I ÉÁNÉÜÉGÉÍ ÉÁCHÍ LÁJ ÁUÉÓÓDÉFÉI Í ÉÁFÉI Í LÁ J ÁSÉÓA ÉGÁ AG FÁHÉG I LÁFJÍ JÁNÉÜÉSÓYQÁGÉ ÉÁHÉG G

McCarran-Ferguson Act was passed in 1945 is clearly relevant to our decision. This does not mean that a transaction not viewed as [**1087] insurance in 1945 cannot be so viewed today.

"We realize that . . . insurance is an evolving institution. Common knowledge tells us that the forms have greatly changed even in a generation. And we would not undertake to freeze the [concept] of 'insurance' . . . into the mold [it] fitted when these Federal Acts were passed." SEC v. Variable Annuity Life Ins. Co., 359 U.S. 65, 71 \(1959\).

It is thus logical to suppose that if elements common to the ordinary understanding of "insurance" are present, new forms of the business should constitute the "business of insurance" for purposes of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. The determination of the scope of the Act, therefore, involves both an analysis of the proximity between the challenged transactions and those well recognized as elements of "insurance," and an examination of the historical setting of the Act. On both counts, Blue Shield's [****53] Pharmacy Agreements constitute the "business of insurance."

[****54] [*239] II

I start with common ground. Neither the Court, [***285] ante, at 230 n. 37, nor the parties challenge the fact that the drug-benefits policy offered by Blue Shield to its policyholders -- as distinguished from the contract between Blue Shield and the pharmacies -- is the "business of insurance." Whatever the merits of scholastic argument over the technical definition of "insurance," the policy both transfers and distributes risk. The policyholder pays a sum certain -- the premium -- against the risk of the uncertain contingency of illness, and if the company has calculated correctly, the premiums of those who do not fall ill pay the costs of benefits above the premiums of those who do. See R. Mehr & E. Cammack, Principles of Insurance 31-32 (6th ed. 1976). An important difference between Blue Shield's policy and other forms of health insurance is that Blue Shield "pays" the policyholder in goods and services (drugs and their dispensation), rather than in cash. Since we will not "freeze the [concept] of 'insurance' . . . into the Before South-Eastern, insurance companies might boycott, coerce, and intimidate without violating federal antitrust statutes since insurance was not considered "commerce" and hence was beyond the reach of federal law. For the same reason, even unregulated insurance transactions were free from antitrust attack. Finally, Congress, because of the "commerce" problem, could not otherwise regulate insurance. None of these elements survived the decision in South-Eastern, and none was revived by McCarran-Ferguson. These differences between pre-South-Eastern and post-McCarran-Ferguson law were what Senator Ferguson had in mind when he answered "no" to Senator McKellar's question, cited by the Court, ante, at 220 n. 24, asking whether the effect of the Act was to re-establish the law as it stood prior to South-Eastern. This is revealed by quotation of Senator Ferguson's full answer to Senator McKellar.

"MR. FERGUSON. No. I would say that subsection (b), at the bottom of page 2, would allow the provisions of the Sherman Act to apply to all agreements or acts of boycott, coercion, or intimidation, and subsection 4 (a) would suspend the application of the provisions of the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, insofar as States may regulate and tax such companies, until certain dates or until Congress may act in the meantime in respect to what Congress thinks should be done with the business of insurance." 91 Cong. Rec. 478 (1945).

These discrete differences between pre-South-Eastern and post-McCarran-Ferguson law are not applicable here, and do not conflict with the holdings of this Court's prior opinions that, with respect to state-regulated insurance practices not constituting boycotts, McCarran-Ferguson was intended to preserve pre-existing state insurance regulation.

This analysis also explains, and renders irrelevant for this case, Congress' rejection of the "total" exemption bills cited by the Court, ante, at 218-219, and n. 21. Those bills, unlike the one that passed, would have exempted boycotts and unregulated transactions. It was this aspect of the "total" exemption bills to which the National Association of Insurance Commissioners objected. See 90 Cong. Rec. 8482 (1944). These bills were rejected not because of a decision to narrow the scope of the nonboycott activities to be exempted, but because Congress determined that the business of insurance should be exempted only where regulated by the States, rather than unconditionally.

11 ÉMÉLÉGÉI ÉZHULÁJÁVÓDÉI Í ÉFFÉ I LÁJASÉOÁÉGÁ ÉFÉTÉG I LAFJÍ JÁNÉSÓYÓÁGJÉHÉI

mold it fitted" when McCarran-Ferguson was passed, this difference cannot be a reason for holding that the drug-benefits policy [****55] falls outside the "business of insurance" even if our inquiry into the understandings of what constituted "insurance" in the 1930's and 1940's were to suggest that a contrary view prevailed at that time.<sup>5</sup>

Fortunately, logic and history yield the same result. It is true that the first health insurance policies provided only cash indemnities. However, although policies that specifically provided drug benefits were not available during the 1930's and 1940's, analogous policies providing hospital and medical services -- rather than cash -- were available.

The hospital service-benefit concept originated in Texas in [*240] 1929; medical services were first offered in 1939. R. Eilers, Regulation of Blue Cross and Blue Shield Plans 10, 15 (1963) (hereinafter [****56] Eilers). In 1940, 4,500,000 people in 60 communities were covered by Blue Cross or related hospital-benefits plans. C. Rorem, Non-Profit Hospital Service Plans 1-2 (1940) (hereinafter Rorem I). During the 1940's, health insurance became a subject of collective bargaining, with unions demanding the service-benefit approach of Blue Cross and Blue Shield. S. Law, Blue Cross 11 (1974) (hereinafter Law). By 1945, the year the McCarran-Ferguson Act was enacted, over 20 million people were enrolled in service-benefit programs, with service-benefit plans comprising 61% of the total hospitalization insurance market. See Hearings before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, A National Health Program, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., pt. 1, p. 173 (1946); Eilers 19; Law 11.

[**1088] Moreover, regulation of the service-benefit plans was a part of the system of state regulation of insurance that the McCarran-Ferguson Act was designed to preserve. Led by New York in 1934, 24 States passed enabling Acts by 1939 which, while relieving the plans of certain reserve requirements and tax obligations, specifically subjected service-benefit plans to the supervision and control of state departments [****57] of insurance.

<sup>6</sup> [****58] [***286] See Rorem, Enabling Legislation for Non-Profit Hospital Service Plans, 6 Law & Contemp. Prob. 528, 531, 534 (1939) (hereinafter Rorem II); N. Sinai, O. Anderson, & M. Dollar, Health Insurance in the United States [*241] 48-49 (1946) (hereinafter Sinai); Comment, Group Health Plans: Some Legal and Economic Aspects, 53 Yale L. J. 162, 174 (1943). Another 16 States apparently limited the issuance of hospitalization insurance to stock and mutual insurance companies. Nine acted on the premise that the plans were not "insurance" and authorized operation under general corporation laws, exempt from reserve requirements. Rorem II, p. 532. By the time the McCarran-Ferguson Act was passed, 35 States had enabling legislation.<sup>7</sup> During this period, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC), the organization of state insurance directors which played a major role in drafting the McCarran-Ferguson Act,<sup>8</sup> was also drafting model state enabling legislation to govern service-benefit health plans. Proceedings of the NAIC, 75th Sess., 226 (1944); id., 76th Sess., 250 (1945).<sup>9</sup>

<sup>5</sup> See SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S., at 460 ("The relationship between insurer and insured, [and] the type of policy which could be issued . . . [are] the core of the 'business of insurance'"). (Emphasis added.)

<sup>6</sup> See 1935 Ala. Acts No. 544; 1935 Cal. Stats., ch. 386; 1939 Conn. Pub. Acts, ch. 150; ch. 698, 53 Stat. 1412 (1939) (District of Columbia); 1937 Ga. Laws, p. 690; 1935 Ill. Laws, p. 621; 1939 Iowa Acts, ch. 222; 1938 Ky. Acts, ch. 23; 1939 Me. Acts, ch. 149; 1937 Md. Laws, ch. 224; 1936 Mass. Acts, ch. 409; 1939 Mich. Pub. Acts No. 109; 1936 Miss. Gen. Laws, ch. 177; 1939 N. H. Laws, ch. 80; 1938 N. J. Laws, ch. 366; 1939 N. M. Laws, ch. 66; 1934 N. Y. Laws, ch. 595; 1939 Ohio Leg. Acts, p. 154; 1937 Pa. Laws No. 378; 1939 R. I. Acts, ch. 719; 1939 S. C. Acts No. 296; 1939 Tex. Gen. Laws, p. 123; 1939 Vt. Laws No. 174; 1939 Wis. Laws, ch. 118.

<sup>7</sup> F. Hedinger, The Social Role of Blue Cross as a Device for Financing the Costs of Hospital Care 51 (1966). The additional statutes were: 1945 Ariz. Sess. Laws, ch. 13 (1st Spec. Sess.); 1939 Fla. Laws, ch. 19108; 1941 Kan. Sess. Laws, ch. 259; 1940 La. Acts No. 267; 1941 Minn. Laws, ch. 53; 1941 Neb. Laws, ch. 43; 1941 N. C. Pub. Laws, ch. 338; 1943 N. D. Laws, ch. 103; 1945 Tenn. Pub. Acts, ch. 98; 1940 Va. Acts, ch. 230; 1943 W. Va. Acts, ch. 8.

<sup>8</sup> See 91 Cong. Rec. 483 (1945) (remarks of Sen. O'Mahoney).

<sup>9</sup> Debate arose during this period as to whether service-benefit plans were technically insurance. See ante, at 225-230. Most state insurance commissioners ruled during the 1930's that the plans constituted insurance, and therefore had to meet the capital stock, reserve, and assessment requirements applicable to the commercial stock and mutual insurance companies which offered cash indemnity policies. Eilers 101. In addition, this meant that the plans were subject to special state taxation. Ibid.

11 ÉMÉLÉGÉI ÚG FLÁJÁÚÓDÉI Í ÉFFÉ I LÁJÁSEÓAÉGÁÍ FÉFFÉ I LÁFJÍ JÁNÉSÓYÓGÁJÉFFÉ I

[***59] [*242] [**287] [**1089] Thus, when the McCarran-Ferguson Act became law, service-benefit plans similar to the Blue Shield plan at issue here were a widespread and well-recognized form of insurance, subject to regulation in most of the States. Congress itself treated these important programs as insurance. In 1939, Congress adopted an enabling Act incorporating a hospitalization-benefits plan in the District of Columbia, with supervisory [*243] authority placed in the hands of the Superintendent of Insurance. See H. R. 6266, 76th Cong., 1st Sess. (1939); H. R. Rep. No. 1247, 76th Cong., 1st Sess. (1939); 84 Cong. Rec. 11224 (1939). And in hearings held the year after passage of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the same Congress that approved that Act debated Blue Shield-type programs as alternatives to national health insurance, with participating Congressmen frequently referring to them as "insurance." Hearings before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, A National Health Program, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., pt. 1, pp. 55, 83, 108, 172, pt. 2, p. 558 (1946).<sup>10</sup> The status of service-benefit policies as "insurance," both logically and historically, is therefore sufficiently [***60] established to make that the first premise in an analysis of the status of the Pharmacy Agreements at issue in this case.

III

The next question is whether at least some contracts with third parties to procure delivery of benefits to Blue Shield's insureds would also constitute the "business of insurance." Such contracts, like those between Blue Shield and the druggists in this case, are known as "provider agreements." The Court, adopting the view of the Solicitor General, today holds that no provider agreements can be considered part of the "business of insurance."<sup>11</sup> It contends that the "underwriting or [***61] spreading of risk [is] an indispensable characteristic of [*244] insurance," ante, at 212,<sup>12</sup> and that [***288] "[another] commonly understood aspect of the business of insurance

Such holdings limited the feasibility of the plans at a time when they were widely perceived as being socially beneficial. Moreover, it was argued that these rulings were inappropriate to service-benefit plans, which were generally "nonprofit," and often included guarantees by hospitals to provide services regardless of the financial state of the insurer -- potentially an adequate substitute for the cash reserves needed by indemnity plans. Id., at 135-136, 239.

Some courts, and even some Blue Cross-type organizations, attempted to surmount these barriers to effectuation of plans deemed to be in the public interest by arguing that the plans were not technically "insurance" subject to the jurisdiction of state insurance commissioners, and hence were not bound by the requirements of the stock and mutual insurance companies. See, e. g., Jordan v. Group Health Assn., 71 App. D. C. 38, 107 F.2d 239 (1939). But see Cleveland Hospital Service Assn. v. Ebright, 142 Ohio St. 51, 49 N. E. 2d 929 (1943) (hospital service plans are insurance); McCarty v. King County Medical Service Corp., 26 Wash. 2d 660, 175 P. 2d 653 (1946) (same). But contemporary commentators questioned the soundness of such views and argued that the plans should be treated as insurance, although as a special kind not subject to the traditional requirements. See, e. g., Note, The Legal Problems of Group Health, 52 Harv. L. Rev. 809, 815 (1939); Comment, Group Health Plans: Some Legal and Economic Aspects, 53 Yale L. J. 162, 172 (1943). The 35 state enabling Acts governing service-benefit health plans reflected the States' agreement that the plans were "a special type of insurance" differing from the stock and mutual companies. Rorem II, p. 534; Sinai 48. This is most clearly demonstrated by the fact that the vast majority of the state statutes, while relieving the plans of "other" insurance law requirements (primarily the reserve requirements and special insurance taxes), subjected their activities to the control of the state insurance commissioner. The 1939 New Mexico Statute, for example, amended the State's Insurance Code by adding a new section entitled "Non-Profit Hospital Service Plans." The amendment subjected the plans, and in particular both their premiums and rates of payment to hospitals, to the approval of the Superintendent of Insurance, while exempting them from "all other provisions of the insurance law." 1939 N. M. Laws, ch. 66 (emphasis added). This approach was in accord with the commonly held view that such plans were forms of "insurance," as reflected by the statements of numerous Congressmen in the congressional hearings on the proposed National Health Program, see infra, at 243. And everyday meaning, rather than some technical term of art, is what Congress intended by its use of the word "insurance" in the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

<sup>10</sup> Messages of two Presidents to the Congress on the subject of national health care also referred to service-benefit plans as forms of insurance. Message from the President of the United States, Report and Recommendations on National Health, H. R. Doc. No. 120, 76th Cong., 1st Sess., 63 (1939); Message from the President, A National Health Program, H. R. Doc. No. 380, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., 9, 10 (1945).

<sup>11</sup> The respondents do not argue this view. They agree that some provider contracts may constitute the "business of insurance." Brief for Respondents 33.

|| ΕΆΝΕΙΣΕΓΕΙ ΦΑΡΓ | ΛΑΙ ΑΙ ΞΑΟΔΑ ΕΙ Ι ΦΑΦΕΙ ΙΛΑ Ι ΣΕΩΔΑ ΦΑΓΑ ΑΓΙ ΦΑΗΕΓ | ΛΑΓΙ Ι ΙΑΝΕΙΣΕΩΥ ΟΛΑΓΙ ΦΑΦΕΓ |

relates to the contract between the insurer and the insured." Ante, at 215. Because provider agreements neither themselves spread risk, nor involve transactions between insurers and insureds, the Court excludes them from the "business of insurance."

The argument fails in light of this Court's [****62] prior decisions and the legislative history of the Act. The Court has held, for example, FTC v. National Casualty Co., 357 U.S. 560 (1958), that the advertising of insurance, a unilateral act which does not involve underwriting, is within the scope of the McCarran-Ferguson [**1090] Act. And the legislative history makes it abundantly clear that numerous horizontal agreements between insurance companies which do not technically involve the underwriting of risk were regarded by Congress as within the scope of the Act's exemption for the "business of insurance." For example, rate agreements among insurers, a conspicuous congressional illustration, see, e. g., 91 Cong. Rec. 1481, 1484 (1945) (remarks of Sens. Pepper and Ferguson), and the subject of the South-Eastern Underwriters case, see SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. at 460, do not themselves spread risk. Indeed, the Court apparently concedes that arrangements among insurance companies respecting premiums and benefits would constitute the "business of insurance," despite their failure to fit within its formula. Ante, at 221 and 224-225, n. 32.

But the Court's [***63] attempt to limit its concession to horizontal transactions still conflicts with the legislative history. Compelling evidence is the fact that Congress actually rejected a proposed bill to limit the exemption to agreements between [*245] insurance companies. S. 12, 79th Cong., 1st Sess. (1945). See n. 3, supra. Moreover, vertical relationships between insurance companies and independent sales agencies were a subject of the indictment in United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 535 (1944), were the object of discussion in the House, 90 Cong. Rec. 6538 (1944) (remarks of Cong. Celler), and were expressly included as part of the "business of insurance" in an early draft of the Act, id., at A4406 (NAIC bill, § 4 (b)(5)). Again, the Court concedes that such transactions, between insurers and agents, might fall within the "business of insurance," despite the inconsistency with the Court's own theory. Ante, at 224-225, n. 32. <sup>13</sup>

[****64] The Court's limitation also ignores the significance of pervasive state insurance regulation -- prevailing when the Act was passed -- of hospitalization-benefits plans whose "distinctive feature," Rorem I, p. 64; Proceedings of the NAIC, 75th Sess., 228 (1944), was the provider contract with the participating hospital to provide service when needed. The year prior to adoption of the Act the [***289] NAIC emphasized the relationship between provider agreements and service-benefit policies:

"A hospital service plan is designed to provide service rather than to indemnify and this can only be guaranteed through contractual arrangements between plans and hospitals." Ibid.

The Association also proposed, in the year McCarran-Ferguson passed, a model state enabling Act requiring "full approval of . . . contracts with hospitals . . . by the insurance commissioner." Proceedings of the NAIC, 76th Sess., 250 [*246] (1945). That proposal reflected well the actual contents of existing state enabling Acts which armed insurance commissioners with considerable authority to regulate provider agreements.<sup>14</sup> Congress itself authorized the service-benefit plan it incorporated in [****65] the District of Columbia "to enter into contracts with hospitals for <sup>12</sup> "Underwriting," the Solicitor General argues, means "[spreading] risk more widely or [reducing] the role of chance events." Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 17 (hereinafter Government Brief). For purposes of argument I will assume that this is a correct definition of "underwriting." But see R. Holtom, Underwriting Principles and Practices 11 (1973).

<sup>13</sup> The effort to distinguish insurer/agent transactions from provider agreements on the ground that the former are "wholly intra-industry" while the latter are not, ante, at 225 n. 32, constitutes argument by tautology. The former are "intra-industry" and the latter not, only because the Court so holds today.

<sup>14</sup> See, e. g., 1935 Cal. Stats., ch. 386; 1939 Iowa Acts, ch. 222; 1937 Md. Laws, ch. 224; 1939 Me. Acts, ch. 149; 1939 N. H. Laws, ch. 80; 1939 S. C. Acts No. 296. See also Rorem I, pp. 67-68; Sinai 48-49. Such provisions were often quite extensive, e. g., requiring approval by the insurance commissioner of contracts between hospitals and the corporation, including rates of payment, ibid.; requiring that the contracts contain guarantees of services by the hospitals to policyholders despite financial difficulties of the insurer. Rorem I, p. 67; or even limiting the kind of hospitals with which contracts could be made. id. at 68.

11 € ÁMÉRÍKÉ ÉKG Í LÁJÁÉDÉT Í ÉFFÉCLÁ JÁSEÓÉGÁ É FÉÉG JLÁFJÍ JÁNÉSÓYÓGJÉÉHÍ

the care and treatment of [its subscribers]." H. R. 6266, 76th Cong., 1st Sess. (1939). In light of Congress' objective through the McCarran-Ferguson Act to insure the continuation of existing state regulation, the conclusion [**1091] that at least some provider agreements were intended to be within the "business of insurance" is inescapable.

[****66] Logic compels the same conclusion. Some kind of provider agreement becomes a necessity if a service-benefits insurer is to meet its obligations to the insureds. The policy before us in this case, for example, promises payment of benefits in drugs. Thus, some arrangement must be made to provide those drugs for subscribers.<sup>15</sup> Such an arrangement obtains [*247] the very benefits promised in the policy; it does not simply relate to the general operation of the company. A provider contract in a service-benefit plan, therefore, is critical to "the type of policy which could be issued" as well as to its "reliability" and "enforcement." It thus comes within the terms of SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S., at 460. That case explained that the "business of insurance" involves not only [***290] the "relationship between insurer and insured," but also "other activities of insurance companies [that] relate so closely to their status as reliable insurers that they too must be placed in the same class." Thus, "[statutes] aimed at protecting or regulating . . . [the insurer/insured] relationship, directly or indirectly, are laws regulating [***67] the 'business of insurance.'" Ibid. (emphasis added).

[****68] The Congress that passed McCarran-Ferguson was composed of neither insurance experts nor dictionary editors. Rather than use the technical term "underwriting" to express its meaning, Congress chose "the business of insurance," a common-sense term connoting not only risk underwriting, but contracts closely related thereto.<sup>16</sup> Since Congress knew of service-benefit policies, and viewed them as insurance, it would strain common sense to suppose Congress viewed contracts [*248] necessary to effectuate those policies' commitments as being outside the business it sought to exempt from the antitrust laws.

[****69] IV

The remaining question is whether the provider agreement in this case constitutes the "business of insurance." Respondents contend that even if some contract between Blue Shield and the pharmacies is necessary, this one is not. Under the contract at issue, the druggist agrees to dispense drugs to Blue Shield's insureds for a $ 2 payment, and Blue Shield agrees to reimburse the druggist for the acquisition cost of each drug so dispensed. The pharmacy is thus limited to a $ 2 "markup." With support from the Court of Appeals, respondents argue that only the first half of the bargain is necessary for Blue Shield to fulfill its policy obligations. Those are fulfilled when Blue Shield binds the pharmacy to dispense the requested drug for $ 2. The second half of [**1092] the agreement, the amount Blue Shield reimburses the druggist, is assertedly irrelevant to the policyholder. As an alternative to the existing plan, the respondents and the Court of Appeals suggest that Blue Shield could simply pay the pharmacist his usual charge (minus the $ 2 paid by the policyholder). The present plan, which limits reimbursement to acquisition cost <sup>15</sup> Indeed, unions negotiating for drug-coverage plans have requested that the plans include contractual arrangements with pharmacies, in order to guarantee that the policy's promises are kept. See Brief for Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Assn. as Amicus Curiae 10-11.

It might be argued that the drug-benefits policy could operate successfully without any agreement between Blue Shield and the pharmacies. The consumer could simply pay the pharmacist his full price, whereupon he would normally receive the drugs without hesitation. Blue Shield could then reimburse the policyholder for the full price minus the $ 2 deductible. This would not, however, be the policy bargained for in this case. That policy guarantees provision of drugs upon a minimal $ 2 payment, without requiring the policyholder to advance the full price when the contingency of illness occurs -- a time when he may not be able to afford the out-of-pocket payment. Moreover, such cash-reimbursement plans almost inevitably include payment ceilings, again distinguishing them from the full-coverage service plan bargained for in this case. See discussion, infra, at 252, and n. 20.

<sup>16</sup> The Court errs in its reading of SEC v. Variable Annuity Life Ins. Co., 359 U.S. 65 (1959). There a "variable annuity" plan was held not to be "the business of insurance" because all risk remained on the policyholder and no underwriting of risk occurred. The key to Variable Annuity is that neither the agreement at issue nor any with which it was involved effectuated a transference of risk. Id., at 71. That is not the case here, where the policyholder has successfully transferred his risk by trading his premium for the certainty of benefits in the event of illness.

11 €ÁMEÜÉGÉÍ ÉKG Í LÁJ ÁUÖDÉF Í ÉFFÉGLÁ JÄSEØaÉGA ÁÍ FÉREGJÉLÁFJÍ JÁNEÉSÓYØJÁGJÉRÉJ

and freezes the markup at $ 2, is said [****70] to set a "fixed" price. From this premise respondents argue that such fixed-price plans are "anticompetitive," and therefore not the "business of insurance."

Respondents' argument is directly contradicted by history. The service-benefit plans available when the McCarran-Ferguson Act was passed actually "fixed" more of the payment to their participating providers than does the plan here, which "fixes" only the markup. Those early plans [***291] usually paid established and equal amounts to their participating hospitals, rather than paying whatever each hospital charged. Rorem I, p. 64. Moreover, under the typical state enabling Act, those [*249] payments were subject to the approval of the state department of insurance.<sup>17</sup> The 1937 Pennsylvania statute, for example, provided that "all rates of payments to hospitals made by such [service-benefit plan] corporations . . . and any and all contracts entered into by any such corporation with any hospital, shall, at all times, be subject to the prior approval of the Insurance Department." 1937 Pa. Laws No. 378. Therefore, as insurer/provider fee agreements were part of the system of state regulation which the McCarran-Ferguson [****71] Act sought to preserve, there is no historical reason to exclude Blue Shield's Pharmacy Agreements from the ambit of the exemption; there is instead a good historical reason for including them.

Nor does respondents' claim that the Pharmacy Agreements are "anticompetitive" exclude them from constituting the "business of insurance." The determination of whether Blue Shield's Pharmacy Agreements actually involve antitrust violations or are otherwise anticompetitive has been held in abeyance, pending final decision as to whether the agreements fall within the scope of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. But even if the agreements were anticompetitive, that alone could not be the basis for excluding them from the "business of insurance." An antitrust exemption by its very nature must protect some [****72] transactions that are anticompetitive; an exemption that is extinguished by a finding that challenged activity violates the antitrust laws is no exemption at all.

While this reason for excluding the Pharmacy Agreements from the circle of exempt provider agreements is unconvincing, there are substantial reasons, in addition to history, for including them within that circle. First, it is clear that the contractual arrangement utilized by Blue Shield affects its [*250] costs, and thus affects both the setting of rates and the insurer's reliability. This is definitely a factor relevant to the determination of whether a transaction is within the "business of insurance." See SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S., at 460. See also Proctor v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 182 U. S. App. D. C. 264, 561 F.2d 262 (1977). True, that factor alone is not determinative, for as argued by the Court, innumerable agreements, including the lease on the insurance company's offices, affect cost. This contract, however, has more than a mere incidental connection to the policy and premium. It is a direct arrangement to provide the very goods [****73] and services whose purchase is the risk assumed in the insurance policy. It is therefore integral to the insurer's rate-setting process, as the correlation between rates and drug prices in a drug-benefits policy is necessarily high. Moreover, the ability of state insurance commissioners to regulate rates, an important concern of the Act, is measurably enhanced by their ability [**1093] to control the formulas by which insurers reimburse [***292] providers.<sup>18</sup> The same is true of state efforts to ensure that plans are financially reliable. See Travelers Ins. Co. v. Blue Cross of Western Pennsylvania, 481 F.2d 80, 83 n. 9 (CA3 1973) (quoting the Pennsylvania Insurance Commissioner). This close nexus between the Pharmacy Agreements and both the rates and fiscal reliability of Blue Shield's plan speaks strongly for their inclusion within the "business of insurance." See generally Proctor v. State [*251] Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., supra, at 271-272, 561 F.2d, at 269-270.

---

<sup>17</sup> Sinai 49. See, e. g., 1937 Ga. Laws, p. 690; 1939 Iowa Acts, ch. 222; 1939 Mich. Pub. Acts No. 109; 1939 N. M. Laws, ch. 66; 1939 Tex. Gen. Laws, p. 123. The same is true of the modern state statutes. See Eilers 106-107.

<sup>18</sup> Indeed, some state insurance commissioners have made aggressive use of their authority over provider contracts as a means of controlling premium rates. See Frankford Hospital v. Blue Cross of Greater Philadelphia, 417 F.Supp. 1104, 1106 (ED Pa. 1976), aff'd, 554 F.2d 1253 (CA3), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 860 (1977); State of Michigan, Commissioner of Ins., No. 77-R-101 (Mar. 3, 1977); State of Illinois, Dept. of Ins., Hearing No. 1607 (Apr. 8, 1977). This may also explain why the Federal Government, in programs in which it functions as a health insurer, requires that its provider agreements include specified fee formulas. See, e. g., 42 U. S. C. §§ 1395u, 1395x (v) (Medicare).

[****74] Another reason, in addition to this nexus to basic insurance elements, also supports the conclusion that fixed-price provider agreements are the "business of insurance." Such agreements themselves perform an important insurance function. It may be true, as the Court contends, that conventional notions of insurance focus on the underwriting of risk. But they also include efforts to reduce the unpredictable aspects of the risks assumed. Traditional plans achieve this end by setting ceilings on cash payments or utilizing large deductibles. R. Mehr & E. Cammack, Principles of Insurance 222 (6th ed. 1976). Even if the insurer cannot know how often a policyholder might become ill, it can know the extent of its exposure in the event of illness. The actuarial uncertainty, therefore, is greatly reduced. A fixed-price provider agreement attempts to reach the same result by contracting in advance for a price, rather than agreeing to pay as the market fluctuates. The agreement on price at least minimizes the variance of the "payoff" variable, even if the probability of its occurrence remains an unknown. Indeed, if examined carefully, this function comes within the latter half of the [****75] definition of "underwriting" offered by the Solicitor General: "[spreading] risk more widely or [reducing] the role of chance events." See n. 12, supra. Of course, the Pharmacy Agreements in this case do not totally control "the role of chance" in drug prices since acquisition costs may fluctuate even if "markup" is fixed, but they are at least an attempt to reduce the role of chance to manageable proportions.<sup>19</sup>

Moreover, a service-benefit plan which "[pays] the cost . . . whatever it might be," as hypothesized by the Court of [*252] Appeals, 556 F.2d, at 1381, would run grave risks of bankruptcy. Since it would expose the insurer to unknown liability, it would measurably increase the probability that an incorrect assessment of exposure would occur. This could lead to a failure to cover actual losses [****76] with premiums. Respondents argue that this fiscal-reliability problem could be solved by placing a dollar limit on benefits. But such a [***293] plan would be almost indistinguishable from a cash-indemnity policy. It would not be the full-service-regardless-of-price plan for which the policyholders bargained.<sup>20</sup> The Pharmacy Agreements are thus "other activities of insurance companies [related] so closely to their status as reliable insurers that they too must be placed in the same class." SEC v. National Securities, Inc., supra, at 460.

[**1094] V

The process of deciding what is and is not the "business of insurance" is inherently a case-by-case problem. It is true that the conclusion advocated here carries with it line-drawing problems. That [****77] is necessarily so once the provider-agreement line is crossed by holding some to be within the "business." But that is a line which history and logic compel me to cross. I would hold that the concept of a provider agreement for benefits promised in the policy is within the "business of insurance" because some form of provider agreement is necessary to fulfill the obligations of a service-benefit policy. I would hold that these provider agreements, Blue Shield's Pharmacy Agreements, are protected because they (1) directly obtain the very benefits promised in the policy<sup>21</sup> [****78] and therefore [*253] directly affect rates, cost, and insurer reliability, and (2) themselves constitute a critical element of risk "prediction."<sup>22</sup> The conclusion that these kinds of agreements are the "business of insurance" is that reached by every Court of Appeals except the Court of Appeals in this case.<sup>23</sup>

<sup>19</sup> The pharmacist respondents would not be better off if Blue Shield set acquisition cost as well as markup. In that event they might not even meet the cost of their own outlays.

<sup>20</sup> The plan here was "bargained for" in the literal sense. It had its origins in a 1967 collective-bargaining agreement between the United Auto Workers and the three largest domestic automobile manufacturers. Brief for Petitioners 6.

<sup>21</sup> The Solicitor General suggests that this test could be subverted by an insurer's decision to list all kinds of incidental and even unrelated transactions in its policy. As with other forms of antitrust immunity, I have no difficulty concluding that "sham" arrangements should not be honored. Cf. Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 144 \(1961\); California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508 \(1972\).

<sup>22</sup> These factors together are sufficient to decide this case. I need not decide whether either would independently suffice, nor whether in the absence of these factors others might also be capable of bringing a provider agreement within the exemption.

11 €ÁMÈÜÉGÉ ÚGÍ HÁIJ ÁUÖDÉF Í ÉFFÉJÍ LÁ JÄSEÖåÉGÁ FÉÉEGHÁFJÍ JÁNÈÜÉSÓYØJÁGJÉÉHÉ Í

[****79] I would not suggest, however, that all provider agreements come within the McCarran-Ferguson Act proviso. Given the facts found by the District Court upon summary judgment, this is not a case where the petitioner pharmacies themselves conspired to exclude others from the market, and either pressured Blue Shield to go along, or were voluntarily joined by the insurer. See also Government Brief 13 n. 6. Such an agreement among pharmacies, itself neither necessary nor related to the insurer's [***294] effort to satisfy its obligations to its policyholders, would be outside the "business of insurance." An insurance company cannot immunize an illegal conspiracy by joining it. Cf. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 351-352 [*254] (1943). Moreover, since in this case the Blue Shield plan was offered to all San Antonio pharmacies and was in fact agreed to by at least 12, I am not called upon to decide whether an exclusive arrangement with a single provider would be so tenuously related to providing policyholder benefits as to be beyond the exemption's protection. See generally Proctor v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 182 U. S. App. D. C., at 270 n. 10, 561 F.2d, at 268 n. 10. [****80] <sup>24</sup>

Finally, the conclusion that Blue Shield's Pharmacy Agreements should be held within the "business of insurance" <sup>25</sup> [****82] [*255] does not alone establish [***295] whether the agreements enjoy [**1095] an exemption from

---

<sup>23</sup> See Proctor v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 182 U. S. App. D. C. 264, 561 F.2d 262 (1977), aff'g 406 F.Supp. 27 (DC 1975), cert. pending, No. 77-580; Doctors, Inc. v. Blue Cross of Greater Philadelphia, 557 F.2d 1001 (CA3 1976), aff'g 431 F.Supp. 5 (ED Pa. 1975); Frankford Hospital v. Blue Cross of Greater Philadelphia, 554 F.2d 1253 (CA3 1976), aff'g 417 F.Supp. 1104 (ED Pa.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 860 (1977); Anderson v. Medical Service of District of Columbia, 551 F.2d 304 (CA4 1977), aff'g 1976-1 Trade Cases para. 60,884 (ED Va); Travelers Ins. Co. v. Blue Cross of Western Pennsylvania, 481 F.2d 80 (CA3), aff'g 361 F.Supp. 774 (WD Pa. 1972), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1093 (1973).

<sup>24</sup> Such an arrangement could not be suspect simply because it would be anticompetitive, see discussion, supra, at 249. Rather, that means of providing policy benefits might be regarded as so unnecessary, and so likely to have its principal impact on pharmacies rather than policyholders, as to cross the boundary line of what constitutes the "business of insurance." I intimate no view upon the question.

<sup>25</sup> The analogies to other antitrust exemptions referred to by the Court, ante, at 231-232, are inapt. It is true that as a general rule an "exempt" party loses its immunity when it makes an agreement that is outside the scope of the exemption. But that general rule has no application here unless one assumes what the respondents need to prove -- that the Pharmacy Agreements are outside the scope of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. Reference to the cases under the Capper-Volstead Act is not helpful on the matter, as that Act limits its exemption to those who are "engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers." 42 Stat. 388, 7 U.S.C. § 291 (emphasis added). As a result, this Court has held that agreements involving nonfarmers are not exempt. National Broiler Marketing Assn. v. United States, 436 U.S. 816 (1978). As the Court emphasizes, however, the McCarran-Ferguson Act exemption was not written in terms of "insurance companies," but extends instead to the "business of insurance." Hence, the participation of pharmacies does not automatically vitiate the exemption, as does the participation of nonfarmers in the Capper-Volstead "analogy."

Nor is reference to the labor exemption helpful to the Court. The quotation from Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 665-666 (1965), cited by the Court, ante, at 232 n. 39, is in complete accord with what I would conclude here: "[A] union [read 'insurer'] may make wage [pharmacy] agreements with a multi-employer bargaining unit [a group of pharmacies] . . . . But . . . [one] group of employers [pharmacies] may not conspire to eliminate competitors from the industry and the union [insurer] is liable with the employers [pharmacies] if it becomes a party to the conspiracy." The labor exemption is a particularly poor analogy for the Court to stress because in yet another footnote, Pennington expressly approved a set of transactions virtually identical to those complained of in this case. Here, respondents contend that Blue Shield adopted a uniform fee policy, even though it may have suspected that some pharmacies would not be able to compete if required to limit their markup to that demanded by Blue Shield. There was, however, no additional evidence of a conspiracy among the participating pharmacies to drive out their less able brethren, which Blue Shield then joined. This was precisely the set of circumstances held by the Pennington Court to be within the scope of the exemption:

"Unilaterally, and without agreement with any employer group to do so, a union may adopt a uniform wage policy and seek vigorously to implement it even though it may suspect that some employers cannot effectively compete if they are required to pay the wage scale demanded by the union. The union need not gear its wage demands to wages which the weakest units in the industry can afford to pay. Such union conduct is not alone sufficient evidence to maintain a union-employer conspiracy charge under the Sherman Act. There must be additional direct or indirect evidence of the conspiracy." 381 U.S., at 665 n. 2.

the antitrust laws. To be entitled to an exemption, petitioners still would have to demonstrate that the transactions are in fact truly regulated by the State, 15 U. S. C. § 1012 \(b\), and that they do not fall within the "boycott" exception of 15 U. S. C. § 1013 \(b\). The District Court held for petitioners on both issues. Neither [****81] issue was reached by the Court of Appeals, however, in light of its holding that the contracts were not the "business of insurance." Accordingly, [*256] I would reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals and remand the case for further proceedings.<sup>26</sup>

[****83]

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 225

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1012

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 29

L Ed Index to Annos, Insurance; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Insurance; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Insurance; McCarran-Ferguson Act; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Validity, construction, and application of McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1011-1015), dealing with regulations of insurance business by state or federal law. 21 L Ed 2d 938.

Union activities violating the federal antitrust laws. 9 L Ed 2d 998, 20 L Ed 2d 1528.

Employer activities, beneficial or detrimental to organized labor, as violating federal antitrust laws. 93 L Ed 811.

---

End of Document

---

Thus, the approach taken by the Court today does not merely "narrowly" construe "insurance" in accordance with our general practice. Rather, that approach actively discriminates between kinds of insurance, effectively confining "insurance" to traditional forms and effectively excluding forms that provide full-service coverage via provider agreements. It thereby places a significant obstacle in the path of the latter.

<sup>26</sup> The Court argues, ante, at 232 n. 40, that provider agreements may have anticompetitive consequences which could lead to escalation of health-care costs. The argument is not without force, but I must note that the very purpose of an antitrust exemption is to protect anticompetitive conduct. The argument, therefore, is better directed to the legislature, which has the power to modify or repeal McCarran-Ferguson, rather than to this Court. Referral to the legislators is particularly appropriate in this case, as the policy aspects may not be as one-sided as those painted by the Court. There is authority for the proposition that provider agreements, far from increasing costs, constitute an effective means for reduction in health-care prices and premiums. Council on Wage and Price Stability, Employee Health Care Benefits: Labor and Management Sponsored Innovations in Controlling Cost, 41 Fed. Reg. 40298, 40305 \(1976\). And the argument that "there is little incentive on the part of Blue Shield to minimize costs, since it is in the interest of the providers to set fee schedules at the highest possible level" overlooks the vital consideration that many if not most of these plans originate in collective-bargaining agreements where "the consumer power and negotiating expertise of organized labor" combine to "reduce the unit price of health services." Ibid. Control over provider agreements by state insurance commissioners constitutes a second "incentive" operating in the same direction. See n. 18, supra. Whether or not the potential anticompetitive impact of McCarran-Ferguson outweighs these positive effects on health-care costs is a judgment properly to be made by Congress.

Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

Supreme Court of the United States

January 15, 1979, Argued ; April 17, 1979, Decided *

No. 77-1578

Reporter

441 U.S. 1 *; 99 S. Ct. 1551 **; 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 ***; 1979 U.S. LEXIS 84 ****; 201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 497; Copy. L. Rep. (CCH) P25,064; 1979-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P62,558

BROADCAST MUSIC, INC., ET AL. v. COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, INC., ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 562 F.2d 130, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

license, blanket, music, compositions, rights, Sherman Act, users, composers, price fixing, antitrust, negotiate, copyright owner, network, television, cases, decree, practices, television network, anti trust law, per se rule, per se violation, competitors, costs, restraint of trade, consent decree, monopoly, holders, musical composition, broadcasters, publishers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

---

* Together with No. 77-1583, American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers et al. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., et al., also on certiorari to the same court.

11 FÁMEJÉFÍFLÁJAEÓDÉFÍ Í FLÁ€SEÓAÉGÁFÍFLÁJÍ JÁMEJÉSÓYQÁI FÍFLÁ201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 497,
█ JÍ

In construing and applying the Sherman Act's ban against contracts, conspiracies, and combinations in restraint of trade, certain agreements or practices are so plainly anticompetitive, and so often lack any redeeming virtue, that they are conclusively presumed illegal without further examination under the rule of reason generally applied in Sherman Act cases. This per se rule is a valid and useful tool of antitrust policy and enforcement. And agreements among competitors to fix prices on their individual goods or services are among those concerted activities held to be within the per se category.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Governments > Legislation > Overbreadth

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

When two partners set the price of their goods or services they are literally price fixing, but they are not per se in violation of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN3  Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations of the Sherman Act.

Lawyers' Edition Display

Decision

Blanket licensing for use of copyrighted musical compositions, held not to be per se illegal price fixing under Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.).

Summary

Two organizations serving as "clearinghouses" for copyright owners and users were sued in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York for violation of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) and copyright laws with respect to a system of blanket licensing whereby the organizations give licensees the right to perform any and all of the musical compositions owned by the organizations' members or affiliates as often as the licensees desire, for a stated term, in return for the licensees' payment of fees which do not directly depend on the amount or type of music used, but ordinarily reflect a percentage of total revenues or a flat dollar amount. The plaintiff, the operator of a national commercial television network holding blanket licenses from both organizations, alleged that the two organizations were unlawful monopolies and that the blanket licenses constituted illegal price fixing, unlawful tying arrangements, concerted refusals to deal, and misuse of copyrights. The District Court ultimately dismissed the complaint, rejecting a claim that the blanket licenses constituted price fixing that was a per se violation of the Sherman Act, and holding that since direct negotiation with individual copyright owners was available and feasible there was no undue restraint of trade, illegal tying, misuse of copyrights, or monopolization (400 F Supp 737). On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit reversed and remanded for consideration of an appropriate remedy, holding that the blanket licenses issued to television networks constituted a form of price fixing illegal per se under the Sherman Act, the determination as to price fixing settling the issue of liability under the Act and establishing copyright misuse (562 F2d 130).

ÍÍ FÁMIÉFLÁJÁÉÓÉÍ Í FÁMIÉFLÁJÍ JÁÉSÓYÓÁÍ ÉFLÁ201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 497, ÍÍ JÍ

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. In an opinion by White, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and Brennan, Stewart, Marshall, Blackmun, Powell, and Rehnquist, JJ., it was held that the system of blanket licensing for the use of copyrighted musical compositions did not constitute a type of price fixing per se violative of the Sherman Act, and that in determining whether the system of blanket licensing violated the Sherman Act, the appropriate standard of examination was that of the rule of reason generally applied in Sherman Act cases, such standard of analysis being one for the Court of Appeals to utilize on remand if the issue of blanket licenses as employed in the television industry had been preserved in the Court of Appeals.

Stevens, J., dissenting, agreed with the Court's holding that the blanket licenses did not constitute a species of price fixing categorically forbidden by the Sherman Act, but would not have remanded the case, and instead would have affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeals on the ground that the question whether the blanket licenses were unlawful under a rule of reason inquiry was properly before the court and should be answered affirmatively.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §16 > blanket licensing -- copyrighted musical compositions -- price fixing -- per se illegality -- rule of reason --> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

The system of blanket licensing whereby organizations operating as clearinghouses for copyright owners and users issue blanket licenses for the use of copyrighted musical compositions--which licenses give the licensees the right to perform any and all of the compositions owned by the organizations' members or affiliates as often as the licensees desire, for a stated term, in return for a fee which does not directly depend on the amount or type of music used, but ordinarily is based upon a percentage of total revenues or a flat dollar amount--does not constitute a type of price fixing that is illegal per se under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), but rather, when such a system of blanket licensing is attacked as constituting price fixing under the Act, it should be subjected to examination under the federal antitrust law's rule of reason standard of analysis.

MONOPOLIES §9 > per se rule -- rule of reason --> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Under the per se rule used in construing and applying the ban of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) against contracts, conspiracies, and combinations in restraint of trade, certain agreements or practices are so plainly anticompetitive and so often lack any redeeming virtue that they will be conclusively presumed illegal without further examination under the rule of reason generally applied in Sherman Act cases.

MONOPOLIES §62 > price fixing -- blanket license -- copyrighted musical compositions -- per se illegality -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Although a system for the blanket licensing of copyrighted musical compositions through the joining together of the composers of musical compositions and publishing houses into an organization that sets a price for the blanket licenses sold by the organization might be "price fixing" in the literal sense, such does not alone establish that the licensing practice is one so plainly anticompetitive and so often lacking any redeeming virtue as to be conclusively presumed illegal under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) without further examination under the rule of reason generally applied in Sherman Act cases.

COPYRIGHT §11 > MONOPOLIES §62 > blanket license -- musical composition -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

The mere fact that a broadcaster of television programs, as the licensee under a blanket license for the use of copyrighted musical compositions, pays a flat fee regardless of the amount of use it makes of copyrighted compositions under the agreement, and even though many of its programs contain little or no music, does not alone make out a violation of federal antitrust law or misuse of copyrights.

MONOPOLIES §37 > price fixing -- per se violation -- Sherman Act -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

When two partners set the price of their goods or services they are literally "price fixing," but they are not per se in violation of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.).

MONOPOLIES §9 > federal antitrust laws -- per se violation -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

It is only after considerable experience with a certain business relationship that such relationship will be classified as a per se violation of federal antitrust laws.

COPYRIGHT §15 > prior consent -- performance of copyrighted music -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

Under the copyright laws, those who publicly perform copyrighted music have the burden of obtaining prior consent.

MONOPOLIES §19 > per se rule -- effect and purpose of practice -- competition -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

ÍÍ FÁNÈÉFÁFLÁJÁÉDÉFÍ Í FÁFLÍ Í FLÀ ÉSÉDÉGÁ ÁÉFLÁJÍ JÁNÈÉSÓYÓÀ I ÉÉFLÁ 201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 497,  JÍ

In characterizing conduct for purposes of the rule whereby certain agreements or practices that are so plainly anticompetitive and so often lacking any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed illegal under federal antitrust law without further examination under the rule of reason generally applied in cases arising under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), the inquiry must focus on whether the effect and, where the conduct tends to show effect, the purpose of the practice is to threaten the proper operation of the predominately free market economy--that is, whether the practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output, and in what portion of the market, or instead is one designed to increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive.

MONOPOLIES §37 > agreements among competitors -- impact on price -- per se violation of Sherman Act -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[9\]!\[\]\(a62ca53ca8a080b5dd0895438b960293_img.jpg\)](#) [9]

Not all arrangements among actual or potential competitors that have an impact on price are per se violations of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) or even unreasonable restraints; mergers among competitors eliminate competition, including price competition, but they are not per se illegal and many of them withstand attack under any existing antitrust standard; joint ventures and other cooperative arrangements are also not usually unlawful, at least not as price-fixing schemes, where the agreement on price is necessary to market the product at all.

ERROR §1537 > Court of Appeals' judgment -- reversal and remand by Supreme Court -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[10\]!\[\]\(369f19138a7ccd2f216b46bf55aab9c3_img.jpg\)](#) [10]

On certiorari to review the decision of a Federal Court of Appeals, which reversed and remanded as to a Federal District Court's dismissal of a complaint in an action brought by the operator of a television network alleging that blanket licenses under which the operator was licensed to use copyrighted musical compositions violated the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) and copyright laws because they constituted illegal price fixing, unlawful tying arrangements, concerted refusals to deal, and misuse of copyrights, the United States Supreme Court will--upon holding that the blanket licenses do not constitute a type of price fixing that is per se illegal under the Sherman Act but must be examined under the rule of reason--reverse the Court of Appeals' judgment that the blanket licenses constitute price fixing per se violative of the Sherman Act and also its judgment, dependent upon its holding regarding price fixing, that the blanket licenses constitute copyright misuse, and the Supreme Court will remand the case for further proceedings to consider any unresolved issues that the network operator might have properly brought to the Court of Appeals, including an assessment under the rule of reason of blanket licenses as employed in the television industry, if such issue had been preserved by the network operator in the Court of Appeals. (Stevens, J., dissented from this holding.)

ERROR §1087.5(2) > Court of Appeals' judgment -- affirmance despite error -- failure to raise point in petition for certiorari -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]!\[\]\(07629363eba05b885474682c0ebe34f5_img.jpg\)](#) [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]!\[\]\(495aef4a752a2ced9659bdeb25678a27_img.jpg\)](#) [11B]

On certiorari to review the decision of a Federal Court of Appeals, which reversed and remanded as to a Federal District Court's dismissal of a complaint in an action brought by the operator of a television network alleging that blanket licenses under which the network was licensed to use copyrighted musical compositions violated the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) and copyright laws as constituting illegal price fixing, unlawful tying arrangements, concerted refusals to deal, and misuse of copyrights, the United States Supreme Court--upon holding that the Court of Appeals had erred in ruling that the blanket licenses constituted a type of price fixing that is per se illegal under the Sherman Act--will not affirm the Court of Appeals' judgment on the ground that the blanket licenses constitute tying arrangements violative of the Sherman Act or on the ground that the licensors monopolized the relevant market contrary to the Sherman Act; the Supreme Court will leave undisturbed the Court of Appeals' judgment in respect to its rejection of the tying and monopolization arguments, particularly since the network operator did not file its own petition for certiorari challenging the Court of Appeals' failure to sustain the tying and monopolization claims.

ÍÍ FÁMIÉÉFLÁJÁÉÓÉÍ Í FÁMIÉÍ FLÁÉSÉDÉGÁÉFLÁJÍ JÁMÉSÓYÓÁÍ ÉFLÁ201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 497,
■■■ JÍ

Syllabus

---

[498] Respondent Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. (CBS), brought this action against petitioners, American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP) and Broadcast Music, Inc. (BMI), and their members and affiliates, alleging, inter alia, that the issuance by ASCAP and BMI to CBS of blanket licenses to copyrighted musical compositions at fees negotiated by them is illegal price fixing under the antitrust laws. Blanket licenses give the licensees the right to perform any and all of the compositions owned by the members or affiliates as often as the licensees desire for a stated term. Fees for blanket licenses are ordinarily a percentage of total revenues or a flat dollar amount, and do not directly depend on the amount or type of music [***2] used. After a trial limited to the issue of liability, the District Court dismissed the complaint, holding, inter alia, that the blanket license was not price fixing and a per se violation of the Sherman Act. The Court of Appeals reversed and remanded for consideration of the appropriate remedy, holding that the blanket license issued to television networks was a form of price fixing illegal per se under the Sherman Act and established copyright misuse.

Held: The issuance by ASCAP and BMI of blanket licenses does not constitute price fixing per se unlawful under the antitrust laws. Pp. 7-25.

(a) "It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations of the Sherman Act." United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 607-608. And though there has been rather intensive antitrust scrutiny of ASCAP and BMI and their blanket licenses, that experience hardly counsels that this Court should outlaw the blanket license as a per se restraint of trade. Furthermore, the United States, by its amicus brief in the present case, urges that the blanket licenses, which [***3] consent decrees in earlier actions by the Government authorize ASCAP and BMI to issue to television networks, are not per se violations of the Sherman Act. And Congress, in the Copyright Act of 1976, has itself chosen to employ the blanket license and similar practices. Thus, there is no nearly universal view that the blanket licenses are a form of price fixing subject to automatic condemnation under the Sherman Act, rather than to a careful assessment under the rule of reason generally applied in Sherman Act cases. Pp. 7-16.

(b) In characterizing the conduct of issuing blanket licenses under the per se rule, this Court's inquiry must focus on whether the effect and, here because it tends to show effect, the purpose of the practice are to threaten the proper operation of a predominantly free-market economy. The blanket license is not a "naked [restraint] of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition," White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263, but rather accompanies the integration of sales, monitoring, and enforcement against unauthorized copyright use, which would be difficult and expensive problems if left to individual users [***4] and copyright owners. Although the blanket license fee is set by ASCAP and BMI rather than by competition among individual copyright owners, and although it is a fee for the use of any of the compositions covered by the license, the license cannot be wholly equated with a simple horizontal arrangement among competitors and is quite different from anything any individual owner could issue. In light of the background, which plainly indicates that over the years, and in the face of available alternatives including direct negotiation with individual copyright owners, the blanket license has provided an acceptable mechanism for at least a large part of the market for the performing rights to copyrighted musical compositions, it cannot automatically be declared illegal in all of its many manifestations. Rather, it should be subjected to a more discriminating examination under the rule of reason. Pp. 16-24.

III FÁNUEFÍFLÁJÄEÖDÍFÍ FÆAFÍ Í FLÀ €ŠEÒAÉGÁFÆAFÍFLÁJÍ JÄEÜEŠOÝQÀI FÆAFÍ LÁ201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 497,
JÍ

(c) The Court of Appeals' judgment holding that the licensing practices of ASCAP and BMI are per se violations of the Sherman Act, and the copyright misuse judgment dependent thereon, are reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings to consider any unresolved issues [****5] that CBS may have properly brought to the Court of Appeals, including an assessment under the rule of reason of the blanket license as employed in the television industry. Pp. 24-25.

Counsel: Amalya L. Kearse argued the cause for petitioners in No. 77-1578. With her on the briefs were George A. Davidson and Conley E. Brian, Jr. Jay Topkis argued the cause for petitioners in No. 77-1583. With him on the briefs were Bernard Korman, Simon H. Rifkind, Herman Finkelstein, and Allan Blumstein.

Alan J. Hruska argued the cause for respondents in both cases. With him on the briefs were John D. Appel and Robert M. Sondak.

Deputy Solicitor General Easterbrook argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging reversal. With him on the briefs were Solicitor General McCree, Assistant Attorney General Shenefield, William Alsup, John J. Powers III, and Andrea Limmer. +

[****6]

Judges: WHITE, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and BRENNAN, STEWART, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, POWELL, and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, post, p. 25.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

[*4]   [*6]   [**1554] MR. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A]This case involves an action under the antitrust and copyright laws brought by respondent Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. (CBS), against petitioners, American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP) and Broadcast Music, [499] Inc. (BMI), and their members and affiliates.<sup>1</sup> The basic question presented is whether the issuance by ASCAP and BMI to CBS of blanket licenses to copyrighted musical compositions at fees negotiated by them is price fixing per se unlawful under the antitrust laws.

[*****7] 1

CBS operates one of three national commercial television networks, supplying programs to approximately 200 affiliated stations and telecasting approximately 7,500 network programs per year. Many, but not all, of these

+ Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed by Irwin Karp for the Authors League of America, Inc.; by Philip Elman and Robert M. Lichtman for the Performing Right Society, Ltd., et al.; and by Robert H. Bork for Aaron Copland et al.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed by Ira M. Millstein for the All-Industry Television Music License Committee; by Clarence Fried for American Broadcasting Companies, Inc.; by David R. Hyde for National Broadcasting Company, Inc.; by John H. Midlen, Jr., for National Religious Broadcasters, Inc.; and by John L. Hill, Attorney General of Texas, David M. Kendall, First Assistant Attorney General, and Robert S. Bickerstaff and Susan Dasher, Assistant Attorneys General, for the Universities of the State of Texas et al.

Irving Moskovitz filed a brief for the All-Industry Radio Music License Committee as amicus curiae.

<sup>1</sup> The District Court certified the case as a defendant class action. 400 F.Supp. 737, 741 n. 2 (SDNY 1975).

11 FÁJIÉSÍ LÁJÁÉDÉÍ I FÁJIÍ I LÁÉSÍ DÉGÁ ÁÉLÁJÍ JÁNÉSÓYÓÁ I ÉLÁ 201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 497, ÉLÁ JÍ

programs make use of copyrighted music recorded on the soundtrack. CBS also owns television and radio stations in various cities. It is "the giant of the world in the use of [**7] music rights," the "No. 1 outlet in the history of entertainment."<sup>2</sup>

Since 1897, the copyright laws have vested in the owner of a copyrighted musical composition the exclusive right to perform the work publicly for profit,<sup>3</sup> but the legal right is not self-enforcing. In 1914, Victor Herbert and a handful of other composers organized ASCAP because those who performed [***8] [*5] copyrighted music for profit were so numerous and widespread, and [**1555] most performances so fleeting, that as a practical matter it was impossible for the many individual copyright owners to negotiate with and license the users and to detect unauthorized uses. "ASCAP was organized as a 'clearing-house' for copyright owners and users to solve these problems" associated with the licensing of music. 400 F.Supp. 737, 741 \(SDNY 1975\). As ASCAP operates today, its 22,000 members grant it nonexclusive rights to license nondramatic performances of their works, and ASCAP issues licenses and distributes royalties to copyright owners in accordance with a schedule reflecting the nature and amount of the use of their music and other factors.

BMI, a nonprofit corporation owned by members of the broadcasting industry,<sup>4</sup> was organized in 1939, is affiliated with or represents some 10,000 publishing companies and 20,000 authors and composers, and operates [***9] in much the same manner as ASCAP. Almost every domestic copyrighted composition is in the repertory either of ASCAP, with a total of three million compositions, or of BMI, with one million.

Both organizations operate primarily through blanket licenses, which give the licensees the right to perform any and all of the compositions owned by the members or affiliates as often as the licensees desire for a stated term. Fees for blanket licenses are ordinarily a percentage of total revenues or a flat dollar amount, and do not directly depend on the amount or type of music used. Radio and television broadcasters are the largest users of music, and almost all of them hold blanket licenses from both ASCAP and BMI. Until this litigation, CBS held blanket licenses from both organizations for its television network on a continuous basis since the late 1940's and [***10] had never attempted to secure any other form of [*6] license from either ASCAP<sup>5</sup> or any of its members. Id., at 752-754.

The complaint filed by CBS charged various violations of the Sherman Act<sup>6</sup> and the copyright laws.<sup>7</sup> CBS argued that ASCAP and BMI are unlawful monopolies and that the blanket license is illegal price fixing, an unlawful tying arrangement, [***8] a concerted refusal to deal, and a misuse of copyrights. The District Court, though denying summary judgment to certain defendants, ruled that the practice did not fall within the per se rule. 337 F.Supp. 394, 398 \(SDNY 1972\). After an 8-week trial, limited to the issue of liability, the court dismissed the complaint, rejecting again the claim that the blanket license was price fixing and a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and holding that since direct [***11] negotiation with individual copyright owners is available and feasible there is no undue restraint of trade, illegal tying, misuse of copyrights, or monopolization. 400 F.Supp., at 781-783.

<sup>2</sup> Id., at 771, quoting a CBS witness. CBS is also a leading music publisher, with publishing subsidiaries affiliated with both ASCAP and BMI, and is the world's largest manufacturer and seller of records and tapes. Ibid.

<sup>3</sup> Act of Jan. 6, 1897, 29 Stat. 481.

<sup>4</sup> CBS was a leader of the broadcasters who formed BMI, but it disposed of all of its interest in the corporation in 1959. 400 F.Supp., at 742.

<sup>5</sup> Unless the context indicates otherwise, references to ASCAP alone in this opinion usually apply to BMI as well. See n. 20, infra.

<sup>6</sup> 15 U. S. C. §§ 1 and 2.

<sup>7</sup> CBS seeks injunctive relief for the antitrust violations and a declaration of copyright misuse. 400 F.Supp., at 741.

II FÁMÉJÉKÉK LÁJÁÉDÉFÍ I FÁMÉFÍ I I LÁ ÉSÉDÁÉGÁFÉKÉK LÁJÍ JÁNÉÉSÓYÓA I ÉKÉFFLÁ 201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 497,
JÍ

[500] Though agreeing with the District Court's factfinding and not disturbing its legal conclusions on the other antitrust theories of liability,<sup>8</sup> [****12] the Court of Appeals held that the blanket license issued to television networks was a form of price fixing illegal per se under the Sherman Act. 562 F.2d 130, 140 \(CA2 1977\). This conclusion, without more, settled the issue of liability under the Sherman Act, established copyright misuse,<sup>9</sup> and required reversal of the District [**1556] Court's [*7] judgment, as well as a remand to consider the appropriate remedy.<sup>10</sup>

[****13] ASCAP and BMI petitioned for certiorari, presenting the questions of the applicability of the per se rule and of whether this constitutes misuse of copyrights. CBS did not cross petition to challenge the failure to sustain its other antitrust claims. We granted certiorari because of the importance of the issues to the antitrust and copyright laws. 439 U.S. 817 \(1978\). Because we disagree with the Court of Appeals' conclusions with respect to the per se illegality of the blanket license, we reverse its judgment and remand the cause for further appropriate proceedings.

[***9] II

[LEdHN\[2\]↑](#) [2][HN1\[↑\]](#) In construing and applying the Sherman Act's ban against contracts, conspiracies, and combinations in restraint of trade, [*8] the Court has held that certain agreements or practices are so "plainly anticompetitive," National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692 \(1978\); Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 50 \(1977\), [****14] and so often "lack . . . any redeeming virtue," Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 \(1958\), that they are conclusively presumed illegal without further examination under the rule of reason generally applied in Sherman Act cases. This per se rule is a valid and useful tool of antitrust policy and enforcement.<sup>11</sup> [****15] And agreements among competitors to fix prices on their

<sup>8</sup> The Court of Appeals affirmed the District Court's rejection of CBS's monopolization and tying contentions but did not rule on the District Court's conclusion that the blanket license was not an unreasonable restraint of trade. See 562 F.2d 130, 132, 135, 141 n. 29 \(CA2 1977\).

<sup>9</sup> At CBS's suggestion, the Court of Appeals held that the challenged conduct constituted misuse of copyrights solely on the basis of its finding of unlawful price fixing. Id., at 141 n. 29.

<sup>10</sup> The Court of Appeals went on to suggest some guidelines as to remedy, indicating that despite its conclusion on liability the blanket license was not totally forbidden. The Court of Appeals said:

"Normally, after a finding of price-fixing, the remedy is an injunction against the price-fixing -- in this case, the blanket license. We think, however, that if on remand a remedy can be fashioned which will ensure that the blanket license will not affect the price or negotiations for direct licenses, the blanket license need not be prohibited in all circumstances. The blanket license is not simply a 'naked restraint' ineluctably doomed to extinction. There is not enough evidence in the present record to compel a finding that the blanket license does not serve a market need for those who wish full protection against infringement suits or who, for some other business reason, deem the blanket license desirable. The blanket license includes a practical covenant not to sue for infringement of any ASCAP copyright as well as an indemnification against suits by others."

"Our objection to the blanket license is that it reduces price competition among the members and provides a disinclination to compete. We think that these objections may be removed if ASCAP itself is required to provide some form of per use licensing which will ensure competition among the individual members with respect to those networks which wish to engage in per use licensing." Id., at 140 (footnotes omitted).

<sup>11</sup> "This principle of per se unreasonableness not only makes the type of restraints which are proscribed by the Sherman Act more certain to the benefit of everyone concerned, but it also avoids the necessity for an incredibly complicated and prolonged economic investigation into the entire history of the industry involved, as well as related industries, in an effort to determine at large whether a particular restraint has been unreasonable -- an inquiry so often wholly fruitless when undertaken." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 \(1958\).

See Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 50 n. 16 \(1977\); United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 609 n. 10 \(1972\).

ÍÍ FÁMEJÉKÍ LÁJÁEÓČÍ Í FÁEJÍ Í LÁ ČSEÓAÉGÁFÁEJÍ LÁJÍ JÁEÜEŠÓYQÁ I ÁEJÍ LÁ01 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 497, JÍ

individual goods or services are among those concerted activities that the Court has held to be within the per se category.<sup>12</sup> But easy labels do not always supply ready answers.

A

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [↑] [3][LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [↑] [4A][LEdHN\[5\]](#) [↑] [5] To the Court of Appeals and CBS, the blanket license involves "price fixing" in the literal sense: the composers and publishing houses have joined together into an organization that sets its price for the blanket license it sells.<sup>13</sup> [***17] But this [*9] is not a [**1557] [501] question simply of determining whether two or more potential competitors have literally "fixed" a "price." As generally used in the antitrust field, "price fixing" is a shorthand way of describing certain categories of business behavior to which the per se rule has been held applicable. The Court of Appeals' literal approach does not alone establish that this particular practice is one of those types or that it is "plainly anticompetitive" and very likely without "redeeming virtue." Literalness is overly simplistic and often overbroad. HN2 [↑] [****16] When two partners set the price of their goods or services [***10] they are literally "price fixing," but they are not per se in violation of the Sherman Act. See United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271, 280 \(CA6 1898\), aff'd, 175 U.S. 211 \(1899\). Thus, it is necessary to characterize the challenged conduct as falling within or without that category of behavior to which we apply the label "per se price fixing." That will often, but not always, be a simple matter.<sup>14</sup>

[LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [↑] [4B]

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [↑] [6] Consequently, as we recognized in United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 607-608 \(1972\), HN3 [↑] "[it] is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations . . ." See [*10] [White \[\*\*\*\*18\] Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263 \(1963\)](#). We have never examined a practice like this one before; indeed, the Court of Appeals recognized that "[in] dealing with performing rights in the music industry we confront conditions both in copyright law and in antitrust law which are sui generis." 562 F.2d, at 132. And though there has been rather intensive antitrust scrutiny of ASCAP and its blanket licenses, that experience hardly counsels that we should outlaw the blanket license as a per se restraint of trade.

B

---

<sup>12</sup> See cases discussed in n. 14, infra.

<sup>13</sup> CBS also complains that it pays a flat fee regardless of the amount of use it makes of ASCAP compositions and even though many of its programs contain little or no music. We are unable to see how that alone could make out an antitrust violation or misuse of copyrights:

"Sound business judgment could indicate that such payment represents the most convenient method of fixing the business value of the privileges granted by the licensing agreement. . . . Petitioner cannot complain because it must pay royalties whether it uses Hazeltine patents or not. What it acquired by the agreement into which it entered was the privilege to use any or all of the patents and developments as it desired to use them." Automatic Radio Mfg. Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 339 U.S. 827, 834 \(1950\).

See also Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100 \(1969\).

<sup>14</sup> Cf., e. g., United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 351 U.S. 305 \(1956\) (manufacturer/wholesaler agreed with independent wholesalers on prices to be charged on products it manufactured); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150 \(1940\) (firms controlling a substantial part of an industry agreed to purchase "surplus" gasoline with the intent and necessary effect of increasing the price); United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392 \(1927\) (manufacturers and distributors of 82% of certain vitreous pottery fixtures agreed to sell at uniform prices).

II FÁMÈJÉÉF CLÁJ ÁUÉOÉÁÍ FÁÉFÍ Í LÀ ÉSÉDÀÉGÁ ÁÉÉÉCLÁJÍ JÁMÈJÉSÓYÓÁ I ÉÉÉÉLÁ 201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÉÉÉÉ JÍ

This litigation and other cases involving ASCAP and its licensing practices have arisen out of the efforts of the creators of copyrighted musical compositions to collect for the public performance of their works, as they are entitled to do under the Copyright Act. As already indicated, ASCAP and BMI originated to make possible and to facilitate dealings between copyright owners and those who desire to use their music. Both organizations plainly involve concerted action in a large and active line of commerce, and it is not surprising that, as the District Court found, "[neither] ASCAP nor BMI is a stranger to antitrust [****19] litigation." 400 F.Supp., at 743.

The Department of Justice first investigated allegations of anticompetitive conduct by ASCAP over 50 years ago.<sup>15</sup> [****20] A criminal complaint was filed in 1934, but the Government was granted a midtrial continuance and never returned to the courtroom. In separate complaints in 1941, the United States charged that the blanket license, which was then the only license [**1558] offered by ASCAP and BMI, was an illegal restraint of trade and that arbitrary prices were being charged as the result of an illegal copyright pool.<sup>16</sup> The Government sought [*11] to enjoin ASCAP's exclusive licensing powers and to require [***11] a different form of licensing by that organization. The case was settled by a consent decree that imposed tight restrictions on ASCAP's operations.<sup>17</sup> Following complaints relating to the television industry, successful private litigation against ASCAP by movie theaters,<sup>18</sup> and a [502] Government challenge to ASCAP's arrangements with similar foreign organizations, the 1941 decree was reopened and extensively amended in 1950.<sup>19</sup>

Under the amended decree, which still substantially controls the activities of ASCAP, members may grant ASCAP only nonexclusive rights to license their works for public performance. Members, therefore, retain the rights individually to license public performances, along with the rights to license the use of their compositions for other purposes. ASCAP itself is forbidden to grant any license to perform one or more specified compositions in the ASCAP repertory unless both the user and the owner have requested [****21] it in writing to do so. ASCAP is required to grant to any user making written application a nonexclusive license to perform all ASCAP compositions, either for a period of time or on a per-program basis. ASCAP may not insist on the blanket license, and the fee for the per-program license, which is to be based on the revenues for the program on which ASCAP music is played, must offer the applicant a genuine economic choice between the per-program license and the more common blanket license. If ASCAP and a putative licensee are unable to agree on a fee within 60 days, the applicant may apply to the District Court [*12] for a determination of a reasonable fee, with ASCAP having the burden of proving reasonableness.<sup>20</sup>

[****22] The 1950 decree, as amended from time to time, continues in effect, and the blanket license continues to be the primary instrument through which ASCAP conducts its business under the decree. The courts have twice construed the decree not to require ASCAP to issue licenses for selected portions of its repertory.<sup>21</sup> [****23] It also

<sup>15</sup> Cohn, Music, Radio Broadcasters and the Sherman Act, 29 Geo. L. J. 407, 424 n. 91 (1941).

<sup>16</sup> E. g., complaint in United States v. ASCAP, Civ. No. 13-95 (SDNY 1941), pp. 3-4.

<sup>17</sup> United States v. ASCAP, 1940-1943 Trade Cases para. 56,104 (SDNY 1941).

<sup>18</sup> See Alden-Rochelle, Inc. v. ASCAP, 80 F.Supp. 888 (SDNY 1948); M. Witmark & Sons v. Jenson, 80 F.Supp. 843 (Minn. 1948), appeal dismissed sub nom. M. Witmark & Sons v. Berger Amusement Co., 177 F.2d 515 (CA8 1949).

<sup>19</sup> United States v. ASCAP, 1950-1951 Trade Cases para. 62,595 (SDNY 1950).

<sup>20</sup> BMI is in a similar situation. The original decree against BMI is reported as United States v. BMI, 1940-1943 Trade Cases para. 56,096 (ED Wis. 1941). A new consent judgment was entered in 1966 following a monopolization complaint filed in 1964. United States v. BMI, 1966 Trade Cases para. 71,941 (SDNY). The ASCAP and BMI decrees do vary in some respects. The BMI decree does not specify that BMI may only obtain nonexclusive rights from its affiliates or that the District Court may set the fee if the parties are unable to agree. Nonetheless, the parties stipulated, and the courts below accepted, that "CBS could secure direct licenses from BMI affiliates with the same ease or difficulty, as the case may be, as from ASCAP members." 400 F.Supp., at 745.

II FÁMÈJÉ ÁFGLÁJ ÁUÉOÁÍ I FÁFFÍ Í LÀ ÉSÉDÀÉCA ÁFÁHFLÁFJÍ JÁMÈJÉSÓYÓÁI ÁFÁHCHÁ 201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÁFÁH JÍ

remains true that the decree guarantees the legal availability of direct licensing of performance [***12] rights by ASCAP members; and the District Court found, and in this respect the Court of Appeals agreed, that there are no practical impediments preventing direct dealing by the television networks if they so desire. Historically, they have not done so. Since 1946, CBS and other television networks have taken blanket licenses from ASCAP and BMI. It was not until this suit [**1559] arose that the CBS network demanded any other kind of license.<sup>22</sup>

[*13] Of course, a consent judgment, even one entered at the behest of the Antitrust Division, does not immunize the defendant from liability for actions, including those contemplated by the decree, that violate the rights of nonparties. See Sam Fox Publishing Co. v. United States, 366 U.S. 683, 690 (1961), which involved this same decree. But it cannot be ignored that the Federal Executive and Judiciary have carefully scrutinized ASCAP and the challenged conduct, have imposed restrictions on various of ASCAP's practices, and, by the terms of the decree, stand ready to provide further consideration, supervision, and perhaps invalidation of asserted anticompetitive practices. [****24] <sup>23</sup> In these circumstances, we have a unique indicator that the challenged practice may have redeeming competitive virtues and that the search for those values is not almost sure to be in vain.<sup>24</sup> Thus, although CBS is not bound by the Antitrust Division's actions, the decree is a fact of economic and legal life in this industry, and the Court of Appeals should not have ignored it completely in analyzing the practice. See id., at 694-695. That fact alone might not remove a naked price-fixing [503] scheme from the ambit of the per se rule, but, as discussed infra, Part III, here we are uncertain whether the practice on its face has the effect, or could have been spurred by the purpose, of restraining competition among the individual composers.

[****25] After the consent decrees, the legality of the blanket license was challenged in suits brought by certain ASCAP members against individual radio stations for copyright infringement. The stations raised as a defense that the blanket license was a form of price fixing illegal under the Sherman Act. The parties [*14] stipulated that it would be nearly impossible for each radio station to negotiate with each copyright holder separate licenses for the performance of his works on radio. Against this background, and relying heavily on the 1950 consent judgment, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit rejected claims that ASCAP was a combination in restraint of trade and that the blanket license constituted illegal price fixing. K-91, Inc. v. Gershwin Publishing Corp., 372 F.2d 1 (1967), [***13] cert. denied, 389 U.S. 1045 (1968).

The Department of Justice, with the principal responsibility for enforcing the Sherman Act and administering the consent decrees relevant to this case, agreed with the result reached by the Ninth Circuit. In a submission amicus curiae opposing one station's petition for certiorari in this Court, the Department [****26] stated that there must be "some kind of central licensing agency by which copyright holders may offer their works in a common pool to all who wish to use them." Memorandum for United States as Amicus Curiae on Pet. for Cert. in K-91, Inc. v. Gershwin Publishing Corp., O. T. 1967, No. 147, pp. 10-11. And the Department elaborated on what it thought that fact meant for the proper application of the antitrust laws in this area:

"The Sherman Act has always been discriminately applied in the light of economic realities. There are situations in which competitors have been permitted to form joint selling agencies or other pooled activities, subject to strict

<sup>21</sup> United States v. ASCAP (Application of Shenandoah Valley Broadcasting, Inc.), 208 F.Supp. 896 (SDNY 1962), aff'd, 331 F.2d 117 (CA2), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 997 (1964); United States v. ASCAP (Application of National Broadcasting Co.), 1971 Trade Cases para. 73,491 (SDNY 1970). See also United States v. ASCAP (Motion of Metromedia, Inc.), 341 F.2d 1003 (CA2 1965).

<sup>22</sup> National Broadcasting Co. did, in 1971, request an annual blanket license for 2,217 specific ASCAP compositions most frequently used on its variety shows. It intended to acquire the remaining rights to background and theme music through direct transactions by it and its program packagers. See United States v. ASCAP (Application of National Broadcasting Co.), supra.

<sup>23</sup> 1950-1951 Trade Cases para. 62,595, p. 63,756.

<sup>24</sup> Cf. Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S., at 50 n. 16. Moreover, unthinking application of the per se rule might upset the balancing of economic power and of procompetitive and anticompetitive effects presumably worked out in the decree.

II FÁMÈJÉÉFI LÁJÁÉÓÉÍ FÁFÍ Í JLÀ ÉSÉDÀÉCA ÁÉÉFHÁJÍ JÁMÈSÓYÓÀ I ÉÉÉG LÁ01 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÉÉÉÉ JÍ

limitations [**1560] under the antitrust laws to guarantee against abuse of the collective power thus created. Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1; United States v. St. Louis Terminal, 224 U.S. 383; Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U.S. 344; Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231. This case appears to us to involve such a situation. The extraordinary number of users spread across the land, [****27] the ease with which a performance may be broadcast, the sheer volume [*15] of copyrighted compositions, the enormous quantity of separate performances each year, the impracticability of negotiating individual licenses for each composition, and the ephemeral nature of each performance all combine to create unique market conditions for performance rights to recorded music." Id., at 10 (footnote omitted).

The Department concluded that, in the circumstances of that case, the blanket licenses issued by ASCAP to individual radio stations were neither a per se violation of the Sherman Act nor an unreasonable restraint of trade.

As evidenced by its amicus brief in the present case, the Department remains of that view. Furthermore, the United States disagrees with the Court of Appeals in this case and urges that the blanket licenses, which the consent decree authorizes ASCAP to issue to television networks, are not per se violations of the Sherman Act. It takes no position, however, on whether the practice is an unreasonable restraint of trade in the context of the network television industry.

Finally, we note that Congress itself, in the new Copyright Act, has [****28] chosen to employ the blanket license and similar practices. Congress created a compulsory blanket license for secondary transmissions by cable television systems and provided that "[notwithstanding] any provisions of the antitrust laws, . . . any claimants may agree among themselves as to the proportionate division of compulsory licensing fees among them, [***14] may lump their claims together and file them jointly or as a single claim, or may designate a common agent to receive payment on their behalf." 17 U. S. C. App. § 111 (d)(5)(A). And the newly created compulsory license for the use of copyrighted compositions in jukeboxes is also a blanket license, which is payable to the performing-rights societies such as ASCAP unless an individual copyright holder can prove his entitlement to a share. § 116 (c)(4). Moreover, in requiring noncommercial broadcasters to pay for their use of copyrighted music, Congress again provided that "[notwithstanding] [*16] any provision of the antitrust laws" copyright owners "may designate common agents to negotiate, agree to, pay, or receive payments." § 118(b). Though these provisions are not directly controlling, [****29] they do reflect an opinion that the blanket license, and ASCAP, are economically beneficial in at least some circumstances.

[504] There have been District Court cases holding various ASCAP practices, including its licensing practices, to be violative of the Sherman Act,<sup>25</sup> but even so, there is no nearly universal view that either the blanket or the per-program licenses issued by ASCAP at prices negotiated by it are a form of price fixing subject to automatic condemnation under the Sherman Act, rather than to a careful assessment under the rule of reason.

III

LEdHN/1B [↑] [1B] [****30] Of course, we are no more bound than is CBS by the views of the Department of Justice, the results in the prior lower court [**1561] cases, or the opinions of various experts about the merits of the blanket license. But while we must independently examine this practice, all those factors should caution us against too easily finding blanket licensing subject to per se invalidation.

A

As a preliminary matter, we are mindful that the Court of Appeals' holding would appear to be quite difficult to contain. If, as the court held, there is a per se antitrust violation whenever ASCAP issues a blanket license to a television network for a single fee, why would it not also be automatically illegal for ASCAP to negotiate and issue <sup>25</sup> See cases cited n. 18, supra. Those cases involved licenses sold to individual movie theaters to "perform" compositions already on the motion pictures' soundtracks. ASCAP had barred its members from assigning performing rights to movie producers at the same time recording rights were licensed, and the theaters were effectively unable to engage in direct transactions for performing rights with individual copyright owners.

---

II FÁMÈJÉÉFÍ LÁJÁÉÓÉÁÍ FÉÉFÍ Í FLÂ ÉSÉDÀÉGÁ ÁÉÉFÍ LÁJÍ JÁMÈJÉSÓYÓÁ I ÉÉÉHÁLÁ201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÉÉÉJÍ

blanket licenses to [*17] individual radio or television stations or to other users who perform copyrighted music for profit?<sup>26</sup> Likewise, if the present network licenses issued through ASCAP on behalf of its members are per se violations, why would it not be equally illegal for the members to authorize ASCAP to issue licenses establishing various categories of uses that a network might have for [*15] copyrighted music and setting a standard [*31] fee for each described use?

Although the Court of Appeals apparently thought the blanket license could be saved in some or even many applications, it seems to us that the per se rule does not accommodate itself to such flexibility and that the observations of the Court of Appeals with respect to remedy tend to impeach the per se basis for the holding of liability.<sup>27</sup>

[**32]

[*18] [LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] CBS would prefer that ASCAP be authorized, indeed directed, to make all its compositions available at standard per-use rates within negotiated categories of use. 400 F.Supp., at 747 n. 7.<sup>28</sup> [*33] But if this in itself or in conjunction with blanket licensing constitutes illegal price fixing by copyright owners, CBS urges that an injunction issue forbidding ASCAP to issue any blanket license or to negotiate any fee except on behalf of an individual member for the use of his own copyrighted work or works.<sup>29</sup> Thus, we are called upon to determine that blanket licensing is unlawful across the board. We are [505] quite sure, however, that the per se rule does not require any such holding.

[LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

B

[**1562] In the first place, the line of commerce allegedly being restrained, the performing rights to copyrighted music, exists at all only because of the copyright laws. Those who would use copyrighted music in public

<sup>26</sup> Certain individual television and radio stations, appearing here as amici curiae, argue that the per se rule should extend to ASCAP's blanket licenses with them as well. The television stations have filed an antitrust suit to that effect. Buffalo Broadcasting Co. v. ASCAP, 78 Civ. 5670 (SDNY, filed Nov. 27, 1978).

<sup>27</sup> See n. 10, supra. The Court of Appeals would apparently not outlaw the blanket license across the board but would permit it in various circumstances where it is deemed necessary or sufficiently desirable. It did not even enjoin blanket licensing with the television networks, the relief it realized would normally follow a finding of per se illegality of the license in that context. Instead, as requested by CBS, it remanded to the District Court to require ASCAP to offer in addition to blanket licensing some competitive form of per-use licensing. But per-use licensing by ASCAP, as recognized in the consent decrees, might be even more susceptible to the per se rule than blanket licensing.

The rationale for this unusual relief in a per se case was that "[the] blanket license is not simply a 'naked restraint' ineluctably doomed to extinction." 562 F.2d, at 140. To the contrary, the Court of Appeals found that the blanket license might well "serve a market need" for some. Ibid. This, it seems to us, is not the per se approach, which does not yield so readily to circumstances, but in effect is a rather bobtailed application of the rule of reason, bobtailed in the sense that it is unaccompanied by the necessary analysis demonstrating why the particular licensing system is an undue competitive restraint.

<sup>28</sup> Surely, if ASCAP abandoned the issuance of all licenses and confined its activities to policing the market and suing infringers, it could hardly be said that member copyright owners would be in violation of the antitrust laws by not having a common agent issue per-use licenses. Under the copyright laws, those who publicly perform copyrighted music have the burden of obtaining prior consent. Cf. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S., at 139-140.

<sup>29</sup> In its complaint, CBS alleged that it would be "wholly impracticable" for it to obtain individual licenses directly from the composers and publishing houses, but it now says that it would be willing to do exactly that if ASCAP were enjoined from granting blanket licenses to CBS or its competitors in the network television business.

II FÁMEJÉKÉFI LÁJÁEÓÉFI Í FÉFFÍ Í GLÀ ÉSÉDÀÉCA ÁÉFFÍ LÁJÍ JÁMEJÉSÓYÓAÍ ÉÉHÁ201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÉÉHÁ JÍ

performances must secure consent from the copyright owner or be liable at least for the statutory damages for each infringement and, if the conduct is willful and for the purpose of financial gain, to criminal penalties.<sup>30</sup> Furthermore, nothing in the Copyright Act of 1976 indicates in the slightest that Congress intended [***16] to weaken the rights of copyright owners to control the public [*19] performance of musical compositions. Quite the contrary is true.<sup>31</sup> Although the copyright laws confer no rights on copyright owners [***34] to fix prices among themselves or otherwise to violate the antitrust laws, we would not expect that any market arrangements reasonably necessary to effectuate the rights that are granted would be deemed a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Otherwise, the commerce anticipated by the Copyright Act and protected against restraint by the Sherman Act would not exist at all or would exist only as a pale reminder of what Congress envisioned.<sup>32</sup>

[***35] C

LEdHN[8] [8]More generally, in characterizing this conduct under the per se rule,<sup>33</sup> our inquiry must focus on whether the effect and, here because it tends to show effect, see United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 436 n. 13 (1978), the purpose of the practice are to threaten the proper operation of our predominantly free-market economy -- that is, whether the practice facially appears to be one that would always or [*20] almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output, and in what portion of the market, or instead one designed to "increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive." Id., at 441 n. 16; see National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S., at 688; Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S., at 50 n. 16; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S., at 4.

[***36] The blanket license, as we see it, is not a "naked [restraint] of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition," White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263 (1963), but rather accompanies the integration of sales, monitoring, and enforcement against unauthorized copyright use. See L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust § 59, p. 154 (1977). As we have already indicated, ASCAP and the blanket license developed together out of the practical situation in the marketplace: thousands of users, thousands of copyright owners, and millions of compositions. Most users want unplanned, [***17] rapid, and indemnified access to any and all of the repertory of compositions, [**1563] and the owners want a reliable method of collecting for the use of their copyrights. Individual sales transactions in this industry are quite expensive, as would be individual monitoring and enforcement, especially in light of the resources of single composers. Indeed, as both the Court of Appeals and CBS recognize, the costs are prohibitive for licenses with individual radio stations, nightclubs, and restaurants, 562 F.2d, at 140 n. 26, and it was [***37] in that milieu that the blanket license arose.

A middleman with a blanket license was an obvious necessity if the thousands of individual negotiations, a virtual impossibility, were to be avoided. Also, individual fees for the use of individual compositions would presuppose an intricate schedule of fees and uses, as well as a difficult and expensive reporting problem for the user and policing

<sup>30</sup> 17 U. S. C. App. § 506.

<sup>31</sup> See Koenigsberg, The 1976 Copyright Act: Advances for the Creator, 26 Cleve. St. L. Rev. 515, 524, 528 (1977).

<sup>32</sup> Cf. Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341 (1963).

Because a musical composition can be "consumed" by many different people at the same time and without the creator's knowledge, the "owner" has no real way to demand reimbursement for the use of his property except through the copyright laws and an effective way to enforce those legal rights. See Twentieth Century Music Corp. v. Aiken, 422 U.S. 151, 162 (1975). It takes an organization of rather large size to monitor most or all uses and to deal with users on behalf of the composers. Moreover, it is inefficient to have too many such organizations duplicating each other's monitoring of use.

<sup>33</sup> The scrutiny occasionally required must not merely subsume the burdensome analysis required under the rule of reason, see National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 690-692 (1978), or else we should apply the rule of reason from the start. That is why the per se rule is not employed until after considerable experience with the type of challenged restraint.

I I FÁMEJÉK ÁGELÁJ ÁJÉÓDÁI Í FÁFFÍ Í HÀ ÉSÉDÁÉGÁ ÁFÁFFÍ LÁJÍ JÁMEJÉSÓYÓA I ÁFÁFFÍ LÁ01 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÁFÁFFÍ JÍ

task for the copyright owner. Historically, the market for public-performance rights organized itself largely around the single-fee blanket [*21] license, which gave unlimited access to the repertory and reliable protection against infringement. When ASCAP's major and user-created competitor, BMI, came [506] on the scene, it also turned to the blanket license.

With the advent of radio and television networks, market conditions changed, and the necessity for and advantages of a blanket license for those users may be far less obvious than is the case when the potential users are individual television or radio stations, or the thousands of other individuals and organizations performing copyrighted compositions in public.<sup>34</sup> But even for television network licenses, ASCAP reduces costs absolutely [****38] by creating a blanket license that is sold only a few, instead of thousands,<sup>35</sup> of times, and that obviates the need for closely monitoring the networks to see that they do not use more than they pay for.<sup>36</sup> ASCAP also provides the necessary resources for blanket sales and enforcement, resources unavailable to the vast majority of composers and publishing houses. Moreover, a bulk license of some type is a necessary consequence of the integration necessary to achieve these efficiencies, and a necessary consequence of an aggregate license is that its price must be established.

[****39] D

This substantial lowering of costs, which is of course potentially beneficial to both sellers and buyers, differentiates the blanket license from individual use licenses. The blanket license is composed of the individual compositions plus the aggregating service. Here, the whole is truly greater than the [*22] sum of its parts; it is, to some extent, a different product. The blanket license has certain unique characteristics: It allows the licensee immediate use of covered compositions, without the delay of [***18] prior individual negotiations,<sup>37</sup> and great flexibility in the choice of musical material. Many consumers clearly prefer the characteristics and cost advantages of this marketable [**1564] package,<sup>38</sup> and even small performing-rights societies that have occasionally arisen to compete with ASCAP and BMI have offered blanket licenses.<sup>39</sup> [****41] Thus, to the extent the blanket license is a different product, ASCAP is not really a joint sales agency offering the individual goods of many sellers, but is a separate seller offering its blanket license, of which the individual compositions are raw material.<sup>40</sup> ASCAP, [*23] in short, made a market in which individual [****40] composers are inherently unable to compete fully effectively.<sup>41</sup>

<sup>34</sup> And of course changes brought about by new technology or new marketing techniques might also undercut the justification for the practice.

<sup>35</sup> The District Court found that CBS would require between 4,000 and 8,000 individual license transactions per year. 400 F.Supp., at 762.

<sup>36</sup> To operate its system for distributing the license revenues to its members, ASCAP relies primarily on the networks' records of which compositions are used.

<sup>37</sup> See Timberg, The Antitrust Aspects of Merchandising Modern Music: The ASCAP Consent Judgment of 1950, 19 Law & Contemp. Prob. 294, 297 (1954) ("The disk-jockey's itchy fingers and the bandleader's restive baton, it is said, cannot wait for contracts to be drawn with ASCAP's individual publisher members, much less for the formal acquiescence of a characteristically unavailable composer or author"). Significantly, ASCAP deals only with nondramatic performance rights. Because of their nature, dramatic rights, such as for musicals, can be negotiated individually and well in advance of the time of performance. The same is true of various other rights, such as sheet music, recording, and synchronization, which are licensed on an individual basis.

<sup>38</sup> Cf. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 572-573 \(1966\); United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 356-357 \(1963\).

<sup>39</sup> Comment, Music Copyright Associations and the Antitrust Laws, 25 Ind. L. J. 168, 170 (1950). See also Garner, United States v. ASCAP: The Licensing Provisions of the Amended Final Judgment of 1950, 23 Bull. Copyright Soc. 119, 149 (1975) ("no performing rights are licensed on other than a blanket basis in any nation in the world").

<sup>40</sup> Moreover, because of the nature of the product -- a composition can be simultaneously "consumed" by many users -- composers have numerous markets and numerous incentives to produce, so the blanket license is unlikely to cause decreased

II FÁMEJÉKÉGHÁJÁJEÓĆÁI Í FÁFFÍ Í LÀ ČŠEĐAĚČA ÁFÁFFÍ LÁJÍ JÁMEJÉSÓYQÁI Í ČÁFFÍ CLÁ01 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ČÁFFÍ JÍ

E

LEdHN[9] [9]Finally, we have some doubt [****42] -- enough to counsel against application of the per se rule -- about the extent to which this practice threatens the "central nervous system of the economy," United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 226 n. 59 (1940), that is, competitive pricing as the free [507] market's means of allocating resources. Not all arrangements among actual or potential competitors that have an impact on price are per se violations of the Sherman Act or even unreasonable restraints. Mergers among competitors eliminate competition, including price competition, but they are not per se illegal, and many of them withstand attack under any existing antitrust standard. Joint ventures and other cooperative arrangements are also not usually unlawful, at least not as price-fixing schemes, where the agreement on price is necessary to [***19] market the product at all.

Here, the blanket-license fee is not set by competition among individual copyright owners, and it is a fee for the use of any of the compositions covered by the license. But the blanket license cannot be wholly equated with a simple horizontal arrangement among competitors. ASCAP does set the price for [****43] its blanket license, but that license is quite different from anything any individual owner could issue. The individual composers and authors have neither agreed not to sell individually in any other market nor use the blanket [*24] license to mask price fixing in such other markets.<sup>42</sup> Moreover, the substantial restraints placed on ASCAP and its members by the consent decree must not be ignored. The District Court found that there was no legal, practical, or conspiratorial impediment to CBS's obtaining individual licenses; CBS, in short, had a real choice.

LEdHN[1C] [1C]With this background in mind, which plainly enough indicates that over the years, and in the face of available [****44] alternatives, the blanket license has provided an acceptable mechanism for at least a large [*1565] part of the market for the performing rights to copyrighted musical compositions, we cannot agree that it should automatically be declared illegal in all of its many manifestations. Rather, when attacked, it should be subjected to a more discriminating examination under the rule of reason. It may not ultimately survive that attack, but that is not the issue before us today.

IV

LEdHN[10] [10] LEdHN[11A] [11A]As we have noted, n. 27, supra, the enigmatic remarks of the Court of Appeals with respect to remedy appear to have departed from the court's strict, per se approach and to have invited a more careful analysis. But this left the general import of its judgment that the licensing practices of ASCAP and BMI under the consent decree are per se violations of the Sherman Act. We reverse that judgment, and the copyright misuse judgment dependent upon it, see n. 9, supra, and remand for further proceedings to consider any unresolved [****45] issues that CBS may have properly brought to the Court of Appeals.<sup>43</sup> Of course, this will output, one of the normal undesirable effects of a cartel. And since popular songs get an increased share of ASCAP's revenue distributions, composers compete even within the blanket license in terms of productivity and consumer satisfaction.

<sup>41</sup> Cf. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S., at 217 (distinguishing Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231 (1918), on the ground that among the effects of the challenged rule there "was the creation of a public market"); United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S., at 401 (distinguishing Chicago Bd. of Trade on the ground that it did not involve "a price agreement among competitors in an open market").

<sup>42</sup> "CBS does not claim that the individual members and affiliates ('sellers') of ASCAP and BMI have agreed among themselves as to the prices to be charged for the particular 'products' (compositions) offered by each of them." 400 F.Supp., at 748.

<sup>43</sup> It is argued that the judgment of the Court of Appeals should nevertheless be affirmed on the ground that the blanket license is a tying arrangement in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act or on the ground that ASCAP and BMI have monopolized the relevant market contrary to § 2. The District Court and the Court of Appeals rejected both submissions, and we do not disturb the latter's judgment in these respects, particularly since CBS did not file its own petition for certiorari challenging the Court of Appeals' failure to sustain its tying and monopolization claims.

II FÁMEJÉKÉG LÁJÁEÓĆÁ I FÁEJÍ I LÀ ēSEÓaĚCA ÁFÁEJLÁFJÍ JÁMEJÉSÓYQÁ I ÁEJÍ I LÁ01 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÁEJÍ JÍ

include an assessment under [*25] the rule of reason of the blanket license as employed in the television industry, if that issue was preserved by CBS in the Court of Appeals.<sup>44</sup>

LEDHN[11B] [↑] [11B]

[***46] The [**20] judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the cases are remanded to that court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE STEVENS, dissenting.

The Court holds that ASCAP's blanket license is not a species of price fixing categorically forbidden by the Sherman Act. I agree with that holding. The Court remands the cases to the Court of Appeals, leaving open the question whether the blanket license as employed by ASCAP and BMI is unlawful under a rule-of-reason inquiry. I think that question is properly before us now and should be answered affirmatively.

There is ample precedent for affirmance of the judgment of the Court of Appeals on a ground that differs from its rationale, provided of course that we do not modify its judgment.<sup>1</sup> In this litigation, the judgment of the [508] Court of Appeals was [*26] not that blanket licenses may never be offered by ASCAP and BMI. Rather, its judgment directed the District Court to fashion relief requiring them to offer additional forms of license as well.<sup>2</sup> Even though that judgment may not be consistent with its stated conclusion that the blanket [***47] license is "illegal per se" as a kind of price fixing, it is entirely consistent with a conclusion that petitioners' exclusive all-or-nothing blanket-license policy violates the rule of reason.<sup>3</sup>

The [**1566] Court of Appeals may well so decide on remand. In my judgment, however, a remand is not necessary.<sup>4</sup> The record before this Court is a full one, reflecting extensive discovery and [***48] eight weeks of trial. The District Court's findings of fact are thorough and well supported. They clearly reveal that the challenged

---

<sup>44</sup> The Court of Appeals did not address the rule-of-reason issue, and BMI insists that CBS did not preserve the question in that court. In any event, if the issue is open in the Court of Appeals, we prefer that that court first address the matter. Because of the United States' interest in the enforcement of the consent decree, we assume it will continue to play a role in this litigation on remand.

<sup>1</sup> See United States v. New York Telephone Co., 434 U.S. 159, 166 n. 8; Dayton Board of Education v. Brinkman, 433 U.S. 406, 419; Massachusetts Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Ludwig, 426 U.S. 479, 480-481; United States v. American Railway Express Co., 265 U.S. 425, 435.

<sup>2</sup> 562 F.2d 130, 140-141 \(CA2 1977\).

<sup>3</sup> See ante, at 17 n. 27 (describing relief ordered by Court of Appeals as "unusual" for a per se case, and suggesting that that court's decision appears more consistent with a rule-of-reason approach).

