] make § 303 the exclusive private remedy for unlawful secondary activity is clearly relevant to the question of Local 100's antitrust liability in the case before us. The Court is correct, of course, in noting that § 8(e)'s prohibition of "hot cargo" agreements was not added to the Act until 1959, and that § 303 was not then amended to cover § 8(e) violations [***440] standing alone. But as part of the 1959 amendments designed to close "technical loopholes" perceived in the Taft-Hartley Act, Congress amended § 8(b)(4) to make it an unfair labor practice for a labor organization to threaten or coerce a neutral employer, either directly or through his employees, where an object of the secondary pressure is to force the employer to enter into an agreement prohibited by § 8(e).<sup>5</sup> [****52] At the same [*647] time, Congress expanded the scope of the § 303 damages remedy to allow recovery of the actual damages sustained as a result of a union's engaging in secondary activity to force an employer to sign an agreement in violation of § 8(e).<sup>6</sup> In short, Congress [****51] has provided an employer like Connell with a fully effective private damages remedy for the allegedly unlawful union conduct involved in this case.

The essence of Connell's complaint is that it was coerced by Local 100's picketing into "conspiring" with the union by signing an agreement that limited its ability [*648] to subcontract mechanical work on a competitive basis.<sup>7</sup> If, as the Court today holds, [****53] the subcontracting agreement is not within the construction-industry proviso to § 8(e), then Local 100's picketing to induce Connell to sign the agreement constituted a § 8(b)(4) unfair labor practice, and was therefore also unlawful under § 303(a), 29 U.S.C. § 187(a).<sup>8</sup> [****55] Accordingly, [***441] Connell has

"(b) Whoever shall be injured in his business or property by reason [o]f any violation of subsection (a) may sue therefor in any district court of the United States subject to the limitations and provisions of section 301 hereof without respect to the amount in controversy, or in any other court having jurisdiction of the parties, and shall recover the damages by him sustained and the cost of the suit."

<sup>5</sup> Section 8(b)(4) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended by the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, 73 Stat. 519, 542-543, now provides in part that it shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents:

"(4)(i) to engage in, or to induce or encourage any individual employed by any person engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce to engage in, a strike or a refusal in the course of his employment to use, manufacture, process, transport, or otherwise handle or work on any goods, articles, materials, or commodities or to perform any services; or (ii) to threaten, coerce, or restrain any person engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce, where in either case an object thereof is -

"(A) forcing or requiring any employer or self-employed person to join any labor or employer organization or to enter into any agreement which is prohibited by subsection (e) of this section...." 29 U.S.C. § 158 (b)(4).

<sup>6</sup> Section 303, as amended by the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, 73 Stat. 519, 545, now provides:

"(a) It shall be unlawful, for the purpose of this section only, in an industry or activity affecting commerce, for any labor organization to engage in any activity or conduct defined as an unfair labor practice in section 158(b)(4) of this title.

"(b) Whoever shall be injured in his business or property by reason [o]f any violation of subsection (a) of this section may sue therefor in any district court of the United States subject to the limitations and provisions of section 185 of this title without respect to the amount in controversy, or in any other court having jurisdiction of the parties, and shall recover the damages by him sustained and the cost of the suit." 29 U.S.C. § 187.

<sup>7</sup> Indeed, Connell's original state-court complaint was filed before Connell had signed any agreement with Local 100. See ante, at 620. At that point it was apparent that the primary reason for the lawsuit was Connell's request for an injunction to stop the union's picketing.

[**1848] the right to sue Local 100 for damages sustained as a result [*649] of Local 100's unlawful secondary activity pursuant to § 303(b), 29 U.S.C. § 187\(b\). Although "limited to actual, compensatory damages," Teamsters v. Morton, 377 U.S., at 260, Connell would be entitled under § 303 to recover all damages to its business that resulted from the union's coercive conduct, including any provable damage caused by Connell's inability to subcontract mechanical work to nonunion firms. Similarly, any nonunion mechanical contractor who believes his business has been harmed by Local 100's having coerced Connell into signing the subcontracting agreement is entitled to sue the union for compensatory damages; for § 303 broadly grants its damages action to "[w]hoever shall be injured in his business or property" [****54] by reason of a labor organization's engaging in a § 8(b)(4) unfair labor practice.<sup>9</sup>

[****56] [*650] Moreover, there is considerable evidence in the legislative materials indicating that in expanding the scope of § 303 to include a remedy for secondary pressure designed to force an employer to sign an illegal "hot cargo" clause and in restricting the remedies for violation of § 8(e) itself to those available from the Board, Congress in 1959 made the [***442] same deliberate choice to exclude antitrust remedies as was made by the 1947 Congress.

While the House was considering labor reform legislation in the summer of 1959, specific proposals were made to apply the antitrust laws to labor unions. Representative Hiestand of California introduced a bill which "would solve many of the problems attending unbridled union power as it exists and operates in this country. My proposal is in the nature of antitrust legislation, applied to labor unions." 105 Cong. Rec. 12135, 2 NLRB Legislative History of [**1849] the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, p. 1507 (hereinafter Leg. Hist. of LMRDA).

---

<sup>8</sup> If, contrary to the Court's conclusion, see ante, at 626-633, Congress intended what it said in the proviso to § 8(e), then the subcontracting agreement is valid and, under the view of the Board and those Courts of Appeals that have considered the question, Local 100's picketing to obtain the agreement would also be lawful. See, e.g., Orange Belt District Council of Painters v. NLRB, 117 U.S. App. D.C. 233, 236, 328 F. 2d 534, 537; Construction Laborers v. NLRB, 323 F. 2d 422 (CA9); Northeastern Indiana Bldg. Trades Council, 148 N.L.R.B. 854, enforcement denied on other grounds, 122 U.S. App. D.C. 220, 352 F. 2d 696. Connell would therefore have neither a remedy under § 303 nor one with the Board.

It would seem necessarily to follow that conduct specifically authorized by Congress in the National Labor Relations Act could not by itself be the basis for federal antitrust liability, unless the Court intends to return to the era when the judiciary frustrated congressional design by determining for itself "what public policy in regard to the industrial struggle demands." Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 485 (Brandeis, J., dissenting). See United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219. In my view, however, even if Local 100's conduct was unlawful, Connell may not seek to invoke the sanctions of the antitrust laws. Accordingly, I find it unnecessary to decide in this case whether the subcontracting agreement entered into by Connell and Local 100 is within the ambit of the construction-industry proviso to § 8(e), and if it is, whether it was permissible for Local 100 to utilize peaceful picketing to induce Connell to sign the agreement.

<sup>9</sup> If Connell and Local 100 had entered into a purely voluntary "hot cargo" agreement in violation of § 8(e), an injured nonunion mechanical subcontractor would have no § 303 remedy because the union would not have engaged in any § 8(b)(4) unfair labor practice. The subcontractor, however, would still be able to seek the full range of Board remedies available for a § 8(e) unfair labor practice. Moreover, if Connell had truly agreed to limit its subcontracting without any coercion whatsoever on the part of Local 100, the affected subcontractor might well have a valid antitrust claim on the ground that Local 100 and Connell were engaged in the type of conspiracy aimed at third parties with which this Court dealt in Allen Bradley Co. v. Electrical Workers, 325 U.S. 797. At the very least, an antitrust suit by an injured subcontractor under circumstances in which Congress had failed to provide any form of private remedy for damage resulting from an illegal "hot cargo" agreement would present a very different question from the one before us - a question which it is not now necessary to answer. Cf. Meat Cutters v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676, 708 n. 9 (opinion of Goldberg, J.).

On the other hand, the signatory of a purely voluntary agreement that violates § 8(e) is fully protected from any damage that might result from the illegal "hot cargo" agreement by his ability simply to ignore the contract provision that violates § 8(e). If the union should attempt to enforce the illicit "hot cargo" clause through any form of coercion, the employer may then bring a § 303 damages suit or may file an unfair labor practice charge with the Board. See 29 U.S.C. § 158\(b\)\(4\)\(B\). Since § 8(e) provides that any prohibited agreement is "unenforceable and void," any union effort to invoke legal processes to compel the neutral employer to comply with his purely voluntary agreement would obviously be unavailing.

Representative Alger of Texas joined in cosponsoring the legislation, stating that "[u]nion monopoly power" manifests itself in "restrictive trade practices [****57] such as price fixing, restrictions on use of new processes and technological improvements, exclusion of products for the market, and so forth.... This bill deals directly with [this aspect] of union monopoly power." 105 Cong. Rec. 12136, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1507. Representative Alger added the following explanation of the bill: S

"Under the language of H.R. 8003 any attempt [*651] by a union to induce an employer or a group of employers to comply with a union demand which would result in restrictive trade practices would be unlawful, and an employer faced with such a demand could seek legal remedies to restrain the union from enforcing its demand. The consequent denial to unions of the right to fix prices or impose other artificial market limitations would not in any way interfere with normal and legitimate union functions or with their proper collective bargaining powers. They would merely be placed on an equal footing with all other groups in society as was the case during the fifty years prior to the Hutcheson decision." 105 Cong. Rec. 12137, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1508.I

The Landrum-Griffin bill, H.R. 8400, 86th Cong., 1st Sess., which, as amended, was enacted as the [****58] Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959,<sup>10</sup> by contrast, clearly provided that the new secondary-boycott [*652] and "hot cargo" provisions were to be enforced solely through the Board and by use of the § 303 damages remedy. See 105 Cong. Rec. 14347-14348, 2 Leg. Hist. of [***443] LMRDA 1522-1523. Recognizing this important difference, Representative Alger proposed to amend the Landrum-Griffin bill by adding, as an additional title, the antitrust provisions of H.R. 8003. 105 Cong. Rec. 15532-15533, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1569. Representative Alger once again stated that his proposed amendment would make it unlawful for an individual local union to "[e]nter into any arrangement - voluntary or coerced - with any employer, groups of employers, or other unions which cause product boycotts, price fixing, or other types of restrictive trade practices." 105 Cong. Rec. 15533, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1569.

[****59] Representative Griffin responded to Representative Alger's proposed amendment by observing: S

"[I]t serves to point out that the substitute [the Landrum-Griffin bill] is a minimum bill. It might be well at this point to mention some provisions that are not in it.

"There is no antitrust law provision in this bill.

... . . .

"This is truly a minimum bill that a responsible Congress should pass. I believe I speak for the gentleman from Georgia [MR. LANDRUM], as well as myself when I say that if amendments are offered on the floor to add [**1850] antitrust provisions or others that have been mentioned, I, for one, will oppose them. The gentleman from Georgia and I have tried to balance delicately the provisions which we believe should be in a bill at this time and which a majority of this body could support." 105 Cong. Rec. 15535, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1571-1572.I

The Alger amendment was rejected, as were additional [*653] efforts to subject proscribed union activities to the antitrust laws and their sanctions. See, e.g., 105 Cong. Rec. 15853, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1685 (amendment offered by Rep. Hoffman). The House then adopted the Landrum-Griffin bill over [****60] protests that it "does not go far enough, that it needs more teeth, and that more teeth are going to come in the form of legislation to bring labor union activities under the antitrust laws." 105 Cong. Rec. 15858, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1690 (remarks of Rep. Alger); see 105 Cong. Rec. 15859-15860, 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1691-1692 (adoption of the Landrum amendment to H.R. 8342, substituting in lieu of the text thereof the text of H.R. 8400 as amended).

---

<sup>10</sup> The legislative proceedings leading to the passage of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 (the Landrum-Griffin Act), 73 Stat. 519, began in January 1959 when Senator John Kennedy introduced S. 505, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. In March 1959 Senator Kennedy introduced S. 1555, incorporating 46 amendments to S. 505 made by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. S. 1555, with various additional amendments, was approved by the Senate on April 25, 1959, and sent to the House, where it was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. On July 30, 1959, the House Committee favorably reported H.R. 8342, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. One week earlier H.R. 8400 and H.R. 8401, identical bills, were introduced in the House by Representatives Landrum and Griffin, respectively. The House voted on August 13, 1959, to substitute the text of H.R. 8400 for the text of the House Committee bill, and the Landrum-Griffin bill was then inserted by the House in S. 1555 in lieu of its provisions. The Conference made several substantive changes in the Landrum-Griffin bill, which was then passed by both the House and Senate and approved by the President. See generally 1 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA vii-xi.

The House-Senate Conference made some substantive changes in the language of the amendments to § 8 (b)(4), and also added the construction- and garment-industry provisos to § 8 (e). See generally Cox, The Landrum-Griffin Amendments to the National Labor Relations Act, 44 Minn. L. Rev. 257. But no change was made in the nature of the sanctions authorized for violations of either section by the House-passed Landrum-Griffin bill: An injured party could either seek relief from the Board or bring suit for damages under § 303 against unions that violate the revised secondary-boycott prohibitions. No provisions were made for exposing proscribed union secondary activity or "hot cargo" agreements to antitrust liability. See H. [****61] R. Conf. Rep. No. 1147, 86th Cong., 1st Sess., [***444] 1 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 934.<sup>11</sup>

[*654] Indeed, two years after enactment of the Landrum-Griffin Act, Senator McClellan, whose committee hearings into abuses caused by concentrated [****62] labor power had played a major role in generating support for the 1959 labor reform legislation, together with five other Senators, introduced a bill to provide antitrust sanctions for illegal "hot cargo" agreements in the transportation industry, despite the fact that such agreements were already expressly prohibited by § 8 (e).<sup>12</sup> As it had in 1947 and 1959, however, Congress in 1961 rejected this effort to subject illegal union secondary conduct to the sanctions of the antitrust laws.

[****63] In [**1851] sum, the legislative history of the 1947 and 1959 amendments and additions to national labor law clearly demonstrates that Congress did not intend to restore antitrust sanctions for secondary boycott activity such as that engaged in by Local 100 in this case, but rather [*655] intended to subject such activity only to regulation under the National Labor Relations Act and § 303 of the Labor Management Relations Act. The judicial imposition of "independent federal remedies" not intended by Congress, no less than the application of state law to union conduct that is either protected or prohibited by federal labor law,<sup>13</sup> threatens "to upset the balance of power between labor and management expressed in our national labor policy." Teamsters v. Morton, 377 U.S., at 260. See Carpenters v. NLRB, 357 U.S., at 98-100; National Woodwork Mfrs. Assn. v. NLRB, 386 U.S., at 619-620. Accordingly, the judgment before us should be affirmed.

[****64]

References

---

<sup>11</sup> Representative Hiestand, during House debate on the report of the Conference Committee, recommended adoption of the bill as amended by the Conference and complimented Representatives Landrum and Griffin for their efforts in guiding the bill through Congress. But in expressing concern over the fact that the legislation did not restore antitrust sanctions for union secondary activity and other anticompetitive restraints of trade, he warned: "[W]e should act today with full knowledge that passage of the Landrum-Griffin bill will not solve every problem. The heart of the problem, the very heart, is the sheer power in the hands of labor union leaders due to their above-the-law status with respect to our antimonopoly laws." 105 Cong. Rec. 18132; 2 Leg. Hist. of LMRDA 1719.

<sup>12</sup> Section 2 \(b\)\(2\) of Senator McClellan's bill, S. 2573, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., provided that the Sherman Act be amended to read in part:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, every contract, agreement, or understanding, express or implied, between any labor organization and any employer engaged in the transportation of persons or property, whereby such employer undertakes to cease, or to refrain from, purchasing, using, selling, handling, transporting, or otherwise dealing in any of the products or services of any producer, processor, distributor, supplier, handler, or manufacturer which are distributed in trade or commerce in any territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or between any such territory and another, or between any such territory or territories and any State or States or the District of Columbia or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations, or to cease doing business with any other person shall be unlawful."

<sup>13</sup> I fully agree with the Court's conclusion, ante, at 635-637, that federal labor law pre-empts the state law that Connell sought to apply to Local 100's secondary activity in this case.

48 Am Jur 2d, Labor and Labor Relations 306, 309, 1458

16 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev ed), Labor and Labor Relations Form 101.1

15 USCS 17; 29 USCS 52, 104, 105, 113, 158(e)

US L Ed Digest, Commerce 129; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 46; States 38

ALR Digests, Commerce 32; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 22

L Ed Index to Annos, Labor and Employment; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Commerce; Labor and Labor Unions; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Commerce; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Union activities violating the federal antitrust laws. 9 L Ed 2d 998, 20 L Ed 2d 1528.

National Labor Relations Act and Labor Management Relations Act as excluding state action. 93 L Ed 470, 94 L Ed 984, 95 L Ed 384, 98 L Ed 245, 99 L Ed 559, 100 L Ed 1174; 174 ALR 1051. [****65]

---

End of Document

United States v. Citizens & Southern Nat'l Bank

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued March 19, 1975 ; June 17, 1975

No. 73-1933

Reporter

422 U.S. 86 *; 95 S. Ct. 2099 **; 45 L. Ed. 2d 41 ***; 1975 U.S. LEXIS 113 ****; 1975-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P60,360

UNITED STATES v. CITIZENS & SOUTHERN NATIONAL BANK ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA

Core Terms

---

banks, correspondent, Sherman Act, mergers, Deposits, de facto, Top, acquisition, bank holding company, district court, shares, demand deposit, branching, antitrust, stock, acquire, largest, de jure, transactions, grandfather, suburban, Loans, immunity, programs, total loan, Clayton Act, affiliation, proposed acquisition, total deposit, markets

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Bank Expansions > Branch Banking > Federal Preemption

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Bank Expansions > Branch Banking > General Overview

HN1[] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

In applying the antitrust laws to banking, careful account must be taken of the pervasive federal and state regulation characteristic of the industry, particularly the legal restraints on entry unique to this line of commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN3 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Commercial Banks > Mergers & Consolidations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Banking Interests

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN4 [down] Financial Institutions, Bank Mergers

Pursuant to 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828\(c\)\(7\)\(B\), referring to 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828 \(c\)\(5\)\(B\), bank mergers are made subject to Clayton Act standards unless the anticompetitive effects of the proposed transaction are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served. Hence, in bank merger cases brought under the Clayton Act, there is a convenience and needs defense that comes into play only after a district court has made a de novo determination of the status of a bank merger under the Clayton Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Banking Law > ... > National Banks > Interest & Usury > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [down] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

The dissemination of price information is not itself a per se violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Banking Interests

Governments > Local Governments > Finance

Banking Law > Bank Activities > Electronic Banking > General Overview

HN6 Bank Expansions, Banking Interests

Correspondent banking is an interbank practice whereby city correspondent banks provide a cluster of services to smaller country banks in exchange for interbank deposits. Among the services typically provided within a conventional correspondent arrangement are check clearing, help with bill collections, participation in large loans, legal advice, help in building securities portfolios, counseling as to personnel policies, staff training, help in site selection, auditing, and the provision of electronic data processing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Even commonly owned firms must compete against each other if they hold themselves out as distinct entities. The corporate interrelationships of the conspirators are not determinative of the applicability of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2. A fortiori, independently owned firms cannot escape competing merely by pretending to common ownership or control. Moreover, a business entity generally cannot justify restraining trade between itself and an independently owned entity merely on the ground that it helped launch that entity, by providing expert advice or seed capital.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

Accomplished through private agreement, market division is a per se offense under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2. Horizontal territorial limitations are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

To circumvent Georgia law which, as then in force, restricted city banks from opening branches in suburban areas, a Georgia national bank (C&S National) formed a holding company (C&S Holding), and the latter company embarked upon a program of forming de facto branch banks in the suburbs of Atlanta. This program involved, among other features, ownership by C&S Holding of 5 percent of the stock of each of the suburban banks (the maximum allowed by state law), and ownership of much of the remaining stock by parties friendly to the C&S system of banking entities (C&S), this system including C&S National and its majority owned affiliates and C&S Holding, but excluding the 5-percent banks. After Georgia amended its banking statutes to allow de jure branching on a countywide basis, C&S applied to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) under the Bank Merger Act of 1966 (12 USCS 1828\(c\)) for permission to acquire all of the stock of six of the 5-percent banks operated by

C&S as de facto branches. The FDIC authorized all but one of the proposed acquisitions. The government immediately commenced the instant litigation in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia for injunctive relief, alleging that the five acquisitions authorized by the FDIC would lessen competition in relevant banking markets, thus violating 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), and that the historic "de facto branch" relations between C&S and the six 5-percent banks constituted unreasonable restraints of trade in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1). The District Court rendered judgment for C&S on all the issues (372 F Supp 616).

On direct appeal, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Stewart, J., expressing the views of six members of the court, it was held that (1) the "grandfather" provision to the Bank Holding Company Act (12 USCS 1849\(d\)) immunized the C&S transactions consummated prior to July 1966; (2) in the face of the stringent state restrictions on branching, C&S program of founding new de facto branches, and maintaining them as such, did not infringe 1 of the Sherman Act; and (3) the acquisitions, proposed by C&S, of stock in the de facto branch corporations did not violate 7 of the Clayton Act.

Brennan, J., joined by Douglas and White, JJ., dissented on the grounds that (1) the government proved violations of 1 of the Sherman Act and 7 of the Clayton Act; and (2) the grandfather provision of the Bank Holding Company Act did not foreclose antitrust scrutiny as to some of the de facto branch corporations.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §5 > federal antitrust laws -- application to banking -- relevant considerations -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

In applying the antitrust laws to banking, careful account must be taken of the pervasive federal and state regulation characteristic of the industry, and particularly of the legal restraints on entry unique to this line of commerce; this admonition has special force where de facto branch arrangements and proposed acquisitions of stock in de facto branches are a direct response to a state's historic restrictions on branch banking.

MONOPOLIES §34.5 > bank mergers -- "convenience and needs defense" -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

In cases in which a bank merger is challenged under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of the stock of another where the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, there is a "convenience and needs defense" that comes into play only after a United States District Court has made a de novo determination of the status of a bank merger under the Act, since pursuant to a provision in the Bank Merger Act (12 USCS 1828\(c\)\(7\)\(B\)), referring to 12 USCS 1828\(c\)\(5\)\(B\), bank mergers are made subject to Clayton Act standards unless "the anticipated effects of the proposed transaction are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served."

MONOPOLIES §20 > banks -- correspondent associate programs -- immunity from antitrust laws -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

In determining whether correspondent associate programs of a system of banking entities are immune from scrutiny under the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), recourse must be had directly to the provisions of the Bank Holding Company Act (12 USCS 1841 et seq.); such immunity cannot be rested on the doctrine of exclusive primary jurisdiction of the Federal Reserve Board under a provision of the Bank Holding Company Act (12 USCS 1842\(a\)) which requires the prior approval of the Federal Reserve Board for certain transactions by bank holding companies, including transactions tending to create or enlarge holding company control of independent banks.

MONOPOLIES §20 > acquisitions of bank stock -- antitrust immunity -- Federal Reserve Board -- staff's "understanding" --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [down] [4]

An "understanding" between the staff of the Federal Reserve Board and a bank holding company that its correspondent associate programs then in effect did not offend a provision of the Bank Holding Company Act (12 USCS 1842\(a\)) concerning the legality or illegality of the acquisition of bank shares or assets, does not give rise to any antitrust immunity, since(1) a consummated transaction acquires immunity under 12 USCS 1849\(b\) only when no antitrust action has been commenced within 30 days after the transaction has received the approval of the Board, in an order which is subject to judicial review and which reflects application by the Board of the special antitrust standards of 12 USCS 1842\(c\), and (2) under 12 USCS 1849\(b\), the immunity applies only to an acquisition, merger, or consolidation transaction approved under 12 USCS 1842 in compliance with the Bank Holding Company Act.

MONOPOLIES §20 > Bank Holding Company Act -- purpose -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [down] [5]

The purpose of the complex machinery set forth in the provision of the Bank Holding Company Act (12 USCS 1849\(b\)--which, insofar as relevant, states that a consummated transaction acquires immunity only when no antitrust action has been commenced within 30 days after the transaction has received the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, in an order which is subject to judicial review and which reflects application by the Board of the special antitrust standards of 12 USCS 1842\(c\)--is to accord finality to formal actions of the Board not subjected to timely challenge under the antitrust laws; there is no indication that Congress wished to accord a similar finality to the informal views of the Board's staff.

MONOPOLIES §20 > acquisition of stock in banking corporations -- "grandfather" provision of Bank Holding Company Act --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [down] [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [down] [6B] [LEdHN\[6C\]](#) [down] [6C] [LEdHN\[6D\]](#) [down] [6D]

Transactions by which a system of banking entities created a correspondent associate relationship with some of its de facto branch banks and which were consummated prior to July 1966, without the Attorney General having taken any action against those transactions, fall within the terms of the "grandfather" provision of the Bank Holding Company Act (12 USCS 1849\(d\)), and the correspondent associate programs in force as to those de facto branch banks are immune from attack under 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1), since the grandfather provision (1) does not state or imply that the covered transactions must have received the formal approval of the Federal Reserve Board; (2) is a simple conferral of legislative amnesty for theretofore unchallenged transactions completed before Congress had clarified the nature of the accommodation between the federal laws; (3) creates immunity under 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1), not simply under the stock acquisition prohibition of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), which is an indication that its protection extends not merely to literal acquisitions, mergers, and consolidations, but also to "restraints of trade" simultaneous with and functionally integral to such transactions; (4) though by its terms applying to transactions of the kind described in 12 USCS 1842\(a\), is not limited to benefit only transactions that plainly transgressed 12 USCS 1842\(a\); and (5) while creating a conclusive presumption of compliance with the antitrust law, does not necessarily create such a presumption of compliance with the provisions of the Bank Holding Company Act.

BANKS §3.5 > formation of de facto branch -- merger -- > Headnote:

LEdHN/7 [down] [7]

While the formation, by a system of banking entities, of de facto branch banks is a unique type of transaction, it may fairly be characterized as an acquisition, merger or consolidation of the kind described in the provision of the Bank Holding Company Act concerning the legality or illegality of acquisition of bank shares or assets (12 USCS 1842\(a\)), where, though multifaceted, the formation of the de facto branches was a unitary and cohesive undertaking in the sense that all the facets were closely coordinated, simultaneously instituted, and designed to serve the single purpose of fitting the new bank into the system of the banking entities.

MONOPOLIES §33 > price information -- > Headnote:

LEdHN/8 [down] [8]

The dissemination of price information is not itself a per se violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.).

ERROR §1477 > antitrust actions -- review of District Court's findings -- > Headnote:

LEdHN/9 [down] [9]

In the light of the United States Supreme Court's holding that the correspondent associate program of a system of bank entities concerning its de facto branches is permissible under 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1), the Supreme Court cannot hold "clearly erroneous," within the meaning of Federal Civil Procedure Rule 52\(a\), the United States District Court's finding--in the government's civil antitrust action against banks, in which the government alleged that the relationship between that system and its de facto branch banks was illegal per se because encompassing a tacit agreement to fix interest rates and services--that the lack of significant price competition did not flow from that agreement but instead was an indirect, unintentional, and formally discouraged result of the sharing of expertise and information which was at the heart of the correspondent associate program.

MONOPOLIES §32 > violation of Sherman Act -- correspondent banking arrangement -- > Headnote:

LEdHN/10 [down] [10]

Standing alone, the facts that (1) the associate program of a system of bank entities for its associated branch corporations has gone several steps beyond conventional correspondent arrangements in that the system banks closely advised the boards of directors of the de facto branch banks, supplied their chief executive officers, allowed full "branchlike" use of the system's logogram, provided all the system banks' services available at a de jure branch, dealt with the de facto branch banks through the system banks' administration department, provided constant and detailed information on prices and on all banking procedures, and (2) conceivably these relationships, separately or taken together, restrained competition among all these banks more thoroughly or effectively than would have a conventional correspondent program, do not make out a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) where the system banks' operation of the associated corporations as de facto operations was a direct response to the state's historic restrictions on de jure branching.

MONOPOLIES §5 > Sherman Act -- central message -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

The central message of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) is that a business entity must find new customers and higher profits through internal expansion, that is, by competing successfully rather than by arranging treaties with its competitors.

MONOPOLIES §10 > conspiracy -- corporate interrelationship -- common ownership and control -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

The corporate interrelationships of conspirators are not determinative of the applicability of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.); a fortiori, independently owned firms cannot escape competing merely by pretending to common ownership, since the pretence would simply perfect the cartel.

MONOPOLIES §53 > market division -- horizontal territorial limitations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

Accomplished through private agreement, market division is a per se offense under the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.); horizontal territorial limitations are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition.

MONOPOLIES §34 > Sherman Act -- de facto branch banks -- state restrictions on branching -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

A program, adopted by a system of bank entities, of founding new de facto branches, and maintaining them as such, does not infringe 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1) where stringent state restrictions on banking preclude the formation of de jure branches.

MONOPOLIES §34.5 > banks -- acquisition of stock in de facto branch corporation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15A\]](#) [15A] [LEdHN\[15B\]](#) [15B]

The acquisitions, proposed by a system of banking entities and approved by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, of stock in de facto branch corporations, founded ab initio with the system's sponsorship, do not violate 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), prohibiting stock acquisitions the effect of which may be substantially to lessen competition in any line of commerce in any section of the country, where (1) the bank system's program of founding and maintaining new de facto branch corporations does not, in the face of the state's antibranching law, violate the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), and hence the proposed acquisitions will extinguish no present competitive conduct or relationships; and (2) as to future competition, there is no evidence of any realistic prospect that denial of these acquisitions would lead the banks to compete against each other, the record showing that none of the shareholders, directors, or officers of the de facto branch corporations expressed any inclination to break their ties with the bank system and its correspondent associate program.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > acquisition of stock in banking corporations -- prima facie case -- burden of rebuttal -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

In a civil antitrust action brought by the government to challenge the acquisitions, by a system of banking entities, of the stock of de facto branch corporations as violating 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), the government makes out a prima facie case of such violation by establishing that the bank system is the predominate banking institution in the appropriate markets, that in these markets the commercial banking industry is quite highly concentrated in terms of market share statistics, and that the proposed acquisitions would increase the system's nominal market shares; it is then incumbent upon the bank system to show that the market share statistics give an inaccurate account of the acquisitions' probable effects on competition.

MONOPOLIES §34.5 > stock acquisitions -- effect on competition -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

The prohibition in 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18) of the acquisition by one corporation of the stock of another where the effect of such acquisition may be to substantially lessen competition in any line of commerce in any section of the country, is concerned with "probable" effects on competition, and not with "ephemeral possibilities."

Syllabus

---

To circumvent Georgia's long standing stringent restrictions on city banks' opening branches in suburban areas, appellee Citizens & Southern National bank (C&S National) formed a holding company, which then embarked on a program of forming de facto branch banks in Atlanta's suburbs. This program included the holding company's ownership of 5 percent of the stock of each of the suburban banks', ownership of much of the remaining stock by parties friendly to the C&S system of banking entities (hereafter C&S), the suburban banks' use of the C&S logogram and of all C&S's banking services, and close C&S oversight of the suburban banks' operation and governance. In 1970, Georgia amended its banking statutes so as to allow de jure branching upon a countywide basis. This meant that C&S could now absorb the 5-percent banks as true branches, because Atlanta is contained within the two counties encompassing the suburbs in which the 5-percent banks operated. Consequently C&S applied to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation [****2] (FDIC) under the Bank Merger Act of 1966 for permission to acquire all the stock of six of the 5-percent banks historically operated as de facto branches or

"correspondent associate" banks within the C&S system. The FDIC authorized five of the proposed acquisitions. The Government then brought suit in District Court for injunctive relief, alleging that the five acquisitions would lessen competition in relevant banking markets in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, and that the historic, de facto branch relations between C&S and the six 5-percent banks constituted unreasonable restraints of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The court rendered judgment for C&S. Three of the 5-percent banks were formed prior to, and three after, July 1, 1966. The "grandfather" provision of the Bank Holding Company Act, 12 U.S.C. § 1849(d), as added by the 1966 amendments, provides that [a]ny acquisition, merger, or consolidation of the kind described in [12 U.S.C. § 1842 (a)]. . . which was consummated at any time prior or subsequent to May 9, 1956, and as to which no litigation was initiated by the Attorney General prior to July 1, 1966, shall [****3] be conclusively presumed not to have been in violation of any antitrust laws other than § 2 of the Sherman Act. Title 12 U.S.C. § 1842 (a) makes it unlawful, absent the Federal Reserve Board's prior approval, for bank holding companies to engage in certain transactions, including those tending to create or enlarge holding company control of independent banks. Held:

1. Since the Attorney General took no action by July 1966 against the three 5-percent banks that were formed prior to that date, the transactions by which these banks became 5-percent banks fall within the terms of the grandfather provision of the Bank Holding Company Act, and therefore the correspondent associate programs in force at these banks are immune from attack under § 1 of the Sherman Act. While C&S's formation of a de facto branch was a unique type of transaction, it may fairly be characterized as an "acquisition, merger, or consolidation of the kind described in [12 U.S.C. § 1842 (a)]," and clearly falls within the class of dealings by bank holding companies that Congress intended, in the grandfather provision, to shield from retroactive challenge under the antitrust [****4] laws. Pp. 102-111.

2. In the face of the stringent state restrictions on branching, C&S's program of founding new de facto branches, and maintaining them as such, did not infringe § 1 of the Sherman Act. Pp. 111-120.

(a) Though the government contends that the correspondent associate programs encompassed at least a tacit agreement to fix interest rates and service charges so as to make the interrelationships--to that extent at least--illegal per se, it cannot be held, in view of the mixed evidenced in the record, and of the fact that such programs, as such, were permissible under the Sherman Act, that the District Court clearly erred in finding that the lack of significant price competition flowed, not from a tacit agreement, but as an indirect, unintentional, and formally discouraged result of the sharing of expertise and information that was at the heart of the correspondent associate program. Pp. 112-114.

(b) The Government's alternative contention that the correspondent associate programs transcending conventional "correspondent" relationships "unreasonably" restrained competition among the 5-percent banks and between these banks and C&S National, is not persuasive, [****5] since even if the Government had proved that such programs restrained competition among the defendant banks more thoroughly or effectively than would have a conventional correspondent program (which the District Court found not to be the case), that alone would not make out a Sherman Act violation. Pp. 114-116.

(c) Where C&S has operated the 5-percent banks as de facto branches in direct response to Georgia's historic restrictions on de jure branching, restraints of trade integral to this particular, unusual function are not unreasonable. To characterize the relationships at issue as an unreasonable restraint of trade is to forget that their whole purpose and effect were to defeat a restraint of trade, and by providing new banking options to suburban Atlanta customers, while eliminating no existing options, C&S's de facto branching program has plainly been procompetitive. Pp. 116-120.

3. The proposed acquisitions will not violate § 7 of the Clayton Act. Pp. 120-122.

(a) Since C&S's program of founding and maintaining new de facto branches in the face of Georgia's antibranching law did not violate the Sherman Act, and since the de facto branches [****6] that C&S proposes to acquire were all founded ab initio with C&S sponsorship, it follows that the proposed acquisitions will extinguish no present competitive conduct or relationships. P. 121.

(b) As for future competition, there is no evidence of any realistic prospect that denial of the acquisitions would lead the defendant banks to compete against each other, the Clayton Act being concerned with "probable" effects on competition, not with "ephemeral possibilities." Pp. 121-122.

372 F.Supp. 616, affirmed.

STEWART, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, POWELL, and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined. BRENNAN, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which DOUGLAS and WHITE, JJ., joined, post, p. 130.

Counsel: Deputy Solicitor General Friedman argued the cause for the United States. On the briefs were Solicitor General Bork, Assistant Attorney General Kauper, Gerald P. Norton, Howard E. Shapiro, and George Edelstein.

Daniel B. Hodgson argued the cause for appellees. With him on the briefs were Michael A. Doyle, Walter M. Grant, Richard A. Posner, and Philip L. Roache, Jr.*

[****7]

Judges: Burger, Douglas, Brennan, Stewart, White, Marshall, Blackmun, Powell, Rehnquist

Opinion by: STEWART

Opinion

---

[*89] [**48] [**2103] MR. JUSTICE STEWART delivered the opinion of the Court.

For many years the State of Georgia restricted banks located in cities from opening branches in suburban areas. To circumvent these restrictions in the Atlanta area, the Citizens & Southern National Bank (C&S National) formed the Citizens & Southern Holding Company (C&S Holding), and the latter company embarked on a program of forming de facto branch banks in the suburbs of Atlanta. This program involved, among other features, ownership by C&S Holding of 5 percent of the stock of each of the suburban banks (the maximum allowed by state law), ownership of much of the remaining stock by parties friendly to C&S,<sup>1</sup> use by the suburban banks of the C&S logogram and of all of C&S's banking services, and close C&S oversight of the operation and governance of the suburban banks. The expectation on all sides -- by C&S, by the suburban banks, and by state and federal bank regulators -- was that C&S would acquire these "5-percent banks" outright, and convert them into de jure [****8] branches, as soon as state law, or the Atlanta city limits, [*90] were altered so as to permit the accomplishment of this end.

In 1970, Georgia amended its banking statutes to allow de jure branching on a countywide basis. Because the city of Atlanta is contained within two counties, DeKalb and Fulton, which encompass [**2104] the Atlanta suburbs in which the 5-percent banks operated, this change in the law meant that C&S National could now absorb the 5-percent banks as true branches. C&S consequently applied [****9] to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), under the Bank Merger Act of 1966, [***49] 80 Stat. 7, 12 U.S.C. § 1828, for permission to acquire all of the stock of six of the 5-percent banks historically operated by C&S as de facto branches. The FDIC authorized all but one of the proposed acquisitions.

---

* Cubbedge Snow and Charles M. Stapleton filed a brief for the Independent Bankers Association of Georgia, Inc., as amicus curiae.

<sup>1</sup> Unless otherwise indicated, the term "C&S" refers generically to the C&S system of banking entities, including C&S National and its majority owned affiliates and C&S Holding, but excluding the 5-percent banks. The defendants in this suit -- appellees here -- are C&S National, C&S Holding, six of the 5-percent banks, and two banks in the Atlanta area, C&S Emory and C&S East Point, which are subsidiaries of C&S Holding. Taken together, these will sometimes be called the "defendant banks."

The Justice Department immediately commenced this litigation in a Federal District Court for injunctive relief, alleging that the five acquisitions authorized by the FDIC would lessen competition in relevant banking markets, and thus violate § 7 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and that the historic "de facto branch" relations between C&S and the six 5-percent banks constituted unreasonable restraints of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 1. After a trial, the court rendered judgment for C&S on all the issues. 372 F. Supp. 616. The Government appealed under § 2 of the Expediting Act, 32 Stat. 823, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 29, and we noted probable jurisdiction. [****10]<sup>2</sup>

[*91] I. The Background of This Litigation

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1] HN1 In applying the antitrust laws to banking, careful account must be taken of the pervasive federal and state regulation characteristic of the industry, "particularly the legal restraints on entry unique to this line of commerce." United States v. Marine Bancorporation, 418 U.S. 602, 606. This admonition has special force in the present case, for the de facto branch arrangements [****11] and the proposed acquisitions involved here were a direct response to Georgia's historic restrictions on branch banking.

Before 1927 Georgia permitted statewide branching, and C&S National, then as now headquartered in Savannah, established three branches in the city of Atlanta. In 1927, state law was changed to prohibit all branching.<sup>3</sup> C&S therefore decided to expand through the formation of a bank holding company. C&S Holding was founded in 1928, and between 1946 and 1954 this company purchased two banks, and founded a third, in the Atlanta area. But in 1956 Georgia again altered its statutes to prohibit a bank holding company from acquiring more than 15 percent of a bank's stock. Georgia Bank Holding Company Act, 1 Ga. Laws 1956, pp. 309-312. A 1960 amendment, still in force, reduced the maximum ownership level to 5 percent. Ga. Code Ann. 13-207\(a\)\(2\) (1967 ed. and Supp. 1974).

[****12] By the 1950's, C&S National was interested primarily in suburban expansion. The Atlanta city limits had been frozen since 1952, and the area's economic and population growth consequently occurred primarily outside the city's boundaries. Between 1959 and 1969, C&S Holding accordingly established in the Atlanta suburbs (in DeKalb and Fulton Counties) the six 5-percent [*92] banks at issue in this case. Five of these banks were founded under the sponsorship [***50] of C&S; the sixth, the Tucker Bank, had long been an independent suburban bank when, in 1965, C&S converted it into a 5-percent bank.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>2</sup> 419 U.S. 893. Notice of appeal was filed prior to the effective date of the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, Pub. L. 93-528, § 7, 88 Stat. 1710. The proposed acquisitions were stayed automatically by the filing of the suit, 12 U.S.C. § 1828\(c\)\(7\)\(A\). The District Court continued the stay, and it has remained in force pending this decision.

<sup>3</sup> A 1929 amendment allowed branching within the home-office city of a bank, but this was of no aid to the ambitions of C&S National outside Savannah.

<sup>4</sup> Founded with C&S sponsorship were: (1) The Sandy Springs Bank, Fulton County (two offices). Founded in 1959 and operational in 1960 as the Citizens National Bank of Sandy Springs, it was converted in 1969 from a national to a state-chartered bank and adopted the name Citizens and Southern Bank of Sandy Springs. (2) The Chamblee Bank, DeKalb County. Founded in 1960 as the Chamblee National Bank, it was converted to a state-chartered bank in 1969 and adopted the name Citizens and Southern Bank of Chamblee. (3) The North Fulton Bank, Fulton County and North Fulton County. It was founded in 1967 as the Citizens and Southern Bank of North Fulton, a state-chartered institution. (4) The Park National Bank, DeKalb County. It was founded in 1967 as the Citizens and Southern Park National Bank. (5) The South DeKalb Bank, DeKalb County (two offices). It was founded as the Citizens and Southern South DeKalb Bank, a state-chartered institution, in 1969.

The Citizens and Southern Bank of Tucker (two offices), in DeKalb County, was independently founded in 1919, as the Bank of Tucker. C&S Holding acquired 5-percent ownership in 1965, and the bank then adopted its present name. This bank is involved in only the Sherman Act phase of this case. Its proposed acquisition by C&S was forbidden by the FDIC.

[****13] Each [**2105] of these six banks was made a "correspondent associate" bank within the C&S system. This status involved many different relationships between the 5-percent bank and C&S: In addition to the 5-percent stock held by C&S Holding, substantial shares were also held by officers, shareholders, and friendly customers of other C&S banks, and by their family members. It was understood from the outset that the 5-percent banks would be acquired outright by C&S as soon as the law permitted. From at least 1965 on, the 5-percent banks used the C&S logogram on their buildings, papers, and correspondence. C&S filed the charter applications of the 5-percent banks [*93] and openly assured the banks of full financial support, assurances which were often instrumental in securing regulatory approval of their creation. C&S chose the principal executive officer for each 5-percent bank. The employees of these banks were accorded the same pension and promotion rights in the C&S system as possessed by their colleagues at C&S National and its de jure affiliates. C&S selected the location of, and oversaw the selection of directors for, the suburban banks. A C&S executive served as an [****14] "advisory director" to each suburban bank. C&S conducted surprise audits and credit checks at the suburban banks. Each of the suburban banks provided the full panoply of C&S banking services, and customers of any 5-percent bank could avail themselves of these services at any of the other 5-percent banks, or at C&S National and its de jure branches. C&S supplied to each 5-percent bank, through manuals and memoranda, a large quantity of information concerning every conceivable banking procedure and problem. Included were data -- stamped "for information only" -- concerning interest rates and service charges employed by C&S National and its de jure branches, but each 5-percent bank was cautioned to use its own judgment in setting interest rates and service charges. In sum, it is fair to say -- and the parties agree - that in almost every respect save corporate form, each of the 5-percent banks was a de facto branch of C&S National.

Between 1966 and 1968, the Federal Reserve Board investigated C&S's [***51] network of correspondent associate banks. The purpose of the investigation was to determine whether C&S was exerting such control over the 5-percent banks as to require [****15] special "approval" of the Federal Reserve Board pursuant to § 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, as amended. 12 U.S.C. § 1842. The investigation ended in an "understanding" between the Board's staff and C&S that the "correspondent [*94] associate" program, as the staff understood it, did not require formal approval.<sup>5</sup> The Justice Department participated in this investigation, and took no action of any kind inconsistent with this "understanding."

In 1970 Georgia amended its banking statutes to permit de jure branching within any county in which a bank already [**2106] had an office. Ga. Code Ann. 13-203.1 \(a\) (Supp. 1974). This allowed C&S National to branch [****16] into those Atlanta suburbs which -- like the city of Atlanta - are within the confines of DeKalb and Fulton Counties. C&S decided to convert the six 5-percent banks at issue here into de jure branches. C&S applied to the FDIC for permission to acquire all of the assets, and to assume all of the liabilities, of the 5-percent banks.<sup>6</sup> On October 4, 1971, after reviewing reports on the proposed acquisitions from the Federal Reserve Board, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Justice Department, the FDIC approved C&S's acquisition of the five suburban banks which C&S had helped to found, but disapproved acquisition of the Tucker Bank. Because the Tucker Bank had enjoyed an independent existence before being converted into a 5-percent bank, the FDIC concluded that the correspondent associate affiliation there had been "anticompetitive in its origins" and should not be "ratified" by <sup>5</sup> See n. 17, infra. The investigation was concerned with § 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, 70 Stat. 134, as amended on July 1, 1966, by Pub. L. 89-485, § 7, 80 Stat. 237, and on Dec. 31, 1970, by Pub. L. 91-607, Tit. I, § 102, 84 Stat. 1763. 12 U.S.C. § 1842.

---

<sup>6</sup> The acquisitions were to be made by bank subsidiaries of C&S Holding: C&S East Point, which proposed to acquire the Sandy Springs and North Fulton Banks, and C&S Emory, which proposed to acquire the Chamblee, Park National, South DeKalb, and Tucker Banks. The FDIC was the responsible federal agency because each of the acquiring banks is a "nonmember [of the Federal Reserve System] insured bank." 12 U.S.C. § 1828 \(c\)\(2\)\(C\).

approval of outright [*95] acquisition.<sup>7</sup> As for the five banks which C&S had helped to found, however, the FDIC stated: S

"[T]he opening of these... de novo banks served the convenience and needs of their respective communities and enhanced competition...."I

[***17] The FDIC noted that the C&S system was the largest commercial banking institution in Fulton County and in DeKalb County.<sup>8</sup> For this reason, it observed, "new acquisitions of nonaffiliated banks in the [***52] same market [by C&S] would raise the most serious competitive problems under the Bank Merger Act as amended and under Section 7 of the Clayton Act." But the FDIC reasoned that the acquisitions proposed by C&S did not raise such problems because the banks involved in the proposed mergers "do not compete today and never have competed"; further, there existed "no reasonable probability" that any of the 5-percent banks would break their ties with the C&S system even if the proposed acquisitions were disapproved. Thus, "[s]uch mergers would not alter the existing competitive structure... in any way or add to the concentration of banking resources now held by the C&S system."

[***18] II. The Suit in the District Court

On November 2, 1971, within the 30-day period prescribed for such suits, 12 U.S.C. §§ 1828 (c)(6) and (7), [*96] the United States filed a complaint in the District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, alleging that the five acquisitions approved by the FDIC would violate § 7 of the Clayton Act and that the ongoing correspondent associate relationships between C&S and the six 5-percent banks which it had originally sought to acquire constituted unreasonable restraints of trade, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The Government sought injunctive relief prohibiting the proposed acquisitions and terminating the alleged violations of the Sherman Act. On January 24, 1974, after an extensive trial, the District Court entered a judgment for the defendants. 372 F. Supp. 616, 643.

[**2107] As to the Sherman Act allegations, the District Court based its judgment upon two separate and independent grounds. First, it held that the 1968 "understanding" between the staff of the Federal Reserve Board and C&S insulated the correspondent associate relationship between C&S and the 5-percent banks [***19] from attack under the antitrust laws. Id., at 627. The court based this conclusion on the following statement in Whitney Bank v. New Orleans Bank, 379 U.S. 411, 419: S

"We believe Congress intended the statutory proceedings before the [Federal Reserve] Board to be the sole means by which questions as to the organization or operation of a new bank by a bank holding company may be tested."I

Alternatively, assuming the Sherman Act applied, the District Court found that the United States had failed to prove that the correspondent associate relationships involved "collusive price fixing" or "any agreements not to compete or for market division."<sup>9</sup> The court held [*97] [***53] "that the matters complained of are subject to the 'rule of

<sup>7</sup> The FDIC noted that the independent Tucker Bank had not been in unsound financial condition when C&S assumed de facto control in 1965, and that it would have been better for competition if C&S had instead sponsored a new bank in the community "just as it did in other growing sections of DeKalb County prior to the recent change in Georgia's branching laws."

<sup>8</sup> See the Appendix to this opinion for the District Court's statistical summary of the Atlanta area's banking markets, C&S's place in these markets, and the effect of the proposed acquisitions on the market-share statistics.

<sup>9</sup> The court stated:

"The Government contends that the following aspects of the relationships between the defendants have restrained interstate trade and commerce:

"1. The routine and systematic practice of furnishing to one another comprehensive information as to past, present and future competitive practices and policies with a purpose of achieving uniformity among the defendants;

"2. The provision by C&S National to the five percent defendants of various manuals and memoranda; reason,' [and]... the Government has not sustained its burden of proof as to the unreasonableness of the practices involved or with respect to any adverse impact upon competition." 372 F. Supp., at 627-628.

[****20] The Government had conceded that it was no violation of the Sherman Act for a large city bank to arrange a traditional "correspondent" relationship with a smaller, [*98] outlying bank -- a "mutually beneficial arrangement whereby the smaller bank receives needed services and the larger bank obtains both the benefit of the correspondent bank balance kept with it and the income from the sale of its services to the smaller bank's customers." Id., at 628. Noting this concession, the District Court observed: S

"[S]uch assistance to, or sponsorship of, a smaller bank, is desirable and necessary and not anticompetitive. The difference between a pure correspondent relationship and a correspondent associate relationship as set forth in the evidence is merely one of degree, a fine line of demarcation almost impossible for the Court to perceive....

[**2108] "... [T]he Court finds as a fact that the relationship between C&S National, C&S Holding, and the five percent defendant banks, and the interchange of information between them, have been reasonable under the circumstances and not in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act." Ibid.

Turning to the [****21] claim under § 7 of the Clayton Act, the court found that the various defendant banks were each "engaged in commerce" and that the relevant "line of commerce" was "commercial banking." The court declined, however, to define the appropriate geographic markets, stating that its "disposition of the case is based upon factors which make a precise delineation of the market area unnecessary." 372 F. Supp., at 629. Simply assuming the correctness of the Government's position that the appropriate markets were DeKalb County, Fulton County, North Fulton County, or the Atlanta area generally, the court made detailed findings as to the effect of the proposed acquisitions on C&S's nominal market shares. Id., at 629-633.<sup>10</sup> But, just as had the FDIC [*99] before it, the court saw these increases in nominal shares as of no competitive [***54] significance because the 5-percent banks had always been de facto branches within the C&S system. Id., at 633-638.<sup>11</sup>

"3. The provision by C&S National to the five percent defendants of suggestions and advice on such matters as rates, hours of operation, types of loan to discourage and minimum loan rates....

"The Government also asserts, and the record shows, that the advice and suggestions offered by C&S National are generally followed.

"These activities, however, do not amount to collusive price fixing. For example, there is no suggestion that any advice as to rates amounts to more than an expert appraisal of a market situation from the point of view of a lending institution -- a type of opinion to which a lending institution would naturally be expected to pay great attention....

"The practices involved here do not conform to the accepted definition or description of per se antitrust violations where no resort to context or circumstances is required (or permitted).

.....

"There is no evidence of record to conclude that the utilization by the five percent defendant banks of the services or information received by them from C&S National or C&S Holding was a result of any tacit or explicit combinations rather than the natural deference of the recipient to information from one with greater expertise or better sources. In either case there is the flow of information as to rates, practices, etc., which the Government apparently applauds or at least condones in a correspondent banking relationship." 372 F. Supp., at 626, 627, and 628.

<sup>10</sup> See Appendix to this opinion.

<sup>11</sup> The court noted that "no witness (for either the Government or the defendants) testified that the proposed mergers would have any adverse economic or competitive implications whatever...." 372 F. Supp., at 638. Competitors of the suburban 5-percent banks "expressed the view that the proposed mergers would have no effect whatsoever on competition as it relates to third parties." Ibid. The court found "as a fact that there is no presently existing substantial competition between the five percent defendant banks and C&S National, or inter sese, or with third parties, which would be affected by the proposed merger." Id., at 642.

[****22] [*100] III. The Issues Under the Sherman and Clayton Acts

It is common ground in this case that the 5-percent banks have been operated from the outset substantially as de facto branches of C&S, even though they are and have always been separate corporate entities. From these agreed-upon facts, the parties draw sharply divergent conclusions under the Sherman and Clayton Acts.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, provides: S

HN2 [↑] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce [\[\*\*2109\]](#) among the several States... is declared to be illegal...."I

The Government contends that the relationships between C&S and the six 5-percent banks constituted unreasonable restraints of trade on two alternative theories: (1) The relationships encompassed an agreement to fix interest rates and service charges among the 5-percent banks, and between these banks and C&S-owned banks, resulting in a "per se" violation of the Sherman Act (2) The programs unreasonably restrained interbank competition, [\[\*\*\*23\]](#) as to prices and services, by extending interbank cooperation far beyond the conventional "correspondent" arrangements which large city banks traditionally make with small banks in [\[\*\*\*55\]](#) outlying markets. C&S denies that its relationships with the 5-percent banks encompassed any agreements to fix prices and contends that the process of de facto branching was a procompetitive response to Georgia's anticompetitive ban on de jure branching, and thus legal under the Sherman [\[\*101\]](#) Act's "rule of reason." In the alternative, C&S contends that its relationships with the 5-percent banks were subject to the "exclusive primary jurisdiction" of the Federal Reserve Board and thus immune from attack under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

LEdHN[2A] [↑] [2A] Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, provides: S

HN3 [↑] "No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal [\[\*\*\*24\]](#) Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." <sup>12</sup>I

In the interval between the trial and the announcement of the District Court's opinion, the Supreme Court of Georgia had ruled in a separate suit brought by a group of independent suburban banks that C&S was in technical violation of the state bank holding company law with respect to the 5-percent banks in the Atlanta suburbs. Its judgment was grounded on the fact that, in addition to the 5-percent stock interest directly owned by C&S Holding, substantial numbers of shares were owned by C&S officers and directors. The state court accordingly directed the Georgia Banking Commissioner to file suit to force divestiture of excess stock holdings by these shareholders. Independent Bankers Assn. v. Dunn, 230 Ga. 345, 197 S.E. 2d 129, modified sub nom. Citizens & Southern National Bank v. Independent Bankers Assn., 231 Ga. 421, 202 S.E. 2d 78. The District Court's opinion took notice of this state-court judgment and concluded that it would not lead to genuine competition among the 5-percent banks or between them and C&S. 372 F. Supp., at 643. After the District Court's opinion was announced, the state Banking Commissioner, acting pursuant to the state-court judgment, ordered C&S Holding to limit its direct and indirect interest in the stock of correspondent associate banks to 5 percent and ordered C&S to "terminate any direct or indirect supervision of the... five percent banks beyond that which is available from The Citizens and Southern National Bank or the Citizens and Southern Holding Company to any bank that wishes to enter into a correspondent relationship with such bank or holding company." On June 3, 1974, the District Court amended its opinion nunc pro tunc to find that the Banking Commissione's "order does not change the underlying basis of the Court's decision that the proposed mergers will not substantially lessen competition." Id., at 643 n. 8.

<sup>12</sup> HN4 [↑] Pursuant to 12 U.S.C. § 1828 \(c\)\(7\)\(B\), referring to 12 U.S.C. § 1828 \(c\)\(5\)\(B\), bank mergers are made subject to Clayton Act standards unless "the anticompetitive effects of the proposed transaction are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served." Hence, in bank merger cases brought under the Clayton Act, there is a "convenience and needs' defense" that "comes into play only after a district court has made a de novo determination of the status of a bank merger under the Clayton Act." United States v. Marine Bancorporation, 418 U.S. 602, 626. See also United States v. Third National Bank in Nashville, 390 U.S. 171; United

LEdHN[2B] [↑] [2B]

[****25] The Government argues that the acquisitions of the five suburban banks approved by the FDIC would "lessen" competition when compared to what the situation would be if the defendant banks ceased their alleged [*102] violations of the Sherman Act. The Government further contends that, even if the present relationships between C&S and the 5-percent banks do not offend the Sherman Act, since the relationships might nevertheless change and the whole situation become more competitive for business or state-law reasons, the proposed acquisitions violate § 7 by foreclosing this possibility. C&S argues that the acquisitions would merely convert de facto into de jure branches, with no perceptible effect on competition compared with the present situation, which is asserted by C&S to be lawful under the Sherman Act. C&S urges that there is no realistic possibility of future competition among the defendant banks. In the alternative, C&S contends that each of the 5-percent banks operates in a distinct and segregatable market, so that the proposed acquisitions would not lessen competition in any relevant "section of the country"; and that any anticompetitive effects of the acquisitions are [****26] "outweighed in the public interest" because the acquisitions meet "the convenience and needs" of banking customers in the [***56] [**2110] Atlanta area.<sup>13</sup> The District Court did not reach these alternative contentions.

A. The Sherman Act Issues

1. The Question of Immunity

LEdHN[3] [↑] [3]The District Court thought the correspondent associate programs immune from Sherman Act scrutiny because they were subject to the "exclusive primary jurisdiction" of the Federal Reserve Board under the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, as amended. We do not so understand the law. The court relied on Whitney Bank v. New Orleans Bank, 379 U.S. 411, but the question in that case was the wholly different one of whether it is the Comptroller of the Currency or the [*103] Federal Reserve Board that has jurisdiction to determine whether transactions by a bank holding company conform with applicable [****27] state banking law. For guidance as to antitrust immunities, recourse must be had directly to the provisions of the Bank Holding Company Act, 12 U.S.C. § 1841 et seq.

The statutory scheme requires the "prior approval" of the Federal Reserve Board for certain transactions by bank holding companies - including transactions tending to create or enlarge holding company control of independent banks. 12 U.S.C. § 1842 (a).<sup>14</sup> The types of transactions requiring Board approval were expanded by amendments to the Act in 1966 and 1970.<sup>15</sup> Prior to [*104] 1966, it appeared that Board approval of a transaction States v. First City National Bank of Houston, 386 U.S. 361. Because of its disposition of the case, the District Court did not reach this additional defense which had been asserted by C&S.

<sup>13</sup> See n. 12, supra.

<sup>14</sup> "It shall be unlawful, except with the prior approval of the Board, (1) for any action to be taken that causes any company to become a bank holding company; (2) for any action to be taken that causes a bank to become a subsidiary of a bank holding company; (3) for any bank holding company to acquire direct or indirect ownership or control of any voting shares of any bank if, after such acquisition, such company will directly or indirectly own or control more than 5 per centum of the voting shares of such bank; (4) for any bank holding company or subsidiary thereof, other than a bank, to acquire all or substantially all of the assets of a bank; or (5) for any bank holding company to merge or consolidate with any other bank holding company...." 12 U.S.C. § 1842 (a).

<sup>15</sup> Prior to the amendments of July 1, 1966, Pub. L. 89-485, § 7, 80 Stat. 237, prior approval of the Board was not required for causing a bank to become a subsidiary of a bank holding company. In addition to adding this requirement, the 1966 amendments broadened the definition of a subsidiary from a company in which a bank holding company "own[s]" 25 percent of the voting shares to a company in which a bank holding company "directly or indirectly own[s] or control[s]" this percentage share. Compare § 4 of the 1966 amendments, 80 Stat. 236, with § 2 \(d\) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, 70 Stat. 133. The provision is now codified at 12 U.S.C. § 1841 (d)(1). The definition of subsidiary has also included, from the outset of the Act, "any company the election of a majority of whose directors is controlled in any manner" by a bank holding company. 12

provided no immunity from antitrust action, for a note then set out under 12 U.S.C. § 1841 stated that nothing in the Act was to be construed as a "defense" to an antitrust suit. The 1966 amendments to the Act formalized [***57] this provision, but also blunted its force by establishing an intricate procedure for accommodating the jurisdictions of the Board and the Justice Department.<sup>16</sup> Under [*105] [***28] the Act as amended, the Board "shall not approve" an [**2111] otherwise forbidden transaction unless it meets certain antitrust standards derived from, but not everywhere identical to, the standards of the Sherman Act and of § 7 of the Clayton Act. 12 U.S.C. § 1842 \(c\). The Board's [*106] order granting or denying an application for prior approval is subject to review in the courts of appeals. 12 U.S.C. § 1848. Furthermore, an approved transaction is stayed automatically for 30 days, during which time an antitrust suit challenging the transaction may be brought in the district court. 12 U.S.C. § 1849 \(b\). Such a suit is governed [***58] by the modified antitrust standards set out in § 1842 \(c\). If the antitrust suit is not brought within 30 days, and the transaction is consummated, S U.S.C. § 1841 \(d\)\(2\). The amendments of December 31, 1970, Pub. L. 91-607, § 101 (d), 84 Stat. 1763, further enlarged the definition of subsidiary to include "any company with respect to the management or policies of which such bank holding company has the power, directly or indirectly, to exercise a controlling influence, as determined by the Board, after notice and opportunity for hearing." 12 U.S.C. § 1841 \(d\)\(3\).

<sup>16</sup> § 11 of the 1966 amendments, Pub. L. 89-485, 80 Stat. 240. As presently in force, 12 U.S.C. § 1849, the provision (with subsection headings omitted) reads:

"(a) Nothing herein contained shall be interpreted or construed as approving any act, action, or conduct which is or has been or may be in violation of existing law, nor shall anything herein contained constitute a defense to any action, suit, or proceeding pending or hereafter instituted on account of any prohibited antitrust or monopolistic act, action, or conduct, except as specifically provided in this section.

"(b) The Board shall immediately notify the Attorney General of any approval by it pursuant to section 1842 of this title of a proposed acquisition, merger, or consolidation transaction, and such transaction may not be consummated before the thirtieth calendar day after the date of approval by the Board. Any action brought under the antitrust laws arising out of an acquisition, merger, or consolidation transaction approved under section 1842 of this title shall be commenced within such thirty-day period. The commencement of such an action shall stay the effectiveness of the Board's approval unless the court shall otherwise specifically order. In any such action, the court shall review de novo the issues presented. In any judicial proceeding attacking any acquisition, merger, or consolidation transaction approved pursuant to section 1842 of this title on the ground that such transaction alone and of itself constituted a violation of any antitrust laws other than section 2 of Title 15, the standards applied by the court shall be identical with those that the Board is directed to apply under section 1842 of this title. Upon the consummation of an acquisition, merger, or consolidation transaction approved under section 1842 of this title in compliance with this chapter and after the termination of any antitrust litigation commenced within the period prescribed in this section, or upon the termination of such period if no such litigation is commenced therein, the transaction may not thereafter be attacked in any judicial proceeding on the ground that it alone and of itself constituted a violation of any antitrust laws other than section 2 of Title 15, but nothing in this chapter shall exempt any bank holding company involved in such a transaction from complying with the antitrust laws after the consummation of such transaction.

"(c) In any action brought under the antitrust laws arising out of any acquisition, merger, or consolidation transaction approved by the Board under section 1842 of this title, the Board and any State banking supervisory agency having jurisdiction within the State involved, may appear as a party of its own motion and as of right, and be represented by its counsel.

"(d) Any acquisition, merger, or consolidation of the kind described in section 1842 \(a\) of this title which was consummated at any time prior or subsequent to May 9, 1956, and as to which no litigation was initiated by the Attorney General prior to July 1, 1966, shall be conclusively presumed not to have been in violation of any antitrust laws other than section 2 of Title 15.

"(e) Any court having pending before it on or after July 1, 1966, any litigation initiated under the antitrust laws by the Attorney General with respect to any acquisition, merger, or consolidation of the kind described in section 1842 \(a\) of this title shall apply the substantive rule of law set forth in section 1842 of this title.

"(f) For the purposes of this section, the term 'antitrust laws' means the Act of July 2, 1890 (the Sherman Antitrust Act), the Act of October 15, 1914 (the Clayton Act), and any other Acts in pari materia."

"the transaction may not thereafter be attacked in any judicial proceeding on the ground that it alone and of itself constituted a violation of any antitrust laws other than section 2 of Title 15 § 2 of the Sherman Act], but nothing in this chapter shall exempt any bank holding company involved in such a [****29] transaction from complying with the antitrust laws after the consummation of such transaction." 12 U.S.C. § 1849 (b).I

[****30] LEdHN[4]↑ [4] LEdHN[5]↑ [5]C&S can draw no consolation from these provisions. It is true that the staff of the Federal Reserve Board, in 1968, came to an "understanding" with C&S that the correspondent associate programs then in effect did not offend § 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act, **2112 12 U.S.C. § 1842 (a), and thus did not require formal Board "approval."<sup>17</sup> But this did not give rise to any *107 antitrust immunity. A consummated transaction acquires immunity under § 1849 (b) only when no antitrust ***59 action has been commenced within 30 days after *108 the transaction has received the "approval" of the Board, in an order which is subject to judicial review and which reflects application by the Board of the special antitrust standards of § 1842 (c). The immunity applies only to "an acquisition, merger, or consolidation transaction approved under section 1842 of this title in compliance with this chapter." § 1849 (b). The obvious purpose of the complex machinery in § 1849 (b) is ****31 to accord finality to formal actions of the Board not subjected to timely challenge under the antitrust laws. There is no indication that Congress wished to accord a similar finality to the informal views of the Board's staff.

[****32] LEdHN[6A]↑ [6A]We note, however, that the 1966 amendments also added a "grandfather" provision to the Bank Holding Company Act, 12 U.S.C. § 1849 (d): S

<sup>17</sup> The Secretary to the Federal Reserve Board described the investigation and the 1968 "understanding" in a 1972 letter to the Justice Department:

"The fact finding inquiry undertaken by Board staff into the relationship between Citizens & Southern and the other banking institutions referred to was begun in 1966 and continued into 1968. The principal focus of the inquiry concerned essentially two questions: (1) whether Citizens & Southern had unlawfully acquired a direct or indirect stock ownership in these banking institutions in excess of 5 per cent without first having secured the requisite prior Board approval; and (2) whether the banking institutions had unlawfully become subsidiaries of Citizens & Southern by virtue of the election of directors without first having received the requisite prior Board approval. The inquiry arose in 1966 out of information contained in Citizens & Southern's registration statement filed with the Board and in 1968 as a result of information supplied by the Comptroller of the Currency in connection with the merger of the Citizens and Southern National Bank and the Citizens and Southern Bank of Augusta. The inquiry referred to was not initiated as a result of any application filed with the Board for approval of an acquisition, merger, or consolidation transaction under section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act.

....
"The Board of Governors did not issue any order approving the relationships between Citizens & Southern and the other banking institutions under section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act.

....
"There was no determination made that approval of the Board under section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act was required for Citizens & Southern to retain an ownership interest of 5 per cent or less in the banking institutions referred to or to maintain the relationships with those banks in circumstances where Citizens & Southern did not elect a majority of the directors of any such bank. There was an understanding reached between members of the Board's staff and representatives of Citizens & Southern that in those cases where Citizens & Southern purchased 5 per cent or less of the stock of a bank, in some instances furnishing a principal operating officer for such bank, as well as other employee benefits, Citizens & Southern would not be deemed to have control of a majority of the directors of such bank on these facts alone. Further, where the foregoing circumstances existed and where control of additional shares was purchased by the bank's executive officer, control of such shares purchased would not be attributed to Citizens & Southern so long as Citizens & Southern did not finance the purchase of such shares, directly or indirectly. Finally, it was understood that even though Citizens & Southern was responsible, directly or indirectly, in placing one or two directors on the boards of such banks, if that number did not constitute a majority of directors of such bank, the Board's staff would not consider that Citizens & Southern could reasonably be held to have control of a majority of the directors of such bank."

"Any acquisition, merger, or consolidation of the kind described in section 1842 (a) of this title which was consummated at any time prior or subsequent to May 9, 1956, and as to which no litigation was initiated by the Attorney General prior to July 1, 1966, shall be conclusively presumed not to have been in violation of any antitrust laws other than section 2 of Title 15 [§ 2 of the Sherman Act]."I [**2113] Unlike § 1849 (b), this provision does not state or imply that the covered transactions must have received the formal approval of the Federal Reserve Board. This grandfather provision is not, like § 1849 (b), an attempt to accommodate the competing jurisdictions of the Federal Reserve Board under § 1842 and the Justice Department under the antitrust laws. Rather, the grandfather provision is a simple conferral of legislative amnesty for [*109] theretofore unchallenged transactions completed before Congress had clarified [****33] the nature of that accommodation.

The transactions by which C&S created a correspondent associate relationship with three of the 5-percent banks - the Sandy Springs, Chamblee, and Tucker banks -- were consummated prior to July 1966, and the Attorney General had taken no action against those transactions by that date. Those transactions thus fall within the terms of the grandfather provision, and the correspondent associate programs in force at those three banks are, therefore, immune from attack under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

LEdHN[6B] [↑] [6B] LEdHN[7] [↑] [7]While the formation by C&S of a de facto branch was a unique type of transaction, it may fairly be characterized as an "acquisition, merger, or consolidation of the kind described in § 1842 (a)." Forming a de facto branch was a multifaceted operation -- involving a multiplicity of purchases of stock by a number of parties, the adoption of the C&S logogram by the de facto branch, the connection of the de facto branch with C&S personnel and information programs, the structuring of the bank [****34] to receive and administer all C&S banking services, and the establishment of formal C&S influence over the board of directors at the de facto branch. But even before its scope was expanded in 1970, § 1842 (a) was concerned with more than the literal "acquisition" of stock: It took broad account of the "indirect" control of stock, and the control of boards of directors "in any manner," by bank [***60] holding companies.<sup>18</sup> The grandfather provision creates immunity under § 1 of the Sherman Act, not simply under § 7 of the Clayton Act, an indication that its protection extends not merely to literal acquisitions, mergers, and consolidations, but also to "restraints of trade" simultaneous with and functionally [*110] integral to such transactions. Though multifaceted, the formation by C&S of a de facto branch was a unitary and cohesive undertaking in the sense that all the facets were closely coordinated, simultaneously instituted, and designed to serve the single purpose of fitting the new bank into the "C&S system." There is virtually nothing about the present correspondent associate programs that was not fully evident and in place from the moment the programs were [****35] launched. There has been no increase in C&S control, nor any change in the way it has been exercised.

LEdHN[6C] [↑] [6C]Whether these programs violated § 1842 (a) -- as it applies today or as it applied when the programs began -- is not relevant to our inquiry.<sup>19</sup> By its terms, the grandfather provision applies to transactions of the kind described in § 1842 (a). We cannot believe that Congress wished to grant the benefits of the provision only to transactions that plainly transgressed § 1842 (a). Such a construction would make application of the grandfather provision not only cumbersome and time consuming,<sup>20</sup> but also flagrantly [**2114] inequitable. The formation of a

<sup>18</sup> See n. 15, supra.

<sup>19</sup> LEdHN[6D] [↑] [6D]The grandfather provision creates a conclusive presumption of compliance with the antitrust laws, but not necessarily of compliance with the provisions of the Bank Holding Company Act. See 12 U.S.C. § 1849 (f).

<sup>20</sup> If the correspondent associate program had received formal Board approval, any antitrust immunity created by the machinery in § 1849 (b) could, of course, have extended only to those features of the program clearly and expressly encompassed by the approval order. But § 1849 (d) applies even where, as here, there has been no approval order. If the provision were construed to cover only transactions actually violative of § 1842 (a), a court applying the provision would face the daunting -- and quite senseless -- task of dissecting a complicated, integrated transaction, such as the formation of a de facto branch, into those components which did and those which did not require prior approval of the Board.

de facto C&S branch involved the direct and [*111] indirect acquisition of bank stock, and the direct and indirect assertion of control over the governance and operations of a bank, by a bank holding company. Though unusual in [****36] form, such a transaction quite clearly falls within the class of dealings by bank holding companies which Congress intended, in § 1849 (d), to shield from retroactive challenge under the antitrust laws.

[****37] 2. De Facto Branching Under the Sherman Act

Three of the 5-percent banks -- the Park National, South DeKalb, and North Fulton banks - were formed after July 1, 1966, and their correspondent associate relationships with C&S are therefore beyond the reach of the grandfather provision of the Bank Holding Company Act and subject to scrutiny under the Sherman Act.

Each of these banks was founded ab initio through the sponsorship of C&S. Except for that sponsorship, they would very probably not exist. The record shows that other banking organizations had been unsuccessful [***61] in attempting to launch new banks in the area, and C&S affiliation and financial backing were instrumental in convincing state and federal banking authorities to charter these new banks. In short, these banks represented a policy by C&S of de facto branching through the formation of new banking units, rather than through the acquisition, and consequent elimination, of pre-existing, independent banks.<sup>21</sup> [****38] Of necessity, the Government's attack on this process [*112] is highly technical. Had the new banks been de jure branches of C&S, the whole process would have been beyond reproach. Branching allows established banks to extend their services to new markets, thereby broadening the choices available to consumers in those markets.<sup>22</sup> Having access to parent-bank financial support, expert advice, and proved banking services, branches of several city banks can often enter a market not yet large or developed enough to support a variety of independent, unit banks. Branching thus offers competitive choice to markets where monopoly or oligopoly might otherwise prevail. Furthermore, the branching process gives to outlying customers the benefit of sophisticated services which local unit banks might have little ability or incentive to deliver. The Government denies none of this, nor that C&S's program of de facto branching was, until 1970, the closest substitute to de jure branching allowed under Georgia law. Yet the Government insists that this de facto branching violated the Sherman Act because the parent bank and its de facto branches were legally distinct corporate [****39] entities and were obligated, therefore, to compete vigorously against each other.

It is, of course, conceded that C&S's de facto branches have not behaved as active competitors with respect either to each other or to C&S National and its majority-owned affiliates. But the Government goes further and contends that the correspondent associate programs have actually encompassed at least a tacit agreement to fix interest rates and service charges, see Interstate Circuit, [*2115] Inc. v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 227; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265, 275-276; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 723; United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, [*113] 142-143, so as to make the interrelationships -- to that extent at least - illegal "per se." See United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 224-226, n. 59; [****40] United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 47. C&S vigorously denies the existence of any agreement to fix prices. The evidence in the record is mixed.

LEdHN[8] [8]C&S did regularly notify the 5-percent banks -- as it did its de jure branches -- of the interest rates and [***62] service charges in force at C&S National and its affiliates. But HN5 [5] the dissemination of price information is not itself a per se violation of the Sherman Act. See Maple Flooring Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 563; Cement Mfrs. Protective Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 588; United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S. 333, 338 (concurring opinion). A few of the memoranda distributed by C&S could be construed as advocating price uniformity; on the other hand, the memoranda were almost without exception stamped "for information only," and the 5-percent banks were admonished by C&S, several times and very clearly, to use their own judgment in setting [****41] prices; indeed, the banks were warned that the antitrust laws required no less. The District Court observed that in fact prices did not often vary significantly among the 5-percent banks or between these banks and C&S National, but the court attributed this to the "natural deference of the recipient to information from one with greater expertise or better services." 372 F. Supp., at 628. And the court found as a fact that there was no "collusive price fixing." Id., at 626.

---

<sup>21</sup> The Tucker Bank, which was not founded as a new bank by C&S, comes within the coverage of the grandfather provision, as explained in the previous section. De facto branching through the de facto "acquisition" of pre-existing banks might raise questions under the Sherman Act considerably different from those presented by the C&S practice of de facto branching through founding new banks.

<sup>22</sup> See generally M. Mayer, The Bankers 83-91 (1974).

LEdHN[9] [9] Were we dealing with independent competitors having no permissible reason for intimate and continuous cooperation and consultation as to almost every facet of doing business, the evidence adduced here might well preclude a finding that the parties were not engaged in a [*114] conspiracy to affect prices. But, as we indicate below, the correspondent associate programs, as such, were permissible under the Sherman Act. In this unusual light, we cannot hold clearly erroneous the District Court's finding that the lack of significant price competition did not flow from a tacit agreement but instead was [****42] an indirect, unintentional, and formally discouraged result of the sharing of expertise and information which was at the heart of the correspondent associate programs. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 52 \(a\); United States v. General Dynamics Corp., 415 U.S. 486, 508.

The Government argues, alternatively, that the correspondent associate programs have gone far beyond conventional "correspondent" relationships, and that consequently these programs have "unreasonably" restrained competition among the 5-percent banks and between these banks and C&S National. The District Court was not persuaded by this theory: S

"The difference between a pure correspondent relationship and a correspondent associate relationship as set forth in the evidence is merely one of degree, a fine line of demarcation almost impossible for the Court to perceive.... In either case there is the flow of information as to rates, practices, etc., which the Government apparently applauds or at least condones in a correspondent banking relationship." 372 F. Supp., at 628.I

The court's dilemma is understandable, for in neither law nor banking custom has there developed a clear, fixed [**2116] [****43] definition of the correspondent relationship: <sup>23</sup> S

HN6 "Correspondent banking is an [***63] interbank practice whereby 'city' correspondent banks provide a cluster [*115] of services to smaller 'country' banks in exchange for interbank deposits. Dating back to colonial times, correspondent banking originally provided an extended network of independent unit banks with a link to financial centers, and at the same time furnished substitute central banking functions. Today, as a vital component of the era of electronic banking, it enables city correspondents to provide customers with a range of services that is varied, extensive and constantly expanding; one survey lists as many as fifty different categories."I

Among the services typically provided within a conventional correspondent arrangement are check clearing, help with bill collections, participation in large loans, legal advice, help in building securities portfolios, counseling as to personnel policies, staff training, help in site selection, auditing, and the provision of electronic data processing. Furthermore, like C&S's program, [****44] the correspondent respondent arrangement is often established as a prelude to a formal merger between the two banks. <sup>24</sup>

<sup>23</sup> Austin & Solomon, A New Antitrust Problem: Vertical Integration in Correspondent Banking, 122 U. Pa. L. Rev. 366, 367-368 (1973).

<sup>24</sup> Id., at 367-371. On the varieties of "service packages" to be found in correspondent banking, see also Knight, Correspondent Banking, Part I: Balances and Services, Fed. Reserve Bank of Kansas City Monthly Review (Nov. 1970); Knight, Correspondent Banking, Part II: Loan Participation and Fund Flows, Fed. Reserve Bank of Kansas City Monthly Review (Dec. 1970); Subcommittee on Domestic Finance of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, 88th Cong., 2d Sess., A Report on the Correspondent Banking System (Comm. Print Dec. 1964), and Correspondent Relations: A Survey of Banker Opinion (Comm. Print Oct. 1964); Nadler, Three Score Years of Correspondent Banking, Banking 54-55 (July 1968); 1970 Correspondent Banking Survey in Am. Banker 8-71 (Dec. 18, 1970).

[****45] [LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10] Nevertheless, C&S's program does appear to have gone several steps beyond conventional correspondent arrangements. [*116] C&S has closely advised the boards of directors of the 5-percent banks, supplied their chief executive officers, allowed full "branchlike" use of the C&S logogram, provided all the C&S services available at a de jure branch, dealt with the 5-percent banks through the C&S branch administration department, and provided constant and detailed information on prices and on all banking procedures.<sup>25</sup> It is conceivable that these relationships, separately or taken together, have restrained competition among the defendant banks more thoroughly or effectively than would have a conventional correspondence program. But even if the Government had proved this, which the District Court found not to be the case, that alone would not make out a Sherman Act violation. C&S has operated the 5-percent banks as de facto branches as a direct response to Georgia's historic restrictions on de jure branching, and the question therefore remains whether restraints of trade integral to this [****46] particular, unusual function are unreasonable. See Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238. We turn directly to that question.

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11] [LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12] The central message of the Sherman Act is that a business entity [***64] must find new customers and higher profits through internal expansion - that is, by competing successfully rather than by arranging treaties with its competitors. This Court has held that HN7 even commonly owned firms must compete against each other, if they hold themselves [****47] out as distinct entities. "The corporate interrelationships of the conspirators... [**2117] are not determinative of the applicability of the Sherman Act." United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 227. See also [Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., \[\*117\] 340 U.S. 211, 215](#); Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 598; Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 141-142. A fortiori, independently owned firms cannot escape competing merely by pretending to common ownership or control, for the pretense would simply perfect the cartel. We may also assume, though the question is a new one, that a business entity generally cannot justify restraining trade between itself and an independently owned entity merely on the ground that it helped launch that entity, by providing expert advice or seed capital. Otherwise the technique of sponsorship followed by restraint might displace internal growth as the normal and legitimate technique of business expansion, with unknowable consequences.

But these general principles do not dispose [****48] of the present case. C&S was absolutely restrained by state law from reaching the suburban market through the preferred process of internal expansion. De facto branching was the closest available substitute.<sup>26</sup> Just last Term, in a brief presented to this Court, the Justice Department told us that it was desirable and procompetitive for a bank to "[enter] de novo into areas foreclosed to branching by sponsoring the organization of an affiliate bank, and later acquiring the bank. This method of expansion is legal and a well-recognized practice used by large statewide banking organizations, and recognized by the federal banking authorities."<sup>27</sup> The [*118] Government acknowledged that such a sponsored bank could "be affiliated with its sponsor for purposes of correspondent relationships and other inter-bank services, including financial support," and that it could be "formed" by the parent bank's "officers, directors, or their associates" and could be "assisted" by the parent firm "until acquired and converted into a branch." <sup>28</sup> This is as good a curbstone description as any of precisely the relationships at issue in the present case. <sup>29</sup>

<sup>25</sup> Also, of course, C&S owns 5 percent of the stock in these banks -- not a common facet of correspondent banking. But the Government neither challenges C&S's 5-percent ownership, as such, nor suggests that it aggravates the alleged antitrust problems.

<sup>26</sup> This case does not require us to explore the conceivable antitrust problems raised by correspondent banking in all circumstances and in all its many forms. We deal here solely with the founding and maintenance of new de facto branch banks in the context of a state ban on de jure branching.

<sup>27</sup> Brief for United States 15-16, filed in No. 73-38, O.T. 1973, United States v. Marine Bancorporation (citations to record omitted).

[****49] [LEdHN\[13\]](#)↑ [13]To characterize these relationships [***65] as an unreasonable restraint of trade is to forget that their whole purpose and effect were to defeat a restraint of trade. Georgia's antibranching law amounted to a compulsory market division. HN8↑ Accomplished through private agreement, market division is a per se offense under the Sherman Act: S

"This Court has reiterated time and again that '[h]orizontal territorial limitations... are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition.'" United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608, quoting White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263.I

The obvious purpose and effect of a rigid antibranching law are to make the potential bank customers of suburban, small town, and rural areas a captive market for small unit banks.<sup>30</sup> C&S devised [**2118] a strategy to circumvent [*119] this statutory barrier. By providing new banking options to suburban Atlanta customers, [****50] while eliminating no existing options, the de facto branching program of C&S has plainly been procompetitive.

[****51] [LEdHN\[14\]](#)↑ [14]The Government suggests that a "conventional" correspondent relationship between C&S and the 5-percent banks would have been equally procompetitive and would have had the added virtue of facilitating competition among the 5-percent banks and between them and C&S National. This is mere speculation on the present record. Moreover, it is far from clear that a conventional correspondent relationship would have allowed C&S to put its full range of services into the suburban market which, in light of the antibranching law, was the very point of its policy and program. Putting to one side the total lack of realism in suggesting that C&S might have founded new banks that would have competed vigorously with it and with each other, cf. United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 169, the Government's argument wholly disregards C&S's ultimate goal of acquiring the new banks outright as soon as legally possible, a goal which the Government last year thought wholly proper. We hold that, in the face of the stringent state restrictions on [*120] branching, C&S's program of founding [****52] new de facto branches, and maintaining them as such, did not infringe § 1 of the Sherman Act.

[***66] B. The Clayton Act Claim

[LEdHN\[15A\]](#)↑ [15A]In the light of the previous discussion, disposition of the Clayton Act claim becomes relatively straight-forward. The issue under § 7 of the Clayton Act is whether the effect of the proposed acquisitions, approved by the FDIC, "may be substantially to lessen competition... in any line of commerce in any section of the country."

<sup>28</sup> Id., at 16 and 17.

<sup>29</sup> The brief noted with approval an example where the sponsored bank had, according to state banking authorities, become a "satellite" of the parent bank. Id., at 16 n. 16.

<sup>30</sup> The banking business is, of course, riddled with state and federal regulatory barriers to entry. See United States v. Marine Bancorporation, 418 U.S., at 628-629. But most of these barriers - e.g., chartering requirements - at least arguably serve the overriding public interest in maintaining customer confidence in the industry as a whole by assuring adequate financial stability and responsible management for all banks. Antibranching laws, on the other hand, are now widely recognized as a simple device to protect outlying unit banks from the rigors of regional competition. See Report, President's Commission on Financial Structure and Regulation 59-63, 113 (1971); Note, Bank Charter, Branching, Holding Company and Merger Laws: Competition Frustrated, 71 Yale L.J. 502, 515-516 (1962); Smith & Greenspun, Structural Limitations on Bank Competition, 32 Law & Contemp. Prob. 40, 45-46 (1967); Comment, Bank Branching in Washington: A Need for Reappraisal, 48 Wash. L. Rev. 611 (1973); Baker, State Branch Bank Barriers and Future Shock -- Will the Walls Come Tumbling Down?, 91 Banking L.J. 119 (1974). See also United States v. Marine Bancorporation, supra, at 612 n. 8.

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16] The Government established that C&S is the predominant banking institution in DeKalb County, Fulton County, North Fulton County, and the Atlanta area generally; that in these markets the commercial banking industry is quite highly concentrated in terms of market share statistics; and, of course, that the proposed acquisitions would increase C&S's nominal market shares.<sup>31</sup> The District Court did not decide whether the geographic markets proposed by the Government were the appropriate ones. But assuming, arguendo, that they were, the Government [****53] plainly made out a prima facie case of a violation of § 7 under several decisions of this Court. See United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362-366; United States v. Phillipsburg National Bank & Trust Co., 399 U.S. 350, 365-367; United States v. General Dynamics Corp., 415 U.S., at 497. It was thus incumbent upon C&S to show that the market-share statistics gave an inaccurate account of the acquisitions' probable effects on competition. [**2119] United States v. General Dynamics Corp., supra, at 497-498; United States v. Marine Bancorporation, 418 U.S., at 631. The District Court, like [*121] the FDIC before it, concluded that C&S had made the necessary showing that these proposed acquisitions would not "lessen" competition for the simple reason that under the correspondent associate program that had been continuously in effect, no real competition had developed or was likely to develop among the 5-percent banks, or between these and C&S National.

[****54] [LEdHN\[15B\]](#) [15B] As to present and past competition, the Government agrees there is and has been none. If this state of affairs were the result of violations of the Sherman Act, we agree with the Government that making the evil permanent through acquisition or merger would offend the Clayton Act. See Citizen Publishing Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131, 135. But we have already concluded that C&S's program of founding and maintaining new de facto branches in the face of Georgia's antibranching law did not violate the Sherman Act, and the de facto branches which C&S proposes to acquire were all founded ab initio with C&S sponsorship. It thus indisputably follows that the proposed acquisitions will extinguish no present competitive conduct or relationships. See United States v. Trans Texas Bancorporation, 412 U.S. 946, aff'd per curiam 1972 Trade Cas. p 74,257 (WD Tex.).

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17] As for future competition, neither the District Court nor the FDIC could find any realistic [****55] prospect that [***67] denial of these acquisitions would lead the defendant banks to compete against each other. The 5-percent banks theoretically could break their ties with C&S and its correspondent associate program, for these banks are each independently owned, but the record shows that none of the shareholders, directors, or officers of the 5-percent banks expressed any inclination to do so, and there was no evidence that the program has been other than beneficial and profitable for both C&S and the 5-percent [*122] banks.<sup>32</sup> The Clayton Act is concerned with "probable" effects on competition, not with "ephemeral possibilities." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 323.

[****56] For the reasons set out in this opinion, the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

<sup>31</sup> See Appendix to this opinion.

<sup>32</sup> In the entire history of C&S's 5-percent program, only the Stone Mountain Bank terminated its relationship with C&S. The record shows that that bank was not sponsored by C&S, that a large amount of the stock remained in the hands of a family hostile to C&S, that the bank's shareholders never intended to merge with C&S, and that the bank's board of directors resisted introduction of C&S banking methods. None of these factors exists with respect to the banks at issue in the present case.

It is true that C&S has recently been ordered by the State Banking Commissioner to trim back its percentage ownership of the suburban banks and to modify, in ways not yet fully clear, its "supervision" of those banks. See n. 11, supra. But the District Court considered this development and concluded that it would not lead to true competition among the defendant banks. The court explicitly found that the changes ordered would not affect the bonds of inter-bank consultation and cooperation which are at the heart of the correspondent associate program. 372 F. Supp., at 638, 643, and n. 8.

It is so ordered.

APPENDIX TO OPINION OF THE COURT

The District Court summarized the structure of various banking markets in the Atlanta area, and the statistical effects of the proposed acquisitions, in the following way, 372 F.Supp., at 629-632:

DeKalb County

Treating C&S National, C&S Emory and C&S DeKalb as one banking organization, there are 19 commercial banking organizations operating offices in DeKalb [*123] [**2120] County. In terms of total deposits and total individual, partnership and corporation ("IPC") demand deposits held by all banking offices located in DeKalb County, the top 4 banks, respectively, are C&S (offices of C&S National in DeKalb County, C&S Emory and C&S DeKalb), First National Bank of Atlanta, Trust Company of Georgia, and Fulton National Bank. In terms of outstanding loans, the top 4 banks are C&S (offices of C&S National in DeKalb County, C&S Emory and C&S DeKalb), Trust Company of Georgia, Tucker and Fulton National Bank. The shares of total deposits, total loans and total IPC demand deposits accounted for by the four [****57] largest banks are as follows:

IPC
	Total	Total	Demand
	Deposits	Loans	Deposits
Banks	(12/31/71)	(12/31/71)	(6/30/72)
Top 2	38.3%	42.7%	34.8%
Top 3	51.8%	52.4%	47.3%
Top 4	62.9%	61.8%	58.2%

C&S (offices of C&S National in DeKalb County, C&S Emory and C&S DeKalb) accounts for the following [***68] shares of total deposits, total loans and total IPC demand deposits held by all banking offices located in DeKalb County.

IPC
	Total	Total	Demand
	Deposits	Loans	Deposits
Bank	(12/31/71)	(12/31/71)	(6/30/72)
C&S	24.1%	28.5%	20.1%

Chamblee, Park National and South DeKalb, all of whose banking offices are located in DeKalb County, account for the following shares of total deposits, total loans and total IPC demand deposits held by all banking offices located in DeKalb County: [*124]

IPC
	Total	Total	Demand
	Deposits	Loans	Deposits
Banks	(12/31/71)	(12/31/71)	(6/30/72)
Chamblee	5.7%	5.7%	5.9%
Park National	2.9%	1.5%	3.0%
South DeKalb	1.8%	2.5%	1.9%

IPC
	Total	Total	Demand
Banks	Deposits	Loans	Deposits
	(12/31/71)	(12/31/71)	(6/30/72)
	10.4%	9.7%	10.8%

Depending on the unit of measurement, Chamblee is the third [****58] or fourth largest bank headquartered in DeKalb County.

If the proposed mergers were approved, the C&S system (which would include offices of C&S National and South DeKalb) would account for 34.5% of the total deposits of all the banking offices located in DeKalb County, 38.2% of the total loans and 30.9% of the total IPC demand deposits. C&S would also be acquiring the third (or fourth) largest bank headquartered in DeKalb County.

If the proposed mergers were approved, the four largest banks would account for the following shares of the DeKalb County market:

IPC
	Total	Demand
Banks	Deposits	Loans	Deposits
Top 2 after mergers	48.7%	52.4%	45.6%
Top 3 after mergers	62.2%	62.1%	58.1%
Top 4 after mergers	73.3%	71.5%	69.0%

Thus, if the proposed mergers were approved, the C&S system's share of total deposits, for example, would increase from about 24% to 34%, or an increase of about 40%. The share of total deposits accounted for by the top 4 banks would increase from about 63% to 73%, while that of the top 2 and top 3 banks would increase from 38% to 49% and from 52% to 62%, respectively.

[*125] North Fulton County

There [****59] are nine commercial banks operating offices in North Fulton County. In terms of total deposits and total IPC demand deposits held by all banking offices located in North Fulton County, the top 4 banks, respectively, are Sandy Springs, Roswell Bank, Fulton Exchange Bank and North Fulton. On June 30, 1970, however, there were only five banks operating offices in North Fulton County: the four banks just mentioned and Trust Company of Georgia Bank of Sandy Springs, which is now a branch of Trust Company of Georgia. The shares of total deposits and IPC demand [**2121] deposits accounted for by the four largest banks are as follows:

Banks	IPC
	Demand	Demand	Total
	Deposits	Deposits	Deposits
	(6/30/72)	(6/30/70)	(6/30/70)
Top 2	57.8%	66.4%	64.0%
Top 3	70.1%	78.9%	80.2%
Top 4	80.3%	90.7%	91.9%

As of June 30, 1972, the North [***69] Springs Office of C&S East Point accounted for 1.7% of total IPC demand deposits held by all banking offices located in North Fulton County.

As of June 30, 1972, Sandy Springs and North Fulton accounted for 36.4% and 10.2%, respectively, of total IPC demand deposits held by all banking offices located [****60] in North Fulton County. As of June 30, 1970, they accounted for 34.4% and 11.7%, respectively, of total deposits held by all commercial banking offices located in North Fulton County.

If the proposed mergers were approved, the C&S system (which would include C&S East Point's North Springs Office, North Fulton and Sandy Springs) would [*126] account for 48.3% of the total IPC demand deposits held by all commercial banking offices located in North Fulton County and the four largest banks would account for the following shares of IPC demand deposits in North Fulton County:

IPC
Demand
Banks	Deposits
Top 2 after mergers	69.7%
Top 3 after mergers	82.0%
Top 4 after mergers	92.0%

Thus, if the proposed mergers were approved, the C&S system's <sup>1</sup> share of total IPC demand deposits held by all banking offices located in North Fulton County would increase from 1.7% to 48.3%, and the C&S system's share in this area would be twice that of the second largest banking organization, the Roswell Bank. Two of the four largest banks in the area would become part of the Atlanta area's largest banking organization. In addition, the share of total IPC demand deposits [****61] accounted for by the top 4 banks would increase from 80.3% to 92.0%, while the shares of the top 2 and top 3 banks would increase from 57.8% to 69.7% and from 70.1% to 82.0%, respectively.

Fulton County

Treating C&S National and C&S East Point as one banking organization, there are 18 commercial banking organizations operating offices in Fulton County. In terms of total loans, deposits and IPC demand deposits held [*127] by all banking offices located in Fulton County, the top 4 banks, respectively, are C&S (offices of C&S National in Fulton County and C&S East Point), First National Bank of Atlanta, Trust Company of Georgia and Fulton National Bank. The shares of total loans, deposits [****62] and IPC demand deposits accounted for by the four largest banks are as follows:<sup>2</sup>

IPC
	Total	Total	Demand
	Loans	Deposits	Deposits
Banks	(12/31/71)	(12/31/71)	(6/30/72)
Top 2	63.0%	55.2%	61.3%
Top 3	78.8%	73.9%	78.1%
Top 4	89.4%	87.0%	88.8%

C&S (offices of C&S National in Fulton County and C&S East Point) [***70] accounts for the following shares of total loans, deposits and IPC demand deposits held by all banking offices located in Fulton County:

---

<sup>1</sup> These computations consider the 5-percent defendant banks as completely separate entities (rather than as constituting a part of the C&S system as actually is the case), and of course, do not relate to competition as such but rather to the assignment of statistical proportions to the various entities involved.

<sup>2</sup> See n. 1, supra.

IPC
	Total	Total	Demand
	Loans	Deposits	Deposits
Bank	(12/31/71)	(12/31/71)	(6/30/72)
C&S	37.2%	30.8%	32.1%

[**2122] Sandy Springs and North Fulton, both of whose banking offices are located in Fulton County, account for the following shares of total loans, deposits and IPC demand deposits held by all banking offices located in Fulton County:

IPC
	Total	Total	Demand
	Loans	Deposits	Deposits
Banks	(12/31/71)	(12/31/71)	(6/30/72)
Sandy Springs	.7%	.8%	.9%
North Fulton	.3%	.3%	.3%
	1.0%	1.1%	1.2%

[****63] [*128] Depending on the unit of measurement, Sandy Springs is the eighth or ninth largest banking organization in Fulton County.

If the proposed mergers were approved, the C&S system (which would include offices of C&S National in Fulton County, C&S East Point, Sandy Springs and North Fulton) would account for 38.2% of the total loans held by all banking offices in Fulton County, 31.9% of the total deposits and 33.3% of the total IPC demand deposits.

If the proposed mergers were approved, the four largest banks would account for the following shares in Fulton County:

IPC
	Total	Total	Demand
	Loans	Deposits	Deposits
Banks
Top 2 after mergers	64.0%	56.3%	62.5%
Top 3 after mergers	79.8%	75.0%	79.3%
Top 4 after mergers	90.4%	88.1%	90.0%

Atlanta Area

Treating C&S National, C&S Emory, C&S DeKalb and C&S East Point as one banking organization, there are 31 commercial banking organizations operating offices in the Atlanta area, six of which operate offices in both Fulton and DeKalb Counties. In terms of total loans, deposits, and IPC demand deposits held by all banking offices located in the Atlanta area, the top 4 banks, [****64] respectively, are C&S (offices of C&S National, C&S East Point, C&S Emory and C&S DeKalb), First National Bank of Atlanta, Trust Company of Georgia and Fulton National Bank. The shares of total loans, deposits and IPC demand deposits accounted for by the four largest banks are as follows: [*129]

IPC
Total	Total	Demand

	Loans	Deposits	Deposits
Banks	(12/31/71)	(12/31/71)	(6/30/72)
Top 2	60.5%	53.2%	58.0%
Top 3	76.2%	71.3%	74.3%
Top 4	86.7%	84.2%	85.0%

C&S (offices of C&S National, C&S Emory, C&S East Point and C&S DeKalb) accounts for the following shares of total loans, deposits and IPC demand deposits held by all banking offices located in the Atlanta area:

	IPC
	Total	Total	Demand
	Loans	Deposits	Deposits
Bank	(12/31/71)	(12/31/71)	(6/30/72)
C&S	36.4%	30.0%	30.6%

[***71] Chamblee, Park National, South DeKalb, Sandy Springs and North Fulton account for the following shares of total loans deposits and IPC demand deposits held by all banking offices located in the Atlanta area:

	IPC
	Total	Total	Demand
	Loans	Deposits	Deposits
Banks	(12/31/71)	(12/31/71)	(6/30/72)
Chamblee	.5%	.6%	.8%
Park National	.1%	.3%	.4%
South DeKalb	.2%	.2%	.3%
Sandy Springs	.6%	.7%	.8%
North Fulton	.3%	.2%	.2%
	1.7%	2.0%	2.5%

[****65] If their deposits (as of 12/31/71) were combined ($ 71,142,252), these five banks would be the equivalent of the sixth largest banking organization in the Atlanta area. Sandy Springs and Chamblee are, alone, the tenth and eleventh largest banking organizations in the Atlanta area, respectively.

[*130] If the proposed mergers were approved, the C&S system (which would include the offices of C&S National in [**2123] the Atlanta area, C&S Emory, C&S DeKalb, C&S East Point, Chamblee, Park National, South DeKalb, Sandy Springs and North Fulton) would account for 38.2% of the total loans held by all banking offices located in the Atlanta area, 32.0% of the total deposits and 33.0% of the total IPC demand deposits. C&S would also be acquiring the tenth and eleventh largest banks in the Atlanta area.

If the proposed mergers were approved, the four largest banks would account for the following shares in the Atlanta area:

	IPC
	Total	Total	Demand
	Loans	Deposits	Deposits
Banks	(12/31/71)	(12/31/71)	(6/30/72)
Top 2 after mergers	62.2%	55.2%	60.5%
Top 3 after mergers	77.9%	73.3%	76.8%

	IPC
	Total	Total	Demand
Banks	Loans	Deposits	Deposits
Top 4 after mergers	88.4%	86.2%	87.5%

Dissent by: BRENNAN

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, [****66] with whom MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS and MR. JUSTICE WHITE join, dissenting.

I agree that the District Court erred in holding that the correspondent associate programs are immune from Sherman Act scrutiny because they are subject to the "exclusive primary jurisdiction" of the Federal Reserve Board under the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, as amended. The District Court also erred, however, in holding that the United States did not prove the violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and § 7 of the Clayton Act, alleged, and I therefore dissent from the affirmance of its judgment.

The issues under the Clayton and Sherman Acts, while logically independent, are related; both present the question whether a large commercial bank, already possessing [*131] a substantial share of the Atlanta market, may lawfully acquire other banks, rather than expand internally. Three banks now control more than 75% of the commercial banking business in Atlanta. Today's decision assures that their dominions will soon be extended as arrangements they have made with independent banks to operate as "de facto branches" are solidified through merger. I cannot agree with today's decision that the Government [****67] is powerless to prevent this result.

[**72] I. The Sherman Act

The "5-percent" banks in this litigation entered into a relationship with C&S far exceeding that of "correspondent banking," the provision of check clearance, investment advice, personnel training, or other specialized services in arm's-length transactions.<sup>1</sup> From the very inception of these relationships, it was contemplated that [*132] the 5-percent banks would seek, and C&S would provide, advice and guidance with respect to virtually every business decision of significance. C&S provided advisory directors -- treated by all parties as actual directors -- made available operating manuals covering banking practices in minute detail,<sup>2</sup> and maintained a constant [**2124] flow

---

<sup>1</sup> Relationships labeled "correspondent banking" may call for careful scrutiny as the sale of specialized services by the corresponding bank shades into "consultation" by the correspondent on every business decision of significance. Correspondent banking, like other intra-industry interaction among firms or their top management, provides an opportunity both for the kind of education and sharing of expertise that ultimately enhances consumer welfare and for "understandings" that inhibit, if not foreclose, the rivalry that antitrust laws seek to promote. As one commentator on commercial banking practices has observed:

"[C]ommunication, especially when it comes from those at the top of a power hierarchy, tends to facilitate conflict resolution. Perhaps a great deal should not be made of this, but competition is a form of conflict and, in the present context, conflict resolution is a form of restraint on competition." Phillips, Competition, Confusion, and Commercial Banking, 19 J. of Finance 32, 42 (1964).

Since the relationship of C&S to the 5-percent banks goes well beyond ordinary "correspondent banking," this case does not present an occasion for further examination of the lawfulness of these more limited interconnections among firms.

<sup>2</sup> The Consumer Credit Operating Bulletin, 7 App. E-1024 (DX-311), is illustrative. It explains what bank records should be established, the methods for arranging a repayment plan, and the procedures to be followed in perfecting a security interest. In addition, the manual sets forth C&S practice with respect to charges for late payments, extensions of repayment deadlines, and the notification of a borrower's employer about repayment delinquency.

of bulletins whose contents ranged from admonitions about the antitrust laws to exhortations to "get the rates [on loans] up." C&S, through its Branch Supervision Department, monitored the performance of the management of the 5-percent banks and was instrumental in having replaced those who did not measure up. These arrangements had the desired effect. The elaborate fabric of "consultations," of seeking "advice and guidance, [****68]" eliminated the opportunity for rivalry among the defendant banks. The District Court found "no presently existing substantial competition between the five-percent banks and C&S National, or inter sese." 372 F. Supp. 616, 642 \(1974\).

[****69] A

The Court concludes that antitrust scrutiny of the affiliation of three 5-percent banks is foreclosed by the grandfather provision of § 11 (d) of the Bank Holding Company Act, 12 U.S.C. § 1849\(d\). That holding is plainly a distorted expansion of § 11 (d) beyond its language and purpose.

The concept of an amnesty for unchallenged structural arrangements in commercial banking first appeared [*133] in the 1966 amendments to the Bank Merger Act, 80 Stat. 7. In those amendments, Congress, responding in part to this Court's decisions in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321 \(1963\), [****73] and United States v. First National Bank & Trust Co. of Lexington, 376 U.S. 665 \(1964\), attempted to mesh antitrust considerations with review of proposed bank mergers by the appropriate regulatory agency. The resulting provisions, which mandate Justice Department participation in the regulatory approval process as well as consideration by the regulatory agencies of "competitive factors," and permit an antitrust suit within 30 days of regulatory approval, appear today in the Federal Deposit Insurance [****70] Act, 12 U.S.C. § 1828. See United States v. First City National Bank of Houston, 386 U.S. 361 \(1967\); United States v. Third National Bank in Nashville, 390 U.S. 171 \(1968\). The 1966 amendments also included a grandfather provision, 80 Stat. 10, that conferred immunity from antitrust challenge (except under § 2 of the Sherman Act) upon any "merger, consolidation, acquisition of assets, or assumption of liabilities" consummated before June 17, 1963, the date of the decision in Philadelphia National Bank.

A few months after enactment of the Bank Merger Act amendments, the "antitrust" provisions were written almost verbatim into the Bank Holding Company Act. Unlike their Merger Act counterparts, the 1966 amendments to the Bank Holding Company Act were not principally addressed to integrating antitrust standards with the regulatory process, but rather to expanding the Federal Reserve Board's jurisdiction and regulatory powers. The antitrust provisions of the Holding Company Act amendments received little legislative attention; the brief reference to them in the legislative history indicates that their purpose [****71] [*134] was to "apply to bank holding company cases the same procedures as are now provided in bank merger cases...."<sup>3</sup> Among the provisions so borrowed from the earlier Bank Merger Act amendments was the grandfather provision, § 11 (d).

Because [**2125] of congressional preoccupation with the regulatory features of the 1966 amendments to the Bank Holding Company Act, interpretation of the antitrust provisions may involve as much an attribution of congressional intent as a discernment of it. This is particularly the case with respect to § 11 (d), which was transplanted from one regulatory statute to another with seemingly scant attention to the differences in the regulatory environment. [****72] Objections that grandfathering holding company acquisitions posed policy questions different from the retroactive immunization of mergers were quickly brushed aside,<sup>4</sup> and § 11 (d) was swept into law along with the other antitrust provisions. Thus, despite whatever dissimilarity of underlying policy considerations may have been exposed, Congress indicated that it considered the grandfather provisions in both statutes [***74] to advance substantially similar purposes. Accordingly, however difficult may be the discernment of the congressional intent expressed in § 11 (d), we must look for assistance to its counterpart in the Bank Merger Act, the only guidepost Congress has left us.

---

<sup>3</sup> As initially enacted by the House, the amendments contained no antitrust provisions. See generally H.R. Rep. No. 534, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. (1965). These were added later by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee and subsequently adopted by both Houses. See S. Rep. No. 1179, 89th Cong., 2d Sess., 10 (1966).

<sup>4</sup> See letter from Deputy Attorney General Clark to Sen. Robertson, reprinted at 112 Cong. Rec. 12385 (1966), and accompanying remarks by Sen. Robertson, ibid.

The grandfather provision of the Bank Merger Act amendments most assuredly did not provide sanctuary [*135] for then-unchallenged price-fixing, market-division, [****73] or other cartel activity by banks. Congressional concern was much more narrowly directed. Philadelphia National Bank rejected a literal interpretation of § 7 of the Clayton Act that would have limited its application to stock acquisitions by banks, an interpretation that nevertheless enjoyed some acceptance prior to the decision. Congress was concerned about the difficulty of unscrambling pre-Philadelphia National Bank mergers undertaken in reliance upon the literal interpretation of § 7, which the Court ultimately rejected, and accordingly immunized them from suit under that section.<sup>5</sup> But a provision barring suit under § 1 of the Sherman Act was also necessary to safeguard the same mergers because of our decision in Lexington Bank, supra. Thus, although the resulting grandfather provision covered both the Clayton and Sherman Acts (except Sherman Act § 2), its purpose was to shield structural arrangements of the sort the Government challenged in Philadelphia National Bank and was continuing to challenge in the District Courts thereafter.<sup>6</sup>

[****74] Against the foregoing background, we confront the language of the counterpart in the Bank Holding Company Act. As enacted in 1966, § 11 (d) shielded an "acquisition, merger, or consolidation of the kind described in § 3 (a) of this Act." Section 3 (a) provided then, as today, that: S

"(a) It shall be unlawful, except with the prior [*136] approval of the Board, (1) for any action to be taken that causes any company to become a bank holding company; (2) for any action to be taken that causes a bank to become a subsidiary of a bank holding company; (3) for any bank holding company to acquire direct or indirect ownership or control of any voting shares of any bank if, after such acquisition, such company will directly or indirectly own or control more than 5 per centum of the voting shares of such bank; (4) for any bank holding [**2126] company or subsidiary thereof, other than a bank, to acquire all or substantially all of the assets of a bank; or (5) for any bank holding company to merge or consolidate with any other bank holding company."<sup>7</sup><sup>1</sup>

Section 3 (a) is thus the operative provision of the statute permitting [***75] the Federal Reserve Board to regulate [****75] the events therein described.

By "grandfathering" an "acquisition, merger, or consolidation of the kind described in § 3 (a)," Congress obviously exempted from antitrust challenge only the events for which Board approval would have been required. None of the transactions defined by § 3 (a), however, includes those features of the "correspondent associate" relationship that the Government is challenging under Sherman Act § 1 in this case. Clauses (4) and (5) of § 3 (a) refer, respectively, to an acquisition of assets and a merger of two holding companies. Clause (3) refers to ownership of voting stock by a holding company; the stock ownership by C&S is not, however, the salient feature of the affiliative relationship and indeed is not challenged in this case. Clauses (1) and (2) address the creation of a holding company-subsidiary relationship. [*137] The [****76] definitional provisions of § 2 \(d\) have undergone recent expansion, but in 1966 they designated a bank as a "subsidiary" if a holding company either (1) directly or indirectly owned or controlled 25% or more of its voting stock, or (2) controlled in any manner the election of a majority of its directors. These two conditions would often be satisfied simultaneously, and indeed shortly after enactment of the forerunner of this provision in 1956 it was suggested that the second condition was redundant. See Note, The Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, 9 Stan. L. Rev. 333, 337, and n. 59 (1957). Congress, however, was apparently concerned that stock interests could be so structured that a holding company could elect a majority of directors without satisfying the 25% ownership requirement.<sup>8</sup> Whether or not this fear was well-founded, it is clear that satisfaction of either condition required an arrangement whereby the holding company had the power to vote stock.

<sup>5</sup> See S. Rep. No. 299, 89th Cong., 1st Sess., 1-7 (1965); H.R. Rep. No. 1221, 89th Cong., 2d Sess., 4 (1966); 111 Cong. Rec. 13304-13305 (1965) (remarks of Sen. Robertson); 112 Cong. Rec. 2454 (1966) (remarks of Rep. Cellar).

<sup>6</sup> See United States v. Crocker-Anglo National Bank, 223 F. Supp. 849 (ND Cal. 1963); United States v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 240 F. Supp. 867 (SDNY 1965), cited in Hearings on S. 1698 before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, 89th Cong., 1st Sess., 446, 463 (1965).

<sup>7</sup> Section 3 (a) had been in force since enactment of the Bank Holding Company Act in 1956. The 1966 amendment added clause (2) to its provisions.

[****77] In establishing its "correspondent associates" C&S did not engage in the transactions described by § 3 (a) in 1966 and therefore sheltered by § 11 (d). Indeed, because of state-law restrictions C&S could not resort to the methods described by § 3 (a) of the Holding Company Act and turned instead to more informal arrangements, including "understandings." While the functional equivalent of a holding company-subsidiary relationship could perhaps be created through informal affiliation, § 3 (a), at least until quite recently, has been [*138] triggered by the formality of control of voting stock. To be sure, § 2 (d) has always referred to a subsidiary as one whose stock is "directly or indirectly" owned or controlled or whose election of directors is controlled "in any manner" by the holding company.<sup>9</sup> But there has been no suggestion by Congress, nor by the Board, that this language would embrace the less formal arrangements [***76] by which the C&S banks operated in complete harmony with C&S. Indeed, the [**2127] statutory clues suggest the contrary, that Congress was concerned with powers attached to stock, and that "indirect" ownership or control merely referred [****78] to their exercise derivatively, through an intermediary.<sup>10</sup>

[****79] [*139] In the 1970 amendments to the Holding Company Act, 84 Stat. 1760, Congress expanded the reach of § 3. The Act now defines "control" to include a relationship whereby a company "directly or indirectly exercises a controlling influence over the management and policies of the bank...." § 2(a)(2)(C), 12 U.S.C. § 1841(a)(2)(C). Congressional preoccupation with stock is still evident since there is a statutory presumption that "any company which directly or indirectly owns, controls, or has power to vote less than 5 per centum of any class of voting securities of a given bank or company does not have control over that bank or company." § 2 (a) (3). Nevertheless the Board has by regulation established a rebuttable presumption of control where a company S

"enters into any agreement or understanding with a bank... such as a management contract, pursuant to which the company or any of its subsidiaries exercises significant influence with respect to the general management or overall operations of the bank...." 12 CFR § 225.2 (b) (3) (1975).I

---

<sup>8</sup> See H.R. Rep. No. 609, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., 12-13 (1955); 101 Cong. Rec. 8028 (1955) (remarks of Rep. Patman). In the form initially adopted by the House, the Act would have defined as a subsidiary a bank over which another company was found by the Federal Reserve Board to "exercise a controlling influence." The Senate amendment substituted the provision ultimately enacted, the requirement of control of the election of directors. See S. Rep. No. 1095, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., 5 (1955).

<sup>9</sup> The reference to indirect ownership, though contained in § 2 (a) of the 1956 Act (defining holding company), was inadvertently omitted from § 2 (d). See 70 Stat. 134. The 1966 amendments corrected the omission. See S. Rep. No. 1179, 89th Cong., 2d Sess., 8 (1966).

<sup>10</sup> Section 2 (g) of the Act defined indirect control or ownership:

"For the purposes of this Act -

"(1) shares owned or controlled by any subsidiary of a bank holding company shall be deemed to be indirectly owned or controlled by such bank holding company;

"(2) shares held or controlled directly or indirectly by trustees for the benefit of (A) a company, (B) the shareholders or members of a company, or (C) the employees (whether exclusively or not) of a company, shall be deemed to be controlled by such company; and

"(3) shares transferred after January 1, 1966, by any bank holding company (or by any company which, but for such transfer, would be a bank holding company) directly or indirectly to any transferee that is indebted to the transferor, or has one or more officers, directors, trustees, or beneficiaries in common with or subject to control by the transferor, shall be deemed to be indirectly owned or controlled by the transferor unless the Board, after opportunity for hearing, determines that the transferor is not in fact capable of controlling the transferee."

This provision was added by the 1966 amendments to adopt interpretations previously made by the Board. S. Rep. No. 1179, supra, at 8.

Arguably, the Board's interpretation would now bring within § 3 the affiliation [****80] of the 5-percent banks with C&S. But the Board's interpretation is based upon recent legislation expanding the reach of the Board's regulatory authority.<sup>11</sup> Since I do not suppose Congress intended in 1966 to immunize transactions of the kind it had not yet brought within § 3, the 1970 amendment is relevant only because it demonstrates the limited character [*140] of the transactions previously embraced by § 3 and "grandfathered" under § 11 (d).

The conclusion that Congress had traditionally not brought informal arrangements within § 3 (a) was reinforced by the provisions of § 4 (a) (2) of the original Act, 70 Stat. 135, which forbade a bank holding company to S

[***77] "engage in any business other than that of banking or of managing or controlling banks [***81] or of furnishing services to or performing services for any bank of which it owns or controls 25 per centum or more of the voting shares."<sup>12</sup>

This provision was enacted in 1956, and as early as 1960 the Board by regulation interpreted "services" to include many of the functions C&S has performed for the 5-percent banks. Included in the Board's interpretation are: "(1) [establishment] and supervision of loaning policies; (2) direction of the purchase [**2128] and sale of investment securities; (3) selection and training of officer personnel; (4) establishment and enforcement of operating policies; and (5) general supervision over all policies and practices." 12 CFR § 225.113 \(1975\). The differentiation of these activities from "control or management" and their inclusion in § 4 of the Act rather than in § 3 vividly exposes the fallacy of today's holding invoking § 11 (d) to foreclose scrutiny of the "correspondent associate" relationship of three of the 5-percent banks. Since § 11 (d) shielded only the events then described in § 3 (a), the conclusion is compelled that all the 5-percent banks are properly before us on the Sherman Act counts. [***82]<sup>12</sup> Accordingly, I turn to the merits.

[*141] B

The District Court found that there were no express agreements among the defendant banks to fix prices or divide markets that would call for application of the per [***83] se rule, United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150 \(1940\); United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S. 350 \(1967\), but it also found that the effect of the association was to eliminate all competition among the banks involved.

The Court finds the restraints embodied in the "correspondent associate" relationship reasonable because of state-law restrictions that blocked, for a time, the avenue of internal expansion by C&S. If the question before us were the lawfulness of these arrangements at their inception, this solution might be satisfactory. The question would be a close one, however, calling for a delicate balancing of the immediate benefits of expanded banking services against the more distant, but nevertheless real, danger of permitting the restraints necessary to circumvent de jure barriers to expansion to continue longer than the conditions that justified them. The inquiry would, of course, have to take into account the possibility that expansion would occur under less restrictive conditions. New entry by an [***78] unaffiliated bank<sup>13</sup> or entry [*142] with a more limited form of sponsorship -- a period of initial [***84] assistance, followed by a withdrawal of the sponsor's influence, at least to a conventional correspondent relationship<sup>14</sup> -- might have sufficed to provide the expansion cited here as a justification for [**2129] incidental restraints. The judicial resources consumed by such an inquiry in any particular case would not be insubstantial, and the very difficulty of making such judgments has in many cases led us to prefer per se rules. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Co., supra, at 220-221; Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 \(1958\); United States v. Sealy, Inc., supra; United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596 \(1972\). See also United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S., at 362.

<sup>11</sup> Congress specifically noted the expansion. See S. Rep. No. 91-1084, p. 6 (1970); H.R. Rep. No. 91-1747, p. 12 (1970). See also Note, The Bank Holding Company Act Amendments of 1970, 39 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 1200, 1213-1214 (1971).

<sup>12</sup> My conclusion that the affiliative relationships are not within the terms of § 3 (a), at least prior to the 1970 amendment, is further supported by the scope and outcome of the 1968 investigation of C&S undertaken by the Federal Reserve Board staff. The investigation was convened specifically to inquire into a possible violation of § 3. The staff was principally concerned with the pattern of ownership of the stock of the 5-percent banks, especially by C&S officers and employees. Ultimately the staff found this acceptable, so long as C&S did not finance the purchases. There is no indication, however, that the staff concerned itself with communications between C&S and the 5-percent banks with respect to such matters as interest rates, loan repayment policies, or other terms of business.

<sup>13</sup> There is little doubt that pent-up consumer demand for additional banks would sooner or later induce efforts to organize new ones. More questionable, however, is whether regulatory authorities would respond promptly to permit new entry. In general, regulatory policy has been thought to retard formation of new banking institutions. See Peltzman, Entry in Commercial Banking, 8 J. Law & Econ. 11 (1965).