<sup>4</sup> That the rule-of-reason issues have been raised and preserved throughout seems to me clear. See 562 F.2d, at 134. ("CBS contends that the blanket licensing method is not only an illegal tie-in or blockbooking which in practical terms is coercive in effect, but is also an illegal price-fixing device, a per se violation . . . "); id., at 141 n. 29 ("As noted, CBS also claims violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. We need not go into the legal arguments on this point because they are grounded on its factual claim that there are barriers to direct licensing and 'bypass' of the ASCAP blanket license. The District Court, as noted, rejected this contention and its findings are not clearly erroneous. The § 2 claim must therefore fail at this time and on this record"); Brief for Respondents 41.

II FÁMÈJÉÉGÍ LÁJÁUÉÓÉÁÍ FÁFFÍ Í LÀ ÉSÉDÀÉGÁ ÁFÁFFOELÁJÍ JÁMÈJÉSÓYÓÁÍ ÉÁÁÁÍ Í LÁ01 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÉÁÁÁÍ JÍ

policy does have a significant adverse impact on competition. I would therefore affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

[****49] I

In December 1969, the president [***21] of the CBS television network wrote to ASCAP and BMI requesting that each "promptly . . . grant a new performance rights license which [*27] will provide, effective January 1, 1970, for payments measured by the actual use of your music."<sup>5</sup> ASCAP and BMI each responded by stating that it considered CBS's request to be an application for a license in accordance with the provisions of its consent decree and would treat it as such,<sup>6</sup> [***50] even though neither decree provides for licensing on a per-composition or per-use basis.<sup>7</sup> Rather than pursuing further discussion, CBS instituted this suit.

Whether or not the CBS letter is considered a proper demand for per-use licensing is relevant, if at all, only on the question of relief. For the fact is, and it cannot seriously be questioned, that ASCAP and BMI have steadfastly adhered to the policy of only offering overall blanket or per-program licenses,<sup>8</sup> notwithstanding requests for more limited authorizations. Thus, ASCAP rejected a 1971 request by NBC for licenses for 2,217 specific compositions,<sup>9</sup> as well as an earlier request by a group of television stations for more limited authority than the blanket licenses which they were then [*28] purchasing.<sup>10</sup> Neither ASCAP nor BMI has ever offered to license anything less than its entire portfolio, even on an experimental basis. Moreover, if the response to the CBS letter were not sufficient to characterize their consistent policy, the defense of this lawsuit surely is. It is the refusal to license anything less than the entire repertoire -- rather than the decision to offer blanket licenses themselves -- that raises the serious antitrust questions [***51] in this case.

II

[**1567] Under our prior cases, there would be no question about the illegality of the [***52] blanket-only [509] licensing policy if ASCAP and BMI were the exclusive sources of all licenses. A copyright, like a patent, is a statutory grant of monopoly privileges. The rules which prohibit a patentee from enlarging his statutory monopoly by conditioning a license on the purchase [***22] of unpatented goods,<sup>11</sup> or by refusing to grant a license under one patent unless the licensee also takes a license under another, are equally applicable to copyrights.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>5</sup> 400 F.Supp. 737, 753 \(SDNY 1975\).

<sup>6</sup> ASCAP responded in a letter from its general counsel, stating that it would consider the request at its next board of directors meeting, and that it regarded it as an application for a license consistent with the decree. The letter from BMI's president stated: "The BMI Consent Decree provides for several alternative licenses and we are ready to explore any of these with you." *Id.* at 753-754.

<sup>7</sup> See ante, at 12, and n. 21.

<sup>8</sup> The 1941 decree requires ASCAP to offer per-program licenses as an alternative to the blanket license. United States v. ASCAP, 1940-1943 Trade Cases para. 56,104, p. 404 \(SDNY\). Analytically, however, there is little difference between the two. A per-program license also covers the entire ASCAP repertoire; it is therefore simply a miniblanket license. As is true of a long-term blanket license, the fees set are in no way dependent on the quantity or quality of the music used. See infra, at 30-33.

<sup>9</sup> See United States v. ASCAP \(Application of National Broadcasting Co.\), 1971 Trade Cases para. 73,491 \(SDNY 1970\).

<sup>10</sup> See United States v. ASCAP \(Application of Shenandoah Valley Broadcasting, Inc.\), 208 F.Supp. 896 \(SDNY 1962\), aff'd, 331 F.2d 117 \(CA2 1964\), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 997.

<sup>11</sup> Mercoind Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U.S. 661; Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436; International Business Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U.S. 131; United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States, 258 U.S. 451.

11 FÁMÈJÉÉG LÁJÁEÓÉÁÍ FÁFFÍ Í LÀ ÉSÉDÀÉGÁ ÁFÁFFGLÁJÍ JÁMÈJÉSÓYÓÁ I ÁÁÁÁ GLÁ01 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÁÁÁÁ JÍ

[****53] It is clear, however, that the mere fact that the holder of several patents has granted a single package license covering them all does not establish any illegality. This point was settled by Automatic Radio Mfg. Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 339 U.S. 827, 834, and reconfirmed in *Zenith Radio Corp. [*291] v. Hazeltine Research, Inc.*, 395 U.S. 100, 137-138. The Court is therefore unquestionably correct in its conclusion that ASCAP's issuance of blanket licenses covering its entire inventory is not, standing alone, automatically unlawful. But both of those cases identify an important limitation on this rule. In the former, the Court was careful to point out that the record did not present the question whether the package license would have been unlawful if Hazeltine had refused to license on any other basis. 339 U.S., at 831. And in the latter case, the Court held that the package license was illegal because of such a refusal. 395 U.S., at 140-141.

Since ASCAP offers only blanket licenses, its licensing practices fall on the illegal side of the line drawn by the two Hazeltine cases. But there [****54] is a significant distinction: unlike Hazeltine, ASCAP does not have exclusive control of the copyrights in its portfolio, and it is perfectly possible -- at least as a legal matter -- for a user of music to negotiate directly with composers and publishers for whatever rights he may desire. The availability of a practical alternative alters the competitive effect of a blockbooking or blanket-licensing policy. ASCAP is therefore quite correct in its insistence that its blanket license cannot be categorically condemned on the authority of the blockbooking and package-licensing cases. While these cases are instructive, they do not directly answer the question whether the ASCAP practice is unlawful.

The answer to that question depends on an evaluation of the effect of the practice on competition in the relevant market. And, of course, it is well settled that a sales practice that is permissible for a small vendor, at least when no coercion is present, may be unreasonable when employed by a company that dominates the market.<sup>13</sup> We [**1568] therefore must consider [*30] what the record tells [***23] us about the competitive character of this market.

[****55] III

The market for music at issue here is wholly dominated by ASCAP-issued blanket licenses.<sup>14</sup> Virtually every domestic copyrighted composition is in the repertoire of either ASCAP or BMI. And again, virtually without exception, the only means that has been used to secure authority to perform such compositions is the blanket license.

<sup>12</sup>Indeed, the leading cases condemning the practice of "blockbooking" involved copyrighted motion pictures, rather than patents. See United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. 131; United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S. 38.

<sup>13</sup>See Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 334 (upholding requirements contract on the ground that "[there] is here neither a seller with a dominant position in the market as in Standard Fashion [Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co.], 258 U.S. 346; nor myriad outlets with substantial sales volume, coupled with an industry-wide practice of relying upon exclusive contracts, as in Standard Oil [Co. v. United States], 337 U.S. 293; nor a plainly restrictive tying arrangement as in International Salt [Co. v. United States], 332 U.S. 392"); Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 610-612 (upholding challenged advertising practice because, while the volume of commerce affected was not "insignificant or insubstantial," seller was found not to occupy a "dominant position" in the relevant market). While our cases make clear that a violation of the Sherman Act requires both that the volume of commerce affected be substantial and that the seller enjoy a dominant position, see id., at 608-609, proof of actual compulsion has not been required, but cf. Royster Drive-In Theatres, Inc. v. American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc., 268 F.2d 246, 251 (CA2 1959), cert. denied, 361 U.S. 885; Milwaukee Towne Corp. v. Loew's, Inc., 190 F.2d 561 (CA7 1951), cert. denied, 342 U.S. 909. The critical question is one of the likely practical effect of the arrangement: whether the "court believes it probable that performance of the contract will foreclose competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected." Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., supra, at 327.

<sup>14</sup>As in the majority opinion, my references to ASCAP generally encompass BMI as well.

II FÁMÈJÉ ËA HÉLÁJ ÁUÉO ÓÁÍ I FÁFÍ Í LÀ €SÉDÀ ËGÁ ÁFÁCHLÁJÍ JÁMÈJÉ SÓYÓÁ I ÉÁKÍ I LÁ01 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÉÁKÍ JÍ

[510] The blanket all-or-nothing license is patently discriminatory.<sup>15</sup> The user purchases full access to ASCAP's entire [*31] repertoire, even though his needs could be satisfied by a far more limited selection. The price he pays for this access is unrelated either to the quantity or the quality of the music he actually uses, or, indeed, to what he would probably use in a competitive system. Rather, in this unique all-or-nothing system, the price is based on a percentage of the user's advertising revenues,<sup>16</sup> [****57] a measure that reflects the customer's ability to pay<sup>17</sup> but is totally unrelated [****56] to factors -- such as the cost, quality, or quantity of the product -- that normally affect price in a competitive market. The ASCAP system requires users to buy more music than they want at a price which, while not beyond their ability to pay and perhaps not even beyond what [***24] is "reasonable" for the access they are getting,<sup>18</sup> may well be far higher than what they would choose to spend for music in [*32] a competitive system. It is a classic example of economic discrimination.

The record plainly establishes [****58] that there is no price competition between separate musical compositions.<sup>19</sup> Under a blanket license, it is no more expensive for a network [**1569] to play the most popular current hit in prime time than it is to use an unknown composition as background music in a soap opera. Because the cost to the user is unaffected by the amount used on any program or on all programs, the user has no incentive to economize by, for example, substituting what would otherwise be less expensive songs for established favorites or by reducing the quantity of music used on a program. The blanket license thereby tends to encourage the use of more music, and also of a larger share of what is really more valuable music, than would be expected in a competitive system characterized by separate licenses. And since revenues are passed on to composers on a basis reflecting the character and frequency of the use of their music,<sup>20</sup> the tendency is to increase the rewards of the established composers at the expense of those less well known. Perhaps the prospect is in any event unlikely, but the blanket license does not present a new songwriter with any opportunity to try to [*33] break into the market [****59] by

<sup>15</sup> See Cirace, CBS v. ASCAP: An Economic Analysis of A Political Problem, 47 Ford. L. Rev. 277, 286 (1978) ("the all-or-nothing bargain allows the monopolist to reap the benefits of perfect price discrimination without confronting the problems posed by dealing with different buyers on different terms").

<sup>16</sup> For many years prior to the commencement of this action, the BMI blanket-license fee amounted to 1.09% of net receipts from sponsors after certain specified deductions. 400 F.Supp., at 743. The fee for access to ASCAP's larger repertoire was set at 2.5% of net receipts; in recent years, however, CBS has paid a flat negotiated fee, rather than a percentage, to ASCAP. 23 Jt. App. in CA2 No. 75-7600, pp. E1051-E1052, E1135.

<sup>17</sup> See Cirace, supra, at 288:

"This history indicates that, from its inception, ASCAP exhibited a tendency to discriminate in price. A license fee based upon a percentage of gross revenue is discriminatory in that it grants the same number of rights to different licensees for different total dollar amounts, depending upon their ability to pay. The effectiveness of price discrimination is significantly enhanced by the all-or-nothing blanket license."

<sup>18</sup> Under the ASCAP consent decree, on receipt of an application, ASCAP is required to "advise the applicant in writing of the fee which it deems reasonable for the license requested." If the parties are unable to agree on the fee within 60 days of the application, the applicant may apply to the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York for the determination of a "reasonable fee." United States v. ASCAP, 1950-1951 Trade Cases para. 62,595, p. 63,754 \(SDNY 1950\). The BMI decree contains no similar provision for judicial determination of a reasonable fee.

<sup>19</sup> ASCAP's economic expert, Robert Nathan, was unequivocal on this point:

"Q. Is there price competition under this system between separate musical compositions?

"A. No sir." Tr. 3983.

<sup>20</sup> See 562 F.2d, at 136 n. 15. In determining royalties ASCAP distinguishes between feature, theme, and background uses of music. The 1950 amended decree requires ASCAP to distribute royalties on "a basis which gives primary consideration to the performance of the compositions." The 1960 decree provided for the additional option of receiving royalties under a deferred plan which provides additional compensation based on length of membership and the recognized status of the individual's works. See United States v. ASCAP, 1960 Trade Cases para. 69,612, pp. 76,469-76,470 \(SDNY 1960\).

11 FÁMÈJÉHÁJÁÈOÍ Í FÁFÍ Í JLÀ ÈSEÒaÈGÁFÁFÍ LÁJÍ JÁÈSÓYÓÀ I ÉÍÍÍ JLÀ01 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÉÍÍÍ JÍ

offering his product for sale at an unusually low price. The absence of that opportunity, however unlikely it may be, is characteristic of a cartelized rather than a competitive market.<sup>21</sup>

[****60] The current state of the market cannot be explained on the ground that it could not operate competitively, or that issuance of more limited -- and thus less restrictive -- licenses by ASCAP is not feasible. The District Court's findings disclose no reason [511] why music-performing rights could not be negotiated on a per-composition or per-use basis, either with the composer or publisher directly or with an agent such as ASCAP. In fact, ASCAP now compensates composers and publishers on precisely those bases.<sup>22</sup> [****61] If distributions of royalties can be calculated [***25] on a per-use and per-composition basis, it is difficult to see why royalties could not also be collected in the same way. Moreover, the record also shows that where ASCAP's blanket-license scheme does not govern, competitive markets do. A competitive market for "synch" rights exists,<sup>23</sup> and after the use of blanket licenses in the motion picture industry was discontinued,<sup>24</sup> such a market promptly developed in that industry.<sup>25</sup> In sum, the record demonstrates that the market at issue here is one that could be highly competitive, but is not competitive at all.

[*34] IV

Since the record describes a market that could be competitive and is not, and since that market is dominated by two firms engaged in a single, blanket method of dealing, it surely seems logical to conclude that trade has been restrained unreasonably. ASCAP argues, however, that at least as to CBS, there has been no restraint at all since the network is free to deal [****62] directly with copyright holders.

[**1570] The District Court found that CBS had failed to establish that it was compelled to take a blanket license from ASCAP. While CBS introduced evidence suggesting that a significant number of composers and publishers, satisfied as they are with the ASCAP system, would be "disinclined" to deal directly with the network, the court found such evidence unpersuasive in light of CBS's substantial market power in the music industry and the importance to copyright holders of network television exposure.<sup>26</sup> Moreover, it is arguable that CBS could go further and, along with the other television networks, use its economic resources to exploit destructive competition among purveyors of music by driving the price of performance rights down to a far lower level. But none of this demonstrates that ASCAP's practices are lawful, or that ASCAP cannot be held liable for injunctive relief at CBS's request.

The fact that CBS has substantial [****63] market power does not deprive it of the right to complain when trade is restrained. Large buyers, as well as small, are protected by the antitrust laws. Indeed, even if the victim of a conspiracy is himself a wrongdoer, he has not forfeited the protection of the law.<sup>27</sup> Moreover, a conclusion that

<sup>21</sup> See generally 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law 280-281, 342-345 (1978); Cirace, supra n. 15, at 286-292.

<sup>22</sup> See n. 20, supra.

<sup>23</sup> The "synch" right is the right to record a copyrighted song in synchronization with the film or videotape, and is obtained separately from the right to perform the music. It is the latter which is controlled by ASCAP and BMI. See CBS, Inc. v. ASCAP, 400 F.Supp., at 743.

<sup>24</sup> See Alden-Rochelle, Inc. v. ASCAP, 80 F.Supp. 888 \(SDNY 1948\).

<sup>25</sup> See 400 F.Supp., at 759-763; 5 Jt. App. in CA2 No. 75-7600, pp. 775-777 (testimony of Albert Berman, managing director of the Harry Fox Agency, Inc.). Television synch rights and movie performance and synch rights are handled by the Fox Agency, which serves as the broker for thousands of music publishers.

<sup>26</sup> See 400 F.Supp., at 767-771.

<sup>27</sup> See Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 138-140; Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 16-17; Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211, 214.

II FÁMEJÉKÉH LÁJÁEÓÉÍ I FÉÉFÍ Í ELÀ EŠÉDÀÉGÁ ÁÉÉÉGÍ LÁJÍ JÁMEJÉSÓYÓÀ I ÉÉÉÉ HÁ201 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÉÉÉÉ JÍ

excessive competition would cause one side of the market more harm than good may justify a legislative exemption from the antitrust laws, but does not [*35] constitute a defense to a violation of the Sherman [***26] Act.<sup>28</sup> Even though characterizing CBS as an oligopolist may be relevant to the question of remedy, and even though free competition might adversely affect the income of a good many composers and publishers, these considerations do not affect the legality of ASCAP's conduct.

[***64] More basically, ASCAP's underlying argument that CBS must be viewed as having acted with complete freedom in choosing the blanket license is not supported by the District Court's findings. The District Court did not find that CBS could cancel its blanket license "tomorrow" and continue to use music in its programming and compete with the other networks. Nor did the District Court find that such a course was without any risk or expense. Rather, the District Court's finding was that within a year, during which it would continue to pay some millions of dollars for its annual blanket license, CBS would be able to develop the needed machinery and enter into the necessary contracts.<sup>29</sup> In other words, although the barriers to direct dealing by CBS as an alternative to paying for a [512] blanket license are real and significant, they are not insurmountable.

Far from establishing ASCAP's immunity from liability, these District Court findings, in my judgment, confirm the illegality [***65] of its conduct. Neither CBS nor any other user has been willing to assume the costs and risks associated with an attempt to purchase music on a competitive basis. The fact that an attempt by CBS to break down the ASCAP monopoly might well succeed does not preclude the conclusion that smaller and less powerful buyers are totally foreclosed from a competitive market.<sup>30</sup> Despite its size, CBS itself [*36] may not obtain [**1571] music on a competitive basis without incurring unprecedented costs and risks. The fear of unpredictable consequences, coupled with the certain and predictable costs and delays associated with a change in its method of purchasing music, unquestionably inhibits any CBS management decision to embark on a competitive crusade. Even if ASCAP offered CBS a special bargain to forestall any such crusade, that special arrangement would not cure the marketwide restraint.

[***66] Whatever management decision CBS should or might have made, it is perfectly clear that the question whether competition in the market has been unduly restrained is not one that any single company's management is authorized to answer. It is often the case that an arrangement among competitors will not serve to eliminate competition forever, but only to delay its appearance or to increase the costs of new entry. That may well be the state of [***27] this market. Even without judicial intervention, the ASCAP monopoly might eventually be broken by CBS, if the benefits of doing so outweigh the significant costs and risks involved in commencing direct dealing.<sup>31</sup> But that hardly means that the blanket-licensing [*37] policy at issue here is lawful. An arrangement that

<sup>28</sup> See National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 689-690.

<sup>29</sup> See 400 F.Supp., at 762-765.

<sup>30</sup> For an individual user, the transaction costs involved in direct dealing with individual copyright holders may well be prohibitively high, at least in the absence of any broker or agency routinely handling such requests. Moreover, the District Court found that writers and publishers support and prefer the ASCAP system to direct dealing. Id., at 767. While their apprehension at direct dealing with CBS could be overcome, the District Court found, by CBS's market power and the importance of television exposure, a similar conclusion is far less likely with respect to other users.

<sup>31</sup> The risks involved in such a venture appear to be substantial. One significant risk, which may be traced directly to ASCAP and its members, relates to music "in the can" -- music which has been performed on shows and movies already in the network's inventory, but for which the network must still secure performing rights. The networks accumulate substantial inventories of shows "in the can." And, as the Government has pointed out as amicus curiae:

"If they [the networks and television stations] were to discontinue the blanket license, they then would be required to obtain performance rights for these already-produced shows. This attempt would create an opportunity for the copyright owners, as a condition of granting performing rights, to attempt to obtain the entire value of the shows 'in the can.' It would produce, in other words, a case of bilateral monopoly. Because pricing is indeterminate in a bilateral monopoly, television networks would not terminate their blanket licenses until they had concluded an agreement with every owner of copyrighted music 'in the can' to produces marketwide price discrimination and significant barriers to entry unreasonably restrains trade even if the discrimination and the barriers have only a limited life expectancy. History suggests, however, that these restraints have an enduring character.

ÍÍ FÁMEÙÉÉHÍ LÁJÀÈÓÉÁÍ Í FÁÉFÍ Í FLÀ ÉSEÒdÀÉCA ÁÉÉHGÍ LÁJÍ JÁMÈÉSÓYÓÀÍ ÉÉÉÉÍ Í LÁ01 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
I JÍ ÉÉÉÉÍ JÍ

[****67] Antitrust policy requires that great aggregations of economic power be closely scrutinized. That duty is especially important when the aggregation is composed of statutory monopoly privileges. Our cases have repeatedly stressed the need to limit the privileges conferred by patent and copyright strictly to the scope of the statutory grant. The record in this case plainly discloses that the limits have been exceeded and that ASCAP and BMI exercise monopoly powers that far exceed the sum of the privileges of the individual copyright holders. [*38] Indeed, ASCAP itself argues that its blanket license constitutes a [513] product that is significantly different from the sum of its component parts. I agree with that premise, but I conclude that the aggregate is a monopolistic restraint of trade proscribed by the Sherman Act.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 45 et seq.

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1 et seq.

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 16, 62

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR [****68] Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Literary and artistic rights for purposes of, and their infringement by or in connection with, motion pictures, radio, and television. 23 ALR2d 244.

---

End of Document

---

allow future performance for an identified price; the networks then would determine whether that price was sufficiently low that termination of the blanket license would be profitable. But the prospect of such negotiations offers the copyrights owners an ability to misuse their rights in a way that ensures the continuation of blanket licensing despite a change in market conditions that may make other forms of licensing preferable." Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 24-25.

This analysis is in no sense inconsistent with the findings of the District Court. The District Court did reject CBS's coercion argument as to music "in the can." But as the Government again points out, the District Court's findings were addressed essentially to a tie-in claim; "the court did not consider the possibility that the copyright owners' self-interested, non-coercive demands for compensation might nevertheless make the cost of CBS' dropping the blanket license sufficiently high that ASCAP and BMI could take this 'termination penalty' into account in setting fees for the blanket license." Id., at 25 n. 23.

Reiter v. Sonotone Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

April 25, 1979, Argued ; June 11, 1979, Decided

No. 78-690

Reporter

442 U.S. 330 *; 99 S. Ct. 2326 **; 60 L. Ed. 2d 931 ***; 1979 U.S. LEXIS 108 ****; 1979-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P62,688; 27 Fed. R. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 653

REITER v. SONOTONE CORP. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 579 F.2d 1077, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

consumers, retail, Clayton Act, district court, enterprise, damages, commercial interest, legislative history, antitrust violation, antitrust, terms, court of appeals, federal court, class action, anticompetitive, treble-damages, settlements, purchaser

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN2 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

II GÁVÉ ÚT HEĀT HÉLÁJ ÁU Ó DÁHG ÚTGÁH LÀ € ÁSÉO ÁU ÓCA ÁU HFÁTTEJHFÁJÍ JÁNÈSÓYÓU ÁFÉ ÚTGÁH

**HN3** [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The word "property" has a naturally broad and inclusive meaning. In its dictionary definitions and in common usage "property" comprehends anything of material value owned or possessed. Money, of course, is a form of property.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN4** [down] Legislation, Interpretation

In construing a statute the court is obliged to give effect, if possible, to every word Congress used. Canons of construction ordinarily suggest that terms connected by a disjunctive be given separate meanings, unless the context dictates otherwise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN5** [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Congress' use of the word "or" in § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, makes plain that "business" was not intended to modify "property," nor was "property" intended to modify "business."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN6** [down] Private Actions, Remedies

A consumer whose money has been diminished by reason of an antitrust violation has been injured in his "property" within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

**HN7** [down] Clayton Act, Claims

Monetary injury, standing alone, may be injury in one's "property" within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN8** [down] Private Actions, Standing

II GÁVÉ ÚT HEĀT HÉLÁJ ÁU Ó DÁCHÍ ËEFGÍ LÀ €ŠEO ÆGA ÁIH FÄTT JHLÁFJÍ JÁNÈSÓY QÁFÉ ËEFT

Consumers of retail goods and services have standing to sue under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > General Overview

HN9 [down] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

The court must take a statute as it finds it.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Consumers paying higher price for goods because of antitrust law violations, held to sustain injury to "property" and to be entitled to sue for treble damages under Clayton Act (15 USCS 15).

Summary

On behalf of herself and all other persons in the United States who purchased hearing aids manufactured by five corporations, a woman brought a class action in the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, seeking treble damages under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15)--which authorizes such treble damage actions by "[a]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws"--on the ground that because of the corporations' violation of federal antitrust laws, including vertical and horizontal price fixing, she and all other members of the class she represented were forced to pay illegally fixed higher prices for hearing aids and related services they purchased from the corporations' retail dealers. The corporations moved for dismissal of the complaint or summary judgment, arguing, among other things, that a retail purchaser of goods for personal use lacks standing to sue for treble damages under 4 of the Act because such a consumer has not been injured in his "business or property" within the meaning of the Act. The District Court held that under 4 a retail purchaser is injured in "property" if the purchaser can show that antitrust violations caused an increase in the price paid for the article purchased, but determining that the defendants had raised a controlling question of law as to which there was substantial ground for difference of opinion, the District Court stayed further proceedings in the case and certified the question of consumer treble damage suits to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit \(435 F Supp 933\). The Court of Appeals reversed, ruling that retail purchasers of consumer goods and services who allege no injury of a commercial or business nature are not injured in their "business or property" for purposes of 4 (579 F2d 1077).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. In an opinion by Burger, Ch. J., expressing the unanimous view of the eight participating members of the Court, it was held that consumers who pay a higher price for goods purchased for personal use as a result of antitrust violations, thus having their money diminished, sustain an injury in their "property" within the meaning of 4 of the Clayton Act, and thus may bring an action under 4 to recover treble damages.

Rehnquist, J. concurring, expressed the view that although the interpretation of 4 of the Act as authorizing consumer suits might add a substantial volume of litigation to the strained dockets of the federal courts, and might be used to exact unfair settlements from retail businesses, any such problems were for Congress and not for the courts.

II GÁVÉ ÚT HEĀT HÉLÁJ ÁU Ó DÁHG Í EÉGHGÍ LÀ €ŠEOA ECA ÁIH FÁTEJHFLÁFÍ JÁNÈSÓY QÚAFÉ ÆHT

Brennan, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §67 > treble damages -- consumer suits -- injury to "business or property" -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

Consumers who, as a result of violations of federal antitrust laws, pay a higher price for goods purchased for personal use, thus having their money diminished, sustain an injury in their "property" within the meaning of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) and may bring an action to recover treble damages under 4, which authorizes treble damage actions by "[a]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws."

STATUTES §163 > federal law -- construction -- language -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

In every case involving the construction of a federal statute, the starting point must be the language employed in the statute by Congress.

MONEY §1 > nature -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Money is a form of property.

STATUTES §110 > construction -- giving effect to all language -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

In construing a federal statute a court is obliged to give effect, if possible, to every word Congress used.

STATUTES §179 > construction -- use of disjunctive -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Under canons of construction, terms connected by a disjunctive ordinarily should be given separate meanings, unless the context dictates otherwise.

I I GÁMEJÁN HEÁH HELÁJ ÁUÉOÓ DÁCHÍG Ó ÉAEGHÍG LÁ €ASÉOÁD ÓCA ÁH HFÉAEEJ HFLÁFJÍ J ÁMÉEASÓY QJÁF€ Ó ÉAEGHÍG

STATUTES §154 > Clayton Act -- interpretation -- belief of Congress after enactment -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [  ] [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [  ] [6B]

The fact that Congress, as evidenced by the text and legislative history of a federal statute enacted subsequent to the enactment of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), believed that consumers have a cause of action to recover treble damages for violations of federal antitrust laws under 4 of the Clayton Act will not be viewed as a controlling consideration by the United States Supreme Court in determining whether consumers who pay a higher price for goods purchased for personal use as a result of federal antitrust violations sustain an injury in their "business or property" within the meaning of 4 so as to be entitled to bring treble damage actions.

COURTS §105 > interpretation of statute -- adverse effects -- considerations for legislature -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[7] [  ] [7]

For purposes of the United States Supreme Court's determining whether consumers who pay a higher price for goods purchased for personal use as a result of federal antitrust violations sustain an injury in their "business or property" within the meaning of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), so as to be entitled to bring an action for treble damages under 4, the argument that the cost of defending consumer actions brought as class actions will have a potentially ruinous effect on small businesses and will ultimately be paid by consumers relates to policy considerations more properly addressed to Congress than to the court, and such considerations cannot govern the court's interpretation of the language of 4.

Syllabus

Petitioner brought a class action on behalf of herself and all persons in the United States who purchased hearing aids manufactured by respondents, alleging that, because of antitrust violations committed by respondents, she and the class she seeks to represent have been forced to pay illegally fixed higher prices for the hearing aids and related services they purchased from respondents' retail dealers. Treble damages were sought under § 4 of the Clayton Act, which provides that "[any] person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws" may bring suit and recover treble damages. Respondents moved to dismiss the damages claim on the ground [****2] that petitioner had not been injured in her "business or property" within the meaning of § 4. The District Court held that under § 4 a retail purchaser is injured in "property" if it can be shown that antitrust violations caused an increase in the price paid for the article purchased; however, it certified the question to the Court of Appeals. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that retail purchasers of consumer goods and services who allege no injury of a commercial or business nature are not injured in their "business or property" within the meaning of § 4, and that the phrase "business or property" was intended to limit standing to those engaged in commercial ventures.

Held: Consumers who pay a higher price for goods purchased for personal use as a result of antitrust violations sustain an injury in their "property" within the meaning of § 4. Pp. 337-345.

(a) Statutory construction must begin with the language employed by Congress. The word "property" has a naturally broad and inclusive meaning comprehending, in common usage, anything of material value owned or possessed. Congress' use of the disjunctive "or" in the phrase "business or property" indicates "business" [****3] was not intended to modify "property," nor was "property" intended to modify "business." Giving the word "property" the independent significance to which it is entitled in this context does not destroy the restrictive significance of the phrase "business or property" as a whole. Pp. 337-339.

- (b) Monetary injury, standing alone, may be injury in one's "property" within the meaning of § 4. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U.S. 390. Thus, the fact that petitioner was deprived of only money is no reason to conclude that she did not sustain a "property" injury. Pp. 339-340.
- (c) Nor does petitioner's status as a "consumer" who purchased goods at retail for personal use change the nature of the injury she suffered or the intrinsic meaning of "property" in § 4. Pp. 340-342.
- (d) The legislative history reflects that the treble-damages remedy was designed to protect consumers, and that no one questioned the right of consumers to sue under § 4. Thus, to the extent that § 4's legislative history is relevant, it also supports the conclusion that a consumer deprived of money by reason of anticompetitive conduct is injured in "property" within the [****4] meaning of § 4. Pp. 342-344.
- (e) The fact that allowing class actions such as this may add a significant burden to the federal courts' already overcrowded dockets is an important but not a controlling consideration, since Congress created the § 4 treble-damages remedy precisely for the purpose of encouraging private challenges to antitrust violations. P. 344.
- (f) Respondents' arguments that the cost of defending consumer class actions will have a potentially ruinous effect on small businesses in particular and will ultimately be paid by consumers, are policy considerations more properly addressed to Congress than to this Court; in any event they cannot govern the reading of the plain language of § 4. Pp. 344-345.
- Counsel: John E. Thomas argued the cause and filed a brief for petitioner. Julian R. Wilheim and Elliot S. Kaplan argued the cause for respondents. With them on the brief were Fred L. Woodworth, Joseph C. Basta, and Deborah J. Palmer. Assistant Attorney General Shenefield argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were Solicitor General McCree, Deputy Solicitor General Easterbrook, Stephen M. Shapiro, Barry [****5] Grossman, and Bruce E. Fein. Warren Spannaus, Attorney General of Minnesota, argued the cause for the States of Alabama et al. as amici curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were Richard B. Allyn, Solicitor General of Minnesota, Alan H. Maclin, Stephen P. Kilgruff, and Thomas Kenyon, Special Assistant Attorneys General; and John Ashcroft, Attorney General of Missouri, Walter O. Theiss, Assistant Attorney General, and Robert Bern; joined by other officials for their respective States as follows: Charles A. Graddick, Attorney General, for Alabama; Avrum M. Gross, Attorney General, and Mark E. Ashburn, Assistant Attorney General, for Alaska; Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General, and Kenneth R. Reed for Arizona; Steve Clark, Attorney General, and Royce O. Griffin, Jr., Deputy Attorney General, for Arkansas; George Deukmejian, Attorney General, Warren J. Abbott, Assistant Attorney General, and Linda L. Tedeschi, Deputy Attorney General, for California; J. D. MacFarlane, Attorney General, B. Lawrence Theis, First Assistant Attorney General, and William E. Walters, Assistant Attorney General, for Colorado; Carl R. Ajello, Attorney General, Gerard J. Dowling and Larry H. Evans, Assistant [****6] Attorneys General, for Connecticut; Richard S. Gebelein, Attorney General, and William E. Kirk III, Assistant Attorney General, for Delaware; Jim Smith, Attorney General, Charles R. Ranson, Special Assistant Attorney General, and Douglas C. Kearney, Assistant Attorney General, for Florida; Wayne Minami, Attorney General, and Thomas T. Wood, Deputy Attorney General, for Hawaii; David H. Leroy, Attorney General, and Mike Brassey, Deputy Attorney General, for Idaho; William J. Scott, Attorney General, for Illinois; Theodore L. Sendak, Attorney General, for Indiana; Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General, and Gary H. Swanson, Assistant Attorney General, for Iowa; Robert T. Stephan, Attorney General, and Wayne E. Hundley, Deputy Attorney General, for Kansas; Robert F. Stephens, Attorney General, and James M. Ringo, Assistant Attorney General, for Kentucky; William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General, and John R. Flowers, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, for Louisiana; Richard S. Cohen, Attorney General, and Cheryl Harrington, Assistant Attorney General, for Maine; Stephen H. Sachs, Attorney General, and Charles O. Monk II, Assistant Attorney General, for Maryland; Francis X. Bellotti, Attorney [****7] General, Paula W. Gold, Assistant Attorney General, and Steven J. Greenfogel for Massachusetts; Frank J. Kelley, Attorney General, and Edwin M. Bladen, Assistant Attorney General, for Michigan; A. F. Summer, Attorney General, and Marshall G. Bennett, Assistant Attorney General, for Mississippi; Mike T. Greely, Attorney General, and Jerome J. Cate, Assistant Attorney General, for Montana; Paul L. Douglas, Attorney General, and Robert F. Bartle and Paul E. Hofmeister, Assistant Attorneys General, for Nebraska; Richard H. Bryan, Attorney

11 GÁVÉ ÚT HEĀT HÉLÁ JÁ ÚD ÁGÍ ÉEFGHÍ LÀ € ÄSE OÄ EGA ÁIH FÄTTEJHLÁFJÍ JÁ ÙESÓY QÄFÉ ÄE

General, for Nevada; Thomas D. Rath, Attorney General, for New Hampshire; John J. Degnan, Attorney General, and Alfred J. Luciani for New Jersey; Jeff Bingham, Attorney General, and James J. Wechsler, Assistant Attorney General, for New Mexico; Robert Abrams, Attorney General, and John M. Desiderio, Assistant Attorney General, for New York; Rufus L. Edmisten, Attorney General, Howard A. Kramer, Deputy Attorney General, and David S. Crump, Special Deputy Attorney General, for North Carolina; Allen I. Olson, Attorney General, and Dale V. Sandstrom and Terry L. Adkins, Assistant Attorneys General, for North Dakota; William J. Brown, Attorney General, and [***8] Eugene F. McShane and Richard M. Firestone, Assistant Attorneys General, for Ohio; Jan Eric Cartwright, Attorney General, and Manville J. Buford, Assistant Attorney General, for Oklahoma; James A. Redden, Attorney General, and James Kirkham Johns for Oregon; Edward G. Biester, Jr., Attorney General, and Norman J. Watkins and John L. Shearburn, Deputy Attorneys General, for Pennsylvania; Dennis J. Roberts II, Attorney General, and Patrick J. Quinlan, Special Assistant Attorney General, for Rhode Island; Daniel R. McLeod, Attorney General, for South Carolina; Mark V. Meierhenry, Attorney General, and James E. McMahon, Assistant Attorney General, for South Dakota; William M. Leech, Jr., Attorney General, and William J. Haynes, Jr., Deputy Attorney General, for Tennessee; Mark White, Attorney General, for Texas; Robert B. Hansen, Attorney General, and Andrew W. Buffmire, Assistant Attorney General, for Utah; M. Jerome Diamond, Attorney General, and Jay I. Ashman, Assistant Attorney General, for Vermont; Marshall Coleman, Attorney General, and Joseph W. Kaestner, Assistant Attorney General, for Virginia; Slade Gorton, Attorney General, Thomas L. Boeder, Senior Assistant Attorney General, [***9] and Earle J. Hereford, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, for Washington; Chauncey H. Browning, Jr., Attorney General, and Charles G. Brown, Deputy Attorney General, for West Virginia; Bronson C. La Follette, Attorney General, and Michael L. Zaleski, Assistant Attorney General, for Wisconsin; and John D. Troughton, Attorney General, Peter J. Mulvaney, Deputy Attorney General, and James W. Gusea, Assistant Attorney General, for Wyoming. *

Judges: BURGER, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which all other Members joined, except BRENNAN, J., who took no part in the decision of the case. REHNQUIST, J., filed a concurring opinion, post, p. 345.

Opinion by: BURGER

Opinion

---

[*334] [***934] [**2328] MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A]We granted certiorari to decide whether consumers who pay [***10] a [***935] higher price for goods purchased for personal use as a result of antitrust violations sustain an injury in their "business or property" within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15.

[*335] [**2329] I

Petitioner brought a class action on behalf of herself and all persons in the United States who purchased hearing aids manufactured by five corporations, respondents here. Her complaint alleges that respondents have committed a variety of antitrust violations, including vertical and horizontal price fixing.<sup>1</sup> Because of these violations, the complaint alleges, petitioner and the class of persons she seeks to represent have been forced to pay illegally fixed

---

* David Berger, H. Laddie Montague, Jr., Merrill G. Davidoff, Stanley J. Friedman, Frederick P. Furth, Thomas R. Fahrner, Aaron M. Fine, and Josef D. Cooper filed a brief for the plaintiffs in Kennedy Smith v. Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A. et al. as amici curiae urging reversal.

<sup>1</sup> Specifically, Reiter alleges that respondents violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1 and 2, and § 3 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 14. She claims respondents restricted the territories, customers, and brands of hearing aids offered by their retail dealers, used the customer lists of their retail dealers for their own purposes, prohibited unauthorized retailers from dealing in or repairing their hearing aids, and conspired among themselves and with their retail dealers to fix the retail prices of the hearing aids.

11 GÁVÈJÀ HÉTHÍ LÁJÀUÉDÉGHGÍ ÉÉEGHGJLÀ €ÉÉÓAÉGÁHÉÉHJÍ LÁJÍ JÁVÈJÉSÓYÓÁFÉ ÉÉÉÉ

higher prices for the hearing aids and related services they purchased from respondents' retail dealers. Treble damages and injunctive relief are sought under §§ 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 737, as amended, 15 U. S. C. §§ 15 and 26.

[****11] Respondents moved for dismissal of the complaint or summary judgment in the District Court. Among other things, respondents argued that Reiter, as a retail purchaser of hearing aids for personal use, lacked standing to sue for treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act because she had not been injured in her "business or property" within the meaning of the Act.

The District Court held that under § 4 a retail purchaser is injured in "property" if the purchaser can show that antitrust violations caused an increase in the price paid for the article purchased. The District Court relied on Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U.S. 390, 396 \(1906\), and the legislative history of the Clayton Act set forth in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 1\*3361 486 n. 10 \(1977\), indicating that Congress intended to give a § 4 remedy to consumers. 435 F.Supp. 933, 935-938 \(Minn. 1977\).

The District Court determined, however, that the respondents had raised a "controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion," id., at 938, and accordingly [****12] certified the question for interlocutory review under 28 U. S. C. § 1292 \(b\). It then stayed further proceedings in the case and declined to express any opinion on the merits of the other issues raised by respondents' motions or on the certifiability of the class.

The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that retail purchasers of consumer goods and services who allege no injury of a commercial or business nature are not injured in their "business or property" within the meaning of § 4. 579 F.2d 1077 \(CA8 1978\). Noting the absence of any holdings on this precise issue by this Court or other courts of [****936] appeals, the court reasoned that the phrase "business or property" was intended to limit standing to those engaged in commercial ventures. It relied on the legislative history and this Court's statement in Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 264 \(1972\), that "business or property" referred to "commercial interests or enterprises." A contrary holding, the Court of Appeals observed, would add a substantial volume of litigation to the already strained dockets of the federal courts and could be used to exact unfair [****13] settlements from retail businesses. Small and medium-sized retailers would be especially hard hit by "gigantic consumer class actions," and granting standing to retail consumers might actually have an anticompetitive impact as a consequence. Accordingly, the Court of Appeals thought "it sensible as a matter of policy and compelled as a matter of law that consumers alleging no injury of a commercial or competitive nature are not injured in their property under section 4 of the Clayton Act." 579 F.2d, at 1087.

[*337] [**2330] We granted certiorari, 439 U.S. 1065 \(1979\).<sup>2</sup> [****14] We reverse.<sup>3</sup>

II

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2] As is true in every case involving the construction of a statute, our starting point must be the language employed by Congress. HN1 Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, provides:

---

<sup>2</sup> Differing views on this issue have been expressed by various courts. See, e. g., Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 579 F.2d 1077 \(CA8 1978\) (case below); Bravman v. Bassett Furniture Industries, 552 F.2d 90, 98-99, and n. 23 (CA3), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 823 \(1977\); Cleary v. Chalk, 159 U. S. App. D. C. 415, 419 n. 17, 488 F.2d 1315, 1319 n. 17 \(1973\), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 938 \(1974\); Theophil v. Sheller-Globe Corp., 446 F.Supp. 131 \(EDNY 1978\); Gutierrez v. E. & J. Gallo Winery Co., 425 F.Supp. 1221 \(ND Cal. 1977\), appeal docketed, No. 77-1725 (CA9).

<sup>3</sup> The Court of Appeals expressly noted that Reiter's claim for injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act was not before it on interlocutory appeal. 579 F.2d, at 1087 n. 19. The court therefore expressed no view as to Reiter's standing to raise this claim. It also expressly refused to decide whether Reiter's claim for treble damages under § 4 was barred by the direct-purchaser rule of Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720 \(1977\). 579 F.2d, at 1079 n. 3. Accordingly, these issues are not before us.

|| GÁVÈJÀ HÉT HÌ LÁJÀUÉDÉGHGÌ FÄEGHÈLÀ €ŠEÒAÉGÀÁH FÄEEJHÌ LÆJÌ JÁMÈSÓYØAFÈ È ÄEEFI

"Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden [****15] in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States . . . without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U. S. C. § 15 (emphasis added).

On its face, § 4 contains little in the way of restrictive language. In Pfizer Inc. v. Government of India, 434 U.S. 308 \(1978\), we remarked:

[HN2\[↑\]](#) 'The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices [*338] by whomever they may be perpetrated.' Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 236; cf. Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 138-139. [***937] And the legislative history of the Sherman Act demonstrates that Congress used the phrase 'any person' intending it to have its naturally broad and inclusive meaning. There was no mention in the floor debates of any more restrictive definition. [****16] " Id. at 312.

[LEdHN\[3\]\[↑\]](#) [3]Similarly here, [HN3\[↑\]](#) the word "property" has a naturally broad and inclusive meaning. In its dictionary definitions and in common usage "property" comprehends anything of material value owned or possessed. See, e. g., Webster's Third New International Dictionary 1818 (1961). Money, of course, is a form of property.

Respondents protest that, if the reference to "property" in § 4 means "money," the term "business" then becomes superfluous, for every injury in one's business necessarily involves a pecuniary injury. They argue that if Congress wished to permit one who lost only money to bring suit under § 4, it would not have used the restrictive phrase "business or property"; rather, it would have employed more generic language akin to that of § 16, for example, which provides for injunctive relief against any "threatened loss or damage." 15 U. S. C. § 26. Congress plainly intended to exclude some category of injury in choosing the phrase "business or property" [****17] for § 4. Only a "commercial interest" gloss, they argue, both gives the phrase the restrictive significance intended for it and at the same time gives independent significance to the word "business" and the word "property." The argument of respondents is straightforward: the phrase "business or property" means "business activity or property related to one's business." Brief for Respondents 11 n. 7.

[**2331] [LEdHN\[4\]\[↑\]](#) [4][LEdHN\[5\]\[↑\]](#) [5]That strained construction would have us ignore the disjunctive "or" and rob the term "property" of its independent [*339] and ordinary significance; moreover, it would convert the noun "business" into an adjective. [HN4\[↑\]](#) In construing a statute we are obliged to give effect, if possible, to every word Congress used. United States v. Menasche, 348 U.S. 528, 538-539 \(1955\). Canons of construction ordinarily suggest that terms connected by a disjunctive be given separate meanings, unless the context dictates [****18] otherwise; here it does not. See FCC v. Pacifica Foundation, 438 U.S. 726, 739-740 \(1978\).[HN5\[↑\]](#) Congress' use of the word "or" makes plain that "business" was not intended to modify "property," nor was "property" intended to modify "business."

[LEdHN\[1C\]\[↑\]](#) [1C]When a commercial enterprise suffers a loss of money it suffers an injury in both its "business" and its "property." But neither term is rendered redundant by recognizing that a consumer not engaged in a "business" enterprise, but rather acquiring goods or services for personal use, is injured in "property" when the price of those goods or services is artificially inflated by reason of the anticompetitive conduct complained of. The phrase "business or property" also retains restrictive significance. It would, for example, exclude personal injuries suffered. E. g., Hamman v. United States, 267 F.Supp. 420, 432 \(Mont. 1967\). Congress must have intended to exclude some class of injuries by the phrase "business or property." But it [****19] taxes the ordinary meaning of common

II GÁVÉJÁ HÉT HULÁJ ÁUÉDÉGHG FÉGHFLÁ €ŠEOAÉGÁH FÁREJHÍ LÉJÍ JÁVÉSÓYÓQAÉ FÉ FÉFJ

[***938] terms to argue, as respondents do, that a consumer's monetary injury arising directly out of a retail purchase is not comprehended by the natural and usual meaning of the phrase "business or property." We simply give the word "property" the independent significance to which it is entitled in this context. HN6↑ A consumer whose money has been diminished by reason of an antitrust violation has been injured "in his . . . property" within the meaning of § 4.

Indeed, this Court indicated as much in *Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U.S. 390 \(1960\)*. There the city alleged that the anticompetitive conduct of the defendants [*340] had caused the city to pay more for water pipes purchased for use in the city's water system. The defendants answered that the pecuniary injury resulting from the alleged overcharges did not injure the city in its "business or property" within the meaning of § 4. This Court, without relying on the fact that the city was engaged in a business enterprise, stated:

"The city was [***20] . . . injured in its property, at least, if not in its business of furnishing water, by being led to pay more than the worth of the pipe. A person whose property is diminished by a payment of money wrongfully induced is injured in his property." 203 U.S., at 396.

The holding of Chattanooga Foundry could well have been grounded on the undisputed fact that the city was engaged in the commercial enterprise of supplying water for a charge and, therefore, engaged in a business. It was not uncommon for both municipalities and private companies to own and operate competing waterworks at the turn of the century. In operating a municipal public utility, the city was in a real sense engaged in the "business of furnishing water" when it purchased the pipe to carry water from the city's reservoirs to its customers. Ibid.

Yet, the Court's holding in Chattanooga Foundry was deliberately grounded on the premise that the city had been injured in its "property" -- independent of any injury it had sustained in its "business of furnishing water" -- because the defendants' antitrust violation caused it to pay a higher price for the pipe than it otherwise would have paid. [***21] Ibid. Chattanooga Foundry therefore establishes that HN7↑ monetary injury, standing alone, may be injury in one's "property" within the meaning of § 4. Thus, the fact that petitioner Reiter was deprived of only money, albeit a modest [*2332] amount, is no reason to conclude that she did not sustain a "property" injury.

Nor does her status as a "consumer" change the nature of [*341] the injury she suffered or the intrinsic meaning of "property" in § 4. HN8↑ That consumers of retail goods and services have standing to sue under § 4 is implicit in our decision in *Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 780, 782 \(1975\)*. There we held that a bar association was subject to a treble-damages suit brought under § 4 by persons who sought legal services in connection with the purchase of a residence. Furthermore, we have often referred to "consumers" as parties entitled to seek damages under § 4 without intimating that consumers [***939] of goods and services purchased [*22] for personal rather than commercial use were in any way foreclosed by the statutory language from asserting an injury in their "property." E. g., Pfizer Inc. v. Government of India, 434 U.S., at 313-315; Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S., at 486 n. 10; Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 494 (1968); Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 236 (1948).

*Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251 \(1972\)*, is not to the contrary. There we held that injury to a state's total economy, for which the state sought redress in its parens patriae capacity, was not cognizable under § 4. It is true we noted that the words "business or property" refer to "commercial interests or enterprises," and reasoned that Hawaii could not recover on its claim for damage done to its "general economy" because such injury did not harm Hawaii's "commercial interests." 405 U.S., at 264.

However, the language of an opinion is not always to be parsed as though we were dealing with language of a statute. Use of [***23] the phrase "commercial interests or enterprises," read in context, in no sense suggests that only injuries to a business entity are within the ambit of § 4. Respondents ignore the Court's careful use of the disjunctive and the naturally broad meaning of the term "interests" in *Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., supra*. The phrase

II GÁVÉJÁ HÉTHI FLÁJÁUÉDÉGHG FÉGHGLÁ EŠEÓAÉGÁH FÉHEJHULÁJÍ JÁVÉSÓYÓAÉ FÉHEH

"commercial interests" was used there as a generic reference to the interests of the [*342] State of Hawaii as a party to a commercial transaction. This is apparent from Hawaii's explicit reaffirmance of the rule of Chattanooga Foundry and statement that, where injury to a state "occurs in its capacity as a consumer in the marketplace" through a "payment of money wrongfully induced," treble damages are recoverable by a state under the Clayton Act. Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., supra, at 263 n. 14. A central premise of our holding in Hawaii was concern over duplicative recoveries. We noted that a "large and ultimately indeterminable part of the injury to the 'general economy'" for which the State sued was "no more than a reflection of injuries to the 'business or property' of consumers" for which, on a [****24] proper showing, they could recover in their own right. 405 U.S., at 263-264.

Consumers in the United States purchase at retail more than $ 1.2 trillion in goods and services annually. 1978 Economic Report of the President 257 (Table B-1). It is in the sound commercial interests of the retail purchasers of goods and services to obtain the lowest price possible within the framework of our competitive private enterprise system. The essence of the antitrust laws is to ensure fair price competition in an open market. Here, where petitioner alleges a wrongful deprivation of her money because the price of the hearing aid she bought was artificially inflated by reason of respondents' anticompetitive conduct, she has alleged an injury in her "property" under § 4.

Nothing in the legislative history of § 4 conflicts with our holding today. [***940] Many courts and commentators have observed that the respective legislative histories of § 4 of the Clayton Act and § 7 of the [**2333] Sherman Act, its predecessor, shed no light on Congress' original understanding of the terms "business or property."

<sup>4</sup> [****26] Nowhere in the legislative record [*343] is specific reference [****25] made to the intended scope of those terms. Respondents engage in speculation in arguing that the substitution of the terms "business or property" for the broader language originally proposed by Senator Sherman <sup>5</sup> was clearly intended to exclude pecuniary injuries suffered by those who purchase goods and services at retail for personal use. None of the subsequent floor debates reflect any such intent. On the contrary, they suggest that Congress designed the Sherman Act as a "consumer welfare prescription." R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 66 (1978). Certainly the leading proponents of the legislation perceived the treble-damages remedy of what is now § 4 as a means of protecting consumers from overcharges resulting from price fixing. E. g., 21 Cong. Rec. 2457, 2460, 2558 (1890). Because Congress in 1890 rejected a proposal to allow a group of consumers to bring a collective action as a class, some legislators questioned whether individual consumers would be willing to bring actions for relatively small amounts. See, e. g., id., at 1767-1768, 2569, 2612, 3147-3148, 3150. At no time, however, was the right of a consumer to bring an action for damages questioned.<sup>6</sup>

LEdHN[6A] [↑] [6A] In Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., supra, after examining the legislative history of § 4, we described the Sherman Act as "conceived of primarily as a remedy for '[the] people of the United States as individuals,' especially consumers," and the treble-damages provision of the Clayton Act as "conceived primarily as [opening] the door of justice [*344] to every man . . . and [giving] the injured party ample damages for the wrong suffered."<sup>7</sup> 429 U.S., at 486 n. 10. Thus, to the extent that the legislative history is relevant, [****27] it supports our <sup>4</sup> See, e. g., Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 261 (1972); Weinberg v. Federated Department Stores, Inc., 426 F.Supp. 880, 882-883 (ND Cal. 1977), appeal docketed, No. 77-1547 (CA9); M. Forkosch, Antitrust and the Consumer 2-3 (1956); Comment, Closing the Door on Consumer Antitrust Standing, 54 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 237, 242-243, 249-252 (1979). See also 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 106, pp. 14-16 (1978).

<sup>5</sup> As originally introduced, the bill that ultimately became the Sherman Act authorized "any person or corporation injured or damaged by [an unlawful] arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination" to sue for damages thereby sustained. S. 1, 51st Cong., 1st Sess., § 2 (1889).

<sup>6</sup> Of course, the treble-damages remedy of § 4 took on new practical significance for consumers with the advent of Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 23.

II GÁVÉJÁ HÉTHI I LÁJÁUÉÖDÉGHG FÉGH HÁ EŠE OÅÉGÅ ÁH FÄHEJI ELÁJÍ JÁVÉSÖYÖFA È FÄHEJI holding that a consumer deprived of money by reason of allegedly anticompetitive conduct is injured in "property" within the meaning of § 4.<sup>7</sup>

LEdHN[6B] [↑] [6B]

Respondents [***941] also argue that allowing class actions [***28] to be brought by retail consumers like the petitioner here will add a significant burden to the already crowded dockets of the federal courts. That may well be true but cannot be a controlling consideration here. HN9 [↑] We must take the statute as we find it. Congress created the treble-damages remedy of § 4 precisely for the purpose of encouraging private challenges to antitrust violations. These private suits provide a significant supplement to the limited resources available to the Department of Justice for enforcing the antitrust laws and deterring violations. Indeed, nearly 20 times as many private antitrust actions are currently pending in the federal courts as actions filed by the Department of Justice. Administrative Office [**2334] of the United States Courts Ann. Rep. 101, Table 28 (1978). To be sure, these private suits impose a heavy litigation burden on the federal courts; it is the clear responsibility of Congress to provide the judicial resources necessary to execute its mandates.

LEdHN[7] [↑] [7]Finally, [***29] respondents argue that the cost of defending consumer class actions will have a potentially ruinous effect on small businesses in particular and will ultimately be paid by [*345] consumers in any event. These are not unimportant considerations, but they are policy considerations more properly addressed to Congress than to this Court. However accurate respondents' arguments may prove to be -- and they are not without substance -- they cannot govern our reading of the plain language in § 4.

District courts must be especially alert to identify frivolous claims brought to extort nuisance settlements; they have broad power and discretion vested in them by Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 23 with respect to matters involving the certification and management of potentially cumbersome or frivolous class actions. See generally Durham & Dibble, Certification: A Practical Device for Early Screening of Spurious Antitrust Litigation, 1978 B.Y.U.L. Rev. 299. Recognition of the plain meaning of the statutory language "business or property" need not result in administrative chaos, class-action harassment, or "windfall" settlements if the district courts exercise sound discretion and use [***30] the tools available.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Reversed and remanded.

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN took no part in the decision of this case.

Concur by: REHNQUIST

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST, concurring.

I join the Court's opinion and write separately only to point out that the concern expressed by the Court of Appeals that an interpretation of "business or property" in the manner in which the Court interprets it today would "add a substantial [***942] volume of litigation to the already strained dockets of the federal courts and could be used to exact unfair settlements from retail businesses," ante, at 336, is by no means an unfounded one. And pronouncements from this Court exhorting district courts to be "especially alert to identify frivolous [*346] claims brought to extort nuisance settlements" will not be a complete solution for those courts which are actually on the firing line in this type of litigation. Ante, at 345. But I fully agree that we must take the statute as Congress wrote it, and I also fully agree with the Court's construction of the phrase "business [***31] or property." I think that the Court's observation, ante, at 343 n. 6, that "the treble-damages remedy of § 4 took on new practical significance for consumers with the advent of Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 23" is a miracle of understatement; and in the absence of any jurisdictional limit, there is considerable doubt in my mind whether this type of action is indeed ultimately of primary benefit to consumers themselves, who may recover virtually no monetary damages, as opposed to the attorneys for the class, who stand to obtain handsome rewards for their services. Be that as it may, the problem, if there is one, is for Congress and not for the courts.

---

<sup>7</sup> Although in no sense a controlling consideration, we note that our holding is consistent with the assumption on which Congress enacted the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976, 90 Stat. 1394, 15 U. S. C. § 15c et seq. The text and legislative history of this statute make clear that in 1976 Congress believed that consumers have a cause of action under § 4, which the statute authorizes the states to assert in a parens patriae capacity. See, e. g., 15 U. S. C. §§ 15c (a)(1), 15c (a)(1)(B)(ii), 15c (b)(2); H. R. Rep. No. 94-499, pp. 6, 9 (1975). See also Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S., at 734 n. 14.

II GÁVÈJÀ HÊCH Í LÁJÀUÉDÉGHG FÄEGH LÀ €SEÒAÉGÀÁHFÄEJI GÄJÍ JÁVÈSÖYQÀÉ FÄEHE

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 360

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 15

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 67

L Ed Index to Annos, Damages; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Double or Treble Damages

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Supreme [***32] Court's views on weight to be accorded to pronouncements of legislature, or members of legislature, respecting meaning or intent of previously enacted statute. 56 L Ed 2d 918.

Authority of state to sue as parens patriae to recover treble damages under 4 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 15). 23 ALR Fed 878.

---

End of Document

J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

January 21, 1981, Argued ; May 18, 1981, Decided

No. 79-1944

Reporter

451 U.S. 557 *; 101 S. Ct. 1923 **; 68 L. Ed. 2d 442 ***; 1981 U.S. LEXIS 49 ****; 49 U.S.L.W. 4516; 1981-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P64,013

J. TRUETT PAYNE CO., INC. v. CHRYSLER MOTORS CORP.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 607 F.2d 1133, vacated and remanded.

Core Terms

---

damages, sales, competitors, antitrust, profits, price discrimination, cases, retail, Robinson-Patman Act, programs, substantial evidence, Clayton Act, wrongdoer, dealer, prices, bonus, infer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

[**HN1** \[\] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act](#)

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

[**HN2** \[\] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act](#)

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

IÍ FÁMEJÉA IÍ FÁI IÍ LÁFÉAUÉOÓCÉFGHÁFÉUFGHLÁ I ÁSÉOÁa ÉCAÁ I GÁEÁI I GLÁFJÍ FÁMEJÉASÓYÓJA JÁEÁI

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN3 [] Remedies, Damages

By its terms 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\) is a prophylactic statute which is violated merely upon a showing that the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition. As cases have recognized, the statute does not require that the discriminations must in fact have harmed competition. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, in contrast, is essentially a remedial statute. It provides treble damages to any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. To recover treble damages, then, a plaintiff must make some showing of actual injury attributable to something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN4 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Proof of a violation does not mean that a disfavored purchaser has been actually injured within the meaning of 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN5 [] Private Actions, Remedies

Damages issues in these cases are rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts. The court has repeatedly held that in the absence of more precise proof, the factfinder may conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN6 [down arrow] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

I I FÁJÉSÓYÓ Á JÁHEE

Even if there is a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, a petitioner is not excused from its burden of proving antitrust injury and damages. It is simply that once a violation has been established, that burden is to some extent lightened.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Recovery of treble damages in price discrimination case under 4 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), held dependent upon showing of actual injury resulting from price discrimination.

Summary

A former automobile dealer brought suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama under 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), alleging that an automobile manufacturer's sales incentive program violated the price discrimination prohibition of 2(a). The dealer argued that since the manufacturer's program, which assigned him a sales objective and paid him a bonus for each car sold in excess of his objective, was set higher than those of his competitors, he received fewer bonuses to the extent that he failed to meet his objectives while his competitors met theirs, resulting in price discrimination whereby he paid more for his automobiles than his competitors. The jury returned a verdict against the manufacturer and awarded the dealer damages which the District Court trebled pursuant to 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15). The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed, finding that in order to recover treble damages under 4, the dealer must prove (1) a violation of the antitrust law, (2) cognizable injury attributable to the violation, and (3) at least the approximate amount of damage. Further, it found it unnecessary to consider whether the manufacturer's incentive program violated 2(a), since the dealer failed to introduce substantial evidence of injury attributable to the program (607 F2d 1133).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court vacated and remanded. In an opinion by Rehnquist, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and Stewart, White, and Stevens, JJ., it was held (1) that the dealer must prove actual injury resulting from a price discrimination prohibited by 2(a) if it is to recover treble damages under 4, and (2) that the case would be remanded so that the Court of Appeals could pass upon the manufacturer's contention that the evidence adduced at trial was insufficient to support a finding of violation of 2(a), where it was a close question whether the dealer's evidence would be sufficient to support a jury award, and where the Court of Appeals had bypassed the issue of whether the manufacturer in fact violated 2(a) and had gone directly to the issue of damages.

Powell, J., joined by Brennan, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., dissenting in part, expressed the view that the judgment of the Court of Appeals should have been affirmed, rather than being vacated and remanded, since, even if there were some reason for the Supreme Court to review the evidence in this case, the Court of Appeals was correct in finding the dealer's evidence insufficient to show a competitive injury of the kind that antitrust laws were enacted to prevent.

Headnotes

---

PRACTICES §36 > price discrimination -- treble damages -- proof of injury -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

In a suit brought by a former automobile dealer under 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), alleging that an automobile manufacturer's sales incentive programs violated the price discrimination prohibition of 2(a), the dealer is not entitled to automatic damages in the amount of the price discrimination upon a showing of a violation of 2(a), and must prove more than a violation of 2(a) if he is to recover treble damages under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), since 2(a) is a prophylactic statute which is violated merely upon a showing that injury may result from the price discrimination prohibited under 2(a), whereas 4 is a remedial statute which provides treble damages upon some showing of actual injury attributable to something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent, and since proof of a violation of 2(a) does not mean that a disfavored purchaser has been actually injured within the meaning of 4.

IÍ FÁMJÌ ÍÍ ÍÍ IÍ LÉFÁJÓDÁFJGHÁ I ÁSÓaÉGÁ I GÁI I GLÁJÌ FÁMJESÓYÓJA JÁI

ERROR §1692.1 > remand -- issue not passed on by court below -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

The United States Supreme Court, in a case in which a former automobile dealer seeks treble damages under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), by alleging that an automobile manufacturer's sales incentive programs, which assigned the dealer a sales objective and paid it a bonus for each car sold in excess of its objective, violated the price discrimination prohibition of 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), by setting the dealer's sales objectives higher than those of its competitors, thereby causing the dealer to receive fewer bonuses and causing it to pay more for its automobiles, will remand the case so that the Federal Court of Appeals may pass upon the manufacturer's contention that the evidence adduced at trial was insufficient to support a finding of violation of 2(a), where, while it is a close question whether the dealer's evidence, consisting of testimony that it lost sales to its competitors, was undersold by them, suffered a reduced market share of retail sales, had to force business so that it could meet its assigned quota, and had to overallow on trade-ins, as a result of the manufacturer's sales incentive programs, would be sufficient to support a jury award, the Court of Appeals bypassed the issue of whether the manufacturer in fact violated 2(a), and went directly to the issue of damages. (Powell, Brennan, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

ERROR §1750 > remand -- what may be considered -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

On remand after the United States Supreme Court vacated the Federal Court of Appeals judgment, the Supreme Court having remanded the case so that the Court of Appeals may pass upon the manufacturer's contention that the evidence adduced at trial was insufficient to support a finding that it violated 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), as alleged by a former automobile dealer, where the Court of Appeals bypassed the issue, at trial, of whether the manufacturer in fact violated 2(a), if the Court of Appeals determines that the manufacturer did violate 2(a), it should then consider the sufficiency of the dealer's evidence of injury.

Syllabus

---

Petitioner, a former automobile dealer, brought suit against respondent automobile manufacturer in Federal District Court, alleging that respondent's "sales incentive" programs over a certain period violated the price-discrimination prohibition of § 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. Under its programs, respondent paid a bonus to its dealers if they exceeded their quotas -- set by respondent for each dealer -- of cars to be sold at retail or purchased from respondent. Petitioner alleged that respondent set petitioner's quotas higher than those of its competitors; that to the extent it failed to meet its quotas, and to the extent its competitors met their lower quotas, petitioner [****2] received fewer bonuses; and that the net effect was that it paid more for its automobiles than did its competitors. Petitioner contended that the amount of the price discrimination -- the amount of the price difference multiplied by the number of petitioner's purchases -- was $ 81,248, and that when petitioner went out of business, the going-concern value of the business ranged between $ 50,000 and $ 170,000. Respondent maintained that the sales incentive programs were nondiscriminatory, and that they did not injure petitioner or adversely affect competition. The jury returned a verdict awarding petitioner $ 111,247.48 in damages, which the District Court trebled. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that it was unnecessary to consider whether a violation of § 2 (a) had been proved, since petitioner had failed to introduce substantial evidence of injury attributable to the programs, much less substantial evidence of the amount of such injury, as was required in order to recover treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act.

IÍ FÁMEJÁ IÍ ÈÁ IÍ LÁFÉFÁUÉOÉDÉJGHÉAÍ ÁSEAOá ÉCAÁ Ií GÉAÉI Ií GLAFJÍ FÁMEJASÓYÓJÁ J FÁHEEG

Held:

1. Petitioner's contention that once it has proved a price discrimination in violation of § 2 (a) it is entitled at a minimum to so-called "automatic [****3] damages" in the amount of the price discrimination is without merit. Section 2 (a), a prophylactic statute which is violated merely upon a showing that "the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition," does not require, for purposes of injunctive actions, that the discrimination must in fact have harmed competition. Corn Products Co. v. FTC, 324 U.S. 726; FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37. However, under § 4 of the Clayton Act, which is essentially a remedial statute providing treble damages to any person "who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws," a plaintiff must make some showing of actual injury attributable to something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. Thus it must prove more than a violation of § 2 (a), since such proof establishes only that injury may result. Cf. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477. Pp. 561-563.

2. The rule excusing antitrust plaintiffs from an unduly rigorous standard of proving antitrust injury, see, e. g., Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, [****4] will not be applied here to determine whether petitioner, though not entitled to "automatic damages," has produced enough evidence of actual injury to sustain recovery. While it is a close question whether petitioner's evidence would be sufficient to support a jury award even under such rule, a more fundamental difficulty is that the cases relied upon by petitioner all depend in greater or lesser part on the inequity of a wrongdoer defeating the recovery of damages against him by insisting upon a rigorous standard of proof. In this case, it cannot be said with assurance that respondent is a "wrongdoer" since the Court of Appeals went directly to the issue of damages after bypassing the question whether respondent in fact violated § 2 (a). The proper course is to remand the case so that the Court of Appeals may pass upon respondent's contention that the evidence was insufficient to support a finding of such violation. If the court determines that respondent did violate the Act, it should then consider the sufficiency of petitioner's evidence of injury. Pp. 563-568.

Counsel: C. Lee Reeves argued the cause and filed briefs for petitioner.

J. Ross Forman III argued the cause and [****5] filed a brief for respondent.*

Judges: REHNQUIST, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and STEWART, WHITE, and STEVENS, JJ., joined. POWELL, J., filed an opinion dissenting in part, in which BRENNAN, MARSHALL, and BLACKMUN, JJ., joined, post, p. 569.

Opinion by: REHNQUIST

Opinion

[*559] [***446] [**1925] JUSTICE REHNQUIST delivered the opinion of the Court.

* Robert H. Whaley filed a brief for Ricky Hasbrouck et al. as amici curiae urging reversal.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed by Thomas E. Deacy, Jr., E. Houston Harsha, and Alan I. Becker, for Cessna Aircraft Co.; and by John T. Cusack and Gordon B. Nash, Jr., for Vanco Beverage, Inc.

The question presented in this case is the appropriate measure of damages in a suit brought under § 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.<sup>1</sup>

[***6] [**1926] Petitioner, for several decades a Chrysler-Plymouth dealer in Birmingham, Ala., went out of business in 1974. It subsequently brought suit against respondent in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama, alleging that from January 1970 to May 1974 respondent's various "sales incentive" programs violated § 2 (a). Under one type of program, respondent assigned to each participating dealer a sales objective and paid to the dealer a bonus on each car sold in excess of that objective. Under another type of program, respondent required each dealer to purchase from it a certain quota of automobiles before it would pay a bonus on the sale of automobiles sold at retail. The amount of the [*560] bonus depended on the number of retail sales (or wholesale purchases) made in excess of the dealer's objective, and could amount to several hundred dollars. Respondent set petitioner's objectives higher than those of its competitors, requiring it to sell (or purchase) more automobiles to obtain a bonus than its competitors. To the extent petitioner failed to meet those objectives and to the extent its competitors met their lower objectives, petitioner [***7] received fewer bonuses. The net effect of all this, according to petitioner, was that it paid more money for its automobiles than did its competitors. It contended that the amount of the price discrimination -- the amount of the price difference multiplied by the number of [***447] petitioner's purchases -- was $ 81,248. It also claimed that the going-concern value of the business as of May 1974 ranged between $ 50,000 and $ 170,000.

Respondent maintained that the sales incentive programs were nondiscriminatory, and that they did not injure petitioner or adversely affect competition. The District Court denied respondent's motion for a directed verdict. The jury returned a verdict against respondent and awarded petitioner $ 111,247.48 in damages, which the District Court trebled.

The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed with instructions to dismiss the complaint. 607 F.2d 1133 \(1979\). It found that in order to recover treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, a plaintiff must prove (1) a violation of the antitrust laws, (2) cognizable injury attributable to the violation, and (3) at least the approximate amount of damage. It found it unnecessary [****8] to consider whether petitioner proved that respondent's incentive programs violated § 2 (a) because, in its view, petitioner had "failed to introduce substantial evidence of injury attributable to the programs, much less substantial evidence of the amount of such injury." Id., at 1135. Rejecting petitioner's theory of "automatic damages," under which mere proof of discrimination establishes the fact and amount of injury, the court held that injury must be proved by more than mere "[conclusory] statements [*561] by the plaintiff, without evidentiary support." Id., at 1136-1137. The court concluded that the District Court erred in refusing respondent's motion for a directed verdict and in denying its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. We granted certiorari, 449 U.S. 819 \(1980\), to review the decision of the Court of Appeals.

<sup>1</sup> Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. § 13 \(a\), provides in pertinent part:

HN1[] "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States . . . and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefits of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them . . . ."

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15, provides:

HN2[] "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover three-fold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

LEDHN[1] [1] Petitioner first contends that once it has proved a price discrimination in violation of § 2 (a) it is entitled at a minimum to so-called "automatic damages" in the amount of the price discrimination. Petitioner [****9] concedes [**1927] that in order to recover damages it must establish cognizable injury attributable to an antitrust violation and some approximation of damage. Brief for Petitioner 9. It insists, however, that the jury should be permitted to infer the requisite injury and damage from a showing of a substantial price discrimination. Petitioner notes that this Court has consistently permitted such injury to be inferred in injunctive actions brought to enforce § 2 (a), e. g., FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37 (1948), and argues that private suits for damages under § 4 should be treated no differently. We disagree.<sup>2</sup>

[****10] HN3 By [***448] its terms § 2 (a) is a prophylactic statute which is violated merely upon a showing that "the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition." [*562] (Emphasis supplied.) As our cases have recognized, the statute does not "require that the discriminations must in fact have harmed competition." Corn Products Refining Co. v. FTC, 324 U.S. 726, 742 (1945); FTC v. Morton Salt Co., supra, at 46 ("the statute does not require the Commission to find that injury has actually resulted"). Section 4 of the Clayton Act, in contrast, is essentially a remedial statute. It provides treble damages to "[any] person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws . . ." (Emphasis supplied.) To recover treble damages, then, a plaintiff must make some showing of actual injury attributable to something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. Perkins v. Standard Oil Co., 395 U.S. 642, 648 (1969) (plaintiff "must, of course, be [****11] able to show a causal connection between the price discrimination in violation of the Act and the injury suffered"). It must prove more than a violation of § 2 (a), since such proof establishes only that injury may result.

Our decision here is virtually governed by our reasoning in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477 (1977). There we rejected the contention that the mere violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, which prohibits mergers which may substantially lessen competition, gives rise to a damages claim under § 4. We explained that "to recover damages [under § 4] respondents must prove more than that the petitioner violated § 7, since such proof establishes only that injury may result." Id., at 486. Likewise in this case, HN4 [↑] proof of a violation does not mean that a disfavored purchaser has been actually "injured" within the meaning of § 4.

The legislative history buttresses this view. Both the Patman bill, H. R. 8442, § 2 (d), 74th Cong., 1st Sess. (1935), as introduced in the House, and the Robinson bill, S. 3154, [****12] § 2 (d), 74th Cong., 2d Sess. (1935), as introduced in the Senate, provided that a plaintiff's damages for a violation of § 2 (a) shall be presumed to be the amount of the price discrimination. The provision, however, encountered such [**563] strong opposition in both Houses that the House Committee eliminated it from its bill, H. R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., 16 (1936), and the Senate Committee modified the provision to authorize presumptive damages in the amount of the discrimination only when plaintiff shows the "fact of damage." S. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., 8 (1936). The Conference Committee eliminated even that compromise, and § 2 (a) was passed in its present form. Congress thus [**1928] has rejected the very concept which petitioner seeks to have the Court judicially legislate. Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. 186, 199-201 (1974).<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The automatic-damages theory has split the lower courts. The leading case approving the theory is Fowler Manufacturing Co. v. Gorlick, 415 F.2d 1248 (CA9 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 1012 (1970). See also Elizabeth Arden Sales Corp. v. Gus Blass Co., 150 F.2d 988 (CA8) (involving §§ 2 (d) and 2 (e) of the Act), cert. denied, 326 U.S. 773 (1945); Grace v. E. J. Kozin Co., 538 F.2d 170 (CA7 1976) (involving § 2 (c) of the Act). The leading case rejecting the theory is Enterprise Industries, Inc. v. Texas Co., 240 F.2d 457 (CA2), cert. denied, 353 U.S. 965 (1957). Accord, Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105 (CA3 1980); McCaskill v. Texaco, Inc., 351 F.Supp. 1332 (SD Ala. 1972), affirmance order, 486 F.2d 1400 (CA5 1973); Kidd v. Esso Standard Oil Co., 295 F.2d 497 (CA6 1961).

<sup>3</sup> Relying on Bruce's Juices, Inc. v. American Can Co., 330 U.S. 743, 757 (1947), petitioner argues that this Court has previously accepted the automatic-damages theory. In that case, the Court stated that if petitioner can show an illegal price discrimination under the Act, "it would establish its right to recover three times the discriminatory difference without proving more than the illegality of the prices." Ibid. But that statement is merely dictum, since the only issue before the Court was whether a violation of § 2 (a) could be used as an affirmative defense to void a contract.

[****13] II

[***449] [LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]Petitioner next contends that even though it may not be entitled to "automatic damages" upon a showing of a violation of § 2 (a), it produced enough evidence of actual injury to survive a motion for a directed verdict. That evidence consisted primarily of the testimony of petitioner's owner, Mr. Payne, and an expert witness, a professor of economics. Payne testified that the price discrimination was one of the causes of the dealership going out of business. In support of that contention, he testified that his salesmen told him that the dealership lost sales to its competitors, and that its market share of retail Chrysler-Plymouth sales in the Birmingham area was 24% in 1970, 27% in 1971, 23% in 1972, and 25% in 1973. Payne contended that it was proper to infer that the 4% drop in 1972 was a result of the incentive programs. [*564] He also testified that the discrimination caused him to "force" business so that he could meet his assigned quotas. That is, his desire to make a sale induced him to "overallow" on trade-ins, thus reducing his profits on his used car operation. App. [****14] 51-52. Payne adduced evidence showing that his average gross profit on used car sales was below that of his competitors, though that same evidence revealed that his average gross profit on new sales was higher. Id. at 269.

Neither Payne nor petitioner's expert witness offered documentary evidence as to the effect of the discrimination on retail prices. Although Payne asserted that his salesmen and customers told him that the dealership was being undersold, id., at 35-37, 92, 95, he admitted he did not know if his competitors did in fact pass on their lower costs to their customers. Id. at 44, 57. Petitioner's expert witness took a somewhat different position. He believed that the discrimination would ultimately cause retail prices to be held at an artificially high level since petitioner's competitors would not reduce their retail prices as much as they would have done if petitioner received an equal bonus from respondent. Id. at 103, 135. He also testified that petitioner was harmed by the discrimination even if the favored purchasers did not lower their retail prices, since petitioner in that case would make less money per car.

<sup>4</sup> Id. at 139.

[****15] [*565] [***450] [**1929] Even construed most favorably to petitioner, the evidence of injury is weak. Petitioner nevertheless asks us to consider the sufficiency of its evidence in light of our traditional rule excusing antitrust plaintiffs from an unduly rigorous standard of proving antitrust injury. In Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 123-124 (1969), for example, the Court discussed at some length the fixing of damages in a case involving market exclusion. We accepted the proposition that damages could be awarded on the basis of plaintiff's estimate of sales it could have made absent the violation:

---

<sup>4</sup> Respondent suggests that petitioner's inability to show that his favored competitors lowered their retail sales price should defeat recovery. That argument assumes that evidence of a lower retail price is the sine qua non of antitrust injury, that the disfavored purchaser is simply not "injured" unless the favored purchaser has lowered his price. If the favored purchaser has lowered his retail price, for example, the disfavored purchaser will lose sales to the extent it does not match that lower price. Similarly, if the disfavored purchaser matches the lower price, it will lose profits. Because petitioner has not shown that the favored purchasers have lowered their retail price, petitioner is arguably foreclosed from showing that it lost either sales or profits. Justice Cardozo seemingly adopted this position in ICC v. United States, 289 U.S. 385, 390-391 (1933), a case involving rate discrimination under the Interstate Commerce Act:

"If by reason of the discrimination, the preferred producers have been able to divert business that would otherwise have gone to the disfavored shipper, damage has resulted to the extent of the diverted profits. If the effect of the discrimination has been to force the shipper to sell at a lowered price . . . damage has resulted to the extent of the reduction. But none of these consequences is a necessary inference from discrimination without more."

Petitioner argues that is an overly narrow view of antitrust injury. To the extent a disfavored purchaser must pay more for its goods than its competitors, it is less able to compete. It has fewer funds available with which to advertise, make capital expenditures, and the like. Although the inability of petitioner to show that the favored retailers lowered their retail price makes petitioner's argument particularly weak, we find it unnecessary to decide in this case whether such failure as a matter of law demonstrates no competitive injury.

I Í FÁMEJÁ I Í LÁFÉAÚEÓDÉFJGHÉEFJGJLÀ I ÁSEÓaÉGAÁ I GÁEE I ÉLÁJÌ FÁMEJÉSÓYÓÁ JÁEEÍ

HN5 "[Damage] issues in these cases are rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts. The Court has repeatedly held that in the absence of more precise proof, the factfinder may 'conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline [****16] in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, [*566] that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs.' Bigelow v. RKO Pictures, Inc., supra, at 264. See also Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U.S. 359, 377-379 (1927); Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 561-566 (1931)." Ibid.

In Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251 (1946), relied on in Zenith, film distributors had conspired to deny the plaintiff theater access to first-run films. The jury awarded damages based on a comparison of plaintiff's actual profits with the contemporaneous profits of a competing theater with access to first-run films. Plaintiff had also adduced evidence comparing his actual profits during the conspiracy with his profits when he had been able to obtain first-runs. The lower court thought the evidence too imprecise to support the award, but we reversed because the evidence was sufficient to support a "just and reasonable inference" of damage. We explained:

"[Any] other rule would enable [****17] the wrongdoer to profit by his wrongdoing at the expense of his victim. It would be an inducement to make wrongdoing so effective and complete in every case as to preclude any recovery, by rendering the measure of damages uncertain. ***451 Failure to apply it would mean that the more grievous the wrong done, the less likelihood there would be of a recovery." 327 U.S., at 264-265.

Our willingness to accept a degree of uncertainty in these cases rests in part on the difficulty of ascertaining business damages as compared, for example, to damages resulting from a personal injury or from condemnation of a parcel of land. The vagaries of the marketplace usually deny us sure knowledge of what plaintiff's situation would have been in the absence of the defendant's antitrust violation. But our willingness also rests on the principle articulated in cases such as Bigelow, that it does not "come with very good grace" for [*567] the wrongdoer to insist upon specific and certain proof of the injury which it has itself inflicted. Hetzell v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 169 U.S. 26, 39 (1898) (quoting United States Trust Co. v. O'Brien, 143 N. Y. 284, 289, 38 N. E. 266, 267 (1894). [****18] Accord, Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 563 (1931) ("Where the tort itself is of such a nature as to preclude the ascertainment of the amount of damages with certainty, it would be a perversion of fundamental principles of justice to deny all relief to the injured person, and thereby relieve the wrongdoer from making any amend for his [**1930] acts"); Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U.S. 359, 379 (1927).

Applying the foregoing principles to this case is not without difficulty. In the first place, it is a close question whether petitioner's evidence would be sufficient to support a jury award even under our relaxed damages rules. In those cases where we have found sufficient evidence to permit a jury to infer antitrust injury and approximate the amount of damages, the evidence was more substantial than the evidence presented here. In Zenith, for example, plaintiff compared its sales in Canada, where it was subject to a violation, with its sales in the United States, where it was not. And in Bigelow, plaintiff adduced evidence not only comparing its profits with [****19] a competitor not subject to the violation but also comparing its profits during the time of the violation with the period immediately preceding the violation.<sup>5</sup>

---

<sup>5</sup> Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555 (1931), is similarly distinguishable. In upholding a jury verdict against respondents for a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, the Court observed:

"It is true that there was uncertainty as to the extent of damage, but there was none as to the fact of damage; and there is a clear distinction between the measure of proof necessary to establish the fact that petitioner had sustained some damage, and the

I Í FÁMEJÁ I Í LÁFÉAÚEÓDÉFJGHÉEFJHELÁ I ÁSEÓaÉGÁ I GÁEE I FLÁJÍ FÁMEJÉSÓYÓÁ JÁEEFJ

[****20] [*568] But a more fundamental difficulty confronts us in this case. The cases relied upon by petitioner all depend in greater or lesser part on the inequity of a wrongdoer defeating the recovery of damages against him by insisting upon a rigorous standard of [***452] proof. In this case, however, we cannot say with assurance that respondent is a "wrongdoer." Because the court below bypassed the issue of liability and went directly to the issue of damages, we simply do not have the benefit of its views as to whether respondent in fact violated § 2 (a). Absent such a finding, we decline to apply to this case the lenient damages rules of our previous cases. Had the court below found a violation, we could more confidently consider the adequacy of petitioner's evidence.

LEdHN[3] [3]Accordingly, we think the proper course is to remand the case so that the Court of Appeals may pass upon respondent's contention that the evidence adduced at trial was insufficient to support a finding of violation of the Robinson-Patman Act. We do not ordinarily address for the first time in this Court an issue which the Court [****21] of Appeals has not addressed, and we think this would be a poor case in which to depart from that practice. If the court determines on remand that respondent did violate the Act, the court should then consider the sufficiency of petitioner's evidence of injury in light of the cases discussed above. We, of course, intimate no views as to how that issue should be decided. We emphasize that HN6 even if there has been a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, petitioner is not excused from its burden of proving antitrust injury and damages. It is simply that once a violation has been established, that burden is to some extent lightened.

[*569] For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is vacated, and the case is remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: POWELL (In Part)

Dissent

---

JUSTICE POWELL, with whom JUSTICE BRENNAN, JUSTICE MARSHALL, and JUSTICE BLACKMUN join, dissenting in part.

I concur in Part I of the Court's opinion, but simply would affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

The Court of Appeals concluded that petitioner "failed to introduce substantial evidence of injury attributable to [respondent's program], [****22] much less substantial evidence [**1931] of the amount of such injury." 607 F.2d 1133, 1135. In Part II of its opinion, the Court today reviews the evidence, vacates the judgment of the Court of Appeals, and remands the case for a resifting of the evidence and determination of whether respondent violated the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. The Court identifies no error of fact or law in the judgment of the Court of Appeals, but vacates that judgment only because the Court finds it "unclear" whether there is sufficient evidence. I find no basis for this Court undertaking to second-guess the Court of Appeals as to the sufficiency of evidence.

Even if there were some satisfactory reason for us to review the evidence in this relatively uncomplicated case, I think the Court of Appeals was plainly correct in finding petitioner's evidence insufficient to show a competitive injury of the kind that the antitrust laws were enacted to prevent. See Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., measure of proof necessary to enable the jury to fix the amount. The rule which precludes the recovery of uncertain damages applies to such as are not the certain result of the wrong, not to those damages which are definitely attributable to the wrong and only uncertain in respect of their amount. . . ." Id., at 562.

---

"If the damage is certain, the fact that its extent is uncertain does not prevent a recovery." Id., at 566.

In this case, by contrast, the issue is not so much the amount of damages as whether petitioner has in fact been injured by an antitrust violation.

429 U.S. 477, 488-489 (1977). Section 2 (a) [***453] is a prophylactic statute that makes unlawful price discrimination that "may . . . lessen [****23] competition." Thus, a court cannot infer from the fact of a violation that defendant's behavior has caused plaintiff any injury. A plaintiff must show, to recover damages for violation of § 2 (a), that unlawful discrimination in price allowed a favored competitor to draw sales or profits [*570] from him, the unfavored competitor. See Enterprise Industries, Inc. v. Texas Co., 240 F.2d 457, 458 (CA2), cert. denied, 353 U.S. 965 (1957). Petitioner's evidence, which the Court concedes to be "weak," ante, at 565, amounts to nothing more than a showing that its market share declined temporarily 4% in 1972. Petitioner presented no substantial evidence that respondent's incentive program caused its market share to shrink. Indeed, over the 4-year period of the challenged programs its market share increased 1%. Rather, petitioner relied on its president's conclusory testimony, which consisted in major part of hearsay statements from petitioner's automobile salesmen. Hypothetical analysis of the "predicted effects" of respondent's program by an economics professor also was relied upon by petitioner to prove the actual cause of injury. One hardly [****24] would expect this Court to reject a Court of Appeals judgment that evidence as flimsy as this was insufficient to go to the jury.

My concern with the Court's opinion, however, goes beyond its reviewing the evidence. I have understood that in a Robinson-Patman Act case the plaintiff has the burden of proving the fact of antitrust injury by a preponderance of the evidence. See Perkins v. Standard Oil Co., 395 U.S. 642, 648 (1969). Only when this fact has been proved may a court properly be lenient in the evidence it requires to prove the amount of damages. See Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 562 (1931). It is not at all apparent that the Court adequately recognizes this distinction.

It seems to me that today's remand measurably increases the uncertainty inherent in the generalities of the Robinson-Patman Act. Accordingly, I dissent.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 140, 141, 153, 154, 186, 189, 362, 363

12 Federal Procedural Forms L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:61-48:147

18 Am Jur PI [****25] & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade and Unfair Trade Practices, Forms 11-30

15 USCS 13, 15

US L Ed Digest, Appeal and Error 1692.1; Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 36, 67

L Ed Index to Annos, Damages; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Double or Treble Damages; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Double and Treble Damages; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade; Robinson-Patman Act

Annotation References:

Robinson-Patman Act as construed by the Supreme Court. 2 L Ed 2d 1737.

Measure and elements of damages under 15 USCS 15 entitling person injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in federal antitrust laws to recover treble damages. 16 ALR Fed 14.

Measure and elements of damages for violation of Robinson-Patman Act (15 USC 13). 9 ALR Fed 279.

H. A. Artists & Assocs. v. Actors' Equity Ass'n

Supreme Court of the United States

March 23, 1981, Argued ; May 26, 1981, Decided

No. 80-348

Reporter

451 U.S. 704 *; 101 S. Ct. 2102 **; 68 L. Ed. 2d 558 ***; 1981 U.S. LEXIS 104 ****; 49 U.S.L.W. 4557; 91 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P12,742; 1981-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P64,021; 107 L.R.R.M. 2394

H. A. ARTISTS & ASSOCIATES, INC., ET AL. v. ACTORS' EQUITY ASSN. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 622 F.2d 647, affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

Core Terms

---

regulations, franchising, exemption, theatrical, producers, actresses, antitrust, nonlabor, labor dispute, wages, Sherman Act, negotiated, licensed, immune, employment condition, franchise fee, Clayton Act, restrictions, commissions, terms, anti trust law, union member, Norris-LaGuardia Act, self-interest, injunctions, combines, exaction

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Clayton Act

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption > Primacy of Labor Policy

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

IÍ FÁMEÚIÁ Í EÍTÍ Í LÍFÉFAUÉAOÍGÉCÍGÍFÉCLÁ IÍ ÁSÉOÍA Í EGA Á IÍ FÁMEÚIÁ IÍ LÁFJÍ IÍ FÁMEÚEÍSÓYÓUÍFÉ CÁI

HN1 [blue icon] Collectives & Cooperatives, Clayton Act

Section 6 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 17, declares that human labor is not a commodity or article of commerce, and immunizes from antitrust liability labor organizations and their members lawfully carrying out their legitimate objectives. Section 20 of the Clayton Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 52, prohibits injunctions against specified employee activities, such as strikes and boycotts, that are undertaken in the employees' self-interest and that occur in the course of disputes concerning terms or conditions of employment, and states that none of the specified acts can be held to be a violation of any law of the United States.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [] Scope, Exemptions

Labor unions acting in their self-interest and not in combination with nonlabor groups enjoy a statutory exemption from Sherman Act liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

HN3 Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

So long as a union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups, the licit and the illicit under the Clayton Act § 20, 29 U.S.C.S. § 52, are not to be distinguished by any judgment regarding the wisdom or unwisdom, the rightness or wrongness, the selfishness or unselfishness of the end of which the particular union activities are the means.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

No federal injunction may issue over a labor dispute, and the Clayton Act § 20, 29 U.S.C.S. § 52, removes all such allowable conduct from the taint of being a violation of any law of the United States, including the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

HN5 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The statutory exemption does not apply when a union combines with a non-labor group. Accordingly, antitrust immunity is forfeited when a union combines with one or more employers in an effort to restrain trade.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Theatrical union's system of regulating theatrical agents, held, with exception of union's exaction of franchise fees, within statutory labor exemption from Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.)

Summary

A union representing most stage actors and actresses in the United States unilaterally established in 1928 a licensing system for the regulation of theatrical agents. The essential elements of the regulations have remained unchanged, requiring, among other things, that a licensed agent renounce any right to take a commission on an employment contract under which an actor or actress receives so-called "scale" wages. Agents are also required to pay franchise fees to the unions which are deposited in the general treasury and not segregated from other union funds. The union has also entered into collective bargaining agreements with theatrical producers specifying minimum wages and other terms and conditions of employment. Eventually, a group of agents who refused to accept the regulations or apply for franchises brought suit in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York contending that the union's regulation of theatrical agents violated the antitrust provisions of 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 2). The District Court dismissed the complaint, finding that the union's creation and maintenance of the agency franchise system was fully protected by the antitrust exemption for unions and their members arising under 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 17, 29 USCS 52) and 4, 5, and 13 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act (29 USCS 104, 105, 113) (478 F Supp 496). The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed, deciding that the central feature of the union's franchising system--the union's exaction of an agreement by agents not to charge commissions on certain types of work--was immune from antitrust challenge. Furthermore, the Court of Appeals suggested that if the exaction of franchise fees by the union exceeded its expenses in administering the franchise system, the fees could not legally be collected. However, the Court of Appeals concluded that the fees were sufficiently low that a remand on this point would not have served any useful purpose (622 F2d 647).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded. In an opinion by Stewart, J., joined by White, Blackmun, Powell, Rehnquist, and Stevens, JJ., and joined in part (all but holding 2 below) by Burger, Ch. J., and Brennan and Marshall, JJ., it was held that the system of regulation imposed by the union upon the theatrical agents, with the exception of the exaction of franchise fees, came within the statutory labor exemption from the federal antitrust laws available to labor unions acting in their self-interest and not in combination with "nonlabor groups", or in combination with parties to a "labor dispute," since (a) a finding that there was no combination between the union and the theatrical producers to create or maintain the system was amply supported by the record, (b) the agents had to be considered a "labor group" and their controversy with the union a "labor dispute" as defined in 13 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act (29 USCS 113) insofar as the regulations embodied a direct frontal attack upon a problem though to threaten the maintenance of the union's basic wage structure, and (c) the union's regulations are clearly designed to promote the union's self-interest, and (2) the franchise fees levied upon theatrical agents, by the union were not a permissible component of the exempt regulatory system, since (a) the union was able to suggest only in the most general terms that the fees were related to the basic purposes of the regulations and (b) if the union did not impose the franchise fees upon the agents, there was no reason to believe that any of its legitimate interests would be affected given their option of raising members' dues to offset the loss of a general revenue source.

Brennan, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and Marshall, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, expressed the view that the union's exaction of a franchise fee was not incommensurate with its expenses in maintaining a full-time employee to administer the system, and therefore was a permissible component of the exempt regulatory system.

Headnotes

LABOR §137 > PRACTICES §46 > theatrical union -- regulation of theatrical agents -- labor exemption from antitrust laws --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

A system of regulation imposed upon theatrical agents by a union representing stage actors and actresses, under which union members cannot deal with any agents who have not obtained a union "franchise" by agreeing to meet certain prescribed regulations imposing conditions of representation, comes within the statutory labor exemption from the federal antitrust laws, and is accordingly not violative of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.)--such exemption being derived from 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 17, 29 USCS 52) and 4, 5 and 13 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act (29 USCS 104, 105, and 113) and being available to labor unions acting in their self-interest and not in combination with "nonlabor groups" or persons who are not "parties to a labor dispute" within the meaning of the Norris-LaGuardia Act--where (1) a finding that there is no combination between the union and certain theatrical producers with whom the union has entered into collective bargaining agreements to create or maintain the system of regulation is amply supported by the record, (2) the agents must be considered a "labor group" for purposes of the exemption and their controversy with the union a "labor dispute" as defined in the Norris-LaGuardia Act in view of the fact that the regulations embody a direct frontal attack upon a problem thought to threaten the maintenance of the union's basic wage structure, and (3) the union's regulations are clearly designed to promote the union's self-interest.

PRACTICES §46 > theatrical union -- theatrical agents -- franchise fees -- statutory labor exemption from antitrust laws --

> Headnote:

LEdHN[2A] [ ] [2A] LEdHN[2B] [ ] [2B]

Franchise fees levied upon theatrical agents by a union representing stage actors and actresses as a part of a system of licensing which is generally exempt from federal antitrust laws under the statutory labor exemption from those laws derived from 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 17, 29 USCS 52) and 4, 5, and 13 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act (29 USCS 104, 105, and 113) are not a permissible component of the exempt system, where (1) the union is able to suggest only in the most general terms that the fees, which are not segregated in any manner but merely deposited in the union's general fund, are somehow related to the basic purposes of the regulation, and (2) if the union did not impose the franchise fees, there is no reason to believe that any of its legitimate interests would be affected insofar as an increase in members' dues could offset the loss of the fees. (Brennan, J., Burger, Ch. J., and Marshall, J., dissented from this holding.)

LABOR §137 > PRACTICES §46 > federal antitrust laws -- statutory labor exemption -- scope -- > Headnote:

LEdHN [3]  [3]

No federal injunction may issue over a "labor dispute" as defined in 13 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act (29 USCS 113), and 20 of the Clayton Act (29 USCS 52) removes all such allowable conduct from the taint of being a violation of any law of the United States, including the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.); however, the statutory exemption does not apply when a union combines with a "nonlabor group," and therefore antitrust immunity is forfeited when a union combines with one or more employers in an effort to restrain trade, a business monopoly being no less so because the union participates and such participation being a violation of the Sherman Act.

PRACTICES §46 > federal antitrust laws -- statutory labor exemption -- covered parties -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[4A] [↓] [4A] LEdHN[4B] [↓] [4B]

A party seeking refuge in the statutory labor exemption from the federal antitrust laws derived from 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 17, 29 USCS 52) and 4, 5, and 13 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act (29 USCS 104, 105, 113) must be a bona fide labor organization, and not an independent contractor or entrepreneur.