[****85] The issue in this case, however, is not whether the affiliation of the 5-percent banks was lawful at its inception, but whether it could lawfully continue, for the Government sought only an injunction. By the time the Government brought suit, Georgia law permitted [*143] C&S to branch freely in the Atlanta suburbs. Because the rule of reason requires us to assess the lawfulness of a restraint in light of all the circumstances, Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238 \(1918\), the lawfulness of the practices at their inception, even if assumed, could not be controlling, for changes in market conditions can deprive once-reasonable arrangements of their justification. United States v. Jerrold Electronics, 187 F. Supp. 545, 560-561 \(ED Pa. 1960\), aff'd, 365 U.S. 567 (1961). See also United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 596-598 \(1957\). The claimed desirability of the challenged arrangements as a response to now-repealed restrictions of Georgia law is therefore relevant only insofar as it may also be claimed that continuation of such arrangements undisturbed by [****86] the Sherman Act would be vital to their creation were Georgia to reinstate its restrictions in the future. Put another way, we need concern ourselves with the lawfulness of "de facto branches" as a response to state-law restrictions only if appellees make a convincing showing that [***79] no bank would engage in "de facto branching" without a guarantee of perpetual noninterference from the antitrust laws.

Certainly it is open to C&S to argue that no rational banker would sponsor a de facto branch unless assured that the resulting relationships could continue in perpetuity. But this sort of argument has seldom carried the day in this Court, see United States v. Sealy, supra; United States v. Topco Associates, supra, and I do not find it persuasive in this case. A bank hemmed in by state antibranching restrictions will presumably find it profitable to take a small stock interest in an independent bank, to offer assistance and thereby attempt to win consumer loyalty through an expanded use of its own name. C&S presumably found these arrangements [*144] profitable at their inception. The record does not show whether C&S actually charged [****87] the 5-percent banks for such assistance as site selection, economic surveys, equipment procurement, and other promotional services; there is no suggestion, however, that C&S provided these services at an ultimate loss, and presumably gains ultimately accrued to the provider. True, C&S hoped to cement the relationships through merger, but it is not clear that these expectations were essential to the initial undertaking. Indeed, C&S continued to provide assistance to certain banks as to which there was little prospect of ultimate acquisition by C&S. 2 App. 378-379. Our concern, in any event, lies not with protecting the expectations of C&S but with avoiding disincentives to the provision of desirable services. Sponsorship will be profitable to a sponsor bank assuming that there is a demand for the services of the sponsored bank and that the sponsor can recoup in some fashion a return for its assistance. These conditions should be [**2130] sufficient to induce a profit-seeking bank, chafing under antibranching restrictions, to sponsor a new entrant even if permanent arrangements are forbidden.

This case, therefore, does not present an occasion for consideration whether the restraints [****88] incident to "de facto branching" are lawful when undertaken in response to a prohibition of de jure branching, a position the Court says the Government took last Term in United States v. Marine Bancorporation, 418 U.S. 602 \(1974\). The restraints incident to the affiliation of the 5-percent banks with C&S must be examined in light of conditions prevailing at the time of suit, which include the ability of C&S to branch freely in the Atlanta suburbs.

<sup>14</sup> The record demonstrates that such a chain of events is possible. Citizens & Southern Bank of Stone Mountain, organized in 1957 with C&S assistance, functioned as a correspondent associate from 1959 until 1970. At that time it declined an offer of acquisition by C&S and became independent of the C&S system. Appellees have argued that Stone Mountain represents a unique case because a majority of voting stock remained in the hands of a single family not intimately tied to the C&S system. This contention is not wholly supported by the record, since in his trial testimony Mr. Mills Lane, President of C&S from 1946 to 1970, referred to three other banks having a similar structure of ownership. (2 App. 378-379, referring to Pelham, Fayetteville, Hogansville). The example of Stone Mountain does, in any event, demonstrate that sponsorship can occur under conditions ultimately leading to independence of the sponsored institution.

The arrangements between C&S and the 5-percent banks resemble a "common brand" marketing agreement or a franchising arrangement in which the franchisor [*145] itself deals directly with consumers as well as providing entrepreneurial skill and other assistance to franchisees. Such combinations may, under certain circumstances, enhance competition. Common-brand marketing may permit a group of small firms to exploit promotional economies and thereby compete with larger enterprises whose business spans several geographic submarkets. Franchising may facilitate entry by allowing an entering firm to save on promotional expenses and to purchase needed entrepreneurial assistance. Restraints invariably accompany [****89] these combinations for the purpose of promoting [***80] product uniformity, for some standardization of product is indispensable to the success of the scheme. Because notwithstanding accompanying restraints such combinations may on balance enhance competition, it would be a mistake to regard them as per se or even presumptively unlawful, and lower courts have not done so. See, e.g., United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 319 F. Supp. 1031, 1038 (ND Ill. 1970), rev'd on other grounds, 405 U.S. 596 (1972); Siegel v. Chicken Delight, Inc., 448 F. 2d 43 (CA9 1971); Susser v. Carvel Corp., 332 F. 2d 505 (CA2 1964). But the Sherman Act limits the scope of cooperation incident to such arrangements. The participants may not fix prices or divide markets. United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., supra; United States v. Sealy, Inc., supra; United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365 (1967). Such combinations, moreover, warrant careful scrutiny when their participants collectively possess a dominant share of a common market, as to which there are [****90] substantial barriers to entry, for these conditions enhance the profitability of price collusion among participants and thus may tempt them to standardize price as well as other product attributes.

Despite the acceptability generally of common-brand [*146] or franchising arrangements, they pose particular difficulty in the commercial banking context. Many features of a commercial bank's services are set by regulation, thus inhibiting competition by restricting the number of product features that individual firms are free to vary. With interest rates on loans fixed by law, for example, competition is confined to such "non-price" features as collateral requirements or repayment policies. With competition thus already delimited, few additional restraints incident to a cooperative scheme can be tolerated before competition is extinguished entirely. Moreover, the entry barriers posed by regulation enhance the danger that incidental cooperation will be extended to abolish all rivalry. These considerations suggest that cooperative arrangements in commercial banking should be permitted only where their competitive benefits are clear, and where the combined market shares of the participants [****91] dispel the fear that price collusion will accompany them.

The situation here fails to satisfy the test. The combined shares of C&S and the 5-percent banks are substantial under any of the alternative definitions of [**2131] the geographic market cited by the Court. Ante, at 122-130.<sup>15</sup> Furthermore, the cooperative arrangements [***81] involve [*147] not a group of small firms allied to challenge a larger rival, United States v. Topco Associates, supra, but instead the dominant firm which thereby extends its hegemony. In a market so concentrated as is commercial banking in Atlanta, the most must be made of opportunity for rivalry among existing firms. Cf. United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S., at 372. The 5-percent banks are now substantial, thriving enterprises,<sup>16</sup> inhibited from competing with C&S only by the "correspondent <sup>15</sup> The District Court made no finding as to the relevant geographic market, accepting the Government's contentions arguendo in deciding the case. The Court apparently does the same. A report prepared by the Government's expert witness concluded that while the Atlanta Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area was too large to be considered an integral geographic market, the constituent counties of DeKalb and Fulton were "reasonable geographic areas within which it is appropriate to analyze the competitive effects of the proposed mergers." 4 App. E-83. This is an approximation, of course, since the same report revealed that a number of DeKalb residents use Fulton County banks, thus suggesting that in certain respects DeKalb and Fulton County banks compete for the same business. Accordingly, it appears that defining the geographic market to include both DeKalb and Fulton Counties would be justified under our cases. See United States v. Phillipsburg National Bank & Trust Co., 399 U.S. 350 (1970); United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321 (1963).

<sup>16</sup> Three of the 5-percent banks - Sandy Springs, Chamblee, and Tucker -- had deposits exceeding $15 million as of January 1, 1970. North Fulton, Park National, and South DeKalb were smaller and more recently organized, but all have experienced

"associate" relationship. I would hold that the Government is entitled to an injunction, specifically against the continued use by the 5-percent banks of the C&S name, the continued use of advisory directors furnished by C&S, and continued "consultations" between the management of the 5-percent banks [****92] and C&S, including the flow of memoranda for "advice and guidance."

[****93] II. The Clayton Act

The Court concedes that under our prior decisions the Government has established a prima facie case under § 7. Ante, at 120. But the Court affirms the District Court's determination that the acquisitions add nothing [*148] of anticompetitive significance to the pre-existing "correspondent associate" relationship. Since I have concluded that the relationship itself violates the Sherman Act, I also disagree with the Court's affirmance of the District Court on the Clayton Act issue. Since, in my view, appellees can no longer rely upon the affiliation to rebut the Government's prima facie case, I would remand to the District Court for consideration of the "convenience and needs" defense of 12 U.S.C. § 1828\(c\)\(5\)\(B\). But I also disagree with the Court's conclusion that the acquisitions add nothing of significance to the existing arrangements, and I would therefore reverse even if I accepted the Court's disposition of the Sherman Act counts. I state briefly my reasons for so concluding.

If not acquired, the 5-percent banks have the power to break their ties with C&S, and the likelihood that any would do so may be expected [****94] to increase as the demand for their services grows and as their managements acquire additional business experience. However risky these ventures may have been at their inception, the recent performance of the 5-percent banks attests to their present viability.<sup>17</sup> Because of the continuing [*2132] population growth of the Atlanta area, the banks may anticipate an expanding demand for their services. These circumstances might well induce the management of a 5-percent bank to assume a more independent posture, at least to shop around among other large [***82] Atlanta banks for more conventional "correspondent" services.<sup>18</sup>

[****95] [*149] Quite apart from what the managements of the 5-percent banks might do, it is most improbable that C&S would long be happy with existing arrangements if acquisition were enjoined. The record demonstrates the aggressive, expansionist performance of C&S, having increased its Atlanta offices from three in 1946 to more than 100 by the time of trial. It is quite inconceivable that such a firm would long be content to continue operations through de facto branches in which its interest was limited to 5%. The formation of de jure branches, ultimately in competition with former "correspondent associates," would be a plausible result.

The foregoing are not "ephemeral possibilities," Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 323 \(1962\), that antitrust analysis should ignore. Section 7 was intended, as we have repeatedly said, to "arrest anticompetitive tendencies in their 'incipiency.'" United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S., at 362. In applying the § 7 standards, we are obliged to hold acquisitions unlawful if a reasonable likelihood of a substantial lessening of competition under future conditions is discernible. [****96] E.g., United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. vigorous growth. The average annual rate of deposit growth for the two years preceding January 1, 1970, was 102% for North Fulton and 50% for Park National, in contrast to a national average rate for all commercial bank deposits during the same period of slightly more than 10%. South DeKalb, organized in late 1969, had more than doubled its deposits from $ 1.5 to $ 3 million during the first half of 1970. 5 App. E-422, E-546.

<sup>17</sup> See n. 16, supra.

<sup>18</sup> Officers of both C&S and the 5-percent banks testified that they had not contemplated a severance of relations, but this testimony does not establish what would happen if the acquisitions were enjoined. Had the managements testified that they would not consider severance under any circumstances, such declarations of an intention to eschew a course dictated by economic self-interest would have to be viewed with skepticism. See United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526, 568-570 \(1973\) (MARSHALL, J., concurring in result).

Whether the 5-percent banks would have been formed at all had their principals expected the Clayton Act to bar ultimate acquisition by C&S is a different question. I am not troubled by it for essentially the same reasons that have led me to conclude above that enjoining continuation of correspondent associate relationships would not deter sponsorship of de facto branches under state-law restrictions on de jure branching. See supra, at 143-144.

441, 458 \(1964\); FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 577 \(1967\); United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526, 539 \(1973\) (DOUGLAS, J., concurring in part). While inquiry as to future market conditions and performance inevitably involves speculation, fidelity to the [*150] congressional purpose requires us to resolve reasonable doubts in favor of the preservation of independent entities. This is perforce true where, as here, the market is highly concentrated and the acquiring firm is the dominant one.

My Brother WHITE reminded us in his dissent last Term in United States v. Marine Bancorporation, 418 U.S., at 653: S

"In the last analysis, one's view of this case, and the rules one devises for assessing whether this merger should be barred, turns on the policy of § 7 of the Clayton Act to bar mergers which may contribute to further concentration in the structure of American business.... The dangers of concentration are particularly acute in the banking business, since 'if the costs of banking services and credit are allowed [***97] to become excessive by the [***83] absence of competitive pressures, virtually all costs, in our credit economy, will be affected....'" (Citations omitted.)

[**2133] Today's decision permits C&S, the dominant commercial bank in Atlanta, further to entrench its position. Two other rivals, which together with C&S control more than 75% of the banking business in Atlanta, may now be expected to follow suit, acquiring their own "de facto branches."<sup>19</sup> I believe these developments exemplify the "further concentration in the structure of American business" that § 7 was designed to prevent. Accordingly, I would reverse the judgment of the District Court.

References

---

Applicability [***98] of federal antitrust laws as affected by other Federal Statutes or by Federal Constitution--Supreme Court cases

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 198- 201, 420

12 Am Jur Legal Forms2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 178:91-178:93

12 USCS 1841 et seq., 1849\(d\); 15 USCS 1, 18

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 34, 34.5

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 17.5

L Ed Index to Annos, Grandfather Clause; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Branch Banks, Grandfather Clause; National Banks; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Banks; Branch Banks; Grandfather Clause ;Monopolies and Restraints of Trade; National Banks

Annotation References:

Applicability of federal antitrust laws as affected by other federal statutes or by Federal Constitution--Supreme Court cases. 45 L Ed 2d 841.

The doctrine of primary administrative jurisdiction, as defined and applied by the Supreme Court. 38 L Ed 2d 796.

---

<sup>19</sup> The record indicates that at the time C&S applied for regulatory approval of the acquisitions, its two largest competitors, First National Bank of Atlanta and Trust Company of Georgia, had sought and in some cases had obtained, approval for similar acquisitions of affiliated banks. 1 App. E-39.

422 U.S. 86, *150; 95 S. Ct. 2099, **2133; 45 L. Ed. 2d 41, ***83; 1975 U.S. LEXIS 113, ****98

Construction, [****99] by Supreme Court of the United States, of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), dealing with acquisition by one corporation of stock of another. 14 L Ed 2d 784.

What is a "branch bank" within statutes regulating the establishment of branch banks. 23 ALR3d 683.

Construction of "grandfather clause" of statute or ordinance regulating or licensing business or occupation. 4 ALR2d 667 .

Application to banks and banking institutions of antimonopoly or antitrust laws. 83 ALR2d 374.

Branch banks. 30 ALR 927, 50 ALR 1340, 136 ALR 471.

---

End of Document

Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued January 14, 1976 ; July 6, 1976

No. 75-122

Reporter

428 U.S. 579 *; 96 S. Ct. 3110 **; 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141 ***; 1976 U.S. LEXIS 4 ****; 1976-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P60,947; 15 P.U.R.4th 401

CANTOR, DBA SELDEN DRUGS CO. v. DETROIT EDISON CO.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT

Core Terms

---

Sherman Act, regulation, exemption, anti trust law, state law, tariff, immunity, monopoly, electricity, antitrust, state action, light bulb, anticompetitive, commerce, light-bulb, customers, state regulation, bulbs, private conduct, state statute, pre-empted, private action, state official, resale price, state-action, compliance, sovereign, cases, interstate commerce, legislative history

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > Authorities & Powers

Communications Law > Regulators > US Federal Communications Commission > Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN1[] Public Utility Commissions, Authorities & Powers

Mich. Comp. Laws § 460.6 (1970) vests the Michigan Public Service Commission (commission) with complete power and jurisdiction to regulate all public utilities in the state. The statute confers express power on the commission to regulate all rates, fares, fees, charges, services, rules, conditions of service, and all other matters pertaining to the formation, operation, or direction of such public utilities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN2[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

428 U.S. 579, *579; 96 S. Ct. 3110, **3110; 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, ***1141; 1976 U.S. LEXIS 4, ****1

State authorization, approval, encouragement, or participation in restrictive private conduct confers no antitrust immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN3 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, by declaring that their action is lawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Governments > Public Improvements > General Overview

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The nature of governmental regulation of private utilities is such that a utility may frequently be required by the state regulatory scheme to obtain approval for practices a business regulated in less detail would be free to institute without any approval from a regulatory body. Approval by a state utility commission of such a request from a regulated utility, where the regulatory commission has not put its own weight on the side of the proposed practice by ordering it, does not transmute a practice initiated by the utility and approved by the regulatory commission into "state action." A private utilities' exercise of the choice allowed by state law where the initiative comes from it and not from the state, does not make its action in doing so "state action" for purposes of the U.S. Const. amend. XIV.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

HN5 Energy & Utilities, Utility Companies

The federal antitrust laws are applicable to electrical utilities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN6 Procedural Matters, Jurisdiction

An implied repeal of the antitrust laws may be found only if there exists a plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN7 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The threshold inquiry in determining if an anticompetitive activity is state action of the type the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, was not meant to proscribe is whether the activity is required by the state acting as sovereign.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Product Promotions

HN8 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The only way the legality of any program may be tested under the Sherman Act is by determining whether the persons who administer it have acted lawfully. The Act proscribes the conduct of persons, not programs.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

A Michigan druggist who sold electric light bulbs sued a Michigan electric utility for federal antitrust violations by virtue of the utility's lamp exchange program under which it supplied its residential customers with free light bulbs when their bulbs burned out. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan entered summary judgment for the utility on the ground that although its lamp exchange program predated state regulation of electric utilities, the Michigan Public Service Commission had approved the utility's tariff including the omission of any separate charge for bulbs, and the tariff could not be changed without the Commission's approval, so that the lamp exchange program was exempt from antitrust liability (392 F Supp 1110). The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit affirmed without opinion (513 F2d 630).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. In an opinion by Stevens, J., expressing the views of five members of the court, it was held (in Parts I and III of the opinion) that neither the approval of the tariff nor the fact that it could not be terminated without Commission approval implied an antitrust exemption. Stevens, J., joined by Brennan, White and Marshall, JJ., also expressed the view (in Parts II and IV of the opinion) that the case was not controlled by Parker v Brown, 317 US 341, 87 L Ed 315, 63 S Ct 307, and that the extent of any state action exemption from the antitrust laws should be decided by case-by-case adjudication of specific controversies.

Burger, Ch. J., concurred in the judgment and in all except Parts II and IV of the opinion, as to which he declared that Parker v Brown, supra, cannot be limited to suits against state officials.

Blackmun, J., concurred in the judgment on the grounds that inconsistent state laws are pre-empted by the Sherman Act, and that state-sanctioned anti-competitive activity must fall if its potential harms outweigh its benefits.

Stewart, J., joined by Powell and Rehnquist, JJ., dissented on the ground that the utility's compliance with the tariff is immune from antitrust liability.

Headnotes

---

428 U.S. 579, *579; 96 S. Ct. 3110, **3110; 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, ***1141; 1976 U.S. LEXIS 4, ****1

ERROR §1408 > summary judgment -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

On certiorari to review the affirmance of summary judgment for the defendant, the United States Supreme Court will resolve doubts in favor of the plaintiff to the extent that the facts are disputed.

MONOPOLIES §9 > state action -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

State authorization, approval, encouragement or participation in restrictive private conduct confers no antitrust immunity.

MONOPOLIES §11 > utilities -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B]

The federal antitrust laws are applicable to electrical utilities.

MONOPOLIES §9 > state regulation -- effect -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The mere possibility of conflict between state regulatory policy and federal antitrust policy is an insufficient basis for implying an exemption from the federal antitrust laws.

MONOPOLIES §9 > state regulation -- effect -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Assuming that there are situations in which the existence of state regulation should give rise to an implied exemption from the federal antitrust laws, the standards for ascertaining the existence and scope of such an exemption must be at least as severe as those applied to federal regulatory legislation.

MONOPOLIES §20 > regulated industries -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

The relevant aspect of the agency's jurisdiction must be sufficiently central to the purposes of the enabling statute so that implied repeal of the antitrust laws is necessary to make the regulatory scheme work before the antitrust laws will be deemed impliedly repealed.

MONOPOLIES §7 > immunity -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

Implied antitrust immunity is not favored, and can be justified only by a convincing showing of clear repugnancy between the antitrust laws and the regulatory system.

STATUTES §229 > implied repeals -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

The cardinal rule, applicable to legislation generally, is that repeals by implication are not favored.

MONOPOLIES §44 > electric utility -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

Neither a state's approval of an electric utility's tariff embodying no separate charge for light bulbs nor the fact that the program may not be terminated until a new tariff is filed is a sufficient basis for implying an exemption from the federal antitrust laws for that program.

MONOPOLIES §9 > exemptions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

The absence of an exemption from the antitrust laws does not mean that those laws have been violated.

Syllabus

---

Respondent, a private utility that is the sole supplier of electricity in southeastern Michigan, also furnishes its residential customers, without additional charge, with almost 50% of the most frequently used standard-size light bulbs under a longstanding practice antedating state regulation of electric utilities. This marketing practice for light bulbs is approved, as part of respondent's rate structure, by the Michigan Public Service Commission, and may not be changed unless and until respondent files, and the Commission approves, a new tariff. Petitioner, a retail druggist selling light bulbs, brought an action against respondent, claiming that it was using its monopoly power in the distribution of electricity to restrain competition in the sale of light bulbs in violation of the Sherman Act. The District Court entered a summary judgment against petitioner, holding on the authority of *Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341*, that the Commission's approval of respondent's light-bulb marketing practices exempted the practices [****2] from the federal antitrust laws, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. Held: Neither Michigan's approval of respondent's present tariff nor the fact that the light-bulb-exchange program may not be terminated until a new tariff is filed, is sufficient basis for implying an exemption from the federal antitrust laws for that program. Pp. 592-598.

(a) The State's participation in the decision to have a light-bulb exchange program is not so dominant that it is unfair to hold a private party responsible for its conduct in implementing the decision, but rather the respondent's participation in the decision is sufficiently significant to require that its conduct, like comparable conduct by unregulated businesses, conform to applicable federal law. Pp. 592-595.

(b) Michigan's regulation of respondent's distribution of electricity poses no necessary conflict with a federal requirement that respondent's activities in competitive markets satisfy antitrust standards. Merely because certain conduct may be subject to state regulation and to the federal antitrust laws does not necessarily mean that it must satisfy inconsistent standards, but, even assuming inconsistency, this would not mean [****3] that the federal interest must inevitably be subordinated to the State's; moreover, even assuming that Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to apply to areas of the economy primarily regulated by a State, the enforcement of the antitrust laws would not be foreclosed in an essentially unregulated area such as the electric light-bulb market. Pp. 595-598.

513 F. 2d 630, reversed and remanded.

STEVENS, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BRENNAN, WHITE, and MARSHALL, JJ., joined, and in which (except as to Parts II and IV) BURGER, C.J., joined. BURGER, C.J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, and concurring in part, post, p. 603. BLACKMUN, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, post, p. 605. STEWART, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which POWELL and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined, post, p. 614.

Counsel: Burton I. Weinstein argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Robert A. Holstein, Michael L. Sklar, and David L. Nelson.

George D. Reycraft argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Donald I. Baker, Leon S. Cohan, and Dean J. Landau.

Solicitor General Bork argued the cause for the United [****4] States as amicus curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were Assistant Attorney General Kauper, Barry Grossman, and Carl D. Lawson.

Howard J. Trienens argued the cause for Michigan Bell Telephone Co. et al. as amici curiae urging affirmance. With him on the brief were Theodore N. Miller and C. John Buresh.*

Judges: Burger, Brennan, Stewart, White, Marshall, Blackmun, Powell, Rehnquist, Stevens.

Opinion by: STEVENS

Opinion

---

[*581] [***1144] [**3113] MR. JUSTICE STEVENS delivered the opinion of the Court. +

In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, the Court [****5] held that the Sherman Act was not violated by state action displacing competition in the marketing of raisins. In this case we must decide whether the Parker rationale immunizes private action which has been approved by a State and which must be continued while the state approval remains effective.

The Michigan Public Service Commission pervasively regulates the distribution of electricity within the State and also has given its approval to a marketing practice which has a substantial impact on the otherwise unregulated business of distributing electric light bulbs. Assuming, arguendo, that the approved practice has unreasonably restrained trade in the light-bulb market, the District Court<sup>1</sup> and the Court of Appeals<sup>2</sup> held, on the authority of * Sumner J. Katz filed a brief for the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

---

+ Parts II and IV of this opinion are joined only by MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, MR. JUSTICE WHITE, and MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL.

Parker, that the Commission's approval exempted the practice from the federal antitrust laws. Because we questioned the applicability of Parker to this situation, we granted certiorari, 423 U.S. 821. We now reverse.

[****6] [LEdHN\[1\]](#) [↑] [1]Petitioner, a retail druggist selling light bulbs, claims that respondent is using its monopoly power in the distribution of electricity to restrain competition in the sale of bulbs in violation of the Sherman Act.<sup>3</sup> Discovery [*582] and argument in connection with defendant's motion [***1145] for summary judgment were limited by stipulation to the issue raised by the Commission's approval of respondent's light-bulb-exchange program. We state only the facts pertinent to that issue and assume, without opining, that without such approval an antitrust violation would exist. To the extent that the facts are disputed, we must resolve doubts in favor of the petitioner since summary judgment was entered against him. We first describe respondent's "lamp exchange program," we next discuss the holding in Parker v. Brown, and then we consider whether that holding should be extended to cover this case. Finally, we comment briefly on additional authorities on which respondent relies.

[****7] I

Respondent, the Detroit Edison Co., distributes electricity and electric light bulbs to about five million people in southeastern Michigan. In this marketing area, respondent is the sole supplier of electricity, and supplies consumers with almost 50% of the [**3114] standard-size light bulbs they use most frequently.<sup>4</sup> Customers are billed for the electricity they consume, but pay no separate charge for light bulbs. Respondent's rates, including the omission of any separate charge for bulbs, have been approved by the Michigan Public Service Commission, and may not be changed without the Commission's approval. Respondent must, therefore, continue [*583] its lamp-exchange program until it files a new tariff and that new tariff is approved by the Commission.

Respondent, or a predecessor, has been following the [****8] practice of providing limited amounts of light bulbs to its customers without additional charge since 1886.<sup>5</sup> [****9] In 1909 the State of Michigan began regulation of electric utilities.<sup>6</sup> In 1916 the Michigan Public Service Commission first approved a tariff filed by respondent setting forth the lamp-supply program. Thereafter, the Commission's approval of respondent's tariffs has included implicit approval of the lamp-exchange program. In 1964 the Commission also approved respondent's decision to eliminate the program for large commercial customers.<sup>7</sup> The elimination of the service for such customers became effective as part of a general rate reduction for those customers.

<sup>1</sup> 392 F. Supp. 1110 \(ED Mich. 1974\).

<sup>2</sup> 513 F. 2d 630 \(CA6 1975\).

<sup>3</sup> Petitioner's complaint asserts that respondent's light-bulb-exchange program violates § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14. In his brief in this Court, petitioner has also argued that the program constitutes unlawful tying violative of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The complaint seeks treble damages and an injunction permanently enjoining respondent from requiring the purchase of bulbs in connection with the sale of electrical energy. The complaint purports to be filed on behalf of all persons similarly situated, but the record contains no indication that the plaintiff moved for a class determination pursuant to Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 23 \(c\).

<sup>4</sup> Respondent does not distribute fluorescent lights or high-intensity discharge lamps; if bulbs of those types were included, respondent's share of the market would only be about 23%.

<sup>5</sup> Under respondent's practice, new residential customers are provided with bulbs in "such quantities as may be needed" for all of their permanent fixtures; thereafter, respondent replaces residential customers' burned out light bulbs in proportion to their estimated use of electricity for lighting. The customer incurs no direct charge for such bulbs at the time they are furnished to him, but normally turns in any burned-out bulbs to obtain a new supply.

<sup>6</sup> See Mich. Comp. Laws §§ 460.551, 460.559 (1970).

<sup>7</sup> Apparently many commercial customers use relatively large quantities of fluorescent lighting and therefore have less interest in the bulb-exchange program.

In 1972 respondent provided its [***1146] residential customers with 18,564,381 bulbs at a cost of $2,835,000.<sup>8</sup> [****10] In its accounting to the Michigan Public Service Commission, respondent included this amount as a portion of its cost of providing service to its customers. Respondent's accounting records reflect no direct profit as a result of the [*584] distribution of bulbs. The purpose of the program, according to respondent's executives, is to increase the consumption of electricity. The effect of the program, according to petitioner, is to foreclose competition in a substantial segment of the light-bulb market.<sup>9</sup>

The distribution of electricity in Michigan is pervasively regulated by the Michigan Public Service Commission. HN1[] A Michigan statute<sup>10</sup> vests the Commission with "complete power and jurisdiction to regulate all public utilities in the state...." The statute confers express power on the Commission "to regulate all rates, fares, fees, charges, services, rules, conditions of service, and all other matters pertaining to the formation, operation, or direction of such public utilities." Respondent advises us that the heart of the Commission's function is to regulate the "furnishing... [of] electricity for the production of light, heat or power...."<sup>11</sup>

[****11] The distribution of electric light bulbs in Michigan is unregulated. The statute creating the Commission contains no direct reference to light bulbs. Nor, as far as we have been advised, does any other Michigan [**3115] statute authorize the regulation of that business. Neither the Michigan Legislature, nor the Commission, has ever made any specific investigation of the desirability of a lamp-exchange program or of its possible effect on competition in the light-bulb market. Other utilities regulated by the Michigan Public Service Commission do not follow the practice of providing bulbs to their customers at no [*585] additional charge. The Commission's approval of respondent's decision to maintain such a program does not, therefore, implement any statewide policy relating to light bulbs. We infer that the State's policy is neutral on the question whether a utility should, or should not, have such a program.

Although there is no statute, Commission rule, or policy which would prevent respondent from abandoning the program merely by filing a new tariff providing for a proper adjustment in its rates, it is nevertheless apparent that while the existing tariff remains [***12] in effect, respondent may not abandon the program without violating a Commission order, and therefore without violating state law. It has, therefore, been permitted by the Commission to carry out the program, and also is required to continue to do so until an appropriate filing has been made and has received the approval of the Commission.

Petitioner has not named any public [***1147] official as a party to this litigation and has made no claim that any representative of the State of Michigan has acted unlawfully.

II

In Parker v. Brown the Court considered whether the Sherman Act applied to state action. The way the Sherman Act question was presented and argued in that case sheds significant light on the character of the state-action concept embraced by the Parker holding.

The plaintiff, Brown, was a producer and packer of raisins; the defendants were the California Director of Agriculture and other public officials charged by California statute with responsibility for administering a program for the marketing of the 1940 crop of raisins. The express purpose of the program was to restrict competition among the growers and maintain prices in the distribution [*586] [****13] of raisins to packers.<sup>12</sup> [****14] Nevertheless, in <sup>8</sup> Of this amount, $ 2,363,328 was paid to the three principal manufacturers of bulbs from whom respondent made its purchases; the other $ 471,672 represented costs incurred in the use of respondent's personnel and facilities in carrying out the program.

<sup>9</sup> According to respondent the effect of the program is to save consumers about $3 million a year, since the bulbs they now receive at a cost of $ 2,835,000 would cost them about $ 6 million in the retail market.

<sup>10</sup> Mich. Comp. Laws § 460.6 (1970).

<sup>11</sup> See Brief for Respondent 11; Mich. Comp. Laws § 460.501 (1970).

the District Court, Brown did not argue that the defendants had violated the Sherman Act. He sought an injunction against the enforcement of the program on the theory that it interfered with his constitutional right to engage in interstate commerce. Because he was attacking the constitutionality of a California statute and regulations having statewide applicability, a three-judge District Court was convened.<sup>13</sup> With one judge dissenting, the District Court held that the program violated the Commerce Clause and granted injunctive relief.<sup>14</sup>

The defendant state officials took a direct appeal to this Court. Probable jurisdiction [**3116] was noted on April 6, 1942, and the Court heard oral argument on the Commerce Clause issue on May 5, 1942. In the meantime, on April 27, 1942, the Court held that the State of Georgia is a "person" within the meaning of § 7 of the Sherman Act and therefore entitled to maintain an action for treble damages. Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159.

Presumably because the Court was then concerned with the relationship between the sovereign States and the antitrust laws, it immediately [****15] [***1148] set Parker v. Brown for reargument<sup>15</sup> and, on its own motion, requested the Solicitor General of the United States to file a brief as amicus curiae and directed the parties to discuss the question whether the California statute was rendered invalid by the Sherman Act.<sup>16</sup>

[****16] In his supplemental brief the Attorney General of [*588] California<sup>17</sup> advanced three arguments against using the Sherman Act as a basis for upholding the injunction entered by the District Court. He contended (1) that even though a State is a "person" entitled to maintain a treble-damage action as a plaintiff, Congress never intended to subject a sovereign State to the provisions of the Sherman Act; (2) that the California program did not, in any event, violate the federal statute; and (3) that since no evidence or argument pertaining to the Sherman Act

---

<sup>12</sup> "The California Agricultural Prorate Act authorizes the establishment, through action of state officials, of programs for the marketing of agricultural commodities produced in the state, so as to restrict competition among the growers and maintain prices in the distribution of their commodities to packers. The declared purpose of the Act is to 'conserve the agricultural wealth of the State' and to 'prevent economic waste in the marketing of agricultural products' of the state." 317 U.S., at 346.

"The declared objective of the California Act is to prevent excessive supplies of agricultural commodities from 'adversely affecting' the market, and although the statute speaks in terms of 'economic stability' and 'agricultural waste' rather than of price, the evident purpose and effect of the regulation is to 'conserve agricultural wealth of the state' by raising and maintaining prices, but 'without permitting unreasonable profits to producers.' § 10." Id., at 355.

<sup>13</sup> Title 28 U.S.C. § 2281 has been consistently read by this Court as authorizing a three-judge court only when the state statute which is sought to be enjoined is of a general and statewide application. Moody v. Flowers, 387 U.S. 97, 101.

<sup>14</sup> Article I, § 8, cl. 3, of the United States Constitution provides:

"Congress shall have Power... To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes...."

<sup>15</sup> The Court also asked the parties to consider whether the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, or any other Act of Congress, invalidated the California program. The supplemental briefs noted that the California program had been adopted with the collaboration of officials of the United States Department of Agriculture, and had been aided by loans from the Commodity Credit Corporation recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture. These facts were emphasized in portions of Mr. Chief Justice Stone's opinion discussing the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Commerce Clause, see 317 U.S., at 357, 358-359, 368, but were not mentioned in connection with the Court's discussion of the Sherman Act.

<sup>16</sup> The first order entered in the Supreme Court Journal on Monday, May 11, 1942, provided:

"No. 1040. W.B. Parker, Director of Agriculture, et al., appellants, v. Porter L. Brown. This cause is restored to the docket for reargument on October 12 next. In their briefs and on the oral argument counsel for the parties are requested to discuss the questions whether the state statute involved is rendered invalid by the action of Congress in passing the Sherman Act, the Agricultural Adjustment Act as amended, or any other Act of Congress. The Solicitor General is requested to file a brief as amicus curiae and, if he so desires, to participate in the oral argument." Journal, O. T. 1941, p. 252.

<sup>17</sup> The Honorable Earl Warren, later Chief Justice of the United States.

had been offered or considered in the District Court, the injunction should not be sustained on an antitrust theory.
<sup>18</sup>

[****17] In his brief for the United States as amicus curiae, the Solicitor General did not take issue with the appellants' first argument. He contended that the California program was inconsistent with the policy of the Sherman Act, but expressly disclaimed any argument that the State of California or its officials had violated federal law.<sup>19</sup> [****18] [**3117] Later in his [***1149] brief the Solicitor General drew an [*589] important distinction between economic action taken by the State itself and private action taken pursuant to a state statute permitting or requiring individuals to engage in conduct prohibited by the Sherman Act. The Solicitor General contended that the private conduct would clearly be illegal but recognized that a different problem existed with respect to the State itself.<sup>20</sup> It was the latter problem that was presented in the Parker case.

This Court set aside the injunction entered by the District Court. In the portion of his opinion for the Court discussing the Sherman Act issue, Mr. Chief Justice Stone addressed only the first of the three arguments advanced by the California Attorney General. The Court held that even though comparable programs organized by private persons would be illegal, the action taken by state officials pursuant to express legislative command did not violate the Sherman Act.<sup>21</sup>

---

<sup>18</sup> In the index to his supplemental brief, the California Attorney General outlined his discussion of the Sherman Act in these words:

"The Sherman Anti-Trust law and the California raisin program.....	35
"1. Is a state subject to the Sherman Act?.....	35
"2. Does the state seasonal program for raisins violate the provisions of the Sherman Act?.....	48
"(a) The Sherman Act is circumscribed by the rule of reason .....	53
"(b) Federal legislation as exempting state program from anti-trust laws.....	60
"3. May the California raisin program be enjoined in the present action?.....	64"

<sup>19</sup> At p. 59 of its brief, the Government stated:

"The Sherman Act does not in terms define its scope in so far as it applies to the activities of state governments. But nothing in the Act precludes its application to programs sponsored by the states. Sections 1 and 2 prohibit unlawful conduct by 'persons,' and the word 'person,' as defined in Section 7, in some connections at least, may include a state. Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159.

"But the question we face here is not whether California or its officials have violated the Sherman Act, but whether the state program interferes with the accomplishment of the objectives of the federal statute."

<sup>20</sup> At p. 63 of its brief, the Government stated:

"A state statute permitting, or requiring, dealers in a commodity to combine so as to limit the supply or raise the price of a subject of interstate commerce would clearly be void. The question here is whether a state may itself undertake to control the supply and price of a commodity shipped in interstate commerce or otherwise restrain interstate competition through a mandatory regulation."

<sup>21</sup> "But it is plain that the prorate program here was never intended to operate by force of individual agreement or combination. It derived its authority and its efficacy from the legislative command of the state and was not intended to operate or become effective without that command. We find nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature. In a dual system of government in which, under the Constitution, the states are sovereign, save only as Congress may constitutionally subtract from their authority, an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress.

"The Sherman Act makes no mention of the state as such, and gives no hint that it was intended to restrain state action or official action directed by a state.

[****19] [*590] This narrow holding made it unnecessary for the Court to agree or to disagree with the Solicitor General's view that a state statute permitting or requiring private conduct prohibited by federal law "would clearly be void."<sup>22</sup> The Court's narrow holding also avoided any question about the applicability of the antitrust laws to private action taken under color of state law.

Unquestionably the term "state action" may be used broadly to encompass [***1150] individual action supported to some extent by state law or custom. Such a broad use of the term, which is familiar in civil rights litigation,<sup>23</sup> [****20] is not, [*591] however, what Mr. Chief Justice Stone described in his Parker opinion. He carefully selected language which plainly [**3118] limited the Court's holding to official action taken by state officials.<sup>24</sup> [****21] In this case, unlike Parker, the only defendant is a private utility. No public officials or agencies are named as parties and there is no claim that any state action violated the antitrust laws. Conversely, in Parker there was no claim that any private citizen or company had violated the law. The only Sherman Act issue decided was whether the sovereign State itself, which had been held to be a person within the meaning of § 7 of the statute, was also subject to its prohibitions. Since the case now before us does not call into question the legality of any [*592] act of the State of Michigan or any of its officials or agents, it is not controlled by the Parker decision.

III

In this case we are asked to hold that private conduct required by state law is exempt from the Sherman Act. Two quite different reasons might support such a rule. First, if a private citizen has done nothing more than obey the command of his state sovereign, it would be unjust to conclude that he has thereby offended federal law. Second, if the State is already regulating an area of the economy, it is arguable that Congress did not intend to superimpose

"There is no suggestion of a purpose to restrain state action in the Act's legislative history. The sponsor of the bill which was ultimately enacted as the Sherman Act declared that it prevented only 'business combinations.' 21 Cong. Rec. 2562, 2457; see also [id.] at 2459, 2461. That its purpose was to suppress combinations to restrain competition and attempts to monopolize by individuals and corporations, abundantly appears from its legislative history.

"The state in adopting and enforcing the prorate program made no contract or agreement and entered into no conspiracy in restraint of trade or to establish monopoly but, as sovereign, imposed the restraint as an act of government which the Sherman Act did not undertake to prohibit. Olsen v. Smith, 195 U.S. 332, 344[3]45; cf. Lowenstein v. Evans, 69 F. 908, 910." 317 U.S., at 350-352.

<sup>22</sup> See n. 15, supra.

<sup>23</sup> See Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 172-187; Adickes v. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 188-234 (BRENNAN, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

<sup>24</sup> In his three-page discussion of the Sherman Act issue in Parker v. Brown, Mr. Chief Justice Stone made 13 references to the fact that state action was involved. Each time his language was carefully chosen to apply only to official action, as opposed to private action approved, supported, or even directed by the State. Thus, his references were to (1) "the legislative command of the state," and (2) "a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature," 317 U.S., at 350; and to (3) "a state's control over its officers and agents," (4) "the state as such," (5) "state action or official action directed by a state," and (6) "state action," id., at 351; and to (7) "the state command to the Commission and to the program committee," (8) "state action," (9) "the state which has created the machinery for establishing the prorate program," (10) "it is the state, acting through the Commission, which adopts the program...," (11) "[t]he state itself exercises its legislative authority," (12) "[t]he state in adopting and enforcing the prorate program...," and finally (13) "as sovereign, imposed the restraint as an act of government...," id., at 352.

The cumulative effect of these carefully drafted references unequivocally differentiates between official action, on the one hand, and individual action (even when commanded by the State), on the other hand.

the antitrust laws as an additional, and [****22] perhaps conflicting, regulatory mechanism. We consider these two reasons separately.

LEdHN[2][↑] [2]We may assume, arguendo, that it would be unacceptable ever to impose statutory liability on a party who had done nothing more than obey a state command. Such an assumption would not decide this case, if, indeed, it would decide any actual case. For typically cases of this kind involve a blend of private and public decisionmaking.<sup>25</sup> [****23] The Court has already decided that HN2[↑] state [***1151] authorization,<sup>26</sup> approval,<sup>27</sup> encouragement,<sup>28</sup> or [*593] participation<sup>29</sup> [****24] in restrictive private [*3119] conduct confers no antitrust immunity. And in Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Corp., 341 U.S. 384, the Court invalidated the plaintiff's entire resale price maintenance program even though it was effective throughout the State only because the Louisiana statute imposed a direct restraint on retailers who had not signed fair trade agreements.<sup>30</sup>

In each of these cases the initiation and enforcement of the program under attack involved a mixture of private and public decisionmaking. In each case, notwithstanding the state participation in the decision, the private party exercised sufficient freedom of choice to enable the Court to conclude that he should be held [****25] responsible for the consequences of his decision.

The case before us also discloses a program which is the product of a decision in which both the respondent and the [*594] Commission participated. Respondent could not maintain the lamp-exchange program without the approval of the Commission, and now may not abandon it without such approval. Nevertheless, there can be no doubt that the option to have, or not to have, such a program is primarily respondent's, not the Commission's.<sup>31</sup> [****26] Indeed, respondent [***1152] initiated the program years before the regulatory agency was even

<sup>25</sup>Indeed, in Parker v. Brown itself, there was significant private participation in the formulation and effectuation of the proration program. As the Court pointed out, approval of the program upon referendum by a prescribed number of producers was one of the conditions for effectuating the program. See ibid.

<sup>26</sup>"It cannot be said that any State may give a corporation, created under its laws, authority to restrain interstate or international commerce against the will of the nation as lawfully expressed by Congress." Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 346.

<sup>27</sup>In the Parker opinion itself, the Court pointed out that HN3[↑] a State does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act "by declaring that their action is lawful." 317 U.S., at 351.

<sup>28</sup>"Respondents' arguments, at most, constitute the contention that their activities complemented the objective of the ethical codes. In our view that is not state action for Sherman Act purposes. It is not enough that, as the County Bar puts it, anticompetitive conduct is 'prompted' by state action; rather, anticompetitive activities must be compelled by direction of the State acting as a sovereign," Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 791.

<sup>29</sup>See Continental Co. v. Union Carbide, 370 U.S. 690; cf. also Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 313 U.S. 450, cited in Parker v. Brown, supra, at 352.

<sup>30</sup>Thus, although the private decision to enforce a statewide fair trade program was not only approved by the State, but actually would have been ineffective without the statutory command to nonsigners to adhere to the prices set by the plaintiff, the rationale of Parker v. Brown did not immunize the restraint. Quite the contrary, in his opinion for the Court Mr. Justice Douglas cited Parker for the proposition that private conduct was forbidden by the Sherman Act even though the State had compelled retailers to follow a parallel price policy. He said: "Therefore, when a state compels retailers to follow a parallel price policy, it demands private conduct which the Sherman Act forbids. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350." 341 U.S., at 389.

<sup>31</sup>We recently described an analogous exercise of a public utility's power to make business decisions subject to Commission approval in Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345:

HN4[↑] "The nature of governmental regulation of private utilities is such that a utility may frequently be required by the state regulatory scheme to obtain approval for practices a business regulated in less detail would be free to institute without any created. There is nothing unjust in a conclusion that respondent's participation in the decision is sufficiently significant to require that its conduct implementing the decision, like comparable conduct by unregulated businesses, conform to applicable federal law.<sup>32</sup> Accordingly, even though there may be cases in which the State's participation in a decision is so dominant [*595] that it would be unfair to hold a private party responsible for his conduct in implementing it, this record discloses no such unfairness.

Apart from the question of fairness to the individual who must conform not only to state regulation but to the federal antitrust laws as well, we must consider whether Congress intended to superimpose antitrust standards on conduct already being regulated under a different standard. Amici curiae forcefully contend that the competitive standard imposed by antitrust legislation [**3120] is fundamentally inconsistent with the "public interest" standard widely enforced by regulatory agencies, and that the essential teaching of Parker v. Brown is that the federal antitrust laws should not be applied in areas of the economy pervasively regulated by state agencies.

There are at least three reasons why this argument is unacceptable. First, merely because certain conduct may be subject both to state [***27] regulation and to the federal antitrust laws does not necessarily mean that it must satisfy inconsistent standards; second, even assuming inconsistency, we could not accept the view that the federal interest must inevitably be subordinated to the State's; and finally, even if we were to assume that Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to apply to areas of the economy primarily regulated by a State, that assumption would not foreclose the enforcement of the antitrust laws in an essentially unregulated area such as the market for electric light bulbs.

LEdHN[3A][][3A]Unquestionably there are examples of economic regulation in which the very purpose of the government control is to avoid the consequences of unrestrained competition. Agricultural marketing programs, such as that involved in Parker, were of that character. But all economic regulation does not necessarily suppress competition. On the contrary, public utility regulation typically [*596] assumes that the private firm is a natural monopoly and that public controls are necessary to protect the consumer from exploitation.<sup>33</sup> [***1153] There [***28] is no logical inconsistency between requiring such a firm to meet regulatory criteria insofar as it is exercising its natural monopoly powers and also to comply with antitrust standards to the extent that it engages in business activity in competitive areas of the economy.<sup>34</sup> Thus, Michigan's regulation of respondent's distribution of electricity poses no necessary conflict with a federal requirement that respondent's activities in competitive markets satisfy antitrust standards.<sup>35</sup> approval from a regulatory body. Approval by a state utility commission of such a request from a regulated utility, where the Commission has not put its own weight on the side of the proposed practice by ordering it, does not transmute a practice initiated by the utility and approved by the Commission into 'state action.' At most, the Commission's failure to overturn this practice amounted to no more than a determination that a Pennsylvania utility was authorized to employ such a practice if it so desired. Respondent's exercise of the choice allowed by state law where the initiative comes from it and not from the State, does not make its action in doing so 'state action' for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment."Id., at 357. (Footnote omitted.)

<sup>32</sup> Nor is such a conclusion even arguably inconsistent with the underlying rationale of Parker v. Brown. For in that case California required every raisin producer in the State to comply with the proration program, whereas Michigan has never required any utility to adopt a lamp-exchange program.

<sup>33</sup> As MR. JUSTICE STEWART pointed out in his dissenting opinion in Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 389, the "very reason for the regulation of private utility rates -- by state bodies and by the Commission -- is the inevitability of a monopoly that requires price control to take the place of price competition."

<sup>34</sup> Commenting on a possible conflict between federal regulatory policy and federal antitrust policy we have repeatedly said "[r]epeal [of the antitrust laws] is to be regarded as implied only if necessary to make the... [Act] work, and even then only to the minimum extent necessary."Id., at 391, quoting Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 357.

<sup>35</sup> Indeed, since our decision in Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, supra, there can be no doubt about the proposition that HN5[] the federal antitrust laws are applicable to electrical utilities. Although there was dissent from the particular application of the statute in that case, there was no dissent from the basic proposition that such utilities must obey the federal antitrust laws.

[****29] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B]

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5] The mere possibility of conflict between state regulatory policy and federal antitrust policy is an insufficient basis for implying an exemption from the federal antitrust laws. Congress could hardly have intended state regulatory agencies to have broader power than federal agencies to exempt private conduct from the antitrust laws.<sup>36</sup> Therefore, assuming that there are [****30] \*\*3121 situations in [*597] which the existence of state regulation should give rise to an implied exemption, the standards for ascertaining the existence and scope of such an exemption surely must be at least as severe as those applied to federal regulatory legislation.

[****31] [LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] The Court has consistently refused to find that regulation gave rise to an implied exemption without first determining that exemption was necessary in order to make the regulatory Act work, "and \*\*\*1154 even then only to the minimum extent necessary."<sup>37</sup>

[LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

[****32] [*598] The application of that standard to this case inexorably requires rejection of respondent's claim. For Michigan's regulatory scheme does not conflict with federal antitrust policy and, conversely, if the federal antitrust laws should be construed to outlaw respondent's lightbulb-exchange program, there is no reason to believe that Michigan's regulation of its electric utilities will no longer be able to function effectively. Regardless of the outcome of this case, Michigan's interest in regulating its utilities' distribution of electricity will be almost entirely unimpaired.

<sup>36</sup> Respondent does not argue that state regulation provides a stronger justification for an implied exemption than federal regulation. On the contrary, respondent relies heavily on Gordon v. New York Stock Exchange, 422 U.S. 659, in which the Court upheld the fixed commissions of the stock exchange as an integral part of the effective operation of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. The inapplicability of that case is manifest from MR. JUSTICE STEWART'S brief concurring opinion in which he stated:

"The Court has never held, and does not hold today, that the antitrust laws are inapplicable to anticompetitive conduct simply because a federal agency has jurisdiction over the activities of one or more of the defendants. HN6 An implied repeal of the antitrust laws may be found only if there exists a 'plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions.' United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 351.

"The mere existence of the Commission's reserve power of oversight with respect to rules initially adopted by the exchanges, therefore, does not necessarily immunize those rules from antitrust attack.... The question presented by the present case, therefore, is whether exchange rules fixing minimum commission rates are 'necessary to make the Securities Exchange Act work.'" Id., at 692-693.

The lamp-supply program is by no means comparably imperative in the continued effective functioning of Michigan's regulation of the utilities industry.

<sup>37</sup> See n. 34, supra. Recent cases make it clear that the relevant "aspect of the agency's jurisdiction must be sufficiently central to the purposes of the enabling statute so that implied repeal of the antitrust laws is 'necessary to make the [regulatory scheme] work.'" Robinson, Recent Antitrust Developments: 1975, 31 Record of N.Y.C.B.A. 38, 57-58 (1976).

In United States v. National Assn. of Securities Dealers, 422 U.S. 694, 719-720, the Court pointed out:

"Implied antitrust immunity is not favored, and can be justified only by a convincing showing of clear repugnancy between the antitrust laws and the regulatory system. See, e.g., United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S., at 348; United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 197-206 \(1939\)."

These cases are, of course, consistent with the "cardinal rule," applicable to legislation generally, that repeals by implication are not favored. Posadas v. National City Bank, 296 U.S. 497, 503.

LEdHN[9] [↑] [9] LEdHN[10A] [↑] [10A] We conclude that neither Michigan's approval of the tariff filed by respondent, nor the fact that the lamp-exchange program may not be terminated until a new tariff is filed, is a sufficient basis for implying an exemption from the federal antitrust laws for that program.<sup>38</sup>

LEdHN[10B] [↑] [10B]

[****33] IV

The dissenting opinion voices the legitimate concern that violation of the antitrust laws by regulated companies may give rise to "massive treble damage liabilities." This is an oft-repeated criticism of the inevitably [*599] imprecise language of the Sherman Act and of the consequent difficulty in predicting with certainty its application to various specific fact situations.<sup>39</sup> The far-reaching value of this basic part of our law, however, has enabled it to withstand such criticism in the past.<sup>40</sup>

[****34] The [****1155] [**3122] concern about treble-damage liability has arguable relevance to this case in two ways. If the hazard of violating the antitrust laws were enhanced by the fact of regulation, or if a regulated company had engaged in anticompetitive conduct in reliance on a justified understanding that such conduct was immune from the antitrust laws, a concern with the punitive aspects of the treble-damage remedy would be appropriate. But neither of those circumstances is present in this case.

When regulation merely takes the form of approval of a tariff proposed by the company, it surely has not increased the company's risk of violating the law. The [*600] respondent utility maintained its lamp-exchange program both before and after it was regulated. The approval of the program by the Michigan Commission provided the company with an arguable defense to the antitrust charge, but did not increase its exposure to liability.

Nor can the utility fairly claim that it was led to believe that its conduct was exempt from the federal antitrust laws. A claim of immunity or exemption is in the nature of an affirmative defense to conduct which is otherwise assumed to [****35] be unlawful. This Court has never sustained a claim that otherwise unlawful private conduct is exempt from the antitrust laws because it was permitted or required by state law.

In the Court's most recent consideration of this subject, it described the defendant's claim with pointed precision as "this so-called state-action exemption." Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S., 773, 788. The Court then explained that the question whether the anticompetitive activity had been required by the State acting as sovereign was the "threshold inquiry" in determining whether it was state action of the type the Sherman Act was not meant to <sup>38</sup> Of course, the absence of an exemption from the antitrust laws does not mean that those laws have been violated.

<sup>39</sup> It is this concern which has repeatedly prompted the introduction of bills which, if adopted, would make the award of treble damages in antitrust litigation discretionary rather than mandatory. See Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 378-380 (1955). See also, e.g., H.R. 978, 85th Cong., 1st Sess. (1957); H.R. 190, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. (1961).

<sup>40</sup> "As a charter of freedom, the Act has a generality and adaptability comparable to that found to be desirable in constitutional provisions. It does not go into detailed definitions which might either work injury to legitimate enterprise or through particularization defeat its purposes by providing loopholes for escape. The restrictions the Act imposes are not mechanical or artificial. Its general phrases, interpreted to attain its fundamental objects, set up the essential standard of reasonableness. They call for vigilance in the detection and frustration of all efforts unduly to restrain the free course of interstate commerce, but they do not seek to establish a mere delusive liberty either by making impossible the normal and fair expansion of that commerce or the adoption of reasonable measures to protect it from injurious and destructive practices and to promote competition upon a sound basis." Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U.S. 344, 359-360.

proscribe.<sup>41</sup> Certainly that careful use of language could not have been read as a guarantee that compliance with any state requirement would automatically confer federal antitrust immunity.

[****36] The dissenting opinion in this case makes much of the obvious fact that Parker v. Brown implicitly held that California's raisin-marketing program was not a violation of the Sherman Act. That is, of course, perfectly [**601] true. But HN8↑ the only way the legality of any program may be tested under the Sherman Act is by determining whether the persons who administer it have acted lawfully. The federal statute proscribes the conduct of persons, not programs, and the narrow holding in Parker concerned only the legality of the conduct of the state officials charged by law with the responsibility for administering California's program. What sort of charge might have been made against the various private persons who engaged in a variety of different activities implementing that program is unknown and unknowable because no such [**1156] charges were made.<sup>42</sup> Even if the state program had been held unlawful, such a holding would not necessarily have supported a claim that private individuals who had merely conformed their conduct to an [**3123] invalid program had thereby violated the Sherman Act. Unless and until a court answered that question, there would be no occasion to [****37] consider an affirmative defense of immunity or exemption.

Nor could respondent justifiably rely on either the holding in *Eastern R. Conf. v. Noerr Motors, 365 U.S. 127*, or the reference in that opinion to Parker.<sup>43</sup> The holding in Noerr was that the concerted activities of the railroad defendants in opposing legislation favorable to the plaintiff motor carriers was not prohibited by the Sherman Act. The case did not involve any question of either liability or exemption for private action taken in compliance with state law.

[****38] Moreover, nothing in the Noerr opinion implies that [*602] the mere fact that a state regulatory agency may approve a proposal included in a tariff, and thereby require that the proposal be implemented until a revised tariff is filed and approved, is a sufficient reason for conferring antitrust immunity on the proposed conduct. The passage quoted in the dissent, post, at 622, sets up an assumed dichotomy between a restraint imposed by governmental action, as contrasted with one imposed by private action, and then cites *United States v. Rock Royal Co-op., 307 U.S. 533*, and Parker for the conclusion that the former does not violate the Sherman Act.<sup>44</sup> That passing reference to Parker sheds no light on the significance of state action which amounts to little more than approval of a private proposal. It surely does not qualify the categorical statement in Parker that "a state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action is lawful." *317 U.S., at 351*. Yet the dissent would allow every state agency to grant precisely that immunity by merely including a direction to engage [****39] in the proposed conduct in an approval order.<sup>45</sup>

<sup>41</sup> HN7↑ "The threshold inquiry in determining if an anticompetitive activity is state action of the type the Sherman Act was not meant to proscribe is whether the activity is required by the State acting as sovereign. *Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S., at 350-352; Continental Co. v. Union Carbide, 370 U.S. 690, 706-707 \(1962\).*" *421 U.S., at 790*.

<sup>42</sup> Indeed, it did not even occur to the plaintiff that the state officials might have violated the Sherman Act; that question was first raised by this Court.

<sup>43</sup> Actually the reference was primarily to *United States v. Rock Royal Co-op., 307 U.S. 533*, and only secondarily to Parker. See *365 U.S., at 136 n. 15*.

<sup>44</sup> "We accept, as the starting point for our consideration of the case, the same basic construction of the Sherman Act adopted by the courts below -- that no violation of the Act can be predicated upon mere attempts to influence the passage or enforcement of laws. It has been recognized, at least since the landmark decision of this Court in *Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 122 U.S. 1* that the Sherman Act forbids only those trade restraints and monopolizations that are created, or attempted, by the acts of 'individuals or combinations of individuals or corporations.' Accordingly, it has been held that where a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, no violation of the Act can be made out." (Rock Royal and Parker are then cited in the footnote which is omitted.) *365 U.S., at 135-136*.

<sup>45</sup> MR. JUSTICE STEWART's analysis rests largely on the dubious assumption that if each of several steps in the implementation of an anticompetitive program is lawful, the entire program must be equally lawful.

[****40] [*603] MR. [***1157] JUSTICE STEWART's separate opinion possesses a virtue which ours does not. It announces a simple rule that can easily be applied in any case in which a state regulatory agency approves a proposal and orders a regulated company to comply with it. No matter what the impact of the proposal on interstate commerce, and no matter how peripheral or casual the State's interests may be in permitting it to go into effect, the state act would confer immunity from treble-damages liability. Such a rule is supported by the wholesome interest in simplicity in the regulation of a complex economy. In our judgment, however, that interest is heavily outweighed by the fact that such a rule may give a host of state regulatory agencies broad power to grant exemptions from an important federal law for reasons wholly unrelated either to federal policy or even to any necessary significant state interest. Although it is tempting to try to fashion a rule which would govern the decision of the liability issue and the damages issue in all future cases presenting [**3124] state-action issues, we believe the Court should adhere to its settled policy of giving concrete meaning [****41] to the general language of the Sherman Act by a process of case-by-case adjudication of specific controversies.

Since the District Court has not yet addressed the question whether the complaint alleged a violation of the antitrust laws, the case is remanded for a determination of that question and for such other proceedings as may be appropriate.

Reversed and remanded.

Concur by: BLACKMUN; BURGER (In Part)

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN, concurring in the judgment.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER, concurring in the judgment and in all except Parts II and IV of the Court's opinion.

I concur in the judgment and in all except Parts II and IV of the Court's opinion. I do not agree, however, that Parker v. Brown, 317 U. S. 341 (1943), can logically be limited to suits against state officials. In interpreting Parker, the Court has heretofore focused on the challenged activity, not upon the identity of the parties to the suit.<sup>S</sup>

"The threshold inquiry in determining if an anticompetitive activity is state action of the type the Sherman Act was not meant to proscribe is whether the activity is required by the State acting as sovereign." Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U. S. 773, 790 (1975) [****42] (emphasis added).<sup>I</sup>

If Parker's holding were limited simply to the nonliability of state officials, then the Court's inquiry in Goldfarb as to the County Bar Association's claimed exemption could have ended upon our recognition that the organization was "a voluntary association and not a state agency. . . ." 421 U. S., at 790. Yet, before determining that there was no exemption from the antitrust laws, the Court proceeded to treat the Association's contention that its action, having been "prompted" by the State Bar, was "state action for Sherman Act purposes." Ibid.

The reading of Parker in Part II is unnecessary to the result in this [***1158] case; that decision simply does not address the precise issue raised by the present case. There was no need in Parker to focus upon the situation where the State, in addition to requiring a public utility "to meet regulatory criteria insofar as it is exercising its natural monopoly powers," ante, at 596, also purports, without any independent regulatory purpose, to control the utility's activities in separate, competitive markets. Today the Court correctly concludes:<sup>S</sup>

"The Commission's approval [****43] of respondent's decision to maintain such a program does not . . . implement any statewide policy relating to light bulbs. We infer that the State's policy is neutral on the question [*605] whether a utility should, or should not, have such a program." Ante, at 585 (emphasis added).<sup>I</sup>

To find a "state action" exemption on the basis of Michigan's undifferentiated sanction of this ancillary practice could serve no federal or state policy.

Mr. Justice Blackmun, concurring in the judgment.

I agree with the Court insofar as it holds that the fact that anticompetitive conduct is sanctioned, or even required, by state law does not of itself put that conduct beyond the reach of the Sherman Act. Since the opposite proposition is the ground on which the Court of Appeals affirmed the dismissal of this suit, I also agree that its judgment must be reversed. My approach, however, is somewhat different from that of the Court.

I

As to the principal question in the case, that of the Sherman Act's pre-emptive effect upon inconsistent state laws, it is, as the dissent points out, one of congressional intent. No one denies that Congress could, if it wished, override those state [****44] laws whose operation would subvert the federal policy of free competition in interstate commerce. In discerning that intent, however, I find somewhat less assistance in the legislative history than does the dissent. It is true that the framers of the Sherman Act expressed [**3125] the view that certain areas of economic activity were left entirely to state regulation. The dissent quotes several of these expressions. Post, at 632-634. A careful reading of those statements reveals, however, that they little more than reflect the then-prevailing view that Congress lacked the power, under the Commerce Clause, to regulate economic activity that was within the domain of the States. The Court since then has recognized a greatly expanded Commerce Clause [*606] power. Arguably, the Sherman Act should have remained confined within the outlines of that power as it was thought to exist in 1890, on the theory that if Congress believed it could not regulate any more broadly, it must not have attempted to do so. But that bridge already has been crossed, for it has been held that Congress intended the reach of the Sherman Act to expand along with that of the commerce power. Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 743 n. 2 (1976), [****45] and cases cited.

Our question in this case is one that the Sherman Act's framers did not directly confront or explicitly address: What was to be the result if the expanding ambit of the Sherman [***1159] Act should bring it into conflict with inconsistent state law? But it seems to me that this bridge also has been crossed. In Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384 (1951), the issue was whether the Sherman Act permitted enforcement of a Louisiana statute requiring compliance by liquor retailers with resale price agreements to which they were not parties, but which had been entered into by other retailers with their wholesale suppliers. The Court held the Louisiana statute unenforceable; there is no plausible reading of that decision other than that the statute was pre-empted by the Sherman Act.<sup>1</sup> Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197 (1904), is to the same effect. The defenders of the railroad holding company attacked in that case argued that it was beyond the Sherman Act's reach because it was lawful under the corporation [*607] laws of New Jersey. The holding company was nonetheless held unlawful, and, [****46] to that extent, the law of New Jersey was forced to give way.<sup>2</sup> [****47] Indeed, I suppose that some degree of state-law pre-emption is implicit in the most fundamental operation of the Sherman Act. If a State had no antitrust policy of its own, anticompetitive combinations of all kinds would be sanctioned and enforced under that State's general contract and corporation law. Yet, there has never been any doubt that if such combinations offend the Sherman Act, they are illegal, and state laws to that extent are overridden.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The Court expressly stated in Schwegmann: "The fact that a state authorizes the price fixing does not, of course, give immunity to the scheme, absent approval by Congress." And again: "[W]hen a state compels retailers to follow a parallel price policy, it demands private conduct which the Sherman Act forbids." 341 U.S., at 386, 389.

<sup>2</sup> The argument that New Jersey law exempted Northern Securities Company from the Sherman Act was thoroughly canvassed in the plurality opinion. 193 U.S., at 344-351. It was rejected for the reason "that no State can endow any of its corporations, or any combination of its citizens, with authority to restrain interstate or international commerce, or to disobey the national will as manifested in legal enactments of Congress." Id., at 350.

<sup>3</sup> In passing, we may cast at least a sidelong glance at a related area of federal trade regulation -- that of the patent laws. Although the federal statute is no more explicit on the point than is the Sherman Act, see 35 U.S.C. § 100 et seq., it clearly pre-empts state laws that purport either to expand on or to infringe the federal patent monopoly. See, e.g., Lear, Inc. v. Adkins, 395

Congress itself has given support to the view that inconsistent state laws are pre-empted by the Sherman Act. Were it the case that state statutes held complete sway, Congress would not have found it necessary [**3126] in 1937 to pass the Miller-Tydings Fair Trade Act, 50 Stat. 693, amending the Sherman Act, specifically exempting from the latter's operation certain price maintenance agreements sanctioned by state law. 15 U.S.C. § 1. There are other instances of Congress' acting to protect [***48] state-sanctioned anticompetitive schemes from the Sherman [*608] Act. In response to Schwegmann, see H.R. Rep. No. [***1160] 1437, 82d Cong., 2d Sess., 1-2, Congress in 1952 passed the McGuire bill, 66 Stat. 632, extending the Miller-Tydings exemption to state statutes that enforced resale price agreements against nonsigners. 15 U.S.C. §§ 45 \(a\)\(2\) to \(5\). A similar enactment is the McCarran-Ferguson Act of 1945, 59 Stat. 34, exempting from federal statutes "any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance," with provision that the Sherman Act, and other named federal statutes, should apply to that business after a specified date "to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law." 15 U.S.C. § 1012 \(b\).<sup>4</sup> These express grants of Sherman Act immunity seem significant to me. As the Court stated in United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 201 (1939), construing the immunity granted to certain agreements by the Agricultural Marketing [*609] Agreement Act of 1937, "[i]f Congress had desired to grant any further immunity, Congress doubtless would have said so. [***49]"

[***50] II

I also agree with MR. JUSTICE STEVENS that the particular anticompetitive scheme attacked in this case must fall despite the imprimatur it claims to have received from the State of Michigan. To say, as I have, that the Sherman Act generally pre-empts inconsistent state laws is not to answer the much more difficult question as to which such laws are pre-empted and to what extent. I fear there are no easy solutions, though several suggest themselves.

It cannot be decisive, for example, simply that a state law goes so far as to require, rather than simply to authorize, the anticompetitive conduct in question. The Court accepted this as a prerequisite to antitrust immunity in Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 790 (1975), but it cannot alone be sufficient. The whole issue in Schwegmann was whether the State could require obedience to a fixed resale price arrangement. Similarly, compliance with an anticompetitive contract, or adherence to an illegal corporate combination, might well be "required" by a State's general contract and corporation law.

Neither can it be decisive that a particular statesanctioned scheme was initiated by the private actors [***51] [***1161] rather than by the State. I see no difference in the degree of private initiation as between the marketing arrangement approved in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943) (and properly approved, I think, for reasons set forth below), and the resale price maintenance scheme disapproved in Schwegmann. In each case the particular [**3127] scheme was initiated by the private actors at the invitation of a general statute, with which they may or may [*610] not have had anything to do. The same was true in Northern Securities, and the same is true here. To be sure, there is a certain rough justice, as well as an appearance of simplicity, in a rule based upon who actually is responsible for the scheme in question, but I fear that both the justice and the simplicity would prove illusory in the rule's actual application. Every state enactment is initiated, in its way, by its beneficiaries. It would scarcely make

---

U.S. 653 \(1969\); Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Stiffel Co., 376 U.S. 225 (1964); Compcorp Corp. v. Day-Brite Lighting, 376 U.S. 234 (1964).

<sup>4</sup>The McCarran-Ferguson Act was passed in reaction to the holding in United States v. Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533 (1944), that the business of insurance is "commerce" within the meaning of the Sherman Act. Congress' expressed concern was that the application of that Act would "greatly impair or nullify the regulation of insurance by the States," bringing to a halt their "experimentation and investigation" in the area. The Act was vigorously endorsed by Governors and insurance commissioners of "almost all of the States." The Justice Department, in opposing the McCarran-Ferguson Act, specifically argued that Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943), made the legislation unnecessary because it immunized the insurance business insofar as it was regulated by the States. Congress was not so sure:

"Parker v. Brown dealt with a State commission authorized by State statute to enforce a program in conformity with, if not supplementary to, a Federal statute. Obviously, all State regulation concerning insurance does not and would not fall in such a category." S. Rep. No. 1112, 78th Cong., 2d Sess., 5 (1944). See also S. Rep. No. 20, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., 1-3 (1945); H.R. Rep. No. 873, 78th Cong., 1st Sess., 7 (1943); H.R. Rep. No. 143, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., 4 (1945).

sense to immunize only those powerful enough to speak entirely through their governmental representatives, or, for that matter, to stifle such speech with the threat that it will destroy antitrust immunity. Moreover, the process of enactment is likely [****52] to involve such a complex interplay between those regulating and those regulated that it will be impossible to identify the true "initiator."

A final, ostensibly simple, solution that I find wanting would be to insist only on some degree of affirmative articulation by the State of its conscientious intent to sanction the challenged scheme, and its reasons therefor. This also is a tempting solution, particularly in this case, where there is little to suggest (at least in recent years) that the Michigan Public Service Commission has even actively considered the light-bulb tie-in, much less articulated a justification for it. Yet such a solution would also lead to perverse results. A regulation whose justification was too plain to require explication would be vulnerable; a questionable one could be immunized if its proponents had the skill or influence to generate the proper legislative history. And, of course, deciding how much "affirmative articulation" of state policy is enough is not a simple matter.

I would apply at least for now, a rule of reason, taking it as a general proposition that state-sanctioned anticompetitive activity must fall like any other if its potential harms [****53] outweigh its benefits. This does not mean [*611] that state-sanctioned and private activity are to be treated alike. The former is different because the fact of state sanction figures powerfully in the calculus of harm and benefit. If, for example, the justification for the scheme lies in the protection of health or safety, the strength of that justification is forcefully attested to by the existence of a state enactment. I would assess the justifications of such enactments in the same way as is done in equal protection review, and where such justifications are at all substantial (as one would expect them to be in the case of most professional licensing or fee-setting schemes, for example, cf. Olsen v. Smith, 195 U.S. 332 \(1904\)), I would be reluctant to find the restraint unreasonable. A particularly strong justification exists for a state-sanctioned scheme if the State in effect has substituted itself for the forces of competition, and regulates private activity to the same ends [***1162] sought to be achieved by the Sherman Act. Thus, an anticompetitive scheme which the State institutes on the plausible ground that it will improve the performance of the [****54] market in fostering efficient resource allocation and low prices can scarcely be assailed. One could not doubt the legality of Detroit Edison's electric power monopoly; the fear of such a monopoly is primarily its tendency to charge excessive prices, but its prices in this instance are controlled by the State.

No doubt such a rule of reason will crystallize, as it is applied, into various per se rules relating to certain kinds of state enactments, such as the regulation of the classic natural monopoly, the public utility. We should not shrink in our general approach, however, from what seems to me our constitutionally mandated task, one often set for us by conflicting federal and state laws, and that is the balancing of implicated federal and state interests with a view to assuring that when these are truly in conflict, the former prevail.

[*612] The dissent's fears on this score appear to me to be exaggerated. The balancing of harm and benefit is, in general, a process with which federal courts are well acquainted [**3128] in the antitrust field. The special problem of assessing state interests to determine whether they are strong enough to prevail against supreme [****55] federal dictates is also a familiar one to the federal courts. Indeed, a state action that interferes with competition not only among its own citizens but also among the States is already subject under the Commerce Clause to much the same searching review of state justifications as is proposed here. See, e.g., Dean Milk Co. v. Madison, 340 U.S. 349, 354 \(1951\) (state restriction on sale of milk not locally processed held invalid because "reasonable and adequate alternatives [were] available" to protect health interests); Southern Pacific Co. v. Arizona, 325 U.S. 761, 770-784 \(1945\) (state restriction of train lengths held invalid under the Commerce Clause because "the state [safety] interest is outweighed by the interest of the nation in an adequate, economical and efficient railway transportation service").

III

By these standards the present case does not seem a difficult one. The light-bulb tie-in presents the usual dangers of such a scheme, principally that respondent will extend its monopoly from the sale of electric power into that of light bulbs, not because it sells better light bulbs, but because its light bulbs are the ones customers [****56] must pay for if they are to have light at all. See P. Areeda, Antitrust Analysis 569-570 (2d ed. 1974). On the record before us the scheme appears to be unjustified. No doubt it originated as a means to promote electric power use, but it is difficult to see why a tie-in (rather than an optional, promotional light-bulb sale) was necessary [*613] to that end even in the 19th century, laying aside the question whether the promotion of greater electric power use remains today a plausible public goal. Respondent would justify the scheme on the ground of consumer savings, its light bulbs assertedly being cheaper and better than those commercially [***1163] available. Brief for Respondent 7-9, 41-42. But again, a tie-in is not necessary to pass along these savings. A tie-in is only necessary in order to force consumers to pay for light bulbs from Detroit Edison rather than someone else. But there is no indication that one light bulb does not fit the socket as well as another, or that the sale of light bulbs is in any way crucial to respondent's successful operation. Conceivably, Michigan's aim is the very extension of the monopoly, born of a preference for having light bulbs [***57] supplied by one whose prices are already regulated. But ending competition in the light-bulb market cannot be accepted as an adequate state objective without some evidence -- of which there is not the least hint in this record -- that such competition is in some way ineffective. For all that appears, light-bulb marketing, unlike electric power production, is not a natural monopoly, nor does it implicate health or safety, nor is it beset with problems of instability or other flaws in the competitive market.<sup>5</sup> [***58] [*614] This is [**3129] what I take it the Court means when it says the electric light-bulb market is "essentially unregulated," and on that understanding I agree with its conclusion. It is conceivable that respondent may show, upon further evidence, a sufficient justification for the scheme, but it certainly has not done so as yet.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>5</sup>The approach described in the text is entirely consistent with the result reached in Parker v. Brown. Wildly fluctuating agricultural prices are a prime candidate for some collective scheme that interrupts free competition in order to bring badly needed stability; under the State's close supervision, as was the case in Parker, the scheme seems entirely reasonable. I see no reason to disapprove the holding of Parker, therefore, and to the extent that the plurality, by stressing the identity of the state defendants in that case, intimates that a different result might have been reached had the raisin growers themselves been sued, I cannot agree.

Neither can I agree with the dissent, however, that Parker must be taken to stand for the broad proposition that a State can immunize any conduct from the application of the Sherman Act. It is true, as the dissent points out, that there are statements arguably to that effect in Parker, but the opinion is hardly unambiguous on the point. The Court also observed in that case that "a state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action is lawful." 317 U.S., at 351. Moreover, if we must choose between Parker's more categorical statements and the seemingly contrary statements in Schwegmann and Northern Securities, see nn. 1 and 2, supra, I prefer the latter, as more in keeping with the actual holdings of those cases.

<sup>6</sup>MR. JUSTICE STEVENS states that there may be cases in which "the State's participation in a decision [to adopt the challenged restraint] is so dominant that it is unfair to hold a private party responsible for his conduct in implementing it." Ante, at 594-595. I agree that a defense based on fairness may be available. I would not, however, rule it out in this case, as the Court's opinion does. The parties, like the court below, so far have addressed themselves only to the question whether petitioner's suit is completely barred by Parker v. Brown and the Michigan Public Service Commission's approval of the challenged tie-in. I would confine our present decision to that question alone, leaving consideration of a fairness defense to the lower courts on remand, and making only these two further observations:

First, I take it that a defense based on fairness would be a defense to a damages recovery but not injunctive relief. The latter, of course, presents no danger of unfairness. Moreover, as MR. JUSTICE STEVENS implies by his emphasis on not unfairly holding a private party "responsible," the defense rests on the theory, not that the challenged restraint is legal, but that since the defendant has committed no voluntary act in implementing it, he cannot be said to have violated any law. The same would not be true of acts following a judgment that the restraint is in fact illegal, and the state law to that extent invalid.

Second, I would hope that consideration will be given on remand to allowing a defense against damages wherever the conduct on which such damages would be based was required by state law. Such a rule would comport with the theory that a defendant should not be held "responsible" in damages for conduct as to which he had no choice, by which I do not mean to rule out other possible grounds for such a rule. See Posner, The Proper Relationship Between State Regulation and the Federal Antitrust Laws, 49 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 693, 728-732 (1974). It would also eliminate what seems to me the extremely unfair possibility that during a particular period -- and it could be a regulatory lag during which the regulatee was attempting to change the state mandate -- the regulatee could be required by state law to conform to a course of conduct for which he was all the while accumulating treble-damages liability under federal law.

[****59]

Dissent by: STEWART

Dissent

---

[***1164] MR. JUSTICE STEWART, with whom MR. JUSTICE POWELL and MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST join, dissenting.

The Court today holds that a public utility company, pervasively regulated by a state utility commission, [*615] may be held liable for treble damages under the Sherman Act for engaging in conduct which, under the requirements of its tariff, it is obligated to perform. I respectfully dissent from this unprecedented application of the federal antitrust laws, which will surely result in disruption of the operation of every state-regulated public utility company in the Nation and in the creation of "the prospect of massive treble damage liabilities" <sup>1</sup> payable ultimately by the companies' customers.

The starting point in analyzing this case is Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341. While Parker did not create the "so-called state-action [****60] exemption" <sup>2</sup> from the federal antitrust laws, <sup>3</sup> [***61] it is [**3130] the case that is most frequently [*616] cited for the proposition that the "[Sherman] Act was intended to regulate private practices and not to prohibit a State from imposing a restraint as an act of government." Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 788. The plurality [***1165] opinion would hold that that case decided only that "the sovereign State itself," ante, at 591, could not be sued under the Sherman Act. This view of Parker, which would trivialize that case to the point of overruling it, <sup>4</sup> flies in the face of the decisions of [*617] this Court that have interpreted or applied Parker's "state action" doctrine, and is unsupported by the sources on which the plurality relies.

---

<sup>1</sup> Posner, The Proper Relationship Between State Regulation and the Federal Antitrust Laws, 49 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 693, 728 (1974).

<sup>2</sup> Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 788.

<sup>3</sup> The progenitor of that doctrine in this Court was Olsen v. Smith, 195 U.S. 332, a decision relied on by Parker to support the proposition that when a State, acting as sovereign, imposes a restraint on commerce, that restraint does not violate the Sherman Act. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S., at 352. Olsen involved a challenge to the validity of a Texas law fixing the charges of pilots operating in the port of Galveston and prohibiting all but duly commissioned pilots from engaging in the pilotage business. The Court rejected the argument that the Texas pilotage statutes were "repugnant... to the laws of Congress forbidding combinations in restraint of trade or commerce," 195 U.S., at 339:

"The contention that because the commissioned pilots have a monopoly of the business, and by combination among themselves exclude all others from rendering pilotage services, is also but a denial of the authority of the State to regulate, since if the State has the power to regulate, and in so doing to appoint and commission, those who are to perform pilotage services, it must follow that no monopoly or combination in a legal sense can arise from the fact that the duly authorized agents of the State are alone allowed to perform the duties devolving upon them by law. When the propositions just referred to are considered in their ultimate aspect they amount simply to the contention, not that the Texas laws are void for want of power, but that they are unwise. If an analysis of those laws justified such conclusion -- which we do not at all imply is the case -- the remedy is in Congress, in whom the ultimate authority on the subject is vested, and cannot be judicially afforded by denying the power of the State to exercise its authority over a subject concerning which it has plenary power until Congress has seen fit to act in the premises." Id., at 344-345.

<sup>4</sup> If Parker v. Brown, supra, could be circumvented by the simple expedient of suing the private party against whom the State's "anticompetitive" command runs, then that holding would become an empty formalism, standing for little more than the proposition that Porter Brown sued the wrong parties.

MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN in a separate opinion today states that he sees "no reason to disapprove the holding of Parker" ante, at 613 n. 5, but then proceeds to do precisely that. The holding in Parker was that "[t]he state in adopting and enforcing the [****62] As to those sources, I would have thought that except in rare instances an analysis of the positions taken by the parties in briefs submitted to this Court should play no role in interpreting its written opinions.<sup>5</sup> A [*618] contrary rule would permit the "plain meaning" of our decisions to be qualified or even overridden by their "legislative history" - i.e., briefs submitted by the contending parties. The legislative history of congressional enactments is useful in discerning legislative intent, because that history emanates from the same source as the legislation itself and is thus directly probative of the intent of the draftsmen. The conflicting views presented in the adversary briefs and arguments submitted to this Court do not bear an analogous relationship to the Court's final product.

[****63] But assuming, arguendo, that it is appropriate to look behind the language of Parker v. Brown, supra, I think it is apparent that the plurality has distorted the positions [**3131] taken by the State of California and the United States as amici curiae. The question presented on reargument in Parker was "whether the state statute involved is rendered invalid by the action of Congress in passing the Sherman Act...." Ante, at 587 n. [***1166] 16. This phrasing indicates that the precise issue on which the Court sought reargument was whether the California statute was pre-empted by the Sherman Act, not whether sovereign States were immune from suit under the Sherman Act.

The State of California and the Solicitor General certainly understood this to be the principal issue. As the plurality opinion correctly notes, the supplemental brief filed by the State of California in response to the question posed by this Court advanced three basic arguments. And as it further notes, this Court's decision in Parker rested on the first of those arguments. But what the plurality fails to acknowledge is that California's first argument was in principal part a straightforward [****64] contention [*619] that the Sherman Act was not intended to pre-empt state regulation of intrastate commerce.<sup>6</sup> prorate program... imposed [a] restraint as an act of government which the Sherman Act did not undertake to prohibit." 317 U.S. at 352. MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN's position is that the Sherman Act does prohibit all state-imposed restraints which do not satisfy the Sherman Act's "rule of reason" -- a view quite different from the holding in Parker. The fact that the result in Parker could have been reached by a different route -- by a holding, for instance, that the prorate restraint was "reasonable" within the meaning of the Sherman Act or was impliedly exempted by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 -- is simply irrelevant.

I am puzzled by MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN's willingness to emasculate Parker, which the Court indicated to have continued vitality just this Term. See Virginia Pharmacy Bd. v. Virginia Consumer Council, 425 U.S. 748, 770. It seems to me that such a step is inconsistent not only with the legislative history of the Sherman Act but also with well-settled principles of stare decisis applicable to this Court's construction of federal statutes. See Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 671 n. 14. If those principles preclude the reconsideration of an antitrust exemption which is in every sense an "aberration" and an "anomaly," Flood v. Kuhn, 407 U.S. 258, 282, then a fortiori they preclude the re-examination of an exemption that coincides with a clear expression of congressional intent.

<sup>5</sup> A different approach is, of course, called for in interpreting this Court's summary dispositions of appeals. See generally Hicks v. Miranda, 422 U.S. 332, 345 n. 14; Port Authority Bondholders Protective Comm. v. Port of New York Authority, 387 F.2d 259, 262 (CA2).

<sup>6</sup> California's argument began with a statement of the principle that the Federal Government and the States -- "sister sovereignties," Supplemental Brief for Appellants 35 in Parker v. Brown, O.T. 1942, No. 46 -- are each "supreme" when legislating "within their respective spheres." "The subject of Federal power is still 'commerce,' -- not all commerce, but commerce with foreign nations and among the several states." Id. at 35-37. Incorporating by explicit reference its preceding argument with respect to whether the Federal Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 pre-empted the California statute, id. at 38, and proceeding from the premise that the subject matter of the California law was intrastate commerce within the jurisdiction of the State, California contended that "it should never be held that Congress intends to supersede or suspend the exercise of the police powers of the States unless its purpose to effect that result is clearly manifested." Ibid. California added that "[s]uch an intent should be even more clear and express when it serves not only to suspend the police powers, but to subject the sovereignty of the State to the inhibition and penalties of Congressional action." Id. at 38-39.

The plurality's position today seems to be that because the State of California placed particular emphasis on the fact that the proscriptions of the Sherman Act, if applicable, would run directly against the State, California's argument in the first part of its

[****65] With respect to the amicus brief of the United States, [*620] the plurality opinion states that the "Solicitor General did not take issue with the appellants' first argument." Ante, at 588. Indeed, the plurality says, the Solicitor General "expressly disclaimed any argument that the State of California or its officials had violated federal law." Ibid. In support of this assertion, the plurality opinion quotes the following language from p. 59 of the Solicitor General's brief in Parker: S

"[T]he question we face here is not whether California or its officials have violated the Sherman Act, but whether the state program [***1167] interferes with the accomplishment of the objectives of the federal statute." Ante, at 589 n. 19.I

This statement by the Solicitor General was indeed correct, because the question on which the Court had requested supplemental briefing was "whether the state statute involved is rendered invalid by the action of Congress in passing the Sherman Act," not "whether California or its officials have violated [**3132] the Sherman Act...." As the Solicitor General noted in the very next sentence, "[a] state law may be superseded as conflicting [****66] with a federal statute irrespective of whether its administrators are subject to prosecution for violation of the paramount federal enactment."<sup>7</sup> The Solicitor General then proceeded [*621] to take strenuous issue with the principal contention advanced in the first part of the relevant section of California's brief -- that the framers of the federal legislation had not intended to pre-empt state legislation like the California Agricultural Prorate Act.<sup>8</sup>

[****67] Thus, it is clear that the plurality has misread the positions taken by the State of California and the Solicitor General in Parker v. Brown. The question presented to the Court in Parker was whether the restraint on brief was simply and solely that "Congress never intended to subject a sovereign State to the provisions of the Sherman Act...." Ante, at 588. Yet, as the preceding quotations show, California's argument in the first part of its brief dovetailed two interrelated themes: First, that state regulation of intrastate commerce was not pre-empted by the Sherman Act and, second, that the framers of the Sherman Act did not intend its proscriptions to run directly against the sovereign States. It was the first of these themes that California deemed primary. Near the close of the first part of California's brief appeared the following passage:

"To hold the State within the prohibition of the Sherman Act in the present instance would result in prohibiting it from exercising its otherwise valid police powers. This Court has repeatedly and emphatically stated that 'it should never be held that Congress intends to supersede or by its legislation suspend the exercise of the police powers of the State, even when it may do so, unless its purpose to effect that result is clearly manifested.'" Supplemental Brief for Appellants 47-48 in Parker v. Brown, O.T. 1942, No. 46 (footnote omitted).

<sup>7</sup> This distinction was properly drawn, as is apparent from decisions in the labor law context. A State or political subdivision thereof is not normally subject to the prohibitions of the National Labor Relations Act, 49 Stat. 449, as amended, 29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq. See, e.g., NLRB v. Natural Gas Utility Dist., 402 U.S. 600. But it certainly does not follow that sovereign enactments of the State may not be deemed pre-empted by the federal legislation. San Diego Unions v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236; Garner v. Teamsters, 346 U.S. 485.

<sup>8</sup> The Solicitor General began his analysis with the following statement:

"A state statute permitting, or requiring, dealers in a commodity to combine so as to limit the supply or raise the price of a subject of interstate commerce would clearly be void. The question here is whether a state may itself undertake to control the supply and price of a commodity shipped in interstate commerce or otherwise restrain interstate competition through a mandatory regulation." Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 63 in Parker v. Brown, O.T. 1942, No. 46.

He then acknowledged that "[i]t seems clear that Congress, when it enacted the statute, did not intend to deprive the states of their normal 'police' powers over business and industry.... For example, in the field of public utilities, a state can undoubtedly regulate rates without running afoul of the Sherman Act notwithstanding the fact that the rate regulation may embrace interstate commerce." Id. at 63-64 (footnotes and citations omitted). But, the Solicitor General continued, "[a]lthough Congress plainly did not regard local laws in these fields as incompatible with the Sherman Act, we believe that the same cannot be said when the state statute is designed directly to control the competitive aspects of an industry in a manner which will have more than local effect." Id. at 64-65. This was the critical portion of the Solicitor General's argument, which sought to draw a delicate distinction between acceptable police power legislation, such as public utility regulation, and pre-empted police power legislation, such as that designed explicitly to suppress competition affecting interstate commerce.

trade effected by the California statute was exempt [*622] from the operation of the Sherman Act. That was the question addressed by the Solicitor General and, in principal part, by the State of California. And it was the question resolved by this Court in its holding that "[t]he state in adopting and enforcing the prorate program made no contract or agreement and entered into no conspiracy in restraint of trade or to establish monopoly but, as sovereign, [***1168] imposed the restraint as an act of government which the Sherman Act did not undertake to prohibit." 317 U.S., at 352.

The notion that Parker decided only that "action taken by state officials pursuant to express legislative command did not violate the Sherman Act," ante, at 589, and that that "narrow holding... avoided any question about the applicability of the antitrust laws to private action" taken under command of state law, ante, at 590, is thus refuted by the very sources [****68] on which the plurality opinion relies. That narrow view of the Parker decision is also refuted by the subsequent cases in this Court that have interpreted and applied the Parker doctrine.

In Eastern R. Conf. v. Noerr Motors, 365 U.S. 127, for instance, the Court held that no violation of the Sherman Act could be predicated on the attempt by private persons to influence the passage or enforcement of state laws regulating [**3133] competition in the trucking industry.<sup>9</sup> The Court took as its starting point the ruling in Parker v. Brown that "where a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, no violation of the Act can be made out." 365 U.S., at 136. The Court [*623] viewed it as "equally clear that the Sherman Act does not prohibit two or more persons from associating together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or monopoly." Ibid. A contrary ruling, the Court held, "would substantially impair the power of government to take actions through its legislature and executive [****69] that operate to restrain trade." Id., at 137. Surely, if a rule permitting Sherman Act liability to arise from lobbying by private parties for state rules restricting competition would impair the power of state governments to impose restraints, then a fortiori a rule permitting Sherman Act liability to arise from private parties' compliance with such rules would impair the exercise of the States' power. But as the Court in Noerr correctly noted, the latter result was foreclosed by Parker's holding that "where a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, no violation of the Act can be made out." 365 U.S., at 136.

[****70] Litigation testing the limits of the state-action exemption has focused on whether alleged anticompetitive conduct by private parties is indeed "the result of" state action. Thus, in Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, the question was whether price fixing practiced by the respondents was "required by the State acting as sovereign. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S., at 350-352...." Id., at 790. The Court held that the "so-called state-action [***1169] exemption," id., at 788, did not protect the respondents because it "cannot fairly be said that the State of Virginia through its Supreme Court Rules required the anticompetitive activities of either respondent.... Respondents' arguments, at most, constitute the contention that their activities complemented the objective [*624] of the ethical codes. In our view that is not state action for Sherman Act purposes. It is not enough that, as the County Bar puts it, anticompetitive conduct is 'prompted' by state action; rather, anticompetitive activities must be compelled by direction of the State acting as a sovereign." Id., at 790-791. The plurality's view that Parker does not cover state-compelled [****71] private conduct flies in the face of this carefully drafted language in the Goldfarb opinion.

Parker, Noerr, and Goldfarb point unerringly to the proper disposition of this case. The regulatory process at issue has three principal stages. First, the utility company proposes a tariff. Second, the Michigan Public Service Commission investigates the proposed tariff and either approves it or rejects it. Third, if the tariff is approved, the utility company must, under command of state law, provide service in accord with its requirements until or unless the Commission approves a modification. The utility company thus engages in two distinct activities: It proposes a tariff and, if the tariff is approved, it obeys its terms. The first action cannot give rise to antitrust liability under Noerr and the second -- compliance with the terms of the tariff under the command of state law -- is immune from antitrust liability under Parker and Goldfarb.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>9</sup>The only exception is where the attempt to influence state regulation is a "sham" aimed at "harass[ing] and deterr[ing]... competitors from having 'free and unlimited access' to the agencies and courts...." California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 515.

[****72] [*625] The [**3134] plurality's contrary view would effectively overrule not only Parker but the entire body of post-Parker case law in this area, including Noerr. With the Parker holding [***1170] reduced to the trivial proposition that the Sherman Act was not intended to run directly against state officials or governmental entities, the Court would fashion a new two-part test for determining whether state utility regulation creates immunity from the federal antitrust law. The first part of the test would focus on whether subjecting state-regulated utilities to antitrust liability would be "unjust." The second part of the test would look to whether the draftsmen of the Sherman Act intended to "superimpose" antitrust standards, and thus exposure to treble damages, on conduct compelled by state regulatory laws. THE CHIEF JUSTICE accedes to the new two-part test, at least where the State "purports, without any independent regulatory purpose, to control [a] utility's activities in separate, competitive [*626] markets." Ante, at 604. The new immunity test thus has the approval of a majority of the Court in instances where state-compelled anticompetitive practices [****73] are deemed "ancillary" to the State's regulatory goals.<sup>11</sup>

With scarcely a backward glance at the Noerr case, the Court concludes that because the utility company's "participation" in the decision to incorporate the lamp-exchange program into the tariff was "sufficiently significant," there is nothing "unjust" in concluding that the company is required to conform its conduct to federal antitrust law "like comparable conduct by unregulated businesses...." Ante, at 594. This attempt to distinguish between the exemptive force of mandatory state rules adopted at the behest of private parties [****74] and those adopted pursuant to the State's unilateral decision is flatly inconsistent with the rationale of Noerr. There the Court pointedly rejected "[a] construction of the Sherman Act that would disqualify people from taking a public position on matters in which they are financially interested" because such a construction "would... deprive the government of a valuable source of information and, at the same time, deprive the people of their right to petition in the very instances in which that [**3135] right may be of the most importance to them." 365 U.S., at 139.<sup>12</sup>

[*627] Today's holding will not only penalize the right to petition but may very well [****75] strike a crippling blow at state utility regulation. As the Court seems to acknowledge, such regulation is heavily dependent on the active <sup>10</sup> The Court's reliance on Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345, is misplaced. There the Court held that a utility's discontinuance of service to a customer for nonpayment of bills was not "state action" sufficient to trigger the protections of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The petitioner had argued that because the State Public Utility Commission had approved that practice as a part of the respondent's general tariff, the termination was "state action" for Fourteenth Amendment purposes. Id., at 354. The Court disagreed, holding as follows: "The nature of governmental regulation of private utilities is such that a utility may frequently be required by the state regulatory scheme to obtain approval for practices a business regulated in less detail would be free to institute without any approval from a regulatory body. Approval by a state utility commission of such a request from a regulated utility, where the Commission has not put its own weight on the side of the proposed practice by ordering it, does not transmute a practice initiated by the utility and approved by the Commission into 'state action.' At most, the Commission's failure to overturn this practice amounted to no more than a determination that a Pennsylvania utility was authorized to employ such a practice if it so desired. Respondent's exercise of the choice allowed by state law where the initiative comes from it and not from the State, does not make its action in doing so 'state action' for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment." Id., at 357 (footnote omitted).

This constitutional holding has no bearing on whether a utility's action in compliance with a tariff which it proposed is exempt from Sherman Act liability. The latter is a question of legislative intent, not constitutional law, and must be answered on the basis of a separate line of authority -- namely, decisions such as Parker and Noerr which have construed the Sherman Act.

<sup>11</sup> I disagree with THE CHIEF JUSTICE's conclusion that Michigan's policy is "neutral" with respect to whether a utility should have a lamp-exchange program. See n. 26, infra. Moreover, I think it is apparent that insistence on statutory articulation of a state "purpose" to regulate activities performed incident to the provision of a "natural monopoly" service will lead to serious interference with state regulation. See ibid.

<sup>12</sup> As the Court noted in Noerr, the scheme at issue in Parker required popular initiative. 365 U.S., at 137-138, n. 17. And as it further noted, Parker itself expressly rejected the argument that the necessity for private initiative affected the "program's validity under the Sherman Act...." Id., at 137. participation of the regulated parties, who typically propose tariffs which are either adopted, rejected, or modified by utility commissions. But if a utility can escape the unpredictable consequences of the second arm of the Court's new test, see infra, this page only by playing possum -- by [***1171] exercising no "option" in the Court's terminology, ante, at 594 -- then it will surely be tempted to do just that, posing a serious threat to efficient and effective regulation.

The second arm of the Court's new immunity test, which apparently comes into play only if the utility's own activity does not exceed a vaguely defined threshold of "sufficient freedom of choice," purports to be aimed at answering the basic question of whether "Congress intended to superimpose antitrust standards on conduct already being regulated" by state utility regulation laws. Ante, at 595. Yet analysis of the Court's opinion reveals that the three factors to which the Court pays heed have little or nothing to do with discerning congressional intent. Rather, [****76] the second arm of the new test simply creates a vehicle for ad hoc judicial determinations of the substantive validity of state regulatory goals, which closely resembles the discarded doctrine of substantive due process. See Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726.

The Court's delineation of the second arm of the new test proceeds as follows. Apart from the "fairness" question, the Court states, there are "at least three reasons" why the light-bulb program should not enjoy Sherman Act immunity. Ante, at 595. "First," the Court observes, "merely because certain conduct may be subject both to state regulation and to the federal antitrust laws does not necessarily mean that it must satisfy [*628] inconsistent standards...." Ibid. That is true enough as an abstract proposition, but the very question is whether the utility's alleged "tie" of light-bulb sales to the provision of electric service is immune from antitrust liability, assuming it would constitute an antitrust violation in the absence of regulation.<sup>13</sup> Second, the Court states, "even assuming inconsistency, we could not accept the view that the federal interest must inevitably be subordinated to the State's. [****77] ..." Ibid. The Court goes on to amplify this rationale as follows: "The mere possibility of conflict between state regulatory policy and federal antitrust policy is an insufficient basis for implying an exemption from the federal antitrust laws. Congress could hardly [**3136] have intended state regulatory [***1172] agencies to have broader power than federal agencies to exempt private conduct from the antitrust laws. Therefore, [*629] assuming that there are situations in which the existence of state regulation should give rise to an implied exemption, the standards for ascertaining the existence and scope of such an exemption surely must be at least as severe as those applied to federal regulatory legislation." The Court has consistently refused to find that regulation gave rise to an implied exemption without first determining that exemption was necessary in order to make the regulatory act work, 'and even then only to the minimum extent necessary.'

"The application of that standard to this case inexorably requires rejection of respondent's claim." Ante, at 596-598 (footnotes omitted).I

[****78] The Court's analysis rests on a mistaken premise. The "implied immunity" doctrine employed by this Court to reconcile the federal antitrust laws and federal regulatory statutes cannot, rationally, be put to the use for which the Court would employ it. That doctrine, a species of the basic rule that repeals by implication are disfavored, comes into play only when two arguably inconsistent federal statutes are involved. "'Implied repeal'" of

<sup>13</sup> The Court seems to indicate at one point that it would be improper to "superimpose" antitrust liability on state regulatory schemes aimed at suppressing competition and raising prices. See ante, at 595 ("Unquestionably there are examples of economic regulation in which the very purpose of the government control is to avoid the consequences of unrestrained competition. Agricultural marketing programs, such as that involved in Parker, were of that character"). But some state regulation, the Court continues, aims not at suppressing competition, but rather at duplicating the effects of competition -- i.e., keeping prices down. With respect to state regulation of the latter type, the state scheme will not afford an exemption to the extent the regulated party is engaged in "business activity in competitive areas of the economy." Ante, at 596 (footnote omitted).

This rationale will not bear its own weight. If compliance with a state program aimed at suppressing competition in nonmonopoly industries -- i.e., raisin production -- cannot give rise to Sherman Act liability, then surely compliance with a state program aimed at controlling the terms and conditions of service performed incident to the provision of a "natural monopoly" product cannot give rise to treble damages.

federal antitrust laws by inconsistent state regulatory statutes is not only "not favored," ante, at 597-598, n. 37, it is impossible. See U.S. Const., Art. VI, cl. 2.

A closer scrutiny of the Court's holding reveals that its reference to the inapposite "implied repeal" doctrine is simply window dressing for a type of judicial review radically different from that engaged in by this Court in Gordon v. New York Stock Exchange, 422 U.S. 659, and United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321. Those cases turned exclusively on issues of statutory construction and involved no judicial scrutiny of the abstract "necessity" or "centrality" of particular [*630] regulatory provisions. Instead, the federal [****79] regulatory statute was accepted as a given, as was the federal antitrust law. The Court's interpretative effort was aimed at accommodating these arguably inconsistent bodies of law, not at second-guessing legislative judgments concerning the "necessity" for including particular provisions in the regulatory statute.

The Court's approach here is qualitatively different. The State of Michigan, through its Public Service Commission, has decided that requiring Detroit Edison to provide "free" light bulbs as a term and condition of service is in the public interest. Yet the Court is prepared to set aside that policy determination: "The lamp-supply program is by no means... imperative in the continued effective functioning of Michigan's regulation of the utilities industry." Ante, at 597 n. 36 (emphasis added). Even "if the federal antitrust laws should be construed to outlaw respondent's light-bulb-exchange program, there is no reason to believe that Michigan's regulation of its electric utilities will no longer be able to function effectively. Regardless of the outcome of this case, Michigan's interest in regulating [***1173] its utilities' distribution of electricity will be [****80] almost entirely unimpaired." Ante, at 598 (emphasis added).

The emphasized language in these passages shows that the Court is adopting an interpretation of the Sherman Act which will allow the federal judiciary to substitute its judgment for that of state legislatures and administrative agencies with respect to whether particular anticompetitive regulatory provisions are "sufficiently central," ante, at 597 n. 37, to a judicial conception of the proper scope of state utility regulation. The content of those "purposes," ibid., which the Court will suffer the States to promote derives presumably from the mandate of the Sherman Act. On this assumption -- and no other is plausible -- it becomes apparent [*631] that the Court's second reason for extending the Sherman Act to cover the light-bulb program, when divested of inapposite references to the federal implied [**3137] repeal doctrine, is merely a restatement of the third rationale, which the Court phrases as follows: "[F]inally, even if we were to assume that Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to apply to areas of the economy primarily regulated by a State, that assumption would not foreclose the enforcement [****81] of the antitrust laws in an essentially unregulated area such as the market for electric light bulbs." Ante, at 595. This statement raises at last the only legitimate question, which is whether Parker erred in holding that Congress, in enacting the Sherman Act, did not intend to vitiate state regulation of the sort at issue here by creating treble-damages exposure for activities performed in compliance therewith.

The Court's rationale appears to be that the draftsmen of the Sherman Act intended to exempt state-regulated utilities from treble damages only to the extent those utilities are complying with state rules which narrowly reflect the "typical[] assumption" that the [utility] is a natural monopoly" and which regulate the utility's "natural monopoly powers" as opposed to its "business activity in competitive areas of the economy." Ante, at 595-596 (footnotes omitted). Furthermore, such regulation must be "sufficiently central" to the regulation of natural monopoly powers if it is to shield the regulated party from antitrust liability. Ante, at 597 n. 37. This Delphic reading of the Sherman Act, which is unaided by any reference to the language or legislative history [****82] of that Act, is, of course, inconsistent with Parker v. Brown. Parker involved a state scheme aimed at artificially raising the market price of raisins. Raisin production is not a "natural monopoly." If the limits of [*632] the state-action exemption from the Sherman Act are congruent with the boundaries of "natural monopoly" power, then Parker was wrongly decided.

But the legislative history of the Sherman Act shows conclusively that Parker was correctly decided. The floor debates and the House Report on the proposed legislation clearly reveal, as at least one commentator has noted, that "Congress fully understood the narrow scope given to the commerce clause" in [***1174] 1890. <sup>14</sup> [****83]

---

<sup>14</sup> Slater, Antitrust and Government Action: A Formula for Narrowing Parker v. Brown, 69 Nw. U.L. Rev. 71, 84 (1974). See, e.g., 20 Cong. Rec. 1169 (1889) (remarks of Sen. Reagan); id., at 1458 (remarks of Sen. George); 21 Cong. Rec. 2467 (1890)

This understanding is, in many ways, of historic interest only, because subsequent decisions of this Court have "permitted the reach of the Sherman Act to expand along with expanding notions of congressional power."<sup>15</sup> But the narrow view taken by the Members of Congress in 1890 remains relevant for the limited purpose of assessing their intention regarding the interaction of the Sherman Act and state economic regulation.

The legislative history reveals very clearly that Congress' perception of the limitations of its power under the Commerce Clause was coupled with an intent not to intrude upon the authority of the several States to regulate "domestic" commerce. As the House Report stated: S

"It will be observed that the provisions of the bill are carefully confined to such subjects of legislation as are clearly within the legislative authority of Congress.

"No attempt is made to invade the legislative authority [*633] of the several States or even to occupy doubtful grounds. No system of laws can be devised by Congress alone which would effectually protect the people of the United States against the evils and oppression of trusts and monopolies. Congress has no authority to deal, generally, with the subject within the States, and the States have no authority to legislate in respect of commerce between the several States or with foreign nations.

[**3138] "It follows, therefore, that the legislative authority [****84] of Congress and that of the several States must be exerted to secure the suppression of restraints upon trade and monopolies. Whatever legislation Congress may enact on this subject, within the limits of its authority, will prove of little value unless the States shall supplement it by such auxiliary and proper legislation as may be within their legislative authority."<sup>16</sup>

Similarly, the floor debates on the proposed legislation reveal an intent to "[g]o as far as the Constitution permits Congress to go,"<sup>17</sup> in the words of Senator Sherman, conjoined with an intent not to "interfere with" state-law efforts to "prevent and control combinations within the limit of the State."<sup>18</sup> Far from demonstrating an intent to preempt state laws aimed at preventing or controlling combinations or monopolies, the legislative debates show that Congress' goal was to supplement such state efforts, themselves [***1175] restricted to the geographic [****85] boundaries of the several States. As Senator Sherman stated: "Each State can deal with a combination within the State, but only the General Government can deal [*634] with combinations reaching not only the several States, but the commercial world. This bill does not include combinations within a State...."<sup>19</sup> Indeed a preexisting body of state law forbidding combinations in restraint of trade provided the model for the federal Act. As Senator Sherman stated with respect to the proposed legislation: "It declares that certain contracts are against public policy, null and void. It does not announce a new principle of law, but applies old and well-recognized principles of the common law to the complicated jurisdiction of our State and Federal Government. Similar contracts in any State in the Union are now, by common or statute law, null and void."<sup>20</sup>

It is noteworthy [****86] that the body of state jurisprudence which formed the model for the Sherman Act coexisted with state laws permitting regulated industries to operate under governmental control in the public interest. Indeed, state regulatory laws long antedated the passage of the Sherman Act and had, prior to its passage, been upheld by this Court against constitutional attacks.<sup>21</sup> Such laws were an integral part of state efforts to regulate [*635]

(remarks of Sen. Hiscock); id., at 2469-2470 (remarks of Sen. Reagan); id., at 2566 (remarks of Sen. Stewart); id., at 2567 (remarks of Sen. Hoar); id., at 2600 (remarks of Sen. George).

<sup>15</sup> Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 743 n. 2.

<sup>16</sup> H.R. Rep. No. 1707, 51st Cong., 1st Sess., 1 (1890) (emphasis added).

<sup>17</sup> 20 Cong. Rec. 1167 (1889).

<sup>18</sup> 21 Cong. Rec. 2456 (1890) (emphasis added).

<sup>19</sup> Id., at 2460.

<sup>20</sup> Id., at 2456.

competition to which Congress turned for guidance in barring restraints of interstate commerce, and it is clear that those laws were left undisturbed by the passage of the Sherman Act in 1890. For, as congressional spokesmen expressly stated, there was no intent to "interfere with" state laws regulating domestic commerce or "invade the legislative authority of the several States...."

[****87] As previously noted, the intent of the draftsmen of the Sherman Act not to intrude on the sovereignty of the States was coupled with a full and precise understanding of the narrow scope of congressional power under the Commerce Clause, as it was then interpreted by decisions of this Court. Subsequent decisions of the Court, however, have permitted the "jurisdictional" reach of the Sherman Act to expand [**3139] along with an expanding view of the commerce power of Congress. See Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 743 n.2, and cases cited therein. These decisions, based on a determination that Congress intended to exercise all the power it possessed when it enacted the Sherman [***1176] Act,<sup>22</sup> [****88] have in effect allowed the Congress of 1890 the retroactive benefit of an enlarged judicial conception of the commerce power.<sup>23</sup>

It was this retroactive expansion of the jurisdictional reach of the Sherman Act that was in large part responsible for the advent of the Parker doctrine. Parker involved a program regulating the production of raisins [*636] within the State of California. Under the original understanding of the draftsmen of the Sherman Act, such in-state production, like in-state manufacturing, would not have been subject to the regulatory power of Congress under the Commerce Clause and thus not within the "jurisdictional" reach of the Sherman Act. See United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1. If the state of the law had remained static, the Parker problem would rarely, if ever, have arisen. As stated in Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, the operative premise would have been that the "Anti-Trust [***89] Act... prescribe[d]... a rule for interstate and international commerce, (not for domestic commerce,)" id., at 337. The relevant question would have been whether the anticompetitive conduct required or permitted by the state statute was in restraint of domestic or interstate commerce. If the former, the conduct would have been beyond the reach of the Sherman Act; if the latter, the conduct would probably have violated the Sherman Act, regardless of contrary state law, on the theory that "[n]o State can, by... any... mode, project its authority into other States, and across the continent, so as to prevent Congress from exerting the power it possesses under the Constitution over interstate and international commerce, or... to exempt its corporation engaged in interstate commerce from obedience to any rule lawfully established by Congress for such commerce." Id., at 345-346.

But the law did not remain static. As one commentator has put it: "By 1942, when Parker v. Brown was decided, the interpretation and scope of the commerce clause had changed substantially. With the development of the 'affection doctrine' purely intrastate events" -- like state-mandated anticompetitive arrangements [***90] with respect to in-state agricultural production or in-state provision of utility services -- "could be regulated [*637] under the commerce clause if these events had the requisite impact on interstate commerce."<sup>24</sup> This development created a potential for serious conflict between state statutes regulating commerce which, in 1890, would have been considered "domestic" but which, in 1942, were viewed [***1177] as falling within the jurisdictional reach of

<sup>21</sup> See Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 125 ("Under [the police] powers the government regulates the conduct of its citizens one towards another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property, when such regulation becomes necessary for the public good. In their exercise it has been customary in England from time immemorial, and in this country from its first colonization, to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, &c., and in so doing to fix a maximum of charge to be made for services rendered, accommodations furnished, and articles sold. To this day, statutes are to be found in many of the States upon some or all these subjects; and we think it has never yet been successfully contended that such legislation came within any of the constitutional prohibitions against interference with private property").

<sup>22</sup> E.g., United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, 324 U.S. 293, 298; United States v. Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 558; Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers v. United States, 286 U.S. 427, 435. See also United States v. American Bldg. Maint. Industries, 422 U.S. 271, 278; Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. 186, 194-195.

<sup>23</sup> See Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S., at 743 n. 2; Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., supra, at 201-202; Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 229-235.

<sup>24</sup> Slater, supra, n. 14, at 85.

the Sherman Act. To have held that state statutes requiring anticompetitive arrangements with respect to such commerce were pre-empted by the Sherman Act would, in effect, have transformed a generous principle of judicial construction -- namely the "retroactive" expansion of the jurisdictional reach of the Sherman Act to [**3140] the limits of an expanded judicial conception of the commerce power -- into a transgression of the clearly expressed congressional intent not to intrude on the regulatory authority of the States.

[****91] The "state action" doctrine of Parker v. Brown, as clarified by Goldfarb, represents the best possible accommodation of this limiting intent and the post-1890 judicial expansion of the jurisdictional reach of the Sherman Act. Parker's basic holding -- that the Sherman Act did not intend to displace restraints imposed by the State acting as sovereign -- coincides with the expressed legislative goal not to "invade the legislative authority of the several States...." Goldfarb clarified Parker by holding that private conduct, if it is to come within the state-action exemption, must be not merely "prompted" but "compelled" by state action. Thus refined, the doctrine performs the salutary function of isolating those areas of state regulation where the State's sovereign interest is, by the State's own judgment, at its strongest, and limits the exemption to those areas.<sup>25</sup>

[****92] [*638] Beyond this the Court cannot go without disregarding the purpose of the Sherman Act not to disrupt state regulatory laws.<sup>26</sup> [****94] Congress, of [***1178] course, can alter its [*639] original intent and expand or contract the categories of state law which may permissibly impose restraints on competition. For example, in 1937 Congress passed the Miller-Tydings Act which attached a proviso to § 1 of the Sherman Act permitting resale price maintenance contracts where such contracts were permitted by applicable state law. This proviso was interpreted in [**3141] Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, not to permit a State to enforce a law providing that all retailers within a State were bound by a resale price maintenance contract executed by any one retailer in the State. As the Court today notes, Parker -- and the legislative judgment embodied in the 1890 version of the Sherman Act -- would, standing alone, have seemed to immunize the state

<sup>25</sup> MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN expresses the view that the Court answered the question of "what was to be the result if the expanding ambit of the Sherman Act should bring it into conflict with inconsistent state law" in Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, and that the answer it gave was that any state regulatory statute "inconsistent" with the judicially expanded Sherman Act was pre-empted. Ante, at 606. But the opinion in Schwegmann -- which did not purport to modify or overrule Parker -- is most plausibly read as resting on a post-1890 expression of congressional intent, the Miller-Tydings Act. See infra, at 639. Even assuming, however, that Schwegmann conflicted with Parker, then surely the most significant aspect of that conflict is that Congress did not allow it to persist, as Schwegmann was soon legislatively overruled by the enactment of the McGuire bill, 66 Stat. 632, 15 U.S.C. §§ 45(a)(2)(5).

<sup>26</sup> The Court states at one point that the omission of a "direct reference to light bulbs" in the statute creating the Michigan Public Service Commission indicates that the State's policy is "neutral on the question whether a utility should, or should not, have such a program." Ante, at 584, 585. This statement seems to suggest that the Court considers the specificity with which a state legislature deals with particular regulatory matters to be relevant in determining whether agency action respecting such matters represents a sovereign choice, entitled to deference under the Sherman Act.

This suggestion overlooks the fact that Michigan's policy, far from being "neutral," is, as announced in Mich. Comp. Laws § 460.6 (1970), to vest an expert agency "with complete power and jurisdiction to regulate all public utilities in the state...." That agency is "vested with power and jurisdiction to regulate all rates, fares, fees, charges, services, rules, conditions of service and all other matters pertaining to the formation, operation or direction of such public utilities. It is further granted the power and jurisdiction to hear and pass upon all matters pertaining to or necessary or incident to such regulation of all public utilities, including electric light and power companies...." Ibid. (emphasis added).

If a state legislature can ensure antitrust exemption only by eschewing such broad delegation of regulatory authority and incorporating regulatory details into statutory law, then there is a very great risk that the State will be prevented from regulating effectively. For as this Court has repeatedly observed in another context, "[d]elegation... has long been recognized as necessary in order that the exertion of legislative power does not become a futility.... [T]he effectiveness of both the legislative and administrative processes would become endangered if [the legislature] were under the... compulsion of filling in the details beyond the liberal prescription [of requiring the making of 'just and reasonable' rates and regulating in the 'public interest'] here. Then the burdens of minutiae would be apt to clog the administration of the law and deprive the agency of that flexibility and dispatch which are its salient virtues." Sunshine Anthracite Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U.S. 381, 398.

scheme. Ante, at 593. But Congress was thought to have struck a new balance in 1937 with respect to a specific category of state-imposed restraints. Accordingly, the Court in Schwegmann [****93] determined congressional intent concerning the permissible limits of state restraints with respect to resale price maintenance by reference to the later, and more specific, expression of congressional purpose.<sup>27</sup>

[*640] There has been no analogous alteration of the original intent regarding the area of state regulation at issue here. Indeed, to the extent subsequent congressional action is probative at all, it shows a continuing intent to defer to the regulatory authority of the States over the terms and conditions of in-state electric utility service. Thus, § 201(a) of the Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. § 824\(a\), provides in relevant part that "Federal regulation... [is] to extend only to those matters which are not subject to regulation by the States."

The Court's opinion simply ignores the clear evidence of congressional intent and substitutes its own policy judgment about the desirability of disregarding any facet of state economic regulation that it thinks unwise or of no great importance. In adopting this freewheeling approach to the language of the Sherman Act the Court creates a statutory simulacrum [****95] of the substantive due process doctrine I thought had been put to rest long ago. See Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726.<sup>28</sup> For [***1179] the Court's approach contemplates the selective interdiction of those anticompetitive state regulatory measures that are deemed not "central" to the limited range of regulatory goals considered "imperative" by the federal judiciary.

Henceforth, a state-regulated public utility company must at its peril successfully divine which of its countless and interrelated tariff provisions a federal court will ultimately consider "central" or "imperative." If it guesses wrong, it may be subjected to treble damages as a penalty for its compliance with state law.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 246-249

15 USCS 1, 2, 14

US [****96] L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 7, 9, 20, 44

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 13, 26

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade; Public Utilities

Annotation References:

Valid governmental action as conferring immunity or exemption from private liability under the federal antitrust laws.
12 ALR Fed 329.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>27</sup> The decision in Schwegmann rested primarily on a detailed analysis of the legislative history of the Miller-Tydings Act. 341 U.S., at 390-395.

<sup>28</sup> See Verkuil, State Action, Due Process and Antitrust: Reflections on Parker v. Brown, 75 Col. L. Rev. 328 (1975).

United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, Inc.