PRACTICES §46 > federal antitrust laws -- statutory labor exemption -- "nonlabor group" -- theatrical producers -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[5A] [  ] [5A] LEdHN[5B] [  ] [5B]

With regard to the statutory labor exemption from the federal antitrust laws which derives from 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 17, 29 USCS 52) and 4, 5, and 13 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act (29 USCS 104, 105, 113) which immunizes labor unions acting in their self-interest and not in combination with "nonlabor groups" from liability under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), theatrical producers who employ members of a union representing stage actors and actresses are plainly a "nonlabor group".

LABOR §137 > PRACTICES §46 > federal antitrust laws -- statutory labor exemption -- combination with "nonlabor group" --

> Headnote:

LEdHN[6] [  ] [6]

With regard to the application to a union of the statutory labor exemption from the federal antitrust laws derived from 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 17, 29 USCS 52) and 4, 5, and 13 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act (29 USCS 104, 105, 113) under which labor unions acting in their self-interest and not in combination with "nonlabor groups", and also not in combination with persons who are not "parties to a labor dispute" within the meaning of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, enjoy exemptions from liability under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), the issue of whether a union which seeks to regulate a particular group is acting in combination with a "nonlabor group" is resolved, in a case where there is no direct wage or job competition between the union and the regulated group, by determining whether there is "some" economic interrelationship affecting legitimate union interests.

Syllabus

Respondent union, which represents most of the stage actors and actresses in the United States, has entered into collective-bargaining agreements with virtually all major theatrical producers throughout the country, fixing minimum (scale) wages and other conditions of employment for those represented by the union. Because of abuses by theatrical agents who, as independent contractors, negotiated employment contracts for actors and actresses with producers, particularly abuses as to the extraction of high commissions tending to undermine collectively bargained rates of compensation, the union in 1928 unilaterally established a licensing system for the regulation of agents, [****2] prohibiting union members from using an agent who has not obtained a license from the union. The essential elements of the licensing system have remained unchanged. To obtain a license, an agent must agree to comply with union regulations which, inter alia, prohibit agent commissions on scale portions of wages received by an actor or an actress from a producer, limit commissions on wages in excess of scale pay, and require payment to the union of franchise fees. Petitioners, agents who refused to obtain union licenses, instituted this action, contending that the union's regulations violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. After trial, the District Court dismissed the complaint, finding that the union's agency franchise system was protected from liability by the antitrust exemptions of unions and their members arising under the Clayton Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Act. The Court of Appeals affirmed, determining that the central feature of the union's franchising system -- the exaction of an agreement by agents as to their commissions -- was immune from antitrust challenge. The court suggested that if the exactions of franchise fees exceeded the union's costs in administering [****3] its license system, they could not legally be collected; but despite the lack of any cost evidence at trial, the court concluded that the fees were sufficiently low that a remand on the point would not serve any useful purpose.

I I FÁMEJÄ ËI ÈEE ËI LÁFÉFÁUÈÖDÉGFÉGÀFGÉGLÀ ËSEÖaÈGAÁ Í ÈEE Í I LÁJÌ FÁMEJÄSÖYQÀFÉ ÈEE

Held:

1. Labor unions acting in their self-interest and not in combination with nonlabor groups enjoy statutory exemption from Sherman Act liability, but the exemption does not apply when a union combines with a "nonlabor group," or persons who are not "parties to a labor dispute" within the meaning of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219. Here, the union's franchising of agents did not involve any combination between the union and any "nonlabor groups." The record amply supports the conclusion that there was no combination between the union and the theatrical producers, and the determination of whether the combination between the union and those agents who agreed to become franchised was a combination with a "nonlabor group" depends on whether there was "job or wage competition or some other economic interrelationship affecting legitimate union interests between the union members and the independent [****4] contractors." Musicians v. Carroll, 391 U.S. 99, 106. Because of the peculiar structure of the legitimate theater industry, where it is customary if not essential for union members to secure employment through agents whose fees are calculated as a percentage of the member's wage -- thus making it impossible for the union to defend even the integrity of the minimum wages it has negotiated with producers without regulation of agency fees -- the union's regulations are within the labor exemption. Agents must, therefore, be considered a "labor group" and their controversy with the union is plainly a "labor dispute" as defined in the Norris-LaGuardia Act. The union's regulations are also clearly designed to promote its legitimate self-interest. Pp. 713-722.
2. However, the union's justification for the franchise fees -- based only on the suggestion in the most general terms that they are related to the basic purposes of its regulations -- is inadequate to warrant the conclusion that the fees are a permissible component of the exempt regulatory system. P. 722.

Counsel: Howard Breindel argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs was Charles Donelan.

[****5] Jerome B. Lurie argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were Sidney E. Cohn, Mary K. O'Melveny, Nan Bases, and Samuel Estreicher.

Laurence Gold argued the cause for the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations as amicus curiae urging affirmance. With him on the brief were J. Albert Woll and George Kaufmann. *

Judges: STEWART, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which WHITE, BLACKMUN, POWELL, REHNQUIST, and STEVENS, JJ., joined, and in all but Part II-D of which BURGER, C. J., and BRENNAN and MARSHALL, JJ.,

---

*David Alter, Joseph Ferraro, Mortimer Becker, Henry Kaiser, Ronald Rosenberg, and Paul P. Selvin filed a brief for the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists et al. as amici curiae urging affirmance.

joined. BRENNAN, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, in which BURGER, C. J., and MARSHALL, J., joined, post, p. 723.

Opinion by: STEWART

Opinion

[*706] [***563] [**2104] JUSTICE STEWART delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A] LEdHN[2A] [↑] [2A] [****6] The respondent Actors' Equity Association (Equity) is a union representing the vast majority of stage actors and actresses in the United States. It enters into collective-bargaining agreements with theatrical producers that specify minimum wages and other terms and conditions of employment for those whom it represents. The petitioners are independent theatrical agents who place actors and actresses in jobs with producers. The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held that the respondents'<sup>1</sup> system of regulation of theatrical agents is immune from antitrust liability by reason of the statutory labor exemption from the antitrust laws, 622 F.2d 647.<sup>2</sup> We granted certiorari to consider the availability of that exemption in the circumstances presented by this case. 449 U.S. 991.

[****7] [**2105] |

Equity is a national union that has represented stage actors and actresses since early in this century. Currently representing approximately 23,000 actors and actresses, it has collective-bargaining agreements with virtually all major theatrical [***564] producers in New York City, on and off Broadway, [*707] and with most other theatrical producers throughout the United States. The terms negotiated with producers are the minimum conditions of employment (called "scale"); an actor or actress is free to negotiate wages or terms more favorable than the collectively bargained minima.

Theatrical agents are independent contractors who negotiate contracts and solicit employment for their clients. The agents do not participate in the negotiation of collective-bargaining agreements between Equity and the theatrical producers. If an agent succeeds in obtaining employment for a client, he receives a commission based on a percentage of the client's earnings. Agents who operate in New York City must be licensed as employment agencies and are regulated by the New York City Department of Consumer Affairs pursuant to New York law, which provides that the maximum commission [****8] a theatrical agent may charge his client is 10% of the client's compensation.

In 1928, concerned with the high unemployment rates in the legitimate theater and the vulnerability of actors and actresses to abuses by theatrical agents,<sup>3</sup> including the extraction of high commissions that tended to undermine collectively bargained rates of compensation, Equity unilaterally established a licensing system for the regulation of agents. The regulations permitted Equity members to deal only with those agents who obtained Equity licenses and thereby agreed to meet the conditions of representation prescribed by Equity. Those members who dealt with nonlicensed agents were subject to union discipline.

<sup>1</sup> The respondent Donald Grody is the executive secretary of Equity.

<sup>2</sup> The basic sources of organized labor's exemption from federal antitrust laws are §§ 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731 and 738, 15 U. S. C. § 17 and 29 U. S. C. § 52, and §§ 4, 5, and 13 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 47 Stat. 70, 71, and 73, 29 U. S. C. §§ 104, 105, and 113.

<sup>3</sup> Such vulnerability was, and still remains, particularly acute for actors and actresses without established professional reputations, who have always constituted the overwhelming majority of Equity's members.

I Í FÁMEJÀ É ËTÉ É LÁFÉFÁUÉDÉGÉGÁÉGÉL Á LÀ I ÁSEÓaÉGáÁ I ËTÉ I I LÁFJÌ FÁMEJÉSÓYQÁÉ ËTÉ

The system established by the Equity regulations was immediately challenged.<sup>4</sup> In Edelstein v. Gillmore, 35 F.2d 723, [****9] [*708] the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit concluded that the regulations were a lawful effort to improve the employment conditions of Equity members. In an opinion written by Judge Swan and joined by Judge Augustus N. Hand,<sup>5</sup> the court said:

"The evils of unregulated employment agencies (using this term broadly to include also the personal representative) are set forth in the defendants' affidavits and are corroborated by common knowledge. . . . Hence the requirement that, as a condition to writing new business with Equity's members, old contracts with its members must be made to conform to the new standards, does not seem to us to justify an inference that the primary purpose of the requirement is infliction of injury upon plaintiff, and other personal representatives in a similar situation, rather than the protection of the supposed interests of Equity's members. The terms they insist upon are calculated to secure [***565] from personal representatives better and more impartial service, at uniform and cheaper rates, and to improve conditions of employment of actors by theater managers. Undoubtedly the defendants intend to compel the plaintiff [****10] to give up rights under existing contracts which do not conform to the new standards set up by Equity, but, as already indicated, their motive in so doing is to benefit themselves and their fellow actors in the economic struggle. The financial loss to plaintiff is incidental [**2106] to this purpose." Id., at 726 (emphasis added).<sup>6</sup>

[***11] [*709] The essential elements of Equity's regulation of theatrical agents have remained unchanged since 1928.<sup>7</sup> [***13] A member of Equity is prohibited, on pain of union discipline, from using an agent who has not, through the mechanism of obtaining an Equity license (called a "franchise"), agreed to comply with the regulations. The most important of the regulations requires that a licensed agent must renounce any right to take a commission on an employment contract under which an actor or actress receives scale wages.<sup>8</sup> To the extent a contract includes provisions under which an actor or actress will sometimes receive scale pay -- for rehearsals or "chorus" [*710] employment, for example -- and sometimes more, the regulations deny the agent any commission on the scale portions of the contract. Licensed agents are also precluded from taking commissions on out-of-town expense money paid to their clients. Moreover, commissions are limited on wages within [***566] 10% of scale pay,<sup>9</sup> [***14] and an agent must allow his client to terminate a representation contract if the agent is not

<sup>4</sup> The challenge was grounded on allegations of common-law tortious interference with business relationships.

<sup>5</sup> Judge Manton dissented without opinion.

<sup>6</sup> For contemporary descriptions of agent abuses of actors and actresses, see generally A. Harding, The Revolt of the Actors (1929). See also New Rules for Actors, N. Y. Times, Sept. 24, 1928, p. 20, col. 3; The New Republic, Oct. 24, 1928, p. 263. Cf. Ribnik v. McBride, 277 U.S. 350, 359-375 (Stone, J., joined by Holmes and Brandeis, JJ., dissenting) (general abuses by employment agencies, particularly at times of widespread unemployment). The Court's decision in Ribnik v. McBride was overruled unanimously in Olsen v. Nebraska, 313 U.S. 236.

<sup>7</sup> The petitioners do not dispute this. The regulations have undergone revision in some details, largely as a result of negotiations between Equity and Theatrical Artists Representatives Associates (TARA), which until shortly before this litigation began was the only association voicing the concerns of agents with regard to their representation of Equity members. Until their voluntary resignation in late 1977, most of the petitioners were members of TARA. The petitioners are now members of the National Association of Talent Representatives (NATR). Unlike TARA, which functions only in the legitimate theater field, NATR also functions in the fields of motion pictures and television. In those fields, agents operate under closely analogous agent regulations maintained by the Screen Actors' Guild and the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists.

The history of the negotiations and disputes between Equity and TARA are described in the opinion of the District Court in the present case. 478 F.Supp. 496, 498 (SDNY).

<sup>8</sup> The minimum, or "scale," wage varies. In August 1977, for example, the minimum weekly salary was $ 335 for Broadway performances, and $ 175 for performances off Broadway. Scale wages are set by a collective-bargaining agreement between Equity and the producers, to which the agents are not parties. When an agent represents an actor or actress whose professional reputation is not sufficient to demand a salary higher than scale, the agent hopes to develop a relationship that will become continually more remunerative as the performer's professional reputation grows, and with it the power to demand an ever higher salary. No agent is required to represent an actor or actress whom he does not wish to represent.

I Í FÁNEJÀ ËI ÈÈ FELÁFÁUÒGÉGÉGÉ ËI LÀ Í ÆSOÀÉGA Á Í ÈÈ Í LAFJÌ FÁNEJESÓYÓUÀFÈ ÈÈÈFI

successful in procuring employment within a specified period.<sup>10</sup> Finally, agents are required to [****12] pay franchise fees to Equity. The fee is $ 200 for the initial franchise, $ 60 a year thereafter for each agent, and $ 40 for any subagent working in the office of another. These fees are deposited by Equity in its general treasury and are not segregated from other union funds.

[**2107] In 1977, after a dispute between Equity and Theatrical Artists Representatives Associates (TARA) -- a trade association representing theatrical agents, see n. 7, supra -- a group of agents, including the petitioners, resigned from TARA because of TARA's decision to abide by Equity's regulations. These agents also informed Equity that they would not accept Equity's regulations, or apply for franchises. The petitioners instituted this lawsuit in May 1978, contending that Equity's regulations of theatrical agents violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1 and 2.

[*711] B

The District Court found, after a bench trial, that Equity's creation [****15] and maintenance of the agency franchise system were fully protected by the statutory labor exemptions from the antitrust laws, and accordingly dismissed the petitioners' complaint. 478 F.Supp. 496 (SDNY). Among its factual conclusions, the trial court found that in the theatrical industry, agents play a critical role in securing employment for actors and actresses:

"As a matter of general industry practice, producers seek actors and actresses for their productions through agents. Testimony in this case convincingly established that an actor without an agent does not have the same access to producers or the same opportunity to be seriously considered for a part as does an actor who has an agent. Even principal interviews, in which producers are required to interview all actors who want to be considered for principal roles, do not eliminate the need for an agent, who may have a greater chance of gaining an audition for his client.

....

"Testimony confirmed that agents play an integral role in the industry; without an agent, an actor would have significantly lesser chances of gaining employment." Id., at 497, 502.

[**567] The court [****16] also found "no evidence to suggest the existence of any conspiracy or illegal combination between Actors' Equity and TARA or between Actors' Equity and producers," and concluded that "[the] Actors Equity franchising system was employed by Actors' Equity for the purpose of protecting the wages and working conditions of its members." Id., at 499.

The Court of Appeals unanimously affirmed the judgment of the District Court. It determined that the threshold issue was, under United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 232, whether Equity's franchising system involved any combination [*712] between Equity and any "non-labor groups" or persons who are not "parties to a labor dispute." 622 F.2d, at 648-649. If it did, the court reasoned, the protection of the statutory labor exemption would not apply.

First, the Court of Appeals held that the District Court had not been clearly erroneous in finding no agreement, explicit or tacit, between Equity and the producers to establish or police the franchising system. Ibid. Next, the court

<sup>9</sup> It is Equity's view that commissions in the industry are not necessarily related to efforts by the agents, and that an agent often functions as little more than an "order taker," who is able to collect a percentage of a client's wages for the duration of a show for doing little more than answering a producer's telephone call. Indeed, an agent may collect a commission on the salary of an actor or actress he represents even if the client obtains the job without the agent.

<sup>10</sup> Equity argues that this restriction is necessary because there is an incentive for agents to represent as many actors and actresses as possible -- and not necessarily to serve them all well -- because an agent receives a commission whenever his client is employed at a salary higher than scale, regardless of the extent of his involvement in obtaining employment for the client.

I I FÁNEJÁ Í ÍÍ FOLÆF ÁU ÓA GÆGÆF Í LÀ Í ÆSEØA ÆGA Á Í ÍÍ LAFJÍ FÁNEJÆSÓYQÆF Í ÍÍÍÍ

turned to the relationship between the union and those agents who had agreed to become franchised, [****17] in order to determine whether those agreements would divest Equity's system of agency regulation of the statutory exemption. Relying on Musicians v. Carroll, 391 U.S. 99, the court concluded that the agents were themselves a "labor group," because of their substantial "economic inter-relationship" with Equity, under which "the union [could] not eliminate wage competition among its members without regulation of the fees of the agents." 622 F.2d, at 650, 651. Accordingly, since the elimination of wage competition is plainly within the area of a union's legitimate self-interest, the court concluded that the exemption was applicable.<sup>11</sup> [****18] [**2108] After deciding that the central feature of Equity's franchising system -- the union's exaction of an agreement by agents not to charge commissions on certain types of work -- was immune from antitrust challenge, the Court of Appeals turned to the petitioners' challenge of the franchise fees exacted from agents. Equity had argued that the fees were necessary to meet its expenses in administering the franchise system, but no evidence was presented at trial to show that the costs justified the fees actually levied. The Court of Appeals suggested that if the exactions exceeded the true [*713] costs, they could not legally be collected, as such exactions would be unconnected with any of the goals of national labor policy that justify the labor antitrust exemption. Despite the lack of any cost evidence at trial, however, the appellate court reasoned that the fees were sufficiently low that a remand to the District Court on this point "would not serve any useful purpose." Id., at 651.

[***568] II

A

Labor unions are lawful combinations that serve the collective interests of workers, but they also possess the power to control the character of competition [****19] in an industry. Accordingly, there is an inherent tension between national antitrust policy, which seeks to maximize competition, and national labor policy, which encourages cooperation among workers to improve the conditions of employment.<sup>12</sup> [****20] In the years immediately following passage of the Sherman Act, courts enjoined strikes as unlawful restraints of trade when a union's conduct or objectives were deemed "socially or economically harmful." Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 485 (Brandeis, J., dissenting).<sup>13</sup> In response to these practices, Congress acted, first in the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, and later in the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 47 Stat. 70, to immunize labor unions and labor disputes from challenge under the Sherman Act.

Section 6 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 17, HN1<sup>14</sup> declares that human labor "is not a commodity or article of commerce," and immunizes from antitrust liability labor organizations [*714] and their members "lawfully carrying out" their "legitimate [objectives]." Section 20 of the Act prohibits injunctions against specified employee activities, such as strikes and boycotts, that are undertaken in the employees' self-interest and that occur in the course of disputes "concerning terms or conditions of employment," and states that none of the specified acts can be "held to be [a] [violation] of any law of the United States." 29 U. S. C. § 52. This protection is re-emphasized and expanded in the Norris-LaGuardia Act, which prohibits federal-court injunctions against single or organized employees engaged in enumerated activities,<sup>14</sup> and specifically forbids such injunctions notwithstanding the claim of an <sup>11</sup> The Court of Appeals recognized that even if there had been an agreement between Equity and a "non-labor group," the agreement might still have been protected from the antitrust laws under the "non-statutory" exemption. 622 F.2d, at 649, n. 1. See Connell Construction Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters, 421 U.S. 616, 622. See n. 19, infra.

<sup>12</sup> See generally Meltzer, Labor Unions, Collective Bargaining, and the Antitrust Laws, 32 U. Chi. L. Rev. 659 (1965); Winter, Collective Bargaining and Competition: The Application of Antitrust Standards to Union Activities, 73 Yale L. J. 14 (1963). See also Leslie, Principles of Labor Antitrust, 66 Va. L. Rev. 1183 (1980).

<sup>13</sup> See Winter, supra n. 12, at 30-38.

<sup>14</sup> As is true under the Clayton Act, the specified activities are protected only in the context of a labor dispute. The Norris-LaGuardia Act defines a labor dispute to include "any controversy concerning terms or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or unlawful [****21] combination or conspiracy. While the Norris-LaGuardia Act's bar of federal-court labor injunctions is not explicitly phrased as an exemption from the antitrust laws, it has been interpreted broadly as a statement of congressional policy that the courts must not use the antitrust [**2109] laws as a vehicle to interfere in labor disputes.<sup>15</sup>

[****22] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]In [***569] *United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219*, the Court held that HN2 labor unions acting in their self-interest and not in combination with nonlabor groups enjoy a statutory exemption from Sherman Act liability. After describing the [*715] congressional responses to judicial interference in union activity, id., at 229-230, the Court declared that

HN3 [↑] "[so] long as a union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups, the licit and the illicit under § 20 [of the Clayton Act] are not to be distinguished by any judgment regarding the wisdom or unwisdom, the rightness or wrongness, the selfishness or unselfishness of the end of which the particular union activities are the means." Id., at 232 (footnote omitted).

The Court explained that this exemption derives not only from the Clayton Act, but also from the Norris-LaGuardia [****23] Act, particularly its definition of a "labor dispute," see n. 14, supra, in which Congress "reasserted the original purpose of the Clayton Act by infusing into it the immunized trade union activities as redefined by the later Act." 312 U.S., at 236. Thus under Hutchesson, HN4[] no federal injunction may issue over a "labor dispute," and "§ 20 [of the Clayton Act] removes all such allowable conduct from the taint of being a 'violation of any law of the United States,' including the Sherman [Act]." Ibid.<sup>16</sup>

[****24] HN5↑ The statutory exemption does not apply when a union combines with a "non-labor group." Hutcheson, supra, at 232. Accordingly, antitrust immunity is forfeited when a union combines with one or more employers in an effort to restrain trade. In Allen Bradley Co. v. Electrical Workers, 325 U.S. 797, for example, the Court held that a union had violated the Sherman Act when it combined with manufacturers and contractors to erect a sheltered local business market in [*716] order "to bar all other business men from [the market], and to charge the public prices above a competitive level." Id., at 809.<sup>17</sup> [****25] The Court indicated that the union efforts would, standing alone, be exempt from antitrust liability, ibid., but because the union had not acted unilaterally, the conditions of employment, regardless of whether or not the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee." 29 U. S. C. § 113\(c\).

<sup>15</sup> In Milk Wagon Drivers v. Lake Valley Farm Products, Inc., 311 U.S. 91, 103, the Court stated: "For us to hold, in the face of [the Norris-LaGuardia Act], that the federal courts have jurisdiction to grant injunctions in cases growing out of labor disputes, merely because alleged violations of the Sherman Act are involved, would run counter to the plain mandate of the Act and would reverse the declared purpose of Congress."

<sup>16</sup> See also Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469. There, in the Term preceding that in which the Hutcheson case was decided, the Court reasoned that the Sherman Act prohibits only restraints on "commercial competition," 310 U.S., at 497, 499, 510-511 -- or those market restraints designed to monopolize supply, control prices, or allocate product distribution -- and that unions are not liable where they merely further their own goals in the labor market.

<sup>17</sup> In Hunt v. Crumboch, 325 U.S. 821, decided the same day as Allen Bradley, the Court ruled that the labor exemption protected a union's boycott of a truck hauler through successful secondary pressure on purchasers of the hauler's services with whom the union had contracts, because of the absence of union participation in a conspiracy with the hauler's competitors. See 325 U.S., at 824; Meltzer, supra n. 12, at 677, and n. 74.

exemption was denied.<sup>18</sup> Congress "intended to outlaw business monopolies. A business [***570] monopoly is no less such because a union participates, and such participation is a violation of the Act." Id. at 811.<sup>19</sup>

[****26] [*717] [**2110] B

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B] [LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [↑] [4A] [LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [↑] [5A] The Court of Appeals properly recognized that the threshold issue was to determine whether or not Equity's franchising of agents involved any combination between Equity and any "non-labor groups," or persons who are not "parties to a labor dispute." 622 F.2d, at 649 (quoting Hutcheson, 312 U.S., at 232).<sup>20</sup> And the court's conclusion that the trial court had not been clearly erroneous in its finding that there was no combination between Equity and the theatrical producers<sup>21</sup> to create or maintain the franchise system is amply supported by the record.

The more difficult problem is whether the combination between Equity and the agents who agreed to become franchised was a combination with a "nonlabor group." The answer to this question is best understood in light of Musicians v. Carroll, 391 U.S. 99. There, four orchestra leaders, members of the American Federation of Musicians, brought an action based on the Sherman Act challenging the union's unilateral system of regulating "club dates," or one-time musical engagements. These regulations, inter alia, enforced a [***718] closed shop; required orchestra leaders to engage a [***571] minimum number [***28] of "sidemen," or instrumentalists; prescribed minimum <sup>18</sup> Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, also dealt with a union combination with employers, but the grounds of decision were unrelated to the antitrust exemption.

<sup>19</sup> Even where there are union agreements with nonlabor groups that may have the effect of sheltering the nonlabor groups from competition in product markets, the Court has recognized a "nonstatutory" exemption to shield such agreements if they are intimately related to the union's vital concerns of wages, hours, and working conditions. See, e. g., Meat Cutters v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676. This nonstatutory exemption was described as follows in Connell Construction Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters, 421 U.S., at 622:

"The Court has recognized . . . that a proper accommodation between the congressional policy favoring collective bargaining under the NLRA and the congressional policy favoring free competition in business markets requires that some union-employer agreements be accorded a limited nonstatutory exemption from antitrust sanctions. . . .

"The nonstatutory exemption has its source in the strong labor policy favoring the association of employees to eliminate competition over wages and working conditions. Union success in organizing workers and standardizing wages ultimately will affect price competition among employers, but the goals of federal labor law never could be achieved if this effect on business competition were held a violation of the antitrust laws. The Court therefore has acknowledged that labor policy requires tolerance for the lessening of business competition based on differences in wages and working conditions."

Neither the District Court nor the Court of Appeals in this case decided whether the nonstatutory exemption would independently shield the respondents from the petitioners' antitrust claims. See n. 11, supra.

20  [4B]

Of course, a party seeking refuge in the statutory exemption must be a bona fide labor organization, and not an independent contractor or entrepreneur. See Meat Drivers v. United States, 371 U.S. 94; Columbia River Packers Assn. v. Clinton, 315 U.S. 143. See generally 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law § 229c, pp. 195-198 (1978). There is no dispute about Equity's status as a bona fide labor organization.

21 [****27] LEdHN[5B] [↑] [5B]

As the employers of Equity's members, producers are plainly a "nonlabor group." Employers almost always will be a "nonlabor group," although an exception has been recognized, for example, when the employer himself is in job competition with his employees. See Musicians v. Carroll, 391 U.S. 99 (orchestra leaders who both lead an orchestra and play an instrument).

I Í FÁNEJÁ Í ÉÉ FÍ LÁFÉAUÉG ÓÉGÉGGFFELÁ Í ÅÉOÅÉGA Á Í ÉÉI Í FLÁJÍ FÁNEJÉSÓYÓUÁ Í ÉÉHÉG

prices for local engagements;<sup>22</sup> prescribed higher minimum prices for traveling orchestras; and permitted leaders to deal only with booking agents licensed by the union.

Without disturbing the finding of the Court of Appeals that the orchestra leaders were employers and independent contractors, the Court concluded that they were nonetheless a "labor group" and parties to a "labor dispute" within the meaning of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, and thus that their involvement in the union regulatory scheme was not an unlawful combination between [***29] "labor" and "nonlabor" groups. The Court [**2111] agreed with the trial court that the applicable test was whether there was "job or wage competition or some other economic interrelationship affecting legitimate union interests between the union members and the independent contractors." Id., at 106.

The Court also upheld the restrictions on booking agents, who were not involved in job or wage competition with union members. Accordingly, these restrictions had to meet the "other economic interrelationship" branch of the disjunctive test quoted above. And the test was met because those restrictions were "'at least as intimately bound up with the subject of wages' . . . as the price floors." Id., at 113 (quoting Teamsters v. Oliver, 362 U.S. 605, 606). The Court noted that the booking agent restrictions had been adopted, in part, because agents had "charged exorbitant fees, and booked engagements for musicians at wages . . . below union scale."<sup>23</sup>

[***30] [*719] C

The restrictions challenged by the petitioners in this case are very similar to the agent restrictions upheld in the Carroll case.<sup>24</sup> [***31] The essential [***572] features of the regulatory scheme are identical: members are permitted to deal only with agents who have agreed (1) to honor their fiduciary obligations by avoiding conflicts of interest, (2) not to charge excessive commissions, and (3) not to book members for jobs paying less than the union minimum.<sup>25</sup> And as in Carroll, Equity's [*720] regulation of agents developed in response to abuses by <sup>22</sup> These consisted of a minimum scale for sidemen, a "leader's fee," which was twice the sidemen's scale in orchestras of at least four, and an additional 8% for social security, unemployment insurance, and other expenses. In addition, if a leader did not appear but designated a subleader, and four or more musicians performed, the leader was required to pay from his leader's fee 1.5 times the sidemen's scale to the subleader.

<sup>23</sup> The Court did not explicitly determine whether the second prong of the Hutcheson test for the statutory exemption had been met, i. e., whether the union had acted in its "self-interest." But given its various findings that the challenged restrictions were designed to cope with job competition and to protect wage scales and working conditions, 391 U.S., at 108, 109, 110, 113, it clearly did so sub silentio.

<sup>24</sup> Several cases before Carroll also upheld union regulation of the practices of independent entrepreneurs affecting the wages or working conditions of union members. See Milk Wagon Drivers v. Lake Valley Farm Products, Inc., 311 U.S. 91; Teamsters v. Oliver, 358 U.S. 283 (Oliver I); Teamsters v. Oliver, 362 U.S. 605 (Oliver II). In Milk Wagon Drivers, the Court held that the union had engaged in a "labor dispute" within the meaning of the Norris-LaGuardia Act when it attempted to organize independent "vendors" who supplied milk to retail stores. There the union feared that the "vendor system" was designed to escape the payment of union wages and the assumption of union-imposed working conditions. In Oliver I, the Milk Wagon Drivers decision was invoked to protect from state antitrust challenge a union's successful efforts to prescribe through collective-bargaining agreements a wage scale for truck-drivers, and minimum rental fees for drivers who owned their own trucks. The union feared that driver-owners, whose fees included not only an entrepreneurial component but also a "wage" for the labor of driving, might undercut the union scale by charging a fee that effectively included a subscale wage component. The Court stated that "[the] regulations [embodied] . . . a direct frontal attack upon a problem thought to threaten the maintenance of the basic wage structure established by the collective bargaining contract." 358 U.S., at 294. See also Oliver II, supra, at 606 (after remand to the state court).

<sup>25</sup> Indeed, the District Court in Carroll, whose judgment was affirmed by this Court "in its entirety," 391 U.S., at 114, drew parallels with the restrictions at issue in the present case. The court noted that "[apparently], similar abuses by booking agents existed in other fields too. Edelstein v. Gillmore, 35 F.2d 723, 726 (2d Cir. 1929) (actors)." Carroll v. AFM, 241 F.Supp. 865, 892 (SDNY).

I Í FÁNEJÁ Í EÍ GELÁ FÁNEJÁ ÓGEGEÍGFFFLÁ Í ÆSÓaÉGA Á Í EÍ GÁJÍ FÁNEJESÓYÓUÍF EÍ EÍH

employment agents who occupy a critical role in the relevant labor market.<sup>26</sup> The agent stands [**2112] directly between union members and jobs, and is in a powerful position to evade the union's negotiated wage structure.

[****32] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]The peculiar structure of the legitimate theater industry, where work is intermittent, where it is customary if not essential for union members to secure employment through agents, and where agents' fees are calculated as a percentage of a member's wage, makes it impossible for the union to defend even the integrity of the minimum wages it has negotiated without regulation of agency fees.<sup>27</sup> The regulations are "brought within the labor exemption [because they are] necessary to assure that scale wages will be paid . . . ." Carroll, 391 U.S., at 112. They "embody . . . a direct frontal attack upon a problem thought to threaten the maintenance of the basic wage structure." Teamsters v. Oliver, 358 U.S. 283, 294. [*721] Agents must, therefore, be considered a "labor group," and their controversy with Equity is plainly a "labor dispute" as defined in the Norris-LaGuardia Act: "representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment, regardless of whether or not the disputants stand [***573] [****33] in the proximate relation of employer and employee." 29 U. S. C. § 113\(c\).

Agents perform a function -- the representation of union members in the sale of their labor -- that in most nonentertainment industries is performed exclusively by unions. In effect, Equity's franchise system operates as a substitute for maintaining a hiring hall as the representative of its members seeking employment.<sup>28</sup>

[****34] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]Finally, Equity's regulations are clearly designed to promote the union's legitimate self-interest. Hutcheson, 312 U.S., at 232. In a case such as this, where there is no direct wage or job competition between the union and the group it regulates, the Carroll formulation to determine the [*722] presence of a nonlabor group -- whether there is "some . . . economic interrelationship affecting legitimate union interests . . . ,"391 U.S., at 106 (quoting District Court opinion) -- necessarily resolves this issue.

D

[LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]The question remains whether the fees that Equity levies upon the agents who apply for franchises are a permissible component of the exempt regulatory system. We have concluded that Equity's

---

The petitioners argue that theatrical agents are indistinguishable from "numerous [other] groups of persons who merely supply products and services to union members" such as landlords, grocers, accountants, and lawyers. But it is clear that agents differ from these groups in two critical respects: the agents control access to jobs and negotiation of the terms of employment. For the actor or actress, therefore, agent commissions are not merely a discretionary expenditure of disposable income, but a virtually inevitable concomitant of obtaining employment.

<sup>26</sup> See Carroll v. AFM, 241 F.Supp., at 881-882; Harding, supra n. 6, at 319-325.

<sup>27</sup> The Court of Appeals found that "the union cannot eliminate wage competition among its members without regulation of the fees of the agents." 622 F.2d, at 651 (emphasis added). Wage competition is prevented not only by the rule precluding commissions on scale jobs. Actors and actresses could also compete over the percentage of their wages they were willing to cede to an agent, subject only to the restrictions imposed by state law.

<sup>28</sup> In many industries, unions maintain hiring halls and other job referral systems, particularly where work is typically temporary and performed on separate project sites rather than fixed locations. By maintaining halls, unions attempt to eliminate abuses such as kickbacks, and to insure fairness and regularity in the system of access to employment. In a 1947 Senate Report, Senator Taft explained: "The employer should be able to make a contract with the union as an employment agency. The union frequently is the best employment agency. The employer should be able to give notice of vacancies, and in the normal course of events to accept men sent to him by the hiring hall." S. Rep. No. 1827, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., 13 (1947), quoted in Teamsters v. NLRB, 365 U.S. 667, 673-674.

The National Labor Relations Board and the courts have ruled that union demands for hiring halls are a mandatory subject of collective bargaining, and that strikes to obtain such provisions are protected activity. See, e. g., Houston Chapter, Associated General Contractors, 143 N. L. R. B. 409, enf'd, 349 F.2d 449 (CA5); NLRB v. Tom Joyce Floors, Inc., 353 F.2d 768, 771 (CA9). Cf. Teamsters v. NLRB, supra, at 672-673, 676.

I I FÁNEJÁ Í EÍ GÁLÉFÁU ÓA DÉGÉGGGLÁ Í ÁSEÓaÉGA Á Í EÍ HÁFJÍ FÁNEJESÓYÓU Í EÍ EÍH

justification for these fees is inadequate. Conceding that Carroll did not sanction union extraction of franchise fees from agents,<sup>29</sup> [**2113] Equity suggests, only in the most general terms, that the fees are somehow related to the basic purposes of its regulations: elimination [****35] of wage competition, upholding of the union wage scale, and promotion of fair access to jobs. But even assuming that the fees no more than cover the costs of administering the regulatory system, this is simply another way of saying that without the fees, the union's regulatory efforts would not be subsidized -- and that the dues of Equity's members would perhaps have to be increased to offset the loss of a general revenue source.<sup>30</sup> If Equity did not impose these franchise fees upon the agents, there is no reason to believe that any of its legitimate interests [***574] would be affected.<sup>31</sup>

[***36] [*723] III

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the case is remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: BRENNAN (In Part)

Dissent by: BRENNAN (In Part)

Dissent

---

JUSTICE BRENNAN, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE and JUSTICE MARSHALL join, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I join all but Part II-D of the Court's opinion. That part holds that respondents' exaction of a franchise fee is not a "permissible component of the exempt regulatory system." Ante, at 722. Rather, I agree with the Court of Appeals that the approximately $ 12,000 collected annually in fees is not "incommensurate with Equity's expenses in maintaining a full-time employee to administer the system," 622 F.2d 647, 651 \(CA2 1980\), and thus is not "unconnected with any of the goals of national labor policy which justify the antitrust exemption for labor," ibid.

The Court justifies its conclusion by suggesting that, since the union could increase its dues to offset the revenue lost from invalidation of the fee system, "there is no reason to believe that any of [the union's] legitimate [***37] interests would be affected," if the fee system were found to violate the antitrust laws. Ante, at 722. The union could of course raise its dues, but the issue here is whether the conceded antitrust immunity of the franchising system includes the franchise fee.

I find somewhat incongruous the Court's conclusion that an incident of the overall system constitutes impermissible regulation, but that agents in general may be significantly [*724] regulated because they are not a "nonlabor

---

<sup>29</sup> See Carroll, 241 F.Supp., at 881. We have, in fact, found no case holding that a union may extract such fees from independent agents who represent union members.

<sup>30</sup> As already indicated, the franchise fees are not segregated in any manner but merely deposited in the union's general fund.

<sup>31</sup> The respondents offer union hiring hall fees as an analogy in support of Equity's collection of franchise fees. In that context, the respondents argue, without citation, that a union may impose reasonable fees upon employers to meet the costs of maintaining a union-run hiring hall. But even if the respondents' statement of labor law is correct, the analogy would not be persuasive. Assuming that hiring hall fees are so imposed, the fees are borne by parties who directly benefit from the employment services of the hiring halls and are collected by the entities that provide them. That is not true in the present case.

The view expressed in the separate opinion filed today as to who are the beneficiaries of the franchising system will undoubtedly surprise the agents who brought this lawsuit. Post, at 724.

I I FÁNEJÀ Í E Í G LÁFÉAÚÓ Ó Ó FÉGÉGGFFHÀ Í ÆSÓaÉGA Á Í Í E Í I LÁFJÌ FÁNEJESÓYÓUÍE Í E Í E Í H

group." This incongruity is highlighted by the similarity between union hiring halls and the franchising system, a similarity which the Court itself acknowledges: "Equity's franchise system operates as a substitute for maintaining a hiring hall as the representative of its members seeking employment." Ante, at 721. The Court disregards this similarity in concluding that the franchising system does not "directly benefit" the agents who are required to pay the fees. Ante, at 722, n. 31. It reaches this conclusion by incorrectly assuming that the only parties who directly benefit from the hiring hall and the franchising system [***575] are employers and employees and producers and [***38] actors, as the case may be. But surely the agents also benefit from the franchising system, which provides an orderly and protective [**2114] mechanism for pairing actors who seek jobs with producers who seek actors. The system is thus the means by which the agents ultimately receive their commissions; it is as much the source of their livelihood as it is that of the actors.

Because the fee is an incident of a legitimate scheme of regulation and because it is commensurate in amount with the purpose for which it is sought, I would also affirm this holding of the Court of Appeals.

References

---

48 Am Jur 2d, Labor and Labor Relations 425 et seq.

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1 et seq., 17; 29 USCS 52, 104, 105, 113

FRES, Regulation of Labor Unions 20:1-20:3, 20:11

US L Ed Digest, Labor 137; Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 46

L Ed Index to Annos, Labor and Employment; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Labor and Labor Unions; Norris-LaGuardia Act; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal [****39] Quick Index, Labor and Employment; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Propriety and scope of injunctive relief in federal antitrust case. 55 L Ed 2d 892.

Applicability of federal antitrust laws as affected by other federal statutes or by Federal Constitution . 45 L Ed 2d 841.

Union activities violating the federal antitrust laws. 9 L Ed 2d 998, 20 L Ed 2d 1528.

Tex. Indus. v. Radcliff Materials

Supreme Court of the United States

March 3, 1981, Argued ; May 26, 1981, Decided

No. 79-1144

Reporter

451 U.S. 630 *; 101 S. Ct. 2061 **; 68 L. Ed. 2d 500 ***; 1981 U.S. LEXIS 26 ****; 49 U.S.L.W. 4537; 1981-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P64,020; 1980-81 Trade Cas. (CCH) P64,020

TEXAS INDUSTRIES, INC. v. RADCLIFF MATERIALS, INC., ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 604 F.2d 897, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

courts, right to contribution, damages, anti trust law, federal common law, common-law, antitrust, Sherman Act, violations, federal court, co-conspirators, conspiracy, wrongdoers, amici, common law, treble-damages, formulate, parties, legislative history, Clayton Act, tortfeasors, concrete, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Torts > ... > Multiple Defendants > Contribution > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

HN1[] Private Actions, Remedies

A right to contribution may arise in either of two ways: first, through the affirmative creation of a right of action by Congress, either expressly or by clear implication; or, second, through the power of federal courts to fashion a federal common law of contribution.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

451 U.S. 630, *630; 101 S. Ct. 2061, **2061; 68 L. Ed. 2d 500, ***500; 1981 U.S. LEXIS 26, ****1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN2 Remedies, Damages

The very idea of treble damages available under the Clayton Act reveals an intent to punish past, and to deter future, unlawful conduct, not to ameliorate the liability of wrongdoers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Torts > ... > Multiple Defendants > Contribution > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

HN3 Private Actions, Remedies

Congress neither expressly nor implicitly intended to create a right to contribution. If any right to contribution exists, its source must be federal common law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Common Law

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

HN4 Federal & State Interrelationships, Federal Common Law

There is no federal general common law. Nevertheless, the Court has recognized the need and authority in some limited areas to formulate what has come to be known as "federal common law." These instances are "few and restricted," and fall into essentially two categories: those in which a federal rule of decision is necessary to protect uniquely federal interests, and those in which Congress has given the courts the power to develop substantive law.

Governments > Courts > Common Law

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

International Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

HN5 Courts, Common Law

Absent some congressional authorization to formulate substantive rules of decision, federal common law exists only in such narrow areas as those concerned with the rights and obligations of the United States, interstate and international disputes implicating the conflicting rights of States or our relations with foreign nations, and admiralty cases.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Torts > ... > Multiple Defendants > Contribution > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

HN6 Federal & State Interrelationships, Federal Common Law

Contribution does not implicate "uniquely federal interests" of the kind that oblige courts to formulate federal common law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Neither the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 nor the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, confers on federal courts the broad power to formulate the right to contribution.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Antitrust defendants against whom civil damages, costs, and attorney's fees have been assessed, held to have no federal statutory or common law right to contribution from alleged co-conspirators.

Summary

A construction company, which had purchased concrete from a company which manufactured and sold ready-mixed concrete, filed a civil action in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana against the cement manufacturer, alleging that the manufacturer and certain unnamed concrete firms had conspired to raise prices in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) and seeking treble damages, plus attorney's fees, under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15). Through discovery, the defendant manufacturer learned that certain other companies were the concrete producers that had participated in the alleged price-fixing scheme and filed a third-party complaint against the other manufacturers seeking contribution from them should it be held liable in the action filed by the construction company. The District Court dismissed the third-party complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, holding that federal law did not allow an antitrust defendant to recover in contribution from co-conspirators. On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit affirmed, concluding that no common law rule of contribution should be fashioned by the courts (604 F2d 897).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Burger, Ch. J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that in a federal antitrust law action a defendant, against whom civil damages, costs, and attorney's fees have been assessed, has no right to contribution, under federal statutory or common law, from other participants in the unlawful conspiracy on which recovery was based, Congress neither expressly nor implicitly intending to create a right to contribution in the antitrust statutes (15 USCS 1 et seq.), contribution not implicating uniquely federal interests of the kind that oblige courts to formulate federal common law, and nothing in the Sherman Act, its legislative history, or in the overall regulatory scheme suggesting that Congress intended courts to have the power to alter or supplement the remedies enacted in 1 and 2 of the Act (15 USCS 1 and 2), and the issue of such a right to contribution being a matter for Congress, not the courts, to decide.

Headnotes

---

CONTRIBUTION §2 > COURTS §141 > antitrust action -- defendant's right to contribution from co-conspirators --> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]

In a federal antitrust law action, a defendant, against whom civil damages, costs, and attorney's fees have been assessed, has no right to contribution, under federal statutory or common law, from other participants in the unlawful conspiracy on which recovery was based, Congress neither expressly nor implicitly intending to create a right to contribution in the antitrust statutes (15 USCS 1 et seq.), contribution not implicating uniquely federal interests of the kind that oblige courts to formulate common law, and nothing in the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), its legislative history, or in the overall regulatory scheme suggesting that Congress intended courts to have the power to alter or supplement the remedies enacted in 1 and 2 of the Act (15 USCS 1 and 2); the issue of such a right to contribution is a matter for Congress, not the courts, to decide.

SUIT §4 > statute -- implication of right of action for contribution -- intent of Congress -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

In determining whether a right to contribution exists by implication under a federal statute, the focus of the United States Supreme Court, as it is in any case involving the implication of a right of action, is on the intent of Congress; congressional intent may be discerned by looking to the legislative history and other factors, such as the identity of the class for whose benefits the statute was enacted, the overall legislative scheme, and the traditional role of the states in providing relief.

LAW §2 > COURTS §792 > federal common law -- development by courts -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

There is no general federal common law; however, there exists the need and authority in limited areas to formulate what has come to be known as "federal common law," these instances being few and restricted and falling essentially into two categories--those in which a federal rule of decision is necessary to protect uniquely federal interests, and those in which Congress has given the courts the power to develop substantive law.

451 U.S. 630, *630; 101 S. Ct. 2061, **2061; 68 L. Ed. 2d 500, ***500; 1981 U.S. LEXIS 26, ****1

COURTS §792 > jurisdiction in federal courts -- authority to formulate common law -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The vesting of jurisdiction in the federal courts does not in and of itself give rise to authority to formulate federal common law, and the existence of congressional authority under Article I of the United States Constitution does not mean that federal courts are free to develop a common law to govern those areas until Congress acts; absent some congressional authorization to formulate substantive rules of decision, federal common law exist only in such narrow areas as those concerned with the rights and obligations of the United States, interstate and international disputes implicating the conflicting rights of states or relations with foreign nations, and admiralty cases, the federal system not permitting the controversy in these instances to be resolved under state law, either because the authority and duties of the United States as sovereign are intimately involved or because the interstate or international nature of the controversy makes it inappropriate for state law to control.

COURTS §93 > legislative scheme -- creation of remedies -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The presumption that a remedy was deliberately omitted from a statute is strongest when Congress has enacted a comprehensive legislative scheme including an integrated system of procedures for enforcement.

COURTS §93 > authority -- providing new rule or remedy -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The authority to construe a statute is fundamentally different from the authority to fashion a new rule or to provide a new remedy which Congress has not decided to adopt.

Syllabus

---

Petitioner and respondents manufacture and sell ready-mix concrete. A purchaser of concrete from petitioner filed a civil action against petitioner in Federal District Court, alleging that petitioner and certain unnamed firms had conspired to raise concrete prices in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and seeking treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act. After learning through discovery that respondents were the alleged co-conspirators, petitioner filed a third-party complaint against them, seeking contribution should it be held liable in the original action. The District Court dismissed the third-party complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, holding that federal law does not allow an antitrust defendant to recover \*\*\*\*2 in contribution from alleged co-conspirators. The Court of Appeals affirmed.

Held: There is no basis in federal statutory or common law for allowing federal courts to fashion the right to contribution urged by petitioner. Pp. 634-647.

(a) Congress neither expressly nor implicitly intended to create such a right to contribution. Nothing in the Sherman and Clayton Acts or in their legislative history refers to contribution, and there is nothing to indicate any congressional concern with softening the blow on joint wrongdoers. Rather, the very idea of treble damages reveals an intent to punish past, and deter future, unlawful conduct, not to ameliorate the liability of joint wrongdoers. Pp. 639-640.

451 U.S. 630, *630; 101 S. Ct. 2061, **2061; 68 L. Ed. 2d 500, ***500; 1981 U.S. LEXIS 26, ****2

(b) The federal courts are not empowered to fashion a federal common-law rule of contribution among antitrust wrongdoers. Contribution does not implicate "uniquely federal interests" of the kind that oblige courts to formulate federal common law. Moreover, even though Congress may have intended to allow federal courts to develop governing principles of law in the common-law tradition with regard to substantive violations of the Sherman Act, it does not follow that Congress intended [****3] to give courts as wide discretion in formulating remedies to enforce the Act or the kind of relief sought through contribution. There is nothing in the Act itself, in its legislative history, or in the overall legislative scheme to suggest that Congress intended courts to have the power to alter or supplement the remedies enacted. Pp. 640-646.

(c) Regardless of the merits of the conflicting arguments on the complex policy questions presented by petitioner's claimed right to contribution, this is a matter for Congress, not the courts to resolve. Pp. 646-647.

Counsel: Benjamin R. Slater, Jr., argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs was William J. Hamlin.

Dando B. Cellini argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were James A. Babst, Ewell P. Walther, Jr., and Stephen H. Kupperman.

Solicitor General McCree argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging affirmance. With him on the brief were Assistant Attorney General Litvack, Deputy Solicitor General Wallace, Stephen M. Shapiro, Barry Grossman, and Bruce E. Fein.*

[****4]

Judges: BURGER, C. J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court.

Opinion by: BURGER

Opinion

---

[*632] [***503] [**2062] CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER delivered the opinion of the Court.

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [↑] [1A]This case presents the question whether the federal antitrust laws allow a defendant, against whom civil damages, costs, and attorney's fees have been assessed, a right to contribution from other participants in the unlawful conspiracy on which recovery was based. We granted certiorari to resolve a conflict in the Circuits. 449 U.S. 949 (1980).<sup>1</sup> We affirm.

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed by Eugene Driker for Borman's Inc.; by Denis McInerney, William T. Lifland, and Allen S. Joslyn for CPC International Inc.; by Cloyd R. Mellott, J. Gary Kosinski, Ray C. Stoner, Michael R. Borasky, James M. Nicholson, and William E. Craig for Georgia-Pacific Corp. et al.; by Harold F. Baker, Alan M. Wiseman, and Gaspare J. Bono for Mead Corp.; and by Leslie H. Arps, Kenneth A. Plevan, John M. Nannes, Richard M. Schwartz, and Thomas R. Long for Westvaco Corp.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed by R. Clifford Potter for Boise Cascade Corp.; by Lowell E. Sachnoff and Stephen D. Susman for the Corrugated Container Class in M. D. L. 310; by David L. Foster and John W. Malley for Duplan Corp.; and by Robert M. Johnson for River Cement Co.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed by James W. Witherspoon for A. L. Black et al.; by Harold G. Christensen, Michael R. Carlston, and Craig S. Cook for Olson Farms, Inc.; by Earl E. Pollock for Owens-Illinois, Inc., et al.; by Richard W. Odgers and C. Douglas Floyd for Safeway Stores, Inc.; and by Donald G. Kempf, Jr., and Hammond E. Chaffetz for Weyerhaeuser Co. et al.

<sup>1</sup> Compare Wilson P. Abraham Construction Corp. v. Texas Industries, Inc., 604 F.2d 897 (CA5 1979) (this case), and Olson Farms, Inc. v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 1979-2 Trade Cases para. 62,995 (CA10), rehearing en banc granted (Dec. 27, 1979), with Professional Beauty Supply, Inc. v. National Beauty Supply, Inc., 594 F.2d 1179 (CA8 1979).

[****5] I

Petitioner and the three respondents manufacture and sell ready-mix concrete in the New Orleans, La., area. In 1975, the Wilson P. Abraham Construction Corp., which had purchased concrete from petitioner, filed a civil action in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana naming petitioner as defendant;<sup>2</sup> the [***504] complaint alleged that petitioner and certain unnamed concrete firms had conspired to raise prices in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as [**2063] amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1, which provides in relevant part:

"Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal."

The complaint sought treble damages plus attorney's fees under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15, which provides:

"Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust [*633] laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides [***6] or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."<sup>3</sup>

Through discovery, petitioner learned that Abraham believed respondents were the other concrete producers that had participated in the alleged price-fixing scheme.<sup>4</sup> Petitioner then filed a third-party complaint against respondents seeking contribution from them should it be held liable in the action filed by Abraham. The District Court dismissed the third-party complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, holding that federal law does not allow an antitrust defendant to recover in contribution from co-conspirators. The District Court also [***7] determined there was no just reason for delay with respect to that aspect of the case and entered final judgment under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54 (b).

On appeal, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit affirmed, holding that, although the Sherman and the Clayton Acts do not expressly afford a right to contribution, the issue should be resolved as a matter of federal common law. Wilson P. Abraham Construction Corp. v. Texas Industries, Inc., 604 F.2d 897 (1979). The court then examined what it perceived to be the benefits and the difficulties of contribution and concluded that no common-law rule of contribution should be fashioned by the courts.

[*634] II

The common law provided no [***8] right to contribution among joint tortfeasors. Union Stock Yards Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 196 U.S. 217 (1905); W. Prosser, Law of Torts § 50, pp. 305-307 (4th ed. 1971). See Merryweather v. Nixan, 8 Term Rep. 186, 101 Eng. Rep. 1337 (K. B. 1799). See also Northwest Airlines, Inc. v. Transport Workers, ante, at 86-87, n. 16. In part, at least, this common-law rule rested on the idea that when several [***505] tortfeasors have caused damage, the law should not lend its aid to have one tortfeasor compel others to share in the sanctions imposed by way of damages intended to compensate the victim. E. g., Atkins v. Johnson, 43 Vt. 78, 81-82 (1870). See Leflar, Contribution and Indemnity Between Tortfeasors, 81 U. Pa. L. Rev. 130, 130-134 (1932). Since the turn of the century, however, 39 states and the District of Columbia have fashioned rules of contribution in one form or another, 10 initially through judicial action and the remainder through legislation. See Northwest Airlines, Inc. v. Transport Workers, ante, at 86-87, and n. 16. Because courts generally have

---

<sup>2</sup> The complaint also named one of petitioner's former employees as a codefendant; this employee has never been served.

<sup>3</sup> The phrase "antitrust laws" includes the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act. 15 U. S. C. § 12 (a).

<sup>4</sup> In 1973, a federal grand jury in Louisiana issued indictments against petitioner, respondents (or their corporate predecessors), and certain employees charging a price-fixing conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Each defendant ultimately entered a plea of nolo contendere.

acknowledged that [****9] treble-damages actions under the antitrust laws are analogous to common-law actions sounding in tort,<sup>5</sup> we are urged to follow [**2064] this trend and adopt contribution for antitrust violators.

[****10] The parties and amici representing a variety of business [*635] interests -- as well as a legion of commentators<sup>6</sup> -- have thoroughly addressed the policy concerns implicated in the creation of a right to contribution in antitrust cases. With potentially large sums at stake, it is not surprising that the numerous and articulate amici disagree strongly over the basic issue raised: whether sharing of damages liability will advance or impair the objectives of the antitrust laws.

[****11] Proponents of a right to contribution advance concepts of fairness and equity in urging that the often massive judgments in antitrust actions be shared by all the wrongdoers. In the abstract, this position has a certain appeal: collective fault, collective responsibility. But the efforts of petitioner and supporting amici to invoke principles of equity presuppose a legislative intent to allow parties violating the law to draw upon equitable principles to mitigate the consequences of their wrongdoing. Moreover, traditional equitable standards have something to say about the septic state of the hands of such a suitor in the courts, and, in the context of one wrongdoer suing a co-conspirator, these standards similarly [***506] suggest that parties generally in pari delicto should be left where they are found. See supra, at 634.<sup>7</sup>

[****12] [*636] The proponents of contribution also contend that, by allowing one violator to recover from co-conspirators, there is a greater likelihood that most or all wrongdoers will be held liable and thus share the consequences of the wrongdoing. It is argued that contribution would thus promote more vigorous private enforcement of the antitrust laws and thereby deter violations, one of the important purposes of the treble-damages action under § 4 of the Clayton Act. See, e. g., Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 344 (1979); Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 485 (1977); Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 262 (1972); Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139 (1968). Independent of this effect, a right to contribution may increase the incentive of a single defendant to provide evidence against co-conspirators so as to avoid bearing the full weight of the judgment. Realization of this possibility [**2065] may also deter one from joining an antitrust conspiracy.

Respondents and amici opposing contribution point out [****13] that an even stronger deterrent may exist in the possibility, even if more remote, that a single participant could be held fully liable for the total amount of the judgment. In this view, each prospective co-conspirator would ponder long and hard before engaging in what may be called a game of "Russian roulette."<sup>8</sup> Moreover, any discussion of this problem [*637] must consider the problem of "overdeterrence," i. e., the possibility that severe antitrust penalties will chill wholly legitimate business agreements. See United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 441-442 \(1978\).

<sup>5</sup> See, e. g., Solomon v. Houston Corrugated Box Co., 526 F.2d 389, 392, n. 4 (CA5 1976); Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 311 F.2d 764, 768 (CA9 1963); Northwestern Oil Co. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 138 F.2d 967, 970 (CA7), cert. denied, 321 U.S. 792 (1943); Williamson v. Columbia Gas & Elec. Corp., 110 F.2d 15, 18 (CA3 1939), cert. denied, 310 U.S. 639 (1940). Cf. Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U.S. 540, 552 (1902). Although not expressly characterizing antitrust violations as tortious, our opinion in Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 342-348 (1971), repeatedly referred to common-law rules and trends regarding release of joint tortfeasors in determining the validity of a release of an alleged antitrust violator.

<sup>6</sup> See, e. g., Cirace, A Game Theoretic Analysis of Contribution and Claim Reduction in Antitrust Treble Damage Suits, 55 St. John's L. Rev. 42 (1980); Corbett, Apportionment of Damages and Contribution Among Coconspirators in Antitrust Treble Damage Actions, 31 Ford. L. Rev. 111 (1962); Easterbrook, Landes, & Posner, Contribution Among Antitrust Defendants: A Legal and Economic Analysis, 23 J. Law & Econ. 331 (1980); Floyd, Contribution Among Antitrust Violators: A Question of Legal Process, 1980 B. Y. U. L. Rev. 183; Polinsky & Shavell, Contribution and Claim Reduction Among Antitrust Defendants: An Economic Analysis, 33 Stan. L. Rev. 447 (1981); Note, 63 Cornell L. Rev. 682 (1978); Note, 48 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 749 (1980); Note, 93 Harv. L. Rev. 1540 (1980); Note, 78 Mich. L. Rev. 892 (1980); Note, 58 Texas L. Rev. 961 (1980); Recent Developments, 33 Vand. L. Rev. 979 (1980); Note, 66 Va. L. Rev. 797 (1980).

<sup>7</sup> Of course, not all equitable principles apply in antitrust cases. For example, in Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134 (1968), the Court held that traditional notions of in pari delicto would not bar a franchisee from recovering from its franchisor even though the franchisee had sought a franchise and thus, to some degree, acquiesced in the scheme alleged to be illegal.

[****14] The parties and amici also discuss at length how a right to contribution should be structured and, in particular, how to treat problems that may arise with the allocation of damages among the wrongdoers and the effect of settlements. Dividing or apportioning damages among a cluster of co-conspirators presents difficult issues, for the participation of each in the conspiracy may have varied. Some may have profited more than others; some may have caused more damage to the injured plaintiff. Some may have been "leaders" and others "followers"; one may be a [***507] "giant," others "pygmies."<sup>9</sup> Various formulae are suggested: damages may be allocated according to market shares, relative profits, sales to the particular plaintiff, the role in the organization and operation of the conspiracy, or simply pro rata, assessing an equal amount against each participant on the theory that each one is equally liable for the injury caused by collective action. In addition to the question of allocation, a right to contribution may have a serious impact on the incentive of defendants to settle. Some amici and commentators have suggested that the total amount of the plaintiff's claim [****15] should be reduced by the amount of any settlement with any one co-conspirator; others [*638] strongly disagree. Similarly, vigorous arguments can be made for and against allowing a losing defendant to seek contribution from co-conspirators who settled with the plaintiff before trial. Regardless of the particular rule adopted for allocating damages or enforcing settlements, the complexity of the issues involved may result in additional trial and pretrial proceedings, thus adding new complications to what already is complex litigation. See, e. g., Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 737-747 \(1977\).

[****16] III

The contentions advanced indicate how views diverge as to the "unfairness" of not providing contribution, the risks and trade-offs perceived by decisionmakers in business, and the various patterns for contribution that could be devised. In this vigorous debate over the advantages and disadvantages of contribution and various contribution schemes, the parties, amici, and commentators [**2066] have paid less attention to a very significant and perhaps dispositive threshold question: whether courts have the power to create such a cause of action absent legislation and, if so, whether that authority should be exercised in this context.

Earlier this Term, in Northwest Airlines, Inc. v. Transport Workers, ante, p. 77, we addressed the similar question of a right to contribution under the Equal Pay Act of 1963, 29 U. S. C. § 206 \(d\), and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U. S. C. § 2000e et seq. We concluded that HN1[] a right to contribution may arise in either of two ways: first, through the affirmative creation [****17] of a right of action by Congress, either expressly or by clear implication; or, second, through the power of federal courts to fashion a federal common law of contribution. Ante, at 90-91.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>8</sup> Economists disagree over whether business decisionmakers, be they the high-level or the middle-level management, are "risk averse"; i. e., they would prefer a greater certainty of a small loss to a less certain chance of a greater loss. Compare K. Elzinga & W. Breit, The Antitrust Penalties 126-129 (1976), with Easterbrook, Landes, & Posner, supra n. 6, at 352, n. 50. See also Polinsky & Shavell, supra n. 6, at 452-455; Shavell, Risk Sharing and Incentives in the Principal and Agent Relationship, 10 Bell J. Econ. 55 (1979).

<sup>9</sup> A small business that mimics the practices of larger companies may be participating directly in the conspiracy or simply "tagging along" with larger companies. See, e. g., Markham, The Nature and Significance of Price Leadership, 41 Amer. Econ. Rev. 891 (1951); Posner, Oligopoly and the Antitrust Laws: A Suggested Approach, 21 Stan. L. Rev. 1562, 1582 (1969); Washburn, Price Leadership, 64 Va. L. Rev. 691, 693-697, 708-712 (1978). Although following industry leaders may help support an inference of agreement, "this Court has never held that proof of parallel business behavior [by itself] conclusively establishes agreement or, phrased differently, that such behavior itself constitutes a Sherman Act offense." Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 541 \(1954\).

<sup>10</sup> In Northwest Airlines, we decided that no such right exists under the Equal Pay Act or Title VII, and we declined to fashion such a right from federal common law.

[*639] A

[***508] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2] There is no allegation that the antitrust laws expressly establish a right of action for contribution. Nothing in these statutes refers to contribution, and if such a right exists it must be by implication. Our focus, as it is in any case involving the implication of a right of action, is on the intent of Congress. E. g., California v. Sierra Club, ante, p. 287; Universities Research Assn. v. Coutu, 450 U.S. 754 \(1981\); Transamerica [****18] Mortgage Advisors, Inc. v. Lewis, 444 U.S. 11 \(1979\); Touche Ross & Co. v. Redington, 442 U.S. 560 \(1979\). Congressional intent may be discerned by looking to the legislative history and other factors: e. g., the identity of the class for whose benefit the statute was enacted, the overall legislative scheme, and the traditional role of the states in providing relief. See California v. Sierra Club, supra; Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. 66 \(1975\).

Petitioner readily concedes that "there is nothing in the legislative history of the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act to indicate that Congress considered whether contribution was available to defendants in antitrust actions." Brief for Petitioner 10. Moreover, it is equally clear that the Sherman Act and the provision for treble-damages actions under the Clayton Act were not adopted for the benefit of the participants in a conspiracy to restrain trade. On the contrary, petitioner "is a member of the class whose activities Congress intended to regulate for the protection and benefit of an entirely distinct class," Piper v. Chris-Craft Industries, Inc., 430 U.S. 1, 37 \(1977\) [****19] (emphasis added). HN2 The very idea of treble damages reveals an intent to punish past, and to deter future, unlawful conduct, not to ameliorate the liability of wrongdoers. The absence of any reference to contribution in the legislative history or of any possibility that Congress was concerned with softening the blow on joint wrongdoers in this setting makes examination of other factors unnecessary. California v. Sierra Club, ante, at 298; Touche Ross & Co. v. Redington, supra, at 574-576. We therefore conclude that HN3 Congress neither expressly nor implicitly intended to create a right to contribution.<sup>11</sup> If any right to contribution [**2067] exists, its source must be federal common law.

[****20] B

[***509] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3] HN4 There is, of course, "no federal general common law." Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 78 \(1938\). Nevertheless, the Court has recognized the need and authority in some limited areas to formulate what has come to be known as "federal common law." See United States v. Standard Oil Co., 332 U.S. 301, 308 \(1947\). These instances are "few and restricted," Wheeldin v. Wheeler, 373 U.S. 647, 651 \(1963\), and fall into essentially two categories: those in which a federal rule of decision is "necessary to protect uniquely federal interests," Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino, 376 U.S. 398, 426 \(1964\), and those in which Congress has given the courts the power to develop substantive law, Wheeldin v. Wheeler, supra, at 652.

(1)

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4] The [****21] vesting of jurisdiction in the federal courts does not in and of itself give rise to authority to formulate federal [*641] common law, United States v. Little Lake Misere Land Co., 412 U.S. 580, 591

<sup>11</sup> That Congress knows how to define a right to contribution is shown by the express actions for contribution under § 11 (f) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U. S. C. § 77k \(f\), and §§ 9 \(e\) and 18 \(b\) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U. S. C. §§ 78i \(e\) and 78r \(b\). Some courts have extrapolated from these provisions that when an implied right of action exists under the securities laws, there also is an implied right to contribution. See, e. g., Heizer Corp. v. Ross, 601 F.2d 330 \(CA7 1979\); Globus, Inc. v. Law Research Service, Inc., 318 F.Supp. 955 (SDNY), aff'd, 442 F.2d 1346 (CA2), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 941 (1971); De Haas v. Empire Petroleum Co., 286 F.Supp. 809 (Colo. 1968), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 435 F.2d 1223 (CA10 1970). We intimate no view as to the correctness of these decisions; in any event, they do not support implication of a right to contribution when a statute expressly creates a damages action but does not provide for contribution. See Northwest Airlines, Inc. v. Transport Workers, ante, at 91-92, n. 24.

(1973), nor does the existence of congressional authority under Art. I mean that federal courts are free to develop a common law to govern those areas until Congress acts. Rather, HN5 absent some congressional authorization to formulate substantive rules of decision, federal common law exists only in such narrow areas as those concerned with the rights and obligations of the United States,<sup>12</sup> [\[\*\*\*\*22\]](#) interstate and international disputes implicating the conflicting rights of States or our relations with foreign nations,<sup>13</sup> and admiralty cases.<sup>14</sup> In these instances, our federal system does not permit the controversy to be resolved under state law, either because the authority and duties of the United States as sovereign are intimately involved or because the interstate or international nature of the controversy makes it inappropriate for state law to control.

In areas where federal common law [\[\*\*\*\*23\]](#) applies, the creation of a right to contribution may fall within the power of the federal courts. For example, in Cooper Stevedoring Co. v. Fritz Kopke, Inc., 417 U.S. 106 [\[\*5101\]](#) (1974), we held that contribution [\[\*642\]](#) is available among joint tortfeasors for injury to a longshoreman. But that claim arose within admiralty jurisdiction, one of the areas long recognized as subject to federal common law, see Edmonds v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, 443 U.S. 256, 259 (1979); our decision there [\[\*\*2068\]](#) was based, at least in part, on the traditional division of damages in admiralty not recognized at common law, see 417 U.S., at 110. Cooper Stevedoring thus does not stand for a general federal common-law right to contribution. See Northwest Airlines, Inc. v. Transport Workers, ante, at 96-97.

The antitrust laws were enacted pursuant to the power of Congress under the Commerce Clause, Art. I, § 8, cl. 3, to regulate interstate and foreign trade, and the case law construing the Sherman Act now spans nearly a century. Nevertheless, a treble-damages action remains a private suit involving the rights [\[\*\*\*\*24\]](#) and obligations of private parties. Admittedly, there is a federal interest in the sense that vindication of rights arising out of these congressional enactments supplements federal enforcement and fulfills the objects of the statutory scheme. Notwithstanding that nexus, contribution among antitrust wrongdoers does not involve the duties of the Federal Government, the distribution of powers in our federal system, or matters necessarily subject to federal control even in the absence of statutory authority. Cf. Bank of America v. Parnell, 352 U.S. 29, 33 (1956). In short, HN6 contribution does not implicate "uniquely federal interests" of the kind that oblige courts to formulate federal common law.

(2)

Federal common law also may come into play when Congress has vested jurisdiction in the federal courts and empowered them to create governing rules of law. See Wheeldin v. Wheeler, supra, at 652. In this vein, this Court has read § 301 (a) of the Labor Management Relations Act, 29 U. S. C. § 185 (a), not only as granting jurisdiction [\[\*\*\*\*25\]](#) over defined [\[\*643\]](#) areas of labor law but also as vesting in the courts the power to develop a common law of labor-management relations within that jurisdiction. Textile Workers v. Lincoln Mills, 353 U.S. 448 (1957). A similar situation arises with regard to the first two sections of the Sherman Act, which in sweeping language forbid "[every] contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade" and "[monopolizing], or

<sup>12</sup> See, e. g., United States v. Little Lake Misere Land Co., 412 U.S. 580 (1973); Clearfield Trust Co. v. United States, 318 U.S. 363 (1943).

<sup>13</sup> See, e. g., Illinois v. Milwaukee, 406 U.S. 91 (1972); Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino, 376 U.S. 398 (1964); Hinderlider v. La Plata River & Cherry Creek Ditch Co., 304 U.S. 92 (1938). Many of these cases arise from interstate water disputes. Such cases do not directly involve state boundaries, disputes over which more often come to this Court under our original jurisdiction; they nonetheless involve especial federal concerns to which federal common law applies. In Hinderlider v. La Plata River & Cherry Creek Ditch Co., supra, at 110, decided the same day as Erie, the Court observed:

"Jurisdiction over controversies concerning rights in interstate streams is not different from those concerning boundaries. These have been recognized as presenting federal questions."

<sup>14</sup> See, e. g., Edmonds v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, 443 U.S. 256 (1979); Fitzgerald v. United States Lines Co., 374 U.S. 16 (1963).

451 U.S. 630, *643; 101 S. Ct. 2061, **2068; 68 L. Ed. 2d 500, ***510; 1981 U.S. LEXIS 26, ****25

[attempting] to monopolize, . . . any part of the trade or commerce . . ." 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2. We noted in National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 688 \(1978\):

"Congress, however, did not intend the text of the Sherman Act to delineate the full meaning of the statute or its application in concrete situations. The legislative history makes it perfectly clear that it expected the courts to give shape to the statute's broad mandate by drawing on common-law tradition."

[***511] Accord, United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S., at 438, and n. 14; 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 302 (1978). [****26] See 21 Cong. Rec. 2456, 2460, 3149, 3152 (1890).<sup>15</sup>

It does not necessarily follow, however, that Congress intended to give courts as wide discretion in formulating remedies to enforce the provisions of the Sherman Act or the kind of relief sought through contribution. The intent to allow courts to develop governing principles of law, so unmistakably clear with regard to substantive violations, does not appear in debates on the treble-damages action created [\*644] in § 7 of the original Act, 26 Stat. 210.<sup>16</sup> [****28] Floyd, supra n. [**2069] 6, at 228. [****27] In the Senate debates of 1890, Senator Morgan described the type of authority given the courts:

"Now, whoever recovers upon this statute, in whatever court he may go to, will recover upon the statute. It is very true that we use common-law terms here and common-law definitions in order to define an offense which is in itself comparatively new, but it is not a common-law jurisdiction that we are conferring upon the circuit courts of the United States." 21 Cong. Rec. 3149 (1890) (emphasis added).

The Senator added that common-law actions in state courts might still exist, but recovery of treble damages would not be available, for its source is federal, not state, law. Ibid. This description of the power of federal courts under the Act suggests a sharp distinction between the lawmaking powers conferred in defining violations and the ability to fashion the relief available to parties claiming injury.<sup>17</sup>

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]In contrast to the sweeping language of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, the remedial provisions defined in the antitrust laws are detailed and specific: (1) violations of §§ 1 [\*645] and 2 are crimes; (2) Congress has expressly authorized a private right of action for treble damages, costs, and reasonable attorney's fees;<sup>18</sup> [****30] (3) other remedial sections also provide for suits by the United [\[\*\*\*512\]](#) States to enjoin violations<sup>19</sup> or for injury to its "business [\*\*\*\*29] or property,"<sup>20</sup> and parens patriae suits by state attorneys general;<sup>21</sup> (4)

<sup>15</sup> Congress assumed the courts would refer to the existing law of monopolies and restraints on trade. See, e. g., Mitchel v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181, 24 Eng. Rep. 347 (K. B. 1711); Darcy v. Allein, 11 Co. Rep. 84, 77 Eng. Rep. 1260 (K. B. 1603). See generally P. Areeda, Antitrust Analysis 44-46 (3d ed. 1981); Letwin, The English Common Law Concerning Monopolies, 21 U. Chi. L. Rev. 355 (1954).

<sup>16</sup> Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 15, which provides the private treble-damages action, derives from § 7 of the Sherman Act as originally enacted. See H. R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., pt. 1, p. 14 (1914). Congress repealed the original § 7 in 1955, Act of July 7, 1955, ch. 283, 69 Stat. 282, as being redundant of Clayton Act § 4, H. R. Rep. No. 422, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., 2 (1955); S. Rep. No. 619, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., 2 (1955).

<sup>17</sup> Courts, of course, should be wary of relying on the remarks of a single legislator, and Senator Morgan's comments are not unambiguous. Yet it is clear that when the Sherman Act was adopted the common law did not provide a right to contribution among tortfeasors participating in proscribed conduct. One permissible, though not mandatory, inference is that Congress relied on courts' continuing to apply principles in effect at the time of enactment. See, e. g., Edmonds v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, 443 U.S., at 273.

<sup>18</sup> Clayton Act § 4 (original version at Sherman Act § 7).

<sup>19</sup> Sherman Act § 4, 15 U. S. C. § 4.

Congress has provided that a final judgment or decree of an antitrust violation in one proceeding will serve as prima facie evidence in any subsequent action or proceeding;<sup>22</sup> and (5) the remedial provisions in the antimerger field, not at issue here, are also quite detailed.<sup>23</sup>

"The presumption that a remedy was deliberately omitted from a statute is strongest when Congress has enacted a comprehensive legislative scheme including an integrated system of procedures for enforcement." Northwest Airlines, Inc. v. Transport Workers, ante, at 97.

That presumption is strong indeed in the context of antitrust violations; the continuing existence of this statutory scheme for 90 years without amendments authorizing contribution is not without significance. There is nothing in the statute itself, in its legislative history, or in the overall regulatory scheme to suggest that Congress intended courts to have the power to alter or supplement the remedies enacted.

[LEdHN\[6\]](#)<sup>24</sup> [6]Our cases interpreting the treble-damages action, see, e. g., Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251 (1972); Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321 (1971); Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134 (1968), do not suggest that, in the past, [*646] we have invoked some broad-ranging common-law source for creating a cause of action. Nor does the judicial determination that defendants should be jointly and severally liable suggest that courts also may order contribution, since joint and several liability simply ensures that the plaintiffs will [****31] be [**2070] able to recover the full amount of damages from some, if not all, participants. See Atlanta v. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipeworks, 127 F. 2d, 26 (CA6 1903), aff'd, 203 U.S. 390 (1906). These cases do no more than identify the scope of the remedy Congress itself has provided. See Floyd, supra n. 6, at 227-231.

"In almost any statutory scheme, there may be a need for judicial interpretation of ambiguous or incomplete provisions. But the authority to construe a statute is fundamentally different from the authority to fashion a new rule or to provide a new remedy which Congress has decided not to adopt." Northwest Airlines, Inc. v. Transport Workers, ante, at 97.

We are satisfied that HN7<sup>25</sup> neither the Sherman Act nor the Clayton Act confers on federal courts the broad power to formulate the right to contribution sought here.

[***513] IV

[LEdHN\[1D\]](#)<sup>26</sup> [1D]The policy questions presented by petitioner's claimed right to contribution are far-reaching. In declining [****32] to provide a right to contribution, we neither reject the validity of those arguments nor adopt the views of those opposing contribution. Rather, we recognize that, regardless of the merits of the conflicting arguments, this is a matter for Congress, not the courts, to resolve.

The range of factors to be weighed in deciding whether a right to contribution should exist demonstrates the inappropriateness of judicial resolution of this complex issue. Ascertaining what is "fair" in this setting calls for inquiry into the entire spectrum of antitrust law, not simply the elements [*647] of a particular case or category of cases. Similarly, whether contribution would strengthen or weaken enforcement of the antitrust laws, or what form a right to contribution should take, cannot be resolved without going beyond the record of a single lawsuit. As in Diamond v. Chakrabarty, 447 U.S. 303, 317 (1980):

<sup>20</sup> Clayton Act § 4A, 15 U. S. C. § 15a.

<sup>21</sup> Clayton Act §§ 4C-4H, 15 U. S. C. §§ 15c-15h.

<sup>22</sup> Clayton Act § 5 (a), 15 U. S. C. § 16 \(a\).

<sup>23</sup> Clayton Act §§ 7-11, 15 U. S. C. §§ 18-21.

"The choice we are urged to make is a matter of high policy for resolution within the legislative process after the kind of investigation, examination, and study that legislative bodies can provide and courts cannot. That process involves the balancing of competing [****33] values and interests, which in our democratic system is the business of elected representatives. Whatever their validity, the contentions now pressed on us should be addressed to the political branches of the Government, the Congress and the Executive, and not to the courts."

Accord, United States v. Topco Associates, 405 U.S. 596, 611-612 (1972).

Because we are unable to discern any basis in federal statutory or common law that allows federal courts to fashion the relief urged by petitioner, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is

Affirmed.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 360

15 USCS 1 et seq.

US L Ed Digest, Contribution 2

L Ed Index to Annos, Contribution; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Contribution; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Contribution; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Implication of private right of action from provision of federal statute not expressly providing for one. 61 L Ed 2d 910.

[****34] The Supreme Court and the post-Erie federal common law. 31 L Ed 2d 1006.

Right to contribution in federal antitrust case. 47 ALR Fed 712.

---

End of Document

Nat'l Gerimedical Hosp. & Gerontology Ctr. v. Blue Cross

Supreme Court of the United States

April 29, 1981, Argued ; June 15, 1981, Decided

No. 80-802

Reporter

452 U.S. 378 *; 101 S. Ct. 2415 **; 69 L. Ed. 2d 89 ***; 1981 U.S. LEXIS 122 ****; 49 U.S.L.W. 4672; 1981-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P64,125

NATIONAL GERIMEDICAL HOSPITAL AND GERONTOLOGY CENTER v. BLUE CROSS OF KANSAS CITY ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIROARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 628 F.2d 1050, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

planning, anti trust law, antitrust, repeal, participating, health-care, health planning, health services, immunity, facilities, Resources, providers, statutory scheme, health system

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > General Overview

**HN1** Healthcare Law, Business Administration & Organization

The National Health Planning and Resources Development Act of 1974, 42 U.S.C.S. § 300k et seq, created federal, state, and local bodies that coordinate their activities in the area of health planning and policy.

Banking Law > Regulators > General Overview

Securities Law > Regulators > Self-Regulating Entities > National Association of Securities Dealers

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Securities Law > ... > Self-Regulating Entities > National Securities Exchanges > General Overview

Securities Law > ... > Self-Regulating Entities > National Securities Exchanges > New York Stock Exchange

**HN2** Banking Law, Regulators

I Í GÁEÜÉHÍ Ì ÉÉHÍ Ì LÁEFÁUÉOÓÉG FÍ ÉÉG FÍ LÁ JÁSEÓaÉGÀ Á JÁÉHÉ JIÁFJÌ FÁMÉÉSÓYÓÁFGÉHÉ

The antitrust laws represent a "fundamental national economic policy." Implied antitrust immunity is not favored, and can be justified only by a convincing showing of clear repugnancy between the antitrust laws and the regulatory system. Repeal is to be regarded as implied only if necessary to make the subsequent law work, and even then only to the minimum extent necessary.

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Securities Law > Regulators > Self-Regulating Entities > National Association of Securities Dealers

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Securities Law > ... > Self-Regulating Entities > National Securities Exchanges > General Overview

Securities Law > ... > Self-Regulating Entities > National Securities Exchanges > New York Stock Exchange

HN3 Legislation, Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Even when an industry is regulated substantially, this does not necessarily evidence an intent to repeal the antitrust laws with respect to every action taken within the industry. Intent to repeal the antitrust laws is much clearer when a regulatory agency has been empowered to authorize or require the type of conduct under antitrust challenge.

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN4 Legislation, Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Antitrust repeals are especially disfavored where the antitrust implications of a business decision have not been considered by a governmental entity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The National Health Planning and Resources Development Act, 42 U.S.C.S. § 300k et seq., is not so incompatible with antitrust concerns as to create a "pervasive" repeal of the antitrust laws as applied to every action taken in response to the health-care planning process.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Health insurer's refusal to accept hospital as member of insurance plan, held not immune from antitrust laws, even if insurer's intent was to aid implementation of HSA's policy under NHRDA (42 USCS 300k et seq.)

I Í GÁMEJÉHÍ Ì ÊHÍ Ì LÁFÉAÚEÓDÉG FÍ ËEG FÍ LÀ JÄSEØAÈGÀ JÄHEE JIÁFJÌ FÁMEÙESÓYÓQÁFGAEE

Summary

The Kansas City area's health system agency (HSA), a private, non-profit corporation, federally funded under the National Health Planning and Resources Development Act (NHRDA; 42 USCS 300k et seq.), determined that there was a surplus of hospital beds in the Kansas City area and announced that it would not approve any addition of acute-care beds in area hospitals. As a result of this announced policy, the petitioner, a private, acute-care community hospital in the Kansas City area, did not seek the HSA's approval of its construction. However, prior to the completion of construction, the petitioner sought to become a participating member of the respondent insurers' health insurance plan. The respondents refused to accept the petitioner as a participating member, because of the respondents' policy barring participation in their insurance plan by any new hospital which could not show that it was meeting a clearly evident need for health-care services in the Kansas City area. In determining that the petitioner had not satisfied this requirement, the respondents relied on the petitioner's failure to obtain the HSA's approval for construction. Claiming that the respondents' refusal to accept the petitioner as a participating member put the petitioner at a competitive disadvantage, the petitioner filed suit against the respondents in the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri. The petitioner claimed that the respondents had violated 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 2) by refusing to deal with the petitioner and by conspiring with the HSA. Holding that Congress intended that actions taken by private parties with the intention of aiding implementation of the NHRDA would be immune from the antitrust laws, the District Court granted judgment for the respondents (479 F Supp 1012). The United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit affirmed (628 F2d 1050).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. In an opinion by Powell, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that the respondents' refusal to accept the petitioner as a participating member of the respondents' health insurance plan was not immune from the federal antitrust laws, even if such refusal was intended to aid implementation of the HSA's plans under the NHRDA, since (1) such refusal was neither compelled nor approved by any governmental, regulatory body, but was a spontaneous response to the finding of an advisory planning body, the local HSA, that there was a surplus of acute-care hospital beds in the area, (2) application of the antitrust laws to such refusal would neither frustrate a particular provision of the NHRDA nor create a conflict with the orders of any regulatory body, (3) nothing in the NHRDA required the respondents to take an action which, in essence, sought to enforce the advisory decision of the HSA, (4) there was no reason to believe that Congress specifically contemplated such enforcement of the NHRDA by private insurance providers, and (5) the NHRDA was not so incompatible with antitrust concerns as to create a pervasive repeal of the antitrust laws as applied to every action taken in response to health-care planning recommendations under the NHRDA.

Headnotes

---

PRACTICES §20 > STATUTES §248.5 > relation of antitrust laws to other legislation -- repeal -- refusal to accept hospital in health insurance plan -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]

The refusal of a health insurer to accept a private, acute-care community hospital as a participating member of the insurer's health insurance plan is not immune from the federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1, 2), even if such refusal is intended to aid implementation of the plans of a local health systems agency (HSA) under the National Health Planning and Resources Development Act (NHRDA; 42 USCS 300k et seq.), where (1) such refusal was neither compelled nor approved by any governmental, regulatory body, but was a spontaneous response to the finding of an advisory planning body, the local HSA, that there was a surplus of acute-care hospital beds in the area, (2) application of the antitrust laws to such refusal would neither frustrate a particular provision of the NHRDA nor create a conflict with the orders of any regulatory body, (3) nothing in the NHRDA required the insurer to take an action which, in essence, sought to enforce the advisory decision of the HSA, (4) there is no reason to believe that Congress specifically contemplated such enforcement of the NHRDA by private insurance providers, and (5) the

IÍ GÁMEJÉH Í ÈH Í LÁFÉAÚÈOÐEG FÍ ÈEG FÍ LÀ JÁSEØAÈGÀ JÈHÈ JIÁFJÌ FÁMEÙÈSÓYØAÐGGÆH

NHPRDA is not so incompatible with antitrust concerns as to create a pervasive repeal of the antitrust laws as applied to every action taken in response to health-care planning recommendations under the NHPRDA.

PRACTICES §7 > implied antitrust immunity -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Implied antitrust immunity is not favored, and can be justified only by a convincing showing of clear repugnancy between the antitrust laws and the regulatory system.

PRACTICES §20 > STATUTES §248.5 > implied repeal of antitrust law -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Repeal of an antitrust law by a subsequent federal law is to be regarded as implied only if necessary to make the subsequent law work, and even then only to the minimum extent necessary.

STATUTES §248.5 > repeal of antitrust law -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Where Congress intends to repeal the antitrust laws, such intent governs, but such intent must be clear, and even when an industry is regulated substantially, this does not necessarily evidence an intent to repeal the antitrust laws with respect to every action taken within the industry; intent to repeal the antitrust laws is much clearer when a regulatory agency has been empowered to authorize or require the type of conduct under antitrust challenge.

STATUTES §248.5 > repeal of antitrust laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Repeals of antitrust laws are especially disfavored where the antitrust implications of a business decision have not been considered by a governmental entity; when relationships are governed in the first instance by business judgment and not regulatory coercion, courts must be hesitant to conclude that Congress intended to override the fundamental national policies embodied in the antitrust laws.

PRACTICES §20 > relation of antitrust laws to other legislation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Where possible, the proper approach for determining whether subsequent federal legislation has granted immunity from the antitrust laws is an analysis which reconciles the operation of both statutory schemes with one another rather than holding one completely ousted.

Syllabus

---

Prior to the completion of its construction, petitioner, a private, acute-care community hospital in the Kansas City, Mo., metropolitan area, sought to enter into a participating hospital agreement with respondent Blue Cross of Kansas City (Blue Cross), a nonprofit provider of individual and group health-care reimbursement plans in the area. Blue Cross refused on the basis of its policy barring participation by any new hospital that could not show that it was meeting a clearly evident need for health-care services in its service area. Blue Cross relied on petitioner's failure to obtain approval for construction from the Mid-America Health Systems Agency (MAHSA), a private, [****2] nonprofit, federally funded corporation which was the local "health system agency" (HSA) designated for the area under the National Health Planning and Resources Development Act of 1974 (NHPDRA). MAHSA's major function is health planning for the Kansas City metropolitan area. Petitioner had not sought approval of its construction from MAHSA because of the latter's announced policy that it would not approve any addition of acute-care beds in view of its determination that there was a surplus of hospital beds in the area. Alleging a wrongful refusal to deal and a conspiracy between Blue Cross and MAHSA, which resulted in a competitive disadvantage to it, petitioner filed suit against respondents Blue Cross and the National Blue Cross Association for violation of the Sherman Act. Respondents contended that the NHPDRA had impliedly repealed the antitrust laws as applied to the conduct in question. The District Court granted judgment for respondents, finding a clear repugnancy between the NHPDRA and the antitrust laws, and congressional intent to repeal the antitrust laws in this context. The Court of Appeals affirmed.

Held: Although respondents may have acted with only the highest [****3] motives in seeking to implement the plans of the local HSA, they cannot defeat petitioner's antitrust claim by the assertion of immunity from the requirements of the Sherman Act. Pp. 388-393.

(a) Implied antitrust immunity can be justified only by a convincing showing of clear repugnancy between the antitrust laws and the regulatory system. Even when an industry is regulated substantially, this does not necessarily evidence an intent to repeal the antitrust laws with respect to every action taken within the industry. And intent to repeal the antitrust laws is much clearer when a regulatory agency has been empowered to regulate the type of conduct under antitrust challenge. Pp. 388-389.

(b) The action challenged here was neither compelled nor approved by any governmental regulatory body. Instead, it was a spontaneous response to the finding of only an advisory planning body, the local HSA which, under the NHPDRA, has no regulatory authority over health-care providers. And the application of the antitrust laws to the Blue Cross' conduct would not frustrate a particular provision of the NHPDRA or create a conflict with the orders of any regulatory body. Nor does the NHPDRA require [****4] Blue Cross to take an action that, in essence, sought to enforce the advisory decision of MAHSA. There is no reason to believe that Congress specifically contemplated "enforcement" of advisory decisions of an HSA by private insurance providers, let alone relied on such actions to put "teeth" into the noncompulsory local planning process. Pp. 389-391.

(c) And NHPDRA is not so incompatible with antitrust concerns as to create a "pervasive" repeal of the antitrust laws as applied to every action taken in response to the health-care planning process. Respondents have failed to make the showing necessary for an exemption of all such actions. Pp. 391-393.

Counsel: Erwin N. Griswold argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Joe Sims and James M. Beck.

Joshua F. Greenberg argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were Abraham Ribicoff, Richard M. Steuer, Harry P. Thomson, Jr., Jennifer A. Gille, John C. Noonan, and Max O. Bagley.

I I GÁEÜÉHÍ I ÉHÍ I LÁEFÁUÉOÉG FÍ ÉHG FÍ LÁ JÁSEØAÉGÀ JÉHÉ JIÁFJÌ FÁMEÜÉSØYÓQÁFGØHÉ

Solicitor General McCree argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were Acting Assistant Attorney General Favretto, Deputy Solicitor General Wallace, Stephen M. Shapiro, [****5] Barry Grossman, and Andrea Limmer. *

Judges: POWELL, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court.

Opinion by: POWELL

Opinion

---

[*380] [***93] [**2417] JUSTICE POWELL delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A]The petitioner in this case, National Gerimedical Hospital and Gerontology Center (National Gerimedical) filed an antitrust suit against respondents, Blue Cross of Kansas City (Blue Cross) and the national Blue Cross Association, challenging the refusal of Blue Cross to accept petitioner as a participating member provider under its health insurance plan. The issue presented here is whether this refusal by Blue Cross is immunized from antitrust scrutiny because it was intended to aid implementation of the plans of the "health systems agency" designated for the Kansas City area under the National Health Planning and Resources Development Act of 1974.

|

Petitioner National Gerimedical is a private, acute-care community hospital opened in 1978 in the Kansas [***94] [****6] City, Mo., metropolitan area.<sup>1</sup> Prior to the completion of construction, petitioner sought to enter into a participating hospital agreement with Blue Cross, a nonprofit provider of individual and group health-care reimbursement plans in Missouri and Kansas. Under such an agreement, participating hospitals receive direct reimbursement of the full costs of [**2418] covered services rendered to individual Blue Cross subscribers.<sup>2</sup> When subscribers receive care in hospitals that are not participating members, Blue Cross pays only 80% of the cost, and these payments are made to the subscriber, rather than directly to the hospital.

[*381] Blue Cross refused to enter into a participating hospital agreement [****7] with petitioner on the basis of its official policy barring participation by any new hospital that could not show that it was meeting "a clearly evident need for health care services in its defined service area."<sup>3</sup> [****8] In determining that petitioner had not satisfied

---

<sup>1</sup> Carl Weissburg and J. Mark Waxman filed a brief for the Federation of American Hospitals as amicus curiae urging reversal.

<sup>2</sup> As a Missouri hospital, petitioner has been licensed by the Missouri Division of Health since September 1977. It also has been certified as a Medicare provider by the Department of Health and Human Services.

<sup>3</sup> All other acute-care hospitals in the Blue Cross service area are participating members.

<sup>3</sup> On January 1, 1976, Blue Cross issued a summary of "Prerequisites" by which it would be guided in deciding whether to accept new participating hospitals. App. 141a. These included the following:

"The hospital must meet a clearly evident need for health care services in its defined service area. Health care institutions and institutional services shall be approved, and/or if required by law, certified as necessary, by the designated planning agency or areawide health planning agency respectively; or, when effective, by the designated State Agency as provided for in Public Law 93-641, the 'National Health Planning and Resources Development Act of 1974.'" Id. at 146a.

Blue Cross added that it retained the final discretion in deciding whether to accept a new hospital, and then included a warning to those contemplating new construction:

"Because lack of knowledge by any applicant of this requirement shall not be considered sufficient reason for waiving it, community groups contemplating construction of new hospitals are urged to consult with Blue Cross, if they expect to apply for participation in the hospital service plan, at some time well in advance of actual construction." Ibid.

I I GÁMEJÉH I ÊHÌ FLÁEFÁUÉOOG FÍ ËEG FÍ LÀ JÄSEØAËGÀ JÄEEJI LAFJÌ FÁMEESÓYQÄGGÅHÈ

this requirement, Blue Cross relied on petitioner's failure to obtain approval for construction from the local "health systems agency" or "HSA" -- the Mid-America Health Systems Agency (MAHSA).<sup>4</sup> This agency is a private, nonprofit corporation, federally funded under the National Health Planning and Resources Development Act of 1974 (NHRDA), 88 Stat. 2229, as amended, 42 U. S. C. § 300l (1976 ed. and Supp. IV). Its major function is health planning for the Kansas City metropolitan area.

In conducting its planning functions, MAHSA had determined that there was a surplus of hospital beds in the area [~~*382~~] and had announced that it would not approve any addition of acute-care beds in area hospitals. As a result of this announced policy, petitioner did not seek MAHSA approval of its construction, leading to the refusal of participating hospital status by Blue Cross.

Claiming that this refusal by Blue Cross put it at a competitive disadvantage, petitioner filed suit in the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri against [~~***95~~] Blue Cross and the national Blue Cross Association. It claimed violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, alleging a wrongful refusal to deal and a conspiracy between Blue Cross and MAHSA.<sup>5</sup> As relief, petitioner sought treble damages and an [~~***9~~] injunction to prevent future violations.

Respondents moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the NHRDA had impliedly repealed the antitrust laws as applied to the conduct in question.<sup>6</sup> The District Court treated this motion as one for summary judgment, and granted judgment for respondents. 479 F.Supp. 1012 \(1979\). It reasoned that if private parties seeking to effectuate the planning objectives of an HSA could be subjected to antitrust liability, accomplishment of the goals [~~**2419~~] of the NHRDA would be frustrated. Id. at 1021. Having found a "clear repugnancy," id. at 1024, between this Act and the antitrust laws, the court relied largely on legislative history for the view that "Congress intended that action taken pursuant to the Act and clearly within the scope of the Act would be exempt from application of the antitrust laws," [~~***10~~] ibid.

[~~*383~~] The United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit affirmed, essentially adopting the reasoning of the District Court. 628 F.2d 1050 \(1980\). The Court of Appeals agreed with the District Court's "finding of clear repugnancy between the Act and the antitrust laws, as the Act and regulatory scheme clearly call for the action which has now become the basis of an antitrust claim." Id., at 1055-1056. It then quoted in full the District Court's argument for the view that Congress intended repeal of the antitrust laws in this context.

We granted a writ of certiorari to [~~***11~~] review this important question. 449 U.S. 1123 \(1981\).

II

Our decision in this case requires careful attention to the structure and goals of the NHRDA, as well as a review of this Court's decisions in the area of implied repeals of the antitrust laws. We begin with a description of the complex scheme of regulatory and planning agencies established by the NHRDA in order to assess the legal significance of that Act with respect to the antitrust claim brought here.

MAHSA, the health systems agency whose refusal to approve new hospital construction in the Kansas City area prompted Blue Cross not to accept petitioner as a participating hospital, is but one part of a larger statutory scheme. The NHRDA, 42 U. S. C. § 300k et seq., HN1[] created federal, state, and local bodies that coordinate their activities in the area of health planning and policy. Building on existing planning and development [~~***96~~] statutes,

<sup>4</sup> See n. 3, supra. In a newsletter issued on July 21, 1976, Blue Cross announced that "[all] projects not reviewed and approved by these Health Systems Agencies will not be reimbursable by Blue Cross of Kansas City." App. 147a.

<sup>5</sup> MAHSA was not named as a defendant. Petitioner also included claims under Missouri's antitrust laws.

<sup>6</sup> Respondents also argued, unsuccessfully, that their conduct was immune from antitrust attack under the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1011 et seq., that their prepaid medical plans are not part of "trade or commerce" within the meaning of the Sherman Act, and that the allegations of conspiracy were insufficient. These claims are not before this Court.

I I GÁMEZÉH I ÉZHÍ HÁFEAÚDAG FÍ ÉEG FJLÀ JÄSEØAÉGA JÄEJÍ LAFJÍ FÁMEESÓYÓÁFOGÁHEFF

<sup>7</sup> Congress sought in 1974 [*384] to create a statutory scheme that would assist in preventing overinvestment in and maldistribution [****12] of health facilities. See 1974 Senate Report, at 39.

HSA's such as MAHSA are concerned with health planning in a particular metropolitan area. See generally H. R. Rep. No. 93-1382, pp. 40-41 (1974). [****13] Each is a nonprofit private corporation, public regional planning body, or single unit of local government, serving a particular "health service area." 42 U. S. C. § 300l-1 (b)(1). The statute requires that a majority of HSA board members be consumers of health care and that at least 40% be health-care "providers." § 300l-1 (b)(3)(C). The "primary responsibility" of each HSA is "effective health planning for its health service area and the promotion of the development within the area of health services, manpower, and facilities which meet identified needs, reduce documented inefficiencies, and implement the health plans of the agency." § 300l-2 (a). As originally enacted, the Act established four general goals: "improving the health of residents," "increasing the accessibility . . . , acceptability, continuity, and quality of . . . health services," "restraining increases in the cost of . . . health services," and "preventing unnecessary duplication of health resources." § 300l-2 (a).<sup>8</sup> To accomplish these goals, [**2420] the Act requires each HSA to formulate a "detailed statement of goals" called a "health systems plan," § 300l-2 (b)(2), an "annual implementation plan" describing the objectives that will achieve the goals of the general plan, § 300l-2 (b)(3), [*385] and "specific plans and projects for achieving the objectives established in the" annual implementation plan, § 300l-2 (b)(4). Each HSA is instructed to "seek, to the extent practicable, to implement [its plans] with the assistance of individuals and public and private entities in its health service area." § 300l-2 (c)(1). In addition, it may provide "technical assistance" to individuals and public and private entities for the development of necessary projects and programs, § 300l-2 (c)(2), and should use grants and contracts to encourage these projects and programs, § 300l-2 (c)(3). The agencies do not possess regulatory authority over healthcare providers.

[****15] At the state level, the Act created two separate bodies. The first, a State Health Planning and Development Agency, is a state agency created by agreement between a Governor [***97] and the Federal Government. See § 300m. It is intended to perform certain crucial functions that cannot be undertaken by local HSA's:

"Specifically, the integration and synthesis of areawide health plans into a Statewide health plan, the establishment of priorities within the State, and the performance of regulatory functions are most appropriately carried out at the State level. The latter function can appropriately be carried out only by an agency of State government." 1974 Senate Report, at 52.

Each state agency must be governed by a "State Program," which the Secretary of Health and Human Services may approve only if it meets guidelines set out in 42 U. S. C. §§ 300m-1, 300m-2. Included in these guidelines is the requirement that each State establish a "certificate of need" program under which all new institutional health facilities must seek state approval prior to construction. § 300m-2 (a)(4)(A).<sup>9</sup> This procedure is "the basic <sup>7</sup> See generally S. Rep. No. 93-1285, pp. 4-39 (1974) (hereinafter 1974 Senate Report). In 1972, for example, Congress passed § 1122 of the Social Security Act, 42 U. S. C. § 1320a-1, which authorizes the Secretary of Health and Human Services to enter into agreements with willing States, under which a state agency would be designated as the appropriate body for approving capital expenditures in the health-care area. Under § 1122, federal reimbursements under programs including Medicare and Medicaid do not include the capital expenses of hospitals that have not received agency approval.

In 1976, Missouri chose not to renew its agreement with the Federal Government under § 1122, thus eliminating the previous state program for approval of hospital construction. Brief for Respondents 6, n. 6.

<sup>8</sup> The Health Planning and Resources Development Amendments of 1979 (1979 Amendments), Pub. L. 96-79, § 103 (c), 93 Stat. 595, added another goal, "preserving and improving . . . competition in the health service area." 42 U. S. C. § 300l-2 (a)(5) (1976 ed., Supp. IV).

<sup>9</sup> The Act provides for reductions in various federal grants to States that do not participate in the planning process. 42 U. S. C. § 300m \(d\).

I I GÁVÉUÉHÍ I ÉHÍ I LÁFÉAUÉDÁG FÍ ÉEGI GELÁ JÁSÉOÀÉGA Á JÁTTÉJÍ LÁFJÍ FÁMÉJÉSÓYÓÁFOGÁHÉFÍ

component in an [*386] [****16] overall effort to control the unnecessary capital expenditures which contribute so greatly to the total national health bill." S. Rep. No. 96-96, p. 5 (1979) (hereinafter 1979 Senate Report).

The State Health Planning and Development Agency is advised by a Statewide Health Coordinating Council, composed in part of representatives of local HSA's. This council is empowered to review the plans of HSA's, review and revise state plans, and make recommendations with respect to applications for federal funds from HSA's and States. 42 U. S. C. § 300m-3 (c).

In addition to various review functions, the Federal Government plays a separate role in this statutory scheme. The NHRDA requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to issue guidelines concerning the appropriate supply, distribution, and organization of health [****17] resources. § 300k-1; see 42 CFR § 121.1 et seq. \(1980\). Finally, the Act created a National Council on Health Planning and Development to advise the Secretary on these guidelines and on the general administration of the Act. 42 U. S. C. § 300k-3.

This elaborate planning structure was intended by Congress to remedy perceived deficiencies in the performance of the health-care industry as it existed prior to 1974. The problems addressed fall into two categories. First, there was concern that marketplace forces in this industry failed to produce efficient investment in facilities and to minimize the costs of health care.<sup>10</sup> [****18] [**2421] In addition, [***98] Congress sought to reduce the maldistribution of health-care facilities.<sup>11</sup>

[*387] In 1979, Congress amended the NHRDA substantially in the Health Planning and Resources Development Amendments of 1979, Pub. L. 96-79, 93 Stat. 592. A purpose of these Amendments was to "[direct] that special consideration be given throughout the planning process to the importance of maintaining and improving competition in the health industry." 1979 Senate Report, at 3.<sup>12</sup> Toward this end, Congress added a number of provisions requiring promotion of competition at the local, state, and federal levels. [42 U. S. C. §§ 300k-2 \(b\), 300l-2 \(a\)\(5\) \(1976 ed., Supp. IV\); 42 U. S. C. §§ 300n-1 \[\*\*\*\*19\] \(c\)\(11\), \(12\) \(1976 ed., Supp. IV\)](#). See generally H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 96-420, p. 58 (1979). In so doing, however, Congress recognized a distinction between areas

<sup>10</sup> As the 1974 Senate Report put it:

"The need for strengthened and coordinated planning for personal health services is growing more apparent each day. In the view of the Committee the health care industry does not respond to classic marketplace forces. The highly technical nature of medical services together with the growth of third party reimbursement mechanisms act to attenuate the usual forces influencing the behavior of consumers with respect to personal health services. . . .

"Investment in costly health care resources, such as hospital beds, coronary care units or radio-isotope treatment centers is frequently made without regard to the existence of similar facilities or equipment already operating in an area. Investment in costly facilities and equipment not only results in capital accumulation, but establishes an ongoing demand for payment to support those services. . . .

"A recently published study indicates that by 1975, over 67,000 unneeded hospital beds will be in operation throughout the United States.

"Hospital beds, though unused, contribute substantial additional costs to the health care industry." 1974 Senate Report, at 39.

<sup>11</sup> The 1974 Senate Report stated:

"Widespread access and distribution problems exist with respect to medical facilities and services. In many urban areas, hospitals, clinics and other medical care institutions and services are crowded into relatively tiny sectors, while large areas go poorly served or completely unserved. Many rural communities are completely without a physician or any other type of health care service, while adjacent urban areas are oversupplied." Ibid.

<sup>12</sup> The Committee also sought to reduce the threat of domination of HSA decisionmaking by providers with a personal stake in the existing health-care system. 1979 Senate Report, at 57-59. See also Rosenblatt, Health Care Reform and Administrative Law: A Structural Approach, 88 Yale L. J. 243, 304-330 (1978) (describing problems of establishing consumer representation in HSA's).

I I GÁMEZÉH I ÉH I LÉFÁJÉDAG FÍ ÉEG CFLÂ JÄSEÖaÉGA JÄEJÌ LAFJÌ FÁMEÉSÓYÓÁFGAHEFJ where competition could serve a useful purpose and [*388] those where some other allocation of resources remained necessary.<sup>13</sup>

[****20] III

National Gerimedical contends that the denial by Blue Cross of participating hospital status violated the antitrust laws. Blue Cross defends on the ground that it acted pursuant to the local HSA plan and only intended to further the purposes of the NHRDA. It argues that, despite the absence of any reference to the antitrust laws in the NHRDA, the creation of the planning structure summarized above implied a repeal of those laws, as applied to this conduct.

LEdHN[2] [1] [2]LEdHN[3] [3]On a number of occasions, this Court has faced similar claims of antitrust immunity in the context of various regulated industries. The general principles applicable to such [***99] claims are well established. HN2 [1] The antitrust laws represent a "fundamental national economic policy." Carnation Co. v. Pacific Westbound Conference, 383 U.S. 213, 218 (1966); see Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 398-399 [*2422] (1978). [****21] "Implied antitrust immunity is not favored, and can be justified only by a convincing showing of clear repugnancy between the antitrust laws and the regulatory system." United States v. National Association of Securities Dealers, 422 U.S. 694, 719-720 (1975); see Gordon v. New York Stock Exchange, 422 U.S. 659, 682 (1975); United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 350-351 [*389] (1963). "Repeal is to be regarded as implied only if necessary to make the [subsequent law] work, and even then only to the minimum extent necessary. This is the guiding principle to reconciliation of the two statutory schemes." Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 357 (1963).

LEdHN[4] [1] [4]To be sure, where Congress did intend to repeal the antitrust laws, that intent governs, United States v. National Association of Securities Dealers, supra; Gordon v. New York Stock Exchange, supra, but this intent must be clear. HN3 [1] [****22] Even when an industry is regulated substantially, this does not necessarily evidence an intent to repeal the antitrust laws with respect to every action taken within the industry. E. g., Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 372-375 (1973); United States v. Radio Corp. of America, 358 U.S. 334, 346 (1959). Intent to repeal the antitrust laws is much clearer when a regulatory agency has been empowered to authorize or require the type of conduct under antitrust challenge. E. g., United States v. National Association of Securities Dealers, supra, at 730-734; Gordon v. New York Stock Exchange, supra, at 689-690.

LEdHN[1B] [1] [1B]In the present case, we must apply these precedents to an industry with a regulatory structure quite different from those considered previously. The action challenged here was neither compelled nor approved by any governmental, regulatory body. Instead, it was a spontaneous response to the finding of an advisory planning body, the local HSA, that there was a surplus of acute-care hospital beds in the Kansas [****23] City area.

<sup>14</sup> [****24] Indeed, when respondents refused to enter into [*390] the agreement with petitioner, the regulatory aspects of the NHRDA -- controlled by the state health planning agencies -- were not in place in Missouri. There

<sup>13</sup> In a new subsection, 42 U. S. C. § 300k-2 (b)(1) (1976 ed., Supp. IV), Congress made the finding that "the effect of competition on decisions of providers respecting the supply of health services and facilities is diminished," causing "duplication and excess supply of certain health services and facilities." It added that where "competition appropriately allocates supply consistent with health systems plans and State health plans," planning agencies should "give priority . . . to actions which would strengthen the effect of competition on the supply of such services." § 300k-2 (b)(3). But, for "health services, such as inpatient health services and other institutional health services, for which competition does not or will not appropriately allocate supply," agencies should "take actions . . . to allocate the supply of such services." § 300k-3 (b)(2).

<sup>14</sup> Significantly, the MAHSA health systems plan only called on insurers to create incentives to hold down the costs of care in existing institutions, and made no mention of a role for insurers in restraining unneeded hospital construction. The plan calls on the "reimbursement system [to] promote appropriate utilization of hospital services, provide positive incentives for efficient institutions, actively encourage utilization of less costly but equal quality alternatives to inpatient care, and develop uniform reimbursement programs." App. 67a. But it then asserts that "[capital] investment in institutions [shall] be controlled by an appropriate review agency." Ibid.

I I GÁMEJÉH I ÍÍHUELÁFÁJÓDÁG FÍ ÉEG GLÁ JÄSEÖAÉGA JÄEJJLÁFJÍ FÁMEJÉSÓYÓÁFOGAHEG

simply was no regulation of this hospital construction, as Missouri had not established any [**100] state regulatory agency with authority to review hospital construction.<sup>15</sup>

LEdHN[5] [5]As a result, the claim of implied antitrust immunity in this case is weaker than in previous cases. It cannot be argued that application of the antitrust laws to the conduct of Blue Cross would frustrate a particular provision of the NHRDA or create a conflict with the orders of any regulatory body. The record discloses no formal request from MAHSA to Blue Cross to refrain from accepting petitioner as a new [**2423] participating hospital. Even if [****25] such a request had been made, it could not have been more than the advice of a private planning body -- albeit a planning body created and funded by the Federal Government. This fact is crucial, because HN4[<sup>16</sup>] antitrust repeals are especially disfavored where the antitrust implications of a business decision have not been considered by a governmental entity. United States v. Radio Corp. of America, supra, at 339, 346; cf. Otter Tail, supra, at 374 ("When . . . relationships are governed in the first instance by business judgment and not regulatory coercion, courts must be hesitant to conclude that Congress intended to override the fundamental national policies embodied in the antitrust laws").

[*391] Respondents rely on the fact that a major function of an HSA is planning in order to eliminate unnecessary duplication of hospital services, 42 U. S. C. § 300l-2 (a)(4) (1976 ed., Supp. IV), and point to statutory language requiring each HSA to "seek, to the extent practicable, to implement its [health plans] with the assistance [****26] of individuals and public and private entities in its health service area," § 300l-2 (c)(1). Here, respondents argue, the HSA found that petitioner was duplicating hospital facilities unnecessarily, and Blue Cross merely sought to aid in the "implementation" of that finding.

LEdHN[1C] [1C]We are unpersuaded, however, that the provisions cited by respondents are sufficient to create a "clear repugnancy" between the NHRDA and the antitrust laws, at least on the facts of this case. See n. 18, infra. Nothing in the NHRDA requires Blue Cross to take an action that, in essence, sought to enforce the advisory decision of MAHSA. HSA's themselves are required to seek private cooperation only "to the extent practicable." 42 U. S. C. § 300l-2 (c)(1). And there is no reason to believe that Congress specifically contemplated such "enforcement" by private insurance providers, let alone relied on such actions to put "teeth" into the noncompulsory local planning process. Congress expected HSA planning to be implemented mainly through persuasion and cooperation. If an HSA recommendation [****27] could be used to justify antitrust immunity for such an act of private enforcement, this effectively would give that [***101] recommendation greater force than Congress intended.<sup>16</sup>

As there is no direct conflict between the requirements of the NHRDA and the Sherman Act with respect to the conduct at issue here, respondents' only remaining argument must be that the NHRDA immunizes all private conduct [*392] undertaken in response to the health planning process. Arguably, the fundamental assumption of Congress, particularly in 1974 when it passed the original Act,<sup>17</sup> was that competition was not a relevant consideration in the health-care industry. If so, although that industry is not regulated in any comprehensive fashion, it might [****28] be concluded that Congress intended "pervasive" cooperation and planning without the interference of antitrust suits.

<sup>15</sup> See n. 7, supra. If it had done so, this case probably would not have arisen. The state agency would have conditioned all hospital construction on issuance of a "certificate of need." See supra, at 385-386. Parties pursuing hospital construction without a certificate of need would now be subject to legal penalties. 42 U. S. C. § 300m-2 (a)(4)(A) (1976 ed., Supp. IV).

Missouri subsequently has established a state agency and enacted "certificate of need" legislation. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 197.300 et seq. (Supp. 1980).

<sup>16</sup> Congress knew how to give an HSA policy greater legal effect. Under 42 U. S. C. § 300l-2 (e) (1976 ed., Supp. IV), HSA approval -- subject to review by the Secretary -- is required for expenditures of funds under certain federal programs.

<sup>17</sup> As noted supra, at 387-388, in 1979 competition was given a more prominent place in the thinking of Congress.

I Í GÁEÜÉJI Í ÉTHUGLÁEFÁUÉDÉG FÍ ÉTEG GLÀ JÁSEÓaÉGAÀ JÁEEFLÁJÌ FÁMEÉSÓYÓAÉGGÉTÉG

LEdHN[6] [6] This argument has some force, in light of the prominence Congress gave to the view that "the health care industry does not respond to classic marketplace forces." 1974 Senate Report, at 39. Perhaps it makes little sense in such a context to entertain antitrust suits intended to promote or protect free competition. It is clear, however, that respondents have failed to make the showing necessary for an exemption of all actions of health-care providers taken in response to planning recommendations. In other industrial contexts, we have refused such a blanket exemption, despite a clear congressional finding that some substitution of regulation for competition was necessary. [**2424] Carnation Co [****29] . v. Pacific Westbound Conference, 383 U.S., at 217-219 (maritime industry); Otter Tail, 410 U.S., at 373-374 (electric power industry). These holdings are based on the guiding principle that, where possible, "the proper approach . . . is an analysis which reconciles the operation of both statutory schemes with one another rather than holding one completely ousted." Silver, 373 U.S., at 357. There is no indication that Congress intended a different result with respect to the health-care industry. One manifestation of this is the fact that in the 1979 Amendments Congress did not alter the basic planning structure, even as it made plain its intent that "competition and consumer choice" are to be favored wherever they "can constructively serve . . . to advance the purposes of quality [*393] assurance, cost effectiveness, and access." 42 U. S. C. § 300k-2 (a)(17) (1976 ed., Supp. IV).<sup>18</sup>

[****30] LEdHN[1D] [1D] We [***102] hold, therefore, that HN5 [5] the NHRDA is not so incompatible with antitrust concerns as to create a "pervasive" repeal of the antitrust laws as applied to every action taken in response to the health-care planning process. Moreover, as discussed above, there was no specific conflict between the Act and the antitrust laws in this case. Although respondents may well have acted here with only the highest of motives in seeking to implement the plans of the local HSA, they cannot defeat petitioner's antitrust claim by the assertion of immunity from the requirements of the Sherman Act.<sup>19</sup> As a result, the judgment below must be reversed and the case remanded.

[****31] It is so ordered.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 190; 73 Am Jur 2d, Statutes 392-396

15 USCS 1, 2; 42 USCS 300k et seq.

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 20; Statutes 248.5

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; Statutes

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; Statutes

---

<sup>18</sup> Nevertheless, because Congress has remained convinced that competition does not operate effectively in some parts of the health-care industry, e. g., 42 U. S. C. § 300k-2 (b) (1976 ed., Supp. IV), we emphasize that our holding does not foreclose future claims of antitrust immunity in other factual contexts. Although favoring a reversal in this case, the United States as amicus curiae asserts that "there are some activities that must, by implication, be immune from antitrust attack if HSAs and State Agencies are to exercise their authorized powers." Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 16, n. 11. Where, for example, an HSA has expressly advocated a form of cost-saving cooperation among providers, it may be that antitrust immunity is "necessary to make the [NHRDA] work." Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 357 (1963). See 124 Cong. Rec. 34932 (1978) (Rep. Rogers) ("The intent of Congress was that HSA's and providers who voluntarily work with them in carrying out the HSA's statutory mandate should not be subject to the antitrust laws. If they were, Public Law 93-641 simply could not be implemented"). Such a case would differ substantially from the present one, where the conduct at issue is not cooperation among providers, but an insurer's refusal to deal with a provider that failed to heed the advice of an HSA.

<sup>19</sup> This holding does not, of course, suggest anything about the merits of the antitrust claim in this case. These matters remain to be litigated on remand, where the court should give attention to the particular economic context in which the alleged conspiracy and "refusal to deal" took place.

I Í GÁVÈJÉHÍ Ì ÆHULÁFÉAÙÈDÉG FÍ ÆEG G LÀ JÆSEØAÉGAÅ JÆFFEGLÁJÌ FÁVÈJÉSÓYØAÉGGÅH

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade; Repeal

Annotation References:

Applicability of federal antitrust laws as affected by other federal statutes or by Federal Constitution. 45 L Ed 2d 841.

Refusals to deal as violations of the federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1, 2, 23). 41 ALR Fed 175.

Valid governmental action [****32] as conferring immunity or exemption from private liability under the federal antitrust laws. 12 ALR Fed 329.

---

End of Document

Am. Soc'y of Mech. Eng'Rs v. Hydrolevel Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

January 13, 1982, Argued ; May 17, 1982, Decided

No. 80-1765

Reporter

456 U.S. 556 *; 102 S. Ct. 1935 **; 72 L. Ed. 2d 330 ***; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 3 ****; 50 U.S.L.W. 4512; 1982-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P64,730

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF MECHANICAL ENGINEERS, INC. v. HYDROLEVEL CORP.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 635 F.2d 118, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

apparent authority, anti trust law, Boiler, antitrust, subcommittee, fuel, cutoff, codes, antitrust violation, treble damages, nonprofit, Sherman Act, low-water, non profit organization, commercial enterprise, organizations, agency law, standard-setting, anticompetitive, reputation, purposes, antitrust liability, treble-damages, associations, effective, ratified, intent of congress, time delay, tax-exempt, customer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Apparent Authority > General Overview

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Agency Relationships > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Authority to Act > General Overview Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Negligent Acts of Agents > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Negligent Acts of Agents > Liability of Principals

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > General Overview

HN1[ Authority to Act, Apparent Authority

Under general rules of agency law, principals are liable when their agents act with apparent authority and commit torts.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Apparent Authority > General Overview

**HN2** Authority to Act, Apparent Authority

Apparent authority is the power to affect the legal relations of another person by transactions with third persons, professedly as agent for the other, arising from and in accordance with the other's manifestations to such third persons.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Apparent Authority > General Overview

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Agency Relationships > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > General Overview

**HN3** Authority to Act, Apparent Authority

Under an apparent authority theory, liability is based upon the fact that the agent's position facilitates the consummation of the fraud, in that from the point of view of the third person, the transaction seems regular on its face and the agent appears to be acting in the ordinary course of the business confided to him.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Apparent Authority > General Overview

**HN4** Authority to Act, Apparent Authority

The apparent authority theory is the settled rule in the federal system.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Types > General Agents

Governments > Courts > Common Law

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

**HN5** Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

Victorian common law does not define the limits of the antitrust private action. The court looks to the general principles of the common law for guidance in deciding the scope of the antitrust cause of action, but the court's decisions are determined by the congressional intent that led to the enactment of the antitrust laws, a desire to enhance competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN6 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust private cause of action is at least as broad as a plaintiff's right to sue for analogous torts, absent indications that the antitrust laws are not intended to reach so far.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Apparent Authority > General Overview

HN7 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

The apparent authority theory is consistent with the congressional intent, expressed in the antitrust laws, to encourage competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Apparent Authority > General Overview

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Availability > Employers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN8 [down] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Antitrust treble damages are designed in part to punish past violations of the antitrust laws. But treble damages are also designed to deter future antitrust violations. Moreover, the antitrust private action serves primarily as a remedy for the victims of antitrust violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Nonprofit Corporations & Organizations > General Overview

HN9 [down] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

Nonprofit organizations can be held liable under the antitrust laws.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Nonprofit association of mechanical engineers responsible for promulgation of industry codes, held civilly liable under antitrust laws for antitrust violations of its agents committed with apparent authority.

Summary

Shortly after the manufacturer of a low-water fuel cutoff, a safety device for heating boilers, secured an important customer, the company which had dominated the market for low-water fuel cutoffs became concerned. The vice-president of the dominant manufacturer, who was also vice-chairman of the subcommittee of the association of mechanical engineers which, among other things, promulgated and published codes and standards for areas of engineering and industry, including the code applicable to cutoffs, and several company officials met with the chairman of that subcommittee. They decided to send an inquiry to the association's committee concerned with boilers asking whether a fuel cutoff with a time delay--which was employed by the new manufacturer, but not employed in the dominant manufacturer's product--satisfied the requirements of the applicable association-promulgated code. The two individuals, as vice-chairman and chairman, respectively, of the relevant subcommittee cooperated in drafting a letter, one they thought would elicit a negative response. Following the association's standard routine, the chairman prepared a response which, in effect, declared the competitor's product unsafe. Salesmen of the dominant manufacturer used the response to discourage customers from buying the competitor's product, so that the manufacturer successfully used his position within the association in an effort to thwart the competitor's challenge. The competitor subsequently sought a correction from the association of the response, but continued to suffer marked resistance after the pertinent committee replied. After the vice-chairman's part in drafting the original letter of inquiry became public, the competitor filed an action in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York against the association, and other parties, alleging that their actions had violated 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 2). After the other parties settled, the lawsuit proceeded to trial against the association, as the remaining defendant. The competitor requested that the trial court instruct the jury that the association could be held liable under the antitrust laws for its agents' conduct if the agents acted within the scope of their apparent authority. The District Court rejected this approach and instead, at the association's suggestion, charged the jury that the association could be held liable only if it had ratified its agents' actions or the agents had acted in pursuit of the association's interests. The jury, nonetheless, returned a verdict for the competitor. The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit concluded that the association could be held liable if its agents had acted within the scope of their apparent authority, and since the District Court had delivered a charge that was more favorable to the defendant than the law requires, affirmed the jury's finding that the association was liable under 1 of the Sherman Act for its agents' actions (635 F2d 118).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Blackmun, J., joined by Brennan, Marshall, Stevens, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held that the association was civilly liable under the antitrust laws for the antitrust violations of its agents committed with apparent authority, this being consistent with the congressional intent to encourage competition, the imposition of treble damages not being inconsistent with the purposes of the antitrust laws and principles of agency law on the grounds that such damages are punitive and that under traditional agency law the courts do not employ apparent authority to impose punitive damages upon a principal for the acts of its agents, and the fact that the association was a nonprofit organization not weakening the force of the antitrust and agency principles that indicate that the association should be held liable for the competitor's antitrust injuries.

Burger, Ch. J., concurred in the judgment, agreeing that the judgment against the association should be affirmed since the association permitted itself to be used to further the scheme which caused injury to the competitor and at no time disavowed the challenged conduct of its members who misused their position in the association, and that under the instructions approved by the association and given by the District Court, the jury found that the association had ratified or adopted the conduct in question.

Powell, J., joined by White and Rehnquist, JJ., dissenting, expressed the view that the holding that standard-setting organizations may be held liable for the acts of their agents even though the organization never ratified, authorized, or derived any benefit whatsoever from the fraudulent activity of the agent and even though the agent acted solely for his private employer's gain, and the imposition of the potentially crippling burden of treble damages, was, at least as applied to nonprofit organizations, inconsistent with the weight of precedent and the intent of Congress, unsupported by the rules of agency law, and irrelevant to the achievement of the goals of the antitrust laws.

Headnotes

---

PRACTICES §12 > safety standards for low-water fuel cutoffs -- liability of nonprofit association of engineers -- agents acting with apparent authority -- imposition of treble damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]

A nonprofit membership association of mechanical engineers engaged in, among other things, the promulgation and publication of codes and standards for areas of engineering and industry is civilly liable under the antitrust laws for the antitrust violations of its agents committed with apparent authority--which violations arose when the chairman of one of the association's subcommittees helped a manufacturer of low-water fuel cutoffs for heating boilers request a ruling on the satisfaction of pertinent code requirements of a competitor's cutoffs and then prepared the association's response which in effect declared the competitor's product unsafe and which was used by the manufacturer's salesmen to discourage customers from buying the competitor's product--this being consistent with the congressional intent to encourage competition, the imposition of treble damages not being inconsistent with the purposes of the antitrust laws and principles of agency law on the grounds that such damages are punitive and that under traditional agency law the courts did not employ apparent authority to impose punitive damages upon a principal for the acts of its agents, and the fact that the association is a non-profit organization not weakening the force of the antitrust and agency principles that indicate that the association should be held liable for the competitor's antitrust injuries. (Powell, White and Rehnquist, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

AGENT §22 > principal's liability for agent's acting with apparent authority -- tortious actions of agent -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Under general rules of agency law, principals are liable when their agents act with apparent authority and commit torts analogous to antitrust violations; a principal is liable for an agent's fraud though the agent acts solely to benefit himself, if the agent acts with apparent authority; a principal is liable for an agent's misrepresentations that cause pecuniary loss to a third party, when the agent acts within the scope of the apparent authority; if an agent is guilty of defamation, the principal is liable so long as the agent was apparently authorized to make the defamatory statement; and a principal is responsible if an agent acting with apparent authority tortiously injures the business relations of a third person.

PRACTICES §7 > antitrust laws -- construction -- common law -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B]

Victorian common law does not define the limits of the antitrust private action; the United States Supreme Court will look to the general principles of the common law for guidance in deciding the scope of the antitrust cause of action, but its decisions are determined by the congressional intent that led to the enactment of the antitrust laws.

PRACTICES §9 > antitrust private cause of action -- breadth -- analogous torts -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The antitrust private cause of action is at least as broad as a plaintiff's right to sue for analogous torts, absent indications that the antitrust laws are not intended to reach so far.

PRACTICES §12 > antitrust laws -- liability of nonprofit organizations -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[5] [5]

Nonprofit organizations can be held liable under the antitrust laws.

Syllabus

---

Petitioner, a nonprofit membership corporation with over 90,000 members drawn from all fields of mechanical engineering, promulgates codes for areas of engineering and industry. Much of its work is done through volunteers from industry and government. The codes, while only advisory, have a powerful economic influence, many of them being incorporated by reference in federal regulations and state and local laws. Respondent marketed a safety device for use in water boilers and secured a customer that previously had purchased the competing product of McDonnell & Miller, Inc. (M&M). One of M&M's officials, a vice president (James), was vice chairman of petitioner's subcommittee that drafted, revised, and interpreted the segment of petitioner's [***2] code governing the safety device in question. Subsequently he and other M&M officials met with the subcommittee's chairman (Hardin). As a result, M&M sent a letter to petitioner asking whether a safety device with a feature such as one contained in respondent's device satisfied the pertinent code requirements. The letter was referred to Hardin, as chairman of the subcommittee, and ultimately an "unofficial response" was issued, prepared by Hardin but mailed on petitioner's stationery over the signature of one of petitioner's full-time employees. The response in effect declared respondent's product unsafe. Thereafter, M&M's salesmen used the subcommittee's response to discourage customers from buying respondent's product. Respondent subsequently sought a correction from petitioner of the unofficial response; respondent continued to suffer market resistance after the pertinent committee replied. After James' part in the drafting of the original letter of inquiry became public, respondent filed suit in Federal District Court against petitioner (and others who settled), alleging violation of the Sherman Act. The trial court rejected respondent's request for jury instructions that [***3] petitioner could be held liable for its agents' conduct if they acted within the scope of their apparent authority. Instead, the jury was instructed that petitioner could be held liable only if it had ratified its agents' actions or if the agents had acted in pursuit of petitioner's interests. The jury, nonetheless, returned a verdict for respondent. The Court of Appeals affirmed, concluding that petitioner could be held liable if its agents had acted within the scope of their apparent authority, and that thus the charge was more favorable to petitioner than the law required.

Held: Petitioner is civilly liable under the antitrust laws for the antitrust violations of its agents committed with apparent authority. Pp. 565-576.

(a) Under general rules of agency law, principals are liable when their agents act with apparent authority and commit torts analogous to the antitrust violation presented here. An agent who appears to have authority to make statements for his principal gives to his statements the weight of the principal's reputation -- in this case, the weight of petitioner's acknowledged expertise in boiler safety. Pp. 565-570.

(b) Petitioner's liability under a theory [***4] of apparent authority is consistent with the congressional intent behind the antitrust laws to encourage competition. Petitioner wields great power in the Nation's economy, and when it cloaks its subcommittee officials with the authority of its reputation, it permits those agents to affect the destinies of businesses and thus gives them the power -- as illustrated by the facts of this case -- to frustrate competition in the marketplace. A rule that imposes liability on the standard-setting organization -- which is best situated to prevent antitrust violations through the abuse of its reputation -- is most faithful to the congressional intent that the private right of action deter antitrust violations. On the other hand, a ratification rule would have anticompetitive effects, encouraging petitioner to do as little as possible to oversee its agents since it could avoid liability by ensuring that it remained ignorant of its agents' conduct. And a rule whereby petitioner would not be liable unless its agents acted with an intent to benefit petitioner would be irrelevant to the antitrust laws' purposes. The anticompetitive practices of petitioner's agents are repugnant to the antitrust [****5] laws even if the agents act without any intent to aid petitioner, and petitioner should be encouraged to eliminate the anticompetitive practices of all its agents acting with apparent authority, especially those who use their positions in petitioner solely for their own benefit or the benefit of their employers. Pp. 570-574.

(c) Application of the theory of apparent authority is not improper on the asserted ground that treble damages for antitrust violations are punitive and that under traditional agency law the courts do not employ apparent authority to impose punitive damages upon a principal for the acts of its agents. Since treble damages also serve as a means of deterring antitrust violations and of compensating victims, it is in accord with both the purposes of the antitrust laws and principles of agency law to hold petitioner liable for the acts of agents committed with apparent authority. Nor does the fact that petitioner is a nonprofit organization weaken the force of the antitrust and agency principles that indicate that it should be liable for respondent's antitrust injuries. Pp. 574-576.

Counsel: Harold R. Tyler, Jr., argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the [****6] briefs were Richard D. Parsons, Frederick T. Davis, and Steven C. Charen.

Carl W. Schwarz argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Stephen P. Murphy and William H. Barrett.

Deputy Solicitor General Shapiro argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging affirmance. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Lee, Assistant Attorney General Baxter, Barry Grossman, and Ernest J. Isenstadt. *

Judges: BLACKMUN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which [****7] BRENNAN, MARSHALL, STEVENS, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. BURGER, C. J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, post, p. 578. POWELL, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which WHITE and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined, post, p. 578.

Opinion by: BLACKMUN

Opinion

---

[*558] [***335] [**1938] JUSTICE BLACKMUN delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A]Petitioner, the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. (ASME), is a nonprofit membership corporation organized in 1880 under the laws of the State of New York. This case presents the important issue of the Society's civil liability under the antitrust laws for acts of its agents performed [*559] with apparent authority. Because the judgment of the Court of Appeals upholding civil liability is consistent with the central purposes of the antitrust laws, we affirm that judgment.

[**1939] I

ASME has over 90,000 members drawn from all fields of mechanical engineering. It has an annual operating budget of over $ 12 million. It employs a full-time staff, but much of its work is done through volunteers from

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed by Michael D. Brown for the American Association of Engineering Societies, Inc.; by Lewis H. Van Dusen, Jr., for the American Society for Testing and Materials; by Robert J. Siverd for the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, Inc.; by David Crump for the Legal Foundation of America; and by Daniel J. Piliero II for the National Fire Protection Association.

Merle L. Royce and James P. Chapman filed a brief for ECOS Electronic Corp. as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed by Henry A. Field, Jr., for Adolph J. Ackerman; and by Kim Zeitlin for the National Commission for Health Certifying Agencies.

industry and government. The Society engages [****8] in a number of activities, such as publishing a mechanical engineering magazine and conducting educational and research programs.

In addition, ASME promulgates and publishes over 400 separate codes and standards for areas of engineering and industry. These codes, while only advisory, have a powerful influence: federal regulations have incorporated many of them by reference, as have the laws of most States, the ordinances of major cities, and the laws of all the Provinces of Canada. See Brief for Petitioner 2. Obviously, if a manufacturer's product cannot satisfy the applicable ASME code, it is at a great disadvantage in the marketplace.

Among ASME's many sets of standards is its Boiler and Pressure Vessel Code. This set, like ASME's other codes, is very important in the affected industry; it has been adopted by 46 States and all but one of the Canadian Provinces. See id., at 5. Section IV of the code sets forth standards for components of heating boilers, including "low-water fuel cutoffs." If the water in a boiler drops below a level sufficient to moderate the boiler's temperature, the boiler can "dry fire" or even explode. A low-water fuel cutoff does what its name [****9] implies: when the water in the boiler falls below a certain level, the device blocks the flow of fuel to the boiler before the water level reaches a dangerously low point. To prevent dry firing and boiler explosions, para. HG-605 of Section IV provides that each boiler "shall have an automatic low-water fuel cutoff so located as to automatically cut [*560] off the fuel supply when the surface of the water falls to the lowest visible part of the water gage glass." Plaintiff's Exhibit 30A. See 635 F.2d 118, 121 \(CA2 1980\).

For some decades, McDonnell & Miller, Inc. (M&M), has dominated the market for low-water fuel cutoffs. [***336] But in the mid-1960's, respondent Hydrolevel Corporation entered the low-water fuel cutoff market with a different version of this device. The relevant distinction, for the purposes of this case, was that Hydrolevel's fuel cutoff, unlike M&M's, included a time delay.<sup>1</sup>

[****10] In early 1971, Hydrolevel secured an important customer. Brooklyn Union Gas Company, which had purchased M&M's product for several years, decided to switch to Hydrolevel's probe. Not surprisingly, M&M was concerned.

Because of its involvement in ASME, M&M was in an advantageous position to react to Hydrolevel's challenge. ASME's governing body had delegated the interpretation, formulation, and revision of the Boiler and Pressure Vessel Code to a Boiler and Pressure Vessel Committee. See App. 120. That committee in turn had authorized subcommittees to respond to public inquiries about the interpretation of the code. An M&M vice president, John W. James, was vice chairman of the subcommittee which drafted, revised, and interpreted Section IV, the segment of the Boiler and Pressure Vessel Code governing low-water fuel cutoffs.

After Hydrolevel obtained the Brooklyn Union Gas account, James and other M&M officials met with T. R. Hardin, [*561] the chairman [**1940] of the Section IV subcommittee.<sup>2</sup> The participants at the meeting planned a course of action. They decided to send an inquiry to ASME's Boiler and Pressure Vessel Committee asking whether a fuel cutoff with [****11] a time delay would satisfy the requirements of para. HG-605 of Section IV. James and Hardin, as vice chairman and chairman, respectively, of the relevant subcommittee, cooperated in drafting a letter, one they thought would elicit a negative response.

<sup>1</sup> M&M's fuel cutoff is a floating bulb that falls with the boiler's water level. When the level reaches the critical point, the bulb causes a switch to cut off the boiler's fuel supply. Hydrolevel's product, in contrast, was an immovable probe inserted in the side of the boiler; when the water level dropped below the probe, the fuel supply was interrupted. Because water in a boiler surges and bubbles, the level intermittently would seem to fall slightly below the probe even though the overall level remained safe. To prevent premature fuel cutoff because of these intermittent fluctuations, Hydrolevel's probe included a time delay that allowed the boiler to operate for a brief period after the water level dropped beneath the probe.

<sup>2</sup> Hardin was an executive vice president of Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company. A controlling interest in Hartford was owned by International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation, which acquired M&M within the year. See 635 F.2d 118, 122, n. 2 \(CA2 1980\).

The letter was mailed over the name of Eugene Mitchell, an M&M vice president, to W. Bradford Hoyt, secretary of the Boiler and Pressure Vessel Committee and a full-time ASME employee. App. 62. Following ASME's standard routine, Hoyt referred the letter to Hardin, as chairman of the subcommittee. Under the procedures of the Boiler and Pressure Vessel Committee, the subcommittee chairman -- Hardin -- could draft a response to a public inquiry without referring it to the entire [****12] subcommittee if he treated it as an "unofficial communication."

As a result, Hardin, one of the very authors of the inquiry, prepared the response. Id., at 63. Although he retained control over the [***337] inquiry by treating the response as "unofficial," the response was signed by Hoyt, secretary of the Boiler and Pressure Vessel Committee, and it was sent out on April 29, 1971, on ASME stationery. Id., at 64. Predictably, Hardin's prepared answer, utilized verbatim in the Hoyt letter, condemned fuel cutoffs that incorporated a time delay:

"A low-water fuel cut-off is considered strictly as a safety device and not as some kind of an operating control. Assuming that the water gage glass is located in accordance with the requirements of Par. HG-602(b), it is the intent of Par. HG-605(a) that the low-water fuel [*562] cut-off operate immediately and positively when the boiler water level falls to the lowest visible part of the water gage glass."

"There are many and varied designs of heating boilers. If a time delay feature were incorporated in a low-water fuel cut-off, there would be no positive assurance that the boiler water level would not fall to a dangerous [***13] point during a time delay period." Ibid.

As the Court of Appeals in this case observed, the second paragraph of the response does not follow from the first: "If the cut-off is positioned sufficiently above the lowest permissible water level, a cut-off with a time-delay could assure, even allowing for the delay, that the fuel supply would stop by the time the water fell to the lowest visible part of the water-gauge glass." 635 F.2d, at 122-123. Hoyt signed and mailed the response without checking its accuracy. See App. 124-126.

As anticipated, M&M seized upon this interpretation of Section IV to discourage customers from buying Hydrolevel's product. It instructed its salesmen to tell potential customers that Hydrolevel's fuel cutoff failed to satisfy ASME's code. See 635 F.2d, at 123. And M&M's employees did in fact carry the message of the subcommittee's response to customers interested in buying fuel cutoffs. Thus, M&M successfully used its position within ASME in an effort to thwart Hydrolevel's competitive challenge.

Several months later, Hydrolevel learned of the subcommittee interpretation from a former customer. Hydrolevel wrote ASME for [****14] a copy of the April 29 response. On February 8, 1972, over the signature of the assistant secretary of the Boiler and Pressure Vessel Committee, ASME sent Hydrolevel a letter quoting the two paragraphs of the April 29 interpretation of Section IV. App. 66-67.

[**1941] On March 23, Hydrolevel's president wrote Hoyt and demanded that ASME cure the effect of the April 29 letter by sending a correction to whomever might have received it. [*563] Id., at 68-73. Hoyt placed Hydrolevel's complaint on the agenda for the meetings of the Boiler and Pressure Vessel Committee and Subcommittee to be held on May 4 and 5.

On May 4, the subcommittee voted to confirm the intent of the first quoted paragraph of the April 29 letter. James, by then the chairman of the subcommittee, reported this recommendation to the committee on May 5. Id., at 82. Thereafter, the committee designated two persons to propose a response to Hydrolevel. Id., at 83. In the end, on June 9 the committee mailed Hydrolevel a reply that "confirmed the intent" of [***338] the April 29 letter. Id., at 84.

<sup>3</sup> The committee's letter further advised that there was

---

<sup>3</sup> Actually, the committee "confirmed the intent" of ASME's February 8, 1972, letter to Hydrolevel. That letter, however, simply quoted the original April 29, 1971, response. See App. 66-67.

"no intent in Section IV [****15] to prohibit the use of low water fuel cutoffs having time delays in order to meet the requirements of Par. HG-605(a). This paragraph relates itself to Par. HG-602(b) which specifically delineates the location of the lowest visible part of the water gage glass." Ibid.

The committee concluded the letter with a warning paragraph suggested by James, see id., at 111-112:

"If a means for retarding control action is incorporated in a low-water fuel cutoff, the termination of the retard function must operate to cutoff the fuel supply before the boiler water level falls below the visible part of the water gage glass." Id., at 84.

After this response to its complaint, Hydrolevel continued to suffer from market resistance. Two years later, the Wall Street Journal published an article describing Hydrolevel's predicament [****16] in trying to sell a fuel cutoff that many in the industry thought to be in violation of ASME's code. Wall Street Journal, July 9, 1974, p. 44, col. 1; App. 94-98. Reacting [*564] to this story, ASME's Professional Practice Committee opened an investigation. It never discovered that James had been involved with the original inquiry. In a resolution reporting the results of its investigation, the committee decided that all ASME officials had acted properly. Further, the Professional Practice Committee "[commended] [James] for conducting himself in a forthright manner." Id., at 104.

Subsequently, James' part in drafting the original letter of inquiry became public because of his testimony in March 1975 before a Senate Subcommittee. See Voluntary Industrial Standards: Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 94th Cong., 1st Sess., 186-199 (1975) (testimony of John W. James of M&M (ITT)); see also id., at 171-185 (testimony of Eugene Mitchell, Manager of Original Equipment Sales, ITT Fluid Handling Division). Within a few months, Hydrolevel filed suit against ITT, ASME, and Hartford in the United States [****17] District Court for the Eastern District of New York. Hydrolevel alleged that the defendants' actions had violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1 and 2. App. 11. Prior to trial, Hydrolevel sold all its assets, except this suit, for salvage value. Ultimately, ITT and Hartford settled.

The lawsuit proceeded to trial against ASME, as the remaining defendant. Hydrolevel requested the trial court to instruct the jury that ASME could be held liable under the antitrust laws for its agents' conduct if the agents acted within the scope of their apparent authority. See id., at 59. The District Court, however, rejected this approach and, instead, at ASME's suggestion, charged the jury that ASME could be held liable only if it had ratified its agents' actions or if the agents had acted in [***339] pursuit of ASME's interests. The District Court explained to the jury:

"[**1942] If the officers or agents act on behalf of interests adverse to the corporation or acted for their own economic benefit or the benefit of another person or corporation, [*565] and this action was not ratified or adopted by the defendant [ASME], their misconduct [****18] cannot be considered that of the corporation with which they are associated." Id., at 49.

The jury, nonetheless, returned a verdict for Hydrolevel.

Before the Court of Appeals, the parties disputed the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict based on the District Court's instruction. See 635 F.2d, at 125. But the Court of Appeals chose not to decide whether the evidence was sufficient to demonstrate that ASME had ratified its agents' actions or that the agents had acted to advance ASME's interests. Instead, after surveying the law of agency and the policies underlying the antitrust laws, the Court of Appeals concluded that ASME could be held liable if its agents had acted within the scope of their apparent authority. Id., at 124-127. Since, therefore, the District Court had delivered "a charge that was more favorable to the defendant than the law requires," id., at 127, the Court of Appeals affirmed the judgment on liability, that is, the jury's finding that ASME was liable under § 1 of the Sherman Act for its agents' actions.<sup>4</sup>

---

<sup>4</sup>The Court of Appeals remanded the case to the District Court after finding that the damages awarded Hydrolevel were excessive and that the District Court had made errors in its calculation of damages. 635 F.2d, at 128-131. The damages issue is the subject of a pending cross-petition for certiorari, No. 80-1771, filed April 22, 1981. Hydrolevel's damages arguments are not now before us, and we express no opinion on that aspect of the Court of Appeals' decision.

[****19] Because the Court of Appeals' decision presents an important issue concerning the interpretation of the antitrust laws, we granted certiorari. 452 U.S. 937 (1981).

II

A

LEdHN[2] [2]As the Court of Appeals observed, HN1 under general rules of agency law, principals are liable when their agents act with [*566] apparent authority<sup>5</sup> and commit torts analogous to the antitrust violation presented by this case. See generally 10 W. Fletcher, Cyclopedic of the Law of Private Corporations para. 4886, pp. 400-401 (rev. ed. 1978); W. Seavey, Law of Agency § 92 (1964). For instance, a principal is liable for an agent's fraud though the agent acts solely to benefit himself, if the agent acts with apparent authority. See, e. g., Standard Surety & Casualty Co. v. Plantsville Nat. Bank, 158 F.2d 422 (CA2 1946), cert. denied, 331 U.S. 812 (1947). Similarly, a principal is liable for an agent's misrepresentations that cause pecuniary loss to a third party, when the agent acts within [****20] the scope of his apparent authority. Restatement (Second) of Agency [***340] §§ 249, 262 (1957) (Restatement); see Rutherford v. Rideout Bank, 11 Cal. 2d 479, 80 P. 2d 978 (1938). Also, if an agent is guilty of defamation, the principal is liable so long as the agent was apparently authorized to make the defamatory statement. Restatement §§ 247, 254. Finally, a principal is responsible if an agent acting with apparent authority tortiously injures the business relations of a third person. Id., § 248 and Comment b, p. 548.

[****21] HN3 Under an apparent authority theory, "[liability] is based upon the fact that the agent's position facilitates the consummation of the fraud, in that from the point of view of the third person the transaction seems regular on its face and the agent appears to be acting in the ordinary course of the business confided to him." Id., § 261, Comment a, p. 571. See Record v. Wagner, 100 N. H. 419, 128 A. 2d 921 (1957). As with the April 29 letter issued by the [**1943] Boiler and Pressure Vessel Subcommittee, the injurious statements are "effective, in part at least, because of the personality of the one [*567] publishing it." Restatement § 247, Comment c, p. 545. In other words, "one who appears to have authority to make statements for the [principal] gives to his statements the weight of the [principal's] reputation," ibid. -- in this case, the weight of ASME's acknowledged expertise in boiler safety. See generally W. Prosser, Law of Torts 467 (4th ed. 1971).

ASME's system of codes and interpretative advice would not be effective if the statements of its agents did not carry with them the assurance that persons in the affected industries [****22] could reasonably rely upon their apparent trustworthiness. Behind the principal's liability under an apparent authority theory, then, is "business expediency -- the desire that third persons should be given reasonable protection in dealing with agents." Restatement § 262, Comment a, p. 572. See Ricketts v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 153 F.2d 757 (CA2 1946). The apparent authority theory thus benefits both ASME and the public whom ASME attempts to serve through its codes: "It is . . . for the ultimate interest of persons employing agents, as well as for the benefit of the public, that persons dealing with agents should be able to rely upon apparently true statements by agents who are purporting to act and are apparently acting in the interests of the principal." Restatement § 262, Comment a, p. 572.

HN4 The apparent authority theory has long been the settled rule in the federal system. See Ricketts v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 153 F.2d, at 759. In Friedlander v. Texas & Pacific R. Co., 130 U.S. 416 (1889), the Court held that an [****23] employer was not liable for the fraud of his agent, when the employer could derive no benefit from the agent's fraud. But Gleason v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 278 U.S. 349 (1929), discarded that rule. In Gleason, a railroad's employee sought to enrich himself by defrauding a customer of the railroad through a forged bill of lading. The Court of Appeals had absolved the railroad from liability because the employee perpetrated the fraud solely for his own benefit. But this Court reversed, [*568] overruling Friedlander. 278 U.S., at 357. Noting that "there was . . . no want of authority in the agent," id., at 355, the Court held the railroad [***341] liable despite the agent's desire to benefit only himself. It explained that "few doctrines of the law are more firmly established or more in harmony with accepted notions of social policy than that of the liability of the principal without fault of his own." Id., at 356.

---

<sup>5</sup> HN2 "Apparent authority is the power to affect the legal relations of another person by transactions with third persons, professedly as agent for the other, arising from and in accordance with the other's manifestations to such third persons." Restatement (Second) of Agency § 8 (1957).

456 U.S. 556, *568; 102 S. Ct. 1935, **1943; 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, ***341; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 3, ****23

LEdHN/3A[↑] [3A]In a wide variety of areas, the federal courts, like this Court in Gleason, have imposed [****24] liability upon principals for the misdeeds of agents acting with apparent authority. See, e. g., Dark v. United States, 641 F.2d 805 (CA9 1981) (federal tax liability); National Acceptance Co. v. Coal Producers Assn., 604 F.2d 540 (CA7 1979) (common-law fraud); Holloway v. Howerdd, 536 F.2d 690 (CA6 1976) (federal securities fraud); United States v. Sanchez, 521 F.2d 244 (CA5 1975) (bail bond fraud), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 817 (1976); Kerbs v. Fall River Industries, Inc., 502 F.2d 731 (CA10 1974) (federal securities fraud); Gilmore v. Constitution Life Ins. Co., 502 F.2d 1344 (CA10 1974) (common-law fraud).<sup>6</sup>

[****25]

[*569] [**1944] LEdHN/4[↑] [4]In the past, the Court has refused to permit broad common-law barriers to relief to constrict the antitrust private right of action. Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts [***342] Corp., 392 U.S. 134 (1968). It stated there that "the purposes of the antitrust laws are best served by insuring that the private action will be an ever-present threat" to deter antitrust violations. Id., at 139. In Perma Life Mufflers, the Court honored that purpose by denying defendants the right to invoke a common-law defense (the doctrine of in pari delicto) that was inconsistent with the antitrust laws. In this case, we can honor the statutory purpose best by interpreting HN6[↑] the antitrust private cause of action to be at least as broad as a plaintiff's right to sue for analogous torts, absent indications that the antitrust laws are not intended to reach so far. See Texas Industries, Inc. v. Radcliff Materials, Inc., 451 U.S. 630, 639 (1981); [****26] Perma Life Mufflers, [*570] 392 U.S., at 138.

<sup>6</sup>The dissent delves into the agency law of the late 19th century and concludes that "it was far from clear" that a principal could be held liable for the deliberate torts of his agent. Post, at 587. But in fact, while there was a division of authority, many courts had made it very clear that principals could be held liable for torts analogous to the antitrust violations committed by ASME's agents.

For instance, a treatise of that era noted that a "considerable number of American courts" had held the principal liable for the agent's fraud, though the agent acted solely for his own benefit, and praised a leading opinion for its "singular ability and lucidity." E. Huffcut, Elements of the Law of Agency § 155, p. 168 (1895). Indeed, the author commented that the cases holding a principal liable when his agent acted with apparent authority and for the agent's sole benefit were "too various to be referred to in detail." Id., § 157.

In holding a telegraph company liable for the fraud of its agent committed solely for his personal benefit, one court summarized the reasoning that became widespread during the last half of the 19th century: "Persons receiving dispatches in the usual course of business, when there is nothing to excite suspicion, are entitled to rely upon the presumption that the agents intrusted with the performance of the business of the company have faithfully and honestly discharged the duty owed by it to its patrons, and that they would not knowingly send a false or forged message." McCord v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Minn. 181, 185, 39 N. W. 315, 317 (1888). See, e. g., Bank of Batavia v. New York, L.E. & W.R. Co., 106 N. Y. 195, 12 N. E. 433 (1887).

LEdHN/3B[↑] [3B]Thus, based on the agency law of the late 19th century, there is ample support for holding ASME liable, particularly since Congress intended that the antitrust laws be given broad, remedial effect. See, e. g., Pfizer Inc. v. Government of India, 434 U.S. 308, 312-313 (1978). But, as we have made clear before, HN5[↑] Victorian common law does not define the limits of the antitrust private action. Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134 (1968) (refusing to apply the ancient defense of in pari delicto in antitrust cases). We look to the general principles of the common law for guidance in deciding the scope of the antitrust cause of action, see National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 688 (1978), but our decisions are determined by the congressional intent that led to the enactment of the antitrust laws, a desire to enhance competition, see id., at 688, 691. Here, general agency principles would lead to a finding of liability if the violation in this case were a mere tort; and imposing liability on ASME in accord with those common-law principles honors the congressional intent behind the antitrust statutes.

Our remaining inquiry, then, is whether ASME's liability under a theory of apparent authority is consistent with the intent behind the antitrust laws.<sup>7</sup>

[****27] B

LEdHN[1B] [1B] We hold that HN7 the apparent authority theory is consistent with the congressional intent to encourage competition. ASME wields great power in the Nation's economy. [**1945] Its codes and standards influence the policies of numerous States and cities, and, as has been said about "so-called voluntary standards" generally, its interpretations of its guidelines "may result in economic prosperity or economic failure, for a number of businesses of all sizes throughout the country," as well as entire segments of an industry. H. R. Rep. No. 1981, 90th Cong., 2d Sess., 75 (1968). ASME can be said to be "in reality an extra-governmental agency, which prescribes rules for the regulation and restraint of interstate commerce." Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457, 465 (1941). When it cloaks its subcommittee officials with the authority of its reputation, [*571] ASME permits those agents to affect the destinies of businesses and thus gives them the power to frustrate [****28] competition in the marketplace.

The facts of this case dramatically illustrate the power of ASME's agents to restrain competition. M&M instigated the submission of a [***343] single inquiry to an ASME subcommittee. For its efforts, M&M secured a mere "unofficial" response authored by a single ASME subcommittee chairman. Yet the force of ASME's reputation is so great that M&M was able to use that one "unofficial" response to injure seriously the business of a competitor.

Furthermore, a standard-setting organization like ASME can be rife with opportunities for anticompetitive activity. Many of ASME's officials are associated with members of the industries regulated by ASME's codes. Although, undoubtedly, most serve ASME without concern for the interests of their corporate employers, some may well view their positions with ASME, at least in part, as an opportunity to benefit their employers. When the great influence of ASME's reputation is placed at their disposal, the less altruistic of ASME's agents have an opportunity to harm their employers' competitors through manipulation of ASME's codes.<sup>8</sup>

[****29] Again, the facts of this case are illustrative. Hardin was able to issue an interpretation of ASME's Boiler and Pressure Vessel Code which in effect declared Hydrolevel's product unsafe. Hardin's interpretation of the code was sent out [*572] under Hoyt's name as secretary of the committee, though Hoyt exercised only ministerial duties and played no role in confirming the substance of the April 29, 1971, letter. See App. 125-126. Thus,

<sup>7</sup> Evidently, in recent years no Court of Appeals other than the Second Circuit has directly decided whether a principal can be held liable for antitrust damages based on an apparent authority theory. But cf. Truck Drivers' Local No. 421 v. United States, 128 F.2d 227 (CA8 1942). The dissent cites several cases, stating that they appear to reject antitrust liability based on apparent authority. See post, at 581-582, and n. 6. United States v. Cadillac Overall Supply Co., 568 F.2d 1078, 1090 (CA5), cert. denied, 437 U.S. 903 (1978); United States v. Hilton Hotels Corp., 467 F.2d 1000, 1004-1007 (CA9 1972), cert. denied sub nom. Western International Hotels Co. v. United States, 409 U.S. 1125 (1973); United States v. American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corp., 433 F.2d 174, 204 (CA3 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 948 (1971). A fair reading of those cases, however, reveals that they did not discuss the merits of an apparent authority theory of antitrust liability. The dissent then dismisses other cases that also do not directly discuss the validity of the apparent authority theory, but that contain language approving apparent authority instructions, see post, at 583-584, n. 8. United States v. Continental Group, Inc., 603 F.2d 444, 468, n. 5 (CA3 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1032 (1980); Continental Baking Co. v. United States, 281 F.2d 137, 150-151 (CA6 1960).

<sup>8</sup> For example, James' employer did not overlook his usefulness as an ASME official. In November 1973, even after the Hydrolevel events had taken place, an M&M executive recommended that James be retained by M&M. The recommendation stated:

"A major reason for the continued success at M&M is a result of [James'] efforts and skill in influencing the various code making bodies to 'legislate' in favor of M&M products. This has been a planned strategy for the business under E. N. McDonnell and carried out with considerable success as evidenced by the M&M market penetration of 70 plus %." App. 86.

The writer emphasized a number of James' ASME activities, including: "Member of main boiler and pressure code committee" and "Chairman of the heating boiler sub-committee (section 4)." Ibid.

without any meaningful safeguards,<sup>9</sup> ASME entrusted the interpretation of one of its codes to Hardin. As a result, M&M was able to use ASME's reputation to hinder Hydrolevel's competitive threat.

[****30] A principal purpose of the antitrust private cause of action, see 15 U. S. C. § 15, is, of course, to deter anticompetitive practices. Pfizer Inc. v. Government of India, 434 U.S. 308, 314 \(1978\); Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S., at 139; see Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., [442 U.S. 330, 342-344 \[\*\*1946\] \(1979\)](#). It is true that imposing liability on ASME's agents themselves will have some deterrent effect, because they will know that if they violate the antitrust laws through their participation in ASME, they risk the consequences of personal civil liability. But if, in addition, ASME is civilly liable for the antitrust violations of its agents acting with apparent authority, it is much more likely that [***344] similar antitrust violations will not occur in the future. "[Pressure] [will be] brought on [the organization] to see to it that [its] agents abide by the law." United States v. A & P Trucking Co., 358 U.S. 121, 126 \(1958\). Only ASME can take systematic steps to make improper conduct on the part of all its agents unlikely, [****31] and the possibility of civil liability will inevitably be a powerful incentive for ASME to take those steps.<sup>10</sup> Thus, a rule that imposes liability on the [*573] standard-setting organization -- which is best situated to prevent antitrust violations through the abuse of its reputation -- is most faithful to the congressional intent that the private right of action deter antitrust violations.<sup>11</sup>

[****32] The wisdom of the apparent authority rule becomes evident when it is compared to the alternative approaches advanced by the District Court's instructions to the jury, see supra, at 564-565, and advocated by ASME.<sup>12</sup> First, ASME insists that it should not be held liable unless it ratified the actions of its agents. But a ratification rule would have anticompetitive effects, directly contrary to the purposes of the antitrust laws. ASME could avoid liability by ensuring that it remained ignorant of its agents' conduct, and the antitrust laws would therefore encourage ASME to do as little as possible to oversee its agents. Thus, ASME's ratification theory would actually enhance the likelihood that the Society's reputation would be used for anticompetitive ends.

[****33] Second, ASME contends that it should not be held liable unless its agents act with an intent to benefit the Society. This proposed rule falls short, though, because it is simply irrelevant to the purposes of the antitrust laws. Whether [*574] they intend to benefit ASME or not, ASME's agents exercise economic power because they act with the force of the Society's reputation behind them. And, whether they act in part to benefit ASME or solely to benefit themselves or their employers, ASME's agents can have the same [***345] anticompetitive effects on the marketplace. The anticompetitive practices of ASME's agents are repugnant to the antitrust laws even if the agents

<sup>9</sup> ASME suggests that Hardin's response did undergo a form of committee review, because he sent copies to the chairman and vice chairman of the full committee. Brief for Petitioner 8. But there is no indication that those officers carefully scrutinized Hardin's response. And certainly they will be encouraged to give responses a closer look in the future if ASME is subject to antitrust liability under an apparent authority theory.

<sup>10</sup> Permitting private plaintiffs to sue defendants like ASME will make that incentive especially powerful, because private suits are an important element of the Nation's antitrust enforcement effort:

"Congress created the treble-damages remedy . . . precisely for the purpose of encouraging private challenges to antitrust violations. These private suits provide a significant supplement to the limited resources available to the Department of Justice for enforcing the antitrust laws and deterring violations." Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 344 \(1979\) (emphasis in original).

<sup>11</sup> The apparent authority rule is also consistent with the congressional desire that the antitrust laws sweep broadly. Congress extended antitrust liability to "every person," 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, and defined "person" to include corporations and associations, 15 U. S. C. § 7.

<sup>12</sup> ASME insists that the Court foreclosed imposition of civil antitrust liability based on apparent authority in Mine Workers v. Coronado Coal Co., 259 U.S. 344 \(1922\), and Coronado Coal Co. v. Mine Workers, 268 U.S. 295 \(1925\). Those cases, however, are not controlling here. The Court expressly pointed out: "Here it is not a question . . . of holding out an appearance of authority on which some third person acts." 259 U.S., at 395; 268 U.S., at 304-305. In fact, it noted: "A corporation is responsible for the wrongs committed by its agents in the course of its business, and this principle is enforced against the contention that torts are ultra vires of the corporation." 259 U.S., at 395; 268 U.S., at 304.

456 U.S. 556, *574; 102 S. Ct. 1935, **1946; 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, ***345; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 3, ****33

act without any intent to aid ASME, and ASME should be encouraged to eliminate the anticompetitive practices of all its agents acting with apparent authority, especially those who use their positions in [**1947] ASME solely for their own benefit or the benefit of their employers.<sup>13</sup>

[****34] C

LEdHN[1C] [↑] [1C]Finally, ASME makes two additional arguments in an attempt to avoid antitrust liability. It characterizes treble damages for antitrust violations as punitive, and urges that [*575] under traditional agency law the courts do not employ apparent authority to impose punitive damages upon a principal for the acts of its agents. See Lake Shore & M.S.R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U.S. 101 (1893); United States v. Ridglea State Bank, 357 F.2d 495 (CA5 1966); see also Restatement § 217C.<sup>14</sup> It is true that HN8 [↑] antitrust treble damages were designed in part to punish past violations of the antitrust laws. See Texas Industries, Inc. v. Radcliff Materials, Inc., 451 U.S., at 639. But treble damages were also designed to deter future antitrust [***346] violations. Ibid. Moreover, the antitrust private action was created primarily as a remedy for the victims of antitrust violations. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 485-486 (1977); [****35] see Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 746-747 (1977). Treble damages "make the remedy meaningful by counterbalancing 'the difficulty of maintaining a private suit'" under the antitrust laws. Brunswick Corp., supra, at 486, n. 10, quoting 21 Cong. Rec. 2456 (1890) (remarks of Sen. Sherman). Since treble damages serve as a means of deterring [*576] antitrust violations and of compensating victims, it is in accord with both the purposes of the antitrust laws and principles of agency law to hold ASME liable for the acts of agents committed with apparent authority. See Restatement § 217C, Comment c, p. 474 (rule limiting principal's liability for punitive damages does not apply to special statutes giving triple damages).

[****36]

<sup>13</sup> The dissent argues, unconvincingly to us, that imposing antitrust liability on ASME will not advance enforcement of the antitrust laws.

The dissent claims that the apparent authority rule will "[encourage] plaintiffs to seek recovery from nonprofit organizations, rather than from the commercial enterprises that benefited from the violation." Post, at 591. Here, the dissent engages in "curious reasoning," see ibid., because today's decision does not encourage a plaintiff to sue any particular defendant to the exclusion of others; it merely lists organizations like ASME among the possible defendants in cases similar to this one. Indeed, although the litigation in this case ended with ASME as the only remaining defendant, it seems likely that, in general, a plaintiff will prefer to bring a corporate defendant like M&M (ITT) before a jury, rather than a nonprofit organization that understandably may appeal to a jury's sympathies and that may not provide so deep a pocket as a commercial enterprise.

In addition, the dissent insists that ASME and other such organizations cannot take steps to reduce the likelihood that antitrust violations like the one that occurred in this case will take place in the future. Post, at 591-592, n. 17. Evidently ASME does not agree, because it has instituted new procedures specifically in response to this suit. See n. 15, infra. The dissent simply refuses to accept that ASME and other such organizations can react to potential antitrust liability by making their associations less subject to fraudulent manipulation.

<sup>14</sup> A majority of courts, however, have held corporations liable for punitive damages imposed because of the acts of their agents, in the absence of approval or ratification. See W. Prosser, Law of Torts 12 (4th ed. 1971). E. g., Kelite Products, Inc. v. Binzel, 224 F.2d 131, 144 (CA5 1955) ("[The] jury may in its discretion assess punitive damages against a corporate defendant for oppressive acts of its agent done in the course of his employment, regardless of actual authority or ratification"); Mayo Hotel Co. v. Danciger, 143 Okla. 196, 200, 288 P. 309, 313 (1930) (holding corporate principal liable for punitive damages, noting that "the legal malice of the servant is the legal malice of the corporation"). In fact, the Court may have departed from the trend of late 19th-century decisions when it issued Lake Shore & M.S.R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U.S. 101 (1893), requiring the principal's participation, approval, or ratification. See Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Holdfoot, 86 Ill. 455, 459 (1877) ("if the wrongful act of the agent is perpetrated while ostensibly discharging duties within the scope of the corporate purposes, the corporation may be liable to vindictive damages"); see also Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lawrence, 74 Miss. 782, 803-805, 22 So. 53, 57-59 (1897); Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 57 Me. 202, 223-224 (1869).

[**1948] [LEDHN\[5\]](#) [5]In addition, ASME contends it should not bear the risk of loss for antitrust violations committed by its agents acting with apparent authority because it is a nonprofit organization, not a business seeking profit. But it is beyond debate that HN9 nonprofit organizations can be held liable under the antitrust laws. See, e. g., Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656 (1961); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1 (1945). Although ASME may not operate for profit, it does derive benefits from its codes, including the fees the Society receives for its code-related publications and services, the prestige the codes bring to the Society, the influence they permit ASME to wield, and the aid the standards provide the profession of mechanical engineering. Since the antitrust violation in this case could not have occurred without ASME's codes and ASME's method of administering them, it is not unfitting that ASME be liable for the damages [***37] arising from that violation. See W. Prosser, Law of Torts 459 (4th ed. 1971); W. Seavey, Law of Agency § 83 (1964). Furthermore, as shown above, ASME is in the best position to take precautions that will prevent future antitrust violations.<sup>15</sup> Thus, the fact that ASME is a nonprofit organization does not weaken the force of the antitrust and agency principles that [***347] indicate that ASME should be liable for Hydrolevel's antitrust injuries.

[***38] [*577] III

[LEDHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]We need not delineate today the outer boundaries of the antitrust liability of standard-setting organizations for the actions of their agents committed with apparent authority. There is no doubt here that Hardin acted within his apparent authority when he answered an inquiry about ASME's Boiler and Pressure Vessel Code as the chairman of the relevant ASME subcommittee. And in this case, we do not face a challenge to a good-faith interpretation of an ASME code reasonably supported by health or safety considerations. See Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341 (1963). We have no difficulty in finding that this set of facts falls well within the scope of ASME's liability on an apparent authority theory.

When ASME's agents act in its name, they are able to affect the lives of large numbers of people and the competitive fortunes of businesses throughout the country. By holding ASME liable under the antitrust laws for the antitrust violations of its agents committed with apparent authority, we recognize the important role of ASME and its agents in the economy, [***39] and we help to ensure that standard-setting organizations will act with care when they permit their agents to [*578] speak for them. We thus make it less likely that competitive challengers like Hydrolevel will be hindered by agents of organizations like ASME in the future.

[**1949] The judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed.

So ordered.

Concur by: BURGER

Concur

---

<sup>15</sup>Indeed, ASME has initiated procedures to protect against similar misadventures in the future. After its experience with the Hydrolevel affair, ASME began issuing a publication containing all written technical inquiries pertaining to codes and their interpretations, a publication available through subscription. See ASME Court of Appeals Exhibit Volume, p. 110; App. in Nos. 79-7254, 79-7260 (CA2), pp. 784 and 804. Apparently, ASME now gives its interpretations close scrutiny through the publication process. According to the publication's foreword, "[in] some few instances, a review of the interpretation revealed a need for corrections of a technical nature." In those cases, ASME published "a corrected interpretation . . . immediately after the original reply." See Interpretations, ASME Boiler and Pressure Vessel Code, Foreword (No. 7: Replies to Technical Inquiries January 1, 1980, through June 30, 1980). In addition, the readers are advised that ASME may reconsider its interpretation "when or if additional information is available which the inquirer believes might affect the interpretation." Ibid.

ASME's new procedure illustrates that the standard-setting organization itself is in the best position to prevent antitrust violations committed by its agents acting with apparent authority, and therefore that the policies of antitrust and agency law call for imposition of liability upon ASME.

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER, concurring in the judgment.

I concur in the judgment. However, I do not agree with the reasoning that leads the Court to its conclusion. I agree with the result reached since petitioner permitted itself to be used to further the scheme which caused injury to respondent. At no time did petitioner disavow the challenged conduct of its members who misused their positions in the Society. Under the instructions approved by petitioner and given by the District Court, the jury found that petitioner had "ratified or adopted" the conduct in question. * On that basis the judgment against petitioner should be affirmed but no general rule can appropriately be drawn from the Court's holding.

[****40]

Dissent by: POWELL

Dissent

---

[***348] JUSTICE POWELL, with whom JUSTICE WHITE and JUSTICE REHNQUIST join, dissenting.

The Court today adopts an unprecedented theory of antitrust liability, one applied specifically to a nonprofit, standard-setting association but a theory with undefined boundaries that could encompass a broad spectrum of our country's nonprofit associations. The theory, based on the agency concept of "apparent authority," would impose the potentially [*579] crippling burden of treble damages. In this case, the Court specifically holds that standard-setting organizations may be held liable for the acts of their agents even though the organization never ratified, authorized, or derived any benefit whatsoever from the fraudulent activity of the agent and even though the agent acted solely for his private employer's gain. In my view such an expansive rule of strict liability, at least as applied to nonprofit organizations, is inconsistent with the weight of precedent and the intent of Congress, unsupported by the rules of agency law that the Court purports to apply, and irrelevant to the achievement of the goals of the antitrust laws. Accordingly, I dissent.

I

The [****41] American Society of Mechanical Engineers (ASME) is a nonprofit, tax-exempt, membership corporation with over 90,000 members. Among its many activities, ASME drafts over 400 codes and standards. These codes have been developed through the voluntary efforts of ASME's members, and are a valuable public service. The Boiler and Pressure Vessel Code, relevant in this case, is some 18,000 pages in length. In addition to preparing codes and standards, ASME members -- through committees -- perform the further service of responding to public inquiries concerning interpretation of the codes. Some measure of the extent of this service can be gathered from the 20,000-30,000 inquiries a year received by the organization concerning just the Boiler and Pressure Vessel Code alone. As a result of a fraudulent answer given by an ASME subcommittee chairman to one of these thousands of inquiries, the entire organization has been exposed to potentially crippling liability.<sup>1</sup>

---

* The District Court instructed the jury that it could find petitioner liable for the acts of its members only if they acted on behalf of the corporation within the scope of their actual authority or if the corporation thereafter ratified or adopted their acts. Judge Weinstein refused to give the apparent authority instruction proposed by respondent. Nevertheless, the Court of Appeals did not rest on the narrow ratification theory underlying the District Court judgment, but instead reached out to decide that petitioner is liable for the acts of its members if those acts are found to be within their apparent authority: the jury never found liability on that theory and the Court of Appeals went "out of bounds." I regard that aspect of the Court of Appeals' opinion and that part of the Court's opinion today as dictum not essential to support the result reached.

<sup>1</sup> The District Court entered a judgment against ASME in an amount in excess of $ 7 million -- a sum that would destroy many such organizations. By contrast McDonnell & Miller, Inc., and Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Co., commercial enterprises owned by International Telephone and Telegraph Corp., and the beneficiaries of the fraudulent conduct in this case, have settled for $ 725,000 and $ 75,000 respectively. Curiously, the Court speaks of the "wisdom" of a rule that encourages such an inequitable result. Ante, at 573. The Court correctly notes that the Court of Appeals reversed the damages award

[****42] [*580] [**1950] Of course, nonprofit associations are subject to the antitrust laws. The Court has so held on several occasions. See Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773 (1975).<sup>2</sup> [****43] Yet the Court also has noted that the antitrust [***349] laws need not be applied to professional organizations in precisely the same manner as they are applied to commercial enterprises. In Goldfarb, supra, for example, the Court recognized that "[it] would be unrealistic to view the practice of professions as interchangeable with other business activities, and automatically to apply to the professions antitrust concepts that originated in other areas."<sup>3</sup> Id., at 788, n. 17. In view of this recognition, one would not have expected the Court to take [*581] the occasion of this case to promulgate an expansive rule of antitrust liability not heretofore applied by it to a commercial enterprise much less to a nonprofit organization.

Indeed, the Court points to no case in which any court has held the apparent authority theory of liability applicable in an antitrust case. Nor does the Court cite a single decision in which the apparent authority theory of liability has been applied in a case involving treble or punitive damages and an agent who acts without any intention of benefiting the principal.<sup>4</sup> In a word, the Court makes new law, largely ignoring existing precedent.

[****44] In Mine Workers v. Coronado Coal Co., 259 U.S. 344 (1922), and Coronado Coal Co. v. Mine Workers, 268 U.S. 295 (1925), the Court held that the national union was not liable as principal for the antitrust violations of the local union. The Court was hesitant to impose treble-damages liability on a membership organization in the absence of clear evidence showing ratification or authorization.<sup>5</sup> [****45] Even in the context [*582] of against ASME and remanded for a new estimation. Perhaps the final award against ASME will be substantially less than the $ 7.5 million judgment originally entered. Yet there is no assurance of this.

<sup>2</sup> Although associations now are viewed as being within the scope of the antitrust laws, to my knowledge this is the first case in which the Court has held explicitly that a nonprofit, tax-exempt association is subject to treble-damages liability. Cf. Areeda, Antitrust Immunity for "State Action" After Lafayette, 95 Harv. L. Rev. 435, 455 (1981) (footnote omitted) ("[Antitrust] liability does not necessarily call for a damage remedy. . . . The Supreme Court may come to agree that antitrust liability may vary according to the remedies sought").

ASME refers to itself as a "society." I use the words "organization" and "association" interchangeably to describe a broad range of nonprofit, membership entities and tax-exempt organizations.

<sup>3</sup> Goldfarb "properly left to the Court some flexibility in considering how to apply traditional Sherman Act concepts to professions long consigned to self-regulation." National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 699 (1978) (BLACKMUN, J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment). See id., at 701 (stressing the need for "elbow-room for realistic application of the Sherman Act" to other than commercial enterprises).

<sup>4</sup> The Court cites to several decisions, ante, at 575, n. 14, in which courts have levied punitive damages upon the principal for the "unauthorized" acts of an agent. It is not clear that any of these decisions holds the principal liable upon the apparent authority of an agent acting without intent to benefit the principal. None of them concerns the antitrust laws. None involves a nonprofit entity.

<sup>5</sup> "[A] trades-union . . . might be held liable . . . but certainly it must be clearly shown in order to impose such a liability on an association of 450,000 men that what was done was done by their agents in accordance with their fundamental agreement of association." Coronado Coal Co., 268 U.S., at 304. The Court refused to impose liability on the national union simply because it had the authority to discipline the local. See Mine Workers, 259 U.S., at 395. Moreover, the Court indicated that this was not a case in which a theory of apparent authority might be applied -- despite the national union's power over the local and despite the support of the strike by the president of the national union: "Here it is not a question of contract or of holding out an appearance of authority on which some third person acts." Ibid. The majority quotes this language, see ante, at 573, n. 12, but misses its point. The Mine Workers Court well could have characterized the case before it as involving an exercise of apparent authority by the local union or the national president; it refused to do so. See Truck Drivers' Local No. 421 v. United States, 128 F.2d 227, 235 (CA8 1942) (viewing the holding in Mine Workers as rejecting an apparent authority theory of antitrust liability).

commercial [***350] [**1951] enterprises, the Courts of Appeals that have considered the matter appear to reject antitrust liability upon mere apparent authority.<sup>6</sup>

[****46] Moreover, the Court as much as concedes that an apparent authority rule of liability has rarely, if ever, been used to impose punitive damages upon the principal. See ante, at 570, n. 7.<sup>7</sup> Rather than contest this well-established rule of [*583] agency law, the Court argues that treble damages are not punitive or, even if they are, the purposes of the antitrust laws override this basic rule of the law of agency. In fact the Court often has characterized treble-damages liability as punitive: "The very idea of treble damages reveals an intent to punish past, and to deter future, unlawful conduct." Texas Industries, Inc. v. Radcliff Materials, Inc., 451 U.S. 630, 639 (1981). See P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 311b (1978) ("whether or not compensatory damages ever punish, treble damages are indisputably punishment"). In the context of a nonprofit, tax-exempt organization it would seem even [***351] clearer that treble damages primarily punish and are intended to do so. There is no element of restitution here; ASME has derived no ill-gotten gain from the misdeeds of its disloyal agent.

[****47] In short, the Court launches on an uncharted course. I know of no antitrust decision that has imposed treble-damages liability upon a commercial enterprise, let alone a nonprofit organization, solely on an [**1952] apparent authority theory of liability.<sup>8</sup> The antitrust laws have been effectively enforced for over 90 years without <sup>6</sup> See United States v. American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corp., 433 F.2d 174, 204 (CA3 1970); United States v. Cadillac Overall Supply Co., 568 F.2d 1078, 1090 (CA5 1978); United States v. Hilton Hotels Corp., 467 F.2d 1000 (CA9 1972). Accord Truck Drivers' Local No. 421 v. United States, supra, at 235 (union not liable for the antitrust violations of a local division: "To bind the union in a situation such as this, actual and authorized agency was necessary; mere apparent authority would not be sufficient").

In United States v. Hilton Hotels Corp., supra, for example, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit ruled out liability on apparent authority by requiring that the agent hold a "purpose to benefit the corporation." Id., at 1006, n. 4. In light of the rule adopted by the Court today, it is ironic that the Court of Appeals in Hilton Hotels considered that its rule of liability was actually a broad one. Although implicitly rejecting a rule of apparent authority, the court held that a corporation could be liable for the acts of its agents "even when done against company orders." Id., at 1004. The court argued that such an expansive rule of liability was justified in the case before it, involving a commercial enterprise, because the Sherman Act was "primarily concerned with the activities of business entities." Ibid. A rule promoting corporate liability was supported further by the consideration that antitrust violations "are usually motivated by a desire to enhance profits," "involve basic policy decisions, and must be implemented over an extended period of time," and "if a violation of the Sherman Act occurs, the corporation, and not the individual agents, will have realized the profits from the illegal activity." Id., at 1006. None of these considerations in support of a broad rule of liability applies to the fraudulent, self-interested conduct of ASME members in this case. Yet the Court adopts a rule of liability far broader than that stated by the Ninth Circuit with such care.

<sup>7</sup> In Lake Shore & M.S.R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U.S. 101, 107 (1893), the Court held that "[a] principal . . . cannot be held liable for exemplary or punitive damages, merely by reason of wanton, oppressive or malicious intent on the part of the agent." In a generally similar context, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit held that a principal was not subject to double damages under the False Claims Act, 31 U. S. C. § 231, for the fraud of an agent acting without intent to benefit the principal. See United States v. Ridglea State Bank, 357 F.2d 495, 500 (1966) ("[The] present action is not primarily one for the recovery of a loss caused by an employee, but is one which, if successful, must result in a recovery wholly out of proportion to actual loss. . . . [The] case calls for the application of the rule . . . that the knowledge or guilty intent of an agent not acting with a purpose to benefit his employer, will not be imputed to the employer").

<sup>8</sup> Hydrolevel argues that Continental Baking Co. v. United States, 281 F.2d 137, 150-151 (CA6 1960), and United States v. Continental Group, Inc., 603 F.2d 444, 468, n. 5 (CA3 1979), support an apparent authority theory of liability in antitrust cases. Yet in Continental Baking the court endorsed an instruction that included an "apparent" authority component on the theory that a corporation must "answer for [an agent's] violations of law which inure to the corporation's benefit." There was no such benefit in this case. Moreover, in Continental Group the court simply affirmed an apparent authority instruction without comment, in a footnote, in a case presenting many other issues. The agents in that case were clearly acting for the benefit of their corporations, and the court may have considered that the apparent authority instruction, if error, was harmless.

the need for such a theory of liability. Indeed, the very facts of this case belie the necessity [*584] of simply creating a new theory of liability; the jury found ASME liable not upon a theory of apparent authority but upon the traditional basis of ratification or authorization. The apparent authority rationale was not even argued to the Second Circuit on appeal. The Second Circuit, and now this Court, reach out unnecessarily to embrace a dubious new doctrine. That the Court chooses the case of a nonprofit, tax-exempt organization to announce its new rule is particularly inappropriate. Nor can the Court's decision be squared with the intent of Congress in enacting the Sherman Act.

[****48] II

This case comes before us as an antitrust suit under the Sherman Act. Our focus should be on the intent of Congress.<sup>9</sup> See Texas Industries, Inc. v. Radcliff Materials, Inc., supra, at 639. And that intent emerges clearly from the legislative history:

[*585] "[The Sherman Act] was enacted in the era of 'trusts' and of 'combinations' of businesses and of capital organized and directed to control of the market by suppression of competition in the marketing of goods and services, the monopolistic tendency of which had become a matter of public concern. The [***352] end sought was the prevention of restraints to free competition in business and commercial transactions which tended to restrict production, raise prices or otherwise control the market to the detriment of purchasers or consumers of goods and services . . ." Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 492-493 (1940).

[****49] Senator Sherman twice explained that his bill was directed at anticompetitive business activity and not at voluntary associations. In response to a request that the legislation be more clearly tailored to "these great trusts, these great corporations, these large moneyed institutions," Senator Sherman answered as follows:

"The bill as reported contains three or four simple propositions which relate only to contracts, combinations, agreements made with a view and designed to carry out a certain purpose . . . It does not interfere in the slightest degree with voluntary associations . . . to advance the interests of a particular trade or occupation. . . . [**1953] They are not business combinations. They do not deal with contracts, agreements, etc. They have no connection with them." 21 Cong. Rec. 2562 (1890).

When Senator Hoar expressed the concern that the bill would prohibit temperance organizations, and proposed an amendment to exclude them from the bill, Senator Sherman spoke reassuringly:

"I have no objection to [this] amendment, but I do not see any reason for putting in temperance societies any more than churches or school-houses or any other [****50] kind of [*586] moral or educational associations that may be organized. Such an association is not in any sense a combination or arrangement made to interfere with interstate commerce." Id., at 2658.

In any event, the comparative paucity of authority on the question of apparent authority liability in antitrust cases simply underscores that the Court today is making new law. It also is doing so needlessly as ASME was neither tried nor found liable on the basis of apparent authority.

<sup>9</sup> Relying on a novel public policy as to nonprofit associations, the Court makes little effort to ascertain the intent of Congress either through examining the legislative history or the common law then existing. Indeed, the Court implies that the agency law of the 19th century and "Victorian" common law are irrelevant. See ante, at 568-569, n. 6. In seeking to understand the Sherman Act, this Court frequently has found it necessary to "delve" into the history of the common law both "Victorian" and from earlier eras. See Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 51-62 (1911). The Civil Rights Acts of the 19th century were also the work of a "Victorian" Congress, yet we have looked both to the legislative history and to the common law when interpreting those Acts. See, e.g., Pierson v. Ray, 386 U.S. 547 (1967).

456 U.S. 556, *586; 102 S. Ct. 1935, **1953; 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, ***352; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 3, ****50

This legislative history does not indicate that nonprofit associations are exempt from the antitrust laws. See Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773 \(1975\). But it does counsel against adopting a new rule of agency law that extends the exposure of such organizations to potentially destructive treble-damages liability.

In addition to the legislative history, it is particularly relevant -- in view of the Court's reliance on the modern law of agency -- to consider the accepted law of agency as it existed at the time the Sherman Act was passed.<sup>10</sup> [****51] It was clear under basic principles then established that [***353] charitable organizations were not liable for the torts of their agents.<sup>11</sup> [*587] Whether a nonprofit, tax-exempt, public service association would have been considered a "charity" is not clear, but one would think that it well might have been.<sup>12</sup>

Moreover, under the laws of agency as known to the Congress that passed the Sherman Act it was far from clear -- even in cases involving commercial enterprises -- that a principal could be held liable for the deliberate torts of his agent. According to one treatise of the time, "[while] . . . it is well settled that the [****52] principal is liable for the negligent act of his agent, committed in the course of his employment, it has been held in many cases, that he is not liable for the agent's willful or malicious act." F. Mechem, Law of Agency § 740 (1889) (hereafter Mechem).<sup>13</sup> [****53] [***354] Indeed, the Court [**1954] acknowledges [*588] this much when it notes that in Friedlander

---

<sup>10</sup> In Texas Industries, Inc. v. Radcliff Materials, Inc., 451 U.S. 630, 644, n. 17 \(1981\), the Court stated that the rules of common law in effect at the time the Act was passed were relevant to an inquiry into congressional intent: "[It] is clear that when the Sherman Act was adopted the common law did not provide a right to contribution among tortfeasors participating in proscribed conduct. One permissible, though not mandatory, inference is that Congress relied on courts' continuing to apply principles in effect at the time of enactment." The contemporary case law is relevant precisely because "Congress . . . did not intend the text of the Sherman Act to delineate the full meaning of the statute or its application in concrete situations. The legislative history makes it perfectly clear that it expected the courts to give shape to the statute's broad mandate by drawing on common-law tradition." National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S., at 688.

<sup>11</sup> "Where a corporation or trustees are conducting a charity with funds devoted to that purpose, the charitable organization is not liable for the torts of its agents or servants, as 'it would be against all law and all equity to take those trust funds, so contributed for a special, charitable purpose, to compensate injuries inflicted or occasioned by the negligence of the agents or servants.'" E. Huffcut, Elements of the Law of Agency § 161, pp. 176-177 (1895).

<sup>12</sup> In describing the liability of the principal for the torts of the agent, the First Restatement of Agency, published in 1933, cautioned that it did not address "any limitations upon liability because of . . . rules applicable to special classes, such as charitable organizations." Restatement of Agency 458.

<sup>13</sup> The complete statement of the rule by Mechem is as follows:

"While . . . it is well settled that the principal is liable for the negligent act of his agent, committed in the course of his employment, it has been held in many cases, that he is not liable for the agent's willful or malicious act. . . .

"The tendency of modern cases, however, is to attach less importance to the intention of the agent and more to the question whether the act was done within the scope of the agent's employment; and it is believed that the true rule may be said to be that the principal is responsible for the wilful or malicious acts of his agent, if they are done in the course of his employment and within the scope of his authority; but that the principal is not liable for such acts, unless previously expressly authorized, or subsequently ratified, when they are done outside of the course of the agent's employment, and beyond the scope of his authority, as where the agent steps aside from his employment to gratify some personal animosity, or to give vent to some private feeling of his own" (emphasis added, footnotes omitted).

Although the concept of within "scope of authority" is not always easy to apply, it is beyond rational doubt that in this case the fraudulent activity of Hardin and James, on behalf of McDonnell & Miller, Inc., was not within the scope of any authority of ASME. In addition, some courts have found that "[a] purpose to benefit the corporation is necessary to bring the agent's acts within the scope of his employment." See United States v. Hilton Hotels Corp., 467 F.2d, at 1006, n. 4. It is just such a purpose that was lacking in this case. Indeed, the "agents" in this case were not acting simply for their own malicious purposes, they were acting on behalf of another principal with interests inimical to those of ASME. It is far from clear under principles of agency law that Hardin and James are properly described as the "agents" of ASME when they act to serve a different principal and without any intention of benefiting ASME. See Mechem § 67 ("A person may act as agent of two or more principals . . . if his duties to each are not such as to require . . . incompatible things").

456 U.S. 556, *588; 102 S. Ct. 1935, **1954; 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, ***354; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 3, ****53

v. Texas & Pacific R. Co., 130 U.S. 416 (1889) -- decided the year before the Sherman Act was passed -- "the Court held that an employer was not liable for the fraud of his agent, when the employer could derive no benefit from the agent's fraud." Ante, at 567.<sup>14</sup>

Finally, no principle of agency law was more firmly established in 1890 -- or now for that matter -- than that punitive damages are not awarded against a principal for the acts of an agent acting only with apparent authority and without any [****54] intention of benefiting the principal. Indeed, this Court [*589] went further, holding more generally that "punitive or vindictive damages, or smart money, [are] not to be allowed as against the principal, unless the principal participated in the wrongful act of the agent." Lake Shore & M.S.R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U.S., at 114, quoting Hagan v. Providence & Worcester R. Co., 3 R.I. 88, 91 (1854).<sup>15</sup>

[****55] [**1955] Although an inquiry into the legislative history and the law of agency is not conclusive, it does cast serious doubt on the Court's choice of this case to promulgate a new rule of antitrust liability. Whatever the merits of an apparent authority rule of liability for commercial enterprises, in the case of a treble-damages action against a nonprofit organization, such a rule is inconsistent with what appears to have been the intent of Congress in enacting the Sherman Act.

[*590] [***355] III

The underlying theme of the Court's opinion seems to be that any rule of agency law that widens the net of antitrust enforcement and liability should be adopted. Yet the Court has never used such a single-minded approach in the past. In United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422 (1978), for example, the Court held that intent is a necessary element of a criminal antitrust offense. The Court was unwilling to assume that Congress had intended to create a strict liability crime despite the potential increase in deterrence. Similarly, in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720 (1977), the Court held that indirect [****56] purchasers could not use a "pass-on" theory to recover

The Court suggests that there was a division among the state courts on the question of the principal's liability for the malicious acts of an agent. See ante, at 568-569, n. 6. But there was no division in the federal courts, the courts charged with enforcement of the Sherman Act. In any event, surely the point is not whether every state court recognized the rule stated by this Court in Friedlander v. Texas & Pacific R. Co., 130 U.S. 416 (1889). Rather, if there was any uncertainty as to the liability of a commercial principal for the torts of an agent acting in the course of employment, how much clearer must it be that a nonprofit, voluntary association would not have been held liable in treble damages for the acts of an agent acting with apparent authority only.

<sup>14</sup> The Court notes that Friedlander was later overruled by Gleason v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 278 U.S. 349 (1929). The relevance of this fact to Congress' intentions is not clear to me. There is "no federal general common law." Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 78 (1938). There is no federal general law of agency. Rather we are engaged here in an exercise in statutory construction. Cf. 21 Cong. Rec. 3149 (1890) (remarks of Sen. Morgan) ("It is very true that we use common-law terms here and common-law definitions in order to define an offense which is in itself comparatively new, but it is not a common-law jurisdiction that we are conferring upon the circuit courts of the United States," quoted in Texas Industries, Inc. v. Radcliff Materials, Inc., 451 U.S., at 644).

<sup>15</sup> The Court responds by citing to several state law decisions indicating that in some States a principal might have been held liable in punitive damages for the acts of an agent. See ante, at 575, n. 14. I believe the Court overstates the extent to which 19th-century state courts imposed punitive damages on the principal for the deliberate torts of an agent. See Mechem § 751; cf. Mayo Hotel Co. v. Danciger, 143 Okla. 196, 200, 288 P. 309, 312 (1930) ("There are . . . respectable authorities, some of them recent ones, definitely holding that a corporation cannot be subjected to exemplary damages because of the malicious . . . acts of its agents and servants where such acts are not authorized or afterwards ratified . . . . Many of the state courts, and a majority of the federal courts, expressly adhere to that doctrine") (emphasis added). More significantly, the Court does not make clear which, if any, of the state decisions it relies upon held the principal liable for punitive damages upon the apparent authority of an agent acting without any intention of benefiting the principal. I had thought that this was the question before us. And again the Court misses the basic point: If the rule of liability adopted by the Court today would have seemed questionable in 1890 even as applied to a commercial enterprise, can there be any basis for believing that Congress intended such an extreme rule of liability to be applied to voluntary, nonprofit associations?

treble damages from an antitrust violator. The Court rejected the argument that the antitrust laws would be more effective were the class of potential plaintiffs widened. On the contrary, "the antitrust laws will be more effectively enforced by concentrating the full recovery for the overcharge in the direct purchasers rather than by allowing every plaintiff potentially affected by the overcharge to sue." Id., at 735. Nor would the Court accept a rule that might permit both indirect and direct purchasers to sue for the same overcharge. Such a rule "would create a serious risk of multiple liability for defendants." Id., at 730. Thus, the Court has adopted a more discerning approach to questions of antitrust liability in the past -- an approach that considers the fairness and appropriateness of a rule in addition to its perceived potential for deterrence.

The Court argues that its expanded rule of liability furthers effective antitrust enforcement. One may question whether a rule of liability developed so late in the day and with so little support in precedent can be described as necessary [****57] to antitrust enforcement. When one considers further that the jury found ASME liable under traditional principles, the need for an expanded rule becomes even less credible. Nor does the Court explain how its rule of apparent authority serves the purpose of effective antitrust enforcement. The [*591] primary beneficiary in this case was McDonnell & Miller, the manufacturing company that arranged for the fraudulent ruling by the ASME subcommittee chairman. The sole purpose of the fraud was to disadvantage McDonnell & Miller's competitor. The focus of Hydrolevel's attack, however, has been on ASME.<sup>16</sup> [****58] It is curious reasoning to argue, as the Court does, that a rule that encourages plaintiffs to seek recovery from nonprofit organizations, rather than from the commercial enterprises that benefited [**1956] from the violation, will facilitate proper antitrust enforcement.<sup>17</sup>

[****59] [*592] In [**356] a more fundamental sense, the Court's assignment of liability to ASME on a theory of apparent authority simply has no relevance to the furtherance of the purposes of the antitrust laws. ASME is not a competitor. The competition here was between McDonnell & Miller, Inc., and Hydrolevel. Of course, if ASME ratifies the fraudulent act of its agent, as the jury found, liability should attach. But the Court has devised what amounts to a rule of strict liability for voluntary associations in antitrust cases. Under the Court's rule ASME would be liable if an ASME building employee pilfered ASME stationery and supplied it to McDonnell & Miller. Similarly, if a private pharmaceutical school -- a tax-exempt corporation like ASME -- released a study condemning a particular

<sup>16</sup> Damages were awarded against ASME in an amount of $ 7.5 million. By contrast, McDonnell & Miller settled the suit for less than a million dollars. See n. 1, supra. The majority's contention that "a plaintiff will prefer to bring a corporate defendant like M&M (ITT) before a jury," ante, at 574, n. 13, is not borne out by this case. If the Court has some other case in mind, it does not cite to it.

<sup>17</sup> The Court's argument that the imposition of treble damages will advance antitrust enforcement has a hollow ring in the context of a membership, nonprofit organization. Organizations of this kind normally function through committees composed -- as in this case -- of volunteers who are not employees, serve only at infrequent intervals, and are virtually uncontrollable by what usually is a small headquarters staff.

The Court suggests that voluntary organizations can "take steps to reduce the likelihood that antitrust violations like the one that occurred in this case will take place in the future." Ibid. The Court then refers to "new procedures" adopted by ASME, and criticizes my dissent for refusing "to accept that ASME and other such organizations can react to potential antitrust liability by making their associations less subject to fraudulent manipulation." Ibid.