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued November 1, 1976 ; February 22, 1977

No. 75-853

Reporter

429 U.S. 610 *; 97 S. Ct. 861 **; 51 L. Ed. 2d 80 ***; 1977 U.S. LEXIS 43 ****; 1977-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P61,294

UNITED STATES STEEL CORP. ET AL. v. FORTNER ENTERPRISES, INC.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT

Core Terms

---

financing, economic power, houses, tying product, customers, sales, tying arrangement, credit market, prefabricated, competitors, seller, tied product, terms, lenders, lending, loans

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN1 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The decisions regarding tying focus attention on the question whether the seller has the power, within the market for the tying product, to raise prices or to require purchasers to accept burdensome terms that could not be exacted in a completely competitive market. In short, the question is whether the seller has some advantage not shared by his competitors in the market for the tying product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN2 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

If the evidence merely shows that credit terms are unique because the seller is willing to accept a lesser profit -- or to incur greater risks -- than its competitors, that kind of uniqueness will not give rise to any inference of economic power in the credit market.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

This civil antitrust case presented the question whether 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) was violated by a tying arrangement whereby in exchange for the promise of the plaintiff, a real estate developer, to purchase from one of the defendant companies prefabricated houses to be erected on certain property, the other defendant company, a wholly owned subsidiary of the house manufacturer, agreed to finance the cost of acquiring and developing the land as well as the cost of the houses. In earlier proceedings, the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky entered a summary judgment for the defendants and the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit affirmed, but the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that the agreement affected a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce in the tied product (prefabricated houses) and that the plaintiff was entitled to an opportunity to prove that the defendants possessed "appreciable economic power" in the market for the tying product (credit) (394 US 495, 22 L Ed 2d 495, 89 S Ct 1252). On remand, the District Court ultimately held that the evidence established that the defendants had sufficient economic power in the credit market to make the tying arrangement unlawful, and the Court of Appeals affirmed (523 F2d 961).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by Stevens, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that "appreciable economic power" in the market for the tying product was not established, where the record merely showed that (1) the corporation that manufactured the houses and owned the credit company was one of the nation's largest corporations, there being no showing that the affiliation between the companies gave the credit company any cost advantage over its competitors, (2) the defendants had entered into similar tying arrangements with a significant number of other customers, such fact indicating nothing as to the defendants' economic power in the credit market, (3) the plaintiff was charged a noncompetitive price for the prefabricated houses, exceeding prices of comparable products, such proof also being consistent with the possibility that the financing was unusually expensive and that the price for the entire package was equal to, or below, a competitive price, and (4) the financing was "unique," primarily because it covered 100% of the plaintiff's acquisition and development costs and the lender accepted a high risk at a low interest rate, no inference of economic power in the credit market being warranted merely because the seller was willing to accept a lesser profit, or to incur greater risks, than its competitors, absent any evidence that the credit company had some cost advantage over its competitors, or could offer a form of financing that was significantly differentiated from that which other lenders could offer if they so elected.

Burger, Ch. J., joined by Rehnquist, J., concurred, emphasizing that the peculiar arrangement in the case at bar involved two separate products sold by two separate corporations, and thus the court's decision did not implicate ordinary credit sales of only a single product, which could not constitute a tying arrangement subject to per se scrutiny under the Sherman Act.

Headnotes

---

Restraints of Trade and Monopolies §30 > tying arrangement -- conspiracy to monopolize -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

In a civil antitrust action based on 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2)--the plaintiff alleging that the defendants, a prefabricated housing manufacturer and a wholly owned subsidiary credit company, had conspired to acquire a monopoly in the market for prefabricated houses by making loans only when purchasers agreed to purchase prefabricated houses from the defendant manufacturer--a finding that 2 was violated is not proper where the record merely shows that the defendants combined or conspired to increase sales of prefabricated house packages, and that the sole purpose of the loan program was to increase the manufacturer's share of the market in prefabricated house packages; "increasing sales" and "increasing market share" are normal business goals, not forbidden by 2 without other evidence of an intent to monopolize, particularly where the defendants did not have a large market share or dominant market position.

Evidence §172 > inference -- intent to monopolize -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

No inference of intent to monopolize, in violation of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), can be drawn from the fact that a firm with a small market share has engaged in nonpredatory competitive conduct in the hope of increasing sales.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > Evidence §343.5 > tying arrangement -- credit terms -- economic power -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B] [LEdHN\[3C\]](#) [3C] [LEdHN\[3D\]](#) [3D]

In a treble damage action alleging that 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) was violated by a tying arrangement whereby in exchange for the plaintiff's promise to purchase the tied product (prefabricated houses to be erected on certain property) from the defendant house manufacturer, the other defendant company, a wholly owned subsidiary of the house manufacturer, agreed to finance the cost of acquiring and developing the land as well as the cost of the houses, "appreciable economic power" in the market for the tying product (credit), which would be necessary to make the tying arrangement illegal, is not established where the record merely shows that (1) the corporation that manufactured the houses and owned the credit company was one of the nation's largest corporations, there being no showing that the affiliation between the companies gave the credit company any cost advantage over its competitors in the credit market, (2) the defendants entered into tying arrangements with a significant number of other customers, such fact indicating nothing as to the defendants' economic power in the credit market, (3) the plaintiff was charged a noncompetitive price for the prefabricated houses, exceeding prices of comparable products, such proof also being consistent with the possibility that the financing was unusually expensive and that the price for the entire package was equal to or below a competitive price, and (4) the financing was "unique," primarily because it covered 100% of the plaintiff's acquisition and development costs and the lender accepted a high risk at a low interest rate, no inference of economic power in the credit market being warranted by evidence which merely showed that credit terms were unique because the seller was willing to accept a lesser profit or to incur greater risks than its competitors; the unusual credit bargain offered to the plaintiff proves nothing more than a willingness to provide cheap financing in order to sell expensive houses, and without any evidence that the credit company had some cost advantage over its competitors--or could offer a form of financing that was significantly differentiated from that which other lenders could offer if they so elected--the unique character of its financing does not support the conclusion that the defendants had the kind of economic power which the plaintiff had the burden of proving in order to prevail.

Evidence §979 > effect -- tying arrangement -- economic power -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

In some tying situations a disproportionately large volume of sales of the tied product resulting from only a few strategic sales of the tying product may reflect a form of economic "leverage" that is probative of power in the market for the tying product, and if the purpose of the tie-in is to facilitate price discrimination, such evidence implies the existence of power that a free market will not tolerate under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.).

Restraints of Trade and Monopolies §30 > tying arrangements -- economic power -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

In order to show the requisite economic power in the tying product to establish an unlawful tying arrangement under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), it is not necessary that the defendant have a monopoly or even a dominant position throughout the market for the tying product; the proper question is whether the seller has some advantage not shared by his competitors in the market for the tying product.

Restraints of Trade and Monopolies §30 > tying arrangements -- economic power -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

In determining whether there is sufficient economic power in the tying product to establish an unlawful tying arrangement under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), the proper focus of concern is whether the seller has the power to raise prices, or impose other burdensome terms such as the tie-in, with respect to any appreciable number of buyers within the market; the mere inclusion of tie-in clauses in contracts with an appreciable number of buyers does not establish the requisite market power, since market power in the sense of power over price must still exist; if the price could have been raised but the tie-in was demanded in lieu of the higher price, then the requisite economic power exists.

Syllabus

---

In exchange for respondent real estate development corporation's promise to purchase prefabricated houses to be erected on certain land, petitioner United States Steel Corp.'s Home Division (the manufacturer of the houses) and petitioner Credit Corp., a wholly owned subsidiary that provides financing to the Home Division's customers, agreed to finance respondent's cost of acquiring and developing the land. After difficulties arose while the development was in progress, respondent brought a treble-damages action against petitioners, alleging that the transaction was a tying arrangement forbidden by the Sherman Act, because the competition for prefabricated houses (the tied product) was restrained by petitioners' abuse of power over credit (the tying product). After this Court, in a prior review of the case upon reversing a summary judgment in petitioners' favor, held that the agreement affected a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce in the tied product and that respondent was entitled to an opportunity to prove that petitioners [****2] possessed "appreciable economic power" in the market for the tying product, the District Court ultimately held that the evidence justified the conclusion that petitioners did have sufficient economic power in the credit market to make the tying arrangement unlawful, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. That evidence related to four propositions: (1) petitioner Credit Corp. and the Home Division were owned by one of the Nation's largest corporations; (2) petitioners entered into tying arrangements with a significant number of customers in addition to respondent; (3) the Home Division charged respondent a noncompetitive price for its prefabricated houses; and (4) the financing provided to respondent was "unique," primarily because it covered 100% of respondent's acquisition and development costs. Held: The record does not support the conclusion that petitioners had appreciable economic power in the market for credit, the tying product. Where the record merely shows that the credit terms are unique because the seller was willing to accept a lesser profit -- or to incur greater risks - than its competitors, such uniqueness does not give rise to any inference of economic power in [****3] the credit market. The unusual credit bargain offered to respondent proves nothing more than a willingness to provide cheap financing in order to sell expensive houses, and without any evidence that the Credit Corp. had some cost advantage over its competitors -- or could offer a form of financing that was significantly differentiated from that which other lenders could offer if they so elected -- the unique character of its financing does not support the lower courts' conclusion that petitioners had the kind of economic power that respondent had the burden of proving in order to prevail. Pp. 614-622.

523 F. 2d 961, reversed.

STEVENS, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court. BURGER, C.J., filed a concurring opinion, in which REHNQUIST, J., joined, post, p. 622.

Counsel: Macdonald Flinn argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Albert F. Reutlinger, William H. Buchanan, and Norman Yoerg, Jr.

Kenneth L. Anderson argued the cause for respondent. With him on the briefs was A. Scott Hamilton, Jr.

Judges: Burger, Brennan, Stewart, White, Marshall, Blasckmun, Powell, Rehnquist, Stevens

Opinion by: STEVENS

Opinion

---

[*611] [****4] [***84] [**863] Mr. JUSTICE STEVENS delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A]LEdHN[2A] [↑] [2A]In exchange for respondent's promise to purchase prefabricated houses to be erected on land near Louisville, Ky., petitioners agreed to finance the cost of acquiring and developing the land. Difficulties arose while the development was in progress, and respondent (Fortner) commenced this treble-damages action, claiming that the transaction was a tying arrangement forbidden by the Sherman Act. Fortner alleged that competition for prefabricated houses (the tied product) was restrained by petitioners' abuse of power over credit (the tying product). A summary judgment in favor of petitioners was reversed by this Court. Fortner Enterprises v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495 (Fortner I). We held that the agreement affected a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce in the tied product and that Fortner was entitled to an opportunity to prove that petitioners possessed "appreciable" [*612] economic power" in the [****5] market for the tying product. The question now presented is whether the record supports the conclusion that petitioners had such power in the credit market.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> As explained at the outset of the opinion, Fortner I involved "a variety of questions concerning the proper standards to be applied by a United States district court in passing on a motion for summary judgment in a civil antitrust action." 394 U.S., at 496. Petitioners do not ask us to re-examine Fortner I, which left only the economic power question open on the issue of whether a per se violation could be proved. On the other hand, Fortner has not pursued the suggestion in Fortner I that it might be able to prove a § 1 violation under the rule-of-reason standard. 394 U.S., at 500. Thus, with respect to § 1, only the economic-power issue is before us.

LEdHN[1B] [↑] [1B]LEdHN[2B] [↑] [2B]In Fortner I, the Court noted that Fortner also alleged a § 2 violation, namely, that petitioners "conspired together for the purpose of: acquiring a monopoly in the market for prefabricated houses." 394 U.S., at 500. The District Court held that a § 2 violation had been proved. Although the Court of Appeals did not reach this issue, a remand is unnecessary. It is clear that neither the District Court's findings of fact nor the record supports the conclusion that § 2 was violated. The District Court found only that "the defendants did combine or conspire to increase sales of prefabricated house packages by United States Steel Corporation by the making of loans to numerous builders containing the tie-in provision" and that "the sole purpose of the loan programs of the Credit Corporation was specifically and deliberately to increase the share of the market of United States Steel Corporation in prefabricated house packages...." App. 1603 (emphasis added). But "increasing sales" and "increasing market share" are normal business goals, not forbidden by § 2 without other evidence of an intent to monopolize. The evidence in this case does not bridge the gap between the District Court's findings of intent to increase sales and its legal conclusion of conspiracy to monopolize. Moreover, petitioners did not have a large market share or dominant market position. See n. 3, infra. No inference of intent to monopolize can be drawn from the fact that a firm with a small market share has engaged in nonpredatory competitive conduct in the hope of increasing sales. Yet as we conclude, infra, at 621-622, that is all the record in this case shows.

[****6] The [***85] [**864] conclusion that a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act<sup>2</sup> [*613] had been proved was only reached after two trials. At the first trial following our remand, the District Court directed a verdict in favor of Fortner on the issue of liability, and submitted only the issue of damages to the jury. The jury assessed damages, before trebling, of $ 93,200. The Court of Appeals reversed the directed verdict and remanded for a new trial on liability. 452 F. 2d 1095 (CA6 1971), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 919. The parties then waived the jury; the trial judge heard additional evidence, and entered extensive findings of fact which were affirmed on appeal. 523 F.2d 961 (1975). Both courts held that the findings justified the conclusion that petitioners had sufficient economic power in the credit market to make the tying arrangement unlawful.

LEdHN[3A] [3A] [****7] Before explaining why we disagree with the ultimate conclusion of the courts below, we first describe the tying arrangement and then summarize the findings on the economic-power issue.

I

Only the essential features of the arrangement between the parties need be described. Fortner is a corporation which was activated by an experienced real estate developer for the purpose of buying and improving residential lots. One petitioner, United States Steel Corp., operates a "Home Division" which manufactures and assembles components of prefabricated houses; the second petitioner, the "Credit Corp.," is a wholly owned subsidiary, which provides financing to customers of the Home Division in order to promote sales. Although their common ownership and control make it appropriate to regard the two as a single seller, they sell two separate products -- prefabricated houses and credit. The credit extended to Fortner was not merely for the price of the homes. Petitioners agreed to lend Fortner over $ 2,000,000 in exchange for Fortner's promise to purchase the components of 210 homes for about $ 689,000. The additional borrowed funds were intended to cover Fortner's cost of acquiring and [****8] [*614] developing the vacant [***86] real estate, and the cost of erecting the houses.

The impact of the agreement on the market for the tied product (prefabricated houses) is not in dispute. On the one hand, there is no claim -- nor could there be -- that the Home Division had any dominance in the prefabricated housing business. The record indicates that it was only moderately successful, and that its sales represented a small fraction of the industry total.<sup>3</sup> On [**865] the other hand, we have already held that the dollar value of the sales to respondent was sufficient to meet the "not insubstantial" test described in earlier cases. See 394 U.S., at 501-502. We therefore confine our attention to the source of the tying arrangement -- petitioners' "economic power" in the credit market.

[****9] II

LEdHN[3B] [3B] The evidence supporting the conclusion that the Credit Corp. had appreciable economic power in the credit market relates to four propositions: (1) petitioner Credit Corp. and the Home Division were owned by one of the Nation's largest corporations; (2) petitioners entered into tying arrangements with a significant number of customers in addition to Fortner; (3) the Home Division charged respondent a noncompetitive price for its prefabricated homes; and (4) the financing provided to Fortner was "unique," primarily because it covered 100% of Fortner's acquisition and development costs.

The Credit Corp. was established in 1954 to provide financing for customers of the Home Division. The United States Steel Corp. not only provided the equity capital, but also allowed the Credit Corp. to use its credit in order [*615] to borrow money from banks at the prime rate. Thus, although the Credit Corp. itself was not a particularly large company, it was supported by a corporate parent with great financial strength.

---

<sup>2</sup> 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

<sup>3</sup> In 1960, for example, the Home Division sold a total of 1,793 houses for $ 6,747,353. There were at least four larger prefabricated home manufacturers, the largest of which sold 16,804 homes in that year. In the following year the Home Division's sales declined while the sales of each of its four principal competitors remained steady or increased.

The Credit Corp.'s loan policies were primarily intended to help the Home Division [****10] sell its products.<sup>4</sup> It extended credit only to customers of the Home Division, and over two-thirds of the Home Division customers obtained such financing. With few exceptions, all the loan agreements contained a tying clause comparable to the one challenged in this case. Petitioner's home sales in 1960 amounted to $ 6,747,353. Since over $ 4,600,000 of these sales were tied to financing provided by the Credit Corp.,<sup>5</sup> it is apparent that the tying arrangement was used with a number of customers in addition to Fortner.

[****11] The [***87] least expensive house package that Fortner purchased from the Home Division cost about $ 3,150. One witness testified that the Home Division's price was $ 455 higher than the price of comparable components in a conventional home; another witness, to whom the District Court made no reference in its findings, testified that the Home Division's price was $ 443 higher than a comparable prefabricated product. Whether the price differential was as great as 15% is not entirely clear, but the record does support the conclusion that the contract required Fortner to pay a noncompetitive price for the Home Division's houses.

The finding that the credit extended to Fortner was unique [*616] was based on factors emphasized in the testimony of Fortner's expert witness, Dr. Masten, a professor with special knowledge of lending practices in the Kentucky area. Dr. Masten testified that mortgage loans equal to 100% of the acquisition and development cost of real estate were not otherwise available in the Kentucky area; that even though Fortner had a deficit of $ 16,000, its loan was not guaranteed by a shareholder, officer, or other person interested in its business; and that [****12] the interest rate of 6% represented a low rate under prevailing economic conditions.<sup>6</sup> Moreover, he explained that the stable [**866] price levels at the time made the risk to the lender somewhat higher than would have been the case in a period of rising prices. Dr. Masten concluded that the terms granted to respondent by the Credit Corp. were so unusual that it was almost inconceivable that the funds could have been acquired from any other source. It is a fair summary of his testimony, and of the District Court's findings, to say that the loan was unique because the lender accepted such a high risk and the borrower assumed such a low cost.

The District Court also found that banks and federally insured savings and loan associations generally were prohibited by law from making 100% land acquisition and development loans, and "that other conventional lenders would not have made such loans at the time in question since they were not prudent loans due to [****13] the risk involved." App. 1596.

Accordingly, the District Court concluded "that all of the required elements of an illegal tie-in agreement did exist since the tie-in itself was present, a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce in the tied product was restrained and the Credit Corporation did possess sufficient economic power or leverage to effect such restraint." Id., at 1602.

[*617] III

LEdHN[3C] [3C]Without the finding that the financing provided to Fortner was "unique," it is clear that the District Court's findings would be insufficient to support the conclusion that the Credit Corp. possessed any significant economic power in the credit market.

Although the Credit Corp. is owned by one of the Nation's largest manufacturing corporations, there is nothing in the record to indicate that this enabled it to borrow [***88] funds on terms more favorable than those available to competing lenders, or that it was able to operate more efficiently than other lending institutions. In short, the affiliation between the petitioners does not appear to have given the Credit Corp. any cost advantage [****14] over its competitors in the credit market. Instead, the affiliation was significant only because the Credit Corp. provided a source of funds to customers of the Home Division. That fact tells us nothing about the extent of petitioners' economic power in the credit market.

<sup>4</sup> After reviewing extensive evidence taken from the files of the Credit Corp., including a memorandum stating that "our only purpose in making the loan... is shipping houses," the District Court expressly found "that the Credit Corporation was not so much concerned with the risks involved in loans but whether they would help sell houses." App. 1588-1589.

<sup>5</sup> This figure is not stated in the District Court's findings; it is derived from the finding of total sales and the finding that 68% of the sales in 1960 were made to dealers receiving financial assistance from the Credit Corp. See id., at 1589-1590.

<sup>6</sup> The prime rate at the time was 5% or 5 1/2%.

LEdHN[4] [↑] [4]The same may be said about the fact that loans from the Credit Corp. were used to obtain house sales from Fortner and others. In some tying situations a disproportionately large volume of sales of the tied product resulting from only a few strategic sales of the tying product may reflect a form of economic "leverage" that is probative of power in the market for the tying product. If, as some economists have suggested, the purpose of a tie-in is often to facilitate price discrimination, such evidence would imply the existence of power that a free market would not tolerate.<sup>7</sup> But in this case Fortner was only required to purchase houses for the number of lots for which it received financing. The tying product produced no commitment from Fortner to purchase varying quantities of the tied product over an extended period of time. This [****15] record, therefore, does not describe [*618] the kind of "leverage" found in some of the Court's prior decisions condemning tying arrangements.<sup>8</sup>

The fact that Fortner -- and presumably other Home Division customers as well -- paid a noncompetitive price for houses also lends insufficient support to the judgment of the lower court. Proof that [**867] Fortner paid a higher price for the tied product is consistent with the possibility that the [****16] financing was unusually inexpensive<sup>9</sup> and that the price for the entire package was equal to, or below, a competitive price. And this possibility is equally strong even though a number of Home Division customers made a package purchase of homes and financing.<sup>10</sup>

[****17] [*619] The [***89] most significant finding made by the District Court related to the unique character of the credit extended to Fortner. This finding is particularly important because the unique character of the tying product has provided critical support for the finding of illegality in prior cases. Thus, the statutory grant of a patent monopoly in International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392; the copyright monopolies in United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, and United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S. 38; and the extensive land

<sup>7</sup> See Bowman, Tying Arrangements and the Leverage Problem, 67 Yale L.J. 19 (1957).

<sup>8</sup> See e.g., United Shoe Machinery v. United States, 258 U.S. 451; International Business Machines v. United States, 298 U.S. 131; International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392. In his article in the 1969 Supreme Court Review, 16, Professor Dam suggests that this kind of leverage may also have been present in Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1.

<sup>9</sup> Fortner's expert witness agreed with the statement:

"The amount of the loan as a percentage of the collateral or security is only one element in determining its advantage to a borrower. The other relevant factors include the rate of interest charged, whether the lender discounts the amount loaned or charges service for [sic] other fees and maturity in terms of repayment." App. 1686.

<sup>10</sup> Relying on Advance Business Systems & Supply Co. v. SCM Corp., 415 F. 2d 55 (CA4 1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 920, Fortner contends that acceptance of the package by a significant number of customers is itself sufficient to prove the seller's economic power. But this approach depends on the absence of other explanations for the willingness of buyers to purchase the package. See 415 F. 2d, at 68. In the Northern Pacific case, for instance, the Court explained:

"The very existence of this host of tying arrangements is itself compelling evidence of the defendant's great power, at least where, as here, no other explanation has been offered for the existence of these restraints. The 'preferential routing' clauses conferred no benefit on the purchasers or lessees. While they got the land they wanted by yielding their freedom to deal with competing carriers, the defendant makes no claim that it came any cheaper than if the restrictive clauses had been omitted. In fact any such price reduction in return for rail shipments would have quite plainly constituted an unlawful rebate to the shipper. So far as the Railroad was concerned its purpose obviously was to fence out competitors, to stifle competition." 356 U.S., at 7-8 (footnote omitted).

As this passage demonstrates, this case differs from Northern Pacific because use of the tie-in in this case can be explained as a form of price competition in the tied product, whereas that explanation was unavailable to the Northern Pacific Railway.

holdings in Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1,<sup>11</sup> represented tying products that the Court regarded as sufficiently unique to give rise to a presumption of economic power.<sup>12</sup>

[****18]

[*620] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5][LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A]As the Court plainly stated in its prior opinion in this case, these decisions do not require that the defendant have a monopoly or even a dominant position throughout the market for a tying product. See 394 U.S., at 502-503.HN1 They do, however, focus attention on the question whether the seller has the power, within the market for the tying product, to raise prices or to require purchasers to accept burdensome terms that could not be exacted in a completely competitive market.<sup>13</sup> [**868] In [***90] short, the question is whether the seller has some advantage not shared by his competitors in the market for the tying product.

[LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

[****19] Without any such advantage differentiating his product from that of his competitors, the seller's product does not [*621] have the kind of uniqueness considered relevant in prior tying-clause cases. n14 The Court made this point explicitly when it remanded this case for trial: S

"We do not mean to accept petitioner's apparent argument that market power can be inferred simply because the kind of financing terms offered by a lending company are 'unique and unusual.' We do mean, however, that uniquely and unusually advantageous terms can reflect a creditor's unique economic advantages over his competitors." 394 U.S., at 505I

<sup>11</sup> The Court in Northern Pacific concluded that the railroad "possessed substantial economic power by virtue of its extensive landholdings" and then described those holdings as follows:

"As pointed out before, the defendant was initially granted large acreages by Congress in the several North-western States through which its lines now run. This land was strategically located in checkerboard fashion amid private holdings and within economic distance of transportation facilities. Not only the testimony of various witnesses but common sense makes it evident that this particular land was often prized by those who purchased or leased it and was frequently essential to their business activities." Id., at 7.

<sup>12</sup> "Since one of the objectives of the patent laws is to reward uniqueness, the principle of these cases was carried over into antitrust law on the theory that the existence of a valid patent on the tying product, without more, establishes a distinctiveness sufficient to conclude that any tying arrangement involving the patented product would have anticompetitive consequences." United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 46.

<sup>13</sup> "Accordingly, the proper focus of concern is whether the seller has the power to raise prices, or impose other burdensome terms such as a tie-in, with respect to any appreciable number of buyers within the market." 394 U.S., at 504.

Professor Dam correctly analyzed the burden of proof imposed on Fortner by this language. In his article in the 1969 Supreme Court Review, 25-26, he reasoned:

"One important question in interpreting the Fortner decision is the meaning of this language. Taken out of context, it might be thought to mean that, just as the 'host of tying arrangements' was 'compelling evidence' of 'great power' in Northern Pacific, so the inclusion of tie-in clauses in contracts with 'any appreciable numbers of buyers' establishes market power. But the passage read in context does not warrant this interpretation. For the immediately preceding sentence makes clear that market power in the sense of power over price must still exist. If the price could have been raised but the tie-in was demanded in lieu of the higher price, then -- and presumably only then -- would the requisite economic power exist. Thus, despite the broad language available for quotation in later cases, the treatment of the law on market power is on close reading not only consonant with the precedents but in some ways less far-reaching than Northern Pacific and Loew's, which could be read to make actual market power irrelevant." (Footnotes omitted.)

An accompanying footnote explained: S

"Uniqueness confers economic power only when other competitors are in some way prevented from offering the distinctive product themselves. Such barriers may be legal, as in the case of patented and copyrighted products, e.g., International Salt; Loew's, or physical, as when the product is land, e.g., Northern Pacific. It is true that the barriers may also be economic, as when competitors are simply unable to produce the distinctive product profitably, but the uniqueness test in such [****20] situations is somewhat confusing since the real source of economic power is not the product itself but rather the seller's cost advantage in producing it." *Id.*, at 505 n. 2.<sup>1</sup> F

n14 One commentator on Fortner I noted:

"The Court's uniqueness test is adequate to identify a number of situations in which this type of foreclosure is likely to occur. Whenever there are some buyers who find a seller's product uniquely attractive, and are therefore willing to pay a premium above the price of its nearest substitute, the seller has the opportunity to impose a tie to some other good." Note, The Logic of Foreclosure: Tie-In Doctrine after Fortner v. U.S. Steel, 79 Yale L.J. 86, 93-94 (1969).

Quite clearly, HN2↑ if the evidence merely shows that credit terms are unique because the seller is willing to accept a lesser profit -- or to incur greater risks -- than its competitors, [*622] that kind of uniqueness will not give rise to any inference of economic power in the credit [****21] market. Yet this is, in substance, all that the record in this case indicates.

[LEdHN\[3D\]](#)↑ [3D]The unusual credit bargain offered to Fortner proves nothing more than a willingness to provide cheap financing in order to sell expensive houses.<sup>15</sup> Without any evidence [***91] that the Credit Corp. had some [**869] cost advantage over its competitors -- or could offer a form of financing that was significantly differentiated from that which other lenders could offer if they so elected -- the unique character of its financing does not support the conclusion that petitioners had the kind of economic power which Fortner had the burden of proving in order to prevail in this litigation.

[****22] The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed.

So ordered.

Concur by: BURGER

Concur

---

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER, with whom MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST joins, concurring.

I concur in the Court's opinion and write only to emphasize what the case before us does not involve; I join on the basis of my understanding of the scope of our holding. Today's decision does not implicate ordinary credit sales of only a single product and which therefore cannot constitute a tying arrangement subject to per se scrutiny under § 1 of the Sherman Act. In contrast to such transactions, we are dealing here with a peculiar arrangement expressly found by the Court in Fortner I to involve two separate products sold by [*623] two separate corporations. *Fortner Enterprises v. United States Steel Corp.*, 394 U.S. 495, 507 \(1969\). Consequently, I read the Court's assumption <sup>15</sup> The opinion of the Court in Fortner I notes that smaller companies might not have the "financial strength to offer credit comparable to that provided by larger competitors under tying arrangements." *394 U.S.*, at 509. Fortner's expert witness was unaware of the financing practices of competing sellers of prefabricated homes, App. 1691-1692, but there is nothing to suggest that they were unable to offer comparable financing if they chose to do so.

---

that a tie-in existed in this case, required as it is by the law of the case, to cast no doubt on the legality of credit financing by manufacturers or distributors.

References

---

What [****23] constitutes "sufficient economic power" to make tying arrangement unlawful restraint of trade violative of 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1)

*54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 59-64, 72*

12 Am Jur Legal Forms 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 178:70

5 USCS 1

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 30

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 16.5

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade; Tying Arrangements

Annotation References:

What constitutes "sufficient economic power" to make tying arrangement unlawful restraint of trade violative of 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1). *51 L Ed 2d 826*.

What constitutes "attempt to monopolize," within meaning of 2 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 2). 27 ALR Fed 762.

Business units or persons within single, commonly owned enterprise as conspiring with each other [****24] in violation of 1 or 3 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 3). 20 ALR Fed 682.

---

End of Document

Cont'l T.V. v. GTE Sylvania

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued February 28, 1977 ; June 23, 1977; as amended

No. 76-15

Reporter

433 U.S. 36 *; 97 S. Ct. 2549 **; 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 ***; 1977 U.S. LEXIS 134 ****; 1977-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P61,488

CONTINENTAL T.V., INC., ET AL. v. GTE SYLVANIA INC.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

Disposition: The Court affirmed the judgment.

Core Terms

---

retailers, restrictions, franchised, vertical, manufacturer, distributors, per se rule, bicycles, products, intrabrand, dealers, territories, Sherman Act, rule of reason, interbrand, sales, wholesale, television, customer, antitrust, transactions, prices, cases, nonsale, selling, discount, outlets, market share, nonfranchised, overruling

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN1 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits every contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. The rule of reason is the prevailing standard of analysis. Under this rule, the fact-finding weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN2 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Per se rules of illegality are appropriate only when they relate to conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive. There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Per se rules thus require the Court to make broad generalizations about the social utility of particular commercial practices. The probability that anticompetitive consequences will result from a practice and the severity of those consequences must be balanced against its procompetitive consequences. Cases that do not fit the generalization may arise, but a per se rule reflects the judgment that such cases are not sufficiently common or important to justify the time and expense necessary to identify them. Once established, per se rules tend to provide guidance to the business community and to minimize the burdens on litigants and the judicial system of the more complex rule-of-reason trials, but those advantages are not sufficient in themselves to justify the creation of per se rules. If it were otherwise, all of antitrust law would be reduced to per se rules, thus introducing an unintended and undesirable rigidity in the law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The distinction drawn between sale and nonsale transactions is not sufficient to justify the application of a per se rule in one situation and a rule of reason in the other.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The per se rule stated in United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U. S. 365 (1967), is overruled. A departure from the rule-of-reason standard must be based upon demonstrable economic effect rather than - as in Schwinn - upon formalistic line drawing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6 Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

When anticompetitive effects are shown to result from particular vertical restrictions they can be adequately policed under the rule of reason, the standard traditionally applied for the majority of anticompetitive practices challenged under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The franchise agreement between a television manufacturer and its franchised retailers provided that each franchisee could sell the manufacturer's products only from the location at which the retailer was franchised. Following the cancellation of the franchise of one of the retailers, the finance company that handled the credit arrangements between the manufacturer and its retailers brought a diversity action in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California seeking recovery of money owed and of secured merchandise held by the retailer. In cross-claims the retailer alleged that the manufacturer violated 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) by entering into franchise agreements that prohibited the sale of the manufacturer's products other than from specified locations. Relying on United States v Arnold, Schwinn & Co. \(1976\) 388 US 365, 18 L Ed 2d 1249, 87 S Ct 1856 \(Schwinn\), the District Court rejected the manufacturer's requested jury instruction that the location restriction was illegal only if it unreasonably restrained or suppressed competition, the court instead instructing that if the jury found that the manufacturer entered into a contract with its dealers pursuant to which the manufacturer exercised dominion or control over the products sold to the dealer, after having parted with title to the products, any effort thereafter to restrict locations from which dealers resold the merchandise would be illegal regardless of the reasonableness of the location restrictions. On appeal from a verdict and judgment rendered in favor of the retailer in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed, concluding that the manufacturer's location restriction had less potential for competitive harm than the restrictions invalidated in Schwinn and thus should be judged under the "rule of reason" rather than the per se rule stated in Schwinn (537 F2d 980).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Powell, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and Stewart, Blackmun, and Stevens, JJ., it was held, overruling the Schwinn per se rule, that the legality of the manufacturer's location restriction should be determined by the "rule of reason" standard.

White, J., concurring in the judgment, expressed the view that the Schwinn rule need not be overruled since the instant case was distinguishable because it presented less potential for restraint of intrabrand competition and more potential for stimulating interbrand competition.

Brennan, J., joined by Marshall, J., dissenting, expressed the view that Schwinn should not be overruled, and, therefore, the Court of Appeals decision should be reversed.

Rehnquist, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §50 > restrictions -- territory -- customers -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

For the purpose of determining whether 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) has been violated, a retail customer restriction under which (1) each distributor has a defined geographic area in which it has the exclusive right to supply franchised retailers, (2) sales to public are made only through franchised retailers who are authorized to sell the product only from specified locations, and (3) the manufacturer prohibits both distributors and retailers from selling the product to nonfranchised retailers, is indistinguishable in intent and competitive impact from a location restriction under which franchised retailers are permitted to sell the manufacturer's product only from the location or locations at which the retailer is franchised; both restrictions limit the freedom of the retailer to dispose of the products as he desires, and the fact that one restriction is addressed to territory and the other to customers is irrelevant to functional antitrust analysis.

COURTS §766 > stare decisis -- reconsideration -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Despite the principle of stare decisis, the United States Supreme Court will reconsider its decision in an earlier case where the court is convinced that the need for clarification of the law in a particular area justifies reconsideration.

MONOPOLIES §16 > rule of reason -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The prevailing standard of analysis under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) which prohibits every contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce, is the "rule of reason," under which the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of the case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition.

MONOPOLIES §16 > per se rule -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1)--which prohibits every contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce--without elaborate inquiry being necessary as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use; such per se rules of illegality are appropriate only when they relate to conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive.

MONOPOLIES §16 > per se rule -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

Per se rules of illegality--under which certain practices are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) without elaborate inquiry being necessary as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use--require the court to make broad generalizations about the social utility of particular commercial practices; the probability that anticompetitive consequences will result from a practice and the severity of those consequences must be balanced against its procompetitive consequences.

433 U.S. 36, *36; 97 S. Ct. 2549, **2549; 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, ***568; 1977 U.S. LEXIS 134, ****1

MONOPOLIES §16 > per se rule -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

Although per se rules--under which certain practices are presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) without elaborate inquiry being necessary as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use--tend to provide guidance to the business community and to minimize the burdens on litigants and the judicial system of the more complex "rule of reason" trials, nevertheless, those advantages are not sufficient in themselves to justify the creation of per se rules.

MONOPOLIES §16 > rule of reason -- per se rule -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

In determining whether 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) has been violated, a distinction drawn between sale and nonsale transactions is not sufficient to justify the application of a per se rule--under which certain practices are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal--in one situation and a rule of reason--under which all circumstances are weighed in deciding whether a practice should be prohibited--in the other.

MONOPOLIES §16 > per se violations -- standard for finding -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

The standard for determining whether vertical restrictions are per se violations of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) which must be conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use, is whether the restrictions have a pernicious effect on competition and lack any redeeming virtue.

MONOPOLIES §16 > per se rule -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9A\]](#) [9A] [LEdHN\[9B\]](#) [9B]

Although there may be occasional problems in differentiating vertical restrictions from horizontal restrictions originating in agreements among retailers--such horizontal restrictions between retailers being per se violations of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.)--nevertheless, these problems of proof are not sufficiently great to justify a per se rule in regard to vertical restrictions.

MONOPOLIES §16 > per se rule -- nature of restraint -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

The nature of a restriction is, generally, an undesirable basis for a per se rule of illegality under which certain practices are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

MONOPOLIES §29 > vertical restrictions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [11B]

The advantages of vertical restrictions should not be limited to the categories of new entrants and failing firms.

COURTS §766 > stare decisis -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [12A] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [12B]

Stare decisis is a principle of policy and not a mechanical formula of adherence to the latest decision, however recent and questionable, when such adherence involves collision with a prior doctrine more embracing in its scope, intrinsically sounder, and verified by experience.

MONOPOLIES §16 > per se rule -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

Although particular applications of vertical restrictions might justify per se prohibition, nevertheless, departure from the rule of reason standard in determining violations of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) must be based upon demonstrable economic effect rather than upon formalistic line drawing.

MONOPOLIES §53 > restriction on location -- rule of reason -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

The rule of reason, under which all the circumstances of the case are weighed in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition, is the standard for determining whether 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) is violated by a vertical restriction under which a manufacturer requires a franchised retailer to sell the manufacturer's products only from the location or locations at which the retailer was franchised. (Brennan and Marshall, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

Syllabus

---

In an attempt to improve its market position by attracting more aggressive and competent retailers, respondent manufacturer of television sets limited the number of retail franchises granted for any given area and required each franchisee to sell respondent's products only from the location or locations at which it was franchised. Petitioner Continental, one of respondent's franchised retailers, claimed that respondent had violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by entering into and enforcing franchise agreements that prohibited the sale of respondent's products other than from specified locations. The District Court rejected respondent's requested jury instruction that the location restriction was illegal only if it unreasonably restrained or suppressed competition. Instead, relying on United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, the District Court instructed the jury that it was a per se violation of § 1 if respondent entered into a contract, combination, or conspiracy with one or more of its retailers, [****2] pursuant to which it attempted to restrict the locations from which the retailers resold the merchandise they had purchased from respondent. The jury found that the location restriction violated § 1, and treble damages were assessed against respondent. Concluding that Schwinn was distinguishable, the Court of Appeals reversed, holding that respondent's location restriction has less potential for competitive harm than the restrictions invalidated in Schwinn and thus should be judged under the "rule of reason." Held:

1. The statement of the per se rule in Schwinn is broad enough to cover the location restriction used by respondent. And the retail customer restriction in Schwinn is functionally indistinguishable from the location restriction here, the restrictions in both cases limiting the retailer's freedom to dispose of the purchased products and reducing, but not eliminating, intrabrand competition. Pp. 42-47.
2. The justification and standard for the creation of per se rules was stated in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5: "There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any [***3] redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Under this standard, there is no justification for the distinction drawn in Schwinn between restrictions imposed in sale and nonsale transactions. Similarly, the facts of this case do not present a situation justifying a per se rule. Accordingly, the per se rule stated in Schwinn is overruled, and the location restriction used by respondent should be judged under the traditional rule-of-reason standard. Pp. 47-59.

537 F.2d 980, affirmed.

POWELL, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C.J., and STEWART, BLACKMUN, and STEVENS, JJ., joined. WHITE, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, post, p. 59. BRENNAN, J., filed a dissenting statement, in which MARSHALL, J., joined, post, p. 71. REHNQUIST, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Counsel: Glenn E. Miller argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Lawrence A. Sullivan and Jesse Choper.

M. Laurence Popofsky argued the cause for respondent. With him [***4] on the brief were Richard L. Goff and Stephen V. Bomse.
*

Judges: BURGER, BRENNAN, STEWART, WHITE, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, POWELL, STEVENS

Opinion by: POWELL

Opinion

---

[*37] [***572] [**2551] MR. JUSTICE POWELL delivered the opinion of the Court.

Franchise agreements between manufacturers and retailers frequently include provisions barring the retailers from selling franchised products from locations other than those specified in the agreements. This case presents important questions concerning the appropriate antitrust analysis of these restrictions under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the Court's decision in United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U. S. 365 (1967). [***5] [*38]

|

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed by Lawrence T. Zimmerman for the Associated Equipment Distributors; by Lloyd N. Cutler, James S. Campbell, William T. Lake, and Donald F. Turner for the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Assn.; and by Philip F. Zeidman and John A. Dienelt for the International Franchise Assn.

Respondent GTE Sylvania Inc. (Sylvania) manufactures and sells television sets through its Home Entertainment Products Division. Prior [***573] to 1962, like most other television manufacturers, Sylvania sold its televisions to independent or company-owned distributors who in turn resold to a large and diverse group of retailers. Prompted by a decline in its market share to a relatively insignificant 1% to 2% of national television sales,<sup>1</sup> Sylvania conducted an intensive reassessment of its marketing strategy, and in 1962 adopted the franchise plan challenged here. Sylvania phased out its wholesale distributors and began to sell its televisions directly to a smaller and more select group of franchised retailers. An acknowledged purpose of the change was to decrease the number of competing Sylvania retailers in the hope of attracting the more aggressive and competent retailers though necessary to the improvement of the company's market position.<sup>2</sup> To this end, Sylvania limited the number of franchises granted for any given area and required each franchisee to sell his Sylvania products only from the location or locations at which he was franchised.<sup>3</sup> A franchise [****6] did not constitute an exclusive territory, and Sylvania retained sole discretion to increase the number of retailers in an area in light of the success or failure of existing retailers in developing their market. The revised marketing strategy appears to have been successful during the period at issue here, for by 1965 Sylvania's share of national television sales had increased to approximately 5%, and the [*39] company ranked as the Nation's eighth largest manufacturer of color television sets.

This suit is the [****7] result of the rupture of a franchiser-franchisee relationship that had previously prospered under the revised Sylvania plan. Dissatisfied with its sales in the city of San Francisco,<sup>4</sup> Sylvania decided in the spring of 1965 to franchise Young [**2552] Brothers, an established San Francisco retailer of televisions, as an additional San Francisco retailer. The proposed location of the new franchise was approximately a mile from a retail outlet operated by petitioner Continental T. V., Inc. (Continental), one of the most successful Sylvania franchisees.<sup>5</sup> Continental protested that the location of the new franchise violated Sylvania's marketing policy, but Sylvania persisted in its plans. Continental then canceled a large Sylvania order and placed a large order with Phillips, one of Sylvania's competitors.

[****8] During this same period, Continental expressed a desire to open a store in Sacramento, Cal., a desire Sylvania attributed at least in part [***574] to Continental's displeasure over the Young Brothers decision. Sylvania believed that the Sacramento market was adequately served by the existing Sylvania retailers and denied the request.<sup>6</sup> In the face of this denial, Continental advised Sylvania in early September 1965, that it was in the process of moving Sylvania merchandise from its San Jose, Cal., warehouse to a new retail location that it had leased in Sacramento. Two weeks later, allegedly for unrelated reasons, Sylvania's credit department reduced Continental's [*40] credit line from $ 300,000 to $ 50,000.<sup>7</sup> In response to the reduction in credit and the generally deteriorating relations with Sylvania, Continental withheld all payments owed to John P. Maguire & Co., Inc. (Maguire), the finance company that handled the credit arrangements between Sylvania and its retailers. Shortly thereafter, Sylvania terminated Continental's franchises, and Maguire filed this diversity action in the United

<sup>1</sup> RCA at that time was the dominant firm with as much as 60% to 70% of national television sales in an industry with more than 100 manufacturers.

<sup>2</sup> The number of retailers selling Sylvania products declined significantly as a result of the change, but in 1965 there were at least two franchised Sylvania retailers in each metropolitan center of more than 100,000 population.

<sup>3</sup> Sylvania imposed no restrictions on the right of the franchisee to sell the products of competing manufacturers.

<sup>4</sup> Sylvania's market share in San Francisco was approximately 2.5%-half its national and northern California average.

<sup>5</sup> There are in fact four corporate petitioners: Continental T.V. Inc., A & G Sales, Sylpac, Inc., and S. A. M. Industries, Inc. All are owned in large part by the same individual, and all conducted business under the trade style of "Continental T. V." We adopt the convention used by the court below of referring to petitioners collectively as "Continental."

<sup>6</sup> Sylvania had achieved exceptional results in Sacramento, where its market share exceeded 15% in 1965.

<sup>7</sup> In its findings of fact made in conjunction with Continental's plea for injunctive relief, the District Court rejected Sylvania's claim that its actions were prompted by independent concerns over Continental's credit. The jury's verdict is ambiguous on this point. In any event, we do not consider it relevant to the issue before us.

States District Court for the Northern District of California seeking recovery [****9] of money owed and of secured merchandise held by Continental.

The antitrust issues before us originated in cross-claims brought by Continental against Sylvania and Maguire. Most important for our purposes was the claim that Sylvania had violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by entering into and enforcing franchise agreements that prohibited the sale of Sylvania products other than from specified locations.<sup>8</sup> At the close of evidence in the jury trial of Continental's claims, Sylvania requested the District Court to instruct the jury that its location restriction was illegal [****10] only if it unreasonably restrained or suppressed competition. App. 5-6, 9-15. Relying on this Court's decision in United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., supra, the District Court rejected the proffered instruction in favor of the following one: S

"Therefore, if you find by a preponderance of the evidence that Sylvania entered into a contract, combination or conspiracy with one or more of its dealers pursuant to which Sylvania exercised dominion or control over the [*41] products sold to the dealer, after having parted with title and risk to the products, you must find any effort thereafter to restrict outlets or store locations from which its dealers resold the merchandise which they had purchased from Sylvania to be a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, [**2553] regardless of the reasonableness of the location restrictions." App. 492.I

[****11] In answers to special interrogatories, the jury found that Sylvania had engaged "in a contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the antitrust laws with respect to location restrictions alone," and assessed Continental's [***575] damages at $ 591,505, which was trebled pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 15 to produce an award of $ 1,774,515. App. 498, 501.<sup>9</sup>

[****12] On appeal, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, sitting en banc, reversed by a divided vote. 537 F.2d 980 (1976). The court acknowledged that there is language in Schwinn that could be read to support the District Court's instruction but concluded that Schwinn was distinguishable on several grounds. Contrasting the nature of the restrictions, their competitive impact, and the market shares of the franchisers in the two cases, the court concluded that Sylvania's location restriction had less potential for competitive harm than the restrictions invalidated in Schwinn and thus should be judged under the "rule of reason" rather than the per se rule stated in Schwinn. The court found support for its [*42] position in the policies of the Sherman Act and in the decisions of other federal courts involving nonprice vertical restrictions.<sup>10</sup>

[****13] We granted Continental's petition for certiorari to resolve this important question of antitrust law. 429 U.S. 893 (1976).<sup>11</sup>

<sup>8</sup> Although Sylvania contended in the District Court that its policy was unilaterally enforced, it now concedes that its location restriction involved understandings or agreements with the retailers.

<sup>9</sup> The jury also found that Maguire had not conspired with Sylvania with respect to this violation. Other claims made by Continental were either rejected by the jury or withdrawn by Continental. Most important was the jury's rejection of the allegation that the location restriction was part of a larger scheme to fix prices. A pendent claim that Sylvania and Maguire had willfully and maliciously caused injury to Continental's business in violation of California law also was rejected by the jury, and a pendent breach-of-contract claim was withdrawn by Continental during the course of the proceedings. The parties eventually stipulated to a judgment for Maguire on its claim against Continental.

<sup>10</sup> There were two major dissenting opinions. Judge Kilkenny argued that the present case is indistinguishable from Schwinn and that the jury had been correctly instructed. Agreeing with Judge Kilkenny's interpretation of Schwinn, Judge Browning stated that he found the interpretation responsive to and justified by the need to protect "individual traders from unnecessary restrictions upon their freedom of action." 537 F.2d, at 1021. See n. 21, infra.

<sup>11</sup> This Court has never given plenary consideration to the question of the proper antitrust analysis of location restrictions. Before Schwinn such restrictions had been sustained in Boro Hall Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 124 F.2d 822 \(CA2 1942\). Since the decision in Schwinn, location restrictions have been sustained by three Courts of Appeals, including the decision below. Salco Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 517 F.2d 567 \(CA10 1975\); Kaiser v. General Motors Corp., 396 F.Supp. 33 \(ED Pa. 1975\), affirmance order, 530 F.2d 964 \(CA3 1976\).

II

A

We turn first to Continental's contention that Sylvania's restriction on retail locations is a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act as interpreted in Schwinn. The restrictions at issue in Schwinn were part of a three-tier distribution system comprising, in [****14] addition to Arnold, Schwinn & Co. (Schwinn), 22 intermediate distributors and a network of franchised retailers. Each distributor had a defined geographic area in which it had the exclusive right to supply franchised retailers. Sales to the public were made only through franchised retailers, who were authorized to sell Schwinn bicycles only from specified locations. In support of this limitation, Schwinn prohibited both distributors and retailers from selling Schwinn bicycles to nonfranchised retailers. [***576] At the retail level, therefore, Schwinn was able to control the number of retailers of [*43] its bicycles in any given area according to its view of the needs of that market.

[**2554] As of 1967 approximately 75% of Schwinn's total sales were made under the "Schwinn Plan." Acting essentially as a manufacturer's representative or sales agent, a distributor participating in this plan forwarded orders from retailers to the factory. Schwinn then shipped the ordered bicycles directly to the retailer, billed the retailer, bore the credit risk, and paid the distributor a commission on the sale. Under the Schwinn Plan, the distributor never had title to or possession [****15] of the bicycles. The remainder of the bicycles moved to the retailers through the hands of the distributors. For the most part, the distributors functioned as traditional wholesalers with respect to these sales, stocking an inventory of bicycles owned by them to supply retailers with emergency and "fill-in" requirements. A smaller part of the bicycles that were physically distributed by the distributors were covered by consignment and agency arrangements that had been developed to deal with particular problems of certain distributors. Distributors acquired title only to those bicycles that they purchased as wholesalers; retailers, of course, acquired title to all of the bicycles ordered by them.

In the District Court, the United States charged a continuing conspiracy by Schwinn and other alleged co-conspirators to fix prices, allocate exclusive territories to distributors, and confine Schwinn bicycles to franchised retailers. Relying on United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U.S. 707 \(1944\), the Government argued that the nonprice restrictions were per se illegal as part of a scheme for fixing the retail prices of Schwinn bicycles. The District Court rejected the [****16] price-fixing allegation because of a failure of proof and held that Schwinn's limitation of retail bicycle sales to franchised retailers was permissible under § 1. The court found a § 1 violation, however, in "a conspiracy to divide certain borderline or overlapping counties in the territories served by four Midwestern [*44] cycle distributors." 237 F.Supp. 323, 342 \(ND Ill. 1965\). The court described the violation as a "division of territory by agreement between the distributors... horizontal in nature," and held that Schwinn's participation did not change that basic characteristic. Ibid. The District Court limited its injunction to apply only to the territorial restrictions on the resale of bicycles purchased by the distributors in their roles as wholesalers. Ibid.

Schwinn came to this Court on appeal by the United States from the District Court's decision. Abandoning its per se theories, the Government argued that Schwinn's prohibition against distributors' and retailers' selling Schwinn bicycles to nonfranchised retailers was unreasonable under § 1 and that the District Court's injunction against exclusive distributor territories should extend to all [****17] such restrictions regardless of the form of the transaction. The Government did not challenge the District Court's decision on price fixing, and Schwinn did not challenge the decision on exclusive distributor territories.

The Court acknowledged the Government's abandonment of its per se theories and stated that the resolution [****577] of the case would require an examination of "the specifics of the challenged practices and their impact upon the marketplace in order to make a judgment as to whether the restraint is or is not 'reasonable' in the special sense in which § 1 of the Sherman Act must be read for purposes of this type of inquiry." 388 U.S., at 374. Despite this description of its task, the Court proceeded to articulate the following "bright line" per se rule of illegality for vertical restrictions: "Under the Sherman Act, it is unreasonable without more for a manufacturer to seek to restrict and confine areas or persons with whom an article may be traded after the manufacturer has parted with dominion over it." Id., at 379. But the Court expressly stated that the rule of reason governs when "the manufacturer retains title, dominion, and [****18] risk with [*45] respect to the product and the position and function of the dealer in question are, in fact, indistinguishable from [**2555] those of an agent or salesman of the manufacturer." Id., at 380.

Application of these principles to the facts of Schwinn produced sharply contrasting results depending upon the role played by the distributor in the distribution system. With respect to that portion of Schwinn's sales for which the distributors acted as ordinary wholesalers, buying and reselling Schwinn bicycles, the Court held that the territorial and customer restrictions challenged by the Government were per se illegal. But, with respect to that larger portion of Schwinn's sales in which the distributors functioned under the Schwinn Plan and under the less common consignment and agency arrangements, the Court held that the same restrictions should be judged under the rule of reason. The only retail restriction challenged by the Government prevented franchised retailers from supplying nonfranchised retailers. Id., at 377. The Court apparently perceived no material distinction between the restrictions on distributors and retailers, for it [***19] held:

"The principle is, of course, equally applicable to sales to retailers, and the decree should similarly enjoin the making of any sales to retailers upon any condition, agreement or understanding limiting the retailer's freedom as to where and to whom it will resell the products." Id., at 378.

Applying the rule of reason to the restrictions that were not imposed in conjunction with the sale of bicycles, the Court had little difficulty finding them all reasonable in light of the competitive situation in "the product market as a whole." Id., at 382.

B

In the present case, it is undisputed that title to the television sets passed from Sylvania to Continental. Thus, the Schwinn per se rule applies unless Sylvania's restriction on [*46] locations falls outside Schwinn's prohibition against a manufacturer's attempting to restrict a "retailer's freedom as to where and to whom it will resell the products." Id., at 378. As the Court of Appeals conceded, the language of Schwinn is clearly broad [***578] enough to apply to the present case. Unlike the Court of Appeals, however, we are unable to find a principled basis for distinguishing [***20] Schwinn from the case now before us.

LEdHN[1]↑ [1]Both Schwinn and Sylvania sought to reduce but not to eliminate competition among their respective retailers through the adoption of a franchise system. Although it was not one of the issues addressed by the District Court or presented on appeal by the Government, the Schwinn franchise plan included a location restriction similar to the one challenged here. These restrictions allowed Schwinn and Sylvania to regulate the amount of competition among their retailers by preventing a franchisee from selling franchised products from outlets other than the one covered by the franchise agreement. To exactly the same end, the Schwinn franchise plan included a companion restriction, apparently not found in the Sylvania plan, that prohibited franchised retailers from selling Schwinn products to nonfranchised retailers. In Schwinn the Court expressly held that this restriction was impermissible under the broad principle stated there. In intent and competitive impact, the retail-customer restriction in Schwinn is indistinguishable from the location restriction in the present [***21] case. In both cases the restrictions limited the freedom of the retailer to dispose of the purchased products as he desired. The fact that one restriction was addressed to territory and the other to customers is irrelevant to functional antitrust analysis and, indeed, to the language and broad thrust of the opinion in Schwinn.<sup>12</sup> [**2556] As Mr. Chief Justice Hughes

<sup>12</sup> The distinctions drawn by the Court of Appeals and endorsed in MR. JUSTICE WHITE's separate opinion have no basis in Schwinn. The intrabrand competitive impact of the restrictions at issue in Schwinn ranged from complete elimination to mere reduction; yet, the Court did not even hint at any distinction on this ground. Similarly, there is no suggestion that the per se rule was applied because of Schwinn's prominent position in its industry. That position was the same whether the bicycles were sold or consigned, but the Court's analysis was quite different. In light of MR. JUSTICE WHITE's emphasis on the "superior consumer acceptance" enjoyed by the Schwinn brand name, post, at 63, we note that the Court rejected precisely that premise in Schwinn. Applying the rule of reason to the restrictions imposed in nonsale transactions, the Court stressed that there was "no showing that [competitive bicycles were] not in all respects reasonably interchangeable as articles of competitive commerce with stated in [*47] Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 360, 377 \(1933\): "Realities must dominate the judgment.... The Anti-Trust Act aims at substance."

433 U.S. 36, *46; 97 S. Ct. 2549, **2556; 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, ***578; 1977 U.S. LEXIS 134, ****21

[****22] III

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]Sylvania argues that if Schwinn cannot be distinguished, it should be reconsidered. Although Schwinn is supported by the principle of stare decisis, Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U. S. 720, 736 [***579] (1977), we are convinced that the need for clarification of the law in this area justifies reconsideration. Schwinn itself was an abrupt and largely unexplained departure from White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U. S. 253 (1963), where only four years earlier the Court had refused to endorse a per se rule for vertical restrictions. Since its announcement, Schwinn has been the subject of continuing controversy and confusion, both in the scholarly journals and in the federal courts. The great weight of scholarly opinion [*48] has been critical of the decision,<sup>13</sup> and a number of the federal courts confronted with analogous vertical restrictions have sought to limit its reach.<sup>14</sup> the Schwinn product" and that it did "not regard Schwinn's claim of product excellence as establishing the contrary." 388 U.S., at 381, and n. 7. Although Schwinn did hint at preferential treatment for new entrants and failing firms, the District Court below did not even submit Sylvania's claim that it was failing to the jury. Accordingly, MR. JUSTICE WHITE's position appears to reflect an extension of Schwinn in this regard. Having crossed the "failing firm" line, MR. JUSTICE WHITE attempts neither to draw a new one nor to explain why one should be drawn at all.

[**2557] In our view, the experience of the [*49] past 10 years should be brought to bear on this subject of considerable commercial importance.

<sup>13</sup> A former Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division has described Schwinn as "an exercise in barren formalism" that is "artificial and unresponsive to the competitive needs of the real world." Baker, Vertical Restraints in Times of Change: From White to Schwinn to Where?, 44 Antitrust L.J. 537 (1975). See, e.g., Handler, The Twentieth Annual Antitrust Review - 1967, 53 Va. L. Rev. 1667 (1967); McLaren, Territorial and Customer Restrictions, Consignments, Suggested Retail Prices and Refusals to Deal, 37 Antitrust L. J. 137 (1968); Pollock, Alternative Distribution Methods After Schwinn, 63 Nw. U. L. Rev. 595 (1968); Posner, Antitrust Policy and the Supreme Court: An Analysis of the Restricted Distribution, Horizontal Merger and Potential Competition Decisions, 75 Colum. L. Rev. 282 (1975); Robinson, Recent Antitrust Developments: 1974, 75 Colum. L. Rev. 243 (1975); Note, Vertical Territorial and Customer Restrictions in the Franchising Industry, 10 Colum. J. L. & Soc. Prob. 497 (1974); Note, Territorial and Customer Restrictions: A Trend Toward a Broader Rule of Reason?, 40 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 123 (1971); Note, Territorial Restrictions and Per Se Rules - A Re-evaluation of the Schwinn and Sealy Doctrines, 70 Mich. L. Rev. 616 (1972). But see Louis, Vertical Distributional Restraints Under Schwinn and Sylvania: An Argument for the Continuing Use of a Partial Per Se Approach, 75 Mich. L. Rev. 275 (1976); Zimmerman, Distribution Restrictions After Sealy and Schwinn, 12 Antitrust Bull. 1181 (1967). For a more inclusive list of articles and comments, see 537 F.2d, at 988 n. 13.

<sup>14</sup> Indeed, as one commentator has observed, many courts "have struggled to distinguish or limit Schwinn in ways that are a tribute to judicial ingenuity." Robinson, supra, n. 13, at 272. Thus, the statement in Schwinn that post-sale vertical restrictions as to customers or territories are "unreasonable without more," 388 U. S., at 379, has been interpreted to allow an exception to the per se rule where the manufacturer proves "more" by showing that the restraints will protect consumers against injury and the manufacturer against product liability claims. See, e.g., Tripoli Co. v. Wella Corp., 425 F.2d 932, 936-938 \(CA3 1970\) (en banc). Similarly, the statement that Schwinn's enforcement of its restrictions had been "firm and resolute," 388 U. S., at 372, has been relied upon to distinguish cases lacking that element. See, e.g., Janel Sales Corp. v. Lanvin Parfums, Inc., 396 F.2d 398, 406 \(CA2 1968\). Other factual distinctions have been drawn to justify upholding territorial restrictions that would seem to fall within the scope of the Schwinn per se rule. See, e.g., Carter-Wallace, Inc. v. United States, 196 Ct. Cl. 35, 44-46, 449 F.2d 1374, 1379-1380 \(1971\) (per se rule inapplicable when purchaser can avoid restraints by electing to buy product at higher price); Colorado Pump & Supply Co. v. Febco, Inc., 472 F.2d 637 \(CA10 1973\) (apparent territorial restriction characterized as primary responsibility clause). One Court of Appeals has expressly urged us to consider the need in this area for greater flexibility. Adolph Coors Co. v. FTC, 497 F.2d 1178, 1187 \(CA10 1974\). The decision in Schwinn and the developments in the lower courts have been exhaustively surveyed in ABA Antitrust Section, Monograph No. 2, Vertical Restrictions Limiting Intrabrand Competition (1977) (ABA Monograph No. 2).

[****23] [LEdHN\[3\]](#)↑ [3][LEdHN\[4\]](#)↑ [4][LEdHN\[5A\]](#)↑ [5A][LEdHN\[6A\]](#)↑ [6A]The traditional framework of analysis under § 1 of the Sherman Act is familiar and does not require extended discussion. Section I\*\*\*580 1 HN1↑ prohibits "[e]very contract, combination..., or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." Since the early years of this century a judicial gloss on this statutory language has established the "rule of reason" as the prevailing standard of analysis. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1 \(1911\). Under this rule, the fact-finding weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition.<sup>15</sup> [****25] HN2↑ Per se rules of [*50] illegality [****24] are appropriate only when they relate to conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive. As the Court explained in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U. S. 1, 5 \(1958\), "there are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use."<sup>16</sup>

[LEdHN\[5B\]](#)↑ [5B][LEdHN\[6B\]](#)↑ [6B]

In [****26] essence, the issue before us is whether Schwinn's per se rule can be justified under the demanding standards of Northern Pac. R. Co. The Court's refusal to endorse a per se rule in White Motor Co. was based on its uncertainty as to whether vertical restrictions satisfied those standards. Addressing this question for the first time, the Court stated: S

"We need to know more than we do about the actual impact of these arrangements on competition to decide whether they have such a 'pernicious effect on' [**2558] competition and lack... any redeeming virtue' ( Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, supra, p. 5) and therefore should [*51] be classified as per se violations of the Sherman Act." 372 U. S., at 263.I

Only four years later the Court in Schwinn announced its sweeping per se rule without even a reference to Northern Pac. R. Co. and with no explanation of its sudden change in position.<sup>17</sup> We turn now to consider Schwinn in light of Northern Pac. R. Co.

<sup>15</sup> One of the most frequently cited statements of the rule of reason is that of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238 \(1918\):

"The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences."

<sup>16</sup> HN3↑ Per se rules thus require the Court to make broad generalizations about the social utility of particular commercial practices. The probability that anticompetitive consequences will result from a practice and the severity of those consequences must be balanced against its procompetitive consequences. Cases that do not fit the generalization may arise, but a per se rule reflects the judgment that such cases are not sufficiently common or important to justify the time and expense necessary to identify them. Once established, per se rules tend to provide guidance to the business community and to minimize the burdens on litigants and the judicial system of the more complex rule-of-reason trials, see Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5; United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 609-610 \(1972\), but those advantages are not sufficient in themselves to justify the creation of per se rules. If it were otherwise, all of antitrust law would be reduced to per se rules, thus introducing an unintended and undesirable rigidity in the law.

<sup>17</sup> After White Motor Co., the Courts of Appeals continued to evaluate territorial restrictions according to the rule of reason. Sandura Co. v. FTC, 339 F.2d 847 \(CA6 1964\); Snap-On Tools Corp. v. FTC, 321 F.2d 825 \(CA7 1963\). For an exposition of the history of the antitrust analysis of vertical restrictions before Schwinn, see ABA Monograph No. 2, pp. 6-8.

[****27] The market impact of vertical restrictions<sup>18</sup> is complex because of their potential for a simultaneous reduction of intrabrand competition and stimulation of interbrand competition. [*52]<sup>19</sup> Significantly, the Court in Schwinn did not distinguish among the challenged restrictions on the basis of their individual potential for intrabrand harm or interbrand benefit. Restrictions that completely eliminated intrabrand competition among Schwinn distributors were analyzed no differently from those that merely moderated intrabrand competition among retailers. The pivotal factor was the passage of title: All restrictions were held to be per se illegal where title had passed, and all were evaluated and sustained under the rule of reason where it had not. The location restriction at issue here would be subject [***582] to the same pattern of analysis under Schwinn.

[****28] It appears that this distinction between sale and nonsale transactions resulted from the Court's effort to accommodate the perceived intrabrand harm and interbrand benefit of vertical restrictions. The per se rule for sale transactions reflected the view that vertical restrictions are "so obviously destructive" [**2559] of intrabrand competition<sup>20</sup> that their use would "open the door to exclusivity of outlets and limitation of territory [*53] further than prudence permits." 388 U. S., at 379-380.<sup>21</sup> Conversely, the continued adherence to the traditional rule of

---

<sup>18</sup> As in Schwinn, we are concerned here only with nonprice vertical restrictions. The per se illegality of price restrictions has been established firmly for many years and involves significantly different questions of analysis and policy. As MR. JUSTICE WHITE notes, post, at 69-70, some commentators have argued that the manufacturer's motivation for imposing vertical price restrictions may be the same as for nonprice restrictions. There are, however, significant differences that could easily justify different treatment. In his concurring opinion in White Motor Co. v. United States, MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN noted that, unlike nonprice restrictions, "[r]esale price maintenance is not only designed to, but almost invariably does in fact, reduce price competition not only among sellers of the affected product, but quite as much between that product and competing brands." 372 U.S. 268. Professor Posner also recognized that "industrywide resale price maintenance might facilitate cartelizing." Posner, supra, n. 13, at 294 (footnote omitted); see R. Posner, Antitrust: Cases, Economic Notes and Other Materials 134 (1974); E. Gellhorn, Antitrust Law and Economics 252 (1976); Note, 10 Colum. J. L. & Soc. Prob., supra, n. 13, at 498 n. 12. Furthermore, Congress recently has expressed its approval of a per se analysis of vertical price restrictions by repealing those provisions of the Miller-Tydings and McGuire Acts allowing fair trade pricing at the option of the individual States. Consumer Goods Pricing Act of 1975, 89 Stat. 801, amending 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 45\(a\). No similar expression of congressional intent exists for nonprice restrictions.

<sup>19</sup> Interbrand competition is the competition among the manufacturers of the same generic product - television sets in this case - and is the primary concern of antitrust law. The extreme example of a deficiency of interbrand competition is monopoly, where there is only one manufacturer. In contrast, intrabrand competition is the competition between the distributors - wholesale or retail - of the product of a particular manufacturer.

The degree of intrabrand competition is wholly independent of the level of interbrand competition confronting the manufacturer. Thus, there may be fierce intrabrand competition among the distributors of a product produced by a monopolist and no intrabrand competition among the distributors of a product produced by a firm in a highly competitive industry. But when interbrand competition exists, as it does among television manufacturers, it provides a significant check on the exploitation of intrabrand market power because of the ability of consumers to substitute a different brand of the same product.

<sup>20</sup> The Court did not specifically refer to intrabrand competition, but this meaning is clear from the context.

<sup>21</sup> The Court also stated that to impose vertical restrictions in sale transactions would "violate the ancient rule against restraints on alienation." 388 U. S., at 380. This isolated reference has provoked sharp criticism from virtually all of the commentators on the decision, most of whom have regarded the Court's apparent reliance on the "ancient rule" as both a misreading of legal history and a perversion of antitrust analysis. See, e.g., Handler, supra, n. 13, at 1684-1686; Posner, supra, n. 13, at 295-296; Robinson, supra, n. 13, at 270-271; but see Louis, supra, n. 13, at 276 n. 6. We quite agree with MR. JUSTICE STEWART's dissenting comment in Schwinn that "the state of the common law 400 or even 100 years ago is irrelevant to the issue before us: the effect of the antitrust laws upon vertical distributional restraints in the American economy today." 388 U. S., at 392.

We are similarly unable to accept Judge Browning's interpretation of Schwinn. In his dissent below he argued that the decision reflects the view that the Sherman Act was intended to prohibit restrictions on the autonomy of independent businessmen even though they have no impact on "price, quality, and quantity of goods and services," 537 F.2d, at 1019. This view is certainly not explicit in Schwinn, which purports to be based on an examination of the "impact [of the restrictions] upon the marketplace." 388 U. S., at 374. Competitive economies have social and political as well as economic advantages, see e.g., Northern Pac. R. Co. reason for nonsale transactions reflected the view that the restrictions have too great a potential for the promotion of interbrand competition to justify complete prohibition.<sup>22</sup> [*54] The Court's opinion provides no analytical support for these contrasting positions. Nor is there even an assertion in the opinion that the competitive impact of vertical restrictions [***583] is significantly affected by the form of the transaction. Nonsale transactions appear to be excluded from the per se rule, not because of a greater danger of intrabrand harm or a greater promise of interbrand benefit, [****29] but rather because of the Court's unexplained belief that a complete per se prohibition would be too "inflexibl[e]." Id., at 379.

[***30] Vertical restrictions reduce intrabrand competition by limiting the number of sellers of a particular product competing for the business of a given group of buyers. Location restrictions have this effect because of practical constraints on the effective marketing area of retail outlets. Although intrabrand competition may be reduced, the ability of retailers to exploit the resulting market may be limited both by the ability of consumers to travel to other franchised locations and, perhaps more importantly, to purchase the competing products of other manufacturers. None of these key variables, however, is affected by the form of the transaction by which a manufacturer conveys his products to the retailers.

[**2560] Vertical restrictions promote interbrand competition by allowing the manufacturer to achieve certain efficiencies in the distribution of his products. These "redeeming virtues" are implicit in every decision sustaining vertical restrictions under the rule of reason. Economists have identified a number [*55] of ways in which manufacturers can use such restrictions to compete more effectively against other manufacturers. See, e.g., Preston, Restrictive Distribution [***31] Arrangements: Economic Analysis and Public Policy Standards, 30 Law & Contemp. Prob. 506, 511 (1965).<sup>23</sup> For example, new manufacturers and manufacturers entering new markets can use the restrictions in order to induce competent and aggressive retailers to make the kind of investment of capital and labor that is often required in the distribution of products unknown to the consumer. Established manufacturers can use them to induce retailers to engage in promotional activities or to provide service and repair facilities necessary to the efficient marketing of their products. Service and repair are vital for many products, such as automobiles and major household appliances. The availability and quality of such services affect a manufacturer's goodwill and the competitiveness of his product. Because of market imperfections such as the so-called "free rider" effect, these services might not be provided by retailers in a purely competitive situation, despite the fact that each retailer's benefit would be greater if all provided the services than if [***584] none did. Posner, supra, n. 13, at 285; cf. P. Samuelson, Economics 506-507 (10th ed. 1976).

v. United States, 356 U. S., at 4, but an antitrust policy divorced from market considerations would lack any objective benchmarks. As Mr. Justice Brandeis reminded us: "Every agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains. To bind, to restrain, is of their very essence." Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S., at 238. Although MR. JUSTICE WHITE's opinion endorses Judge Browning's interpretation, post, at 66-68, it purports to distinguish Schwinn on grounds inconsistent with that interpretation, post, at 71.

<sup>22</sup> In that regard, the Court specifically stated that a more complete prohibition "might severely hamper smaller enterprises resorting to reasonable methods of meeting the competition of giants and of merchandising through independent dealers." 388 U.S., at 380. The Court also broadly hinted that it would recognize additional exceptions to the per se rule for new entrants in an industry and for failing firms, both of which were mentioned in White Motor as candidates for such exceptions. 388 U.S., at 374. The Court might have limited the exceptions to the per se rule to these situations, which present the strongest arguments for the sacrifice of intrabrand competition for interbrand competition. Significantly, it chose instead to create the more extensive exception for nonsale transactions which is available to all businesses, regardless of their size, financial health, or market share. This broader exception demonstrates even more clearly the Court's awareness of the "redeeming virtues" of vertical restrictions.

<sup>23</sup> Marketing efficiency is not the only legitimate reason for a manufacturer's desire to exert control over the manner in which his products are sold and serviced. As a result of statutory and common-law developments, society increasingly demands that manufacturers assume direct responsibility for the safety and quality of their products. For example, at the federal level, apart from more specialized requirements, manufacturers of consumer products have safety responsibilities under the Consumer Product Safety Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2051 et seq. (1970 ed., Supp. V), and obligations for warranties under the Consumer Product Warranties Act, 15 U. S. C. § 2301 et seq. (1970 ed., Supp. V). Similar obligations are imposed by state law. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 1790 et seq. (West 1973). The legitimacy of these concerns has been recognized in cases involving vertical restrictions. See, e.g., Tripoli Co. v. Wella Corp., 425 F.2d 932 (CA3 1970).

[****32] [*56] Economists also have argued that manufacturers have an economic interest in maintaining as much intrabrand competition as is consistent with the efficient distribution of their products. Bork, The Rule of Reason and the Per Se Concept: Price Fixing and Market Division [II], 75 Yale L. J. 373, 403 (1966); Posner, supra, n. 13, at 283, 287-288.<sup>24</sup> Although the view that the manufacturer's interest necessarily corresponds with that of the public is not universally shared, even the leading critic of vertical restrictions concedes that Schwinn's distinction between sale and nonsale transactions is essentially unrelated to any relevant economic impact. Comanor, Vertical Territorial and Customer Restrictions: White Motor and Its Aftermath, 81 Harv. L. Rev. 1419, 1422 (1968).<sup>25</sup> Indeed, to the extent that the form of the transaction is related [**2561] to interbrand benefits, the Court's distinction is inconsistent with its articulated concern for the ability of smaller firms to compete effectively with larger ones. Capital requirements and administrative expenses may prevent smaller firms from using the exception for nonsale transactions. [****33] See, e.g., Baker, supra, n. 13, at 538; Phillips, Schwinn Rules and the "New Economics" of Vertical [*57] Relation, 44 Antitrust L. J. 573, 576 (1975); Pollock, supra, n. 13, at 610.<sup>26</sup>

[****34] [LEdHN\[7\]\[↑\]](#) [7][HN4\[↑\]](#)

We conclude that the distinction drawn in Schwinn between sale and nonsale transactions is not sufficient to justify the application of a per se rule in one situation and a rule of reason in the other. The question remains whether the per se rule stated in Schwinn should be expanded to include nonsale transactions or abandoned in favor of a return to the rule of reason. We have found no persuasive support for expanding the per se rule. As noted above, the Schwinn Court recognized the undesirability of "prohibit[ing] all vertical restrictions of territory and all franchising...."
388 U. S., at 379-380.<sup>27</sup> [**585] And even Continental does not urge us to hold that all such restrictions are per se illegal.

[****35] [LEdHN\[8\]\[↑\]](#) [8][LEdHN\[9A\]\[↑\]](#) [9A][LEdHN\[10A\]\[↑\]](#) [10A][LEdHN\[11A\]\[↑\]](#) [11A][LEdHN\[12A\]\[↑\]](#) [12A][LEdHN\[13\]\[↑\]](#) [13]We revert to the standard articulated in Northern Pac. R. Co., and reiterated in White Motor, for determining whether vertical restrictions must be "conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use."
356 U. S., at 5. Such restrictions, in varying forms, are widely used in our free market economy. As indicated above, there is substantial scholarly and judicial authority [*58] supporting their economic utility. There is relatively little authority to the contrary.<sup>28</sup> [****37] Certainly, there has been no showing in this case, either generally or with

<sup>24</sup> "Generally a manufacturer would prefer the lowest retail price possible, once its price to dealers has been set, because a lower retail price means increased sales and higher manufacturer revenues." Note, 88 Harv. L. Rev. 636, 641 (1975). In this context, a manufacturer is likely to view the difference between the price at which it sells to its retailers and their price to the consumer as its "cost of distribution," which it would prefer to minimize. Posner, supra, n. 13, at 283.

<sup>25</sup> Professor Comanor argues that the promotional activities encouraged by vertical restrictions result in product differentiation and, therefore, a decrease in interbrand competition. This argument is flawed by its necessary assumption that a large part of the promotional efforts resulting from vertical restrictions will not convey socially desirable information about product availability, price, quality, and services. Nor is it clear that a per se rule would result in anything more than a shift to less efficient methods of obtaining the same promotional effects.

<sup>26</sup> We also note that per se rules in this area may work to the ultimate detriment of the small businessmen who operate as franchisees. To the extent that a per se rule prevents a firm from using the franchise system to achieve efficiencies that it perceives as important to its successful operation, the rule creates an incentive for vertical integration into the distribution system, thereby eliminating to that extent the role of independent businessmen. See, e.g., Keck, The Schwinn Case, 23 Bus. Law. 669 (1968); Pollock, supra, n. 13, at 608-610.

<sup>27</sup> Continental's contention that balancing intrabrand and interbrand competitive effects of vertical restrictions is not a "proper part of the judicial function," Brief for Petitioners 52, is refuted by Schwinn itself. United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S., at 608, is not to the contrary, for it involved a horizontal restriction among ostensible competitors.

respect to Sylvania's agreements, [****36] that vertical restrictions have or are likely to have a "pernicious effect on competition" or that they "lack... any redeeming virtue." Ibid.<sup>29</sup> Accordingly, HN5 we conclude [**2562] that the per se rule stated in Schwinn must be overruled.<sup>30</sup> In so holding we do not foreclose the possibility that particular applications of vertical restrictions might justify per se prohibition under Northern Pac. R. Co. But we do make clear that departure from the rule-of-reason standard [*59] must be based upon demonstrable economic effect rather than - as in Schwinn - upon formalistic line drawing.

[LEdHN\[9B\]](#) [↑] [9B] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [↑] [10B] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [↑] [11B] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [↑] [12B]

[****38] [LEdHN\[14\]](#) [↑] [14]In sum, we conclude that the appropriate decision is to return to the rule of reason that governed vertical restrictions prior to Schwinn. HN6 When anticompetitive effects are shown to result from particular vertical restrictions they can be adequately policed under the rule of reason, the standard traditionally applied for the majority of anticompetitive [***586] practices challenged under § 1 of the Act. Accordingly, the decision of the Court of Appeals is Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Concur by: WHITE

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE WHITE, concurring in the judgment.

Although I agree with the majority that the location clause at issue in this case is not a per se violation of the Sherman Act and should be judged under the rule of reason, I cannot agree that this result requires the overruling of United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365 (1967). In my view this case is distinguishable from Schwinn because there is less potential for restraint of intrabrand competition and more potential for stimulating interbrand competition. [****39] As to intrabrand competition, Sylvania, unlike Schwinn, did not restrict the customers to whom or the territories where its purchasers could sell. As to interbrand competition, Sylvania, unlike Schwinn, had an insignificant market share at the time it adopted its challenged distribution practice and enjoyed no consumer preference that would allow its retailers to charge a premium over other brands. In two short paragraphs, the majority disposes of the view, adopted after careful analysis by the Ninth Circuit en banc below, that these differences provide a "principled basis for distinguishing Schwinn," ante, at 46, despite holdings by three Courts of <sup>28</sup> There may be occasional problems in differentiating vertical restrictions from horizontal restrictions originating in agreements among the retailers. There is no doubt that restrictions in the latter category would be illegal per se, see, e.g., United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 (1966); United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., supra, but we do not regard the problems of proof as sufficiently great to justify a per se rule.

---

<sup>29</sup> The location restriction used by Sylvania was neither the least nor the most restrictive provision that it could have used. See ABA Monograph No. 2, pp. 20-25. But we agree with the implicit judgment in Schwinn that a per se rule based on the nature of the restriction is, in general, undesirable. Although distinctions can be drawn among the frequently used restrictions, we are inclined to view them as differences of degree and form. See Robinson, supra, n. 13, at 279-280; Averill, Sealy, Schwinn and Sherman One: An Analysis and Prognosis, 15 N. Y. L. F. 39, 65 (1969). We are unable to perceive significant social gain from channeling transactions into one form or another. Finally, we agree with the Court in Schwinn that the advantages of vertical restrictions should not be limited to the categories of new entrants and failing firms. Sylvania was faltering, if not failing, and we think it would be unduly artificial to deny it the use of valuable competitive tools.

<sup>30</sup> The importance of stare decisis is, of course, unquestioned, but as Mr. Justice Frankfurter stated in Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U. S. 106, 119 (1940), "STARE DECISIS is a principle of policy and not a mechanical formula of adherence to the latest decision, however recent and questionable, when such adherence involves collision with a prior doctrine more embracing in its scope, intrinsically sounder, and verified by experience."

Appeals and the District Court on remand in Schwinn that [*60] the per se rule established in that case does not apply to location clauses such as Sylvania's. To reach out to overrule one of this Court's recent interpretations of the Sherman Act, after such a cursory examination of the necessity for doing so, is surely an affront to the principle that considerations of stare decisis are to be given particularly strong weight in the area of statutory construction. Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 736-737 \(1977\); [****40] Runyon v. McCrary, 427 U.S. 160, 175 \(1976\); Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 671 \(1974\).

One element of the system of interrelated vertical restraints invalidated in Schwinn was a retail-customer restriction prohibiting franchised retailers from selling Schwinn products to nonfranchised retailers. The Court rests its inability to distinguish Schwinn entirely on this retail-customer restriction, finding it "[i]n intent and competitive [**2563] impact... indistinguishable from the location restriction in the present case," because "[i]n both cases the restrictions limited the freedom of the retailer to dispose of the purchased products as he desired." Ante, at 46. The customer restriction may well have, however, a very different "intent and competitive impact" than the location restriction: It prevents discount stores from getting the manufacturer's product and thus prevents intrabrand price competition. Suppose, for example, that interbrand competition is sufficiently [***587] weak that the franchised retailers are able to charge a price substantially above wholesale. Under a location restriction, these franchisers are free to sell to discount [****41] stores seeking to exploit the potential for sales at prices below the prevailing retail level. One of the franchised retailers may be tempted to lower its price and act in effect as a wholesaler for the discount house in order to share in the profits to be had from lowering prices and expanding volume.<sup>1</sup>

[*61] Under a retail customer restriction, on the other hand, the franchised dealers cannot sell to discounters, who are cut off altogether from the manufacturer's product and the opportunity for intrabrand price competition. This was precisely the theory on which the Government successfully challenged Schwinn's customer restrictions in this Court. The District Court in that case found that "[e]ach one of [Schwinn's franchised retailers] knows also that he is not [****42] a wholesaler and that he cannot sell as a wholesaler or act as an agent for some other unfranchised dealer, such as a discount house retailer who has not been franchised as a dealer by Schwinn." 237 F.Supp. 323, 333 \(ND Ill. 1965\). The Government argued on appeal, with extensive citations to the record, that the effect of this restriction was "to keep Schwinn products out of the hands of discount houses and other price cutters so as to discourage price competition in retailing...." Brief for United States O. T. 1966. No. 25 P. 26 See id., at 29-37.<sup>2</sup>

[****43] It is true that, as the majority states, Sylvania's location restriction inhibited to some degree "the freedom of the retailer to dispose of the purchased products" by requiring the retailer to sell from one particular place of business. But the retailer is still free to sell to any type of customer - including discounters and other unfranchised dealers - from any area. I think this freedom implies a significant difference for the effect of a location clause on intrabrand competition. The [*62] District Court on remand in Schwinn evidently thought so as well, for after enjoining Schwinn's customer restrictions as directed by this Court it expressly sanctioned location clauses, permitting Schwinn to "designat[e] in its retailer franchise agreements the location of the place or places of business for which the franchise is issued." 291 F.Supp. 564, 565-566 \(ND Ill. 1968\).

An additional basis for finding less restraint of intrabrand competition in this case, emphasized by the Ninth Circuit en banc, is that Schwinn involved restrictions on competition among distributors at the [**2564] wholesale level. As Judge Ely [***588] wrote for the six-member majority [****44] below: S

<sup>1</sup> The franchised retailers would be prevented from engaging in discounting themselves if, under the Colgate doctrine, see infra, at 67, the manufacturer could lawfully terminate dealers who did not adhere to his suggested retail price.

<sup>2</sup> Given the Government's emphasis on the inhibiting effect of the Schwinn restrictions on discounting activities, the Court may well have been referring to this effect when it condemned the restrictions as "obviously destructive of competition." 388 U. S., at 379. But the Court was also heavily influenced by its concern for the freedom of dealers to control the disposition of products they purchased from Schwinn. See infra, at 66-69. In any event, the record in Schwinn illustrates the potentially greater threat to intrabrand competition posed by customer as opposed to location restrictions.

"[Schwinn] had created exclusive geographical sales territories for each of its 22 wholesaler bicycle distributors and had made each distributor the sole Schwinn outlet for the distributor's designated area. Each distributor was prohibited from selling to any retailers located outside its territory....

"... Schwinn's territorial restrictions requiring dealers to confine their sales to exclusive territories prescribed by Schwinn prevented a dealer from competing for customers outside his territory.... Schwinn's restrictions guaranteed each wholesale distributor that it would be absolutely isolated from all competition from other Schwinn wholesalers." 537 F.2d 980, 989-990 (1976).I

Moreover, like its franchised retailers, Schwinn's distributors were absolutely barred from selling to nonfranchised retailers, further limiting the possibilities of intrabrand price competition.

The majority apparently gives no weight to the Court of Appeals' reliance on the difference between the competitive effects of Sylvania's location clause and Schwinn's interlocking "system of vertical restraints affecting both wholesale and retail distribution." Id., at 989. [****45] It also ignores post-Schwinn [*63] decisions of the Third and Tenth Circuits upholding the validity of location clauses similar to Sylvania's here. Salco Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 517 F.2d 567 (CA10 1975); Kaiser v. General Motors Corp., 530 F.2d 964 (CA3 1976), aff'g 396 F.Supp. 33 (ED Pa. 1975). Finally, many of the scholarly authorities the majority cites in support of its overruling of Schwinn have not had to strain to distinguish location clauses from the restrictions invalidated there. E.g., Robinson, Recent Antitrust Developments: 1974, 75 Colum. L. Rev. 243, 278 (1975) (outcome in Sylvania not preordained by Schwinn because of marked differences in the vertical restraints in the two cases); McLaren, Territorial and Customer Restrictions, Consignments, Suggested Retail Prices and Refusals to Deal, 37 Antitrust L. J. 137, 144-145 (1968) (by implication Schwinn exempts location clauses from its per se rule); Pollock, Alternative Distribution Methods After Schwinn, 63 Nw. U. L. Rev. 595, 603 (1968) ("Nor does the Schwinn doctrine outlaw the use of a so-called 'location clause'...").

[****46] Just as there are significant differences between Schwinn and this case with respect to intrabrand competition, there are also significant differences with respect to interbrand competition. Unlike Schwinn, Sylvania clearly had no economic power in the generic product market. At the time they instituted their respective distribution policies, Schwinn was "the leading bicycle producer in the Nation," with a national market share of 22.5%, 388 U. S., at 368, 374, whereas Sylvania was a "faltering, if not failing" producer of television sets, with "a relatively insignificant 1% to 2%" share of the national market in which the dominant manufacturer had a 60% to 70% share. Ante, at 38, 58 n. 29. Moreover, the Schwinn brand name enjoyed superior consumer acceptance and commanded a premium price as, in the [***589] District Court's words, "the Cadillac of the bicycle industry." 237 F.Supp., at 335. This premium gave Schwinn dealers a margin of [*64] protection from interbrand competition and created the possibilities for price cutting by discounters that the Government argued were forestalled by Schwinn's customer restrictions. <sup>3</sup> Thus, judged [****47] by the criteria [**2565] economists use to measure market power - product differentiation and market share <sup>4</sup> - Schwinn enjoyed a substantially stronger position in the bicycle market than did Sylvania in the television market. This Court relied on Schwinn's market position as one reason not to apply the rule of reason to the vertical restraints challenged there. "Schwinn was not a newcomer, seeking to break into or stay in the bicycle business. It was not a 'failing company.' On the contrary, at the initiation of these practices, it was the leading bicycle producer in the Nation." 388 U. S., at 374. And the Court of Appeals below found "another significant distinction between our case and Schwinn" in Sylvania's "precarious market share," which

<sup>3</sup> Relying on the finding of the District Court, the Government argued:

"[T]he declared purpose of the Schwinn franchising system [was] to establish and exploit a distinctive identity and superior consumer acceptance for the Schwinn brand name as the Cadillac of bicycles, thereby enabling the charging of a premium price.... This scheme could not possibly succeed, and doubtless would long ago have been abandoned, if in the consumer's mind other bicycles were just as good as Schwinn's." Brief for United States, O.T. 1966, No. 25, p. 36.

<sup>4</sup> See, e.g., F. Scherer, Industrial Market Structure and Economics Performance 10-11 (1970); P. Samuelson, Economics 485-491 (10th ed. 1976).

"was so small when it adopted its locations practice that it was threatened with expulsion from the television market." 537 F.2d, at 991.<sup>5</sup>

[****48] [*65] In my view there are at least two considerations, both relied upon by the majority to justify overruling Schwinn, that would provide a "principled basis" for instead refusing to extend Schwinn to a vertical restraint that is imposed by a "faltering" manufacturer with a "precarious" position in a generic product market dominated by another firm. The first is that, as the majority puts it, "when interbrand competition exists, as it does among television manufacturers, it provides a significant check on the exploitation of intrabrand market power because of the ability of consumers to substitute a different brand of the same product." Ante, at 52 n. 19. See also ante, at 54.<sup>6</sup> Second is the view, argued forcefully in the economic literature cited by the majority, that the potential benefits of vertical restraints in promoting interbrand [***590] competition are particularly strong where the manufacturer imposing the restraints is seeking to enter a new market or to expand a small market share. Ibid.<sup>7</sup> The majority even recognizes that Schwinn "hinted" at an exception for new entrants and failing firms from its per se rule. Ante, at 53-54, n. 22.

[****49] In other areas of antitrust law, this Court has not hesitated to base its rules of per se illegality in part on the defendant's market power. Indeed, in the very case from which the majority draws its standard for per se rules, Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U. S. 1, 5 (1958), the [*66] Court stated the reach of the per se rule against tie-ins under § 1 of the Sherman Act as extending to all defendants with "sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain free competition in the [**2566] market for the tied product...."
356 U. S., at 6. And the Court subsequently approved an exception to this per se rule for "infant industries" marketing a new product. United States v. Jerrold Electronics Corp., 187 F.Supp. 545 (ED Pa. 1960), aff'd per curiam, 365 U.S. 567 (1961). See also United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 363 (1963), where the Court held presumptively illegal a merger "which produces a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market...." I see no doctrinal obstacle to excluding firms with such minimal market power [****50] as Sylvania's from the reach of the Schwinn rule.<sup>8</sup>

[****51] I have, moreover, substantial misgivings about the approach the majority takes to overruling Schwinn. The reason for the distinction in Schwinn between sale and nonsale transactions was not, as the majority would have it, "the Court's effort to accommodate the perceived intrabrand harm and interbrand benefit of vertical restrictions," ante, at 52; the reason was rather, as Judge Browning argued in dissent below, the notion in many of our cases

---

<sup>5</sup> Schwinn's national market share declined to 12.8% in the 10 years following the institution of its distribution program, at which time it ranked second behind a firm with a 22.8% share. 388 U. S., at 368-369. In the three years following the adoption of its locations practice, Sylvania's national market share increased to 5%, placing it eighth among manufacturers of color television sets. Ante, at 38-39. At this time Sylvania's shares of the San Francisco, Sacramento, and northern California markets were respectively 2.5%, 15%, and 5%. Ante, at 39 nn. 4, 6. The District Court made no findings as to Schwinn's share of local bicycle markets.

<sup>6</sup> For an extensive discussion of this effect of interbrand competition, see ABA Antitrust Section, Monograph No. 2, Vertical Restrictions Limiting Intrabrand Competition 60-67 (1977).

<sup>7</sup> Preston, Restrictive Distribution Arrangements: Economic Analysis and Public Policy Standards, 30 Law & Contemp. Prob. 506, 511 (1965); Posner, Antitrust Policy and the Supreme Court: An Analysis of the Restricted Distribution, Horizontal Merger and Potential Competition Decisions, 75 Colum. L. Rev. 282, 293 (1975); Scherer, supra, n. 4, at 510.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. Sandura Co. v. FTC, 339 F.2d 847, 850 (CA6 1964) (territorial restrictions on distributors imposed by small manufacturer "competing with and losing ground to the 'giants' of the floor-covering industry" is not per se illegal); Baker, Vertical Restraints in Times of Change: From White to Schwinn to Where?, 44 Antitrust L.J. 537, 545-547 (1975) (presumptive illegality of territorial restrictions imposed by manufacturer with "any degree of market power"). The majority's failure to use the market share of Schwinn and Sylvania as a basis for distinguishing these cases is the more anomalous for its reliance, see infra, at 68-70, on the economic analysis of those who distinguish the anticompetitive effects of distribution restraints on the basis of the market shares of the distributors. See Posner, supra, at 299; Bork, The Rule of Reason and the Per Se Concept: Price Fixing and Market Division [II], 75 Yale L. J. 373, 391-429 (1966).

involving vertical restraints that independent [*67] businessmen should have the freedom to dispose of the goods they own as they see fit. Thus the first case cited by the Court in Schwinn for the proposition that "restraints upon alienation... are beyond the power of the manufacturer to impose upon [***591] its vendees and... are violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act," 388 U. S., at 377, was this Court's seminal decision holding a series of resale-price-maintenance agreements per se illegal, Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373 \(1911\). In Dr. Miles the Court stated that "a general restraint upon alienation is ordinarily invalid," citing Coke on Littleton, and emphasized that the [****52] case involved "agreements restricting the freedom of trade on the part of dealers who own what they sell." Id., at 404, 407-408. Mr. Justice Holmes stated in dissent: "If [the manufacturer] should make the retail dealers also agents in law as well as in name and retain the title until the goods left their hands I cannot conceive that even the present enthusiasm for regulating the prices to be charged by other people would deny that the owner was acting within his rights." Id., at 411.

This concern for the freedom of the businessman to dispose of his own goods as he sees fit is most probably the explanation for two subsequent cases in which the Court allowed manufacturers to achieve economic results similar to that in Dr. Miles where they did not impose restrictions on dealers who had purchased their products. In United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300 \(1919\), the Court found no antitrust violation in a manufacturer's policy of refusing to sell to dealers who failed to charge the manufacturer's suggested retail price and of terminating dealers who did not adhere to that price. It stated that the Sherman Act did not "restrict the [****53] long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private [**2567] business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal." Id., at 307. In United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U.S. 476 \(1926\), the Court upheld resale-price-maintenance [*68] agreements made by a patentee with its dealers who obtained its goods on a consignment basis. The Court distinguished Dr. Miles on the ground that the agreements there were "contracts of sale rather than of agency" and involved "an attempt by the Miles Medical Company... to hold its purchasers, after the purchase at full price, to an obligation to maintain prices on a resale by them." 272 U. S., at 487. By contrast, a manufacturer was free to contract with his agents to "[fix] the price by which his agents transfer the title from him directly to [the] consumer... however comprehensive as a mass or whole in [the] effect [of these contracts]." Id., at 488. Although these two cases have been called into question by subsequent decisions, see United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29 \(1960\), [****54] and Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U. S. 13 \(1964\), their rationale runs through our case law in the area of distributional restraints. In Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, 340 U. S. 211, 213 \(1951\), the Court held that an agreement to fix resale prices was per se illegal under § 1 because "such agreements, no less than those to fix minimum prices, cripple the freedom of traders and thereby restrain their ability to sell [***592] in accordance with their own judgment." Accord, Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U. S. 145, 152 \(1968\). See generally Judge Browning's dissent below, 537 F.2d, at 1018-1022; ABA Antitrust Section, Monograph No. 2, Vertical Restrictions Limiting Intrabrand Competition 29-31, 82-83, 87-91, 96-97 (1977); Blake & Jones, Toward a Three-Dimensional Antitrust Policy, 65 Colum. L. Rev. 422, 427-436 (1965).

After summarily rejecting this concern, reflected in our interpretations of the Sherman Act, for "the autonomy of independent businessmen," ante, at 53 n. 21, the majority not surprisingly finds "no justification" for Schwinn's distinction between sale and nonsale transactions [****55] because the distinction is "essentially unrelated to any relevant economic impact." Ante, at 56. But while according some weight to the businessman's [*69] interest in controlling the terms on which he trades in his own goods may be anathema to those who view the Sherman Act as directed solely to economic efficiency,<sup>9</sup> this principle is without question more deeply embedded in our cases than the notions of "free rider" effects and distributional efficiencies borrowed by the majority from the "new economics of vertical relationships." Ante, at 54-57. Perhaps the Court is right in partially abandoning this principle and in judging the instant nonprice vertical restraints solely by their "relevant economic impact"; but the precedents which reflect this principle should not be so lightly rejected by the Court. The rationale of Schwinn are no doubt difficult to discern from the opinion, and it may be wrong; it is not, however, the aberration the majority makes it out to be here.

[****56] I have a further reservation about the majority's reliance on "relevant economic impact" as the test for retaining per se rules regarding vertical restraints. It is common ground among the leading advocates of a purely economic approach to the question of distribution restraints that the economic arguments in favor of allowing vertical nonprice restraints generally apply to vertical price restraints as well.<sup>10</sup> Although [*70] [**2568] the majority asserts that "the per se illegality of price restrictions... involves significantly different questions of analysis and policy," ante, at 51 n. 18, I suspect this purported distinction may be as difficult to justify as that of Schwinn under the terms of the majority's analysis. Thus Professor Posner, in an article cited five times by the majority, concludes: "I believe that the law should treat price and nonprice restrictions the same and that it should make no distinction [***593] between the imposition of restrictions in a sale contract and their imposition in an agency contract." Posner, supra, n. 7, at 298. Indeed, the Court has already recognized that resale price maintenance may increase output by inducing "demand [****57] creating activity" by dealers (such as additional retail outlets, advertising and promotion, and product servicing) that outweighs the additional sales that would result from lower prices brought about by dealer price competition. Albrecht v. Herald Co., supra, at 151 n. 7. These same output-enhancing possibilities of nonprice vertical restraints are relied upon by the majority as evidence of their social utility and economic soundness, ante, at 55, 57-58, and as a justification for judging them under the rule of reason. The effect, if not the intention, of the Court's opinion is necessarily to call into question the firmly established per se rule against price restraints.

---

<sup>9</sup> E.g., Bork, Legislative Intent and the Policy of the Sherman Act, 9 J. Law & Econ. 7 (1966); Bork, The Rule of Reason and the Per Se Concept: Price Fixing and Market Division [I], 74 Yale L. J. 775 (1965).

[****58] Although the case law in the area of distributional restraints has perhaps been less than satisfactory, the Court would do well to proceed more deliberately in attempting to improve it. In view of the ample reasons for distinguishing Schwinn from this case and in the absence of contrary congressional action, I would adhere to the principle that S

"each case arising under the Sherman Act must be determined upon the particular facts disclosed by the record, and... the opinions in those cases must be read in the light of their facts and of a clear recognition of the essential differences in the facts of those cases, and in the facts of any new case to which the rule of earlier decisions [*71] is to be applied." Maple Flooring Mfrs. Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 563, 579 (1925).I

In order to decide this case, the Court need only hold that a location clause imposed by a manufacturer with negligible economic power in the product market has a competitive impact sufficiently less restrictive than the Schwinn restraints to justify a rule-of-reason standard, even if the same weight is given here as in Schwinn to dealer autonomy. I therefore concur in the judgment. [****59]

Dissent by: BRENNAN

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, with whom MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL joins, dissenting.

I would not overrule the per se rule stated in United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U. S. 365 (1967), and would therefore reverse the decision of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

---

<sup>10</sup> Professor Posner writes, for example:

"There is no basis for choosing between [price fixing and market division] on social grounds. If resale price maintenance is like dealer price fixing, and therefore bad, a manufacturer's assignment of exclusive sales territories is like market division, and therefore bad too....

"[If helping new entrants break into a market] is a good justification for exclusive territories, it is an equally good justification for resale price maintenance, which as we have seen is simply another method of dealing with the free-rider problem.... In fact, any argument that can be made on behalf of exclusive territories can also be made on behalf of resale price maintenance." Posner, supra, n. 7, at 292-293. (Footnote omitted.)

See Bork, supra, n. 8, at 391-464.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 31, 32, 74

21 Am Jur Trials 453, Franchise Litigation

15 USCS 1

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 16, 53

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 38

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Franchise; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Validity under federal antitrust laws of agreement conferring exclusive sales agency for designated territory. 9 L Ed 2d 1235.

Vertical territorial and customer restraints as per se violations [****60] of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1). Post-Schwinn cases. 30 ALR Fed 19.

---

End of Document

Vendo Co. v. Lektro-Vend Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued January 19, 1977 ; June 29, 1977; as amended Petition for Rehearing Denied October 3, 1977

No. 76-156

Reporter

433 U.S. 623 *; 97 S. Ct. 2881 **; 53 L. Ed. 2d 1009 ***; 1977 U.S. LEXIS 25 ****; 1977-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P61,497

VENDO CO. v. LEKTRO-VEND CORP. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

Disposition: The court reversed the judgment.

Core Terms

---

injunction, federal court, state-court, proceedings, state court, Clayton Act, anti-injunction, authorize, enjoin, express authorization, antitrust, intended scope, Anti-Injunction Act, plurality, Appeals, anti trust law, antitrust violation, legislative history, federal policy, courts, violation of antitrust laws, injunctive relief, Sherman Act, covenant, rights, Manufacturing, principles, patent, restraint of trade, compete

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > Exceptions

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

HN1 Anti-Injunction Act, Exceptions

See 28 U.S.C.S. § 2283.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > Exceptions

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

HN2 Anti-Injunction Act, Exceptions

I HHÁNEJÀ GHÀÀ GHÀÀ JUÈDÀG Ì FÄÄG Ì FLÄ HÄSEØAÈGÀÄEEJÄEEJÄFJÌ JÄMÈSØYQÀÄEEF

The Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C.S. § 2283, is an absolute prohibition against any injunction of any state-court proceedings, unless the injunction falls within one of the three specifically defined exceptions in the Act.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > Exceptions

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

**HN3** Anti-Injunction Act, Exceptions

Any doubts as to the propriety of a federal injunction against state court proceedings should be resolved in favor of permitting the state courts to proceed in an orderly fashion to finally determine the controversy. The cautious approach is mandated by the explicit wording of 28 U.S.C.S. § 2283 and the fundamental principle of a dual system of courts. The prohibition is not to be whittled away by judicial improvisation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN4** Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 26.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > Exceptions

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

**HN5** Anti-Injunction Act, Exceptions

In order to qualify as an "expressly authorized" exception to the Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C.S. § 2283, an Act of Congress must have created a specific and uniquely federal right or remedy, enforceable in a federal court of equity, that could be frustrated if the federal court were not empowered to enjoin a state court proceeding. The test is whether an Act of Congress, clearly creating a federal right or remedy enforceable in a federal court of equity, could be given its intended scope only by the stay of a state court proceeding.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

Shortly after a corporation which had acquired most of the assets of another corporation brought an action in an Illinois state court seeking recovery for breach of covenants not to compete which the acquired corporation and one of its stockholders had entered into as part of the acquisition agreement, the acquired corporation, its stockholder, and another brought an action in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, alleging that the covenants against competition were unreasonable restraints of trade violative of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.). Ultimately, after nine years of litigation in the state courts (see 105 Ill App 2d 261, 245 NE2d 263, and 13 Ill

I HÁMEJÄ GHÄÄ GHÄÄ ÄUÄÖÄG I FÄÄEG I FLÄ HÄSEÄ äÄGÄ FEEÄFEEJÄFÄJÄ I ÄNÄEÄSÖYÄÄGÄ PÄÄF

App 3d 291, 300 NE2d 632), the Supreme Court of Illinois affirmed a judgment in favor of the acquiring company for some $ 7,000,000 (see 58 Ill 2d 289, 321 NE2d 1), and the plaintiffs in the Federal District Court antitrust action moved for a preliminary injunction against collection of the state court judgment that had been rendered against them. The District Court granted the motion, finding that the covenants against competition were overly broad and that the acquiring corporation's activities in the state litigation were not a genuine attempt to use the adjudicative process legitimately. The District Court held that injunctive relief was not barred by the Anti-Injunction Act (28 USCS 2283)--which prohibits a federal court from granting an injunction staying state court proceedings "except as expressly authorized by Act of Congress, or where necessary in aid of its jurisdiction, or to protect or effectuate its judgments"--since 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26), which authorizes private injunctive relief in federal courts against threatened loss or damage from antitrust violations, constituted an express exception by Act of Congress to the Anti-Injunction Act, and since an injunction was necessary to protect the jurisdiction of the court in view of the fact that collection of the state court judgment would, in effect, eliminate two of the three plaintiffs in the federal action (403 F Supp 527). On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed, holding that 16 of the Clayton Act was an express exception by Act of Congress to the Anti-Injunction Act (545 F2d 1050).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. Although unable to agree on an opinion, five members of the court agreed that the District Court had erred in granting injunctive relief.

Rehnquist, J., announced the judgment of the court, and in an opinion joined by Stewart and Powell, JJ., expressed the view that 16 of the Clayton Act did not qualify under the "expressly authorized by Act of Congress" exception to the Anti-Injunction Act, and that the District Court's injunction was not "necessary in aid of its jurisdiction" for purposes of the Anti-Injunction Act.

Blackmun, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., concurring in the result, expressed the view that 16 of the Clayton Act was an "expressly authorized by Act of Congress" exception to the Anti-Injunction Act under narrowly limited circumstances, but that, nevertheless, 16 did not authorize the District Court's injunction in the case at bar, since the state court proceeding, in and of itself, was not part of a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims used as an anticompetitive device.

Stevens, J., joined by Brennan, White, and Marshall, JJ., dissented, expressing the view that an injunction under 16 of the Clayton Act was within the "expressly authorized by Act of Congress" exception to the Anti-Injunction Act, that the District Court's injunction was authorized under 16, and that such injunction was not barred under principles of equity, comity, and federalism.

Headnotes

COURTS §697 > MONOPOLIES §68 > federal court injunction -- collection of state court judgment -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

The United States Supreme Court will hold that under the Anti-Injunction Act (28 USCS 2283), providing that a federal court may not grant an injunction to stay proceedings in a state court "except as expressly authorized by Act of Congress, or where necessary in aid of its jurisdiction, or to protect or effectuate its judgments," a Federal District Court, in an action wherein the plaintiffs alleged that covenants against competition that had been entered into with the defendant were violative of federal antitrust laws, cannot preliminarily enjoin--pursuant to 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26), which authorizes private injunctive relief in federal courts against threatened loss or damage from antitrust violations--the collection of a state court judgment against the federal plaintiffs which had been rendered in a state court action brought by the federal defendant for breach of the covenants against competition, where (1) three Justices of the Supreme Court are of the view that, for purposes of the Anti-Injunction Act, 16 of the Clayton Act is not within the "expressly authorized by Act of Congress" exception and that an injunction by the District Court is not "necessary in aid of its jurisdiction," and (2) two other Justices are of the view that 16 of the Clayton Act is within the "expressly authorized by Act of Congress" exception to the Anti-Injunction Act under narrowly limited circumstances not present in the case at bar. [Per Rehnquist, J., Stewart, J., Powell, J., Blackmun, J., and Burger, Ch. J. Dissenting: Stevens, Brennan, White, and Marshall, JJ.]

I HHÀNÈJÀ GHÀNÀ GHÀNÀ ÁUÈDÒG Ì FÄÄG Ì FLÀ HÄSEÖAÈGÀFEEJÄÄFEEJÄFJÌ Í ÁUÈSÖYQÀÍ ÄÄÄÄ

COURTS §700.5 > Anti-Injunction Act -- Clayton Act provision as exception -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

For purposes of the Anti-Injunction Act (28 USCS 2283), prohibiting federal courts from granting injunctions staying state court proceedings "except as expressly authorized by Act of Congress," 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26)--which authorizes private injunctive relief in federal courts against threatened loss or damage from antitrust violations--is, at least under some circumstances, an "expressly authorized" exception. [Per Blackmun, J., Burger, Ch. J., Stevens, J., Brennan, J., White, J., and Marshall, J. Contra: Rehnquist, Stewart, and Powell, JJ.]

Syllabus

---

Petitioner vending machine manufacturer acquired most of the assets of another vending machine manufacturing company controlled by respondent Stoner and his family. As part of the acquisition agreement the latter company undertook to refrain from owning or managing any business engaged in the manufacture or sale of vending machines, and respondent Stoner, who was employed by petitioner as a consultant under a 5-year contract, agreed not to compete with petitioner in the manufacture of such machines during the term of his contract and for five years thereafter. Subsequently, petitioner sued respondents (Stoner, the company which he and his family controlled, and another corporation with which he had a relationship) in a Illinois state court for breach of the noncompetition covenants. Shortly thereafter, respondents sued petitioner in Federal District Court, alleging that it had violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act in that the covenant against competition was an unreasonable restraint of trade. After protracted litigation [***2] in the state-court action, the Illinois Supreme Court affirmed a judgment in petitioner's favor in an amount exceeding $7 million. Then in the antitrust action, which, in the meantime, had lain "dormant," the District Court granted respondents' motion for a preliminary injunction against collection of the Illinois judgment, holding that § 16 of the Clayton Act (which authorizes any person to seek injunctive relief against violations of the antitrust laws) constituted an "expressly authorized" exception to the Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2283 (which prohibits a federal court from enjoining state-court proceedings "except as expressly authorized by Act of Congress, or where necessary in aid of its jurisdiction, or to protect or effectuate its judgments"), and further found that an injunction was necessary to protect the court's jurisdiction within the meaning of that exception in § 2283 by preserving a case or controversy, since the state collection efforts would eliminate the two corporate respondents (which would then be controlled by petitioner) as plaintiffs in the federal suit. The Court of Appeals affirmed, also finding that § 16 of the Clayton [***3] Act was an express exception to § 2283, but not reaching the issue of whether an injunction was necessary to protect the District Court's jurisdiction. Held: The judgment is reversed, and the case is remanded. Pp. 630-643; 643-645.

545 F.2d 1050, reversed and remanded.

MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST, joined by MR. JUSTICE STEWART and MR. JUSTICE POWELL, concluded that the District Court's preliminary injunction violated the Anti-Injunction Act. Pp. 630-643.

(a) Having been enacted long after the Anti-Injunction Act, § 16 of the Clayton Act, on its face, is far from an express exception to the Anti-Injunction Act, and may be fairly read as virtually incorporating the prohibitions of that Act. Pp. 631-632.

(b) The test as to whether an Act of Congress qualifies as an "expressly authorized" exception to the Anti-Injunction Act is whether the "Act of Congress, clearly creating a federal right or remedy enforceable in a federal court of equity, could be given its intended scope only by the stay of a state court proceeding." Mitchum v. Foster, 407 U.S. 225, 238. Here, while the private action conferred by § 16 of the Clayton Act meets the first part [****4] of the test in that such an action may be brought only in a federal court, it does not meet the second part of the test, since, as is demonstrated by § 16's legislative history suggesting that § 16 was merely intended to extend to private citizens the right to enjoin antitrust violations, § 16 is not an "Act of Congress [which] could be given its intended scope only by the stay of a state court proceeding." Mitchum, supra, distinguished. Pp. 632-635.

I HHÁÈJÀ GHÀÀ GHÀÀ ÁUÈÒDÀG Ì FÀÀGÌ FLÀ HÀSEÒAÈGÀÀ ÈÈJÀÈÈJÀLÀJÌ Ì ÁUÈÒSÓYQÀÀ ÈÈÈH

(c) To hold that § 16 could be given its "intended scope" only by allowing an injunction against a pending state-court action would completely eviscerate the Anti-Injunction Act, because this would mean that virtually all federal statutes authorizing injunctive relief would be exceptions to that Act. While § 16 embodies an important congressional policy favoring private enforcement of the antitrust laws, the importance of the policy to be "protected" by an injunction under § 16 does not control for purposes of the Anti-Injunction Act, since the prohibitions of that Act exist separate and apart from the traditional principles of equity and comity that determine whether or not the state proceeding can be enjoined. [****5] Pp. 635-639.

(d) For an Act countenancing a federal injunction to come within the "expressly authorized" exception to the Anti-Injunction Act, it must necessarily interact with, or focus upon, a state judicial proceeding, and § 16 of the Clayton Act is not such an Act. Pp. 640-641.

(e) The District Court's finding that the injunction was "necessary in aid of its jurisdiction" within the meaning of that exception to the Anti-Injunction Act is supported neither by precedent nor by the factual premises upon which such finding was based. Although such exception may be fairly read as incorporating cases where the federal court has obtained jurisdiction over a res prior to the state-court action, here both the federal and state actions are in personam actions, which traditionally may proceed concurrently, without interference from either court, and an injunction to "preserve" a case or controversy does not fit within the "necessary in aid of its jurisdiction" exception. It does not appear that even if the two corporate respondents ceased to litigate the federal action, respondent Stoner would lose his standing to vindicate his rights, or that the two corporate defendants would [****6] necessarily be removed from the action. Pp. 641-643.

MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN, joined by THE CHIEF JUSTICE, concluded that, although § 16 of the Clayton Act may be an "expressly authorized" exception to the Anti-Injunction Act in limited circumstances where the state proceedings are part of a "pattern of baseless, repetitive claims" being used as an anticompetitive device, all the traditional prerequisites for equitable relief are satisfied, and the only way to give the antitrust laws their intended scope is by staying the state proceedings, California Motor Transport Co v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, the District Court failed properly to apply the California Motor Transport rule because it did not and could not find the state litigation to be part of a "pattern of baseless, repetitive claims" being used in and of itself as an anticompetitive device, and that therefore § 16 did not itself authorize the District Court's injunction. Pp. 643-645.

REHNQUIST, J., announced the Court's judgment and delivered an opinion, in which STEWART and POWELL, JJ., joined. BLACKMUN, J., filed an opinion concurring in the result, in which BURGER, C.J., joined, post, p. 643. [****7] STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which BRENNAN, WHITE, and MARSHALL, JJ., joined, post, p. 645.

Counsel: Earl E. Pollock argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs was Lambert M. Ochsenschlager. Barnabas F. Sears argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were James E. S. Baker and Thomas L. Brejcha, Jr.

Judges: BURGER, BRENNAN, STEWART, WHITE, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, POWELL, REHNQUIST, STEVENS

Opinion by: REHNQUIST

Opinion

---

I HHÁNEJÁA GHÉÁA GHÁÍÍ ÁUÉOÁEGÍ I FÁRÍG I FLÁ HÁSEÓA EGA ÁFEEUÁA FEEUÁLAFÍJÍ I ÁMEJESÓYQÁAG ÉE

[*626] [*1014] [*2885] MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST announced the judgment of the Court and delivered an opinion in which MR. JUSTICE STEWART and MR. JUSTICE POWELL join.

1

After nine years of litigation in the Illinois state courts, the Supreme Court of Illinois affirmed [****8] a judgment in favor of petitioner and against respondents in the amount of $7,363,500. Shortly afterwards the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois enjoined, at the behest of respondents, state proceedings to collect the judgment. 403 F.Supp. 527 (1975). The order of the United States District Court was affirmed by the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, 545 F.2d 1050 (1976), and we granted certiorari to consider the important question of the relationship between state and federal courts which such an injunction raises. 429 U.S. 815 (1976).

11

The Illinois state-court litigation arose out of commercial dealings between petitioner and respondents. In 1959 petitioner Vendo Co., a vending machine manufacturer located in Kansas City, Mo., acquired most of the assets of Stoner Manufacturing, which was thereupon reorganized as respondent Stoner Investments, Inc. Respondent Harry H. Stoner and members of his family owned all of the stock of Stoner Manufacturing, and that of Stoner Investments. Stoner Manufacturing had engaged in the manufacture of vending machines which dispensed candy, and as a part of [****9] the acquisition agreement it undertook to refrain from owning or managing any business engaged in the manufacture or sale of vending machines. Pursuant to an employment contract, respondent Harry Stoner was employed by petitioner as a consultant for five years at a salary of $50,000, and he agreed that during the term of his contract and for five years thereafter he would not [*627] compete with petitioner in the business of manufacturing vending machines.

In 1965, petitioner sued respondents<sup>1</sup> in state court for breach of these noncompetition covenants. Shortly thereafter, respondents sued petitioner in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, complaining that petitioner had violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2. Respondents alleged that the covenants against competition were unreasonable restraints of trade because they were not reasonably limited as to time and place, and that the purpose of petitioner's state-court lawsuit was to "unlawfully harass" respondents and to "eliminate the competition" of respondents. App. 22, 25.

[****10] Respondents set up this federal antitrust claim as an affirmative defense to petitioner's state-court suit. Id., at 31-32. However, prior to any ruling by the state courts on the merits of this defense, respondents voluntarily withdrew it. Id., at 82.

The state-court litigation ran its [***1015] protracted course,<sup>2</sup> including [*628] two trials, two appeals [**2886] to the State Appellate Court, and an appeal to the Supreme Court of Illinois. In September 1974, the latter court

<sup>1</sup> In addition to respondents Stoner and Stoner Manufacturing, petitioner also sued respondent Lektro-Vend Corp. Lektro-Vend had developed a radically new vending machine, and it was Stoner's relationship with Lektro-Vend that formed the basis of the lawsuit.

<sup>2</sup> The Court of Appeals' summary of the state-court litigation is illustrative:

"The suit was filed in Kane County, Illinois on August 10, 1965; the complaint charged breach of noncompetition covenants; an amended complaint also charged theft of trade secrets. After a bench trial the court on December 16, 1966 found for Vendo. Judgments against Stoner for $250,000 and against both defendants for $1,100,000 were granted. Stoner and Stoner Investments were enjoined from further acts of competition.

"An appeal was taken to the Appellate Court of Illinois. That court entered its decision on January 30, 1969,... 105 Ill. App. 2d 261, 245 N.E. 2d 263. The court held that no trade secrets were involved, the noncompetition covenants were valid and enforceable, and the covenants had been breached by the defendants. The grant of injunctive relief was affirmed. The court affirmed a judgment in favor of petitioner and against respondents in an amount exceeding $7 million. Vendo Co. v. Stoner, 58 Ill. 2d 289, 321 N.E. 2d 1. The Supreme Court of Illinois predicated its judgment on its holding that Stoner had breached a fiduciary duty owed to petitioner, rather than upon any breach of the noncompetitive covenants.<sup>3</sup> This Court denied respondents' petition for a writ of certiorari. 420 U.S. 975 (1975).

I HHÁEÜÀ GHEÀ GI LÁI ÚUÖÄG I FÄEG I Ì LÁ HÄSEÖAÄG ÄEEUÄÄFÉI LÄJÍ I ÁNEÜSÖYÖÄG ÄEEFÉ

[****11] During the entire nine-year course of the state-court litigation, respondents' antitrust suit in the District Court was, in the words of the Court of Appeals, allowed to lie "dormant." 545 F.2d, at 1055. But the day after a Circuit Justice of this [*629] Court had denied a stay of execution pending petition for certiorari to the Supreme Court of Illinois, respondents moved in the District Court for a preliminary injunction against collection of the Illinois judgment. The District Court in due course granted this motion.

That court found that it "appear[ed] that the [noncompetition] covenants... were overly broad," 403 F.Supp., at 533, and that there was "persuasive evidence that Vendo's activities in its litigation against the Stoner interests in Illinois state court were not a genuine attempt to use the adjudicative process legitimately." Id., at 534-535. Recognizing that [***1016] there is a "paucity of authority" on the issue, id., at 536, the District Court held that the injunctive-relief provision of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26, constitutes an express exception to 28 U.S.C. § 2283, [****12] the "Anti-Injunction Act." The court further found that collection efforts would eliminate two of the three plaintiffs and thus that the injunction was necessary to protect the jurisdiction of the court, within the meaning of that exception to § 2283.