It would be enlightening if the Court would explain how such an association can protect itself even from "mere tort" liability, see ante, at 569, n. 6, much less the treble-damages liability imposed in this case, in light of the Court's adoption of the apparent authority theory of liability. Review procedures well may be helpful to prevent mistakes made in good faith on behalf of an association. But no set of rules and regulations, and no procedures however elaborate, can protect adequately against fraud and disloyalty. In this case, for example, if ASME had required approval by a review committee or even by its governing body before the release of each of the thousands of ruling letters, a member bent on fraud could forge evidence or otherwise circumvent most safeguards. In practice, a rule of apparent authority can be a rule of strict liability as the Court today holds in this case. In the context of a loosely structured, voluntary nonprofit association it may be wholly impractical to adopt any measures that will lessen substantially the likelihood of liability, and if there is liability the Court also would impose punitive damages.

drug, because a competing drug company had suborned the professor who wrote the report, the Court's rule would subject the school to the full brunt of treble damages.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade. The Court attaches liability in this case on the dubious notion that ASME somehow has "conspired" with McDonnell & Miller. Yet [****60] it stretches the concept of vicarious liability beyond its rational limits to conceive of Hardin and James as conspiring on behalf of ASME when they acted solely for the benefit of McDonnell & Miller and against the interests of ASME.<sup>18</sup> The Court simply opens [***357] new vistas in the law of conspiracy and vicarious liability, as well as in the imposition of the harsh penalty of treble damages.

[****61] [*593] Whatever the application of agency law in its traditional setting, application of the most expansive rules of liability in the context of antitrust treble damages and nonprofit, [**1957] tax-exempt associations threatens serious injustice and over deterrence. There is no way in which an association adequately can protect itself from this sort of liability. There is no chain of delegated authority, from stockholders through directors and officers, in the typical voluntary association. The members of these associations exercise a far less structured control than the stockholders and directors of a commercial enterprise. Perhaps ASME will attempt to protect itself by ceasing to respond to inquiries concerning its codes. That hardly would contribute either to antitrust enforcement or to the public welfare. And whereas a commercial enterprise may have the resources to bear a treble-damages award, the same cannot be said of most nonprofit organizations.<sup>19</sup>

[****62] The Court is so zealous to impose treble-damages liability that it ignores a basic purpose of the Sherman Act: the preservation of private action contributing to the public welfare. See United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S., at 438-443. [*594] ASME industry standard-setting can have a significant potential for consumer benefit: for example, its boiler safety information can be expensive if consumers are forced to gain it only by their own experience or by the creation of another bureaucracy. The Court's policy discussion takes no account of this potential cost. Rather, it appears to be so concerned with imposing liability that it puts at risk much of the beneficial private activity of the voluntary associations of our country.

How far the Court's holding extends is unclear. The Court emphasizes that ASME is a standard-setting organization. Yet it does not limit its rationale to these particular organizations. One must be concerned whether the new doctrine and the sweep of the Court's language will be read as exposing the array of nonprofit associations -- professional, charitable, educational, and even religious -- to a new theory [****63] of strict liability in treble damages.

References

---

3 Am Jur 2d, Agency 261; 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 107, 108.5, 251

---

<sup>18</sup> The intersection of the law of agency and vicarious liability with the law of conspiracy makes this a complex case. Yet the Court does not recognize this complexity. It so expands the concept of vicarious liability as to leave little content, in this case, to the requirement in § 1 of the Sherman Act that antitrust plaintiffs demonstrate a contract, combination, or conspiracy. Indeed, the Court never identifies who conspired with whom. Did James -- acting for ASME -- conspire with Hardin -- acting for McDonnell & Miller, Inc., and Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Co.? Or was it the other way around? Could it be said, under the Court's theory, that James had conspired with himself -- as a double agent -- thereby committing both of his "principals" to an antitrust conspiracy? In my view, it makes more sense to view the matter as a conspiracy between the agents of McDonnell & Miller, Inc., and Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Co. The Court's theory makes possible ratification by ASME irrelevant. In this light, ASME was as much a victim of this conspiracy as Hydrolevel.

<sup>19</sup> It is relevant to note that a nonprofit organization cannot reduce the burden of a treble-damages award by deducting the award as a business expense. See P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law § 311a (1978) ("treble damages are generally a deductible business expense for federal income tax purposes").

456 U.S. 556, *594; 102 S. Ct. 1935, **1957; 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, ***357; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 3, ****63

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:21 et seq.

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, Form 11 et seq.

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Actions

15 USCS 1, 2

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 12, 43, 67

L Ed Index to Annos, Principal and Agent; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Corporate Officers, Directors, and Agents; Principal and Agent; Restraints of Trade [****64] and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Agency; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

---

End of Document

Ariz. v. Maricopa County Medical Soc.

Supreme Court of the United States

November 4, 1981, Argued ; June 18, 1982, Decided

No. 80-419

Reporter

457 U.S. 332 *; 102 S. Ct. 2466 **; 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 ***; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 5 ****; 50 U.S.L.W. 4687; 1982-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P64,792

ARIZONA v. MARICOPA COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 643 F.2d 553, reversed.

Core Terms

---

insurers, price-fixing, per se rule, prices, consumers, price fixing, Sherman Act, respondents', condemned, patients, fee schedule, maximum price, procompetitive, literal, maximum-fee, coverage, insurance plan, antitrust, schedules, maximum, medical services, medical care, license, summary judgment, rule of reason, competitors, composed, blanket, charges, parties

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN1** [ Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act of 1890, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, literally prohibits every agreement in restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN2** [ Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The United States Supreme Court analyzes most restraints of trade under the so-called "rule of reason." As its name suggests, the rule of reason requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The true test of legality is whether the restraint of trade imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Among the practices which the courts have heretofore deemed to be unlawful in and of themselves are price fixing, division of markets, group boycotts, and tying arrangements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Inquiry under its rule of reason ends once a price-fixing agreement is proved, for there is a conclusive presumption which brings such agreements within the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Any combination which tampers with price structures is engaged in an unlawful activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN8 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce is illegal per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN9** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The elimination of so-called competitive evils in an industry is no legal justification for price-fixing agreements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN10** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A new per se rule is not justified until the judiciary obtains considerable rule-of-reason experience with the particular type of restraint challenged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN11** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Whatever economic justification particular price-fixing agreements may be thought to have, the law does not permit an inquiry into their reasonableness.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Agreement among competing physicians setting, by majority vote, maximum fees for payment from participants in specified insurance plans, held per se unlawful under 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

Summary

Two Arizona county medical societies formed two "foundations for medical care" organized for the purpose of promoting fee-for-service medicine and to provide the community with a competitive alternative to existing health insurance plans. The foundations performed three primary activities including establishing the schedule of maximum fees that participating doctors agreed to accept as payment in full for services performed for patients insured under plans approved by the foundations. The state of Arizona filed a civil complaint in the United States District Court for the District of Arizona against the two county medical societies and foundations alleging that they were engaged in illegal price-fixing conspiracies in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1). The state moved for partial summary judgment after conducting a limited amount of pretrial discovery, and the District Court denied the motion but certified for interlocutory appeal the question of whether the foundations' membership agreements, which contained the promise to abide by maximum fee schedules, are illegal per se under 1 of the Sherman Act. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed the District Court's order refusing to enter partial summary judgment, holding that the question could not be answered without evaluating the actual purpose and effect of the agreement at a full trial (643 F2d 553).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by Stevens, J., joined by Brennan, White, and Marshall, JJ., it was held that the maximum fee agreements, as price-fixing agreements, are per se unlawful under 1 of the Sherman Act, (1) the agreements not escaping per se condemnation because they were horizontal and fix maximum prices since horizontal agreements to fix maximum prices are placed on the same legal footing as agreements to fix minimum or uniform prices, (2) the fact that doctors--rather than nonprofessionals--were the parties to the price-fixing agreement not precluding application of the per se rule as the price-fixing agreements are not premised on public service or ethical norms, (3) the fact that the judiciary has had little antitrust experience in the health care industry being insufficient reason for not applying the per se rule, (4) the per se rule not being inapplicable because the agreements were alleged to have procompetitive justifications as the anticompetitive potential inherent in all price-fixing agreements justifies their facial invalidation even if procompetitive justifications are offered for some, and (5) the maximum-fee schedules not involving price-fixing in only a literal sense since as agreements among independent competing entrepreneurs, the agreements fit squarely into the horizontal price-fixing mold.

Powell, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and Rehnquist, J., dissented, expressing the view that a decision on an incomplete record was not consistent with proper judicial resolution of an issue of this complexity, novelty, and importance to the public.

Blackmun and O'Connor, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

PRACTICES §42 > competing physicians -- maximum fee setting -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

An agreement among competing physicians setting, by majority vote, the maximum fees that they may claim in full payment for health services provided to policyholders of specified insurance plans is per se unlawful under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

ERROR §1283 > partial summary judgment -- disputed issue of fact -- view of defendants -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

On the issue of whether a partial summary judgment should have been entered by a Federal District Court in favor of the plaintiffs in a case, the United States Supreme Court must assume that the defendants' version of any disputed issue of fact is correct.

ERROR §1662 > moot question -- change in practices -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B]

A challenge to activities of "foundations for medical care" in the use of "relative values"--providing a numerical weight for each different medical service--and "conversion factors"--the dollar amount used to determine fees for particular medical speciality--to determine maximum fees and submitting new few schedules to the vote of the entire physician membership is not mooted when, after the Federal District Court and the Federal Court of Appeals have rendered judgment, both foundations apparently discontinue the use of relative values and conversion factors in formulating the fee schedules and one foundation amends its bylaws to provide that the fee schedule would be adopted by majority vote of its board of trustees and not by the vote of its members.

PRACTICE §16 > rule of reason -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The rule of reason used to determine whether an agreement is in restraint of trade in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) requires the factfinder to decide whether under all of the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition.

PRACTICES §42 > horizontal agreements -- maximum prices -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Agreements among competing physicians setting, by majority vote, the maximum fees that they may claim in full payment for health services provided to policyholders of specified insurance plans do not escape per se condemnation under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) because they are horizontal and fix maximum prices since horizontal agreements to fix maximum prices are placed on the same legal footing as agreements to fix minimum or uniform prices.

PRACTICES §42 > doctors' services -- public service -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The fact that doctors--rather than nonprofessionals--are the parties to a price-fixing agreement among competing physicians setting, by majority vote, the maximum fees that they may claim in full payment for health services provided the policyholders of specified insurance plan does not support the physicians' position that the agreements are not in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) since the price-fixing agreements are not promised on public service or ethical norms and the physicians' claim for relief from the application of the per se rule of a violation of the Act is simply that the doctors' agreement not to charge certain insureds more than a fixed price facilitates the successful marketing of an attractive insurance plan; but the claim that the price restraint will make it easier for customers to pay does not distinguish the medical profession from any other provider of goods or services.

PRACTICES §16 > judicial experience -- per se rule -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

The fact that the judiciary has had little antitrust experience in health care industry is insufficient reason for not applying the per se rule, that price-fixing agreements are unlawful per se under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), since the Sherman Act, so far as price-fixing agreements are concerned, establishes one uniform rule applicable to all industries alike.

PRACTICES §16 > per se rule -- rule of reason -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

A new per se rule to determine whether a particular type of restraint is a per se violation of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) is not justified until the judiciary obtains considerable rule of reason experience with the particular type of restraint challenged.

PRACTICES §36 > price-fixing -- procompetitive justifications -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9A\]](#) [9A] [LEdHN\[9B\]](#) [9B]

The per se rule, that price-fixing agreements are unlawful per se under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), is not inapplicable to agreements alleged to have procompetitive justifications since the anticompetitive potential inherent in all price-fixing agreements justifies their facial invalidation even if procompetitive justifications are offered for some and those claims of enhanced competition are so unlikely to prove significant in any particular case that the United States Supreme Court adheres to the rule of law that is justified in its general application.

PRACTICES §16 > COURTS §141 > per se rule -- Congress -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

Adherence to the per se rule, that price-fixing agreements are unlawful per se under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), is grounded not only on economic prediction, judicial convenience, and business certainty, but also on a recognition of the respective roles of the judiciary and the Congress in regulating the economy since Congress may consider the exception that the judiciary is not free to read into the statute and Congress can make per se rules inapplicable in some or all cases.

PRACTICES §42 > price-fixing agreements -- horizontal agreements -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

Maximum-fee schedule of physicians of competing physicians set by majority vote do not involve price-fixing in only a literal sense since the physicians' combination in the form of a foundation does not permit them to sell any different product and has merely permitted them to sell their services to certain customers at fixed prices; the maximum fee agreements are among independent competing entrepreneurs fitting squarely into the horizontal price-fixing mold.

Syllabus

---

Respondent foundations for medical care were organized by respondent Maricopa County Medical Society and another medical society to promote fee-for-service medicine and to provide the community with a competitive alternative to existing health insurance plans. The foundations, by agreement of their member doctors, established the maximum fees the doctors may claim in full payment for health services provided to policyholders of specified insurance plans. Petitioner State of Arizona filed a complaint against respondents in Federal District Court, alleging that they were engaged in an illegal price-fixing conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The District Court denied the State's motion for partial [****2] summary judgment, but certified for interlocutory appeal the question whether the maximum-fee agreements were illegal per se under § 1 of the Sherman Act. The Court of Appeals affirmed the denial of the motion for partial summary judgment and held that the certified question could not be answered without evaluating the purpose and effect of the agreements at a full trial.

Held: The maximum-fee agreements, as price-fixing agreements, are per se unlawful under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Pp. 342-357.

(a) The agreements do not escape condemnation under the per se rule against price-fixing agreements because they are horizontal and fix maximum prices. Horizontal agreements to fix maximum prices are on the same legal -- even if not economic -- footing as agreements to fix minimum or uniform prices. Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211; Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145. The per se rule is violated here by a price restraint that tends to provide the same economic rewards to all practitioners regardless of their skill, experience, training, or willingness to employ innovative and difficult procedures [****3] in individual cases. Such a restraint may also discourage entry into the market and may deter experimentation and new developments by individual entrepreneurs. P. 348.

(b) Nor does the fact that doctors rather than nonprofessionals are the parties to the price-fixing agreements preclude application of the per se rule. Respondents do not claim that the quality of the professional services their members provide is enhanced by the price restraint, Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, and National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, distinguished, and their claim that the price restraint will make it easier for customers to pay does not distinguish the medical profession from any other provider of goods or services. Pp. 348-349.

(c) That the judiciary has had little antitrust experience in the health care industry is insufficient reason for not applying the per se rule here. "[The] Sherman Act, so far as price-fixing agreements are concerned, establishes one uniform rule applicable to all industries alike." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 222. Pp. [****4] 349-351.

(d) The per se rule is not rendered inapplicable in this case for the alleged reason that the agreements in issue have procompetitive justification. The anticompetitive potential in all price-fixing agreements justifies their facial invalidation even if procompetitive justifications are offered for some. Even when respondents are given every benefit of doubt, the record in this case is not inconsistent with the presumption that respondents' agreements will not significantly enhance competition. The most that can be said for having doctors fix the maximum prices is that doctors may be able to do it more efficiently than insurers, but there is no reason to believe any savings that might accrue from this arrangement would be sufficiently great to affect the competitiveness of these kinds of insurance plans. Pp. 351-354.

(e) Respondents' maximum-fee schedules do not involve price-fixing in only a literal sense. Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, distinguished. As agreements among independent competing entrepreneurs, they fit squarely into the horizontal price-fixing mold. Pp. 355-357.

Counsel: Kenneth R. Reed, [****5] Special Assistant Attorney General of Arizona, argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General, Charles L. Eger, Assistant Attorney General, Alison B. Swan, and Patricia A. Metzger.

Philip P. Berelson argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were Robert O. Lesher and Daniel J. McAuliffe.

Deputy Solicitor General Shapiro argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were Solicitor General McCree, Assistant Attorney General Baxter, Deputy Solicitor General Wallace, Barry Grossman, Robert B. Nicholson, and Nancy C. Garrison.*

[****6]

Judges: STEVENS, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BRENNAN, WHITE, and MARSHALL, JJ., joined. POWELL, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which BURGER, C. J., and REHNQUIST, J., joined, post, p. 357. BLACKMUN and O'CONNOR, JJ., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: STEVENS

---

*Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the State of Alabama et al. by Charles A. Graddick, Attorney General of Alabama, and Susan Beth Farmer, Sarah M. Spratling, and James Drury Flowers, Assistant Attorneys General; Wilson L. Condon, Attorney General of Alaska, and Louise E. Ma, Assistant Attorney General; Steve Clark, Attorney General of Arkansas, and David L. Williams, Deputy Attorney General; J. D. MacFarlane, Attorney General of Colorado, and B. Lawrence Theis, First Assistant Attorney General; Carl R. Ajello, Attorney General of Connecticut, and Robert M. Langer, John R. Lacey, John M. Looney, Jr., and Steven M. Rutstein, Assistant Attorneys General; Richard S. Gebelein, Attorney General of Delaware, and Robert P. Lobue, Deputy Attorney General; Jim Smith, Attorney General of Florida, and Bill L. Bryant, Jr., Assistant Attorney General; Tany S. Hong, Attorney General of Hawaii, and Sonia Faust, Deputy Attorney General; Tyrone C. Fahner, Attorney General of Illinois, and Thomas M. Genovese, Assistant Attorney General; Linley E. Pearson, Attorney General of Indiana, and Frank A. Baldwin, Assistant Attorney General; Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, and John R. Perkins, Assistant Attorney General; Robert T. Stephan, Attorney General of Kansas, and Carl M. Anderson, Assistant Attorney General; Steven L. Beshear, Attorney General of Kentucky, and James M. Ringo, Assistant Attorney General; William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General of Louisiana, and John R. Flowers, Jr., Assistant Attorney General; James E. Tierney, Attorney General of Maine; Stephen H. Sachs, Attorney General of Maryland, and Charles O. Monk II, Assistant Attorney General; Frank J. Kelley, Attorney General of Michigan, and Edwin M. Bladen, Assistant Attorney General; Warren R. Spannaus, Attorney General of Minnesota, and Stephen P. Kilgriff, Special Assistant Attorney General; Bill Allain, Attorney General of Mississippi, and Robert E. Sanders, Special Assistant Attorney General; John Ashcroft, Attorney General of Missouri, and William L. Newcomb, Jr., Assistant Attorney General; Michael T. Greely, Attorney General of Montana, and Jerome J. Cate, Assistant Attorney General; Paul L. Douglas, Attorney General of Nebraska, and Dale A. Comer, Assistant Attorney General; Gregory H. Smith, Attorney General of New Hampshire; James R. Zazzali, Attorney General of New Jersey, and Laurel A. Price, Deputy Attorney General; Jeff Bingaman, Attorney General of New Mexico, and James J. Wechsler and Richard H. Levin, Assistant Attorneys General; Robert Abrams, Attorney General of New York, and Lloyd Constantine, Assistant Attorney General; Rufus L. Edmisten, Attorney General of North Carolina, H. A. Cole, Jr., Special Deputy Attorney General, and R. Darrell Hancock, Associate Attorney General; Robert O. Wefald, Attorney General of North Dakota, and Gary H. Lee, Assistant Attorney General; Jan Eric Cartwright, Attorney General of Oklahoma, and Gary W. Gardenshire, Assistant Attorney General; Dennis J. Roberts II, Attorney General of Rhode Island, and Patrick J. Quinlan, Special Assistant Attorney General; Daniel R. McLeod, Attorney General of South Carolina, and John M. Cox, Assistant Attorney General; Mark V. Meierhenry, Attorney General of South Dakota, and James E. McMahon, Assistant Attorney General; William M. Leech, Jr., Attorney General of Tennessee, and William J. Haynes, Deputy Attorney General; Mark White, Attorney General of Texas, and Linda A. Aaker, Assistant Attorney General; David L. Wilkinson, Attorney General of Utah, and Peter C. Collins, Assistant Attorney General; John J. Easton, Jr., Attorney General of Vermont, and Jay I. Ashman, Assistant Attorney General; Kenneth O. Eikenberry, Attorney General of Washington, and John R. Ellis, Assistant Attorney General; Chauncey H. Browning, Attorney General of West Virginia, and Charles G. Brown, Deputy Attorney General; Bronson C. La Follette, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Michael L. Zaleski, Assistant Attorney General; and John D. Troughton, Attorney General of Wyoming, and Gay R. Venderpoel, Assistant Attorney General; for the State of Ohio by William J. Brown, Attorney General, and Charles D. Weller, Doreen C. Johnson, and Eugene F. McShane, Assistant Attorneys General; for Chalmette General Hospital, Inc., et al. by John A. Stassi II; and for Hospital Building Co. by John K. Train III and John R. Jordan, Jr.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed by William G. Kopit and Robert J. Moses for the American Association of Foundations for Medical Care; by Richard L. Epstein and Jay H. Hedgepeth for the American Hospital Association; and by M. Laurence Popofsky and Peter F. Sloss for California Dental Service.

Alfred Miller filed a brief for the American Association of Retired Persons et al. as amici curiae.

Opinion

---

[*335] [***53] [**2468] JUSTICE STEVENS delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A]The question presented is whether § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1, has been violated by agreements among competing physicians setting, by majority vote, the maximum fees that they may claim in full [*336] payment for health services provided to policyholders of specified insurance plans. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held that the question could not be answered without evaluating the actual purpose and effect of the agreements at a full trial. 643 F.2d 553 (1980). Because the undisputed facts disclose a violation of the statute, [***2469] we granted certiorari, 450 U.S. 979 (1981), [****7] and now reverse.

I

In October 1978 the State of Arizona filed a civil complaint against two county medical societies and two "foundations for medical care" that the medical societies had organized. The complaint alleged that the defendants were engaged in illegal price-fixing conspiracies.<sup>1</sup> [****8] After the defendants filed their answers, one [***54] of the medical societies was dismissed by consent, the parties conducted a limited amount of pretrial discovery, and the State moved for partial summary judgment on the issue of liability. The District Court denied the motion,<sup>2</sup> [****9] but entered an order pursuant to 28 U. S. C. § 1292(b), [*337] certifying for interlocutory appeal the question "whether the FMC membership agreements, which contain the promise to abide by maximum fee schedules, are illegal per se under section 1 of the Sherman Act."<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The complaint alleged a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act as well as of the Arizona antitrust statute. The state statute is interpreted in conformity with the federal statute. 643 F.2d 553, 554, n. 1 (CA9 1980). The State of Arizona prayed for an injunction but did not ask for damages.

<sup>2</sup> The District Court offered three reasons for its decision. First, citing Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977), the court stated that "a recent antitrust trend appears to be emerging where the Rule of Reason is the preferred method of determining whether a particular practice is in violation of the antitrust law." App. to Pet. for Cert. 43. Second, "the two Supreme Court cases invalidating maximum price-fixing, [Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211 (1951), and Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145 (1968)], need not be read as establishing a per se rule." Id., at 44. Third, "a profession is involved here." Id., at 45. Under the rule-of-reason approach, the plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment on the issue of liability could not be granted "because there is insufficient evidence as to the [purpose and effect of the allegedly unlawful practices and the power of the defendants]." Id., at 47.

The District Court also denied the defendants' motion to dismiss based on the ground that they were engaged in the business of insurance within the meaning of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1011 et seq. See App. to Pet. for Cert. 39-41. The defendants did not appeal that portion of the District Court order. 643 F.2d, at 559, and n. 7.

<sup>3</sup> The quoted language is the Court of Appeals' phrasing of the question. Id., at 554. The District Court had entered an order on June 5, 1979, providing, in relevant part:

"The plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment on the issue of liability is denied with leave to file a similar motion based on additional evidence if appropriate." App. to Pet. for Cert. 48.

On August 8, 1979, the District Court entered a further order providing:

"The Order of this Court entered June 5, 1979 is amended by addition of the following: This Court's determination that the Rule of Reason approach should be used in analyzing the challenged conduct in the instant case to determine whether a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act has occurred involves a question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and an immediate appeal from the Order denying plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment on the issue of liability may materially advance the ultimate determination of the litigation. Therefore, the foregoing Order and determination of the Court is certified for interlocutory appeal pursuant to 28 U. S. C. § 1292(b)." Id., at 50-51.

[****10] The Court of Appeals, by a divided vote, affirmed the District Court's order refusing to enter partial summary judgment, but each of the three judges on the panel had a different view of the case. Judge Sneed was persuaded that "the challenged practice is not a per se violation." 643 F.2d, at 1\*338 560.<sup>4</sup> [****11] Judge Kennedy, [***55] although concurring, cautioned that he had not [**2470] found "these reimbursement schedules to be per se proper, [or] that an examination of these practices under the rule of reason at trial will not reveal the proscribed adverse effect on competition, or that this court is foreclosed at some later date, when it has more evidence, from concluding that such schedules do constitute per se violations." Ibid.<sup>5</sup> Judge Larson dissented, expressing the view that a per se rule should apply and, alternatively, that a rule-of-reason analysis should condemn the arrangement even if a per se approach was not warranted. Id., at 563-569.<sup>6</sup>

[*339] LEdHN/2A1↑ [2A] [****12] Because the ultimate question presented by the certiorari petition is whether a partial summary judgment should have been entered by the District Court, we must assume that the respondents' version of any disputed issue of fact is correct. We therefore first review the relevant undisputed facts and then identify the factual basis for the respondents' contention that their agreements on fee schedules are not unlawful.

II

The Maricopa Foundation for Medical Care is a nonprofit Arizona corporation composed of licensed doctors of medicine, osteopathy, and podiatry engaged in private practice. Approximately 1,750 doctors, representing about 70% of the practitioners in Maricopa County, are members.

The Maricopa Foundation was organized in 1969 for the purpose of promoting fee-for-service medicine and to provide the community with a competitive alternative to existing health insurance plans.<sup>7</sup> The foundation performs <sup>4</sup> Judge Sneed explained his reluctance to apply the per se rule substantially as follows: The record did not indicate the actual purpose of the maximum-fee arrangements or their effect on competition in the health care industry. It was not clear whether the assumptions made about typical price restraints could be carried over to that industry. Only recently had this Court applied the antitrust laws to the professions. Moreover, there already were such significant obstacles to pure competition in the industry that a court must compare the prices that obtain under the maximum-fee arrangements with those that would otherwise prevail rather than with those that would prevail under ideal competitive conditions. Furthermore, the Ninth Circuit had not applied Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211 (1951), and Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145 (1968), to horizontal agreements that establish maximum prices; some of the economic assumptions underlying the rule against maximum price fixing were not sound.

<sup>5</sup> Judge Kennedy's concurring opinion concluded as follows:

"There does not now appear to be a controlling or definitive analysis of the market impact caused by the arrangements under scrutiny in this case, but trial may reveal that the arrangements are, at least in their essentials, not peculiar to the medical industry and that they should be condemned." 643 F.2d, at 560.

<sup>6</sup> Judge Larson stated, in part:

"Defendants formulated and dispersed relative value guides and conversion factor lists which together were used to set an upper limit on fees received from third-party payors. It is clear that these activities constituted maximum price-fixing by competitors. Disregarding any 'special industry' facts, this conduct is per se illegal. Precedent alone would mandate application of the per se standard."

"I find nothing in the nature of either the medical profession or the health care industry that would warrant their exemption from per se rules for price-fixing." Id., at 563-564 (citations omitted).

<sup>7</sup> Most health insurance plans are of the fee-for-service type. Under the typical insurance plan, the insurer agrees with the insured to reimburse the insured for "usual, customary, and reasonable" medical charges. The third-party insurer, and the insured to the extent of any excess charges, bears the economic risk that the insured will require medical treatment. An alternative to the fee-for-service type of insurance plan is illustrated by the health maintenance organizations authorized under the Health Maintenance Organization Act of 1973, 42 U. S. C. § 300e et seq. Under this form of prepaid health plan, the three primary activities. It establishes the schedule of maximum fees that participating doctors agree to accept as payment in full for services performed for patients insured under plans approved by the foundation. It reviews the medical necessity and appropriateness [***13] of treatment provided by its members to such insured persons. It is authorized to draw checks on insurance [***56] company accounts to pay doctors for [*340] services performed for covered patients. In performing these functions, the foundation is considered an "insurance administrator" by the Director of the Arizona Department of Insurance. Its participating doctors, however, have no financial interest in the operation of the foundation.

[***14] [**2471] The Pima Foundation for Medical Care, which includes about 400 member doctors,<sup>8</sup> performs similar functions. For the purposes of this litigation, the parties seem to regard the activities of the two foundations as essentially the same. No challenge is made to their peer review or claim administration functions. Nor do the foundations allege that these two activities make it necessary for them to engage in the practice of establishing maximum-fee schedules.

LEdHN[3A][] [3A]At the time this lawsuit was filed,<sup>9</sup> [***16] each foundation made use of "relative values" and "conversion factors" in compiling its fee schedule. The conversion factor is the dollar amount used to determine fees for a particular [***15] medical specialty. Thus, for example, the conversion factors for "medicine" and "laboratory" were $ 8 and $ 5.50, respectively, in 1972, and $ 10 and $ 6.50 in 1974. The relative value schedule provides a numerical weight for each different medical service -- thus, an office consultation has a lesser value than a home visit. The relative value was multiplied by the conversion factor to determine the maximum fee. The fee schedule has been revised periodically. The foundation board of trustees would solicit advice from various medical societies about the need [*341] for change in either relative values or conversion factors in their respective specialties. The board would then formulate the new fee schedule and submit it to the vote of the entire membership.<sup>10</sup>

LEdHN[3B][] [3B]

The fee schedules limit the amount that the member doctors may recover for services performed for patients insured under plans approved by the foundations. To obtain this approval the insurers -- including self-insured employers as well as insurance companies<sup>11</sup> -- agree to pay [***57] the doctors' charges up to the scheduled amounts, and in exchange the doctors agree to accept those amounts as payment in full for their services. The doctors are free to charge higher fees to uninsured patients, and they also may charge any patient less than the scheduled maxima. A patient who is insured by a foundation-endorsed plan is guaranteed complete coverage for the full amount of his medical bills only if he is treated by a foundation member. He [***17] is free to go to a consumer pays a fixed periodic fee to a functionally integrated group of doctors in exchange for the group's agreement to provide any medical treatment that the subscriber might need. The economic risk is thus borne by the doctors.

<sup>8</sup>The record contains divergent figures on the percentage of Pima County doctors that belong to the foundation. A 1975 publication of the foundation reported 80%; a 1978 affidavit by the executive director of the foundation reported 30%.

<sup>9</sup>In 1980, after the District Court and the Court of Appeals had rendered judgment, both foundations apparently discontinued the use of relative values and conversion factors in formulating the fee schedules. Moreover, the Maricopa Foundation that year amended its bylaws to provide that the fee schedule would be adopted by majority vote of its board of trustees and not by vote of its members. The challenge to the foundation activities as we have described them in the text, however, is not mooted by these changes. See United States v. W.T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629 (1953).

<sup>10</sup>The parties disagree over whether the increases in the fee schedules are the cause or the result of the increases in the prevailing rate for medical services in the relevant markets. There appears to be agreement, however, that 85-95% of physicians in Maricopa County bill at or above the maximum reimbursement levels set by the Maricopa Foundation.

<sup>11</sup>Seven different insurance companies underwrite health insurance plans that have been approved by the Maricopa Foundation, and three companies underwrite the plans approved by the Pima Foundation. The record contains no firm data on the portion of the health care market that is covered by these plans. The State relies upon a 1974 analysis indicating that the insurance plans endorsed by the Maricopa Foundation had about 63% of the prepaid health care market, but the respondents contest the accuracy of this analysis.

nonmember physician and is still covered for charges that do not exceed the maximum-fee schedule, but he must pay any excess that the nonmember physician may charge.

LEdHN[2B] [2B] The impact of the foundation fee schedules on medical fees and on insurance premiums is a matter of dispute. The State of Arizona contends that the periodic upward revisions of the maximum-fee schedules have the effect of stabilizing [***18] and enhancing the level of actual charges by physicians, [**2472] and [*342] that the increasing level of their fees in turn increases insurance premiums. The foundations, on the other hand, argue that the schedules impose a meaningful limit on physicians' charges, and that the advance agreement by the doctors to accept the maxima enables the insurance carriers to limit and to calculate more efficiently the risks they underwrite and therefore serves as an effective cost-containment mechanism that has saved patients and insurers millions of dollars. Although the Attorneys General of 40 different States, as well as the Solicitor General of the United States and certain organizations representing consumers of medical services, have filed amicus curiae briefs supporting the State of Arizona's position on the merits, we must assume that the respondents' view of the genuine issues of fact is correct.

This assumption presents, but does not answer, the question whether the Sherman Act prohibits the competing doctors from adopting, revising, and agreeing to use a maximum-fee schedule in implementation of the insurance plans.

III

The respondents recognize that our decisions [***19] establish that price-fixing agreements are unlawful on their face. But they argue that the per se rule does not govern this case because the agreements at issue are horizontal and fix maximum prices, are among members of a profession, are in an industry with which the judiciary has little antitrust experience, and are alleged to have procompetitive justifications. Before we examine each of these arguments, we pause to consider the history and the meaning of the per se rule against price-fixing agreements.

A

LEdHN[4] [4] Section 1 of the Sherman Act of 1890 HN1 literally prohibits every agreement "in restraint of trade." <sup>12</sup> In United States v. Joint Traffic Assn., 171 U.S. 505 [**581] (1898), we recognized that Congress could not have intended a literal interpretation of the word "every"; since Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U.S. 1 (1911), [***20] HN2 we have analyzed most restraints under the so-called "rule of reason." As its name suggests, the rule of reason requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition.<sup>13</sup>

[***21] The elaborate inquiry into the reasonableness of a challenged business practice entails significant costs. Litigation of the effect or purpose of a practice often is extensive and complex. Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 (1958). Judges often lack the expert understanding of industrial market structures and behavior to determine with any confidence a practice's effect on competition. United States v. Topco Associates,

<sup>12</sup> HN3 "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 1.

<sup>13</sup> Justice Brandeis provided the classic statement of the rule of reason in Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238 (1918):

HN4 "The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences."

Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 609-610 (1972). And the result of the process in any given case may provide little certainty or guidance about the legality of [**2473] a practice in another context. Id. at 609, n. 10; Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, supra, at 5.

The costs of judging business practices under the rule of reason, however, have been reduced by the recognition of per se rules.<sup>14</sup> Once experience with a particular kind of restraint enables the Court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it, it has applied a conclusive presumption that the restraint is unreasonable.<sup>15</sup> [***23] As in every rule of general application, the [***22] match between the presumed and the actual is imperfect. For the sake of business certainty and litigation efficiency, we have tolerated the invalidation of some agreements that a fullblown inquiry might have proved to be reasonable.<sup>16</sup>

Thus [***59] the Court in Standard Oil recognized that [***24] HN6<sup>17</sup> inquiry under its rule of reason ended once a price-fixing agreement was proved, for there was "a conclusive presumption which [*345] brought [such agreements] within the statute." 221 U.S., at 65. By 1927, the Court was able to state that "it has . . . often been decided and always assumed that uniform price-fixing by those controlling in any substantial manner a trade or business in interstate commerce is prohibited by the Sherman Law." United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 398.

"The aim and result of every price-fixing agreement, if effective, is the elimination of one form of competition. The power to fix prices, whether reasonably exercised or not, involves power to control the market and to fix arbitrary and unreasonable prices. The reasonable price fixed today may through economic and business changes become the unreasonable price of tomorrow. Once established, it may be maintained unchanged because of the absence of competition secured by the agreement for a price reasonable when fixed. Agreements which create such potential power may well be held to be in themselves [***25] unreasonable or unlawful restraints, without the necessity of minute inquiry whether a particular price is reasonable or unreasonable as fixed and without placing on the government in enforcing the Sherman Law the burden of ascertaining from day to day whether it has become unreasonable through the mere variation of economic conditions." Id. at 397-398.

Thirteen years later, the Court could report that "for over forty years this Court has consistently and without deviation adhered [**2474] to the principle that price-fixing agreements are unlawful per se under the Sherman Act and that no showing of so-called competitive abuses or evils which those agreements were designed to eliminate or alleviate may be interposed as a defense." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 218 (1940). In that case a glut in the spot market for gasoline had prompted the major oil refiners to engage in a concerted effort to

<sup>14</sup> For a thoughtful and brief discussion of the costs and benefits of rule-of-reason versus per se rule analysis of price-fixing agreements, see F. Scherer, Industrial Market Structure and Economic Performance 438-443 (1970). Professor Scherer's "opinion, shared by a majority of American economists concerned with antitrust policy, is that in the present legal framework the costs of implementing a rule of reason would exceed the benefits derived from considering each restrictive agreement on its merits and prohibiting only those which appear unreasonable." Id. at 440.

<sup>15</sup> HN5<sup>18</sup> "Among the practices which the courts have heretofore deemed to be unlawful in and of themselves are price fixing, division of markets, group boycotts, and tying arrangements." Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S., at 5 (citations omitted). See United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 522-523 (1948).

<sup>16</sup> Thus, in applying the per se rule to invalidate the restrictive practice in United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596 (1972), we stated that "[w]hether or not we would decide this case the same way under the rule of reason used by the District Court is irrelevant to the issue before us." Id. at 609. The Court made the same point in Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S., at 50, n. 16:

"Per se rules thus require the Court to make broad generalizations about the social utility of particular commercial practices. The probability that anticompetitive consequences will result from a practice and the severity of those consequences must be balanced against its procompetitive consequences. Cases that do not fit the generalization may arise, but a per se rule reflects the judgment that such cases are not sufficiently common or important to justify the time and expense necessary to identify them."

purchase and store surplus gasoline in order to maintain stable prices. Absent the agreement, the [*346] companies argued, competition was cutthroat and self-defeating. The argument did not carry the day:

[****26] HN7 "Any combination which tampers with price structures is engaged in an unlawful activity. Even though [***60] the members of the price-fixing group were in no position to control the market, to the extent that they raised, lowered, or stabilized prices they would be directly interfering with the free play of market forces. The Act places all such schemes beyond the pale and protects that vital part of our economy against any degree of interference. Congress has not left with us the determination of whether or not particular price-fixing schemes are wise or unwise, healthy or destructive. It has not permitted the age-old cry of ruinous competition and competitive evils to be a defense to price-fixing conspiracies. It has no more allowed genuine or fancied competitive abuses as a legal justification for such schemes than it has the good intentions of the members of the combination. If such a shift is to be made, it must be done by the Congress. Certainly Congress has not left us with any such choice. Nor has the Act created or authorized the creation of any special exception in favor of the oil industry. Whatever may be its [****27] peculiar problems and characteristics, the Sherman Act, so far as price-fixing agreements are concerned, establishes one uniform rule applicable to all industries alike." *Id.* at 221-222.

The application of the per se rule to maximum-price-fixing agreements in *Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211 \(1951\)*, followed ineluctably from Socony-Vacuum:

"For such agreements, no less than those to fix minimum prices, cripple the freedom of traders and thereby restrain their ability to sell in accordance with their own judgment. We reaffirm what we said in *United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223: HN8* Under [*347] the Sherman Act a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce is illegal per se." *340 U.S., at 213*.

Over the objection that maximum-price-fixing agreements were not the "economic equivalent" of minimum-price-fixing agreements, [****28] <sup>17</sup> Kiefer-Stewart was reaffirmed in *Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145 \(1968\)*:

"Maximum and minimum price fixing may have different consequences in many situations. But schemes to fix maximum prices, by substituting the perhaps erroneous judgment of a seller for the forces of the competitive market, may severely intrude upon the ability of buyers to compete and survive in that market. Competition, even in a single product, is not cast in a single mold. Maximum prices may be fixed too low for the dealer to furnish services essential to the value which goods have for the consumer or to furnish services and conveniences which consumers desire and for which they are willing to pay. Maximum price fixing may channel distribution through a few large or specifically advantaged dealers who otherwise [***61] would be subject to significant nonprice competition. Moreover, if the actual price [**2475] charged under a maximum price scheme is nearly always the fixed maximum price, which is increasingly likely as the maximum price approaches the actual cost of the dealer, the scheme tends to acquire all the attributes of an arrangement fixing minimum [****29] prices." *Id., at 152-153* (footnote omitted).

We have not wavered in our enforcement of the per se rule against price fixing. Indeed, in our most recent price-fixing case we summarily reversed the decision of another Ninth [*348] Circuit panel that a horizontal agreement among competitors to fix credit terms does not necessarily contravene the antitrust laws. *Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643 \(1980\)*.

B

*LEdHN* [5] Our decisions foreclose the argument that the agreements at issue escape per se condemnation because they are horizontal and fix maximum prices. Kiefer-Stewart and Albrecht place horizontal agreements to fix maximum prices on the same legal -- even if not economic -- footing as agreements to fix minimum or uniform prices.<sup>18</sup> The per se rule "is grounded on [****30] faith in price competition as a market force [and not] on a policy of low selling prices at the price of eliminating competition." Rahl, Price Competition and the Price Fixing Rule -- Preface and Perspective, 57 Nw. U. L. Rev. 137, 142 (1962). In this case the rule is violated by a price restraint that tends to provide the same economic rewards to all practitioners regardless of their skill, their experience, their training, or their willingness to employ innovative and difficult procedures in individual cases. Such a restraint also may discourage entry into the market and may deter experimentation and new developments by individual entrepreneurs. It may be a masquerade for an agreement to fix uniform prices, or it may in the future take on that character.

---

<sup>17</sup> *Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S., at 156* (Harlan, J., dissenting).

[****31] [LEdHN\[6\]](#)↑ [6]Nor does the fact that doctors -- rather than nonprofessionals -- are the parties to the price-fixing agreements support the respondents' position. In Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 788, n. 17 \(1975\), we stated that the "public service aspect, and other features of the professions, may [*349] require that a particular practice, which could properly be viewed as a violation of the Sherman Act in another context, be treated differently." See National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 696 \(1978\). The price-fixing agreements in this case, however, are not premised on public service or ethical norms. The respondents do not argue, as did the defendants in Goldfarb and Professional Engineers, that the quality of the professional service that their members [***62] provide is enhanced by the price restraint. The respondents' claim for relief from the per se rule is simply that the doctors' agreement not to charge certain insureds more than a fixed price facilitates the successful marketing of an attractive [****32] insurance plan. But the claim that the price restraint will make it easier for customers to pay does not distinguish the medical profession from any other provider of goods or services.

[LEdHN\[7\]](#)↑ [7] [LEdHN\[8A\]](#)↑ [8A]We are equally unpersuaded by the argument that we should not apply the per se rule in this case because the judiciary has little antitrust experience in the health care industry.<sup>19</sup> [****34] The argument quite obviously [**2476] is inconsistent with Socony-Vacuum. In unequivocal terms, we stated that, "[whatever] may be its peculiar problems and characteristics, the Sherman Act, so far as price-fixing agreements are concerned, establishes one uniform rule applicable to all industries alike." 310 U.S., at 222. We also stated that HN9↑ "[the] elimination of so-called competitive evils [in an industry] is no legal justification" for price-fixing agreements, id., at 220, yet the Court of Appeals refused to apply the [****33] per se rule in [*350] this case in part because the health care industry was so far removed from the competitive model.<sup>20</sup> Consistent with our prediction in Socony-Vacuum, 310 U.S., at 221, the result of this reasoning was the adoption by the Court of <sup>18</sup> It is true that in Kiefer-Stewart, as in Albrecht, the agreement involved a vertical arrangement in which maximum resale prices were fixed. But the case also involved an agreement among competitors to impose the resale price restraint. In any event, horizontal restraints are generally less defensible than vertical restraints. See Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 \(1977\); Easterbrook, Maximum Price Fixing, 48 U. Chi. L. Rev. 886, 890, n. 20 (1981).

<sup>19</sup> The argument should not be confused with the established position that HN10↑ a new per se rule is not justified until the judiciary obtains considerable rule-of-reason experience with the particular type of restraint challenged. See White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253 \(1963\). Nor is our unwillingness to examine the economic justification of this particular application of the per se rule against price fixing inconsistent with our reexamination of the general validity of the per se rule rejected in Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., supra.

<sup>20</sup> "The health care industry, moreover, presents a particularly difficult area. The first step to understanding is to recognize that not only is access to the medical profession very time consuming and expensive both for the applicant and society generally, but also that numerous government subventions of the costs of medical care have created both a demand and supply function for medical services that is artificially high. The present supply and demand functions of medical services in no way approximate those which would exist in a purely private competitive order. An accurate description of those functions moreover is not available. Thus, we lack baselines by which could be measured the distance between the present supply and demand functions and those which would exist under ideal competitive conditions." 643 F.2d, at 556.

Appeals of a legal standard based on the reasonableness of the fixed prices,<sup>21</sup> [****35] an inquiry we have so often condemned.<sup>22</sup> Finally, [*351] the argument [***63] that the per se rule must be rejustified for every industry that has not been subject to significant antitrust litigation ignores the rationale for per se rules, which in part is to avoid "the necessity for an incredibly complicated and prolonged economic investigation into the entire history of the industry involved, as well as related industries, in an effort to determine at large whether a particular restraint has been unreasonable -- an inquiry so often wholly fruitless when undertaken." Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S., at 5.

LEdHN[8B] [↑] [8B]

LEdHN[9A] [↑] [9A] [****36] The respondents' principal argument is that the per se rule is inapplicable because their agreements are alleged to have procompetitive justifications. The argument indicates a misunderstanding of the per se concept. The anticompetitive potential inherent in all price-fixing agreements justifies their facial invalidation even if procompetitive justifications are offered [**2477] for some.<sup>23</sup> Those claims of enhanced competition are so unlikely to prove significant in any particular case that we adhere to the rule of law that is justified in its general application. Even when the respondents are given every benefit of the doubt, the limited record in this case is not inconsistent with the presumption that the respondents' agreements will not significantly enhance competition.

LEdHN[9B] [↑] [9B]

[****37] The respondents contend that their fee schedules are procompetitive because they make it possible to provide consumers of health care with a uniquely desirable form of insurance coverage that could not otherwise exist. The features of the foundation-endorsed insurance plans that they stress are a choice of doctors, complete insurance coverage, and lower premiums. The first two characteristics, however, are hardly unique to these plans. Since only about 70% of [*352] the doctors in the relevant market are members of either foundation, the guarantee of complete coverage only applies when an insured chooses a physician in that 70%. If he elects to go to a nonfoundation doctor, he may be required to pay a portion of the doctor's fee. It is fair to presume, however, that at least 70% of the doctors in other markets charge no more than the "usual, customary, and reasonable" fee that typical insurers are willing to reimburse in full.<sup>24</sup> Thus, in Maricopa and Pima Counties as well as in most parts of

<sup>21</sup> "Perforce we must take industry as it exists, absent the challenged feature, as our baseline for measuring anticompetitive impact. The relevant inquiry becomes whether fees paid to doctors under that system would be less than those payable under the FMC maximum fee agreement. Put differently, confronted with an industry widely deviant from a reasonably free competitive model, such as agriculture, the proper inquiry is whether the practice enhances the prices charged for the services. In simplified economic terms, the issue is whether the maximum fee arrangement better permits the attainment of the monopolist's goal, viz., the matching of marginal cost to marginal revenue, or in fact obstructs that end." Ibid.

<sup>22</sup> In the first price-fixing case arising under the Sherman Act, the Court was required to pass on the sufficiency of the defendants' plea that they had established rates that were actually beneficial to consumers. Assuming the factual validity of the plea, the Court rejected the defense as a matter of law. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290 (1897). In National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 689 (1978), we referred to Judge Taft's "classic rejection of the argument that competitors may lawfully agree to sell their goods at the same price as long as the agreed-upon price is reasonable." See United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271 (CA6 1898), aff'd, 175 U.S. 211 (1899). In our latest price-fixing case, we reiterated the point: "It is no excuse that the prices fixed are themselves reasonable." Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 647 (1980).

<sup>23</sup> HN11 [↑] "Whatever economic justification particular price-fixing agreements may be thought to have, the law does not permit an inquiry into their reasonableness. They are all banned because of their actual or potential threat to the central nervous system of the economy." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 226, n. 59 (1940).

<sup>24</sup> According to the respondents' figures, this presumption is well founded. See Brief for Respondents 42, n. 120.

the country, if an insured asks his [***64] doctor if the insurance coverage is complete, presumably in about 70% of the cases the doctor will say "Yes" and in about 30% of the [***38] cases he will say "No."

It is true that a binding assurance of complete insurance coverage -- as well as most of the respondents' potential for lower insurance premiums <sup>25</sup> [***40] -- can be obtained only if the insurer and the doctor agree in advance on the maximum fee that the doctor will accept as full payment for a particular service. Even if a fee schedule is therefore desirable, it is not necessary that the doctors do the price fixing.<sup>26</sup> [***41] The [*353] [**2478] record indicates that the Arizona Comprehensive Medical/Dental Program for Foster Children is administered by the Maricopa Foundation pursuant to a contract under which the maximum-fee schedule is prescribed by a state agency rather than by the doctors.<sup>27</sup> This program and the Blue Shield plan challenged in Group Life & Health Insurance Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205 \(1979\), indicate that insurers are capable [***39] not only of fixing maximum reimbursable prices but also of obtaining binding agreements with providers guaranteeing the insured full reimbursement of a participating provider's fee. In light of these examples, it is not surprising that nothing in the record even arguably supports the conclusion that this type of insurance program could not function if the fee schedules were set in a different way.

The most that can be said for having doctors fix the maximum prices is that doctors may be able to do it more efficiently than insurers. The validity of that assumption is [***65] far from obvious,<sup>28</sup> [***42] but in any event there is no reason to believe [*354] that any savings that might accrue from this arrangement would be sufficiently great to affect the competitiveness of these kinds of insurance plans. It is entirely possible that the potential or <sup>25</sup> We do not perceive the respondents' claim of procompetitive justification for their fee schedules to rest on the premise that the fee schedules actually reduce medical fees and accordingly reduce insurance premiums, thereby enhancing competition in the health insurance industry. Such an argument would merely restate the long-rejected position that fixed prices are reasonable if they are lower than free competition would yield. It is arguable, however, that the existence of a fee schedule, whether fixed by the doctors or by the insurers, makes it easier -- and to that extent less expensive -- for insurers to calculate the risks that they underwrite and to arrive at the appropriate reimbursement on insured claims.

<sup>26</sup> According to a Federal Trade Commission staff report: "Until the mid-1960's, most Blue Shield plans determined in advance how much to pay for particular procedures and prepared fee schedules reflecting their determinations. Fee schedules are still used in approximately 25 percent of Blue Shield contracts." Bureau of Competition, Federal Trade Commission, Medical Participation in Control of Blue Shield and Certain Other Open-Panel Medical Prepayment Plans 128 (1979). We do not suggest that Blue Shield plans are not actually controlled by doctors. Indeed, as the same report discusses at length, the belief that they are has given rise to considerable antitrust litigation. See also D. Kass & P. Pautler, Bureau of Economics, Federal Trade Commission, Staff Report on Physician Control of Blue Shield Plans (1979). Nor does this case present the question whether an insurer may, consistent with the Sherman Act, fix the fee schedule and enter into bilateral contracts with individual doctors. That question was not reached in Group Life & Health Insurance Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205 \(1979\). See id., at 210, n. 5. In an amicus curiae brief, the United States expressed its opinion that such an arrangement would be legal unless the plaintiffs could establish that a conspiracy among providers was at work. Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae, O. T. 1978, No. 77-952, pp. 10-11. Our point is simply that the record provides no factual basis for the respondents' claim that the doctors must fix the fee schedule.

<sup>27</sup> In that program the foundation performs the peer review function as well as the administrative function of paying the doctors' claims.

<sup>28</sup> In order to create an insurance plan under which the doctor would agree to accept as full payment a fee prescribed in a fixed schedule, someone must canvass the doctors to determine what maximum prices would be high enough to attract sufficient numbers of individual doctors to sign up but low enough to make the insurance plan competitive. In this case that canvassing function is performed by the foundation; the foundation then deals with the insurer. It would seem that an insurer could simply bypass the foundation by performing the canvassing function and dealing with the doctors itself. Under the foundation plan, each doctor must look at the maximum-fee schedule fixed by his competitors and vote for or against approval of the plan (and, if the plan is approved by majority vote, he must continue or revoke his foundation membership). A similar, if to some extent more protracted, process would occur if it were each insurer that offered the maximum-fee schedule to each doctor.

actual power of the foundations to dictate the terms of such insurance plans may more than offset the theoretical efficiencies upon which the respondents' defense ultimately rests.<sup>29</sup>

C

LEdHN[10A][↑] [10A] Our adherence to the per se rule is grounded not only on economic prediction, judicial convenience, and business certainty, but also on a recognition of the respective roles of the Judiciary and the Congress in regulating the economy. United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S., at 611-612. Given its generality, our enforcement of the Sherman Act has required the Court to provide much of its substantive content. By articulating the rules of law with some clarity and by adhering to rules that are justified in their general application, however, we enhance the legislative prerogative [****43] to amend the law. The respondents' arguments against application of the per se rule in this case therefore are [*355] better directed to the Legislature. Congress may consider the exception that we are not free to read into the statute.<sup>30</sup>

LEdHN[10B][↑] [10B]

[***44] [**2479] IV

LEdHN[1B][↑] [1B] LEdHN[11][↑] [11] Having declined the respondents' invitation to cut back on the per se rule against price fixing, we are left with the respondents' argument that their fee schedules involve price fixing in only a literal sense. For this argument, the respondents rely upon Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1 (1979).

[***66] In Broadcast Music we were confronted with an antitrust challenge to the marketing of the right to use copyrighted compositions derived from the entire membership of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP). The so-called "blanket license" was entirely different from the product that any one composer was able to sell by himself.<sup>31</sup> Although there was little competition among individual composers for their separate compositions, the blanket-license arrangement did not place any restraint on the right of any individual copyright owner to sell his own compositions separately to any buyer at any price.<sup>32</sup> But [***45] a [*356] "necessary consequence" of the creation of the blanket license was that its price had to be established. Id., at 21. We held that the delegation by the composers to ASCAP of the power to fix the price for the blanket license was not a species of the price-fixing agreements categorically forbidden by the Sherman Act. The record disclosed price fixing only in a "literal sense." Id., at 8.

<sup>29</sup> In this case it appears that the fees are set by a group with substantial power in the market for medical services, and that there is competition among insurance companies in the sale of medical insurance. Under these circumstances the insurance companies are not likely to have significantly greater bargaining power against a monopoly of doctors than would individual consumers of medical services.

<sup>30</sup> "[Congress] can, of course, make per se rules inapplicable in some or all cases, and leave courts free to ramble through the wilds of economic theory in order to maintain a flexible approach." United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S., at 610, n. 10. Indeed, it has exempted certain industries from the full reach of the Sherman Act. See, e. g., 7 U. S. C. §§ 291, 292 (Capper-Volstead Act, agricultural cooperatives); 15 U. S. C. §§ 1011-1013 (McCarran-Ferguson Act, insurance); 49 U. S. C. § 5b (Reed-Bulwinkle Act, rail and motor carrier rate-fixing bureaus); 15 U. S. C. § 1801 (newspaper joint operating agreements).

<sup>31</sup> "Thus, to the extent the blanket license is a different product, ASCAP is not really a joint sales agency offering the individual goods of many sellers, but is a separate seller offering its blanket license, of which the individual compositions are raw material." 441 U.S., at 22 (footnote omitted).

<sup>32</sup> "Here, the blanket-license fee is not set by competition among individual copyright owners, and it is a fee for the use of any of the compositions covered by the license. But the blanket license cannot be wholly equated with a simple horizontal arrangement among competitors. ASCAP does set the price for its blanket license, but that license is quite different from anything any individual owner could issue. The individual composers and authors have neither agreed not to sell individually in any other market nor use the blanket license to mask price fixing in such other markets." Id., at 23-24 (footnote omitted).

[****46] This case is fundamentally different. Each of the foundations is composed of individual practitioners who compete with one another for patients. Neither the foundations nor the doctors sell insurance, and they derive no profits from the sale of health insurance policies. The members of the foundations sell medical services. Their combination in the form of the foundation does not permit them to sell any different product.<sup>33</sup> Their combination has merely permitted them to sell their services to certain customers at fixed prices and arguably to affect the prevailing market price of medical care.

[****47] The foundations are not analogous to partnerships or other joint arrangements in which persons who would otherwise be competitors pool their capital and share the risks of loss as well as the opportunities for profit. In such joint ventures, the partnership is regarded as a single firm competing with other sellers in the market. The agreement under attack is [*357] an agreement among hundreds of competing doctors concerning the price at which each will offer his own services to a substantial number of consumers. It is true that [***67] some are surgeons, some anesthesiologists, and some psychiatrists, but the doctors do not sell a package of three kinds of services. If a clinic offered complete medical coverage for a flat fee, the cooperating doctors would have the type of partnership arrangement in which a price-fixing agreement [**2480] among the doctors would be perfectly proper. But the fee agreements disclosed by the record in this case are among independent competing entrepreneurs. They fit squarely into the horizontal price-fixing mold.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed.

It is so ordered.

JUSTICE BLACKMUN and JUSTICE O'CONNOR took no [****48] part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Dissent by: POWELL

Dissent

---

JUSTICE POWELL, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE and JUSTICE REHNQUIST join, dissenting.

The medical care plan condemned by the Court today is a comparatively new method of providing insured medical services at predetermined maximum costs. It involves no coercion. Medical insurance companies, physicians, and patients alike are free to participate or not as they choose. On its face, the plan seems to be in the public interest.

The State of Arizona challenged the plan on a per se antitrust theory. The District Court denied the State's summary judgment motion, and -- because of the novelty of the issue -- certified the question of per se liability for an interlocutory appeal. On summary judgment, the record and all inferences therefrom must be viewed in the light most favorable to the respondents. Nevertheless, rather than identifying clearly the controlling principles and remanding for decision on a completed record, this Court makes its own per se judgment of invalidity. The respondents' contention that [*358] the "consumers" of medical services are benefited substantially by the plan is given [****49] short shrift. The Court concedes that "the parties conducted [only] a limited amount of pretrial discovery," ante, at 336, leaving undeveloped facts critical to an informed decision of this case. I do not think today's decision on an incomplete record is consistent with proper judicial resolution of an issue of this complexity, novelty, and importance to the public. I therefore dissent.

---

<sup>33</sup> It may be true that by becoming a member of the foundation the individual practitioner obtains a competitive advantage in the market for medical services that he could not unilaterally obtain. That competitive advantage is the ability to attract as customers people who value both the guarantee of full health coverage and a choice of doctors. But, as we have indicated, the setting of the price by doctors is not a "necessary consequence" of an arrangement with an insurer in which the doctor agrees not to charge certain insured customers more than a fixed price.

I

The Maricopa and Pima Foundations for Medical Care are professional associations of physicians organized by the medical societies in their respective counties.<sup>1</sup> The foundations [***68] were established to make available a type of prepaid medical insurance plan, aspects of which are the target of this litigation. Under the plan, the foundations insure no risks themselves. Rather, their key function is to secure agreement among their member physicians to a maximum-price schedule for specific medical services. Once a fee schedule has been agreed upon following a process of consultation and balloting, the foundations invite private insurance companies to participate by offering medical insurance policies based upon the maximum-fee schedule.<sup>2</sup> The insurers agree to offer complete [***50] [*359] reimbursement to their insureds for the full amount of their medical bills -- so long as these bills do not exceed the maximum-fee schedule.

[***51] [**2481] An insured under a foundation-sponsored plan is free to go to any physician. The physician then bills the foundation directly for services performed.<sup>3</sup> If the insured has chosen a physician who is not a foundation member and the bill exceeds the foundation maximum-fee schedule, the insured is liable for the excess. If the billing physician is a foundation member, the foundation disallows the excess pursuant to the agreement each physician executed upon joining the foundation.<sup>4</sup> Thus, the plan offers complete coverage of medical expenses but still permits an insured to choose any physician.

[***52] II

This case comes to us on a plaintiff's motion for summary judgment after only limited discovery. Therefore, as noted above, the inferences to be drawn from the record must be viewed in the light most favorable to the respondents. United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, 655 (1962). [*360] This requires, as the Court acknowledges, that we consider the foundation arrangement as one that "impose[s] a meaningful limit on physicians' charges," that "enables the insurance carriers to limit and to calculate more efficiently the risks they underwrite," and that "therefore serves as an effective cost containment mechanism that has saved patients and insurers millions of dollars." Ante, at 342. The question is whether we [***69] should condemn this arrangement forthwith under the Sherman Act, a law designed to benefit consumers.

<sup>1</sup> The Pima Foundation is open to any Pima County area physician licensed in Arizona. It has a renewable 5-year membership term. A voluntary resignation provision permits earlier exit on the January 1 following announcement of an intent to resign.

The Maricopa Foundation admits physicians who are members of their county medical society. The Maricopa Foundation has a renewable 1-year term of membership. Initial membership may be for a term of less than a year so that a uniform annual termination date for all members can be maintained.

The medical societies are professional associations of physicians practicing in the particular county. The Pima County Medical Society, but not the Pima Foundation, has been dismissed from the case pursuant to a consent decree.

<sup>2</sup> Three private carriers underwrite various Pima Foundation-sponsored plans: Arizona Blue Cross-Blue Shield, Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co., and Connecticut General Life Insurance Co. The latter two companies also underwrite plans for the Maricopa Foundation, as do five other private insurance companies. Apparently large employers, such as the State of Arizona and Motorola, also act as foundation-approved insurers with respect to their employees' insurance plans.

<sup>3</sup> The foundations act as the insurance companies' claims agents on a contract basis. They administer the claims and, to some extent, review the medical necessity and propriety of the treatment for which a claim is entered. The foundations charge insurers a fee for their various services. In recent years, this fee has been set at 4% of the insurers' premiums.

<sup>4</sup> This agreement provides in part that the physician agrees "to be bound . . . with respect to maximum fees . . . by any fee determination by the [foundation] consistent with the schedule adopted by the [foundation physician] membership . . ." App. 31-32. The agreement also provides that foundation members "understand and agree that participating membership in the [foundation] shall not affect the method of computation or amount of fees billed by me with respect to any medical care for any patient." Ibid.

Several other aspects of the record are of key significance but are not stressed by the Court. First, the foundation arrangement forecloses no competition. Unlike the classic cartel agreement, the foundation plan does not instruct potential competitors: "Deal with consumers on the following terms and no others. [****53]" Rather, physicians who participate in the foundation plan are free both to associate with other medical insurance plans -- at any fee level, high or low -- and directly to serve uninsured patients -- at any fee level, high or low. Similarly, insurers that participate in the foundation plan also remain at liberty to do business outside the plan with any physician -- foundation member or not -- at any fee level. Nor are physicians locked into a plan for more than one year's membership. See n. 1, supra. Thus freedom to compete, as well as freedom to withdraw, is preserved. The Court cites no case in which a remotely comparable plan or agreement is condemned on a per se basis.

Second, on this record we must find that insurers represent consumer interests. Normally consumers search for high quality at low prices. But once a consumer is insured<sup>5</sup> -- i. e., has chosen a medical insurance plan -- he is [*361] largely indifferent to the amount that his physician charges if the coverage is full, as under the foundation-sponsored plan.

[****54] The insurer, however, is not indifferent. To keep insurance premiums at a competitive level and to remain profitable, insurers -- including those who have contracts with the foundations -- step into the consumer's [*2482] shoes with his incentive to contain medical costs. Indeed, insurers may be the only parties who have the effective power to restrain medical costs, given the difficulty that patients experience in comparing price and quality for a professional service such as medical care.

On the record before us, there is no evidence of opposition to the foundation plan by insurance companies -- or, for that matter, by members of the public. Rather seven insurers willingly have chosen to contract out to the foundations the task of developing maximum-fee schedules.<sup>6</sup> Again, on the record before us, we must infer that the foundation plan -- open as it is to insurers, physicians, and the public -- has in fact benefited consumers by "[enabling] the insurance carriers to limit and to calculate more efficiently the risks they underwrite." Ante, at 342. Nevertheless, even though the case is here on an [*70] incomplete summary judgment record, the Court conclusively [****55] draws contrary inferences to support its per se judgment.

III

It is settled law that once an arrangement has been labeled as "price fixing" it is to be condemned per se. But it is equally well settled that this characterization is not to be applied [*362] as a talisman to every arrangement that involves a literal fixing of prices. Many lawful contracts, mergers, and partnerships fix prices. But our cases require a more discerning [****56] approach. The inquiry in an antitrust case is not simply one of "determining whether two or more potential competitors have literally 'fixed' a 'price.' . . . [Rather], it is necessary to characterize the challenged conduct as falling within or without that category of behavior to which we apply the label 'per se price fixing.' That will often, but not always, be a simple matter." Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 9 (1979).

Before characterizing an arrangement as a per se price-fixing agreement meriting condemnation, a court should determine whether it is a "naked [restraint] of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition." United States v.

<sup>5</sup> At least seven insurance companies are competing in the relevant market. See n. 2, supra. At this stage of the case we must infer that they are competing vigorously and successfully.

The term "consumer" -- commonly used in antitrust cases and literature -- is used herein to mean persons who need or may need medical services from a physician.

<sup>6</sup> The State introduced no evidence on its summary judgment motion supporting its apparent view that insurers effectively can perform this function themselves, without physician participation. It is clear, however, that price and quality of professional services -- unlike commercial products -- are difficult to compare. Cf. Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350, 391-395 (1977) (opinion of POWELL, J.). This is particularly true of medical service. Presumably this is a reason participating insurers wish to utilize the foundations' services.

Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608 (1972), quoting White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263 (1963). See also Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49-50 (1977). Such a determination is necessary because "departure from the rule-of-reason standard must be based upon demonstrable economic effect rather than . . . upon formalistic line drawing." Id., at 58-59. [****57] As part of this inquiry, a court must determine whether the procompetitive economies that the arrangement purportedly makes possible are substantial and realizable in the absence of such an agreement.

For example, in National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679 (1978), we held unlawful as a per se violation an engineering association's canon of ethics that prohibited competitive bidding by its members. After the parties had "compiled a voluminous discovery and trial record," id., at 685, we carefully considered -- rather than rejected out of hand -- the engineers' "affirmative defense" of their agreement: that competitive bidding would tempt engineers to do inferior work that would threaten public [*363] health and safety. Id., at 693. We refused to accept this defense because its merits "[confirmed] rather than [refuted] the anticompetitive purpose and [**2483] effect of [the] agreement." Ibid. The analysis incident to the "price fixing" characterization found no substantial procompetitive efficiencies. See also Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 646, n. 8, and 649-650 (1980) [****58] (challenged arrangement condemned because it lacked "a procompetitive justification" and had "no apparent potentially redeeming value").

In Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., supra, there was minimum price fixing in the most "literal sense." Id., at 8. [***71] We nevertheless agreed, unanimously,<sup>7</sup> [****59] that an arrangement by which copyright clearinghouses sold performance rights to their entire libraries on a blanket rather than individual basis did not warrant condemnation on a per se basis. Individual licensing would have allowed competition between copyright owners. But we reasoned that licensing on a blanket basis yielded substantial efficiencies that otherwise could not be realized. See id., at 20-21. Indeed, the blanket license was itself "to some extent, a different product." Id., at 22.<sup>8</sup>

In sum, the fact that a foundation-sponsored health insurance plan literally involves the setting of ceiling prices among competing physicians does not, of itself, justify condemning the plan as per se illegal. Only if it is clear from the record that the agreement among physicians is "so plainly [*364] anticompetitive that no elaborate study of [its effects] is needed to establish [its] illegality" may a court properly make a per se judgment. National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, supra, at 692. [****60] And, as our cases demonstrate, the per se label should not be assigned without carefully considering substantial benefits and procompetitive justifications. This is especially true when the agreement under attack is novel, as in this case. See Broadcast Music, supra, at 9-10; United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., supra, at 607-608 ("It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations").

IV

The Court acknowledges that the per se ban against price fixing is not to be invoked every time potential competitors literally fix prices. Ante, at 355-357. One also would have expected it to acknowledge that per se characterization is inappropriate if the challenged agreement or plan achieves for the public procompetitive benefits that otherwise are not attainable. The Court does not do this. And neither does it provide alternative criteria by which the per se characterization is to be determined. It is content simply to brand this type of plan as "price fixing" and describe the agreement in Broadcast Music -- which also literally involved the [****61] fixing of prices -- as "fundamentally different." Ante, at 356.

<sup>7</sup> See Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S., at 25 (STEVENS, J., dissenting in part) ("The Court holds that ASCAP's blanket license is not a species of price fixing categorically forbidden by the Sherman Act. I agree with that holding").

<sup>8</sup> Cf. Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 54 (1977) (identifying achievement of efficiencies as "redeeming virtue" in decision sustaining an agreement against per se challenge); L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust § 74, p. 200 (1977) (per se characterization inappropriate if price agreement achieves great economies of scale and thereby improves economic performance); id., § 66, p. 180 (higher burden might reasonably be placed on plaintiff where agreement may involve efficiencies).

In fact, however, the two agreements are similar in important respects. Each involved competitors [***72] and resulted in cooperative pricing.<sup>9</sup> Each arrangement also was [**2484] prompted [*365] by the need for better service to the consumers.<sup>10</sup> [****62] And each arrangement apparently makes possible a new product by reaping otherwise unattainable efficiencies.<sup>11</sup> The Court's effort to distinguish Broadcast Music thus is unconvincing.<sup>12</sup>

[***63] [*366] The Court, in defending its holding, also suggests that "respondents' arguments against application of the per se rule . . . are better directed to the Legislature." Ante, at 354-355. This is curious advice. The Sherman Act does not mention per se rules. And it was not Congress that decided Broadcast Music and the other relevant cases. Since the enactment of the Sherman Act in 1890, it has been the duty of courts to interpret and apply its general mandate -- and to do so for the [***73] benefit of consumers.

As in Broadcast Music, the plaintiff here has not yet discharged its burden of proving that respondents have entered a plainly anticompetitive combination without a substantial and procompetitive efficiency justification. In my view,

---

<sup>9</sup> In this case the physicians in effect vote on foundation maximum-fee schedules. In Broadcast Music, the copyright owners aggregated their copyrights into a group package, sold rights to the package at a group price, and distributed the proceeds among themselves according to an agreed-upon formula. See Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. v. American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, 562 F.2d 130, 135-136 (CA2 1977).

<sup>10</sup> In this case, the foundations' maximum-fee schedules attempt to rectify the inflationary consequence of patients' indifference to the size of physicians' bills and insurers' commitment to reimburse whatever "usual, customary, and reasonable" charges physicians may submit. In Broadcast Music, the market defect inhered in the fact that "those who performed copyrighted music for profit were so numerous and widespread, and most performances so fleeting, that as a practical matter it was impossible for the many individual copyright owners to negotiate with and license the users and to detect unauthorized uses." 441 U.S., at 4-5.

<sup>11</sup> In this case, the record before us indicates that insurers -- those best situated to decide and best motivated to inspire trust in their judgment -- believe that the foundations are the most efficient providers of the maximum-fee scheduling service. In Broadcast Music, we found that the blanket copyright clearinghouse system "[reduced] costs absolutely . . ." Id., at 21.

<sup>12</sup> The Court states that in Broadcast Music "there was little competition among individual composers for their separate compositions." Ante, at 355. This is an irrational ground for distinction. Competition could have existed, 441 U.S., at 6; see also 562 F.2d, at 134-135, 138, but did not because of the cooperative agreement. That competition yet persists among physicians is not a sensible reason to invalidate their agreement while refusing similarly to condemn the Broadcast Music agreements that were completely effective in eliminating competition.

The Court also offers as a distinction that the foundations do not permit the creation of "any different product." Ante, at 356. But the foundations provide a "different product" to precisely the same extent as did Broadcast Music's clearinghouses. The clearinghouses provided only what copyright holders offered as individual sellers -- the rights to use individual compositions. The clearinghouses were able to obtain these same rights more efficiently, however, because they eliminated the need to engage in individual bargaining with each individual copyright owner. See 441 U.S., at 21-22.

In the same manner, the foundations set up an innovative means to deliver a basic service -- insured medical care from a wide range of physicians of one's choice -- in a more economical manner. The foundations' maximum-fee schedules replace the weak cost containment incentives in typical "usual, customary, and reasonable" insurance agreements with a stronger cost control mechanism: an absolute ceiling on maximum fees that can be charged. The conduct of the insurers in this case indicates that they believe that the foundation plan as it presently exists is the most efficient means of developing and administering such schedules. At this stage in the litigation, therefore, we must agree that the foundation plan permits the more economical delivery of the basic insurance service -- "to some extent, a different product." Broadcast Music, 441 U.S., at 22.

the District Court therefore correctly refused to grant the State's motion for summary judgment.<sup>13</sup> This critical and disputed issue of fact remains [**2485] unresolved. See Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 56\(c\).

[****64] [*367] V

I believe the Court's action today loses sight of the basic purposes of the Sherman Act. As we have noted, the anti-trust laws are a "consumer welfare prescription." Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 343 \(1979\). In its rush to condemn a novel plan about which it knows very little, the Court suggests that this end is achieved only by invalidating activities that may have some potential for harm. But the little that the record does show about the effect of the plan suggests that it is a means of providing medical services that in fact benefits rather than injures persons who need them.

In a complex economy, complex economic arrangements are commonplace. It is unwise for the Court, in a case as novel and important as this one, to make a final judgment in the absence of a complete record and where mandatory inferences create critical issues of fact.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 31, 32

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 13, 21

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

[****65] 15 USCS 1 et seq.

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 42

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Supreme Court's views as to what constitutes per se illegal "price fixing" to under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 64 L Ed 2d 997.

---

<sup>13</sup> Medical services differ from the typical service or commercial product at issue in an antitrust case. The services of physicians, rendered on a patient-by-patient basis, rarely can be compared by the recipient. A person requiring medical service or advice has no ready way of comparing physicians or of "shopping" for quality medical service at a lesser price. Primarily for this reason, the foundations -- operating the plan at issue -- perform a function that neither physicians nor prospective patients can perform individually. On a collective -- and average -- basis, the physicians themselves express a willingness to render certain identifiable services for not more than specified fees, leaving patients free to choose the physician. We thus have a case in which we derive little guidance from the conventional "perfect market" analysis of antitrust law. I would give greater weight than the Court to the uniqueness of medical services, and certainly would not invalidate on a per se basis a plan that may in fact perform a uniquely useful service.

Affirmance of the District Court's holding would not have immunized the medical service plan at issue. Nor would it have foreclosed an eventual conclusion on remand that the arrangement should be deemed per se invalid. And if the District Court had found that petitioner had failed to establish a per se violation of the Sherman Act, the question would have remained whether the plan comports with the rule of reason. See, e. g., United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 441, n. 16 \(1978\).

"Learned profession" exemption in Federal Antitrust Laws (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 39 ALR Fed 774.

---

End of Document

Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready

Supreme Court of the United States

March 24, 1982, Argued ; June 21, 1982, Decided

No. 81-225

Reporter

457 U.S. 465 *; 102 S. Ct. 2540 **; 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 ***; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 132 ****; 50 U.S.L.W. 4723; 1982-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P64,791

BLUE SHIELD OF VIRGINIA ET AL. v. McCREADY

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 649 F.2d 228, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

psychologists, reimburse, subscribers, anti trust law, psychiatrists, conspiracy, antitrust, conspirators, damages, anticompetitive, psychotherapy, coverage, clinical psychologist, petitioners', Clayton Act, distributors, competitors, retailers, boycott, concerted refusal, purchasers, violations, antitrust violation, consumer, alleges, billed, remote, economic loss, third party, effecting

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN1** [ Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

**HN2** [ Remedies, Damages

Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides a treble-damages remedy to any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

HN3 [down] Private Actions, Standing

The Clayton Act (Act) does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN4 [down] Remedies, Damages

Section 4 of the Clayton Act does not authorize a state to sue in its parens patriae capacity for damages to its general economy. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN5 [down] Clayton Act, Claims

In the absence of direct guidance from Congress, and faced with the claim that a particular injury is too remote from the alleged violation to warrant § 4 standing under the Clayton Act, the courts are thus forced to resort to an analysis no less elusive than that employed traditionally by courts at common law with respect to the matter of proximate cause. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN6 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

Where the injury alleged is so integral an aspect of the conspiracy alleged, there can be no question but that the loss was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN7 [L] Clayton Act, Claims

For a plaintiff to recover treble damages on account of violations of § 7 of the Clayton Act, he must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market. Plaintiff must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendant's acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Health plan subscriber denied reimbursement for psychologist's fees, held to have standing to sue for conspiracy to exclude psychologists from psychotherapy market.

Summary

A prepaid group health plan subscriber brought a private antitrust class action in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia against the plan and a psychiatric society, alleging an unlawful conspiracy to exclude and boycott clinical psychologists from receiving compensation under the plan, so as to restrain competition in the psychotherapy market, and further alleging that her claims for psychotherapy by a clinical psychologist were routinely denied because not billed through a physician. The District Court granted the defendants' motion to dismiss, on the grounds that the subscriber lacked standing to sue, and the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit reversed (649 F2d 228).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Brennan, J., joined by White, Marshall, Blackmun, and Powell, JJ., it was held that the subscriber had suffered an injury redressable under the antitrust laws because the harm to her was a necessary step in effecting the ends of the illegal conspiracy.

Rehnquist, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and O'Connor, J., dissented, stating that the subscriber lacked standing to sue because she did not suffer the type of harm which makes the challenged practice illegal.

Stevens, J., dissented, expressing the view that the subscriber suffered no damages because she received psychological services presumably worth the payment made by her.

Headnotes

---

ERROR §1293 > pleadings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [L] [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [L] [1B]

On certiorari to review a case arising on a motion to dismiss, the United States Supreme Court will assume, as the plaintiff alleged, that but for an alleged conspiracy to deny payment to her, she would have been reimbursed by her health plan insurer for the cost of her psychologist's services.

457 U.S. 465, *465; 102 S. Ct. 2540, **2540; 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, ***149; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 132, ****1

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which provides a treble-damages remedy to any person "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws," does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers, but protects all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated.

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Congress did not intend to allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property.

SUIT §4 > statutory remedy -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

In identifying the limits of an explicit statutory remedy, legislative intent is the controlling consideration.

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

In determining which persons have sustained injuries too remote from an antitrust violation to give them standing to sue for damages under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which provides a treble-damages remedy to any person "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws," the court must look (1) to the physical and economic nexus between the alleged violation and the harm to the plaintiff and (2) more particularly, to the relationship of the injury alleged with those forms of injury about which Congress was likely to have been concerned in making the defendant's conduct unlawful and in providing a private remedy under 4 of the Clayton Act.

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which provides a treble-damages remedy to any person "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws," the availability of the remedy to some person who claims its benefits is not a question of the specific intent of the conspirators.

457 U.S. 465, *465; 102 S. Ct. 2540, **2540; 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, ***149; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 132, ****1

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

An injury is within 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which provides a treble-damages remedy to any person "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws," where the harm to the plaintiff and her class was a necessary step in effecting the ends of the illegal conspiracy. (Rehnquist, J., Burger, Ch. J., and O'Connor, J., dissented from this holding.)

CAUSE §10 > intervening cause -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

In a private antitrust suit by an employee against a prepaid health plan and a psychiatric society for unlawful conspiracy causing the group health plan's refusal to reimburse subscribers for psychotherapy performed by psychologists rather than psychiatrists, the employer's decision to retain the plan notwithstanding such refusal is not an intervening cause of the employee's injury.

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

As a general principle, antitrust treble-damages recoveries under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) should be linked to the pro-competition policy of the antitrust laws.

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

A plaintiff under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which provides a treble-damages remedy to any person "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws," need not prove an actual lessening of competition in order to recover; competitors may be able to prove antitrust injury before they actually are driven from the market and competition is thereby lessened.

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

A prepaid group health plan subscriber whose claims for psychotherapy expenses are denied by the plan because not billed through a physician, in furtherance of an unlawful conspiracy to restrain competition in the psychotherapy market by refusing to reimburse subscribers for psychotherapy performed by psychologists, thereby suffers an injury redressable under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which provides a treble-damages remedy to any person "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." (Rehnquist, J., Burger, Ch. J., O'Connor and Stevens, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[12A] [12A] LEdHN[12B] [12B]

The relationship between the claimed injury and that which is unlawful in the defendant's conduct is one factor to be considered in determining the redressability of a particular form of injury under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which provides a treble-damages remedy to any person "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws."

Syllabus

---

Respondent employee was provided coverage under a prepaid group health plan purchased by her employer from petitioner Blue Shield of Virginia (Blue Shield). The plan provided reimbursement for part of the cost incurred by subscribers for outpatient treatment for mental and nervous disorders, including psychotherapy. However, Blue Shield's practice was to reimburse subscribers for services provided by psychiatrists but not by psychologists unless the treatment was supervised by and billed through a physician. Respondent was treated by a clinical psychologist and submitted claims to Blue Shield for the costs of the treatment. After the claims were routinely denied because they had not been billed through a physician, respondent brought a class action in Federal District Court, [****2] alleging that Blue Shield and petitioner Neuropsychiatric Society of Virginia, Inc., had engaged in an unlawful conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act to exclude psychologists from receiving compensation under Blue Shield's plans. She further alleged that Blue Shield's failure to reimburse was in furtherance of the conspiracy and had caused injury to her business or property for which she was entitled to treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, which provides for recovery of such damages by "[any] person" injured "by reason of anything" prohibited in the antitrust laws. The District Court granted petitioners' motion to dismiss, holding that respondent had no standing under § 4 to maintain her suit. The Court of Appeals reversed.

Held: Respondent has standing to maintain the action under § 4 of the Clayton Act. Pp. 472-485.

(a) The lack of restrictive language in § 4 reflects Congress' expansive remedial purpose of creating a private enforcement mechanism to deter violators and deprive them of the fruits of their illegal actions, and to provide ample compensation to victims of antitrust violations. In the absence of some articulable consideration of statutory [****3] policy suggesting a contrary conclusion in a particular factual setting, § 4 is to be applied in accordance with its plain language and its broad remedial and deterrent objectives. Pp. 472-473.

(b) Permitting respondent to proceed does not offer the slightest possibility of a duplicative exaction from petitioners, Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, and Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, distinguished, since she had paid her psychologist, who thus was not injured by Blue Shield's refusal to reimburse respondent. And whatever the adverse effect of Blue Shield's actions on respondent's employer, who purchased the plan, it is not the employer as purchaser, but its employees as subscribers, who are out of pocket as a consequence of the plan's failure to pay benefits. Pp. 473-475.

(c) In determining whether a particular injury is too remote from the alleged violation to warrant § 4 standing, consideration is to be given (1) to the physical and economic nexus between the alleged violation and the harm to the plaintiff, and (2), more particularly, to the relationship of the injury alleged with those forms of injury about [****4] which Congress was likely to have been concerned in making defendant's conduct unlawful and in providing a private remedy under § 4. Pp. 476-478.

(d) Respondent's injury is not rendered "remote" merely because the alleged goal of petitioners was to halt encroachment by psychologists into a market that physicians and psychiatrists sought to preserve for themselves. Here, the § 4 remedy cannot reasonably be restricted to those competitors whom petitioners hoped to eliminate from the market. Denying reimbursement to subscribers for the cost of treatment was the very means by which it is alleged that Blue Shield sought to achieve its alleged illegal ends, and respondent's injury was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause. Nor is the § 4 remedy unavailable to respondent on the asserted ground that standing should be limited to participants in the restrained market in group health care plans -- that is, to entities, such as respondent's employer, who were purchasers of group health plans. Respondent did not allege a restraint in the market for group health plans, but instead premised her claim on the concerted refusal to reimburse under a [****5] plan that would permit reimbursement for psychologists' services. As a consumer of psychotherapy services entitled to financial benefits under the Blue Shield plan, she was within that area of the economy endangered by the breakdown of competitive conditions resulting from Blue Shield's selective refusal to reimburse. Pp. 478-481.

(e) Section 4 standing is not precluded on the asserted ground that respondent's injury does not reflect the "anticompetitive" effect of the alleged boycott. Her injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress in providing a private remedy for violations of the antitrust laws. Respondent did not yield to Blue Shield's coercive pressure to induce its subscribers into selecting psychiatrists over psychologists for the services they required, but instead bore Blue Shield's sanction in the form of an increase in the net cost of her psychologist's services. In light of the conspiracy here alleged, respondent's injury "flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful," Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, and falls squarely within the area of congressional concern. Pp. 481-484.

Counsel: Griffin B. Bell [****6] argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were James D. Miller, William B. Poff, Ronald M. Ayers, Heman A. Marshall III, Joel I. Klein, and H. Bartow Farr III.

Warwick R. Furr II argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Timothy J. Bloomfield and Thomas M. Brownell. *

Judges: BRENNAN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which WHITE, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, and POWELL, JJ., joined. REHNQUIST, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which BURGER, C. J., and O'CONNOR, J., joined, post, p. 485. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, post, p. 492.

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

---

[*467] [***153] [**2542] JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

The antitrust complaint at issue in this case alleges that a group health plan's practice of refusing to reimburse subscribers for psychotherapy performed by psychologists, while providing reimbursement for comparable treatment by psychiatrists, was in furtherance of an unlawful conspiracy to restrain competition in the psychotherapy market. [****7] The question presented is whether a subscriber who employed the services of a psychologist has standing to maintain an action under § 4 of the Clayton Act based upon the plan's failure to provide reimbursement for the costs of that treatment.

I

LEdHN[1A] [1A]From September 1975 until January 1978, respondent Carol McCready was an employee of Prince William County, [*468] Va. As [***154] part of her compensation, the county provided her with coverage under a prepaid group health plan purchased from petitioner Blue Shield of Virginia (Blue Shield).<sup>1</sup> The plan

---

*Paul R. Friedman, Bruce J. Ennis, and Donald N. Bersoff filed a brief for the American Psychological Association as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

<sup>1</sup>With petitioner Blue Shield of Southwestern Virginia.

457 U.S. 465, *468; 102 S. Ct. 2540, **2542; 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, ***154; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 132, ****7

specifically provided reimbursement for a portion of the cost incurred by subscribers with respect to outpatient treatment for mental and nervous disorders, including psychotherapy. Pursuant to this provision, Blue Shield reimbursed subscribers for psychotherapy provided by psychiatrists. But Blue Shield did not provide reimbursement for the services of psychologists unless the treatment was supervised by and billed through a physician.<sup>2</sup> [****9] While a subscriber to the plan, McCready was treated by a clinical psychologist. She [**2543] submitted [****8] claims to Blue Shield for the costs of that treatment, but those claims were routinely denied because they had not been billed through a physician.<sup>3</sup>

LEdHN[1B] [1B]

In 1978, McCready brought this class action in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, on behalf of all Blue Shield subscribers who had incurred costs [*469] for psychological services since 1973 but who had not been reimbursed.<sup>4</sup> [****11] The complaint alleged [***155] that Blue Shield and petitioner Neuropsychiatric Society of Virginia, Inc., had engaged in an unlawful conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the [*470] Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1,<sup>5</sup> "to exclude and boycott clinical psychologists from <sup>2</sup> Petitioners contend that the contract between the county and Blue Shield must be read to bar payments for the services of nonphysicians. Respondent counters that between 1962 and 1972 Blue Shield routinely reimbursed subscribers for psychotherapy provided by psychologists, and that this practice was revised in 1972 as a result of the alleged conspiracy. In addition, respondent notes that in 1973 the Virginia Legislature passed a "freedom of choice" statute, Va. Code § 38.1-824 (1981), that required Blue Shield to pay for services rendered by licensed psychologists. See Virginia Academy of Clinical Psychologists v. Blue Shield of Virginia, 624 F.2d 476, 478 (CA4 1980). She argues that Blue Shield's obligations must be read consistently with that statute, at least until that statute was held invalid as applied in Blue Cross of Virginia v. Commonwealth, 221 Va. 349, 269 S. E. 2d 827 (1980). This case arises on a motion to dismiss. We therefore assume, as McCready has alleged, that but for the alleged conspiracy to deny payment, she would have been reimbursed by Blue Shield for the cost of her psychologist's services.

<sup>3</sup> Apparently Blue Shield inadvertently paid one of McCready's claims. After the error was discovered, Blue Shield sought to obtain a refund from McCready for the amount paid. 649 F.2d 228, 230, n. 4 (1981).

<sup>4</sup> A similar complaint was filed by the Virginia Academy of Clinical Psychologists (VACP) and its president against the same defendants. The District Court addressed the motions to dismiss filed in each of the cases in a single opinion. The court dismissed McCready's case -- thus giving rise to the appellate decision at issue in this Court -- but permitted the VACP case to proceed to trial. Following trial, the District Court entered judgment for the defendants, Virginia Academy of Clinical Psychologists v. Blue Shield of Virginia, 469 F.Supp. 552 (1979), but the Court of Appeals reversed with respect to defendant Blue Shield, 624 F.2d 476 (CA4 1980). The opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in the instant case states that the opinion in VACP "should be read in connection with" its own opinion. 649 F.2d, at 230. A brief recitation of the decision in the VACP case is thus helpful in understanding the precise nature of McCready's claim.

In VACP, the Court of Appeals rejected the District Court's treatment of Blue Shield as a distinct entity for purposes of determining whether a conspiracy or agreement had been shown. 624 F.2d, at 479. The court found that "the Blue Shield Plans are combinations of physicians, operating under the direction and control of their physician members." Ibid.

"Blue Shield Plans are not insurance companies, though they are, to a degree, insurers. Rather, they are generally characterized as prepaid health care plans, quantity purchasers of health care services. [In] a real and legal sense, the Blue Shield Plans are agents of their member physicians." Id., at 480 (citations and footnote omitted).

With respect to the question whether the alleged Blue Shield combination was "in restraint of trade," the Court of Appeals agreed with the District Court that the rule of reason was applicable, but held that the District Court had erred in finding no liability. The Court of Appeals observed that psychologists and psychiatrists compete in the psychotherapy market, and that the decisions of Blue Shield "necessarily dictate, to some extent," who will be chosen to provide psychotherapy. Id., at 485. Finding that Blue Shield's policy of denying reimbursement for the psychotherapeutic services of psychologists unless billed through physicians, was not merely a cost-containment device or simply "good medical practice," as claimed by Blue Shield, the court held that Blue Shield had violated the Sherman Act. Ibid.

457 U.S. 465, *470; 102 S. Ct. 2540, **2543; 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, ***155; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 132, ****11

receiving compensation under" the Blue Shield plans. App. 55. McCready further alleged that Blue Shield's failure to reimburse had been in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy, and had caused injury to her business or property for which she was entitled to treble damages and attorney's fees [****10] under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15.<sup>6</sup>

The District Court granted petitioners' motion to dismiss, holding that McCready had no standing under § 4 to maintain her suit.<sup>7</sup> In the District Court's view, [**2544] McCready's standing to maintain a § 4 action turned on whether she had suffered injury "within the sector of the economy competitively endangered by the defendants' alleged violations of the antitrust laws." App. 17. Noting that the goal of the alleged boycott [****12] was to exclude clinical psychologists from a segment of the psychotherapy market, the court concluded that the "sector of the economy competitively endangered" by the charged violation extended "no further than that area occupied by the psychologists." Id., at 18 (emphasis in original). Thus, while McCready clearly had suffered an injury by [*471] being denied reimbursement, this injury was "too indirect and remote to be considered 'antitrust injury.'" Ibid.

[****13] A divided panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit reversed, holding that McCready had alleged an injury within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act and had standing to maintain the suit. 649 F.2d 228 \(1981\). The court recognized that the goal of the alleged conspiracy was the exclusion of clinical psychologists from some segment of the psychotherapy [***156] market. But it held that the § 4 remedy was available to any person "whose property loss is directly or proximately caused by" a violation of the antitrust laws, and that McCready's loss was not "too remote or indirect to be covered by the Act." Id., at 231.<sup>8</sup> The court thus

<sup>5</sup> HN1 [↑] That section provides, in pertinent part, that "[every] contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal."

<sup>6</sup> That section provides, in pertinent part:

"Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

<sup>7</sup> Petitioners have argued in this Court that under § 2 of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1012, their actions were exempt from the antitrust laws as part of the "business of insurance." In ruling on petitioners' motion to dismiss, the District Court concluded that respondent had adequately pleaded a boycott beyond the protection of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1013\(b\). Respondent points out that on a full factual record the issue was resolved against the petitioners in VACP, 624 F.2d, at 483-484. The Court of Appeals did not address this question in the present case, however, and we do not reach it here.

<sup>8</sup> Addressing the "target area" limitation on antitrust standing recognized in several Courts of Appeals, see n. 14, infra, the court concluded that the policies underlying that limitation were not implicated by McCready's claim. 649 F.2d, at 231-232. The dissenting judge took a contrary view of the "target area" rule. He emphasized that McCready had not described her injury "as a design or goal of any antitrust violation," but "rather as a consequence thereof." Id., at 232. He viewed this as the determinative factor in the proper application of the "target area" test to the facts of this case:

"In determining who has standing to sue, the courts must look at who the illegal act was aimed to injure. A bystander, who is not the intended victim of the antitrust violation but who is injured nonetheless, cannot sue under the antitrust laws. His injury is too remote." Id., at 233.

In addition, the dissent argued that McCready was not within the sector of the economy "competitively endangered" by the alleged violation, agreeing with the District Court that "she operated in a market which was unrestrained so far as she was concerned." Id., at 234. Finally, the dissent reasoned:

"The price of psychologists' services to her was not increased by any act of the defendants. The fact that her Blue Shield contract . . . would not reimburse her for those services had nothing to do with the price she paid for the services, which . . . were not artificially inflated by an antitrust violation. . . .

". . . There is not even a claim that her psychologists' bills are higher than they would have been had the conspiracy not existed." Id., at 235-236.

457 U.S. 465, *471; 102 S. Ct. 2540, **2544; 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, ***156; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 132, ****13

[*472] remanded the case to the District Court for further proceedings. We granted certiorari. 454 U.S. 962 (1981).

[****14] II

LEdHN[2]↑ [2]Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, HN2↑ provides a treble-damages remedy to "[any] person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws," 15 U.S.C. § 15 (emphasis added). As we noted in Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 337 (1979), "[on] its face, § 4 contains little in the way of restrictive language." And the lack of restrictive language reflects Congress' "expansive remedial purpose" in enacting § 4: Congress sought to create a private enforcement mechanism that would deter violators and deprive them of the fruits of their illegal actions, and would provide ample compensation to the victims of antitrust violations. Pfizer Inc. v. India, 434 U.S. 308, 313-314 (1978). See Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 485-486, and n. 10, (1977); Perma Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139 (1968); [****15] American Society of Mechanical Engineers v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 572-573, and n. 10, ****25451 (1982). HN3↑ As we have recognized, "[the] statute does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. . . . The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated." Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 236 (1948).

Consistent with the congressional purpose, we have refused to engrave artificial limitations on the § 4 remedy.<sup>9</sup> [****17] [*473] [***157] Two recent cases illustrate the point. Pfizer Inc. v. India, supra, afforded the statutory phrase "any person" its "naturally broad and inclusive meaning," id., at 312, and held that it extends even to an action brought by a foreign sovereign. Similarly, Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., supra, rejected the argument that the § 4 remedy is available only to redress [****16] injury to commercial interests. In that case we afforded the statutory term "property" its "naturally broad and inclusive meaning," and held that a consumer has standing to seek a § 4 remedy reflecting the increase in the purchase price of goods that was attributable to a price-fixing conspiracy. 442 U.S., at 338. In sum, in the absence of some articulable consideration of statutory policy suggesting a contrary conclusion in a particular factual setting, we have applied § 4 in accordance with its plain language and its broad remedial and deterrent objectives. But drawing on statutory policy, our cases have acknowledged two types of limitation on the availability of the § 4 remedy to particular classes of persons and for redress of particular forms of injury. We treat these limitations in turn.<sup>10</sup>

A

In Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251 (1972), we held that § 4 HN4↑ did not authorize a State to sue in its parens patriae capacity for damages to its "general economy." Noting [*474] [***18] that a "large and ultimately indeterminable part of the injury to the 'general economy' . . . is no more than a reflection of injuries to the 'business or property' of consumers, for which they may recover themselves under § 4," we concluded that "[even] the most <sup>9</sup> In a related context we commented that "[in] the face of [the congressional antitrust] policy this Court should not add requirements to burden the private litigant beyond what is specifically set forth by Congress . . ." Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 454 (1957). See also Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas Co., 364 U.S. 656, 659-660 (1961) (per curiam) (To state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, "allegations adequate to show a violation and, in a private treble damage action, that plaintiff was damaged thereby are all the law requires").

<sup>10</sup> Permitting McCready to maintain this lawsuit will, of course, further certain basic objectives of the private enforcement scheme embodied in § 4. Only by requiring violators to disgorge the "fruits of their illegality" can the deterrent objectives of the antitrust laws be fully served. Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 494 (1968). See Pfizer Inc. v. India, 434 U.S. 308, 314 (1978); Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 746 (1977). But in addition to allowing Blue Shield to retain a palpable profit as a result of its unlawful plan, denying standing to McCready and the class she represents would also result in the denial of compensation for injuries resulting from unlawful conduct.

457 U.S. 465, *474; 102 S. Ct. 2540, **2545; 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, ***157; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 132, ****18

lengthy and expensive trial could not . . . cope with the problems of double recovery inherent in allowing damages" for injury to the State's quasi-sovereign interests. Id., at 264. See Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., supra, at 342.

In Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720 (1977), similar concerns prevailed. Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481 (1968), had held that an antitrust defendant could not relieve itself of its obligation to pay damages resulting from overcharges to a direct-purchaser plaintiff by showing [***158] [**2546] that the plaintiff had passed the amount of the overcharge on to its own customers. Illinois Brick was an action by an indirect purchaser claiming damages from the antitrust violator measured by the amount that had been passed on to it. Relying in part on Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., supra, [****19] the Court found unacceptable the risk of duplicative recovery engendered by allowing both direct and indirect purchasers to claim damages resulting from a single overcharge by the antitrust defendant. Illinois Brick, supra, at 730-731. The Court found that the splintered recoveries and litigative burdens that would result from a rule requiring that the impact of an overcharge be apportioned between direct and indirect purchasers could undermine the active enforcement of the antitrust laws by private actions. 431 U.S., 745-747. The Court concluded that direct purchasers rather than indirect purchasers were the injured parties who as a group were most likely to press their claims with the vigor that the § 4 treble-damages remedy was intended to promote. Id., at 735.

The policies identified in Hawaii and Illinois Brick plainly offer no support for petitioners here. Both cases focused on the risk of duplicative recovery engendered by allowing [*475] every person along a chain of distribution to claim damages arising from a single transaction that violated the antitrust laws. But permitting respondent to proceed in the circumstances [****20] of this case offers not the slightest possibility of a duplicative exaction from petitioners. McCready has paid her psychologist's bills; her injury consists of Blue Shield's failure to pay her. Her psychologist can link no claim of injury to himself arising from his treatment of McCready; he has been fully paid for his service and has not been injured by Blue Shield's refusal to reimburse her for the cost of his services. And whatever the adverse effect of Blue Shield's actions on McCready's employer, who purchased the plan, it is not the employer as purchaser, but its employees as subscribers, who are out of pocket as a consequence of the plan's failure to pay benefits.<sup>11</sup>

[****21] [*476] B

<sup>11</sup> [***159] LEdHN[3][↑] [3]LEdHN[4A][↑] [4A]LEdHN[5][↑] [5]Analytically distinct from the restrictions on the § 4 remedy recognized in Hawaii and Illinois Brick, there is the conceptually more difficult question "of which persons have sustained injuries too remote [from an antitrust violation] to give them standing to sue for damages under § 4." Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S., at 728, n. 7 [**2547] (emphasis added).<sup>12</sup> An antitrust violation may be <sup>11</sup> If there is a subordinate theme to our opinions in Hawaii and Illinois Brick, it is that the feasibility and consequences of implementing particular damages theories may, in certain limited circumstances, be considered in determining who is entitled to prosecute an action brought under § 4. Where consistent with the broader remedial purposes of the antitrust laws, we have sought to avoid burdening § 4 actions with damages issues giving rise to the need for "massive evidence and complicated theories," where the consequence would be to discourage vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws by private suits. Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., supra, at 493. Thus we recognized that the task of disentangling overlapping damages claims is not lightly to be imposed upon potential antitrust litigants, or upon the judicial system. See Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 264 (1972); Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, supra, at 741-742. In addition, while "[difficulty] of ascertainment [should not be] confused with right of recovery," Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 265 (1946), § 4 plainly focuses on tangible economic injury. It may therefore be appropriate to consider whether a claim rests at bottom on some abstract conception or speculative measure of harm. See Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., supra, at 262-263, n. 14. But like the policy against duplicative recoveries, our cautious approach to speculative, abstract, or impractical damages theories has no application to McCready's suit. The nature of her injury is easily stated: As the result of an unlawful boycott, Blue Shield failed to pay the cost she incurred for the services of a psychologist. Her damages were fixed by the plan contract and, as the Court of Appeals observed, they could be "ascertained to the penny." 649 F.2d, at 231.

457 U.S. 465, *476; 102 S. Ct. 2540, **2547; 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, ***159; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 132, ****21

expected to cause ripples of [*477] harm to flow through the Nation's economy; but "despite the broad wording of § 4 there is a point beyond which the wrongdoer should not be held liable." Id., at 760 (BRENNAN, J., dissenting). It is reasonable to assume that Congress did not intend to allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property. Of course, neither [****22] the statutory language nor the legislative history of § 4 offers any focused guidance on the question of which injuries are too remote from the violation and the purposes of the antitrust laws to form the predicate for a suit under § 4; indeed, the unrestrictive language of the section, and the avowed breadth of the congressional purpose, cautions us not to cabin § 4 in ways that will defeat its broad remedial objective. But the potency of the remedy implies the need for some care in its application. HN5↑ In the absence of direct guidance from Congress, and faced with the claim that a particular injury is too remote from the alleged violation to warrant § 4 standing, the courts are thus forced to resort to an analysis no less elusive than that employed [***160] traditionally by courts at common law with respect to the matter of "proximate cause."<sup>13</sup> See Perkins v. Standard Oil Co., 395 U.S. 642, 649 (1969); Karseal Corp. v. Richfield Oil Corp., 221 F.2d 358, 363 [\*4781] (CA9 1955). In applying that elusive concept to this statutory action, [****23] we look (1) to the physical and economic nexus between the alleged violation [**2548] and the harm to the plaintiff, and (2), more particularly, to the relationship of the injury alleged with those forms of injury about which Congress was likely to have been concerned in making defendant's conduct unlawful and in providing a private remedy under § 4.

[****24] [LEdHN\[4B\]↑](#) [4B]

[****25] (1)

<sup>12</sup> We addressed two issues of "remoteness" in Perkins v. Standard Oil Co., 395 U.S. 642 (1969). That case involved an alleged violation of § 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13. Focusing on the substantive terms of § 2, we found no warrant in its "language or purpose" to engraft an "artificial" limitation on the reach of the remedy to bar what the court below had termed a "fourth level" injury. 395 U.S., at 648. We also rejected the claim that one form of damages claimed by the defendant was not the proximate result of the alleged violation. Id., at 649.

The Courts of Appeals have developed a more substantial jurisprudence on the subject of "remoteness," formulating various "tests" as aids in analysis. Among the tests employed by the lower courts are those that focus on the "directness" of the injury, e. g., Loeb v. Eastman Kodak Co., 183 F. 704, 709 (CA3 1910); Productive Inventions, Inc. v. Trico Products Corp., 224 F.2d 678 (CA2 1955); Volasco Products Co. v. Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Co., 308 F.2d 383 (CA6 1962); on its foreseeability, e. g., In re Western Liquid Asphalt Cases, 487 F.2d 191, 199 (CA9 1973); Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. v. Goldwyn, 328 F.2d 190, 220 (CA9 1964); or on whether the injury is "arguably . . . within the zone of interests protected by the [antitrust laws]," e. g., Malamud v. Sinclair Oil Corp., 521 F.2d 1142, 1152 (CA6 1975). See also n. 14, infra ("target area" test). The Third Circuit has concluded that "§ 4 standing analysis is essentially a balancing test comprised of many constant and variable factors and that there is no talismanic test capable of resolving all § 4 standing problems." Bravman v. Basset Furniture Industries, Inc., 552 F.2d 90, 99 (1977). The Third Circuit has thus rejected the definitional approach, opting instead for an analysis of the "factual matrix" presented by each case. Ibid. We have no occasion here to evaluate the relative utility of any of these possibly conflicting approaches toward the problem of remote antitrust injury.

<sup>13</sup> The traditional principle of proximate cause suggests the use of words such as "remote," "tenuous," "fortuitous," "incidental," or "consequential" to describe those injuries that will find no remedy at law. See, e. g., South Carolina Council of Milk Producers, Inc. v. Newton, 360 F.2d 414, 419 (CA4 1966). And the use of such terms only emphasizes that the principle of proximate cause is hardly a rigorous analytic tool. See, e. g., Palsgraf v. Long Island R. Co., 248 N. Y. 339, 162 N. E. 99 (1928); id., at 351-352, 162 N. E., at 103 (Andrews, J., dissenting) ("What is a cause in a legal sense, still more what is a proximate cause, depend in each case upon many considerations. . . . What we do mean by the word 'proximate' is, that because of convenience, of public policy, of a rough sense of justice, the law arbitrarily declines to trace a series of events beyond a certain point"). It bears affirming that in identifying the limits of an explicit statutory remedy, legislative intent is the controlling consideration. Cf. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. v. Curran, 456 U.S. 353, 377-378 (1982); Middlesex County Sewerage Authority v. National Sea Clammers Assn., 453 U.S. 1, 13 (1981); Transamerica Mortgage Advisors, Inc. v. Lewis, 444 U.S. 11, 15-16 (1979).

It is petitioners' position that McCready's injury is too "fortuitous" and too "incidental" to and "remote" from the alleged violation to provide the basis for a § 4 action.<sup>14</sup> At the outset, petitioners argue that because the alleged conspiracy was directed by its protagonists at psychologists, and not at subscribers to group health plans, only psychologists might maintain suit. This argument may be quickly disposed of.

[****26] [LEdHN\[61\]](#) [6][LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]We do not think that because the goal of the conspirators was to halt encroachment by psychologists into a market that [*479] physicians and psychiatrists sought to preserve for themselves, McCready's injury is rendered "remote." The availability of the § 4 remedy to some person who claims its benefit is not a question of the specific intent of the conspirators. Here the remedy cannot reasonably be restricted to those competitors whom the conspirators hoped to eliminate from the [***161] market.<sup>15</sup> McCready claims that she has been the victim of a concerted refusal to pay on the part of Blue Shield, motivated by a desire to deprive psychologists of the patronage of Blue Shield subscribers. Denying reimbursement to subscribers for the cost of treatment was the very means by which it is alleged that Blue Shield sought to achieve its illegal ends. The harm to McCready and her class was clearly foreseeable; indeed, it was a necessary step in effecting the ends of the alleged illegal conspiracy. [****27] HN6 Where the injury alleged is so integral an aspect of the conspiracy alleged, there can be no question but that the loss was precisely "the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S., at 489, quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 125 (1969).

Petitioners next argue that even if the § 4 remedy might be available to persons other than the competitors of the conspirators, it is not available to McCready because she was not an economic actor [****28] in the market that had been restrained. In petitioners' view, the proximate range of the violation is limited to the sector of the economy in which a violation of the type alleged would have its most direct anticompetitive effects. Here, petitioners contend that that market, for purposes of the alleged conspiracy, is the market in group health care plans. Thus, in petitioners' view, standing to redress [*480] the violation alleged in this case is limited to participants in that market -- that is, to entities, such as McCready's employer, who were purchasers of group health plans, but not to [**2549] McCready as a beneficiary of the Blue Shield plan.<sup>16</sup>

<sup>14</sup> In so arguing, petitioners advert to the "target area" test of antitrust standing that prevails in the Courts of Appeals for the First, Second, and Fifth Circuits. See, e. g., Pan-Islamic Trade Corp. v. Exxon Corp., 632 F.2d 539, 546 (CA5 1980); Engine Specialties, Inc. v. Bombardier Ltd., 605 F.2d 1, 18-19 (CA1 1979); Calderone Enterprises Corp. v. United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., 454 F.2d 1292 (CA2 1971). Petitioners place special reliance on the following frequently cited formulation of the "target area" principle:

"[In] order to have 'standing' to sue for treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, a person must be within the 'target area' of the alleged antitrust conspiracy, i. e., a person against whom the conspiracy was aimed, such as a competitor of the persons sued. Accordingly we have drawn a line excluding those who have suffered economic damage by virtue of their relationships with 'targets' or with participants in an alleged antitrust conspiracy, rather than being 'targets' themselves." Id., at 1295.

<sup>15</sup> Nor does the "target area" test applied by the Courts of Appeals "imply that it must have been a purpose of the conspirators to injure the particular individual claiming damages." See Schwimmer v. Sony Corp. of America, 637 F.2d 41, 47-48 (CA2 1980), quoting Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. v. Goldwyn, 328 F.2d, at 220.

<sup>16</sup> Petitioners borrow selectively from Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477 (1977), in arguing that McCready's § 4 claim is "unrelated to any reduction in competition caused by the alleged boycott," because the injury she alleges "is the result of the terms of her insurance contract, and not the result of a reduction in competition." Brief for Petitioners 16. Extracting additional language from Brunswick, they argue that "McCready would have suffered the identical 'loss' -- but no compensable 'injury' as long as her employer, which acted independently in an unrestrained market, continued to purchase a group insurance contract that did not cover the services of clinical psychologists." Brief for Petitioners 16-17 (footnote omitted).

[****29] [LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] Petitioners misconstrue McCready's complaint. McCready does not allege a restraint in the market for group health plans. Her claim of injury is premised on a concerted refusal to reimburse under a plan that was, in fact, purchased and retained by her employer for her benefit, and that as a matter of contract construction and state law permitted reimbursement for the services of psychologists without any significant variation in the structure of the contractual relationship between her employer and Blue Shield.<sup>17</sup> See n. 2, [***162] supra. As a consumer of psychotherapy services entitled to financial benefits under the Blue Shield plan, we think it clear that McCready was "within that area of the economy . . . endangered by [that] breakdown of competitive conditions" [*481] resulting from Blue Shield's selective refusal to reimburse. In re Multidistrict Vehicle Air Pollution M. D. L. No. 31, 481 F.2d 122, 129 (CA9 1973).

[LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

[****30] (2)

We turn finally to the manner in which the injury alleged reflects Congress' core concerns in prohibiting the antitrust defendants' course of conduct. Petitioners phrase their argument on this point in a manner that concedes McCready's participation in the market for psychotherapy services and rests instead on the notion that McCready's injury does not reflect the "anticompetitive" effect of the alleged boycott. They stress that McCready did not visit a psychiatrist whose fees were artificially inflated as a result of the competitive advantage he gained by Blue Shield's refusal to reimburse for the services of psychologists; she did not pay additional sums for the services of a physician to supervise and bill for the psychotherapy provided by her psychologist; and that there is no "claim that her psychologists' bills are higher than they would have been had the conspiracy not existed."<sup>18</sup> In promoting this argument, petitioners rely heavily on language in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., supra.

[****31] In Brunswick, respondents were three bowling centers who complained that petitioner's acquisition of several financially troubled bowling centers violated § 7 of the Clayton Act by lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly. In seeking damages, "respondents attempted to show that had petitioner allowed the [acquired] centers to close, respondents' profits would have increased." Id., at 481. The Court of Appeals endorsed the legal theory upon which respondents' claim was based, id., at 483, holding that "any loss 'causally linked' to 'the mere presence of the violator in the market'" was compensable under § 4, id., at 487. We reversed, holding that the injury alleged by respondents was not of "the type that the statute was intended" [**2550] to forestall." [*482] Id., at 487-488, quoting Wyandotte Transportation Co. v. United States, 389 U.S. 191, 202 (1967). Indeed, the Court noted that respondents sought in damages "the profits they would have realized had competition been reduced." 429 U.S., at 488 (emphasis added).

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9] [****32] We can agree with petitioners' view of Brunswick as embracing the general principle that treble-damages recoveries should be linked to the procompetition policy of the antitrust laws. But petitioners seek to take Brunswick one significant step farther. In a passage upon which [***163] petitioners place much reliance, we stated:

---

<sup>17</sup> Nor do we think that her employer's decision to retain Blue Shield coverage despite its continued failure to reimburse for the services of a psychologist -- or indeed, her employer's unexercised option to terminate that relationship -- is an intervening cause of McCready's injury. Although her employer's decision to purchase the Blue Shield plan for her benefit was in some sense a factor that contributed independently to McCready's injury, her coverage under the Blue Shield plan may, at this stage of the litigation, properly be accepted as a given, and the proper focus in evaluating her entitlement to raise a § 4 damages claim is on Blue Shield's change in the terms of the plan to link reimbursement to a subscriber's choice of one group of psychotherapists over another.

<sup>18</sup> 649 F.2d, at 236 (Widener, J., dissenting).

**HN7** "[For] plaintiffs to recover treble damages on account of § 7 violations, they must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market. Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be 'the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause.' Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 395 U.S., at 125." Id., at 489 (emphasis in original; footnote omitted).

Relying on this language, [****33] petitioners reason that McCready can maintain no action under § 4 because her injury "did not reflect the anticompetitive effect" of the alleged violation.

[**LEdHN\[10\]**](#) [10] [**LEdHN\[11\]**](#) [11]Brunswick is not so limiting. Indeed, as we made clear in a footnote to the relied-upon passage, a § 4 plaintiff need not "prove an actual lessening of competition in order to recover. [Competitors] may be able to prove antitrust injury before they actually are driven from the market and competition is thereby lessened." Id., at 489, n. 14. Thus while an increase in price resulting from a dampening of competitive market forces is assuredly one type of injury for which § 4 potentially [*483] offers redress, see Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330 (1979), that is not the only form of injury remediable under § 4. We think it plain that McCready's injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress in providing a private remedy for violations of the antitrust laws.

[**LEdHN\[12A\]**](#) [12A] [****34] McCready charges Blue Shield with a purposefully anticompetitive scheme. She seeks to recover as damages the sums lost to her as the consequence of Blue Shield's attempt to pursue that scheme.<sup>19</sup> [****36] She alleges that Blue Shield sought to induce its subscribers into selecting psychiatrists over psychologists for the psychotherapeutic services they required,<sup>20</sup> and that the heart of its scheme was the offer of a Hobson's choice to its subscribers. Those subscribers were compelled to choose between visiting a psychologist and forfeiting reimbursement, or receiving reimbursement by forgoing treatment by the practitioner of their choice. In the latter case, the antitrust injury would have been borne in the first instance by the [***164] competitors of the conspirators, and inevitably -- though indirectly -- by the customers of the competitors in the form of suppressed competition in the psychotherapy market; in the former case, as it happened, the injury was borne directly by the customers of the competitors. [**2551] McCready did not yield to Blue Shield's coercive pressure, and bore Blue Shield's sanction in the form of an increase in the net cost of her psychologist's services. [****35] Although [*484] McCready was not a competitor of the conspirators, the injury she suffered was inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict on psychologists and the psychotherapy market. In light of the conspiracy here alleged we think that McCready's injury "flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful" within the meaning of Brunswick, and falls squarely within the area of congressional concern.<sup>21</sup>

<sup>19</sup> Brunswick held that a claim of injury arising from the preservation or enhancement of competition is a claim "inimical to the purposes of [the antitrust] laws," 429 U.S., at 488. Most obviously, McCready's claim is quite unlike the claim asserted by the plaintiff in Brunswick for she does not seek to label increased competition as a harm to her. Nevertheless, we agree with petitioners that the relationship between the claimed injury and that which is unlawful in the defendant's conduct, as analyzed in Brunswick, is one factor to be considered in determining the redressability of a particular form of injury under § 4.

<sup>20</sup> Or at the least, Blue Shield sought to compel McCready to employ the services of a physician in addition to those of a psychologist.

<sup>21</sup> JUSTICE REHNQUIST, dissenting, is of course correct in asserting that the "injury suffered by the plaintiff must be of the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall," post, at 486. But JUSTICE REHNQUIST's dissent takes an unrealistically narrow view of those injuries with which the antitrust laws might be concerned, and offers not the slightest hint -- beyond sheer ipse dixit -- to help in determining what kinds of injury are not amenable to § 4 redress. For example, the dissent acknowledges that "a distributor who refused to go along with the retailers' conspiracy [to injure a disfavored retailer] and thereby lost the conspiring retailers' business would . . . have an action against those retailers," post, at 490. The dissent characterizes this circumstance as a "concerted refusal to deal," and is thus willing to acknowledge the existence of compensable injury. But the dissent's is not the only pattern of concerted refusals to deal. If a group of psychiatrists conspired to boycott a bank until the bank ceased making loans to psychologists, the bank would no doubt be able to recover the injuries suffered as a consequence of the

LEdHN[12B] [↑] [12B]

[****37] III

Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides a remedy to "[any] person" injured "by reason of" anything prohibited in the [*485] antitrust laws. We are asked in this case to infer a limitation on the rule of recovery suggested by the plain language of § 4. But having reviewed our precedents and, more importantly, the policies of the antitrust laws, we are unable to identify any persuasive rationale upon which McCready might be denied redress under § 4 for the injury she claims. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is

Affirmed.

Dissent by: REHNQUIST; STEVENS

Dissent

---

JUSTICE REHNQUIST, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE and JUSTICE O'CONNOR join, dissenting.

Respondent's alleged "antitrust injury" in this case arises from a health insurance coverage dispute with her insurer, petitioner Blue Shield of Virginia. Respondent's ***165 complaint is that Blue Shield reimburses its subscribers for treatment by psychiatrists, but not by psychologists unless their services are supervised and billed by treating physicians. Respondent was treated by a clinical psychologist, but when she submitted claims to Blue Shield, she was denied reimbursement.

Respondent alleged in her complaint [****38] that Blue Shield's refusal to reimburse her for the costs she incurred in obtaining the services of a psychologist furthered a conspiracy by petitioners "to exclude and boycott clinical psychologists from receiving compensation under" Blue Shield's plan. App. 55. Blue Shield's refusal-to-reimburse policy is alleged to constitute a form of economic pressure on McCready and other Blue Shield subscribers to obtain the services of psychiatrists rather than psychologists. By employing this economic pressure on Blue Shield subscribers, petitioners are alleged to have placed clinical psychologists at a competitive disadvantage with regard to psychiatrists in the market for **2552 insurance-reimbursed psychological services.

The Court concludes that McCready's inability to obtain reimbursement for the psychological services she actually obtained permits her to maintain an action to enforce the anti-trust [*486] laws pursuant to § 4 of the Clayton Act. According to the Court, one who suffers economic loss as a necessary step in effecting the end of a conspiracy has "standing" to sue pursuant to § 4. Ante, at 479, 483-484. I disagree.

Section 4 of the Clayton Act authorizes [****39] suits for treble damages by "[any] person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U. S. C. § 15. It is not enough, however, for a plaintiff merely to allege that the defendant violated the antitrust laws and that he was injured. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 486-489 (1977). See Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 263, n. 14 (1972). The injury suffered by the plaintiff must be of the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., supra, at 487-488.

---

psychiatrists' actions. And plainly, in evaluating the reasonableness under the antitrust laws of the psychiatrists' conduct, we would be concerned with its effects not only on the business of banking, but also on the business of the psychologists against whom that secondary boycott was directed.

McCready and the banker and the distributor are in many respects similarly situated. McCready alleges that she has been the victim of a concerted refusal by psychiatrists to reimburse through the Blue Shield plan. Because McCready is a consumer, rather than some other type of market participant, the dissent finds itself unwilling to acknowledge that she might have suffered a form of injury of significance under the antitrust laws. But under the circumstances of this case, McCready's participation in the market for psychotherapeutic services provides precisely that significance.

"Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be 'the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause.'" 429 U.S., at 489 (citation omitted).

Although McCready [****40] alleges that she would have been reimbursed had it not been for the conspiracy, I do not think that she has made a sufficient allegation of "antitrust injury" within the meaning of Brunswick.

Standing alone, a refusal by an insurer to reimburse its insured does not constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. At most, such an action on the part of an insurer may amount to a breach of a contract or a violation of relevant state law regulating [***166] the insurance industry.<sup>1</sup> According to the Court, [*487] however, what distinguishes this case from the typical insurance coverage dispute is either the purpose behind or the effect of Blue Shield's refusal to reimburse. If Blue Shield violated the antitrust laws by its nonreimbursement policy, it was only because that policy was used as a means of putting psychologists at a competitive disadvantage in relation to psychiatrists.

[****41] Two conceivable grounds therefore may be divined from the Court's opinion to support its conclusion that McCready has suffered "antitrust injury" when Blue Shield refused to reimburse her costs in obtaining the services of a psychologist. The first theory is that McCready may recover simply because petitioners' nonreimbursement policy was intended to put clinical psychologists at a competitive disadvantage. According to the Court, this must be so even if Blue Shield's refusal to reimburse her would be entirely legal under the antitrust laws in the absence of such a purpose to competitively injure third parties. Blue Shield's intent or purpose renders the discriminatory reimbursement policy illegal. Under this theory, it would seem to be irrelevant for the Court's purposes whether McCready obtained the services of a psychologist or a psychiatrist so long as the illegal intent is present and she suffered economic loss as a result.<sup>2</sup>

[****42] [**2553] The second conceivable rationale is a flat rule that recovery is permitted by those persons who suffer economic loss as a necessary step in effecting a conspiracy to place third parties [*488] at a competitive disadvantage.<sup>3</sup> Under this theory, McCready may recover merely by demonstrating that she was a "tool" of petitioners' effort to disable psychologists from competing with psychiatrists in the market for insurance-reimbursed psychological services. She may recover because she did not yield to the economic pressure imposed on her.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> In addition to the antitrust claim, McCready's complaint asserts a claim for breach of contract under the principles of pendent jurisdiction. App. 57-58. She also alleges that Blue Shield's policy contravened state law. Id. at 55-56.

<sup>2</sup> The Court explains that those subscribers, such as McCready, who did not yield to Blue Shield's coercive pressures suffer from Blue Shield's sanctions by way of increased costs in obtaining the services of a psychologist. Those subscribers who did yield to Blue Shield's pressure suffer antitrust injury indirectly because of suppressed competition in the psychotherapy market. Ante, at 483-484. I do not understand the Court to conclude that Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720 \(1977\), would not bar recovery by a subscriber, as opposed to a psychologist, in the latter situation.

<sup>3</sup> The Court suggests a third theory -- that McCready has standing herself as a target of a concerted refusal to deal. See ante, at 484, n. 21; infra, at 490-491.

<sup>4</sup> In order to recover under this theory, it would seem that respondent must prove at trial that she actually refused to yield to the economic pressure created by Blue Shield's reimbursement policy. If she decided to obtain the services of a psychologist rather than a psychiatrist without knowing of Blue Shield's policy, it cannot be said that her "injury" was proximately related to petitioners' alleged anticompetitive conduct. If she discovered the policy only after she sought reimbursement, then it cannot be said that Blue Shield's policy had any effect on McCready's conduct as a consumer in the market for psychotherapeutic services. This, of course, is not to say that a person in all circumstances must have knowledge of a defendant's anticompetitive activities before one may challenge that activity. One may not be a victim of economic pressure, however, if one acted oblivious to that pressure.

457 U.S. 465, *488; 102 S. Ct. 2540, **2553; 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, ***166; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 132, ****42

The theory is that McCready [***167] may recover because her loss is linked to petitioners' efforts to enforce a "boycott" of third parties.

[****43] I believe that such reasoning is foreclosed by the Court's decision in Brunswick. In order to recover, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the nature of the injury he suffered is of the type that makes the challenged practice illegal. In Brunswick, the merger may well have violated § 7 of the Clayton Act in the abstract or even as to competitors not before the Court. Yet, we held that the plaintiffs in Brunswick could not recover because they did not suffer from the anticompetitive effects of the merger. We rejected the contention that it was sufficient to show merely that the defendant's merger violated § 7 and that there existed a causal link between that merger and an economic loss. 429 U.S., at 486-489. Instead, [*489] the required showing is that the type of harm suffered by the plaintiff is that which makes the challenged practice illegal. *Id., at 489*.

Therefore, McCready may not recover merely by showing that she has suffered an economic loss resulting from a practice the legality of which depends upon its effect on a third party. McCready must show that the challenged practice is illegal with regard to its effect [***44] upon her. But petitioners' policy is alleged to be illegal not by virtue of its effect upon Blue Shield's subscribers but because of its effect upon psychologists. McCready alleges no anticompetitive effect upon herself. She does not allege that the conspiracy has affected the availability of the psychological services she sought and actually obtained. Nor does she allege that the conspiracy affected the price of the treatment she received.<sup>5</sup> [****45] She does not allege that her injury was caused by any reduction in competition between psychologists and psychiatrists, nor that it was the result of any success<sup>6</sup> Blue Shield achieved in its "boycott" of psychologists. She seeks recovery solely on the basis that Blue Shield's reimbursement policy failed to alter her conduct [**2554] in a fashion necessary to foreclose psychologists from obtaining the patronage of Blue Shield's subscribers.

If the important consideration is whether the challenged practice is illegal with regard to its effect on the plaintiff, then it would be irrelevant for the plaintiff's purposes that the conspiracy might also adversely affect competition on another level of the market. For example, a group of retailers [*490] may threaten to refuse to do business with those distributors that continue to do business with a disfavored retailer. If the distributors agreed to cooperate with the conspiring retailers, then the disfavored retailer would have an action against the agreeing distributors and the conspiring retailers. [***168] See, e. g., United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 \(1966\); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207 \(1959\). I would think that a distributor who refused to go along [***46] with the retailers' conspiracy and thereby lost the conspiring retailers' business would also have an action against those retailers. Such an action would be based upon the conspirators' concerted refusal to deal with the distributor which itself would be unlawful under the antitrust laws. Such an action, unlike the instant case, would not depend upon the anticompetitive effect of the challenged practice upon a third party. The distributor would have an action not on the ground that he was caught in the middle of an attempted boycott of participants on another level of the market, but because he was boycotted. The boycott of the distributor puts him at a competitive disadvantage to those distributors who are unaffected by the retailers' conspiracy and to those distributors who agree to participate.

7

<sup>5</sup> By excluding psychologists from the market, psychiatrists may well be able to increase their charges for psychotherapeutic services, which in turn, may raise the insurance rates charged by Blue Shield. McCready, however, alleges no such injury to herself on this theory.

<sup>6</sup> Because McCready obtained the services of a psychologist, it cannot be said that the psychologists were injured by the economic pressure Blue Shield placed on McCready and the class of subscribers she represents. See ante, at 475.

<sup>7</sup> As pointed out by the Court, a concerted refusal to deal may take many forms. Ante, at 484, n. 21. I would agree that the bank could sue in the Court's hypothetical because, as conceded by the Court, the bank's ability to compete with other banks would be adversely affected. By contrast, my disagreement with the Court is that it permits McCready to sue solely because of an injury to a level of the market in which she does not participate. Moreover, McCready does not allege that petitioners' conspiracy adversely affected competition between psychologists and psychiatrists in such a manner as to adversely affect the price or supply of psychotherapeutic services available to her as a consumer. Thus, McCready's case is clearly distinguishable from that of the bank's in the Court's hypothetical.

[****47] McCready, however, does not allege that petitioners engaged in a concerted refusal to deal with her. As the Court is aware, ante, at 468-470, McCready has alleged that petitioners [*491] violated the antitrust laws by conspiring to exclude clinical psychologists from the coverage of Blue Shield plans, and that this conspiracy foreseeably injured her. The Court apparently concludes, however, that McCready has also sufficiently alleged that petitioners have engaged in a concerted refusal to deal with her, and that this is the gravamen of her antitrust complaint: "McCready alleges that she has been the victim of a concerted refusal by psychiatrists to reimburse through the Blue Shield plan." Ante, at 484, n. 21. It may be that the Court today is merely holding that a boycottee has "standing" to sue under § 4. Were this the issue presented by this case, I have little doubt that the Court merely would have denied certiorari.

But McCready simply does not, and could not, claim standing as the target of a concerted refusal to deal. Neither Blue Shield nor the psychiatrists threatened to cease doing business with McCready if she obtained the services of a psychologist [****48] rather than a psychiatrist. McCready alleges only that under the Blue Shield policy she could not obtain reimbursement for services rendered by psychologists. If such a claim is sufficient to make out a concerted refusal to deal, then any consumer who could not obtain a product or service on the precise terms he desires could claim to be the victim of a "boycott." Most importantly, McCready alleges that Blue Shield's policy violates the antitrust laws [****169] only by virtue of its anticompetitive effect on psychologists. She does not allege that Blue Shield's policy [*2555] is illegal in any way because of its effect on subscribers.

The Court, however, dismisses such concerns by stating in conclusory terms that "the injury [McCready] suffered was inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict on psychologists and the psychotherapy market." Ante, at 484. I trust that the Court is not holding that a plaintiff may escape dismissal of the complaint merely by alleging that he suffered an economic loss "inextricably [*492] intertwined" with an injury the defendants intended, but failed, to inflict upon a third party.<sup>8</sup> Although [****49] the Court may view itself as successfully deciding this case on its peculiar facts, it has wholly failed to provide any sort of reasoned basis for its decision. Especially in the area of antitrust law, labels do not suffice when analysis is necessary.

I would reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals because McCready has not alleged that she has suffered antitrust injury, but at best injury attributable to a breach of contract on the part of Blue Shield.

JUSTICE STEVENS, dissenting.

Respondent is a consumer of psychotherapeutic services. The question is whether she has been injured [****50] in her "business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws."<sup>1</sup> The alleged antitrust violation is an agreement between petitioners Neuropsychiatric Society of Virginia and Blue Shield that Blue Shield would refuse to reimburse subscribers for payments made to clinical psychologists for charges that were not billed through a physician. The objective of the alleged conspiracy was to induce subscribers to patronize psychiatrists instead of psychologists.

For purposes of decision, I assume that the alleged agreement is unlawful. In analyzing [****51] the sufficiency of respondent's damage claim, it is helpful first to consider the situation [*493] in which the conspiracy would have its maximum impact on the relevant market. Given their objective, petitioners' conspiracy would be most effective if they made it perfectly clear to subscribers that they would not be reimbursed if they consulted psychologists instead of psychiatrists. For without this information, a subscriber's choice between a psychologist and a psychiatrist would not be affected by the conspiracy. Thus, I first assume that the Blue Shield insurance policy did not cover services performed by psychologists and that subscribers as a class were fully aware of this exclusion.

<sup>8</sup> If McCready's injury were truly "inextricably intertwined" with any injury actually suffered by the psychologists, the risk of duplicative recovery and the practical problems inherent in distinguishing the loss suffered by her from the loss suffered by the psychologists may mean that either subscribers or psychologists, but not both, may recover. See Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720 (1977).

<sup>1</sup> "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U. S. C. § 15.

[***170] On this assumption, a Blue Shield subscriber who is a potential consumer in the relevant market has at least three options. He may: (1) forgo treatment entirely; (2) go to a psychiatrist; or (3) go to a psychologist.

<sup>2</sup> [****53] If he exercises his first option, his illness may worsen but he will not have [**2556] suffered any economic injury cognizable under the antitrust laws.<sup>3</sup> If he exercises his second option, his property will not be diminished because Blue Shield will reimburse [****52] him for his payment to the psychiatrist. If he exercises his third option, his property will be diminished to the extent of his unreimbursed payment to the psychologist, but he will have received in exchange psychotherapeutic services that presumably [*494] were worth the payment.<sup>4</sup> The fact that he voluntarily elected to spend money for services not covered by his insurance policy would have no greater legal significance than a similar voluntary decision by a person who was not a Blue Shield subscriber.<sup>5</sup> It thus seems clear to me that whatever option the fully informed subscriber exercises, he would suffer no injury to his property by reason of the restriction of insurance coverage to psychotherapeutic services performed by psychiatrists.

[****54] This conclusion is reinforced by the fact that Blue Shield subscribers have the additional option of going to a psychologist while retaining their rights to reimbursement under the policy. According to respondent's complaint, Blue Shield did not refuse to reimburse all payments made by subscribers to psychologists, but only those payments not billed through a physician. Even if a fully informed subscriber's preference for psychologists over psychiatrists were protected by the antitrust laws, that preference was not denied by the antitrust violation alleged in this [***171] case.<sup>6</sup> The Hobson's choice described [*495] by the Court, ante, at 483, simply does not fit this case.

The availability of this fourth option would seem to indicate that respondent, in fact, was not fully aware of the scope of her policy's [****55] coverage. If her lack of understanding was caused by fraud or deception, she should be able to recover in a common-law action. If the misunderstanding was her own fault, that circumstance should not provide a basis for an antitrust recovery that would not be available if she had been fully informed.

Nor is the deficiency in respondent's complaint cured if the assumption about the insurance coverage is reversed. Although her antitrust claim would be more credible if Blue Shield excluded coverage of services performed by

<sup>2</sup> In Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, we held that antitrust injury was limited to "the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause." Id., at 489 (quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 125). I would expect that the alleged violation in this case would be most likely to cause knowledgeable members of the class of potential consumers of psychotherapeutic services to exercise either the first or the second option. It is fair to assume that the third situation -- the one in which respondent finds herself -- would be "unlikely" to result.

<sup>3</sup> The subscriber may have to undergo more extensive treatment later if he forgoes treatment now and his illness worsens. Any consequential economic injury, however, would no more constitute antitrust injury than the economic injury suffered by a consumer who decides to forgo a purchase on the ground that the price of the goods or services was fixed at an artificially high level.

<sup>4</sup> If treatment by a psychiatrist and treatment by a psychologist were fungible, then a subscriber who exercised this third option effectively would be paying twice for the psychotherapeutic service, once to the insurer in premiums and once to the psychologist in an unreimbursable payment. But the subscriber's exercise of this option presumably indicates that treatment by a psychologist is more valuable to him than treatment by a psychiatrist. If that be true, the subscriber is in the same situation as any policyholder who desires a service for which he has not purchased insurance.

<sup>5</sup> If the subscriber would purchase a service that was covered by the Blue Shield policy, such as a surgical operation, then he would be reimbursed by Blue Shield for that payment. If respondent's antitrust claim is that petitioners have engaged in an unlawful boycott, it therefore is manifest that respondent is not the boycottee. For petitioners have not refused to deal with respondent -- they offer her the same coverage as any other subscriber or potential subscriber.

<sup>6</sup> Presumably, the charge (if any) of the referring physician would be reimbursable under the policy. In any event, the complaint does not claim damages based on any such unreimbursed charge.

psychologists, respondent alleged in the second count of her complaint that the insurance policy, properly construed under applicable principles of Virginia law, provided coverage for services performed by psychologists, but that Blue Shield nevertheless refused to reimburse her for the payments she made to her psychologist. If a subscriber does not suffer antitrust injury when the insurance policy excludes coverage of services performed by psychologists, it would be anomalous to conclude that the availability of a [**2557] breach-of-contract claim would in any way enhance his standing. The right to recover under the federal antitrust laws cannot be derived [****56] from a right to recover under state law.

Because respondent's complaint discloses no basis for concluding that she has suffered an injury to her property by reason of the alleged antitrust violation, I respectfully dissent.

References

---

Standing to sue, under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) and predecessor statute, to recover treble damages for antitrust violation

*54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 289, 293*

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:89, 48:90

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, Form 13

15 USCS 15

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 67

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Standing to sue, under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) and predecessor statute, to recover treble [****57] damages for antitrust violation. 73 L Ed 2d 1427.

Measure and elements of damages under *15 USCS 15* entitling person injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in federal antitrust laws to recover treble damages. 16 ALR Fed 14.

Propriety, under *Rules 23\(a\)* and *23\(b\) of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure*, of class action for violation of federal antitrust laws. 6 ALR Fed 19.

Union Labor Life Ins. Co. v. Pireno

Supreme Court of the United States

April 27, 1982, Argued ; June 28, 1982, Decided *

No. 81-389

Reporter

458 U.S. 119 *; 102 S. Ct. 3002 **; 73 L. Ed. 2d 647 ***; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 144 ****; 50 U.S.L.W. 4911; 1982-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P64,802

UNION LABOR LIFE INSURANCE CO. v. PIRENO

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 650 F.2d 387, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

insured, insurance business, policyholders, Pharmacy, practices, exempt, peer review committee, insurance company, peer review, McCarran-Ferguson Act, insurance industry, parties, Sherman Act, chiropractors, petitioners', charges, anti trust law, chiropractic, underwriting, regulation, legislative history, claims adjustment, reliability, transferred, spreading, prescription drug, reimbursed, antitrust, insurance policy, omitted footnote

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

See 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1012\(a\), \(b\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1013\(b\).

---

* Together with No. 81-390, New York State Chiropractic Assn. v. Pireno, also on certiorari to the same court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN3 Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Exemptions from the antitrust laws must be construed narrowly. This principle applies not only to implicit exemptions, but also to express statutory exemptions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Three criteria are relevant in determining whether a particular practice is part of the "business of insurance" exempted from the antitrust laws by § 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act: first, whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry. None of these criteria is necessarily determinative in itself.

Insurance Law > Contract Formation

HN5 Insurance Law, Contract Formation

The transfer of risk from insured to insurer is effected by means of the contract between the parties -- the insurance policy -- and that transfer is complete at the time that the contract is entered. If the policy limits coverage to "necessary" treatments and "reasonable" charges for them, then that limitation is the measure of the risk that has actually been transferred to the insurer.

Insurance Law > Contract Formation

HN6 Insurance Law, Contract Formation

The insurance policy defines the scope of risk assumed by the insurer from the insured.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN7 Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

15 U.S.C.S. § 1012\(b\) is intended primarily to protect "intra-industry cooperation" in the underwriting of risks. Arrangements between insurance companies and parties outside the insurance industry can hardly be said to lie at the center of that legislative concern. More importantly, such arrangements may prove contrary to the spirit as well as the letter of § 1012\(b\) because they have the potential to restrain competition in noninsurance markets.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Insurer use of peer review committee to determine reasonableness of chiropractor's fees, held not exempt from antitrust laws as "business of insurance" under McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1012\(b\)).

Summary

A New York insurance company's health insurance policy covers certain policyholder claims for chiropractic treatment but certain of these policies limit the company's liability to "the reasonable charges" for "necessary medical care and services." Accordingly, when presented with a policyholder claim for reimbursement for chiropractic treatments, the insurance company must determine whether the treatments were necessary and whether the charges for them were reasonable. In making some of these determinations the company arranged with the New York chiropractic association to use the advice of the association's peer review committee. The committee was established by the association primarily to aid insurers in evaluating claims for chiropractic treatments and is composed of ten practicing chiropractors, who serve on a voluntary basis. On a number of occasions a certain chiropractor's treatments of the insurance company's policyholders, and his charges for those treatments, have been referred by the company to the committee, which sometimes concluded that his treatments were unnecessary or that his charges were unreasonable. The dispute over the charges deemed unreasonable resulted in the chiropractor bringing a suit in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, alleging that the peer review practices involved violated 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1). In particular, he claimed that the insurance company and others had used the peer review committee as the vehicle for a conspiracy to fix the prices that chiropractors would be permitted to charge for their services. After extensive discovery, the District Court dismissed the complaint, concluding that the insurance company's use of the peer review committee was exempted from antitrust scrutiny by the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1011 et seq.), since the peer review practices constituted the "business of insurance" which was subject to an exemption under that Act. The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit reversed, concluding that the District Court had erred in holding that the insurance company's use of the peer review committee constituted the "business of insurance" (650 F2d 387).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Brennan, J., joined by White, Marshall, Blackmun, Powell, and Stevens, JJ., it was held that the alleged conspiracy was not exempt from federal antitrust law as part of the "business of insurance," since (1) the insurance company's use of the peer review committee played no part in the spreading and underwriting of a policyholder's risk, (2) the use of the peer review committee was not an integral part of the policy relationship between insurer and insured, and (3) although it could be assumed that the challenged peer review practices need not be denied the exemption under 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1012\(b\)), which operates so as to render the federal antitrust laws inapplicable to the "business of insurance" to the extent such business is regulated by state law, solely because they involved parties outside the insurance industry--namely the practicing chiropractors on the peer review committee--they could hardly be said to lie at the center of the Act's legislative concern and could prove contrary to the spirit as well as the letter of 2(b), since they have the potential to restrain competition in non-insurance markets.

Rehnquist, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and O'Connor, J., dissenting, expressed the view that the claims adjustment function of the peer review committee is at the heart of the relationship between insurance companies and their policyholders and that, accordingly, such committees are clearly within the sphere of insurance activity which the McCarran-Ferguson Act intended to protect from the effect of the antitrust laws.

Headnotes

---

PRACTICES §29 > McCarran-Ferguson Act -- "business of insurance" -- exemption from federal antitrust laws -- peer review committee for insurance claim -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

An alleged conspiracy to eliminate price competition among chiropractors by means of a "peer review committee" that advises an insurance company whether particular chiropractors' treatments and fees are "necessary" and "reasonable" is not exempt from federal antitrust law as part of the "business of insurance" within the meaning of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1011 et seq.), where (1) the insurance company's use of the peer review committee plays no part in the spreading and underwriting of a policyholder's risk, (2) the use of the peer review committee is not an integral part of the policy relationship between insurer and insured, and (3) although it may be assumed that the challenge peer review practices need not be denied the exemption under 2(b) of the Act (15 USCS 1012\(b\)), which operates so as to render the federal antitrust laws inapplicable to the "business of insurance" to the extent such business is regulated by state law, solely since they involved parties outside the insurance industry--namely the practicing chiropractors on the peer review committee--they can hardly be said to lie at the center of the Act's legislative concern and may prove contrary to the spirit as well as the letter of 2(b), since they have the potential to restrain competition in noninsurance markets. (Rehnquist, J., Burger, Ch. J., and O'Connor, J., dissented from this holding.)

PRACTICES §7 > federal antitrust laws -- exemption -- construction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

The Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) expresses a longstanding congressional commitment to the policy of free markets and open competition and, accordingly, exemptions from the antitrust laws must be construed narrowly, this principle applying not only to implicit exemptions but also to express statutory exemptions.

PRACTICES §29 > McCarran-Ferguson Act -- "business of insurance" -- criteria -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Criteria relevant in determining whether a particular practice is part of the "business of insurance" exempted from federal antitrust law by 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1012\(b\)) are whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured, and whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry; however, none of these criteria is necessarily determinative in itself.

INSURANCE §46 > insurance policy -- scope of risk -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The transfer of risk from insured to insurer is affected by means of a contract between the parties--the insurance policy--and that transfer is complete at the time the contract is entered; the fundamental principle of insurance is that the insurance policy defines the scope of risk assumed by the insurer from the insured.

Syllabus

---

As required by New York law, petitioner Union Labor Life Insurance Co. (ULL) issues health insurance policies covering certain policyholder claims for chiropractic treatments. Some ULL policies limit the company's liability to "reasonable" charges for "necessary" medical care and services. In order to determine whether particular chiropractors' treatments and fees were necessary and reasonable, ULL arranged with petitioner New York State Chiropractic Association (NYSCA), a professional association of chiropractors, to use the advice of its Peer Review Committee, which was established primarily to aid insurers in evaluating claims for chiropractic treatments, and which is composed of 10 practicing [****2] New York chiropractors. Respondent is a licensed chiropractor practicing in New York. On a number of occasions ULL referred his treatments of ULL policyholders, and his charges for those treatments, to the Committee for review. The Committee sometimes concluded that respondent's treatments were unnecessary or his charges unreasonable. Respondent brought suit in Federal District Court, alleging that petitioners' peer review practices violated § 1 of the Sherman Act because petitioners had used the Committee as the vehicle for their conspiracy to fix the prices that chiropractors would be permitted to charge for their services. The District Court granted petitioners' motion for summary judgment, dismissing respondent's complaint on the ground that ULL's use of NYSCA's Peer Review Committee was exempted from antitrust scrutiny by § 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, which applies to the "business of insurance." The Court of Appeals reversed and remanded the action for further proceedings.

Held: ULL's use of NYSCA's Peer Review Committee does not constitute the "business of insurance" within the meaning of § 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, and thus is not exempt from antitrust [****3] scrutiny. Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, controlling. Pp. 126-134.

(a) There are three criteria relevant in determining whether a particular practice is part of the "business of insurance" exempted from the antitrust laws by § 2(b): first, whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry. Royal Drug Co., supra. Pp. 126-129.

(b) With regard to the first criterion, petitioners' arrangement plays no part in the spreading and underwriting of a policyholder's risk, because it is logically and temporally unconnected to the contract entered by the policyholder and ULL, which was the actual risk-transferring event. As to the second criterion, ULL's use of NYSCA's Peer Review Committee is distinct from ULL's contracts with its policyholders, and constitutes a separate arrangement between the insurer and third parties not engaged in the business of insurance. Nor does the challenged [****4] arrangement satisfy this criterion on the asserted ground that it directly involves the "interpretation" and "enforcement" of the insurance contract, because ULL's procedure for deciding whether claims are covered is a matter of indifference to the policyholder, whose only concern is whether his claim is paid, not why it is paid. As respects the third criterion, it may be assumed that the challenged arrangement need not be denied the § 2(b) exemption solely because it involves parties outside the insurance industry -- namely, practicing chiropractors serving on the Peer Review Committee. But such arrangements can hardly be said to lie at the center of the legislative concern underlying § 2(b), which was with the protection of intra-industry cooperation in the underwriting of risks. More importantly, such arrangements may prove contrary to the spirit as well as the letter of § 2(b), because they have the potential to restrain competition in noninsurance markets. Pp. 130-134.

Counsel: T. Richard Kennedy argued the cause for petitioners in both cases. With him on the briefs for petitioner in No. 81-389 were Edward Thompson and Philip R. Kastellec. Robert P. Borsody [****5] filed a brief for petitioner in No. 81-390.

Susan M. Jenkins argued the cause for respondent in both cases. With her on the brief was Ralph C. Wiegandt.

Barry Grossman argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging affirmance. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Lee, Assistant Attorney General Baxter, Deputy Solicitor General Shapiro, Jerrold J. Ganzfried, and Nancy C. Garrison. *

[****6]

Judges: BRENNAN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which WHITE, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, POWELL, and STEVENS, JJ., joined. REHNQUIST, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which BURGER, C. J., and O'CONNOR, J., joined, post, p. 134.

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

---

[*122] [***651] [**3005] JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN/1A [1A] In these cases we consider an alleged conspiracy to eliminate price competition among chiropractors, by means of a "peer review committee" that advised an insurance company whether particular chiropractors' treatments and fees were "necessary" and "reasonable." The question presented is whether the alleged conspiracy is exempt from federal antitrust laws as part of the "business of insurance" within the meaning of the McCarran-Ferguson Act.<sup>1</sup>

---

+ Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed by Richard A. Whiting for the American Insurance Association et al.; by Sidney S. Rosdeitcher and Richard D. Friedman for the Health Insurance Association of America et al.; and by David Crump for the Legal Foundation of America.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the State of Arizona et al. by Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona, and Kenneth R. Reed, Special Assistant Attorney General, Steve Clark, Attorney General of Arkansas, and David L. Williams, Deputy Attorney General, J. D. MacFarlane, Attorney General of Colorado, and Thomas P. McMahon, Carl R. Ajello, Attorney General of Connecticut, and Robert M. Langer and John R. Lacey, Assistant Attorneys General, Richard S. Gebelein, Attorney General of Delaware, and Vincent M. Amberly, Deputy Attorney General, Tany S. Hong, Attorney General of Hawaii, and Sonia Faust, Deputy Attorney General, Tyrone C. Fahner, Attorney General of Illinois, and Thomas M. Genovese, Assistant Attorney General, Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, and John R. Perkins, Assistant Attorney General, William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General of Louisiana, and John R. Flowers, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, Stephen H. Sachs, Attorney General of Maryland, and Charles O. Monk II, Assistant Attorney General, Frank J. Kelley, Attorney General of Michigan, and Edwin M. Bladen, Assistant Attorney General, Bill Allain, Attorney General of Mississippi, and Robert E. Sanders, Special Assistant Attorney General, John Ashcroft, Attorney General of Missouri, and William L. Newcomb, Jr., and Robert E. Dolan, Jr., Assistant Attorneys General, Michael T. Greely, Attorney General of Montana, and Jerome J. Cate, Assistant Attorney General, Paul L. Douglas, Attorney General of Nebraska, and Dale A. Comer, Assistant Attorney General, Jeff Bingaman, Attorney General of New Mexico, and James J. Wechsler and Richard H. Levin, Assistant Attorneys General, Rufus L. Edmisten, Attorney General of North Carolina, H. A. Cole, Jr., Special Deputy Attorney General, and John R. Corne, Associate Attorney General, William J. Brown, Attorney General of Ohio, and Eugene F. McShane, Dennis J. Roberts II, Attorney General of Rhode Island, and Patrick J. Quinlan, Assistant Attorney General, Mark White, Attorney General of Texas, and James V. Sylvester, Assistant Attorney General, David L. Wilkinson, Attorney General of Utah, John J. Easton, Jr., Attorney General of Vermont, and Glenn A. Jarrett, Assistant Attorney General, and Bronson C. La Follette, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Michael L. Zaleski, Assistant Attorney General; for the Association of American Physicians & Surgeons, Inc., by Kent Masterson Brown; and for Automotive Service Councils, Inc., by Donald A. Randall and Jonathan T. Howe.

David J. Brummond filed a brief for the National Association of Insurance Commissioners as amicus curiae.

<sup>1</sup> 59 Stat. 33, as amended, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1011-1015. The Act provides in relevant part:

[****7] I

[***652] Petitioners are the New York State Chiropractic Association (NYSCA), a professional association of chiropractors, and the Union Labor Life Insurance Co. (ULL), a Maryland insurer doing business in New York. As required by New York law, ULL's health insurance policies cover certain policyholder claims for chiropractic treatments. But certain ULL policies limit the company's liability to "the reasonable charges" for "necessary medical care and services." [*123] App. 19a, 22a (emphasis added). Accordingly, when presented with a policyholder claim for reimbursement for chiropractic treatments, ULL must determine whether the treatments were necessary and whether the charges for them were reasonable. In making some of these determinations, ULL has arranged with NYSCA to use the advice of NYSCA's Peer Review Committee.

The Committee was established by NYSCA in 1971, primarily to aid insurers in evaluating claims for chiropractic treatments.<sup>2</sup> It is composed of 10 practicing New York chiropractors, who serve on a voluntary basis. At the request of an insurer, the Committee will examine a chiropractor's treatments and charges in a particular case, and will [****8] render an opinion on the necessity for the treatments and the reasonableness of the charges made for them. The opinion will be based upon such considerations as the treating chiropractor's experience and specialty degrees; the location of his office; the number of visits and time spent with the patient; the patient's age, occupation, general physical condition, and history of previous treatment; and X-ray findings.

Respondent is a chiropractor licensed and practicing in the State of New York. On a [**3006] number of occasions his treatments of ULL policyholders, and his charges for those treatments, have been referred by ULL to the Committee, which has sometimes concluded that his treatments were unnecessary or his charges unreasonable. Petitioners assert that respondent has treated his patients "in a manner calculated [****9] to maximize the number of treatments for a particular condition, and that his fees for these treatments are unusually high." 650 F.2d 387, 389 \(CA2 1981\). Respondent, for his part, contends that the members of the Committee "practice 'antiquated' techniques that they seek to impose on their more innovative competitors." Ibid.

[*124] This dispute resulted in the present suit, brought by respondent in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Respondent alleged that the peer review practices of petitioners violated § 1 of the Sherman Act.<sup>3</sup> In [***653] particular, he claimed that petitioners and others had used the Committee as the vehicle for a conspiracy to fix the prices that chiropractors, including respondent, would be permitted to charge for their services. He concluded that he had been restrained from providing his chiropractic services to the public freely and fully, and that would-be recipients of chiropractic services had been deprived of the benefits of competition. Respondent requested, inter alia, declaratory and injunctive relief against ULL's continued use of NYSCA's Peer Review Committee in evaluating policyholders' [****10] claims.

After extensive discovery, the District Court granted petitioners' motion for summary judgment dismissing respondent's complaint, concluding that ULL's use of NYSCA's Peer Review Committee was exempted from

HN1 [↑] "(a) The business of insurance, and every person engaged therein, shall be subject to the laws of the several States which relate to the regulation or taxation of such business.

"(b) No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, . . . unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance. . . ." § 2, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1012\(a\), \(b\).

HN2 [↑] "(b) Nothing contained in this Act shall render the . . . Sherman Act in applicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation." § 3, 15 U. S. C. § 1013\(b\).

<sup>2</sup> The Committee's advice is also available to patients, governmental agencies, and chiropractors themselves, but insurers are the principal users. 650 F.2d 387, 388 \(CA2 1981\).

<sup>3</sup> 15 U. S. C. § 1, which provides in pertinent part that "[every] contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. . . ."

458 U.S. 119, *124; 102 S. Ct. 3002, **3006; 73 L. Ed. 2d 647, ***653; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 144, ****10

antitrust scrutiny by the McCarran-Ferguson Act. App. to Pet. for Cert. in No. 81-389, pp. 20a-37a. The court noted that three requirements must be met in order to obtain the McCarran-Ferguson exemption: The challenged practices (1) must constitute the "business of insurance," (2) must be regulated by state law, and (3) must not amount to a "boycott, coercion, or intimidation." Id., at 27a-28a. In the court's view, all three of these requirements were satisfied in the present case. In particular, the court held [****11] that petitioners' peer review practices constituted the "business of insurance" because they served "to define the precise extent of ULL's [*125] contractual obligations . . . under [its] policies." Id., at 29a-30a. Moreover, the court determined that the peer review practices "[involved] the spreading of risk, an indispensable element of the 'business of insurance.'" Id., at 30a.<sup>4</sup> Respondents' Sherman Act claim was accordingly dismissed with prejudice.

[****12] The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit reversed. 650 F.2d 387 \(1981\). Relying upon this Court's recent opinion in Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205 \(1979\), the Court of Appeals concluded that the District Court had erred in holding that ULL's use of NYSCA's [**3007] Peer Review Committee constituted the "business of insurance."<sup>5</sup> Accordingly, the Court of Appeals remanded the action for further proceedings. We granted certiorari to resolve a conflict among the Courts of Appeals on the question presented.<sup>6</sup> 454 U.S. 1052 \(1981\).

[****13] [*126] //

[***654] LEdHN1B [↑] [1B]LEdHN2 [↑] [2]The only issue before us is whether petitioners' peer review practices are exempt from antitrust scrutiny as part of the "business of insurance." "It is axiomatic that conduct which is not exempt from the antitrust laws may nevertheless be perfectly legal." Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., supra, at 210, n. 5. Thus in deciding these cases we have no occasion to address the merits of respondent's Sherman Act claims. However, the Sherman Act does express a "longstanding congressional commitment to the policy of free markets and open competition." Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 56 \(1982\); see also United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 610 \(1972\). Accordingly, our precedents consistently hold that HN3 [↑] exemptions from the antitrust laws must be construed narrowly. FMC v. Seatrail Lines, Inc., 411 U.S. 726, 733 \(1973\). [****14] This principle applies not only to implicit exemptions, see Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., supra, at 231, but also to express statutory exemptions, see United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 351 U.S. 305, 316 \(1956\). In Royal Drug, supra, this Court had occasion to reexamine the scope of the express antitrust exemption provided for the "business of insurance" by § 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. We hold that decision of the question before us is controlled by Royal Drug.

The principal petitioner in Royal Drug was a Texas insurance company, Blue Shield, that offered policies entitling insured persons to purchase prescription drugs for $ 2 each from any pharmacy participating in a "Pharmacy Agreement" with Blue Shield; policyholders were also allowed to purchase prescription drugs from a

---

<sup>4</sup> The court then turned to the Act's second requirement, that the challenged practices be "regulated by state law." The court held that that requirement had been met, as well, observing that New York had "enacted a pervasive scheme of regulation and supervision of insurance," had prohibited "the unfair settlement of claims," and had proscribed "the conduct alleged in the complaint" in its state antitrust law, the Donnelly Act, which by its terms applied to insurers. App. to Pet. for Cert. in No. 81-389, pp. 31a-32a. Finally, the court determined that respondent had neither alleged a "boycott" on petitioners' part, nor offered evidentiary support for such a claim. Id., at 33a-35a. The court thus concluded that the Act's third requirement was satisfied in the present case, and that petitioners' actions were consequently "exempt from application of the antitrust laws." Id., at 36a.

<sup>5</sup> Since it reached this conclusion, the Court of Appeals did not definitively address the other holdings of the District Court. See n. 4, supra. The court did note, however, that petitioner NYSCA did not itself "appear to be regulated by state law in the manner § 2(b) requires." 650 F.2d, at 390, n. 5.

<sup>6</sup> As noted by the Court of Appeals, id. at 395, n. 13, the decision below is contrary to that of the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit "in a factually identical case." See Bartholomew v. Virginia Chiropractors Assn., 612 F.2d 812 \(1979\).

nonparticipating pharmacy, but in that event they would have to pay full price for the drugs and would be reimbursed by Blue Shield for only a part of that price. Blue Shield offered Pharmacy Agreements to all licensed pharmacies in Texas, but participating pharmacies were required to sell prescription [****15] drugs to Blue [*127] Shield's policyholders for $ 2 each, and were reimbursed only for their cost in acquiring the drugs thus sold. "Thus, only pharmacies that [could] afford to distribute prescription drugs for less than this $ 2 markup [could] profitably participate in the plan." 440 U.S., at 209 (footnote omitted).

Respondents in Royal Drug were the owners of nonparticipating pharmacies. They sued Blue Shield and several participating pharmacies under § 1 of the Sherman Act, alleging that the Pharmacy Agreements were the instrument by which Blue Shield had conspired with participating pharmacies to fix the retail prices of prescription drugs. Respondents also alleged that the Agreements encouraged [**3008] Blue Shield's policyholders to avoid nonparticipating pharmacies, thus constituting an unlawful group boycott. The District Court granted summary judgment to Blue Shield and the other petitioners, holding that the challenged Agreements were exempt under § 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson ***655 Act. But the Court of Appeals disagreed, holding that the Agreements were not the "business of insurance" within the meaning of that Act, and reversed. [****16] 440 U.S., at 210. This Court affirmed. Looking to "the structure of the Act and its legislative history," id., at 211, the Court discussed three characteristics of the business of insurance that Congress had intended to exempt through § 2(b).

First, after noting that one "indispensable characteristic of insurance" is the "spreading and underwriting of a policyholder's risk," id., at 211-212,<sup>7</sup> the Court observed that parts [*128] of the legislative history of the McCarran-Ferguson Act "strongly suggest that Congress understood the business of insurance to be the underwriting and spreading of risk," id., at 220-221. The Court then dismissed Blue Shield's contention that its Pharmacy Agreements involved such activities.

"The Pharmacy Agreements . . . are merely arrangements for the purchase of goods and services by Blue Shield. By agreeing with pharmacies on the maximum prices it will pay for drugs, Blue Shield effectively reduces the total amount it must pay to its policyholders. The Agreements thus enable Blue Shield to minimize costs and maximize profits. Such cost-savings arrangements may well be [****17] sound business practice, and may well inure ultimately to the benefit of policyholders in the form of lower premiums, but they are not the 'business of insurance.'" Id., at 214 (footnote omitted).

Second, the Court identified "the contract between the insurer and the insured" as "[another] commonly understood aspect of the business of insurance." Id., at 215. The Court noted that, in [****18] enacting the McCarran-Ferguson Act, Congress had been concerned with the "relationship between insurer and insured, the type of policy which could be issued, its reliability, interpretation, and enforcement -- these were the core of the "business of insurance."'" Id., at 215-216, quoting SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 460 \(1969\). The Court then rejected Blue Shield's argument that its Pharmacy Agreements were so closely related to the "reliability, interpretation, and enforcement" of its policies as to fall within the intended scope of § 2(b): "This argument . . . proves too much." 440 U.S., at 216.

"At the most, the petitioners have demonstrated that the Pharmacy Agreements result in cost savings to Blue Shield which may be reflected in lower premiums if [****656] the cost savings are passed on to policyholders. But, in that sense, every business decision made by an insurance company has some impact on its reliability, its ratemaking, [*129] and its status as a reliable insurer . . . [and thus] could be included in the 'business of insurance.' Such a result would be plainly contrary to the statutory [****19] language, which exempts the 'business of insurance' and not the 'business of insurance companies.'" *Id.* at 216-217.

<sup>7</sup> As the Court explained:

"It is characteristic of insurance that a number of risks are accepted, some of which involve losses, and that such losses are spread over all the risks so as to enable the insurer to accept each risk at a slight fraction of the possible liability upon it.' 1 G. Couch, Cyclopedia of Insurance Law § 1:3 (2d ed. 1959). See also R. Keeton, Insurance Law § 1.2(a) (1971) ('Insurance is an arrangement for transferring and distributing risk'); 1 G. Richards, The Law of Insurance § 2 (W. Freedman 5th ed. 1952)." 440 U.S., at 211 (footnote omitted).

458 U.S. 119, *129; 102 S. Ct. 3002, **3008; 73 L. Ed. 2d 647, ***656; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 144, ****18

Finally, the Court noted that in enacting the McCarran-Ferguson Act, "the primary concern of both representatives of the insurance [**3009] industry and the Congress was that cooperative ratemaking efforts be exempt from the antitrust laws." *Id.* at 221. This was so because of "the widespread view that it [was] very difficult to underwrite risks in an informed and responsible way without intra-industry cooperation." Ibid. The Court was thus reluctant to extend the § 2(b) exemption to the case before it, "because the Pharmacy Agreements involve parties wholly outside the insurance industry." *Id.* at 231.

"There is not the slightest suggestion in the legislative history that Congress in any way contemplated that arrangements such as the Pharmacy Agreements in this case, which involve the mass purchase of goods and services from entities outside the insurance industry, are the 'business of insurance.'" *Id.* at 224 (footnote omitted).

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3] [****20] In sum, Royal Drug identified HN4 three criteria relevant in determining whether a particular practice is part of the "business of insurance" exempted from the antitrust laws by § 2(b): first, whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry. None of these criteria is necessarily determinative in itself, but examining the arrangement between petitioners NYSCA and ULL with respect to all three criteria, we do not hesitate to conclude that it is not a part of the "business of insurance."

[*130] [LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4] Plainly, ULL's use of NYSCA's Peer Review Committee plays no part in the "spreading and underwriting of a policyholder's risk." Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S., at 211. Both the "spreading" and the "underwriting" of risk refer [****21] in this context to the transfer of risk characteristic of insurance. See n. 7, supra. And as the Court of Appeals below observed:

"The risk that an insured will require chiropractic treatment has been transferred from the insured to [ULL] by the very purchase of insurance. Peer review takes place only after the risk has been transferred by means of the policy, and then it functions only to determine whether the risk of the entire loss (the insured's cost of treatment) has been transferred to [ULL] -- that is, whether the insured's loss falls within the policy limits." 650 F.2d, at 393.

Petitioner ULL argues that the [***657] Court of Appeals' analysis is "semantic and unrealistic." Brief for Petitioner ULL 17. Petitioner reasons that "[it] is inconceivable that Congress would have included risk transfer within the 'business of insurance' but excluded a device that helps 'determine whether the risk . . . has been transferred' and acts as 'an aid in determining the scope of the transfer.'" Ibid. We find no merit in this argument, because the challenged peer review arrangement is logically and temporally unconnected to the transfer of risk [****22] accomplished by ULL's insurance policies. HN5 The transfer of risk from insured to insurer is effected by means of the contract between the parties -- the insurance policy -- and that transfer is complete at the time that the contract is entered. See 9 G. Couch, Cyclopedia of Insurance Law §§ 39:53, 39:63 (2d ed. 1962). If the policy limits coverage to "necessary" treatments and "reasonable" charges for them, then that limitation is the measure of the risk that has actually been transferred to the insurer: To the extent that [*131] the insured pays unreasonable charges for unnecessary treatments, he will not be reimbursed, because the risk of incurring such treatments and charges was never transferred to the insurer, but was instead always retained by the insured. Petitioner's argument contains the unspoken premise that the transfer of risk from an insured to his insurer actually takes place not when the contract between those parties is completed, but rather only when the insured's claim is [**3010] settled. This premise is contrary to the fundamental principle of insurance that [****23] HNC↑ the insurance policy defines the scope of risk assumed by the insurer from the insured. See id., § 39:3; R. Keeton, Insurance Law § 5.1(a) (1971).

458 U.S. 119, *131; 102 S. Ct. 3002, **3009; 73 L. Ed. 2d 647, ***657; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 144, ****22

Turning to the second Royal Drug criterion, it is clear that ULL's use of NYSCA's Peer Review Committee is not an integral part of the policy relationship between insurer and insured. In the first place, the challenged arrangement between ULL and NYSCA is obviously distinct from ULL's contracts with its policyholders. In this sense the challenged arrangement resembles the Pharmacy Agreements in Royal Drug. There the Court rejected the proposition that the Agreements were "between insurer and insured." Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., supra, at 215, quoting SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S., at 460. Rather, it recognized those Agreements as "separate contractual arrangements between Blue Shield and pharmacies engaged in the sale and distribution of goods and services other than insurance." 440 U.S., at 216. Similarly, ULL's use of NYSCA's Peer Review Committee is a separate arrangement between [****24] the insurer and third parties not engaged in the business of insurance.

Petitioner ULL argues that the challenged peer review practices satisfy this criterion because peer review "directly involves the 'interpretation' and 'enforcement' of the insurance contract." Brief for Petitioner ULL 16. But this argument is essentially identical to one made and rejected in [*132] Royal Drug. Blue Shield there contended that its Pharmacy Agreements "so closely [affected] the 'reliability, interpretation, and enforcement' of the insurance [***658] contract . . . as to fall within the exempted area." 440 U.S., at 216 (footnote omitted). This Court noted, however:

"The benefit promised to Blue Shield policyholders is that their premiums will cover the cost of prescription drugs except for a $ 2 charge for each prescription. So long as that promise is kept, policyholders are basically unconcerned with arrangements made between Blue Shield and participating pharmacies." Id., at 213-214 (footnotes omitted).

Similarly, when presented with policyholder claims for reimbursement, ULL must decide whether the claims are covered by its policies. [***25] But these decisions are entirely ULL's, and its use of NYSCA's Peer Review Committee as an aid in its decisionmaking process is a matter of indifference to the policyholder, whose only concern is whether his claim is paid, not why it is paid. As in Royal Drug, petitioners have shown, at the most, that the challenged peer review practices result in "cost savings to [ULL] which may be reflected in lower premiums if the cost savings are passed on to policyholders." Id., at 216. To grant the practices a § 2(b) exemption on such a showing "would be plainly contrary to the statutory language, which exempts the 'business of insurance' and not the 'business of insurance companies.'" Id., at 217.

Finally, as respects the third Royal Drug criterion, it is plain that the challenged peer review practices are not limited to entities within the insurance industry. On the contrary, ULL's use of NYSCA's Peer Review Committee inevitably involves third parties wholly outside the insurance industry -- namely, practicing chiropractors. Petitioners do not dispute this fact, but instead deprecate its importance. They argue that we should not conclude [****26] "that ULL's use of the peer review process is outside the scope of the 'business' [*133] of insurance' simply because NYSCA is not an insurance company." Brief for Petitioner ULL 25. In petitioners' view:

"There is nothing in the McCarran-Ferguson Act that limits the 'business of insurance' to the business of insurance companies. As this Court has stated, '[the Act's] language refers not to the persons or companies who are subject to [**3011] state regulation, but to laws "regulating the business of insurance.'" National Securities, 393 U.S. at 459." Ibid. (emphasis in original of quoted opinion).

Asserting that "the [New York] Superintendent of Insurance effectively can regulate the peer review process through his authority over the claims adjustment procedures of ULL," id., at 26, petitioners conclude that the process is part of the "business of insurance" despite the necessary involvement of third parties outside the insurance industry.

We may assume that the challenged peer review practices need not be denied the § 2(b) exemption solely because they involve parties outside the insurance industry. But the involvement of such [****27] parties, even if not dispositive, constitutes part of the inquiry mandated by the Royal Drug analysis. As the Court noted there, § 2(b) HN7 was intended primarily to protect "intra-industry cooperation" in the underwriting of [***659] risks. 440 U.S., at 221 (emphasis added). Arrangements between insurance companies and parties outside the insurance industry can hardly be said to lie at the center of that legislative concern. More importantly, such arrangements may prove contrary to the spirit as well as the letter of § 2(b), because they have the potential to restrain competition in noninsurance markets. Indeed, the peer review practices challenged in the present cases assertedly realize precisely this potential: Respondent's claim is that the practices restrain competition in a provider market -- the market for chiropractic services -- rather than in an insurance market. App. 8a. Thus we cannot join petitioners in depreciating the [*134] fact that parties outside the insurance industry are intimately involved in the peer review practices at issue in these cases. [****28]<sup>8</sup>

[****29] III

LEdHN/1C [1C] In sum, we conclude that ULL's use of NYSCA's Peer Review Committee does not constitute the "business of insurance" within the meaning of § 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act.<sup>9</sup> The judgment of the Court of Appeals is accordingly

Affirmed.

Dissent by: REHNQUIST

Dissent

---

JUSTICE REHNQUIST, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE and JUSTICE O'CONNOR join, dissenting.

Purporting to rely upon our recent decision in Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205 (1979), [*135] the Court today exposes to antitrust liability an aspect of the business of insurance designed to promote fair and efficient claims settlement. The Court reaches this conclusion by determining [****30] that the peer review process does not spread risk, is not an integral [**3012] part of the insurance relationship, and is not limited to entities within the insurance industry. Because I find the claims adjustment function of the Peer Review Committee [***660] to be at the heart of the relationship between insurance companies and their policyholders, I conclude that such committees are clearly within the sphere of insurance activity which the McCarran-Ferguson Act intended to protect from the effect of the antitrust laws.<sup>1</sup> This conclusion finds support in the legislative history of the Act and in Royal Drug and its predecessors.

<sup>8</sup>The premise of the dissent is that NYSCA's Peer Review Committee actually constitutes "the claims adjustor" in these cases. See post, at 137. From this premise the dissent reasons that since "claims adjustment is part and parcel of the 'business of insurance' protected by the McCarran-Ferguson Act," post, at 138, it necessarily follows that the peer review practices at issue in these cases must enjoy the Act's exemption. The fatal flaw in this syllogism is that NYSCA's Peer Review Committee is not the claims adjustor. As the Court of Appeals noted: "Opinions of the committee are not binding unless the parties agree beforehand that they will be." 650 F.2d, at 388. Thus in a case such as the present ones, ULL is perfectly free to disregard the Committee's evaluation. Even if ULL were to act upon the Committee's opinion, the nonbinding nature of the Committee's evaluation means that, at most, peer review is merely ancillary to the claims adjustment process. We see no reason that such ancillary activities must necessarily enjoy the McCarran-Ferguson exemption from the antitrust laws. Unlike activities that occur wholly within the insurance industry -- such as the claims adjustment process itself -- the ancillary peer review practices at issue in these cases "involve parties wholly outside the insurance industry." See Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S., at 231. Thus peer review falls afoul of the third Royal Drug criterion in a way in which pure claims adjustment activities cannot.

<sup>9</sup>This conclusion renders it unnecessary for us to address the questions whether the conduct challenged in respondent's complaint was "regulated by state law" or constituted a "boycott, coercion, or intimidation." See n. 5, supra.

458 U.S. 119, *135; 102 S. Ct. 3002, **3011; 73 L. Ed. 2d 647, ***659; 1982 U.S. LEXIS 144, ****30

For many years statutes such as the Sherman Act were [***31] thought not applicable to the business of insurance, this Court having held in Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 183 (1869), that "[issuing] a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce." When this Court held in United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533 (1944), that the business of insurance was a part of interstate commerce subject to the Sherman Act, Congress responded quickly to reestablish the preeminence of States in regulating such business. Congress' response -- the McCarran-Ferguson Act -- sought primarily to protect the contractual relationship between the insurer and the insured:

"Under the regime of Paul v. Virginia, supra, States had a free hand in regulating the dealings between insurers and their policyholders. Their negotiations, and the contract which resulted, were not considered commerce and were, therefore, left to state regulation. The [*136] South-Eastern Underwriters decision threatened the continued supremacy of the States in this area. The McCarran-Ferguson Act was an attempt to turn back the clock, to assure that the activities of insurance companies [***32] in dealing with their policyholders would remain subject to state regulation." SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 459 (1969).

We recognized this congressional purpose in Royal Drug:

"The relationship between insurer and insured, the type of policy which could be issued, its reliability, interpretation, and enforcement -- these were the core of the "business of insurance." Undoubtedly, other activities of insurance companies relate so closely to their status as reliable insurers that they too must be placed in the same class. But whatever the exact scope of the statutory term, it is clear where the focus was -- it was on the relationship between the insurance company and the policyholder." Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., supra, at 215-216 (quoting SEC v. National Securities, Inc., supra, at 460).

Thus, whatever else was said in Royal Drug about the indispensable characteristic of risk-spreading, the Court found the contractual relationship between the insurer and the insured to be the essence of the "business of insurance."

Central to this contractual relationship [***33] is the process of claims adjustment -- [***661] the determination of the actual payments to be made to the insured for losses covered by the insurance contract. The key representation of the insurance company and the principal expectation of the policyholder is that prompt payment will be made when the event insured against actually occurs. As one commentator has stated:

---

<sup>1</sup> Since the Court declines to reach the question of whether petitioners' Committee is regulated by state law as required by the McCarran-Ferguson Act, I likewise do not discuss it. I note, however, that the District Court found petitioners' Committee to be so regulated. App. to Pet. for Cert. in No. 81-389, pp. 31a-32a.

"Up until the time there is a claim and a payment is made, the only tangible evidence of insurance is a piece of paper. In other words, the real product of insurance [*137] is the claims proceeds. Selection of the prospect, qualifying him for coverage that suits his needs, delivery of a policy, collecting premiums for perhaps years, making changes in coverage to meet changing situations, all of these are but [**3013] preambles to the one purpose for which the insurance was secured, namely to collect dollars if and when an unforeseen event takes place." J. Wickman, Evaluating the Health Insurance Risk 57 (1965).<sup>2</sup>

[****34] It is the claims adjustor -- in this case petitioners' Peer Review Committee -- which determines whether and to what extent an insured's losses will be covered. The Court thus plainly errs when it concludes that the role of petitioners' Peer Review Committee "is not an integral part of the policy relationship between insurer and insured," ante, at 131, and "is a matter of indifference to the policyholder." Ante, at 132. Few insurance matters could be of greater importance to policyholders than whether their claims will be paid, and it is the Peer Review Committee which in effect makes that determination. Being a critical component of the relationship [*138] between an insurer and an insured, claims adjustment is part and parcel of the "business of insurance" protected by the McCarran-Ferguson Act.<sup>3</sup>

[****35] This conclusion finds support in a source of guidance completely disregarded [***662] by the Court -- the legislative history of McCarran-Ferguson. The passage of the Act was preceded by the introduction in the Senate Committee of a report and a bill prepared by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners. "The views of the NAIC are particularly significant, because the Act ultimately passed was based in large part on the NAIC bill." Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S., at 221 (footnote omitted). Included in that bill were seven specific insurance practices to which the Sherman Act was not to apply, and to which the Court in Royal Drug looked for guidance as to the meaning of the phrase "business of insurance." See id., at 222. Among those seven protected practices was the process of claims adjustment: "the said Sherman Act shall not apply . . . to any cooperative or joint service, adjustment, investigation, or inspection agreement relating to insurance." 90 Cong. Rec. A4406 (1944) (emphasis added). Other statements in the legislative history support the conclusion that claims adjustment was to be [****36] protected:

[*139] "[W]e come squarely to the question of whether State regulation is adequate to handle insurance, or whether that business should be subject to the provisions of the antitrust laws. . . . A great number of fire-insurance companies have cooperated in mutual agreement -- and of [**3014] necessity -- through the Southeastern Underwriters Association and rating bureaus, adjusting policy rates to risks, classifying insurable property either in co-insurance or in re-insurance, making appraisals of losses, and working out systems of inspection to improve

<sup>2</sup> Other commentators agree with this assessment of the importance of claims settlement:

"The adjustment (including payment) of claims represents the final act in the insurance process. The payment of a claim by an insurance company brings the insurance contract 'to life' in a fashion far more vivid than does any other single act in connection with the purchase, issuance, and maintenance of the contract." Butler, Loss Adjustment in Fire Insurance, in Property and Liability Insurance Handbook 219 (J. Long & D. Gregg eds. 1965).

"Claim administration is the last link in the process of insurance -- a process that begins with actuarial analysis and continues through sales, underwriting, investment, and policy service. . . . [T]he expectation of the policyowner that an insurer is willing to meet its obligations, through claims administration, is an important part in the decision to purchase insurance. Indeed, it is the claim administration function that delivers on the product sold to the policyowner." C. Cissley, Claim Administration: Principles and Practices iii (1980).

<sup>3</sup> Apparently unable to discern the difference between a mere method of paying a claim and the more fundamental process of determining whether a claim is covered by the insurance agreement, the Court finds that petitioners' peer review procedure "resembles the Pharmacy Agreements in Royal Drug." Ante, at 131. But the Pharmacy Agreement at issue in Royal Drug was simply a method of reimbursing policyowners for medication expenses. The policyowners could obtain medication from participating pharmacies simply by paying the amount that otherwise would not be covered by the insurance plan. The pharmacies thus constituted nothing more than in-kind dispensers of insurance payments; they played no role whatsoever in the more fundamental process of assessing the validity of a claim and determining the amount to be paid. Peer review committees, which fulfill such a fundamental role, are thus quite unlike the arrangements considered by the Court in Royal Drug.

protection against fires. All of this has been done with splendid success. It would be a pity indeed, after all these years, to have the government intervene. The business of insurance involves long contracts. The fidelity of performance of those contracts will not brook intervention." Id., at 6530 (remarks of Rep. Satterfield) (emphasis added).

See also id., at 6543 (remarks of Rep. Jennings); id., at 6550-6551 (remarks of Rep. Ploeser).

The role of claims adjustment in the insurance relationship and the legislative history of the Act thus unmistakably demonstrate that claims [****37] settlement procedures such as petitioners' Peer Review Committee were to be accorded protection from the antitrust laws as the "business of insurance." Few practices followed by insurance companies today present a fairer or more efficient means of claims resolution than professional peer review committees. Insurance claimants seek reimbursement for virtually every form of medical treatment and care, and determining the reasonableness and necessity of such expenses requires the expertise of a practicing physician. Because the entire spectrum of human ailments are involved, the views of one physician are seldom sufficient; specialists from many fields of medicine must be consulted. Few if any insurance companies can afford to staff their claims settlement departments with such a broad range of physicians. The companies thus must either make less than [*140] satisfactory claims determinations, or must turn to an outside group of experts such as petitioners' Committee.

Although the Court protests that [***663] its decision says nothing about petitioners' antitrust liability, there can be little doubt that today's decision will vastly curtail the peer review process. Few professionals [****38] or companies will be willing to expose themselves to possible antitrust liability through such activity. The Court thus not only misreads the McCarran-Ferguson Act and our prior precedents, but also eliminates an aspect of the American insurance industry which has long redounded to the benefit of insurance companies and policyholders alike.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 225

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:146

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1012

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 29

L Ed Index to Annos, Insurance; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Insurance; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Insurance; McCarran-Ferguson Act; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Validity, construction, and application of McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1011-1015), dealing with regulation of insurance business [****39] by state or federal law. 21 L Ed 2d 938.

Associated General Contractors v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters

Supreme Court of the United States

October 5, 1982, Argued ; February 22, 1983, Decided

No. 81-334

Reporter

459 U.S. 519 *; 103 S. Ct. 897 **; 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 ***; 1983 U.S. LEXIS 128 ****; 51 U.S.L.W. 4139; 96 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P14,028; 1983-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P65,226; 112 L.R.R.M. 2753

ASSOCIATED GENERAL CONTRACTORS OF CALIFORNIA, INC. v. CALIFORNIA STATE COUNCIL OF CARPENTERS ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 648 F.2d 527, reversed.

Core Terms

damages, antitrust violation, anti trust law, firms, alleges, contractors, coercion, indirect, defendants', common-law, purchaser, nonunion, wages, restraint of trade, subcontractors, overcharges, injuries, cases, union dues, Clayton Act, Sherman Act, collective-bargaining, Appeals, parties, bargaining, conspiracy, antitrust, employees, violation of antitrust laws, amended complaint

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A court must assume that a party can prove the facts alleged in its amended complaint. It is not, however, proper to assume that a party can prove facts that it has not alleged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN2 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

I I JÁNÈJÀ FJÀÀ FJLÀCHÀÒDÀ JÌ ÀÀ JÌ LÀ I ÀSEÒAÈGÀÀ GHÀÀ GHÀJÌ HÀWÈJÈSÓYÓÀGÀ ÀÀ

An agreement to restrain trade may be unlawful even though it does not entirely exclude its victims from a market. Coercive activity that prevents its victims from making free choices between market alternatives is inherently destructive of competitive conditions and may be condemned even without proof of its actual market effect.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A district court retains the power to insist upon some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN4 Private Actions, Standing

Even though coercion directed by a defendant at third parties in order to restrain trade may have been unlawful, it does not, of course, necessarily follow that still another party is a person injured by reason of a violation of the antitrust laws within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN5 Standing, Clayton Act

The class of persons who may maintain a private damages action under the antitrust laws is broadly defined in § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN6 Private Actions, Standing

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

[**HN7** \[down\] **Private Actions, Standing**](#)

The statute does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. Nor does it immunize the outlawed acts because they are done by any of these. The Clayton Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

[**HN8** \[down\] **Remedies, Damages**](#)

Neither a creditor nor a stockholder of a corporation that is injured by a violation of the antitrust laws can recover treble damages under § 7 of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

[**HN9** \[down\] **Clayton Act, Claims**](#)

An antitrust violation may be expected to cause ripples of harm to flow through the nation's economy; but despite the broad wording of § 4 of the Clayton Act there is a point beyond which a wrongdoer should not be held liable. It is reasonable to assume that Congress did not intend to allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

[**HN10** \[down\] **Standing, Requirements**](#)

I Í JÁNEĀ FJĀĀ FJLĀ ĀHĀĀDĀ JÍ ĀĀ JÍ LĀ I ĀSEĀĀGĀĀ GĀĀĀ ĀHĀĀJÌ HĀĀĀSÓYÓĀGĀ ĀĀĀ

Harm to an antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but a court must make a further determination whether a plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

[**HN11**\[\] **Private Actions, Standing**](#)

What is a cause in a legal sense, still more what is a proximate cause, depend in each case upon many considerations. What is meant by the word "proximate" is, that because of convenience, of public policy, of a rough sense of justice, the law arbitrarily declines to trace a series of events beyond a certain point.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

[**HN12**\[\] **Remedies, Damages**](#)

The availability of the § 4 of the Clayton Act remedy to some person who claims its benefit is not a question of the specific intent of the conspirators.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

[**HN13**\[\] **Private Actions, Standing**](#)

A union, in its capacity as bargaining representative, will frequently not be part of a class the Sherman Act was designed to protect, especially in disputes with an employer with whom it bargains. In each case its alleged injury must be analyzed to determine whether it is of the type that the antitrust statute was intended to forestall.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Private Attorneys General

[**HN14**\[\] **Private Actions, Remedies**](#)

The existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party to perform the office of a private attorney general.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN15 [+] Private Actions, Standing

It is appropriate for purposes of § 4 of the Clayton Act to consider whether a claim rests at bottom on some abstract conception or speculative measure of harm.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN16 [+] Remedies, Damages

The feasibility and consequences of implementing particular damages theories may, in certain limited circumstances, be considered in determining who is entitled to prosecute an action brought under § 4 of the Clayton Act. Thus, the task of disentangling overlapping damages claims is not lightly to be imposed upon potential antitrust litigants, or upon the judicial system.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Union held not injured by violation of antitrust laws, within meaning of 4 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), by employer association's coercion of employers.

Summary

Two unions alleged that, in violation of the antitrust laws, a multiemployer association and its members coerced certain third parties, as well as some of the association's members, to enter into business relationships with nonunion firms. This coercion, according to the complaint, adversely affected the trade of certain unionized firms and thereby restrained the business activities of the unions. The unions sought treble damages under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which authorizes the award of damages to those injured in their business or property by antitrust violations. The United States District Court for the Northern District of California dismissed the complaint (404 F Supp 1067). The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed the District Court's dismissal of the antitrust claim, holding that (1) a Sherman Act violation, a group boycott, had been alleged, (2) the defendants' conduct was not within the antitrust exemption for labor activities, and (3) the plaintiffs had standing to recover damages for the injury to their own business activities occasioned by the defendants' boycott (648 F2d 527).

I Í JÁNEÚÁ FJÉÍ FJLÁCHÁÉÓðÀ JÍ ÉÍ JÍ LÁ I ÁSEÓaÉGÁÁ GHÁÉÍ GHÁJÍ HÁEÚÉSÓYÓÁFG ÓÉÉÉ

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by Stevens, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and Brennan, White, Blackmun, Powell, Rehnquist, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held that based on the allegations of the complaint, the unions were not persons injured by reason of a violation of the antitrust laws within the meaning of 4 of the Clayton Act.

Marshall, J., dissenting, expressed the view that the court's decision imposes an unwarranted judge-made limitation on the antitrust laws and that the unions fit comfortably within the language of 4.

Headnotes

---

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- union -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

A union is not a person injured by reason of a violation of the antitrust laws within the meaning of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which authorizes the award of damages to those injured in their business or property by antitrust violations, based on the allegations of its complaint that a multiemployer association and its members coerced certain third parties, as well as some of the association's members, to enter into business relationships with nonunion firms, allegedly adversely affecting the trade of certain unionized firms and thereby restraining the business activities of the union. (Marshall, J., dissented from this holding.)

ERROR §1293 > complaint -- assumption that plaintiff can prove facts alleged -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

The reviewing court must assume that the plaintiff can prove the facts alleged in its amended complaint, on appeal considering the sufficiency of a complaint alleging violation of the antitrust laws; however, it is not proper to assume that the plaintiff can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged in the complaint.

PRACTICES §46 > antitrust violations -- multiemployer association and its members -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The allegations that a multiemployer association and its members have breached their collective bargaining agreements in various ways, and that they have manipulated their corporate names and corporate status in order to divert business to nonunion divisions or firms that they actually control, in the context of the bargaining relationship between them and a union, and the charge that the association and its members advocated, encouraged, induced, and aided nonmembers in refusing to enter into collective bargaining relationships with a union, do not describe antitrust violations.

PRACTICES §9 > coercive activity -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

I I JÁNEĀ FJÉÉ FJLÁCHÚÉDÉ JÍ ÉÉ JÍ LÁ I ÁSEÓaÉGÁÁ GHÁÉÉ GHÁJÍ HÁEÜÉSÓYÓÁFG ÓÉÉÉ

An agreement to restrain trade may be unlawful even though it does not entirely exclude its victims from the market; coercive activity that prevents its victims from making free choices between market alternatives is inherently destructive of competitive conditions and may be condemned even without proof of its actual market effect.

PLEADING §130 > specificity -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

A Federal District Court retains the power to insist upon some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed in a case of the magnitude of an antitrust suit filed by a union alleging that a multiemployer association and its members coerced certain third parties and some of the association's members to enter into business relationships with nonunion contractors and subcontractors, thereby adversely affecting the trade of certain unionized firms and restraining the union's business activities.

PRACTICES §67 > union -- injured party -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Even though coercion directed by a multiemployer association and its members at third parties in order to restrain the trade of certain contractors and subcontractors may have been unlawful, it does not necessarily follow that still another party, a union, is a person injured by reason of a violation of the antitrust laws within the meaning of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), which authorizes the award of damages to those injured in their business or property by antitrust violations.

STATUTES §164 > construction -- language of statute -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

The starting point for interpreting a statute is the language of the statute itself.

PRACTICES §7 > Sherman Act -- common-law background -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Congress intended the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) to be construed in the light of its common-law background.

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- union -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9A\]](#) [9A] [LEdHN\[9B\]](#) [9B] [LEdHN\[9C\]](#) [9C]

The question of whether a union may recover for the injury allegedly suffered by reason of a multiemployer association and its members' coercion against certain third parties cannot be answered simply by reference to the broad language of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) since, as was required in common-law damages litigation in 1890, the question requires an evaluation of the union's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them.

I I JÁNEĀ FJÉĀ FJLÁCHÁEÓdÀ JÍ ÉĀ JÍ LÁ I ÁSEÓaÉGáÄ GHÁEÅ GHÁFJÌ HÁEÜÉSÓYÓÁFG ËÅFF

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- common-law limitations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [ ] [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [ ] [10B]

The limitations on damages recoveries found in common-law actions in 1890 are not intended to serve permanently as limits on recoveries under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) since the common law is an evolving body of law.

PARTIES §3 > PRACTICES §67 > antitrust standing -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [ ] [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [ ] [11B]

Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make a further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action.

PRACTICES §67 > Clayton Act -- sufficiency of complaint -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [ ] [12A] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [ ] [12B]

The mere fact that a claim is literally encompassed by the Clayton Act does not end the inquiry; an allegation of improper motive, although it may support a plaintiff's damages claims under 4 of the Act (15 USCS 15), which authorizes the award of damages to those injured in their business or property by antitrust violations, is not a panacea that will enable any complaint to withstand a motion to dismiss; a defendant's specific intent may sometimes be relevant to the question of whether a violation of law has been alleged.

PRACTICES §67 > who may recover -- union -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13A\]](#) [ ] [13A] [LEdHN\[13B\]](#) [ ] [13B]

A union's allegations of consequential harm resulting from a violation of the antitrust laws, although buttressed by an allegation of intent to harm the union, are insufficient as a matter of law where other relevant factors--the nature of the union's injury, the tenuous and speculative character of the relationship between the alleged antitrust violation and the union's alleged injury, the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages, and the existence of more direct victims of the alleged conspiracy--weigh heavily against judicial enforcement of the union's antitrust claim.

Syllabus

---

I I JÁNEĀ FJĀĀ FJLĀ ĀHĀOĀ JI ĀĀ JI LĀ I ĀSEĀGĀ ĀGHĀĀ ĀHĀJĀ HĀEĀSĀYĀFĀ ĀĀĀ

Petitioner multiemployer association and respondents (collectively the Union) are parties to collective-bargaining agreements governing the terms and conditions of employment in construction-related industries in California. The Union filed suit in Federal District Court, alleging that petitioner and its members, in violation of the antitrust laws, coerced certain third parties and some of petitioner's members to enter into business relationships with nonunion contractors and subcontractors, and thus adversely affected the trade of certain unionized firms, thereby restraining the Union's business activities. Treble damages were sought under § 4 of the Clayton Act, which authorizes recovery of such damages by "[any] person who shall be injured [****2] in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." The District Court dismissed the complaint as insufficient to allege a cause of action for treble damages under § 4. The Court of Appeals reversed.

Held: Based on the allegations of the complaint, the Union was not a person injured by reason of a violation of the antitrust laws within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act. Pp. 526-546.

(a) Even though coercion allegedly directed by petitioner at third parties in order to restrain the trade of "certain" contractors and subcontractors may have been unlawful, it does not necessarily follow that the Union is a person injured by reason of a violation of the antitrust laws within the meaning of § 4. Pp. 526-529.

(b) The question whether the Union may recover for the alleged injury cannot be answered by literal reference to § 4's broad language. Instead, as was required in common-law damages litigation in 1890 when § 4's predecessor was enacted as § 7 of the Sherman Act, the question requires an evaluation of the Union's harm, the petitioner's alleged wrongdoing, and the relationship between them. Pp. 529-535.

(c) The Union's allegations [****3] of consequential harm resulting from a violation of the antitrust laws, although buttressed by an allegation of intent to harm the Union, are insufficient as a matter of law. Other relevant factors -- the nature of the alleged injury to the Union, which is neither a consumer nor a competitor in the market in which trade was allegedly restrained, the tenuous and speculative character of the causal relationship between the Union's alleged injury and the alleged restraint, the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages, and the existence of more direct victims of the alleged conspiracy -- weigh heavily against judicial enforcement of the Union's antitrust claim. Pp. 535-546.

Counsel: James P. Watson argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs was George M. Cox.

Victor J. Van Bourg argued the cause and filed a brief for respondents.*

[****4]

Judges: STEVENS, J., delivered the opinion of the Court in which BURGER, C. J., and BRENNAN, WHITE, BLACKMUN, POWELL, REHNQUIST, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. MARSHALL, J., filed a dissenting opinion, post, p. 546.

Opinion by: STEVENS

Opinion

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed by Solicitor General Lee, Assistant Attorney General Baxter, Deputy Solicitor General Wallace, Elinor Hadley Stillman, Robert B. Nicholson, and Robert J. Wiggers for the United States; by Peter G. Nash for the Associated General Contractors of America, Inc.; and by Edward B. Miller and Stephen A. Bokat for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

J. Albert Woll, Laurence Gold, and George Kaufmann filed briefs for the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organization as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

Kenneth E. Ristau, Jr., and David A. Cathcart filed a brief for the Pacific Maritime Association as amicus curiae.

I I JÁNEĀ FJÉÉ FJLÁCHÚÉÓdÀ JÍ ÉÉÉ JÍ LÁ I ÁSEÓaÉGáÄ GHÁÉÉ GHÁFJÍ HÁWÉÉSÓYÓQÁFG ÓÉÉÉ

[*520] [*727] [*899] JUSTICE STEVENS delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN/1A [1A] This case arises out of a dispute between parties to a multi-employer collective-bargaining agreement. The plaintiff unions allege that, in violation of the antitrust laws, the multi-employer association and its members coerced certain third parties, as well as some of the association's members, to enter into business relationships with nonunion firms. This coercion, according to the complaint, adversely affected the trade of certain unionized firms and thereby restrained the [*521] business activities of the unions. The question presented is whether the complaint sufficiently alleges that the unions have been "injured in [their] business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws" and may therefore recover treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act. [***5] 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15. Unlike the majority of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, we agree with the District Court's conclusion that the complaint is insufficient.