The Court of Appeals affirmed, finding that § 16 of the Clayton Act was an express exception to § 2283. The court did not reach the issue of whether an injunction was necessary to protect the jurisdiction of the District Court.

LEdHN/1A [↑] [1A]In this Court, petitioner renews its contention that principles of equity, comity, and federalism, as well as the Anti-Injunction Act, barred the issuance of the injunction by the District Court. Petitioner also asserts in its brief on the merits that the [**2887] United States District Court was required to give full faith and credit to the judgment entered by the Illinois courts.<sup>4</sup> Because we agree with petitioner that the District Court's order violated the Anti-Injunction Act, we reach none of its other contentions.

[****13] [*630] III

The Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2283, provides: S

also held that though the trial court erred in striking the affirmative defense based on the federal antitrust laws, it was correct in denying the defense based on the Illinois antitrust laws. The cause was remanded for a determination of damages and further proceedings.

"Upon remand the defendant withdrew its affirmative defense asserted under the federal antitrust laws. The trial court, after hearing evidence, entered judgments against Stoner and Stoner Investments which totaled $7,363,500.

"Upon a second appeal to the Illinois Appellate Court, the court decided, on September 12, 1973, 13 Ill. App. 3d 291, 300 N.E. 2d 632, that the trial court erred in the measurement of damages. The case was remanded for assessment of damages in accordance with the Appellate Court's original opinion.

"Upon appeal to the Illinois Supreme Court on September 27, 1974., 58 Ill. 2d 289, 321 N.E. 2d 1, the appellate court was reversed and the trial court's judgments were affirmed. The Supreme Court in deciding the case constructed a different theory of recovery - the breach of a fiduciary obligation on the part of Stoner - than had been asserted by Vendo." 545 F.2d 1050, 1055 n. 4 \(CA7 1976\).

<sup>3</sup> "Quite apart from any liability which may be predicated upon a breach of the covenants against competition contained in the sales agreement and the employment contract, it is clear that Stoner violated his fiduciary duties to plaintiff during the period when he was a director and an officer of plaintiff." 58 Ill. 2d, at 303, 321 N.E. 2d, at 9.

<sup>4</sup> This issue was not presented to this Court in the petition for certiorari, and the Court of Appeals did not discuss it in its opinion.

I HHÁEJUÀ CHÉJU HELÁJU ÁUÉOÄG I FÄEG I Í LÁ HÄSEÖAÄG ÁFEEJÄÄFÉFÍ LÄJU Í ÁNÉJESÓYÖÄG ÄÄFFH

HN1 "A court of the United States may not grant an injunction to stay proceedings in a State court except as expressly authorized by Act of Congress, or where necessary in aid of its jurisdiction, or to protect or effectuate its judgments."<sup>1</sup>

The origins and development of the present Act, and of the statutes which preceded it, have been amply described in our prior opinions and need not be restated here. The most recent of these opinions are Mitchum v. Foster, 407 U.S. 225 (1972), and Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Locomotive Engineers, 398 U.S. 281 (1970). Suffice it to say that HN2 the Act is an absolute prohibition against any injunction of any state-court proceedings, unless the injunction falls within one of the three specifically defined exceptions in the Act. The Act's purpose is to forestall the inevitable friction between the state and federal courts that ensues from [****14] the injunction of state judicial proceedings by a federal court. Oklahoma Packing Co. v. Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co., 309 U.S. 4, 9 (1940). Respondents' principal contention is that, as the Court of Appeals held, § 16 of the Clayton Act, which authorizes a private action to redress violations of the antitrust laws, comes within the "expressly authorized" exception to § 2283.

We test this proposition mindful of our admonition that HN3 ST "[a]ny doubts as to the propriety of a federal injunction against state court proceedings should be resolved in favor of permitting the state courts to proceed in an orderly fashion to finally determine [***1017] the controversy." Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., supra, at 297.<sup>1</sup>

This cautious approach is mandated by the "explicit wording of § 2283" and the "fundamental principle of a dual system of [*631] courts." Ibid. We have no occasion to construe the section more broadly: S

"[It is] clear beyond cavil that the prohibition is not to be whittled away by judicial improvisation." Clothing Workers v. Richman Bros. Co., 348 U.S. 511, 514 (1955). [****15]

Our inquiry, of course, begins with the language of § 16 of the Clayton Act, which is the statute claimed to "expressly authorize" the injunction issued here. It provides, in pertinent part: S

HN4 "[A]ny person... shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws... when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings...." 38 Stat. 737, 15 U.S.C. § 26.<sup>1</sup>

On its face, the language merely authorizes private injunctive relief for antitrust violations. Not only does the statute not mention § 2283 or the enjoining of state-court proceedings, but the granting of injunctive relief under § 16 is by the terms of that section limited to "the same conditions and principles" employed by courts of equity, and by "the rules governing such proceedings." In 1793 the predecessor to [****16] § 2283 was enacted specifically to limit the general equity powers of a federal court. Smith v. Apple, 264 U.S. 274, 279 (1924); Toucey v. New York [**2888] Life Ins. Co., 3414 U.S. 118, 130 n. 2 (1941). When § 16 was enacted in 1914 the bar of the Anti-Injunction Act had long constrained the equitable power of federal courts to issue injunctions. Thus, on its face, § 16 is far from an express exception to the Anti-Injunction Act, and may be fairly read as virtually incorporating the prohibitions [*632] of the Anti-Injunction Act with restrictive language not found, for example, in 42 U.S.C. § 1983. See discussion of Mitchum v. Foster, infra.

Respondents rely, as did the Court of Appeals and the District Court, on the following language from Mitchum: S

"... [It] is clear that, HN5 in order to qualify as an 'expressly authorized' exception to the anti-injunction statute, an Act of Congress must have created a specific and uniquely federal right or remedy, enforceable in a federal court of equity, that could be frustrated [****17] if the federal court were not empowered to enjoin a state court proceeding. This is not to say that in order to come within the exception an Act of Congress must, on its face and in every one of its provisions, be totally incompatible with the prohibition of the anti-injunction statute. The test, rather, is whether an Act of Congress, clearly creating a federal right or remedy enforceable in a federal court of equity,

I HHÁWEJĀA CHĒĀ HLAJĀ AÜEÖÄG I FÄÄG I I LÄ HÄSEÖÄG ÄFÄÄFÄI LÄFJÄ I ÄNÄEŠÖYÖÄG ÄFÄÄFÄI could be given its [***1018] intended scope only by the stay of a state court proceeding." 407 U.S., at 237-238. (Emphasis added, footnote omitted.)

But we think it is clear that neither this language from Mitchum nor Mitchum's ratio decidendi supports the result contended for by respondents.

The private action for damages conferred by the Clayton Act is a "uniquely federal right or remedy," in that actions based upon it may be brought only in the federal courts. See General Investment Co. v. Lake Shore & Mich. So. R. Co., 260 U.S. 261, 287 \(1922\). It thus meets the first part of the test laid down in the language quoted from Mitchum.

But that authorization for private actions does not meet the second part of the Mitchum test; [****18] it is not an "Act of Congress... [which] could be given its intended scope only by the stay of a state court proceeding," 407 U.S., at 238. Crucial to our determination in Mitchum that 42 U.S.C. 1983 [*633] fulfilled this requirement - but wholly lacking here - was our recognition that one of the clear congressional concerns underlying the enactment of § 1983 was the possibility that state courts, as well as other branches of state government, might be used as instruments to deny citizens their rights under the Federal Constitution. This determination was based on our review of the legislative history of § 1983; similar review of the legislative history underlying § 16 demonstrates that that section does not meet this aspect of the Mitchum test.

Section 1983 on its face, of course, contains no reference to § 2283, nor does it expressly authorize injunctions against state-court proceedings. But, as Mitchum recognized, such language need not invariably be present in order for a statute to come within the "expressly authorized" exception if there exists sufficient evidence in the legislative history demonstrating that Congress recognized [***19] and intended the statute to authorize injunction of state-court proceedings. In Part IV of our opinion in Mitchum we examined in extenso the purpose and legislative history underlying § 1983, originally § 1 of the Civil Rights Act of 1871. We recounted in detail that statute's history which made it abundantly clear that by its enactment Congress demonstrated its direct and explicit concern to make the federal courts available to protect civil rights against unconstitutional actions of state courts.

We summarized our conclusion in these words: S

"This legislative history makes evident that Congress clearly conceived that it was altering the relationship between the States and the Nation with respect to the protection of federally created rights; it was concerned that state instrumentalities [**2889] could not protect those rights; it realized that state officers might, in fact, be antipathetic to the vindication of those rights; and it believed that these failings extended to the state courts." 407 U.S., at 242.
[*634]

Thus, in Mitchum, absence of express language authorization for enjoining state-court proceedings in § 1983 actions was cured by the [***20] presence of relevant legislative history. [***1019] In this case, however, neither the respondents nor the courts below have called to our attention any similar legislative history in connection with the enactment of § 16 of the Clayton Act. It is not suggested that Congress was concerned with the possibility that state-court proceedings would be used to violate the Sherman or Clayton Acts. Indeed, it seems safe to say that of the many and varied anticompetitive schemes which § 16 was intended to combat, Congress in no way focused upon a scheme using litigation in the state courts. The relevant legislative history of § 16 simply suggests that in enacting § 16 Congress was interested in extending the right to enjoin antitrust violations to private citizens. 5

<sup>5</sup> Prior to the enactment of § 16, private injunctive relief was not authorized for antitrust violations. Paine Lumber Co. v. Neal, 244 U.S. 459 \(1917\). As far as the legislative history indicates, the sole purpose of § 16 (§ 14 in the original drafts) was to extend to private parties the right to sue for injunctive relief. The following passage, taken in its entirety from H. R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 21 (1914), demonstrates what Congress had in mind in enacting § 16:

"Section 14 authorizes a person, firm, or corporation or association to sue for and have injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against

I HHÁEJÀ GHEĀ HI LÁI ÆJÓÄG I FÄEG I JLÁ HÄSEÖAÄGA ÄEEJÄÄF JLÄFJÍ I ÁNEJESÓYQÄG ÄEEGE

[*635] The critical aspects of the legislative history recounted in Mitchum which led us to conclude that § 1983 was within the "expressly authorized" exception to § 2283 are wholly absent from the relevant history of § 16 of the Clayton Act. This void is not filled by other evidence of congressional authorization.

[****21] Section 16 undoubtedly embodies congressional policy favoring private enforcement of the antitrust laws, and undoubtedly there exists a strong national interest in antitrust enforcement.<sup>6</sup> However, [**2890] contrary to [***1020] certain language in the opinion [*636] of the District Court, 403 F.Supp., at 536, the importance of the federal policy to be "protected" by the injunction is not the focus of the inquiry. Presumptively, all federal policies enacted into law by Congress are important, and there will undoubtedly arise particular situations in which a particular policy would be fostered by the granting of an injunction against a pending state-court action. If we were to accept respondents' contention that § 16 could be given its "intended scope" only by allowing such injunctions, then § 2283 would be completely eviscerated since the ultimate logic of this position can mean no less than that virtually all federal statutes<sup>7</sup> authorizing injunctive relief are exceptions to § 2283. Certainly [*637] all federal threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity under the rules governing such proceedings. Under section 7 of the act of July 2, 1890, a person injured in his business and property by corporations or combinations acting in violation of the Sherman antitrust law, may recover loss and damage for such wrongful act. There is, however, no provision in the existing law authorizing a person, firm, corporation, or association to enjoin threatened loss or damage to his business or property by the commission of such unlawful acts, and the purpose of this section is to remedy such defect in the law. This provision is in keeping with the recommendation made by the President in his message to Congress on the subject of trusts and monopolies."

See also S. Rep. No. 698, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 17-18 (1914).

<sup>6</sup> In California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508 (1972), this Court held that harassing and sham state-court proceedings of a repetitive nature could be part of an anticompetitive scheme or conspiracy. In Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366 (1973), one of the allegations was that the federal-court defendant had instituted and supported state-court litigation for anticompetitive purposes in violation of the antitrust laws. The District Court had enjoined the defendant from "[i]nstituting, supporting or engaging in litigation, directly or indirectly, against cities and towns, and officials thereof, which have voted to establish municipal power systems...." Jurisdictional Statement, in No. O.T. 1972, 71-991, p. A-115. This Court vacated and remanded to the District Court for consideration, in light of the intervening decision of California Motor Transport, of whether the state-court litigation came within the "mere sham" exception announced in Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. 127 (1961). Those cases together may be cited for the proposition that repetitive, sham litigation in state courts may constitute an antitrust violation and that an injunction may lie to enjoin future state-court litigation. However, neither of those cases involved the injunction of a pending state-court proceeding, and thus the bar of § 2283 was not brought into play.

Nothing that we say today cuts back in any way on the holdings of these two cases; what we must here decide is whether such a lawsuit may be enjoined by a federal court after it has been commenced, notwithstanding the bar of the Anti-Injunction Act. While we conclude that it may not, nothing in our opinion today prevents a federal court in the proper exercise of its jurisdiction enjoin from the commencement of additional state-court proceedings if it concludes from the course and outcome of the first one that such proceedings would constitute a violation of the antitrust laws. With respect to this future litigation, the injunction will prevent even the commencement of a second such action, and the principles of federalism do not require the bar of § 2283. This distinction is totally consistent with the realization that the true bona fides of the initial state-court litigation is often not apparent:

"One claim, which a court or agency may think baseless, may go unnoticed; but a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims may emerge which leads the fact finder to conclude that the administrative and judicial processes have been abused." California Motor Transport, supra, at 513.

Any "disadvantage" to which the federal plaintiff is put in the initial proceeding is diminished by his ability to set up the federal antitrust claim as an affirmative defense, reviewable by this Court under 28 U.S.C. § 1257 (3), and his ability to sue for treble damages resulting from the vexatious prosecution of that state-court litigation.

<sup>7</sup> Petitioner has catalogued the following federal statutes, and suggests that each would be so affected:

I HHÁWEJÀ GHEZÍ HÌ LÁI ÆØDÄG Ì FÄEËG JELÁ HÄSEØAËGA ÁFÉCJÁFÉGELÁJÍ Í ÁNÆJESÓYØJÁG ÁFÉCJÁFÉG

[***1021] injunctive statutes are enacted to provide for the suspension of activities antithetical to the federal policies underlying [***22] the injunctive statute or related statutes. If the injunction would issue under the general rules of equity practice - requiring, inter alia, a showing of irreparable injury - but for the bar of § 2283, then clearly § 2283 in some sense may be viewed as frustrating or restricting federal policy since the activity inconsistent with the federal policy may not be enjoined because of § 2283's bar.<sup>8</sup> Thus, [**2891] were we to accede [*638] to respondent's interpretation of the "intended scope" language, an exception to § 2283 would always be found to be

"E.g., 7 U.S.C. § 216 (§ 315 of the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921); 7 U.S.C. § 2050a (Farm Labor Contractor Registration Act); 7 U.S.C. § 2305 \(a\) (§ 6 of the Agricultural Fair Practices Act of 1967); 12 U.S.C. § 1731b \(i\) (§ 513 of the National Housing Act); 12 U.S.C. § 1976 (Bank Holding Company Act); 15 U.S.C. § 78aa (Securities Exchange Act of 1934); 15 U.S.C. § 298 (relating to the false stamping of gold and silver); 15 U.S.C. § 433 (providing for suits by farmers' cooperative associations against discrimination by boards of trade); 15 U.S.C. §§ 1114\(2\), 1116, 1121 (providing for injunctive relief against trademark infringement); 15 U.S.C. § 2073 (Consumer Product Safety Act); 15 U.S.C. § 2102 (Hobby Protection Act); 17 U.S.C. § 112 (providing for injunctions against violation of any right secured by the copyright laws); 26 U.S.C. § 9011 \(b\) (Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act); 29 U.S.C. § 412 (Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act); 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5 (Title VII (Equal Employment Opportunities) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964); 42 U.S.C. §§ 6305, 6395 \(e\) (Energy Policy and Conservation Act); 45 U.S.C. § 547 (Title III of the Rail Passenger Service Act of 1970); 49 U.S.C. §§ 1 \(20\), 322\(b\)\(2\), 916, 1017 \(b\) (Interstate Commerce Act); 49 U.S.C. § 1487 \(a\) (Federal Aviation Act). See also 16 U.S.C. § 1540 \(g\) (Endangered Species Act of 1973); 33 U.S.C. § 1365 (Federal Water Pollution Control Act); 33 U.S.C. § 1415 \(g\) (Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act of 1972); 33 U.S.C. § 1515 (Deepwater Ports Act of 1974); 42 U.S.C. § 300j-8 (Safe Drinking Water Act); 42 U.S.C. § 1857h-2 (Clean Air Act); 42 U.S.C. § 4911 (Noise Control Act of 1972)." Reply Brief for Petitioner 10-11, n. 7.

<sup>8</sup> MR. JUSTICE STEVENS in his dissent, see post, at 649-654, would conclude that since certain types of state-court litigation may violate the antitrust laws, an injunction of such litigation while pending is "expressly authorized" under the provisions of the Anti-Injunction Act. But this conclusion does not at all follow from the premise that judicial decisions have construed the prohibition of the antitrust laws to include sham and frivolous state-court proceedings - a premise with which we do not at all disagree, see n. 6, supra. The conclusion is supportable only as a matter of policy preference, and not of statutory construction. Under MR. JUSTICE STEVENS' view, all a federal court need do is find a violation of the federal statute, then by the very force of that finding "express authorization" for the statute would be presumed. But this approach flies in the face of our past decisions. For example, in Mitchum v. Foster, 407 U.S. 225, 227 \(1972\), the petitioner had alleged that the state courts "were depriving him of rights protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments." Under MR. JUSTICE STEVENS' syllogistic formulation, since the state-court action is a violation of § 1983, the express authorization would be readily found on the face of the statute. However, the Court in Mitchum found no such ipso facto shortcut to the explicit prohibition of § 2283, but resorted to careful analysis of the legislative history in order to find evidence of congressional authorization. In short, MR. JUSTICE STEVENS' approach, which removes the bar of § 2283 from all federal injunctive statutes, is totally inconsistent with this Court's longstanding recognition that "[l]egislative policy is here expressed in a clear-cut prohibition qualified only by specifically defined exceptions." Clothing Workers v. Richman Bros. Co., 348 U.S. 511, 516 \(1955\).

In reaching this conclusion, MR. JUSTICE STEVENS argues that the Anti-Injunction Act should be "considered wholly inapplicable to later enacted federal statutes that are enforceable exclusively in federal litigation." Post, at 659. But this view is inconsistent with the approach adopted by the Court in Clothing Workers, supra. In that case, an employer had sought an injunction against a union in state court. This Court found that the action before the state court was "outside state authority," 348 U.S., at 514, and that jurisdiction was vested solely in the National Labor Relations Board. But the Court found that the exclusive federal jurisdiction was not sufficient to render § 2283 inapplicable. See also Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Locomotive Engineers, 398 U.S. 281 \(1970\).

We think MR. JUSTICE STEVENS' view tends to confuse the jurisdiction granted to federal courts by § 16 of the Clayton Act with the separate question of whether a court having such jurisdiction has also been "expressly authorize[d]" to enjoin state-court proceedings. Post, at 650-654. But the question of whether an injunction against state-court proceedings has been "expressly authorized" under § 2283 never arises unless the federal court asked to issue the injunction has subject-matter jurisdiction of the case in which the injunction is sought. Here the District Court is entirely free to proceed with the litigation on the merits of respondents' antitrust claim against petitioner, and to grant damages and such other relief as may be appropriate if it determines the issues in favor of respondents. All that we conclude is that it may not include as a part of that relief an injunction against an already pending state-court proceeding.

"necessary" to give the injunctive Act its full intended scope, and § 2283 would place no additional limitation on the right [\*639] to enjoin state proceedings. The Anti-Injunction Act, a fixture in federal law since 1793, would then be a virtual [\*\*\*1022] dead letter whenever the plaintiff seeks an injunction under a federal injunctive statute. Whether or not the state proceeding could be enjoined would rest solely upon the traditional principles of equity and comity. However, as we emphasized in Mitchum, 407 U.S., at 243, the prohibitions of § 2283 exist separate and apart from these traditional [\*\*\*\*23] principles, and we cannot read the "intended scope" language as rendering this specific and longstanding statutory provision inoperative simply because important federal policies are fostered by the statute under which the injunction is sought. Congress itself has found that these policies, in the ordinary case, must give way to the policies underlying § 2283. Given the clear prohibition of § 2283, the courts will not sit to balance and weigh the importance of various federal policies in seeking to determine which are sufficiently important to override historical concepts of federalism underlying § 2283; by the statutory scheme it has enacted, Congress has clearly reserved this judgment unto itself.<sup>9</sup> [\*\*\*\*24] [\*640] [\*\*2892] Our conclusion that the "importance," or the potential restriction in scope, of the federal injunction statute does not control for § 2283 purposes is consistent with the analysis of those very few statutes which we have in the past held to be exceptions to the Anti-Injunction Act. See Mitchum, supra, at 234-235, and nn. 12-16. The original version of the Anti-Injunction Act itself was amended in 1874 to allow federal courts to enjoin state-court proceedings which interfere with the administration of a federal bankruptcy proceeding. Rev. Stat. § 720. The Interpleader Act of 1926, 28 U.S.C. § 2361, the Frazier-Lemke Act, 11 U.S.C. § 203 (1940 ed.), and the Federal Habeas Corpus Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2251, while not directly referring to § 2283, have nonetheless explicitly authorized injunctive relief against state-court proceedings. The Act of [\*\*\*1023] 1851 limiting liability of shipowners, 46 U.S.C. § 185, provided that, after deposit of certain funds in the court by the shipowner, "all claims and proceedings against the owner with respect [\*\*\*\*25] to the matter in question shall cease." The statutory procedures for removal of a case from state court to federal court provide that the removal acts as a stay of the state-court proceedings. 28 U.S.C. § 1446\(e\).

By limiting the statutory exceptions of § 2283 and its predecessors to these few instances, we have clearly recognized that the Act countenancing the federal injunction must necessarily [\*641] interact with, or focus upon, a state judicial proceeding.<sup>10</sup> Section 16 of the Clayton Act, which does not by its very essence contemplate or envision any necessary interaction with state judicial proceedings, is clearly not such an Act.

IV

---

<sup>9</sup> Much of MR. JUSTICE STEVENS' dissenting opinion is an able brief for the conceded importance of the Sherman and Clayton Acts. But however persuasive it might be in inducing Congress to lift the bar of § 2283 with respect to injunctions issued under § 16, we do not believe it is persuasive in determining whether, under the present state of the law, Congress has in fact "expressly authorized" the injunction issued by the District Court here. For example, MR. JUSTICE STEVENS laments that state-court proceedings may now become the vehicles by which an antitrust violator may put one independent businessman after another out of business. See post, at 652-654, 657. Federal courts are able to enjoin future repetitive litigation, see discussion of California Motor Transport and Otter Tail Power, supra, n. 6. But even if one were to agree with this broad speculation, the solution is simple and straightforward. If Congress determines that the use of state-court proceedings to foster anticompetitive schemes is of sufficient gravity, it may simply conclude that the need for greater antitrust enforcement outweighs the need to prevent friction in our federal system and amend § 16 to expressly authorize an injunction of state-court proceedings.

No desire for more vigorous antitrust enforcement should cause us to lose sight of our role as judges in interpreting the explicit command of a congressional statute; for notwithstanding the rhetoric of the dissenting opinion, the conclusion that § 16 is an "expressly authorized" exception to § 2283 is no more than an ipse dixit. The "explicit wording of § 2283," Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., supra, at 297, is lost on the dissent; the dissent's approach is the clearest form of judicial improvisation which the Court counseled against in Clothing Workers v. Richman Bros. Co., supra, at 514.

<sup>10</sup> A possible exception is Porter v. Dicken, 328 U.S. 252 \(1946\), regarding § 205(a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942. This Act, enacted in response to wartime exigencies, expired in 1947.

I HHÁWEJÀ Għażiex I FLA'I AWEJX QI I FEL-QA' JGLÄ HASED OQAL FEEJ KU F-EGħaliex Għażiex iż-żgħix

LEDHN[1B] [1B] Although the Court of Appeals did [****26] not reach the issue, the District Court found that, in addition to being "expressly authorized," the injunction was "necessary in aid of its jurisdiction," a separate exception to § 2283. The rationale of the District Court was as follows: S

"The Court also holds that § 2283 authorizes an injunction here because further collection efforts would eliminate two plaintiffs, Stoner Investments and Lektro-Vend Corp., as parties under the case or controversy provisions of Article III since they would necessarily be controlled by Vendo. Vendo's offer to place the Stoner Investment and Lektro-Vend stock under control of the Court does not meet this problem because as a matter of substance Vendo would control both plaintiff and defendant, requiring dismissal under Article III. Thus the injunction is also necessary to protect the jurisdiction of the Court." 403 F.Supp., at 536-537.I

[**2893] In Toucey v. New York Life Ins. Co., 314 U.S., at 134-135, we acknowledged the existence of a historical exception to the Anti-Injunction Act in cases where the federal court has obtained jurisdiction over the res, prior to the state-court action. Although the "necessary [****27] in aid of" exception to § 2283 may be fairly read as incorporating this historical n rem exception, see C. Wright, Federal Courts § 47, p. 204 (3d ed. 1976), the federal and state actions here are simply in personam. [*642] The traditional notion is that in personam actions in federal and state court may proceed concurrently, without interference from either court, and there is no evidence that the exception to § 2283 was intended to alter this balance. We have never viewed parallel in personam actions as interfering with the jurisdiction of either court; as we stated in Kline v. Burke Construction Co., 260 U.S. 226 (1922): S

"[A]nction brought to enforce [a personal liability] does not tend to impair or defeat the jurisdiction of the court in which a [***1024] prior action for the same cause is pending. Each court is free to proceed in its own way and in its own time, without reference to the proceedings in the other court. Whenever a judgment is rendered in one of the courts and pleaded in the other, the effect of that judgment is to be determined by the application of the principles of res adjudicata...." Id. at 230 (emphasis added). [****28] I

No case of this Court has ever held that an injunction to "preserve" a case or controversy fits within the "necessary in aid of its jurisdiction" exception; neither have the parties directed us to any other federal-court decisions so holding.

The District Court's legal conclusion is not only unsupported by precedent, but the factual premises upon which it rests are not persuasive. First, even if the two corporate plaintiffs would cease to litigate the case after execution of the state-court judgment, there is no indication that Harry Stoner himself would lose his standing to vindicate his rights, or that the case could not go forward. Nor does it appear that the two corporate plaintiffs would necessarily be removed from the lawsuit. As far as the record indicates, there are currently minority shareholders in those corporations whose ownership interests would not be affected by petitioner's acquisition of majority stock control of the corporations. Under the applicable rules for shareholder derivative actions, [*643] see Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 23.1, the shareholders could presumably pursue the corporate rights of action, which would inure to their benefit, even if the corporations [****29] themselves chose not to do so. Finally, petitioner offered to enter a consent decree which assuredly would eliminate any possibility of petitioner's acquiring control of the corporations. See App. 209-210, 258. The injunction in this case was therefore, even under the District Courts' legal theory, not necessary in aid of that court's jurisdiction.

Our conclusion that neither of the bases relied upon by the District Court constitutes an exception to § 2283 is more than consistent with the recognition that any doubt must be resolved against the finding of an exception to § 2283, Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 398 U.S., at 297; a holding that there is an exception present in this case would demonstrably involve "judicial improvisation." Clothing Workers, 348 U.S., at 514.

Reversed and remanded.

Concur by: BLACKMUN

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE joins, concurring in the result.

LEdHN[1C][↑] [1C] Although I agree that the decision of the Court of Appeals should be reversed, I do so for reasons that differ significantly from those expressed by the plurality. According [****30] to the plurality's analysis, § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26, is not an expressly authorized exception to the Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2283, because it is not "an 'Act of Congress... [which] could be given its intended scope only by the stay of a state-court proceeding,' [Mitchum v. Foster, 407 U.S. 225, 238 (1972)]." Ante, at 632. I do not agree that this is [***1025] invariably [**2894] the case; since I am of the opinion, however, that the state-court proceeding in this case should not have been enjoined by the federal court, I concur in the result.

LEdHN[2A][↑] [2A] In my opinion, application of the Mitchum test for deciding whether a statute is an "expressly authorized" exception to the Anti-Injunction Act shows that § 16 is such an exception [*644] under narrowly limited circumstances. Nevertheless, consistently with the decision in California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508 (1972), * I would hold that no injunction may issue against currently pending state-court proceedings [****31] unless those proceedings are themselves part of a "pattern of baseless, repetitive claims" that are being used as an anticompetitive device, all the traditional prerequisites for equitable relief are satisfied, and the only way to give the antitrust laws their intended scope is by staying the state proceedings. Cf. California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking [*645] Unlimited, 404 U.S., at 513. See also Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 380 (1973).

[****32] In my view, the District Court failed properly to apply the California Motor Transport rule. The court believed that it was enough that Vendo's activities in the single state-court proceeding involved in this case were not genuine attempts to use the state adjudicative process legitimately. In reaching this conclusion, the court looked to Vendo's purpose in conducting the state litigation and to several negative consequences that the litigation had for respondents. The court, however, did not find a "pattern of baseless, repetitive claims," nor could it have done so under the circumstances. Only one state-court proceeding was involved in this case, and it resulted in the considered affirmance by the Illinois Supreme Court of a judgment for more than $7 million. In my opinion, therefore, it cannot be said on this record that Vendo was using the [***1026] state-court proceeding as an

---

* I cannot agree with MR. JUSTICE STEVENS post, at 661-662 that the examples given in the quoted portion of California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, necessarily involve the use of the adjudicatory process in the same way that the state courts were being used in this case. For example, there is no reason to believe that the Court's reference to the use of a patent obtained by fraud to exclude a competitor contemplated only one lawsuit. The case cited in connection with that reference, Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172 (1965), held only that the enforcement of a patent procured by fraud on the Patent Office could state a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, where the monopolistic acts alleged included use of the fraudulent patent through a course of action involving both threats of suit and prosecution of an infringement suit.

MR. JUSTICE STEVENS' quotation from California Motor Transport stops just short of the language that I consider critical to the instant case. The Court's opinion continues:

"Misrepresentations, condoned in the political arena, are not immunized when used in the adjudicatory process. Opponents before agencies or courts often think poorly of the other's tactics, motions, or defenses and may readily call them baseless. One claim, which a court or agency may think baseless, may go unnoticed; but a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims may emerge which leads the fact finder to conclude that the administrative and judicial processes have been abused. That may be a difficult line to discern and draw." 404 U.S., at 513.

Since I believe that federal courts should be hesitant indeed to enjoin ongoing state-court proceedings, I am of the opinion that a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims or some equivalent showing of grave abuse of the state courts must exist before an injunction would be proper. No such finding was made by the District Court in this case.

anticompetitive device in and of itself. Thus, I believe that § 16 itself did not authorize the injunction below, and on this ground I would reverse.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, MR. JUSTICE WHITE, and MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL join, dissenting.

Quite [***33] properly, the plurality does not question the merits of the preliminary injunction entered by the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois staying proceedings in the Illinois [**2895] courts. It was predicated on appropriate findings of fact,<sup>1</sup> it was entered by a District Judge whose [*646] understanding of the federal antitrust laws was unique,<sup>2</sup> and its entry was affirmed unanimously by the Court of Appeals.

[***34] Judge McLaren found substantial evidence that petitioner intended to monopolize the relevant market; that one of the overt acts performed in furtherance thereof was the use of litigation as a method of harassing and eliminating competition; that two of the corporate plaintiffs in the case, respondents here, would be eliminated by collection of the Illinois judgment; and that the state litigation had already severely hampered, and collection of the judgment would prevent, the marketing of a promising, newly developed machine which would compete with petitioner's products. 403 F.Supp. 527, 534-535, 538 (1975).<sup>3</sup> The Court of Appeals implicitly endorsed these findings when it noted that "[h]ere Vendo seeks to thwart a federal antitrust suit by the enforcement of state court judgments which are alleged to be the very object of antitrust violations." 545 F.2d 1050, 1057 \(CA7 1976\).

[***35] The question which is therefore presented is whether the [*647] anti-injunction statute<sup>4</sup> deprives the federal courts of power to stay state-court [***1027] litigation which is being prosecuted in direct violation of the Sherman Act. I cannot believe that any of the members of Congress who unanimously enacted that basic charter of economic freedom<sup>5</sup> in 1890 would have answered that question the way the plurality does today.

---

<sup>1</sup> Specific findings of likelihood of ultimate success on the merits, likelihood of irreparable harm, a balance of the equities in favor of respondent-movants, and of protection of the public interest by issuance of the injunction are recited and substantiated in the District Court opinion. 403 F.Supp. 527, 532-538 (1975). The Court of Appeals affirmed, specifically rejecting petitioner's attack on the finding of a likelihood of ultimate success on the merits. 545 F.2d 1050, 1058-1059 \(CA7 1976\).

<sup>2</sup> The late Richard W. McLaren served as Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice from 1969 until his appointment to the bench in 1972. In private practice he had acted as Chairman of the Antitrust Section of the American Bar Association.

<sup>3</sup> It is well settled, and the District Court so held, that when the precise conduct proscribed by the antitrust laws is sought to be furthered by litigation, the antitrust laws forbid a court from giving judgment if to do so "would be to make the courts a party to the carrying out of one of the very restraints forbidden by the Sherman Act." Kelly v. Kosuga, 358 U.S. 516, 520. See 403 F.Supp., at 535, citing Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons, 212 U.S. 227, 261. See Response of Carolina v. Leasco Response, Inc., 498 F.2d 314, 317-320 (CA5 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1050; Milsen Co. v. Southland Corp., 454 F.2d 363 (CA7 1971); Helfenbein v. International Industries, Inc., 438 F.2d 1068, 1071 (CA8 1971); Farbenfabriken Bayer, A.G. v. Sterling Drug, Inc., 307 F.2d 207 (CA3 1962); Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 276 F.2d 766 (CA6 1960); United States v. Bayer Co., 135 F.Supp. 65 (SDNY 1955).

<sup>4</sup> "A court of the United States may not grant an injunction to stay proceedings in a State court except as expressly authorized by Act of Congress, or where necessary in aid of its jurisdiction, or to protect or effectuate its judgments." 28 U.S.C. § 2283.

<sup>5</sup> "The Sherman Act was designed to be a comprehensive charter of economic liberty aimed at preserving free and unfettered competition as the rule of trade." Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 4.

I HHÁEJÀA GHEĀ I Í LÁI ÁUÉOÄG I FÄÄG JÍ LÁ HÄSEÖÄG ÅEEJÄÄFÄÄG LÄFJÍ Í ÁNÈJESÓYÖÄG ÄÄHÍ

[****36] |

【**2896】 The plurality relies on the present form of a provision of the Judiciary Act of 1793.<sup>6</sup> In the ensuing century, there were changes in our economy which persuaded the Congress that the state courts could not adequately deal with contracts in restraint of trade that affected commerce in more than one 【*648】 jurisdiction.<sup>7</sup>

---

"The purpose of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act is to prevent undue restraints of interstate commerce, to maintain its appropriate freedom in the public interest, to afford protection from the subversive or coercive influences of monopolistic endeavor. As a charter of freedom, the Act has a generality and adaptability comparable to that found to be desirable in constitutional provisions. It does not go into detailed definitions which might either work injury to legitimate enterprise or through particularization defeat its purposes by providing loopholes for escape. The restrictions the Act imposes are not mechanical or artificial. Its general phrases, interpreted to attain its fundamental objects, set up the essential standard of reasonableness. They call for vigilance in the detection and frustration of all efforts unduly to restrain the free course of interstate commerce." Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U.S. 344, 359-360.

<sup>6</sup> Act of Mar. 2, 1793, § 5, 1 Stat. 335: "[N]or shall a writ of injunction be granted to stay proceedings in any court of a state...." For convenience, the plurality has referred to this clause as the "Anti-Injunction Act"; that, however, is not the proper name of the statute.

<sup>7</sup> In his first speech in support of his bill, Senator Sherman stated:

"The power of the State courts has been repeatedly exercised to set aside such combinations as I shall hereafter show, but these courts are limited in their jurisdiction to the State, and, in our complex system of government, are admitted to be unable to deal with the great evil that now threatens us.

"... The purpose of this bill is to enable the courts of the United States to apply the same remedies against combinations which injuriously affect the interests of the United States that have been applied in the several States to protect local interests.

.....

"... The committee therefore deemed it proper by express legislation to confer on the circuit courts of the United States original jurisdiction of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity arising under this section, with authority to issue all remedial process or writs proper and necessary to enforce its provisions...." 21 Cong. Rec. 2456 (1890). Later the same day he said: [Congress] may 'regulate commerce;' can it not protect commerce, nullify contracts that restrain commerce, turn it from its natural courses, increase the price of articles, and therefore diminish the amount of commerce?

.....

"[The power of the 'combinations'] for mischief will be greatly crippled by this bill. Their present plan of organization was adopted only to evade the jurisdiction of State courts.

.....

"Suppose one of these combinations should unite all, or nearly all, the domestic producers of an article of prime necessity with a view to prevent competition and to keep the price up to the foreign cost and duty added, would not this be in restraint of trade and commerce and affect injuriously the operation of our revenue laws? Can Congress prescribe no remedy except to repeal its taxes? Surely it may authorize the executive authorities to appeal to the courts of the United States for such a remedy, as courts habitually apply in the States for the forfeiture of charters thus abused and the punishment of officers who practice such wrongs to the public. It may also give to our citizens the right to sue for such damages as they have suffered." Id., at 2462. Senator Sherman, 3 days later, discussing the rise of the "combinations" during the preceding 20 years, stated:

"... The State courts have attempted to wrestle with this difficulty. I produced decisions of the supreme courts of several of the States.

"Take the State of New York, where the sugar trust was composed of seventeen corporations. What remedy had the people of New York in the suit that they had against that combination? None whatever, except as against one corporation out of the seventeen. No proceeding could be instituted in the State of New York by which all those corporations could be brought in one suit under the common jurisdiction of the United States. No remedy could be extended by the courts, although they were eager and earnest in search of a remedy.

.....

I HHÁEÜÀ ÇHÄÉ I Ì LÁI ÆÜÖÄG I FÄÄG JÌ LÁ HÄSEÖA ÄÄG ÅEEU ÄÄFÄG LÄJÍI ÁNÆÜESÓY ÖÄG ÄÄHÄ

The Sherman Act was enacted virtually unanimously in 1890 to protect the national [***1028] economy from the pernicious effects of regulation by private cartel and to vest the federal [*649] courts with jurisdiction adequate to "exert such remedies [**2897] as would fully accomplish the purposes intended."<sup>8</sup>

[****37] Between 1890 and 1914, although private litigants could [*650] recover treble damages, only the United States could invoke the jurisdiction of the federal courts to prevent and restrain violations of the Sherman Act.<sup>9</sup> When Congress authorized the federal courts to grant injunctive relief in private antitrust litigation, it conferred the same broad powers that the courts possess in cases brought by the Government.<sup>10</sup> Section [*651] [***1029] 16 of the Clayton Act expressly authorizes injunctions against "a violation of the antitrust laws."<sup>11</sup>

---

"... When a man is injured by an unlawful combination why should he not have the power to sue in the courts of the United States? It would not answer to send him to a State court. It would not answer at all to send him to a court of limited jurisdiction. Then, besides, it is a court of the United States that alone has jurisdiction over all parts of the United States. The United States can send its writs into every part of a State and make parties in different States submit to its process. The States can not do that." Id., at 2568-2569.

Similarly, in the House debate Congressman Culberson, floor sponsor of the bill, had this to say during his introductory remarks:

"If Congress will legislate within its sphere and to the limit to which it may go, and if the legislatures of the several States will do their duty and supplement that legislation, the trusts and combinations which are devouring the substance of the people of the country may be effectually suppressed. The States are powerless unless Congress will take charge of the trade between the States and make unlawful traffic that operates in restraint of trade and which promotes and encourages monopoly." Id., at 4091.

See Letwin, Congress and the Sherman Antitrust Law: 1887-1890, 23 U. Chi. L. Rev. 221 (1956).

<sup>8</sup> "... [F]ounded upon broad conceptions of public policy, the prohibitions of the statute were enacted to prevent not the mere injury to an individual which would arise from the doing of the prohibited acts, but the harm to the general public which would be occasioned by the evils which it was contemplated would be prevented, and hence not only the prohibitions of the statute but the remedies which it provided were coextensive with such conceptions.... [T]he statute in express terms vested the Circuit Court[s] of the United States with 'jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act,' and besides expressly conferred the amplest discretion in such courts to join such parties as might be deemed necessary and to exert such remedies as would fully accomplish the purposes intended." Wilder Mfg. Co. v. Corn Products Co., 236 U.S. 165, 174. See Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 343-347, 349-350. (opinion of Harlan, J.).

<sup>9</sup> Section 4 of the Sherman Act authorized equitable relief in actions brought by United States Attorneys; § 7 authorized any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of the antitrust laws to recover treble damages. 26 Stat. 209-210. In both sections, as is true of § 16 of the Clayton Act, the scope of the court's jurisdiction is limited only by the need to establish a violation of the Act.

<sup>10</sup> Although the kind of relief which is appropriate in private litigation may sometimes be different from that which the Government may obtain, cf. United States v. Borden Co., 347 U.S. 514, 518-520, there is no difference in the scope of the jurisdictional grant to the federal court in the two kinds of cases:

"[T]he purpose of giving private parties treble-damage and injunctive remedies was not merely to provide private relief, but was to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws. E.g., United States v. Borden Co., 347 U.S. 514, 518 (1954). Section 16 should be construed and applied with this purpose in mind.... Its availability should be 'conditioned by the necessities of the public interest which Congress has sought to protect.' [Hecht Co. v. Bowles, 321 U.S. 321, 330]. Zenith Corp. v. Hazeltine, 395 U.S. 100, 130-131.

<sup>11</sup> Section 16 provides:

"[A]ny person... shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws... when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings..." 38 Stat. 737, 15 U.S.C. § 26. The legislative history of § 16 is thin. In addition to the nearly identical House and Senate Reports, ante, at 634 n. 5, the following comments from the House debate provide some idea of the congressional intent. Congressman McGillicuddy, a member of the Commerce Committee, described the perceived need:

I HHÁEJÀ GHEĀ Í FLÁI ÆJEDĀG Í FÆG JÍ LÁ HASEOÀGA ÁFÉCJÁFÉGJÁFJÍ Í ÁNÆSÓYÓGÁG ÆKTHÍ

[****38] [**2898] The scope of the jurisdictional grant is just as broad as the definition of a violation of the antitrust laws. That definition was deliberately phrased in general language to be sure that "every conceivable act which could possibly come within [*652] the spirit or purpose of the prohibition" would be covered by the statute, regardless of whether or not the particular form of restraint was actually foreseen by Congress.<sup>12</sup> In the decades following the formulation of the Rule of Reason in 1911, this Court has made it perfectly clear that the prosecution of litigation in a state court may itself constitute a form of violation of the federal statute.

[****39] Thus, the attempt to enforce a [***1030] patent obtained by fraud,<sup>13</sup> or a patent known to be invalid for other reasons,<sup>14</sup> may constitute an independent violation of the Sherman Act; and such litigation may be brought in a state court.<sup>15</sup> The prosecution of frivolous claims and objections before regulatory bodies, including state agencies, may violate the antitrust laws.<sup>16</sup> The enforcement of restrictive provisions in a license to use a patent or a trademark<sup>17</sup> may violate the Sherman Act; such enforcement may, of course, be sought in the state courts. Similarly, the provisions of a lease,<sup>18</sup> or a fair trade [*653] agreement,<sup>19</sup> may become the focus of enforcement litigation which has a purpose or effect of frustrating rights guaranteed by the antitrust laws, either in a state or

"Under the present law any person injured in his business or property by acts in violation of the Sherman antitrust law may recover his damage.... There is no provision under the present law, however, to prevent threatened loss or damage even though it be irreparable. The practical effect of this is that a man would have to sit by and see his business ruined before he could take advantage of his remedy. In what condition is such a man to take up a long and costly lawsuit to defend his rights?

"The proposed bill solves this problem for the person, firm, or corporation threatened with loss or damage to property by providing injunctive relief against the threatened act that will cause such loss or damage. Under this most excellent provision a man does not have to wait until he is ruined in his business before he has his remedy." 51 Cong. Rec. 9261 (1914).

During consideration of the Conference Report Congressman Floyd described the scope of the § 16 remedy:

"[S]o that if a man is injured by a discriminatory contract, by a tying contract, by the unlawful acquisition of stock of competing corporations, or by reason of someone acting unlawfully as a director in two banks or other corporations, he can go into any court and enjoin or restrain the party from committing such unlawful acts." Id., at 16319.

<sup>12</sup> "[The] generic designation of the first and second sections of the [Sherman Act], when taken together, embraced every conceivable act which could possibly come within the spirit or purpose of the prohibitions of the law, without regard to the garb in which such acts were clothed. That is to say, it was held [in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1] that in view of the general language of the statute and the public policy which it manifested, there was no possibility of frustrating that policy by resorting to any disguise or subterfuge of form, since resort to reason rendered it impossible to escape by any indirection the prohibitions of the statute." United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 81.

<sup>13</sup> Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172.

<sup>14</sup> MacGregor v. Westinghouse Co., 329 U.S. 402.

<sup>15</sup> Pratt v. Paris Gas Light & Coke Co., 168 U.S. 255, 260.

<sup>16</sup> Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366; 417 U.S. 901 (summary affirmance after remand); California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508.

<sup>17</sup> Timken Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593; Farbenfabriken Bayer, A.G. v. Sterling Drug, Inc., 307 F.2d 207 (CA3 1962); Gray Line, Inc. v. Gray Line Sightseeing Cos., 246 F.Supp. 495 (ND Cal. 1965).

<sup>18</sup> International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392; United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States, 258 U.S. 451; Phillips v. Crown Central Petroleum Corp., 376 F.Supp. 1250 (Md. 1973).

<sup>19</sup> Janel Sales Corp. v. Lanvin Parfums, Inc., 396 F.2d 398 (CA2 1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 938; Katz Drug Co. v. W. A. Sheaffer Pen Co., 6 F.Supp. 212 (WD Mo. 1933).

I HHÁEÀÀ GHÉÀ Í HÁIÌ ÁUÈOÀG Ì FÄEÙ JÌ LÀ HÄEÀÀ ÆAÀFÉEÀÀ HÀLÁJÌ Í ÁNÈEÀSÓY QÀG ÈEEH federal court.<sup>20</sup> Indeed, the enforcement of a covenant not to compete - the classic example of a contract in restraint of trade - typically takes place in a state court.<sup>21</sup>

[****40] [**2899] These examples are sufficient to demonstrate that "litigation in state courts may constitute an antitrust violation...." ante, at 635 n. 6. Since the judicial construction of a statute is as much a part of the law as the words written by the legislature, the illegal use of state-court litigation as a method of monopolizing or restraining trade is as plainly a violation of the antitrust laws as if Congress had specifically described each of the foregoing cases as an independent [*654] violation. The [***1031] language in § 16 of the Clayton Act which expressly authorizes injunctions against violations of the antitrust laws is therefore applicable to this species of violation as well as to other kinds of violations.

Since § 16 of the Clayton Act is an Act of Congress which expressly authorizes an injunction against a state-court proceeding which violates the antitrust laws, the plain language of the anti-injunction statute excepts this kind of injunction from its coverage.<sup>22</sup>

[***41] II

There is nothing in this Court's precedents which is even arguably inconsistent with this rather obvious reading of the statutory language.<sup>23</sup> On at least three occasions the Court [*655] has held that general grants of federal <sup>20</sup> In litigation between a franchisee and franchisor the former may challenge the validity of various contract provisions under federal law, while the latter may rely heavily on state contract law as a basis for controlling the franchisee's conduct. State proceedings to obtain possession of disputed premises or equipment are powerful weapons in such litigation, even when the federal court has the power to maintain the status quo. See Chmielecki v. City Products Corp., 71 F.R.D. 118, 141-142, 158 (WD Mo. 1976).

<sup>21</sup> The potential consequences of the plurality's view may perhaps best be illustrated by reference to a common-law decision that could not possibly survive scrutiny under the Sherman Act. In Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns & Ammunition Co., [1894] A.C. 535, the House of Lords held that a 25-year, worldwide covenant not to compete in the arms business was an enforceable bargain. One of the parties to such a contract was therefore entitled to enjoin a breach of the agreement by another party. If such common-law relief should be granted by a state court in a comparable situation, and if the plurality's interpretation of the statute were accepted, a federal court would be powerless to interfere with state proceedings to enforce such a judgment.

<sup>22</sup> The text of the statute is quoted in n. 4, supra.

<sup>23</sup> Rather surprisingly the plurality seems to regard Clothing Workers v. Richman Bros. Co., 348 U.S. 511, as supporting its position. That case involved a construction of the portion of the Taft-Hartley Act that conferred jurisdiction on the National Labor Relations Board to obtain injunctive relief in certain situations. The Court rejected the argument that the statute implicitly authorized similar relief for private parties:

"Congress explicitly gave such jurisdiction to the district courts only on behalf of the Board on a petition by it or 'the officer or regional attorney to whom the matter may be referred.' § 10 (j), (1), 61 Stat. 149, 29 U.S.C. § 160 (j), (1). To hold that the Taft-Hartley Act also authorizes a private litigant to secure interim relief would be to ignore the closely circumscribed jurisdiction given to the District Court and to generalize where Congress has chosen to specify. To find exclusive authority for relief vested in the Board and not in private parties accords with other aspects of the Act." Id. at 517.

Since the statute did not expressly authorize the requested relief, it was obviously not within the "expressly authorized" exception to § 2283. The fact that the Court simply read the relevant statutes literally in that case supports my view that we should use the same approach here.

In Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Locomotive Engineers, 398 U.S. 281, on which the plurality also relies, the union did not even argue that injunctive relief was expressly authorized by federal statute. It unsuccessfully contended "that the federal injunction was proper either 'to protect or effectuate' the District Court's denial of an injunction in 1967, or as 'necessary in aid of' the District Court's jurisdiction." Id. at 284. That case is wholly inapposite to the issue presented today.

I HHÁEJÀ GHEÉ I I LÁI ÁUÉOÄG I FÄÄG JJLÁ HÄSEÖAÄG ÄEEUÄÄFCHLÄJÍ I ÁNÆJESÓYQÄG ÄÄÄÄ F jurisdiction which make no mention of either state-court proceedings, or of the anti-injunction statute, are within the "expressly authorized" exception. Providence & N.Y.S.S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co., 109 U.S. 578, 599-601;<sup>24</sup> Porter v. Dicken, [**2900] 328 U.S. 252; [***1032]<sup>25</sup> Mitchum v. Foster, 407 U.S. 225.

[****42] [*656] In Mitchum the Court made it clear that a statute may come within the "expressly authorized" exception to § 2283 even though it does not mention the anti-injunction statute or contain any reference to state-court proceedings, provided that it creates a uniquely federal right or remedy that could be frustrated if the federal court were not empowered to enjoin the state proceeding.<sup>26</sup> The Court then formulated and applied this test: "The test... is whether an Act of Congress, clearly creating a federal right or remedy enforceable in a federal court of equity, could be given its intended scope only by the stay of a state court proceeding." 407 U.S., at 238.

[****43] Section 16 of the Clayton Act created a federal remedy which can only be given its intended scope if it includes the power to stay state-court proceedings in appropriate [*657] cases. As one of the sponsors of the statute explained, under "this most excellent provision a man does not have to wait until he is ruined in his business before he has his remedy."<sup>27</sup> But if the plurality's interpretation of the legislation were correct, a private litigant might indeed be "ruined in his business before he has his remedy" against state-court litigation seeking

The fact that these two cases provide the plurality with its strongest support emphasizes the dramatic character of its refusal to accept the plain meaning of the words Congress has written.

<sup>24</sup> "But the power of the District Courts to issue an injunction to stay proceedings in a State court is questioned, since, by the Judiciary Act of 1973, 1 Stat. 335, it was declared that no writ of injunction shall be granted [by the United States courts] 'to stay proceedings in any court of a State.' But the act of 1851 was a subsequent statute, and by the 4th section of this act - after providing for proceedings to be had under it for the benefit of ship owners, and after declaring that it shall be deemed a sufficient compliance with its requirements on their part if they shall transfer their interest in ship and freight for the benefit of the claimants to a trustee to be appointed by the court - it is expressly declared, that 'from and after [such] transfer all claims and proceedings against the owners shall cease.' Surely this injunction applies as well to 'claims and proceedings' in State courts as to those in the federal courts...." 109 U.S., at 599-600.

<sup>25</sup> The relevant portions of §§ 205(a) and (c) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, 56 Stat. 33, simply provided:

"SEC. 205. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 4 of this Act, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the Administrator that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

. . .

"(c) The district courts shall have jurisdiction of criminal proceedings for violations of section 4 of this Act, and, concurrently with State and Territorial courts, of all other proceedings under section 205 of this Act."

<sup>26</sup> "In the first place, it is evident that, in order to qualify under the 'expressly authorized' exception of the anti-injunction statute, a federal law need not contain an express reference to that statute. As the Court has said, 'no prescribed formula is required; an authorization need not expressly refer to § 2283.' Amalgamated Clothing Workers v. Richman Bros. Co., 348 U.S. 511, 516. Indeed, none of the previously recognized statutory exceptions contains any such reference. Secondly, a federal law need not expressly authorize an injunction of a state court proceeding in order to qualify as an exception. Three of the six previously recognized statutory exceptions contain no such authorization. Thirdly, it is clear that, in order to qualify as an 'expressly authorized' exception to the anti-injunction statute, an Act of Congress must have created a specific and uniquely federal right or remedy, enforceable in a federal court of equity, that could be frustrated if the federal court were not empowered to enjoin a state court proceeding. This is not to say that in order to come within the exception an Act of Congress must, on its face and in every one of its provisions, be totally incompatible with the prohibition of the anti-injunction statute. The test, rather, is whether an Act of Congress, clearly creating a federal right or remedy enforceable in a federal court of equity, could be given its intended scope only by the stay of a state court proceeding." 407 U.S., at 237-238 (footnotes omitted).

<sup>27</sup> See n. 11, supra.

I HÁWEJÀ GHEÉ I Í LÁÍ ÁUÉOÄG I FÄEG EELÁ HÄSEØAÄG ÁFÉE ÄTTÉGLÁJÍ I ÁNÆJESÓY ØAG ÄTTÉH enforcement of an invalid patent, a covenant not to compete, or an executory merger agreement, to take only a few obvious [***1033] examples of antitrust violations that might be consummated by state-court litigation.

The plurality assumes that Congress intended to distinguish between illegal state proceedings which are already pending and those which have not yet been filed at the time of a federal court's determination that [****44] a violation of the antitrust laws has been consummated; the federal court may enjoin the latter, but is powerless to restrain the former. See ante, at 635-636, n. 6. Nothing in the history of the anti-injunction statute suggests any such logic-chopping distinction.<sup>28</sup> [**2901] Indeed, it is squarely at odds with Senator Sherman's own explanation of the intended scope of the statutory power "to issue all remedial process or writs proper and necessary to enforce its provisions...."<sup>29</sup> It would demean the legislative [*658] process to construe the eloquent rhetoric which accompanied the enactment of the antitrust laws as implicitly denying federal courts the power to restrain illegal state-court litigation simply because it was filed before the federal case was concluded.<sup>30</sup> A faithful application of the rationale of Mitchum v. Foster requires a like result in this case.

[***45] III

The plurality expresses the fear that if the Clayton Act is given its intended scope, the anti-injunction statute "would be completely eviscerated" since there are 26 other federal statutes which may also be within the "expressly authorized" exception. Ante, at 636-637, n. 7. That fear, stated in its strongest terms, is that in the 184 years since the anti-injunction statute was originally enacted, there are 26 occasions on which Congress has qualified its prohibition to some extent. There are at least three reasons why this argument should not cause panic.

First, the early history of the anti-injunction statute indicates that it was primarily intended to prevent the federal courts from exercising a sort of appellate review function in litigation in which the state and federal courts had equal competence. The statute imposed a limitation on [***1034] the general equity powers of the federal courts which existed in 1793, and which have been exercised subsequently in diversity [*659] and other private litigation. But the anti-injunction statute has seldom, if ever, been construed to interfere with a federal court's power to implement federal policy pursuant to [****46] an express statutory grant of federal jurisdiction.<sup>31</sup> Although there is no need to resolve the question in this case, I must confess that I am not now persuaded that the concept of federalism is necessarily inconsistent with the view that the 1793 Act should be considered wholly inapplicable to later enacted federal statutes that are enforceable exclusively in federal litigation.<sup>32</sup> If a fair reading of the jurisdictional grant in

<sup>28</sup> Thus, the 1851 Act to limit the liability of shipowners, 9 Stat. 635, applied equally to "preventing or arresting the prosecution of separate suits," see Providence & N.Y.S.S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co., 109 U.S., 578, 596. The Interpleader Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2361, in terms, applies equally to the "instituting or prosecuting" of other litigation. In terms of the interest in federalism, since the injunction against litigation typically runs against the parties rather than the court, there is little difference between denying a citizen access to the state forum and denying him the right to prosecute an existing case to its conclusion. In either situation, a federal injunction must rest on a determination that an important federal policy outweighs the interest in allowing a state court to resolve a particular controversy. But when the federal policy does justify that conclusion, the timing of the state-court action should rarely be controlling.

<sup>29</sup> See n. 7, supra.

<sup>30</sup> It is true that when the Sherman Act was passed, Congress did not expressly address "the possibility that state-court proceedings would be used to violate the Sherman or Clayton Acts." Ante, at 634. As the statute has been construed, however, it is now well settled that state courts can be used as the very instruments by which litigants, and the public, may be deprived of rights protected by the antitrust laws. When the state courts are so used and the antitrust laws thereby violated, the state litigation is as plainly a matter of federal legislative concern as if it had been expressly identified in the debates preceding the enactment of the 1890 statute.

<sup>31</sup> As already noted, supra, at 654-655, n. 23, there was no such express grant of jurisdiction to private litigants in either Clothing Workers v. Richman Bros. Co., 348 U.S. 511 or Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Locomotive Engineers, 398 U.S. 281.

<sup>32</sup> Indeed, Mr. Justice Black's opinion for the Court in Porter v. Dicken, 328 U.S. 252, seems to proceed on the assumption that the anti-injunction statute is inapplicable when the federal statute may be enforced in either a state or a federal court.

I HHÁEJÀ GHEĀ Í JLÁJÍ ÁUÉOÄG Í FÄEGJÉFLÁ HÄSEÓAÄG ÁFÉCJÉÄFCH LAFJÍ Í ÁNÆSØYØAG ÄHÅG Í any such statute does authorize an injunction against state court litigation frustrating the federal policy, nothing in our prior cases would foreclose the conclusion that it is within the "expressly authorized" exception to § 2283.

[****47] [**2902] Second in any event, the question whether the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, for example, gives the federal court the power to enjoin state litigation has little, if any, relevance to the issues presented by this case. Whatever the answer to that question may be,<sup>33</sup> that 56-year-old statute will not exacerbate federal-state relations and jeopardize the vitality of "our federalism." Indeed, even if all the statutes identified by the plurality are within the "expressly authorized" exception to § 2283, it is extremely doubtful that they would generate as much, or as significant, litigation as either [*660] the Civil Rights Act of 1871 or the antitrust laws.<sup>34</sup> The answer to the important question presented by this case should not depend on speculation about potential consequences for other statutes of relatively less importance to the economy and the Nation.

[****48] Third, concern about the Court's ability either to enlarge or to contain the exceptions to the anti-injunction statute, ante, at 635-639, is disingenuous at best. As originally enacted in 1793, the statute contained no express exception at all. Those few that were recognized in the ensuing century and a half were the product of judicial interpretation of the statute's prohibition in concrete situations. The codification of the Judicial Code in 1948 restated the exceptions in statutory language, but was not intended to modify the Court's power to accommodate the terms of the statute to overriding expressions of national policy embodied in statutes [***1035] like the Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871 or the Sherman Act of 1890.<sup>35</sup>

[****49] IV

Since the votes of THE CHIEF JUSTICE and MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN are decisive, a separate comment on MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN's opinion concurring in the result is required.

LEdHN[2B] [2B] His agreement with the proposition that an injunction properly entered pursuant to § 16 of the Clayton Act is within the "expressly authorized" exception to the anti-injunction statute establishes that proposition as the law for the future. [*661] His view that § 16 did not authorize the preliminary injunction entered by Judge McLaren is dispositive of this litigation but, for reasons which may be briefly summarized, is not a view that finds any support in the law.

Unlike the plurality, which would draw a distinction between ongoing litigation and future litigation, ante, at 635-636, n.6, MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN differentiates between a violation committed by a multiplicity of lawsuits and a violation involving only one lawsuit. The very case on which he relies rejects that distinction. In California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 512-513, the Court stated: S

"Yet unethical conduct [****50] in the setting of the adjudicatory process often results in sanctions. Perjury of witnesses is one example. Use of a patent obtained by fraud to exclude a competitor from the market may involve a violation of the antitrust laws, as we held in Walker Process Equipment v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 175-177. Conspiracy with a licensing authority to eliminate a competitor may also result in an antitrust transgression. Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 707; Harman v. Valley National Bank, 339 F.2d 564 (CA9 1964). Similarly, [**2903] bribery of a public purchasing agent may constitute a

<sup>33</sup> Cases in which § 2283 has been held to bar injunctive relief against state proceedings have seldom involved attempts to enforce federal statutes. Indeed, some courts have held that any federal statute expressly authorizing equitable relief is within the exception from § 2283.

<sup>34</sup> It is worthy of note that only 5 of the cited statutes predate the addition of the words "except as expressly authorized by Act of Congress" to the anti-injunction statute in 1948 (fully 16 were enacted in the last 10 years).

<sup>35</sup> The Reviser's Note to § 2283, which is taken from the House Report, H.R. Rep. No. 308, 80th Cong., 1st Sess., A181-A182 (1947), states that, with the exception of the addition of the words "to protect or effectuate its judgments," which were intended to overrule Toucey v. New York Life Ins. Co., 314 U.S. 118, "the revised section restores the basic law as generally understood and interpreted prior to the Toucey decision."

I HHÁEJÀ GHEI Í FLÁI ÚJEÓDÁG Í FÉREGJ EHЛА HASEOÀCA ÁFÉCJ ÁTTÉCHÍ LAFJÍ Í ÁNÈJESÓYÓG ÁTTÉCHÍ € violation of § 2(c) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. Rangen, Inc. v. Sterling Nelson & Sons, 351 F.2d 851 (CA9 1965).

"There are many other forms of illegal and reprehensible practice which may corrupt the administrative or judicial processes and which may result in antitrust violations."<sup>1</sup>

Each of the examples given in this excerpt from the California Motor Transport opinion involves a single use of the adjudicatory process to violate the antitrust laws. [*662] [****51] Manifestly, when Mr. Justice Douglas wrote for the Court in that case and described "a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims," id., at 513, as an illustration of an antitrust violation, he did not thereby circumscribe the category to that one example. Nothing in his opinion even remotely implies [***1036] that there would be any less reason to enjoin the "[u]e of a patent obtained by fraud to exclude a competitor from the market," id., at 512, for example, than to enjoin the particular violation before the Court in that case.

In this case we are reviewing the affirmance by the Court of Appeals of an order granting a preliminary injunction. Affirmance was required unless the exercise of the District Court's discretion was clearly erroneous. And when both the District Court and the Court of Appeals are in agreement, the scope of review in this Court is even more narrow, Faulkner v. Gibbs, 338 U.S. 267, 268; United States v. Dickinson, 331 U.S. 745, 751; Allen v. Trust Co., 326 U.S. 630, 636. Without the most careful review of the record, and the findings and conclusions of the District Court, it is most inappropriate for this Court to [****52] reverse on the basis of a contrary view of the facts of the particular case.

The mere fact that the Illinois courts concluded that petitioner's state-law claim was meritorious does not disprove the existence of a serious federal antitrust violation. For if it did, invalid patents, price fixing agreements, and other illegal covenants in restraint of trade would be enforceable in state courts no matter how blatant the violation of federal law.

V

Apart from the anti-injunction statute, petitioner has argued that principles of equity, comity, and federalism create a bar to injunctive relief in this case. Brief for Petitioner 36-39. This argument is supported by three facts: The Illinois litigation was pending for a period of nine years; the Illinois Supreme Court concluded tha respondents were guilty of [*663] a breach of fiduciary duty; and respondents withdrew their antitrust defense from the state action.

Unfortunately, in recent years long periods of delay have been a characteristic of litigation in the Illinois courts. That is not a reason for a federal court to show any special deference to state courts; quite the contrary, it merely emphasizes the seriousness [****53] of any decision by a federal court to abstain, on grounds of federalism, from the prompt decision of a federal question.

The Illinois Supreme Court's conclusion that respondents had violated a fiduciary obligation and that petitioner was entitled to a large damages recovery rested on that court's appraisal of the legality of a covenant in restraint of trade.<sup>36</sup> The fact that the covenant not to compete is valid as a matter of state law is irrelevant to the federal antitrust issue. If, for example, instead of a contract totally excluding respondents from the relevant market, the [**2904] parties had agreed on a lesser restraint which merely required respondents to sell at prices fixed by [***1037] petitioner, the Illinois court might also have concluded that respondents were bound by the contract even though the federal courts would have found it plainly violative of the Sherman Act. The Illinois decision on the merits

---

<sup>36</sup> "In some situations there could be, of course, a violation of a covenant not to compete without the breach of a fiduciary duty, as would be the case if Stoner had not been an officer and director of plaintiff. In the present case, however, the acts of defendants in misappropriating the Lektro-Vend [machine] and their use of it to compete against plaintiff are intertwined, the latter being, so to speak, the means by which the former was brought to bear against plaintiff." Vendo Co. v. Stoner, 58 Ill. 2d 289, 306-307, 321 N.E. 2d 1, 11 (1974).

I HHÁEÜÀ ÇHÉÈ Ì HÁIÌ ÁUÆÓÄG Ì FÄEGJ Ë LÁ HÄSEÖÅÄG ÅFÉCJ ÄÄTFCHI LÄJÍ Ì ÁNÆSØYØÄG ÄÄH merely highlights the fact that state and federal courts apply significantly different standards in evaluating contracts in restraint of trade.<sup>37</sup>

[****54] [*664] That fact provides the explanation for respondents' decision to withdraw their federal antitrust defense from the Illinois litigation and to present it to the federal courts. Congress has granted the federal courts exclusive jurisdiction over the prosecution of private antitrust litigation.<sup>38</sup> Since the state courts do not have the power to award complete relief for an antitrust violation, since state judges are unfamiliar with the complexities of this area of the law, and since state procedures are sometimes unsatisfactory for cases of nationwide scope, no adverse inference should be drawn from a state-court defendant's election to reserve his federal antitrust claim for decision by a federal court.

Indeed, since these respondents made that election, and since Congress has withheld jurisdiction of antitrust claims from the state courts, the plurality [****55] properly ignores the argument that principles of federalism require abstention in this case. For a ruling requiring the federal court to abstain from [*665] the decision of an antitrust issue that might have been raised in a state-court proceeding would be tantamount to holding that the federal defense must be asserted in the state action. Such a holding could not be reconciled with the congressional decision to confer exclusive jurisdiction of the private enforcement of the antitrust laws on the federal courts. Quite plainly, therefore, this is not the kind of case in which abstention is even arguably proper.

When principles of federalism are invoked to defend a violation of the Sherman Act, one is inevitably reminded of the fundamental issue [***1038] that was resolved only a few years before the anti-injunction statute was passed. Perhaps more than any other provision in the Constitution, it was the Commerce Clause that transformed the ineffective coalition created by the Articles of Confederation into a great Nation. S

"It was... to secure freedom of trade, to break down the barriers to its free flow, that the Annapolis Convention was called, only to adjourn with [****56] a view to Philadelphia. Thus the generating source of the Constitution lay in the rising volume of restraints upon commerce which the Confederation could not check. These were the proximate cause of our national existence down to today. I S

. . .
" [**2905] So by a stroke as bold as it proved successful, they founded a nation, although they had set out only to find a way to reduce trade restrictions. So also they solved the particular problem causative of their historic action, by introducing the commerce clause in the new structure of power.

<sup>37</sup> Indeed, a state court's conclusion that the breach of a covenant not to compete constitutes the violation of a fiduciary obligation as a matter of state law is not inconsistent with a federal-court determination that the litigation enforcing that covenant was "conducted in bad faith" as that concept is used in cases like Huffman v. Pursue, Ltd., 420 U.S. 592, 611. While the District Court did not specifically address the question involved in Huffman and Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, it had the following to say in addressing the extent of the Sherman Act violation:

"There is persuasive evidence that Vendo's activities in its litigation against the Stoner interests in Illinois state court were not a genuine attempt to use the adjudicative process legitimately. Its theft of trade secret claim was clearly non-meritorious, and litigation of this claim might well be interpreted - considering the record as a whole - as an attempt to further harass the Stoner interests and limit the amount of aid Stoner could lend Lektro-Vend. The attempt to enforce the covenants not to compete... appears to have been to lengthen the period for which the noncompetition covenants would run. The purpose of this portion of the state litigation seems purely anticompetitive." 403 F.Supp., at 534-535.

The Court of Appeals implicitly affirmed, supra, at 646. Thus while every state proceeding which clashes with the antitrust laws would not necessarily be motivated by a desire to harass or be conducted in bad faith, the findings indicate that such was the case here.

<sup>38</sup> See Freeman v. Bee Machine Co., 319 U.S. 448; General Investment Co. v. Lake Shore & Mich. So. R. Co., 260 U.S. 261.

I HHÁEÙÈÀ GHÉÈ Ì I LÁI ÆUÒÄG Ì FÆEGJ Í LÁ HÆSOÀÄG ÁFÉU ÁTTÉCHÌ LÁJÍ Ì ÁNÈESÓY QÁG ÈÅÅÍ Ì

"... On this fact as much as any other we may safely say rests the vast economic development and present industrial power of the nation. Of it may be credited largely the fact we are an independent and democratic country today." W. Rutledge, A Declaration of Legal Faith 25-27 (1947).!

[*666] Only by ignoring this chapter in our history could we invoke principles of federalism to defeat enforcement of the "Magna Carta of free enterprise" <sup>39</sup> enacted pursuant to Congress' plenary power to regulate commerce among the States.

I respectfully dissent.

[****57]

References

---

42 Am Jur 2d, Injunctions 235; 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 369

15 USCS 26; 28 USCS 2283

US L Ed Digest, Courts 697, 700.5; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 68

ALR Digests, Courts 313, 315; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 15

L Ed Index to Annos, Injunction; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Injunctions; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Injunctions; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Applicability of federal antitrust laws as affected by other federal statutes or by Federal Constitution. 45 L Ed 2d 841.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>39</sup> "Antitrust laws in general, and the Sherman Act in particular, are the Magna Carta of free enterprise. They are as important to the preservation of economic freedom and our free-enterprise system as the Bill of Rights is to the protection of our fundamental personal freedoms. And the freedom guaranteed each and every business, no matter how small, is the freedom to compete - to assert with vigor, imagination, devotion, and ingenuity whatever economic muscle it can muster." United States v. Topco Associates, 405 U.S. 596, 610. See also Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 235-236.

Pfizer, Inc. v. Gov't of India

Supreme Court of the United States

November 1, 1977 Argued ; January 11, 1978 As Amended

No. 76-749

Reporter

434 U.S. 308 *; 98 S. Ct. 584 **; 54 L. Ed. 2d 563 ***; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 14 ****; 1978-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P61,812

PFIZER INC. ET AL. v. GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

Core Terms

---

foreign nation, treble damages, anti trust law, treble-damages, foreign sovereign, Sherman Act, consumers, entitled to sue, sovereign, domestic, remedies, courts, legislative history, antitrust violation, Clayton Act, antitrust, practices, purchaser, commerce, Cooper, foreign corporation, anticompetitive, violators, purposes, district court, inclusion, immunity, damages, debates, deprive

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

The Sherman and Clayton Acts each provide that the word person shall be deemed to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, the laws of any of the territories, the laws of any state, or the laws of any foreign country. 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 7 and 12.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

I H ÁMÈÈHÈ ÈÈHÈ LÁÌ ÁUÈOÈHÌ I ÈÈHÈ Ì I LÁ I ÁSEÒAÈGÀÁ I HÈÈHÈ Ì HÀFJÌ I ÁMÈÈSÓYÓQÁI ÈÈHÈ

The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN4** [down] Private Actions, Remedies

In light of the Clayton Act's expansive remedial purpose, the U.S. Supreme Court has not taken a technical or semantic approach in determining who is a "person" entitled to sue for treble damages.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN5** [down] Legislation, Interpretation

The purpose, the subject matter, the context, the legislative history, and the executive interpretation of the statute are aids to construction which may indicate the proper scope of the law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

International Law > ... > Comity Doctrine > Areas of Law > Commercial Transactions

**HN6** [down] Justiciability, Standing

A foreign nation is generally entitled to prosecute any civil claim in the courts of the United States upon the same basis as a domestic corporation or individual might do.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

International Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

**HN7** [down] Private Actions, Standing

A foreign nation otherwise entitled to sue in our courts is entitled to sue for treble damages under the antitrust laws to the same extent as any other plaintiff. Neither the fact that parties are foreign nor the fact that they are sovereign is reason to deny them the remedy of treble damages Congress afforded to "any person" victimized by violations of the antitrust laws.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

Several foreign nations instituted separate antitrust actions against certain pharmaceutical manufacturing companies in different Federal District Courts, alleging damages as the purchasers of antibiotics, and seeking to recover treble damages under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which authorizes "any person" injured by antitrust violations to sue for treble damages in the Federal District Courts. The actions were consolidated for pretrial purposes in the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, which held that the foreign nations were "persons" entitled to sue under the Clayton Act, and which refused to dismiss the actions. On interlocutory appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit affirmed (550 F2d 396).

I H ÁMÈÉHÉ ÉÉHÉ LÁÍ ÁUÉÓDÉÍ I ÉÉHÉ Í I LÁ I ÁSEÓaÉGÁ Á HÉÉHÉ Í HÁJÍ Í ÁMÈÉSÓYÓQÁFÍ ÉÉHÉ

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Stewart, J., joined by Brennan, White, Marshall, and Stevens, JJ., it was held that a foreign nation was a "person" within the meaning of 4, and thus, if otherwise entitled to sue in the courts of the United States, could sue as a purchaser of goods for treble damages to the same extent as any other plaintiff, since (1) even though Congress' foremost concern in passing the antitrust laws was the protection of Americans, nevertheless the treble-damage remedy of 4 was not restricted to consumers in the United States, (2) the word "person" in 4 did not automatically exclude all sovereign governments or governmental bodies from suing for treble damages, and (3) absent clear legislative intent, foreign nations could not be excluded from the protection of the antitrust laws as an exception to the general rule that a foreign nation was entitled to prosecute any civil claim in the courts of the United States upon the same basic as a domestic corporation or individual.

Burger, Ch. J., joined by Powell and Rehnquist, JJ., dissented, expressing the view that (1) the legislative history of the antitrust laws did not indicate that Congress intended to allow foreign nations to sue Americans for treble damages, and (2) since the question whether foreign sovereigns should be allowed to sue involved a sensitive political decision and had not been considered by Congress when the antitrust laws were enacted, the issue should be left to Congress and the Executive.

Powell, J., dissenting, expressed the view that major policy questions, particularly those involving foreign sovereigns as in the case at bar, were beyond the province of the Judicial Branch and were matters for legislative judgment.

Blackmun, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §67 > suit for treble damages -- availability to foreign nation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

A foreign nation is a "person" within the meaning of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which authorizes "any person" injured by antitrust violations to sue for treble damages in the Federal District Courts; thus if otherwise entitled to sue in the courts of the United States, a foreign nation may sue as a purchaser of goods for treble damages under the antitrust laws to the same extent as any other plaintiff. (Burger, Ch. J., and Powell and Rehnquist, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

MONOPOLIES §8 > federal statutes -- definition of "person" -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

Under the provisions of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 7) and the Clayton Act (15 USCS 12) which define the word "person," as used in the Acts, as including corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, any of the territories, any state, or any foreign country, the definition of "person" is inclusive rather than exclusive, and does not by itself imply that a foreign government, any more than a natural person, falls without its bounds.

I H ÁMÈÈHÈ ÈÈHÈ LÁI ÀUÈOÈA I ÈÈHÈ I I LÁ I ÁSEÒAÈGÀÁ I HÈÈHÈ I HÀJÍ I ÁMÈÈSÓYÓÁFÍ ÈÈHÈ

MONOPOLIES §67 > suit for treble damages -- persons entitled to sue -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which authorizes "any person" injured by antitrust violations to sue for treble damages in the Federal District Courts, the phrase "any person" is intended to have its naturally broad and inclusive meaning.

MONOPOLIES §67 > suits for treble damages -- availability to foreign plaintiffs -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Even though Congress' foremost concern in passing the antitrust laws was the protection of Americans, nevertheless the treble-damage remedy of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which authorizes "any person" injured by antitrust violations to sue for treble damages in the Federal District Courts, is available to foreign plaintiffs, and is not restricted to consumers in the United States.

MONOPOLIES §67 > suits for treble damages -- availability to foreign corporations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which authorizes "any person" injured by antitrust violations to sue for treble damages in the Federal District Courts, a foreign corporation is entitled to sue for treble damages, since the definition of "person" contained in the Sherman Act (15 USCS 7) and the Clayton Act (15 USCS 12) explicitly includes corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of any foreign country.

MONOPOLIES §10 > Sherman Act -- conspiracies affecting imports and exports -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

The Sherman Act's reference to commerce with foreign nations (15 USCS 1, 2) does not reach only conspiracies affecting goods imported into the United States; the antitrust laws apply to exports as well.

MONOPOLIES §67 > suit for treble damages -- purposes of statute -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

The purposes of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which authorizes any person injured by antitrust violations to sue for treble damages in the Federal District Courts, are (1) to deter violators and deprive them of the fruits of their illegality, and (2) to compensate victims of antitrust violations for their injuries.

I H ÁMÈJÉH Ë H LÁI ÁMÈDÉ Ì H Ë I I LÁ I ÁMÈOÀÉGÀ Á Ì H ÁMÈ Ì H ÁMÈJÍ Ì ÁMÈJÉSÓYÓJÁI Ë

MONOPOLIES §67 > suits for treble damages -- availability to sovereign governments -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

The word "person" in 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which authorizes any "person" injured by antitrust violations to sue for treble damages in the Federal District Courts, does not automatically exclude all sovereign governments or governmental bodies from suing for treble damages.

STATUTES §178 > interpretation -- meaning of "person" -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

As used in statutes, the word "person" is not a term of art with a fixed meaning wherever it is used.

MONOPOLIES §67 > suits for treble damages -- availability to foreign nations and domestic states -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

Under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which authorizes "any person" injured by antitrust violations to sue for treble damages in the Federal District Courts, a foreign nation, like a domestic state, is entitled to pursue the remedy of treble damages when it has been injured in its business or property by antitrust violations.

LAW §15 > MONOPOLIES §67 > suits for treble damages -- availability to foreign nations -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

A foreign nation is generally entitled to prosecute any civil claim in the courts of the United States upon the same basis as a domestic corporation or individual, and allowing a foreign sovereign to sue under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) for treble damages to the same extent as any other person is a specific application of the general rule; excluding foreign nations from the protection of the antitrust laws cannot be justified as an exception to the general rule in the absence of clear legislative intent.

COURTS §57 > LAW §15 > suits by foreign governments -- power of Executive Branch -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

Only governments recognized by, and at peace with, the United States are entitled to access to the courts of the United States, and it is within the exclusive power of the Executive Branch to determine which nations are entitled to sue, there being a rule of complete judicial deference to the Executive Branch in such area.

Syllabus

I H ÁMÈÙÉHÈ ÉÉHÈ LÁI ÆUÉOÉAÌ I ÉÉHÈ I I LÁ I ÁSÉOÀÉGÀÁ Ì HÀÉHÈ Ì HÀJÍ Ì ÁMÈÙÉSÓYÓQÁI ÉÉHÈ

A foreign nation otherwise entitled to sue in the courts of this country held to be a "person" within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act and thus to be entitled to sue for treble damages under the federal antitrust laws to the same extent as any other plaintiff. Pp. 311-320.

(a) Though no statutory provision or legislative history clearly covers the question whether a foreign nation is a "person" as the word is used in § 4 (which gives "any person" injured by antitrust violations the right to sue in district courts), Congress intended the word to have a broad and inclusive meaning, and in light of the antitrust laws' expansive remedial purpose, the Court has not narrowly construed the term. Pp. 311-313.

(b) Congress did not intend to make the treble-damages remedy available only to consumers in this country as is manifest from the inclusion of foreign corporations within the statutory definition of "person" and the fact that the antitrust laws extend to trade "with foreign countries." Pp. 313-314.

(c) To deny [****2] a foreign plaintiff injured by an antitrust violation the right to sue would defeat the two purposes of § 4: to deter violators and deprive them of the "fruits of their illegality," and "to compensate victims of antitrust violations for their injuries." Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 746. Pp. 314-315.

(d) When a foreign nation enters our commercial markets as a purchaser of goods or services, it can be victimized by anticompetitive practices just as surely as a private person or a domestic State, which in Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159, was held to be a "person" within the meaning of the antitrust laws; and there is no reason why Congress would have wanted to deprive a foreign nation of the treble-damages remedy available to others who suffer through violations of the antitrust laws. Pp. 315-318.

(e) Foreign nations are generally entitled to prosecute civil claims in the courts of the United States upon the same basis as domestic corporations or individuals. To afford foreign nations the protection of the antitrust laws does not involve a judicial encroachment upon foreign policy, since only governments recognized by and at peace [****3] with the United States are entitled to access to this country's courts, and it is within the exclusive power of the Executive Branch to determine which nations are entitled to sue. Pp. 318-320.

550 F. 2d 396, affirmed.

STEWART, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BRENNAN, WHITE, MARSHALL, and STEVENS, JJ., joined. BURGER, C.J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which POWELL and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined, post, p. 320. POWELL, J., filed a dissenting opinion, post, p. 329. BLACKMUN, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Counsel: Samuel W. Murphy, Jr., argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Kenneth N. Hart, William J. T. Brown, Peter Dorsey, Allen F. Maulsby, Gordon G. Busdicker, Julian O. von Kalinowski, Joe A. Walters, John H. Morrison, John P. Lynch, Merrell E. Clark, Jr., and Roberts B. Owen.

Douglas V. Rigler argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were Julius Kaplan, James W. Schroeder, Harold C. Petrowitz, Ralph E. Becker, Joseph B. Friedman, and James H. Mann. *

[****4]

Judges: Burger, Brennan, Stewart, White, Marshall, Powell, Rehnquist, Stevens; Blackmun took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: STEWART

* Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed by Solicitor General McCree, Acting Assistant Attorney General Shenefield, Barry Grossman, and Frederic Freilicher for the United States; and by Paul C. Sprenger and Eric L. Olson for the Federal Republic of Germany.

Opinion

---

[*309] [***567] [**586] MR. JUSTICE STEWART delivered the opinion of the court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A] In this case we are asked to decide whether a foreign nation is entitled to sue in our courts for treble damages under the antitrust laws. The respondents are the Government of India, the Imperial Government of Iran, and the Republic of the Philippines. They brought separate actions in Federal District Courts against the petitioners, six pharmaceutical manufacturing companies. The actions were later consolidated for pretrial purposes in the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota.<sup>1</sup> The complaints alleged that the petitioners [*310] had conspired to restrain and monopolize interstate and foreign trade in the manufacture, distribution, and sale of broad spectrum antibiotics, in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, ch. 647, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. Among the practices [***5] the petitioners allegedly engaged in were price fixing, market division, and fraud upon the United States Patent Office.<sup>2</sup> India and Iran each [***568] alleged that it was a "sovereign foreign state with whom the United States of America maintains diplomatic relations"; the Philippines alleged that it was a "sovereign and independent government." Each respondent claimed that as a purchaser of antibiotics it had been damaged in its business or property by the alleged antitrust violations and sought treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U.S.C. § 15, on its own behalf and on behalf of several classes of foreign purchasers of antibiotics.<sup>3</sup>

[***6] [*311] The petitioners asserted as an affirmative defense to the complaints that the respondents as foreign nations were not "persons" entitled to sue for treble damages under § 4. In response to pretrial motions<sup>4</sup> the District Court held that the respondents were "persons" and refused to dismiss the [**587] actions.<sup>5</sup> The trial court certified the question for appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292 (b).<sup>6</sup> The Court of Appeals for the Eighth

---

<sup>1</sup> Similar actions were also brought by Spain, South Korea, West Germany, Colombia, Kuwait, and the Republic of Vietnam. Vietnam was a party to this case in the Court of Appeals and was named as a respondent in the petition for certiorari. Subsequent to the filing of the petition Vietnam's complaint was dismissed by the District Court on the ground that the United States no longer recognized the Government of Vietnam; the dismissal was affirmed by the Court of Appeals. Republic of Vietnam v. Pfizer Inc., 556 F. 2d 892 (CA8). Vietnam has not participated as a party in this Court. Some of the other suits have been withdrawn and the rest are pending.

<sup>2</sup> The antibiotic antitrust litigation originated with a proceeding brought by the Federal Trade Commission which resulted in an order requiring petitioners Pfizer and American Cyanamid to grant domestic applicants licenses under their patents for broad spectrum antibiotics. See Charles Pfizer & Co. v. FTC, 401 F. 2d 574 (CA6). Criminal antitrust proceedings against petitioners Pfizer, American Cyanamid, and Bristol-Myers were eventually dismissed. United States v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., 367 F. Supp. 91 (SDNY); see also United States v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., 426 F. 2d 32 (CA2), modified, 437 F. 2d 957, aff'd by an equally divided Court, 404 U.S. 548. Most of the large number of civil suits have been settled. See West Virginia v. Chas Pfizer & Co., 314 F. Supp. 710 (SDNY), aff'd, 440 F. 2d 1079 (CA2).

<sup>3</sup> Respondents India and Iran also sued in a parens patriae capacity; those claims were dismissed in a separate appeal and are not at issue here. Pfizer Inc. v. Lord, 522 F. 2d 612, 615-620 (CA8).

<sup>4</sup> Petitioners moved to dismiss the suits brought by India and Iran. The Philippines moved to strike petitioners' affirmative defense.

<sup>5</sup> The District Court relied upon an earlier decision denying a motion to dismiss a related suit brought by the State of Kuwait, see n. 1, supra. In re Antibiotic Antitrust Actions, 333 F. Supp. 315 (SDNY). An appeal was taken from that decision but was dismissed by stipulation of the parties. Thus, the Court of Appeals' decision in the present case marked the first appellate consideration of the issue.

<sup>6</sup> A petition for mandamus had previously been denied. Pfizer Inc. v. Lord, supra.

I H ÁMÈÉH È ÉHFFLÁI ÆJÉDÉI I ÉHÉ I Í LÁ I ÅSEØAÉGÁI HÆRÍ Í Í LÁJÍ Í ÁMÈÉSÓYÓÁI ÉHÉ

Circuit affirmed, 550 F. 2d 396, and adhered to its decision upon rehearing en banc.<sup>7</sup> Id., at 400. We granted certiorari to resolve an important and novel question in the administration of the antitrust laws. 430 U.S. 964.

[****7] |

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] As the Court of Appeals observed, this case "turns on the interpretation of the statute." 550 F. 2d, at 397. A treble-damages remedy for persons injured by antitrust violations was first provided in § 7 of the Sherman Act, and was re-enacted in 1914 without substantial change as § 4 of the Clayton Act.<sup>8</sup> Section 4 provides: S

HN1 [A]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust [*312] laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the [***569] defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."|

Thus, whether a foreign nation is entitled to sue for treble damages depends upon whether it is a "person" as that word is used in § 4. There is no statutory provision or legislative history that provides a clear answer; [****8] it seems apparent that the question was never considered at the time the Sherman and Clayton Acts were enacted.

It is apparent that this definition is inclusive rather than exclusive, and does not by itself imply that a foreign government, any more than a natural person, falls without its bounds. Cf. Helvering v. Morgan's Inc., 293 U.S. 121, 125 n. 1; United States v. New York Telephone Co., ante, at 169 n. 15.<sup>9</sup>

[****9] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3] The Court has previously noted the broad scope of the remedies provided by the antitrust laws. HN3 [The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated.] Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 236; cf. Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 138-139. And the legislative history of the Sherman Act demonstrates that Congress used the phrase "any person" intending it to have its naturally broad and inclusive meaning. There was no mention in the floor debates of any more restrictive definition. Indeed, during the course of those debates the word "person" was used interchangeably with other terms even [*313] broader in connotation. For example, Senator Sherman said that the treble-damages remedy was being given to "any party," and Senator Edmunds, one of the principal [**588] draftsmen of the final bill,<sup>10</sup> said that [****10] it established "the right of anybody to sue who chooses to sue." 21 Cong. Rec. 2569, 3148 (1890).

HN4 In light of the law's expansive remedial purpose, the Court has not taken a technical or semantic approach in determining who is a "person" entitled to sue for treble damages. Instead, it has said that [HN5] "[t]he purpose, <sup>7</sup> Two judges dissented, believing that Congress, in passing the Sherman and Clayton Acts, did not intend to include foreign sovereigns within the scope of the term "person." 550 F. 2d, at 400. Three judges in the majority also joined a concurring opinion noting the absence of controlling legislative history and urging congressional action. Id., at 399-400.

<sup>8</sup> Section 7 of the Sherman Act was repealed in 1955 as redundant. § 3, 69 Stat. 283; see S. Rep. No. 619, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., 2 (1955).

<sup>9</sup> [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

HN2 [The Sherman and Clayton Acts each provide that the word "person"

"shall be deemed to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, the laws of any of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country." 15 U.S.C. §§ 7, 12.

<sup>10</sup> See Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 489 n. 10.

I HI ÁMEÉÉHÉ ËFHÁJÍ ÁJÉODAÍ I ÉÉHÍ I LÁI ÁSEÓaÉGÁ Á HÉÉHÍ I JLAFJÍ I ÁMEÉSÓYÓÁFI ÉÉHÉ

the subject matter, the context, the legislative history, and the executive interpretation of the statute are aids to construction which may indicate" the proper scope of the law. United States v. Cooper Corp., 312 U.S. 600, 605.

II

The respondents in this case possess two attributes that could arguably exclude them from the scope of the sweeping phrase "any person." They are foreign, and they are sovereign nations.

A

[****11] [LEdHN\[4\]](#)↑ [4] [LEdHN\[5\]](#)↑ [5] [LEdHN\[6A\]](#)↑ [6A]As to the first of these attributes, the petitioners argue that, in light of statements made during [***570] the debates on the Sherman Act and the general protectionist and chauvinistic attitude evidenced by the same Congress in debating contemporaneous tariff bills, it should be inferred that the Act was intended to protect only American consumers. Yet it is clear that a foreign corporation is entitled to sue for treble damages, since the definition of "person" contained in the Sherman and Clayton Acts explicitly includes "corporations and associations existing under or authorized by... the laws of any foreign country." See n. 9, supra. Moreover, the antitrust laws extend to trade "with foreign nations" as well as among the several States of the Union. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2.<sup>11</sup> Clearly, therefore, Congress [*314] did not intend to make the treble-damages remedy available only to consumers in our own country.<sup>12</sup>

[****12] In addition, the petitioners' argument confuses the ultimate purposes of the antitrust laws with the question of who can invoke their remedies. The fact that Congress' foremost concern in passing the antitrust laws was the protection of Americans does not mean that it intended to deny foreigners a remedy when they are injured by antitrust violations. Treble-damages suits by foreigners who have been victimized by antitrust violations clearly may contribute to the protection of American consumers.

[LEdHN\[7\]](#)↑ [7]The Court has noted that § 4 has two purposes: to deter violators and deprive them of "the fruits of their illegality," and "to compensate victims of antitrust violations for their injuries." Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 746; Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 485-486; Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., supra, at 139. To deny a foreign plaintiff injured by an antitrust violation the right to sue would defeat these purposes. [**589] It would permit a price fixer or a monopolist to escape full liability [****13] for his illegal actions and would deny [*315] compensation to certain of his victims, merely because he happens to deal with foreign customers.

Moreover, an exclusion of all foreign plaintiffs would lessen the deterrent effect of treble damages. The conspiracy alleged by the respondents in this case operated in domestically as well as internationally.<sup>13</sup> If foreign plaintiffs were not permitted to seek a remedy for their antitrust injuries, persons doing [***571] business both in this country and abroad might be tempted to enter into anticompetitive conspiracies affecting American consumers in the expectation that the illegal profits they could safely extort abroad would offset any liability to plaintiffs at home.

<sup>11</sup> [LEdHN\[6B\]](#)↑ [6B]

THE CHIEF JUSTICE'S dissent seems to contend that the Sherman Act's reference to commerce with foreign nations was intended only to reach conspiracies affecting goods imported into this country. Post, at 323-324. But the scope of congressional power over foreign commerce has never been so limited, and it is established that the antitrust laws apply to exports as well. See, e.g., Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 599; United States v. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 92 F. Supp. 947 (Mass.).

<sup>12</sup> Moreover, in the Webb-Pomerene Act, ch. 50, 40 Stat. 516, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 61 et seq., Congress has provided a narrow and carefully limited exception for export activity that would otherwise violate the antitrust laws. See United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Export Assn., 393 U.S. 199. A judicial rule excluding all non-Americans as plaintiffs in treble-damages cases would hardly be consistent with the precisely limited exception Congress has established to the general applicability of the antitrust laws to foreign commerce.

<sup>13</sup> See n. 2, supra.

I HÍ ÁMÉRÍKÁ ÉS FÍ LÁÍ ÁJÉGÁÍ I ÉRÉ Í JLÁI ÁSEÓAÉCAÁ Í HÉRÉ Í FLÁFJÍ Í ÁMÉRÍKÓÁÍ ÉRÉFH

If, on the other hand, potential antitrust violators must take into account the full costs of their conduct, American consumers are benefited by the maximum deterrent effect of treble damages upon all potential violators.<sup>14</sup>

[****14] B

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8] [LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9] The second distinguishing characteristic of these respondents is that they are sovereign nations. The petitioners contend that the word "person" was clearly understood by Congress when it passed the Sherman Act to exclude sovereign governments. The word "person," however, is not a term of art with a fixed meaning wherever it is used, nor was it in 1890 when the Sherman Act was passed.<sup>15</sup> Cf. [Towne v. Eisner, 245 U.S. \[\*316\] 418, 425](#). Indeed, this Court has expressly noted that use of the word "person" in the Sherman and Clayton Acts did not create a "hard and fast rule of exclusion" of governmental bodies. United States v. Cooper Corp., 312 U.S., at 604-605.

[****15] On the two previous occasions that the Court has considered whether a sovereign government is a "person" under the antitrust laws, the mechanical rule urged by the petitioners has been rejected.<sup>16</sup> In United States v. Cooper Corp., the United States sought to maintain a treble-damages action under § 7 of the Sherman Act for injury to its business or property. The Court considered the question whether the [***572] United States was a "person" entitled to sue for treble damages as one to be decided not "by a strict construction of the words of the [**590] Act, nor by the application of artificial canons of construction," but by analyzing the language of the statute "in the light, not only of the policy intended to be served by the enactment, but, as well, by all other available aids to construction." Id., at 605. The Court noted that the Sherman Act provides several [*317] separate and distinct remedies: criminal prosecutions, injunctions, and seizure of property by the United States on the one hand, and suits for treble damages "granted to redress private injury" on the other. Id., at 607-608. Statements made during the congressional debates on the Sherman and Clayton [****16] Acts provided further evidence that Congress affirmatively intended to exclude the United States from the treble-damages remedy. Id., at 611-612. Thus, the Court found that the United States was not a "person" entitled to bring suit for treble damages.<sup>17</sup>

In Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159, decided the very next Term, the question was whether Georgia was entitled to sue for treble damages under § 7 of the Sherman Act. The Court of Appeals, believing that the Cooper case <sup>14</sup> It has been suggested that depriving foreign plaintiffs of a treble-damages remedy and thus encouraging illegal conspiracies would affect American consumers in other ways as well: by raising worldwide prices and thus contributing to American inflation; by discouraging foreign entrants who might undercut monopoly prices in this country; and by allowing violators to accumulate a "war chest" of monopoly profits to police domestic cartels and defend them from legal attacks. Velvel, Antitrust Suits by Foreign Nations, 25 Cath. U.L. Rev. 1, 7-8 (1975).

<sup>15</sup> The case relied on by petitioners as establishing a general rule, United States v. Fox, 94 U.S. 315, merely adopted New York's construction of its Statute of Wills, as a matter of state law. Id., at 320. Even in New York the word "person" did not have a settled meaning. Compare In re Will of Fox, 52 N.Y. 530, aff'd sub nom. United States v. Fox, supra, with Republic of Honduras v. Soto, 112 N.Y. 310, 19 N.E. 845. In fact, contemporaneous cases generally held that the sovereign was entitled to have the benefit of a statute extending a right to "persons." See, e.g., Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U.S. 508, 514-517; Dollar Savings Bank v. United States, 19 Wall. 227, 239; Cotton v. United States, 11 How. 229, 231.

Cases construing federal statutes of the same era also indicate that the use of the term "person" did not invariably imply an intent to exclude governmental bodies. See, e.g., Ohio v. Helvering, 292 U.S. 360 ("person" in §§ 3140 and 3244 of the Revised Statutes of 1878 includes a State); California v. United States, 320 U.S. 577, 585-586 ("person" in the Shipping Act, 1916, 46 U.S.C. § 801 et seq., includes both a State and a city); Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U.S. 390, 396 ("person" in the Sherman Act includes a city).

<sup>16</sup> Even earlier, in Chattanooga Foundry, supra, at 396, the Court held without extended discussion that a city was entitled to sue for treble damages.

<sup>17</sup> In 1955 Congress amended the Clayton Act to allow the United States to sue for single damages when it is injured in its business or property. Ch. 283, § 1, 69 Stat. 282, 15 U.S.C. § 15a.

I HI ÁMEÉÉHÉ ÉÉHÉ LÁÍ ÁUÉDÁÍ I ÉÉHÉ JÉLÁ I ÁSEÓaÉCAÁ Í HÉÉHÉ I GLÁJÍ Í ÁMEÉÉSÓYÓÁI ÉÉHÉ controlled, had held that a State, like the Federal Government, was not a "person." This Court reversed, noting that Cooper did not hold "that the [****17] word 'person,' abstractly considered, could not include a governmental body." 316 U.S., at 161. As in Cooper, the Court did not rest its decision upon a bare analysis of the word "person," but relied instead upon the entire statutory context to hold that Georgia was entitled to sue. Unlike the United States, which "had chosen for itself three potent weapons for enforcing the Act," 316 U.S., at 161, a State had been given no other remedies to enforce the prohibitions of the law. To deprive it also of a suit for damages "would deny all redress to a State, when mulcted by a violator of the Sherman Law, merely because it is a State." Id., at 162-163. Although the legislative history of the Sherman Act did not indicate that Congress ever considered whether a State would be entitled to sue, the Court found no reason to believe that Congress had intended to deprive a State of the remedy made available to all other victims of antitrust violations.

[*318] [LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]It is clear that in Georgia v. Evans the Court rejected the proposition that the word "person" as used [****18] in the antitrust laws excludes all sovereign states. And the reasoning of that case leads to the conclusion that a foreign nation, like a domestic State, is entitled to pursue the remedy of treble damages when it has been injured in its business or property by antitrust violations. When a foreign nation enters our commercial markets as a purchaser of goods or services, it can be victimized by anticompetitive practices just as surely as a private person or a domestic State. The antitrust laws provide no alternative remedies for [***573] foreign nations as they do for the United States.<sup>18</sup> The words of Georgia v. Evans are thus equally applicable here: S

"We can perceive no reason for believing that Congress wanted to deprive a [foreign nation], as purchaser of commodities shipped in [international] commerce, of the civil remedy of treble damages which is available to other purchasers who suffer through violation of the Act.... Nothing in the Act, its history, or its policy, could justify so restrictive a construction of the word 'person' in § 7 . . . . Such a construction would deny all redress to a [foreign nation], when mulcted by a violator of the Sherman [\[\*\*591\]](#) [\[\*\*\*19\]](#) Law, merely because it is a [foreign nation]."
316 U.S., at 162-163.

III

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]The result we reach does not involve any novel concept of the jurisdiction of the federal courts. This Court has long recognized the rule that HN6 [1] a foreign nation is generally entitled to prosecute any civil claim in the courts of the United States [\[\*319\]](#) upon the same basis as a domestic corporation or individual might do. "To deny him this privilege would manifest a want [\[\*\*\*20\]](#) of comity and friendly feeling." The Sapphire, 11 Wall. 164, 167; Monaco v. Mississippi, 292 U.S. 313, 323 n. 2; Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino, 376 U.S. 398, 408-409; see U.S. Const., Art. III, § 2, cl. 1.<sup>19</sup> To allow a foreign sovereign to sue in our courts for treble damages to the same extent as any other person injured by an antitrust violation is thus no more than a specific application of a long-settled general rule. To exclude foreign nations from the protections of our antitrust laws

<sup>18</sup> While THE CHIEF JUSTICE's dissent says there are "weapons in the arsenals of foreign nations" sufficient to enable them to counter anticompetitive conduct, such as cartels or boycotts, post, at 327-328, such a political remedy is hardly available to a foreign nation faced with monopolistic control of the supply of medicines needed for the health and safety of its people.

<sup>19</sup> Congress has explicitly conferred jurisdiction upon the federal courts to entertain such suits:

"The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions where the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $10,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is between --

.....

"(4) a foreign state... as plaintiff and citizens of a State or of different States." 28 U.S.C. § 1332\(a\)\(4\) \(1976 ed.\)

Among the actions foreign sovereign governments were entitled to maintain at the time of the passage of the Sherman and Clayton Acts were suits for common-law business torts, such as unfair competition, similar in general nature to antitrust claims. See French Republic v. Saratoga Vichy Spring Co., 191 U.S. 427 \(1903\); La Republique Francaise v. Schultz, 94 F. 500 \(SDNY 1899\).

I HÍ ÁMÉRÍKA Í HÍFJLÁ Í ÁMÉRÍKA Í HÍ JFLÁ I ÁMÉRÍKA Í HÍFJLÁ Í HÍFJÍ Í ÁMÉRÍKA Í HÍFJLÁ would, on the other hand, create a conspicuous exception to this rule, an exception that could not be justified in the absence of clear legislative intent.

[****21] [LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]Finally, the result we reach does not require the Judiciary in any way to interfere in sensitive matters of foreign policy.<sup>20</sup> It has long been [***574] established that only governments recognized by the United States and at peace with us are entitled to access [*320] to our courts, and that it is within the exclusive power of the Executive Branch to determine which nations are entitled to sue. Jones v. United States, 137 U.S. 202, 212; Guaranty Trust Co. v. United States, 304 U.S. 126, 137-138; Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino, supra, at 408-412. Nothing we decide today qualifies this established rule of complete judicial deference to the Executive Branch.<sup>21</sup>

[****22] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]We hold today only that HN7 a foreign nation otherwise entitled to sue in our courts is entitled to sue for treble damages under the antitrust laws to the same extent as any other plaintiff. Neither the fact that the respondents are foreign nor the fact that they are sovereign is reason to deny them the remedy of treble damages Congress afforded to "any person" victimized by violations of the antitrust laws.

Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Dissent by: BURGER; POWELL

Dissent

---

[**592] MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER, with whom MR. JUSTICE POWELL and MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST join, dissenting.

The Court today holds that foreign nations are entitled to bring treble-damages actions in American courts against American suppliers for alleged violations of the antitrust laws; the Court reaches this extraordinary result by holding that for purposes of § 4 of the Clayton Act, foreign sovereigns are "persons," while conceding paradoxically that the question "was never considered at the time the Sherman and [****23] Clayton Acts were enacted." Ante, at 312.

I dissent from this undisguised exercise of legislative power, since I find the result plainly at odds not only with the language of the statute but also with its legislative history and precedents of this Court. The resolution of the delicate and [*321] important policy issue of giving more than 150 foreign countries the benefits and remedies enacted to protect American consumers should be left to the Congress and the Executive. Congressional silence over a period of almost a century provides no license for the Court to make this sensitive political decision vastly expanding the scope of the statute Congress enacted.

A

"The starting point in every case involving construction of a statute is the language itself." Blue Chip Stamps v. Manor Drug Stores, 421 U.S. 723, 756 (1975) (POWELL, J., concurring). The relevant provisions here are § 1 of

---

<sup>20</sup> In a letter that was presented to the Court of Appeals when it reconsidered this case en banc, the Legal Adviser of the Department of State advised "that the Department of State would not anticipate any foreign policy problems if... foreign governments [were held to be] 'persons' within the meaning of Clayton Act § 4." A copy of this letter is contained in the Memorandum for the United States as Amicus Curiae in opposition to the petition for a writ of certiorari filed in this Court.

<sup>21</sup> Cf. n. 1, supra.

I HI ÁWÈJÁHÈ ËHGLÁÌ ÁWÈDÀÌ I ÈHÉ JGLÁÌ ÁSEÓaÈGÁÌ HÉHÉ Ì LAFJÍÌ ÁWÈESÓYÓJÁÌ ÈHÉH

the Clayton Act in which the word "person" is defined, and § 4 in which the treble-damages remedy is conferred on those falling within the precisely [***575] enumerated categories. Section 1 provides, in relevant part: S

"The word 'person' or 'persons' wherever used [****24] in this Act shall be deemed to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, the laws of any of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country."1

Section 4 then incorporates this definition by providing: S

"That any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."1

Even on the most expansive reading, these two sections provide not the slightest indication that Congress intended to allow foreign nations to sue Americans for treble damages under our antitrust laws. The very fact that foreign sovereigns [*322] were not included within the definition of "person" despite the explicit reference to corporations and associations existing under the "laws of any foreign country" in the same definition ought to be dispositive under [****25] established doctrine governing interpretation of statutes. I therefore see no escape from the conclusion that the omission by Congress of foreign nations was deliberate.

The inclusion of foreign corporations within the statutory definition in no sense argues for a different characterization of Congress' intent. At the time of the passage of both the Sherman and Clayton Acts, foreign sovereigns, even when acting in their commercial capacities, were immune from suits in the courts of this country under the doctrine of sovereign immunity. See The Schooner Exchange v. McFaddon, 7 Cranch 116 (1812); Ex parte Peru, 318 U.S. 578 (1943); Mexico v. Huffman, 324 U.S. 30 (1945). Foreign corporations, of course, had no such immunity. See, e.g., Shaw v. Quincy Mining Co., 145 U.S. 444, 453 (1892); In re Hohorst, 150 U.S. 653, 662-663 (1893). Given that "person" as used in the Clayton and Sherman Acts refers to both antitrust plaintiffs and defendants, see [**593] United States v. Cooper Corp., 312 U.S. 600, 606 (1941), the decision of Congress to include foreign corporations while omitting foreign sovereigns [****26] from the definition most likely reflects this differential susceptibility to suit rather than any intent to benefit foreign consumers or to enlist their help in enforcing our antitrust laws. It would be little short of preposterous to think that Congress in 1890 was concerned about giving such rights to foreign nations, even though it might well decide to do so now.

Respondents' claim that this disparate treatment cannot be justified today when foreign states effectively control many large foreign corporations and when sovereign immunity has been limited by the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act of 1976, Pub. [***576] L. 94-583, 90 Stat. 2891, is not an argument appropriately addressed to or considered by this Court. If [*323] revisions in the statute are required to take into account contemporary circumstances, that task is properly one for Congress particularly in light of the sensitive political nature and foreign policy implications of the question.

The Court's reliance on the references to "foreign nations" in §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and § 1 of the Clayton Act to support an argument that Congress was specifically concerned with foreign commerce and foreign [****27] nations in 1890 when the disputed definition was enacted is similarly unavailing. As a threshold matter, congressional concern with the foreign commerce of the United States does not entail either a desire to protect foreign nations or a willingness to allow them to sue Americans for treble damages in our courts. The Webb-Pomerene Act, ch. 50, 40 Stat. 516, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 61 et seq., passed within only a few years of the Clayton Act, indicates that such a concern may instead be served at the expense of foreign states and consumers.

1

---

<sup>1</sup> The Webb-Pomerene Act exempts certain actions of export associations from the antitrust laws, but the exemption applies only if the association's actions do not restrain trade or affect the price of exported products within the United States and do not restrain the export trade of any domestic competitor of the association. 15 U.S.C. § 62. Although the Act was subsequently

I H ÁNÉUÉHÉI FÁNGHÁJÁ Í ÁNÉOÓDEAÍ I FÁH JHLÁ ÁNSEÓÓA ÉGÁ Á HÁÉHEÍ I I LAFJÍ I ÁNÉUÉSÓYÓUÁFÉ ÉÁHÉEG

[****28] In any event, the relevant language of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, as subsequently incorporated in the Clayton Act, does not support respondents' contention. The reference to "commerce... with foreign nations" appeared only in the final draft of the Act as reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee, and replaced language in the numerous earlier drafts of Senator Sherman to the following effect: S

"That all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made [*324] with a view or which tend to prevent full and free competition in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or of the sale of articles imported into the United States,... are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful and void...." 21 Cong. Rec. 2598 (1890) (first draft) (emphasis added).<sup>21</sup>

The focus of this language on protecting domestic consumers from anticompetitive practices affecting the importation of goods into the United States could not be more clear, nor could the absence of any attention to affording comparable protection for foreign consumers of American exports. The language substituted by the Judiciary [****29] Committee -- language tracking that appearing in the Commerce Clause -- was chosen to mollify the objections of those Senators who felt the proposed statute exceeded Congress' constitutional power to regulate commerce, see, e.g., id., at 2600, 3147 (remarks of [***577] Sen. George); id., at 2728 (remarks [**594] of Sen. Edmunds); id., at 3149 (remarks of Sen. Reagan); cf. Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 495 (1940); Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers, Inc. v. United States, 286 U.S. 427, 434-435 (1932); that language was not intended to work any substantive change in the focus or scope of the Act. See United States v. Wise, 370 U.S. 405, 420 (1962) (Harlan, J., concurring). To read this language as evidencing an intent to protect foreign nations or foreign consumers simply belies its lineage.

B

The legislative history of the treble-damages remedy gives no more [****30] support to the result reached by the Court than does the language of the statute. As five of the eight judges of the Court of Appeals concluded -- and indeed as the majority here concedes, ante, at 312 -- "Congress, in passing § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, gave no consideration nor did [*325] it have any legislative intent whatsoever, concerning the question of whether foreign governments are 'persons' under the Act." 550 F. 2d 396, 399 (Ross, J., concurring) (emphasis added). The conversion of this silence in 1890 into an affirmative intent in 1978 is indeed startling.

The failure of Congress even to consider the question of granting treble-damages remedies to foreign nations provides the clearest possible argument for leaving the question to the same political process that gave birth to the Sherman and Clayton Acts. To rely on the absence of any express congressional intent to exclude foreign nations from taking advantage of the treble-damages remedy is a remarkable innovation in statutory interpretation. It is a strange way to camouflage the unassailable conclusion that the legislative history offers no affirmative support [****31] for the result reached today. Further, as this Court observed just last Term, the legislative history of the treble-damages remedy which does exist "indicate[s] that it was conceived of primarily as a remedy for '[t]he people of the United States as individuals,' especially consumers." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-OMat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 486 n. 10 (1977), quoting from 21 Cong Rec. 1767-1768 (1890) (remarks of Sen. George). What we so recently saw as primarily a remedy for American consumers is now extended to all the nations of the world -- a boon Congress might choose to grant but has not done so.

C

In the absence of any helpful language in the statute or any affirmative legislative history, the Court attempts to base its expansive reading of "person" on Mr. Justice Frankfurter's decision in Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159 regarded as carving out an exemption from the antitrust laws, the legislative history indicates considerable question at the time whether the conduct of exporters meeting the conditions specified in the Act would have violated the antitrust laws even without the putative exemption. See H.R. Rep. No. 50, 65th Cong., 1st Sess., 2 (1917).

<sup>2</sup> The equivalent language of subsequent drafts can be found at 21 Cong. Rec. 2598-2600 (1890).

I HI ÁWÈJÉHÈ ÈÈHÍ LÁÌ ÁWÈDÀÌ I ÈÈHÍ JI LÁÌ ÁSEÓaÈCAÁ Ì HÈÈHÍ Ì LAFJÍ Ì ÁWÈJÉSÓYÓÁFI ÈÈHÍ

(1942), granting the State of Georgia and all other domestic States the right to sue for treble damages. I fail to see how that result dictates this one.

In Georgia v. Evans, Mr. Justice Frankfurter concluded that absent the right to sue for treble damages, our States would [*326] be left without any remedy against [****32] violators of the antitrust laws. The Court today analogizes the situation of foreign nations to that of the States in Evans, and [***578] finds the analogy dispositive. When viewed solely in terms of the remedies specifically provided by the antitrust laws, the plight of domestic States and foreign sovereigns may, in this limited respect, be roughly comparable. But the very limited scope of the inquiry in Evans precludes consideration of the manifold and patently obvious respects in which foreign nations and our own domestic States differ -- cogent difference bearing on the question under consideration here, though obviously not at all on the Court's inquiry in Evans.

First, the disparate treatment of foreign and domestic States is a legitimate source of concern only on the assumption that Congress in passing the Sherman Act intended -- or even contemplated -- that these two categories of political entities were so essentially [**595] alike that they were entitled to the same remedies against anticompetitive conduct. As I have already suggested, this assumption derives no support from either the statutory language or anything in the legislative history. Although our own [****33] States were also not the expressly intended beneficiaries of the Act, to deny them the treble-damages remedy would, as Mr. Justice Frankfurter perceived, have the unmistakable result of effectively denying surrogate protection to American citizens in whose behalf the State acts and for whose benefit the Sherman Act was enacted. Thus, while the result in Evans is a tolerable taking of certain liberties with the literal language of the statute, the congruence of that result with Congress' purpose can scarcely be doubted. This same logic, however, does not even remotely apply to the situation of foreign nations.

Second, it simply is not the case that absent a treble-damages remedy, foreign nations would be denied any effective means of redress against anticompetitive practices by American corporations. Unlike our own States, whose freedom of action in this regard is constrained by the Commerce and Supremacy [*327] Clauses, foreign sovereigns remain free to enact and enforce their own comprehensive antitrust statutes and to impose other more drastic sanctions on offending corporations. One need look no further than the laws of respondents India and the Philippines for evidence [****34] that such remedies are possessed by foreign nations. And indeed, amicus West Germany has demonstrated that such laws are not mere idle enactments. During the pendency of this action, it notified petitioner Pfizer that a proceeding under German antitrust law was being commenced involving some of the same allegations which are made in the complaint filed by respondents in their treble-damages actions in this country.

While problems of jurisdiction and discovery may render antitrust actions against foreign defendants somewhat more problematic than a suit against a corporation in its own country, the limited experience of the Common Market nations in applying their antitrust laws to foreign corporations suggests that such difficulties are certainly not insoluble and are likely exaggerated. See, e.g., Europemballage Corp. v. E.C. Commission, 12 Comm. Mkt. L.R. 199 (1973); Commercial Solvents Corp. v. E.C. Commission, 13 Comm. Mkt. L.R. 309 (1974). And, as the presently [***579] existing treaty between the United States and West Germany indicates, reciprocal agreements providing for cooperation in antitrust investigations undertaken by foreign nations are an effective means of [****35] mitigating the rigors of discovery in foreign jurisdictions. See Agreement Relating to Mutual Cooperation Regarding Restrictive Business Practices, entered into force Sept. 11, 1976. United States -- Federal Republic of Germany, [1976] 27 U.S.T. 1956, T.I.A.S. No. 8291.

Third, it takes little imagination to realize the dramatic and very real differences in terms of coercive economic power and political interests which distinguish our own States from foreign sovereigns. The international price fixing, boycotts, and other current anticompetitive practices undertaken by some Middle Eastern nations are illustrative of the weapons [*328] in the arsenals of foreign nations which no domestic State could ever employ. Nor do our domestic States, in any meaningful sense, have the conflicting economic interests or antagonistic ideologies which characterize and enliven the relations among nation states.

I HÌ ÁMÈRÌKÀ ËNG LÀI ÁU ĐÀI Ì ËU JÍ LÀI ÁSÈOÀCÁ Ì HÈU Ì JLAFJÌ Ì ÁMÈRSÓYÓAÍ ËUHÌ

Viewed in this light, it is clear that the decision to allow foreign sovereigns to seek treble damages from Americans and to rely on standards of competitive behavior in fixing liability which those very same nations flout in their business relationships with this country is a decision [***36] dramatically different from the one Mr. Justice Frankfurter faced in Evans. To consider the result reached there as to Georgia determinative of the result here is to substitute a "hard and fast rule of inclusion" for the "hard and fast rule of exclusion" which Justices Frankfurter and Roberts eschewed in Evans and Cooper, respectively. Only the [**596] most mechanical reading of our prior precedent will justify such a result.

Further, the result reached by the Court today confronts us with the anomaly that while the United States Government cannot sue for treble damages under our antitrust laws, other nations are free to engage in the most flagrant kinds of combinations for price fixing, totally at odds with our antitrust concepts, and nevertheless are given the right by the Court to sue American suppliers in American courts for treble damages plus attorneys' fees. It is no answer to say that the United States needs no civil treble-damages remedy since it has reserved for itself the power to pursue criminal remedies against American suppliers for antitrust violations. What that response overlooks is that our criminal antitrust remedies hardly compare with the infinite array [***37] of political and commercial weapons available to a foreign nation for use against the United States itself or against American producers and suppliers. This, again, underscores how completely the problem is a matter of policy to be resolved by the political branches without the intrusion of the Judiciary.

[*329] D

Finally, the Court's emphasis on the deterrent effects of treble-damages actions by foreign sovereigns also will not withstand critical scrutiny. We acknowledged in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S., at 485-486, that while treble damages do play an important role in deterring wrongdoers, "the treble-damages [***580] provision... is designed primarily as a remedy." To allow foreign sovereigns who were clearly not the intended beneficiaries of this remedy to nevertheless invoke it reverses this priority of purposes, and does so solely on the basis of this Court's uninformed speculation about some possible beneficiaial consequences to American consumers of this "maximum deterrent." Ante, at 315. In areas of far less political delicay, we have been unwilling to expand the scope of the right to sue under the antitrust laws without [***38] express congressional intent to do so. See, e.g., Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 264-265 (1972).<sup>3</sup>

For these reasons I dissent from the Court's intrusion into the legislative sphere.

MR. JUSTICE POWELL, dissenting.

I join THE CHIEF JUSTICE in his dissent, and add a word to emphasize my difficulty with the Court's decision.

The issue is whether the antitrust laws of this country are to be made available for treble-damages suits against American businesses by the governments of other countries. The Court resolves this issue in favor of such [***39] governments by construing the word "person" in § 4 of the Clayton Act to include [*330] "foreign governments." No one argues seriously that this was the intent of Congress in 1890 when the term "person" was included in the Act. Indeed, the Court acknowledges that this "question was never considered at the time the Sherman and Clayton Acts were enacted." Ante, at 312.

Despite this conclusion as to the absence of any congressional consideration, the inviting possibility of treble damages is extended today by judicial action to the sovereign nations of the world.<sup>1</sup> With minor exceptions, the United States recognizes the governments of all of these nations. We may assume that most of them have no

<sup>3</sup>The Court adverts to a letter from the Legal Adviser of the State Department to the Court of Appeals advising that no foreign policy problems were anticipated from a decision holding foreign governments to be persons within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act. The significance of this communication escapes me. Nothing in the Constitution suggests legislative power may be exercised jointly by the courts and the Department of State.

<sup>1</sup>At present there are 162 sovereign nations.

I HI ÁMEÉSÓYÓÓFI ÉEÉHÉLÁÍ ÁMEÉSÓYÓÓFI ÉEÉHÉLÁÍ ÁMEÉSÓYÓÓFI ÉEÉHÉLÁÍ

equivalent of our antitrust laws and would be unlikely to afford reciprocal opportunities to the United States to sue and recover damages in their courts.

The [**597] Court has resolved a major policy question. As the Acting Solicitor General stated in his [****40] Memorandum for the United States as Amicus Curiae, filed March 23, 1977: S

"Whether foreign sovereigns are 'persons' entitled to sue under Section 4 depends largely upon the general policy reflected in the statute, and the general policy of the United States opening its courts to foreign sovereigns." I

I had thought it was accepted doctrine that questions of "general policy" -- especially with respect to foreign sovereigns and absent explicit legislative authority -- are beyond the province of the Judicial Branch. If the statute truly reflected a general [**581] policy that dictated the inclusion of foreign sovereigns, the Court might be justified in reaching today's result. In Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159 (1942), a clear policy to protect the States of the Union was reflected in the antitrust laws and in the legislative history. The Court could "perceive no reason for believing that Congress wanted to deprive a State, as purchaser of commodities shipped in interstate commerce, of the civil remedy of treble damages which is available [*331] to other purchasers who suffer through violation of the Act." Id. at 162.

Unlike the majority, [****41] I do not believe the same can be said with respect to foreign sovereigns. See ante, at 318. It is not only the absence of specific congressional intent to include them. It is that the predicate for the Court's approach in Georgia v. Evans is not present in the case before us. The solicitude that we assume Congress has for the welfare of each of the United States, especially when the subject matter of legislation largely has been removed from the competence of the States and has been entrusted to the United States, cannot be assumed with respect to foreign nations. Putting it differently, it was not illogical for the Evans Court to include the States within the reach of § 4, but it is a quantum leap to include foreign governments.

A court, without the benefit of legislative hearings that would illuminate the policy considerations if the question were left to Congress, is not competent in my opinion to resolve this question in the best interest of our country. It is regrettable that the Court today finds it necessary to rush to this essentially legislative judgment.<sup>2</sup>

[****42]

References

---

Supreme Court's views as to right of foreign nation or its representative to sue in courts of United States

55 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 289, 299-301, 360

12 Federal Procedural Forms L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:69

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev Ed), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, Forms 11 et seq.

15 USCS 15

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 67

---

<sup>2</sup> The Court quotes a letter to the effect that "the Department of State would not anticipate any foreign policy problems" if § 4 were held to embrace suits by foreign governments. Ante, at 319 n. 20 (emphasis supplied). But resolution of the issue here depends not only upon foreign policy considerations but also upon considerations relevant to the general welfare of the United States. The latter are quite beyond the concern of the Department of State and should be considered by the Legislative Branch. The international business conducted by American corporations has economic and social ramifications of great importance to our country.

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 15

L Ed Index to Annos, Damages; Foreign Countries; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Double or Treble Damages; Foreign State or Country; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Foreign Country; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Supreme Court's views as to right of foreign nation or its representative to sue in courts of United States. 54 L Ed 2d 854.

Authority of state to sue as parens patriae to recover treble damages under 4 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 15). [****43] 23 ALR Fed 878.

Measure and elements of damages under 15 USCS 15 entitling person injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in federal antitrust laws to recover treble damages. 16 ALR Fed 14.

---

End of Document

Lafayette v. La. Power & Light Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued October 4, 1977 ; March 29, 1978; As Amended

No. 76-864

Reporter

435 U.S. 389 *; 98 S. Ct. 1123 **; 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 ***; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 19 ****; 1978-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P61,936; 24 P.U.R.4th 395

CITY OF LAFAYETTE, LOUISIANA, ET AL. v. LOUISIANA POWER & LIGHT CO.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

Core Terms

---

municipalities, anti trust law, Sherman Act, anticompetitive, antitrust, plurality, immunity, exemption, sovereign, regulation, monopoly, government action, electric, political subdivision, state legislature, petitioners', state policy, proprietary, customers, limits, purposes, state action, enterprise, displace, cases, government body, district court, counterclaim, competitors, policies

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN1 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Federal antitrust laws do not prohibit a state as sovereign from imposing certain anticompetitive restraints as an act of government.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN2 Private Actions, Remedies

It is not necessary to point to an express statutory mandate for each act which is alleged to violate the antitrust laws. It will suffice if the challenged activity was clearly within the legislative intent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN3 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Whether a governmental body's actions are comprehended within the powers granted to it by the legislature is, of course, a determination which can be made only under the specific facts in each case. A district judge's inquiry on this point should be broad enough to include all evidence which might show the scope of legislative intent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN4[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The definition of "person" or "persons" in the antitrust statutes embraces both cities and states.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Remedies, Damages

Section 8 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 7, and § 1 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 12, are general definitional sections which define person or persons, wherever used in this Act to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, the laws of any of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country. Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, provides, in pertinent part, that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 7.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN7[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 12.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Cases reviewing the legislative history of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, have concluded that Congress, exercising the full extent of its constitutional power, sought to establish a regime of competition as the fundamental principle governing commerce in this country.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN9 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

United States Supreme Court cases have held that even when Congress by subsequent legislation establishes a regulatory regime over an area of commercial activity, the antitrust laws will not be displaced unless it appears that the antitrust and regulatory provisions are plainly repugnant. The presumption against repeal by implication reflects the understanding that the antitrust laws establish overarching and fundamental policies, a principle which argues with equal force against implied exclusions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

HN10 Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

All governmental entities, whether state agencies or subdivisions of a state, are not, simply by reason of their status as such, exempt from the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN11 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

For purposes of the Parker doctrine, not every act of a state agency is that of the state as sovereign.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN12 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In light of the serious economic dislocation which could result if cities were free to place their own parochial interests above the nation's economic goals reflected in the antitrust laws, the court is especially unwilling to presume that Congress intended to exclude anticompetitive municipal action from their reach.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > Public Improvements > General Overview

Real Property Law > Subdivisions > State Regulations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN13** [L] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Since municipal corporations are instrumentalities of the state for the convenient administration of government within their limits the actions of municipalities may reflect state policy. The United States Supreme Court therefore concludes that the Parker doctrine exempts only anticompetitive conduct engaged in as an act of government by the state as sovereign, or, by its subdivisions, pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > General Overview

**HN14** [L] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In the absence of evidence that the state authorized or directed a given municipality to act as it did, the actions of a particular city hardly can be found to be pursuant to the state's command, or to be restraints that the state as sovereign imposed. The most that could be said is that state policy may be neutral. This does not mean, however, that a political subdivision necessarily must be able to point to a specific, detailed legislative authorization before it properly may assert a Parker defense to an antitrust suit. While a subordinate governmental unit's claim to Parker immunity is not as readily established as the same claim by a state government sued as such, an adequate state mandate for anticompetitive activities of cities and other subordinate governmental units exists when it is found from the authority given a governmental entity to operate in a particular area, that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN15** [L] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The Parker doctrine preserves to the states their freedom under the dual system of federalism to use their municipalities to administer state regulatory policies free of the inhibitions of the federal antitrust laws without at the same time permitting purely parochial interests to disrupt the nation's free-market goals.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN16** [L] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Parker and its progeny make clear that a State properly may direct or authorize its instrumentalities to act in a way which, if it did not reflect state policy, would be inconsistent with the antitrust laws.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

Two Louisiana cities, as operators of electric utility systems, instituted an action under federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1 et seq.) against certain private utility companies in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana. One of the defendants counterclaimed, alleging that the plaintiffs had committed various antitrust offenses. The plaintiffs moved to dismiss the counterclaim on the ground that as cities, they were not subject to the antitrust laws because of the "state action" exemption, whereby the federal antitrust laws did not prohibit a state as sovereign from imposing anticompetitive restraints as an act of government. The District Court entered a judgment dismissing the counterclaim, but the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed and remanded, holding that cities were not automatically exempt from federal antitrust laws under the state action exemption (532 F2d 431).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In that part of the opinion (part I) by Brennan, J., which constituted the opinion of the court (Burger, Ch. J., and Marshall, Powell, and Stevens, JJ., joining in part I of the opinion), it was held that apart from the applicability of the state action exemption, (1) as defined in federal antitrust laws, the terms "person" or "persons" included cities as municipal utility operators, whether suing as plaintiffs or being sued as defendants, and (2) there was no implied exclusion, based on public policy, of cities as municipal utility operators from coverage as "persons" under the antitrust laws. With regard to the question of the applicability of the state action exemption, five members of the court, although unable to agree on an opinion, agreed that the exemption did not automatically exempt cities from the operation of the antitrust laws. In the balance of his opinion (parts II and III), Brennan, J., joined by Marshall, Powell, and Stevens, JJ., expressed the view that the state action exemption exempted only anticompetitive conduct engaged in as an act of government by a state as sovereign, or, by its subdivisions, pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or with monopoly public service--an adequate state mandate for anticompetitive activities of cities and other subordinate governmental units existing only when it was found from the authority given a governmental entity to operate in a particular area that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of.

Marshall, J., concurring, expressed the view that (1) the state action exemption from the antitrust laws should be no broader than was necessary to serve the state's legitimate purposes, and (2) it was not enough that a state desired to insulate anticompetitive practices, it being necessary that the state imposed the practices as an act of government.

Burger, Ch. J., concurring in part I of the opinion of Brennan, J., and in the judgment, expressed the view that (1) the threshold inquiry in determining if an anticompetitive activity was state action exempt from the federal antitrust laws was whether the activity was required by the state acting as sovereign, (2) in addition to determining that an area of conflict between a state's regulatory policies and the federal antitrust laws was the result of a state policy to displace competition with regulation or with monopoly public service, it should also be determined that the implied exemption from federal law was necessary to make the state regulatory scheme work, and (3) the exemption was applicable only if the state compelled the anticompetitive activity, and only if the cities demonstrated that the exemption was essential to the state's plan.

Stewart, J., joined by White and Rehnquist, JJ., and joined in pertinent part by Blackmun, J., dissented, expressing the view that (1) cities engaged in activities such as those involved in the case at bar should not be subjected to possible antitrust liability, since they were governmental bodies, not private persons, and their actions were acts of government, and thus they should be relieved of antitrust liability under the established doctrine that where a restraint of trade or monopolization was the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, no violation of the antitrust laws could be made out, (2) while private action must be compelled by a state legislature in order to escape the reach of the antitrust laws, it was senseless to require a showing of state compulsion when the state itself acted through one of its governmental subdivisions, and (3) the court's decision marked an extraordinary intrusion into the operation of state and local government, compelling a municipality to seek passage of a state statute requiring it to engage in any activity which might be considered anticompetitive, and imposing staggering costs on municipal governments, both in the sense of possible liability for treble damages under the antitrust laws and in the sense of the costs of defending antitrust actions.

Blackmun, J., dissenting, expressed the view that in light of the holding that municipalities were subject to broad antitrust liability, the court should also have considered the question of the appropriate remedy, especially since the prospect of insolvency for the cities, through liability for treble damages, threatened the welfare of their inhabitants.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §8 > federal antitrust laws -- cities as "persons" covered -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

As defined in federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1 et seq.), the terms "person" or "persons" include cities as municipal utility operators, whether suing as plaintiffs or being sued as defendants.

MONOPOLIES §11 > federal antitrust laws -- applicability to cities -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

There is no implied exclusion, based on public policy, of cities as municipal utility operators from coverage as "persons" under the federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1 et seq.), such an exclusion cannot be inferred on the grounds that (1) it would be anomalous to subject municipalities to the liabilities imposed upon violators of the antitrust laws, (2) the antitrust laws are intended to protect the public only from abuses of private power and not from actions of municipalities that exist to serve the public weal, or (3) federal antitrust regulation is unnecessary because government is subject to political control and the welfare of its citizens is thus assured through the political process.

MONOPOLIES §7 > federal laws -- coverage -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

There is a presumption against implied exclusions from coverage under the federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1 et seq.).

MONOPOLIES §4 > antitrust laws -- freedom to compete -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

The freedom guaranteed under antitrust laws in general, and the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1-7) in particular, to each and every business, no matter how small, is the freedom to compete, that is, to assert with vigor, imagination, devotion, and ingenuity whatever economic muscle it can muster.

STATUTES §248.5 > implied repeal -- federal antitrust laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

There is a presumption against repeal by implication of federal antitrust laws.

MONOPOLIES §30 > federal laws -- tying arrangements -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [ ] [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [ ] [6B]

With regard to the purposes of the rule under federal antitrust laws against tying arrangements, the purpose of protecting competing sellers from competition unrelated to the merits of the product involved and, concomitantly, to protect the market from distortion, is equally important to the purpose of protecting against injury to the buyer.

MONOPOLIES §11 > federal laws -- applicability to local governments -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [ ] [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [ ] [7B]

While local governments, acting as agents at the direction of the state, are free to implement state policies without being subject to federal antitrust laws to the same extent as would be the state itself, nevertheless local governments are not exempt from such laws on the theory that applying antitrust principles to local governments will necessarily interfere with the execution of governmental programs.

MONOPOLIES §7 > Sherman Act -- construction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [ ] [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [ ] [8B]

The Sherman Act (15 USCS 1-7) is to be interpreted in the light of its legislative history and of the particular evils at which the legislation was aimed.

MONOPOLIES §9 > federal antitrust laws -- state action exemption -- cities -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9A\]](#) [ ] [9A] [LEdHN\[9B\]](#) [ ] [9B] [LEdHN\[9C\]](#) [ ] [9C] [LEdHN\[9D\]](#) [ ] [9D] [LEdHN\[9E\]](#) [ ] [9E]

The United States Supreme Court will affirm a Federal Court of Appeals' decision that the "state action" exemption from federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1 et seq.)--whereby federal antitrust laws do not prohibit a state as sovereign from imposing anticompetitive restraints as an act of government--does not automatically exempt cities as municipal utility operators from the operation of the antitrust laws, where (1) four members of the Supreme Court are of the opinion that (a) the state action exemption exempts only anticompetitive conduct engaged in as an act of government by a state as sovereign, or, by its subdivisions, pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or with monopoly public service, and (b) an adequate state mandate for anticompetitive activities of cities and other subordinate governmental units exists only when it is found from the authority given a governmental entity to operate in a particular area that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of; and (2) a fifth member of the Supreme Court is of the opinion that (a) the threshold inquiry in determining if an anticompetitive activity is state action exempt from the antitrust laws is whether the activity is required by the state acting as sovereign, (b) in addition to determining that an area of conflict between a state's regulatory policies and the federal antitrust laws is the result of a state policy to displace competition with regulation or with monopoly public service, it must be determined that the implied exemption from federal law is necessary to make the state regulatory scheme work, and (c) the exemption is applicable only if the state compels the anticompetitive activity, and only if the cities demonstrate that the exemption is essential to the state's plan. [Per Brennan, J., Marshall, J., Powell, J., Stevens, J., and Burger, Ch. J. Dissenting: Stewart, White, Blackmun, and Rehnquist, JJ.]

Syllabus

---

Petitioner cities, which own and operate electric utility systems both within and beyond their respective city limits as authorized by Louisiana law, brought an action in District Court against respondent investor-owned electric utility with which petitioners compete, alleging that it committed various federal antitrust offenses that injured petitioners in the operation of their electric utility systems. Respondent counterclaimed, alleging that petitioners had committed various antitrust offenses that injured respondent in its business and property. Petitioners moved to dismiss the counterclaim on the ground that, as cities and subdivisions of the State, the "state action" doctrine of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, rendered federal antitrust laws inapplicable to them. The District Court granted the motion, but the Court of Appeals reversed and remanded. Held: Apart from whether petitioners are exempt from the antitrust laws as agents of the State under the Parker doctrine there [****2] are insufficient grounds for inferring that Congress did not intend to subject cities to antitrust liability. Pp. 394-408.

(a) The definition of "person" or "persons" covered by the antitrust laws clearly includes cities, whether as municipal utility operators suing as plaintiffs seeking damages for antitrust violations or as such operators being sued as defendants. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U.S. 390; Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159. Pp. 394-397.

(b) Petitioners have failed to show the existence of any overriding public policy inconsistent with a construction of coverage of the antitrust laws. The presumption against implied exclusion from such laws cannot be negated either on the ground that it would be anomalous to subject municipalities to antitrust liability or on the ground that the antitrust laws are intended to protect the public only from abuses of private power and not from action of municipalities that exist to serve the public weal. Pp. 400-408.

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, joined by MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, MR. JUSTICE POWELL, and MR. JUSTICE STEVENS, concluded:

1. Parker v. Brown does not automatically exempt from the [****3] antitrust laws all governmental entities, whether state agencies or subdivisions of a State, simply by reason of their status as such, but exempts only anticompetitive conduct engaged in as an act of government by the State as sovereign, or by its subdivisions, pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service. Pp. 408-413.

2. The Court of Appeals did not err in holding that further inquiry should be made to determine whether petitioners' actions were directed by the State, since when the State itself has not directed or authorized an anticompetitive practice, the State's subdivisions in exercising their delegated power must obey the antitrust laws. While a subordinate governmental unit's claim to Parker immunity is not as readily established as the same claim by a state government sued as such, an adequate state mandate for anticompetitive activities of cities and other subordinate governmental units exists when it is found "from the authority given a governmental entity to operate in a particular area, that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of." Pp. 413-417.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE, while agreeing with the directions [****4] for remand in Part III because they represent at a minimum what is required to establish an exemption, would insist that the State compel the alleged anticompetitive activity and that the cities demonstrate that the exemption is essential to the state regulatory scheme. Pp. 425-426, and n.6.

532 F. 2d 431, affirmed.

BRENNAN, J., announced the judgment of the Court and delivered the opinion of the Court with respect to Part I, in which BURGER, C.J., and MARSHALL, POWELL, and STEVENS, JJ., joined; and an opinion with respect to Parts II and III, in which MARSHALL, POWELL, and STEVENS, JJ., joined. MARSHALL, J., filed a concurring opinion, post, p. 417. BURGER, C.J., filed an opinion concurring in part and concurring in the judgment, post, p. 418. STEWART, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which WHITE and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined, and in all but Part II-B of which BLACKMUN, J., joined, post, p. 426. BLACKMUN, J., filed a dissenting opinion, post, p. 441.

Counsel: Jerome A. Hochberg argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were James F. Fairman, Jr., and Ivor C. Armistead III.

Andrew P. Carter argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief was William T. Tete.

William T. Crisp argued the cause for the National Rural Electric Cooperative Assn. et al. as amici curiae urging affirmance. With him on the brief were Robert D. Tisinger, James H. Eddleman, J. J. Davidson, Jr., C. Pinckney Roberts, and B. D. St. Clair. *

Judges: Burger, Brennan, Stewart, White, Marshall, Blackmun, [****6] Powell, Rehnquist, Stevens

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

---

[*391] [*369] [**1125] MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court (Part I), together with an opinion (Parts II and III), in which MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, MR. JUSTICE POWELL, and MR. JUSTICE STEVENS joined.

Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943), held that the HN1 federal antitrust laws do not prohibit a State "as sovereign" from imposing certain anticompetitive restraints "as an act of government." The question in this case is the extent to which the antitrust laws prohibit a State's cities from imposing such anticompetitive restraints.

Petitioner cities are organized under the laws of the State of Louisiana,<sup>1</sup> which grant them power to own and operate electric utility systems both within and beyond their city limits.<sup>2</sup> Petitioners brought this action in the District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, alleging that, among others,<sup>3</sup> Louisiana Power & Light Co. (LP&L), an investor-owned electric service utility with which petitioners compete [*392] in [**1126] the areas beyond their city limits,<sup>4</sup> committed various antitrust offenses which injured petitioners in the operation [****7] of their electric utility [***370] systems.<sup>5</sup> LP&L counterclaimed, seeking damages and injunctive relief for various antitrust offenses which petitioners had allegedly committed and which injured it in its business and property.<sup>6</sup>

---

* Solicitor General McCree, Acting Assistant Attorney General Shenefield, and Barry Grossman filed a brief for the United States as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

Frederick T. Searls and Michael P. Graney filed a brief for the Columbus and Southern Ohio Electric Co. et al. as amici curiae.

<sup>1</sup> See La. Const. Art. 6, §§ 2, 7\(A\) (effective Jan. 1, 1975); La. Const., Art. XIV, § 40(d) (1921) (effective prior to Jan. 1, 1975); see generally La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 33:621, 33:361, 33:506 (West 1951).

<sup>2</sup> La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33:1326 (West 1951); §§ 33:4162, 33:4163 (West 1966).

<sup>3</sup> The complaint named as parties defendant Middle-South Utilities, Inc., a Florida corporation of which LP&L is a subsidiary, Central Louisiana Electric Co., Inc., and Gulf States Utilities, Louisiana and Texas corporations respectively, engaged in the generation, transmission, and sale of electric power at wholesale and retail in Louisiana.

<sup>4</sup> LP&L does not allege that it directly competes with the city of Lafayette, but does allege that the city of Plaquemine imposed tying arrangements which injured it. See Respondent's Second Amended Counterclaim, App. 33-34; Affidavit of J. M. Wyatt, Senior Vice President of LP&L, Id., at 37.

<sup>5</sup> Petitioners' complaint charged that the defendants conspired to restrain trade and attempted to monopolize and have monopolized the generation, transmission, and distribution of electric power by preventing the construction and operation of

[****8]

[****9]

Petitioners moved to dismiss the counterclaim on the ground that, as cities and subdivisions of the State of Louisiana, the "state action" doctrine of Parker v. Brown, rendered federal antitrust laws inapplicable to them. The District Court granted the motion, holding that the decision of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in Saenz v. University Interscholastic League, 487 F. 2d 1026 \(1973\), [****10] required dismissal, notwithstanding that "[t]hese plaintiff cities are engaging in what is clearly a business activity ... in which a profit is realized," and "for this reason ... this court is reluctant to [*393] hold that the antitrust laws do not apply to any state activity." <sup>7</sup> App. 47 (emphasis in original). The District Court in this case read Saenz to interpret the "state action" exemption <sup>8</sup> as requiring the "holding that purely state government activities are not subject to the requirements of the antitrust laws of the United States," App. 48, thereby making petitioners' status as cities determinative against maintenance of antitrust suits against them. The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed and remanded for further proceedings. <sup>9</sup> 532 F. 2d 431 \(1976\). The Court of Appeals noted that the District Court had acted before this Court's decision in Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773 \(1975\), and held that "taken together" Parker v. Brown and Goldfarb [**371] "require the following analysis":S"A subordinate state governmental body is not ipso facto exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws. Rather, a district court [****11] must ask whether the state [**1127] legislature contemplated a certain type of anticompetitive restraint. In our opinion, though, HN2 it is not necessary to point to an [*394] express statutory mandate for each act which is alleged to violate the antitrust laws. It will suffice if the challenged activity was clearly within the legislative intent. Thus, a trial judge may ascertain, from the authority given a governmental entity to operate in a particular area, that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of. On the other hand, as in Goldfarb, the connection between a legislative grant of power and the subordinate entity's asserted use of that power may be too tenuous to permit the conclusion that the entity's intended scope of activity encompassed such conduct. HN3 Whether a governmental body's actions are comprehended within the powers granted to it by the legislature is, of course, a determination which can be made only under the specific facts in each case. A district judge's inquiry on this point should be broad enough to include all evidence which might show the scope of legislative intent." 532 F.2d, at 434-435 (footnotes omitted).l

We [****12] granted certiorari, 430 U.S. 944 (1977). We affirm.

competing utility systems, by improperly refusing to wheel power, by foreclosing supplies from markets served by defendants, by engaging in boycotts against petitioners, and by utilizing sham litigation and other improper means to prevent the financing of construction of electric generation facilities beneficial to petitioners.

<sup>6</sup>The counterclaim, as amended, alleged that the petitioners, together with a nonparty electric cooperative, had conspired to engage in sham litigation against LP&L to prevent the financing with the purpose and effect of delaying or preventing the construction of a nuclear electric-generating plant, to eliminate competition within the municipal boundaries by use of covenants in their respective debentures, to exclude competition in certain markets by using long-term supply agreements, and to displace LP&L in certain areas by requiring customers of LP&L to purchase electricity from petitioners as a condition of continued water and gas service.

<sup>7</sup>Saenz was a treble-damages action by a slide-rule manufacturer who alleged a conspiracy between a state agency, the University Interscholastic League(UIL), its director, and a private competitor of Saenz to effect the rejection of Saenz products for use in interscholastic competition among Texas public schools. In Saenz the Court of Appeals affirmed the District Court's dismissal of the action against the UIL and its director on the ground that as a state agency and a state official, they were not answerable under the Sherman Act.

<sup>8</sup>The word "exemption" is commonly used by courts as a shorthand expression for Parker' s holding that the Sherman Act was not intended by Congress to prohibit the anticompetitive restraints imposed by California in that case.

<sup>9</sup>In entering its order dismissing the counterclaim, the District Court made an express determination that there was no just reason for delay and expressly directed the entry of judgment for plaintiffs pursuant to Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 54\(b\). This action designated the dismissal as a final appealable order. See Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Wetzel, 424 U.S. 737, 742-743 \(1976\).

[****13] I

LEdHN/1A[] [1A]Petitioners' principal argument is that "since a city is merely a subdivision of a state and only exercises power delegated to it by the state, Parker's findings regarding the congressionally intended scope of the Sherman Act apply with equal force to such political subdivisions." Brief for Petitioners 5. Before addressing this question, however, we shall address the contention implicit in petitioners' arguments in their brief that, apart from the question of their exemption as agents of the State under the Parker doctrine, Congress never intended to subject local governments to the antitrust laws.

A

The antitrust laws impose liability on and create a cause of action for damages for a "person" or "persons" as defined in [*395] the Acts.<sup>10</sup> Since the [***372] Court has held that HN4[] the definition of "person" or "persons" embraces both cities and States, it is understandable that the cities do not argue that they are not "persons" within the meaning of the antitrust laws.

[****14] Section 8 of the Sherman Act, ch. 647, 26 Stat. 210, 15 U.S.C. § 7 (1976 ed.), and § 1 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, 15 U.S.C. § 12 (1976 ed.), HN5[] are general definitional sections which define "person" or "persons," "wherever used in this [Act] . . . to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, the laws of any of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country."<sup>11</sup> Section 4 of the [**1128] Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U.S.C. § 15 (1976 ed.), provides, [*396] in pertinent part, that "[a]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court . . . , and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained. . . ." <sup>12</sup>

[***15]

Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U.S. 390 (1906), held that a municipality is a "person" within the meaning of § 8 of the Sherman Act, the general definitional section, and that the city of Atlanta therefore could maintain a treble-damages action under § 7, the predecessor of § 4 of the Clayton Act,<sup>13</sup> against a supplier from <sup>10</sup> The word "person" or "persons" is used repeatedly in the antitrust statutes. For examples, see 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1976 ed.) ("Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . ."); 15 U.S.C. § 2 (1976 ed.) ("Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . ."); 15 U.S.C. § 3 (1976 ed.) ("Every person [making a contract or engaging in a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade in any Territory or the District of Columbia] shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . ."); 15 U.S.C. § 7 (1976 ed.) (defining the word "person" or "persons"); 15 U.S.C. § 8 (1976 ed.) (declaring illegal every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade by persons or corporations engaged in importing articles into the United States, and providing that any person so engaged shall be guilty of a misdemeanor).

<sup>11</sup> Section 8 of the Sherman Act provides in full:

HN6[] "That the word 'person,' or 'persons,' wherever used in this act shall be deemed to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, the laws of any of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country."

Section 8 has remained unchanged since its enactment in 1890.

Section 1 of the Clayton Act defines the word "person" or "persons" in language identical to that of § 8 of the Sherman Act, and it also has remained unchanged since its enactment in 1914.

<sup>12</sup> Section 4 is quoted in full in n. 13, infra.

<sup>13</sup> Section 7 of the Sherman Act, ch. 647, 26 Stat. 210 (1890) (repealed in 1955), provided in full:

whom the city purchased water pipe which it used to furnish water as a municipal utility service. Some 36 years later, Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159 \(1942\), held that the words "any person" in § 7 of the Sherman Act included States. Under that decision, the State of Georgia was permitted to bring an action in its own name charging injury from a combination to fix prices and suppress competition \*\*\*373 in the market for asphalt which the [\[\*397\]](#) State purchased annually for use in the construction of public roads. The Court reasoned that "[n]othing in the Act, its history, or [\[\*\*\*\*16\]](#) its policy, could justify so restrictive a construction of the word 'person' in § 7 as to exclude a State." 316 U.S., at 162.

[\[\*\*\*\*17\]](#) [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) ↑ [1B] Although both Chattanooga Foundry and Georgia v. Evans involved the public bodies as plaintiffs, whereas petitioners in the instant case are defendants to a counterclaim, the basis of those decisions plainly precludes a reading of "person" or "persons" to include municipal utility operators that sue as plaintiffs but not to include such municipal operators when sued as defendants. Thus, the conclusion that the antitrust laws are not to be construed as meant by Congress to subject cities to liability under the antitrust laws must rest on the impact of some overriding public policy which negates the construction of coverage, and not upon a reading of "person" or "persons" as not including them.<sup>14</sup>

[\[\*\*\*\*18\]](#) B

[\[\*\*1129\]](#) [LEdHN\[2A\]](#) ↑ [2A] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) ↑ [3] Petitioners suggest several reasons why, in addition to their arguments for exemption as agents of the State under the Parker doctrine, a congressional purpose not to subject cities [\[\*398\]](#) to the antitrust laws should be inferred. Those arguments, like the Parker exemption itself, necessarily must be considered in light of the presumption against implied exclusions from coverage under the antitrust laws.

(1)

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) ↑ [4A] The purposes and intended scope of the Sherman Act have been developed in prior cases and require only brief mention here. Commenting upon the language of the Act in rejecting a claim that the insurance business was excluded from coverage, the Court stated: "Language more comprehensive is difficult to conceive. On its face it shows a carefully studied attempt to bring within the Act every person engaged in business whose activities might restrain or monopolize commercial intercourse among the states." United States v. South-Eastern

"Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act, may sue therefor in any circuit court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover three fold the damages by him sustained, and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides in full:

HNT ↑ "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

Section 4 has remained unchanged since its enactment in 1914. It is made applicable to all of the antitrust statutes by § 1 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 12 \(1976 ed.\).

<sup>14</sup> When Congress wished to exempt municipal service operations from the coverage of the antitrust laws, it has done so without ambiguity. The Act of May 26, 1938, ch. 283, 52 Stat. 446, 15 U.S.C. § 13c \(1976 ed.\), grants a limited exemption to certain not-for-profit institutions for "purchases of their supplies for their own use" from the provisions of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U.S.C. §§ 13 to 13b and 21a \(1976 ed.\), which otherwise make it unlawful for a supplier to grant, or for an institution to induce, a discriminatory discount with respect to such supplies. Congress expressly included public libraries in this exemption. (Public libraries are, by definition, operated by local government. See 1 U.S. Office of Education, Biennial Surveys of Education in the United States, ch. 8 (Library Service 1938-1940), p. 27 (1947); 2 U.S. Office of Education, ch. 2 (Statistical Summary of Education, 1941-1942), p. 38; 32 Am. Library Assn. Bull. 272 (1938).

435 U.S. 389, *398; 98 S. Ct. 1123, **1129; 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, ***373; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 19, ****18

Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 553 (1944). That and subsequent HN8[] cases reviewing the legislative history of the Sherman Act have concluded [****19] that Congress, exercising the full extent of its constitutional power,<sup>15</sup> sought to establish a regime of competition as the [***374] fundamental principle governing commerce in this country.<sup>16</sup>

[****20] LEdHN5[] [5]For this reason, HN9[] our cases have held that even when Congress by subsequent legislation establishes a regulatory regime over an area of commercial activity, the antitrust laws will not be displaced unless it appears that the antitrust and regulatory provisions are plainly repugnant. E.g., United States v. First National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 350-351, and n. 28 (1963) (collecting cases). The presumption against repeal by implication reflects the understanding that the antitrust laws establish overarching and fundamental policies, a principle which argues with equal force against implied exclusions. See Goldfarb, 421 U.S., at 786-788.

Two policies have been held sufficiently weighty to override the presumption against implied exclusions from coverage of the antitrust laws. In Eastern Railroad Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127 (1961), the Court held that, regardless of anticompetitive purpose or intent, a concerted effort by persons to influence lawmakers to enact legislation beneficial to themselves or detrimental to competitors was not within the scope of the antitrust laws. Although [****21] there is nothing in the language of the statute or its history which would indicate that Congress considered such an exclusion, the impact of two correlative principles was held to require the conclusion that the presumption should not support a finding of coverage. The first is that a contrary construction would impede the open communication between the polity and its lawmakers which is vital to the functioning of a representative democracy. Second, "and of at least equal significance," is the threat to the constitutionally protected right of petition which a contrary construction would entail. Id., at 137-138.<sup>17</sup>

[****22] [*400] Parker [**1130] v. Brown<sup>18</sup> identified a second overriding policy, namely that "[i]n a dual system of government in [***375] which, under the Constitution, the states are sovereign, save only as Congress may constitutionally subtract from their authority, an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress." 317 U.S., at 351.

Common to the two implied exclusions was potential conflict with policies of signal importance in our national traditions and governmental structure of federalism. Even then, however, the recognized exclusions have been unavailing to prevent antitrust enforcement which, though implicating those fundamental policies, was not thought

<sup>15</sup> See Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 229-235 (1948).

<sup>16</sup> LEdHN4B[] [4B]

"Antitrust laws in general, and the Sherman Act in particular, are the Magna Carta of free enterprise. They are as important to the preservation of economic freedom and our free-enterprise system as the Bill of Rights is to the protection of our fundamental personal freedoms. And the freedom guaranteed each and every business, no matter how small, is the freedom to compete -- to assert with vigor, imagination, devotion, and ingenuity whatever economic muscle it can muster." United States v. Topco Associates, 405 U.S. 596, 610 (1972).

<sup>17</sup> See also Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669-672 (1965). Pennington held that, regardless of the anticompetitive purpose or effect on small competing mining companies, the joint action of certain large mining companies and labor unions in lobbying before the Secretary of Labor in favor of legislation establishing a minimum wage for employees of contractors selling coal to the Tennessee Valley Authority and in lobbying before TVA to avoid coal purchases exempted from the legislation was not subject to antitrust attack. Cases subsequent to Pennington have emphasized the possible constitutional infirmity in the antitrust laws that a contrary construction would entail in light of the serious threat to First Amendment freedoms that would have been presented. See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 707-708 (1962); California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 516 (1972) (STEWART, J., concurring in judgment).

<sup>18</sup> See also Olsen v. Smith, 195 U.S. 332, 344-345 (1904).

severely to impinge upon them. See, e.g., *Goldfarb, supra*; *California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508 \(1972\)*.

Petitioners' arguments [****23] therefore cannot prevail unless they demonstrate that there are countervailing policies which are sufficiently weighty to overcome the presumption. We now turn to a consideration of whether, apart from the question of their exemption as agents of the State under the Parker doctrine, petitioners have made that showing.

(2)

Petitioners argue that their exclusion must be inferred because it would be anomalous to subject municipalities to the criminal and civil liabilities imposed upon violators of the antitrust laws. The short answer is that it has not been regarded as anomalous to require compliance by municipalities with the substantive standards of other federal laws which impose such sanctions upon "persons." See *Union Pacific R. I\*401 Co. v. United States, 313 U.S. 450 \(1941\)*.<sup>19</sup> See generally [**1131] *Ohio v. Helvering, 292 U.S. 360, 370 \(1934\)*;<sup>20</sup> [***376] *California v. United*

---

<sup>19</sup> Union Pacific considered the applicability to a city of § 1 of the Elkins Act, 32 Stat. 847, as amended, 34 Stat. 587, 49 U.S.C. § 41 (1). That statute, in definitional language similar to that used in § 8 of the Sherman Act, makes it unlawful for "any person, persons, or corporation to offer, grant, or give, or to solicit, accept, or receive any rebate, concession, or discrimination in respect to the transportation of any property in interstate or foreign commerce by any [covered] common carrier...." (Emphasis added.) Kansas City, Kan. (hereinafter Kansas), decided to develop its Public Levee as a metropolitan rail food terminal with wholesale and retail produce markets. Kansas constructed, operated, and owned the market, financing the development with municipal revenue bonds.

Another city, Kansas City, Mo. (hereinafter Missouri), also operated a rail food terminal within the same metropolitan area. Because Kansas believed that there was insufficient business in the metropolitan area to support both markets, it developed a plan to induce Missouri produce dealers to lease its facilities by offering cash payments and temporary reduction or abatement of rent. These payments exceeded the amounts needed to compensate the merchants for the costs of moving, settlement of existing leases, and disruption to business. Kansas adopted the payment plan by resolution, and its legality under Kansas law was sustained by the Kansas Supreme Court in a quo warranto proceeding. *State ex rel. Parker v. Kansas City, 151 Kan. 1, 97 P.2d 104, 98 P.2d 101 \(1939\)*.

The Missouri terminal was served by a number of railroads, but the Kansas terminal was served virtually exclusively by the Union Pacific Railroad. As merchants moved from Missouri to Kansas, the Union Pacific's traffic necessarily increased while that of the other railroads shrank. The United States charged that the effect of Kansas' concessions to merchants was to permit them to ship produce over the Union Pacific more cheaply than on the competing railroads serving the Missouri terminal and, in effect, amounted to a rebate from Union Pacific's tariffs. The District Court permanently enjoined Kansas from giving cash or rental credits to Missouri dealers to move or for moving to Kansas.

On appeal to this Court, Kansas argued that because the concessions were lawful under state law, it could not be enjoined from making them, and the United States argued that the municipality was a "person" within the meaning of the statute and therefore subject to the Act on the same terms as a private corporation. See Brief for Appellants, O.T. 1940, No. 594, pp. 233-235, 244-256; Brief for United States, O.T. 1940, No. 594, p. 72. See generally *id. at 59-68, 69-75*.

The Court held that the municipality was a "person" subject to the Act, and, with a modification not important here, upheld the permanent injunction against it. Mr. Justice Roberts, in dissent, made the argument made by the cities here, that the statutory phrase "every person" was not sufficiently specific to justify the conclusion that Congress wished to subject municipal corporations and their officers to the criminal penalties for which the Act provided. It is significant that the cities' argument was rejected in the context of the antirebate provisions of the Elkins Act, a statute which essentially is an antitrust provision serving the same purposes as the anti-price-discrimination provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act. Accord, Slater, Antitrust and Government Action: A Formula For Narrowing Parker v. Brown, 69 Nw. U.L. Rev. 71, 89 n. 100 (1974).

<sup>20</sup> Ohio v. Helvering sustained a federal tax liability imposed upon the State of Ohio in its business as a distributor of alcoholic beverages. The statute, Rev. Stat. § 3244 (1878), imposed a tax upon "[e]very person who sells or offers for sale [alcoholic beverages]." The applicable definitional section, Rev. Stat. § 3140 (1878), provided: "[W]here not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof, the word 'person,' as used in this title, shall be construed to mean and include

435 U.S. 389, *401; 98 S. Ct. 1123, **1131; 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, ***376; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 19, ****23

States, 320 U.S. 577 (1944).<sup>21</sup> But those cases do not [*402] necessarily require the conclusion that remedies appropriate to redress violations by private corporations would be equally appropriate for municipalities; nor need we decide any [****24] question of remedy in this case.<sup>22</sup>

[****25]

[****26]

[*403] Petitioners next argue that the antitrust laws are intended to protect the public only from abuses of private power and not from actions of municipalities that exist to serve the public weal.

Petitioners' contention that their goal is not [****27] private profit but public service is only partly correct. Every business enterprise, public or private, operates its business in furtherance of its own goals. In the case of a municipally owned utility, that goal is likely to be, broadly speaking, the benefit of its citizens. But the economic choices made by public corporations in the conduct of their business affairs, designed as they are to assure maximum benefits for the community constituency, are not inherently more likely to comport with the broader interests of national [***377] economic well-being than are those of private corporations acting in furtherance of the interests of the organization and its shareholders. The allegations of the counterclaim, which for present purposes we accept as true,<sup>23</sup> aptly [**1132] illustrate the impact which local governments, acting as providers of services, may have on other individuals and business enterprises with which they interrelate as purchasers, suppliers, and sometimes, as here, as competitors.<sup>24</sup>

[****28]

LEdHN[6A] [6A]LP&L alleged that the city of Plaquemine contracted to provide LP&L's electric customers outside its city limits gas and water service only on condition that the customers purchase [*404] electricity from the city and not from LP&L.<sup>25</sup> The effect of such a tie-in is twofold. First, the tying contract might injure former LP&L customers in two ways. The net effect of the tying contract might be to increase the cost of electric service to these customers. Moreover, a municipality conceivably might charge discriminatorily higher rates to such captive customers outside its jurisdiction without a cost justified basis. Both of these practices would provide maximum benefits for its constituents, while diserving the interests of the affected [****29] customers. Second, the practice would necessarily have an impact on the regulated public utility whose service is displaced.<sup>26</sup> The elimination of a partnership, association, company, or corporation, as well as a natural person." Helvering stated that "[w]hether the word 'person' or 'corporation' includes a state or the United States depends upon the connection in which the word is found," 292 U.S. at 370, and held that "the state itself, when it becomes a dealer in intoxicating liquors, falls within the reach of the tax either as a 'person' under the statutory extension of that word to include a corporation, or as a 'person' without regard to such extension."

Id., at 371.

<sup>21</sup> California held that a city and State are subject to §§ 16 and 17 of the Shipping Act, 1916, 39 Stat. 734, as amended, 46 U.S.C. §§ 815, 816, making unlawful certain practices of "person[s]," defined by § 1, 46 U.S.C. § 801, as including "corporations, partnerships, and associations, existing under or authorized by the laws of the United States, or any State. . . ."

<sup>22</sup> The question of remedy can arise only if the District Court, on the Court of Appeals remand, determines that petitioners' activities are prohibited by the antitrust laws.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 740 (1976). We use the allegations of the counterclaim only as a ready and convenient example of the kinds of activities in which a municipality may engage in the operation of its utility business which would have an anticompetitive effect transcending its municipal borders.

<sup>24</sup> See generally Duke & Co. v. Foerster, 521 F. 2d 1277 (CA3 1975); New Mexico v. American Petrofina, Inc., 501 F. 2d 363 (CA9 1974); Hecht v. Pro-Football, Inc., 144 U.S. App. D.C. 56, 444 F. 2d 931 (1971).

<sup>25</sup> See Respondent's Second Amended Counterclaim, App. 33.

<sup>26</sup> LEdHN[6B] [6B]

customers in an established service area would likely reduce revenues, and possibly require abandonment or loss of existing equipment the effect of which would be to reduce its rate base and possibly affect its capital structure. The surviving customers and the investor-owners would bear the brunt of these consequences. The decision to displace existing service, rather than being made on the basis of efficiency in the distribution of services, may be made by the municipality in the interest of realizing maximum benefits to itself without regard to extra-territorial impact and regional efficiency.<sup>27</sup>

[****30]

[*405] The second allegation of LP&L's counterclaim,<sup>28</sup> is that petitioners conspired with others to engage in sham and frivolous litigation against [***378] LP&L before various federal agencies<sup>29</sup> and federal courts for the purpose, and with the effect, of delaying approval and construction of LP&L's proposed nuclear electric generating plant. It is alleged that this course of conduct was designed to deprive LP&L of needed financing and to impose delay costs, amounting to $ 180 million, which would effectively block construction of the proposed project. Such activity may benefit the citizens of Plaquemine and Lafayette by eliminating a competitive [****31] threat to expansion of the municipal utilities in still undeveloped areas beyond the cities' territorial limits. But that kind of activity, if truly anticompetitive,<sup>30</sup> may impose enormous unnecessary costs on the potential customers of the nuclear generating facility both within and beyond the [**1133] cities' proposed area of expansion. In addition, it may cause significant injury to LP&L, interfering with its ability to provide expanded service.

[****32] [LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [↑] [7A] [LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [↑] [8A] Another aspect of the public-service argument<sup>31</sup> is that [*406] because government is subject to political control, the welfare of its citizens is assured through the political process and that federal antitrust regulation is therefore unnecessary. The argument that consumers dissatisfied with the service provided by the municipal utilities may seek redress through the political process is without merit. While petitioners recognize, as they must, that those consumers living outside the municipality who are forced to take municipal service have no political recourse at the municipal level, they argue nevertheless that the customers may take their complaints to the state legislature. It fairly may be questioned whether the consumers in question or the Florida corporation of which LP&L is a subsidiary have a meaningful chance of influencing the state legislature to outlaw on an ad hoc basis whatever anticompetitive practices petitioners may direct against them from time to time. More fundamentally, however, that argument cuts far too broadly; the same argument may be made regarding anticompetitive activity in which any corporation [****33] engages. Mulcted consumers and unfairly displaced

As one commentator has noted, our cases indicate that the protection against injury to the buyer is only one purpose of the rule against tying arrangements. Equally important is the need to protect competing sellers from competition unrelated to the merits of the product involved, and, concomitantly, to protect the market from distortion. Turner, The Validity of Tying Arrangements Under the Antitrust Laws, 72 Harv. L. Rev. 50, 60 (1958).

<sup>27</sup> While the investor-owned utilities in Louisiana are subject to regulation by the Louisiana Public Utilities Commission, municipally owned utilities are not subject to the jurisdiction of the PUC and hence apparently need not conform their expansion policies to whatever plans the PUC might deem advisable for coordinating service. See n. 44, infra.

<sup>28</sup> See Respondent's Answer & Counterclaim, App. 18-20.

<sup>29</sup> The counterclaim alleged that petitioners engaged in sham litigation before the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Federal Power Commission, the Atomic Energy Commission, and the United States Department of Justice.

<sup>30</sup> See generally California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508 \(1972\).

<sup>31</sup> [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [↑] [7B]

Petitioners have urged that the antimonopoly principles of the antitrust laws are inconsistent with the very nature of government operating as a monopoly in the public interest. They suggest that to apply antitrust principles to local governments will necessarily interfere with the execution of governmental programs. We do not agree. Acting as agents at the direction of the State, local governments are free to implement state policies without being subject to the antitrust laws to the same extent as would the State itself. See infra, at 413-417. On the other hand, it would not hinder governmental programs to require that cities authorized to provide services on a monopoly basis refrain from, for example, predatory conduct not itself directed by the State.

competitors may always seek redress through the political process. In enacting the Sherman Act, however, Congress mandated competition as the polestar by which all must be guided in ordering their business affairs. It did not leave this fundamental national policy to the vagaries of the political process, but established a broad policy, to be administered [***379] by neutral courts,<sup>32</sup> which [*407] would guarantee every enterprise the right to exercise "whatever economic muscle it can muster," United States v. Topco Associates, 405 U.S. 596, 610 (1972), without regard to the amount of influence it might have with local or state legislatures.<sup>33</sup>

[****35]

In [**1134] 1972, there were 62,437 different units of local government in this country.<sup>34</sup> Of this number 23,885 were special districts which had a defined goal or goals for the provision of one or several services,<sup>35</sup> while the remaining 38,552 represented [*408] the number of counties, municipalities, [****36] and townships, most of which have broad authority for general governance subject to limitations in one way or another imposed by the State.<sup>36</sup> These units may, and do, participate in and affect the economic life of this Nation in a great number and variety of ways. When these bodies act as owners and providers of services, they are fully capable of aggrandizing other economic units with which they interrelate, with the potential of serious distortion of the rational and efficient allocation of resources, and the efficiency of free markets which the regime of competition embodied in the antitrust laws is thought to engender.<sup>37</sup> If municipalities were free [***380] to make economic choices counseled solely by

<sup>32</sup> [****34] LEdHN[8B] [8B]

"The prohibitions of the Sherman Act were not stated in terms of precision or of crystal clarity and the Act itself did not define them. In consequence of the vagueness of its language, perhaps not uncalculated, [*] the courts have been left to give content to the statute, and in the performance of that function it is appropriate that courts should interpret its word in the light of its legislative history and of the particular evils at which the legislation was aimed. . . ." S

[*]See Debates, 21 Cong. Rec. 2460, 3148; 2 Hoar, Autobiography of Seventy Years 364; Senator Edmunds, The Interstate Trust and Commerce Act of 1890, 194 No. Am. Rev. 801, 813, 'after most careful and earnest consideration by the judiciary Committee of the Senate it was agreed by every member that it was quite impracticable to include by specific description all the acts which should come within the meaning and purpose of the words "trade" and "commerce" or "trust," or the words "restraint" or "monopolize," by precise and all-inclusive definitions; and that these were truly matters for judicial consideration.'

"See also Senator Hoar who with Senator Edmunds probably drafted the bill (see A. H. Walker, History of the Sherman Law (1910), p. 27-28) in 36 Cong. Rec. 522, Jan. 6, 1903: 'We undertook by law to clothe the courts with the power and impose on them and the Department of Justice the duty of preventing all combinations in restraint of trade....'" I

Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 489, and n. 10 (1940).

<sup>33</sup> The political-redress argument could also be made in the context of anticompetitive actions engaged in by the State itself. Our rejection of the argument here is not, however, inconsistent with the Parker doctrine. Parker did not reason that political redress is an adequate substitute for direct enforcement of the antitrust laws. Rather, Parker held that, in the absence of congressional intent to the contrary, a purpose that the antitrust laws be used to strike down the State's regulatory program imposed as an act of government would not be inferred. To the extent that the actions of a State's subdivisions are the actions of the State, the Parker exemption applies. See infra, at 413-417.

<sup>34</sup> 1 U. S. Bureau of the Census, 1972 Census of Governments, Governmental Organization 1 (1973). This figure (62,437) represents the total of county, municipal, township, and special district governments, but does not include the 15,781 independent school districts in the United States which, of course, have a much more narrowly defined range of functions and powers than those of local governmental units generally. See id., at 1-5.

<sup>35</sup> See id., at 4-5.

<sup>36</sup> See id., at 1-3.

<sup>37</sup> See, e. g., Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, supra, at 493-495, n. 15 (reviewing legislative history).

their own parochial interests and without regard to their anticompetitive effects, a serious chink in the armor of antitrust protection would be introduced at odds with the comprehensive national policy Congress established.<sup>38</sup>

[****37]

LEdHN[2B] [↑] [2B] [****38] We conclude that these additional arguments for implying an exclusion for local governments from the antitrust laws must be rejected. We therefore turn to petitioners' principal argument, that "Parker's findings regarding the congressionally intended scope of the Sherman Act apply with equal force to such political subdivisions." Brief for Petitioners 5.

II

Plainly petitioners are in error in arguing that Parker held that HN10 [↑] all governmental entities, whether state agencies or subdivisions of a State, are, simply by reason of their status as such, exempt from the antitrust laws.

Parker v. Brown involved the California Agricultural Prorate [*409] Act enacted by the California Legislature as a program to be enforced "through action of state officials ... to restrict competition among the growers [of raisins] and maintain prices in the distribution of their commodities to packers." 317 U.S., at 346. The Court held that the program was not prohibited by the federal antitrust laws since "nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history . . . suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature, [****39] " id., at 350-351, and "[t]he state . . . as sovereign, imposed the restraint as an act of government which the Sherman Act did not undertake to prohibit." Id., at 352.

Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773 (1975), underscored the significance of Parker's holding that the determinant of the exemption was whether the challenged action was "an act of government" by the State as "[**1135] sovereign." Parker repeatedly emphasized that the anticompetitive effects of California's prorate program derived from "the state[s] command"; the State adopted, organized, and enforced the program "in the execution of a governmental policy."<sup>39</sup> 317 U.S., at 352. Goldfarb, on the other hand, presented the question "whether a minimum-fee schedule for lawyers published by the Fairfax County Bar Association and enforced by the Virginia State Bar," 421 U.S., at 775, violated the Sherman Act. Exemption was claimed on the ground that the Virginia State Bar was "a state agency by law." Id., at 790. The Virginia [***381] Legislature had empowered the Supreme Court of Virginia to regulate the practice of law and [****40] had assigned the State Bar a role in that regulation as an administrative agency of the Virginia Supreme Court. But no Virginia statute referred to lawyers' fees and the Supreme Court of Virginia had taken no action requiring the use of and adherence to minimum [*410] fee schedules. Goldfarb therefore held that it could not be said that the anticompetitive effects of minimum fee schedules were directed by the State acting as sovereign. Id., at 791. The State Bar, though acting within its broad powers, had "voluntarily joined in what is essentially a private anticompetitive activity," id., at 792, and was not executing the mandate of the State. Thus, the actions of the State Bar had failed to meet "[t]he threshold inquiry in determining if an anticompetitive activity is state action of the type the Sherman Act was not meant to proscribe. . . ." Id., at 790. Goldfarb therefore made it clear that, HN11 [↑] for purposes of the Parker doctrine, not every act of a state agency is that of the State as sovereign.

[****41] Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350 (1977), involved the actions of a state agency to which the Parker exemption applied. Bates considered the applicability of the antitrust laws to a ban on attorney advertising directly imposed by the Arizona Supreme Court. In holding the antitrust laws inapplicable, Bates noted that "[t]hat court is the ultimate body wielding the State's power over the practice of law, see Ariz. Const., Art. 3; In re Bailey, 30 Ariz. 407, 248 P. 29 (1926), and, thus, the restraint is 'compelled by direction of the State acting as a sovereign." Id., at 360, quoting Goldfarb, supra, at 791. We emphasized, moreover, the significance to our conclusion of the fact that the state policy requiring the anticompetitive restraint as part of a comprehensive regulatory system, was one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy, and that the State's policy was actively supervised by the State Supreme Court as the policymaker.<sup>40</sup>

<sup>38</sup> See United States v. Topco Associates, 405 U.S., at 610; Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, supra, at 492-495, and n. 15; Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 229-235 (1948).

<sup>39</sup> The state regulatory program involved in Parker furthered an important state interest which was consistent with federal policy. See Parker, 317 U.S., at 352-359.

[****42] [*411] These [***382] [**1136] decisions require rejection of petitioners' proposition that their status as such automatically affords governmental entities the "state action" exemption.<sup>41</sup> Parker's limitation [*412] of the exemption, as applied by Goldfarb and Bates, to "official action directed by [the] state," arises from the basis for the "state action" doctrine -- that given our "dual system of government in which, under the Constitution, the states are sovereign, save only as Congress may constitutionally subtract from their authority," 317 U.S., at 351, a congressional purpose to subject to antitrust control the States' acts of government will not lightly be inferred. To extend that doctrine to municipalities would be inconsistent with that limitation. Cities are not themselves sovereign; they do not receive all the federal deference of the States that create them. See, e.g., Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 667 n. 12 (1974); Lincoln County v. Luning, 133 U.S. 529 (1890) (political subdivisions not protected by Eleventh Amendment from immunity from suit in federal court). Parker's limitation of the exemption to [****43] "official action directed by a state," 317 U.S., at 351, is consistent with the fact that the States' subdivisions generally have not been treated as equivalents of the States themselves.<sup>42</sup> HN12 [↑] In light of the serious

<sup>40</sup> The plurality opinion in Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579 (1976), also analyzed a "state action" exemption claim in terms of whether the challenged anticompetitive action was taken pursuant to state command. Detroit Edison, an electric utility regulated by Michigan, was charged by an independent seller of light bulbs with antitrust violations in the operation of a program which provided light bulbs without extra cost to electricity customers. Detroit Edison, relying on Parker, defended on the ground that the light-bulb program was included in its rate filed with and approved by the State Public Service Commission and that state law required it to follow the terms of the tariff as long as it was in effect. Cantor rejected the claim, holding that since no Michigan statutes regulated the light-bulb industry, and since neither the Michigan Legislature nor the Public Service Commission had passed upon the desirability of such a light-bulb program, the Commission's approval of Detroit Edison's program did not "implement any statewide policy relating to light blubs" and that "the State's policy is neutral on the question whether a utility should, or should not, have such a program." 428 U.S., at 585. THE CHIEF JUSTICE, while not joining all of the plurality opinion, agreed with this analysis. Id., at 604-605.

Cantor's analysis is not, however, necessarily applicable here. Cantor was concerned with whether anticompetitive activity in which purely private parties engaged could, under the circumstances of that case, be insulated from antitrust enforcement. The situation involved here, on the other hand, presents the issue of under what circumstances a State's subdivisions engaging in anticompetitive activities should be deemed to be acting as agents of the State.

<sup>41</sup> Petitioners argue that Goldfarb, like Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., supra, expresses a limitation upon the circumstances under which private parties may be immunized from suit under the antitrust laws. They seek to avoid our holding in Goldfarb by suggesting that the State Bar, although a state agency by law acting in its official capacity, was somehow not a state agency because its official actions in issuing ethical opinions, see 421 U.S., at 791 n. 21, benefited its member-lawyers by discouraging price competition. We think it obvious that the fact that the ancillary effect of the State Bar's policy, or even the conscious desire on its part, may have been to benefit the lawyers it regulated cannot transmute the State Bar's official actions into those of a private organization. In addition to the decision in this case, every other Court of Appeals which has considered the immunity of state instrumentalities after Goldfarb has regarded it as having held that anticompetitive actions of a state instrumentality not compelled by the State acting as sovereign are not immune from the antitrust laws. Fairfax v. Fairfax Hospital Assn., 562 F. 2d 280, 284-285 (CA4 1977); id., at 288 (concurring opinion); Kurek v. Pleasure Driveway & Park Dist., 557 F. 2d 580, 588-591 (CA7 1977), cert. pending, No. 77-440; Duke & Co. v. Foerster, 521 F. 2d at 1280.

The acknowledgment of our Brother STEWART's dissent, post, at 433, that, as noted in Indian Towing Co. v. United States, 350 U.S. 61, 67-68 (1955), "Government is not partly public or partly private, depending upon the governmental pedigree of the type of a particular activity or the manner in which the Government conducts it" (citation omitted), discloses the fallacy of his effort to distinguish Goldfarb on the ground that, although the State Bar was "a state agency for some limited purposes, . . . the price fixing it fostered was for the private benefit of its members and its actions were essentially those of a private professional group." Post, at 431.

economic [***383] dislocation which [*413] could result if cities were free to place their own parochial interests above the Nation's economic goals reflected in the antitrust laws, see supra, at 403-408, we are especially unwilling to [**1137] presume that Congress intended to exclude anticompetitive municipal action from their reach.

[****44] LEdHN[9A][↑] [9A]On the other hand, the fact that municipalities, simply by their status as such, are not within the Parker doctrine, does not necessarily mean that all of their anticompetitive activities are subject to antitrust restraints. HN13[↑] Since "[m]unicipal corporations are instrumentalities of the State for the convenient administration of government within their limits." Louisiana ex rel. Folsom v. Mayor of New Orleans, 109 U.S. 285, 287 (1883), the actions of municipalities may reflect state policy. We therefore conclude that the Parker doctrine exempts only anticompetitive conduct engaged in as an act of government by the State as sovereign, or, by its subdivisions, pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service. There remains the question whether the Court of Appeals erred in holding that further inquiry should be made to determine whether petitioners' actions were directed by the State.

III

LEdHN[9B][↑] [9B] The petitioners and our Brother STEWART's dissent focus their arguments upon the fact that municipalities may exercise the sovereign power of the State, concluding from this that any actions [***45] which municipalities take necessarily reflect state policy and must therefore fall within the Parker doctrine. [*414] But, the fact that the governmental bodies sued are cities, with substantially less than statewide jurisdiction, has significance. When cities, each of the same status under state law, are equally free to approach a policy decision in their own way, the anticompetitive restraints adopted as policy by any one of them, may express its own preference, rather than that of the State.<sup>43</sup> Therefore, HN14[↑] in the absence of evidence that the State authorized or directed a given municipality to act as it did, the actions of a particular city hardly can be found to be pursuant to "the state[s] command," or to be restraints that "the state . . . as sovereign" imposed. 317 U.S., at 352. [***384] The most<sup>44</sup> that could be said is that state policy [**1138] may be neutral. [*415] To permit municipalities to be <sup>43</sup> "While state legislatures exercise extensive power over their constituents and over the various units of local government, the States universally leave much policy and decisionmaking to their governmental subdivisions. Legislators enact many laws but do not attempt to reach those countless matters of local concern necessarily left wholly or partly to those who govern at the local level." Avery v. Midland County, 390 U.S. 474, 481 (1968).

<sup>42</sup> Without explication, our Brother STEWART's dissent states that our "reliance . . . on the basically irrelevant body of law under the Eleventh Amendment" is unfounded. Ibid. Rather, it is the statement that is unfounded. For the longstanding principle, of which Congress in 1890 was well aware, see Lincoln County v. Luning, 133 U.S. 529 (1890), is that political subdivisions are not as such sovereign. Certainly, nothing in National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833 (1976), even remotely suggested the contrary; we search in vain for anything in that case that establishes a constitutional principle of presumptive congressional deference in behalf of cities. Indeed our emphasis today in our conclusion, that municipalities are "exempt" from antitrust enforcement when acting as state agencies implementing state policy to the same extent as the State itself makes it difficult to see how National League of Cities is even tangentially implicated.

Although Avery concluded that the actions of local government are the actions of the State for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment, state action required under Parker has different attributes. Cf. Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 667 n. 12 (1974).

<sup>44</sup> Indeed, state policy may be contrary to that adopted by a political subdivision, yet, for a variety of reasons, might not render the local policy unlawful under state law. For example, a state public utilities commission might adopt, though we are not aware that the Louisiana PUC has done so, a policy prohibiting the specific anticompetitive practices in which the municipality engages, yet be unable to enforce that policy with respect to municipalities because it lacks jurisdiction over them. (The Louisiana PUC, in litigation unrelated to this case, has been held to lack jurisdiction over municipal utility systems whether operating within or without the municipality. City of Monroe v. Louisiana Public Serv. Comm'n, No. 177, 757 -- Div. "I" (19th Jud. Dist. Ct., Sept. 14, 1976).) If that were the case, and assuming that there were no other evidence to the contrary, it would be difficult to say that state policy fosters, much less compels, the anticompetitive practices.

shielded from the antitrust laws in such circumstances would impair the goals Congress sought to achieve by those laws, see supra, at 403-408, without furthering the policy underlying the Parker "exemption." This does not mean, however, that [****46] a political subdivision necessarily must be able to point to a specific, detailed legislative authorization before it properly may assert a Parker defense to an antitrust suit. While a subordinate governmental unit's claim to Parker immunity is not as readily established as the same claim by a state government sued as such, we agree with the Court of Appeals that an adequate state mandate for anticompetitive activities of cities and other subordinate governmental units exists when it is found "from the authority given a governmental entity to operate in a particular area, that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of."<sup>45</sup> 532 F. 2d, at 434.

[****47]

[****48]

HN15 The Parker doctrine, so understood, preserves to the States their freedom under our dual system of federalism to use their municipalities to administer state regulatory policies free of the inhibitions of the federal antitrust laws without at the [*416] same time permitting purely parochial interests to disrupt the Nation's free-market goals.

Our Brother STEWART's dissent argues that the result we reach will "greatly ... impair the ability of a State to delegate governmental power broadly to its municipalities." Post, at 438 (footnote [****49] omitted). That, with respect, is simply hyperbole. Our decision will render a State no less able to allocate governmental power [***385] between itself and its political subdivisions. It means only that when the State itself has not directed or authorized an anticompetitive practice, the State's subdivisions in exercising their delegated power must obey the antitrust laws. The dissent notwithstanding, it is far too late to argue that a State's desire to insulate anticompetitive practices not imposed by it as an act of government falls within the Parker doctrine. Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384 (1951). Moreover, by characterizing the Parker exemption as fully applicable to local governmental units simply by virtue of their status as such, the approach taken by the dissent would hold anticompetitive municipal action free from federal antitrust enforcement even when state statutes specifically provide that municipalities shall be subject to the antitrust laws of the United States. See generally La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33:1334 (G) (West Supp. 1977), quoted in n. 44, supra. That result would be a perversion of federalism. [****50] <sup>46</sup>

Today's decision does not threaten the legitimate exercise of governmental power, nor does it preclude municipal government [*417] from providing services on a monopoly basis. HN16 Parker and its progeny make clear that a State properly may, as States did in Parker and Bates, direct or authorize its instrumentalities to act in a way

Louisiana Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33:1334(G) (West Supp. 1977) provides another illustration of the fact that a particular activity in which a subdivision technically has power to engage does not necessarily conform to, and may conflict with, state policy. Louisiana has authorized municipalities to create intergovernmental commissions as municipal instrumentalities jointly to construct and operate public services including utilities. §§ 33:1324, 33:1331-33:1334 (West Supp. 1977). Such commissions are, by definition, political subdivisions of the State. § 33:1334(D) (West Supp. 1977). Section 1334 (G) nevertheless provides that "[n]othing in this Chapter shall be construed to grant an immunity to or on behalf of any [such] public instrumentality . . . from any antitrust laws of the state or of the United States."

<sup>45</sup> We reject petitioners' fallback position that an antitrust claim will not lie for anticompetitive municipal action which, though not state directed, is lawful under state law. See Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384 (1951); Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 344-351 (1904); cf. Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 313 U.S. 450 (1941) (discussed in n. 19, supra). See also n. 44, supra.

<sup>46</sup> Restating a theme made and rejected before, see Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S., at 640 (STEWART, J., dissenting), our Brother STEWART's dissent, post, at 438-440, likens judicial enforcement of the antitrust laws to a regime of substantive due process used by federal judges to strike down state and municipal economic regulation thought by them unfair. That analogy, of course, ignores the congressional judgment mandating broad scope in enforcement of the antitrust laws and simply reflects the dissent's view that such enforcement with respect to cities is unwise.

which, if it did not reflect state policy, would be inconsistent with the antitrust laws. [****51] Compare Bates with Goldfarb. True, even a lawful monopolist may be subject to antitrust restraints when it seeks to [**1139] extend or exploit its monopoly in a manner not contemplated by its authorization. Cf. Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 377-382 \(1973\).<sup>47</sup> But assuming that the municipality is authorized to provide a service on a monopoly basis, these limitations on municipal action<sup>48</sup> will not hobble the execution of legitimate governmental programs.

[****52] Affirmed.

Concur by: MARSHALL; BURGER (In Part)

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, concurring.

I agree with THE CHIEF JUSTICE, post, at 425-426, that any implied "state action" [***386] "exemption from the antitrust laws should be no broader than is necessary to serve the State's legitimate purposes. I join the plurality opinion, however, because the test there established, relating to whether it is "state policy to displace competition," ante, at 413, incorporates within it the core of THE CHIEF JUSTICE's concern. As the plurality opinion makes clear, it is not enough that the State [*418] "desire[s] to insulate anticompetitive practices." Ante, at 416. For there to be an antitrust exemption, the State must "impose" the practices "as an act of government." Ibid. State action involving more anticompetitive restraint than necessary to effectuate governmental purposes must be viewed as inconsistent with the plurality's approach.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER, concurring in the Court's opinion in Part I and in the judgment.

This case turns, or ought to, on the District Court's explicit conclusion,<sup>1</sup> unchallenged here, that "[t]hese plaintiff cities are engaging in what is [****53] clearly a business activity; activity in which a profit is realized." There is nothing in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 \(1943\), or its progeny, which suggests that a proprietary enterprise with the inherent capacity for economically disruptive anticompetitive effects should be exempt from the Sherman Act merely because it is organized under state law as a municipality. Parker was a case involving a suit against state officials who were administering a state program which had the conceded purpose of replacing competition in a segment of the agricultural market with a regime of governmental regulation. The instant lawsuit is entirely different. It arises because respondent took the perfectly natural step of answering a federal antitrust complaint -- [*419] filed by competitors -- with a counterclaim alleging serious violations of the Sherman Act.

---

<sup>47</sup> While the majority and dissent disagreed in Otter Tail over whether the specific practices of which plaintiffs complained could be regarded as unlawful anticompetitive restraints in light of the existence of federal regulation, there was agreement that a lawful monopolist could violate the antitrust laws. Compare 410 U.S., at 377-382 with id., at 390-391, n. 7 (STEWART, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

<sup>48</sup> It may be that certain activities which might appear anticompetitive when engaged in by private parties, take on a different complexion when adopted by a local government. See generally Posner, The Proper Relationship Between State Regulation and the Federal Antitrust Laws, 49 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 693, 705 (1974).

<sup>1</sup> The District Court did not, of course, make a formal finding of fact to this effect since the counterclaim was disposed of on the basis of pleadings. Nonetheless, the District Court could reasonably conclude, as a matter of law, that these Cities are engaging in business activities which have as their aim the production of revenues in excess of costs. It certainly is the case that the Cities are attempting to provide a public service, but it is likewise undeniable that they seek to do so in the most profitable way. The Cities allege in their complaint, for example, that they have "been prevented from profitably expanding their businesses." App. 14. While it is correct that the Cities are ordinarily constrained from applying their net earnings as a private corporation would, this does not detract from their competitive posture and resulting incentive to engage in anticompetitive practices.

[****54] There is nothing in this record to support any assumption other than that this is an ordinary dispute among competitors in the same market. It is true that petitioners are municipalities, but we should not ignore the reality that this is the only difference between [**1140] the Cities and any other entrepreneur in the economic community. Indeed, the injuries alleged in petitioners' complaint read as a litany of economic woes suffered by a business which has been unfairly treated by a competitor: S

"As a direct and proximate result of the unlawful conduct hereinabove alleged, plaintiffs have: (1) been prevented from and continue to be prevented from profitably expanding their businesses; (2) lost [***387] and continue to lose the profits which would have resulted from the operation of an expanded, more efficient and lower cost business; (3) been deprived of and continue to be deprived of economies in the financing and operation of their systems; (4) sustained and continue to sustain losses in the value of their businesses and properties; and (5) incurred and continue to incur excessive costs and expenses they otherwise would not have incurred." App. 14. (Emphasis added. [****55] ) I

It strikes me as somewhat remarkable to suggest that the same Congress which "meant to deal comprehensively and effectively with the evils resulting from contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade," Atlantic Cleaner & Dyers, Inc. v. United States, 286 U.S. 427, 435 \(1932\), would have allowed these petitioners to complain of such economic damage while baldly asserting that any similar harms they might unleash upon competitors or the economy are absolutely beyond the purview of federal law. To allow the defense asserted by the petitioners in this case would inject a wholly arbitrary variable into a "fundamental national economic policy," [*420] Carnation Co. v. Pacific Conference, 383 U.S. 213, 218 \(1966\), which strongly disfavors immunity from its scope. See United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 350-351 \(1963\); California v. FPC, 369 U.S. 482, 485 \(1962\).

As I indicated, concurring in Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 604 \(1976\), "in interpreting Parker, the Court has heretofore focused on the challenged activity, not upon the identity of the parties to the suit. [****56]" Such an approach is surely logical in light of the fact that the Congress which passed the Sherman Act very likely never considered the kinds of problems generated by Parker and the cases which have arisen in its wake. E.g., Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350 \(1977\); Cantor, supra; Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773 \(1975\); see Slater, Antitrust and Government Action: A Formula for Narrowing Parker v. Brown, 69 Nw. U.L. Rev. 71, 84 (1974). It is even more dubious to assume that the Congress specifically focused its attention on the possible liability of a utility operated by a subdivision of a State. Not only were the States generally considered free to regulate commerce within their own borders, see, e.g., United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1 \(1895\); Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U.S. 1 \(1888\), but manufacturing enterprises, in and of themselves, were not taken to be interstate commerce. Id. at 20.

By the time Parker was decided, however, this narrow view of "interstate commerce" had broadened via the "affection doctrine" to include intrastate events which had a sufficient [****57] effect on interstate commerce. See NLRB v. Fainblatt, 306 U.S. 601, 605, and n. 1 \(1939\); cf. Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 743 \(1976\). Given this development, [***388] and the Court's interpretation of "person" or "persons" in the Sherman Act to include States and municipalities, ante, at 394-397, along with the trend of allowing the reach of the Sherman Act to expand with broadening conceptions of congressional power under the Commerce Clause, see [*421] Rex Hospital Trustees, supra, at 743 n. 2, one might reasonably wonder how the Court reached its result in Parker.

[**1141] The holding in Parker is perfectly understandable, though, in light of the historical period in which the case was decided. The Court had then but recently emerged from the era of substantive due process, and was undoubtedly not eager to commence a new round of invalidating state regulatory laws on federal principles. See Verkuil, State Action, Due Process and Antitrust: Reflections on Parker v. Brown, 75 Colum. L. Rev. 328, 331-334 (1975). Responding to this concern, the Parker Court's interpretation of legislative [****58] intent reflects a "policy[ ] of signal importance in our national traditions and governmental structure of federalism." Ante, at 400. S"In a dual system of government in which, under the Constitution, the states are sovereign, save only as Congress may constitutionally subtract from their authority, an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress." Parker, 317 U.S., at 351. I

The Parker decision was thus firmly grounded on principles of federalism, the ambit of its inquiry into congressional purpose being defined by the Court's view of the requirements of "a dual system of government."<sup>2</sup>

[****59] This mode of analysis is as sound today as it was then, and I am surprised that neither the plurality opinion nor the dissents focus their attention on this aspect of Parker. Indeed, [*422] it is even more puzzling that so much judicial energy is expended here on deciding a question not presented by the parties or by the facts of this case: that is, to what extent the Sherman Act impinges generally upon the monopoly powers of state and local governments. As I suggested at the outset, the issue here is whether the Sherman Act reaches the proprietary enterprises of municipalities.<sup>3</sup>

The answer to the question presented ought not [****60] to be so difficult. When Parker was decided there was certainly no question that a State's operation of a common carrier, even without profit and as a "public function," would be subject to federal [***389] regulation under the Commerce Clause. United States v. California, 297 U.S. 175, 183-186 (1936) ("[W]e think it unimportant to say whether the state conducts its railroad in its 'sovereign' or in its 'private' capacity." Id., at 183); see Parden v. Terminal R. Co., 377 U.S. 184, 189-193 (1964); California v. Taylor, 353 U.S. 553, 568 (1957). Likewise, it had been held in Ohio v. Helvering, 292 U.S. 360 (1934), that a State, upon engaging in business, became subject to a federal statute imposing a tax on those dealing in intoxicating liquors, although States were not specifically mentioned in the statute. In short, the Court had already recognized, for purposes of federalism, the difference between a State's entrepreneurial personality and a sovereign's decision - - as in Parker -- to replace competition with regulation.<sup>4</sup>

[****61] [*423] I [**1142] see nothing in the last 35 years to question this conclusion. In fact, the Court's recent decision in National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833 (1976), which rekindled a commitment to tempering the Commerce Clause power with the limits imposed by our structure of government, employs language strikingly similar to the words of Mr. Chief Justice Stone in Parker: S"It is one thing to recognize the authority of Congress to enact laws regulating individual businesses necessarily subject to the dual sovereignty of the government of the Nation and of the State in which they reside. It is quite another to uphold a similar exercise of congressional authority directed, not to private citizens, but to States as States. We have repeatedly recognized that there are attributes of sovereignty attaching to every state government which may not be impaired by Congress, not because Congress may lack an affirmative grant of legislative authority to reach the matter, but because the Constitution prohibits it from exercising the authority in that manner." 426 U.S., at 845.I

<sup>2</sup> Our conceptions of the limits imposed by federalism are bound to evolve, just as our understanding of Congress' power under the Commerce Clause has evolved. Consequently, since we find it appropriate to allow the ambit of the Sherman Act to expand with evolving perceptions of congressional power under the Commerce Clause, a similar process should occur with respect to "state action" analysis under Parker. That is, we should not treat the result in the Parker case as cast in bronze; rather, the scope of the Sherman Act's power should parallel the developing concepts of American federalism.

<sup>3</sup> I use the term "proprietary" only to focus attention on the fact that all of the parties are in a competitive relationship such that each should be constrained, when necessary, by the federal antitrust laws. It is highly unlikely that Congress would have meant to impose liability only on some of these parties, when each possesses the means to thwart federal antitrust policy.

<sup>4</sup> MR. JUSTICE STEWART's dissent, post, at 433-434, attempts to blunt this analysis by noting that the "nongovernmental-governmental" distinction was criticized in Indian Towing Co. v. United States, 350 U.S. 61 (1955). I suggest no more, however, than what is obvious from our past cases: Petitioners' business activities are not entitled to per se exemption from the Sherman Act. This much ought to be quite clear from United States v. California, 297 U.S. 175 (1936), where the State operated a railroad, albeit without profit, and as a "public function." I cannot comprehend why the Cities here should be treated in a different manner. The only authority which MR. JUSTICE STEWART cites to the contrary, Lowenstein v. Evans, 69 F. 908 (CCSC 1895), was a case in which a State's complete monopolization of the liquor industry was challenged as violating the Sherman Act. But in that circumstance the State clearly directed the creation of a monopoly, thus bringing the matter within the Parker rationale. Compare Ohio v. Helvering, 292 U.S. 360 (1934).

The National League of Cities opinion focused its delineation [****62] of the "attributes of sovereignty" alluded to above on a determination as to whether the State's interest involved "functions essential to separate and independent existence." Ibid., [*424] quoting Coyle v. Oklahoma, 221 U.S. 559, 580 (1911). [***390] It should be evident, I would think, that the running of a business enterprise is not an integral operation in the area of traditional government functions. See Alfred Dunhill of London, Inc. v. Cuba, 425 U.S. 682, 695-696 (1976); Bank of United States v. Planters' Bank of Georgia, 9 Wheat. 904, 907 (1824). Indeed, the reaffirmance of the holding in United States v. California, supra, by National League of Cities, supra, at 854 n. 18, strongly supports this understanding. Even if this proposition were not generally true, the particular undertaking at issue here -- the supplying of electric service -- has not traditionally been the prerogative of the State. Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345, 352-353 (1974).<sup>5</sup> [****63] Following the path outlined above should lead us to a logical destination: Petitioners should be treated, for purposes of applying the federal antitrust laws, in essentially the same manner as respondent. This is not to say, of course, that the conduct in which petitioners allegedly engaged is automatically subject to condemnation under the Sherman Act. As the Court recognized in Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S., at 592-598, state-regulated [**1143] utilities pose special analytical problems under Parker. It may very well be, for example, that a State, acting as sovereign, has imposed a system of governmental control in order "to avoid the consequences of unrestrained [*425] competition." Cantor, supra, at 595. This is precisely what occurred in Parker, and there is no question that a utility's action taken pursuant to the command of such an "act of government," Parker, 317 U.S., at 352, would not be prohibited by the Sherman Act.

LEdHN[9C] [↑] [9C]I agree with the plurality, then, that "[t]he threshold inquiry in determining if an anticompetitive activity is state action of the type the Sherman Act was not meant to [****64] proscribe is whether the activity is required by the State acting as sovereign." Goldfarb, 421 U.S., at 790.(Emphasis added.) But this is only the first, not the final step of the inquiry, for Cantor recognized that "all economic regulation does not necessarily suppress competition." 428 U.S., at 595. "There is no logical inconsistency between requiring such a firm to meet regulatory criteria insofar as it is exercising its natural monopoly powers and also to comply with antitrust standards to the extent that it engages in business activity in competitive [***391] areas of the economy." Id., at 596.

LEdHN[9D] [↑] [9D]I would therefore remand, directing the District Court to take an additional step beyond merely determining -- as the plurality would -- that any area of conflict between the State's regulatory policies and the federal antitrust laws was the result of a "state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service."<sup>6</sup> Ante, at 413. This supplemental [*426] inquiry would consist of determining whether the implied <sup>5</sup> Such an ascertainment dovetails precisely with the law of Louisiana. There it is recognized that the powers of a municipal corporation are both public and private: As to the former, the city represents the State, discharging duties incumbent upon the State; as to the latter, it represents pecuniary and proprietary interests of individuals, and is held to the same responsibility as a private person. Hall v. Shreveport, 157 La. 589, 594, 102 So. 680, 681 (1925). A long line of Louisiana cases dealing explicitly with the subject of municipally owned electrical utilities holds that cities are to be governed by the same rules applicable to private corporations and individuals. See Hicks v. City of Monroe Utilities Comm'n, 237 La. 848, 112 So. 2d 635 (1959); Elias v. Mayor of New Iberia, 137 La. 691, 69 So. 141 (1915); Hart v. Lake Providence, 5 La. App. 294 (1926); Bannister v. City of Monroe, 4 La. App. 182 (1926).

<sup>6</sup> While I agree with the plurality that a State may cause certain activities to be exempt from the federal antitrust laws by virtue of an articulated policy to displace competition with regulation, I would require a strong showing on the part of the defendant that the State so intended. Thus, I would not be satisfied, as the plurality and Court of Appeals apparently are, that the highest policymaking body in the State of Louisiana merely "contemplated" the activities being undertaken by the cities. See ante, at 415. I would insist, as the Court did in Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 791 (1975), that the State compel the anticompetitive activity. Moreover, I would have the Cities demonstrate that the exemption was not only part of a regulatory scheme to supersede competition, but that it was essential to the State's plan. Consequently, I do not disagree with the terms of exemption from federal law "was necessary in order to make the regulatory Act work, [****65] 'and even then only to the minimum extent necessary.'" 428 U.S., at 597.<sup>7</sup>

[LEdHN\[9E\]](#) [↑] [9E]

[****66]

Dissent by: STEWART; BLACKMUN

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE STEWART, with whom MR. JUSTICE WHITE, MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN,* and MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST join, dissenting.

In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, a California statute restricted competition among raisin [****67] growers in order to keep the price of raisins artificially high. The Court found that California's program did not violate the antitrust laws but was "an act of government which the Sherman Act did not undertake to prohibit." Id., at 352. Parker v. Brown thus made clear that "where a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, no violation of [**1144] the [Sherman] Act can be made out." Eastern Railroad Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 136.

The principle of Parker v. Brown controls this case. The petitioners are governmental bodies, not private persons, and their actions are "act[s] of government" which Parker v. Brown held are not subject to the Sherman Act. But instead of applying the Parker doctrine, the Court today imposes new [*427] and unjustifiable limits upon it. According to the plurality, governmental action will henceforth be immune from the antitrust [***392] laws<sup>1</sup> only when "authorized or directed" by the State "pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service." Ante, at 414, 413. Such [***68] a "direction" from the State apparently will exist only when it can be shown "'from the authority given a governmental entity to operate in a particular area, that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of.'" Ante, at 415. By this exclusive focus on a legislative mandate the plurality has effectively limited the governmental action immunity of the Parker case to the acts of a state legislature. This is a sharp and I think unjustifiable departure from our prior cases.

[***69] THE CHIEF JUSTICE adopts a different approach, at once broader and narrower than the plurality's. In his view, municipalities are subject to antitrust liability when they engage in "proprietary enterprises," ante, at 422, but apparently retain their antitrust immunity for other types of activity. But a city engaged in proprietary activity is to be treated as if it were a private corporation: that is, it is immune from the antitrust laws only if it shows not the plurality's remand as such; I would simply ask for a stronger showing on the part of the Cities. I join the judgment, however, and the directions of the remand, because they represent at a minimum what I believe we should demand of petitioners.

---

<sup>7</sup> In Cantor this mode of analysis effectively answered Detroit Edison's claim that it was required by state law to engage in the allegedly anticompetitive activities. We "infer[red] that the State's policy [was] neutral on the question whether a utility should, or should not, have such a program," 428 U.S., at 585 (opinion of STEVENS, J.) (emphasis added), 604-605 (opinion of BURGER, C.J.), and consequently it could not be said that an exemption "was necessary in order to make the regulatory Act work."

* MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN joins all but Part II-B of this opinion.

<sup>1</sup> As the plurality acknowledges, ante, at 393 n. 8, Parker v. Brown did not create any exemption from the antitrust laws, but simply recognized that it was the intent of Congress that the Sherman Act should not apply to governmental action. It is thus hard to understand why the plurality invokes the doctrine that exemptions from the antitrust laws will not be lightly implied by subsequent enactment of a regulatory statute. This rule, which effects the accommodation of two federal statutes and rests on the principle that implied repeals are not favored, has no relevance to the Parker doctrine, which is based on an interpretation of the Sherman Act itself.

merely that its action was "required by the State acting as sovereign" but also that such immunity is "necessary in order to make the [State's] regulatory Act work." Ante, at 425, 426. THE CHIEF JUSTICE's approach seems to me just as mistaken as the plurality's.

[*428] I

The fundamental error in the opinions of the plurality and THE CHIEF JUSTICE is their failure to recognize the difference between private activities authorized or regulated by government on the one hand, and the actions of government itself on the other.

A

In determining whether the actions of a political subdivision of a State as well as those of a state legislature are immune from the Sherman Act, we must interpret the provisions of the [****70] Act "in the light of its legislative history and of the particular evils at which the legislation was aimed." Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 489. Those "particular evils" did not include acts of governmental bodies. Rather, Congress was concerned with attacking concentrations of private economic power unresponsive to public needs, such as "these great trusts, these great corporations, these large moneyed institutions." 21 Cong. Rec. 2562 (1890).<sup>2</sup>

[****71] Recognizing [***393] [**1145] this congressional intent, the Court in Parker v. Brown held that the antitrust laws apply to private and not governmental action. The program there at issue was in [*429] fact established by California's legislature, and not by one of its political subdivisions. But the Court nowhere held that the actions of municipal governments should not equally be immune from the antitrust laws. On the contrary, it expressly equated "the state or its municipality." 317 U.S., at 351. The Parker opinion repeatedly and carefully<sup>3</sup> emphasized that California's program was not the action of "private persons, individual or corporate." Id., at 350.<sup>4</sup> The distinction established in Parker v. Brown was not one between actions of a state legislature and those of other governmental units. Rather, the Court drew the line between private action and governmental action.

[****72] There can be no doubt on which side of this line the petitioners' actions fall. "Municipal corporations are instrumentalities of the State for the convenient administration of government within their limits." Louisiana ex rel. Folsom v. Mayor of New Orleans, 109 U.S. 285, 287; cf. Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 575.<sup>5</sup> They have only such powers as are delegated them by the State of which they are a subdivision, and when they act they exercise

<sup>2</sup> See also, e.g., 20 Cong. Rec. 1458 (1889) ("the practice, now becoming too common, of large corporations, and of single persons, too, of large wealth, so arranging that they dictate to the people of this country what they shall pay when they purchase, and what they shall receive when they sell"); 21 Cong. Rec. 2728 (1890) ("transaction[s] the only purpose of which is to extort from the community, monopolize, segregate, and apply to individual use, for the purposes of individual greed, wealth which ought properly and lawfully and for the public interest to be generally diffused over the whole community"); id., at 3147 (remarks of Sen. George).

That the Sherman Act was enacted to deal with combinations of individuals and corporations for private business advantage has long been recognized by this Court. Eastern Railroad Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 135-136; Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S., at 492-493, and n. 15; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 50, 58.

<sup>3</sup> See Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 591, and n. 24.

<sup>4</sup> The Court assumed that California's program would violate the Sherman Act "if it were organized and made effective solely by virtue of a contract, combination or conspiracy of private persons, individual or corporate," but noted that the program "was never intended to operate by force of individual agreement or combination." 317 U.S., at 350. The Court found nothing in the Sherman Act or its legislative history to suggest that "it was intended to restrain state action or official action directed by a state"; rather, the Act was intended "to suppress combinations to restrain competition and attempts to monopolize by individuals and corporations." Id., at 351. It was "a prohibition of individual and not state action." Id., at 352.

<sup>5</sup> See also, e.g., Trenton v. New Jersey, 262 U.S. 182, 185-186; Hunter v. Pittsburgh, 207 U.S. 161, 178; The Mayor v. Ray, 19 Wall. 468, 475; Bradford v. Shreveport, 305 So. 2d 487 (La.).

435 U.S. 389, *429; 98 S. Ct. 1123, **1145; 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, ***393; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 19, ****72

the State's sovereign power. Avery v. Midland County, 390 U.S. 474, 480; *Brard v. [**430] Alexandria*, 341 U.S. 622, 640. City governments are not unaccountable to the public but are subject to direct popular control through their own electorates and through the state legislature.<sup>6</sup> They are thus a far cry from the private [***394] accumulations of wealth that the Sherman Act was intended to regulate.

[****73]

B

The plurality today advances two reasons for holding nonetheless that the Parker doctrine is inapplicable to municipal governments. First, the plurality notes that municipalities cannot claim the State's sovereign immunity under the Eleventh Amendment. Ante, at 412. But this is hardly relevant to the question of whether they are within the reach of the Sherman Act. That question must be answered by reference to congressional intent, and not constitutional [**1146] principles that apply in entirely different situations.<sup>7</sup> And if constitutional analogies are to be looked to, a decision much more directly related to this case than those under the Eleventh Amendment is National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833. [****74] That case, like this one, involved an exercise of Congress' power under the Commerce Clause, and held that States and their political subdivisions must be given equal deference. Id., at 855-856, n. 20. The plurality does not advance any basis for its disregard of National League of Cities and its [*431] reliance instead on the basically irrelevant body of law under the Eleventh Amendment.

Secondly, the plurality relies on Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773. [****75] The Goldfarb case, however, did not overrule Parker v. Brown but rather applied it. Goldfarb concerned a scheme regulating economic competition among private parties, namely, lawyers. The Court held that this "private anticompetitive activity," 421 U.S., at 792, could not be sheltered under the umbrella of the Parker doctrine unless it was compelled by the State. Since the bar association and State Bar could show no more than that their minimum-fee schedule "complemented" actions of the State, id., at 791, the scheme was not immune from the antitrust laws. Cf. Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384.

Unlike Goldfarb, this case does not involve any anticompetitive activity by private persons. As noted in Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350, 361, actions of governmental bodies themselves present "an entirely different case" falling squarely within the rule of Parker v. Brown. Although the State Bar in Goldfarb was "a state agency for some limited purposes," 421 U.S., at 791, the price fixing [***395] it fostered was for the private benefit of its members and its actions were essentially [***76] those of a private professional group. Cf. Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade, Inc. v. FTC, 263 F. 2d 502, 508-510 (CA4). Unlike a city, the Virginia State Bar surely is not "a political subdivision of the State."<sup>8</sup>

By requiring that a city show a legislative mandate for its activity, the plurality today blurs, if indeed it does not erase, this logical distinction between private and governmental action. In Goldfarb and in Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, the Court held that private action must be compelled by the state legislature in order to escape the reach of the Sherman Act. State compulsion is an appropriate requirement [*432] when private persons claim that their anticompetitive actions are not their own but the State's, since a State cannot immunize private anticompetitive conduct merely by permitting it.<sup>9</sup> But it is senseless to require a showing of state compulsion when the State itself acts [****77] through one of its governmental subdivisions. See *New Mexico v. American Petrofina, Inc., 501 F.2d 363, 369-370* (CA9).

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U.S. 540, 544-545; The Mayor v. Ray, supra, at 475; East Hartford v. Hartford Bridge Co., 10 How. 511. Under Louisiana law the petitioners' powers are subject to complete legislative control. See Bradford v. Shreveport, supra.

<sup>7</sup> That the particular factual and legal context is all important is shown by the fact that under other provisions of the Constitution a municipality is equated with a State. E.g., Waller v. Florida, 397 U.S. 387 (Double Jeopardy Clause); Avery v. Midland County, 390 U.S. 474, 480 (Fourteenth Amendment); Trenton v. New Jersey, supra (Impairment of Contract Clause). See also Doran v. Salem Inn, Inc., 422 U.S. 922, 927 n. 2 (28 U.S.C. § 1254 (2)).

<sup>8</sup> Worcester v. Street R. Co., 196 U.S. 539, 548.

C

The separate opinion of THE CHIEF JUSTICE does not rely on any distinctions between States and their political subdivisions. It purports to find a simpler reason for subjecting the petitioners to antitrust [**1147] liability despite the fact that they are governmental bodies, namely that Parker v. Brown does not protect "a State's entrepreneurial personality." Ante, at 422.<sup>10</sup> But this distinction is no more substantial a basis for disregarding the governmental action immunity in this case than the reasons advanced by the plurality.

[****78] A State may choose to regulate private persons providing certain goods or services, or it may provide the goods and services itself. The State's regulatory body in the former case, or a state-owned utility in the latter, will necessarily make economic decisions. These decisions may be responsive to similar concerns, and they may have similar anticompetitive effects.<sup>11</sup> Yet, according to THE CHIEF JUSTICE, the former [*433] type of governmental decision is immune from antitrust liability while the latter is not.

There is no basis for this distinction either in the Sherman Act itself or in our prior cases interpreting [****79] it. To the contrary, Parker v. Brown [***396] established that governmental actions are not regulated by the Sherman Act. See *supra, at 428-430*. And, as this Court has previously said: S"Government is not partly public or partly private, depending upon the governmental pedigree of the type of a particular activity or the manner in which the Government conducts it.' *Federal Crop Insurance Corp. v. Merrill, 332 U.S. 380, 383-384*. On the other hand, it is level,' our present concern, which is 'uniquely governmental,' in the sense that its kind has not at one time or another been, or could not conceivably be, privately performed." *Indian Towing Co. v. United States, 350 U.S. 61, 67-68.I*

Nonetheless THE CHIEF JUSTICE would treat some governmental actions as governmental for purposes of the antitrust laws, and some as if they were not governmental at all.

Moreover, the scope of the immunity envisioned by THE CHIEF JUSTICE is virtually impossible to determine. The distinction between "proprietary" and "governmental" activities has aptly been described as a "quagmire." *Id., at 65*. The "distinctions [are] so finespun and capricious as [****80] to be almost incapable of being held in the mind for adequate formulation." *Id., at 65-68*. The separate opinion of THE CHIEF JUSTICE does nothing to make these distinctions any more substantial or understandable.<sup>12</sup> Indeed, even a moment's [*434] consideration of the range of services provided today by governments shows how difficult it is to determine whether or not they are "proprietary." For example, if a city or State decides to provide water service to its citizens at cost on a monopoly basis, is its action to be characterized as "proprietary"? Whether it is "proprietary" or not, it is surely an act of government, as are the petitioners' actions in this case. Cf. *Lowenstein v. Evans, 69 F. 908* (CC S.C.).<sup>13</sup> But THE

<sup>9</sup> See *Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 346*.

<sup>10</sup> However, the District Court's "conclusion," ante, at 418, that the petitioners' electric utility service was a business activity engaged in for profit was not supported by any evidence (since the case was decided on a motion to dismiss) and is indeed challenged here by the petitioners in their reply brief.

<sup>11</sup> Of course, the fact -- heavily relied upon both by the plurality and THE CHIEF JUSTICE -- that the actions of cities may have anticompetitive effects misses the point. The whole issue before the Court today is whether conduct that would concededly subject a private individual to liability because of its anticompetitive nature is proscribed by the antitrust laws when undertaken by a city.

<sup>12</sup> In various places, the separate opinion of THE CHIEF JUSTICE refers to "'business activit[ies] . . . in which a profit is realized,'" to "proprietary enterprises," to activities which have "the inherent capacity for economically disruptive anticompetitive effects," to those which are not "integral operation[s] in the area of traditional government functions," and to those not "the prerogative of the State."

CHIEF JUSTICE, [**1148] like the plurality, ignores what seems to me the controlling distinction in this case, that between private and governmental action.

[****81]

II

The Court's decision in this case marks an extraordinary intrusion into the operation of state and local government in this country. Its impact can hardly be overstated.

A

Under our federal system, a State is generally free to allocate its governmental power to its political subdivisions [***397] as it wishes.<sup>14</sup> A State may decide to permit its municipalities to exercise its police power without having to obtain approval of each law from the legislature.<sup>15</sup> Such local self-government [*435] serves important state interests. It allows a state legislature to devote more time to statewide problems without being burdened with purely local matters, and allows municipalities to deal quickly and flexibly with local problems. But today's decision, by demanding extensive legislative control over municipal action, will necessarily diminish the extent to which a State can [***82] share its power with autonomous local governmental bodies.

This will follow from the plurality's emphasis on state legislative action, and the vagueness of the criteria it announces.<sup>16</sup> First, it is not clear from the plurality opinion whether a municipal government's [***83] actions will be immune from the Sherman Act if they are merely "authorized" by a state legislature or whether they must be legislatively "directed" in order to enjoy immunity. While the plurality uses these terms interchangeably, they can have very different meanings. See Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S., at 592-593. A municipality that is merely "authorized" by a state statute to provide a monopoly service thus cannot be certain it will not be subject to antitrust liability if it does so.

Second, the plurality gives no indication of how specifically the legislature's "direction" must relate to the "action complained of." Reference to the facts of this case will show how elusive [***84] the plurality's test is. Stripped to its essentials, the counterclaim alleged that the petitioners engaged in sham litigation, maintained their monopolies by debenture covenants, foreclosed competition by long-term supply contracts, [*436] and tied the sale of gas and water to the sale of electricity. Broadly speaking, these actions could be characterized as bringing lawsuits, issuing bonds, and providing electric and gas service, all of which are activities authorized by state statutes.<sup>17</sup> But in

<sup>13</sup> This case, involving a state liquor monopoly, was cited with approval in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S., at 352.

<sup>14</sup> See, e.g., Lockport v. Citizens for Community Action, 430 U.S. 259, 269; Avery v. Midland County, 390 U.S., at 481-482.

<sup>15</sup> Local self-government is broadest in "home rule" municipalities, which can be almost entirely free from legislative control in local matters. See Vanlandingham, Municipal Home Rule in the United States, 10 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 269 (1968). Although the petitioners are not home rule cities, Louisiana's Constitution has a home rule provision, La. Const. of 1974, Art. 6, §§ 5, 6; La. Const. of 1921, Art. XIV, §§ 22, 40 (c), as do the constitutions or statutes of at least 33 other States. Note, Antitrust Law and Municipal Corporations, 65 Geo. L.J. 1547, 1559 n. 77 (1977).

<sup>16</sup> While THE CHIEF JUSTICE has not joined those portions of the plurality opinion that discuss what is necessary to show that a challenged activity was required by the State, he would apparently require a still stronger, and hence less justifiable, showing of state legislative compulsion. Ante, at 425-426, n. 6.

<sup>17</sup> La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33:621 (West 1951):

"The inhabitants of the city shall continue a body politic and corporate by its present name and, as such,... may sue and be sued;... may acquire by condemnation or otherwise, construct, own, lease, and operate and regulate public utilities within or without the corporate limits of the city subject only to restrictions imposed by general law for the protection of other [***398] affirming the judgment of the Court [**1149] of Appeals the Court makes evident that it does not consider these statutes alone a sufficient "mandate" to the cities.

[****85] On the other hand, the plurality states that a city need not "point to a specific, detailed legislative authorization before it properly may assert a Parker defense to an antitrust suit." Ante, at 415. Thus, it seems that the petitioners need not identify a statute compelling each lawsuit, each contract, and each debenture covenant.<sup>18</sup> But what intermediate showing [*437] of legislative authorization, approval, or command will meet the plurality's test I am unable to fathom.<sup>19</sup>

[****86]

Finally, state statutes often are enacted with little recorded legislative history, [****87]<sup>20</sup> and the bare words of a statute will often be unilluminating in interpreting legislative intent. For example, do the Louisiana statutes permitting the petitioners to operate public utilities<sup>21</sup> "contemplate" that the petitioners might tie the sale of gas to the sale of electricity? Do those statutes, indeed, "contemplate" that electric service will be provided to city residents on a monopoly basis? Without legislative history or relevant statutory language, any answer to these questions would be purely a creation of judicial imagination.<sup>22</sup>

[****88] [*438] As a practical result of the uncertainties in today's opinions,<sup>23</sup> and of [***399] the plurality's emphasis on state legislative action, a prudent municipality will probably believe itself compelled to seek passage of a state statute requiring it to engage in any activity which might be considered anticompetitive. Each time a city grants an exclusive franchise, or chooses to provide a service itself on a monopoly basis, or refuses to grant a communities;... [and] may borrow money on the faith and credit of the city by issue or sale of bonds, notes, or other evidences of debt. . . ."

---

See also La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 33:1326 (West 1951), 33:4162, 33:4163 (West 1966).

<sup>18</sup> The plurality's suggestion that the Louisiana Legislature has expressed a state policy that the activities of cities should be subject to the antitrust laws, ante, at 414-415, n. 44, and 416, is both erroneous and irrelevant. Louisiana Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33:1334 \(G\) (West Supp. 1977) applies not to municipalities but only to utility commissions created jointly by several cities or counties; there is no comparable statute applicable to the petitioners. Moreover, the applicability of the federal antitrust laws is a matter of federal, not state, law; conversely, a State's restrictions on municipal action are a matter of state, not federal, law. A State can no more bring a person's conduct within the coverage of federal law when Congress has not done so than it can exempt a person's conduct from the operation of federal law if Congress has provided otherwise. Cf. Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384.

<sup>19</sup> The Court imposes yet another unwarranted limitation upon governmental immunity from the antitrust laws. Apparently, a municipality can claim immunity only if the state legislature has mandated its action "pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service." Ante, at 413 (plurality opinion); see ante, at 425 (opinion of BURGER, C.J.). Even had the Louisiana State Legislature passed a law specifically compelling the petitioners to litigate in an effort to prevent respondent from constructing its nuclear generating facility, compelling them to insert restrictive covenants in their debentures, and compelling the tying arrangements complained of, could such a law fairly be described as "displac[ing] competition with regulation or monopoly public service"? Would the Court thus deny the cities immunity for their actions even if they were compelled by the State which controlled them?

<sup>20</sup> See M. Price & H. Bitner, Effective Legal Research 73, 103 (3d ed. 1969).

<sup>21</sup> See n. 17, supra.

<sup>22</sup> This problem of statutory interpretation is exacerbated by the fact that today's decision will have "retroactive" application in two senses. First, antitrust liability can be premised on actions that have occurred in the past. Second, many of the statutes governing contemporary and future municipal activities were enacted years ago. Thus, municipalities will be faced with the difficult problem of establishing their antitrust immunity based on statutes that were enacted without any foreknowledge of the criteria announced by the Court today.

<sup>23</sup> The vagueness of the test proposed in the separate opinion of THE CHIEF JUSTICE, see supra, at 433-434, will only add to the confusion of a city trying to protect itself from antitrust liability.

zoning variance to a business,<sup>24</sup> or even -- as alleged in this case -- brings litigation on behalf of its citizens, state legislative [**1150] action will be necessary to ensure that a federal court will not subsequently decide that the activity was not "contemplated" by the legislature. Thus, the effect of today's decision is greatly to impair the ability of a State to delegate governmental power broadly to its municipalities.<sup>25</sup> Such extensive interference with the fundamentals of state government is not a proper function of the federal judiciary.<sup>26</sup>

[****89]

[****90] B

Today's decision will cause excessive judicial interference not only with the procedures by which a State makes its governmental decisions, but with their substance as well.

[*439] States should be "accorded wide latitude in the regulation of their local economies," New Orleans v. Dukes 427 U.S. 297, 303, and in "the manner in which they will structure delivery of those governmental services which their citizens require." National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S., at 847. The antitrust liability the Court today imposes on municipal governments will sharply limit that latitude.

First, the very vagueness and uncertainty of the new test for antitrust immunity is bound to discourage state agencies and subdivisions in their experimentation with innovative social and economic programs.<sup>27</sup> In the exercise of their powers local governmental entities often take actions that might violate the antitrust laws if taken by private persons, such as granting exclusive franchises, enacting restrictive zoning ordinances and providing public services on a monopoly basis. But a city contemplating such action in the interest of its citizens will be able to [****91] do so after today only at the risk of discovering too late that a federal court believes that insufficient statutory "direction" existed, or that the activity is "proprietary" in nature.

Second, [***400] the imposition of antitrust liability on the activities of municipal governments will allow the sort of wide-ranging inquiry into the reasonableness of state regulations that this Court has forsaken.<sup>28</sup> For example, in New Orleans v. Dukes, supra, a city ordinance which, to preserve the character of a historic area, prohibited the sale of food from pushcarts unless the vendor had been in business for at least eight years, was challenged under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Court upheld the constitutional validity of the ordinance. But it now appears that if Dukes had proceeded under the antitrust laws and claimed that the ordinance was an unreasonably anticompetitive [***92] limit [*440] on the number of pushcart vendors, he might well have prevailed unless New Orleans could establish that the Louisiana Legislature "contemplated" the exclusion of all but a few pushcart vendors from the historic area. The "wide latitude" of the States "in the regulation of their local economies," exercised in Dukes by the city to which this power to regulate had been delegated, could thus be wholly stifled by the application of the antitrust laws.

C

---

<sup>24</sup> See Whitworth v. Perkins, 559 F. 2d 378 (CA5).

<sup>25</sup> By imposing antitrust liability on "proprietary" governmental activities, the test adopted in the opinion of THE CHIEF JUSTICE would further deter States from choosing to provide services themselves rather than regulating others.

<sup>26</sup> See Sailors v. Board of Education, 387 U.S. 105; Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U.S. 304, 310; see also Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 289-290, and n. 23, and cases cited (Frankfurter, J., dissenting).

The plurality's emphasis on legislative action also leaves in doubt the status of state delegations of power to administrative agencies, unless they, too, can show that the legislature "directed" their actions. This, of course, defeats the whole purpose of establishing such agencies.

<sup>27</sup> See New State Ice Co. v. Liebmann, 285 U.S. 262, 311 (Brandeis, J., dissenting).

<sup>28</sup> Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726.

[**1151] Finally, today's decision will impose staggering costs on the thousands of municipal governments in our country. In this case, a not atypical antitrust action, the respondent claimed that it had suffered damages of $ 180 million as a result of only one of the antitrust violations it alleged. Trebled, this amounts to $ 540 million on this claim alone, to be recovered from cities with a combined population (in 1970) of about 75,000.<sup>29</sup> A judgment of this magnitude would assure bankruptcy [****93] for almost any municipality against which it might be rendered.<sup>30</sup> Even if the petitioners ultimately prevail, their citizens will have to bear the rapidly mounting [*441] costs of antitrust litigation through increased taxes or decreased services.<sup>31</sup> The prospect of a city closing its schools, discharging its policemen, and curtailing its fire department in order to defend an antitrust suit would surely dismay the Congress that enacted the Sherman Act.<sup>32</sup>

[****94]

For [***401] all of the [****95] reasons discussed in this opinion, I respectfully dissent.

MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN, dissenting.

I join MR. JUSTICE STEWART's dissent with the exception of Part II-B, but wish to note that I do not take his opinion as reaching the question whether petitioners should be immune under the Sherman Act even if found to have been acting in concert with private parties. To grant immunity to municipalities in such a circumstance would go beyond the protections previously accorded officials of the States themselves. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 351-352 (1943) ("[W]e have no question of the state or its municipality becoming a participant in a private agreement or combination by others for restraint of trade, cf. Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 313 U.S. 450"). The Court of Appeals did not have the opportunity to rule on how a "conspiracy with private parties" exception to municipalities' general immunity should be limited, if indeed such an exception is appropriate at all. If the view that municipalities are not subject to the full reach [*442] of Sherman Act liability had commanded a majority, a remand for consideration of this more limited [****96] exception would be in order.

In light of the fact that the plurality and THE CHIEF JUSTICE have concluded that municipalities should be subject to broad Sherman Act liability, I must question the nonchalance with which the Court puts aside the question of remedy. Ante, at 402, and n.22. It is a grave act to make governmental units potentially liable for massive treble damages when, however "[**1152] proprietary" some of their activities may seem, they have fundamental responsibilities to their citizens for the provision of life-sustaining services such as police and fire protection. The several occasions in the past when the Court has found that Congress intended to subject municipalities and States to liability as "persons" or "corporations" do not provide the support for today's holding that the plurality opinion would pretend. Ante, at 400-402, and nn. 19-21. The Court cites previous constructions of the Elkins Act; the <sup>29</sup> U.S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, 1970 Census of Population, Number of Inhabitants, United States Summary, Table 31 (1971).

<sup>30</sup> The Court indicates that the remedy of treble damages might not be "appropriate" in antitrust actions against a municipality. Ante, at 401-402, and n.22. But the language of § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15 (1976 ed.), is mandatory on its face: It requires that "[a]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws ... shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained" (emphasis supplied). Cf., e.g., 35 U.S.C. § 284. And the legislative history cited by MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN, post, at 443 n. 2, demonstrates that Congress has understood the treble-damages provision to be mandatory and has refused to change it. The Court does not say on what basis a district court could possibly disregard this clear statutory command. Cf. Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134.

<sup>31</sup> Legal fees to defend one current antitrust suit have been estimated as at least one-half million dollars a month. N.Y. Times, June 27, 1977, p. 41, col. 6; id., Sept. 4, 1977, section 3, p. 5, col. 1.

<sup>32</sup> Treble-damages liability can, of course, be ruinous to a private corporation as well. But a private corporation, organized for the purpose of seeking private profit, is surely very different from a city providing essential governmental functions, and shareholders do not stand in the same relation to their corporation as do residents or taxpayers to the city in which they live. An investment in a corporation is essentially a business decision; a shareholder takes the risks of corporate losses in the hope of corporate profits. A citizen's relationship to his city government is obviously far different.

federal tax on sellers of alcoholic beverages; and the Shipping Act, 1916. But the financial penalties available under those Acts do not even approach the magnitude of the treble-damages remedy provided by the antitrust laws.

<sup>1</sup> Nor has [*443] [****97] the Court come to grips with the [***402] plainly mandatory language of § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15 \(1976 ed.\): "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws ... shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained" (emphasis supplied), and the repeated occasions on which Congress has rejected proposals to make the treble-damages remedy discretionary.<sup>2</sup> It is one thing to leave open the question of remedy if there is a conceivable defense to damages whose theory is consistent with the mandatory language of the Clayton Act (e.g., in the case of private utilities subject to state tariffs, that their conduct was required by state law and hence was involuntary). See Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 614-615, n.6 \(1976\) (opinion concurring in judgment). It is quite another to delay the question of remedy in the absence of any suggested basis for a defense, especially where the prospect of insolvency for petitioner cities would so threaten the welfare of their inhabitants. The sensible course, it seems to me, is to consider the range of liability in light of [****98] the range of defendants for whom Sherman Act penalties would be appropriate.

[****99]

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 15-18, 246, 286, 301

12 Federal Procedural Forms L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:61 et seq.

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, Forms 11 et seq.

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1 et seq.

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 8, 9, 11, 64

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 12, 13

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

---

<sup>1</sup> Respondent seeks treble damages in excess of $ 540 million in this case. If divided among Plaquemine and Lafayette residents, that penalty would exceed $ 28,000 for each family of four.

Under the federal tax on sellers of alcoholic beverages, 26 U.S.C. §§ 11 and 205 (1926 ed.), construed in Ohio v. Helvering, 292 U.S. 360, 370-371 \(1934\), the potential liability of the State of Ohio was $ 25 for each retail, and $ 100 for each wholesale, outlet. Under §§ 16 and 17 of the Shipping Act, 1916, 46 U.S.C. §§ 815, 816 (1940 ed.), construed in California v. United States, 320 U.S. 577, 585-586 \(1944\), a violation was a misdemeanor punishable by a $ 5,000 fine. The Court's only arguable support lies in § 1 of the Elkins Act, 49 U.S.C. § 41, construed in Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 313 U.S. 450 \(1941\). Even there, the potential liability of a municipality not acting as a common carrier is a $ 20,000 fine, and, were illegal transportation rebates to be received by the municipality, three times the amount of the rebate. Even if a municipality were held to be operating a common carrier under that Act, potential financial liability is limited to the fine and the actual damages caused by the prohibited conduct. 49 U.S.C. § 8.

<sup>2</sup> E.g., H.R. 4597, 83d Cong., 1st Sess. (1953); H.R. 6875, 84th Cong., 1st Sess. (1955); H.R. 978, 85th Cong., 1st Sess. (1957); H.R. 1184, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. (1959); H.R. 190, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. (1961). See also Hearings on H.R. 4597 before Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 83d Cong., 1st Sess. (1953); Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., 189, 509-522, 2246-2249 (1955).

435 U.S. 389, *443; 98 S. Ct. 1123, **1152; 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, ***402; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 19, ****99

Annotation References:

Applicability of federal antitrust laws as affected by other federal statutes or by Federal Constitution . 45 L Ed 2d 841.

Valid governmental action as conferring immunity or [****100] exemption from private liability under the federal antitrust laws. 12 ALR Fed 329.

---

End of Document

National Soc. of Professional Engineers v. United States

Supreme Court of the United States

January 18, 1978, Argued ; April 25, 1978, Decided

No. 76-1767

Reporter

435 U.S. 679 *; 98 S. Ct. 1355 **; 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 ***; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 47 ****; 1978-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P61,990

NATIONAL SOCIETY OF PROFESSIONAL ENGINEERS v. UNITED STATES

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 181 U. S. App. D. C. 41, 555 F.2d 978, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

ethical, Sherman Act, profession, competitive bidding, district court, engineers, antitrust, customer, engineering services, prices, bids, restraint of trade, injunction, ban, price information, anticompetitive, deceptively, inferior

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN1** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The fact that a restraint operates upon a profession as distinguished from a business is relevant in determining whether that particular restraint violates the Sherman Act. The public service aspect, and other features of the professions may require that a particular practice, which could properly be viewed as a violation of the Sherman Act in another context, be treated differently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN2** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN3** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The rule of reason is used to give the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., both flexibility and definition, and its central principle of antitrust analysis remains constant. Contrary to its name, the rule does not open the field of antitrust inquiry to any argument in favor of a challenged restraint that may fall within the realm of reason. Instead, it focuses directly on the challenged restraint's impact on competitive conditions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Capper-Volstead Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN4 Collectives & Cooperatives, Capper-Volstead Act

Restraints of trade within the purview of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., cannot be taken out of rule of reason category by indulging in general reasoning as to the expediency or nonexpediency of having made the contracts or the wisdom or want of wisdom of the statute which prohibited their being made.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

In a restraint of trade case, the test is whether the challenged contracts or acts were unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions. Unreasonableness under that test can be based either (1) on the nature or character of the contracts, or (2) on surrounding circumstances giving rise to the inference or presumption that they were intended to restrain trade and enhance prices. Under either branch of the test, the inquiry is confined to a consideration of impact on competitive conditions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Price is the central nervous system of the economy, and an agreement that interferes with the setting of price by free market forces is illegal on its face.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., reflects a legislative judgment that ultimately competition will produce not only lower prices, but also better goods and services. Even assuming occasional exceptions to the presumed consequences of competition, the statutory policy precludes inquiry into the question whether competition is good or bad.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

The equation of competition with deception, like the similar equation with safety hazards, is simply too broad; courts may assume that competition is not entirely conducive to ethical behavior, but that is not a reason, cognizable under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., for doing away with competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

HN10 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The First Amendment does not make it impossible ever to enforce laws against agreements in restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN11 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A district court is not obliged to assume, contrary to common experience, that a violator of the antitrust laws will relinquish the fruits of his violation more completely than the court requires him to do. When the purpose to restrain trade appears from a clear violation of law, it is not necessary that all of the untraveled roads to that end be left open and that only the worn one be closed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN12 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The burden is upon the proved transgressor to bring any proper claims for relief to the court's attention.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The United States brought an action in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, against an association of professional engineers under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1)--which declares illegal every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce--seeking to nullify the association's canon of ethics which prohibited association members from submitting competitive bids for their engineering services. Rejecting the association's contention that the canon was justified under the "rule of reason" allegedly because the canon was adopted by members of a learned profession for the purpose of minimizing the risk that competition would produce inferior engineering work endangering public safety, the District Court granted an injunction against the canon, which it found to be a combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of interstate trade and commerce violative of 1 of the Act (389 F Supp 1193). Ultimately, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit affirmed, modifying the injunction so that the association was prohibited from adopting any official opinion, policy statement, or guideline stating or implying that competitive bidding was unethical (555 F2d 978).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Stevens, J., joined by Stewart, White, Marshall, and Powell, JJ., and joined in part by Blackmun and Rehnquist, JJ. (as to holding 3 below), it was held that (1) the association's canon of ethics, which constituted an agreement among competitors to refuse to discuss prices with potential customers until after negotiations had resulted in the initial selection of an engineer, was not price fixing as such, but, on its face, restrained trade within the meaning of 1 of the Sherman Act, since it operated as an absolute ban on competitive bidding, impeding the ordinary give and take of the market place and substantially depriving customers of the ability to utilize and compare prices in selecting engineering services, (2) the canon could not be justified under the "rule of reason" standard of analysis for 1 of the Act, since such rule, under which the inquiry was whether a challenged agreement was one that promoted competition or one that suppressed competition, did not support a defense based on the assumption that competition itself was unreasonable, and (3) the injunction, as modified by the Court of Appeals, was not unconstitutional under the First Amendment as a prior restraint on speech and as a prohibition against free association, but was proper under the appropriate standard, being a reasonable method of eliminating the consequences of the association's illegal conduct, notwithstanding that the injunction went beyond a simple proscription against the precise conduct found to constitute an antitrust law violation.

Blackmun, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment, expressed the view that not every ethical rule which was promulgated by a professional society and which had an anticompetitive effect was forbidden under the Sherman Act.

Burger, Ch. J., concurred in the court's judgment to the extent it sustained the finding of a Sherman Act violation, but dissented from the judgment's prohibiting the association from stating in its public standards of ethics the view that competitive bidding was unethical, since the First Amendment guaranteed the right to express such a position.

Brennan, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

A canon of ethics of an association of engineers prohibiting association members from engaging in competitive bidding for their engineering services, and thus constituting an agreement among competitors to refuse to discuss prices with potential customers until after negotiations have resulted in the initial selection of an engineer, is not price fixing as such, yet, on its face, restrains trade in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), which prohibits contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce, since it operates as an absolute ban on competitive bidding, impeding the ordinary give and take of the market place, and substantially depriving customers of the ability to utilize and compare prices in selecting engineering services; such canon cannot be justified under the "rule of reason" standard of analysis for 1 of the Act on the ground that the canon was adopted by members of a learned profession for the purpose of minimizing the risk that competition would produce inferior engineering work endangering public safety, since such rule, under which the inquiry is whether the challenged agreement is one that promotes competition or one that suppresses competition, does not support a defense based on the assumption that competition itself is unreasonable.

MONOPOLIES §7 > construction -- Sherman Act -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), providing that "every" contract that restrains trade is unlawful, cannot be read literally, since 1 would outlaw the entire body of private contract law which establishes the enforceability of commercial agreements and enables competitive markets to function effectively; the legality of an agreement or regulation cannot be determined by so simple a test as whether it restrains competition.

MONOPOLIES §16 > "rule of reason" -- scope -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The "rule of reason" standard of analysis for the prohibition of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) against contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce--under which rule the inquiry is whether a restraint promotes or suppresses competition--does not open the field of antitrust inquiry to any argument in favor or a challenged restraint that may fall within the realm of reason, but instead, focuses directly on the challenged restraint's impact on competitive conditions.