I

The two named plaintiffs (the Union) -- the California State Council of Carpenters and the Carpenters 46 Northern Counties [**900] Conference Board -- are affiliated with the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL-CIO. The Union represents more than 50,000 individuals employed by the defendants in the carpentry, drywall, piledriving, and related industries throughout the State of California. The Union's complaint is filed as a class action on behalf of numerous affiliated local unions and district councils. The defendants [***728] are Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. (Associated), a membership corporation composed of various building and construction contractors, approximately 250 members of Associated who are identified by name in an exhibit attached to the complaint, and 1,000 unidentified co-conspirators.

The Union and Associated, and their respective predecessors, have been parties to collective-bargaining agreements governing [***6] the terms and conditions of employment in construction-related industries in California for over 25 years. The wages and other benefits paid pursuant to these agreements amount to more than $ 750 million per year. In addition, approximately 3,000 contractors who are not members of Associated have entered into separate "memorandum agreements" with the Union, which bind them to the terms of the master collective-bargaining agreements between the Union and Associated. The amended complaint does not [*522] state the number of nonsignatory employers or the number of nonunion employees who are active in the relevant market.

In paragraphs 23 and 24 of the amended complaint, the Union alleges the factual basis for five different damages claims.<sup>1</sup> [***8] Paragraph 23 alleges generally that the defendants conspired to abrogate and weaken the collective-bargaining relationship between the Union and the signatory employers. In seven subsections, paragraph 24 sets forth activities allegedly committed pursuant to the conspiracy. The most specific allegations relate to the labor relations between the parties.<sup>2</sup> The complaint's description of actions affecting nonparties is both brief and vague. [***7] It is alleged that defendants

"(3) Advocated, encouraged, induced, and aided non-members of defendant Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. to refuse to enter into collective bargaining relationships with plaintiffs and each of them;

<sup>1</sup> The facts set forth in paragraphs 23 and 24, initially alleged in support of the Union's federal antitrust claim, are realleged in each of the other claims for relief: breach of collective-bargaining agreements (PMPM 29-31); intentional interference with contractual relations (PMPM 32-35); intentional interference with business relationships (PMPM 36-39); and violation of the California antitrust statute (PMPM 40-43).

<sup>2</sup> For example, it is alleged that defendants breached their collective-bargaining agreements "by failing to pay agreed-upon wages, by failing to use the hiring hall, by failing to pay Trust Fund contributions, by failing to observe other terms and conditions of employment, and by generally weakening the good faith requirement of the collective bargaining agreements"; that defendants improperly changed their names and corporate status and made use of so-called "double breasted operations"; and that they encouraged nonmembers of Associated to refuse to enter into collective-bargaining agreements with the Union.

I I JÁNEĀ FJÉÉ GGÁÉHÁUÉÓDÀ JÍ ÉÉJÉELÁ I ÁSEÓAÉGÁÄ GHAÉÉ GÌ LAFJÌ HÁUÉÉSÓYÓQÁFG ÓÉÉÉ

"(4) Advocated, encouraged, induced, coerced, aided and encouraged owners of land and other letters of construction contracts to hire contractors and subcontractors who are not signatories to collective bargaining agreements with plaintiffs and each of them;

[*523] "(5) Advocated, induced, coerced, encouraged, and aided members of Associated General Contractors of California, Inc., non-members of Associated General Contractors of California, Inc., and 'memorandum contractors' to enter into subcontracting agreements with subcontractors who are not signatories to [***729] any collective bargaining agreements with plaintiffs and each of them"; App. E to Pet. for Cert. 17-19 (emphasis added).<sup>3</sup>

[***9] [**901] Paragraph 25 describes the alleged "purpose and effect" of these activities: first, "to weaken, destroy, and restrain the trade of certain contractors," who were either members of Associated or memorandum contractors who had signed agreements with the Union; and second, to restrain "the free exercise of the business activities of plaintiffs and each of them."<sup>4</sup> [***10] Plaintiffs claim that these alleged antitrust violations [*524] caused them $ 25 million in damages.<sup>5</sup> The complaint does not identify any specific component of this damages claim.

After hearing "lengthy oral argument" and after receiving two sets of written briefs, one filed before and the second filed after this Court's decision in Connell Construction Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters, 421 U.S. 616 (1975), the District Court dismissed the complaint, including the federal antitrust claim. 404 F.Supp. 1067 (ND Cal. 1975).<sup>6</sup> [***11] The court observed that the complaint alleged "a rather vague, general conspiracy," and that the allegations "appear typical of disputes a union might have with an employer," which in the normal course are resolved by grievance and arbitration or by the NLRB. Id., at 1069.<sup>7</sup> Without seeking to clarify or [***730] further amend the first amended complaint, the Union filed its notice of appeal on October 9, 1975.

<sup>3</sup>The word "coerced" did not appear in the complaint as originally filed. Even as amended after the filing of motions to dismiss, the complaint does not allege that the defendants used any coercion to persuade nonmembers of Associated to refuse to enter into collective-bargaining agreements with the Union (PM 24(3)). The complaint alleges neither the identity nor the number of landowners, general contractors, or others who were coerced into making contracts with nonunion firms.

<sup>4</sup>Paragraph 25, which describes the effect of the conspiracy, reads in full as follows:

"The purpose and effect of the above described activities, plan and conspiracy are oppressive, unreasonable, and illegal, and are in restraint of trade and an unlawful interference and restraint of the free exercise of the business activities of plaintiffs and each of them, all in violation of 15 U. S. C. Section 1. The purpose and effect of the above described activities, plan and conspiracy, in addition, are to weaken, destroy, and restrain the trade of certain contractors, both members of the Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. and non-members, who are 'memorandum contractors,' who have faithfully performed the terms and conditions set out in the master collective bargaining agreements described above. The effect of this restraint on trade is to further weaken and destroy plaintiffs in this matter. These activities are in restraint of the free exercise of plaintiffs' trade and an interference therein, all in violation of 15 U. S. C. Section 1." App. E to Pet. for Cert. 20-21.

<sup>5</sup>Plaintiffs do not seek injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 26, and they do not ask us to consider whether they have standing to request such relief.

<sup>6</sup>An order dismissing the federal antitrust claim and the state-law claims was filed on August 4, 1975, and an amended order dismissing the entire complaint was entered on September 10, 1975. The District Court had initially stayed the breach-of-contract claim for 120 days pending grievance and arbitration procedures. On reconsideration it also dismissed the breach-of-contract claim, deciding that the suit had been prematurely filed.

<sup>7</sup>Addressing the federal antitrust claim, the District Court concluded:

"The essence of plaintiffs' claim seems to be that defendants violated the antitrust laws insofar as they declined to enter into agreements with plaintiffs to deal only with subcontractors which were signatories to contracts with plaintiffs, precisely the type of agreement which subjected the union in Connell to antitrust liability." 404 F.Supp., at 1070.

The District Court reasoned that the employers' refusal to enter into such an agreement could not provide the basis for an antitrust claim.

I I JÁMEĀ FJĀĀ G LÉCHĀĀDÀ JÍ EEEFLÄ I ÅSEÅÄCA Ä GHÄTT HÉLÄJÌ HÄVÄÅSÖYÖÄG ÄTTFF

Over five years later, on November 20, 1980, the Court of Appeals reversed the District Court's dismissal of the Union's federal antitrust claim. 648 F.2d 527.<sup>8</sup> The majority [<sup>*525</sup>] of the Court of Appeals disagreed with the District Court's characterization of the antitrust claim; it adopted a construction of the amended complaint which is somewhat broader than the allegations in the pleading itself.<sup>9</sup> [****13] The Court of [**902] Appeals held (1) that a Sherman Act violation -- a group [****12] boycott -- had been alleged, *id.* at 531-532; (2) that the defendants' conduct was not within the antitrust exemption for labor activities, *id.* at 532-536; and (3) that the plaintiffs had standing to recover damages for the injury to their own business activities occasioned by the defendants' "industry-wide boycott against all subcontractors with whom the Unions had signed agreements . . ." *Id.* at 537. In support of the Union's standing, the majority reasoned that the Union was within the area of the economy endangered by a breakdown of competitive conditions, not only because injury to the Union was a foreseeable consequence of the antitrust violation, but also because that injury was specifically intended by the defendants. The court noted that its conclusion was consistent with other cases holding that union organizational [<sup>*526</sup>] and representational activities constitute a form of business protected by the antitrust laws.<sup>10</sup>

[****14] II

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]As the case comes to us, we [***731] HN1 must assume that the Union can prove the facts alleged in its amended complaint. It is not, however, proper to assume that the Union can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged.<sup>11</sup>

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]We first note that the Union's most specific claims of injury involve matters that are not subject to review under the antitrust laws. The amended complaint alleges that the defendants have breached their collective-bargaining agreements [****15] in various ways, and that they have manipulated their corporate names and corporate status in order to divert business to nonunion divisions or firms that they actually control. Such deceptive diversion of business to the nonunion portion of a so-called "double-breasted" operation might constitute a breach

<sup>8</sup>The Court of Appeals affirmed the dismissal of all other claims.

<sup>9</sup>The Court of Appeals majority read subparagraph (4) of paragraph 24, quoted *supra, at 522*, as though it alleged that the defendants had coerced landowners and other persons who let construction contracts "to hire only construction firms, primarily subcontractors, who had not signed with the Unions." *648 F.2d, at 532* (emphasis added); see also *id., at 544* (denying petition for rehearing). The word "only" does not appear in the amended complaint, and it implies that the defendants' activities gave rise to a broader restraint than was actually alleged.

The majority read subparagraph (5) of paragraph 24 to charge that defendants had "coerced and aided each other to subcontract only with subcontractors who had not signed with the Unions." *Id., at 531* (emphasis added). Again using the word "only," which does not appear in the complaint itself, the majority characterized the defendants' alleged activities as "very similar to a concerted refusal to deal, or a group boycott." Ibid. It concluded that the allegations "present virtually the obverse of the situation described in Connell": the conspiracy, if successful, "would effectively lock union-signatory subcontractors out of a portion of the market for carpentry work." *Id., at 532*.

<sup>10</sup>See Tugboat, Inc. v. Mobile Towing Co., 534 F.2d 1172, 1176-1177 \(CA5 1976\); International Assn. of Heat & Frost Insulators v. United Contractors Assn., 483 F.2d 384, 397-398 \(CA3 1973\).

Circuit Judge Sneed dissented. He first rejected the majority's characterization of the complaint, agreeing instead with the District Court. Second, assuming that the complaint alleged a boycott of certain employers, he concluded that neither the employees of a victim of the boycott nor their collective-bargaining representative had standing to assert the antitrust claim. Finally, he concluded that an injury that affected only the Union's organizational and representational activity was remediable under the labor laws rather than the antitrust laws.

The Court of Appeals denied the petition for rehearing and rehearing en banc on May 22, 1981. Accompanying the order was a statement by the majority rebutting the petitioners' assertion that the opinion rendered multiemployer bargaining units unlawful, and a dissent by Circuit Judge Sneed. *648 F.2d, at 543, 545*.

<sup>11</sup>The Union had an adequate opportunity to amend its pleading to add factual allegations demonstrating that the District Court's decision to dismiss the complaint was based on a misunderstanding of its antitrust claim.

I I JÁMEĀ FJĀĀ G LÉCHUĀDÀ JÍ EEEGLÄ I ÅSEÅAÅA Å GHÄÅH HFLÄFJÌ HÄWÅÅSÖYÓÅG ÅÅÅÅFÍ of contract, an unfair labor practice, or perhaps even a [*527] common-law fraud or deceit, but in the context of the bargaining relationship between the parties to this litigation, such activities are plainly not subject to review under the federal antitrust laws.<sup>12</sup> [****16] Similarly, the charge that the defendants "advocated, encouraged, induced, and aided nonmembers . . . to refuse [*903] to enter into collective bargaining relationships" with the Union (PM 24(3)) does not describe an antitrust violation.<sup>13</sup>

The Union's antitrust claims arise from alleged restraints caused by defendants in the market for construction contracting and subcontracting.<sup>14</sup> The complaint alleges that defendants "coerced"<sup>15</sup> [****18] two classes of persons: (1) landowners and [*528] others who let construction contracts, i. e., the defendants' customers and potential customers; and (2) general contractors, i. e., defendants' competitors and defendants themselves. Coercion against the members of both classes was designed to [****732] induce them to give some of their business -- but not necessarily all of it -- to nonunion firms.<sup>16</sup> Although the pleading does not allege that the coercive conduct increased the aggregate share of nonunion firms in the market, it does allege that defendants' activities weakened and restrained the trade "of certain contractors." See n. 4, supra. Thus, particular victims of coercion may have diverted particular [****17] contracts to nonunion firms and thereby caused certain unionized subcontractors to lose some business.

LEdHN[4] [4] LEdHN[5A] [5A] We think the Court of Appeals properly assumed that such coercion might violate the antitrust laws.<sup>17</sup> [****19] HN2 An agreement to restrain trade may be unlawful even though it does not entirely exclude its victims from the market. See Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 17 (1945). Coercive activity that prevents its victims from making free choices between market alternatives is inherently

<sup>12</sup> In analyzing the antitrust allegations in the amended complaint, we therefore construe the references to "contractors and subcontractors who are not signatories to collective bargaining agreements" as referring to completely independent nonunion firms rather than to operations covertly controlled by one or more defendants.

<sup>13</sup> The Court of Appeals did not reverse the District Court's dismissal of the complaint with regard to these allegations. 648 F.2d, at 531-532, 537, 540.

<sup>14</sup> See Brief for Respondents 37. There is no allegation of wrongful conduct directed at nonunion subcontracting firms. We therefore assume that, if any nonunion firms refused to bargain with the Union because of the conspiracy, they did so because they were rewarded with business they would not otherwise have obtained. Thus, nonunion firms could not be considered victims of the conspiracy; rather, they appear to have been its indirect beneficiaries. None are named either as defendants or as co-conspirators.

The amended complaint also does not allege any restraint on competition in the market for labor union services. Unlike the two cases involving union plaintiffs cited by the Court of Appeals, see n. 10, supra, in this case there is no claim that competition between rival unions has been injured or even that any rival unions exist.

<sup>15</sup> The complaint does not specify the nature of the "coercion." It does not, for example, allege that the defendants refused to deal with all members of either of the two classes of persons against whom coercion was applied. Indeed, it is highly improbable that the defendants -- all of whom are signatories to union contracts -- would refuse to deal with all of their customers and potential customers in an attempt to divert all of their business to nonunion firms.

<sup>16</sup> There is no allegation that any person subjected to coercion was required to deal exclusively with nonunion firms.

<sup>17</sup> LEdHN[5B] [5B]

Had the District Court required the Union to describe the nature of the alleged coercion with particularity before ruling on the motion to dismiss, it might well have been evident that no violation of law had been alleged. In making the contrary assumption for purposes of our decision, we are perhaps stretching the rule of Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47-48 (1957), too far. Certainly in a case of this magnitude, HN3 a district court must retain the power to insist upon some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed.

I I J Á N E Ú A F J Á N G L E H Á U Ó D Á J I É E J E H L Á I Á S E O Á E C Á Á G H Á T T Ó H G L Á F J Í H Á V E Ú E S Ó Y Ó Á F G Á T T E F J

destructive of competitive conditions and may be condemned even without proof of its actual market effect. Cf. Klors, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 210-214 (1959).<sup>18</sup>

[*529] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]HN4 Even though coercion directed by defendants at third parties in order to restrain the trade of "certain" contractors and subcontractors may have been unlawful, it does [*904] not, of course, necessarily follow that still another party -- the Union -- is a person injured by reason of a violation of the antitrust laws within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act.

III

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7] [***20] We first consider the language in the controlling statute. See Consumer Product Safety Comm'n v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 447 U.S. 102, 108 (1980). HN5 The class of persons who may maintain a private damages action under the antitrust laws is broadly defined in § 4 of the Clayton Act. 15 U. S. C. § 15. That section provides:

HN6 "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, [***733] and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

A literal reading of the statute is broad enough to encompass every harm that can be attributed directly or indirectly to the consequences of an antitrust violation. Some of our prior cases have paraphrased the [***21] statute in an equally expansive way.<sup>19</sup> But before we hold that the statute is as broad as its [*530] words suggest, we must consider whether Congress intended such an open-ended meaning.

[***22] The critical statutory language was originally enacted in 1890 as § 7 of the Sherman Act. 26 Stat. 210. The legislative history of the section shows that Congress was primarily interested in creating an effective remedy for consumers who were forced to pay excessive prices by the giant trusts and combinations that dominated certain interstate markets.<sup>20</sup> That history supports a broad construction of this remedial provision. A proper interpretation of the section cannot, however, ignore the larger context in which the entire statute was debated.

<sup>18</sup> Although we do not know what kind of coercion defendants allegedly employed, we assume for purposes of decision that it had a predatory "nature or character," Klors, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S., at 211, and that it would "cripple the freedom of traders and thereby restrain their ability to sell in accordance with their own judgment." Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211, 213 (1951).

<sup>19</sup> In Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219 (1948), the Court held that growers of sugar beets could maintain a treble-damages action against refiners who had allegedly conspired to fix the price that they would pay for the beets. Although previous price-fixing cases had involved agreements among sellers to fix sales prices, the Court readily concluded that the Act applied equally to an agreement among competing buyers to fix purchase prices. The Court stated:

HN7 "The statute does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. Nor does it immunize the outlawed acts because they are done by any of these. Cf. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150; American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781. The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated." Id., at 236.

Similarly broad language was used in later cases holding that actions could be maintained by consumers, Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 337-338 (1979), by a foreign government, Pfizer Inc. v. India, 434 U.S. 308, 313-314 (1978), and by the direct victim of a boycott. Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 472-473 (1982). In each of those cases, however, the actual plaintiff was directly harmed by the defendants' unlawful conduct. The paraphrasing of the language of § 4 in those opinions added nothing to the even broader language that the statute itself contains.

<sup>20</sup> See 21 Cong. Rec. 1767-1768, 2455-2456, 2459, 2615, 3147-3148 (1890). The original proposal, which merely allowed recovery of the amount of actual enhancement in price, was successively amended to authorize double-damages and then treble-damages recoveries, in order to provide otherwise remediless small consumers with an adequate incentive to bring suit.

[****23] [*531] [LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8] [LEdHN\[9A\]](#) [9A] The repeated references to the common law in the debates that preceded the enactment of the Sherman Act make it clear that Congress intended the Act to be [**905] construed in the light of its common-law background.<sup>21</sup> Senator Sherman stated that the bill "does not announce a new principle of law, but applies old and well recognized principles of the common law to the complicated jurisdiction of our State and Federal ***734 Government."<sup>22</sup> Thus our comments on the need for judicial interpretation of § 1 are equally applicable to § 7:

"One problem presented by the language of § 1 of the Sherman Act is that it cannot mean what it says. The statute says that 'every' contract that restrains trade is unlawful. But, as Mr. Justice Brandeis perceptively noted, restraint is the very essence of every contract; read literally, § 1 would outlaw the entire body of private contract law. . . .

"Congress, however, did not intend the text of the Sherman Act to delineate the full meaning of the statute or its [****24] application in concrete situations. The legislative history makes it perfectly clear that it expected the courts to give shape to the statute's broad mandate by drawing on common-law tradition." National Society of J\*5321 Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 687-688 \(1978\) (footnotes omitted).

Just as the substantive content of the Sherman Act draws meaning from its common-law antecedents, so must we consider the contemporary legal context in which Congress acted when we try to ascertain the intended scope of the private remedy created by § 7.

[****25] [LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] In 1890, notwithstanding general language in many state constitutions providing in substance that "every wrong shall have a remedy,"<sup>23</sup> [****26] a number of judge-made rules circumscribed the availability of damages recoveries in both tort and contract litigation -- doctrines such as foreseeability and proximate cause,<sup>24</sup> directness of injury,<sup>25</sup> [****27] certainty ***735 of damages, [*533]<sup>26</sup> and privity of

Id., at 1765, 2455, 3145. The same purpose was served by the special venue provisions, the provision for the recovery of attorney's fees, and the elimination of any requirement that the amount in controversy exceed the jurisdictional threshold applicable in other federal litigation. See, e. g., id., at 2612, 3149. Moreover, changes in the description of the remedy extended the section's coverage beyond price fixing.

<sup>21</sup> See, e. g., id., at 2456, 2459, 3151-3152.

<sup>22</sup> Id., at 2456. Senator Sherman added: "The purpose of this bill is to enable the courts of the United States to apply the same remedies against combinations which injuriously affect the interests of the United States that have been applied in the several States to protect local interests." Ibid.; see also id., at 2459, 3149, 3151-3152. Although Members of Congress referred particularly to common-law definitions of "monopoly" and "restraint of trade," they appear to have been generally aware that the statute would be construed by common-law courts in accordance with traditional canons. For example, at the beginning of the debate on the Sherman Act, one Senator cautioned his colleagues:

"A careful analysis of the terms of the bill is essential. We must know what it means, what its legal effect is, if we give force to it as it is written. . . . We must adopt, therefore, the known methods of the courts in determining what the bill means." Id., at 1765.

<sup>23</sup> For example, the State Constitution of Illinois, adopted in 1870, provided: "Every person ought to find a certain remedy in the laws for all injuries and wrongs which he may receive in his person, property or reputation. . . ." Art. II, § 19. Comparable provisions were found in the State Constitutions of Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, New Hampshire, Ohio, and Vermont. See generally F. Hough, American Constitutions (1871).

<sup>24</sup> One treatise stated: "Natural, proximate, and legal results are all that damages can be recovered for, even under a statute entitling one 'to recover any damage.'" 3 J. Lawson, Rights, Remedies, and Practice 1740 (1890). Another leading treatise explained:

"The chief and sufficient reason for this rule is to be found in the impossibility of tracing consequences through successive steps to the remote cause, and the necessity of pausing in the investigation of the chain of events at the point beyond which experience and observation convince us we cannot press our inquiries with safety." T. Cooley, Law of Torts 73 (2d ed. 1888).

I I JÁMEĀ FJĀĀ HHLÉCHĀ JÓGĀ JÍ EEEJ É LÄ I ÅSEOÅGAÅ GHÉEÜ HÍ LAFJÍ HÁMEÅSÓYÓÅFG ÅEEEG

[**906] contract.<sup>27</sup> Although particular common-law limitations were not debated in Congress, the frequent references to common-law principles imply that Congress simply assumed that antitrust damages litigation would be subject to constraints comparable to well-accepted common-law rules applied in comparable litigation.<sup>28</sup>

[****28] The federal judges who first confronted the task of giving meaning to § 7 so understood the congressional intent. Thus in 1910 the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit held as a matter of law that HN8↑ neither a creditor nor a stockholder of a corporation that was injured by a violation of the antitrust laws could recover treble damages under § 7. [*Loeb v. Eastman \[\*534\] Kodak Co., 183 F. 704.*](#) The court explained that the plaintiff's injury as a stockholder was "indirect, remote, and consequential." *Id., at 709.*<sup>29</sup> This holding was consistent with Justice Holmes' explanation of a similar construction of the remedial provision of the Interstate Commerce Act a few years later: "The general tendency of the law, in regard to damages at least, is not to go beyond the first step." *Southern Pacific Co. v. Darnell-Taenzer Lumber Co., 245 U.S. 531, 533 \(1918\).*<sup>30</sup> When [***736] Congress enacted § 4 of the Clayton Act in 1914, and when it reenacted that section in 1955, 69 Stat. 282, it adopted the language of § 7 and presumably [****29] also the judicial gloss that avoided a simple literal interpretation.

<sup>25</sup> In torts, a leading treatise on damages set forth the general principle that, "[where] the plaintiff sustains injury from the defendant's conduct to a third person, it is too remote, if the plaintiff sustains no other than a contract relation to such a third person, or is under contract obligation on his account, and the injury consists only in impairing the ability or inclination of such person to perform his part, or in increasing the plaintiff's expense or labor of fulfilling such contract, unless the wrongful act is willful for that purpose." Thus, A, who had agreed with a town to support all the town paupers for a specific period, in return for a fixed sum, had no cause of action against S for assaulting and beating one of the paupers, thereby putting A to increased expense. Similarly, a purchaser under an output contract with a manufacturer had no right of recovery against a trespasser who stopped the company's machinery, and a creditor could not recover against a person who had forged a note, causing diminution in the dividends from an estate. 1 J. Sutherland, Law of Damages 55-56 (1882) (emphasis in original, footnote omitted).

Similarly, in contract, the common-law courts drew a distinction between direct and consequential damages; the latter had to be specifically included in the contract to be recoverable. See *id., at 74-93;* 1 T. Sedgwick, Measure of Damages 203-244 (8th ed. 1891) (discussing the rule of Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341, 156 Eng. Rep. 145 (1854)).

<sup>26</sup> The common law required the plaintiff to prove, with certainty, both the existence of damages and the causal connection between the wrong and the injury. No damages could be recovered for uncertain, conjectural, or speculative losses. See generally cases cited in F. Bohlen, Cases on the Law of Torts 292-312 (2d ed. 1925) (cases alleging emotional harm to plaintiff). Even if the injury was easily provable, there would be no recovery if the plaintiff could not sufficiently establish the causal connection. See 1 Sutherland, supra n. 25, at 94-126; 1 Sedgwick, supra n. 25, at 245-294.

<sup>27</sup> See, e. g., Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 M. & W. 109, 152 Eng. Rep. 402 (Ex. 1842).

<sup>28</sup> [*LEdHN\[10B\]↑*](#) [10B]

See n. 22, supra. The common law, of course, is an evolving body of law. We do not mean to intimate that the limitations on damages recoveries found in common-law actions in 1890 were intended to serve permanently as limits on Sherman Act recoveries. But legislators familiar with these limits could hardly have intended the language of § 7 to be taken literally.

<sup>29</sup> See also *Amex v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 166 F. 820 \(CC Mass. 1909\).* Applying "ordinary principles of law" to the general language of the statute, the court held that a stockholder had no legally cognizable antitrust claim against defendants for illegally acquiring the corporation, thereby rendering plaintiff's stock worthless. Plaintiff's claim was not distinguishable from any injury sustained by the company itself. Therefore, the court stated, a contrary result would "subject the defendant not merely to treble damages, but to sextuple damages, for the same unlawful act." *Id., at 823.*

<sup>30</sup> The Court held in that case that the plaintiff shippers could recover damages from the defendant railroad for charging an excessive freight rate, even though they had been able to pass on the damage to their purchasers. Justice Holmes wrote that the law holds the defendant "liable if proximately the plaintiff has suffered a loss," but "does not attribute remote consequences to a defendant." *245 U.S., at 533-534.*

I I JÁMEĀ FJĀM HI LĀEHAUĀ JI EĒJ ē LĀ I ÅSEÅAÅ GHEĀH H I LÄFJÌ HÄWÆÅSÖYÓÅFG ÅÅEGJ

[****30] As this Court has observed, the lower federal courts have been "virtually unanimous in concluding that Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation." Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 263, n. 14 (1972). Just last Term we stated:

HN9 [↑] " [**907] An antitrust violation may be expected to cause ripples of harm to flow through the Nation's economy; but 'despite the broad wording of § 4 there is a point beyond which the wrongdoer should not be held liable.' [Illinois [*535] Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S.], at 760 (BRENNAN, J., dissenting). It is reasonable to assume that Congress did not intend to allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property." Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 476-477 (1982).

LEDHN[9B] [↑] [9B] LEDHN[11A] [↑] [11A] [****31] It is plain, therefore, that the question whether the Union may recover for the injury it allegedly suffered by reason of the defendants' coercion against certain third parties cannot be answered simply by reference to the broad language of § 4. Instead, as was required in common-law damages litigation in 1890, the question requires us to evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them.<sup>31</sup>

[****32] IV

There is a similarity between the struggle of common-law judges to articulate a precise definition of the concept of "proximate cause,"<sup>32</sup> [****33] and [***737] the struggle of federal judges to [*536] articulate a precise test to determine whether a party injured by an antitrust violation may recover treble damages.<sup>33</sup> [****34] It is common

<sup>31</sup> LEDHN[11B] [↑] [11B]

The label "antitrust standing" has traditionally been applied to some of the elements of this inquiry. As commentators have observed, the focus of the doctrine of "antitrust standing" is somewhat different from that of standing as a constitutional doctrine.

HN10 [↑] Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make a further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action. See Berger & Bernstein, An Analytical Framework for Antitrust Standing, 86 Yale L. J. 809, 813, n. 11 (1977); Pollock, Standing to Sue, Remoteness of Injury, and the Passing-On Doctrine, 32 A. B. A. Antitrust L. J. 5, 6-7 (1966).

<sup>32</sup> In his comment, Mahoney v. Beatman: A Study in Proximate Cause, 39 Yale L. J. 532, 533 (1930), Leon Green noted: "Legal theory is too rich in content not to afford alternative ways, and frequently several of them, for stating an acceptable judgment." Earlier, in his Rationale of Proximate Cause 135-136 (1927) (footnote omitted), Green had written:

"Cause,' although irreducible in its concept, could not escape the ruffles and decorations so generously bestowed: remote, proximate, direct, immediate, adequate, efficient, operative, inducing, moving, active, real, effective, decisive, supervening, primary, original, contributory, ultimate, concurrent, causa causans, legal, responsible, dominating, natural, probable, and others. The difficulty now is in getting any one to believe that so simple a creature could have been so extravagantly garbed."

<sup>33</sup> Some courts have focused on the directness of the injury, e. g., Loeb v. Eastman Kodak Co., 183 F. 704, 709 (CA3 1910); Productive Inventions, Inc. v. Trico Products Corp., 224 F.2d 678, 679 (CA2 1955), cert. denied, 350 U.S. 936 (1956); Volasco Products Co. v. Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Co., 308 F.2d 383, 394-395 (CA6 1962), cert. denied, 372 U.S. 907 (1963). Others have applied the requirement that the plaintiff must be in the "target area" of the antitrust conspiracy, that is, the area of the economy which is endangered by a breakdown of competitive conditions in a particular industry. E. g., Pan-Islamic Trade Corp. v. Exxon Corp., 632 F.2d 539, 546-547 (CA5 1980); Engine Specialties, Inc. v. Bombardier Ltd., 605 F.2d 1, 17-18 (CA1 1979); Calderone Enterprises Corp. v. United Artists Theater Circuit, Inc., 454 F.2d 1292, 1292-1295 (CA2 1971). Another Court of Appeals has asked whether the injury is "arguably within the zone of interests protected by the antitrust laws." Malamud v. Sinclair Oil Corp., 521 F.2d 1142, 1151-1152 (CA6 1975). See generally Berger & Bernstein, supra n. 31.

I I JÁMEĀ FJÄÄ HÍ LÄCHÄUÖÄ JÍ ÈEJ ËI LÄ I ÄSEÖäÄÄ Ä GÄÄÄÄ HÍ LÄFJÌ HÄWÈÄSÖYÖÄFG ÄÄÄÄH

ground that the judicial remedy cannot encompass every conceivable harm that can be traced to alleged [**908] wrongdoing. In both situations the infinite variety of claims that may arise make it virtually impossible to announce a black-letter rule that will dictate the result in every case.<sup>34</sup> Instead, [*537] previously decided cases identify factors that circumscribe and guide the exercise of judgment in deciding whether the law affords a remedy in specific circumstances.

[LEdHN\[9C\]](#) [↑] [9C] [LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [↑] [12A] The factors that favor judicial recognition of the Union's antitrust claim are easily stated. The complaint does allege a causal connection between an antitrust violation and harm to the Union and further [****35] alleges that the defendants intended to cause that harm. As we have indicated, however, the mere fact that the claim is literally encompassed by the Clayton Act does not end the inquiry. We are also satisfied that an allegation of improper motive, although it may support a plaintiff's damages claim under § 4, 35 [****36] is not a panacea that will [***738] enable any complaint to withstand a motion to dismiss.<sup>36</sup> Indeed, in McCready, we specifically held: "HN12 [↑] The availability of the § 4 remedy to some person who claims its benefit is not a question of the specific intent of the conspirators." 457 U.S., at 479.<sup>37</sup>

[*538] A number of other factors may be controlling. In this case it is appropriate to focus on the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury. As the legislative history shows, the Sherman Act was enacted to assure customers the benefits of price competition, and our prior cases have emphasized the central interest in protecting the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market.<sup>38</sup> [****38] Last Term in Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, supra, we identified the relevance of this central policy to a determination of the plaintiff's right to maintain an action under § 4. McCready alleged that she was a consumer [****37] of psychotherapeutic services and that she had been

As a number of commentators have observed, these labels may lead to contradictory and inconsistent results. See Berger & Bernstein, supra n. 31, at 835, 843; Handler, The Shift From Substantive to Procedural Innovations in Antitrust Suits, 71 Colum. L. Rev. 1, 27-31 (1971); Sherman, Antitrust Standing: From Loeb to Malamud, 51 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 374, 407 (1976) ("it is simply not possible to fashion an across-the-board and easily applied standing rule which can serve as a tool of decision for every case"). In our view, courts should analyze each situation in light of the factors set forth in the text infra.

<sup>34</sup> Cf. Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S., at 477-478, n. 13 (discussing elusiveness of test of proximate cause); Palsgraf v. Long Island R. Co., 248 N. Y. 339, 162 N. E. 99 \(1928\); id. at 351-352, 162 N. E. at 103 (Andrews, J., dissenting) ("HN11 [↑] What is a cause in a legal sense, still more what is a proximate cause, depend in each case upon many considerations . . . . What we do mean by the word 'proximate' is, that because of convenience, of public policy, of a rough sense of justice, the law arbitrarily declines to trace a series of events beyond a certain point").

<sup>35</sup> [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [↑] [12B]

It is well settled that a defendant's specific intent may sometimes be relevant to the question whether a violation of law has been alleged. See United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 522 \(1948\). Moreover, there no doubt are cases in which such an allegation would adequately support a plaintiff's claim under § 4. Cf. Handler, supra n. 33, at 30 (specific intent of defendant to cause injury to a particular class of persons should "ordinarily be dispositive" in creating standing to sue); Lytle & Purdue, Antitrust Target Area Under Section 4 of the Clayton Act: Determination of Standing in Light of the Alleged Antitrust Violation, 25 Am. U. L. Rev. 795, 814-816 (1976) (suggesting that standing in a group boycott situation should be based on the purpose of the boycott).

<sup>36</sup> See Sherman, supra n. 33, at 389-391, citing Billy Baxter, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 431 F.2d 183, 189 (CA2 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 923 \(1971\).

<sup>37</sup> In McCready we rejected the contention that, because there was no specific intent to harm the plaintiff, her injury was thereby rendered remote. This case presents a different question, but in neither case is the motive allegation of controlling importance.

<sup>38</sup> See United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 610 \(1972\) ("Antitrust laws in general, and the Sherman Act in particular, are the Magna Carta of free enterprise. They are as important to the preservation of economic freedom and our free-enterprise system as the Bill of Rights is to the protection of our fundamental personal freedoms. And the freedom guaranteed each and every business, no matter how small, is the freedom to compete -- to assert with vigor, imagination, devotion, and ingenuity whatever economic muscle it can muster").

I I JÁMEĀ FJÄÄ HÌ LÄFÄHÄDÄ JÌ ÈEJ È LÄI ÅSEÖÅÄGÄ Ä GHÄÄHÄ HÌ LÄFJÌ HÄWÄÅSÖYÖÄFG ÄÄHÄHÄ injured by the defendants' conspiracy to restrain competition in the market for such services.<sup>39</sup> The Court stressed [**909] the fact that "McCready's injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress in providing a private remedy for violations of the antitrust laws." 457 U.S., at 483, citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 487-489 \(1977\). After noting that her injury "was inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict on psychologists and the psychotherapy market," 457 U.S., at 484, the Court concluded that such an injury "falls squarely within the area of congressional concern." Ibid.

[*539] [LEdHN\[13A\]](#) [↑] [13A] In this case, however, the Union was neither a consumer nor a competitor in the market in which trade was restrained.<sup>40</sup> [****40] It is not clear [***739] whether the Union's interests would be served or disserved by enhanced competition in the market. As a general matter, a union's primary goal is to enhance the earnings and improve the working conditions of its membership; that goal is not necessarily served, and indeed may actually be harmed, by uninhibited competition among employers striving to reduce costs in order to obtain a competitive advantage over their rivals.<sup>41</sup> At common law -- as well as in the early [***39] days of administration of the federal antitrust laws -- the collective activities of labor unions were regarded as a form of conspiracy in restraint of trade.<sup>42</sup> [****41] Federal policy has since developed not only a broad labor exemption from the antitrust laws,<sup>43</sup> but also a separate body of [*540] labor law specifically designed to protect and encourage the organizational and representational activities of labor unions. Set against this background, HN13 [↑] a union, in its capacity as bargaining representative, will frequently not be part of the class the Sherman Act was designed to protect, especially in disputes with employers with whom it bargains. In each case its alleged injury must be analyzed to determine whether it is of the type that the antitrust statute was intended to forestall. See Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., supra, at 487-488. In this case, particularly in light of the longstanding collective-bargaining relationship between the parties, the Union's labor-market interests seem to predominate, and the Brunswick test is not satisfied.

An additional factor is the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury. In this case, the chain of causation between the Union's injury and the alleged restraint in the market for construction subcontracts [**910] contains several somewhat vaguely defined links. According to the complaint, defendants applied coercion against certain landowners and other contracting parties in order to cause them to divert business from certain union contractors to nonunion contractors.<sup>44</sup> [****43] As a result, [*541] the [***740] Union's complaint alleges, the Union suffered <sup>39</sup> McCready, a Blue Shield subscriber, alleged that Blue Shield and the Neuropsychiatric Society of Virginia, Inc., had unlawfully conspired to restrain competition in the market for psychotherapeutic services by providing insurance coverage only for consumers who patronized psychiatrists, not psychologists. McCready obtained services from a psychologist and was denied reimbursement.

<sup>40</sup> Moreover, it has not even alleged any marketwide restraint of trade. The allegedly unlawful conduct involves predatory behavior directed at "certain" parties, rather than a claim that output has been curtailed or prices enhanced throughout an entire competitive market.

<sup>41</sup> In Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 664 \(1965\), the Court recognized that wages lie at the heart of the subjects of mandatory collective bargaining, and that "the elimination of competition based on wages among the employers in the bargaining unit," which directly benefits the union, also has an effect on competition in the product market. See generally Leslie, Principles of Labor Antitrust, 66 Va. L. Rev. 1183, 1185-1188 (1980); Winter, Collective Bargaining and Competition: The Application of Antitrust Standards to Union Activities, 73 Yale L. J. 14, 17-20, 28-30 (1963).

<sup>42</sup> See, e. g., Coronado Coal Co. v. Mine Workers, 268 U.S. 295, 310 \(1925\) (applying Sherman Act to alleged conspiracy by unions involved in labor dispute to restrain interstate trade in coal); Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274 \(1908\) (applying Sherman Act to boycott by labor organization seeking to unionize plaintiff's hat factory); Cox, Labor and the Antitrust Laws -- A Preliminary Analysis, 104 U. Pa. L. Rev. 252, 256-262 (1955); Meltzer, Labor Unions, Collective Bargaining, and the Antitrust Laws, 32 U. Chi. L. Rev. 659, 661-666 (1965); Winter, supra n. 41, at 30-38.

<sup>43</sup> See 29 U. S. C. § 52 (statutory labor exemption); Mine Workers v. Pennington, supra; Meat Cutters v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676 \(1965\) (nonstatutory exemption). In this case we need not reach petitioner's contentions that the alleged activities are within the statutory and nonstatutory labor exemptions.

I Í JÁMEÐA FJÆÐI FLÁÐA ÆÐA JÍ ÆÐEJ FELÀ I ÆÐOÐA ÆÐA GHEÐI ÐI ÆÐFJÌ HÁÐEÐSÓYÓÐAG ÆÐH unspecified injuries in its "business activities."<sup>45</sup> It is obvious that any such injuries were only an indirect result of whatever harm may have been suffered [****42] by "certain" construction contractors and subcontractors.<sup>46</sup>

[****44] If either these firms, or the immediate victims of coercion by defendants, have been injured by an antitrust violation, their injuries would be direct and, as we held in McCready, they would have a right to maintain their own treble-damages actions against the defendants. An action on their behalf would encounter none of the conceptual difficulties that [*542] encumber the Union's claim.<sup>47</sup> [****45] HN14↑ The existence of an [***741] identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a [**911] more remote party such as the Union to perform the office of a private attorney general.<sup>48</sup> Denying the Union a remedy on the basis of its allegations in this case is not likely to leave a significant antitrust violation undetected or unremedied.<sup>47</sup>

Partly because it is indirect, and partly because the alleged effects on the Union may have been produced by independent factors, the Union's damages claim is also highly speculative. There is, for example, no allegation that <sup>44</sup> There is a parallel between these allegations and the claim in Connell Construction Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters, 421 U.S. 616 (1975). The plaintiff in that case, a general building contractor, was coerced by the defendant union into signing an agreement not to deal with nonunion subcontractors. Similarly, in the McCready case, the plaintiff was the direct victim of unlawful coercion. As the Court noted, "McCready did not yield to Blue Shield's coercive pressure, and bore Blue Shield's sanction in the form of an increase in the net cost of her psychologist's services." 457 U.S., at 483. Her status was thus comparable to that of a contracting or subcontracting firm that refused to yield to the defendants' coercive practices and therefore suffered whatever sanction that coercion imposed. Like McCready, and like Connell Construction Co., such a firm could maintain an action against the defendants. In contrast, the Union is neither a participant in the market for construction contracts or subcontracts nor a direct victim of the defendants' coercive practices. We therefore need not decide whether the direct victim of a boycott, who suffers a type of injury unrelated to antitrust policy, may recover damages when the ultimate purpose of the boycott is to restrain competition in the relevant economic market.

<sup>45</sup> Its brief merely echoes the Court of Appeals' description of its allegations: "the Unions have been injured in their business, i.e., organizing carpentry industry employees, negotiating and policing collective bargaining agreements, and securing jobs for their members." Brief for Respondents 25-26.

<sup>46</sup> Because of the absence of specific allegations, we can only speculate about the specific components of the Union's claim. If the Union asserts that its attempts to organize previously nonunion firms have been frustrated because nonunion firms wish to continue to obtain business from those subjected to coercion by the defendants, its harm stems most directly from the conduct of persons who are not victims of the conspiracy. See n. 14, supra. If the Union claims that dues payments were adversely affected because employees had less incentive to join the Union in light of expanding nonunion job opportunities, its damage is more remote than the harm allegedly suffered by unionized subcontractors. The same is true if the Union contends that revenues from dues payments declined because its members lost jobs or wages because their unionized employers lost business. That harm, moreover, is even more indirect than the already indirect injury to its members, yet a number of decisions have denied standing to employees with merely derivative injuries. See, e.g., Pitchford v. PEPI, Inc., 531 F.2d 92, 97 (CA3), cert. denied, 426 U.S. 935 (1976); Contreras v. Grower Shipper Vegetable Assn., 484 F.2d 1346 (CA9 1973), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 932 (1974); Reibert v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 471 F.2d 727 (CA10), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 938 (1973). But see Nichols v. Spencer Int'l Press, Inc., 371 F.2d 332, 334 (CA7 1967).

<sup>47</sup> Indeed, if there is substance to the Union's claim, it is difficult to understand why these direct victims of the conspiracy have not asserted any claim in their own right. The Union's suggested explanations of this fact tend to shed doubt on the proposition that these "victims" were actually harmed at all.

"Many unionized firms will respond to the alleged boycott . . . by setting up double-breasted operations or shifting more of their resources to the non-unionized part of their operations when double-breasted operations already exist. In this manner, unionized subcontractors can avoid losing any business and, as a result, these subcontractors will not possess the classic economic incentive to file suit." Alternatively, unionized subcontractors may simply not renew the collective bargaining agreement when it expires." Brief for Respondents 49 (citation omitted).

<sup>48</sup> Cf. Blue Chip Stamps v. Manor Drug Stores, 421 U.S. 723, 739-748 (1975) (purchaser-seller limitation on actions under § 10(b) of Securities Exchange Act of 1934).

I Í JÁMEÍA FJÆÍ I GLÆHÚDGA JÍ ÆFFLÀ I ÆSDAÉCA Á GHÆTÍ I FLAFJÍ HÁMEÍSÓYÓÁFG ÆTHÍ I

any collective-bargaining agreement was terminated as a result of the coercion, no allegation that the aggregate share of the contracting market controlled by union firms has diminished, no allegation that the number of employed union members has declined, and no allegation that the Union's revenues in the form of dues or initiation fees have decreased. Moreover, although coercion against certain firms is alleged, there is no assertion that any such firm was prevented from doing business with any union firms or that any firm or group of firms was subjected to a complete boycott. See nn. 9, 15, and 16, supra. [**543] Other than the alleged injuries flowing from breaches of [****46] the collective-bargaining agreements -- injuries that would be remediable under other laws -- nothing but speculation informs the Union's claim of injury by reason of the alleged unlawful coercion. Yet, as we have recently reiterated, HN15<sup>49</sup> it is appropriate for § 4 purposes "to consider whether a claim rests at bottom on some abstract conception or speculative measure of harm." Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S., at 475, n. 11, citing Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S., at 262-263, n. 14.<sup>49</sup>

[****47] The indirectness of the alleged injury also implicates the strong interest, identified in our prior cases, in keeping the scope of complex antitrust trials within judicially manageable limits.<sup>50</sup> These cases have [***742] stressed the importance of avoiding [*544] either the risk of duplicate recoveries on the one hand, or the danger of complex apportionment of damages on the other. Thus, in Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481 (1968), we refused to allow the defendants to discount the plaintiffs' damages claim to the extent that overcharges had been passed on to the plaintiffs' customers. We noted that any attempt to ascertain damages with such precision "would often require additional long and complicated proceedings involving massive evidence and complicated theories." Id., at 493. [**912] In Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720 (1977), we held that treble damages could not be recovered by indirect purchasers of concrete blocks who had paid an enhanced price because their suppliers had been victimized by a price-fixing conspiracy. We observed that potential plaintiffs [****48] at each level in the distribution chain would be in a position to assert conflicting claims to a common fund, the amount of the alleged overcharge, thereby creating the danger of multiple liability for the fund and prejudice to absent plaintiffs.

"Permitting the use of pass-on theories under § 4 essentially would transform treble-damages actions into massive efforts to apportion the recovery among all potential plaintiffs that could have absorbed part of the overcharge -- from direct purchasers to middlemen to ultimate consumers. However appealing this attempt to allocate the overcharge might seem in theory, it would add whole new dimensions of complexity to treble-damages suits and seriously undermine their effectiveness." Id., at 737-738.

<sup>49</sup> We expressly noted in McCready:

"[Our] cautious approach to speculative, abstract, or impractical damages theories has no application to McCready's suit. The nature of her injury is easily stated: As the result of an unlawful boycott, Blue Shield failed to pay the cost she incurred for the services of a psychologist. Her damages were fixed by the plan contract and, as the Court of Appeals observed, they could be 'ascertained to the penny.'" 457 U.S., at 475-476, n. 11.

<sup>50</sup> This interest was also identified in the legislative debates preceding the enactment of the Sherman Act. Speaking in opposition to a proposed amendment that might have complicated the procedures in private actions, Senator Edmunds said:

"Therefore I say as to the suggested amendment of my friend from Mississippi -- and I repeat it in all earnestness -- that if I were a lobbyist and wanted to entangle this business, I should provide that everybody might sue everybody else in one common suit and have a regular pot-pourri of the affair, as his amendment proposes, and leave it to the lawyers of the trust to have an interminable litigation in respect of the proper parties, whether their interests were common or diverse or how they were affected, and take twenty years in order to get a result as to a single one of them. The Judiciary Committee did not think it wise to do that sort of thing, because we were in earnest about the business, as I know my friend is." 21 Cong. Rec. 3148 (1890).

See also id., at 3149 (remarks of Senator Morgan opposing same amendment: "There is as much harm in trying to do too much as there is in not trying to do anything, and I think we have stopped at about the proper line in this bill, and I shall support it just as it is").

I I JÁMEĀ FJĀM I I LÉCHAUĀGĀ JI EĒJFGĀ I ÅSEÅAÅCÅÅ GÅÅTÅI I GLÅJÌ HÅÅEÅSØYØÅFÅG ÅÅTÅI

[****49] The same concerns should guide us in determining whether the Union is a proper plaintiff under § 4 of the Clayton Act.<sup>51</sup> [****50] [*545] As the Court wrote in Illinois Brick, massive and complex damages litigation not only burdens the courts, but also undermines the effectiveness of treble-damages suits. Id. at 745. In this case, if the Union's complaint asserts a claim for damages under § 4, the District Court would face problems of identifying damages and apportioning them among directly victimized contractors and subcontractors and indirectly affected employees and union entities. It would be necessary to determine to what extent the coerced firms diverted business away from union subcontractors, and then to what extent those subcontractors [***743] absorbed the damage to their businesses or passed it on to employees by reducing the work force or cutting hours or wages. In turn it would be necessary to ascertain the extent to which the affected employees absorbed their losses and continued to pay union dues.<sup>52</sup>

LEdHN[1B] [↑] [1B] LEdHN[13B] [↑] [13B] We conclude, therefore, that the Union's allegations of consequential harm resulting from a violation of the antitrust laws, although buttressed by an allegation of intent to harm the Union, are insufficient as a matter of law. Other relevant factors -- the nature of the Union's injury, the tenuous and speculative character of the relationship between the alleged antitrust violation and the Union's alleged injury, the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages, and the existence of more direct victims of the alleged conspiracy -- weigh heavily against [***51] judicial enforcement of the Union's antitrust claim. Accordingly, we hold that, based on the allegations of this complaint, the District [*546] Court was correct in concluding that the Union is not a person injured by reason of a violation of the antitrust laws within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: MARSHALL

Dissent

---

JUSTICE MARSHALL, dissenting.

Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides that a damages action may be brought under the antitrust laws by "[any] person who [has been] injured in his business or [**913] property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U. S. C. § 15 (emphasis added). Despite the absence of an "articulable consideration of statutory policy" supporting the denial of standing, Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 473 (1982), the Court today holds that the intended victim of a restraint of trade does not constitute a "person who [has been] injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." Because I believe that this decision imposes an [***52] unwarranted judge-made limitation on the antitrust laws, I respectfully dissent.

Congress' adoption of the broad language of § 4 was not accidental. As this Court observed in Pfizer Inc. v. India, 434 U.S. 308, 312 (1978): "Congress used the phrase 'any person' intending it to have its naturally broad and inclusive meaning. There was no mention in the floor debates of any more restrictive definition." Only last Term we emphasized that the all-encompassing language of § 4 "reflects Congress' 'expansive remedial purpose' in enacting

---

<sup>51</sup> We pointed out in McCready, 457 U.S., at 475, n. 11:

"If there is a subordinate theme to our opinions in Hawaii and Illinois Brick, it is that HN16 [↑] the feasibility and consequences of implementing particular damages theories may, in certain limited circumstances, be considered in determining who is entitled to prosecute an action brought under § 4. . . . Thus we recognized that the task of disentangling overlapping damages claims is not lightly to be imposed upon potential antitrust litigants, or upon the judicial system."

<sup>52</sup> Although the policy against duplicative recoveries may not apply to the other type of harm asserted in the Union's brief -- reduction in its ability to persuade nonunion contractors to enter into union agreements -- the remote and obviously speculative character of that harm is plainly sufficient to place it beyond the reach of § 4. See n. 46, supra.

I Í JÁMEÍA FJÆÍ I Í LÆCHAUÐA JÍ ÆEJFHÄ I ÅSEÐA ÆCA Á GHÆTI Í HLÆFJÍ HÁMEÍSÓYÓÁFG ÆTEG

§ 4: Congress sought to create a private enforcement mechanism that would deter violators and deprive them of the fruits of their illegal actions, and would provide ample compensation to the victims of antitrust violations." [Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, supra, \[\*\*\*744\] at 472](#), quoting Pfizer Inc. v. India, supra, at 313-314.

In keeping with the inclusive language and remedial purposes of § 4, this Court has "refused to engraft artificial limitations [\[\*547\]](#) on the § 4 remedy." Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, supra, at 472 (footnote omitted). [\[\*\*\*\*53\]](#)<sup>1</sup> Thus, for example, in Pfizer Inc. v. India, the Court held that the statutory phrase "any person" is broad enough to encompass a foreign sovereign. In Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330 \(1979\), the Court likewise adopted an expansive reading of the statutory term "property," ruling that a consumer who pays a higher price as a result of a price-fixing conspiracy has sustained an injury to his "property" and therefore has standing to sue under § 4.

The plaintiff unions fit comfortably within the language of § 4. The complaint [\[\*\*\*\*54\]](#) alleges that plaintiffs suffered injury as a result of a restraint of trade that was "designed to weaken and destroy plaintiffs and each of them." Complaint para. 26. The Court does not suggest that a union is not a "person" within the meaning of § 4, or that plaintiffs cannot prove injury to their "business or property." Moreover, it would require a strained reading of § 4 to conclude that a party that an antitrust violation was aimed at cannot prove that it suffered injury "by reason of" an antitrust violation.

Far from supporting the Court's conclusion, ante, at 531-533, the common-law background of the antitrust laws highlights the anomaly of denying a remedy to the intended victim of unlawful conduct. Since antitrust violations are essentially "tortious acts," Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264 \(1946\),<sup>2</sup> the most apt analogy is to the common law of torts. Although many legal battles have been fought over the extent of tort liability for remote consequences [\[\*548\]](#) of negligent conduct, it has always been assumed that the victim of an intentional tort can recover from the tortfeasor if he proves that the tortious [\[\*\*\*\*55\]](#) conduct was a cause-in-fact of his injuries. An [\[\*\*914\]](#) inquiry into proximate cause has traditionally been deemed unnecessary in suits against intentional tortfeasors.<sup>3</sup> [\[\*\*\*\*56\]](#) For [\[\*\*\*745\]](#) example, if one party makes false representations to another, intending them to be communicated to a third party and acted upon to his detriment, the third party can bring an action for misrepresentation against the originator of the false information if he suffers injury as a result.<sup>4</sup> Indeed, in many

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 453-454 \(1957\) (given Congress' determination that the activities prohibited by the antitrust laws are "injurious to the public" and its creation of "sanctions allowing private enforcement of the antitrust laws by an aggrieved party," "this Court should not add requirements to burden the private litigant beyond what is specifically set forth by Congress in those laws").

<sup>2</sup> See Karseal Corp. v. Richfield Oil Corp., 221 F.2d 358, 363 \(CA9 1955\) (antitrust action is basically a suit to recover "for a tort").

<sup>3</sup> See Restatement of Torts § 279 (1934) ("If the actor's conduct is intended by him to bring about bodily harm to another which the actor is not privileged to inflict, it is the legal cause of any bodily harm of the type intended by him which it is a substantial factor in bringing about"); id., Comment c ("There are no rules which relieve the actor from liability because of the manner in which his conduct has resulted in the injury such as there are where the liability of a negligent actor is in question. Therefore, the fact that the actor's conduct becomes effective in harm only through the intervention of new and independent forces for which the actor is not responsible is of no importance") (citations omitted); id., § 280 (same rule applies to conduct intended to cause harm other than bodily harm); Seidel v. Greenberg, 108 N. J. Super. 248, 261-269, 260 A. 2d 863, 871-876 \(1969\); Derosier v. New England Tel. & Tel. Co., 81 N. H. 451, 464, 130 A. 145, 152 \(1925\) ("For an intended injury the law is astute to discover even very remote causation").

The Court's reliance on Sutherland's treatise on damages is misplaced. Ante, at 532-533, n. 25. Although Sutherland stated as a general proposition that a defendant is not liable to a plaintiff for injuries suffered as a result of the defendant's conduct with respect to a third party, he distinguished cases in which "the wrongful act is willful for that purpose," by which he presumably meant cases in which the defendant intended to injure the plaintiff. 1 J. Sutherland, Law of Damages 55 (1882) (footnote omitted). In the examples given by Sutherland and cited by the Court, there is no suggestion that the defendants intended to inflict injury upon the plaintiffs.

I Í JÁMEĀ FJĀĀ I Í LÄCHÄĀDÄ JÍ ÄEJFI LÄI ÄSEOÄÄÄ ÄGHÄÄÄ I Í LÄFJÌ HÄWÄÄSÖYÖÄFG ÄÄÄÄÄ I situations the common law holds [*549] an intentional tortfeasor liable even for the unforeseeable consequences of his conduct.<sup>5</sup> I am not aware of any cases exonerating an intentional tortfeasor from responsibility for the intended consequences of his actions merely because he inflicted harm upon his victim indirectly rather than directly.

This case does not implicate the sort of "articulable consideration of statutory policy" which we have deemed necessary to deny standing to a party encompassed by the language of § 4. Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S., at 473. In Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477 (1977), we denied standing to parties that suffered injury because an illegal acquisition prevented them from reaping profits that they would have reaped had the acquired firms been permitted to fail. We reasoned that permitting recovery for "the profits [plaintiffs] [****57] would have realized had competition been reduced" would be "inimical" to the purposes of the antitrust laws, id., at 488, since plaintiffs' injuries did not "reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation," id., at 489. This consideration of statutory policy is not applicable here, for plaintiffs allege that they suffered injury as a result of the defendants' efforts to coerce and induce letters of construction contracts and others to deal with nonunion carpentry firms solely because of their nonunion status. If plaintiffs prove their allegations, they will prove that they suffered harm attributable to the anticompetitive consequences of the defendants' restraint of trade.

Nor does the present case implicate the consideration of statutory policy underlying this Court's decisions in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720 (1977), and Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251 (1972). Critical to the denial of [**915] standing in those cases was [***746] the risk of duplicative recovery that would have been created by affording [****58] the plaintiffs [*550] standing.<sup>6</sup> In Illinois Brick the Court held that an indirect purchaser has no standing to sue a seller on the theory that overcharges paid to the seller by a direct purchaser were passed on to the indirect purchaser. 431 U.S., at 730-731. If the Court had held in Illinois Brick that the indirect purchaser has standing, sellers would have faced the prospect of two treble-damages actions based on the same overcharges. Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481 (1968), had established that a direct purchaser can sue a seller for the entire amount of the seller's overcharges, and that the seller cannot assert as a defense that the direct purchaser passed the overcharges through to its customers (the indirect purchasers). Similarly, in Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., where the State of Hawaii sought to recover for financial harm allegedly suffered by the general economy of the State, the Court denied standing because "[a] large and ultimately indeterminable part of the injury to the 'general economy,' as it is measured by economists, is no more than a reflection of injuries to the 'business' [***59] or property' of consumers, for which they may recover themselves under § 4." 405 U.S., at 264.<sup>7</sup>

[***60] There is no risk of double recovery here. The plaintiff unions seek recovery for injuries distinct from those that other parties may have suffered. One such distinct injury [*551] plaintiffs may have suffered is a decrease in union dues resulting from a reduction in work available to union members. In addition to regular dues, it is not uncommon for employees to pay periodic dues representing a percentage of their wages. See R. Gorman, Basic

<sup>4</sup> See, e. g., Watson v. Crandall, 7 Mo. App. 233 (1879), aff'd, 78 Mo. 583 (1883); Campbell v. Gooch, 131 Kan. 456, 292 P. 752 (1930). See generally Prosser, Misrepresentation and Third Persons, 19 Vand. L. Rev. 231, 240-242 (1966).

<sup>5</sup> See, e. g., W. Prosser, Law of Torts 32-33 (4th ed. 1971) (doctrine of transferred intent); id., at 67-68 (trespasser is responsible for unforeseeable consequences of his trespass).

<sup>6</sup> See Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 474-475 (1982) (noting that Illinois Brick and Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co. "focused on the risk of duplicative recovery engendered by allowing every person along a chain of distribution to claim damages arising from a single transaction that violated the antitrust laws").

<sup>7</sup> Significantly, the risk of duplicative recovery that the Court relied on in both Illinois Brick and Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co. is not simply a judicially invented reason for restricting the broad scope of § 4. Permitting two recoveries based on the very same injuries would be contrary to the basic statutory scheme governing damages actions, for the result would be to subject antitrust defendants to sextuple-damages awards rather than the treble-damages awards that Congress contemplated. See 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law § 337d (1978).

Text on Labor Law 650 (1976).<sup>8</sup> If union members lost work as a result of the alleged restraint of trade, their wages and thus the dues collected by the plaintiff unions may have been reduced.

Any recovery of lost dues by the plaintiff unions would not duplicate [***61] recoveries that might be obtained by either unionized carpentry firms or employees of those firms. A recovery of lost dues by a union would not duplicate a recovery for lost profits that might be obtained by a firm for which union members worked, for union dues are not an element of a [***747] firm's profits. Nor would a recovery of lost dues by a union duplicate recoveries of lost wages that employees might obtain. Although periodic union dues are based on a percentage of wages, there would be no double recovery because union dues would be subtracted from lost wages in calculating the employees' damages. The Hanover Shoe rule barring the assertion of a "pass-through" defense would not prevent subtraction of union dues from wages in determining the employees' damages. The Hanover Shoe rule was designed to avoid the "additional long and complicated proceedings involving massive evidence and complicated theories" that would be required to determine the extent to which price overcharges were passed through to an indirect purchaser. 392 U.S., at 493. [**916] In sharp contrast, where union dues are a percentage of wages, there is no difficulty in determining [***62] the amount of dues that a union lost as a result of a reduction in the wages earned by union members.

[*552] I recognize that it may not be easy to ascertain to what extent any reduction in union dues was attributable to the defendants' conduct. But our cases make it clear that "[if] there is sufficient evidence in the record to support an inference of causation, the ultimate conclusion as to what the evidence proves is for the jury." Perkins v. Standard Oil Co., 395 U.S. 642, 648 \(1969\) (reinstating jury verdict based on injury indirectly caused by price discrimination in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act). Insofar as the amount of damages is concerned, an antitrust plaintiff need only provide a reasonable estimate of the damages stemming from an antitrust violation. See Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S., at 266. "Difficulty of ascertainment is no longer confused with right of recovery," id., at 265, quoting *Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., 282 U.S. 555, 566 (1931), and "[the] most elementary conceptions of justice and public policy require that the wrongdoer shall [***63] bear the risk of the uncertainty which his own wrong has created," 327 U.S., at 265.*

Any concern the Court may have that the plaintiffs cannot prove their case does not justify throwing them out of court solely on the basis of the pleadings. If, during discovery, it becomes apparent that plaintiffs cannot establish a reasonable inference of causation or cannot provide evidence supporting a rational estimate of damages, they will be vulnerable to a motion for summary judgment. Dismissal for failure to state a claim is too crude a procedural device to be used to vindicate the "interest . . . in keeping the scope of complex antitrust trials within judicially manageable limits." Ante, at 543.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 289

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:61 et seq.

15 USCS 15

FRES, Labor Disputes 72:53, 72:54

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 67

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

---

<sup>8</sup> Since we have only the pleadings before us, we do not know how the plaintiff unions collect their dues. However, plaintiffs are entitled to survive a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) if there is any set of facts that, if proved at trial, would entitle them to recover.

I I JÁMEĀ FJĀM I GŁEHAJÓDÀ JI ÈEJFÌ LÀ I ÅSEØAÅCAÅ GHÅTTI I I LAFJÌ HÅMEÅSØYØÅFG ÅTTÅH

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade [***64] and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Supreme Court's views as to meaning of term "person," as used in statutory or constitutional provision. 56 L Ed 2d 895.

Validity, under the federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1 et seq.), of agreements between employers or employer associations imposing restrictions on employment. 2 ALR Fed 839.

---

End of Document

Ashley v. Jackson

Supreme Court of the United States

October 11, 1983, Decided

No. 82-1390

Reporter

464 U.S. 900 *; 104 S. Ct. 255 **; 78 L. Ed. 2d 241 ***; 1983 U.S. LEXIS 1904 ****; 52 U.S.L.W. 3287; 32 Fair Empl. Prac. Cas. (BNA) 1846; 32 Empl. Prac. Dec. (CCH) P33,840

ASHLEY ET AL. v. CITY OF JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI, ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] C. A. 5th Cir.

Reported below: 687 F.2d 66.

Core Terms

---

consent decree, decree, suits, practices, promoting, bind

Opinion

---

[*900] [**255] [***241] Certiorari denied.

Dissent by: REHNQUIST

Dissent

---

[**256] JUSTICE REHNQUIST, with whom JUSTICE BRENNAN joins, dissenting.

This case presents the question whether a victim of alleged discrimination may have his right to sue totally extinguished by a prior suit to which he was not a party and in which a consent decree was entered before his cause of action even accrued. Because I think the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit erred in holding that a district court cannot entertain a suit challenging practices allegedly mandated or permitted by a prior consent decree, I dissent from the denial of certiorari.

In March 1974, consent decrees were entered in two suits alleging race discrimination in the city of Jackson's hiring and promoting practices in its Police Department. United States v. City of Jackson, Civil Action No. J-74-66(N) (SD Miss.); Corley v. Jackson Police Dept., Civil Action No. 73J-4(C) (SD Miss.). As described by the District Court in this case:

"The consent decree entered in United States of America v. City of Jackson required, inter alia, that the City of Jackson adopt [****2] and seek to achieve a goal for hiring blacks for one-half of all vacancies in all job classifications, subject to the availability of qualified applicants, until such time as the proportion of blacks to whites in each such classification equalled the proportion of blacks to whites in the working age population [***242] of the City of Jackson. The Corley v. Jackson Police Department consent decree incorporated by reference the United

1 1 1 ÁMÈRÌKÀ CEELEI ÁMÈRÌKÀ I ÉÉG I LÀ I ÁSÈOÀÉCÁ FÉÉG GLÁJÌ HÁMÈSÓYÓÁFJE ÉÉHÉG

States of America v. City of Jackson decree and further provided that the Jackson Police Department establish separate promotion eligibility lists for white and black employees and that it make future promotions, subject to the availability of qualified black candidates, alternately from each such list in a one-to-one ratio until the proportion of black persons in supervisory positions and in the ranks above patrolman substantially equalled the proportion of blacks to whites in the working age population of the City of Jackson." App. to Pet. for Cert. 13A.

In 1976 and 1978, petitioners, who are white, filed two suits against the city of Jackson alleging that the city had discriminated [*901] against them in the Police Department by hiring [***3] or promoting less qualified blacks solely on the basis of their race. In substance, the complaints alleged that the "goals" established in the prior consent decrees were being treated as strict quotas by the city, and that blacks were being hired and promoted over whites without regard to relative qualifications. See First Amended and Supplemental Complaint in Civil Action No. J76-70(R) (SD Miss.), pp. 36-38; Complaint in Civil Action No. J78-0218(C) (SD Miss.), pp. 20-22. Petitioners contended that the challenged practices were not required by the consent decrees or, in the alternative, that the consent decrees were themselves illegal. As a third option, assuming respondents' practices under the consent decrees were necessary to remedy the effects of the city's past racial discrimination, petitioners claimed that they themselves were now victims of that prior discrimination and, as such, were entitled to compensation.

Both suits were brought only after timely charges of discrimination had been filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), and statutory notices of the right to sue had been received. Jurisdiction of the District Court was invoked under the Fifth [***4] and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution, under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U. S. C. § 2000e-5, and under various other provisions [**257] of federal law. The court consolidated the two actions.

Petitioners also filed motions for leave to intervene in the consent decree suits in order to challenge those decrees on their face. The United States opposed the motions on the grounds, among others, that they were untimely and asserted interests already adequately represented by the defendant city. The motions to intervene were denied. No appeal was taken.

Following a hearing, the District Court dismissed the consolidated suits for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction. The court determined that "[the] practices complained of are the result of consent decrees which were entered" in the prior cases, App. to Pet. for Cert. 12a, and, thus, that the suits constitute an impermissible collateral attack on the consent decrees over which a different court has continuing jurisdiction. The dismissal was affirmed on the same grounds by the Fifth Circuit, and this petition followed.

I find myself at a loss to understand the origins of the doctrine of "collateral attack" [***5] employed by the lower courts in this case to preclude a suit brought by parties who had no connection with the [*902] prior litigation. Their cause of action did not even accrue until at least a year after the entry of the consent decrees. And their attempt to intervene in those suits, more than three years after entry of the consent decrees, was denied as untimely.

It is a fundamental premise of preclusion law that nonparties to a prior action are not bound by the judgment. Sea-Land Services, Inc. v. Gaudet, 414 U.S. 573, 593 \(1974\); Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 110 \(1969\). This rule can be traced to an opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in Davis v. Wood, 1 Wheat. 6, 8-9 \(1816\); it is part of our "deep-rooted historic tradition that everyone should have his own day in court." 18 C. Wright, A. Miller, & E. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure § 4449, p. 417 (1981). Only a few Terms ago, we had occasion to stress that "[it] is a violation of due process for a judgment to be binding on a litigant who was not a party nor a privy and therefore has never had an opportunity [***6] to be heard." Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 327, n. 7 \(1979\).

This principle should apply with all the more force to a consent decree, which is little more than a contract between the parties, formalized by the signature of a judge. The central feature of any consent decree is that it is not an adjudication on the merits. The decree may be scrutinized by the judge for [***243] fairness prior to his approval, but there is no contest or decision on the merits of the issues underlying the lawsuit. Such a decree binds the signatories, but cannot be used as a shield against all future suits by nonparties seeking to challenge conduct that may or may not be governed by the decree.

Í Í I ÁMÉRÍKA ELLÁI ÁUĐÓÁG Í ÉÉG Í LÁI ÁSEÓAÉCAÁ FÉÉGI HÁJÉSÓYÓÁFÉ Í ÉÉK

Nonparties have an independent right to an adjudication of their claim that a defendant's conduct is unlawful. Suppose, for example, that the Government sues a private corporation for alleged violations of the antitrust laws and then enters into a consent decree. Surely, the existence of that decree does not preclude a future suit by another corporation alleging that the defendant company's conduct, even if authorized by the decree, constitutes an antitrust violation. The nonparty [***7] has an independent right to bring his own private antitrust action for treble damages or injunctive relief. See 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 330, p. 143 (1978). Similarly, if an action alleging unconstitutional [**258] prison conditions results in a consent decree, a prisoner subsequently harmed by prison conditions is not precluded from bringing suit on the mere plea that the conditions are in accordance [*903] with the consent decree. Such compliance might be relevant to a defense of good-faith immunity, see Pet. for Cert. in Bennett v. Williams, O. T. 1982, No. 82-1704, but it would not suffice to block the suit altogether.

In litigation under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 we have constantly stressed the importance of individual enforcement actions, and have shown great reluctance to find such actions precluded. Thus, in Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co., 415 U.S. 36 (1974), we held that an individual does not forfeit his private cause of action if he first pursues his grievance under the nondiscrimination clause of a collective-bargaining agreement.

"Title VII . . . specifies with precision the jurisdictional [***8] prerequisites that an individual must satisfy before he is entitled to institute a lawsuit. In the present case, these prerequisites were met when petitioner (1) filed timely a charge of employment discrimination with the Commission, and (2) received and acted upon the Commission's statutory notice of the right to sue . . . . There is no suggestion in the statutory scheme that a prior arbitral decision either forecloses an individual's right to sue or divests federal courts of jurisdiction." Id., at 47.

In this case, petitioners have satisfied the same prerequisites, and "[there] is no suggestion in the statutory scheme that a prior [consent decree to which petitioners were not parties] either forecloses an individual's right to sue or divests federal courts of jurisdiction." Ibid.

In General Telephone Co. v. EEOC, 446 U.S. 318, 332 (1980), we held that the EEOC may seek classwide relief under Title VII without being certified as the class representative under Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, even though we recognized that a judgment so obtained would not "be binding upon all individuals with similar grievances [***9] in the class or subclasses that might be certified."

"In light of the 'general intent to accord parallel or overlapping remedies against discrimination,' . . . we are unconvinced that it would be consistent with the remedial purpose of the statutes to bind all 'class' members with discrimination grievances against an employer by the relief obtained under an EEOC judgment or settlement against the employer. This is especially true given the possible differences between the [*904] public and private interests involved." Id., at 333 (citing Alexander, supra, at 47).

We did acknowledge in that case that "where the EEOC has prevailed in its action, the court may reasonably require any individual who claims under its judgment to relinquish his right to bring a separate private action." 446 U.S., at 333 (emphasis added). But we were unwilling to bind a class member to a prior judgment when that class member decides to forgo the available class relief because he thinks he can obtain better relief in a private action.

ÍÍÍ ÁMEÑÉÉÉÉ LÉÉ ÁUÉDÁG Í ÉÉÉÍ LÁÍ ÁSEÓáÉCÁG FÉÉÉG HÁÉJÍ HÁÉÉSÓYÓÁJÉ ÉÉÉÉ

It certainly seems to follow that we would not preclude someone who was not a party to the prior action [***10] from bringing a private enforcement suit.

Finally, just last Term, in W. R. Grace & Co. v. Rubber Workers, 461 U.S. 757 (1983), we held that a union, which declined to participate in conciliation between the EEOC and a [**259] private corporation, could subsequently challenge layoffs made pursuant to the conciliation agreement as in violation of the seniority provisions of its collective-bargaining agreement [***244] with the corporation. The unanimous Court was unmoved by the Company's claim that such suits would subject it to conflicting obligations. "The dilemma," we stressed, "was of the Company's own making." Id., at 767. The Company was attempting, by hiding behind the conciliation agreement, "to shift the loss to its male employees, who shared no responsibility for the sex discrimination." Id., at 770.

In sum, I see no justification, either in general principles of preclusion or the particular policies implicated in Title VII suits, for the District Court's refusal to take jurisdiction over this case. Accordingly, I would grant certiorari to review the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

---

End of Document

Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde

Supreme Court of the United States

November 2, 1983, Argued ; March 27, 1984, Decided

No. 82-1031

Reporter

466 U.S. 2 *; 104 S. Ct. 1551 **; 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 ***; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 49 ****; 52 U.S.L.W. 4385; 1984-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P65,908

JEFFERSON PARISH HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO. 2 ET AL. v. HYDE

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 686 F.2d 286, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

patients, market power, seller, anesthesiologists, tying arrangement, anesthesiological, tying product, tied product, products, flour, buyers, consumers, package, sugar, anesthesia, anticompetitive, tie, tie-in, hospital service, Sherman Act, restrain, forcing, condemnation, purchaser, markets, cases, exclusive-dealing, exclusive contract, rule of reason, merits

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN2[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Not every refusal to sell two products separately can be said to restrain competition. If each of the products may be purchased separately in a competitive market, one seller's decision to sell the two in a single package imposes no unreasonable restraint on either market, particularly if competing suppliers are free to sell either the entire package or its several parts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN3** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such "forcing" is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN4** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Per se condemnation -- condemnation without inquiry into actual market conditions -- is only appropriate if the existence of forcing is probable. Thus, application of the per se rule focuses on the probability of anticompetitive consequences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

**HN5** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Any inquiry into the validity of a tying arrangement must focus on the market or markets in which the two products are sold, for that is where the anticompetitive forcing has its impact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN6** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement cannot exist unless two separate product markets have been linked.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN7** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Tying arrangements need only be condemned if they restrain competition on the merits by forcing purchases that would not otherwise be made. A lack of price or quality competition does not create this type of forcing.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Hospital's exclusive contract with firm of anesthesiologists held not to violate Sherman Act.

Summary

A board-certified anesthesiologist who was denied admission to a hospital staff, because the hospital had an exclusive services contract with a firm of anesthesiologists, sued for a declaratory judgment that the contract was unlawful and an injunction ordering the hospital to appoint him to the hospital staff. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana denied relief, finding that the anticompetitive consequences of the contract were minimal and outweighed by benefits in the form of improved patient care (513 F Supp 532). The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed on the ground that the contract was illegal per se (686 F2d 286).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by Stevens, J., joined by Brennan, White, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., it was held that (1) since 70 percent of the patients residing in the parish entered different hospitals, the hospital lacked sufficient market power to apply a rule of per se illegality to the tying arrangement, and (2) evidence that some surgeons and patients preferred the plaintiff's services to those of the firm, without evidence that any patient sophisticated enough to know the difference between two anesthesiologists was not able to go to a hospital that would provide him with the anesthesiologist of his choice, was insufficient to show that the contract unreasonably restrained competition.

Brennan, J., joined by Marshall, J., joined the court's opinion and judgment but filed a separate opinion stating that the court properly adhered to its long held view that tying arrangements are subject to evaluation for per se illegality.

O'Connor, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and by Powell and Rehnquist, JJ., concurred on the ground that the per se doctrine should no longer be applied in tying cases, and that the contract was lawful under the rule of reason.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > tying arrangements -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

An exclusive contract between a hospital and a firm of anesthesiologists, which requires every patient undergoing surgery at the hospital to use the services of that firm of anesthesiologists, does not violate 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) where 70 percent of the patients residing in the parish enter different hospitals so that the hospital lacks sufficient market power to force patients to buy services they would not otherwise purchase, and the contract does not unreasonably restrain competition.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §64 > parties -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

Under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), allowing an antitrust suit to be brought by "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws," a board-certified anesthesiologist denied admission to a hospital staff because of the hospital's exclusive services contract with a firm of anesthesiologists has standing to enforce 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) against the hospital.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > per se violations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B]

466 U.S. 2, *2; 104 S. Ct. 1551, **1551; 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, ***2; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 49, ****1

Where a complaint charges that the defendants have engaged in price fixing, or have concertedly refused to deal with nonmembers of an association, or have licensed a patent device on condition that unpatented materials be employed in conjunction with the patented device, then the amount of commerce involved is immaterial because such restraints are illegal per se.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > price fixing -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

A price-fixing agreement between competitors is such an arrangement as to be considered a sufficient basis for presuming unreasonableness without the necessity of any analysis of the market context in which the arrangement may be found.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > package sales -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

If each of two products may be purchased separately in a competitive market, one seller's decision to sell the two in a single package imposes no unreasonable restraint on either market, particularly if competing suppliers are free to sell either the entire package or its several parts.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > tying arrangements -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchaser of a tied product that the buyer did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms; when such forcing is present, competition on the merits for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > tying arrangements -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Per se condemnation of a tying arrangement--condemnation without inquiry into actual market conditions--is only appropriate if it is probable that the seller has some special ability to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > tying arrangement -- competitive impact -
-> Headnote:
[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

466 U.S. 2, *2; 104 S. Ct. 1551, **1551; 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, ***2; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 49, ****1

To justify per se condemnation of a tying arrangement, as a threshold matter there must be a substantial potential for impact on competition.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > tying arrangement -- single purchaser --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

If only a single purchaser is forced with respect to a tied item, the resultant impact on competition is insufficient to warrant the concern of the antitrust law.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > tying arrangement -- undesired product --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

When a purchaser is forced to buy a product he would not have otherwise bought even from another seller in the tied product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §55 > patents -- tying arrangements --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

The sale or lease of a patented item on condition that the buyer make all his purchases of a separate tied product from the patentee is unlawful.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > tying arrangement -- market power --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

When a seller does not have either the degree or the kind of market power that enables him to force customers to purchase a second, unwanted product in order to obtain the tying product, an antitrust violation can be established only by evidence of an unreasonable restraint on competition in the relevant market.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > tying arrangement -- product market --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

466 U.S. 2, *2; 104 S. Ct. 1551, **1551; 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, ***2; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 49, ****1

The answer to the question whether one or two products are involved, for the purpose of determining whether an unlawful tying arrangement exists, turns not on the functional relationship between them but rather on the character of the demand for the two items; hence, a tying arrangement cannot exist unless two separate product markets have been linked.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > tying arrangement -- market power --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

A hospital lacks the market power sufficient to justify per se condemnation of a tying arrangement where 70 percent of the patients residing in the parish enter different hospitals, even though the prevalence of third-party payment for health care costs reduces price competition and a lack of adequate information renders consumers unable to evaluate the quality of the medical care provided by competing hospitals.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > tying arrangement -- per se illegality --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

A hospital's exclusive-services contract with a firm of anesthesiologists, so that every patient undergoing surgery at the hospital must use the services of that firm, is not per se illegal under the Sherman Act where 70 percent of the patients residing in the parish enter different hospitals, because the hospital lacks the market power sufficient to justify per se condemnation of the tying arrangement.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > Sherman Act -- burden of proof -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

In order to prevail in the absence of per se liability, a Sherman Act plaintiff has the burden of proving that the conduct in question violated the Sherman Act because it unreasonably restrained competition.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §50 > exclusive requirements contract --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17A\]](#) [17A] [LEdHN\[17B\]](#) [17B]

An exclusive requirements contract is unlawful under the Sherman Act if it forecloses so much of the market from penetration by competitors of the person who contracts to furnish exclusively all the other party's requirements, as to unreasonably restrain competition in the affected market.

EVIDENCE §979 > sufficiency -- anticompetitive effect -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [ ] [18]

There is insufficient evidence to show an actual adverse effect on competition by a hospital's exclusive contract with a firm of anesthesiologists, under which no anesthesiologist outside the firm can provide anesthesiology services at the hospital, where the evidence indicates that some surgeons and patients prefer an outside anesthesiologist's services to those of the firm, but there is no evidence that any patient sophisticated enough to know the difference between two anesthesiologists is unable to go to a hospital that will provide him with the anesthesiologist of his choice.

Syllabus

---

A hospital governed by petitioners has a contract with a firm of anesthesiologists requiring all anesthesiological services for the hospital's patients to be performed by that firm. Because of this contract, respondent anesthesiologist's application for admission to the hospital's medical staff was denied. Respondent then commenced an action in Federal District Court, claiming that the exclusive contract violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. The District Court denied relief, finding that the anticompetitive consequences of the contract were minimal and outweighed by benefits in the form of improved patient care. The Court of Appeals reversed, finding the contract illegal "per se." The court held that the case involved a "tying arrangement" because the users of the hospital's operating rooms [****2] (the tying product) were compelled to purchase the hospital's chosen anesthesiological services (the tied product), that the hospital possessed sufficient market power in the tying market to coerce purchasers of the tied product, and that since the purchase of the tied product constituted a "not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce," the tying arrangement was therefore illegal "per se."

Held: The exclusive contract in question does not violate § 1 of the Sherman Act. Pp. 9-32.

(a) Any inquiry into the validity of a tying arrangement must focus on the market or markets in which the two products are sold, for that is where the anticompetitive forcing has its impact. Thus, in this case the analysis of the tying issue must focus on the hospital's sale of services to its patients, rather than its contractual arrangements with the providers of anesthesiological services. In making that analysis, consideration must be given to whether petitioners are selling two separate products that may be tied together, and, if so, whether they have used their market power to force their patients to accept the tying arrangement. Pp. 9-18.

(b) No tying arrangement can exist here unless [****3] there is a sufficient demand for the purchase of anesthesiological services separate from hospital services to identify a distinct product market in which it is efficient to offer anesthesiological services separately from hospital services. The fact that the exclusive contract requires purchase of two services that would otherwise be purchased separately does not make the contract illegal. Only if patients are forced to purchase the contracting firm's services as a result of the hospital's market power would the arrangement have anticompetitive consequences. If no forcing is present, patients are free to enter a competing hospital and to use another anesthesiologist instead of the firm. Pp. 18-25.

(c) The record does not provide a basis for applying the per se rule against tying to the arrangement in question. While such factors as the Court of Appeals relied on in rendering its decision -- the prevalence of health insurance as eliminating a patient's incentive to compare costs, and patients' lack of sufficient information to compare the quality of the medical care provided by competing hospitals -- may generate "market power" in some abstract sense, they do not generate [****4] the kind of market power that justifies condemnation of tying. Tying arrangements need only be condemned if they restrain competition on the merits by forcing purchases that would not otherwise be made. The fact that patients of the hospital lack price consciousness will not force them to take an anesthesiologist whose services they do not want. Similarly, if the patients cannot evaluate the quality of anesthesiological services, it follows that they are indifferent between certified anesthesiologists even in the absence of a tying arrangement. Pp. 26-29.

(d) In order to prevail in the absence of per se liability, respondent has the burden of showing that the challenged contract violated the Sherman Act because it unreasonably restrained competition, and no such showing has been made. The evidence is insufficient to provide a basis for finding that the contract, as it actually operates in the market, has unreasonably restrained competition. All the record establishes is that the choice of anesthesiologists at the hospital has been limited to one of the four doctors who are associated with the contracting firm. If respondent were admitted to the hospital's staff, the range [****5] of choice would be enlarged, but the most significant restraints on the patient's freedom to select a specific anesthesiologist would nevertheless remain. There is no evidence that the price, quality, or supply or demand for either the "tying product" or the "tied product" has been adversely affected by the exclusive contract, and no showing that the market as a whole has been affected at all by the contract. Pp. 29-32.

Counsel: Frank H. Easterbrook argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Lucas J. Giordano, Thomas J. Reed, and Henry S. Allen, Jr.

Jerrold J. Ganzfried argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Lee, Assistant Attorney General Baxter, Deputy Solicitor General Wallace, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Lipsky, Barry Grossman, and Andrea Limmer.

John M. Landis argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief was Phillip A. Wittman. *

[****6]

Judges: STEVENS, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BRENNAN, WHITE, MARSHALL, and BLACKMUN, JJ., joined. BRENNAN, J., filed a concurring opinion, in which MARSHALL, J., joined, post, p. 32. O'CONNOR, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, in which BURGER, C. J., and POWELL and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined, post, p. 32.

Opinion by: STEVENS

Opinion

---

[*4] [**8] [**1554] JUSTICE STEVENS delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A] LEdHN[2A] [2A] At issue in this case is the validity of an exclusive contract between a hospital and a firm of anesthesiologists. We must decide whether the contract gives rise to a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act<sup>1</sup> because every patient undergoing [*5] surgery at the hospital must use the services of one * Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the American Hospital Association by Richard L. Epstein, Robert W. McCann, and John J. Miles; for the College of American Pathologists by Jack R. Bierig; and for the National Association of Private Psychiatric Hospitals by Joel I. Klein.

---

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the American Society of Anesthesiologists, Inc., by John Landsdale, Jr., and Michael Scott; for the Association of American Physicians & Surgeons, Inc., by Kent Masterson Brown; and for the Louisiana State Medical Society by Henry B. Alsobrook, Jr., Frank M. Adkins, and Richard B. Eason II.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed for the American Association of Nurse Anesthetists by Phil David Fine, Robert F. Sylvia, Richard E. Verville, and Susan M. Jenkins; and for the Louisiana Hospital Association et al. by Ricardo M. Guevara.

<sup>1</sup> LEdHN[2B] [2B]

Section 1 of the Sherman Act states: HN1 "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. . ." 26 Stat. 209, as firm of anesthesiologists, and, if not, whether the contract is nevertheless illegal because it unreasonably restrains competition among anesthesiologists.

[****7] In July 1977, respondent Edwin G. Hyde, a board-certified anesthesiologist, applied for admission to the medical staff of East Jefferson Hospital. The credentials committee and the medical staff executive committee recommended approval, but the hospital board denied the application because the hospital was a party to a contract providing that all anesthesiological services required by the hospital's patients would be performed by Roux & Associates, a professional medical corporation. Respondent then commenced this action seeking a declaratory judgment that the contract is unlawful and an injunction ordering petitioners to appoint him to the hospital staff.<sup>2</sup> After trial, the District Court denied relief, finding that the anticompetitive consequences of the Roux contract were minimal and outweighed by benefits in the form of improved patient care. 513 F.Supp. 532 \(ED La. 1981\). The Court of Appeals reversed because it was persuaded that the contract was illegal "per se." 686 F.2d 286 \(CA5 1982\). We granted certiorari, 460 U.S. 1021 (1983), and now reverse.

[****8] I

In February 1971, shortly before East Jefferson Hospital opened, it entered into an "Anesthesiology Agreement" with Roux & Associates (Roux), a firm that had recently [**1555] been organized by Dr. Kermit Roux. The contract provided that any anesthesiologist designated by Roux would be admitted to the hospital's medical staff. The hospital agreed to [*6] provide the space, equipment, maintenance, and other supporting services [***9] necessary to operate the anesthesiology department. It also agreed to purchase all necessary drugs and other supplies. All nursing personnel required by the anesthesia department were to be supplied by the hospital, but Roux had the right to approve their selection and retention.<sup>3</sup> The hospital agreed to "restrict the use of its anesthesia department to Roux & Associates and [that] no other persons, parties or entities shall perform such services within the Hospital for the [term] of this contract." App. 19.<sup>4</sup>

[****9] The 1971 contract provided for a 1-year term automatically renewable for successive 1-year periods unless either party elected to terminate. In 1976, a second written contract was executed containing most of the provisions of the 1971 agreement. Its term was five years and the clause excluding other anesthesiologists from the hospital was deleted;<sup>5</sup> [****10] the hospital nevertheless continued to regard itself as committed to a closed anesthesiology department. Only Roux was permitted to practice anesthesiology at the hospital. At the [*7] time of trial the department included four anesthesiologists. The hospital usually employed 13 or 14 certified registered nurse anesthetists.<sup>6</sup> amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1. Respondent has standing to enforce § 1 by virtue of § 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 15.

---

<sup>2</sup> In addition to seeking relief under the Sherman Act, respondent's complaint alleged violations of 42 U. S. C. § 1983 and state law. The District Court rejected these claims. The Court of Appeals passed only on the Sherman Act claim.

<sup>3</sup> The contract required all of the physicians employed by Roux to confine their practice of anesthesiology to East Jefferson.

<sup>4</sup> Originally Roux agreed to provide at least two full-time anesthesiologists acceptable to the hospital's credentials committee. Roux agreed to furnish additional anesthesiologists as necessary. The contract also provided that Roux would designate one of its qualified anesthesiologists to serve as the head of the hospital's department of anesthesia.

The fees for anesthesiological services are billed separately to the patients by the hospital. They cover the hospital's costs and the professional services provided by Roux. After a deduction of eight percent to provide a reserve for uncollectible accounts, the fees are divided equally between Roux and the hospital.

<sup>5</sup> "Roux testified that he requested the omission of the exclusive language in his 1976 contract because he believes a surgeon or patient is entitled to the services of the anesthesiologist of his choice. He admitted that he and others in his group did work outside East Jefferson following the 1976 contract but felt he was not in violation of the contract in light of the changes made in it." 513 F.Supp. 532, 537 \(ED La. 1981\).

<sup>6</sup> Approximately 875 operations are performed at the hospital each month; as many as 12 or 13 operating rooms may be in use at one time.

The exclusive contract had an impact on two different segments of the economy: consumers of medical services, and providers of anesthesiological services. Any consumer of medical services who elects to have an operation performed at East Jefferson Hospital may not employ any anesthesiologist not associated with Roux. No anesthesiologists except those employed by Roux may practice at East Jefferson.

There are at least 20 hospitals in the New Orleans metropolitan area and about 70 percent of the patients living in Jefferson Parish go to hospitals other than East Jefferson. Because it regarded the entire New Orleans metropolitan area as the relevant geographic market in which hospitals compete, this evidence convinced the District Court that East Jefferson does not possess any significant "market power"; therefore it concluded that petitioners could not use the Roux contract to anticompetitive [***10] ends.<sup>7</sup> [***12] The same evidence led the Court of Appeals [***11] to draw a different conclusion. [**1556] Noting that 30 percent of the residents of the parish go to East Jefferson Hospital, and that in fact "patients tend to choose hospitals by location rather than price or quality," the Court of [*8] Appeals concluded that the relevant geographic market was the East Bank of Jefferson Parish. 686 F.2d, at 290. The conclusion that East Jefferson Hospital possessed market power in that area was buttressed by the facts that the prevalence of health insurance eliminates a patient's incentive to compare costs, that the patient is not sufficiently informed to compare quality, and that family convenience tends to magnify the importance of location.<sup>8</sup>

The Court of Appeals held that the case involves a "tying arrangement" because the "users of the hospital's operating rooms (the tying product) are also compelled to purchase the hospital's chosen anesthesia service (the tied product)." [Id., at \[\*\*\*13\] 289](#). Having defined the relevant geographic market for the tying product as the East Bank of Jefferson Parish, the court held that the hospital possessed "sufficient market power in the tying market to coerce purchasers of the tied product." Id., at 291. Since the purchase of the tied product constituted a "not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce," under the Court of Appeals' reading of our decision in Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 11 (1958), the tying arrangement was therefore illegal "per se."<sup>9</sup>

[*9] //

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [↑] [3A][LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4]Certain types of contractual arrangements are deemed unreasonable as a matter of law.<sup>10</sup> The [***14] character [***11] of the restraint produced by such an arrangement is considered a

<sup>7</sup> The District Court found:

"The impact on commerce resulting from the East Jefferson contract is minimal. The contract is restricted in effect to one hospital in an area containing at least twenty others providing the same surgical services. It would be a different situation if Dr. Roux had exclusive contracts in several hospitals in the relevant market. As pointed out by plaintiff, the majority of surgeons have privileges at more than one hospital in the area. They have the option of admitting their patients to another hospital where they can select the anesthesiologist of their choice. Similarly a patient can go to another hospital if he is not satisfied with the physicians available at East Jefferson." Id., at 541.

<sup>8</sup> While the Court of Appeals did discuss the impact of the contract upon patients, it did not discuss its impact upon anesthesiologists. The District Court had referred to evidence that in the entire State of Louisiana there are 156 anesthesiologists and 345 hospitals with operating rooms. The record does not tell us how many of the hospitals in the New Orleans metropolitan area have "open" anesthesiology departments and how many have closed departments. Respondent, for example, practices with two other anesthesiologists at a hospital which has an open department; he previously practiced for several years in a different New Orleans hospital and, prior to that, had practiced in Florida. The record does not tell us whether there is a shortage or a surplus of anesthesiologists in any part of the country, or whether they are thriving or starving.

<sup>9</sup> The Court of Appeals rejected as "clearly erroneous" the District Court's finding that the exclusive contract was justified by quality considerations. See 686 F.2d, at 292.

<sup>10</sup> [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [↑] [3B]

sufficient basis for presuming unreasonableness without the necessity of any analysis of the market context in which the arrangement may be found.<sup>11</sup> A price-fixing agreement between competitors is the classic example of such an arrangement. Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 343-348 (1982). It is far too late in the history of our antitrust jurisprudence to question the proposition that certain tying arrangements pose an unacceptable risk of stifling competition and therefore are unreasonable "per se."<sup>12</sup> [****16] The rule was first enunciated in International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 396 [**1557] (1947),<sup>13</sup> and has been endorsed [*10] by this Court many times since.<sup>14</sup> [****17] The rule also reflects congressional policies underlying the antitrust laws. In enacting § 3 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 14, Congress expressed great concern about the anticompetitive character of tying arrangements. See H. R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 10-13 (1914); S. Rep. No. 698, 63d [****15] Cong., 2d Sess., 6-9 (1914).<sup>15</sup> [****18] [***12] [**1558] While this

---

"For example, where a complaint charges that the defendants have engaged in price fixing, or have concertedly refused to deal with non-members of an association, or have licensed a patented device on condition that unpatented materials be employed in conjunction with the patented device, then the amount of commerce involved is immaterial because such restraints are illegal per se." United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 522-523 (1948) (footnotes omitted).

<sup>11</sup> See, e. g., Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49-50 (1977).

<sup>12</sup> The District Court intimated that the principles of per se liability might not apply to cases involving the medical profession. 513 F.Supp., at 543-544. The Court of Appeals rejected this approach. 686 F.2d, at 292-294. In this Court, petitioners "assume" that the same principles apply to the provision of professional services as apply to other trades or businesses. Brief for Petitioners 4, n. 2. See generally National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679 (1978).

<sup>13</sup> The roots of the doctrine date at least to Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Co., 243 U.S. 502 (1917), a case holding that the sale of a patented film projector could not be conditioned on its use only with the patentee's films, since this would have the effect of extending the scope of the patent monopoly. See also Henry v. Dick Co., 224 U.S. 1, 70-73 (1912) (White, C. J., dissenting).

<sup>14</sup> See United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, 429 U.S. 610, 619-621 (1977); Fortner Enterprises v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 498-499 (1969); White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 262 (1963); Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 330 (1962); United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S. 38 (1962); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 (1958); Black v. Magnolia Liquor Co., 355 U.S. 24, 25 (1957); Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 608-609 (1953); Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 305-306 (1949).