MONOPOLIES §36 > "rule of reason" -- reasonableness of prices -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The "rule of reason" standard of analysis for the prohibition of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) against contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce--under which rule the inquiry is whether a challenged agreement is one that promotes or suppresses competition--does not permit an inquiry into the reasonableness of prices set by private agreement.

MONOPOLIES §11 > exemption of industry -- Sherman Act -- Congress -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

It is for Congress to determine whether a specific industry should be exempt from federal antitrust laws because the special characteristics of the industry are such that monopolistic arrangements will better promote trade and commerce than competition.

MONOPOLIES §14 > "rule of reason" -- special characteristics of industry -- justification for monopoly -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

For purposes of the "rule of reason" standard of analysis for the prohibition of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) against contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce--under which rule the inquiry is whether the challenged restraint is one that promotes or suppresses competition--it cannot be argued that monopolistic arrangements in a particular industry having special characteristics should be allowed because such monopolistic arrangements will better promote trade and commerce than competition; restraints of trade cannot be taken out of that category by indulging in general reasoning as to the expediency or nonexpediency of having made the contracts or the wisdom or want of wisdom of the statute which prohibited their being made.

MONOPOLIES §16 > "unreasonableness" -- Sherman Act -- test -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

For purposes of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), which prohibits contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce, and the test which considers whether challenged contracts or acts are unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions, "unreasonableness" may be based either (1) on the nature or character of the contracts, or (2) on surrounding circumstances giving rise to the inference or presumption that they were intended to restrain trade and enhance prices; under either branch of the test, the inquiry is confined to a consideration of impact on competitive conditions.

MONOPOLIES §8 > Sherman Act -- interpretation of "every" -- anticompetitive conduct. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

The discretion which the courts have in interpreting the word "every" in 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1)--which prohibits "every" contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce--is confined to consideration of whether in each case the conduct being reviewed under the Act constitutes an undue restraint of competitive conditions, or a monopolization, or an attempt to monopolize; such standard permits the courts to decide whether conduct is significantly and unreasonably anticompetitive in character or effect.

MONOPOLIES §16 > "rule of reason" -- Sherman Act -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

The inquiry mandated by the "rule of reason" standard of analysis for the prohibition of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) against contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce, is whether the challenged agreement is one that promotes or suppresses competition; the true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition.

435 U.S. 679, *679; 98 S. Ct. 1355, **1355; 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, ***637; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 47, ****1

MONOPOLIES §9 > per se illegality -- anticompetitive agreements -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

For purposes of federal antitrust law analysis, agreements whose nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality are "illegal per se."

MONOPOLIES §36 > interference with price setting -- Sherman Act -- per se illegality -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

An agreement that interferes with the setting of price by free market forces is illegal on its face under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.).

MONOPOLIES §9 > Sherman Act -- competitive bidding -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

The Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) does not require competitive bidding; it prohibits unreasonable restraints on competition.

MONOPOLIES §16 > "rule of reason" -- ethical norms of profession -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

Ethical norms for learned professions may serve to regulate and promote competition for professional services, and--for purposes of analysis under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), which prohibits contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce--thus be valid under the "rule of reason" standard where the inquiry is whether a challenged agreement is one that promotes or suppresses competition.

LAW §935.5 > MONOPOLIES §75 > free speech -- free association -- injunction -- restraint on professional society --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14A\]](#) [14A] [LEdHN\[14B\]](#) [14B] [LEdHN\[14C\]](#) [14C]

A federal court injunction against a professional society whose canon of ethics prohibiting society members from submitting competitive bids for engineering services had been found to restrain trade in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1)--which injunction prohibits the society from adopting any official opinion, policy statement, or guideline stating or implying that competitive bidding is unethical--is not unconstitutional under the First Amendment as a prior restraint on speech or as a prohibition against free association, but rather, under the appropriate standard, the injunction is proper as being a reasonable method of eliminating the consequences of the society's illegal conduct, notwithstanding that the injunction goes beyond a simple proscription against the precise conduct previously pursued. (Burger, Ch. J., dissented from this holding.)

MONOPOLIES §75 > Sherman Act violation -- power of court -- remedy -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

Upon finding a party guilty of a violation of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), a Federal District Court is empowered to fashion appropriate restraints on the party's future activities both to avoid a recurrence of the violation and to eliminate its consequences.

LAW §935.5 > First Amendment -- enforcement of law -- agreements in restraint of trade -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

With respect to the rights of free speech and association, the First Amendment does not make it impossible ever to enforce laws against agreements in restraint of trade.

MONOPOLIES §74 > antitrust violations -- remedy -- considerations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

In fashioning a remedy for violations of federal antitrust laws, a Federal District Court may consider the fact that its injunction may impinge upon rights that would otherwise be constitutionally protected, but those protections do not prevent it from remedying the antitrust violations.

MONOPOLIES §75 > injunctive relief -- scope limitations -- burden upon transgressor -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18]

In granting injunctive relief for a violation of federal antitrust laws when the purpose to restrain trade appears from a clear violation of law, it is not necessary that the court leave open all of the untraveled roads and close only the worn one by framing its injunction as a simple proscription against the precise conduct constituting the violation; the burden is upon the proven transgressor to bring any proper claims for relief to the court's attention if it is fearful that the injunction will restrain it as to conduct which is legitimate.

Syllabus

---

The United States brought this civil antitrust suit against petitioner, the National Society of Professional Engineers, alleging that petitioner's canon of ethics prohibiting its members from submitting competitive bids for engineering services suppressed competition in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Petitioner defended on the ground, inter alia, that under the Rule of Reason the canon was justified because it was adopted by members of a learned profession for the purpose of minimizing the risk that competition would produce inferior engineering work endangering the public safety. The District Court, granting an injunction against the canon, rejected this justification, holding that the canon on its face violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, thus making it unnecessary to make findings on the likelihood that competition would produce the dire consequences envisaged by petitioner. [****2] The Court of Appeals affirmed, although modifying the District Court's injunction in certain respects so that, as modified, it prohibits petitioner from adopting any official opinion, policy statement, or guideline stating or implying that competitive bidding is unethical. Held:

1. On its face, the canon in question restrains trade within the meaning of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and the Rule of Reason, under which the proper inquiry is whether the challenged agreement is one that promotes, or one that suppresses, competition, does not support a defense based on the assumption that competition itself is unreasonable. Pp. 686-696.

(a) The canon amounts to an agreement among competitors to refuse to discuss prices with potential customers until after negotiations have resulted in the initial selection of an engineer, and, while it is not price fixing as such, it operates as an absolute ban on competitive bidding, applying with equal force to both complicated and simple projects and to both inexperienced and sophisticated customers. Pp. 692-693.

(b) Petitioner's affirmative defense confirms rather than refutes the anticompetitive purpose and effect of its canon, and its attempt [****3] to justify, under the Rule of Reason, the restraint on competition imposed by the canon on the basis of the potential threat that competition poses to the public safety and the ethics of the engineering profession is nothing less than a frontal assault on the basic policy of the Sherman Act. Pp. 693-695.

(c) That engineers are often involved in large-scale projects significantly affecting the public safety does not justify any exception to the Sherman Act. Pp. 695-696.

(d) While ethical norms may serve to regulate and promote competition in professional services and thus fall within the Rule of Reason, petitioner's argument here is a far cry from such a position; and, although competition may not be entirely conducive to ethical behavior, that is not a reason, cognizable under the Sherman Act, for doing away with competition. P. 696.

2. The District Court's injunction, as modified by the Court of Appeals, does not abridge First Amendment rights. Pp. 696-699.

(a) The First Amendment does not "make it . . . impossible ever to enforce laws against agreements in restraint of trade," Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U.S. 490, 502, and, although the [****4] District Court may consider the fact that its injunction may impinge upon rights that would otherwise be constitutionally protected, those protections do not prevent it from remedying the antitrust violations. Pp. 697-698.

(b) The standard against which the injunction must be judged is whether the relief represents a reasonable method of eliminating the consequences of the illegal conduct, and the injunction meets this standard. P. 698.

(c) If petitioner wishes to adopt some other ethical guideline more closely confined to the legitimate objective of preventing deceptively low bids, it may move the District Court to modify its injunction. Pp. 698-699.

Counsel: Lee Loewinger argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs was Martin Michaelson.

Howard E. Shapiro argued the cause for the United States. With him on the brief were Solicitor General McCree, Assistant Attorney General Shenefield, and Robert B. Nicholson.

Judges: STEVENS, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which STEWART, WHITE, MARSHALL, and POWELL, JJ., joined, and in Parts I and III of which BLACKMUN and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined. BLACKMUN, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and concurring in [****5] the judgment, in which REHNQUIST, J., joined, post, p. 699. BURGER, C. J., filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, post, p. 701. BRENNAN, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: STEVENS

Opinion

---

[*681] [***643] [**1360] MR. JUSTICE STEVENS delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A] This is a civil antitrust case brought by the United States to nullify an association's canon of ethics prohibiting competitive bidding by its members. The question is whether the canon may be justified under the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1 et seq. (1976 ed.), because it was adopted by members of a learned profession for the purpose of minimizing the risk that competition would produce inferior engineering work endangering the public safety. The District Court rejected this justification without making any findings on the likelihood that competition would produce the dire consequences foreseen by the association.<sup>1</sup> The Court of Appeals affirmed.<sup>2</sup> [***644] We granted certiorari to decide whether the District [***6] Court should have considered the factual basis for the proffered justification before rejecting it. 434 U.S. 815. Because we are satisfied that the asserted defense rests on a fundamental misunderstanding of the Rule of Reason frequently applied in antitrust litigation, we affirm.

I

Engineering is an important and learned profession. There are over 750,000 graduate engineers in the United States, of whom [***7] about 325,000 are registered as professional engineers. Registration requirements vary from State to State, but usually require the applicant to be a graduate engineer with at least [*682] four years of practical experience and to pass a written examination. About half of those who are registered engage in consulting engineering on a fee basis. They perform services in connection with the study, design, and construction of all types of improvements to real property -- bridges, office buildings, airports, and factories are examples. Engineering fees, amounting to well over $ 2 billion each year, constitute about 5% of total construction costs. In any given facility, approximately 50% to 80% of the cost of construction is the direct result of work performed by an engineer concerning the systems and equipment to be incorporated in the structure.

The National Society of Professional Engineers (Society) was organized in 1935 to deal with the nontechnical aspects of engineering practice, including the promotion of the professional, social, and economic interests of its members. Its present membership of 69,000 resides throughout the United States and in some foreign countries. [***8] Approximately 12,000 members are consulting engineers who offer their services to governmental, industrial, and private clients. Some Society members are principals or chief executive officers of some of the largest engineering firms in the country.

The charges of a consulting engineer may be computed in different ways. He may charge the client a percentage of the cost of the project, may set his fee at his actual cost plus overhead plus a reasonable profit, may charge fixed rates per hour for different types of work, may perform an assignment for a specific sum, or he may combine one or more of these approaches. Suggested fee schedules for particular types of services in certain areas have been promulgated from time to time by various local societies. This case does not, however, involve any claim that the National Society has tried to fix specific fees, or even a [**1361] specific method of calculating fees. It involves a charge that the members of the Society have unlawfully agreed to refuse to negotiate or even to discuss the question of fees until after a prospective client has selected [***645] the [*683] engineer for a particular project. Evidence of this [****9] agreement is found in § 11 (c) of the Society's Code of Ethics, adopted in July 1964.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> 389 F.Supp. 1193 (DC 1974).

<sup>2</sup> 181 U. S. App. D. C. 41, 555 F.2d 978 (1977). When the District Court's original judgment was entered, petitioner was entitled to appeal directly to this Court. We vacated the District Court's judgment for reconsideration in the light of our then recent decision in Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 422 U.S. 1031. After reconsideration, the District Court re-entered its original judgment, 404 F.Supp. 457 (DC 1975), and petitioner then appealed to the Court of Appeals.

[****10] The District Court found that the Society's Board of Ethical Review has uniformly interpreted the "ethical rules against competitive bidding for engineering services as prohibiting the submission of any form of price information to a prospective customer which would enable that customer to make a price comparison on engineering services."<sup>4</sup> [****11] If the client requires that such information be provided, then § 11 (c) imposes an [*684] obligation upon the engineering firm to withdraw from consideration for that job. The Society's Code of Ethics thus "prohibits engineers from both soliciting and submitting such price information," 389 F.Supp. 1193, 1206 (DC 1974),<sup>5</sup> and seeks to preserve the profession's "traditional" method of selecting professional engineers. Under the traditional method, the client initially selects an engineer on the basis of background and reputation, not price.<sup>6</sup>

In 1972 the Government filed its complaint against the Society alleging that members had agreed to abide by canons of ethics prohibiting the submission of competitive bids for engineering services and that, in consequence, price competition among the members had been suppressed and customers had been deprived of the benefits [****12] of free and open competition. The complaint [***646] prayed for an injunction terminating the unlawful agreement.

In its answer the Society admitted the essential facts alleged by the Government and pleaded a series of affirmative defenses, only one of which remains in issue. In that defense, the Society averred that the standard set out in the Code of Ethics was reasonable because competition among professional [*1362] engineers was contrary to the public interest. It was averred that it would be cheaper and easier for an engineer "to design and specify inefficient and unnecessarily expensive structures and [*685] methods of construction."<sup>7</sup> Accordingly, competitive pressure

<sup>3</sup> That section, which remained in effect at the time of trial, provided:

"Section 11 -- The Engineer will not compete unfairly with another engineer by attempting to obtain employment or advancement or professional engagements by competitive bidding . . . .

"c. He shall not solicit or submit engineering proposals on the basis of competitive bidding. Competitive bidding for professional engineering services is defined as the formal or informal submission, or receipt, of verbal or written estimates of cost or proposals in terms of dollars, man days of work required, percentage of construction cost, or any other measure of compensation whereby the prospective client may compare engineering services on a price basis prior to the time that one engineer, or one engineering organization, has been selected for negotiations. The disclosure of recommended fee schedules prepared by various engineering societies is not considered to constitute competitive bidding. An Engineer requested to submit a fee proposal or bid prior to the selection of an engineer or firm subject to the negotiation of a satisfactory contract, shall attempt to have the procedure changed to conform to ethical practices, but if not successful he shall withdraw from consideration for the proposed work. These principles shall be applied by the Engineer in obtaining the services of other professions." App. 9951.

<sup>4</sup> 389 F.Supp., at 1206. In addition to § 11 (c) of the Society's Code of Ethics, see n. 3, supra, the Society's Board of Directors has adopted various "Professional Policy" statements. Policy statement 10-F was issued to "make it clear beyond all doubt" that the Society opposed competitive bidding for all engineering projects. 389 F.Supp., at 1206. This policy statement was replaced in 1972 by Policy 10-G which permits price quotations for certain types of engineering work -- in particular, research and development projects.

<sup>5</sup> Although the Society argues that it has never "enforced" its ban on competitive bidding, Reply Brief for Petitioner 15-18, the District Court specifically found that the record "[supports] a finding that NSPE and its members actively pursue a course of policing adherence to the competitive bid ban through direct and indirect communication with members and prospective clients." 389 F.Supp., at 1200. This finding has not been challenged as clearly erroneous.

<sup>6</sup> Having been selected, the engineer may then, in accordance with the Society's canons of ethics, negotiate a satisfactory fee arrangement with the client. If the negotiations are unsuccessful, then the client may withdraw his selection and approach a new engineer. Id., at 1215.

<sup>7</sup> The entire defense pleaded in the answer reads as follows:

to offer engineering services at the lowest possible price would adversely affect the quality of engineering. Moreover, the practice of awarding engineering contracts to the lowest bidder, regardless of quality, would be dangerous to the public health, safety, and welfare. For these reasons, the Society claimed that its Code of Ethics was not an "unreasonable restraint of interstate trade or commerce."

[****13] The parties compiled a voluminous discovery and trial record. The District Court made detailed findings about the [*686] engineering profession, the Society, its members' participation in interstate commerce, the history of the ban on competitive bidding, and certain incidents in which the ban appears to have been violated or enforced. The District Court did not, however, make any finding on the question whether, or to what extent, competition had led to inferior engineering work which, in turn, had adversely affected the public health, safety, or welfare. That inquiry was considered unnecessary because the court was convinced that the ethical prohibition against competitive bidding was "on its face a tampering with the price structure of engineering fees in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act." 389 F.Supp., at 1200.

[***647] Although it modified the injunction entered by the District Court,<sup>8</sup> the Court of Appeals affirmed its conclusion that the agreement was unlawful on its face and therefore "illegal without regard to claimed or possible benefits." 181 U. S. App. D. C. 41, 47, 555 F.2d 978, 984.

[***14] II

In Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, the Court held that a bar association's rule prescribing minimum fees for legal services violated § 1 of the Sherman Act. In that opinion the Court noted that certain practices by members of a learned profession might survive scrutiny under the Rule of Reason even though they would be viewed as a violation of the Sherman Act in another context. The Court said:

[**1363] HN1 [↑] "The fact that a restraint operates upon a profession as distinguished from a business is, of course, relevant in determining whether that particular restraint violates the [*687] Sherman Act. It would be unrealistic to view the practice of professions as interchangeable with other business activities, and automatically to apply to the professions antitrust concepts which originated in other areas. The public service aspect, and other features of the professions may require that a particular practice, which could properly be viewed as a violation of

"18. (a) The principles and standards contained in the NSPE Code of Ethics, particularly those contained in that part of the NSPE Code of Ethics set out above, are reasonable, necessary to the public health, safety and welfare insofar as they are affected by the work of professional engineers, and serve the the public interest.

"(b) Experience has demonstrated that competitive bidding for professional engineering services is inconsistent with securing for the recipients of such services the most economical projects or structures. Testing, calculating and designing the most economical and efficient structures and methods of construction is complex, difficult and expensive. It is cheaper and easier to design and specify inefficient and unnecessarily expensive structures and methods of construction. Consequently, if professional engineers are required by competitive pressures to submit bids in order to obtain employment of their services, the inevitable tendency will be to offer professional engineering services at the lowest possible price. Although this may result in some lowering of the cost of professional engineering services it will inevitably result in increasing the overall cost and decreasing the efficiency of those structures and projects which require professional engineering design and specification work.

"(c) Experience has also demonstrated that competitive bidding in most instances and situations results in an award of the work to be performed to the lowest bidder, regardless of other factors such as ability, experience, expertise, skill, capability, learning and the like, and that such awards in the case of professional engineers endanger the public health, welfare and safety.

"(d) For the aforesaid reasons, the provisions of the NSPE Code of Ethics set out above are not, in any event, in unreasonable restraint of interstate trade or commerce." App. 21-22.

<sup>8</sup>The Court of Appeals struck down the portion of the District Court's decree that ordered the Society to state that it did not consider competitive bidding to be unethical. 181 U. S. App. D. C., at 47, 555 F.2d, at 984. The court reasoned that this provision was "more intrusive than necessary to achieve fulfillment of the governmental interest." Ibid. The Government has not petitioned for review of that decision.

the Sherman Act in another context, be treated differently. We intimate no view on any [****15] other situation than the one with which we are confronted today." 421 U.S., at 788-789, n. 17.

Relying heavily on this footnote, and on some of the major cases applying a Rule of Reason -- principally Mitchel v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181, 24 Eng. Rep. 347 (1711); Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1; Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231; and Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 -- petitioner argues that its attempt to preserve the profession's traditional method of setting fees for engineering services is a reasonable method of forestalling the public harm which might be produced by unrestrained competitive bidding. To evaluate this argument it is necessary to identify the contours of the Rule of Reason and to discuss its application to the kind of justification asserted by petitioner.

A. The Rule of Reason.

LEdHN/2A[][2A]One problem presented by the language of § 1 of the Sherman Act is that it cannot mean what it says. The statute says that "every" contract [****16] that restrains trade is unlawful.<sup>9</sup> But, as Mr. Justice Brandeis perceptively noted, restraint is the [***648] very [*688] essence of every contract;<sup>10</sup> read literally, § 1 would outlaw the entire body of private contract law. Yet it is that body of law that establishes the enforceability of commercial agreements and enables competitive markets -- indeed, a competitive economy -- to function effectively.

[****17] LEdHN/3[][3]Congress, however, did not intend the text of the Sherman Act to delineate the full meaning of the statute or its application in concrete situations. The legislative history makes it perfectly clear that it expected the courts to give shape to the statute's broad mandate by drawing on common-law tradition.<sup>11</sup> The Rule of Reason, with its origins in common-law precedents long antedating the Sherman Act, has served that purpose. HN3[] It has been used to give the Act both flexibility and definition, and its central principle of antitrust analysis has remained constant. Contrary to its name, the Rule does not open the field of antitrust inquiry to any argument in favor of a challenged restraint that may fall within the realm of reason. Instead, it focuses directly on the challenged restraint's impact on competitive conditions.

[****18] This principle is apparent in even the earliest of cases applying the Rule of Reason, Mitchel v. Reynolds, supra. Mitchel involved the enforceability of a promise by [**1364] the seller of a bakery that he would not compete with the purchaser of his business. The covenant was for a limited time and applied only to the area in which the bakery had operated. It was therefore upheld as reasonable, even though it deprived the [*689] public of the benefit of potential competition. The long-run benefit of enhancing the marketability of the business itself -- and

<sup>9</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Act, as set forth in 15 U. S. C. § 1 \(1976 ed.\), provides:

HN2[] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. . . ."

10

LEdHN/2B[][2B]"But the legality of an agreement or regulation cannot be determined by so simple a test, as whether it restrains competition. Every agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains. To bind, to restrain, is of their very essence." Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238.

See also United States v. Topco Associates, 405 U.S. 596, 606:

"Were § 1 to be read in the narrowest possible way, any commercial contract could be deemed to violate it."

<sup>11</sup> See 21 Cong. Rec. 2456 (1890) (comments of Sen. Sherman); see generally H. Thorelli, Federal Antitrust Policy 228-229 (1955).

435 U.S. 679, *689; 98 S. Ct. 1355, **1364; 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, ***648; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 47, ****18

thereby providing incentives to develop such an enterprise -- outweighed the temporary and limited loss of competition.<sup>12</sup>

[****19] LEdHN/4<sup>13</sup> [4]The Rule of Reason suggested by Mitchel v. Reynolds has been regarded as a standard for testing the enforceability of covenants in restraint of trade which are ancillary to a legitimate transaction, such as an employment contract or the sale of a going business. Judge (later Mr. Chief Justice) Taft so interpreted the Rule in his classic rejection of the argument that competitors may lawfully agree to sell their goods at the same price as long as the agreed-upon price is reasonable. United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271, 282-283 \(CA6 1898\), aff'd, 175 U.S. 211. [***649] That case, and subsequent decisions by this Court, unequivocally foreclose an interpretation of the Rule as permitting an inquiry into the reasonableness of the prices set by private agreement.<sup>14</sup>

[****20] LEdHN/5<sup>15</sup> [5]

LEdHN/6<sup>16</sup> [6]The early cases also foreclose the argument that because of the special characteristics of a particular industry, monopolistic arrangements will better promote trade and commerce than competition. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290; United States v. Joint Traffic Assn., 171 U.S. 505, 573-577. That kind of argument is properly addressed to Congress and may justify an exemption from the statute for [*690] specific industries,<sup>17</sup> but it is not permitted by the Rule of Reason. As the Court observed in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S., at 65, HN4<sup>18</sup> "restraints of trade within the purview of the statute . . . [cannot] be taken out of that category by indulging in general reasoning as to the expediency or nonexpediency of having made the contracts or the wisdom or want of wisdom of the statute which prohibited their being made. [****21] "

LEdHN/7<sup>19</sup> [7]LEdHN/8A<sup>20</sup> [8A]HN5<sup>21</sup> The test prescribed in Standard Oil is whether the challenged contracts or acts "were unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions." Unreasonableness under that test could be based either (1) on the nature or character of the contracts, or (2) on surrounding [****22] circumstances giving rise to the inference or presumption that they were intended to restrain trade and enhance prices.<sup>22</sup> [****23] Under either branch of the [**1365] test, the inquiry is confined to a consideration of impact on competitive conditions.<sup>23</sup>

<sup>12</sup>"4thly, The fourth reason is in favour of these contracts, and is, that there may happen instances wherein they may be useful and beneficial, as . . . in case of an old man, who finding himself under such circumstances either of body or mind, as that he is likely to be a loser by continuing his trade, in this case it will be better for him to part with it for a consideration, that by selling his custom, he may procure to himself a livelihood, which he might probably have lost, by trading longer." 1 P. Wms., at 191, 24 Eng. Rep., at 350.

<sup>13</sup>85 F., at 293. See also United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 340-342.

<sup>14</sup>Congress has exempted certain industries from the full reach of the Sherman Act. See, e. g., 7 U. S. C. §§ 291-292 \(1976 ed.\) (Capper-Volstead Act, agricultural cooperatives); 15 U. S. C. §§ 1011-1013 \(1976 ed.\) (McCarran-Ferguson Act, insurance); 49 U. S. C. § 5b (Reed-Bulwinkle Act, rail and motor carrier rate-fixing bureaus); 15 U. S. C. § 1801 \(1976 ed.\) (newspaper joint operating agreements).

<sup>15</sup>"Without going into detail and but very briefly surveying the whole field, it may be with accuracy said that the dread of enhancement of prices and of other wrongs which it was thought would flow from the undue limitation on competitive conditions caused by contracts or other acts of individuals or corporations, led, as a matter of public policy, to the prohibition or treating as illegal all contracts or acts which were unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions, either from the nature or character of

[****24]

[*691] [LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]In [***650] this respect the Rule of Reason has remained faithful to its origins. From Mr. Justice Brandeis' opinion for the Court in Chicago Board of Trade to the Court opinion written by MR. JUSTICE POWELL in Continental T. V., Inc., the Court has adhered to the position that the inquiry mandated by the Rule of Reason is whether the challenged agreement is one that promotes competition or one that suppresses competition. HN6 "The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition." 246 U.S., at 238, quoted in 433 U.S., at 49 n. 15.<sup>17</sup>

[****25]

[*692] [LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]There are, thus, two complementary categories of antitrust analysis. In the first category are agreements whose nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality -- they are "illegal per se." In the second category are agreements whose competitive effect can only be evaluated by analyzing the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed. In either event, the purpose of the analysis is to form a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint; it is not to decide whether a policy favoring competition is in the public interest, or in the interest of the members of an industry. Subject to exceptions defined by statute, that policy decision has been made by the Congress.<sup>18</sup>

[****26] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]B. The Ban on Competitive Bidding.

the contract or act or where the surrounding circumstances were such as to justify the conclusion that they had not been entered into or performed with the legitimate purpose of reasonably forwarding personal interest and developing trade, but on the contrary were of such a character as to give rise to the inference or presumption that they had been entered into or done with the intent to do wrong to the general public and to limit the right of individuals, thus restraining the free flow of commerce and tending to bring about the evils, such as enhancement of prices, which were considered to be against public policy." 221 U.S., at 58.

<sup>16</sup> Throughout the Court's opinion the emphasis is on economic conceptions. For instance, the Court's description of the common-law treatment of engrossing and forestalling statutes noted that contracts which had been illegal on their face were later recognized as reasonable because they tended to promote competition. Id., at 55. As was pointed out in the Report of the Attorney General's National Committee To Study the Antitrust Laws 11 (1955):

[LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]"While Standard Oil gave the courts discretion in interpreting the word 'every' in Section 1, such discretion is confined to consideration of whether in each case the conduct being reviewed under the Act constitutes an undue restraint of competitive conditions, or a monopolization, or an attempt to monopolize. This standard permits the courts to decide whether conduct is significantly and unreasonably anticompetitive in character or effect; it makes obsolete once prevalent arguments, such as, whether monopoly arrangements would be socially preferable to competition in a particular industry, because, for example, of high fixed costs or the risks of 'cut-throat' competition or other similar unusual conditions."

<sup>17</sup> In Continental T. V., Inc., the Court explained the Rule of Reason standard as follows:

"Under this rule, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." 433 U.S., at 49.

The Court then analyzed the "market impact" of vertical restraints, noting their complexity because of the potential for a simultaneous reduction of intrabrand competition and stimulation of interbrand competition. Id., at 50-51. "Competitive impact" and "economic analysis" were emphasized throughout the opinion.

<sup>18</sup> See generally Attorney General's Report, supra n. 16, at 10-11; Bork, The Rule of Reason and the Per Se Concept: Price Fixing and Market Division, 74 Yale L. J. 775 (1965); L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 165-197 (1977).

HN7 Price is the "central nervous system of the economy," United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 226 n. 59, and an agreement that "[interferes] with the setting of price by free market forces" is illegal on its face. United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S. 333, 337. In this case we are presented with an agreement among [**651] competitors to refuse to discuss prices with potential customers until after negotiations have resulted [**1366] in the initial selection of an engineer. While this is not price fixing as such, no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of such an agreement. It operates as an absolute ban on competitive bidding, applying with equal force to both complicated and simple projects and to both inexperienced and sophisticated customers. As the District Court found, [****27] the ban "impedes the ordinary give and take of the market place," and substantially deprives the customer of "the ability to utilize [*693] and compare prices in selecting engineering services." 404 F.Supp. 457, 460. On its face, this agreement restrains trade within the meaning of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

The Society's affirmative defense confirms rather than refutes the anticompetitive purpose and effect of its agreement. The Society argues that the restraint is justified because bidding on engineering services is inherently imprecise, would lead to deceptively low bids, and would thereby tempt individual engineers to do inferior work with consequent risk to public safety and health.<sup>19</sup> The logic of this argument rests on the assumption that the agreement will tend to maintain the price level; if it had no such effect, it would not serve its intended purpose. The Society nonetheless invokes the Rule of Reason, arguing that its restraint on price competition ultimately inures to the public benefit by preventing the [*694] production of inferior work and by insuring ethical behavior. As the preceding discussion of the Rule of Reason reveals, this Court [****28] has never accepted such an argument.

[****29] It may be, as petitioner argues, that competition tends to force prices down and that an inexpensive item may be inferior to one that is more costly. There is some risk, therefore, that competition will cause some suppliers to market a defective product. Similarly, competitive bidding for engineering projects may be inherently imprecise and incapable of taking into account all the variables which will be involved in the actual performance of the [***652] project.<sup>20</sup> Based on these considerations, a purchaser might conclude that his interest in quality -- which may embrace the safety of the end product -- outweighs the advantages of achieving cost savings by pitting one competitor against another. Or an individual vendor might independently refrain from price negotiation until he has satisfied himself that he fully understands the scope of his customers' needs. These decisions might be [**1367] reasonable; indeed, petitioner has provided ample documentation for that thesis. But these are not reasons that satisfy the Rule; nor are such individual decisions subject to antitrust [****30] attack.

<sup>19</sup> The Society also points out that competition, in the form of bargaining between the engineer and customer, is allowed under its canon of ethics once an engineer has been initially selected. See n. 6, supra. It then contends that its prohibition of competitive bidding regulates only the timing of competition, thus making this case analogous to Chicago Board of Trade, where the Court upheld an exchange rule which forbade exchange members from making purchases after the close of the day's session at any price other than the closing bid price. Indeed, petitioner has reprinted the Government's brief in that case to demonstrate that the Solicitor General regarded the exchange's rule as a form of price fixing. Reply Brief for Petitioner A1-A28. We find this reliance on Chicago Board of Trade misplaced for two reasons. First, petitioner's claim mistakenly treats negotiation between a single seller and a single buyer as the equivalent of competition between two or more potential sellers. Second, even if we were to accept the Society's equation of bargaining with price competition, our concern with Chicago Board of Trade is in its formulation of the proper test to be used in judging the legality of an agreement; that formulation unquestionably stresses impact on competition. Whatever one's view of the application of the Rule of Reason in that case, see Sullivan, supra n. 18, at 175-182, the Court considered the exchange's regulation of price information as having a positive effect on competition. 246 U.S., at 240-241. The District Court's findings preclude a similar conclusion concerning the effect of the Society's "regulation."

<sup>20</sup> We, of course, express no view on the truth of this assertion, although it might be noted that the Society has allowed competitive bidding for some types of engineering projects in this country, see n. 4, supra, and, at one time, allowed competitive bidding for all engineering work in foreign countries "as required by the laws, regulations or practices of the foreign country." App. 6487. This rule, called the "When-in-Rome" clause, was abolished in 1968. Id., at 6344.

LEdHN[12] [12]The Sherman Act does not require competitive bidding;<sup>21</sup> [*695] it prohibits unreasonable restraints on competition. Petitioner's ban on competitive bidding prevents all customers from making price comparisons in the initial selection of an engineer, and imposes the Society's views of the costs and benefits of competition on the entire marketplace. It is this restraint that must be justified under the Rule of Reason, and petitioner's [****31] attempt to do so on the basis of the potential threat that competition poses to the public safety and the ethics of its profession is nothing less than a frontal assault on the basic policy of the Sherman Act.

[****32] HN8

The Sherman Act reflects a legislative judgment that ultimately competition will produce not only lower prices, but also better goods and services. "The heart of our national economic policy long has been faith in the value of competition." Standard Oil Co. v. FTC, 340 U.S. 231, 248. The assumption that competition is the best method of allocating resources in a free market recognizes that all elements of a bargain -- quality, service, safety, and durability -- and not just the immediate cost, are favorably affected by the free opportunity to select among alternative offers. Even assuming occasional exceptions to the presumed consequences of competition, the statutory policy precludes inquiry into the question whether competition is good or bad.

The fact that engineers are often involved in large-scale projects significantly affecting the public safety does not alter our analysis. Exceptions to the Sherman Act for potentially dangerous goods and services would be tantamount to a repeal of the statute. In our complex economy the number of items that may cause serious harm is almost endless -- automobiles, [****33] [***653] drugs, foods, aircraft components, heavy equipment, and countless others, cause serious harm to individuals or to the public at large if defectively made. The judiciary cannot [*696] indirectly protect the public against this harm by conferring monopoly privileges on the manufacturers.

LEdHN[13] [13]By the same token, the cautionary footnote in Goldfarb, 421 U.S., at 788-789, n. 17, quoted supra, cannot be read as fashioning a broad exemption under the Rule of Reason for learned professions. We adhere to the view expressed in Goldfarb that, by their nature, professional services may differ significantly from other business services, and, accordingly, the nature of the competition in such services may vary. Ethical norms may serve to regulate and promote this competition, and thus fall within the Rule of Reason.<sup>22</sup> But the Society's argument in this case is a far cry from such a position. We are faced with a contention that a total ban on competitive bidding is necessary because otherwise engineers will be tempted to submit deceptively low bids. Certainly, the problem [****34] of professional deception is a proper [**1368] subject of an ethical canon. But, once again, HN9 the equation of competition with deception, like the similar equation with safety hazards, is simply too broad; we may assume that competition is not entirely conducive to ethical behavior, but that is not a reason, cognizable under the Sherman Act, for doing away with competition.

In sum, the Rule of Reason does not support a defense based on the assumption that competition itself [****35] is unreasonable. Such a view of the Rule would create the "sea of doubt" on which Judge Taft refused to embark in Addyston, 85 F., at 284, and which this Court has firmly avoided ever since.

<sup>21</sup>Indeed, Congress has decided not to require competitive bidding for Government purchases of engineering services. The Brooks Act, 40 U. S. C. §§ 541-544 (1970 ed., Supp. V), requires the Government to use a method of selecting engineers similar to the Society's "traditional method." See n. 6, supra. The Society relies heavily on the Brooks Act as evidence that its ban on competitive bidding is reasonable. The argument is without merit. The Brooks Act does not even purport to exempt engineering services from the antitrust laws, and the reasonableness of an individual purchaser's decision not to seek lower prices through competition does not authorize the vendors to conspire to impose that same decision on all other purchasers.

<sup>22</sup>Courts have, for instance, upheld marketing restraints related to the safety of a product, provided that they have no anticompetitive effect and that they are reasonably ancillary to the seller's main purpose of protecting the public from harm or itself from product liability. See, e. g., Tripoli Co. v. Wella Corp., 425 F.2d 932 (CA3 1970) (en banc); cf. Continental T. V., 433 U.S., at 55 n. 23.

III

[LEdHN\[14A\]](#) [14A] The judgment entered by the District Court, as modified by [*697] the Court of Appeals,<sup>23</sup> prohibits the Society from adopting any official opinion, policy statement, or guideline stating or implying that competitive bidding is unethical.<sup>24</sup> Petitioner argues that this judgment abridges its First Amendment rights.<sup>25</sup> We find no merit in this contention.

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15] [****36] [LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16] [LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17] Having found the Society guilty of a violation of the Sherman Act, the District Court was empowered to fashion appropriate restraints on the Society's future activities both to avoid a recurrence of the violation and to eliminate its consequences. See, e. g., International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 400-401; United States v. Glaxo Group, Ltd., 410 U.S. 52, 64. While the resulting order may curtail the exercise [***654] of liberties that the Society might otherwise enjoy, that is a necessary and, in cases such as this, unavoidable consequence of the violation. Just as an injunction against price fixing abridges the freedom of businessmen to talk to one another about prices, so too the injunction in this case must restrict the Society's range of expression on the ethics of competitive bidding.<sup>26</sup> HN10 [10] The First Amendment does not "make it . . . impossible ever to enforce laws [****37] against agreements in restraint of trade . . . ." Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U.S. 490, 502. In fashioning a remedy, the District Court may, of course, consider the fact that its injunction may impinge upon rights that would otherwise be constitutionally [*698] protected, but those protections do not prevent it from remedying the antitrust violations.

[LEdHN\[14C\]](#) [14C] [LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18] The standard against [****38] which the order must be judged is whether the relief represents a reasonable method of eliminating the consequences of the illegal conduct. We agree with the Court of Appeals that the injunction, as modified, meets this standard. While it goes beyond a simple proscription against the precise conduct previously pursued, that is entirely appropriate.

HN11 [11] "The District Court is not obliged to assume, contrary to common experience, that a violator of the antitrust laws will relinquish the fruits of his violation more completely than the court requires him to do. And advantages already in hand may be held by methods more subtle and informed, and more difficult to prove, than those which, in the first place, win a market. When the purpose to restrain trade appears from a clear violation of law, it is not necessary that all of the untraveled roads to that end be left open and that only the worn one be closed." [**1369] International Salt Co., supra, at 400.

The Society apparently fears that the District Court's injunction, if broadly read, will block legitimate paths of expression [****39] on all ethical matters relating to bidding.<sup>27</sup> But the answer to these fears is, as the Court held

<sup>23</sup> See n. 8, supra.

<sup>24</sup> See App. 9974-9980.

<sup>25</sup> [LEdHN\[14B\]](#) [14B] Petitioner contends the judgment is both an unconstitutional prior restraint on speech and an unconstitutional prohibition against free association.

<sup>26</sup> Thus, in Goldfarb, although the bar association believed that its fee schedule accurately reflected ethical price levels, it was nonetheless enjoined "from adopting, publishing, or distributing any future schedules of minimum or suggested fees." Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 355 F.Supp. 491, 495-496 (ED Va. 1973). See also United States v. National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, 339 U.S. 485.

<sup>27</sup> For instance, the Society argues that the injunction can be read as prohibiting it from opposing repeal of statutes such as the Brooks Act, see n. 21, supra, and that such a prohibition would violate the principles of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See Eastern Railroad Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127; Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657. By its terms the injunction contains no such prohibition, and indeed the Government contends that "[nothing] in the judgment prevents NSPE and its members from attempting to influence governmental action . . ." Brief for United States 60.

in International Salt, that HN12↑ the burden is upon the proved transgressor "to bring any proper claims for relief to the court's attention." Ibid. In [*699] this case, the Court of Appeals specifically stated that "[if] the Society wishes to adopt some other ethical guideline more closely confined to the legitimate objective of preventing deceptively low bids, it [***655] may move the district court for modification of the decree." 181 U. S. App. D. C. at 46, 555 F.2d, at 983. This is, we believe, a proper approach, adequately protecting the Society's interests. We therefore reject petitioner's attack on the District Court's order.

[****40] The judgment of the Court of Appeals is

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Concur by: BLACKMUN (In Part); BURGER (In Part)

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN, with whom MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST joins, concurring in part and concurring in the judgment.

I join Parts I and III of the Court's opinion and concur in the judgment. I do not join Part II because I would not, at least for the moment, reach as far as the Court appears to me to do in intimating, ante, at 696, and n. 22, that any ethical rule with an overall anticompetitive effect promulgated by a professional society is forbidden under the Sherman Act. In my view, the decision in Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 788-789, n. 17 \(1975\), properly left to the Court some flexibility in considering how to apply traditional Sherman Act concepts to professions long consigned to self-regulation. Certainly, this case does not require us to decide whether the "Rule of Reason" as applied to the professions ever could take account of benefits other than increased competition. For even accepting petitioner's assertion that product quality is one such [****41] benefit, and that maintenance of the quality of engineering services requires that an engineer not bid before he has made full acquaintance with the scope of a client's desired project, Brief for Petitioner 49-50, 54, petitioner Society's rule is still grossly overbroad. As petitioner concedes, Tr. of Oral [*700] Arg. 47-48, § 11 (c) forbids any simultaneous consultation between a client and several engineers, even where the client provides complete information to each about the scope and nature of the desired project before requesting price information. To secure a price estimate on a project, the client must purport to engage a single engineer, and so long as that engagement continues no other member of the Society is permitted to discuss the project with the client in order to provide comparative price information. Though § 11 (c) does not fix prices directly, and though the customer retains the option of rejecting a particular engineer's offer and beginning negotiations all over again with another engineer, the forced process of sequential search inevitably increases the cost of gathering price information, and hence will dampen price competition, without any calibrated [****42] role to play in preventing uninformed bids. Then, too, the Society's rule is overbroad in the aspect noted by Judge Leventhal, when it prevents any dissemination of competitive price information in regard to real property improvements prior to the engagement of a single engineer regardless [**1370] of "the sophistication of the purchaser, the complexity of the project, or the procedures for evaluating price information." 181 U. S. App. D. C. 41, 45, 555 F.2d 978, 982 \(1977\).

My skepticism about going further in this case by shaping the Rule of Reason to such a narrow last as does [***656] the majority, * arises from the fact that there may be ethical rules which have a more than de minimis

---

* This Court has not always applied the Rule of Reason with such rigor even to commercial businesses. See Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U.S. 344 (1933); Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231 (1918); L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 175-182 (1977); R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 41-47, 56 (1978). I intimate no view as to the correctness of those decisions.

anticompetitive effect and yet are important in a profession's proper ordering. A medical association's prescription of standards of minimum competence for licensing or certification may lessen the number of [*701] entrants. A bar association's regulation of the permissible forms of price advertising for nonroutine legal services or limitation of in-person solicitation, see Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350 (1977), may also have the [****43] effect of reducing price competition. In acknowledging that "professional services may differ significantly from other business services" and that the "nature of the competition in such services may vary," ante, at 696, but then holding that ethical norms can pass muster under the Rule of Reason only if they promote competition, I am not at all certain that the Court leaves enough elbowroom for realistic application of the Sherman Act to professional services.

Dissent by: BURGER (In Part)

Dissent

---

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I concur in the Court's [****44] judgment to the extent it sustains the finding of a violation of the Sherman Act but dissent from that portion of the judgment prohibiting petitioner from stating in its published standards of ethics the view that competitive bidding is unethical. The First Amendment guarantees the right to express such a position and that right cannot be impaired under the cloak of remedial judicial action.

References

---

Propriety and scope of injunctive relief in federal antitrust case

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 30, 31

12 Federal Procedural Forms L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:61 et seq.

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 11 et seq.

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 16, 42

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 16.5

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

[****45] Annotation References:

The Supreme Court and the First Amendment right of association. 33 L Ed 2d 865.

The Supreme Court and the right of free speech and press. 93 L Ed 1151, 2 L Ed 2d 1706, 11 L Ed 2d 1116, 21 L Ed 2d 976.

"Learned profession" exemption in federal antitrust laws. 39 ALR Fed 774.

---

End of Document

St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry

Supreme Court of the United States

March 27, 1978, Argued ; June 29, 1978, Decided

No. 77-240

Reporter

438 U.S. 531 *; 98 S. Ct. 2923 **; 57 L. Ed. 2d 932 ***; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 40 ****; 1978-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P62,102

ST. PAUL FIRE & MARINE INSURANCE CO. ET AL. v. BARRY ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIRST CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 555 F.2d 3, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

boycott, Sherman Act, intimidation, insurance company, coercion, practices, regulation, terms, policyholders, coverage, insurers, insurance business, conspiracy, concerted refusal, anti trust law, Underwriters, combinations, state regulation, insurance industry, state law, antitrust, competitors, target, medical malpractice insurance, legislative history, McCarran-Ferguson Act, customers, coerce, rates, respondents'

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

**HN1** Industry Practices, Federal Regulations

See § 2\(a\) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012\(a\).

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

**HN2** Industry Practices, Federal Regulations

See § 2\(b\) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012\(b\).

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

**HN3** Industry Practices, Federal Regulations

See § 3\(b\) the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1013\(b\).

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Claims Made Policies > Coverage

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Claims Made Policies > General Overview

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Claims Made Policies > Occurrence Policies

HN4 Claims Made Policies, Coverage

An "occurrence" policy protects the policyholder from liability for any act done while the policy is in effect, whereas a "claims made" policy protects the holder only against claims made during the life of the policy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Mootness > General Overview

HN5 Justiciability, Mootness

Although not raised by the parties, a mootness issue implicates the court's jurisdiction.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 Legislation, Interpretation

The starting point in any case involving construction of a statute is the language itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN7 Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

Under § 3\(b\) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1013\(b\), the boycotters and the ultimate target need not be in a competitive relationship with each other.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The enlistment of third parties in an agreement not to trade, as a means of compelling capitulation by the boycotted group, is conduct supporting a finding of unlawful boycott.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN9** Legislation, Interpretation

Words or phrases in a statute come freighted with the meaning imparted to them by the mischief to be remedied and by contemporaneous discussion. In such conditions, history is a teacher that is not to be ignored.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

**HN10** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The term "boycott" is not limited to concerted activity against insurance companies or agents or, more generally, against competitors of members of the boycotting group.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

**HN11** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Where a group of insurers decides to resolve by private action the problem of escalating damages claims and verdicts by coercing the policyholders to accept a severe limitation of coverage essential to the provision of medical services, this conduct constitutes a boycott under § 3\(b\) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1013\(b\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

**HN12** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Conduct by individual actors falling short of concerted activity is simply not a boycott within the McCarran-Ferguson Act § 3\(b\), 15 U.S.C.S. § 1013\(b\).

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

Licensed physicians practicing in Rhode Island and their patients brought a class action, in part under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), against four insurance companies writing medical malpractice insurance in the state, alleging a private conspiracy of the four companies in which three refused to deal on any terms with the physicians, policyholders of the fourth company, as a means of compelling their submission to new, restrictive ground rules of coverage set by the fourth company. The United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island dismissed the antitrust complaint, holding that it was barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1011-1015). The United States Court of Appeals reversed, holding that the complaint stated a claim within the "boycott" exception in 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act \(555 F2d 3\).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Powell, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and Brennan, White, Marshall, Blackmun, and Stevens, JJ., it was held that (1) the boycott exception of 3(b) was not limited to concerted activity against insurance companies or agents or, more generally, against competitors of members of the boycotting group, but also provided protection under the Sherman Act for policyholders victimized by private conspiracies of insurers, and (2) the private conduct alleged to have occurred constituted a boycott within the meaning of 3(b), since the agreement binding the four companies erected a barrier between the policyholders and any alternative source of the desired coverage, effectively foreclosing all possibility of coverage anywhere in the relevant market, and since the conduct with which the companies were charged appeared to have occurred outside of any regulatory or cooperative arrangement established by the laws of Rhode Island.

Stewart, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., dissented, expressing the view that 3(b) required that the agreement or act of boycott must be aimed ultimately at a member of the insurance industry and that it did not apply where the immediate targets were policyholders or others outside the industry, unless they were boycotted for the purpose of forcing other insurance companies or agents to comply with industry rules.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §29 > McCarran-Ferguson Act -- boycott exception -- construction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

The "boycott" exception of 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1013\(b\)) is not limited to concerted activity against insurance companies or agents or, more generally, against competitors of members of the boycotting group, but also provides protection under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) for policyholders victimized by private practices of insurers; the language of 3(b) is broad and unqualified, and it covers any act or agreement amounting to a boycott, coercion, or intimidation. (Stewart and Rehnquist, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

MONOPOLIES §29 > McCarran-Ferguson Act -- boycott exception -- conduct constituting boycott -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

Private conduct alleged to have been engaged in by insurance companies--whereby four insurance companies writing medical malpractice insurance in a state agreed that three of the four would not deal on any terms with the policyholders of the fourth as a means of insuring policyholder submission to new, restrictive ground rules of coverage--constitutes a "boycott" within the meaning of 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1013\(b\)), since the agreement binding the four companies erected a barrier between the policyholders and any alternative source of the desired coverage, effectively foreclosing all possibility of coverage anywhere in the relevant market, where the conduct with which the companies are charged appears to have occurred outside of any regulatory or cooperative arrangement established by the laws of the state in which they were writing the policies. (Stewart and Rehnquist, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

COURTS §763 > mootness -- state law affecting subject of suit -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

A suit under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) against four insurance companies writing medical malpractice insurance in a state, alleging a private conspiracy of the four companies in which three refused to sell policyholders of the fourth any type of insurance as a means of compelling their submission to new, restrictive ground rules of coverage set by the fourth, is not mooted by the State's formation, after the initial complaint has been filed, of a joint underwriting association to provide malpractice insurance to all licensed providers of health services and to require the participation of all personal-injury liability insurers in the state in a scheme to pool expenses and losses in providing such insurance, where the state's act does not extinguish the plaintiffs' every claim for relief, since it cannot be said that it is absolutely clear that the allegedly wrongful behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur.

STATUTES §163 > construction -- language -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The starting point in any case involving construction of a statute is the language itself.

BOYCOTT §1 > concept -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The generic concept of boycott refers to a method of pressuring a party with whom one has a dispute by withholding, or enlisting others to withhold, patronage or services from the target.

MONOPOLIES §30 > Sherman Act -- offenses -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) makes it an offense for businessmen to agree among themselves to stop selling to particular customers.

STATUTES §145 > construction -- history -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

History is not to be ignored where words or phrases in a statute come freighted with the meaning imparted to them by the mischief to be remedied and by contemporaneous discussion.

MONOPOLIES §29 > McCarran-Ferguson Act -- boycott exception -- conduct by individuals -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Conduct by individual actors falling short of concerted activity is not a "boycott" within 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1013\(b\)).

Syllabus

---

Respondents, licensed physicians practicing in Rhode Island and their patients, brought a class action against petitioners, four insurance companies writing medical malpractice insurance in the State, alleging a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act in which three of the four companies refused to deal on any terms with the policyholders of the fourth as a means of compelling them to submit to new ground rules set by the fourth, whereby coverage on an "occurrence" basis would not be renewed and coverage would issue only on a "claims made" basis. Petitioners' motion to dismiss the antitrust claim on the ground that it was barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act was granted by the District Court. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that the complaint stated a claim within the "boycott" exception in § 3 \(b\) of that Act, which provides that the Sherman Act shall remain applicable "to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, [****2] coercion, or intimidation." Held:

1. The antitrust claim is not mooted by the fact that after the complaint was filed Rhode Island formed a Joint Underwriters Association to provide medical malpractice insurance and to require all personal-injury liability insurers in the State to pool expenses and losses in providing such insurance. Since Rhode Island now permits the writing of such insurance outside of the Association, it cannot be said that "subsequent events [make] it absolutely clear that the allegedly wrongful behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur," United States v. Phosphate Export Assn., 393 U.S. 199, 203. Pp. 537-538.
2. The "boycott" exception of § 3 \(b\) applies to certain types of disputes between policyholders and insurers and is not limited to concerted activity directed against competitor insurers or agents or, more generally, against competitors of members of the boycotting group. Pp. 538-551.
  - (a) The language of § 3 \(b\) is broad and unqualified, covering "any" act or agreement amounting to a "boycott, coercion, or intimidation." Had Congress intended to limit its scope to boycotts of competitor insurer companies or agents, [****3] and to preclude all Sherman Act protection for policyholders, it presumably would have made this explicit. The customary understanding of "boycott" at the time of enactment, as elaborated in the Sherman Act decisions of this Court, does not support a definition of the term that embraces only those combinations that target competitors of the boycotters as the ultimate objects of a concerted refusal to deal. Pp. 541-546.
  - (b) The legislative history, while not unambiguous, provides no substantial evidence that Congress sought to attach a special meaning to the language of § 3 \(b\) that would exclude policyholders from all Sherman Act protection from restrictive agreements and practices by insurers falling outside of the realm of state-supervised cooperative action. Congress intended to preserve Sherman Act review of certain forms of regulation by private combinations and groups, including but not limited to the eradication of "blacklisting" and other exclusionary devices directed at independent insurance companies or agents. Pp. 546-550.
  - (c) Nor does the structure of the McCarran-Ferguson Act support the proposed limitation on the reach of § 3 \(b\). Section 3 \(b\) is an exception [****4] to § 2 \(b\), which limits the general applicability of the federal antitrust laws "to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law." Congress intended in the "boycott" clause of § 3 \(b\) to carve out of the overall framework of plenary state regulation an area that would remain subject to Sherman Act scrutiny. Pp. 550-551.
3. The type of private conduct alleged to have taken place here, directed against policyholders, constitutes a "boycott" within the meaning of § 3 \(b\). Pp. 552-555.

(a) Such conduct accords with the common understanding of a boycott. The agreement binding petitioners erected a barrier between respondents and any alternative source of the desired coverage, effectively foreclosing all possibility of competition anywhere in the relevant market. Pp. 552-553.

(b) The conduct with which petitioners are charged appears to have occurred outside of any regulatory or cooperative arrangement established by the laws of Rhode Island. This is not a case where a State has decided that regulatory policy requires that certain risks be allocated in a particular fashion among insurers or has authorized insurers to decline to insure [****5] particular risks. Here a group of insurers decided to resolve by private action the problem of escalating damages claims and verdicts by coercing policyholders of one of the insurers to accept a severe limitation of coverage. Pp. 553-555.

Counsel: Sidney S. Rosdeitcher argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Howard S. Veisz, Thomas D. Gidley, Stephen J. Carlotti, Charles Lister, Joseph A. Kelly, Walker B. Comegys, Kirk Hanson, and Joseph V. Cavanagh.

Leonard Decof argued the cause and filed a brief for respondents.

Deputy Solicitor General Friedman argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging affirmance. With him on the brief were Solicitor General McCree, Assistant Attorney General Shenefield, Richard A. Allen, and John J. Powers III.*

[****6]

Judges: POWELL, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and BRENNAN, WHITE, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, and STEVENS, JJ., joined. STEWART, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which REHNQUIST, J., joined, post, p. 555.

Opinion by: POWELL

Opinion

---

[*533] [***936] [**2925] MR. JUSTICE POWELL delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A] LEdHN[2A] [2A] Respondents, licensed physicians practicing in the State of Rhode Island and their patients, brought a class action, in part under the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1 et seq. (1976 ed.), against petitioners, the four insurance companies writing medical malpractice insurance in the State. The complaint alleged a [**2926] private conspiracy of the four companies in which three refused to sell respondents insurance of any type as a means of compelling their submission to new ground rules of coverage set by the fourth. Petitioner insurers successfully moved in District Court to dismiss the antitrust claim on the ground that it was [****7] barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act (Act), 59 Stat. 33, as amended, 15 U. S. C. [*534] §§ 1011-1015 (1976 ed.).<sup>1</sup> The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that respondents' complaint stated a claim within

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed by Richard A. Whiting and Loren Kieve for the American Insurance Assn. et al.; and by Jon S. Hanson for the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

Roger Tilbury and Henry Kane filed a brief for the Portland Retail Druggists Assn., Inc., as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

Eugene Greener, Jr., filed a brief for Lakeside Hospital, Inc., as amicus curiae.

<sup>1</sup> The McCarran-Ferguson Act provides in relevant part:

HN1 [Sec. 2]. (a) The business of insurance, and every person engaged therein, shall be subject to the laws of the several States which relate to the regulation or taxation of such business.

the "boycott" exception in § 3 (b) of the Act, which provides that the Sherman Act shall remain applicable "to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation," 15 U. S. C. § 1013 (b) (1976 ed.). 555 F.2d 3 (CA1 1977). We are required to decide whether the "boycott" exception applies to disputes between policyholders and insurers.

[****8] I

As this case comes to us from the reversal of a successful motion to dismiss, we treat the factual allegations of respondents' amended complaint as true.<sup>2</sup> During the period in [*535] question, petitioners St. Paul Fire & [***937] Marine Insurance Co. (St. Paul), Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., Travelers Indemnity of Rhode Island (and two affiliated companies), and Hartford Casualty Co. (and an affiliated company) were the only sellers of medical malpractice insurance in Rhode Island. In April 1975, St. Paul, the largest of the insurers, announced that it would not renew medical malpractice coverage on an "occurrence" basis, but would write insurance only on a "claims made" basis.<sup>3</sup> [*535] Following St. Paul's announcement, and in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy, the other petitioners refused to accept applications for any type of insurance from physicians, hospitals, or other medical personnel whom St. Paul then insured. The object of the conspiracy was to restrict St. Paul's policyholders to "claims made" coverage by compelling them to "purchase medical malpractice insurance from one insurer only, to wit defendant, St. Paul, and that [such] purchase must be made on [***9] terms dictated by the defendant, St. Paul." App. 25. It is alleged that this scheme was effectuated by a collective refusal to deal, by unfair rate discrimination, by agreements not to compete, [**2927] and by horizontal price fixing, and that petitioners engaged in "a purposeful course of coercion, intimidation, boycott and unfair competition with respect to the sale of medical malpractice insurance in the State of Rhode Island." Id. at 24-27.<sup>4</sup>

HN2[] "(b) No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, or which imposes a fee or tax upon such business, unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance: Provided, That after June 30, 1948, the Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, known as the Sherman Act, and the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended, known as the Clayton Act, and the Act of September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State Law.

....

HN3[] "Sec. 3 (b) Nothing contained in this chapter shall render the said Sherman Act inapplicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation." 59 Stat. 34, as amended, 61 Stat. 448, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1012, 1013 (b) (1976 ed.).

<sup>2</sup> Both the amended complaint and a second amended complaint, filed after the District Court's dismissal of the antitrust claim, also alleged several state-law claims. Review of the disposition of those claims has not been sought in this Court.

To the extent the complaint alleges a violation of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 12 et seq. (1976 ed.), that claim is barred by respondents' concession that the requirements of § 2 (b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act are satisfied in this case. See n. 9, infra.

<sup>3</sup> HN4[] An "occurrence" policy protects the policyholder from liability for any act done while the policy is in effect, whereas a "claims made" policy protects the holder only against claims made during the life of the policy. The Court of Appeals noted that "a doctor who practiced for only one year, say 1972, would need only one 1972 'occurrence' policy to be fully covered, but he would need several years of 'claims made' policies to protect himself from claims arising out of his acts in 1972." 555 F.2d 3, 5 n. 1 (CA1 1977).

<sup>4</sup> Respondents further assert that "it is virtually impossible for a physician, hospital or other medical personnel to engage in the practice of medicine or provide medical services or treatment without medical malpractice insurance," App. 22, and that as a result of petitioners' conspiracy, they "may be forced to withhold medical services and disengage from the practice of medicine, except on an emergency basis," id. at 26.

[*536] On November 19, 1975, the District Court for the District of Rhode Island granted petitioners' motion to dismiss. The District Court declined to give the "boycott" exception the reading suggested by its "broad wording," declaring instead that "the purpose of the boycott, coercion, and intimidation exception was solely to protect insurance agents or other insurance companies from being 'black-listed' by powerful combinations of insurance companies, not to affect the insurer-insured relationship." Id., at 44.

On May 16, 1977, a divided panel of the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit reversed in pertinent part. The majority [****11] reasoned that the "boycott" exception was broadly framed, and that there was no reason to decline to give the term "boycott" its "normal Sherman Act scope." 555 F.2d, at 8. "In antitrust law, a boycott is a 'concerted refusal' [***938] to deal" with a disfavored purchaser or seller." Id., at 7. The court thought that this reading would not undermine state regulation of the industry. "Regulation by the state would be protected; concerted boycotts against groups of consumers not resting on state authority would have no immunity." Id., at 9.

On August 12, 1977, petitioners sought a writ of certiorari in this Court. To resolve the conflicting interpretations of § 3 (b) adopted by several Courts of Appeals,<sup>5</sup> we granted the writ on October 31, 1977. 434 U.S. 919. We now affirm.

[****12] [*537] II

LEdHN[3]↑ [3]At the threshold, we confront a question of mootness. HN5↑ Although not raised by the parties, this issue implicates our jurisdiction. See, e. g., Memphis Light, Gas & Water Div. v. Craft, 436 U.S. 1, 7-8 (1978); Sosna v. Iowa, 419 U.S. 393, 398 (1975).

The Court of Appeals requested the parties to brief the question whether the antitrust claim was mooted by Rhode Island's formation, after the initial complaint was filed, of a Joint Underwriting Association (JUA) to provide malpractice insurance to all licensed providers of health-care services and to require the participation of all personal-injury liability insurers in the State in a scheme to pool expenses and losses in providing such insurance.<sup>6</sup> The [*2928] court noted that while the State's action prevented St. Paul from "[gathering] the fruits of the alleged conspiracy," it was "convinced that, for purposes of [its] jurisdiction, the state's act did not extinguish plaintiffs' every claim for relief." 555 F.2d, at 5-6, n. 2. We agree.

[****13] Although later developments may have "[reduced] the [*538] practical importance of this case" for the parties, it cannot be said that "subsequent [***939] events [make] it absolutely clear that the allegedly wrongful

<sup>5</sup> Following the rendition of the legislative history in Transnational Ins. Co. v. Rosenlund, 261 F.Supp. 12 (Ore. 1966), two Circuits squarely have held that § 3 (b) reaches only "blacklists" of insurance companies or agents by other insurance companies or agents. See Meicler v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., 506 F.2d 732, 734 (CA5 1975); but cf. Battle v. Liberty National Life Ins. Co., 493 F.2d 39, 51 (CA5 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1110 (1975); Addrissi v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc., 503 F.2d 725, 729 (CA9 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 929 (1975).

Two other Circuits have adopted a broader reading of § 3 (b). See Ballard v. Blue Shield of Southern W. Va., Inc., 543 F.2d 1075, 1078 (CA4 1976), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 922 (1977) (alleged conspiracy between insurers and physicians to deny health insurance coverage for chiropractic services); Proctor v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 182 U. S. App. D. C. 264, 276-277, 561 F.2d 262, 274-275 (1977), cert. pending, No. 77-580 (alleged conspiracy between insurers and automobile repair shops to boycott noncooperative repair shops). See also Monarch Life Ins. Co. v. Loyal Protective Life Ins. Co., 326 F.2d 841, 846 (CA2 1963) (dictum), cert. denied, 376 U.S. 952 (1964).

<sup>6</sup> To establish a stable market for medical malpractice insurance, the JUA was created on a temporary basis by Emergency Regulation XXI, R. I. Dept. of Business Regulation, Insurance Div., June 16, 1975, App. 114-127, and received legislative sanction in R. I. Gen. Laws § 42-14.1-1 (1977). The emergency regulation was revised in April 1976 to permit the writing of medical malpractice insurance outside the JUA for all providers of health-care services other than physicians. App. 150-151. A subsequent change in state law authorizes the Director to promulgate regulations permitting the selling of such insurance outside of the JUA to physicians as well. 1976 R. I. Pub. Laws, ch. 79, § 1. behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur." United States v. Phosphate Export Assn., 393 U.S. 199, 203 (1968); see United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 632-633 (1953). Since Rhode Island now permits the writing of medical malpractice insurance outside of the JUA, see n. 6, supra, we cannot assume that petitioners will not re-enter the market in some fashion. The conditions that gave rise to the controversy have not been shown to have abated. And the possibility of a resurgence of the alleged conspiracy is further evidenced by petitioners' acknowledgment in the Court of Appeals "that the alleged antitrust violations could recur in the future." 2 Record 83.

7

[****14] III

The McCarran-Ferguson Act was passed in reaction to this Court's decision in United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533 (1944). Prior to that decision, it had been assumed, in light of Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 183 [*539] (1869), that the issuance of an insurance policy was not a transaction in interstate commerce and that the States enjoyed a virtually exclusive domain over the insurance industry. South-Eastern Underwriters held that a fire insurance company which conducted a substantial part of its transactions across state lines is engaged in interstate commerce, and that Congress did not intend to exempt the business of insurance from the operation of the Sherman Act.<sup>8</sup> The decision provoked widespread [*2929] concern that the States would no longer be able to engage in taxation and effective regulation of the insurance industry. Congress moved quickly, enacting the McCarran-Ferguson Act within a year of the decision in South-Eastern Underwriters.

[****15] As [*940] this Court observed shortly afterward, "[obviously] Congress' purpose was broadly to give support to the existing and future state systems for regulating and taxing the business of insurance." Prudential Insurance Co. v. Benjamin, 328 U.S. 408, 429 (1946). Our decisions have given effect to this purpose in construing the operative terms of the § 2 (b) proviso, which is the critical provision limiting the general applicability of the federal antitrust laws "to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State Law." See SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 460 (1969); FTC v. National Casualty Co., 357 U.S. 1[*540] 560 (1958); infra, at 550-551. Section 2 (b) is not in issue in this case.<sup>9</sup> Rather, we are called upon to interpret, for the first time, the scope of § 3 (b), the principal exception to this scheme of pre-emptive state regulation of the "business of insurance."

<sup>7</sup> Although this case is technically not moot, the parties are not barred from showing, "on remand, that the likelihood of further violations is sufficiently remote to make injunctive relief unnecessary." United States v. Phosphate Export Assn., 393 U.S. 199, 203 (1968); see United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 633-636 (1953).

We have not addressed respondents' claim for damages arising out of their inability "to obtain medical malpractice insurance on a reasonable basis after June 30, 1975," App. 26. Such a claim might itself preclude a finding of mootness, see e. g., Memphis Light, Gas & Water Div. v. Craft, 436 U.S. 1, 8-9 (1978), but the parties have not advised the Court whether this claim survives the formation of the JUA. The Court of Appeals stated that respondents were "entitled to seek both injunctive relief and treble damages," noting, in a separate discussion, that "the change in malpractice coverage has increased costs for the doctors." 555 F.2d, at 12, and n. 7. The validity of the damages claim, in light of the role of the JUA and the considerations identified in this decision, is a matter for initial determination by the courts below.

<sup>8</sup> The Government in that case brought a Sherman Act prosecution against the South-Eastern Underwriters Association (SEUA), its membership of nearly 200 private stock fire insurance companies, and 27 individuals. The indictment alleged conspiracies to maintain arbitrary and noncompetitive premium rates on fire and "allied lines" of insurance in several States, and to monopolize trade and commerce in the same lines of insurance. It was asserted that the conspirators not only fixed rates but also, in the Court's words, "employed boycotts together with other types of coercion and intimidation to force nonmember insurance companies into the conspiracies, and to compel persons who needed insurance to buy only from [SEUA] members on [SEUA] terms." United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S., at 535.

<sup>9</sup> Respondents did not contest below "that [petitioners'] acts were related to the business of insurance and that Rhode Island effectively regulates that business." 555 F. d, at 6. They do not argue to the contrary in this Court.

[****16] The Court of Appeals in this case determined that the word "boycott" in § 3 \(b\) should be given its ordinary Sherman Act meaning as "a concerted refusal to deal." The "boycott" exception, so read, covered the alleged conspiracy of petitioners, conducted "outside any state-permitted structure or procedure, [to] agree among themselves that customers dissatisfied with the coverage offered by one company shall not be sold any policies by any of the other companies." 555 F.2d, at 9.

Petitioners take strong exception to this reading, arguing that the "boycott" exception "should be limited to cases where concerted refusals to deal are used to exclude or penalize insurance companies or other traders which refuse to conform their competitive practices to terms dictated by the conspiracy." Brief for Petitioners 13. This definition is said to accord with the plain meaning and judicial interpretations of the term "boycott," with the evidence of specific legislative intent, and with the overall structure of the Act. Respondents counter that the language of § 3 \(b\) is sweeping, and that there is no warrant for the view that the exception protects insurance companies "or other [****17] traders" from anticompetitive practices, but withholds similar protection from policyholders victimized by private, predatory agreements. They urge that this case involves a "traditional boycott," defined as a concerted refusal to deal on any terms, as opposed to a refusal to deal except on specified terms. Brief for Respondents 43.

[*541] We consider first petitioners' definition of "boycott" in view of the language, legislative history, and structure of the Act.<sup>10</sup>

IV

A

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B][LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4]HN6 [↑] The starting [****18] point in any [***941] case involving construction of a statute is the language itself. See Blue Chip Stamps v. Manor Drug Stores, 421 U.S. 723, 756 \(1975\) (POWELL, J., concurring). With economy of expression, Congress provided in § 3 \(b\) for the continued applicability of the Sherman Act to "any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation." Congress thus employed terminology that evokes a tradition of meaning, as elaborated in the body of decisions interpreting the Sherman Act. It may be assumed, in the absence of indications [**2930] to the contrary, that Congress intended this language to be read in light of that tradition.

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [↑] [5]The generic concept of boycott refers to a method of pressuring a party with whom one has a dispute by withholding, or enlisting others to withhold, patronage or services from the target.<sup>11</sup> The word gained currency in this country largely as a term of opprobrium to describe certain tactics employed by parties to labor disputes. See, e. g., State v. Glidden, 55 Conn. 46, 8 A.890 [****19] (1887); Laidler, Boycott, in 2 Encyclopaedia of the Social Sciences 662-666 (1930). Thus it is not surprising that the term first entered the lexicon of antitrust law in decisions involving attempts by labor unions to encourage third parties [*542] to cease or suspend doing business with employers unwilling to permit unionization.<sup>12</sup> [****20] See, e. g., Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274

<sup>10</sup> The Court of Appeals' ruling rested on the determination that respondents charged petitioners "with an unlawful boycott," id. at 12. In light of our disposition of this case, we do not decide the scope of the terms "coercion" and "intimidation" in § 3 \(b\).

<sup>11</sup> See Bird, Sherman Act Limitations on Noncommercial Concerted Refusals to Deal, 1970 Duke L. J. 247, 248; Webster's New International Dictionary of the English Language 321 (2d ed. 1949); 1 The Oxford English Dictionary 1040 (1933); Black's Law Dictionary 234 (4th ed. 1968).

<sup>12</sup> The first decision of this Court dealing with a boycott situation, although without using the term, appears to be Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38 (1904), a nonlabor case involving an association of wholesalers and manufacturers that provided in its bylaws that no dealer member could buy from any manufacturer who was not a member of the association or sell for less than list price to a nonmember. See Kirkpatrick, Commercial Boycotts as Per Se Violations of the Sherman Act, 10 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 302, 306-307 (1942).

(1908); Gompers v. Bucks Stove & Range Co., 221 U.S. 418 (1911); Lawlor v. Loewe, 235 U.S. 522 (1915); Duplex Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443 (1921); Bedford Stone Co. v. Stone Cutters' Assn., 274 U.S. 37 (1927).<sup>13</sup>

Petitioners define "boycott" as embracing only those combinations which target competitors of the boycotters as the ultimate objects of a concerted refusal to deal. They cite commentary that attempts to develop a test for distinguishing the types of restraints that warrant per se invalidation from other concerted refusals to deal that are not inherently [***942] destructive of competition.<sup>14</sup> But the issue before us is whether the conduct in question involves a boycott, not whether it is per se unreasonable. In this regard, we have not been referred [*543] to any decision of this Court holding [****21] that petitioners' test states the necessary elements of a boycott within the purview of the Sherman Act. Indeed, the decisions reflect a marked lack of uniformity in defining the term.

Petitioners refer to cases stating that "group boycotts" are "concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders," Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, 359 U.S. 207, 212 (1959), [****22] or are combinations of businessmen "to deprive others of access to merchandise which the latter wish to sell to the public," United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 146 (1966). We note that neither standard in terms excludes respondents -- for whom medical malpractice insurance is necessary [**2931] to ply their "trade" of providing health-care services, see n. 4, supra -- from the class of cognizable victims. But other verbal formulas also have been used. In FMC v. Svenska Amerika Linien, 390 U.S. 238, 250 (1968), for example, the Court noted that "[under] the Sherman Act, any agreement by a group of competitors to boycott a particular buyer or group of buyers is illegal per se." The Court also has stated broadly that "group boycotts, or concerted refusals to deal, clearly run afoul of § 1 [of the Sherman Act]." Times-Picayune v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 625 (1953). Hence, "boycotts are not a unitary phenomenon." P. Areeda, Antitrust Analysis 381 (2d ed. 1974).

LEdHN[6] [6]As the labor-boycott cases illustrate, [****23] HNT the boycotters and the ultimate target need not be in a competitive relationship with each other. This Court also has held unlawful, concerted refusals to deal in cases where the target is a customer of some or all of the conspirators who is being denied access to desired goods or services because of a refusal to accede to particular terms set by some or all of the sellers. See, e.g., Paramount Famous Corp. v. United States, 282 U.S. 30 (1930); United States v. First Nat. Pictures, Inc., 282 U.S. 44 (1930); Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, 263 U.S. 291 (1923). See also Anderson v. Shipowners Assn., 272 U.S. 359 (1926). As the [*544] Court put it in Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons, 340 U.S. 211, 214 (1951), "the Sherman Act makes it an offense for [businessmen] to agree among themselves to stop selling to particular customers."<sup>15</sup>

---

<sup>13</sup> The cases cited in the text are significant for their general interpretation of the Sherman Act even though they are no longer controlling as to the applicability of the antitrust laws to the activities of labor unions. See Connell Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters, 421 U.S. 616, 621-623 (1975); United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 234 (1941); Drivers' Union v. Lake Valley Co., 311 U.S. 91, 102-103 (1940).

<sup>14</sup> See L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust 256-259 (1977). Other commentators have framed a somewhat broader definition for a per se offense in this area. See Barber, Refusals to Deal under the Federal Antitrust Laws, 103 U. Pa. L. Rev. 847, 875 (1955) ("group action to coerce third parties to conform to the pattern of conduct desired by the group or to secure their removal from competition"); Kirkpatrick, supra n. 12, at 305 ("interference with the relations between a nonmember of the combination and its members or others"). We express no opinion, however, as to the merit of any of these definitions.

<sup>15</sup> Kiefer-Stewart Co. involved a horizontal resale price maintenance scheme, see White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 260 (1963), but it has been cited as a "group boycott" case, see Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, 359 U.S. 207, 212 n. 5 (1959); Times-Picayune v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 625 (1953). See also United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, 324 U.S. 293, 295-296 (1945) (alleged conspiracy of producers, wholesalers, and retailers to maintain local retail prices by means of a "boycott program").

[****24] Whatever [***943] other characterizations are possible,<sup>16</sup> petitioners' conduct fairly may be viewed as "an organized boycott," Fashion Guild v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457, 465 (1941), of St. Paul's policyholders. Solely for the purpose of forcing physicians and hospitals to accede to a substantial curtailment of the coverage previously available, St. Paul induced its competitors to refuse to deal on any terms with its customers. This agreement did not simply fix rates or terms of coverage; it effectively barred St. Paul's policyholders from all access to alternative sources of coverage and even from negotiating for more favorable terms elsewhere in the market. The pact served as a tactical weapon invoked by St. Paul in support of a dispute with its policyholders. HN8<sup>17</sup> The enlistment of third parties in an agreement not to trade, as a means of compelling capitulation by the boycotted group, long has been [*545] viewed as conduct supporting a finding of unlawful boycott. Eastern States Lumber Assn. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 612-613 (1914), citing [****25] Loewe v. Lawlor, supra; see Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, supra, at 213; Anderson v. Shipowners Assn., supra, at 362-363, 364-365. As in Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, supra, at 312, where film distributors had [**2932] conspired to cease dealing with an exhibitor because he had declined to purchase films from some of the distributors, "[the] illegality consists, not in the separate action of each, but in the conspiracy and combination of all to prevent any of them from dealing with the [target]."<sup>18</sup>

[****26] LEdHN7<sup>19</sup> [7]Thus if the statutory language is read in light of the customary understanding of "boycott" at the time of enactment, respondents' complaint states a claim under § 3 \(b\).<sup>20</sup> But, as Mr. Justice Cardozo [***944] observed, HNG<sup>21</sup> words or phrases in a statute come "freighted with the meaning imparted to them by the mischief to be remedied and by contemporaneous discussion. In such conditions history is a teacher that is not [*546] to be ignored." Duparquet Co. v. Evans, 297 U.S. 216, 221 (1936) (citation omitted). We therefore must consider whether Congress intended to attach a special meaning to the word "boycott" in § 3 \(b\).

[****27] B

In the Court of Appeals, petitioners argued that only insurance companies and agents could be victims of practices within the reach of the "boycott" exception.<sup>22</sup> That position enjoys some support in the legislative history because the principal targets of the practices termed "boycotts" and "other types of coercion and intimidation" in South-

See generally Report of the U.S. Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 137 (1955) ("[approving] the established legal doctrines which condemn group boycotts of customers or suppliers as routine unreasonable restraints forbidden by Section 1 of the Sherman Act").

<sup>16</sup> Petitioners suggest that the alleged conspiracy in this case presents a horizontal agreement not to compete, as distinguished from a boycott. See United States v. Topco Associates, 405 U.S. 596, 612 (1972); United States v. Consolidated Laundries Corp., 291 F.2d 563, 573-575 (CA2 1961).

<sup>17</sup> As one commentator has noted: "If an individual competitor lacks the bargaining power to get a particular contract term, the courts apparently will not let him join with other competitors and use their collective bargaining power to compel the insertion of such a term in the contract, no matter how desirable." Bird, supra n. 11, at 263, discussing, inter alia, Binderup v. Pathe Exchange; Paramount Famous Corp. v. United States, 282 U.S. 30 (1930).

<sup>18</sup> We note our disagreement with MR. JUSTICE STEWART's expression of alarm that a reading of the operative terms of § 3 \(b\), consistent with traditional Sherman Act usage, "would plainly devour the broad antitrust immunity bestowed by § 2 \(b\)." Post, at 559. Whatever the precise reach of the terms "boycott," "coercion," and "intimidation," the decisions of this Court do not support the dissent's suggestion that they are coextensive with the prohibitions of the Sherman Act. See, e. g., Eastern States Lumber Assn. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 611 (1914), quoting Gompers v. Bucks Stove & Range Co., 221 U.S. 418, 438 (1911). In this regard, we are not cited to any decision illustrating the assertion, post, at 559 n. 6, that price fixing, in the absence of any additional enforcement activity, has been treated either as "a boycott" or "coercion."

<sup>19</sup> Brief for Appellees Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. et al. in No. 76-1226, p. 18 (CA1); Brief for Appellees St. Paul et al. in No. 76-1226, p. 14 (CA1).

Eastern Underwriters were insurance companies that did not belong to the industry association charged with the conspiracy, as well as agents and customers who dealt with those nonmembers. See 322 U.S., at 535-536. Moreover, there are references in the debates to the need for preventing insurance companies and agents from "blacklisting" and imposing other sanctions against uncooperative competitors or agents. See 91 Cong. Rec. 1087 (1945) (remarks of Rep. Celler); id., at 1485-1486 (remarks of Sen. O'Mahoney). In this Court, however, petitioners expanded the list of potential targets of § 3 \(b\) conduct to include any victim -- even one outside the insurance industry -- who is in a competitive relationship with any of the members of the boycotting group. Tr. of Oral Arg. 22, 57-58.

[****28] The principal exception in the McCarran-Ferguson bill to the pre-emptive role of state regulation was for acts or agreements amounting to a "boycott, coercion, or intimidation" violative of the Sherman Act. Both Committee Reports stated: "[At] no time are the prohibitions in the Sherman Act against any agreement or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation [*547] suspended. These provisions of the Sherman Act remain in full force and effect." S. Rep. No. 20, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., 3 (1945); H. R. Rep. No. 143, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., 3 (1945). The debates make clear that the "boycott" exception was viewed by the Act's proponents [**2933] as an important safeguard against the danger that insurance companies might take advantage of purely permissive state legislation to establish monopolies and enter into restrictive agreements falling outside the realm of state-supervised cooperative action.

The bill ultimately enacted emerged from Conference Committee as a compromise between conflicting Senate and House proposals.<sup>20</sup> [****30] Although [***945] the conference substitute quickly gained approval in the House, it encountered opposition in the Senate. Senator Pepper spoke at [****29] length against privileging the States "[to enact] some mild form of legislation which they may call regulatory, thereby defeating the purpose of the Supreme Court decision and defeating the act itself." 91 Cong. Rec. 1443 (1945). The responses of Senators Ferguson and O'Mahoney, floor managers of the conference bill, indicate [*548] that while Congress was willing to permit the States to substitute regulation for competition with respect to matters such as rates and terms of coverage, the "boycott" clause defined a range of conduct that would remain within the purview of the Sherman Act.<sup>21</sup>

Petitioners cite passages of the debates in which Senator O'Mahoney refers to "blacklisting" and other exclusionary devices directed at independent insurance companies or agents. But those passages also provide support for respondents' position that the eradication [***31] of such practices was not the only objective of Congress in enacting § 3 \(b\). In Senator O'Mahoney's view, "[the] vice in the insurance industry . . . was not that there were rating bureaus, but that there was in the industry a system of private government which had been built up by a small <sup>20</sup> The bill introduced by Senators McCarran and Ferguson (S. 340) provided that only federal legislation specifically dealing with insurance could override state laws relating to the regulation or taxation of that business, and created a moratorium period, staying the operation of the Sherman and Clayton Acts to enable the States to adjust their statutes to South-Eastern Underwriters. S. Rep. No. 20, 79th Cong., 1st Sess. (1945); 91 Cong. Rec. 478 (1945). Largely at the insistence of Senator O'Mahoney, it was amended on the floor of the Senate to provide that the Sherman and Clayton Acts would not be pre-empted at the expiration of the moratorium. Id. at 488. The bill introduced in the House and reported favorably out of committee contained provisions that were similar to the original bill in the Senate. H. R. Rep. No. 143, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., 1 (1945); 91 Cong. Rec. 1085 (1945). The bill as reported passed the House. A Conference Committee then was appointed, composed of Senators McCarran, O'Mahoney, and Ferguson, and Representatives Sumners, Walter, and Hancock. In place of the Senate floor amendment, the conference substitute added the proviso to § 2 \(b\) that is presently in the Act. H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 213, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., 1-2 (1945).

<sup>21</sup> Senator Ferguson perceived a distinction between legislation authorizing "rating bureaus," which would not be disturbed by the bill, 91 Cong. Rec. 1481 (1945), and legislation permitting insurance companies to engage in practices constituting a "boycott, coercion, or intimidation," which would remain subject to the Sherman Act, ibid.

Senator O'Mahoney noted that the conference substitute would permit "certain agreements which can normally be made in the insurance business which are in the public interest, but which might conceivably be a violation of the antitrust law," such as a "rating bureau" operating "under the supervision and regulation of the State . . ." Id., at 1444. But other practices constituting "regulation by private combinations and groups," id., at 1483, would have to pass muster under the Sherman Act.

group of insurance companies, which companies undertook by their agreements and understandings to invade the field of Congress to regulate commerce." 91 Cong. Rec. 1485 (1945). The conference substitute, he insisted, "outlaws completely all steps by which small groups have attempted to establish themselves in control in the great interstate and international business of insurance." Ibid. Perhaps the most revealing discussion is found in his explanation of why the language of § 3 (b) was limited to "boycotts, [*549] coercion, or intimidation," and did not reach all combinations among insurance companies and their agents. He stated:

"[The] committee was cognizant of [***946] the fact that many salutary combinations might be proposed and which ought to be [**2934] approved, to which there was no objection. From the very beginning, Mr. President, of this controversy [****32] over insurance I have always taken the position that I saw no objection to combinations or agreements among the companies in the public interest provided those combinations and agreements were in the open and approved by law. Public supervision of agreements is essential.

....

"[My] judgment is that every effective combination or agreement to carry out a program against the public interest of which I have had any knowledge in this whole industry study would be prohibited by [§ 3 (b)]." 91 Cong. Rec. 1486 (1945) (emphasis supplied).

The rules and regulations of private associations in the industry, while providing Senator O'Mahoney with a vivid example of "the sort of agreement which ought to be condemned," ibid., exemplified a larger evil -- "regulation by private combinations and groups," id., at 1483 -- that required the continued application of the Sherman Act.<sup>22</sup>

[****33] [*550] The language of § 3 (b) is broad and unqualified; it covers "any" act or agreement amounting to a "boycott, coercion, or intimidation." If Congress had intended to limit its scope to boycotts of competing insurance companies or agents, and to preclude all Sherman Act protection for policyholders, it is not unreasonable to assume that it would have made this explicit. While the legislative history does not point unambiguously to the answer, it provides no substantial support for limiting language that Congress itself chose not to limit.<sup>23</sup>

<sup>22</sup> The dissenting opinion of MR. JUSTICE STEWART advances the view, abandoned by petitioners in this Court, see supra, at 546, that § 3 (b) applies only "to the kinds of antitrust violations alleged in South-Eastern Underwriters . . . ." Post, at 565. The dissent refers to no statement, either in the Committee Reports or the debates, asserting that § 3 (b)'s only purpose was to keep alive the South-Eastern Underwriters indictment or purporting to restrict its scope to the practices specifically alleged therein. There is nothing in the proposal of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, identified by the dissent as the model for the Senate bill, S. 340, that evinces such a limited purpose. The report accompanying the proposal stated in pertinent part:

"No exemption is sought nor expected for oppressive or destructive practices. On the whole, insurance has been conducted on a high plane, with great benefit to the public, and if inconsistent procedures are found they must be eradicated. Provision is made that the Sherman Act shall not now or hereafter be inapplicable to any act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation." 90 Cong. Rec. A4406 (1944) (emphasis supplied).

It is difficult to view this language as supporting the dissent's interpretation.

It also is asserted that the "boycott" clause in the Senate bill was intended to apply only during the moratorium period, a fact which supposedly supports the dissent's narrow reading of the clause. But the dissent concedes that "[whatever] its initial impetus . . . , there is no indication that the provision was finally thought to be applicable only to the South-Eastern litigation." Post, at 563-564, n. 20. Moreover, neither the Committee Reports, see supra, at 546-547, nor the insurance commissioners' statement, quoted above, suggests an intent to suspend the operation of the "boycott" clause at any time. Certainly Senator Ferguson disclaimed such an intent, stating he saw "no reason for not changing the word 'section' to 'act,' because I am of the opinion that that was the intention of all concerned." 91 Cong. Rec. 479 (1945). There simply is no persuasive evidence of an original design merely to preserve the South-Eastern Underwriters indictment.

<sup>23</sup> The legislative materials do not demonstrate with necessary clarity "that [Congress] has in fact used a private code, so that what appears to be violence to language is merely respect to special usage." Frankfurter, Some Reflections on the Reading of Statutes, 47 Colum. L. Rev. 527, 543-544 (1947).

C

[***947] Petitioners also contend that the structure of the Act supports their reading of § 3 (b). They note that this Court [*551] [****34] has interpreted the term "business of insurance" in § 2 (b) broadly to encompass "[the] relationship between insurer and insured, the type of policy which could be issued, its reliability, interpretation, and enforcement," SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S., at 460, and has held that the mere enactment of "prohibitory legislation" and provision for "a scheme of [**2935] administrative supervision" constitute adequate regulation to satisfy the proviso to § 2 (b), FTC v. National Casualty Co., 357 U.S., at 564-565. Thus, petitioners conclude, § 3 (b) cannot be interpreted in a fashion that would undermine the congressional judgment expressed in § 2 (b) that the protection of policyholders is the primary responsibility of the States and that the state regulation which precludes application of federal law is not limited to regulation specifically authorizing the conduct challenged.

Petitioners rely on a syllogism that is faulty in its premise, for it ignores the fact that § 3 (b) is an exception to § 2 (b), and that Congress intended in the "boycott" clause to carve out of the overall framework of plenary state regulation [****35] an area that would remain subject to Sherman Act scrutiny. The structure of the Act embraces this exception. Unless § 3 (b) is read to limit somewhat the sweep of § 2 (b), it serves no purpose whatever. Petitioners do not press their argument that far, but they suggest no persuasive reason for engraving a particular limitation on § 3 (b) that is justified neither by its language nor by the legislative history.<sup>24</sup>

[****36] [*552] [***948] V

LEdHN/2B [↑] [2B] We hold that HN10 [↑] the term "boycott" is not limited to concerted activity against insurance companies or agents or, more generally, against competitors of members of the boycotting group. It remains to consider whether the type of private conduct alleged to have taken place in this case, directed against policyholders, constitutes a "boycott" within the meaning of § 3 (b).

A

The conduct in question accords with the common understanding of a boycott. The four insurance companies that control the market in medical malpractice insurance are alleged to have agreed that three of the four would not deal on any terms with the policyholders of the fourth. As a means of ensuring policyholder submission to new, restrictive ground rules of coverage, St. Paul obtained the agreement of the other petitioners, strangers to the immediate dispute, to refuse to sell any insurance to its policyholders. "A valuable service germane to [respondents'] business and important to their effective competition [****37] with others was withheld from them by [*553] collective action." Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 348-349, n. 5 (1963).

<sup>24</sup> Even under petitioners' reading, certain cooperative arrangements among insurance companies may constitute a "boycott" under § 3 (b) notwithstanding the applicability of § 2 (b) to activities that "relate . . . closely to their status as reliable insurers," SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 460 (1969), and the adequacy of state regulation of the industry. Hence, petitioners' line may not be as "bright" as they suggest.

The dissenting opinion of MR. JUSTICE STEWART also argues that the structure of the Act supports a restrictive reading of § 3 (b). We do not think the dissent's restatement of the holding in FTC v. National Casualty Co., 357 U.S. 560, 564 (1958), see post, at 557-558, n. 4, furthers resolution of the problem at hand. It is not disputed that Congress intended that certain forms of "regulation by private combinations and groups," 91 Cong. Rec. 1483 (1945) (remarks of Sen. O'Mahoney), remain subject to Sherman Act scrutiny, notwithstanding enactment of the type of "prohibitory legislation," coupled with "enforcement through a scheme of administrative supervision," that was deemed sufficient for § 2 (b) purposes in National Casualty Co. In that case the Court rejected the Federal Trade Commission's argument that "where a statute, instead of sanctioning a particular type of transaction, prohibits conduct in general terms and provides for enforcement through administrative action, there is realistically, in the absence of such enforcement, no 'regulation' in fact." Brief for Federal Trade Commission, O. T. 1957, Nos. 435 and 436, p. 53. The question that nonetheless remains is whether Congress intended to foreclose all Sherman Act protection for policyholders victimized by private conspiracies of insurers when a State has engaged in generally comprehensive regulation under § 2 (b). We think the record does not support such a foreclosure.

The agreement binding petitioners erected a barrier between St. Paul's customers [**2936] and any alternative source of the desired coverage, effectively foreclosing all possibility of competition anywhere in the relevant market. This concerted refusal to deal went well beyond a private agreement to fix rates and terms of coverage, as it denied policyholders the benefits of competition in vital matters such as claims policy and quality of service. Cf. Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 55 (1977). St. Paul's policyholders became the captives of their insurer. In a sense the agreement imposed an even greater restraint on competitive forces than a horizontal pact not to compete with respect to price, coverage, claims policy, and service, since the refusal to deal in any fashion reduced the likelihood that a competitor might have broken ranks as to one or more of the fixed terms.<sup>25</sup> The conduct alleged here is certainly not, in Senator O'Mahoney's terms, within the category [****38] of "agreements which can normally be made in the insurance business," 91 Cong. Rec. 1444 (1945), or "agreements and combinations in the public interests [sic] which can safely be permitted," id., at 1486.

B

We emphasize that the conduct with which petitioners are charged appears to have occurred outside of any regulatory or cooperative arrangement established by the laws of Rhode Island. There was no state authorization of the conduct in question. This was the explicit premise of [***949] the Court of [*554] [****39] Appeals' decision, see 555 F.2d, at 9, and petitioners do not aver that state law or regulatory policy can be said to have required or authorized the concerted refusal to deal with St. Paul's customers.<sup>26</sup>

[****40] Here the complaint alleges an attempt at "regulation by private combinations and groups," 91 Cong. Rec. 1483 (1945) (remarks of Sen. O'Mahoney). This is not a case where a State has decided that regulatory policy requires that certain categories of risks be allocated in a particular fashion among insurers, or where a State authorizes insurers to decline to insure particular risks because the continued provision of that insurance would undermine certain regulatory goals, such as the maintenance of insurer solvency. In this case, HN11 a group of insurers decided to resolve by private action the problem of escalating damages claims and verdicts by coercing the policyholders of St. Paul to accept a severe limitation of coverage essential to the provision of medical services. See n. 4, supra. We conclude that this conduct, as alleged in the complaint, constitutes a "boycott" under § 3 \(b\).<sup>27</sup>

[****41]

[*555] [LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]Our ruling does not alter § 2 \(b\)'s protection of state regulatory and tax laws, [**2937] its recognition of the primacy of state regulation, or the limited applicability of the federal antitrust laws generally "to the

<sup>25</sup> "[Even] where prices are rigidly fixed, the members of a cartel will be able to compete with each other with respect to product quality unless a homogeneous product is involved. Indeed, even if the product is homogeneous there will be room for rivalry in such matters as promptness in filling orders and the provision of ancillary services. An effective division of markets, by contrast, might substantially wash out all opportunity for rivalry." Sullivan, supra n. 14, at 224-225.

<sup>26</sup> Counsel for petitioners stated at oral argument that he was not sure whether St. Paul had filed the specific policy change in issue with the director of the state insurance division. Tr. of Oral Arg. 8. Even if we assume that such a filing had been made, there is no suggestion that the State, in furtherance of its regulatory policies, authorized the concerted refusal to deal on any terms with St. Paul's policyholders.

Although the dissenting opinion below noted "that Rhode Island has exercised its right to regulate all material aspects of the business of insurance and that the actions complained of relative to withholding malpractice insurance were all part of such regulated business," 555 F.2d, at 14, this statement refers to the requirements of the proviso to § 2 \(b\). The dissent did not argue that the agreement in question was within the contemplation of any state regulatory scheme.

<sup>27</sup> We have no occasion here to decide whether the element of state regulatory direction or authorization of the particular practice, absent in this case, is a factor to be considered in the definition of "boycott" within the meaning of § 3 \(b\), or whether it comes into play as part of a possible defense under the "state action" doctrine, as elaborated in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943), and its progeny.

extent that" the "business of insurance" is not regulated by state law. Moreover, HN12 conduct by individual actors falling short of concerted activity is simply not a "boycott" within § 3 \(b\). Cf. Times-Picayune v. United States, 345 U.S., at 625. Finally, while we give force to the congressional intent to preserve Sherman Act review for certain types of private collaborative activity by insurance companies, we do not hold that all concerted activity violative of the Sherman Act comes within § 3 \(b\). Nor does our decision address insurance practices that are compelled or specifically authorized by state regulatory policy.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals therefore is

Affirmed.

Dissent by: STEWART

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE STEWART, with whom MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST [****42] joins, dissenting.

Section 2 \(b\) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act provides that the Sherman Act "shall be applicable to the [***950] business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State Law." <sup>1</sup> [\[\*\*\*\*43\]](#) Section 3 \(b\) limits the antitrust immunity [\*556] which the States may confer by providing that the Sherman Act shall remain applicable to agreements or acts of "boycott, coercion, or intimidation." <sup>2</sup> Today the Court holds that the term "boycott" found in § 3 \(b\) should be given the same broad meaning that it has been given in Sherman Act case law. It seems clear to me, however, that the "boycott, coercion, or intimidation" language of § 3 \(b\) was intended to refer, not to the practices defined and condemned by the Sherman Act, but to the narrower range of practices involved in United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, the case that prompted Congress to enact the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

I

The Court accurately reads the Act as not conferring broadscale antitrust immunity on the insurance industry, at least not for practices that "occurred outside of any regulatory or cooperative arrangement established by the laws of Rhode Island." Ante, at 553. Although Congress plainly intended to give the States priority in regulating the

---

<sup>1</sup> Section 2 provides in full:

"(a) The business of insurance, and every person engaged therein, shall be subject to the laws of the several States which relate to the regulation or taxation of such business.

"(b) No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, or which imposes a fee or tax upon such business, unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance: Provided, That after June 30, 1948, the Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, known as the Sherman Act, and the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended, known as the Clayton Act, and the Act of September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State Law." 59 Stat. 34, as amended, 61 Stat. 448, 15 U. S. C. § 1012 \(1976 ed.\).

<sup>2</sup> Section 3 provides in full:

"(a) Until June 30, 1948, the Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, known as the Sherman Act, and the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended, known as the Clayton Act, and the Act of September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the Act of June 19, 1936, known as the Robinson-Patman Anti-Discrimination Act, shall not apply to the business of insurance or to acts in the conduct thereof.

"(b) Nothing contained in this chapter [Act] shall render the said Sherman Act inapplicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation." 59 Stat. 34, as amended, 61 Stat. 448, 15 U. S. C. § 1013 \(1976 ed.\).

insurance industry, it just [****44] as plainly intended not to immunize that industry from federal antitrust liability "to the extent that such business is not regulated by State Law."<sup>3</sup> In thus construing the Act's [*557] general purpose, the Court is true to the legislative history. But I cannot understand why the Court then tries to achieve that statutory purpose by giving an unduly expansive reading to § 3 (b), when the provision that obviously was meant to accomplish [**2938] that purpose was § 2 (b). Properly read, § 2 (b) suspends the federal antitrust laws only to the extent that an area or practice is regulated by state law.<sup>4</sup> Although the [*558] Court correctly notes that § 2 (b) "[***951] is not in issue in this case," ante, at 540, neither section can be construed entirely independently of the other.

[****45] The broad reading the Court gives to § 3 (b) seems to me not only to misconceive the larger design of the Act, but also to distort its basic purpose. Section 3 (b) is an absolute exception to § 2 (b). It brings back under the Sherman Act a range of practices, whether authorized by state law or not.<sup>5</sup> By construing § 3 (b) very expansively, the Court narrows the field of regulation open to the States. Yet it was clearly Congress' intent to give the States generous license to govern the business of insurance free of interference from the antitrust laws.

Because I believe that the Court's construction of § 3 (b) overlooks the role of § 2 (b) and misperceives congressional intent, I respectfully dissent.

II

It is [****46] true, as the Court says, that the McCarran-Ferguson Act fails to tell us in so many words that the phrase "boycott, coercion, or intimidation" should be read in some light other than that "tradition of meaning, as

<sup>3</sup> See n. 1, supra, and n. 4, infra.

<sup>4</sup> In the present case the District Court in an oral opinion held that various Rhode Island laws, including state antitrust statutes, made the federal antitrust laws generally inapplicable to the petitioners under § 2 (b). That ruling was implicitly accepted by the Court of Appeals, and has not been questioned here. See ante, at 540 n. 9.

The legislative history in the Senate indicates that two kinds of state regulation were thought capable of suspending the federal antitrust laws under § 2 (b). See 91 Cong. Rec. 1444 (1945) (remarks of Sen. O'Mahoney). First, a State could enact its own antitrust laws. Senator Murdock explained that "[insofar] as [the state laws] fail to cover the same ground covered by the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, those [federal] acts become effective again" after the moratorium. Ibid. Second, a State could enact laws regulating various aspects of the business of insurance, such as rates and terms of coverage. Senator Ferguson explained that "if the States were specifically to legislate upon a particular point, and that legislation were contrary to the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, or the Federal Trade Commission Act, then the State law would be binding." Id., at 1481. See also id., at 1443 (remarks of Sen. McCarran and of Sen. Ferguson); id., at 1444 (remarks of Sen. White).

This Court has had few occasions to consider the operation of § 2 (b). In SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, the Court held that certain Arizona regulations protecting insurance company stockholders did not regulate the "business of insurance" within the meaning of § 2 (b) and thus did not pre-empt the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. The case did not involve the antitrust proviso of § 2 (b), and hence did not decide to what extent a State must regulate the "business of insurance" to pre-empt the federal antitrust laws.

FTC v. National Casualty Co., 357 U.S. 560, is the only case in this Court involving that question. There, the Court held that state statutes "prohibiting unfair and deceptive insurance practices," id., at 562, pre-empted Federal Trade Commission regulations "prohibiting respondent insurance companies from carrying on certain advertising practices found by the Commission to be false, misleading, and deceptive, in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act . . ." Id., at 561-562. Noting that no one had alleged that the state regulation was "mere pretense," the Court rejected the FTC's argument that the state regulation was "too 'inchoate' to be 'regulation' until [the State's statutory] prohibition has been crystallized into 'administrative elaboration of these standards and application in individual cases.'" Id., at 564.

<sup>5</sup> In Senator Ferguson's words:

"There are certain things which a State cannot interfere with. It cannot interfere with the application of the Sherman Act to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or an act of boycotting, coercion, or intimidation." 91 Cong. Rec. 1443 (1945).

elaborated in the body of [***952] decisions interpreting the Sherman Act." Ante, at 541. Yet, the very selection of precisely those three words from the entire antitrust lexicon indicates that they were intended to [*559] have some special meaning apart from traditional usage. Indeed, if "boycott" is to be given the same scope it has in Sherman Act case law, then so should " [**2939] coercion" and "intimidation." But that reading of § 3(b) would plainly devour the broad antitrust immunity bestowed by § 2(b).<sup>6</sup> Congress could not logically have intended that result. To understand the special sense in which it used the words "boycott, coercion, or intimidation," therefore, we must turn to the legislative history of the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

[***47] On November 20, 1942, the Justice Department secured an indictment against a private association of stock fire insurance companies and 27 individuals for alleged violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The prosecution came as a surprise to many, because Supreme Court precedents dating back 75 years had implied that the insurance industry was not a part of interstate commerce subject to congressional regulation under the Commerce Clause.<sup>7</sup> On this ground, the District Court sustained the defendants' demurrer to the indictment on August 15, 1943,<sup>8</sup> and the Government took an appeal directly to the Supreme Court.

Uncertain about the continuing validity of many state regulations that conflicted with federal law, various insurance companies and organizations immediately sought relief from Congress. Some threatened to withhold state taxes on [***48] the ground that States were then thought to be prohibited from [*560] taxing interstate commerce.<sup>9</sup> These threats prompted state officials to press for congressional action too. Months before the Supreme Court even heard arguments in the case, duplicate bills had been introduced in both Houses of Congress which would have given the insurance industry blanket immunity from the Sherman and Clayton Acts.<sup>10</sup> A joint congressional committee held extensive hearings from September 1943 into June 1944, but a vote on the bills was delayed until after the Court announced its decision.

That decision came on June 5, 1944. The Court held that the business of insurance is part of interstate commerce, and that the Congress which enacted the Sherman Act had not intended to exempt that industry. United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533. Of particular relevance to our inquiry [***49] is the Court's description of the unlawful activities alleged in the [***953] South-Eastern Underwriters indictment:

"The member companies of S. E. U. A. controlled 90 per cent of the fire insurance and 'allied lines' sold by stock fire insurance companies in the six states where the conspiracies were consummated. Both conspiracies consisted of a continuing agreement and concert of action effectuated through S. E. U. A. The conspirators not only fixed premium rates and agents' commissions, but employed boycotts together with other types of coercion and intimidation to force nonmember insurance companies into the conspiracies, and to compel persons who needed insurance to buy only from S. E. U. A. members on S. E. U. A. terms. Companies not members of S. E. U. A. were cut off from the opportunity to reinsure their risks, and their services and facilities were disparaged; independent sales agencies who defiantly represented non-S. E. U. A. [*561] companies were punished by a withdrawal of the right to represent the members of S. E. U. A.; and persons needing insurance who purchased from [**2940] non-S. E. U. A. companies were threatened with boycotts and withdrawal [***50] of all patronage." Id. at 535-536 (footnote omitted).

<sup>6</sup> Most practices condemned by the Sherman Act can be cast as an act or agreement of "boycott, coercion, or intimidation." For example, price fixing can be seen either as a refusal to deal except at a uniform price (i. e., a boycott), or as an agreement to force buyers to accept an offer on the sellers' common terms (i. e., coercion). Yet state-sanctioned price fixing immunized by § 2(b) was plainly not intended to fall within the § 3(b) exception. See 91 Cong. Rec. 1481 (1945) (remarks of Sen. Ferguson).

<sup>7</sup> See H. R. Rep. No. 143, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., 2 (1945).

<sup>8</sup> United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 51 F.Supp. 712 (ND Ga.).

<sup>9</sup> See H. R. Rep. No. 143, supra, at 2.

<sup>10</sup> H. R. 3270, S. 1362, 78th Cong., 1st Sess. (1943).

The Court concluded:

"Few states go so far as to permit private insurance companies, without state supervision, to agree upon and fix uniform insurance rates. . . . No states authorize combinations of insurance companies to coerce, intimidate, and boycott competitors and consumers in the manner here alleged, and it cannot be that any companies have acquired a vested right to engage in such destructive business practices." Id., at 562.

Before announcement of the Court's opinion, the phrase "boycott, coercion, or intimidation" had appeared in none of the lengthy debates or numerous legislative proposals in Congress from September 1943 to May 1944.

The bill totally exempting the insurance industry from the Sherman and Clayton Acts passed the House of Representatives on June 22, 1944.<sup>11</sup> Although a majority of the Senate Committee recommended enactment of the House bill,<sup>12</sup> six members urged that the Senate not pass the bill but wait for the legislative proposal then being drafted by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, an organization of state officials.<sup>13</sup> [****51] The Senate let the House bill die that session,<sup>14</sup> and the Committee turned its attention to the recommendation of the state insurance commissioners.

The state officials proposed a statute that, after a moratorium [*562] period of several years, would have exempted from the Sherman Act a specific list of cooperative practices.<sup>15</sup> The proposed statute also provided: "Nothing contained in this section shall render the said Sherman Act inapplicable to any act of boycott, [***954] coercion, or intimidation."<sup>16</sup> The accompanying report explained the operation and the relationship of these two provisions:<sup>17</sup>

"A suspension until July 1, 1948, is requested, in which the Sherman and Clayton Acts shall not apply, in order to allow adjustments within the business and time for enactment by States of such further legislation as they may deem necessary [****52] or desirable. After July 1, 1948, it is provided that the Sherman Act shall not apply to the use of cooperative rates, forms, and underwriting plans where State-approved, to adjustment, inspection and similar agreements[,] to acts of reinsurance or co-insurance, to commission agreements, to the collection of statistics, nor to cooperative action for making of rates, rules, or plans where their use is not mandatory.

<sup>11</sup> 90 Cong. Rec. 6510 (1944).

<sup>12</sup> S. Rep. No. 1112, 78th Cong., 2d Sess. (1944).

<sup>13</sup> Id., pt. 2, at 6.

<sup>14</sup> 90 Cong. Rec. 8054 (1944).

<sup>15</sup> Id., at A4406.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid.

<sup>17</sup> The report also appeared to reflect the testimony of Attorney General Biddle, who, on the day after H. R. 3270, see n. 10 supra, passed the House, appeared before the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee that was considering this same legislation. He assured the Subcommittee that the Government did not intend to bring new prosecutions while Congress was considering legislation on the subject, but he insisted that the South-Eastern case should and would go forward because of the seriousness of the charges. After quoting a portion of the Court's opinion set out in the text, supra, at 560-561, he stated:

"[That] case was not merely a price-fixing case, but involved very serious boycotting. It involved boycotting by insurance companies of agents who would not belong to the association, and under the laws of the State in which the association operated, many of the acts alleged in the indictment would have been illegal." Joint Hearing on S. 1362 et al. before the Subcommittees of the Committees on the Judiciary, 78th Cong., 2d Sess., 636 (1944).

[*563] "No exemption is sought nor expected for oppressive or destructive practices. . . . Provision is made that the Sherman Act shall not now or hereafter be inapplicable to any act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation." 90 Cong. Rec. A4406 (1944).

[****53] [**2941] This proposal formed the basis for S. 340, which was reported out with the unanimous support of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary in January 1945.<sup>18</sup> The list of specific practices immunized from antitrust liability was dropped, leaving the provision that suspended the Clayton and Sherman Acts for several years, during which time the States could accommodate their regulatory activities to the federal antitrust laws.<sup>19</sup> [****54] Even during the moratorium, however, the Sherman Act was to remain applicable to "any act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation."<sup>20</sup> This provision was not [***955] needed [*564] after the moratorium because the antitrust laws would take full effect after that time. Thus, the Senate bill as finally passed made federal antitrust policy paramount to state regulation.

[****55] The House passed a version of the bill striking the opposite balance. Its bill, too, carried a moratorium provision with the boycott limitation, but at the end of that period the federal antitrust laws would be pre-empted by state regulations even insofar as acts of "boycott, coercion, or intimidation" were concerned.<sup>21</sup>

A Conference Committee then within a short period worked out a compromise bill which became the present McCarran-Ferguson Act. Section 2 (b) of this bill steered a middle course by making the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, and the Federal Trade Commission Act applicable to the business of insurance after a moratorium period, but only "to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law."<sup>22</sup> [****56] At the same time, the "boycott, coercion, and intimidation" limitation on the States' power to confer antitrust immunity was extended beyond the moratorium period to the full life of the Act.<sup>23</sup>

III

From this review of the legislative history, it should be clear that the scope given both §§ 2 (b) and 3 (b) is crucial to the effectuation of the compromise struck by the 79th Congress. If § 2 (b) is construed broadly to pre-empt federal law without the need for specific state legislation and if § 3 (b) is given no effect as a limitation on that pre-emption, the original House position prevails. On the other hand, if § 3 (b) is construed as broadly as the Sherman Act itself,

<sup>18</sup> S. Rep. No. 20, 79th Cong., 1st Sess. (1945).

<sup>19</sup> In the floor debates, several Senators pointed out that the bill could be read to support pre-emption of the federal antitrust laws by state regulations. 91 Cong. Rec. 480 (1945). To clarify its intent, the Senate amended S. 340 on the floor to make the antitrust laws expressly and fully applicable after the moratorium period. Id., at 488.

<sup>20</sup> As the bill came out of committee, the boycott provision applied only to the section establishing a short-term moratorium. Id., at 479. A proposal to extend the boycott provision to the full Act was offered by Senator Murdock and accepted by Senator Ferguson, ibid., but was never ratified by the Senate.

That the boycott exception was originally drafted only to keep the Sherman Act partially in effect during the moratorium suggests that the provision may have been initially intended to prevent interference with the prosecution of the defendants in South-Eastern Underwriters, who still faced trial following the decision of this Court. Certainly, many Congressmen expressed their opposition to legislation that would free those defendants from liability. See, e. g., 90 Cong. Rec. 6450 (1944) (remarks of Rep. Celler); id., at 6452 (remarks of Rep. LaFollette); Joint Hearings, supra n. 17, at 637 (remarks of Sen. Hatch). On its face, the boycott provision removed any doubt about the Government's authority to continue with that prosecution. Whatever its initial impetus, however, there is no indication that the provision was finally thought to be applicable only to the South-Eastern litigation.

<sup>21</sup> See 91 Cong. Rec. 1085 (1945); see also id., at 1484-1485.

<sup>22</sup> See n. 1, supra.

<sup>23</sup> See n. 2, supra.

then the original Senate version largely prevails, no matter how § 2 (b) is interpreted. [**565] Congress clearly intended a middle position between these extremes. That position cannot be given effect unless § 2 (b) is read to pre-empt federal law only to the [**2942] extent the States have actually regulated a particular area, and § 3 (b) is viewed as referring to a range of evils considerably narrower than those prohibited by the Sherman Act.

From the legislative debates on S. 340, the Committee Reports, and the design of the statute itself, it is evident that the "boycott, [****57] coercion, or intimidation" provision is most fairly read as referring to the kinds of antitrust violations alleged in South-Eastern Underwriters -- that is, attempts by members of the insurance business to force other members to follow the industry's private rules and practices. Repeatedly, Congressmen involved in the drafting of the statute drew a distinction between state regulation and private [***956] regulation.<sup>24</sup> Congress plainly wanted to allow the States to authorize anticompetitive practices which they determined to be in the public interest, as indicated by formal state approval.<sup>25</sup> Section 2 (b) does just that. Congress just as plainly wanted to make sure that private organizations set up to govern the industry, such as the South-Eastern Underwriters Association, would not escape the reach of the federal antitrust laws. Section 2 (b) also meets this concern to the extent that States do not authorize or sanction anticompetitive practices promoted by such organizations. But § 2 (b) leaves open the possibility that States might, at the prompting of these powerful organizations, enact merely permissive regulations sufficiently specific to confer antitrust immunity, [****58] thus leaving those organizations free to coerce compliance from uncooperative competitors. Properly construed, § 3 (b) fills this gap by keeping the Sherman Act fully applicable to private enforcement -- by the means described in the South-Eastern [*566] Underwriters case -- of industry rules and practices, even if those rules and practices are permitted by state law.<sup>26</sup> Similarly, where a State enacts its own antitrust laws conferring § 2 (b) immunity, § 3 (b) retains Sherman Act coverage for those especially "destructive . . . practices," 322 U.S., at 562, involved in South-Eastern Underwriters.

The key feature of § 3 (b), then, is that the agreement or act of "boycott, coercion, or intimidation" must be aimed ultimately [****59] at a member of the insurance industry. As in South-Eastern Underwriters, the immediate targets may be policyholders or others outside the industry, but unless they are boycotted, coerced, or intimidated for the purpose of forcing other insurance companies or agents to comply with industry rules, § 3 (b) does not apply.

It follows, then, that § 3 (b) does not reach the boycott alleged in this case. The respondents' complaint does not contend that petitioner insurance companies refused to sell them insurance with the ultimate aim of disciplining or coercing other insurance companies. Rather, if there was an agreement among the petitioners, the complaint would indicate that it was entirely voluntary.

I would reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 227

12 Federal Procedural Forms L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:109, 48:126, 48:146

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1013(b)

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 29

---

<sup>24</sup> See, e.g., 91 Cong. Rec. 1480, 1483, 1485 (1945) (remarks of Sen. O'Mahoney); id., at 1481 (remarks of Sen. Ferguson).

<sup>25</sup> See id., at 1486 (remarks of Sen. O'Mahoney).

<sup>26</sup> See id., at 1485-1486 (remarks of Sen. O'Mahoney).

438 U.S. 531, *566; 98 S. Ct. 2923, **2942; 57 L. Ed. 2d 932, ***956; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 40, ****59

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and [****60] Monopolies 25

L Ed Index to Annos, McCarran-Ferguson Act; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, McCarran-Ferguson Act; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

What circumstances render civil case, or issues arising therein, moot so as to preclude Supreme Court's consideration of their merits. 44 L Ed 2d 745.

Validity, construction, and application of McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1011-1015), dealing with regulations of insurance business by state or federal law. 21 L Ed 2d 938.

---

End of Document

United States v. United States Gypsum Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

March 1, 1978, Argued ; June 29, 1978, Decided

No. 76-1560

Reporter

438 U.S. 422 *; 98 S. Ct. 2864 **; 57 L. Ed. 2d 854 ***; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 131 ****; 1978-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P62,103

UNITED STATES v. UNITED STATES GYPSUM CO. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 550 F.2d 115, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

Sherman Act, seller, prices, deliberations, conspiracy, Robinson-Patman Act, foreman, verification, competitors, jurors, price information, instructions, exchanges, antitrust, buyer, circumstances, stabilize, good faith, indictment, withdrawal, cases, undertaken, gypsum board, interseller, effects, criminal law, price-fixing, customer, price discrimination, anti trust law

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Intent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Sherman Act

HN1[] Criminal Actions, Intent

An effect on prices, without more, will not support a criminal conviction under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., but that conclusion is not based on the existence of any conflict between the requirements of the Robinson-Patman and the Sherman Acts. Rather, a defendant's state of mind or intent is an element of a criminal antitrust offense which must be established by evidence and inferences drawn therefrom and cannot be taken from the trier of fact through reliance on a legal presumption of wrongful intent from proof of an effect on prices.

438 U.S. 422, *422; 98 S. Ct. 2864, **2864; 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, ***854; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 131, ****1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Intent

HN2 [down] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

A civil violation can be established by proof of either an unlawful purpose or an anticompetitive effect. Of course, consideration of intent may play an important role in divining the actual nature and effect of the alleged anticompetitive conduct.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Acts & Mental States > General Overview

HN3 [down] Mens Rea, Specific Intent

The existence of a mens rea is the rule of, rather than the exception to, the principles of Anglo-American criminal jurisprudence. Intent generally remains an indispensable element of a criminal offense. This is as true in a sophisticated criminal antitrust case as in one involving any other criminal offense.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation > Rule of Lenity

HN4 [down] Legislation, Interpretation

Ambiguity concerning the ambit of criminal statutes should be resolved in favor of lenity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

Evidence > ... > Presumptions > Exceptions > Common Law Presumptions

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Acts & Mental States > General Overview

HN5 [down] Mens Rea, Specific Intent

At least with regard to crimes having their origin in the common law, there is an interpretative presumption that mens rea is required. Mere omission of intent in the statute will not be construed as eliminating that element from the crimes denounced; instead Congress will be presumed to have legislated against the background of our traditional legal concepts which render intent a critical factor, and absence of contrary direction will be taken as satisfaction with widely accepted definitions, not as a departure from them.

438 U.S. 422, *422; 98 S. Ct. 2864, **2864; 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, ***854; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 131, ****1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Intent

HN6 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The Sherman Act (Act), 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., unlike most traditional criminal statutes, does not, in clear and categorical terms, precisely identify the conduct which it proscribes. Both civil remedies and criminal sanctions are authorized with regard to the same generalized definitions of the conduct proscribed -- restraints of trade or commerce and illegal monopolization -- without reference to or mention of intent or state of mind. Nor has judicial elaboration of the Act always yielded the clear and definitive rules of conduct which the statute omits; instead open-ended and fact-specific standards like the "rule of reason" have been applied to broad classes of conduct falling within the purview of the Act's general provisions. Simply put, the Act has not been interpreted as if it were primarily a criminal statute; it has been construed to have a generality and adaptability comparable to that found to be desirable in constitutional provisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

With certain exceptions for conduct regarded as per se illegal because of its unquestionably anticompetitive effects, the behavior proscribed by the Sherman Act is often difficult to distinguish from the gray zone of socially acceptable and economically justifiable business conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

The exchange of price data and other information among competitors does not invariably have anticompetitive effects; indeed such practices can in certain circumstances increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive. For this reason, such exchanges of information do not constitute a per se violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.. A number of factors including most prominently the structure of the industry involved and the nature of the information exchanged are generally considered in divining the procompetitive or anticompetitive effects of this type of interseller communication. Exchanges of current price information, of course, have the greatest potential for generating anticompetitive effects and although not per se unlawful have consistently been held to violate the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

438 U.S. 422, *422; 98 S. Ct. 2864, **2864; 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, ***854; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 131, ****1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Intent

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Sherman Act

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The criminal offenses defined by the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., should be construed as including intent as an element.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In a conspiracy, two different types of intent are generally required -- the basic intent to agree, which is necessary to establish the existence of the conspiracy, and the more traditional intent to effectuate the object of the conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Acts & Mental States > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Intent

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Recognizing that mens rea is not a unitary concept, the Code enumerates four possible levels of intent -- purpose, knowledge, recklessness, and negligence. In dealing with the kinds of business decisions upon which the antitrust laws focus, the concepts of recklessness and negligence have no place. Action undertaken with knowledge of its probable consequences and having the requisite anticompetitive effects can be a sufficient predicate for a finding of criminal liability under the antitrust laws. In so holding, it is not meant to suggest that conduct undertaken with the purpose of producing anticompetitive effects would not also support criminal liability, even if such effects did not come to pass. This elevated standard of intent need not be established in cases where anticompetitive effects have been demonstrated; instead, proof that the defendant's conduct was undertaken with knowledge of its probable consequences will satisfy the Government's burden.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Acts & Mental States > Actus Reus

HN12[] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

It is now generally accepted that a person who acts or omits to act intends a result of his act or omission under two quite different circumstances: (1) when he consciously desires that result, whatever the likelihood of that result happening from his conduct; and (2) when he knows that the result is practically certain to follow from his conduct, whatever his desire may be as to that result. Generally this limited distinction between knowledge and purpose has not been considered important since there is good reason for imposing liability whether the defendant desired or merely knew of the practical certainty of the results. In either circumstance, the defendants are consciously behaving in a way the law prohibits, and such conduct is a fitting object of criminal punishment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Intent

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > General Intent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Knowledge

HN13 [blue icon] Criminal Actions, Intent

The business behavior which is likely to give rise to criminal antitrust charges is conscious behavior normally undertaken only after a full consideration of the desired results and a weighing of the costs, benefits, and risks. A requirement of proof not only of this knowledge of likely effects, but also of a conscious desire to bring them to fruition or to violate the law would seem, particularly in such a context, both unnecessarily cumulative and unduly burdensome. Where carefully planned and calculated conduct is being scrutinized in the context of a criminal prosecution, the perpetrator's knowledge of the anticipated consequences is a sufficient predicate for a finding of criminal intent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Jury Instructions > Particular Instructions > Elements of Offense

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Jury Instructions > Particular Instructions > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

A conclusive presumption of intent which testimony could not overthrow will effectively eliminate intent as an ingredient of the offense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

**HN15** [down] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A purpose of complying with the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13 \(1976 ed.\), by exchanging price information is not inconsistent with knowledge that such exchanges of information will have the probable effect of fixing or stabilizing prices. Since knowledge of the probable consequences of conduct to be the requisite mental state in a criminal prosecution, a defendant's purpose in engaging in the proscribed conduct will not insulate him from liability unless it is deemed of sufficient merit to justify a general exception to the Sherman Act's, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., proscriptions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Contracts Law > Personal Property > Bona Fide Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Promotional Allowances & Services

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Robinson-Patman Act Exemptions

**HN16** [down] Robinson-Patman Act, Defenses

Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\) \(1976 ed.\), embodies a general prohibition of price discrimination between buyers when an injury to competition is the consequence. The primary exception to the § 2(a) bar is the meeting-competition defense which is incorporated as a proviso to the burden-of-proof requirements set out in § 2(b): provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Types of Price Discrimination > Brokerage, Commissions & Compensation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

HN17 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Defenses

The kind of showing which a seller must make in order to satisfy the good-faith requirement of the § 2(b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(b\) \(1976 ed.\), defense is that section 2(b) does not require the seller to justify price discriminations by showing that in fact they met a competitor's price. But it does place on the seller the burden of showing that the price was made in good faith to meet a competitor's. The statute at least requires the seller, who has knowingly discriminated in price, to show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Buyer Liability

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

HN18 [] Price Discrimination, Buyer Liability

A good-faith belief, rather than absolute certainty, that a price concession is being offered to meet an equally low price offered by a competitor is sufficient to satisfy the § 2(b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(b\) \(1976 ed.\), defense. While casual reliance on uncorroborated reports of buyers or sales representatives without further investigation may not, as we noted earlier, be sufficient to make the requisite showing of good faith, nothing in the language of § 2(b) indicates that direct discussions of price between competitors are required. It is the concept of good faith which lies at the core of the meeting-competition defense, and good faith is a flexible and pragmatic, not technical or doctrinaire, concept. Rigid rules and inflexible absolutes are especially inappropriate in dealing with the § 2(b) defense; the facts and circumstances of the particular case, not abstract theories or remote conjectures, should govern its interpretation and application.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

438 U.S. 422, *422; 98 S. Ct. 2864, **2864; 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, ***854; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 131, ****1

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN19 [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

The good-faith standard remains the benchmark against which the seller's conduct is to be evaluated, and this standard can be satisfied by efforts falling short of interseller verification in most circumstances where the seller has only vague, generalized doubts about the reliability of its commercial adversary -- the buyer. Given the fact-specific nature of the inquiry, it is difficult to predict all the factors the Federal Trade Commission or a court would consider in appraising a seller's good faith in matching a competing offer in these circumstances. Certainly, evidence that a seller had received reports of similar discounts from other customers, or was threatened with a termination of purchases if the discount were not met, would be relevant in this regard. Efforts to corroborate the reported discount by seeking documentary evidence or by appraising its reasonableness in terms of available market data would also be probative as would the seller's past experience with the particular buyer in question.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Buyer Liability

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

HN20 [ ] Price Discrimination, Buyer Liability

Section 2(f) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(f\) imposes liability on buyers for inducing illegal price discounts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN21 [ ] Robinson-Patman Act, Defenses

The good-faith requirement of the § 2(b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (Act), 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(b\) \(1976 ed.\), defense implicitly suggests a somewhat imperfect matching between competing offers actually made and those allowed to be met. Unless this requirement is to be abandoned, it seems clear that inadequate information will, in a limited number of cases, deny the defense to some who, if all the facts had been known, would have been entitled to invoke it. Interseller verification does not provide a satisfactory solution to this seemingly inevitable problem of inadequate information. Moreover, § 2(b) affords only a defense to liability and not an affirmative right under the Act. While sellers are, of course, entitled to take advantage of the defense when they can satisfy its requirements, efforts to increase its availability at the expense of broader, affirmative antitrust policies must be rejected.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Inchoate Crimes > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Jury Instructions > Objections

HN22 [ ] Conspiracy, Elements

Affirmative acts inconsistent with the object of the conspiracy and communicated in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators have generally been regarded as sufficient to establish withdrawal or abandonment.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

In addition to questions relating to the propriety of certain trial procedures during a prosecution of certain manufacturers and certain of their officers for an alleged price-fixing conspiracy in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), this case presented issues as to the requisite intent for an antitrust conviction, and as to whether, as contended by the defendants, the exchange of price information between sellers--for the purpose of the sellers' taking advantage of the Robinson-Patman Act's 2(b) (15 USCS 13\(b\)) "meeting competition" defense to illegal price discrimination--was exempt from Sherman Act scrutiny. During the trial in the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania, the focus of the government's price-fixing case was the defendants' practice of telephoning each other to determine the price currently being offered to a specific customer. The defendants maintained that any such exchanges of price information were solely for the purposes of complying with the Robinson-Patman Act and preventing customer fraud in representing prices at which the defendants were offering their products. The trial court's charge to the jury included instructions that if the price information exchanges were found to have been undertaken in good faith to comply with 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act, then price verification alone would not be sufficient to establish an illegal price fixing agreement, but that if the jury found that the effect of price verification was to fix prices, then the defendants would be "presumed, as a matter of law, to have intended that result." The defendants were convicted on the basis of the jury's guilty verdicts, but the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit reversed the convictions on various grounds and remanded the case, holding, inter alia, that if certain conditions were met, price verification among competitors for the sole purpose of taking advantage of the "meeting competition" defense of the Robinson-Patman Act constituted a "controlling circumstance" precluding liability under the Sherman Act \(550 F2d 115\).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Burger, Ch. J., joined by Brennan, Marshall, and White, JJ., and joined in part by Stewart (as to holdings 1, 2, 4, and 5 below), Powell (as to holdings 1, 2, 4, and 5), Rehnquist (as to holding 4), and Stevens (as to holdings 2-5), JJ., it was held that (1) a defendant's state of mind or intent was an element of a federal criminal antitrust offense which had to be established by evidence and inferences drawn therefrom and could not be taken from the trier of fact through reliance on a legal presumption of wrongful intent from mere proof of an effect on prices (action undertaken with knowledge of its probable consequences, and having the requisite anticompetitive effects, being a sufficient predicate for a finding of criminal liability), and thus the trial court's instruction in the case at bar, relating to the presumption of intent if the effect of the defendants' price verification was to fix prices, was improper; (2) price verification among competitors for the purpose of taking advantage of the "meeting competition" defense of the Robinson-Patman Act could not be treated as a "controlling circumstance" precluding criminal liability for price-fixing under 1 of the Sherman Act, such verification instead remaining subject to close scrutiny under the Sherman Act; (3) an ex parte meeting that had taken place between the trial judge and the jury foreman--the foreman having requested the meeting on the morning of the seventh day of deliberations (after a lengthy trial, and after various supplemental instructions had been given during the jury's deliberations, including "Allen" charges), to discuss the jury's condition and to seek further guidance from the judge, and counsel having agreed to the ex parte meeting when the judge stated that his purpose would be to determine the jury's physical condition and the prospects for a verdict, and that no instructions on the law would be given--was improper, and alone warranted reversal of the convictions, where the foreman had referred several times during the meeting to the jury's deadlock, and where the exchange with the judge suggested the strong likelihood that the foreman carried away from the meeting, and restated to his fellow jurors, the impression that the judge wanted a verdict one way or the other; (4) the trial court's charge concerning participation in the conspiracy was sufficient, since (a) the jury had been instructed repeatedly that only a single conspiracy was alleged and that liability could only be predicated on the knowing involvement of each defendant, considered individually, in the conspiracy charged, and (b) in any event, the instruction differed in only immaterial respects from the defendants' requested instruction; and (5) the trial court's instruction that in order to find that a defendant had abandoned or withdrawn from the conspiracy, the jury must find that the defendant took some affirmative action to disavow or defeat its purpose, and that to withdraw, a defendant "either must have affirmatively notified each other member of the conspiracy he will no longer participate in the undertaking so they understand they can no longer expect his participation or acquiescence or he must make disclosures of the illegal scheme to law enforcement officials," was improper and alone constituted reversible error, since the charge, fairly read, limited the jury's consideration to only two circumscribed and arguably impractical methods of demonstrating withdrawal from the conspiracy, whereas affirmative acts inconsistent with the conspiracy's object and communicated in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators were generally regarded as sufficient to establish withdrawal or abandonment.

Powell, J., concurring in part, stated that (1) with regard to holding 2 above, he joined the portion of the court's opinion which held that a seller's intention to establish a "meeting competition" defense under 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act was not in itself a "controlling circumstance" excusing liability under the Sherman Act for otherwise unlawful price verification practices, (2) he did not join any portions of the court's opinion which might be read as suggesting that there were cases where the 2(b) defense was unavailable even though a seller made every reasonable, lawful effort to corroborate his buyer's report that a competitor had offered a lower price, and (3) it was not necessary to consider the issue as to the trial judge's ex parte meeting with the jury foreman, since such issue was unlikely to arise at any retrial.

Rehnquist, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, expressed the view that (1) it was not necessary to consider either the intent required for criminal liability under the Sherman Act or the interrelationship of the Robinson-Patman Act's "meeting competition" defense and the Sherman Act, since the District Court's instructions on such matters, when considered as a whole, were adequate, (2) the communications between the judge and the jury foreman, having been consented to by all the parties, did not justify a reversal of the jury's verdict, and (3) the instruction as to withdrawal from the conspiracy, considered either alone or with the other instructions, did not warrant reversal of the verdict.

Stevens, J., concurred in part and dissented in part, expressing the view that as applied to an agreement among producers to exchange current price information, the rule of reason required an element in addition to proof of the agreement itself--either an actual market effect or an express purpose to affect market price--but once that element was shown, any additional showing of intent was unnecessary.

Blackmun, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

438 U.S. 422, *422; 98 S. Ct. 2864, **2864; 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, ***854; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 131, ****1

MONOPOLIES §36 > TRIAL §290 > price-fixing conspiracy -- criminal intent -- instructions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

In a prosecution of certain manufacturers for violating 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) by allegedly engaging in a price-fixing conspiracy, where one of the allegations was that the defendants exchanged price information in verifying prices being offered to specific customers, jury instructions on the issue of intent--charging that if the jury found that the effect of price verification was to fix prices, then the defendants would be "presumed, as a matter of law, to have intended that result"--are improper, since (1) an effect on prices, without more, will not support a criminal conviction under the Sherman Act, and (2) the requisite criminal intent cannot be established by reliance on a legal presumption of wrongful intent from proof of an effect on prices; although an effect on prices may support an inference that the defendant had knowledge of the probability of such a consequence at the time he acted, the jury must remain free to consider additional evidence before accepting or rejecting the inference, and thus, while it would be correct to instruct the jury that it may infer intent from an effect on prices, ultimately the decision on the issue of intent must be left to the trier of fact alone. (Stevens, J., dissented from this holding.)

EVIDENCE §172 > MONOPOLIES §15 > criminal intent -- presumption -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

A defendant's state of mind or intent is an element of a federal criminal antitrust offense which must be established by evidence and inferences drawn therefrom, and cannot be taken from the trier of fact through reliance on a legal presumption of wrongful intent from proof of an effect on prices.

MONOPOLIES §15 > criminal offenses -- intent -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B]

The Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) is not to be construed as mandating a regime of strict liability criminal offenses; instead, the criminal offenses defined by the Act should be construed as including intent as an element.

MONOPOLIES §15 > civil violations -- intent -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

As a general rule, a civil violation of the federal antitrust laws can be established by proof of either an unlawful purpose or an anticompetitive effect, although consideration of intent may play an important role in divining the actual nature and effect of the alleged anticompetitive conduct.

LAW §6 > MONOPOLIES §15 > intent -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The general rule that intent is an indispensable element of a criminal offense is as true in a sophisticated criminal antitrust case as in one involving any other criminal offense.

LAW §6 > statutory offense -- intent -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Far more than the simple omission of the appropriate phrase from the statutory definition of a crime is necessary to justify dispensing with an intent requirement.

MONOPOLIES §33 > exchange of price information -- per se illegality -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

Exchanges of current price information between competitors are not per se unlawful under federal antitrust laws.

CONSPIRACY §1 > intent -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

In a conspiracy, two different types of intent are generally required--the basic intent to agree, which is necessary to establish the existence of the conspiracy, and the more traditional intent to effectuate the object of the conspiracy.

MONOPOLIES §15 > criminal offenses-intent -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

With regard to the element of intent in federal criminal antitrust violations, the concepts of recklessness and negligence have no place in dealing with the kinds of business decisions upon which the antitrust laws focus.

MONOPOLIES §15 > criminal offenses -- intent -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

Action undertaken with knowledge of its probable consequences, and having the requisite anticompetitive effects, can be a sufficient predicate for a finding of criminal liability under the federal antitrust laws, it not being necessary to show that the conduct was undertaken with the "conscious object" of producing anticompetitive effects; where carefully planned and calculated conduct is being scrutinized in the context of a criminal prosecution, the perpetrator's knowledge of the anticipated consequences is a sufficient predicate for a finding of criminal intent.

MONOPOLIES §36 > exchanging price information -- criminal liability -- "meeting competition" defense -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [11B]

Sellers' verification between themselves of price concessions offered to their customers--such verification by exchange of price information being for the sole purpose of the sellers' taking advantage of the Robinson-Patman Act's 2(b) (15 USCS 13\(b\)) "meeting competition" defense to illegal price discrimination--may not be treated as a "controlling circumstance" precluding criminal liability for price-fixing under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1); exchanges of price information, even when putatively for purposes of Robinson-Patman Act compliance, must remain subject to close scrutiny under the Sherman Act.

MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- "meeting competition" defense -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [down] [12]

With regard to the "meeting competition" defense to price discrimination under 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(b\)), the statute does not require sellers to justify price discriminations by showing that in fact they met a competitor's price, but it does place on the seller the burden of showing that the price was made in good faith to meet a competitor's; the statute at least requires the seller, who has knowingly discriminated in price, to show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor.

MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- "meeting competition" defense -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [down] [13]

A good-faith belief, rather than absolute certainty, that a price concession is being offered to meet an equally low price offered by a competitor is sufficient to satisfy the Robinson Patman Act's 2(b) (15 USCS 13\(b\)) "meeting competition" defense to price discrimination charges.

MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- "meeting competition" defense -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [down] [14]

The concept of good faith which lies at the core of the "meeting competition" defense to price discrimination under 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(b\)) is a flexible and pragmatic, not a technical or doctrinaire, concept; rigid rules and inflexible absolutes are especially inappropriate in dealing with the 2(b) defense; the facts and circumstances of the particular case, not abstract theories or remote conjectures, should govern its interpretation and application.

EVIDENCE §852 > MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- "meeting competition" defense -- good faith -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [down] [15]

The good-faith standard of the "meeting competition" defense to price discrimination under 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(b\)) can be satisfied by efforts falling short of interseller verification in most circumstances where the seller has only vague, generalized doubts about the reliability of a buyer who represents that he has been offered a lower price; evidence that a seller had received reports of similar discounts from other customers, or was threatened with a termination of purchases if the discount was not met, is relevant in this regard; also probative are (1) efforts to corroborate the reported discount by seeking documentary evidence or by appraising its reasonableness in terms of available market data, and (2) the seller's past experience with the particular buyer in question.

ERROR §1631 > TRIAL §36 > criminal prosecution -- ex parte meeting of judge and jury foreman -- reversible error --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16A\]](#) [16A] [LEdHN\[16B\]](#) [16B]

In a federal antitrust prosecution, an ex parte meeting between the judge and the jury foreman--the foreman having requested the meeting on the morning of the seventh day of deliberations (after a lengthy trial, and after various supplemental instructions had been given during the jury's deliberations, including "Allen" charges), to discuss the condition of the jury and to seek further guidance from the judge, and counsel having agreed to the ex parte meeting when the judge stated that his purpose would be to determine the jury's physical condition and the prospects for a verdict, and that no instructions on the law would be given--is improper, where the foreman referred several times during the meeting to the jury's deadlock, and where the exchange with the judge suggested the strong likelihood that the foreman carried away from the meeting, and restated to his fellow jurors, the impression that the judge wanted a verdict one way or the other; the reversal of convictions (the jury having returned guilty verdicts on the morning following the ex parte meeting) would be justified solely because of the risk that the foreman believed that the court was insisting on a dispositive verdict. (Rehnquist, J., dissented in part from this holding.)

TRIAL §277.5 > criminal case -- instructions -- judge's personal views -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

A judge's subjective personal views have no place in his instructions to the jury in a federal criminal trial.

TRIAL §290 > antitrust prosecution -- conspiracy -- instructions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18]

In a federal prosecution of certain companies and certain of their officers for an alleged conspiracy in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), the trial court's charge concerning participation in the conspiracy is sufficient, where (1) the jury was informed repeatedly that only a single conspiracy was alleged and that liability could only be predicated on the knowing involvement of each defendant, considered individually, in the conspiracy charged, and (2) in any event, the instruction differed in only immaterial respects from the defendants' requested instruction, which would have directed the jury to determine what kind of agreement or understanding, if any, existed as to each defendant before any defendant could be found to be a member of the conspiracy.

ERROR §1604 > TRIAL §290 > antitrust prosecution -- withdrawal from conspiracy -- instructions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[19\]](#) [19]

In a federal prosecution resulting in the convictions of certain companies and certain of their officers for an alleged conspiracy in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), the trial court's charge concerning withdrawal from the conspiracy--the jury having been instructed that in order to find that a defendant abandoned or withdrew from a conspiracy, it must find that the defendant took some affirmative action to disavow or defeat its purpose, and that to withdraw, a defendant "either must have affirmatively notified each other member of the conspiracy he will no longer participate in the undertaking so they understand they can no longer expect his participation or acquiescence or he must make disclosures of the illegal scheme to law enforcement officials"--is improper, and standing alone constitutes reversible error, since the charge, fairly read, limited the jury's consideration to only two circumscribed and arguably impractical methods of demonstrating withdrawal from the conspiracy, whereas affirmative acts inconsistent with the object of the conspiracy and communicated in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators are generally regarded as sufficient to establish withdrawal or abandonment. (Rehnquist, J., dissented in part from this holding.)

Syllabus

---

Several major gypsum board manufacturers and various of their officials were indicted for violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act by allegedly engaging in a price-fixing conspiracy. One of the types of actions allegedly taken in formulating and effectuating the conspiracy was interseller price verification, i. e., the practice of telephoning a competing manufacturer to determine the price being currently offered on gypsum board to a specific customer. After some of the defendants pleaded nolo contendere and were sentenced, the remaining defendants were convicted after a trial of some 19 weeks. The Government's case focused on the interseller price-verification charge, which the defendants defended on the ground that the price-information exchanges were to enable them to take advantage of the meeting-competition defense contained in § 2 (b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (which permits a seller to rebut a prima facie [****2] price-discrimination charge by showing that a lower price to a purchaser was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor). On the verification issue, the trial judge charged the jury that if the price-information exchanges were found to have been undertaken in good faith to comply with the Robinson-Patman Act, verification alone would not suffice to establish an illegal price-fixing agreement, but that if the jury found that the effect of verification was to fix prices, then the parties would be presumed, as a matter of law, to have intended that result. The judge further charged that since only a single conspiracy was alleged, liability could only be predicated on the knowing involvement of each defendant, considered individually, in the conspiracy alleged, the judge having refused the defendants' requested charge directing the jury to determine what kind of agreement, if any, existed as to each defendant before any could be found to be a member of the conspiracy. With respect to the defendants' evidence as to withdrawal from the conspiracy, the judge instructed the jury that withdrawal had to be established by either affirmative notice to every other member [****3] of the conspiracy or by disclosure of the illegal enterprise to law enforcement officials. The judge refused the defendants' requested instruction that vigorous price competition during the period in question could also be considered as evidence of abandonment of the conspiracy. After all the testimony had been presented, the jurors were sequestered for deliberation, and apparently disagreement among them arose. After approximately seven days of deliberations, the foreman of the jury informed the judge that he wanted to discuss the jury's condition, and this resulted, with the parties' consent, in an ex parte meeting between the judge and the foreman. Most of the discussion at the meeting involved the jurors' deteriorating health but the foreman also referred to the jury's deadlock; there followed an exchange strongly suggesting that the foreman may have carried away from the meeting the impression that the judge wanted a verdict "one way or the other." The jury rendered its guilty verdict the following morning. The Court of Appeals reversed the convictions on various grounds, holding, inter alia, that verification of price concessions with competitors for the sole purpose [****4] of taking advantage of the meeting-competition defense of § 2 (b) constitutes a "controlling circumstance" precluding liability under § 1 of the Sherman Act, and thus an instruction allowing the jury to ignore the defendants' purpose in engaging in the alleged misconduct could not be sustained. Held:

1. A defendant's state of mind or intent is an element of a criminal antitrust offense which must be established by evidence and inferences drawn therefrom and cannot be taken from the trier of fact through reliance on a legal presumption of wrongful intent from proof of an effect on prices. Since the trial judge's instruction on the verification issue had this prohibited effect, it was improper. Pp. 434-446.

(a) The Sherman Act is not to be construed as mandating a regime of strict-liability crimes; rather the criminal offenses defined therein are to be construed as including intent as an element. Pp. 436-443.

(b) Action undertaken with knowledge of its probable consequences and having the requisite anticompetitive effects can be a sufficient predicate for a finding of criminal liability under the antitrust laws. Where carefully planned and calculated conduct is being scrutinized [****5] in the context of a criminal prosecution, the perpetrator's knowledge of the anticipated consequences is a sufficient predicate for a finding of criminal intent. Pp. 443-446.

2. A good-faith belief, rather than an absolute certainty, that a price concession is being offered to meet an equally low price offered by a competitor suffices to invoke the § 2 (b) defense; exchanges of price information, even when putatively for the purpose of Robinson-Patman Act compliance, must remain subject to close scrutiny under the Sherman Act. Therefore, the Court of Appeals erred in treating interseller price verification even as a limited "controlling circumstance" exception precluding Sherman Act liability. Pp. 447-459.

3. The ex parte meeting between the trial judge and the jury foreman was improper, and the Court of Appeals would have been justified in reversing the convictions solely because of the risk that the foreman believed the judge was insisting on a dispositive verdict. Such a meeting is pregnant with possibilities for error, since it is difficult to contain, much less to anticipate, the direction the conversation will take at such a meeting, any occasion which leads to communication [****6] with the whole jury panel through one juror inevitably risks innocent misstatements of the law and misinterpretations despite the undisputed good faith of the participants, and the absence of counsel from the meeting aggravates the problems of having one juror serve as a conduit for communication with the whole panel. Here the meeting was allowed to drift into a supplemental instruction relating to the jury's obligation to reach a verdict, and counsel were denied any chance to correct whatever mistaken impression the foreman might have taken from the meeting. Pp. 459-462.

4. The trial judge's charge concerning participation in the conspiracy, although perhaps not completely clear, was sufficient, but his charge on withdrawal from the conspiracy was erroneous, since it limited the jury's consideration to only two circumscribed and arguably impractical methods of demonstrating withdrawal, rather than permitting consideration of any affirmative acts inconsistent with the object of the conspiracy and communicated in a manner reasonably calculated to reach coconspirators. Pp. 462-465.

Counsel: Deputy Solicitor General Friedman argued the cause for the United States. With him on the [****7] briefs were Solicitor General McCree, Assistant Attorney General Shenefield, Frank H. Easterbrook, Robert B. Nicholson, Rodney O. Thorson, and Robert J. Wiggers.

H. Francis DeLane, W. Donald McSweeney, and Fred H. Bartlit, Jr., argued the cause for respondents. With them on the briefs were Stephen A. Stack, Jr., Mari M. Gursky, William A. Montgomery, Joseph R. Lundy, Thomas A. Gottschalk, Robert C. Keck, James G. Hiering, Cloyd R. Mellott, William B. Mallin, J. Gary Kosinski, D. Richard Funk, Clark M. Clifford, Carson M. Glass, and Thomas Richard Spradlin. *

---

* A brief of amici curiae urging reversal was filed for their respective States by Evelle J. Younger, Attorney General of California, Sanford N. Gruskin, Chief Assistant Attorney General, Warren J. Abbott, Assistant Attorney General, and Michael I. Spiegel and Charles M. Kagay, Deputy Attorneys General; William J. Baxley, Attorney General of Alabama, and Thomas Troy Zieman, Jr., Jerry L. Weidler, and Susan Beth Farmer, Assistant Attorneys General; Bruce E. Babbitt, Attorney General of Arizona, and Alison B. Swan, Assistant Attorney General; J. D. McFarlane, Attorney General of Colorado, and Robert F. Hill, First Assistant Attorney General; Carl R. Ajello, Attorney General of Connecticut; Theodore L. Sendak, Attorney General of Indiana; Curt Schneider, Attorney General of Kansas, and Thomas W. Regan, Assistant Attorney General; William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General of Louisiana; Francis B. Burch, Attorney General of Maryland; John Ashcroft, Attorney General of Missouri; William F. Hyland, Attorney General of New Jersey; Toney Anaya, Attorney General of New Mexico; Louis J. Lefkowitz, Attorney General of New York, and John M. Desiderio, Assistant Attorney General; Rufus L. Edmisten, Attorney General of North Carolina, and David S. Crump, Special Deputy Attorney General; James A. Redden, Attorney General of Oregon, and Stephen L. Dunne; John L. Hill, Attorney General of Texas; Robert B. Hansen, Attorney General of Utah; M. Jerome Diamond, Attorney General of

[****8]

Judges: BURGER, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BRENNAN, MARSHALL, and WHITE, JJ., joined; in all but Part IV of which STEWART, J., joined; in Parts I, II, V, and a portion of Part III of which POWELL, J., joined; in Part I and a portion of Part V of which REHNQUIST, J., joined; and in all but Part II of which STEVENS, J., joined. POWELL, J., filed an opinion concurring in part, post, p. 469. REHNQUIST, J., post, p. 471, and STEVENS, J., post, p. 474, filed opinions concurring in part and dissenting in part. BLACKMUN, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: BURGER

Opinion

---

[*426] [***862] [**2868] MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case presents the following questions: (a) whether intent is an element of a criminal antitrust offense; (b) whether an exchange of price information for purposes of compliance with the Robinson-Patman Act is exempt from Sherman Act scrutiny; (c) the adequacy of jury instructions on membership in and withdrawal from the alleged conspiracy; and (d) the propriety of an ex parte meeting between the trial judge and the foreman of the jury.

I

Gypsum board, a laminated [****9] type of wallboard composed of paper, vinyl, or other specially treated coverings over a gypsum core, has in the last 30 years substantially replaced wet plaster as the primary component of interior walls and ceilings in residential and commercial [***863] construction. The product is essentially fungible; differences in price, credit terms, and delivery services largely dictate the purchasers' choice between competing suppliers. Overall demand, however, is governed by the level of construction activity and is only marginally affected by price fluctuations.

The gypsum board industry is highly concentrated, with the number of producers ranging from 9 to 15 in the period 1960-1973. The eight largest companies accounted for some 94% of the national sales with the seven "single-plant producers" <sup>1</sup> accounting for the remaining 6%. Most of the major producers and a large number of the single-plant producers are members of the Gypsum Association which since 1930 has served as a trade association of gypsum board manufacturers.

[****10] [*427] A

Beginning in 1966, the Justice Department, as well as the Federal Trade Commission, became involved in investigations into possible antitrust violations in the gypsum board industry. In 1971, a grand jury was empaneled and the investigation continued for an additional 28 months. In late 1973, an indictment was filed in the United

---

Vermont; Anthony F. Troy, Attorney General of Virginia; Slade Gorton, Attorney General of Washington, and Thomas L. Boeder, Assistant Attorney General; Bronson C. LaFollette, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Michael L. Zaleski, Assistant Attorney General.

Stanley T. Kaleczyc, Lawrence B. Kraus, and Stephen A. Bokat filed a brief for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States as amicus curiae.

<sup>1</sup> The major producers operate numerous plants to serve a wide range of geographical markets. The single-plant producers are limited in terms of the markets they can serve because of the difficulties and expense involved in long-distance transportation of gypsum board.

States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania charging six major manufacturers and various of their corporate officials with violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, ch. 647, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1.<sup>2</sup>

[****11] The indictment charged that the defendants had engaged in a combination and conspiracy "[beginning] sometime prior to 1960 and continuing thereafter at least until sometime in 1973," App. 34, in restraint of interstate trade and commerce in the manufacture and sale of gypsum board. The alleged combination and conspiracy consisted of:

"[A] continuing agreement understanding and concert of action among the defendants and co-conspirators to (a) raise, fix, maintain and stabilize the prices of gypsum board; (b) fix, maintain and stabilize the terms and conditions of sale thereof; and (c) adopt and maintain uniform methods of packaging and handling such gypsum board." Ibid.

[*428] The indictment proceeded to specify some 13 types of actions taken by conspirators "[in] formulating and effectuating" the [**2869] combination and conspiracy, the most relevant of which, for our purposes, is specification (h) which alleged that the conspirators

[***864] "telephoned or otherwise contacted one another to exchange and discuss current and future published or market prices and published or standard terms and conditions of sale and to ascertain alleged deviations [****12] therefrom."

The bill of particulars provided additional details about the continuing nature of the alleged exchanges of competitive information and the role played by such exchanges in policing adherence to the various other illegal agreements charged.

B

The first skirmish in the protracted litigation of this case was a motion for dismissal filed by the defendants alleging that their due process rights had been denied because of unreasonable preindictment delay. The District Court, after holding a five-day evidentiary hearing on the motion, concluded that there was "no evidence of unreasonable delay on the part of the Government," 383 F.Supp. 462, 470 (WD Pa. 1974), and that the defendants were not "prejudiced to any extraordinary degree whatsoever by the chain of events leading to this indictment." Ibid. The District Court denied a motion to dismiss the indictment. Thereafter nine of the defendants entered pleas of nolo contendere and were sentenced.<sup>3</sup> The trial of the remaining seven defendants commenced on March 3, 1975, and lasted some 19 weeks.

[***13] [*429] The focus of the Government's price-fixing case at trial was interseller price verification -- that is, the practice allegedly followed by the gypsum board manufacturers of telephoning a competing producer to determine the price currently being offered on gypsum board to a specific customer. The Government contended that these price exchanges were part of an agreement among the defendants, had the effect of stabilizing prices and policing agreed-upon price increases, and were undertaken on a frequent basis until sometime in 1973. Defendants disputed both the scope and duration of the verification activities, and further maintained that those exchanges of price information which did occur were for the purposes of complying with the Robinson-Patman Act<sup>4</sup>

<sup>2</sup>The corporate defendants named in the indictment were: United States Gypsum Co., National Gypsum Co., Georgia Pacific Corp., Kaiser-Gypsum Co., Inc., Celotex Corp., and Flintkote Co. The individual defendants included: the Chairman of the Board and the Executive Vice-President of United States Gypsum, the Chairman of the Board and Vice-President for Sales of National Gypsum, the President of Georgia Pacific, the President and the Vice-President and General Manager of Kaiser-Gypsum, the President of Celotex, and the Chairman of the Board and the President of Flintkote. The Gypsum Association was named as an unindicted coconspirator as were two other gypsum board producers -- Johns-Manville Corp. and Fibreboard Corp.

<sup>3</sup>The remaining corporate defendants were United States Gypsum, National Gypsum, Georgia Pacific, and Celotex, and the remaining individual defendants were the Chairman of the Board and the Vice-President of Sales of National Gypsum and the Executive Vice-President of United States Gypsum.

and preventing customer fraud. These purposes, in defendants' view, brought the disputed communications among competitors within a "controlling circumstance" exception to Sherman Act liability -- at the extreme, precluding, as a matter of law, consideration of verification by the jury in determining defendants' guilt on the price-fixing charge, and at the minimum, making the defendants' purposes in engaging in such communications [****14] a threshold factual question.

The instructions on the verification issue given by the trial judge provided that if the exchanges of price information were deemed by the jury to have been undertaken [***865] "in a good faith effort to comply with the Robinson-Patman Act," verification standing alone would not be sufficient to establish an illegal price-fixing agreement. The paragraphs immediately following, however, provided that the purpose was essentially irrelevant if the jury found that the effect of verification was to raise, [*430] fix, maintain, or stabilize prices. The instructions on verification closed with the observation:

"The law presumes [****15] that a person intends the necessary and natural consequences of his acts. Therefore, if the effect of the exchanges of pricing information [**2870] was to raise, fix, maintain, and stabilize prices, then the parties to them are presumed, as a matter of law, to have intended that result."

The aspects of the charge dealing with the Government's burden in linking a particular defendant to the conspiracy, and the kinds of evidence the jury could properly consider in determining if one or more of the alleged conspirators had withdrawn from or abandoned the conspiracy were also a subject of some dispute between the judge and defense counsel. On the former, the disagreement was essentially over the proper specificity of the charge. Defendants requested a charge directing the jury to determine "what kind of agreement or understanding, if any, existed as to each defendant" before any could be found to be a member of the conspiracy. The trial judge was unwilling to give this precise instruction and instead emphasized at several points in the charge the jury's obligation to consider the evidence regarding the involvement of each defendant individually, and to find, as a precondition to [****16] liability, that each defendant was a knowing participant in the alleged conspiracy.<sup>5</sup>

On the matter of withdrawal from the conspiracy, defendants sought an instruction stating explicitly that evidence of vigorous price competition during the period covered by the indictment could be considered by the jury as indicating abandonment of the charged conspiracy by one or more of the defendants. Substantial evidence on this subject had been [*431] presented by the defendants in the course of the trial. The judge again was unwilling to accept defendants' construction of the applicable law and substituted an instruction specifying that withdrawal had to be established by either affirmative notice to each other member of the conspiracy or by disclosure of the illegal enterprise to law enforcement [****17] officials. The trial judge allowed the defendants to argue their theory of withdrawal to the jury despite his unwillingness to refer to it explicitly in his charge.

C

The jury retired to deliberate early on the evening of Tuesday, July 8, 1975. Supplemental instructions were given in response to questions from the jury on Wednesday and Thursday, and the hours of deliberation were shortened on Friday after the court was informed that some of the jurors were exhausted and not feeling well. On Saturday, after responding to further requests [***866] from the jury, the judge, sua sponte, in open court, used the supplemental instruction approved by the Court of Appeals<sup>6</sup> to remind the jurors of their obligation to continue the deliberations. Essentially the same instruction was given to the jury again on Sunday, after the judge had received a note detailing the jury's inability to reach a unanimous verdict.

<sup>4</sup> Defendants contended that the exchange of price information or verification was necessary to enable them to take advantage of the meeting-competition defense contained in § 2 (b) of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. § 13 (b) (1976 ed.); see Part III, infra.

<sup>5</sup> Relevant portions of the charge dealing with this issue are excerpted in the opinion of the Court of Appeals. 550 F.2d 115, 127 n. 12 (1977); id. at 137-138 (Weis, J., dissenting).

<sup>6</sup> See United States v. Fioravanti, 412 F.2d 407 (CA3), cert. denied sub nom. Panaccione v. United States, 396 U.S. 837 (1969).

[****18] On Monday, the court received yet another note from the jury, this time stating that the foreman wished to "discuss the condition of the Jury" and to seek "further guidance" from the judge. The judge suggested to counsel that he confer privately with the foreman and that a transcript of the meeting be kept but impounded. The judge indicated that if his suggestion was rejected he would simply deny the foreman's request for the meeting. In response to questions from counsel, the judge stated that the purpose of the meeting would be to determine if the jury was in serious physical condition, and [**432] he further indicated that no instructions on the law would be given to the foreman without calling in the jury and instructing them in open court with counsel present.<sup>7</sup> After further discussion, all counsel [**2871] agreed, albeit somewhat reluctantly, to the proposed meeting.

[****19] Most of the discussion between the jury foreman and the judge concerned the deteriorating state of health of the jurors after almost five months on the case followed by five days of intensive deliberations and the existence of personality conflicts among the members of the panel. The foreman also stressed at least twice during the conversation with the judge his belief that the jury was unable to reach a verdict and that further discussion would not eliminate the disagreements which existed. The judge indicated that while he would take into consideration what the foreman had said, he wanted the jury to continue its deliberations. Near the close of the meeting, the following colloquy took place:

"THE COURT. I would like to ask the jurors to continue their deliberations and I will take into consideration what you have told me. That is all I can say."

"MR. RUSSELL. I appreciate it. It is a situation I don't know how to help you get what you are after."

"THE COURT. Oh, I am not after anything."

"MR. RUSSELL. You are after a verdict one way or the other."

"THE COURT. Which way it goes doesn't make any difference to me."<sup>8</sup>

[****20] Shortly thereafter, the foreman returned to the jury room and deliberations continued. The judge then informed counsel, in abbreviated fashion, what had transpired at the meeting with the foreman, and of [***867] his direction that the deliberations [*433] continue.<sup>9</sup> Defense counsel asked to see the transcript of the in camera meeting and moved for a mistrial because of the jury's apparent deadlock. These requests were denied,<sup>10</sup> although the judge indicated that if no verdict were rendered by the following Friday, he would then reconsider the mistrial motions. The following morning, the jury returned guilty verdicts against each of the defendants.

[****21] D

The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit reversed the convictions. 550 F.2d 115 \(1977\). The panel was unanimous in its rejection of the claim of preindictment delay, but divided over the proper disposition of the remaining issues.

---

<sup>7</sup> The judge observed that the only instruction he might give the foreman was "to go back and continue his deliberations." App. 1823.

<sup>8</sup> The complete colloquy between the foreman and the judge is reproduced as an appendix to this opinion.

<sup>9</sup> "Significantly, the judge did not tell counsel about the foreman's opinion that the jury was hopelessly deadlocked; did not indicate that the foreman was under the impression that the court wanted a definite verdict either for the prosecution or the defendants; and did not mention the directive to the jury that it should 'see if [it] can come to a verdict.'" 550 F.2d, at 132 (Adams, J., concurring).

<sup>10</sup> After the conclusion of the trial, the Court of Appeals ordered the transcript of the meeting between the judge and the foreman released to counsel to aid them in preparation of the appeal.

Two judges agreed that the trial judge erred in instructing the jury that an effect on prices resulting from an agreement to exchange price information made out a Sherman Act violation regardless of whether respondents' sole purpose in engaging in such exchanges was to establish a defense to price-discrimination charges. Instead, they regarded such a purpose, if certain conditions were met,<sup>11</sup> as constituting a "controlling [*434] circumstance" which, under United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S. 333 (1969), would excuse what might otherwise constitute an antitrust violation. One judge considered the instructions regarding the purpose and scope of the conspiracy and the [**2872] kinds of conduct necessary to demonstrate a withdrawal therefrom to be infirm, while another concluded that the convictions should be reversed because the trial judge "improperly induced" the jury into reaching a verdict [****22] during the in camera conversation with the foreman.

One judge, in dissent, would have sustained the convictions. He regarded the charge on verification to be consistent with Container Corp., and rejected the notion that the Robinson-Patman Act required the exchange of price information even in the limited circumstances identified by the majority. Neither of the alleged infirmities in the general conspiracy instructions, in his view, afforded any basis for reversal, and he [****23] disagreed with the characterization of the trial judge's conduct as coercing a verdict.

We granted certiorari, 434 U.S. 815 (1977), and we affirm.

[***868] //

We turn first to consider the jury instructions regarding the elements of the price-fixing offense charged in the indictment. Although the trial judge's instructions on the price-fixing issue are not without ambiguity, it seems reasonably clear that he regarded an effect on prices as the crucial element of the charged offense. The jury was instructed that if it found interseller verification had the effect of raising, fixing, maintaining, or stabilizing the price of gypsum board, then such verification could be considered as evidence of an agreement to so affect prices. They were further charged, and it is this point which gives rise to our present concern, that "if the effect of the exchanges of pricing information was to raise, fix, maintain, and stabilize prices, then the parties to them are presumed, as a matter of law, to have intended that result." App. 1722. (Emphasis added.)

[*435] The Government characterizes this charge as entirely consistent with "this Court's long-standing rule that [****24] an agreement among sellers to exchange information on current offering prices violates Section 1 of the Sherman Act if it has either the purpose or the effect of stabilizing prices," Reply Brief for United States 1, and relies primarily on our decision in United States v. Container Corp., supra, a civil case, to support its position. See also American Column & Lumber Co. v. United States, 257 U.S. 377 (1921); United States v. American Linseed Oil Co., 262 U.S. 371 (1923); Maple Flooring Mfg. Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 563 (1925); Cement Mfrs. Protective Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 588 (1925). In this view, the trial court's instructions would not be erroneous, even if interpreted, as they were by the Court of Appeals, to direct the jury to convict if it found that verification had an effect on prices, regardless of the purpose of the respondents. The Court of Appeals rejected the Government's "effects alone" test, holding instead that in certain limited circumstances, a purpose of complying with the Robinson-Patman Act would constitute a controlling circumstance [****25] excusing Sherman Act liability, and hence an instruction allowing the jury to ignore purpose could not be sustained.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A] LEdHN[2A] [↑] [2] LEdHN[3A] [↑] [3A] LEdHN[4A] [↑] [4A] We agree with the Court of Appeals that HN1 [↑] an effect on prices, without more, will not support a criminal conviction under the Sherman Act, but we do not base that conclusion on the existence of any conflict between the requirements of the Robinson-Patman and the Sherman Acts.<sup>12</sup> Rather, we hold that a defendant's state of mind or intent is an element of a

---

<sup>11</sup> "Therefore, appellants were entitled to an instruction that their verification practice would not violate the Sherman Act if the jury found: (1) the appellants engaged in the practice solely to comply with the strictures of Robinson-Patman; (2) they had first resorted to all other reasonable means of corroboration, without success; (3) they had good, independent reason to doubt the buyers' truthfulness; and (4) their communication with competitors was strictly limited to the one price and one buyer at issue." Id., at 126.

<sup>12</sup> See Part III, infra.

criminal antitrust offense which must be established by evidence and inferences drawn therefrom and cannot be taken from the trier of fact through reliance on a legal presumption of wrongful intent from proof of an effect on prices. Cf. Morissette v. United States, 342 U.S. 246, 274-275 \(1952\). [****26] Since the challenged instruction, [**2873] as we read it, had this prohibited [*436] effect, it is disapproved. We are unwilling to construe the Sherman Act as mandating a [***869] regime of strict-liability criminal offenses.<sup>13</sup>

[****27] A

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]We start with the familiar proposition that HN3 "[the] existence of a mens rea is the rule of, rather than the exception to, the principles of Anglo-American criminal jurisprudence." Dennis v. United States, 341 U.S. 494, 500 \(1951\). See also United States v. Freed, 401 U.S. 601, 613 \(1971\) (BRENNAN, J., concurring in judgment); United States v. Balint, 258 U.S. 250, 251-253 \(1922\). In a much-cited passage in Morissette v. United States, supra, at 250-251, Mr. Justice Jackson speaking for the Court observed:

"The contention that an injury can amount to a crime only when inflicted by intention is no provincial or transient notion. It is as universal and persistent in mature systems of law as belief in freedom of the human will and a consequent ability and duty of the normal individual to choose between good and evil. A relation between some mental element and punishment for a harmful act is almost as instinctive as [****28] the child's familiar exculpatory 'But I didn't mean to,' and has afforded the rational basis for a tardy and unfinished substitution of deterrence and reformation in place of retaliation and vengeance as the motivation for public prosecution. Unqualified acceptance of this doctrine by English common [*437] law in the Eighteenth Century was indicated by Blackstone's sweeping statement that to constitute any crime there must first be a 'vicious will.'" (Footnotes omitted.)

Although Blackstone's requisite "vicious will" has been replaced by more sophisticated and less colorful characterizations of the mental state required to support criminality, see ALI, Model Penal Code § 2.02 (Prop. Off. Draft 1962), intent generally remains an indispensable element of a criminal offense. This is as true in a sophisticated criminal antitrust case as in one involving any other criminal offense.

This Court, in keeping with the common-law tradition and with the general injunction that HN4 "ambiguity concerning the ambit of criminal statutes should be resolved in favor of lenity," Rewis v. United States, 401 U.S. 808, 812 \(1971\), [****29] has on a number of occasions read a state-of-mind component into an offense even when the statutory definition did not in terms so provide. See, e. g., Morissette v. United States, supra. Cf. Lambert v. California, 355 U.S. 225 \(1957\). Indeed, the holding in Morissette can be fairly read as establishing, HN5 at least with regard to crimes having their origin in the common law, an interpretative presumption that [***870] mens rea is required. "[Mere] omission . . . of intent [in the statute] will not be construed as eliminating that element from the crimes denounced"; instead Congress will be presumed to have legislated against the background of our traditional legal concepts which render intent a critical factor, and "absence of contrary direction [will] be taken as satisfaction with widely accepted definitions, not as a departure from them." 342 U.S., at 263.

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]While strict-liability offenses are not unknown to the criminal law and do not [****30] invariably offend constitutional requirements, see Shevlin-Carpenter Co. v. Minnesota, 218 U.S. 57 \(1910\), [**2874] the limited circumstances in which Congress has created and this Court has recognized such offenses, see e. g., [*438] United States v. Balint, supra; United States v. Behrman, 258 U.S. 280 \(1922\); United States v. Dotterweich, 320 U.S. 277 \(1943\); United States v. Freed, supra, attest to their generally disfavored status. See generally ALI, Model Penal Code, Comment on § 2.05, p. 140 (Tent. Draft No. 4, 1955); W. LaFave & A. Scott,

<sup>13</sup> [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

Our analysis focuses solely on the elements of a criminal offense under the antitrust laws, and leaves unchanged the general rule that HN2 a civil violation can be established by proof of either an unlawful purpose or an anticompetitive effect. See United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S. 333, 337 \(1969\); id., at 341 (MARSHALL, J., dissenting). Of course, consideration of intent may play an important role in divining the actual nature and effect of the alleged anticompetitive conduct. See Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238 \(1918\).

Criminal Law 222-223 (1972). Certainly far more than the simple omission of the appropriate phrase from the statutory definition is necessary to justify dispensing with an intent requirement. In the context of the Sherman Act, this generally inhospitable attitude to non-mens rea offenses is reinforced by an array of considerations arguing against treating antitrust violations as strict-liability crimes.

B

HN6 [↑] The Sherman Act, unlike [****31] most traditional criminal statutes, does not, in clear and categorical terms, precisely identify the conduct which it proscribes.<sup>14</sup> Both civil remedies and criminal sanctions are authorized with regard to the same generalized definitions of the conduct proscribed -- restraints of trade or commerce and illegal monopolization -- without reference to or mention of intent or state of mind. Nor has judicial elaboration of the Act always yielded the clear and definitive rules of conduct which the statute omits; instead open-ended and fact-specific standards like the "rule of reason" have been applied to broad classes of conduct falling within the purview of the Act's general provisions. See, e. g., Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 60 (1911); *United I*439] States v. Topco Associates*, 405 U.S. 596, 607 (1972); Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49 (1977). Simply put, the Act has not been interpreted as if it were primarily a criminal statute; it has been construed to have a "generality and adaptability comparable to that found to be desirable in constitutional provisions." Appalachian [****32] Coals, [**871] Inc. v. United States, 288 U.S. 344, 359-360 (1933). See generally 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law § 310 (1978).

Although in Nash v. United States, 229 U.S. 373, 376-378 (1913), the Court held that the indeterminacy of the Sherman Act's standards did not constitute a fatal constitutional objection to their criminal enforcement, nevertheless, this [****33] factor has been deemed particularly relevant by those charged with enforcing the Act in accommodating its criminal and remedial sanctions. The 1955 Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws concluded that the criminal provisions of the Act should be reserved for those circumstances where the law was relatively clear and the conduct egregious:

"The Sherman Act, inevitably perhaps, is couched in language broad and general. Modern business patterns moreover are so complex that market effects of proposed conduct are only imprecisely predictable. Thus, it may be difficult for today's businessman to tell in advance whether projected actions will run afoul of the Sherman Act's criminal strictures. With this hazard in mind, we believe that criminal process should be used only where the law is clear and the facts reveal a flagrant offense and plain intent unreasonably to restrain trade." Report of the Attorney General's National Committee [**2875] to Study the Antitrust Laws 349 (1955).

The Antitrust Division of the Justice Department took a similar, though slightly more moderate, position in its enforcement [*440] guidelines issued [****34] contemporaneously with the 1955 Report of the Attorney General's Committee:

"In general, the following types of offenses are prosecuted criminally: (1) price fixing; (2) other violations of the Sherman Act where there is proof of a specific intent to restrain trade or to monopolize; (3) a less easily defined category of cases which might generally be described as involving proof of use of predatory practices (boycotts for example) to accomplish the objective of the combination or conspiracy; (4) the fact that a defendant has previously been convicted of or adjudged to have been, violating the antitrust laws may warrant indictment for a second offense. . . . The Division feels free to seek an indictment in any case where a prospective defendant has

---

<sup>14</sup> Senator Sherman adverted to the open texture of the statutory language in 1890 and accurately forecast its consequence -- a central role for the courts in giving shape and content to the Act's proscriptions.

"I admit that it is difficult to define in legal language the precise line between lawful and unlawful combinations. This must be left for the courts to determine in each particular case. All that we, as lawmakers, can do is to declare general principles, and we can be assured that the courts will apply them so as to carry out the meaning of the law . . ." 21 Cong. Rec. 2460 (1890).

knowledge that practices similar to those in which he is engaging have been held to be in violation of the Sherman Act in a prior civil suit against other persons." <sup>15</sup> Id., at 350.

[****35] While not dispositive of the question now before us, the recommendations of the Attorney General's Committee and the guidelines promulgated by the Justice Department highlight the same basic concerns which are manifested in our general requirement of mens rea in criminal statutes and suggest that these concerns [***872] are at least equally salient in the antitrust context.

LEdHN[7A] [7A] Close attention to the type of conduct regulated by the Sherman Act buttresses this conclusion. HN7 [7B] With certain exceptions for conduct regarded as per se illegal because of its unquestionably anticompetitive effects, see, e. g., United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150 (1940), the behavior [*441] proscribed by the Act is often difficult to distinguish from the gray zone of socially acceptable and economically justifiable business conduct. Indeed, the type of conduct charged in the indictment in this case -- the exchange of price information among competitors -- is illustrative in this regard. <sup>16</sup> [****38] The imposition of criminal liability on a corporate official, or for that matter on [***36] a corporation directly, for engaging in such conduct which only after the fact is determined to violate the statute because of anticompetitive effects, without inquiring into the intent with which it was undertaken, holds out the distinct possibility of overdeterrence; salutary and procompetitive conduct lying close to the borderline of impermissible conduct might be shunned by businessmen who chose to be excessively cautious in the face of uncertainty regarding possible exposure to criminal punishment [**2876] for even a good-faith error of judgment. <sup>17</sup> See 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law 29 [*442] (1978); R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 78 (1978); Kadish, Some Observations On the Use of Criminal Sanctions in Enforcing Economic Regulations, 30 U. Chi. L. Rev. 423, 441-442 (1963). Further, the use of criminal sanctions in such circumstances would be difficult to square with the generally accepted functions of the criminal law. See Hart, The Aims of the Criminal Law, 23 Law & Contemp. Prob. 401, 422-425 (1958); ALI, [***873] Model Penal Code, Comment on § 2.05, p. 140 (Tent. Draft No. 4, 1955). The criminal sanctions would be used, not [***37] to punish conscious and calculated wrongdoing at odds with statutory proscriptions, but instead simply to regulate business practices regardless of the intent with which they were undertaken. While in certain cases we have imputed a regulatory purpose to Congress in choosing to employ criminal sanctions, see, e.

<sup>15</sup> In 1967, the Antitrust Division refined its guidelines to emphasize that criminal prosecutions should only be brought against willful violations of the law. See The President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice, Task Force Report: Crime and Its Impact -- An Assessment 110 (1967).

<sup>16</sup> LEdHN[7B] [7B]

HN8 [7B] The exchange of price data and other information among competitors does not invariably have anticompetitive effects; indeed such practices can in certain circumstances increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive. For this reason, we have held that such exchanges of information do not constitute a per se violation of the Sherman Act. See, e. g., United States v. Citizens & Southern Nat. Bank, 422 U.S. 86, 113 (1975); United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S., at 338 (Fortas, J., concurring). A number of factors including most prominently the structure of the industry involved and the nature of the information exchanged are generally considered in divining the procompetitive or anticompetitive effects of this type of interseller communication. See United States v. Container Corp., supra. See generally L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 265-274 (1977). Exchanges of current price information, of course, have the greatest potential for generating anticompetitive effects and although not per se unlawful have consistently been held to violate the Sherman Act. See American Column & Lumber Co. v. United States, 257 U.S. 377 (1921); United States v. American Linseed Oil Co., 262 U.S. 371 (1923); United States v. Container Corp., supra.

<sup>17</sup> The possibility that those subjected to strict liability will take extraordinary care in their dealings is frequently regarded as one advantage of a rule of strict liability. See J. Hall, General Principles of Criminal Law 344 (2d ed. 1960); W. LaFave & A. Scott, Criminal Law 222-223 (1972). However, where the conduct proscribed is difficult to distinguish from conduct permitted and indeed encouraged, as in the antitrust context, the excessive caution spawned by a regime of strict liability will not necessarily redound to the public's benefit. The antitrust laws differ in this regard from, for example, laws designed to insure that adulterated food will not be sold to consumers. In the latter situation, excessive caution on the part of producers is entirely consistent with the legislative purpose. See United States v. Park, 421 U.S. 658, 671-672 (1975).

g., United States v. Balint, 258 U.S. 250 \(1922\), the availability of a range of nonpenal alternatives to the criminal sanctions of the Sherman Act negates the imputation of any such purpose to Congress in the instant context.<sup>18</sup> See generally Baker, To Indict or Not To Indict: [*443] Prosecutorial Discretion in Sherman Act Enforcement, 63 Cornell L. Rev. 405 (1978).

[****39] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B]For these reasons, we conclude that HN9 the criminal offenses defined by the Sherman Act should be construed as including intent as an element.<sup>19</sup>

[****40] C

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A]Having concluded that intent is a necessary element of a criminal antitrust violation, the task remaining is to treat the [*2877] practical aspects of this requirement.<sup>20</sup> As we have noted, the language of the Act provides minimal assistance in determining what standard of intent is appropriate, and the sparse legislative [*444] history of the criminal provisions is similarly unhelpful. We must therefore turn to more general sources and traditional understandings of the nature of the element of intent in the criminal law. In so doing, we must try to avoid "the [*874] variety, disparity and confusion" of judicial definitions of the "requisite but elusive mental element" of criminal offenses. Morissette v. United States, 342 U.S., at 252.

[****41] [LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9] [LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]The ALI Model Penal Code is one source of guidance upon which the Court has relied to illuminate questions of this type. Cf. Leary v. United States, 395 U.S. 6, 46 n. 93 \(1969\); Turner v. United States, 396 U.S. 398, 416 n. 29 \(1970\). HN11 Recognizing that "mens rea is not a unitary concept," United States v. Freed, 401 U.S., at 613 (BRENNAN, J., concurring in judgment), the Code enumerates four possible levels of intent -- purpose, knowledge, recklessness, and negligence. In dealing with the kinds of business decisions upon which the antitrust laws focus, the concepts of recklessness and negligence have no place. Our question instead is whether a criminal violation of the antitrust laws requires, in addition to proof of anticompetitive effects, a demonstration that the disputed conduct was undertaken with the "conscious object" of <sup>18</sup> Congress has recently increased the criminal penalties for violation of the Sherman Act. Individual violations are now treated as felonies punishable by a fine not to exceed $ 100,000, or by imprisonment for up to three years, or both. Corporate violators are subject to a $ 1 million fine. 15 U. S. C. § 1 \(1976 ed.\). The severity of these sanctions provides further support for our conclusion that the Sherman Act should not be construed as creating strict-liability crimes. Cf. Morissette v. United States, 342 U.S. 246, 256 \(1952\); Sayre, Public Welfare Offenses, 33 Colum. L. Rev. 55, 72 (1933) (strict liability generally inappropriate when offense punishable by imprisonment). Respondents here were not prosecuted under the new penalty provisions since they were indicted prior to the December 21, 1974, effective date for the increased sanctions.

<sup>19</sup> An accommodation of the civil and criminal provisions of the Act similar to that which we approve here was suggested by Senator Sherman in response to Senator George's argument during floor debate that the Act was primarily a penal statute to be construed narrowly in accord with traditional maxims:

"The first section, being a remedial statute, would be construed liberally with a view to promote its object. It defines a civil remedy, and the courts will construe it liberally . . . .

"In providing a remedy the intention of the combination is immaterial. . . .

"The third section is a criminal statute, which would be construed strictly and is difficult to be enforced. In the present state of the law it is impossible to describe, in precise language, the nature and limits of the offense in terms specific enough for an indictment." 21 Cong. Rec. 2456 (1890).

Although the bill being debated by Senators George and Sherman differed in form from the Act as ultimately passed, the colloquy between them indicates that Congress was fully aware of the traditional distinctions between the elements of civil and criminal offenses and apparently did not intend to do away with them in the Act.

<sup>20</sup> [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

HN10 In a conspiracy, two different types of intent are generally required -- the basic intent to agree, which is necessary to establish the existence of the conspiracy, and the more traditional intent to effectuate the object of the conspiracy. See W. LaFave & A. Scott, Criminal Law 464-465 (1972). Our discussion here focuses only on the second type of intent.

producing such effects, or whether [****42] it is sufficient that the conduct is shown to have been undertaken with knowledge that the proscribed effects would most likely follow. While the difference between these formulations is a narrow one, see ALI, Model Penal Code, Comment on § 2.02, p. 125 (Tent. Draft No. 4, 1955), we conclude that action undertaken with knowledge of its probable consequences and having the requisite anticompetitive effects can be a sufficient predicate for a finding of criminal liability under the antitrust laws.<sup>21</sup>

[****43] [*445] Several considerations fortify this conclusion. The element of intent in the criminal law has traditionally been viewed as a bifurcated concept embracing either the specific requirement of purpose or the more general one of knowledge or awareness.

"[It] is HN12↑ now generally accepted that a person who acts (or omits to act) intends a result of his act (or omission) under two quite different circumstances: (1) when he consciously desires that result, whatever the likelihood of that result happening from his conduct; and (2) when he knows that the result is practically certain to follow from his conduct, whatever his desire may be as to that result." W. LaFave & A. Scott, Criminal Law 196 (1972).

See also G. Williams, Criminal Law: The General Part §§ 16, 18 (2d ed. 1961); Cook, Act, Intention, and Motive in the Criminal Law, 26 Yale L. J. 645, 653-658 (1917); Perkins, A Rationale of Mens Rea, 52 Harv. L. Rev. 905, 910-911 (1939). Generally this limited distinction between knowledge and purpose has not been considered important since [****44] "there is good reason for imposing liability whether the defendant desired or [\[\*\*\*875\]](#) merely knew of the practical certainty of the results." LaFave & Scott, supra, at 197. See also ALI, Model Penal Code, Comment [\[\*\*2878\]](#) on § 2.02, p. 125 (Tent. Draft No. 4, 1955). In either circumstance, the defendants are consciously behaving in a way the law prohibits, and such conduct is a fitting object of criminal punishment. See 1 Working Papers of the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws 124 (1970).

Nothing in our analysis of the Sherman Act persuades us that this general understanding of intent should not be applied to criminal antitrust violations such as charged here. HN13↑ The business behavior which is likely to give rise to criminal antitrust charges is conscious behavior normally undertaken [*446] only after a full consideration of the desired results and a weighing of the costs, benefits, and risks. A requirement of proof not only of this knowledge of likely effects, but also of a conscious desire to bring them to fruition or to violate the law would [****45] seem, particularly in such a context, both unnecessarily cumulative and unduly burdensome. Where carefully planned and calculated conduct is being scrutinized in the context of a criminal prosecution, the perpetrator's knowledge of the anticipated consequences is a sufficient predicate for a finding of criminal intent.

D

LEdHN1B↑ [1B] When viewed in terms of this standard, the jury instructions on the price-fixing charge cannot be sustained. HN14↑ "A conclusive presumption [of intent] which testimony could not overthrow would effectively eliminate intent as an ingredient of the offense." Morissette, supra, at 275. The challenged jury instruction, as we read it, had precisely this effect; the jury was told that the requisite intent followed, as a matter of law, from a finding that the exchange of price information had an impact on prices. Although an effect on prices may well support an inference that the defendant had knowledge of the probability of such a consequence at the time he acted, the jury [****46] must remain free to consider additional evidence before accepting or rejecting the inference. Therefore, although it would be correct to instruct the jury that it may infer intent from an effect on prices, ultimately

---

<sup>21</sup> In so holding, we do not mean to suggest that conduct undertaken with the purpose of producing anticompetitive effects would not also support criminal liability, even if such effects did not come to pass. Cf. United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 105 \(1948\). We hold only that this elevated standard of intent need not be established in cases where anticompetitive effects have been demonstrated; instead, proof that the defendant's conduct was undertaken with knowledge of its probable consequences will satisfy the Government's burden.

the decision on the issue of intent must be left to the trier of fact alone. The instruction given invaded this factfinding function.<sup>22</sup>

[****47] [*447] [***876] [**2879] III

LEdHN[11A] [11A]Our construction of the Sherman Act to require proof of intent as an element of a criminal antitrust violation leaves [*448] unresolved the question upon which the Court of Appeals focused, whether verification of price concessions with competitors for the sole purpose of taking advantage of the § 2 (b) meeting-competition defense should be treated as a "controlling circumstance" precluding liability under § 1 of the Sherman Act. We now turn to that question.<sup>23</sup>

[****48] A

In Cement Mfrs. Protective Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 588 (1925), the Court held exempt from Sherman Act § 1 liability an exchange of price information among competitors because the exchange of information was necessary to protect the cement manufacturers from fraudulent behavior by contractors.<sup>24</sup> Over 40 years later, in United <sup>22</sup> Respondents contend that "prior to the trial of this case, no court had ever held that a mere exchange of information which had a stabilizing effect on prices violated the Sherman Act, regardless of the purpose for the exchange." Joint Brief for Respondents 50. Retroactive application of "this judicially expanded definition of the crime" would, the argument continues, contravene the "principles of fair notice embodied in the Due Process Clause." Ibid. While we have rejected on other grounds the "effects only" test in the context of criminal proceedings, we do not agree with respondents that the prior case law dealing with the exchange of price information required proof of a purpose to restrain competition in order to make out a Sherman Act violation.

---

Certainly our decision in United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S. 333 (1969), is fairly read as indicating that proof of an anticompetitive effect is a sufficient predicate for liability. In that case, liability followed from proof that "the exchange of price information has had an anticompetitive effect in the industry," id., at 337, and no suggestion was made that proof of a purpose to restrain trade or competition was also required. Thus, at least in the post-Container period, which comprises almost the entire time period at issue here, respondents' claimed lack of notice cannot be credited.

Nor are the prior cases treating exchanges of information among competitors more favorable to respondents' position. See American Column & Lumber Co. v. United States, 257 U.S., at 400 ("[Any] concerted action . . . to cause, or which in fact does cause, . . . restraint of competition . . . is unlawful"); United States v. American Linseed Oil Co., 262 U.S. 371, 389 (1923) ("[A] necessary tendency . . . to suppress competition . . . [is] unlawful"); Maple Flooring Mfrs. Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 563, 585 (1925) (purpose to restrain trade or conduct which "had resulted, or would necessarily result, in tending arbitrarily to lessen production or increase prices" sufficient for liability). While in Cement Mfrs. Protective Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 588 (1925), an exception from Sherman Act liability was recognized for conduct intended to prevent fraud, we do not read that case as repudiating the rule set out in prior cases; instead Cement highlighted a narrow limitation on the application of the general rule that either purpose or effect will support liability.

We do not understand respondents to be making the related claim that they relied on the several lower court cases exempting interseller verification for purposes of complying with the Robinson-Patman Act from scrutiny under the Sherman Act, see infra, at 452-453, and thus should not be penalized if those decisions turn out to have been incorrect. Whatever the merits of such an argument, respondents would appear unable to invoke it since the initiation of their verification practices antedated those lower court decisions.

<sup>23</sup> This question was not resolved by the prior discussion because HN15 [a purpose of complying with the Robinson-Patman Act by exchanging price information is not inconsistent with knowledge that such exchanges of information will have the probable effect of fixing or stabilizing prices. Since we hold knowledge of the probable consequences of conduct to be the requisite mental state in a criminal prosecution like the instant one where an effect on prices is also alleged, a defendant's purpose in engaging in the proscribed conduct will not insulate him from liability unless it is deemed of sufficient merit to justify a general exception to the Sherman Act's proscriptions. Cf. Cement Mfrs. Protective Assn. v. United States, supra.

<sup>24</sup> Respondents maintain that their verification practices not only were for the purpose of complying with the Robinson-Patman Act, but also served to protect them from fraud on the part of their customers, and thus fall squarely within the Cement exception. The Court of Appeals rejected this claim, 550 F.2d, at 123 n. 9, and we find no reason to upset this determination.

States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S., at 335, Mr. Justice Douglas characterized the Cement holding in the following terms:

"While there was present here, as in Cement Mfrs. Protective Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 588, an exchange of prices to specific [***877] customers, there was absent the controlling [*449] circumstance, viz., that cement manufacturers, to protect themselves from delivering to contractors more cement than was needed for a specific job and thus receiving a lower price, exchanged price information as a means of protecting their legal rights from fraudulent inducements to deliver more cement than needed for a specific job."

The use of the phrase "controlling circumstance" in Container Corp. implied that the exception from Sherman [****49] Act liability recognized in Cement Mfrs. was not necessarily limited to the special circumstances of that case, although the exact scope of the exception remained largely undefined.

Since Container Corp., several courts have read the controlling-circumstance exception as encompassing exchanges of price information when undertaken for the purpose of compliance with § 2 (b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. See, e. g., Belliston v. Texaco, Inc., 455 F.2d 175, 181-182 (CA10 1972); Wall Products Co. v. National Gypsum Co., 326 F.Supp. 295, 312-315 (ND Cal. 1971). [****50] <sup>25</sup> [****51] The Court of Appeals in the instant case essentially adopted the same tack -- albeit [**2880] with some additional limitations <sup>26</sup> -- finding such a step necessary to eliminate a perceived conflict between the Sherman Act's proscriptions regarding the exchange of price information among competitors and the claimed necessity of such exchanges to perfect the § 2 (b) defense. The Government challenges that resolution on two grounds: first, that there is no general controlling-circumstance exception to the Sherman Act, and second, that, in any event, there is no conflict between the two antitrust statutes which would require the prohibitions of the Sherman Act to [*450] be tempered even to the degree mandated by the Court of Appeals' carefully circumscribed holding in this case. We agree generally with the Government as to the proper accommodation of the Sherman and Robinson-Patman Acts, and therefore find it unnecessary to address the more general question going to the existence and proper scope of the so-called controlling-circumstance exception.

B

HN16 [↑] Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13 (a) (1976 ed.), embodies a general prohibition of price discrimination between buyers when an injury to competition is the consequence. The primary exception to the § 2 (a) bar is the meeting-competition defense which is incorporated as a proviso to the burden-of-proof requirements set out in § 2 (b):

*"Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services [***878] or facilities furnished by a competitor."*

---

<sup>25</sup> Although the Belliston court did not specifically refer to Cement's "controlling circumstance" exception, it adopted the rationale of the Wall Products case where that exception was explicitly relied upon to immunize verification from the proscriptions of the Sherman Act.

<sup>26</sup> See n. 11, supra.

The role of the § 2 (b) proviso in tempering the § 2 (a) prohibition of price discrimination was highlighted in Standard Oil Co. v. FTC, 340 U.S. 231 \(1951\). There [****52] we recognized the potential tension between the rationales underlying the Sherman and Robinson-Patman Acts and sought to effect a partial accommodation by construing § 2 (b) to provide an absolute defense to liability for price discrimination.

"We need not now reconcile, in its entirety, the economic theory which underlies the Robinson-Patman Act with that of the Sherman and Clayton Acts. It is enough to say that Congress did not seek by the Robinson-Patman Act either to abolish competition or so radically to curtail it that a seller would have no substantial right of self-defense [*451] against a price raid by a competitor. For example, if a large customer requests his seller to meet a temptingly lower price offered to him by one of his seller's competitors, the seller may well find it essential, as a matter of business survival, to meet that price rather than to lose the customer. . . . There is . . . plain language and established practice which permits a seller, through § 2 (b), to retain a customer by realistically meeting in good faith the price offered to that customer, without necessarily changing the seller's price to its other customers." 340 U.S., at 249-250. [****53]

LEdHN[12]↑ [12]In FTC v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U.S. 746 \(1945\), the Court provided the first and still the most complete explanation of HN17↑ the kind of showing which a seller must make in order to satisfy the good-faith requirement of the § 2 (b) defense:

"Section 2 (b) does not require the seller to justify price discriminations by showing that in fact they met a competitor's price. But it does place on the seller the burden of showing that the price was made in good faith to meet a competitor's. . . . We agree with the Commission that the statute at least requires the seller, who has knowingly discriminated in price, to show the existence of [**2881] facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor." Id., at 759-760.

Application of these standards to the facts in Staley led to the conclusion that the § 2 (b) defense had not been made out. The record [****54] revealed that the lower price had been based simply on reports of salesmen, brokers, or purchasers with no efforts having been made by the seller "to investigate or verify" the reports or the character and reliability of the informants. 324 U.S., at 758. Similarly, in Corn Products Co. v. FTC, 324 U.S. 726 \(1945\), decided the same day, the § 2 (b) defense was not allowed because "[the] only evidence said to [*452] rebut the prima facie case . . . of the price discriminations was given by witnesses who had no personal knowledge of the transactions, and was limited to statements of each witness's assumption or conclusion that the price discriminations [***879] were justified by competition." 324 U.S., at 741.

Staley's "investigate or verify" language coupled with Corn Products' focus on "personal knowledge of the transactions" have apparently suggested to a number of courts that, at least in certain circumstances, direct verification of discounts between competitors may be necessary to meet the burden-of-proof requirements of the § 2 (b) defense. See Gray v. Shell Oil Co., 469 F.2d 742, 746-747 \(CA9 1972\); [****55] Belliston v. Texaco, Inc., 455 F.2d, at 181-182; Webster v. Sinclair Refining Co., 338 F.Supp. 248, 251-252 \(SD Ala. 1971\); Wall Products Co. v. National Gypsum Co., 326 F.Supp., at 312-315; Di-Wall, Inc. v. Fibreboard Corp., 1970 Trade Cases para. 73,155 (ND Cal. 1970). In none of these cases were the courts called upon to address directly the question of whether interseller verification was actually required to satisfy § 2 (b)'s good-faith standard; instead, the issue was presented only obliquely in the form of a defense to the alleged Sherman Act violation. The Belliston and Webster cases accepted the defense despite the absence of evidence that alternative means of corroborating the claimed price reduction had been exhausted, while the Gray and Wall Products courts found the communication between sellers permissible only after other alternatives had been exhausted.<sup>27</sup> The Court of Appeals critically and perceptively analyzed these cases and concluded that only a very narrow exception to Sherman Act liability should be recognized; that exception would cover the relatively [****56] few situations where the veracity of the buyer seeking the matching discount was legitimately in doubt, other [*453] reasonable means of corroboration were unavailable to the seller, and the interseller communication was for the sole purpose of complying with the Robinson-Patman Act. Despite the court's efforts to circumscribe the scope of the exception it was constrained to recognize, we find its analysis unacceptable.

C

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [↑] [13] [LEdHN\[14\]](#) [↑] [14] HN18 [↑] A good-faith belief, rather than absolute certainty, that a price concession is being offered to meet an equally [****57] low price offered by a competitor is sufficient to satisfy the § 2 (b) defense. While casual reliance on uncorroborated reports of buyers or sales representatives without further investigation may not, as we noted earlier, be sufficient to make the requisite showing of good faith, nothing in the language of § 2 (b) or the gloss on that language in Staley and Corn Products indicates that direct discussions of price between competitors are required. Nor has any court, so far as we are aware, ever imposed such a requirement.<sup>28</sup> See Rowe, Pricing and the [***880] [**2882] Robinson-Patman Act, 41 A. B. A. Antitrust L. J. 98, 100-102 (1971); ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments 145 n. 241 (1975). On the contrary, the § 2 (b) defense has been successfully invoked in the absence of interseller verification on numerous occasions, see, e. g., International Air Industries, Inc. v. American Excelsior Co., 517 F.2d 714, 725-726 (CA5 1975); Cadigan v. Texaco, Inc., [*454] 492 F.2d 383 (CA9 1974); Jones v. Borden Co., 430 F.2d 568, 572-574 (CA5 1970); National Dairy Products Corp. [****58] v. FTC, 395 F.2d 517, 523 (CA7 1968). And in Kroger Co. v. FTC, 438 F.2d 1372, 1376-1377 (CA6 1971), aff'g Beatrice Foods Co., 76 F. T. C. 719 (1969), the defense was recognized despite the fact that the price concession was ultimately found to have undercut that of the competition and thus technically to have fallen outside the "meet not beat" strictures of the defense. As these cases indicate, and as the Federal Trade Commission observed, it is the concept of good faith which lies at the core of the meeting-competition defense, and good faith

"is a flexible and pragmatic, not technical or doctrinaire, concept. . . . Rigid rules and inflexible absolutes are especially inappropriate in dealing with the § 2 (b) defense; the facts and circumstances of the particular case, not abstract theories or remote conjectures, should govern its interpretation and application." Continental Baking Co., 63 F. T. C. 2071, 2163 (1963).

[****59] [LEdHN\[15\]](#) [↑] [15] The so-called problem of the untruthful buyer which concerned the Court of Appeals does not in our view call for a different approach to the § 2 (b) defense. HN19 [↑] The good-faith standard remains the benchmark against which the seller's conduct is to be evaluated, and we agree with the Government and the FTC that this standard can be satisfied by efforts falling short of interseller verification in most circumstances where the seller has only vague, generalized doubts about the reliability of its commercial adversary -- the buyer.<sup>29</sup> [****61] Given the [*455] fact-specific nature of the inquiry, it is difficult to predict all the factors the FTC or a court would consider in appraising a seller's good faith in matching a competing offer in these circumstances. Certainly, evidence that a seller had received reports of similar discounts from other customers, cf. Jones v. Borden Co., supra, at 572-573; or was threatened with a termination of purchases if the discount were not met, cf. International [****60] Air Industries, Inc. v. American Excelsior Co., supra, at 726; Cadigan v. Texaco, I***881 Inc., supra, at 386, would be relevant in this regard. Efforts to corroborate the reported discount by seeking documentary evidence or by appraising its reasonableness in terms of available market data would also be probative as would the seller's past experience with the particular buyer in question.<sup>30</sup>

<sup>27</sup> The decision in Di-Wall is ambiguous on the question of whether alternatives short of verification were exhausted prior to the exchange of price information. 1970 Trade Cases, para. 73,155, p. 88,557.

<sup>28</sup> In Viviano Macaroni Co. v. FTC, 411 F.2d 255 (CA3 1969), the § 2 (b) defense was not recognized because the seller had relied solely on the report of its customer regarding other competitive offers without undertaking any investigation to corroborate the offer or the reliability of the customer. The Court of Appeals in the instant case read Viviano as at least suggesting, if not requiring, interseller verification when the veracity of the buyer was in doubt. As we read that case, however, it simply reaffirms the teaching of Staley, and does not compel the further conclusion that only interseller verification will satisfy the good-faith requirement, even in the particular circumstances identified by the Court of Appeals. See 550 F.2d, at 135 (Weis, J., dissenting).

[****62] There remains the possibility that in a limited number of situations a seller may [**2883] have substantial reasons to doubt the accuracy of reports of a competing offer and may be unable to corroborate such reports in any of the generally accepted ways. Thus the defense may be rendered unavailable since unanswered [*456] questions about the reliability of a buyer's representations may well be inconsistent with a good-faith belief that a competing offer had in fact been made.<sup>31</sup> As an abstract proposition, resort to interseller verification as a means of checking the buyer's reliability seems a possible solution to the seller's plight, but careful examination reveals serious problems with the practice.

[****63] Both economic theory and common human experience suggest that interseller verification -- if undertaken on an isolated and infrequent basis with no provision for reciprocity or cooperation -- will not serve its putative function of corroborating the representations of unreliable buyers regarding the existence of competing offers. Price concessions by oligopolists generally yield competitive advantages only if secrecy can be maintained; when the terms of the concession are made publicly known, other competitors are likely to follow and any advantage to the initiator is lost in the process. See generally F. Scherer, Industrial Market Structure and Economic Performance 208-209, 449 (1970); P. Areeda, Antitrust Analysis 230-231 (2d ed. 1974); Note, Meeting Competition Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 90 Harv. L. Rev. 1476, 1480-1481 (1977). See also United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S., at 337. Thus, if one seller offers a price concession for the purpose of winning over one of his competitor's customers, it is unlikely that the same seller will freely inform its competitor of the details of the concession so that it can be promptly matched and [****64] diffused. Instead, such a seller would appear to have at least as great an incentive to misrepresent the existence [*457] or size [****882] of the discount as would the buyer who received it. Thus verification, if undertaken on a one-shot basis for the sole purpose of complying with the § 2 (b) defense, does not hold out much promise as a means of shoring up buyers' representations.

The other variety of interseller verification is, like the conduct charged in the instant case, undertaken pursuant to an agreement, either tacit or express, providing for reciprocity among competitors in the exchange of price <sup>29</sup> "Although a seller may take advantage of the meeting competition defense only if it has a commercially reasonable belief that its price concession is necessary to meet an equally low price of a competitor, a seller may acquire this belief, and hence perfect its defense, by doing everything reasonably feasible -- short of violating some other statute, such as the Sherman Act -- to determine the veracity of a customer's statement that he has been offered a lower price. If, after making reasonable, lawful, inquiries, the seller cannot ascertain that the buyer is lying, the seller is entitled to make the sale. . . . There is no need for a seller to discuss price with his competitors to take advantage of the meeting competition defense." (Citations omitted.) Brief for United States 86-87, and n. 78. See also App. to Pet. for Cert. 97a-99a.

<sup>30</sup> It may also turn out that sustained enforcement of § 2 (f) HN20 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, which imposes liability on buyers for inducing illegal price discounts, will serve to bolster the credibility of buyers' representations and render reliance thereon by sellers a more reasonable and secure predicate for a finding of good faith under § 2 (b). See generally Note, Meeting Competition Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 90 Harv. L. Rev. 1476, 1495-1496 (1977). In both Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. FTC, 557 F.2d 971 (CA2 1977), and Kroger v. FTC, 438 F.2d 1372 (CA6 1971), buyers have been held liable under § 2 (f) despite the fact that the sellers were either found not to have violated the Robinson-Patman Act (Kroger) or were not charged with such a violation (A&P). Certiorari has been granted in Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. to consider the permissibility of enforcing the Robinson-Patman Act in this manner. 435 U.S. 922 (1978).

<sup>31</sup> We need not and do not decide that in all such circumstances the defense would be unavailable. The case-by-case interpretation and elaboration of the § 2 (b) defense is properly left to the other federal courts and the FTC in the context of concrete fact situations. We note also that our conclusions regarding the proper interpretation of § 2 (f), see n. 30, supra, may well affect subsequent application of the § 2 (b) defense.

information. Such an agreement would make little economic sense, in our view, if its sole purpose were to guarantee all participants the opportunity to match the secret price concessions of other participants under § 2 (b). For in such circumstances, each seller would know that his price concession could not be kept from his competitors and no seller participating in the information-exchange arrangement would, therefore, have any incentive for deviating from the prevailing price level in the industry. See United States v. Container Corp., supra, at 336-337. [****65] Regardless of its putative purpose, the most likely consequence of any such agreement to exchange price information would be the stabilization of industry prices. See Scherer, supra, at 449; Note, Antitrust Liability for an Exchange of Price Information -- What Happened to Container Corp., 63 Va. L. Rev. 639, 666 [**2884] (1977). Instead of facilitating use of the § 2 (b) defense, such an agreement would have the effect of eliminating the very price concessions which provide the main element of competition in oligopolistic industries and the primary occasion for resort to the meeting-competition defense.

Especially in oligopolistic industries such as the gypsum board industry, the exchange of price information among competitors carries with it the added potential for the development of concerted price-fixing arrangements which lie at the core of the Sherman Act's prohibitions. The Department of Justice's 1977 Report on the Robinson-Patman Act focused on the growing use of the Act as a cover for price fixing; former [*458] Antitrust Division Assistant Attorney General Kauper discussed the mechanics of the process:

"And thus you find in some industries [****66] relatively extensive exchanges of price information for the purpose, at least the stated purpose, of complying with the Robinson-Patman Act . . . .

"Now, the mere exchange of price information itself may tend to stabilize prices. But I think it is also relatively common that once that exchange process begins, certain understandings go along with it -- that we will exchange prices, but it will be understood, for example, you will not undercut my prices.

"And from there it is a rather easy step into a full-fledged price-fixing agreement. I think we have seen that from time to time, and I suspect we will continue to see it as long as there continues to be a need to justify particular price discriminations in the terms of the Robinson-Patman Act." United States Department of Justice, Report on the Robinson-Patman Act 58-61 (1977).

LEdHN[11B] [↑] [11B] We are left, therefore, on the one hand, with doubts about both the need for and the efficacy of interseller verification as a means of facilitating [***883] compliance with § 2 (b), and, on the other, with recognition of the tendency for price discussions between competitors [****67] to contribute to the stability of oligopolistic prices and open the way for the growth of prohibited anticompetitive activity. To recognize even a limited "controlling circumstance" exception for interseller verification in such circumstances would be to remove from scrutiny under the Sherman Act conduct falling near its core with no assurance, and indeed with serious doubts, that competing antitrust policies would be served thereby. In Automatic Canteen Co. v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61, 74 (1953), the Court suggested that as a general rule the Robinson-Patman Act should be construed so as to insure its coherence with "the broader antitrust policies that have been laid down by Congress"; that observation [*459] buttresses our conclusion that exchanges of price information -- even when putatively for purposes of Robinson-Patman Act compliance -- must remain subject to close scrutiny under the Sherman Act.<sup>32</sup>

[****68] IV

<sup>32</sup> That the § 2 (b) defense may not be available in every situation where a competing offer has in fact been made is not, in our view, a meaningful objection to our holding. HN21 [↑] The good-faith requirement of the § 2 (b) defense implicitly suggests a somewhat imperfect matching between competing offers actually made and those allowed to be met. Unless this requirement is to be abandoned, it seems clear that inadequate information will, in a limited number of cases, deny the defense to some who, if all the facts had been known, would have been entitled to invoke it. For reasons already discussed, interseller verification does not provide a satisfactory solution to this seemingly inevitable problem of inadequate information. Moreover, § 2 (b) affords only a defense to liability and not an affirmative right under the Act. While sellers are, of course, entitled to take advantage of the defense when they can satisfy its requirements, efforts to increase its availability at the expense of broader, affirmative antitrust policies must be rejected.

LEdHN[16A] [16A] One judge of the Court of Appeals was of the view that reversal was required not only because of infirmities in the antitrust instruction, but also because the trial judge had "[encroached] on [the] [jury's] authority" and had foreclosed "a possible 'no verdict' [**2885] outcome." 550 F.2d, at 134 (Adams, J., concurring). Our own review of the record and the circumstances surrounding the deliberations of the jury, and in particular the ex parte communications between the judge and jury foreman, leads us to the same conclusion.

After hearing a mass of testimony for nearly five months, the jurors were sequestered when deliberations commenced. On the second and third days of deliberations, supplemental instructions were given in response to jury questions; on the fourth day, the hours of deliberations were shortened because of reported nervous tension among the jurors; on the fifth day, the judge sua sponte delivered what amounted to a modified [*460] Allen charge<sup>33</sup> [****70] in the course of providing further answers to questions from the jury; and on the sixth [****69] day, the modified Allen charge was repeated, this time in response to a note from the jury that it was unable to reach a verdict. Against this [***884] background of internal pressures and apparent disagreements and confusion among the jurors, the jury foreman, on the morning of the seventh day of deliberations, requested a meeting with the judge "to discuss the condition of the Jury and further guidance." The District Judge suggested that he meet alone with the jury foreman and counsel acquiesced. The transcript of the meeting, which was initially impounded but released for purposes of the appeal, contained several references by the foreman to the jury's deadlock, as well as an exchange suggesting the strong likelihood that the foreman carried away from the meeting the impression that the judge wanted a verdict "one way or the other." The judge's report to counsel summarizing the discussion made no reference to either of these matters.<sup>34</sup>

LEdHN[17] [17] We find this sequence of events disturbing for a number of reasons. Any ex parte meeting or communication between the judge and the foreman of a deliberating jury is pregnant with possibilities for error. This record amply demonstrates that even an experienced trial judge cannot be certain to avoid all the pitfalls inherent in such an enterprise. First, it is difficult to contain, much less to anticipate, the direction the conversation will take at such a meeting. Unexpected questions or comments can generate unintended and misleading impressions of the judge's subjective personal views which have no place in his instruction to the jury -- all the more so when counsel are not present to challenge the statements. Second, [*461] any occasion which leads to communication with the whole jury panel through one juror inevitably risks innocent misstatements of the law and misinterpretations despite the undisputed good faith of the participants. Here, there developed a set of circumstances [****71] in which it can fairly be assumed that the foreman undertook to restate to his fellow jurors what he understood the judge to have implied regarding the resolution of the case in a definite verdict "one way or the other." There is, of course, no way to determine precisely what the foreman said when he returned to the jury room.

Finally, the absence of counsel from the meeting and the unavailability of a transcript or full report of the meeting aggravate the problems of having one juror serve as a conduit for communicating instructions to the whole panel. While all counsel acquiesced to the judge's ex parte conference with the jury foreman, they did so on the express understanding that the judge merely intended -- as no doubt at the time he did -- to receive from the foreman a report on the state of affairs in the jury room and the prospects for a verdict. Certainly none of the parties waived the right to a full and accurate report of what transpired at the meeting nor did they agree that the judge [**2886] was to repeat the instructions as to his understandable reluctance to accept the jury's inability to reach a verdict. Because neither counsel received a full report from [****72] the judge, they were not aware of the scope of the conversation between the foreman and the judge, of the judge's statement that the jury should continue to deliberate in order to reach a verdict, or of the real risk that the foreman's impression was that a verdict [***885] "one way or the other" was required. Counsel were thus denied any opportunity to clear up the confusion regarding the judge's direction to the foreman, which could readily have been accomplished by requesting that the whole jury

<sup>33</sup> Allen v. United States, 164 U.S. 492 (1896). An injunction to the jury "to deliberate with a view toward reaching an agreement if you can, without violence, to individual judgment," was also included in the judge's original instruction prior to the commencement of deliberations.

<sup>34</sup> See n. 9, supra.

438 U.S. 422, *461; 98 S. Ct. 2864, **2886; 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, ***885; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 131, ****72

be called into the courtroom for a clarifying instruction. See Rogers v. United States, 422 U.S. 35, 38 (1975); Filippon v. Albion Vein Slate Co., 250 U.S. 76, 81 (1919). [*462] Thus, it is not simply the action of the judge in having the private meeting with the jury foreman, standing alone -- undesirable as that procedure is -- which constitutes the error; rather, it is the fact that the ex parte discussion was inadvertently allowed to drift into what amounted to a supplemental instruction to the foreman relating to the jury's obligation to return a verdict, coupled with the fact that counsel were denied any chance to correct [****73] whatever mistaken impression the foreman might have taken from this conversation, that we find most troubling.

While it is, of course, impossible to gauge what part the disputed meeting played in the jury's action of returning a verdict the following morning, this swift resolution of the issues in the face of positive prior indications of hopeless deadlock, at the very least, gives rise to serious questions in this regard. Cf. Rogers v. United States, supra, at 40-41. In Jenkins v. United States, 380 U.S. 445 (1965), we held an instruction directing the jury that it had to reach a verdict was reversible error; the logic of Jenkins cannot be said to be inapposite here, given the peculiar circumstances in which discussions between the judge and the foreman took place.

LEdHN[16B] [16B] We are persuaded that the Court of Appeals would have been justified in reversing the convictions solely because of the risk that the foreman believed the court was insisting on a dispositive verdict; a belief which we must assume was promptly conveyed to the jurors. The unintended [****74] direction of the colloquy between the judge and the jury foreman illustrates the hazards of ex parte communications with a deliberating jury or any of its members.

V

LEdHN[18] [18] Respondents also challenged in the Court of Appeals the jury instructions regarding participation in the conspiracy and withdrawal therefrom; one judge on the panel concluded that these instructions were infirm. We agree with the Government [*463] that the charge concerning participation in the conspiracy, while perhaps not as clear as it might have been, was sufficient. The jury was informed repeatedly that only a single conspiracy was alleged and that liability could only be predicated on the knowing involvement of each defendant, considered individually, in the conspiracy charged. As given,<sup>35</sup> the instruction was substantially in accord with those generally given in similar antitrust cases. See ABA Antitrust Section, Jury Instructions in Criminal Antitrust Cases 1964-1976, chs. 10, 28 (1978); 2 E. Devitt & C. Blackmar, Federal Jury Practice and Instructions §§ 55.09, 55.17 (3d ed., 1977). And in any event, the disputed [****75] instruction [***886] differed in only minor and immaterial respects from the instruction requested by respondents.<sup>36</sup>

[**2887] LEdHN[19] [19] [****76] We have more difficulty with the instruction on withdrawal from the conspiracy. The jury was charged in the following terms:

"In order to find that a defendant abandoned or withdrew from a conspiracy prior to December 27, 1968, you must find, from the evidence, that he or it took some affirmative action to disavow or defeat its purpose. Mere inaction would not be enough to demonstrate abandonment. To withdraw, a defendant either must have affirmatively notified each other member of the conspiracy [*464] he will no longer participate in the undertaking so they understand they can no longer expect his participation or acquiescence, or he must make disclosures of the illegal scheme to law enforcement officials.

<sup>35</sup> See n. 5, supra.

<sup>36</sup> The requested charge was as follows:

"Because the gist of the offense charged is a continuing agreement to raise, fix, maintain and stabilize prices of gypsum products, it is essential for you to determine what kind of agreement or understanding, if any, existed as to each defendant. Each defendant is chargeable with the acts of his or its fellow defendants and alleged co-conspirators only if the acts are done in furtherance of the joint venture as he or it understood it. No defendant is to be held responsible for what some of the alleged conspirators, unknown to the rest, do beyond the reasonable intendment of the common agreement or understanding, if any, to which you may find him or it a party." 550 F.2d, at 128-129, n. 13 (emphasis omitted).

"Thus, once a defendant is shown to have joined a conspiracy, in order for you to find he abandoned the conspiracy, the evidence must show that the defendant took some definite, decisive step, indicating a complete disassociation from the unlawful enterprise." (Emphasis added).

Respondents had requested a more expansive instruction which would have specifically allowed the jury to consider a "[resumption] of competitive behavior, such as intensified price [****77] cutting or price wars," as affirmative action showing a withdrawal from the price-fixing enterprise. While the judge allowed this theory to be argued to the jury, he declined to include it in his instructions. The Government now seeks to defend the charge as given on the ground that the first sentence was sufficiently broad to satisfy respondents' concerns, and the third sentence, to which respondents principally object, did not in any meaningful way detract from the generality of the first.

We cannot agree. The charge, fairly read, limited the jury's consideration to only two circumscribed and arguably impractical methods of demonstrating withdrawal from the conspiracy.<sup>37</sup> Nothing that we have been able to find in the case law suggests, much less commands, that such confining blinders be placed on the jury's freedom to consider evidence regarding the continuing participation of alleged conspirators in the charged conspiracy. HN22 Affirmative acts inconsistent with the object of the conspiracy and communicated in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators have generally [*465] [****78] been regarded as sufficient to establish withdrawal or abandonment. See, e. g., Hyde v. United States, 225 U.S. 347, 369 \*\*\*8871 \(1912\); United States v. Borelli, 336 F.2d 376, 385 \(CA2 1964\). See also Note, Developments in the Law -- Criminal Conspiracy, 72 Harv. L. Rev. 920, 958 (1959). We conclude that the unnecessarily confining nature of the instruction, standing alone, constituted reversible error.<sup>38</sup> If a new trial takes place, an instruction correcting this error and giving the jury broader compass on the question of withdrawal must be given.

[****79] Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE STEWART joins all but Part IV of this opinion.

MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

[**2888] APPENDIX TO OPINION OF THE COURT

[Present: The foreman of the jury and the Court.]

The COURT. What is your problem, sir?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have two problems. And first of all, if I refer to a juror with a sexual gender, I would like it struck, because I would like to say juror.

The COURT. In other words, if he says he or she, make it neutral.

Mr. RUSSELL. The two problems are health and the status of the count.

The COURT. You can't tell me that now.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not going to tell you what the status is in no way. In fact, I can't tell you, because I can't remember.

<sup>37</sup> In this case the obligation to notify "each other member" of the charged conspiracy would be a manageable task; in other situations all "other" members might not be readily identifiable.

<sup>38</sup> The instruction on withdrawal and proper evidence thereof may have been of particular importance here because respondents vigorously argued throughout the trial that competition within the industry resumed before December 27, 1968, the critical date for purposes of the applicable five-year statute of limitations.

[*466] The COURT. All right.

Mr. RUSSELL. But first of all, I would like to thank you for that 6:30, because I don't think you would have a jury left. I am not a doctor, but these people are getting very distraught. It is not that they go into a depression and stay there; they go into a depression and they're coming out high. Now I would say at least eight of the jurors [****80] are taking some kind of pill. Some of the pills have been even issued by the doctor downstairs. I am not a doctor and I can't judge these things, but I have seen one of [3] these jurors at one time I thought she was going to jump out the window. And I, just for my own sake, without telling you this, I cannot take the responsibility that this could happen. I know this is part of Mr. Keene's job, but like I say, they go high and low, and sometimes by the time I get to Mr. Keene and get him down there, they are perfectly normal again.

In fact, one of the instances was when I saw this one girl --

The COURT. May I ask this: If we discharged -- we can excuse one juror for health reasons. Is there any juror we could excuse that would help the situation? If it is more than that, there is no point.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think there is more than that, Judge. I am not a doctor, so I can't say. I'm not even sure these are true sicknesses. They seem -- [***888] I mean, with the high and low, they seem induced, but when a person thinks they are sick, they're generally sick.

The COURT. It is just as bad, if they think they are.

Mr. RUSSELL. As I say, I am not a doctor. I don't like [****81] to be a judge, but I think for my own sake, my feelings, it is my responsibility as foreman to tell you these things. I do not want to be responsible for anybody's health.

The COURT. I don't, either.

[4] You recall, though, that before -- when I had two alternate jurors, I asked all the jurors if there was anybody who was not physically able to go ahead and everybody wanted to do it.

[*467] Mr. RUSSELL. I realize that. I think every juror out there wants to do their duty.

The COURT. See, we have tried this case now for four months.

Mr. RUSSELL. This is part of it, I will grant you, but it is not the whole part of it. There is some personality conflicts on the jury that have led to certain situations and I think we have overcome those.

The COURT. If we continue to deliberate from 9 to 6:30, with a lunch hour, for a while longer --

Mr. RUSSELL. What I want to tell you next is -- and that is, again, my opinion -- and you can tell me I am wrong -- and I have to look at it in a different way. We have taken enough ballots now, and we have had enough discussions, and the way it is divided is not going to be settled by any document, any remembrance of testimony. [****82] It is based on a belief and even if they -- even if they would sign a document today, and you would ask me to get up in the jury box and swear I think this is a true and just verdict, I would have to say no, because I believe in the twelve or multiple system of a jury; that if we are to decide beyond a [5] reasonable doubt, when you get twelve, or whatever the number has to be -- [**2889] The COURT. That is what you have to decide.

Mr. RUSSELL. --- it proves it beyond a shadow of a doubt.

The COURT. Not beyond a shadow of a doubt.

438 U.S. 422, *467; 98 S. Ct. 2864, **2889; 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, ***888; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 131, ****82

Mr. RUSSELL. I know. Each individual proves it to himself, but for a man to be convicted guilty, or the company, we do it beyond a reasonable doubt, but if you have twelve, you know it is beyond a shadow of a doubt and you cannot have any conscience over it as far as a juror or anything else. That is the way I feel, Judge.

The COURT. What are you suggesting?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am asking you what I should do. I am to the point - - - -

The COURT. I would like this jury to deliberate longer. I [*468] say that because, as I say, we have tried it for a considerable period of time.

Mr. RUSSELL. Everybody realizes that and I do.

[****83] The COURT. We have individual people here who are concerned and the jury has now deliberated -- they deliberated three full days, Wednesday, Thursday and [6] Friday. They deliberated a half a day on Saturday and a half day on Sunday. They are not deliberating a full day, because jurors usually deliberate until eleven or ten at night.

[***89] Mr. RUSSELL. We know that and we want to thank you.

The COURT. You have not deliberated that long yet.

Mr. RUSSELL. I know that is the way you would like it, but what I am trying to tell you is I don't think deliberation is going to change it. It is not a matter of time anymore.

The COURT. Are you telling me this jury is hopelessly deadlocked and will never reach a verdict?

Mr. RUSSELL. In my opinion, it is. I have to rely on that. I have no experience in this kind of thing. I don't know what people go through in a jury. This is the first time I have ever served on one and it is a new experience and I will never forget it. But it is a terrible responsibility and what I said, if it was a matter of finding a document or finding a part of a testimony that would convince somebody, I would say sure, and good.

The COURT. All [****84] right.

For the time being continue your deliberations. I will take into consideration what you have told me.

[7] Mr. RUSSELL. As I said, the health problem is something that I think has to be looked at. I don't know how you are going to judge this or whether you call Mr. Keene and ask him or the Marshal's opinion, but I think something ought to be done.

The COURT. All right. I will take it into consideration. I have to talk to counsel.

Mr. RUSSELL. I appreciate that. I didn't expect a decision, but I would like some kind of guidance.

[*469] The COURT. I would like to ask the jurors to continue their deliberations and I will take into consideration what you have told me. That is all I can say.

Mr. RUSSELL. I appreciate it. It is a situation I don't know how to help you get what you are after.

The COURT. Oh, I am not after anything.

Mr. RUSSELL. You are after a verdict one way or the other.

The COURT. Which way it goes doesn't make any difference to me.

Mr. RUSSELL. They keep saying, "If you will tell him what the situation is, he might accept it."

I said, "He doesn't want to know. He told me that he doesn't want to know what the decision is."

438 U.S. 422, *469; 98 S. Ct. 2864, **2889; 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, ***889; 1978 U.S. LEXIS 131, ****84

[8] [****85] The COURT. No, I don't want to know that. It would not be proper for me to know.

Mr. RUSSELL. You may imply something from what I said.

[**2890] The COURT. I can imply something from just watching, but I don't want you to tell me. That would be a breach of your duty.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have told you as best I can.

The COURT. Thank you. You tell them to keep deliberating and see if they can come to a verdict.

[At 12:04 p.m. the jury foreman returned to the deliberation room.]

Certified true and correct transcript.

/s/ MARION C. WIKE

Marion C. Wike

Official Reporter

[App. 1837-1840.]

Concur by: POWELL (In Part)

Concur

---

[***890] MR. JUSTICE POWELL, concurring in part.

I join the judgment and Parts I, II, and V of the Court's opinion.<sup>1</sup> I also join so much of Part III as holds that a [*470] seller's intention to establish a meeting-competition defense under § 2 (b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, to a charge of price discrimination under § 2 (a) is not in itself a "controlling circumstance" excusing liability under § 1 of the Sherman Act for otherwise unlawful direct price-verification practices.

[****86] I do not join those portions of Part III, however, that might be read as suggesting that there are cases where the § 2 (b) defense is unavailable even though a seller made every reasonable, lawful effort to corroborate his buyer's report that a competitor had offered a lower price before reducing his own price to that buyer. See, e. g., ante, at 455-456, 459 n. 32.<sup>2</sup> In my view, a proper accommodation between the policies of the Robinson-Patman Act and the Sherman Act would result in recognition of the § 2 (b) defense in such cases. Otherwise, sellers sometimes would face the unenviable choice of reducing prices to one buyer and risking Robinson-Patman Act liability, refusing to do so and losing the sale, or reducing prices to all buyers.

A prudent businessman faced with this choice often would forgo the price reduction altogether. This reaction would disserve the procompetitive policy of the Sherman [****87] Act without advancing materially the antidiscrimination policy of the Robinson-Patman Act. The Court already has made clear that the Robinson-Patman Act "does not require the seller to justify price discriminations by showing that in fact they met a competitive price." FTC v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U.S. 746, 759 (1945). Today the Court confirms that "it is the concept of good faith which lies at the core of the meeting-competition defense, and good faith 'is a flexible and pragmatic, not technical or doctrinaire, concept." Ante, at 454, quoting Continental Baking Co., 63 F. T. C. 2071, 2163 (1963). A seller who has attempted to verify his buyer's [*471] report by every reasonable, lawful means before reducing his price to meet a competitor's price, in my view, has met the test of "good faith." In such a case, if the buyer's report proves to have been untruthful, it is the buyer alone, not the seller, who has acted in bad faith.

---

<sup>1</sup> Because the issue discussed in Part IV of the Court's opinion is unlikely to arise at any retrial, I find it unnecessary to express a view as to it.

<sup>2</sup> I do not understand the Court to take a firm position on this issue. See ante, at 456 n. 31.

Dissent by: REHNQUIST (In Part); STEVENS (In Part)

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I concur in Part I and in the first portion of Part V of the Court's opinion approving [****88] the jury instruction on participation in the conspiracy. I dissent from the remaining portions of the opinion and set forth as briefly as possible my reasons for doing so.

Part II of the Court's opinion uses [***891] as its point of departure jury instructions on price fixing which the Court correctly characterizes as "not without ambiguity." Ante, at 434. However, these jury instructions are but a starting point for the discourse in Part II of the Court's opinion dealing with [**2891] the element of intent in a criminal case, a discourse which I believe goes beyond any reasoning necessary to dispose of the contentions with respect to that point in this case.

I do not find it necessary to decide the intent which Congress required as a prerequisite for criminal liability under the Sherman Act, because I believe that the instructions given by the District Court, when considered as a whole and in connection with the objections made to them, are sufficiently close to respondents' tendered instructions so as to afford respondents no basis upon which to challenge the verdict. The jury instructions in this case take up some 40 pages of the record and are both detailed and complex. [****89] The judge instructed the jury as to both respondents' contention that they exchanged price information solely to comply with the Robinson-Patman Act, and the Government's contention that "the Defendants' purpose was not merely to establish their good faith under the Robinson-Patman Act, but that [*472] they exchanged competitive information for the purpose of raising, fixing, maintaining, and stabilizing prices.

"It will be up to you, members of the jury, to resolve these issues.

"First, you must determine whether there was an agreement, either implied or express, to engage in the practice of price checking or verification. . . .

. . .

"Secondly, you must determine whether the purpose for the exchange of competitive information between the Defendants and their alleged co-conspirators was to insure a good faith meeting of competition, as a defense to the Robinson-Patman Act.

"If you decide that, if you decide that this was merely done in a good faith effort to comply with the Robinson-Patman Act, then you could not consider verification, standing alone, as establishing an agreement to fix, raise, maintain, and stabilize prices as charged.

"However, if [****90] you decide that the effect of these exchanges was to raise, fix, maintain, and stabilize the price of gypsum wallboard, then you may consider these changes [sic] as evidence of the mutual agreement or understanding alleged in the indictment to raise, fix, maintain, and stabilize list prices." App. 1720-1721 (emphasis added).

Read in conjunction with the above, the portions of the instructions quoted by the Court, ante, at 430, are not reversible error. The jury was instructed that it must find a purpose "to raise, fix, maintain, and stabilize list prices" and that this purpose could be presumed from the effect of respondents' agreement. Respondents' proposed [***892] instruction * does not [*473] significantly differ from that given by the District Court. I might add that in my view it would take plainly erroneous instructions, the error of which was both quite precisely and reasonably pointed out to the District Court, to warrant reversal of a judgment entered upon a jury's verdict following five months of trial.

[****91] The portions of Part II which I find most troubling are not those which expressly address the congressionally prescribed requirement of intent for criminal liability under the Sherman Act, but those which discourse at length upon the role of intent in the imposition of criminal liability in general, particularly those which might be [**2892] taken to import any special constitutional difficulty if criminal liability is imposed without fault. While the Court emphasizes that its result is not constitutionally required, ante, at 437, the Court's broad policy statements may be misread by the lower courts. I also feel bound to say that while I am willing to respectfully defer to the views of the distinguished authors of the American Law Institute's Model Penal Code, and to the authors of law review articles and treatises such as those sprinkled throughout the text of Part II of the Court's opinion, I have serious reservations about the undiscriminating emphasis and weight which the Court appears to give them in this case.

For similar reasons, I do not believe that it is necessary in this case to address the interrelationship of the Robinson-Patman Act's meeting-competition [****92] defense and the Sherman Act, and I cheerfully refrain from that task. The jury was clearly instructed that if price information was exchanged "in a good faith effort to comply with the Robinson-Patman Act," [*474] this exchange by itself would not make out a violation of the Sherman Act. I believe that the communications between the judge and the jury foreman described in Part IV of the Court's opinion, having been consented to by all parties to the case, would not justify a reversal of the verdict of the jury. I agree with that portion of Part V of the Court's opinion which approves the charge given the jury concerning participation in the conspiracy, but disagree with that portion of Part V which seems to approve a more expansive instruction with respect to withdrawal from the conspiracy. In my opinion, neither of these instructions of the District Court was sufficient, either separately or together, to warrant reversal of the jury's verdict of guilty.

I therefore conclude that the judgment of the Court of Appeals should be reversed, and the judgment of the District Court based upon the jury's verdict should be reinstated.

[***893] MR. JUSTICE STEVENS, concurring in part [****93] and dissenting in part.

There are three reasons why I am unable to subscribe to the bifurcated construction of S.1 of the Sherman Act which the Court adopts in Part II of its opinion.

In 1955 I subscribed to the view that criminal enforcement of the Sherman Act is inappropriate unless the defendants have deliberately violated the law.<sup>1</sup> I adhere to that view today. But since 1890 when the Sherman Act was enacted, the statute has had the same substantive reach in criminal and civil cases. No matter how wise the new rule that the Court adopts today may be, I believe it is an amendment only Congress may enact.

---

* "There has been evidence in this case of a defendant's contacting a competitor to verify the existence or nonexistence of a reported lower price or other competitive condition in the market place. This practice has been referred to as 'verification.' There is evidence that verification was engaged in by defendants for the purpose of compliance with the Robinson-Patman Act, one of the federal antitrust laws. I charge you as a matter of law that no finding of guilt may be made in this case based on verification engaged in for the purpose of compliance with the Robinson-Patman Act. Further, to consider verification as any evidence whatsoever of an alleged price-fixing conspiracy you must first determine beyond a reasonable doubt that the purpose of verification was not compliance with the Robinson-Patman Act." App. 1857.

<sup>1</sup> Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 349-351 (1955).

If I were fashioning a new test of criminal liability, I would require proof of a specific purpose to violate the law rather than mere knowledge that the defendants' agreement has had [*475] an adverse effect on the market.<sup>2</sup> Under the lesser standard adopted by the Court, I believe MR. JUSTICE [****94] REHNQUIST is quite right in viewing the error in the trial judge's instructions as harmless. Ante, at 471-473. There is, of course, a theoretical possibility that defendants could engage in a practice of exchanging current price information that was sufficiently prevalent to have had a marketwide impact that they did not know about, but as a practical matter that possibility is surely remote.

Finally, I am afraid that the new civil-criminal dichotomy may work mischief in the civil enforcement of the prohibition against tampering with prices in a free [**2893] market. Conclusive presumptions play a central role in the enforcement, both civil and criminal, of the Sherman Act. Thus, [****95] an agreement to charge the same price,<sup>3</sup> [****96] or to adopt a common purchasing policy that determines the market price,<sup>4</sup> is unreasonable, and therefore unlawful, without any proof of the purpose or the actual effect of the agreement. The law presumes that those who entered the price-fixing agreement knew that forbidden effects would follow, and it also presumes, conclusively, that those effects will follow. In a criminal prosecution for price fixing in violation of the Sherman Act it is, therefore, irrelevant whether the prices fixed were reasonable or whether the defendant's intentions were good.<sup>5</sup> See [United States v. \[\*476\] Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392](#). [***894] As Mr. Justice Stone explained for the Court in that case, "the Sherman law is not only a prohibition against the infliction of a particular type of public injury. It is a limitation of rights, . . . which may be pushed to evil consequences and therefore restrained."Id. at 398 (citation omitted).

To be sure, cases such as Trenton Potteries involved conduct that was determined to be illegal on its face, while in this case the trial court appraised respondents' agreement under "rule of reason" analysis.<sup>6</sup> But properly understood, rule-of-reason analysis is not distinct from "per se" analysis. On the contrary, agreements that are illegal per se are merely a species within the broad category of agreements that unreasonably restrain trade; less proof is required to [****97] establish their illegality, but they nonetheless violate the basic rule of reason.<sup>7</sup>

As applied to an agreement among major producers to exchange current price information, the rule of reason requires an element in addition to proof of the agreement itself -- either an actual market effect or an express purpose to affect market price -- but once that element is shown, any additional showing of intent is unnecessary. See United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S. 333. [****98] The rule is premised on the assumption that if the practice of exchanging current price information is sufficiently prevalent to affect the market price, then there is [*477] an extremely high probability that the sales representatives of these companies had actual knowledge of <sup>2</sup>The distinction between the two standards is explained ante, at 444-445. The Report of the Attorney General's Committee recommended that "criminal process should be used only where the law is clear and the facts reveal a flagrant offense and plain intent unreasonably to restrain trade." Report, supra n. 1, at 349.

<sup>3</sup>United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392.

<sup>4</sup>United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150.

<sup>5</sup>In fact, early in the development of criminal enforcement of the Sherman Act, this Court stated:

"[The] conspirators must be held to have intended the necessary and direct consequences of their acts and cannot be heard to say the contrary. In other words, by purposely engaging in a conspiracy which necessarily and directly produces the result which the statute is designed to prevent, they are, in legal contemplation, chargeable with intending that result." United States v. Patten, 226 U.S. 525, 543.

<sup>6</sup>An argument can be made that an agreement among the major producers in the market to exchange current price information should be considered illegal on its face. As the Court points out, "[exchanges] of current price information . . . have the greatest potential for generating anticompetitive effects and . . . have consistently been held to violate the Sherman Act." Ante, at 441 n. 16.

<sup>7</sup>Rahl, Price Competition and the Price Fixing Rule -- Preface and Perspective, 57 Nw. L. Rev. 137, 139 (1962).

that fact. Given the language of § 1, that premise is as valid in the context of a criminal prosecution as it is in the context of a treble-damages civil action.

Accordingly, although I agree with much of the abstract discussion in Part II of the Court's opinion, I concur only in Parts I, III, IV, and V, and in the judgment.

References

---

*54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 45- 49, 175- 180*

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, Form 29

12 Am Jur Legal Forms 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 178:92

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1, 13\(b\)

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 15, 36

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 14, 31

L Ed Index to Annos, [****99] Prices; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade; Robinson-Patman Act

Annotation References:

Construction and application of "good faith meeting competition" defense of Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(b\)). 9 L Ed 2d 1138.

Robinson-Patman Act as construed by Supreme Court. 2 L Ed 2d 1737.

Discounts permissible under Robinson-Patman Amendment to Clayton Act. 1 ALR2d 276.

---

End of Document

Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n

Supreme Court of the United States

December 4, 1978, Argued ; February 22, 1979, Decided

No. 77-654

Reporter

440 U.S. 69 *; 99 S. Ct. 925 **; 59 L. Ed. 2d 153 ***; 1979 U.S. LEXIS 59 ****; 1979-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P62,475

GREAT ATLANTIC & PACIFIC TEA CO., INC. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 557 F.2d 971, reversed.

Core Terms

---

buyer, seller, bid, meeting-competition, price discrimination, competitor's, Robinson-Patman Act, dairy, defenses, induce, meeting competition, milk, lower price, good faith, derivative, disclosure, Automatic, affirmative defense, Administrative Law, Federal Trade Commission Act, discriminations, circumstances, differentials, knowingly, label, beat

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Buyer Liability

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN1 [⬇️] Price Discrimination, Buyer Liability

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(f\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN2 [⬇️] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 45\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Cost Justification Defense

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > General Overview

11 ÉÁWÉÉJÉÉJLÁJÁÉÉDÉNGÉÉJG LÁ JÁÉÉDÉGÁFÍHÉÉFÍHÁJÍJÁÉÉSÓYÓJÁJÉÉFÍ

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

HN3 [↓] Defenses, Cost Justification Defense

Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 2\(a\), \(b\), a seller who can establish either that a price differential was cost justified or offered in good faith to meet competition has a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination under the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN4 [↓] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2\(f\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Buyer Liability

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > General Overview

HN5 [↓] Price Discrimination, Buyer Liability

A buyer cannot be liable for an illegal price discrimination if a prima facie case could not be established against a seller or if the seller has an affirmative defense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

HN6 [↓] Price Discrimination, Defenses

If a seller has a valid meeting-competition defense, there is simply no prohibited price discrimination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Promotional Allowances & Services

HN7 [↓] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(e\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN8** [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The exchange of price information by competitors violates the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Buyer Liability

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

**HN9** [blue icon] Robinson-Patman Act, Defenses

A buyer who has done no more than accept the lower of two prices competitively offered does not violate the Robinson-Patman Act § 2\(f\), 15 U.S.C.S. § 2\(f\), provided the seller has a meeting-competition defense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

**HN10** [blue icon] Sherman Act, Defenses

The test for determining when a seller has a valid meeting-competition defense is whether a seller can show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor. A good-faith belief, rather than absolute certainty, that a price concession is being offered to meet an equally low price offered by a competitor is sufficient to satisfy the defense under Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2\(b\). Since good faith, rather than absolute certainty, is the touchstone of the meeting-competition defense, a seller can assert the defense even if it has unknowingly made a bid that in fact not only met but beat his competition.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Buyer purchasing, from seller having meeting competition defense under 15 USCS 13\(b\), at lowest price competitively offered, held not to have induced or received illegal price discrimination under 15 USCS 13\(f\).

Summary

A grocery store chain, after deciding to switch from the sale of brand label milk to the sale of private label milk, solicited an offer from its longtime supplier to supply milk under the chain's private label. The chain was dissatisfied with the supplier's initial offer and solicited offers from other dairies, one of which submitted an offer lower than that of the supplier. The chain's buyer subsequently contacted the supplier and told it that it had another offer, that the supplier was "not even in the ballpark," and that a $ 50,000 improvement in the offer "would not be a drop in the bucket." The supplier then submitted a new bid, lower than the competing offer, emphasizing that it needed to keep the chain's business and that it made the new offer in order to meet the other dairy's bid. After the chain accepted the supplier's second offer, the Federal Trade Commission filed a complaint against the chain, charging, among other things, that it had violated 2(f) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(f\)) by knowingly inducing or receiving a price discrimination prohibited by 2 of the Act (15 USCS 13), namely the price discrimination of a seller, which is prohibited under 2(a) (15 USCS 13\(a\)). After proceedings before an administrative law judge, the Commission--rejecting the chain's contention that it could utilize, as a defense to its 2(f) liability, the meeting competition defense of 2(b) of the Act, which allows a seller to rebut a prima facie case of price discrimination by showing that the seller's lower price was made in good faith to meet a competitor's equally low price--held that the chain had violated 2(f). The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed on review of the Commission's decision (557 F2d 971).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by Stewart, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and Brennan, Blackmun, Powell, and Rehnquist, JJ., it was held that a buyer who has done no more than accept the lower of two prices competitively offered does not induce or receive price discrimination in violation of 2(f) provided the seller has a valid meeting competition defense, the chain thus not being in violation of 2(f) since the supplier had a valid meeting competition defense under 2(b).

White, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, expressed the view that the court should not have decided whether the supplier had a valid meeting competition defense, since neither the Commission nor the Court of Appeals had reached the issue.

Marshall, J., dissenting in part, agreed that the Commission and the Court of Appeals had applied an incorrect legal standard in assessing the chain's liability under 2(f), but disagreed with the court's ruling that 2(f) precluded buyer liability under the Act unless the seller could also be found liable for price discrimination, expressing the view that a buyer could claim the meeting competition defense if he acted in good faith to induce a seller to meet a competitor's price, regardless of whether the seller's price happened to beat the competitor's, but that a buyer who induced the lower bid by misrepresentation could not escape liability, and that the United States Supreme Court should not have resolved disputed factual issues in the case without a remand.

Stevens, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §36 > buyer's inducement of price discrimination -- effect of seller's meeting competition defense --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

11 ÉÁWÉÉÁ JÉÉ JLÁJÁUÉÓÉG ÉÉG LÁ JÁÉÓáÉGáÁÍ HÉÉFÍ HÁFÍ JÁWÉÉSÓYÓÁ JÉÉ

A buyer who has done no more than accept the lower of two prices competitively offered does not knowingly induce or receive a seller's illegal price discrimination in violation of 2(f) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, (15 USCS 13\(f\)) where the seller from whom the buyer purchases has a meeting competition defense under 2(b) of the Act (15 USCS 13\(b\)) to the Act's prohibition against price discrimination by sellers (15 USCS 13\(a\)). (Marshall, J., dissented from this holding.)

MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- seller's defenses -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

Under 2(a) and (b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, (15 USCS 13\(a\) and \(b\)), a seller who can establish that a price differential was cost justified or offered in good faith to meet competition has a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination under the Act.

MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- buyer's liability -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Under 2(f) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, (15 USCS 13\(f\)), a buyer cannot be liable for inducing or receiving a discrimination in price if a prima facie case of price discrimination under 2(a) and (b) of the Act (15 USCS 13\(a\) and \(b\)) could not be established against a seller or if the seller has an affirmative defense. (Marshall, J., dissented from this holding.)

MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- meeting competition defense -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The test for determining whether a seller has a valid defense against illegal price discrimination under 2(b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, (15 USCS 13\(b\)) is whether a seller can show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor; a good faith belief, rather than absolute certainty, that a price concession is being offered to meet an equally low price offered by a competitor is sufficient to satisfy the 2(b) defense, and a seller can assert the defense even if it has unknowingly made a bid that in fact not only met but beat his competition.

MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- seller's meeting competition defense -- buyer's inducing or receiving price discrimination -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

A seller is entitled to a meeting competition defense under 2(b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, (15 USCS 13\(b\)) to any illegal price discrimination under 2(a) of the Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)) arising from its sale to a buyer who had purchased under the seller's second bid at a price lower than the low bid made by prospective seller in a bid submitted after the buyer had rejected the eventual seller's initial bid, where (1) the seller submitted its second bid after the buyer had informed the seller that, as to the prospective seller's bid, its initial bid was "not even in the ballpark" and that a $ 50,000 improvement "would not be a drop in the bucket," (2) the seller could justifiably conclude, in light of its established business relationship with the buyer, that it was necessary to make the second bid offering substantial concessions in order to avoid loss of the buyer's account, (3) the seller had made the second bid without knowing of the details of the competing bid, and, thus, the buyer, who does no more than accept such seller's second offer, is not liable under 2(f) of the Act (15 USCS 13\(f\)) for inducing or receiving an illegal discrimination in price. (Marshall, J., dissented in part from this holding.)

Syllabus

---

Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, prohibits price discrimination by sellers, but under § 2 (b) the seller may rebut a prima facie case of price discrimination by showing that his lower price was made in good faith to meet a competitor's equally low price. Section 2 (f) makes it unlawful "for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section." Petitioner, in an effort to achieve cost savings, entered into an agreement with its longtime supplier, Borden Co., under which Borden would supply "private [****2] label" (as opposed to "brand label") milk to petitioner's stores in the Chicago area. Petitioner refused Borden's initial offer in implementation of the agreement and solicited offers from other companies, resulting in a lower offer from one of Borden's competitors. At this point petitioner's buyer informed Borden that its offer was "not even in the ball park" and that a $ 50,000 improvement in the offer "would not be a drop in the bucket." Borden then submitted a new offer that was substantially better than its competitor's and petitioner accepted it. Based on these facts, the Federal Trade Commission charged petitioner with violating § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act for allegedly misleading Borden during contract negotiations by failing to inform it that its second offer was better than its competitor's, and with violating § 2 (f) by knowingly inducing or receiving price discrimination from Borden. The FTC dismissed the § 5 charge on the ground that the issue was what amount of disclosure is required of the buyer during contract negotiations and that to impose a duty of affirmative disclosure would be "contrary to normal business practice" and "contrary to the public [****3] interest," but held that petitioner had violated § 2 (f), the FTC rejecting, inter alia, petitioner's defense that the Borden offer had been made to meet competition. The Court of Appeals affirmed. Held: A buyer who has done no more than accept the lower of two prices competitively offered does not violate § 2 (f) provided the seller has a meeting-competition defense, and here where Borden had such a defense and thus could not be liable under § 2 (b) petitioner, who did no more than accept Borden's offer, cannot be liable under § 2 (f). Pp. 75-85.

(a) Since liability under § 2 (f) is limited to price discrimination "prohibited by this section," and since only §§ 2 (a) and (b) deal with seller liability for price discrimination, a buyer, under § 2 (f)'s plain meaning, cannot be liable if a prima facie case cannot be established against a seller or if the seller has an affirmative defense. Automatic Canteen Co. of America v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61. In either situation, there is no price discrimination "prohibited by this section." And the legislative history of § 2 (f) confirms the conclusion that buyer liability under § 2 (f) is dependent on seller [****4] liability under § 2 (a). Pp. 75-78.

(b) To rewrite § 2 (f) to hold a buyer liable even though there is no price discrimination "prohibited by this section" would contravene the rule that this Court "cannot supply what Congress has studiously omitted," FTC v. Simplicity Pattern Co., 360 U.S. 55, 67. Pp. 78-79.

(c) Imposition of § 2 (f) liability on petitioner would lead to price uniformity and rigidity contrary to the purposes of other antitrust legislation. P. 80.

(d) A duty of affirmative disclosure requiring a buyer to inform a seller that his bid has beaten competition would frustrate competitive bidding and, by reducing uncertainty, would lead to price matching and anticompetitive cooperation among sellers. P. 80.

I I €ÁN€JÉN J ÉN J LÁ J ÁUÉDÉN GÍ ÉAÉGÍ LÁ J ÁSÉDÁ ÉGÁAFÍ HÉAÉFÍ HÁFJÍ J ÁN€JÉSÓY QJÁ J ÉAÉ

(e) The effect of the finding that petitioner's same conduct violated § 2(f) as violated § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act is to impose the same duty of affirmative disclosure that the FTC condemned as anticompetitive, "contrary to the public interest," and "contrary to normal business practice," in dismissing the § 5 charge. Pp. 80-81.

(f) The test for determining when a seller has a valid meeting-competition defense is whether [****5] he can "show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor." FTC v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U.S. 746. Under the circumstances of this case, Borden did act reasonably and in good faith when it made its second bid, since, in light of its established business relationship with petitioner, it could justifiably conclude that petitioner's statements about the first offer were reliable and that it was necessary to make another bid offering substantial concessions to avoid losing its account with petitioner. Pp. 82-84.

Counsel: Denis McInerney argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Raymond L. Falls, Jr., and William T. Lifland.

Deputy Solicitor General Easterbrook argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Solicitor General McCree, Michael N. Sohn, Gerald P. Norton, W. Dennis Cross, and Jerold D. Cummins.*

Judges: STEWART, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, [***6] C. J., and BRENNAN, BLACKMUN, POWELL, and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined, and in Parts I, II, and III of which WHITE, J., joined. WHITE, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, post, p. 85. MARSHALL, J., filed an opinion dissenting in part, post, p. 85. STEVENS, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: STEWART

Opinion

[*71] [*157] [*928] MR. JUSTICE STEWART delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A] The question presented in this case is whether the petitioner, the [***158] Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. (A&P), violated § 2 (f) of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. § 13 (f),<sup>1</sup> by knowingly inducing or [**929] receiving illegal price discriminations from the Borden Co. (Borden).

*Thomas A. Rothwell and Arthur H. Brendtson filed a brief for the Small Business Legislative Council as amicus curiae.

<sup>1</sup> Title 15 U. S. C. § 13(f) provides:

HN1 "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section."

Title 15 U. S. C. §§ 13(a) and (b) provide in pertinent part:

"(a) . . . It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered . . . .

11 ÉÁWÉÉÁ JÉÉ FLÁJÁUÉÓdÁNG ÉÉÉGJLÁ JÁSÉOáÉGáÁÍ HÁÉÉFÍ Í LÁJÍ JÁWÉÉSÓYÓJÁ JÉÉÉ

[****7] [*72] The alleged violation was reflected in a 1965 agreement between A&P and Borden under which Borden undertook to supply "private label" milk to more than 200 A&P stores in a Chicago area that included portions of Illinois and Indiana. This agreement resulted from an effort by A&P to achieve cost savings by switching from the sale of "brand label" milk (milk sold under the brand name of the supplying dairy) to the sale of "private label" milk (milk sold under the A&P label).

To implement this plan, A&P asked Borden, its longtime supplier, to submit an offer to supply under private label certain of A&P's milk and other dairy product requirements. After prolonged negotiations, Borden offered to grant A&P a discount for switching to private-label milk provided A&P would accept limited delivery service. Borden claimed that this offer would save A&P $ 410,000 a year compared to what it had been paying for its dairy products. A&P, however, was not satisfied with this offer and solicited offers from other [*73] dairies. A competitor of Borden, Bowman Dairy, then submitted an offer which was lower than Borden's.<sup>2</sup>

[****8] At this point, A&P's Chicago buyer contacted Borden's chain store sales manager and stated: "I have a bid in my pocket. You [Borden] people are so far out of line it is not [***159] even funny. You are not even in the ball park." When the Borden representative asked for more details, he was told nothing except that a $ 50,000 improvement in Borden's bid "would not be a drop in the bucket."

Borden was thus faced with the problem of deciding whether to rebid. A&P at the time was one of Borden's largest customers in the Chicago area. Moreover, Borden had just invested more than $ 5 million in a new dairy facility in Illinois. The loss of the A&P account would result in underutilization of this new plant. Under these circumstances, Borden decided to submit a new bid which doubled the estimated annual savings to A&P, from $ 410,000 to $ 820,000. In presenting its offer, Borden emphasized to A&P that it needed to keep A&P's business and was making the new offer in order to meet Bowman's bid. A&P then accepted Borden's bid after concluding that it was substantially better than Bowman's.

|

Based on these facts, the Federal Trade Commission filed a three-count complaint against [****9] A&P. Count I charged that A&P had violated § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act by misleading Borden in the course of negotiations for the private-label contract, in that A&P had failed to inform Borden that its second offer was better than the Bowman bid.<sup>3</sup> [*74] Count II, involving the same conduct, charged that A&P had violated § 2 (f) of the Clayton Act, as [***930] amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, by knowingly inducing or receiving price discriminations from Borden. Count III charged that Borden and A&P had violated § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act by combining to stabilize and maintain the retail and wholesale prices of milk and other dairy products.

[****10] An Administrative Law Judge found, after extended discovery and a hearing that lasted over 110 days, that A&P had acted unfairly and deceptively in accepting the second offer from Borden and had therefore violated §

"(b) . . . Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

<sup>2</sup>The Bowman bid would have produced estimated annual savings of approximately $ 737,000 for A&P as compared with the first Borden bid, which would have produced estimated annual savings of $ 410,000.

<sup>3</sup>Section 5 (a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 719, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 45 (a), provides in relevant part:

HN2[↑] "(1) Unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce, are declared unlawful."

11 €ÁVÉJÁA JÉB I LÁJÁUÖDÁGÍ ÉEJHELÁ JÄSEÖAÉCA ÁFÍ HÄTTÍ JLAFJÍ JÁNÉESÓYÓUÁ JÄTTÍ€

5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act as charged in Count I. The Administrative Law Judge similarly found that this same conduct had violated § 2 \(f\). Finally, he dismissed Count III on the ground that the Commission had not satisfied its burden of proof.

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [↑] [2A]On review, the Commission reversed the Administrative Law Judge's finding as to Count I. Pointing out that the question at issue was what amount of disclosure is required of the buyer during contract negotiations, the Commission held that the imposition of a duty of affirmative disclosure would be "contrary to normal business practice and, we think, contrary to the public interest." Despite this ruling, however, the Commission held as to Count II that the identical conduct on the part of A&P had violated § 2 \(f\), finding that Borden had discriminated in price between A&P and its competitors, that the discrimination had been injurious [****11] to competition, and that A&P had known or [***160] should have known that it was the beneficiary of unlawful price discrimination.<sup>4</sup> The Commission rejected A&P's defenses that the Borden bid had been made to meet competition and was cost justified.<sup>5</sup>

[****12] [*75] A&P filed a petition for review of the Commission's order in the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. The court held that substantial evidence supported the findings of the Commission and that as a matter of law A&P could not successfully assert a meeting-competition defense because it, unlike Borden, had known that Borden's offer was better than Bowman's.<sup>6</sup> Finally, the court held that the Commission had correctly determined that A&P had no cost-justification defense. 557 F.2d 971. Because the judgment of the Court of Appeals raises important issues of federal law, we granted certiorari. 435 U.S. 922.

[****13] II

The Robinson-Patman Act was passed in response to the problem perceived in the increased market power and coercive practices of chainstores and other big buyers [**931] that threatened [*76] the existence of small independent retailers. Notwithstanding this concern with buyers, however, the emphasis of the Act is in § 2 \(a\), which prohibits price discriminations by sellers. Indeed, the original Patman bill as reported by Committees of both Houses prohibited only seller activity, with no mention of buyer liability.<sup>7</sup> Section 2 \(f\), making buyers liable for <sup>4</sup> The Commission also found that the interstate commerce requirement of § 2 \(f\) was satisfied.

<sup>5</sup>

[LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [↑] [2B]HN3 [↑] Under § 2 \(a\) and \(b\) of the Act, a seller who can establish either that a price differential was cost justified or offered in good faith to meet competition has a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination under the Act. Standard Oil Co. v. FTC, 340 U.S. 231. See n. 1, supra.

With respect to the meeting-competition defense, the Commission stated that even though Borden as the seller might have had a meeting-competition defense, A&P as the buyer did not have such a defense because it knew that the bid offered was, in fact, better than the Bowman bid. With respect to the cost-justification defense, the Commission found that Commission counsel had met the initial burden of going forward as required by this Court's decision in Automatic Canteen Co. of America v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61, and that A&P had not then satisfied its burden of showing that the prices were cost justified, or that it did not know that they were not.

The Commission upheld the Administrative Law Judge's dismissal of Count III of the complaint.

<sup>6</sup> The Court of Appeals, like the Commission, relied on Kroger Co. v. FTC, 438 F.2d 1372 (CA6), for the proposition that a buyer can be liable under § 2 \(f\) of the Act even if the seller has a meeting-competition defense. The Kroger case involved a buyer who had made deliberate misrepresentations to a seller in order to induce price concessions. While the Court of Appeals in this case did not find that A&P had made any affirmative misrepresentations, it viewed the distinction between a "lying buyer" and a buyer who knowingly accepts the lower of two bids as without legal significance. See n. 15, infra.

<sup>7</sup> H. R. 8442, 74th Cong., 1st Sess. (1935); S. 3154, 74th Cong., 1st Sess. (1935).

11. €ÁVÆÐA JÆÐI LÁJÁ ÆÐOÐÁGÍ ÆÐHFLÁ JÆÐOÐA ÆÐA ÁFÍ HÆÐFI ÆÐJÍ JÁVÆÐSÓYÓÐA JÆÐFH

inducing or receiving price discriminations by sellers, was the product of a belated floor amendment near the conclusion of the Senate debates.<sup>8</sup>

[****14] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [↑] [3] As finally enacted, § 2 \(f\) provides:

HN4 [↑] " [**161] That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section." (Emphasis added.)

Liability under § 2 \(f\) thus is limited to situations where the price discrimination is one "which is prohibited by this section." While the phrase "this section" refers to the entire § 2 of the Act, only subsections (a) and (b) dealing with seller liability involve discriminations in price. Under the plain meaning of § 2 \(f\), therefore, HN5 [↑] a buyer cannot be liable if a prima facie case could not be established against a seller or if the seller has an affirmative defense. In either situation, there is no price discrimination "prohibited by this section."<sup>9</sup> [*77] The legislative history of § 2 \(f\) fully confirms the conclusion that buyer liability [****15] under § 2 \(f\) is dependent on seller liability under § 2 \(a\).<sup>10</sup>

[****16] The derivative nature of liability under § 2 \(f\) was recognized by this Court in Automatic Canteen Co. of America v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61. In that case, the Court stated that even if the Commission has established a prima facie case of price discrimination, a buyer does not violate § 2 \(f\) if the lower prices received are either within one of the seller's defenses or not known by the buyer not to be within one of those defenses. The Court stated:

"Thus, at the least, we can be confident in reading the words in § 2 \(f\), 'a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section,' as a reference to the substantive prohibitions against discrimination by sellers defined elsewhere in the Act. It is therefore apparent that the discriminatory price that buyers are forbidden by § 2 \(f\) to induce cannot include price differentials that are not forbidden to sellers in other sections of the Act . . . . For we are not dealing simply with a 'discrimination in price'; the 'discrimination in price' in § 2 \(f\) must be one 'which is prohibited by this section.' Even if any price differential were to be comprehended within the term 'discrimination in price,' § 1\*\*\*\*171 2 \(f\), which speaks of prohibited discriminations, cannot be read as declaring out of bounds price differentials within one or more of the 'defenses' available to sellers, such as that the price differentials [*78] reflect cost differences, fluctuating market conditions, or bona fide attempts to meet competition, as those defenses [**932] are set out in the [****162] provisos of §§ 2 \(a\) and 2 \(b\)." 346 U.S., at 70-71 (footnotes omitted).

The Court thus explicitly recognized that a buyer cannot be held liable under § 2 \(f\) if the lower prices received are justified by reason of one of the seller's affirmative defenses.

III

---

<sup>8</sup> F. Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act 423 (1962). Section 2 \(f\) has been described by commentators as an "afterthought." Id., at 421; J. McCord, Commentaries on the Robinson-Patman Act 96 (1969).

<sup>9</sup> Commentators have recognized that a finding of buyer liability under § 2 \(f\) is dependent on a finding of seller liability under § 2 \(a\). McCord, supra, at 96 ("[Section 2 \(f\) cannot be enforced if a prima facie case could not be established against the seller on the basis of the transaction in question under Section 2 \(a\) or if he could sustain an affirmative defense thereto"); Rowe, supra, at 421 ("the legal status of the buyer is derivative from the seller's pricing legality under the Act"); H. Shniderman, Price Discrimination in Perspective 136 (1977) (a buyer can be liable under § 2 \(f\) only if the price received "cannot be excused by any defenses provided to the seller").

<sup>10</sup> In presenting the Conference Report to the House, Representative Utterback summarized the meaning of § 2 \(f\) by stating: "This paragraph makes the buyer liable for knowingly inducing or receiving any discrimination in price which is unlawful under the first paragraph [§ 2 \(a\)] of the amendment." 80 Cong. Rec. 9419 (1936).

11 €ÁMÆJÆ JÆ Ì LÁJÆ ÆOGÆGÍ ÆEJHGÆ JÆSÆ ÆAÆCAÆÍ HÆTÆFÆ GÆFÆ JÆMÆSÆÓYÆ ÆAÆ JÆTÆFÆ

LedHN[1B] [1B] The petitioner, relying on this plain meaning of § 2 (f) and the teaching of the Automatic Canteen case, argues that it cannot be liable under § 2 (f) if Borden had a valid meeting-competition defense. The respondent, on the other hand, argues that the petitioner may be liable even assuming that Borden had such a defense. The meeting-competition defense, the respondent contends, must in these circumstances be judged from the point of view of [****18] the buyer. Since A&P knew for a fact that the final Borden bid beat the Bowman bid, it was not entitled to assert the meeting-competition defense even though Borden may have honestly believed that it was simply meeting competition. Recognition of a meeting-competition defense for the buyer in this situation, the respondent argues, would be contrary to the basic purpose of the Robinson-Patman Act to curtail abuses by large buyers.

A

The short answer to these contentions of the respondent is that Congress did not provide in § 2 (f) that a buyer can be liable even if the seller has a valid defense. The clear language of § 2 (f) states that a buyer can be liable only if he receives a price discrimination "prohibited by this section." HN6 If a seller has a valid meeting-competition defense, there is simply no prohibited price discrimination.

A similar attempt to amend the Robinson-Patman Act judicially was rejected by this Court in FTC v. Simplicity Pattern Co., [*79] 360 U.S. 55. There the Federal Trade Commission had found that a manufacturer of dress patterns had [****19] violated § 2 (e) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, by providing its larger customers services and facilities not offered its smaller customers.<sup>11</sup> The manufacturer attempted to defend against this charge by asserting that there had been no injury to competition and that its discriminations in services were cost justified. Since liability under § 2 (e), unlike § 2 (a), does not depend upon competitive injury or the absence of a cost-justification defense, the manufacturer's primary argument was that "it would be 'bad law and bad economics' to make discriminations unlawful even where they may be accounted for by cost differentials or where there is no competitive injury." 360 U.S., at 67 (footnote omitted). The Court rejected this argument. Recognizing that "this Court is not in a position to review the economic wisdom of Congress," [***163] "the Court stated that "[we] cannot supply what Congress has studiously omitted." Ibid. (footnote omitted). The respondent's attempt in the present case to rewrite § 2 (f) to hold a buyer liable even though there is no discrimination in price "prohibited by this section" must be rejected for [****20] the same reason.<sup>12</sup>

[****21] [*80] [**933] B

In the Automatic Canteen case, the Court warned against interpretations of the Robinson-Patman Act which "extend beyond the prohibitions of the Act and, in so doing, help give rise to a price uniformity and rigidity in open conflict with the purposes of other antitrust legislation." 346 U.S., at 63. Imposition of § 2 (f) liability on the petitioner in this case would lead to just such price uniformity and rigidity.<sup>13</sup>

<sup>11</sup> Section 2 (e) provides:

HN7 "It shall be unlawful for any person to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale, with or without processing, by contracting to furnish or furnishing, or by contributing to the furnishing of, any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms." 15 U. S. C. § 13 (e).

<sup>12</sup> Contrary to the respondent's suggestion, this interpretation of § 2 (f) is in no way inconsistent with congressional intent. "[The] buyer whom Congress in the main sought to reach was the one who, knowing full well that there was little likelihood of a defense for the seller, nevertheless proceeded to exert pressure for lower prices." Automatic Canteen Co. of America v. FTC, 346 U.S., at 79. Here, by contrast, we conclude that a buyer is not liable if the seller does have a defense under § 2 (b).

<sup>13</sup> More than once the Court has stated that the Robinson-Patman Act should be construed consistently with broader policies of the antitrust laws. United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422; Automatic Canteen Co. of America v. FTC, supra, at 74.

11 €ÁVÈÀ JÉÀ ÉLÁJ ÁUÉDÁGÍ ÉEJHHÁ JÄŠÉOaÉCA ÁÍ HÄÉTFÍ HAFJÍ JÁNÉSÓYÓUÁ JÄÉEGF

In a competitive market, uncertainty among sellers will cause them to compete for business by offering buyers lower prices. Because of the evils of collusive action, the Court has held that [***22] HN8<sup>14</sup> the exchange of price information by competitors violates the Sherman Act. United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S. 333. Under the view advanced by the respondent, however, a buyer, to avoid liability, must either refuse a seller's bid or at least inform him that his bid has beaten competition. Such a duty of affirmative disclosure would almost inevitably frustrate competitive bidding and, by reducing uncertainty, lead to price matching and anticompetitive cooperation among sellers.<sup>14</sup>

Ironically, the Commission itself, in dismissing the charge under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act in this case, recognized the dangers inherent in a duty of affirmative disclosure:

"The imposition of a duty [***23] of affirmative disclosure, applicable to a buyer whenever a seller states that his offer is [*81] intended to meet competition, is contrary to normal business practice and, we think, contrary to the public interest.

....

"We fear a scenario where the seller automatically attaches a meeting competition caveat to every bid. The buyer would then state whether such bid meets, beats, or loses to another bid. The seller would then submit a second, a third, and perhaps a fourth bid until finally he is able to ascertain his competitor's bid." 87 F. T. C. 1047, 1050-1051.

The effect of the finding that the [***164] same conduct of the petitioner violated § 2 \(f\), however, is to impose the same duty of affirmative disclosure which the Commission condemned as anticompetitive, "contrary to the public interest," and "contrary to normal business practice," in dismissing the charge under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Neither the Commission nor the Court of Appeals offered any explanation for this apparent anomaly.

As in the Automatic Canteen case, we decline to adopt a construction of § 2 \(f\) that is contrary to its plain meaning and would lead [***24] to anticompetitive results. Accordingly, we hold that HN9<sup>15</sup> a buyer who has done no more than accept the lower of two prices competitively offered does not violate § 2 \(f\) provided the seller has a meeting-competition defense.<sup>15</sup>

<sup>14</sup> A duty of affirmative disclosure might also be difficult to enforce. In cases where a seller offers differing quantities or a different quality product, or offers to serve the buyer in a different manner, it might be difficult for the buyer to determine when disclosure is required.

<sup>15</sup> In Kroger Co. v. FTC, 438 F.2d 1372, the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit held that a buyer who induced price concessions by a seller by making deliberate misrepresentations could be liable under § 2 \(f\) even if the seller has a meeting-competition defense.

This case does not involve a "lying buyer" situation. The complaint issued by the FTC alleged that "A&P accepted the said offer of Borden with knowledge that Borden had granted a substantially lower price than that offered by the only other competitive bidder and without notifying Borden of this fact." The complaint did not allege that Borden's second bid was induced by any misrepresentation. The Court of Appeals recognized that the Kroger case involved a "lying buyer," but stated that there was no meaningful distinction between the situation where "the buyer lies or merely keeps quiet about the nature of the competing bid." 557 F.2d 971, 983.

Despite this background, the respondent argues that A&P did engage in misrepresentations and therefore can be found liable as a "lying buyer" under the rationale of the Kroger case. The misrepresentation relied upon by the respondent is a statement allegedly made by a representative of A&P to Borden after Borden made its second bid which would have resulted in annual savings to A&P of $ 820,000. The A&P representative allegedly told Borden to "sharpen your pencil a little bit because you are not quite there." But the Commission itself referred to this comment only to note its irrelevance, and neither the Commission nor

ÍÍ ÉÁVÉÚÁ JÉÁ FLÁJ ÁUÉÓGÁGÍ ÉÉJHHÁ JÄSÉOáÉGA ÁÍ HÄÉÉFÍ I LAFJÍ JÁVÉÉSÓYÓUÁ JÄÉÉEG

[***25] [*82] [**934] IV

Because both the Commission and the Court of Appeals proceeded on the assumption that a buyer who accepts the lower of two competitive bids can be liable under § 2 \(f\) even if the seller has a meeting-competition defense, there was not a specific finding that Borden did in fact have such a defense. But it quite clearly did.

A

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4] HN10 The test for determining when a seller has a valid meeting-competition defense is whether a seller can "show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor." FTC v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U.S. 746, 759-760. "A good-faith belief, rather than absolute certainty, that a price concession is being offered to meet an equally low price offered by a competitor is sufficient to satisfy the § 2 \(b\) defense." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 453.<sup>16</sup> [***165] [***26] Since good faith, rather than absolute certainty, is the touchstone of the meeting-competition defense, a seller can assert the defense even if it has unknowingly made a bid that in fact not only met but beat his competition. Id., at 454.

B

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5] [***27] Under the circumstances of this case, Borden did act reasonably and in good faith when it made its second bid. The petitioner, despite its longstanding relationship with Borden, was dissatisfied with Borden's first bid and solicited offers from other dairies. The subsequent events are aptly described in the opinion of the Commission:

"Thereafter, on August 31, 1965, A&P received an offer from Bowman Dairy that was lower than Borden's August 13 offer. On or about September 1, 1965, Elmer Schmidt, A&P's Chicago unit buyer, telephoned Gordon Tarr, Borden's Chicago chain store sales manager, and stated, 'I have a bid in my pocket. You [Borden] people are so far out of line it is not even funny. You are not even in the ball park.' Although Tarr asked Schmidt for some details, Schmidt said that he could not tell Tarr anything except that a $ 50,000 improvement in Borden's bid 'would not be a drop in the [bucket].' Contrary to its usual practice, A&P then offered Borden the opportunity [*84] to submit another bid." 87 F. T. C., at 1048 (Footnotes and record citations omitted.)

Thus, Borden was informed by the petitioner that it was in danger of losing its [***28] [**935] A&P business in the Chicago area unless it came up with a better offer. It was told that its first offer was "not even in the ball park" and that a $ 50,000 improvement "would not be a drop in the bucket." In light of Borden's established business relationship with the petitioner, Borden could justifiably conclude that A&P's statements were reliable and that it was necessary to make another bid offering substantial concessions to avoid losing its account with the petitioner.

the Court of Appeals mentioned it in considering the § 2 \(f\) charge against A&P. This is quite understandable, since the comment was allegedly made after Borden made its second bid and therefore cannot be said to have induced the bid as in the Kroger case.

Because A&P was not a "lying buyer," we need not decide whether such a buyer could be liable under § 2 \(f\) even if the seller has a meeting-competition defense.

<sup>16</sup> Recognition of the right of a seller to meet a lower competitive price in good faith may be the primary means of reconciling the Robinson-Patman Act with the more general purposes of the antitrust laws of encouraging competition between sellers. As the Court stated in Standard Oil Co. v. FTC, 340 U.S., at 249:

"We need not now reconcile, in its entirety, the economic theory which underlies the Robinson-Patman Act with that of the Sherman and Clayton Acts. It is enough to say that Congress did not seek by the Robinson-Patman Act either to abolish competition or so radically to curtail it that a seller would have no substantial right of self-defense against a price raid by a competitor."

11 ÉÁVÉÙÀ JÉÙ I LÁJÁÙÖÄGÍ ÈÆHÍ LÁ JÄÙÖÄGÁFÍ HÄÙÙI Í LÄFJÍ JÁÙÙSÖYÖÙÁ JÄÙÙEG

Borden was unable to ascertain the details of the Bowman bid. It requested more information about the bid from the petitioner, but this request was refused. It could not then attempt to verify the existence and terms of the competing offer from Bowman without risking Sherman Act liability. United States v. United States Gypsum Co., supra. Faced with a substantial loss of business and unable to find out the precise details of the competing bid, Borden made another offer stating that it was doing so in order to meet competition. Under these circumstances, the conclusion is virtually inescapable that in making that offer Borden acted in a reasonable and good-faith effort to meet [***29] its competition, [***166] and therefore was entitled to a meeting-competition defense.<sup>17</sup>

[***30]

[*85] LEdHN[1C]↑ [1C]Since Borden had a meeting-competition defense and thus could not be liable under § 2 (b), the petitioner who did no more than accept that offer cannot be liable under § 2 (f).<sup>18</sup>

Accordingly, the judgment is reversed.

It is so ordered.

MR. JUSTICE STEVENS took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Concur by: WHITE (In Part)

Dissent by: WHITE (In Part); MARSHALL (In Part)

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE WHITE, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I concur in Parts I, II, and III of the Court's opinion, but dissent from Part IV. Because it was thought the issue was irrelevant where the buyer knows that the price offered is lower than necessary to meet competition, neither the Commission nor the Court of Appeals decided whether [***31] Borden itself would have had a valid meeting-competition defense. The Court should not decide this question here, but should remand to the Commission, whose job it is initially to consider such matters.

For the reason stated by the Commission and the Court of Appeals, I am also convinced that the United States made a sufficient, unrebutted showing that Borden would not have a cost-justification defense to a Robinson-Patman Act charge.

MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, dissenting in part.

---

<sup>17</sup> The facts of this case are thus readily distinguishable from Corn Products Co. v. FTC, 324 U.S. 726, and FTC v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U.S. 746, in both of which the Court held that a seller had failed to establish a meeting-competition defense. In the Corn Products case, the only evidence to rebut the prima facie case of price discrimination was testimony by witnesses who had no personal knowledge of the transactions in question. Similarly, in the Staley Mfg. Co. case, unsupported testimony from informants of uncertain character and reliability was insufficient to establish the defense. In the present case, by contrast, the source of the information was a person whose reliability was not questioned and who had personal knowledge of the competing bid. Moreover, Borden attempted to investigate by asking A&P for more information about the competing bid. Finally, Borden was faced with a credible threat of a termination of purchases by A&P if it did not make a second offer. All of these factors serve to show that Borden did have a valid meeting-competition defense. See United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S., at 454.

<sup>18</sup> Because we hold that the petitioner is not liable under § 2 (f), we do not reach the question whether Borden might also have had a cost-justification defense under § 2 (a).

II ÉÁWÉJÁA JÉÉÍ LÁJÁUÉDÁGÍ ÉÉEHÍ LÁ JÄÉDÅÉCA ÁFÍ HÄÉÉÉÍ I LÄFJÍ JÄÉÉSÖYÖUÁ JÄÉÉÉH

I agree with the Court that the Federal Trade Commission and the Court of Appeals applied the wrong legal standard in [*86] assessing A&P's liability under the Robinson-Patman Act. However, I cannot join the Court's interpretation of § 2 (f) as precluding buyer liability under this Act unless the seller could also be found liable for price [**936] discrimination. Neither the language nor the sparse legislative history of § 2 (f) justifies this enervating standard for the determination of buyer liability. To the contrary, the Court's construction disregards the congressional purpose to curtail the coercive practices of chainstores and other large buyers. [***167] Having formulated a new legal [***32] standard, the Court then applies it here in the first instance rather than remanding the case to the Commission. Given the numerous ambiguities in the record, I believe the Court thereby improperly arrogates to itself the role of the trier of fact.

I

Section 2 (f) provides that "[it] shall be unlawful for any person . . . knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section." (Emphasis added.) The Court interprets the italicized language as "plainly meaning" that a buyer can be found liable for knowingly inducing price discrimination only if his seller is first proved liable under §§ 2 (a) and 2 (b). Ante, at 76, 81. Under this construction, proceedings involving only the Commission and a buyer will turn upon proof of a seller's liability, and whenever a seller could successfully claim the meeting-competition defense, the buyer must be exonerated.

In my view, the language of § 2 (f) does not compel this circuitous method of establishing buyer liability. Sections 2 (a) and 2 (b) of the Act define the elements of price discrimination and the affirmative defenses available to sellers. When Congress extended liability to buyers [***33] who encourage price discrimination, a ready means of defining the prohibition was to rely on the elements and defenses already delineated in §§ 2 (a) and 2 (b). Thus, the phrase "which is prohibited by this section" in § 2 (f) incorporates these elements and [*87] defenses by reference, making them applicable to buyers. So construed, § 2 (f) simply means that the same elements of a prima facie case must be established and the same basic affirmative defenses available, whether buyer or seller liability is in issue. The section does not require that another party actually satisfy all of the conditions of §§ 2 (a) and 2 (b) before buyer liability can even be considered. Determining buyer and seller liability independently, I believe, places less strain on the "plain meaning" of the language of § 2 (f) than does the absolutely derivative standard the majority announces today.

In construing § 2 (f), the Court relies on Congress' delay in adding the section to the final bill and on a remark by Representative Utterback during the legislative debates. Ante, at 75-77, and n. 10. The delay provides little logical justification for the Court's interpretation; rather, it more [***34] likely reflects Congress' late realization that halting the abusive practices of buyers<sup>1</sup> could not be accomplished solely through imposition of liability on sellers. Representative Utterback's statement, 80 Cong. Rec. 9419 (1936), amounts to a slight paraphrase of § 2 (f) and in no way supports [***168] the Court's derivative standard.

[***35] I agree with the Court's suggestion, ante, at 80, that we must resolve the dilemma confronting a buyer who properly invites a seller to meet a competitor's price and then fortuitously [*88] obtains a lower bid. Congress could not have expected the buyer to choose between asking the seller to increase the bid to a specific price or accepting the lower bid and facing liability under § 2 (f). Rather, it must have intended some accommodation [**937] for buyers who act in good faith yet receive bids that beat competition. This does not mean, however, that a buyer should be liable under § 2 (f) only if his seller also would be liable. That solution to the buyer's dilemma would enable him to manufacture his own defense by misrepresenting to a seller the response needed to meet a competitor's bid and then allowing the seller to rely in good faith on incorrect information. The Court purports to reserve this "lying buyer" issue, ante, at 81-82, n. 15, but the derivative standard it adopts today belies the reservation. If "prohibited by this section" means that a buyer's liability depends on that of the seller, then absent seller liability, the buyer's conduct and bad [***36] faith are necessarily irrelevant.

<sup>1</sup> See S. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. (1936); H. R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., 3-7, 17 (1936); H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 2951, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. (1936); FTC, Final Report on the Chain-Store Investigation, S. Doc. No. 4, 74th Cong., 1st Sess. (1935); FTC v. Henry Broch & Co., 363 U.S. 166, 168-169 (1960); W. Patman, Complete Guide to the Robinson-Patman Act 7-10 (1963); F. Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act 8-14 (1962). See generally Hearings on Price Discrimination (S. 4171) before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. (1936); Hearings on H. R. 8442, H. R. 4995, and H. R. 5062 before the House Committee on the Judiciary, 74th Cong., 1st Sess. (1935).

II ÉÁMÉJÉA JÉHÉ Í LÁJÁUÉOÉGÍ ÉEJHÍ LÁ JÄSÉOáÉCA ÁFÍ HÄÉHÉ Í LÁFJÍ JÁNÉÉSÓYÓUÁ JÉHÉHÍ

I would hold that under § 2 (f), the Robinson-Patman Act defenses must be available to buyers on the same basic terms as they are to sellers. To be sure, some differences in the nature of the defenses would obtain because of the different bargaining positions of sellers and buyers. With respect to the meeting-competition defense at issue here, a seller can justify a price discrimination by showing that his lower price was offered in "good faith" to meet that of a competitor. Ante, at 82-83; United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 450-455 (1978). In my view, a buyer should be able to claim that defense -- independently of the seller -- if he acted in good faith to induce the seller to meet a competitor's price, regardless of whether the seller's price happens to beat the competitor's. But a buyer who induces the lower bid by misrepresentation should not escape Robinson-Patman Act liability. See Kroger Co. v. FTC, 438 F.2d 1372 (CA6) (Clark, J.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 871 (1971). This definition of the meeting-competition defense both extricates buyers from an impossible [***37] dilemma and respects the congressional [*89] intent to prevent buyers from abusing their market power to gain competitive advantage.<sup>2</sup>

[***38] [***169] Automatic Canteen Co. of America v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61 (1953), is entirely consistent with this interpretation of § 2 (f). The issue there concerned the allocation of "the burden of coming forward with evidence under § 2 (f) of the Act," 346 U.S., at 65, not the precise contours of the elements and defenses that determine the scope of buyer liability. Automatic Canteen's general discussion of § 2 (f)'s substantive requirements, quoted ante, at 77-78, merely explains that the affirmative defenses "available to sellers" must also be available to buyers. Far from pronouncing that buyer liability is derivative, Automatic Canteen began with the observation that § 2 (f) is "roughly the counterpart, as to buyers, of sections of the Act dealing with discrimination by sellers." 346 U.S., at 63 (emphasis added).<sup>3</sup>

[***39] [*90] [**938] II

In my judgment, the numerous ambiguities in the record dictate that this case be remanded to the Commission. The Court, however, avoids a remand by concluding in the first instance that A&P's seller necessarily had a meeting-competition defense.<sup>4</sup> In so doing, the Court usurps the factfinding function best performed by the <sup>2</sup> See S. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., 3-4, 7 (1936); H. R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., 3-7, 14-17 (1936); Patman, supra, at 7-10, 148-151; Rowe, supra, at 8-23.

The Court recently noted in United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 455 n. 30 (1978), that "[it] may also turn out that sustained enforcement of § 2 (f) . . . will serve to bolster the credibility of buyers' representations and render reliance thereon by sellers a more reasonable and secure predicate for a finding of good faith under § 2 (b)." (Citation omitted.) But if neither a buyer nor a seller can be liable when the seller relies in good faith on the buyer's misrepresentations, then enforcement of § 2 (f) will not "bolster the credibility" of buyers. Thus, the derivative standard of liability adopted by the Court today is inconsistent with the premise underlying the Court's suggestion in United States Gypsum, see Note, The Supreme Court, 1977 Term, 92 Harv. L. Rev. 57, 288, 291-294 (1978), and it eliminates one means of reassuring sellers that they may rely on buyer representations.

<sup>3</sup> Given this preface to Automatic Canteen, language in that opinion provides little support for the Court's adoption today of a derivative standard with respect to the buyer's meeting-competition defense. Moreover, to the extent the majority believes its resort to literal construction of § 2 (f) forecloses further inquiry, it ignores the broader teaching of Automatic Canteen. That case adopted a common-sense approach for interpreting the often ambiguous Robinson-Patman Act, tempering a "merely literal reading of the language" with considerations of "fairness and convenience" when necessary to achieve Congress' purpose. 346 U.S., at 79, and n. 23. On that basis, Automatic Canteen allocated to the Commission the burden of production regarding a buyer's cost-justification defense, even though the Commission does not bear that burden in a proceeding against a seller. Id. at 75-76; FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 44-45 (1948). Indeed, the Court's interpretation of § 2 (f) today, which places buyers in the litigating position of their sellers, may also be incompatible with Automatic Canteen's specific holding on the burden of production.

Commission.<sup>5</sup> Neither the Administrative Law Judge, the Commission, nor the Court of Appeals determined that Borden would have been entitled to claim the meeting-competition defense. Indeed, the Administrative Law Judge suggested the opposite, 87 F. T. C. 962, 1021 \(1976\), and the Commission stated:

"We believe that it is very probable that Borden did not have such a defense. To have a meeting competition [*91] defense, the record must demonstrate the existence of facts [***170] which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to conclude that the lower price would, in fact, meet the competitor's price. As noted, Borden had serious doubts concerning whether the competing bid was legal. Specifically, it believed that the other bid only considered direct costs. It should have asked A&P for more information [***40] about the competing bid. By not making the request, it was not acting prudently. As the record clearly indicates, A&P had knowledge of Borden's belief that other dairies might submit bids that did not include all costs." 87 F. T. C. 1047, 1057 n. 19 \(1976\) (citations omitted; emphasis in original).

[****41] Furthermore, if the Court truly intends to avoid deciding the "lying buyer" issue, then it should remand the case for determination of whether the exception applies here. Testimony before the Administrative Law Judge directly raised the possibility that A&P misled Borden to believe a still lower price was necessary than Borden had offered when it first responded to the Bowman bid. App. 117a-118a, 123a-124a, 141a-142a.<sup>6</sup> Both the Administrative Law [**939] Judge and the [*92] Commission credited that testimony, see 87 F. T. C., at 979, 1021-1022; 87 F. T. C., at 1049 n. 3, but since evidence of misrepresentation was not material under the standard they applied, there were no clear findings of fact on the point. Under these circumstances, this Court should not attempt to elide such testimony by the unsubstantiated conclusion that Borden's final bid was unaffected by any misrepresentation. Ante, at 81-82, n. 15; see n. 6, supra.

[****42] Accordingly, I dissent from the Court's adoption of a derivative standard for determining buyer liability and its resolution of disputed factual issues without a remand.

References

---

<sup>4</sup> Because the Court reverses the judgment without remanding for further consideration and does not expressly reach the merits of the cost-justification issue raised by A&P, ante, at 85 n. 18, I need not address that issue either.

<sup>5</sup> Considering the recent admonition in United States Gypsum, supra, at 456 n. 31, that "[the] case-by-case interpretation and elaboration of the § 2 (b) defense is properly left to the other federal courts and the FTC in the context of concrete fact situations," the Court's action is particularly inappropriate.

While I question the Court's decision to undertake resolution of this factual question, without even determining which party bore the burden of persuasion, I do not understand Part IV of its opinion as purporting to modify in any sense what was said last Term in United States Gypsum about the scope of the meeting-competition defense for sellers.

<sup>6</sup> The Court's opinion creates the impression that Borden submitted only two proposals, ante, at 81-82, n. 15, 83-84. In fact, A&P induced Borden to make a third proposal, even though the second was already more favorable than Bowman's.

When Borden initially responded to Bowman's bid, the A&P representative rejected Borden's offer on the ground that it included milk sold in glass gallon containers, whereas other bidders supposedly had not included that item. Actually, Bowman's bid had included glass gallons and A&P had subsequently decided against using glass containers. 87 F. T. C. 962, 979 \(1976\); App. 73a-74a, 116a-118a, 257a-260a, 774a-775a. The effect of forcing Borden to delete milk sold in glass gallons from the proposal without raising the overall bid, was to increase the savings to A&P on other products still covered because part of the promised savings had been derived from the sale of the cheaper glass gallons. See 87 F. T. C., at 979-980. In addition, while Borden was preparing a third proposal to reflect the deletion, A&P suggested that Borden make further price reductions, saying "sharpen your pencil a little bit because you are not quite there." App. 118a. As a result, Borden reduced its prices still further to yield additional savings of approximately $ 5,000 to $ 8,000. The bid finally accepted by A&P incorporated these price reductions as well as those attributable to the deletion of glass gallons. See id., at 117a-118a, 123a-124a, 141a-142a.

11 €ÁVÉÙÀ JÆEGLÁJÀ ÆÓÐÁGÍ ÆEJHULÁ JÆSEØAÐGA ÁFI HÆTEFFI ØLFJÍ JÁMEESØYØA JÆEÙÙ G

Construction and application of "good faith meeting competition" defense of Clayton Act, as amended by Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(b\))

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 150

12 Federal Procedural Forms L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:111

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, Form 29

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 13

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 36

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Robinson Patman Act

Annotation References:

Construction and application of "good faith meeting competition" defense of Clayton Act, as amended by Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(b\)). [****43] 59 L Ed 2d 810.

Robinson-Patman Act as construed by Supreme Court. 2 L Ed 2d 1737.

---

End of Document

Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

October 11, 1978, Argued ; February 27, 1979, Decided

No. 77-952

Reporter

440 U.S. 205 *; 99 S. Ct. 1067 **; 59 L. Ed. 2d 261 ***; 1979 U.S. LEXIS 29 ****; 1979-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P62,479

GROUP LIFE & HEALTH INSURANCE CO., AKA BLUE SHIELD OF TEXAS, ET AL. v. ROYAL DRUG CO., INC., DBA ROYAL PHARMACY OF CASTLE HILLS, ET AL.

Subsequent History: [****1] Petition For Rehearing Denied April 16, 1979.

Prior History: CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEAL FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 556 F.2d 1375, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

insurance business, Pharmacy, insurer, exemption, policyholders, McCarran-Ferguson Act, regulation, insurance company, underwriting, anti trust law, provider, plans, service-benefit, contracts, reliability, premiums, insurance industry, rates, benefits, costs, legislative history, participating, obligations, spreading, cooperative, drugs, insurance commissioner, transactions, agrees, risks

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN1 [down arrow] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1011.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

HN2 [down arrow] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

The starting point in any case involving the meaning of a statute is the language of the statute itself.

II. ÉNHEJGEÍ ÞEGÉ LÁJÁUÐÓÐÉ Í ÞÆFÉ Í LÁ JÁSEÐAÐGA ÁG FÆREG ÐLÁFJÍ JÁHEÐSÓY QUÁG ÐÆFÉ

Insurance Law > Contract Formation > General Overview

Insurance Law > Contract Formation

HN3 Insurance Law, Contract Formation

The primary elements of an insurance contract are the spreading and underwriting of a policyholder's risk. It is characteristic of insurance that a number of risks are accepted, some of which involve losses, and that such losses are spread over all the risks so as to enable the insurer to accept each risk at a slight fraction of the possible liability upon it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Insurance Law > Contract Formation > General Overview

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

In enacting the McCarran-Ferguson Act 15 U.S.C.S. § 1011, Congress was concerned with: The relationship between insurer and insured, the type of policy which could be issued, its reliability, interpretation, and enforcement--these were the core of the "business of insurance." The focus is on the relationship between the insurance company and the policyholder.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Governments > Legislation > Enactment > Veto

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

HN5 Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Congress provided in 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012\(b\) that the antitrust laws shall be applicable unless the activities of insurance companies are the business of insurance and regulated by state law. Moreover, under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1013\(b\) the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, was made applicable in any event to acts of boycott, coercion, or intimidation. To allow the states time to adjust to the applicability of the antitrust laws to the insurance industry, Congress imposed a 3-year moratorium. After the expiration of the moratorium on July 1, 1948, however, Congress clearly provided that the antitrust laws would be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by state law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Í Í LÁ JÁSEÓAÉGÁG FÁREG FLÁJÍ JÁMEÉSÓYÓÁGÍ

While the power of the states to tax and regulate insurance companies was reaffirmed, the McCarran-Ferguson Act (the Act), 15 U.S.C.S. § 1011, also established that the insurance industry would no longer have a blanket exemption from the antitrust laws. It is true that § 2 \(b\) of the Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012\(b\) does create a partial exemption from those laws. Perhaps more significantly, however, that section, and the Act as a whole, embody a legislative rejection of the concept that the insurance industry is outside the scope of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

**HN7** Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

References to the meaning of the business of insurance in the legislative history of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1011, strongly suggest that Congress understood the business of insurance to be the underwriting and spreading of risk.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

**HN8** Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Congress certainly did not intend the definition of the business of insurance to be broader than its commonly understood meaning.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN9** Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Exemptions from the antitrust laws are to be narrowly construed. This doctrine is not limited to implicit exemptions from the antitrust laws, but applies with equal force to express statutory exemptions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Capper-Volstead Act

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

**HN10** Collectives & Cooperatives, Capper-Volstead Act

An exempt entity forfeits antitrust exemption by acting in concert with nonexempt parties.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Insurer-pharmacy agreements implementing prescription drug benefit for insurer's policyholders, held not exempt from antitrust laws as "business of insurance" under McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1012\(b\)).

Summary

In order to implement provisions of its insurance policies which entitled policyholders to obtain prescription drugs, a Texas insurance company entered into agreements with pharmacies in Texas whereby the pharmacies agreed to furnish the insurer's policyholders with prescription drugs at the price of two dollars per prescription and the insurance company agreed to reimburse the pharmacies for their costs in acquiring prescription drugs sold to policyholders. Alleging violations of federal antitrust laws arising from the insurer-pharmacy agreements, certain pharmacies which had not entered into agreements with the insurance company brought an action in the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas, claiming that the insurance company and pharmacies with which it had entered into agreements had violated 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) by agreeing to fix the retail prices of drugs and pharmaceuticals, and that their activities had caused the insurance company's policyholders not to deal with certain of the plaintiffs. The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants on the ground that the agreements were exempt from federal antitrust laws under the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1011 et seq.), which, through 2(b) of the Act (15 USCS 1012\(b\)), renders the federal antitrust laws inapplicable to the "business of insurance" to the extent such business is regulated by state law and is not subject to the "boycott" exception of 3(b) of the Act (15 USCS 1013\(b\)), the District Court having found that for purposes of 2(b) of the Act, the agreements constituted the "business of insurance" regulated by Texas and that the agreements were not "boycotts" within the meaning of 3(b) of the Act \(415 F Supp 343\). The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed on appeal, holding that the agreements in question were not the "business of insurance" within the meaning of 2(b) of the Act \(556 F2d 1375\).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Stewart, J., joined by White, Blackmun, Rehnquist, and Stevens, JJ., it was held that the agreements between the insurance company and the pharmacies did not constitute the "business of insurance" for purposes of 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, since the agreements did not involve any underwriting or spreading of risks, but were mere arrangements for the purchase of goods and services by the insurance company, and since the agreements were not between an insurer and insureds, but were separate contractual arrangements between the insurance company and parties engaged in the sale and distribution of goods and services other than insurance.

Brennan, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and Marshall, and Powell, JJ., dissenting, expressed the view that some "provider" agreements negotiated to carry out an insurer's policy obligations to its insureds should be considered part of the "business of insurance" for purposes of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, and that the specific agreements at issue in the case at bar should be considered part of such business.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §29 > McCarran-Ferguson Act -- "business of insurance" -- exemption from federal antitrust laws -- agreements between insurer and pharmacies -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]

Agreements between an insurance company and pharmacies, whereby the pharmacies agree to furnish the insurer's policyholders with prescription drugs at a stated, fixed, relatively small price per prescription in return for the insurer's agreeing to reimburse the pharmacies for their costs in acquiring such prescription drugs do not constitute the "business of insurance" for purposes of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1011 et seq.), which operates so as to render the federal antitrust laws inapplicable to the "business of insurance" to the extent such business is regulated by state law (15 USCS 1012\(b\)) and is not subject to the Act's "boycott" exception (15 USCS 1013\(b\)), since the agreements do not involve any underwriting or spreading of risk, but constitute mere arrangements for the purchase of goods and services by the insurer, and since the agreements are not between an insurer and insureds, but are separate contractual arrangements between an insurance company and parties engaged in the sale and distribution of goods and services other than insurance. (Brennan, J., Burger, Ch. J., and Marshall and Powell, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

Ι ΕΆΝΕΙ ΈΓΕΙ ΠΑΡΕΙ ΛΑΙ Ι ΑΥΞΑΝΕΙ ΕΙ ΠΑΡΕΙ Ι ΛΑΙ ΑΣΕΩΑ ΕΓΑ ΑΓΙ ΦΑΛΗΓ ΦΛΑΓΙ Ι Ι ΑΝΕΙ ΕΣΟΥ ΟΙ ΑΓΙ ΠΑΡΕΙ

COMMERCE §103(1) > STATUTES §163 > construction -- McCarran-Ferguson Act -- language -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[2] [  ] [2]

The starting point in a case involving construction of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1011 et seq.), setting forth the policy favoring regulation of the business of insurance by the state--like the starting point in any case involving the meaning of a statute--is the language of the statute itself.

MONOPOLIES §29 > McCarran-Ferguson Act -- exemption from federal antitrust laws -- "business of insurance" --

> Headnote:

LEdHN[3] [  ] [3]

Section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1012\(b\)), declaring that a federal statute is not to be construed to invalidate state laws enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance unless the federal law specifically relates to the business of insurance, does not exempt the business of insurance companies from the scope of federal antitrust laws, the exemption being for the "business of insurance," not the "business of insurers"; 2(b) applies only when insurance companies are engaged in the "business of insurance."

INSURANCE §46 > contract -- primary elements -- policyholder's risk -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[4] [  ] [4]

The primary elements of an insurance contract are the spreading and underwriting of a policyholder's risk.

INSURANCE §1 > underwriting or spreading of risk -- indispensable characteristic -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[5] [  ] [5]

Underwriting or spreading of risk is an indispensable characteristic of insurance.

COMMERCE §103(1) > McCarran-Ferguson Act -- "business of insurance" -- agreement necessary for insurer's providing insurance -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[6A] [  ] [6A] LEdHN[6B] [  ] [6B]

Simply because an agreement between an insurer and another party is necessary in order for the insurer to provide insurance does not mean that such an agreement constitutes the "business of insurance" for purposes of the provisions of 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1012\(b\)), which direct that a federal law is not to be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede state laws enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance unless the federal law specifically relates to the business of insurance; and thus, the fact that a line of credit agreement or other commercial arrangement with a bank is necessary in order for an indemnity insurer to pay off monetary claims does not mean that such an agreement constitutes the "business of insurance."

11. ~~ÉÁNÈJÉGÍ ÞEGÉ LÁJÁUÉÓÐÆF Í ÆFF Í LÁ JÁSEÓaÉGA ÁG FÆREG ÐLÁFJÍ JÁUÉSÓYQÁG ÐÆFF~~

COMMERCE §103(1) > McCarran-Ferguson Act -- "business of insurance" -- acquisitions by insurer -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

For purposes of the provisions of 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1012\(b\)), providing that a federal law is not to be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any state laws enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance unless the federal law specifically relates to the business of insurance, an insurance company's acquisition of a manufacturer or a retail chain in order to lower the insurer's cost of meeting its obligations to policyholders does not constitute the "business of insurance."

MONOPOLIES §7 > federal antitrust laws -- exemption -- construction -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

The rule that exemptions from federal antitrust laws are to be narrowly construed is not limited to implicit exemptions from the antitrust laws, but applies with equal force to express statutory exemptions.

MONOPOLIES §46 > labor unions -- pattern bargaining -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[9A\]](#) [9A] [LEdHN\[9B\]](#) [9B]

A union may make wage agreements with a multi-employer bargaining unit and may, in pursuance of its own union interests, seek to obtain the same terms from other employers without violating federal antitrust laws.

MONOPOLIES §9 > labor unions -- agreement for pattern bargaining -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

A union forfeits its exemption from federal antitrust laws when it agrees with one set of employers to impose a certain wage scale on other bargaining units; one group of employers may not conspire to eliminate competitors from an industry, and the union is liable with the employers if it becomes a party to the conspiracy.

Syllabus

---

Petitioner Blue Shield, a Texas insurance company, offers policies that entitle the insured to obtain prescription drugs. The insured may obtain the drugs from a pharmacy participating in a "Pharmacy Agreement" with Blue Shield (in which case the insured must pay only $ 2 for every prescription drug, with the remainder of the cost being paid directly by Blue Shield to the participating pharmacy) or from a nonparticipating pharmacy (in which case the insured pays the full price and may be reimbursed by Blue Shield for 75% of the difference between that price and $ 2). Blue Shield offered to enter into a Pharmacy Agreement with each licensed [****2] pharmacy in Texas, the participating pharmacy to agree to furnish Blue Shield policyholders prescription drugs at $ 2 each, with Blue Shield to agree to reimburse the pharmacy for its cost in acquiring the drug. Respondents, nonparticipating pharmacies, brought this antitrust action alleging that Blue Shield and three participating pharmacies, also petitioners, had violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by entering into agreements fixing the retail prices of drugs and that petitioners' activities had caused Blue Shield policyholders to boycott certain respondents. The trial court granted petitioners summary judgment on the ground that the agreements are exempt from the antitrust laws under § 2 (b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (Act), because the agreements are the "business of insurance," are regulated by Texas, and are not boycotts within the meaning of the Act. The Court of Appeals reversed. Held: The Pharmacy Agreements are not the "business of insurance" within the meaning of § 2 (b). Pp. 210-233.

II ÉÁNÉÜÉGÉÍ ÉÁGÉÍ LÁJÁUÉÓÄFÉÍ Í ÉÁFÉÍ Í LÁ JÁSEÓaÉGÁG FÁEEGÍ FLÁJÍ JÁMÉÜÉSÓYQÁGÉÁEE

- (a) Section 2 (b) exempts the "business of insurance," not the "business of insurers." Pp. 210-211.
- (b) A primary element of an insurance contract is the underwriting or spreading [****3] of risk, SEC v. Variable Annuity Life Ins. Co., 359 U.S. 65, but that element is not involved in the Pharmacy Agreements, which are merely arrangements for the purchase of goods and services by Blue Shield, enabling it to effect cost savings. Pp. 211-215.
- (c) The Pharmacy Agreements involve contractual arrangements between Blue Shield and the pharmacies, not its policyholders. Pp. 215-217.
- (d) The legislative history of the Act confirms the conclusion that the "business of insurance" was understood by Congress to involve the underwriting of risk and the relationship and transactions between insurance companies and their policyholders, and no legislative intention is disclosed to exempt agreements or transactions between insurance companies and entities outside the insurance industry. Moreover, at the time of the Act's enactment health-care plans such as those of Blue Shield were not considered to constitute insurance at all, and it is difficult to assume that Congress, contrary to that contemporary view, could have considered such plans to be the "business of insurance" within the meaning of the Act. Even if Congress did consider certain aspects of such plans [****4] to be the "business of insurance," however, it still does not follow that the Pharmacy Agreements in this case are within the meaning of that phrase. Pp. 217-230.
- (e) This result is consistent with the principle that exemptions from the antitrust laws are to be construed narrowly. Pp. 231-233.

Counsel: Keith E. Kaiser argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were J. Burleson Smith, R. Laurence Macon, Richard A. Whiting, Charles R. Shaddox, D. Dudley Oldham, Martin D. Beirne, William R. Pakalka, William C. Church, Jr., and Richard B. Moore.

Joel H. Pullen argued the cause and filed a brief for respondents.

Richard A. Allen argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging affirmance. With him on the brief were Solicitor General McCree, Assistant Attorney General Shenefield, and Barry Grossman.*

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed by Thomas E. Kauper, John A. Fillion, M. Jay Whitman, J. Albert Woll, and Laurence Gold for the International Union, UAW, et al.; by James W. Rankin and Roger G. Wilson for the Blue Shield Assn.; by Peter F. Sloss and Godfrey L. Munter, Jr., for the California Dental Service et al.; by Chester Inwald for the District Council 37 Health & Security Plan et al.; by John H. Pickering, Arnold M. Lerman, C. Loring Jetton, Jr., and William H. Crabtree for the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Assn. of the United States, Inc.; and by Stephen F. Gordon for the United Federation of Teachers Welfare Fund.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed by William J. Brown, Attorney General, and Charles D. Weller for the State of Ohio; by Donald A. Randall and Jonathan T. Howe for the Automotive Service Councils, Inc.; by Richard M. Rindler and Phillip

II ÉÁNÉÜÉGÍ ÉEGÉ LÁJÁUÉÓÉFÉ I ÉEEÉ Í LÁ JÁSEÓaÉGÁG FÉEEÉ FLÁJÍ JÁNÉÉSÓYÓÁGÉÉÉ

[***5]

Judges: STEWART, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which WHITE, BLACKMUN, REHNQUIST, and STEVENS, JJ., joined. BRENNAN, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which BURGER, C. J., and MARSHALL and POWELL, JJ., joined, post, p. 233.

Opinion by: STEWART

Opinion

---

[*207] [***266] [**1071] MR. JUSTICE STEWART delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A]The respondents, 18 owners of independent pharmacies in San Antonio, Tex., brought an antitrust action in a Federal District Court against the petitioners, Group Life and Health Insurance Co., known as Blue Shield of Texas (Blue Shield), and three pharmacies also doing business in San Antonio. The complaint alleged that the petitioners had violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1, by entering agreements to fix the retail prices of drugs and pharmaceuticals, and that the activities of the petitioners had caused Blue Shield's policyholders not to deal with certain of the respondents, thereby constituting an unlawful group boycott. The trial court granted summary judgment to the petitioners on the ground that the challenged [***6] agreements are exempt from the antitrust laws under § 2 (b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 59 Stat. 34, as amended, 61 Stat. 448, 15 U. S. C. § 1012 (b), because the agreements are the "business of insurance," are "regulated by [Texas] law," and are not "boycotts" within the meaning of § 3 (b) of the Act, 59 Stat. 34, 15 U. S. C. [*208] § 1013 (b).<sup>1</sup> [***7] 415 F.Supp. 343 (WD Tex.). [**1072] The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed the judgment. Holding that the agreements in question are not the "business of insurance" within the meaning of § 2 (b), the appellate

---

A. Proger for the National Assn. of Retail Druggists; by A. Stewart Kerr for the Pharmacists Guild of Michigan; and by Roger Tilbury and Henry Kane for the Portland Retail Druggists Assn., Inc.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed by Max Thelen, Jr., for the Kaiser-Permanente Medical Care Program; and by Jon S. Hanson, Richard A. Hemmings, and David J. Brummond for the National Assn. of Insurance Commissioners.

<sup>1</sup> The Act provides in relevant part:

HN1 [↑] "Congress hereby declares that the continued regulation and taxation by the several States of the business of insurance is in the public interest, and that silence on the part of the Congress shall not be construed to impose any barrier to the regulation or taxation of such business by the several States.

"Sec. 2. (a) The business of insurance, and every person engaged therein, shall be subject to the laws of the several States which relate to the regulation or taxation of such business.

"(b) No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, or which imposes a fee or tax upon such business, unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance: Provided, That after June 30, 1948, the Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, known as the Sherman Act, and the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended, known as the Clayton Act, and the Act of September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law.

"Sec. 3. (a) Until June 30, 1948, the Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, known as the Sherman Act, and the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended, known as the Clayton Act, and the Act of September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission Act, . . . and the Act of June 19, 1936, known as the Robinson-Patman Anti-discrimination Act, shall not apply to the business of insurance or to acts in the conduct thereof.

"(b) Nothing contained in this Act shall render the said Sherman Act inapplicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation." 59 Stat. 33-34, as amended, 61 Stat. 448.

II ÉÁNÉÜÉGÉÍ ÉÁGGÉ LÁJÁÜÉDÉFÉ Í ÉÁFFÉ GLÁ JÁSEÓáÉGÁG FÉÁEGÉ Í LÁJÍ JÁNEÜÉSÓYÓÁGÉÁÉÉ court did not reach the other questions decided by the trial court. 556 F.2d 1375. We granted certiorari because of intercircuit conflicts as to the meaning of the phrase "business of insurance" in § 2 \(b\) of the Act.<sup>2</sup> 435 U.S. 903.

[*209] I

[***267] Blue Shield offers insurance policies which entitle the policyholders to obtain prescription drugs. If the pharmacy selected by the insured has entered into a "Pharmacy Agreement" with Blue Shield, and is therefore a participating pharmacy, the insured is required to pay only $ 2 for every prescription drug. The remainder of the cost is paid directly by Blue Shield to the participating pharmacy. If, on the other hand, the insured selects a pharmacy which has not entered into a Pharmacy Agreement, and is therefore a nonparticipating pharmacy, he is required to pay the full price charged by the pharmacy. The insured may then [***8] obtain reimbursement from Blue Shield for 75% of the difference between that price and $ 2.

Blue Shield offered to enter into a Pharmacy Agreement with each licensed pharmacy in Texas. Under the Agreement, a participating pharmacy agrees to furnish prescription drugs to Blue Shield's policyholders at $ 2 for each prescription, and Blue Shield agrees to reimburse the pharmacy for the pharmacy's cost of acquiring the amount of the drug prescribed. Thus, only pharmacies that can afford to distribute prescription drugs for less than this $ 2 markup can profitably participate in the plan.<sup>3</sup>

[***9]

[*210] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B]The only issue before us is whether the Court of Appeals was correct in concluding that these Pharmacy Agreements are not the "business of insurance" within the meaning of § 2 \(b\) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. If that conclusion is correct, then the Agreements are not exempt from examination under the antitrust laws.<sup>4</sup> Whether the Agreements are illegal under the antitrust laws is an entirely separate question, not now before us.<sup>5</sup>

[***10] [***268] [**1073] II

A

<sup>2</sup>The position of the Fifth Circuit is in conflict with that of the Third, Fourth, and District of Columbia Circuits. See Frankford Hospital v. Blue Cross of Greater Philadelphia, 554 F.2d 1253 (CA3 1977); Anderson v. Medical Service of District of Columbia, 551 F.2d 304 (CA4 1977); Proctor v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 182 U. S. App. D. C. 264, 561 F.2d 262 (1977).

<sup>3</sup>The amicus curiae brief of the United States provides a useful illustration of the operation of the Pharmacy Agreement:

"Suppose the usual and customary retail price for a quantity of Drug X charged both by 'participating' Pharmacy A and 'non-participating' Pharmacy B is $ 10.00, and the wholesale price (or acquisition cost) to both is $ 8.00. If an insured buys Drug X from Pharmacy A, the insured pays $ 2.00. Pharmacy A receives $ 2.00 from the insured and $ 8.00 from Blue Shield, or $ 10.00 total. If an insured buys Drug X from Pharmacy B, the insured pays Pharmacy B $ 10.00, and receives $ 6.00 (75 percent of the difference between the retail price and $ 2.00) from Blue Shield. While Pharmacy B receives the same as Pharmacy A, the insured must pay $ 4.00 for the drug and also must take steps to obtain reimbursement."

"If the pharmacy's acquisition cost for the drug is $ 5.00 rather than $ 8.00, the situations of Pharmacy B and the insured are unchanged. But now Pharmacy A will receive only $ 5.00 from Blue Shield, for a total of $ 7.00."

<sup>4</sup>Even if they are the "business of insurance," the Agreements are exempt from the antitrust laws only if they are also "regulated by State law" within the meaning of § 2 \(b\) and not "boycotts" or other conduct described by § 3 (b). See n. 1, supra. See also St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531.

<sup>5</sup>It is axiomatic that conduct which is not exempt from the antitrust laws may nevertheless be perfectly legal. The United States in its amicus briefs urging affirmance has taken the position that the Pharmacy Agreements probably do not violate the antitrust laws, though recognizing that that issue is not presented here.

11. € ÁMÉRÍGÍ ÉGELÁJÁVÓDÉI Í ÉFFÉ HÁJASÉOÁÉGA ÁÍ FÉÉTG Í LAFJÍ JÁNÉSÓYÓJÁGÉÉÉÉ

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3] As the Court stated last Term in St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 541,<sup>6</sup> the starting point in a case involving construction of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, like HN2 the starting point in any case involving the meaning of a statute, is the language of the statute itself. See also Blue Chip Stamps v. Manor Drug Stores, 421 U.S. 723, 756 (POWELL, J., concurring). It is important, therefore, to observe at the outset that the statutory language in question [*211] here does not exempt the business of insurance companies from the scope of the antitrust laws. The exemption is for the "business of insurance," not the "business of insurers":

"The statute did not purport to make the States supreme in regulating all the activities of insurance companies; its language [****11] refers not to the persons or companies who are subject to state regulation, but to laws 'regulating the business of insurance.' Insurance companies may do many things which are subject to paramount federal regulation; only when they are engaged in the 'business of insurance' does the statute apply." SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 459-460. (Emphasis in original.)

Since the law does not define the "business of insurance," the question for decision is whether the Pharmacy Agreements fall within the ordinary understanding of that phrase, illuminated by any light to be found in the structure of the Act and its legislative history. Cf. Ernst & Ernst v. Hochfelder, 425 U.S. 185, 199, and n. 19.

B

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4] [****12] HN3 The primary elements of an insurance contract are the spreading and underwriting of a policyholder's risk. "It is characteristic of insurance that a number of risks are accepted, some of which involve losses, and that such losses are spread over all the risks so as to enable the insurer to accept each risk at a slight fraction of the possible liability upon it." 1 G. Couch, Cyclopedia of Insurance Law § 1:3 (2d ed. 1959). See also R. Keeton, Insurance Law § 1.2 (a) (1971) ("Insurance is an arrangement for transferring and distributing risk"); 1 G. Richards, The Law of Insurance § 2 (W. Freedman 5th ed. 1952).<sup>7</sup>

[****13]

[*212] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5] The significance of underwriting or spreading of risk as an indispensable characteristic of insurance was recognized by this Court in SEC v. Variable Annuity Life Ins. Co., 359 U.S. 65. That case involved several corporations, representing themselves as "life insurance" companies, that offered variable annuity contracts for sale in interstate commerce. [***269] The companies were regulated by the insurance commissioners of several States. Purchasers of the contracts were not entitled to any fixed return, but only to a pro rata participation in the investment portfolios of the companies. Thus a policyholder could receive substantial sums if investment decisions were successful, but very little if they were not. One of the questions presented was whether these variable annuity contracts were the "business of insurance" under § 2 \(b\) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act.<sup>8</sup> The <sup>6</sup> The issue in that case was the meaning of the "boycott" exception in § 3 (b) of the Act. The issue here, the meaning of the "business of insurance" exemption in § 2 \(b\) of the Act, was not before the Court.

<sup>7</sup> Webster's New International Dictionary of the English Language 1289 (unabr. 2d ed. 1958) defines insurance as:

"Act of insuring, or assuring, against loss or damage by a contingent event; a contract whereby, for a stipulated consideration, called a premium, one party undertakes to indemnify or guarantee another against loss by a certain specified contingency or peril, called a risk, the contract being set forth in a document called the policy. . . ."

<sup>8</sup> The issue in SEC v. Variable Annuity Life Ins. Co. was whether the variable annuity contracts were subject to regulation under the Securities Act of 1933 and the Investment Company Act of 1940. The Court held that the contracts were subject to such

11 € ÁMÉRÍGÉÍ ÉÁCGLÁJ ÁUÓDÉF Í ÉÁFE HÁ JÁSEÓáÉGA ÁÍ FÉÁTG JLÁFJÍ JÁNÉSÓYÓÁGJÉÁFH

Court held that the [**1074] annuity contracts were not insurance, even though they were regulated as such under state law and involved actuarial prognostications of mortality. Central to the [***14] Court's holding was the premise that "the concept of 'insurance' involves some investment risk-taking on the part of the company." 359 U.S., at 71. Since the variable annuity contracts offered no guarantee of fixed income, they placed all the investment risk on the annuitant and none on the company. Ibid. The Court concluded, therefore, that the annuities involved "no true underwriting of risks, the one earmark of insurance as it has commonly been conceived of in popular understanding and usage." Id. at 73 (footnote omitted). Cf. German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 233 U.S. 389, 412 ("The effect of insurance -- indeed [*213] it has been said to be its fundamental object -- is to distribute the loss over as wide an area as possible").

[***15] The petitioners do not really dispute that the underwriting or spreading of risk is a critical determinant in identifying insurance. Rather they argue that the Pharmacy Agreements do involve the underwriting of risks. As they state in their brief:

"In Securities and Exchange Commission v. Variable Annuity Life Insurance Co., 359 U.S. 65, 73 \(1959\), the 'earmark' of insurance was described as the 'underwriting of risks' in exchange for a premium. Here the risk insured against is the possibility that, during the term of the policy, the insured may suffer a financial loss arising from the purchase of prescription drugs, or that he may be financially unable to purchase such drugs. In consideration of the premium, Blue Shield assumes this risk by agreeing with its insureds to contract with Participating Pharmacies to furnish the needed drugs and to reimburse the Pharmacies for each prescription filled for the insured. In short, each of the fundamental elements of insurance is present here -- the payment of a premium in exchange for a promise to indemnify the insured against losses upon the happening of a specified contingency."

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [***16] The fallacy of the petitioners' position is that they confuse the obligations [***270] of Blue Shield under its insurance policies, which insure against the risk that policyholders will be unable to pay for prescription drugs during the period of coverage, and the agreements between Blue Shield and the participating pharmacies, which serve only to minimize the costs Blue Shield incurs in fulfilling its underwriting obligations.<sup>9</sup> [***17] The [*214] benefit promised to Blue Shield policyholders is that their premiums will cover the cost of prescription drugs except for a $ 2 charge for each prescription.<sup>10</sup> So long as that promise is kept, policyholders are basically unconcerned with arrangements made between Blue Shield and participating pharmacies.<sup>11</sup>

[**1075] The Pharmacy Agreements thus do not involve any underwriting or spreading of risk, but are merely arrangements for the purchase of goods and services by Blue Shield. By agreeing with pharmacies on the maximum prices it will pay for drugs, Blue Shield effectively reduces the total amount it must pay to its policyholders. The Agreements thus enable Blue Shield to minimize costs and maximize profits. Such [***18]

regulation as securities since they were not "insurance" or "annuity" policies specifically exempt from the Securities Act, and because they were not the "business of insurance" within the meaning of the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

<sup>9</sup> [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B] It is true that some type of provider agreement is necessary for a service benefit plan to exist. But it does not follow that because an agreement is necessary to provide insurance, it is also the "business of insurance." Assume, for example, that an indemnity insurer must have a line of credit or other commercial arrangement with a bank in order to pay off monetary claims. Despite the fact that the line of credit is "necessary" for the insurer to fulfill its obligations, it is nevertheless not the "business of insurance."

<sup>10</sup> Thus, the benefit promised to Blue Shield policyholders under the policy is that they "shall be required to pay no more than the drug deductible for each of such covered drugs."

<sup>11</sup> As the Court of Appeals stated:

"Blue Shield's policyholders are basically unconcerned with the contract between the insurer and the Participating Pharmacy. They are obligated to pay a Participating Pharmacy two dollars ($ 2.00) for a prescription regardless of the presence or absence of a price fixing arrangement. Thus, by minimizing costs and maximizing profits, the Participating Pharmacy Agreements inure principally to the benefit of Blue Shield." 556 F.2d 1375, 1381.

11 ÉÁWÈÉGÍ ÉÁCFI LÁJÁÉDÉFÉ I ÉÁFEI Í LÁ JÁÉDÉGÁ Á FÉÁFGI ÉÁFJÍ JÁÉDÉSÓYQÁGJÉÁFFI costsavings arrangements may well be sound business practice, and may well inure ultimately to the benefit of policyholders in the form of lower premiums, but they are not the "business of insurance." <sup>12</sup>

[*215] [LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A]The Pharmacy Agreements are thus legally indistinguishable from countless other business arrangements that may be made by insurance companies to keep their costs low and thereby also keep low the level of premiums charged to their policyholders. Suppose, for example, that an insurance company entered into a contract with a large retail drug chain whereby its policyholders [***19] could obtain drugs under their policies only from stores operated by this chain. The justification for such an agreement would be administrative and bulk-purchase savings resulting from obtaining all of the company's drug needs from a single dealer. Even though these cost savings might ultimately be reflected in lower premiums to policyholders, would such a contract be the "business of insurance"? Or suppose that the insurance company should decide [***271] to acquire the chain of drug stores in order to lower still further its costs of meeting its obligations to its policyholders. Such an acquisition would surely not be the "business of insurance." SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453.<sup>13</sup>

[***20] C

Another commonly understood aspect of the business of insurance relates to the contract between the insurer and the insured. HN4 In enacting the McCarran-Ferguson Act Congress was concerned with:

"The relationship between insurer and insured, the type of policy which could be issued, its reliability, interpretation, [*216] and enforcement -- these were the core of the 'business of insurance.' Undoubtedly, other activities of insurance companies relate so closely to their status as reliable insurers that they too must be placed in the same class. But whatever the exact scope of the statutory term, it is clear where the focus was -- it was on the relationship between the insurance company and the policyholder." SEC v. National Securities, Inc., supra, at 460.

The Pharmacy Agreements are not "between insurer and insured." They are separate contractual arrangements between Blue Shield and pharmacies engaged in the sale and distribution of goods and services other than insurance.

The petitioners argue that nonetheless the Pharmacy Agreements so closely affect [***21] the "reliability, interpretation, and enforcement" of the insurance contract and "relate so closely to their status as reliable insurers [***1076]" as to fall within the exempted area.<sup>14</sup> This argument, however, proves too much.

<sup>12</sup> As the United States points out in its amicus brief, there is an important distinction between risk underwriting and risk reduction. By reducing the total amount it must pay to policyholders, an insurer reduces its liability and therefore its risk. But unless there is some element of spreading risk more widely, there is no underwriting of risk.

<sup>13</sup>

[LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]In National Securities, the Arizona Director of Insurance approved, pursuant to statute, a merger between two insurance companies. This Court held, however, that the Arizona statute was not enacted for the purpose of regulating the "business of insurance." 393 U.S., at 460. If a merger between two insurance companies is not the "business of insurance," then an acquisition by an insurer of a manufacturer or a retail chain, although conceptually indistinguishable from the Pharmacy Agreements in this case, is also not the "business of insurance."

<sup>14</sup> The petitioners argue that the absence of the Pharmacy Agreements "which permit the insured to obtain drugs on the terms and for the amounts stated in the policies would constitute a breach of the contract of insurance." But the benefit Blue Shield provides its policyholders is the assurance that they can obtain drugs in return for a direct maximum payment of $ 2 for each prescription. The Pharmacy Agreements are separate contractual arrangements between Blue Shield and certain pharmacists fixing the cost Blue Shield will pay for drugs. The wholly separate nature of the two categories of agreements is in no way affected by the fact that the Pharmacy Agreements are indirectly referred to in the insurance policies.

11 ÉMELÉGÉI ÚJÍ LÁJÁDÓK Í ELLÉPÉ I LÁJÁSÉOÁÉGA ÁFÉTÉG FLÁFJÍ JÁNÉSÓYÓJÁGÉRÉGF

At the most, the petitioners have demonstrated that the Pharmacy [***22] Agreements result in cost savings to Blue Shield which may be reflected in lower premiums if the cost savings are passed on to policyholders. But, in that sense, every business decision made by an insurance company has some impact on its reliability, its ratemaking, and its status as a [*217] reliable insurer. The manager of an insurance company is no different from the manager of any enterprise with the responsibility to minimize costs and maximize profits. If terms such as "reliability" and "status as a reliable insurer" were to be interpreted in the broad sense urged by [***272] the petitioners, almost every business decision of an insurance company could be included in the "business of insurance." Such a result would be plainly contrary to the statutory language, which exempts the "business of insurance" and not the "business of insurance companies."

III

A

LEdHN[1D] [1D]The conclusion that the Pharmacy Agreements are not the "business of insurance" is fully confirmed by the legislative history of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. The law was enacted in 1945 in response to this Court's decision in United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533. [***23] The indictment in that case charged that the defendants had conspired to fix insurance rates and commissions, and had conspired to boycott and coerce noncooperating insurers, agents, and insureds. In the District Court the defendants had successfully demurred to the indictment on the ground that the insurance industry was not a part of interstate commerce subject to regulation under the Commerce Clause.<sup>15</sup> On direct appeal, this Court reversed the judgment, holding that the business of insurance is interstate commerce, and that the Congress which enacted the Sherman Act had not intended to exempt the insurance industry from its coverage.

B

The primary concern of Congress in the wake of that decision was in enacting legislation that would ensure that [*218] the States would continue to have the ability to tax and regulate [***24] the business of insurance.<sup>16</sup> [***25] This concern is reflected in §§ 1 [*1077] and 2 (a) of the Act,<sup>17</sup> neither of which is involved in this case. A secondary concern was the applicability of the antitrust laws to the insurance industry.<sup>18</sup> [***26] Months

<sup>15</sup> Since the leading case of Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 183, it had been understood that "[issuing] a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce."

<sup>16</sup> S. Rep. No. 20, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., 2 (1945); H. R. Rep. No. 143, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., 2-3 (1945). The problem was that if insurance was interstate commerce, then the constitutionality of state regulation and taxation would be questionable. As the House Report stated:

"Inevitable uncertainties . . . followed the handing down of the decision in the Southeastern Underwriters Association case . . . .

"[Your] committee believes there is urgent need for an immediate expression of policy by the Congress with respect to the continued regulation of the business of insurance by the respective States. Already many insurance companies have refused, while others have threatened refusal to comply with State tax laws, as well as with other State regulations, on the ground that to do so, when such laws may subsequently be held unconstitutional in keeping with the precedent-smashing decision in the Southeastern Underwriters case, will subject insurance executives to both civil and criminal actions for misappropriation of company funds." Ibid. (Emphasis added.)

<sup>17</sup> See text of statute at n. 1, supra.

<sup>18</sup> There is no question that the primary purpose of the McCarran-Ferguson Act was to preserve state regulation of the activities of insurance companies, as it existed before the South-Eastern Underwriters case. The power of the States to regulate and tax insurance companies was threatened after that case, because of its holding that insurance companies are in interstate commerce. The McCarran-Ferguson Act operates to assure that the States are free to regulate insurance companies without before [*219] this Court's [***273] decision in South-Eastern Underwriters was announced, proposed legislation to totally exempt the insurance industry from the Sherman and Clayton Acts had been introduced in Congress.<sup>19</sup> Less than three weeks after the actual decision, the House of Representatives passed a bill which would also have provided the insurance industry with a blanket exemption from the antitrust laws, thus restoring the state of law that had existed before the decision in South-Eastern Underwriters.<sup>20</sup>

11 € ÁMÉRÍKÁI ÉPÍ LÁJÁDÉTÉ I ÉPÉI LÁJÁSÉOÁÉGÁ ÉPÉTÉ GLÁJÍ JÁNÉSÓYÓÁGJÁÉPÉG

Congress, however, rejected this approach.<sup>21</sup> Instead of a total exemption, HN5[↑] Congress provided in § 2 (b) that the antitrust laws "shall be applicable" unless the activities of insurance companies are the business of insurance and regulated by state law. Moreover, under § 3 (b) the Sherman Act was made applicable in any event to acts of boycott, coercion, or intimidation. To allow the States time to adjust to the applicability of the antitrust laws to the insurance industry, [*220] Congress imposed a 3-year moratorium.<sup>22</sup> After the expiration of the moratorium on July 1, 1948, however, Congress clearly provided that the [***27] antitrust laws would be applicable to the business of insurance "to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law."<sup>23</sup>

By making the antitrust laws applicable to the insurance industry except as to conduct that is the business of insurance, regulated [***28] by state law, and not a boycott, Congress did not intend to and did not overrule the South-Eastern Underwriters [**1078] case.<sup>24</sup> HN6[↑] While the power of the States [***274] to tax and regulate insurance companies was reaffirmed, the McCarran-Ferguson Act also established that the insurance industry would no longer have a blanket exemption from the antitrust laws. It is true that § 2 (b) of the Act does create a fear of Commerce Clause attack. The question in the present case, however, is one under the quite different secondary purpose of the McCarran-Ferguson Act -- to give insurance companies only a limited exemption from the antitrust laws.

The repeated insistence in the dissenting opinion that the McCarran-Ferguson Act should be read as protecting the right of the States to regulate what they traditionally regulated is thus entirely correct -- and entirely irrelevant to the issue now before the Court. See n. 38, infra. For the question here is not whether the McCarran-Ferguson Act made state regulation of these Pharmacy Agreements exempt from attack under the Commerce Clause. It is the quite different question whether the Pharmacy Agreements are exempt from the antitrust laws.

In short, the McCarran-Ferguson Act freed the States to continue to regulate and tax the business of insurance companies, in spite of the Commerce Clause. It did not, however, exempt the business of insurance companies from the antitrust laws. It exempted only "the business of insurance." See SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453.

<sup>19</sup> H. R. 3270, 78th Cong., 1st Sess. (1943); S. 1362, 78th Cong., 1st Sess. (1943). These bills would have provided that nothing in the Sherman or Clayton Acts "shall be construed to apply to the business of insurance or to acts in the conduct of that business or in any wise to impair the regulation of that business by the several States."

<sup>20</sup> 90 Cong. Rec. 6565 (1944).

<sup>21</sup> The total exemption bill failed in the Conference Committee because of a fear that it could not pass in the Senate and in any event would be vetoed by the President. 91 Cong. Rec. 1087 (1945) (remarks of Rep. Hancock). Also important was the opposition of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners to a blanket antitrust exemption. 90 Cong. Rec. 8482 (1944).

<sup>22</sup> See n. 1, supra. The purpose of the moratorium was to allow the States three years to take steps to regulate the business of insurance. 91 Cong. Rec. 1443 (1945) (remarks of Sen. McCarran).

<sup>23</sup> Ibid. (remarks of Sen. Ferguson); McCarran, Federal Control of Insurance: Moratorium Under Public Law 15 Expired July 1, 34 A. B. A. J. 539, 540 (1948).

<sup>24</sup> That Congress did not intend to restore the law to what it had been before South-Eastern Underwriters is made dramatically clear in the following exchange between Senator McKellar and Senator Ferguson:

"Mr. McELLAR. As I understand the bill its purpose and effect will be to establish the law as it was supposed to be prior to the rendering of the recent opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States. Is that correct?

"Mr. FERGUSON. No." 91 Cong. Rec. 478 (1945).

See also id., at 1444 (exchange between Sens. Pepper and McCarran).

11 € ÁMÉRÍGÉI ÚGGLÁJÁNDÉI Í ÉFFÉ I LÁJSEÓÁFGÁFÉTTÉG I LAFJÍ JÁNEESÓYÓGÁFÉTTÉG

partial exemption from those laws. Perhaps more significantly, however, that section, and the Act as a whole, embody a legislative rejection of the concept that the insurance industry is outside the scope of the antitrust laws -- a concept that had prevailed before the South-Eastern Underwriters decision.

[****29] C

HN7 References to the meaning of the "business of insurance" in the legislative history of the McCarran-Ferguson Act [*221] strongly suggest that Congress understood the business of insurance to be the underwriting and spreading of risk. Thus, one of the early House Reports stated: "The theory of insurance is the distribution of risk according to hazard, experience, and the laws of averages. These factors are not within the control of insuring companies in the sense that the producer or manufacturer may control cost factors." H. R. Rep. No. 873, 78th Cong., 1st Sess., 8-9 (1943).<sup>25</sup> See also S. Rep. No. 1112, 78th Cong., 2d Sess., 6 (1944); 90 Cong. Rec. 6526 (1944) (remarks of Rep. Hancock).

[****30] Because of the widespread view that it is very difficult to underwrite risks in an informed and responsible way without intra-industry cooperation, the primary concern of both representatives of the insurance industry and the Congress was that cooperative ratemaking efforts be exempt from the antitrust laws. The passage of the McCarran-Ferguson Act was preceded by the introduction in the Senate Committee of a report and a bill submitted by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners on November 16, 1944.<sup>26</sup> The views of the NAIC are particularly significant, because the Act ultimately passed was based in large part on the NAIC bill.<sup>27</sup> The report emphasized that the concern of the insurance commissioners was that smaller enterprises and insurers other than life insurance companies were unable to underwrite risks accurately, and it therefore concluded:

"For these and other reasons this subcommittee believes it would be a mistake to permit or require the unrestricted competition contemplated by the antitrust laws to apply to the insurance business. To prohibit combined [*222] efforts for statistical and rate-making purposes would be a backward step in the development [****31] of a progressive business. We do not regard it as necessary to labor this point any [***275] further because Congress itself recently recognized the necessity for concert of action in the collection of statistical data and rate making when it enacted the District of Columbia Fire Insurance Rating Act." Id., at A4405 (emphasis added).

The bill proposed by the NAIC enumerated seven specific practices to which the Sherman Act was not to apply.<sup>28</sup> [****32] Each of the specific practices involved intra-industry cooperative or concerted activities. [**1079] None involved contractual arrangements that insurance companies might make with providers of goods or services to reduce the costs to the companies of meeting their underwriting obligations to their policyholders.<sup>29</sup>

<sup>25</sup> The recognition by Congress that the ability to control costs was not within the ability of insurance companies is further evidence that the Pharmacy Agreements, which are solely designed to minimize costs, are not insurance.

<sup>26</sup> 90 Cong. Rec. A4403-4408 (1944).

<sup>27</sup> 91 Cong. Rec. 483 (1945) (remarks of Sen. O'Mahoney).

<sup>28</sup> 90 Cong. Rec. A4406 (1944). This specific list of exempted activities was not included in the law ultimately enacted.

<sup>29</sup> The dissenting opinion makes the argument that because Congress rejected bills that would have limited the "business of insurance" to a specific list of insurance company practices, Congress intended that the exemption it finally enacted be interpreted "broadly." Precisely the opposite is true.

At the time Congress was considering one of the early versions of the Act, H. R. 3270, 78th Cong., 1st Sess. (1943), which would have wholly exempted from the antitrust laws "the business of insurance or . . . acts in the conduct of that business," an amendment was introduced which would have exempted specific activities. 90 Cong. Rec. 6561 (1944). The proponent of the amendment, Representative Anderson, explained that its purpose was to provide broader protection than provided by H. R. 3270: "But I say to this House that some legislation should be passed which asserts the right of the States to control the questions of risks, rates, premiums, commissions, policies, investments, reinsurance, capital requirements, and items of that nature. It is for that purpose I have insisted upon bringing this at this time to the attention of the House. If you pass H. R. 3270 as it now stands and go back home and any of your insurance friends ask you what you did to safeguard the protection of

11 ÉMÉLÉGÉÍ ÉCCGLÁJÁVÓDÉI Í ÉFFÉ JIÁ JÁSEÓaÉGA ÁÍ FÉTÉGÍ LAFJÍ JÁNÉSÓYÓGJÁÉHG

[****33] [*223] The floor debates also focused simply on whether cooperative ratemaking should be exempt. Thus, Senator Ferguson, in explaining the purpose of the bill, stated:

"This bill would permit -- and I think it is fair to say that it is intended to permit -- rating bureaus, because in the last session we passed a bill for the District of Columbia allowing rating. What we saw as wrong was the fixing of rates without statutory authority in the States; but we believe that State rights should permit a State to say that it believes in a rating bureau. I think the insurance companies have convinced many members of the legislature that we cannot have open competition in fixing rates on insurance. If we do, we shall have chaos. There will be failures, and failures always follow losses." 91 Cong. Rec. 1481 (1945).

The consistent theme of the remarks of other Senators also indicated a primary concern that cooperative ratemaking would be protected from the antitrust laws. Id., at 1444 and 1485 (remarks of Sen. O'Mahoney); [***276] 485 (remarks of Sen. Taft).<sup>30</sup> [***35] President Roosevelt, in signing the bill, also emphasized [*224] that the bill would allow cooperative [***34] rate regulation. He stated that "Congress did not intend to permit private rate fixing, which the Antitrust Act forbids, but was willing to permit actual regulation [**1080] of rates by affirmative action of the States." S. Rosenman, The Public Papers and Addresses of Franklin D. Roosevelt, 1944-1945 Vol., p. 587 (1950).<sup>31</sup> There is not the slightest suggestion in the legislative history that Congress in any way contemplated that arrangements such as the Pharmacy Agreements in this case, which involve the mass purchase of goods and services from entities outside the insurance industry, are the "business of insurance."<sup>32</sup> insurance by the State, you must answer them in all truth that all you did was to pass a bill which provided antitrust protection for companies now under indictment."

---

The amendment was defeated. 90 Cong. Rec. 6562 (1944).

Thus, Congress rejected an amendment which exempted specific activities of insurance companies (not including anything remotely resembling the Pharmacy Agreements in this case) which was perceived to be broader than H. R. 3270. Since H. R. 3270 was itself broader than the Act as eventually enacted, it necessarily follows that the exemption of the Act is narrower than the bills which would have exempted specific practices. This pattern is consistent with the entire legislative history of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, which was characterized by a continual narrowing of the original blanket exemption.

<sup>30</sup> The dissenting opinion states that the "compelling explanation" for the lack of discussion of provider agreements in the legislative history was the congressional concern about fire insurance companies. Post, at 234, n. 2. However, input from all types of insurance companies was sought through the Insurance Commissioners of the various States "because the Commissioners were aware of the chaotic condition which exists at the present time." 91 Cong. Rec. 484 (1945) (remarks of Sen. Ferguson). Moreover, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, whose concern was surely not limited to fire insurance, was certainly aware of provider agreements since it drafted model state enabling legislation to govern service-benefit health plans. But this Association, which played a major role in the drafting of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, did not include provider agreements in its proposed bill exempting specific practices of insurance companies from the scope of the antitrust laws. 90 Cong. Rec. A4406 (1944). Given this background, the failure of Congress to mention provider agreements, or anything in any way resembling them, suggests that Congress did not intend that provider agreements were to be exempt.

<sup>31</sup> The dissenting opinion states that the National Securities case recognized that the legislative history of the Act "sheds little light" on the meaning of the "business of insurance." Post, at 234. In National Securities, however, the Court went on to state that the legislative history indicated that "Congress was mainly concerned with the relationship between insurance ratemaking and the antitrust laws, and with the power of the States to tax insurance companies." 393 U.S., at 458-459.

<sup>32</sup> One question not resolved by this legislative history is which of the various practices alleged in the South-Eastern Underwriters indictment Congress intended to be covered by the phrase "business of insurance." The indictment in that case had charged, for example, that the defendants had fixed their agents' commissions as well as premium rates. It is clear from the legislative history that the fixing of rates is the "business of insurance." The same conclusion does not so clearly emerge with respect to the fixing of agents' commissions.

The bills introduced before the South-Eastern Underwriters decision which would have totally exempted the insurance industry from the antitrust laws specifically included agreements regarding agents' commissions as an exempt practice. E. g., H. R. 4444, 78th Cong., 2d Sess. (1944). Similarly, the bill proposed by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners two

[****36] [*225] D

[***277] At the time of the enactment of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, corporations organized for the purpose of providing their [*226] members with medical services and hospitalization were not considered to be engaged in the insurance business at all, and thus were not subject to state insurance laws. E. g., Jordan v. Group Health Assn., 71 App. D. C. 38, 107 F.2d 239 (1939); California Physicians' Service v. Garrison, 155 P. 2d 885 (Cal. App. 1945), aff'd, 28 Cal. 2d 790, 172 P. 2d 4 (1946); Commissioner of Banking & Insurance v. Community Health Service, 129 N. J. L. 427, 30 A. 2d 44 (1943); State ex rel. Fishback v. Universal Service Agency, 87 Wash. 413, 151 P. 768 (1915).<sup>33</sup> Similarly, States which regulated [**1081] prepaid health-service plans at the time the Act was enacted either exempted them from the requirements of the state insurance code or provided that they "shall not be construed as being engaged in the business of insurance" under state law. Rorem, Enabling Legislation for Non-Profit Hospital Service Plans, 6 Law & Contemp. Prob. 528, 534 (1939). [****37]<sup>34</sup> Since the legislative months after the South-Eastern Underwriters case was decided would have also exempted agents' commissions. 90 Cong. Rec. A4406 (1944). The subsequent bill that followed the approach of the NAIC and exempted specific activities, however, was limited to traditional underwriting activities and made no mention of agreements with insurance agents:

§ 4 (b). "On and after March 1, 1946, the provisions of said Sherman Act shall not apply to any agreement or concerted or cooperative action between two or more insurance companies for making, establishing, or using rates for insurance, rating methods, premiums, insurance policy or bond forms, or underwriting rules . . ." S. 12, 79th Cong., 1st Sess. (1945).

One inference that can be drawn from this pattern is that Congress was aware of the existence of agreements regarding agents' commissions, and chose not to include them within the exemption for the "business of insurance." On the other hand, the fact that the indictment in South-Eastern Underwriters had included a charge that insurance companies did boycott agents who insisted on selling other lines of insurance, together with the fact that § 3 (b) presumably removes an exemption that, but for its absence, would be conferred by § 2, suggests that the "business of insurance" may have been intended to include dealings within the insurance industry between insurers and agents.

Even if it be assumed, however, that transactions between an insurer and its agents, including independent agents, are the "business of insurance," it still does not follow that the Pharmacy Agreements also fall within the definition. Transactions between an insurer and an agent, unlike the Pharmacy Agreements, are wholly intra-industry; an insurance agent sells insurance while a pharmacy sells goods and services. Moreover, there are historical reasons why the Pharmacy Agreements should not be considered the "business of insurance," whatever may be the status of agreements between an insurer and its agents. See Part III-D, infra.

<sup>33</sup> The only case to the contrary was Cleveland Hospital Service Assn. v. Ebright, 142 Ohio St. 51, 49 N. E. 2d 929 (1943). There have been few cases dealing with the issue since the enactment of the McCarran-Ferguson Act; most of them have also held that Blue Cross and Blue Shield plans are not insurance. See, e. g., Michigan Hospital Service v. Sharpe, 339 Mich. 357, 63 N. W. 2d 638 (1954); Hospital Service Corp. v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co., 101 R. I. 708, 227 A. 2d 105 (1967).

<sup>34</sup> The dissenting opinion argues that "regulation of the service-benefit plans was a part of the system of state regulation of insurance that the McCarran-Ferguson Act was designed to preserve." Post, at 240. It is not at all clear that States that passed enabling statutes regarded the plans as insurance. These statutes typically authorized the plans to operate but did not specify whether or not they were insurance. E. g., 1935 Ill. Laws, p. 621 ("An Act to provide for the Incorporation and Regulation of nonprofit Hospital Service Corporations"); 1939 Mich. Pub. Acts No. 109 ("An Act to provide for and to regulate the incorporation of non-profit hospital service corporations"); 1938 N. J. Laws, ch. 336 ("An Act concerning hospital service corporations and regulating the establishment, maintenance and operation of hospital service plans"); ch. 698, 53 Stat. 1412 (1939) ("Providing for the incorporation of certain persons as Group Hospitalization, Inc."). This latter statute enacted by Congress also provided in § 7: "This corporation shall not be subject to the provisions of statutes regulating the business of insurance in the District of Columbia, but shall be exempt therefrom unless specifically designated therein." The Senate Report stated: "This bill does not change existing law but merely creates a private corporation which did not heretofore exist in the District of Columbia." S. Rep. No. 1012, 76th Cong., 1st Sess., 2 (1939). At the time this statute was passed in 1939, the group health services plan in the District of Columbia had been construed not to be engaged in the business of insurance. Group Health Assn. v. Moor, 24 F.Supp. 445 (DC 1938).

11 €ÁMÉÜÉGÍ ÚCGÍ LÁJÁÜÖDÉT Í ÉFFÉ FLÁ JÄSEØAÉGÁ ÞÉTTÉGÍ LÁFJÍ JÁNÈÉSÓYØAÍGJÉTTÉHÍ

[*227] history makes clear that [**278] HN8↑ Congress certainly did not intend the definition of the "business of insurance" to be broader than its commonly understood meaning, the contemporary perception that health-care organizations were not engaged in providing insurance is highly significant in ascertaining congressional intent.

[****38] The Jordan v. Group Health Assn. case, supra, is illustrative of the contemporary view of health-care plans. Group Health was organized as a nonprofit corporation to provide various medical services and supplies to members who paid a fixed annual premium. To implement the plan, Group Health contracted with physicians, hospitals, and others, to provide medical services. These groups were compensated exclusively by Group Health. By contracting with the various medical groups directly, Group Health was able to obtain [*228] services at a lower cost than if each member contracted separately. The plan, therefore, was somewhat similar to the Pharmacy Agreements in this case. The court in Group Health held that this type of arrangement was not insurance:

"Whether the contract is one of insurance or of indemnity there must be a risk of loss to which one party may be subjected by contingent or future events and an assumption of it by legally binding arrangement by another. Even the most loosely stated conceptions of insurance . . . require these elements. Hazard is essential and equally so a shifting of its incidence.

....

"Although Group Health's [****39] activities may be considered in one aspect as creating security against loss from illness or accident, more truly they constitute the [**1082] quantity purchase of well-rounded, continuous medical service by its members. Group Health is in fact and in function a consumer cooperative. The functions of such an organization are not identical with those of insurance or indemnity companies. The latter are concerned primarily, if not exclusively, with risk . . . . On the other hand, the cooperative is concerned principally with getting service rendered to its members and doing so at lower prices made possible by quantity purchasing and economies in operation." 71 App. D. C., at 44, 46, 107 F.2d, at 245, 247. (Emphasis supplied in part; footnotes omitted.)<sup>35</sup>

---

Indeed, courts have continued to hold that Blue Shield plans are not insurance even in States that have enacted enabling statutes. E. g., Michigan Hospital Service v. Sharpe, supra. In that case, the court specifically rejected the proposition that the existence of the enabling statute was sufficient to demonstrate that the plan was insurance.

But even if certain aspects of a Blue Shield plan are the "business of insurance," the Pharmacy Agreements in this case are not -- for all the reasons set out in this opinion. It is to be emphasized that the question whether provider agreements like the Pharmacy Agreements in this case, or other aspects of insurance companies, were in 1945 or are now regulated by state law is irrelevant to the issue before the Court in the present case. See n. 38, infra.

<sup>35</sup> Despite the fact that courts did not view plans like Blue Cross and Blue Shield as insurance at the time of the passage of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the petitioners argue that Attorney General Biddle's remarks when testifying in the Joint Hearing before the Subcommittees of the Committees on the Judiciary on S. 1362, H. R. 3269, and H. R. 3270, 78th Cong., 1st Sess., 41-42 (1943), indicate a congressional understanding that such plans were indeed insurance.

The thrust of Attorney General Biddle's remarks was that this Court's decision in American Medical Assn. v. United States, 317 U.S. 519, justified the indictment in the South-Eastern Underwriters case. In the AMA case, the Court had held that a health-maintenance organization was engaged in "trade" within the meaning of the Sherman Act. Based on this decision, Attorney General Biddle expressed the view that the plan was insurance and that therefore the Court had already held that insurance was commerce. Thus, he argued that the indictment in South-Eastern Underwriters was proper.

It seems clear, however, why this testimony does not demonstrate that Congress believed that Blue Cross or Blue Shield plans are insurance. First, the statement of the Attorney General that the plan in the AMA case was insurance was not accepted by Congress. Senator Bailey rejected the characterization, pointing out that the Court had not referred to the plan as insurance. To Senator Bailey, the plan was not insurance but a "group cooperative movement." (Indeed, the precise plan at issue was held not to be insurance in Jordan v. Group Health Assn., 71 App. D. C. 38, 107 F.2d 239 \(1939\).) But even if it can nonetheless be inferred that some Members of Congress may have agreed with the Attorney General that prepaid health plans are insurance, his testimony did not remotely suggest that agreements between an insurer and a third party fixing the cost at which goods and services will be purchased is also insurance.

[***40] [*229] [***279] Indeed, Blue Cross and Blue Shield organizations themselves have historically taken the position that they are not insurance companies in seeking to avoid state regulation and taxation.<sup>36</sup> [***41] It is thus difficult to assume that contrary to this historical position and a majority of court decisions, Congress in 1945 understood that advance-payment medical-benefits [*230] plans are the "business of insurance."<sup>37</sup> It is next to impossible to assume that Congress could have thought that agreements (even by insurance companies) which provide for the purchase of goods and services from third parties at a set price are within the meaning of that phrase.<sup>38</sup>

[***42] [*231] [*280] [**1083] IV

LEdHN[8]↑ [8]LEdHN[9A]↑ [9A]LEdHN[10A]↑ [10A]It is well settled that HN9↑ exemptions from the antitrust laws are to be narrowly construed. E. g., Abbott Laboratories v. Portland Retail Druggists Assn., Inc., 425 U.S. 1; Connell Construction Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters, 421 U.S. 616; FMC v. Seatrail Lines, Inc., 411 U.S. 726; United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 351 U.S. 305. This doctrine is not limited to implicit exemptions from the antitrust laws, but applies with equal force to express statutory exemptions. E. g., Abbott Laboratories v. Portland Retail Druggists Assn., Inc., supra, at 11-12 (the Nonprofit Institutions Act); FMC v. Seatrail Lines, Inc.,

---

Similarly, the fact that a few years later some witnesses at a Senate Committee hearing referred to Blue Cross as insurance in discussing alternatives to national health insurance, e. g., Hearings before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor on S. 1606, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., pt. 1, pp. 172-176 (1946), does not establish that Congress shared this view, let alone that provider agreements like the Pharmacy Agreements in this case are insurance.

<sup>36</sup> Weller, The McCarran-Ferguson Act's Antitrust Exemption for Insurance: Language, History and Policy, 1978 Duke L. J. 587, 624 n. 174. As one commentator has stated about the effectiveness of the traditional opposition of these organizations to being characterized as insurance:

"[Insurance] experts are fond of expressing amazement at Blue Cross and Blue Shield opinion that the Blues are not insurance but something else, such as 'pre-payment plans.' The insurance experts should control their incredulity of this view, or at least save some for the courts. For the fact is that the majority of cases have in effect upheld these so-called 'outrageous' opinions of Blue Cross adherents." Denenberg, The Legal Definition of Insurance, 30 J. Ins. 319, 322 (1963).

<sup>37</sup> This is not to say that the contracts offered by Blue Shield to its policyholders, as distinguished from its provider agreements with participating pharmacies, may not be the "business of insurance" within the meaning of the Act.

<sup>38</sup> This conclusion is in no way affected by the existence of state enabling statutes regulating advance-payment medical-benefits plans at the time the McCarran-Ferguson Act was enacted. E. g., 1937 Cal. Stats., ch. 882, as amended by 1941 Cal. Stats., ch. 311; 1939 Conn. Pub. Acts, ch. 150; 1935 Ill. Laws, p. 621; 1936 Miss. Gen. Laws, ch. 177; 1939 Mich. Pub. Acts, No. 109; 1938 N. J. Laws, ch. 719. These statutes generally provided that the plans were not insurance. See supra, at 226-227, and n. 34. Even if it is assumed that some state legislatures believed that these plans are insurance, however, it still does not follow that provider agreements like the Pharmacy Agreements in this case were considered by Congress to be the "business of insurance."

Many aspects of insurance companies are regulated by state law, but are not the "business of insurance." Similarly, the enabling statutes in existence at the time the Act was enacted typically regulated such diverse aspects of the plans as the composition of their boards of directors, when their books and records could be inspected, how they could invest their funds, when they could liquidate or merge, as well as how they could purchase goods and services by entering into provider agreements.

Provider agreements are no more the "business of insurance" because they were regulated by state law at the time of the McCarran-Ferguson Act than are these other facets of the plans which were similarly regulated. If Congress had exempted the "business of insurance companies," then these aspects of the plans which are not themselves insurance as that term is commonly understood would nevertheless be arguably exempt. But since Congress explicitly rejected this approach, they are not within the exemption even though they are the subject of state regulation.

This Court has implicitly recognized that state regulation of a practice of an insurance company does not mean that the practice is the "business of insurance" within the meaning of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. In both cases, SEC v. Variable Annuity Life Ins. Co., 359 U.S. 65, and SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, the challenged conduct was regulated by the State Insurance Commissioner, but this Court held that the practices were not the "business of insurance."

supra, at 733 (§ 15 of the Shipping Act); United States v. McKesson & Robbins, supra, at 316 [****43] (the Miller-Tydings and McGuire Acts).

Application of this principle is particularly appropriate in this case because the Pharmacy Agreements involve parties wholly outside the insurance industry. In analogous contexts, the Court has held that HN10 [↑] an exempt entity forfeits antitrust exemption by acting in concert with nonexempt parties. The Court has held, for example, that an exempt agricultural cooperative under the Capper-Volstead Act loses its exemption if it conspires with nonexempt parties. Case-Swayne Co. v. Sunkist Growers, Inc., 389 U.S. 384; United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188. Similarly, the Court has consistently stated that a union forfeits its exemption from the antitrust laws if it agrees with one set of employers to impose a wage scale on other bargaining units. Ramsey v. Mine Workers, [*232] 401 U.S. 302, 313; Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 665-666.<sup>39</sup>

[****44] [***281] [**1084] If agreements between an insurer and retail pharmacists are the "business of insurance" because they reduce the insurer's costs, then so are all other agreements insurers may make to keep their costs under control -- whether with automobile body repair shops or landlords.<sup>40</sup> [****45] Such agreements [*233] would be exempt from the antitrust laws if Congress had extended the coverage of the McCarran-Ferguson Act to the "business of insurance companies."<sup>41</sup> But that is precisely what Congress did not do.

For all these reasons, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is

Affirmed.

Dissent by: BRENNAN

Dissent

---

39

LEdHN[9B] [↑] [9B] LEdHN[10B] [↑] [10B] As the Court stated in Pennington, 381 U.S., at 665-666 (footnote omitted):

"[A] union may make wage agreements with a multi-employer bargaining unit and may in pursuance of its own union interests seek to obtain the same terms from other employers. No case under the antitrust laws could be made out on evidence limited to such union behavior. But we think a union forfeits its exemption from the antitrust laws when it is clearly shown that it had agreed with one set of employers to impose a certain wage scale on other bargaining units. One group of employers may not conspire to eliminate competitors from the industry and the union is liable with the employers if it becomes a party to the conspiracy."

<sup>40</sup> There is no principled basis upon which a line could rationally be drawn that would extend the McCarran-Ferguson Act exemption only to an insurer's agreement with providers of goods and services to be furnished to its policyholders -- such as agreements with hospitals, doctors, lawyers, and the like. But assuming that such a line could rationally be drawn, to hold that even such provider agreements are the "business of insurance" is to ignore the language and purpose of the Act not to exempt the insurance industry as such from the antitrust laws.

Moreover, exempting provider agreements from the antitrust laws would be likely in at least some cases to have serious anticompetitive consequences. Recent studies have concluded that physicians and other health-care providers typically dominate the boards of directors of Blue Shield plans. Thus, there is little incentive on the part of Blue Shield to minimize costs, since it is in the interest of the providers to set fee schedules at the highest possible level. This domination of Blue Shield by providers is said to have resulted in rapid escalation of health-care costs to the detriment of consumers generally. See Skyrocketing Health Care Costs: The Role of Blue Shield, Hearings before the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., 4-34 (1978) (remarks of Michael Pertschuk, Chairman, Federal Trade Commission).

<sup>41</sup> It might be argued that some such agreements are exempt from the antitrust laws under the state-action exemption of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341. But that exemption would exist because of the extent of state regulation and not because the agreements are the "business of insurance."

11 ÉMÉLÉGÍ ÚJ HÁJÁVÓDÉI Í EEFÉ I LÁJSEÓAÉGÁÍ FÉEEG FLÁFJÍ JÁNÉSÓYÓGJÁGÉEÉI

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, and MR. JUSTICE POWELL join, dissenting.

The McCarran-Ferguson Act, 59 Stat. 33, as amended, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1011-1015, renders the federal antitrust laws inapplicable to the "business of insurance" to the extent such business is regulated by state law and is not subject to the "boycott" exception stated in § 1013 \(b\).<sup>1</sup> The single question presented by this case is whether the "business of insurance" [\[\*234\]](#) [\[\*\*\*282\]](#) includes direct contractual arrangements ("provider agreements") between petitioner Blue Shield and third parties to provide benefits owed to the insurer's policyholders. [\[\*\*\*\*46\]](#) The Court today holds that it does not.

[\[\*\*\*\*47\]](#) I disagree: Since (a) there is no challenge to the status of Blue Shield's drug-benefits policy as the "business of insurance," I conclude (b) that some provider agreements negotiated to carry out the policy obligations of the insurer to the insured should be considered part of such business, and (c) that the specific Pharmacy Agreements at issue in this case should be included in such part. Before considering this analysis, however, it is necessary to set forth the background of the enactment of the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

[\[\*\*1085\]](#) I

SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 459 \(1969\), recognized that the legislative history of the McCarran-Ferguson Act sheds little light on the meaning of the words "business of insurance." See S. Rep. No. 20, 79th Cong., 1st Sess. (1945); H. R. Rep. No. 143, 79th Cong., 1st Sess. (1945). But while the legislative history is largely silent on the matter,<sup>2</sup> [\[\*\*\*\*49\]](#) it does indicate that Congress deliberately chose [\[\*235\]](#) to phrase the exemption broadly. Congress had draft bills before it which would have limited the "business of insurance" to a

<sup>1</sup> Section 2 \(b\) of the Act, as set forth in 15 U. S. C. § 1012 \(b\), provides:

"(b) No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, or which imposes a fee or tax upon such business, unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance: Provided, That after June 30, 1948, the Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, known as the Sherman Act, and the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended, known as the Clayton Act, and the Act of September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended [\[15 U. S. C. 41 et seq.\]](#), shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State Law."

Section 3 (b), as set forth in 15 U. S. C. § 1013 \(b\), provides:

"(b) Nothing contained in this chapter shall render the said Sherman Act inapplicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation."

<sup>2</sup> The Court argues that the silence with respect to agreements between insurers and third parties, coupled with the fact that Congressmen did discuss horizontal agreements between insurance companies, establishes by negative inference that third-party agreements were not considered "the business of insurance." There is, however, a compelling explanation for the lack of mention of provider agreements. As the Court has noted in several cases, see, e. g., SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 459 \(1969\); St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 538-539 \(1978\), the McCarran-Ferguson Act was a reaction to the decision in United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533 \(1944\). See infra, at 236-237. That case involved an organization of fire insurance companies, and much of the congressional discussion accordingly concerned alleged abuses by and regulation of such companies. See, e. g., 91 Cong. Rec. 1091-1092, 1479 (1945); 90 Cong. Rec. 6449-6455, 6527 (1944). Indeed, health insurers did not even participate in the hearings on the Act. See Joint Hearing before the Subcommittees of the Committees on the Judiciary on S. 1362 et al., 78th Cong., 1st Sess. (1943). Since fire insurers paid their policyholders cash indemnities, these companies had no reason to contract with third parties for the provision of goods or services. That fact fully explains the absence of discussion of such contracts in the congressional debates. Such absence no more indicates a congressional intent to exclude provider agreements from the "business of insurance" than does the absence of any mention of health insurance companies indicate a congressional intent arbitrarily to exclude all health insurance from the "business of insurance."

11 ÉÁWÉÜÉGÍ ÉÁCHÍ LÁJÁUÓDÉT Í ÉÁFÉ Í LÁ JÁSÉOáÉGÁ Á FÉÁTG GLÁFJÍ JÁNÈÉSÓYÓÁGJÁÉHÉ J narrow range of specified insurance company practices, but chose [****48] instead the more general language which ultimately became law.<sup>3</sup>

[****50] [*236] The [***283] historical background of the statute's enactment, developed by the Court in SEC v. National Securities, Inc., supra, provides the guide to congressional purpose:

"The McCarran-Ferguson Act was passed in reaction to this Court's decision in United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533 (1944). Prior to that decision, it had been assumed, in the language of the leading case, that 'issuing] a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce.' Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 183 (1869). Consequently, regulation of insurance transactions was thought to rest exclusively with the States. In South-Eastern Underwriters, this Court held that insurance transactions were subject to federal regulation [**1086] under the Commerce Clause, and that the antitrust laws, in particular, were applicable to them. Congress reacted quickly . . . [, being] concerned about the inroads the Court's decision might make on the tradition of state regulation of insurance. The McCarran-Ferguson Act was the product of this concern. Its purpose was stated quite clearly in its first [****51] section; Congress declared that 'the continued regulation and taxation by the several States of the business of insurance is in the public interest.' 59 Stat. 33 (1945), 15 U. S. C. § 1011. As this Court said shortly afterward, '[obviously] Congress' purpose was broadly to give support to the existing and future state systems for regulating and taxing the business of insurance.' Prudential Insurance Co. v. Benjamin, 328 U.S. 408, 429 (1946).

"The . . . Act was an attempt to turn back the clock, to assure that the activities of insurance companies in dealing with their policyholders would remain subject to state regulation." 393 U.S., at 458-459.

See also St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 538-539 (1978); 90 Cong. Rec. 6524 (1944) (Cong. Walter) [*237] ("[The] legislation . . . is designed to restore to the status quo the position the insurance business of this Nation occupied before the Supreme Court recently legislated [in South-Eastern Underwriters]").

Since continuation of state regulation as it existed before South-Eastern was Congress' goal,<sup>4</sup> [****52] evidence of [***284] what States [*238] might reasonably have considered to be and regulated as insurance at the time the

<sup>3</sup> S. 12, 79th Cong., 1st Sess. (1945), would have specified

"any agreement or concerted or cooperative action between two or more insurance companies for making, establishing, or using rates for insurance, rating methods, premiums, insurance policy or bond forms, or underwriting rules." (Emphasis added.)

See also § 4 (b) of a draft bill of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, 90 Cong. Rec. A4406 (1944). A significant Senate floor debate with regard to such limiting bills is the following:

"MR. PEPPER. Would it not be better that those agreements, if there are such that are legitimatized, be identified in the statute?

"MR. O'MAHONEY. I quite agree with the Senator, and I endeavored to the very best of my ability to induce the committees of Congress to write into the law specific exemptions from the antitrust law, but I was unable to prevail in the Committee on the Judiciary and I was unable to prevail on the floor of the Senate." 91 Cong. Rec. 1444 (1945).

The Court challenges the conclusion that Congress intended to phrase the exemption broadly by referring to the legislative history of one obscure amendment to an early House version of the Act. Ante, at 222-223, n. 29. Closer examination of the short debate surrounding that amendment reveals only the Representatives' repeated expressions of their confusion over what the amendment meant. See 90 Cong. Rec. 6562 (1944) (remarks of Reps. Summers, Hobbs, and Fernandez).

<sup>4</sup> There can be no quarrel with the Court's statement, ante, at 220, and n. 24, that the McCarran-Ferguson Act was not intended to restore the law, in all respects, to what it had been before South-Eastern Underwriters. But the principal differences between pre-South-Eastern and post-McCarran-Ferguson law are irrelevant for purposes of this case, and do not detract from the Court's oft-repeated statement that the purpose of the Act was to preserve state regulatory schemes as they existed before South-Eastern Underwriters.