<sup>15</sup> See also 51 Cong. Rec. 9072 (1914) (remarks of Rep. Webb); id., at 9084 (remarks of Rep. Madden); id., at 9090 (remarks of Rep. Mitchell); id., at 9160-9164 (remarks of Rep. Floyd); id., at 9184-9185 (remarks of Rep. Helvering); id., at 9409 (remarks of Rep. Gardner); id., at 9410 (remarks of Rep. Mitchell); id., at 9553-9554 (remarks of Rep. Barkley); id., at 14091-14097 (remarks of Sen. Reed); id., at 14094 (remarks of Sen. Walsh); id., at 14209 (remarks of Sen. Shields); id., at 14226 (remarks of Sen. Reed); id., at 14268 (remarks of Sen. Reed); id., at 14599 (remarks of Sen. White); id., at 15991 (remarks of Sen. Martine); id., at 16146 (remarks of Sen. Walsh); Spivack, The Chicago School Approach to Single Firm Exercises of Monopoly Power: A Response, 52 Antitrust L. J. 651, 664-665 (1983). For example, the House Report on the Clayton Act stated:

"The public is compelled to pay a higher price and local customers are put to the inconvenience of securing many commodities in other communities or through mail-order houses that can not be procured at their local stores. The price is raised as an inducement. This is the local effect. Where the concern making these contracts is already great and powerful, such as the United Shoe Machinery Co., the American Tobacco Co., and the General Film Co., the exclusive or 'tying' contract made with local dealers becomes one of the greatest agencies and instrumentalities of monopoly ever devised by the brain of man. It completely shuts out competitors, not only from trade in which they are already engaged, but from the opportunities to build up trade in any community where these great and powerful combinations are operating under this system and practice. By this method and practice the Shoe Machinery Co. has built up a monopoly that owns and controls the entire machinery now being used by all great shoe-manufacturing houses of the United States. No independent manufacturer of shoe machines has the slightest opportunity to build up any considerable trade in this country while this condition obtains. If a manufacturer who is using machines of the Shoe Machinery Co. were to purchase and place a machine manufactured by any independent company in his establishment, the Shoe Machinery Co. could under its contracts withdraw all their machinery from the establishment of the shoe manufacturer and thereby wreck the business of the manufacturer. The General Film Co., by the case [*11] does not arise under the Clayton Act, the congressional finding made therein concerning the competitive consequences of tying is illuminating, and must be respected.<sup>16</sup>

466 U.S. 2, *10; 104 S. Ct. 1551, **1558; 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, ***12; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 49, ****18

[LEdHN[5A]] [5A]It is clear, however, that HN2 not every refusal to sell two products separately can be said to restrain competition. If each of the products may be purchased separately in a competitive market, one seller's decision to sell the two in a single package imposes no unreasonable restraint on either market, particularly [*12] if competing suppliers are free to sell either the entire package or its several parts.<sup>17</sup> For example, we have written that "if one of a dozen food stores in a community were to refuse to sell flour unless the buyer also took sugar it would hardly tend to restrain competition in sugar if its competitors were ready and able to sell flour by itself." *Northern Pacific R. Co. v. [****19] United States, 356 U.S., at 7.*<sup>18</sup> Buyers often find package sales attractive; [*13] a seller's decision to offer such packages can merely be an attempt to compete effectively -- conduct that is entirely consistent with the Sherman Act. See Fortner Enterprises v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 517-518 (1969)(Fortner I) (WHITE, J., dissenting); id., at 524-525 (Fortas, J., dissenting).

[****20] [LEdHN[61]] [6]Our cases have concluded that HN3 the essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such "forcing" is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated.

"Basic to the faith that a free economy best promotes the public weal is that goods must stand the cold test of competition; that the public, acting through the market's impersonal judgment, shall allocate the Nation's resources and thus direct the course its economic development will take. . . . By conditioning his sale of one commodity on same method practiced by the Shoe Machinery Co. under the lease system, has practically destroyed all competition and acquired a virtual monopoly of all films manufactured and sold in the United States. When we consider contracts of sales made under this system, the result to the consumer, the general public, and the local dealer and his business is even worse than under the lease system." H. R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 12-13 (1914).

---

Similarly, Representative Mitchell said: "[Monopoly] has been built up by these 'tying' contracts so that in order to get one machine one must take all of the essential machines, or practically all. Independent companies who have sought to enter the field have found that the markets have been preempted. . . . The manufacturers do not want to break their contracts with these giant monopolies, because, if they should attempt to install machinery, their business might be jeopardized and all of the machinery now leased by these giant monopolies would be removed from their places of business. No situation cries more urgently for relief than does this situation, and this bill seeks to prevent exclusive 'tying' contracts that have brought about a monopoly, alike injurious to the small dealers, to the manufacturers, and grossly unfair to those who seek to enter the field of competition and to the millions of consumers." 51 Cong. Rec. 9090 (1914).

<sup>16</sup> See generally, e. g., Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclamation Assn., 452 U.S. 264, 276-277 (1981); New Orleans v. Dukes, 427 U.S. 297, 303-304 (1976) (per curiam).

<sup>17</sup> [LEdHN[5B]] [5B]

"Of course where the buyer is free to take either product by itself there is no tying problem even though the seller may also offer the two items as a unit at a single price." Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S., at 6, n. 4.

<sup>18</sup> Thus, we have held that a seller who ties the sale of houses to the provision of credit simply as a way of effectively competing in a competitive market does not violate the antitrust laws. "The unusual credit bargain offered to Fortner proves nothing more than a willingness to provide cheap financing in order to sell expensive houses." United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, 429 U.S., at 622 (footnote omitted).

466 U.S. 2, *12; 104 S. Ct. 1551, **1558; 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, ***13; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 49, ****20

[*13] the purchase of another, a seller coerces the abdication of buyers' independent judgment as to the 'tied' product's merits and insulates it from the competitive stresses of the open market. But any [***21] intrinsic superiority of the 'tied' product would convince freely choosing buyers to select it over others anyway." Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 605 (1953).<sup>19</sup>

[***22] [**1559] Accordingly, [***14] we have condemned tying arrangements when the seller has some special ability -- usually called "market [*14] power" -- to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market. See United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, 429 U.S. 610, 620 (1977) (Fortner II); Fortner I, 394 U.S., at 503-504; United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 45, 48, n. 5 (1962); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S., at 6-7.<sup>20</sup> When "forcing" occurs, our cases have found the tying arrangement to be unlawful.

[***23] Thus, the law draws a distinction between the exploitation of market power by merely enhancing the price of the tying product, on the one hand, and by attempting to impose restraints on competition in the market for a tied product, on the other. When the seller's power is just used to maximize its return in the tying product market, where presumably its product enjoys some justifiable advantage over its competitors, the competitive ideal of the Sherman Act is not necessarily compromised. But if that power is used to impair competition on the merits in another market, a potentially inferior product may be insulated from competitive pressures.<sup>21</sup> This impairment could either harm existing competitors or create barriers to entry of new competitors in the market for the tied product, Fortner I, 394 U.S., at 509,<sup>22</sup> [***25] and can increase [*15] the social costs of market power by facilitating price discrimination, thereby increasing monopoly profits over what they would be absent the tie, Fortner II, 429 U.S., at

<sup>19</sup> Accord, Fortner I, 394 U.S., at 508-509; Atlantic Refining Co. v. FTC, 381 U.S. 357, 369-371 (1965); United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S., at 44-45; Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S., at 6. For example, JUSTICE WHITE has written:

"There is general agreement in the cases and among commentators that the fundamental restraint against which the tying proscription is meant to guard is the use of power over one product to attain power over another, or otherwise to distort freedom of trade and competition in the second product. This distortion injures the buyers of the second product, who because of their preference for the seller's brand of the first are artificially forced to make a less than optimal choice in the second. And even if the customer is indifferent among brands of the second product and therefore loses nothing by agreeing to use the seller's brand of the second in order to get his brand of the first, such tying agreements may work significant restraints on competition in the tied product. The tying seller may be working toward a monopoly position in the tied product and, even if he is not, the practice of tying forecloses other sellers of the tied product and makes it more difficult for new firms to enter that market. They must be prepared not only to match existing sellers of the tied product in price and quality, but to offset the attraction of the tying product itself. Even if this is possible through simultaneous entry into production of the tying product, entry into both markets is significantly more expensive than simple entry into the tied market, and shifting buying habits in the tied product is considerably more cumbersome and less responsive to variations in competitive offers. In addition to these anticompetitive effects in the tied product, tying arrangements may be used to evade price control in the tying product through clandestine transfer of the profit to the tied product; they may be used as a counting device to effect price discrimination; and they may be used to force a full line of products on the customer so as to extract more easily from him a monopoly return on one unique product in the line." Fortner I, 394 U.S., at 512-514 (dissenting opinion) (footnotes omitted).

<sup>20</sup> This type of market power has sometimes been referred to as "leverage." Professors Areeda and Turner provide a definition that suits present purposes. "'Leverage' is loosely defined here as a supplier's power to induce his customer for one product to buy a second product from him that would not otherwise be purchased solely on the merit of that second product." 5 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 1134a, p. 202 (1980).

<sup>21</sup> See Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 145 (1955); Craswell, Tying Requirements in Competitive Markets: The Consumer Protection Issues, 62 B. U. L. Rev. 661, 666-668 (1982); Slawson, A Stronger, Simpler Tie-In Doctrine, 25 Antitrust Bull. 671, 676-684 (1980); Turner, The Validity of Tying Arrangements under the Antitrust Laws, 72 Harv. L. Rev. 50, 60-62 (1958).

<sup>22</sup> See 3 Areeda & Turner, supra n. 20, para. 733e (1978); C. Kaysen & D. Turner, Antitrust Policy 157 (1959); L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust § 156 (1977); O. Williamson, Markets and Hierarchies: Analysis and Antitrust Implications 111 (1975); Pearson, Tying Arrangements and Antitrust Policy, 60 Nw. U. L. Rev. 626, 637-638 (1965).

617.<sup>23</sup> And from the [***15] standpoint [**1560] of the consumer -- whose interests the statute was especially intended to serve [****24] -- the freedom to select the best bargain in the second market is impaired by his need to purchase the tying product, and perhaps by an inability to evaluate the true cost of either product when they are available only as a package.<sup>24</sup> In sum, to permit restraint of competition on the merits through tying arrangements would be, as we observed in Fortner II, to condone "the existence of power that a free market would not tolerate."
429 U.S., at 617 (footnote omitted).

[****26] [LEdHN\[7\]↑](#) [7][LEdHN\[8\]↑](#) [8][LEdHN\[9\]↑](#) [9][LEdHN\[10\]↑](#) [10]HN4↑ Per se condemnation -- condemnation without inquiry into actual market conditions -- is only appropriate if the existence of forcing is probable.<sup>25</sup> Thus, application of the per se rule [*16] focuses on the probability of anticompetitive consequences. Of course, as a threshold matter there must be a substantial potential for impact on competition in order to justify per se condemnation. If only a single purchaser were "forced" with respect to the purchase of a tied item, the resultant impact on competition would not be sufficient to warrant the concern of antitrust law. It is for this reason that we have refused to condemn tying arrangements unless a substantial volume of commerce is foreclosed thereby. See Fortner I, 394 U.S., at 501-502; Northern [****27] Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S., at 6-7; Times-Picayune, 345 U.S., at 608-610; International Salt, 332 U.S., at 396. Similarly, when a purchaser is "forced" to buy a product he would not have otherwise bought even from another seller in the tied-product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed.

[LEdHN\[11\]↑](#) [11]Once this threshold is surmounted, per se [***28] prohibition is appropriate if anticompetitive forcing is likely. For example, if the Government has granted the seller a patent or similar monopoly over a product, it is fair to presume that the inability to buy the product elsewhere gives the seller market power. United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S., at 45-47. Any effort to enlarge the scope of the patent monopoly by using the market power it confers to restrain competition in the market for a second product will undermine competition on the merits in that second market. Thus, the sale or lease of a patented item on condition that the buyer make all his purchases [***16] of a separate tied product from the patentee is unlawful. See United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 156-159 \(1948\); International Salt, 332 U.S., [*17] at 395-396; International Business Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U.S. 131 (1936).

<sup>23</sup> Sales of the tied item can be used to measure demand for the tying item; purchasers with greater needs for the tied item make larger purchases and in effect must pay a higher price to obtain the tying item. See P. Areeda, Antitrust Analysis para. 533 (2d ed. 1974); R. Posner, Antitrust Law 173-180 (1976); Sullivan, supra n. 22, § 156; Bowman, Tying Arrangements and the Leverage Problem, 67 Yale L. J. 19 (1957); Burstein, A Theory of Full-Line Forcing, 55 Nw. U. L. Rev. 62 (1960); Dam, Fortner Enterprises v. United States Steel: "Neither a Borrower, Nor a Lender Be," 1969 S. Ct. Rev. 1, 15-16; Ferguson, Tying Arrangements and Reciprocity: An Economic Analysis, 30 Law & Contemp. Prob. 552, 554-558 (1965); Markovits, Tie-Ins, Reciprocity, and the Leverage Theory, 76 Yale L. J. 1397 (1967); Pearson, supra n. 22, at 647-653; Sidak, Debunking Predatory Innovation, 83 Colum. L. Rev. 1121, 1127-1131 \(1983\); Stigler, United States v. Loew's Inc.: A Note on Block-Booking, 1963 S. Ct. Rev. 152.

<sup>24</sup> Especially where market imperfections exist, purchasers may not be fully sensitive to the price or quality implications of a tying arrangement, and hence it may impede competition on the merits. See Craswell, supra n. 21, at 675-679.

<sup>25</sup> The rationale for per se rules in part is to avoid a burdensome inquiry into actual market conditions in situations where the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct is so great as to render unjustified the costs of determining whether the particular case at bar involves anticompetitive conduct. See, e. g., Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 350-351 \(1982\).

LEdHN[12] [12]The same strict rule is appropriate in other situations in which the existence of market power is probable. When the seller's [****29] share of the market is high, see Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S., at 611-613, or when the seller offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer, see Fortner I, 394 U.S., at 504-506, and n. 2, the Court has held that the likelihood that market power exists and is being used to restrain competition in a separate market is sufficient to make per se condemnation appropriate. Thus, in Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1 (1958), we held that the railroad's control over vast tracts of western real estate, although not itself unlawful, gave the railroad a unique kind of bargaining power that enabled it to tie the sales of that land to exclusive, long-term commitments that fenced out competition in the transportation market over a protracted period.<sup>26</sup> When, however, the [*18] seller does not have either the degree or the kind of market power that enables him to force customers to purchase a second, unwanted product in order to obtain the tying product, an antitrust violation can be established only by evidence of an unreasonable restraint on competition in the [****30] relevant market. See Fortner I, 394 U.S., at 499-500; Times-Picayune [**1561] Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S., at 614-615.

[****31] In sum, HN5 [5] any inquiry into the validity of a tying arrangement must focus on the market or markets in which the two products are sold, for that is where the anticompetitive forcing has its impact. Thus, in this case our analysis of the tying issue must focus on the hospital's sale of services to its patients, rather than its contractual arrangements with [***17] the providers of anesthesiological services. In making that analysis, we must consider whether petitioners are selling two separate products that may be tied together, and, if so, whether they have used their market power to force their patients to accept the tying arrangement.

III

The hospital has provided its patients with a package that includes the range of facilities and services required for a variety of surgical operations.<sup>27</sup> At East Jefferson Hospital the package includes the services of the anesthesiologist.<sup>28</sup> Petitioners argue that the package does not involve a tying arrangement [*19] at all -- that they are merely providing a functionally [**1562] integrated package of services.<sup>29</sup> Therefore, petitioners [****32] contend that it is inappropriate to apply principles concerning tying arrangements to this case.

<sup>26</sup> "As pointed out before, the defendant was initially granted large acreages by Congress in the several Northwestern States through which its lines now run. This land was strategically located in checkerboard fashion amid private holdings and within economic distance of transportation facilities. Not only the testimony of various witnesses but common sense makes it evident that this particular land was often prized by those who purchased or leased it and was frequently essential to their business activities. In disposing of its holdings the defendant entered into contracts of sale or lease covering at least several million acres of land which included 'preferential routing' clauses. The very existence of this host of tying arrangements is itself compelling evidence of the defendant's great power, at least where, as here, no other explanation has been offered for the existence of these restraints. The 'preferential routing' clauses conferred no benefit on the purchasers or lessees. While they got the land they wanted by yielding their freedom to deal with competing carriers, the defendant makes no claim that it came any cheaper than if the restrictive clauses had been omitted. In fact any such price reduction in return for rail shipments would have quite plainly constituted an unlawful rebate to the shipper. So far as the Railroad was concerned its purpose obviously was to fence out competitors, to stifle competition." 356 U.S., at 7-8 (footnote omitted).

<sup>27</sup> The physical facilities include the operating room, the recovery room, and the hospital room where the patient stays before and after the operation. The services include those provided by staff physicians, such as radiologists or pathologists, and interns, nurses, dietitians, pharmacists, and laboratory technicians.

<sup>28</sup> It is essential to differentiate between the Roux contract and the legality of the contract between the hospital and its patients. The Roux contract is nothing more than an arrangement whereby Roux supplies all of the hospital's needs for anesthesiological services. That contract raises only an exclusive-dealing question, see n. 51, infra. The issue here is whether the hospital's insistence that its patients purchase anesthesiological services from Roux creates a tying arrangement.

<sup>29</sup> See generally Dolan & Ralston, Hospital Admitting Privileges and the Sherman Act, 18 Hous. L. Rev. 707, 756-758 (1981); Kissam, Webber, Bigus, & Holzgraefe, Antitrust and Hospital Privileges: Testing the Conventional Wisdom, 70 Calif. L. Rev. 595, 666-667 (1982).

[****33] [LEdHN\[13\]](#) [↑] [13]Our cases indicate, however, that the answer to the question whether one or two products are involved turns not on the functional relation between them, but rather on the character of the demand for the two items.<sup>30</sup> [****34] In Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594 \(1953\), the Court held that a tying arrangement was not present because the arrangement did not link two distinct markets for products that were distinguishable in the eyes [***18] of buyers.<sup>31</sup> [****35] In [*20] Fortner I, the Court concluded that a sale involving two independent transactions, separately priced and purchased from the buyer's perspective, was a tying arrangement.<sup>32</sup> These [*21] cases make it clear that HN6 [↑] a tying arrangement cannot [**1563] exist unless two separate product markets have been linked.

---

<sup>30</sup> The fact that anesthesiological services are functionally linked to the other services provided by the hospital is not in itself sufficient to remove the Roux contract from the realm of tying arrangements. We have often found arrangements involving functionally linked products at least one of which is useless without the other to be prohibited tying devices. See Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U.S. 661 \(1944\) (heating system and stoker switch); Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger Co., 314 U.S. 488 \(1942\) (salt machine and salt); International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392 \(1947\) (same); Leitch Mfg. Co. v. Barber Co., 302 U.S. 458 \(1938\) (process patent and material used in the patented process); International Business Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U.S. 131 \(1936\) (tabulators and tabulating punch cards); Carbice Corp. v. American Patents Development Corp., 283 U.S. 27 \(1931\) (ice cream transportation package and coolant); FTC v. Sinclair Refining Co., 261 U.S. 463 \(1923\) (gasoline and underground tanks and pumps); United Shoe Machinery Co. v. United States, 258 U.S. 451 \(1922\) (shoe machinery and supplies, maintenance, and peripheral machinery); United States v. Jerrold Electronics Corp., 187 F.Supp. 545, 558-560 \(ED Pa. 1960\) (components of television antennas), aff'd, 365 U.S. 567 \(1961\) (per curiam). In fact, in some situations the functional link between the two items may enable the seller to maximize its monopoly return on the tying item as a means of charging a higher rent or purchase price to a larger user of the tying item. See n. 23, supra.

<sup>31</sup> "The District Court determined that the Times-Picayune and the States were separate and distinct newspapers, though published under single ownership and control. But that readers consciously distinguished between these two publications does not necessarily imply that advertisers bought separate and distinct products when insertions were placed in the Times-Picayune and the States. So to conclude here would involve speculation that advertisers bought space motivated by considerations other than customer coverage; that their media selections, in effect, rested on generic qualities differentiating morning from evening readers in New Orleans. Although advertising space in the Times-Picayune, as the sole morning daily, was doubtless essential to blanket coverage of the local newspaper readership, nothing in the record suggests that advertisers viewed the city's newspaper readers, morning or evening, as other than fungible customer potential. We must assume, therefore, that the readership 'bought' by advertisers in the Times-Picayune was the selfsame 'product' sold by the States and, for that matter, the Item.

"The factual departure from the 'tying' cases then becomes manifest. The common core of the adjudicated unlawful tying arrangements is the forced purchase of a second distinct commodity with the desired purchase of a dominant 'tying' product, resulting in economic harm to competition in the 'tied' market. Here, however, two newspapers under single ownership at the same place, time, and terms sell indistinguishable products to advertisers; no dominant 'tying' product exists (in fact, since space in neither the Times-Picayune nor the States can be bought alone, one may be viewed as 'tying' as the other); no leverage in one market excludes sellers in the second, because for present purposes the products are identical and the market the same." 345 U.S., at 613-614 (footnote omitted).

<sup>32</sup> "There is, at the outset of every tie-in case, including the familiar cases involving physical goods, the problem of determining whether two separate products are in fact involved. In the usual sale on credit the seller, a single individual or corporation, simply makes an agreement determining when and how much he will be paid for his product. In such a sale the credit may constitute such an inseparable part of the purchase price for the item that the entire transaction could be considered to involve only a single product. It will be time enough to pass on the issue of credit sales when a case involving it actually arises. Sales such as that are a far cry from the arrangement involved here, where the credit is provided by one corporation on condition that a product be purchased from a separate corporation, and where the borrower contracts to obtain a large sum of money over and above that needed to pay the seller for the physical products purchased. Whatever the standards for determining exactly when a transaction involves only a 'single product,' we cannot see how an arrangement such as that present in this case could ever be said to involve only a single product." 394 U.S., at 507 (footnote omitted).

[****36] The requirement that two distinguishable product markets be involved follows from the underlying rationale of the rule against tying. The definitional question depends on whether the arrangement may have the type of competitive consequences addressed by the rule.<sup>33</sup> [****37] The answer to the question whether petitioners [***19] have utilized a tying arrangement must be based on whether there is a possibility that the economic effect of the arrangement is that condemned by the rule against tying -- that petitioners have foreclosed competition on the merits in a product market distinct from the market for the tying item.<sup>34</sup> Thus, in this case no tying arrangement can exist unless there is a sufficient demand for the purchase of anesthesiological services separate from hospital services [*22] to identify a distinct product market in which it is efficient to offer anesthesiological services separately from hospital services.<sup>35</sup>

[****38] Unquestionably, the anesthesiological component of the package offered by the hospital could be provided separately and could be selected either by the individual patient or by one of the patient's doctors if the hospital did not insist on including anesthesiological services in the package it [**1564] offers to its customers. As a matter of actual practice, anesthesiological services are billed separately from the hospital services petitioners provide. There was ample and uncontested testimony that patients or surgeons often request specific anesthesiologists to come to a hospital and provide anesthesia, and that the choice of an individual anesthesiologist separate from the choice of a hospital is particularly frequent in respondent's specialty, obstetric anesthesiology.<sup>36</sup> [****40] The District [*23] [***20] Court found that "[the] provision of anesthesia services is a medical service

---

<sup>33</sup> Professor Dam has pointed out that the per se rule against tying can be coherent only if tying is defined by reference to the economic effect of the arrangement.

"[The] definitional question is hard to separate from the question when tie-ins are harmful. Yet the decisions, in adopting the per se rule, have attempted to flee from that economic question by ruling that tying arrangements are presumptively harmful, at least whenever certain nominal threshold standards on power and foreclosure are met. The weakness of the per se methodology is that it places crucial importance on the definition of the practice. Once an arrangement falls within the defined limits, no justification will be heard. But a per se rule gives no economic standards for defining the practice. To treat the definitional question as an abstract inquiry into whether one or two products is involved is thus to compound the weakness of the per se approach." Dam, supra n. 23, at 19.

<sup>34</sup> Of course, the Sherman Act does not prohibit "tying"; it prohibits "[contracts] . . . in restraint of trade." Thus, in a sense the question whether this case involves "tying" is beside the point. The legality of petitioners' conduct depends on its competitive consequences, not on whether it can be labeled "tying." If the competitive consequences of this arrangement are not those to which the per se rule is addressed, then it should not be condemned irrespective of its label.

<sup>35</sup> This approach is consistent with that taken by a number of lower courts. See Moore v. Jas. H. Matthews & Co., 550 F.2d 1207, 1214-1215 (CA9 1977); Siegel v. Chicken Delight, Inc., 448 F.2d 43, 48-49 (CA9 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 955 (1972); Washington Gas Light Co. v. Virginia Electric & Power Co., 438 F.2d 248, 253 (CA4 1971); Susser v. Carvel Corp., 332 F.2d 505, 514 (CA2 1964), cert. dism'd, 381 U.S. 125 (1965); United States v. Mercedes-Benz of North America, Inc., 517 F.Supp. 1369, 1379-1381 (ND Cal. 1981); In re Data General Corp. Antitrust Litigation, 490 F.Supp. 1089, 1104-1110 (ND Cal. 1980); Jones v. 247 East Chestnut Properties, 1975-2 Trade Cases para. 60,491, pp. 67,162-67,163 (ND Ill. 1974); N. W. Controls, Inc. v. Outboard Marine Corp., 333 F.Supp. 493, 501-504 (Del. 1971); Teleflex Industrial Products, Inc. v. Brunswick Corp., 293 F.Supp. 107, 109, and n. 6 (ED Pa. 1968). See generally Ross, The Single Product Issue in Antitrust Tying: A Functional Approach, 23 Emory L. J. 963 (1974); Wheeler, Some Observations on Tie-ins, the Single-Product Defense, Exclusive Dealing and Regulated Industries, 60 Calif. L. Rev. 1557, 1558-1567, 1572-1573 (1972); Note, Product Separability: A Workable Standard to Identify Tie-In Arrangements Under the Antitrust Laws, 46 S. Cal. L. Rev. 160 (1972). See also Fortner I, 394 U.S., at 525 (Fortas, J., dissenting); Note, Tying Arrangements and the Single Product Issue, 31 Ohio St. L. J. 861 (1970).

<sup>36</sup> Testimony that patients and their physicians frequently do differentiate between hospital services and anesthesiological services, and request specific anesthesiologists, was provided by Dr. Roux, Tr. 17, 20 (May 15, 1980, afternoon session), Dr. Hyde, id., at 68-69, 72-74 (May 16, 1980), and other anesthesiologists as well, see id., at 64, 87-88 (May 15, 1980, afternoon session) (testimony of Dr. Charles Eckert); id., at 25-30, 33-34 (May 16, 1980) (testimony of Dr. John Adriani). There was no testimony that patients or their surgeons do not differentiate between anesthesiological services and hospital services when making purchasing decisions. As a statistical matter, only 27 percent of anesthesiologists have financial relationships with hospitals. American Medical Association, Socioeconomic Characteristics of Medical Practice: 1983, p. 12 (1983). In this respect separate from the other services provided by the hospital." 513 F.Supp., at 540.<sup>37</sup> The Court of Appeals agreed with this finding, and went on to observe: "[An] anesthesiologist is normally selected by the surgeon, rather than the patient, based on familiarity gained through [****39] a working relationship. Obviously, the surgeons who practice at East Jefferson Hospital do not gain familiarity with any anesthesiologists other than Roux and Associates." 686 F.2d, at 291.<sup>38</sup> The record amply supports the conclusion that consumers differentiate between anesthesiological services and the other hospital services provided by petitioners.<sup>39</sup>

466 U.S. 2, *23; 104 S. Ct. 1551, **1564; 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, ***20; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 49, ****40

[****41] [*24] Thus, the hospital's requirement that its patients obtain necessary anesthesiological [**1565] services from Roux [***21] combined the purchase of two distinguishable services in a single transaction.<sup>40</sup> [****42] Nevertheless, the fact that this case involves a required [*25] purchase of two services that would otherwise be purchased separately does not make the Roux contract illegal. As noted above, there is nothing inherently anticompetitive about packaged sales. Only if patients are forced to purchase Roux's services as a result anesthesiologists may differ from radiologists, pathologists, and other types of hospital-based physicians (HBPs). "In some respects anesthesiologists are more akin to office-based MDs (particularly surgeons) than other HBPs. Anesthesiologists' outputs are more discrete, and these HBPs are predominantly fee-for-service practitioners who directly provide services to patients." Steinwald, Hospital-Based Physicians: Current Issues and Descriptive Evidence, Health Care Financing Rev. 63, 69 (Summer 1980). See also United States v. American Society of Anesthesiologists, Inc., 473 F.Supp. 147, 150 \(SDNY 1979\) ("By 1957 the salaried anesthesiologist had become the exception. Anesthesiologists began to establish independent practices and were able to obtain hospital privileges upon the same terms and conditions as other clinicians").

<sup>37</sup> Accordingly, in its conclusions of law the District Court treated the case as involving a tying arrangement. 513 F.Supp., at 542.

<sup>38</sup> Petitioners do not challenge these findings of the District Court and the Court of Appeals.

<sup>39</sup> One of the most frequently cited statements on this subject was made by Judge Van Dusen in United States v. Jerrold Electronics Corp., 187 F.Supp. 545 \(ED Pa. 1960\), aff'd, 365 U.S. 567 (1961) (per curiam). While this statement was specifically made with respect to § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 14, its analysis is also applicable to § 1 of the Sherman Act, since with respect to the definition of tying the standards used by the two statutes are the same. See Times-Picayune, 345 U.S., at 608-609.

"There are several facts presented in this record which tend to show that a community television antenna system cannot properly be characterized as a single product. Others who entered the community antenna field offered all of the equipment necessary for a complete system, but none of them sold their gear exclusively as a single package as did Jerrold. The record also establishes that the number of pieces in each system varied considerably so that hardly any two versions of the alleged product were the same. Furthermore, the customer was charged for each item of equipment and not a lump sum for the total system. Finally, while Jerrold had cable and antennas to sell which were manufactured by other concerns, it only required that the electronic equipment in the system be bought from it." 187 F.Supp., at 559.

The record here shows that other hospitals often permit anesthesiological services to be purchased separately, that anesthesiologists are not fungible in that the services provided by each are not precisely the same, that anesthesiological services are billed separately, and that the hospital required purchases from Roux even though other anesthesiologists were available and Roux had no objection to their receiving staff privileges at East Jefferson. Therefore, the Jerrold analysis indicates that there was a tying arrangement here. Jerrold also indicates that tying may be permissible when necessary to enable a new business to break into the market. See id., at 555-558. Assuming this defense exists, and assuming it justified the 1971 Roux contract in order to give Roux an incentive to go to work at a new hospital with an uncertain future, that justification is inapplicable to the 1976 contract, since by then Roux was willing to continue to service the hospital without a tying arrangement.

<sup>40</sup> This is not to say that § 1 of the Sherman Act gives a purchaser the right to buy a product that the seller does not wish to offer for sale. A grocer may decide to carry four brands of cookies and no more. If the customer wants a fifth brand, he may go elsewhere but he cannot sue the grocer even if there is no other in town. However, in such a case the customer is free to purchase no cookies at all, while buying other needed food. If the grocer required the customer to buy an unwanted brand of cookies in order to buy other items which the customer needs and cannot readily obtain elsewhere, then a tying question arises. Cf. Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S., at 7 (grocer selling flour can require customers to also buy sugar only "if its competitors were ready and able to sell flour by itself"). Here, the question is whether patients are forced to use an unwanted anesthesiologist in order to obtain needed hospital services.

466 U.S. 2, *25; 104 S. Ct. 1551, **1565; 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, ***21; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 49, ****42

of the hospital's market power would the arrangement have anticompetitive consequences. If no forcing is present, patients are free to enter a competing hospital and to use another anesthesiologist instead of Roux.<sup>41</sup> The fact that petitioners' patients are required to purchase two separate items is only the beginning of the appropriate inquiry.<sup>42</sup>

[****43] [*26] IV

[***22] The question remains whether this arrangement involves the use of market power [**1566] to force patients to buy services they would not otherwise purchase. Respondent's only basis for invoking the per se rule against tying and thereby avoiding analysis of actual market conditions is by relying on the preference of persons residing in Jefferson Parish to go to East Jefferson, the closest hospital. A preference of this kind, however, is not necessarily probative of significant market power.

LEdHN[14] [14]Seventy percent of the patients residing in Jefferson Parish enter hospitals other than East Jefferson. 513 F.Supp., at 539 Thus East Jefferson's "dominance" over persons residing in Jefferson Parish is far from overwhelming.<sup>43</sup> [***45] The [*27] fact that a substantial majority of the parish's residents elect not to enter East Jefferson means that the geographic data do not establish the kind of dominant market position that obviates the need for further inquiry into actual competitive conditions. The Court of Appeals acknowledged as much; it recognized that East [****44] Jefferson's market share alone was insufficient as a basis to infer market power, and buttressed its conclusion by relying on "market imperfections"<sup>44</sup> that permit petitioners to charge noncompetitive <sup>41</sup> An examination of the reason or reasons why petitioners denied respondent staff privileges will not provide the answer to the question whether the package of services they offered to their patients is an illegal tying arrangement. As a matter of antitrust law, petitioners may give their anesthesiology business to Roux because he is the best doctor available, because he is willing to work long hours, or because he is the son-in-law of the hospital administrator without violating the per se rule against tying. Without evidence that petitioners are using market power to force Roux upon patients there is no basis to view the arrangement as unreasonably restraining competition whatever the reasons for its creation. Conversely, with such evidence, the per se rule against tying may apply. Thus, we reject the view of the District Court that the legality of an arrangement of this kind turns on whether it was adopted for the purpose of improving patient care.

<sup>42</sup> Petitioners argue and the District Court found that the exclusive contract had what it characterized as procompetitive justifications in that an exclusive contract ensures 24-hour anesthesiology coverage, enables flexible scheduling, and facilitates work routine, professional standards, and maintenance of equipment. The Court of Appeals held these findings to be clearly erroneous since the exclusive contract was not necessary to achieve these ends. Roux was willing to provide 24-hour coverage even without an exclusive contract and the credentials committee of the hospital could impose standards for staff privileges that would ensure staff would comply with the demands of scheduling, maintenance, and professional standards. 686 F.2d, at 292. In the past, we have refused to tolerate manifestly anticompetitive conduct simply because the health care industry is involved. See Arizona v. Maricopa Medical Society, 457 U.S., at 348-351; National Gerimedical Hospital v. Blue Cross, 452 U.S. 378 \(1981\); American Medical Assn. v. United States, 317 U.S. 519, 528-529 \(1943\). Petitioners seek no special solicitude. See n. 12, supra. We have also uniformly rejected similar "goodwill" defenses for tying arrangements, finding that the use of contractual quality specifications are generally sufficient to protect quality without the use of a tying arrangement. See Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S., at 305-306; International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S., at 397-398; International Business Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U.S., at 138-140. See generally Comment, Tying Arrangements under the Antitrust Laws: The "Integrity of the Product" Defense, 62 Mich. L. Rev. 1413 (1964). Since the District Court made no finding as to why contractual quality specifications would not protect the hospital, there is no basis for departing from our prior cases here.

<sup>43</sup> In fact its position in this market is not dissimilar from the market share at issue in Times-Picayune, which the Court found insufficient as a basis for inferring market power. See 345 U.S., at 611-613. Moreover, in other antitrust contexts this Court has found that market shares comparable to that present here do not create an unacceptable likelihood of anticompetitive conduct. See United States v. Connecticut National Bank, 418 U.S. 656 \(1974\); United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377 \(1956\).

466 U.S. 2, *27; 104 S. Ct. 1551, **1566; 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, ***22; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 49, ****44

prices for hospital services: the prevalence of third-party payment for health care costs reduces price competition, and a lack of adequate information renders consumers unable to evaluate the quality of the medical care provided by competing hospitals. 686 F.2d, at 290.<sup>45</sup> While these factors may generate "market power" in some abstract sense,<sup>46</sup> they do not generate the kind of market power that justifies condemnation of tying.

HNT Tying arrangements need only be condemned if they restrain [****46] competition on the merits by forcing purchases that would not otherwise be made. A lack of price or quality [*28] competition does not create this type of forcing. If consumers lack price consciousness, that fact will not [***23] force them to take an anesthesiologist whose services they do not want -- their indifference to price will have no impact on their willingness or ability to go to another hospital where they can utilize the services of the anesthesiologist of their choice. Similarly, if consumers cannot evaluate the quality of anesthesiological services, it follows that they are indifferent between certified anesthesiologists even in the absence of a tying arrangement -- such an arrangement cannot be said to have foreclosed a choice that would have otherwise been made "on the merits."

LEdHN[15] [15]Thus, neither of the "market imperfections" relied upon by the Court of Appeals forces consumers to take anesthesiological services they would not select in the absence of a tie. It is safe to assume that every patient undergoing a surgical operation needs the services of an anesthesiologist; at least [****47] this record contains no evidence that the hospital "forced" any [**1567] such services on unwilling patients.<sup>47</sup> The record therefore [*29] does not provide a basis for applying the per se rule against tying to this arrangement.

[****48] V

LEdHN[16] [16]In order to prevail in the absence of per se liability, respondent has the burden of proving that the Roux contract violated the Sherman Act because it unreasonably restrained competition. That burden necessarily involves an inquiry into the actual effect of the exclusive contract on competition among

---

<sup>44</sup> The Court of Appeals acknowledged that absent these market imperfections, there was no basis for applying the per se rule against tying. "The contract at issue here involved only one hospital out of at least twenty in the area. Under the analysis applied to a truly competitive market, appellant has failed to prove an illegal tying arrangement." 686 F.2d, at 290.

<sup>45</sup> Congress has found these market imperfections to exist. See National Gerimedical Hospital v. Blue Cross, 452 U.S., at 388, n. 13, 391-393, and n. 18; 42 U. S. C. §§ 300k, 300k-2(b); H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 96-420, pp. 57-58 (1979); S. Rep. No. 96-96, pp. 52-53 (1979).

<sup>46</sup> As an economic matter, market power exists whenever prices can be raised above the levels that would be charged in a competitive market. See Fortner II, 429 U.S., at 620; Fortner I, 394 U.S., at 503-504.

<sup>47</sup> Nor is there an indication in the record that petitioners' practices have increased the social costs of their market power. Since patients' anesthesiological needs are fixed by medical judgment, respondent does not argue that the tying arrangement facilitates price discrimination. Where variable-quantity purchasing is unavailable as a means to enable price discrimination, commentators have seen less justification for condemning tying. See Dam, supra n. 23, at 15-17; Turner, supra n. 21, at 67-72. While tying arrangements like the one at issue here are unlikely to be used to facilitate price discrimination, they could have the similar effect of enabling hospitals "to evade price control in the tying product through clandestine transfer of the profit to the tied product. . ." Fortner I, 394 U.S., at 513 (WHITE, J., dissenting). Insurance companies are the principal source of price restraint in the hospital industry; they place some limitations on the ability of hospitals to exploit their market power. Through this arrangement, petitioners may be able to evade that restraint by obtaining a portion of the anesthesiologists' fees and therefore realize a greater return than they could in the absence of the arrangement. This could also have an adverse effect on the anesthesiology market since it is possible that only less able anesthesiologists would be willing to give up part of their fees in return for the security of an exclusive contract. However, there are no findings of either the District Court or the Court of Appeals which indicate that this type of exploitation of market power has occurred here. The Court of Appeals found only that Roux's use of nurse anesthetists increased its and the hospital's profits, but there was no finding that nurse anesthetists might not be used with equal frequency absent the exclusive contract. Indeed, the District Court found that nurse anesthetists are utilized in all hospitals in the area. 513 F.Supp., at 537, 543. Moreover, there is nothing in the record which details whether this arrangement has enhanced the value of East Jefferson's market power or harmed quality competition in the anesthesiology market.

anesthesiologists. This competition takes place in a market that has not been defined. The market is not necessarily the same as the market in which hospitals compete in offering services to patients; it may encompass competition among anesthesiologists for exclusive contracts such as the Roux contract and might be statewide [***24] or merely local.<sup>48</sup> There is, however, insufficient evidence in this record to provide a basis for finding that the Roux contract, as it actually operates in the market, has unreasonably restrained competition. [*30] The record sheds little light on how this arrangement affected consumer demand for separate arrangements with a specific anesthesiologist.<sup>49</sup> [****50] The evidence indicates that some surgeons and patients preferred respondent's services to those of [****49] Roux, but there is no evidence that any patient who was sophisticated enough to know the difference between two anesthesiologists was not also able to go to a hospital that would provide him with the anesthesiologist of his choice.<sup>50</sup>

[**1568] [LEdHN\[17A\]](#) [↑] [17A] [LEdHN\[18\]](#) [↑] [18] In sum, all that the record establishes is that the choice of anesthesiologists at East Jefferson has been limited to one of the four doctors who are associated with Roux and therefore have staff privileges.<sup>51</sup> Even if Roux did not have an exclusive contract, the range of alternatives open to the patient would be severely limited by the nature of the transaction and the hospital's unquestioned right to exercise some control over the identity and the number of doctors to whom it accords staff privileges. If respondent is admitted to the staff of East Jefferson, the range of choice will be enlarged [****51] from [*31] four to five doctors, but the most significant restraints on the patient's freedom to select a specific anesthesiologist will nevertheless remain.<sup>52</sup> Without a showing [***25] of actual adverse effect on competition, respondent cannot make out a case under the antitrust laws, and no such showing has been made.

[****52] VI

---

<sup>48</sup> While there was some rather impressionistic testimony that the prevalence of exclusive contracts tended to discourage young doctors from entering the market, the evidence was equivocal and neither the District Court nor the Court of Appeals made any findings concerning the contract's effect on entry barriers. Respondent does not press the point before this Court. It is possible that under some circumstances an exclusive contract could raise entry barriers since anesthesiologists could not compete for the contract without raising the capital necessary to run a hospitalwide operation. However, since the hospital has provided most of the capital for the exclusive contractor in this case, that problem does not appear to be present.

<sup>49</sup> While it is true that purchasers may not be fully sensitive to the price or quality implications of a tying arrangement, so that competition may be impeded, see n. 24, supra, this depends on an empirical demonstration concerning the effect of the arrangement on price or quality, and the record reveals little if anything about the effect of this arrangement on the market for anesthesiological services.

<sup>50</sup> If, as is likely, it is the patient's doctor and not the patient who selects an anesthesiologist, the doctor can simply take the patient elsewhere if he is dissatisfied with Roux. The District Court found that most doctors in the area have staff privileges at more than one hospital. 513 F.Supp., at 541.

<sup>51</sup> [LEdHN\[17B\]](#) [↑] [17B]

The effect of the contract, of course, has been to remove the East Jefferson Hospital from the market open to Roux's competitors. Like any exclusive-requirements contract, this contract could be unlawful if it foreclosed so much of the market from penetration by Roux's competitors as to unreasonably restrain competition in the affected market, the market for anesthesiological services. See generally Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320 \(1961\); Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293 \(1949\). However, respondent has not attempted to make this showing.

<sup>52</sup> The record simply tells us little if anything about the effect of this arrangement on price or quality of anesthesiological services. As to price, the arrangement did not lead to an increase in the price charged to the patient. 686 F.2d, at 291. As to quality, the record indicates little more than that there have never been any complaints about the quality of Roux's services, and no contention that his services are in any respect inferior to those of respondent. Moreover, the self-interest of the hospital, as well as the ethical and professional norms under which it operates, presumably protect the quality of anesthesiological services. See Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals, Accreditation Manual for Hospitals 3-10, 151-154 (1983).

LEdHN[1B] [1B]Petitioners' closed policy may raise questions of medical ethics,<sup>53</sup> and may have inconvenienced some patients who would prefer to have their anesthesia administered by someone other than a member of Roux & Associates, but it does not have the obviously unreasonable impact on purchasers that has characterized the tying arrangements that this Court has branded unlawful. There is no evidence that the price, the quality, or the supply or demand for either the "tying product" or the "tied product" involved in this case has been adversely affected by the exclusive contract between Roux and the hospital. It may well be true that the contract made it necessary for Dr. Hyde and others to practice elsewhere, rather than at East Jefferson. But there has been no showing that the market as a whole has been affected at all by the contract. Indeed, as we previously noted, the record tells us very little about the market for the services of anesthesiologists. [*32] Yet that is the market in which the exclusive contract has had its principal impact. There is simply no showing here of the kind of restraint [****53] on competition that is prohibited by the Sherman Act. Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the case is remanded to that court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.<sup>54</sup>

It is so ordered.

Concur by: BRENNAN; O'CONNOR

Concur

---

JUSTICE BRENNAN, with whom JUSTICE MARSHALL joins, concurring.

As the opinion for the Court demonstrates, we have long held that tying arrangements are subject to evaluation for per se illegality under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Whatever merit the policy arguments against this longstanding construction of the Act might have, Congress, presumably [**1569] aware of our decisions, has never changed the rule by amending the Act. In such circumstances, our practice usually has been to stand by a settled statutory interpretation [***54] and leave the task of modifying the statute's reach to Congress. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 769 (1984) (BRENNAN, J., concurring). I see no reason to depart from that principle in this case and therefore join the opinion and judgment of the Court.

JUSTICE O'CONNOR, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE, JUSTICE POWELL, and JUSTICE REHNQUIST join, concurring in the judgment.

East Jefferson Hospital, a public hospital governed by petitioners, requires patients to use the anesthesiological services provided by Roux & Associates, as they are the only doctors authorized to administer anesthesia to patients in the hospital. The Court of Appeals found that this [***26] arrangement was a tie-in illegal under the Sherman Act. 686 F.2d 286, 1*331 (CA5 1982). I concur in the Court's decision to reverse but write separately to explain why I believe the hospital-Roux contract, whether treated as effecting a tie between services provided to patients, or as an exclusive dealing arrangement between the hospital and certain anesthesiologists, is properly analyzed under the rule of reason.

|

Tying is a form of marketing [***55] in which a seller insists on selling two distinct products or services as a package. A supermarket that will sell flour to consumers only if they will also buy sugar is engaged in tying. Flour is referred to as the tying product, sugar as the tied product. In this case the allegation is that East Jefferson Hospital has unlawfully tied the sale of general hospital services and operating room facilities (the tying service) to the sale of anesthesiologists' services (the tied services). The Court has on occasion applied a per se rule of illegality in actions alleging tying in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392 \(1947\).

---

<sup>53</sup> See App. A to Brief for American Society of Anesthesiologists, Inc., as Amicus Curiae.

<sup>54</sup> The claims raised by respondent but not passed upon by the Court of Appeals remain open on remand. See n. 2, supra.

Under the usual logic of the per se rule, a restraint on trade that rarely serves any purposes other than to restrain competition is illegal without proof of market power or anticompetitive effect. See, e. g., Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 \(1958\). In deciding whether an economic restraint should be declared illegal per se, "[the] probability that anticompetitive consequences will result from a practice and the severity of [****56] those consequences [is] balanced against its procompetitive consequences. Cases that do not fit the generalization may arise, but a per se rule reflects the judgment that such cases are not sufficiently common or important to justify the time and expense necessary to identify them." Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 50, n. 16 \(1977\). See also Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 351 \(1982\). Only when there is very little loss to society from banning a restraint [*34] altogether is an inquiry into its costs in the individual case considered to be unnecessary.

Some of our earlier cases did indeed declare that tying arrangements serve "hardly any purpose beyond the suppression of competition." Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 305-306 \(1949\) (dictum). However, this declaration was not taken literally even by the cases that purported to rely upon it. In practice, a tie has been illegal only if the seller is shown to have "sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain free competition in the market [****57] for the tied product. . . ." Northern Pacific R. Co., 356 U.S., at 6. Without "control or dominance over the tying product," the seller could not use the tying product as "an effectual weapon to pressure buyers into taking the tied [**1570] item," so that any restraint of trade would be "insignificant." Ibid. The Court has never been willing to say of tying arrangements, as it has of price fixing, division of markets, and other [***27] agreements subject to per se analysis, that they are always illegal, without proof of market power or anticompetitive effect.

The "per se" doctrine in tying cases has thus always required an elaborate inquiry into the economic effects of the tying arrangement.<sup>1</sup> As a result, tying doctrine incurs the costs of a rule-of-reason approach without achieving its benefits: the doctrine calls for the extensive and time-consuming economic analysis characteristic of the rule of reason, but then may be interpreted to prohibit arrangements that economic analysis would show to be beneficial. Moreover, the per se label in the tying context has generated more confusion [*35] than coherent law because it appears to invite [****58] lower courts to omit the analysis of economic circumstances of the tie that has always been a necessary element of tying analysis.

The time has therefore come to abandon the "per se" label and refocus the inquiry on the adverse economic effects, and the potential economic benefits, that the tie may have. The law of tie-ins will thus be brought into accord with the law applicable to all other allegedly anticompetitive economic arrangements, except those few horizontal or quasi-horizontal [****59] restraints that can be said to have no economic justification whatsoever.<sup>2</sup> This change will rationalize rather than abandon tie-in doctrine as it is already applied.

II

---

<sup>1</sup> This inquiry has been required in analyzing both the prima facie case and affirmative defenses. Most notably, United States v. Jerrold Electronics Corp., 187 F.Supp. 545, 559-560 \(ED Pa. 1960\), aff'd per curiam, 365 U.S. 567 \(1961\), upheld a requirement that buyers of television systems purchase the complete system, as well as installation and repair service, on the grounds that the tie assured that the systems would operate and thereby protected the seller's business reputation.

<sup>2</sup> Tying law is particularly anomalous in this respect because arrangements largely indistinguishable from tie-ins are generally analyzed under the rule of reason. For example, the "per se" analysis of tie-ins subjects restrictions on a franchisee's freedom to purchase supplies to a more searching scrutiny than restrictions on his freedom to sell his products. Compare, e. g., Siegel v. Chicken Delight, Inc., 448 F.2d 43 \(CA9 1971\), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 955 \(1972\), with Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 \(1977\). And exclusive contracts that, like tie-ins, require the buyer to purchase a product from one seller are subject only to the rule of reason. See infra, at 44-45.

Our prior opinions indicate that the purpose of tying law has been to identify [****60] and control those tie-ins that have a demonstrable exclusionary impact in the tied-product market, see Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 605 (1953), or that abet the harmful exercise of market power that the seller possesses in the tying product market.<sup>3</sup> Under the rule of reason tying arrangements should be disapproved only in such instances.

Market power in the tying product may be acquired legitimately (e. g., through the grant of a patent) or illegitimately (e. g., as a result of unlawful monopolization). In either event, exploitation of consumers in the market for the tying [*36] product is a possibility that exists and that may be regulated under § 2 of the Sherman Act without reference to any [***28] tying arrangements that the seller may have developed. The existence of a tied product normally does not increase the profit that the seller with market power can extract from sales of the tying product. [****61] A seller with a monopoly on flour, for example, cannot increase the profit it can extract from flour consumers simply by forcing them to buy sugar along with their flour. Counterintuitive though that assertion may seem, it is easily demonstrated and widely accepted. See, e. g., R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 372-374 [**1571] (1978); P. Areeda, Antitrust Analysis 735 (3d ed. 1981).

Tying may be economically harmful primarily in the rare cases where power in the market for the tying product is used to create additional market power in the market for the tied product.<sup>4</sup> [****62] The antitrust law is properly concerned with [*37] tying when, for example, the flour monopolist threatens to use its market power to acquire additional power in the sugar market, perhaps by driving out competing sellers of sugar, or by making it more difficult for new sellers to enter the sugar market. But such extension of market power is unlikely, or poses no threat of economic harm, unless the two markets in question and the nature of the two products tied satisfy three threshold criteria.<sup>5</sup>

First, the seller must have power in the tying-product market.<sup>6</sup> [****64] Absent [***29] such power tying cannot conceivably have any adverse impact in the tied-product market, and can be only procompetitive in the tying-

---

<sup>3</sup> See n. 4, infra.

<sup>4</sup> Tying might be undesirable in two other instances, but the hospital-Roux arrangement involves neither one.

In a regulated industry a firm with market power may be unable to extract a supercompetitive profit because it lacks control over the prices it charges for regulated products or services. Tying may then be used to extract that profit from sale of the unregulated, tied products or services. See Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 513 (1969) (WHITE, J., dissenting).

Tying may also help the seller engage in price discrimination by "metering" the buyer's use of the tying product. Cf. International Business Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U.S. 131 (1936); International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392 (1947). Price discrimination may be independently unlawful, see 15 U. S. C. § 13. Price discrimination may, however, decrease rather than increase the economic costs of a seller's market power. See, e. g., R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 398 (1978); P. Areeda, Antitrust Analysis 608-610 (3d ed. 1981); O. Williamson, Markets and Hierarchies: Analysis and Antitrust Implications 11-13 (1975). United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, Inc., 429 U.S. 610, 617 (1977) (Fortner II), did not hold that price discrimination in the form of a tie-in is always economically harmful; that case indicated only that price discrimination may indicate market power in the tying-product market. But there is no need in this case to address the problem of price discrimination facilitated by tying. The discussion herein is aimed only at tying arrangements as to which no price discrimination is alleged.

<sup>5</sup> Wholly apart from market characteristics, a prerequisite to application of the Sherman Act is an effect on interstate commerce. See, e. g., McLain v. Real Estate Board of New Orleans, 444 U.S. 232, 246 (1980); Burke v. Ford, 389 U.S. 320, 322 (1967). It is not disputed that such an impact is present here.

<sup>6</sup> The Court has failed in the past to define how much market power is necessary, but in the context of this case it is inappropriate to attempt to resolve that question. In International Salt Co. v. United States, supra, the Court assumed that a patent conferred market power and therefore sufficiently established "the tendency of the arrangement to accomplishment of monopoly." Id. at 396. In its next tying case, Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594 (1953), the Court distinguished International Salt in part by finding that there was no market "dominance," 345 U.S., at 610-613, after a careful product market.<sup>7</sup> If the [*38] seller of flour has no [**1572] market power over flour, it will gain none by insisting that its buyers take some sugar as well. See United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, Inc., 429 U.S. 610, 620 (1977) (Fortner II); Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 503-504 (1969) (Fortner I); United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 45, 48, n. 5 (1962); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S., at 6-7. [****63]

[***65] Second, there must be a substantial threat that the tying seller will acquire market power in the tied-product market. No such threat exists if the tied-product market is occupied by many stable sellers who are not likely to be driven out by the tying, or if entry barriers in the tied-product market are low. If, for example, there is an active and vibrant market for sugar -- one with numerous sellers and buyers who do not deal in flour -- the flour monopolist's tying of sugar to flour need not be declared unlawful. Cf. Fortner II, supra, at 617-618, and n. 8; Fortner I, supra, at 498-499; Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S., at 611; Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S., at 305-306; *International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S., [*391] at 396*. If, on the other hand, the tying arrangement is likely to erect significant barriers to entry into the tied-product market, the tie remains suspect. Atlantic Refining Co. v. FTC, 381 U.S. 357, 371 (1965).

[***30] Third, there must be a coherent economic basis for [***66] treating the tying and tied products as distinct. All but the simplest products can be broken down into two or more components that are "tied together" in the final sale. Unless it is to be illegal to sell cars with engines or cameras with lenses, this analysis must be guided by some limiting principle. For products to be treated as distinct, the tied product must, at a minimum, be one that some consumers might wish to purchase separately without also purchasing the tying product.<sup>8</sup> When the tied product has no use other than in conjunction with the tying product, a seller of the tying product can acquire no additional market power by selling the two products together. If sugar is useless to consumers except when used with flour, the flour seller's market power is projected into the sugar market whether or not the two products are actually sold together; the flour seller can exploit what market power it has over flour with or without the tie.<sup>9</sup> The flour seller will therefore have [**1573] little incentive to monopolize the sugar market unless it can produce and consideration of the relevant market. Then, in Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 6-8, 11 (1958), the Court required only a minimal showing of market power. More recently, in Fortner II, supra, the Court conducted a more extensive analysis of whether the tie was actually an exercise of market power, considering such factors as the size and profitability of the firm seeking to impose the tie, the character of the tying product, and the effects of the tie -- the price charged for the products, the number of customers affected, the functional relation between the tied and tying product.

<sup>7</sup> A common misconception has been that a patent or copyright, a high market share, or a unique product that competitors are not able to offer suffices to demonstrate market power. While each of these three factors might help to give market power to a seller, it is also possible that a seller in these situations will have no market power: for example, a patent holder has no market power in any relevant sense if there are close substitutes for the patented product. Similarly, a high market share indicates market power only if the market is properly defined to include all reasonable substitutes for the product. See generally Landes & Posner, Market Power in Antitrust Cases, 94 Harv. L. Rev. 937 (1981).

Nor does any presumption of market power find support in our prior cases. Although United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131 (1948), considered the legality of "block-booking" of motion pictures, which ties the purchase of rights to copyrighted motion pictures to purchase of other motion pictures of the same copyright holder, the Court did not analyze the arrangement with the schema of the tying cases. Rather, the Court borrowed the patent law principle of "patent misuse," which prevents the holder of a patent from using the patent to require his customers to purchase unpatented products. Id., at 156-159. See, e. g., Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U.S. 661, 665 (1944). The "patent misuse" doctrine may have influenced the Court's willingness to strike down the arrangement at issue in International Salt as well, although the Court did not cite the doctrine in that case.

<sup>8</sup> Whether the tying product is one that consumers might wish to purchase without the tied product should be irrelevant. Once it is conceded that the seller has market power over the tying product it follows that the seller can sell the tying product on noncompetitive terms. The injury to consumers does not depend on whether the seller chooses to charge a supercompetitive price, or charges a competitive price but insists that consumers also buy a product that they do not want.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. Areeda, supra n. 4, at 735; Ross, The Single Product Issue in Antitrust Tying: A Functional Approach, 23 Emory L. J. 963, 1010 (1974); Bowman, Tying Arrangements and the Leverage Problem, 67 Yale L. J. 19, 21-23 (1957).

distribute sugar more cheaply than other sugar sellers. And in this unusual case, where flour is monopolized [****67] and sugar is useful only when [*40] used with flour, consumers will suffer no further economic injury by the monopolization of the sugar market.

Even when the tied product does have a use separate from the tying product, it makes little sense to label a package as two products [****68] without also considering the economic justifications for the sale of the package as a unit. When the economic advantages of joint packaging are substantial the package is not appropriately viewed as two products, and that should be the end of the tying inquiry. The lower courts largely have adopted this approach.<sup>10</sup> See, e. g., [***31] Foster v. Maryland State Savings and Loan Assn., 191 U. S. App. D. C. 226, 228-231, 590 F.2d 928, 930-933 (1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1071 (1979); Response of Carolina, Inc. v. Leasco Response, Inc., 537 F.2d 1307, 1330 (CA5 1976); Kugler v. AAMCO Automatic Transmissions, Inc., 460 F.2d 1214 (CA8 1972); ILC Peripherals Leasing Corp. v. International Business Machines Corp., 448 F.Supp. 228, 230 [*41] (ND Cal. 1978); United States v. Jerrold Electronics Corp., 187 F.Supp. 545, 563 (ED Pa. 1960), aff'd per curiam, 365 U.S. 567 (1961).

[****69] These three conditions -- market power in the tying product, a substantial threat of market power in the tied product, and a coherent economic basis for treating the products as distinct -- are only threshold requirements. Under the rule of reason a tie-in may prove acceptable even when all three are met. Tie-ins may entail economic benefits as well as economic harms, and if the threshold requirements are met these benefits should enter the rule-of-reason balance.

"[Tie-ins] may facilitate new entry into fields where established sellers have wedded their customers to them by ties of habit and custom. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 330 (1962). . . . They may permit clandestine price cutting in products which otherwise would have no price competition at all because of fear of retaliation from the few other producers dealing in the market. They may protect the reputation of the tying product if failure to use the tied product in conjunction with it may cause it to malfunction. . . . [Citing] Pick Mfg. Co. v. General Motors Corp., 80 F.2d 641 (C. A. 7th Cir. 1935), aff'd, 299 U.S. 3 (1936). And, [****70] if the tied and tying products are functionally related, they may reduce costs through economies of joint production and distribution." Fortner I, 394 U.S., at 514, n. 9 (WHITE, J., dissenting).

The ultimate decision whether a tie-in is illegal under the antitrust laws should depend upon the demonstrated economic effects [**1574] of the challenged agreement. It may, for example, be entirely innocuous that the seller exploits its control over the tying product to "force" the buyer to purchase the tied product. For when the seller exerts market power only in the tying-product market, it makes no difference to him or his customers whether he exploits that power by raising [*42] the price of the tying product or by "forcing" customers to buy a tied product. See Markovits, Tie-Ins, Reciprocity and the Leverage Theory, 76 Yale L. J. 1397, 1397-1398 (1967); Burstein, A Theory of Full-Line Forcing, 55 Nw. U. L. Rev. 62, 62-63 (1960). On the other hand, tying may make the provision of packages of goods and services more efficient. A tie-in should be condemned only when its anticompetitive impact outweighs its contribution to efficiency.

<sup>10</sup> The examination of the economic advantages of tying may properly be conducted as part of the rule-of-reason analysis, rather than at the threshold of the tying inquiry. This approach is consistent with this Court's occasional references to the problem. The Court has not heretofore had occasion to set forth any general criteria for determining when two apparently separate products are components of a single product for tying analysis. In Times-Picayune Publishing Co., the Court held that advertising space in a morning newspaper was the same product as advertising space in the evening newspaper -- access to readership of the respective newspapers -- because the subscribers had no reason to distinguish among the readers of the two papers. 345 U.S., at 613-616. In Fortner I, the Court, reversing the grant of a motion for summary judgment, rejected the contention that credit could never be separate from the product for whose purchase credit was extended. 394 U.S., at 506-507. The Court disclaimed any determination of "the standards for determining exactly when a transaction involves only a single product." Id., at 507. These cases indicate that consideration of whether a buyer might prefer to purchase one component without the other is one of the factors in tying analysis and, more generally, that economic analysis rather than mere conventional separability into different markets should determine whether one or two products are involved in the alleged tie.

[****71] III

Application of these criteria to the case at hand is straightforward.

[***32] Although the issue is in doubt, we may assume that the hospital does have market power in the provision of hospital services in its area. The District Court found to the contrary, 513 F.Supp. 532, 541 (ED La. 1981), but the Court of Appeals determined that the hospital does possess market power in an appropriately defined market. While appellate courts should normally defer to the district courts' findings on such fact-bound questions,<sup>11</sup> I shall assume for the purposes of this discussion that the Court of Appeals' determination that the hospital does have some power in the provision of hospital services in its local market is accepted.

Second, in light of the hospital's presumed market power, we may also assume that there is a substantial threat that East Jefferson [****72] will acquire market power over the provision of anesthesiological services in its market. By tying the sale of anesthesia to the sale of other hospital services the hospital can drive out other sellers of those services who might otherwise operate in the local market. The hospital may thus gain local market power in the provision of anesthesiology: anesthesiological services offered in the hospital's market, narrowly defined, will be purchased only from Roux, under the hospital's auspices.

[*43] But the third threshold condition for giving closer scrutiny to a tying arrangement is not satisfied here: there is no sound economic reason for treating surgery and anesthesia as separate services. Patients are interested in purchasing anesthesia only in conjunction with hospital services,<sup>12</sup> so the hospital can acquire no additional market power by selling the two services together. Accordingly, the link between the hospital's services and anesthesia administered by Roux will affect neither the amount of anesthesia provided nor the combined price of anesthesia and surgery for those who choose to become the hospital's patients. In these circumstances, anesthesia and surgical [****73] services should probably not be characterized as distinct products for tying purposes.

Even if they are, the tying should not be considered a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act because tying here cannot increase the seller's already absolute power over the volume of production of the tied product, which is an inevitable consequence of the fact that very few patients will choose to undergo surgery without receiving anesthesia. The hospital-Roux contract therefore has little potential to harm the patients. On the other side of the balance, the District Court found, and the Court of Appeals did not dispute, that the tie-in conferred significant benefits upon the hospital and the patients that it served.

The tie-in improves patient care and permits more efficient hospital operation in a number of ways. From the viewpoint of hospital management, [****74] the tie-in ensures 24-hour [**1575] anesthesiology coverage, aids in standardization of procedures and efficient use of equipment, facilitates flexible scheduling of operations, and permits the hospital more effectively [***33] to monitor the quality of anesthesiological services. Further, the tying arrangement is advantageous to patients because, as the District Court found, the closed anesthesiology department [*44] places upon the hospital, rather than the individual patient, responsibility to select the physician who is to provide anesthesiological services. The hospital also assumes the responsibility that the anesthesiologist will be available, will be acceptable to the surgeon, and will provide suitable care to the patient. In assuming these responsibilities -- responsibilities that a seriously ill patient frequently may be unable to discharge -- the hospital provides a valuable service to its patients. And there is no indication that patients were dissatisfied with the quality of anesthesiology that was provided at the hospital or that patients wished to enjoy the services of anesthesiologists other than those that the hospital employed. Given this evidence of [****75] the advantages and effectiveness of the closed anesthesiology department, it is not surprising that, as the District Court found, such arrangements are accepted practice in the majority of hospitals of New Orleans and in the health care industry generally. Such an arrangement, which has little anticompetitive effect and achieves substantial benefits in the provision of care to patients, is hardly one that the antitrust law should condemn.<sup>13</sup> This conclusion reaffirms our threshold determination that the joint provision of hospital services and anesthesiology should not be viewed as involving a tie between distinct products, and therefore should require no additional scrutiny under the antitrust law.

---

<sup>11</sup> See Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 52(a); Inwood Laboratories, Inc. v. Ives Laboratories, Inc., 456 U.S. 844, 855-858 (1982).

<sup>12</sup> While the record appears to be devoid of factual findings on this point the assumption is a safe one, and certainly one that finds no contradiction in the record.

IV

Whether or not the hospital-Roux contract is characterized [****76] as a tie between distinct products, the contract unquestionably does constitute exclusive dealing. Exclusive-dealing arrangements are independently subject to scrutiny under §1 of the Sherman Act, and are also analyzed under the rule of [*45] reason. Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 333-335 (1961).

The hospital-Roux arrangement could conceivably have an adverse effect on horizontal competition among anesthesiologists, or among hospitals. Dr. Hyde, who competes with the Roux anesthesiologists, and other hospitals in the area, who compete with East Jefferson, may have grounds to complain that the exclusive contract stifles horizontal competition and therefore has an adverse, albeit indirect, impact on consumer welfare even if it is not a tie.

Exclusive-dealing arrangements may, in some circumstances, create or extend market power of a supplier or the purchaser party to the exclusive-dealing arrangement, and may thus restrain horizontal competition. Exclusive dealing can have adverse economic consequences by allowing one supplier of goods or services unreasonably to deprive other suppliers of a market for their goods, or by allowing [****77] one buyer of goods unreasonably to deprive other buyers of a needed source of supply. [***34] In determining whether an exclusive-dealing contract is unreasonable, the proper focus is on the structure of the market for the products or services in question -- the number of sellers and buyers in the market, the volume of their business, and the ease with [**1576] which buyers and sellers can redirect their purchases or sales to others. Exclusive dealing is an unreasonable restraint on trade only when a significant fraction of buyers or sellers are frozen out of a market by the exclusive deal. Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293 (1949). When the sellers of services are numerous and mobile, and the number of buyers is large, exclusive-dealing arrangements of narrow scope pose no threat of adverse economic consequences. To the contrary, they may be substantially procompetitive by ensuring stable markets and encouraging long-term, mutually advantageous business relationships.

At issue here is an exclusive-dealing arrangement between a firm of four anesthesiologists and one relatively small hospital. [*46] There is no suggestion [****78] that East Jefferson Hospital is likely to create a "bottleneck" in the availability of anesthesiologists that might deprive other hospitals of access to needed anesthesiological services, or that the Roux associates have unreasonably narrowed the range of choices available to other anesthesiologists in search of a hospital or patients that will buy their services. Cf. Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1 (1945). A firm of four anesthesiologists represents only a very small fraction of the total number of anesthesiologists whose services are available for hire by other hospitals, and East Jefferson is one among numerous hospitals buying such services. Even without engaging in a detailed analysis of the size of the relevant markets we may readily conclude that there is no likelihood that the exclusive-dealing arrangement challenged here will either unreasonably enhance the hospital's market position relative to other hospitals, or unreasonably permit Roux to acquire power relative to other anesthesiologists. Accordingly, this exclusive-dealing arrangement must be sustained under the rule of reason.

V

For these reasons I conclude that the hospital-Roux [****79] contract does not violate §1 of the Sherman Act. Since anesthesia is a service useful to consumers only when purchased in conjunction with hospital services, the arrangement is not properly characterized as a tie between distinct products. It threatens no additional economic harm to consumers beyond that already made possible by any market power that the hospital may possess. The fact that anesthesia is used only together with other hospital services is sufficient, standing alone, to insulate from attack the hospital's decision to tie the two types of service.

---

<sup>13</sup> The Court of Appeals disregarded the benefits of the tie because it found that there were less restrictive means of achieving them. In the absence of an adequate basis to expect any harm to competition from the tie-in, this objection is simply irrelevant.

466 U.S. 2, *46; 104 S. Ct. 1551, **1576; 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, ***34; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 49, ****79

Whether or not this case involves tying of distinct products, the hospital-Roux contract is subject to scrutiny under the rule of reason as an exclusive-dealing arrangement. Plainly, however, the arrangement forecloses only a small [*47] fraction of the markets in which anesthesiologists may sell their services, and a still smaller fraction of the market in which hospitals may secure anesthesiological [***35] services. The contract therefore survives scrutiny under the rule of reason.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit should be reversed, and the case should be remanded for any further [***80] proceedings on respondent's remaining claims. See ante, at 5, n. 2.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade and Unfair Trade Practices 59-72

15 USCS 1

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 30

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Tying arrangements

Annotation References:

What constitutes sufficient economic power to make tying arrangement unlawful restraint of trade violative of 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1). 51 L Ed 2d 826.

What constitutes separate and distinct products or services for purposes of determining whether tying arrangement violates 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) or 3 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 14). 46 ALR Fed 516. [***81]

---

End of Document

Hoover v. Ronwin

Supreme Court of the United States

January 16, 1984, Argued ; May 14, 1984, Decided

No. 82-1474

Reporter

466 U.S. 558 *; 104 S. Ct. 1989 **; 80 L. Ed. 2d 590 ***; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 76 ****; 52 U.S.L.W. 4535; 1984-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P65,980

HOOVER ET AL. v. RONWIN ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 686 F.2d 692, reversed.

Core Terms

---

Sherman Act, sovereign, grading, anticompetitive, immunity, bar examination, recommend, articulated, lawyers, state-action, anti trust law, formula, state action, state bar, competence, regulation, antitrust, state supreme court, antitrust immunity, practice of law, licensing, state policy, conspiracy, restraint of trade, artificially, challenges, restrain, exempt, guild, delegated

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Under the court's rationale in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 \(1943\), when a state legislature adopts legislation, its actions constitute those of the state, and ipso facto are exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Scope, Exemptions

466 U.S. 558, *558; 104 S. Ct. 1989, **1989; 80 L. Ed. 2d 590, ***590; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 76, ****1

A state supreme court, when acting in a legislative capacity, occupies the same position as that of a state legislature. Therefore, a decision of a state supreme court, acting legislatively rather than judicially, is exempt from Sherman Act liability as state action. Closer analysis is required when the activity at issue is not directly that of the legislature or supreme court, but is carried out by others pursuant to state authorization. In such cases, it becomes important to ensure that the anticompetitive conduct of the state's representative is contemplated by the state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN3** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

If the replacing of entirely free competition with some form of regulation or restraint is not authorized or approved by the state then the rationale of *Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 \(1943\)*, is inapposite. As a result, in cases involving the anticompetitive conduct of a nonsovereign state representative the court requires a showing that the conduct is pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy to replace competition with regulation. The court also has found the degree to which the state legislature or supreme court supervises its representative to be relevant to the inquiry. When the conduct is that of the sovereign itself, on the other hand, the danger of unauthorized restraint of trade does not arise. Where the conduct at issue is in fact that of the state legislature or supreme court, the court need not address the issues of "clear articulation" and "active supervision."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Legal Ethics > Practice Qualifications

**HN4** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The regulation of the activities of the bar is at the core of the state's power to protect the public.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN5** Scope, Exemptions

The reason that state action is immune from Sherman Act liability is not that the state has chosen to act in an anticompetitive fashion, but that the state itself has chosen to act. There is no suggestion of a purpose to restrain state action in the Sherman Act's legislative history. The court did not suggest in Parker that a state action is exempt from antitrust liability only if the sovereign acted wisely after full disclosure from its subordinate officers. The only requirement is that the action be that of the state acting as a sovereign.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN6[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Where the action complained of is that of the state itself, the action is exempt from antitrust liability regardless of the state's motives in taking the action.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

State action antitrust immunity held to cover state committee's grading of bar examinations.

Summary

One who failed the Arizona bar examination brought suit in the United States District Court for the District of Arizona against members of the Arizona Supreme Court's Committee on Examinations and Admissions, alleging that the committee members had conspired to restrain trade in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act by artificially reducing the numbers of competing attorneys in the state of Arizona through setting the bar examination grading scale with reference to the number of new attorneys sought desirable rather than with reference to some suitable level of competence. The District Court dismissed the complaint on the grounds that it failed to state a justiciable claim, and that the plaintiff lacked standing. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed, holding that the committee members, in order to secure state action immunity from the federal antitrust laws, must show that they were acting pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy (686 F2d 692).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by Powell, J., expressing the views of Burger, Ch. J., and Brennan and Marshall, JJ., it was held that the state action doctrine of immunity from antitrust liability applied to the committee's grading of the bar examination because the state constitution vested authority in the court to determine who should be admitted to practice law in the state, the court had established the committee to examine and recommend applicants for admission to the state bar, and the court rules delegated examinations and applicant recommendations to the committee while reserving to the court the ultimate authority to grant or deny admission.

Stevens, J., joined by White and Blackmun, JJ., dissented on the ground that the challenged action was that of the committee rather than that of the Arizona Supreme Court.

Rehnquist and O'Connor, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > bar examinations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]!\[\]\(8d1a7a858879e429724662a8297e3c4b_img.jpg\) \[1A\]](#) [LEdHN\[1B\]!\[\]\(098df655fbb4080743c47e1e8e2f9954_img.jpg\) \[1B\]](#) [LEdHN\[1C\]!\[\]\(66bacce17587f9ae9c2c8fa84be98d67_img.jpg\) \[1C\]](#)

The state action doctrine of immunity from Sherman Act liability applies to the grading of bar examinations by a committee selected and appointed by the state supreme court, who are state officers to whom the court has given discretion in compiling and grading the bar examinations, but whose actions remain subject to the court's strict supervisory powers and ultimate full authority, where the supreme court's rules specify the subjects to be tested and the general qualifications required of applicants for the bar, authorize the committee to determine an appropriate grading or scoring system and require the committee to submit the grading formula to the court at least 30 days before the examination, limit the committee's authority after the giving and grading of the examination to making recommendations to the court, and provide a detailed mandatory review procedure by which an aggrieved candidate can challenge the committee's grading formula, with the court itself making the final decision to grant or deny admission to practice. (Stevens, White, and Blackmun, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

466 U.S. 558, *558; 104 S. Ct. 1989, **1989; 80 L. Ed. 2d 590, ***590; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 76, ****1

ATTORNEYS §3 > admission -- regulation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

A state statute providing that the state's highest court may promulgate rules regulating pleading, practice, and procedure in the state courts, and that such rules shall not become effective until 60 days after distribution, does not limit the court's jurisdiction to establish the terms of admission to practice law in the state.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > state legislation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

When a state legislature adopts legislation, its actions constitute those of the state, and ipso facto are exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > court rules -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

A decision of a state supreme court, acting legislatively rather than judicially, is exempt from Sherman Act liability as state action.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > state action -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

When the activity at issue is not directly that of the legislature or supreme court, but is carried out by others pursuant to state authorization, there is no antitrust immunity absent a showing that the conduct is pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy to replace competition with regulation, concerning which the degree to which the state legislature or supreme court supervises its representatives is relevant; when the conduct at issue is in fact that of the state legislature or supreme court, the court need not address the issues of clear articulation and active supervision.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > state action -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

State action is exempt from antitrust liability if the action is that of the state acting as sovereign, regardless of whether the sovereign acted wisely after full disclosure from its subordinate officers.

APPEAL §1104.5 > issue -- petition for rehearing -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B] [7B]

A contention raised for the first time in a response to a motion for rehearing in the United States Court of Appeals may not be raised before the United States Supreme Court on certiorari to review the Court of Appeals' judgment, because the failure to raise the issue in a timely manner precludes the Supreme Court's consideration of it.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > court actions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

A state supreme court's denial of a disappointed bar applicant's petition to review the adverse recommendation of the court's committee on examinations and admissions, and its denial of his two petitions for rehearing, constitute state action by the court within the purview of the state action doctrine of antitrust immunity.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > state -- motive -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

Where the action complained of is that of the state itself, the action is exempt from antitrust liability regardless of the state's motives in taking the action.

Syllabus

---

Respondent Ronwin (hereafter respondent) was an unsuccessful candidate for admission to the Arizona Bar in 1974. Pursuant to the Arizona Constitution, the Arizona Supreme Court has plenary authority to determine admissions to the bar. Under the Arizona Supreme Court Rules in effect in 1974, a Committee on Examinations and Admissions (Committee), appointed by the court, was authorized to examine applicants on specified subjects. The Rules required the Committee to submit its grading formula to the court prior to giving the examination. After grading the examination, the Committee was directed to submit its recommendations for the admission of applicants to the court, which then made the final decision to grant or deny admission to practice. Under the Rules, a rejected applicant was entitled to seek individualized review of the Committee's adverse recommendation [****2] by filing a petition with the court. After the Arizona Supreme Court denied respondent's petition for review, he ultimately filed this action in Federal District Court against the Arizona State Bar, members of the Committee (including petitioners), and others. Respondent alleged that petitioners had conspired to restrain trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act by "artificially reducing the numbers of competing attorneys in the State." He argued that the Committee had set the grading scale on the examination with reference to the number of new attorneys it thought desirable, rather than with reference to some "suitable" level of competence. Petitioners contended that they were immune from antitrust liability under the state-action doctrine of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341. The District Court dismissed the complaint on the ground, inter alia, of failure to state a justiciable claim. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that although petitioners ultimately might be able to show that they were entitled to state-action immunity, the District Court should not have decided the issue on a motion to dismiss.

Held: The District Court properly dismissed [****3] the complaint for failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted. Pp. 567-582.

(a) Under Parker, when a state legislature adopts legislation, its actions constitute those of the State and ipso facto are exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws. A state supreme court, when acting in a legislative capacity, occupies the same position as that of a state legislature for purposes of the state-action doctrine. Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350. When the activity at issue is not directly that of the legislature or supreme court, but is carried out by others pursuant to state authorization, there must be a showing that the challenged conduct is pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy to replace competition with regulation, and the degree to which the state legislature or supreme court supervises its representative may be relevant to the inquiry. However, where the challenged conduct is in fact that of the state legislature or supreme court, the issues of "clear articulation" and "active supervision" need not be addressed. Pp. 567-569.

(b) In this case, the actions of the Committee with regard to the bar examination grading [****4] formula cannot be divorced from the Arizona Supreme Court's exercise of its sovereign powers. Although the Arizona Supreme Court necessarily delegated the administration of the admissions process to the Committee, under the court's Rules the court itself retained the sole authority to determine who should be admitted to the practice of law in Arizona. Thus, the challenged conduct was in reality that of the Arizona Supreme Court and is therefore exempt from Sherman Act liability under the state-action doctrine. Cf. Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, supra. Pp. 569-574.

(c) Bates cannot be distinguished on the ground that the Arizona Supreme Court is not a petitioner in this case and was not named as a defendant in the complaint, or on the ground that Parker is inapplicable because respondent is not challenging the Arizona Supreme Court's conduct. The same situation existed in Bates. As in Bates, the real party in interest is the Arizona Supreme Court. The case law, as well as the State Supreme Court's Rules, makes clear that the court made the final decision on each applicant. To allow Sherman Act plaintiffs to look behind the actions of state [****5] sovereigns and base their claims on perceived illegal conspiracies among the committees, commissions, or others who necessarily must advise the sovereign would emasculate the Parker v. Brown doctrine. Pp. 574-582.

Counsel: Charles R. Hoover, pro se, argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Jefferson L. Lankford and Donn G. Kessler. Philip E. von Ammon filed a brief for the State Bar of Arizona et al. as respondents under this Court's Rule 19.6, in support of petitioners.

Respondent Edward Ronwin argued the cause and filed a brief pro se.

Acting Solicitor General Wallace argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging affirmance. With him on the brief were Assistant Attorney General Baxter, John H. Garvey, Barry Grossman and Nancy C. Garrison.
*

[****6]

Judges: POWELL, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and BRENNAN and MARSHALL, JJ., joined. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which WHITE and BLACKMUN, JJ., joined, post, p. 582. REHNQUIST, J., took no part in the decision of the case. O'CONNOR, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the National Conference of Bar Examiners by Kurt W. Melchior, Allan Ashman, and Jan T. Chilton; and for the State Bar of California by Henry C. Thumann, Herbert M. Rosenthal, Truitt A. Richey, Jr., and Robert M. Sweet.

A brief of amici curiae was filed for the State of Colorado et al. by Stephen H. Sachs, Attorney General of Maryland, Charles O. Monk II and Linda H. Jones, Assistant Attorneys General, Duane Woodard, Attorney General of Colorado, Thomas P. McMahon, First Assistant Attorney General, Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, John R. Perkins, Assistant Attorney General, Robert Abrams, Attorney General of New York, Lloyd Constantine, Assistant Attorney General, William M. Leech, Jr., Attorney General of Tennessee, William J. Haynes, Jr., Deputy Attorney General, Jim Mattox, Attorney General of Texas, David R. Richards, Executive Assistant Attorney General, Bronson C. La Follette, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Michael L. Zaleski, Assistant Attorney General.

Opinion by: POWELL

Opinion

---

[*560] [***594] [**1991] JUSTICE POWELL delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A]This case presents the question whether the state-action doctrine of immunity from actions under the Sherman Act applies to the grading of bar examinations by the Committee appointed by, and according to the Rules of, the Arizona Supreme Court.

|

LEdHN[2A] [↑] [2A]Respondent Ronwin was an unsuccessful candidate for admission to the Bar of Arizona in 1974. Petitioners were four members of the [***595] Arizona Supreme Court's Committee on Examinations and Admissions (Committee). <sup>1</sup> [****9] The Arizona [*561] Constitution vests authority in the court to determine who should be admitted [****7] to practice law in the State. Hunt v. Maricopa County Employees Merit System Comm'n, 127 Ariz. 259, 261-262, 619 P.2d 1036, 1038-1039 (1980); see also Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 32-275 (1976). Pursuant to that authority, the Arizona Supreme Court established the Committee to examine and recommend applicants for admission to the Arizona Bar.<sup>2</sup> The Arizona Supreme Court Rules, adopted by the court and in effect in 1974,<sup>3</sup> [****10] [**1992] delegated certain responsibilities to the Committee while reserving to the court the ultimate authority to grant or deny admission. The [*562] Rules provided that the Committee "shall examine applicants" on subjects enumerated in the Rules and "recommend to [the] court for admission to practice" applicants found to have the requisite qualifications. Rule 28(a) (1973).<sup>4</sup> They also authorized the Committee to

---

<sup>1</sup> Although petitioners represent only four of the seven members of the Committee at the time of the February 1974 bar examination, Ronwin named all seven members in his original complaint. Apparently, three of the original defendants to this action did not join, for reasons not apparent, the petition for certiorari in this Court. There is no claim that these members of the Committee failed to participate in or dissented from the actions of the Committee.

<sup>2</sup> The procedure in Arizona is not unique to that State. In recent years, the burgeoning number of candidates for admission to practice law and the increased complexity of the subjects that must be tested have combined to make grading and administration of bar examinations a burdensome task. As a result, although the highest court in each State retains ultimate authority for granting or denying admission to the bar, each of those courts has delegated to a subordinate committee responsibility for preparing, grading, and administering the examination. See F. Klein, S. Leleiko, & J. Mavity, Bar Admission Rules and Student Practice Rules 30-33 (1978).

<sup>3</sup> The parties disagree on the wording of the Rules at the time Ronwin took the bar examination. The disagreement centers around the effective date of some amendments promulgated in 1974. Petitioners contend that the amendments took effect before Ronwin took the February 1974 bar examination; Ronwin submits that they became effective in March 1974. Ronwin concedes that the Supreme Court order amending the Rules provided that the amendments would become effective in January 1974. Notwithstanding this directive, he argues that Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12-109 (1982) provided that amendments to the Supreme Court's Rules may not become effective until 60 days after publication and distribution. Since the Supreme Court released the amendments on January 11, Ronwin submits that the earliest possible effective date was March 12.

LEdHN[2B] [↑] [2B]

Ronwin has misread § 12-109. That section only applied to Rules that regulated pleading, practice, and procedure in judicial proceedings in state courts. By its terms, the statute did not limit the jurisdiction of the Arizona Supreme Court to establish the terms of admission to practice law in the State. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 32-275 (1976).

<sup>4</sup> Rule 28(a) provided:

"Examination and Admission. . . . The examination and admission of applicants for membership in the State Bar of Arizona shall conform to this Rule. For such purpose, a committee on examinations and admissions consisting of seven active members of the state bar shall be appointed by this court. . . . The committee shall examine applicants and recommend to this court for

"utilize such grading or scoring system as the Committee deems appropriate in its discretion,"<sup>5</sup> [****11] and to use the Multi-State Bar Examination. Rule 28(c) [***596] VII A (1973), as amended, 110 Ariz. xxvii, xxxii (1974). Even with respect to "grading or scoring," the court did not delegate final authority to the [****8] Committee. The Rules directed the Committee to file the formula it intended to use in grading the examination with the court 30 days prior to giving the examination.<sup>6</sup> Also, after grading the examination and compiling the list of those applicants whom it considered [*563] qualified to practice law in the State, the Committee was directed to submit its recommendations to the court for final action. Rule 28(a). Under the Rules and Arizona case law, only the court had authority to admit or deny admission.<sup>7</sup> Finally, a rejected applicant was entitled to seek individualized review of an adverse recommendation of the Committee by filing a petition directly with the court.<sup>8</sup> [**1993] The [*564] Rules required the Committee to file a response to such a petition and called for a prompt and fair decision on the applicant's claims by the Arizona Supreme Court.

admission to practice applicants who are found by the committee to have the necessary qualifications and to fulfill the requirements prescribed by the rules of the board of governors as approved by this court respecting examinations and admissions. . . . The court will then consider the recommendations and either grant or deny admission."

<sup>5</sup> According to Ronwin's complaint, the Committee announced before the February examination that the passing grade on the test would be 70, but it assigned grades using a scaled scoring system. Under this system, the examinations were graded first without reference to any grading scale. Thus, each examination was assigned a "raw score" based on the number of correct answers. The Committee then converted the raw score into a score on a scale of zero to 100 by establishing the raw score that would be deemed the equivalent of "seventy." See n. 19, infra.

<sup>6</sup> Rule 28(c) VII B provided:

"The Committee on Examinations and Admissions will file with the Supreme Court thirty (30) days before each examination the formula upon which the Multi-State Bar Examination results will be applied with the other portions of the total examination results. In addition the Committee will file with the Court thirty (30) days before each examination the proposed formula for grading the entire examination." 110 Ariz., at xxxii.

<sup>7</sup> See n. 4, supra; Application of Courtney, 83 Ariz. 231, 233, 319 P. 2d 991, 993 (1957) ("[This] court may in the exercise of its inherent powers, admit to the practice of law with or without favorable action by the Committee"); Hackin v. Lockwood, 361 F.2d 499, 501 (CA9) ("[We] find the power to grant or deny admission is vested solely in the Arizona Supreme Court"), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 960 (1966). See also Application of Burke, 87 Ariz. 336, 351 P. 2d 169 (1960).

<sup>8</sup> Rule 28(c) XII F provided:

"1. An applicant aggrieved by any decision of the Committee

"(A) Refusing permission to take an examination upon the record;

"(B) Refusing permission to take an examination after hearing;

"(C) For any substantial cause other than with respect to a claimed failure to award a satisfactory grade upon an examination;

"may within 20 days after such occurrence file a verified petition with this Court for a review. . . .

"2. A copy of said petition shall be promptly served upon the chairman or some member of the Committee and the Committee shall within 15 days of such service transmit said applicant's file and a response to the petition fully advising this Court as to the Committee's reasons for its decision and admitting or contesting any assertions made by applicant in said petition. Thereupon this Court shall consider the papers so filed together with the petition and response and make such order, hold such hearings and give such directions as it may in its discretion deem best adapted to a prompt and fair decision as to the rights and obligations of applicant judged in the light of the Committee's and this Court's obligation to the public to see that only qualified applicants are admitted to practice as attorneys at law." 110 Ariz., at xxxv-xxxvi.

Under Rule 28(c) XII G, an applicant who wished to challenge the grading of an answer to a particular question first had to submit his claim to the Committee for review. The applicant was entitled to request Arizona Supreme Court review only if three members of the Committee agreed with the applicant that his answer had not received the grade it deserved. The Rule also provided that the court could grant or deny such a request in its discretion. Id., at xxxvi-xxxvii.

[****12] Ronwin took the Arizona bar examination [***597] in February 1974.<sup>9</sup> He failed to pass, the Committee recommended to the Arizona Supreme Court that it deny him admission to the Bar, and the court accepted the recommendation. Ronwin petitioned the court to review the manner in which the Committee conducted and graded the examination. In particular, he alleged that the Committee had failed to provide him with model answers to the examination, had failed to file its grading formula with the court within the time period specified in the Rules, had applied a "draconian" pass-fail process, had used a grading formula that measured group, rather than individual, performance, had failed to test applicants on an area of the law on which the Rules required testing, and had conducted the examination in a "pressure-cooker atmosphere." He further alleged that the Committee's conduct constituted an abuse of discretion, deprived him of due process and equal protection, and violated the Sherman Act.<sup>10</sup> The court denied his petition and two subsequent petitions for rehearing.<sup>11</sup> Ronwin then sought review of the Arizona [*565] Supreme Court's action in this Court. We denied his petition [****13] for certiorari. 419 U.S. 967 (1974).

[****14] Some four years later, in March 1978, Ronwin filed this action in the United States District Court for the District of Arizona. Petitioners were named as defendants in the suit in their capacity as individual members of the Committee.<sup>12</sup> Ronwin renewed his complaint that petitioners had conspired to restrain trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 1, by "artificially reducing the numbers of competing attorneys in the State of Arizona."<sup>13</sup> [****16] The gist [**1994] of Ronwin's [***598] argument is that the Committee of which petitioners constituted a majority had set the grading scale on the February examination with reference to the number of new attorneys they thought desirable, rather than with reference to some "suitable" level of competence. Petitioners moved to dismiss the complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim upon which [*566] relief could be granted, and under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(1\) for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction. In particular, petitioners alleged that, acting as a Committee, they were immune from antitrust liability under Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 \(1943\). [****15] Petitioners also argued that Ronwin suffered no damage from the conduct of which he complained and that the Committee's conduct had not affected interstate

<sup>9</sup> The Arizona Supreme Court Rules instructed the Committee to give two examinations each year -- one in July and one in February. Id., at xxxii.

<sup>10</sup> He also alleged that the Committee had violated his constitutional rights by refusing, after the grades had been released, to provide him with the questions and answers to the Multi-State portion of the examination.

<sup>11</sup> Rule 28(c) XII F 2 provides, with respect to the petition of an aggrieved applicant, that the Arizona Supreme Court "shall consider" the petition and response, and "hold such hearings and give such directions as it may in its discretion deem best adapted to a prompt and fair decision." 110 Ariz., at xxxvi. Ronwin makes no claim that the court failed to comply with its Rules, although -- of course -- he disagrees with the court's judgment denying his petition. Thus, the court's denial of his petition must be construed as a consideration and rejection of the arguments made in the petition -- including Ronwin's claim that the Sherman Act was violated.

<sup>12</sup> Also named as defendants were petitioners' spouses and the Arizona State Bar. The District Court dismissed the suit as to these defendants and the Court of Appeals affirmed the dismissal. Ronwin v. State Bar of Arizona, 686 F.2d 692, 694, n. 1 \(CA9 1981\). Ronwin challenged this aspect of the Court of Appeals' opinion in a conditional cross-petition for certiorari. We denied the cross-petition. Ronwin v. Hoover, 461 U.S. 938 \(1983\).

<sup>13</sup> The averment of a Sherman Act violation in Ronwin's complaint is as follows:

"The aforesaid conduct [the "scoring system or formula," see n. 4, supra], which the Defendants entered into as a conspiracy or combination, was intended to and did result in a restraint of trade and commerce among the Several States by artificially reducing the numbers of competing attorneys in the State of Arizona; and, in further consequence of said conduct, Plaintiff was among those artificially prevented from entering into competition as an attorney in the State of Arizona and thereby further deprived of the right to compete as an attorney for the legal business deriving from or involving the Several States of the United States, including Arizona." App. 10-11.

The adequacy of these conclusory averments of intent is far from certain. The Court of Appeals, however, found the complaint sufficient. Accordingly, we address the "state action" issue.

466 U.S. 558, *566; 104 S. Ct. 1989, **1994; 80 L. Ed. 2d 590, ***598; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 76, ****15

commerce. The District Court granted petitioners' motion after finding that the complaint failed to state a justiciable claim, that the court had no jurisdiction, and that Ronwin lacked standing.<sup>14</sup>

The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed the dismissal of the complaint. Ronwin v. State Bar of Arizona, 686 F.2d 692 \(1982\). The Court of Appeals read the District Court's ruling that Ronwin had failed to state a claim as a holding that bar examination grading procedures are immune from federal antitrust laws under Parker v. Brown. It reasoned that, although petitioners ultimately might be able to show that they are entitled to state-action immunity, the District Court should not have decided this issue on a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion. See 686 F.2d, at 698. The court stated that under Parker and its progeny, the mere fact that petitioners were state officials appointed by the Arizona Supreme Court was insufficient to confer [****17] state-action immunity on them. 686 F.2d, at 697. Relying on its reading of several recent opinions of this Court,<sup>15</sup> the Court of Appeals noted that the petitioners might be able to invoke the state-action [*567] doctrine, but reasoned that they first must show that they were acting pursuant to a "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed . . . state policy." Id., at 696. Therefore, dismissal for failure to state a claim was improper. The court also held that Ronwin had standing to bring this action. The case was remanded to the District Court for further action.<sup>16</sup> [****18] We granted certiorari to review the Court of Appeals' application of the state-action doctrine. 461 U.S. 926 (1983). We now reverse.

[***599] II

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [↑] [3]The starting point in any analysis involving the state-action doctrine is the reasoning of Parker v. Brown. In Parker, \*\*1995 the Court considered the antitrust implications of the California Agriculture Prorate Act -- a state statute that restricted competition among food producers in California. Relying on principles of federalism and state sovereignty, the Court declined to construe the Sherman Act as prohibiting the anticompetitive actions of a State acting through its legislature:

"We find nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature. In a dual system of government in which, under the Constitution, the states are sovereign, save only as Congress may constitutionally subtract from their authority, an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and [****19] agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress." 317 U.S., at 350-351.

Thus, HN1 [↑] under the Court's rationale in Parker, when a state legislature adopts legislation, its actions constitute those of [*568] the State, see id., at 351, and ipso facto are exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws.

<sup>14</sup> The District Court also denied Ronwin's motion requesting the trial judge to recuse himself. The Court of Appeals held that the District Court had not abused its discretion in denying the motion. 686 F.2d, at 701. We declined to review that finding. Ronwin v. Hoover, supra.

<sup>15</sup> Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40 \(1982\); California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97 \(1980\); New Motor Vehicle Board of California v. Orrin W. Fox Co., 439 U.S. 96 \(1978\); Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389 \(1978\).

<sup>16</sup> The Court of Appeals also held that the District Court should give Ronwin the opportunity to show that petitioners' actions sufficiently affected interstate commerce to fall within the jurisdiction of the Sherman Act. Petitioners did not seek review of this holding.

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5] In the years since the decision in Parker, the Court has had occasion in several cases to determine the scope of the state-action doctrine. It has never departed, however, from Parker's basic reasoning. Applying the Parker doctrine in *Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350, 360 \(1977\)*, the Court held that HN2 [a state supreme Court, when acting in a legislative capacity, occupies the same position as that of a state legislature. Therefore, a decision of a state supreme [****20] court, acting legislatively rather than judicially, is exempt from Sherman Act liability as state action. See also *Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 790 \(1975\)*. Closer analysis is required when the activity at issue is not directly that of the legislature or supreme court, <sup>17</sup> but is carried out by others pursuant to state authorization. See, e. g., *Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40 \(1982\)* \(municipal regulation of cable television industry\); *California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97 \(1980\)* \(private price-fixing arrangement authorized by State\); *New Motor Vehicle Board of California v. Orrin W. Fox Co., 439 U.S. 96 \(1978\)* \(new franchises controlled by state administrative board\). In such cases, it becomes important to ensure that the anticompetitive conduct of the State's representative was contemplated by the State. *Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 413-415 \(1978\)* (opinion of BRENNAN, J.); see *New Mexico v. American Petrofina, Inc., 501 F.2d 363, 369-370 \(CA9 \*\*\*6001 1974\)*. [****21] HN3 [If the replacing of entirely free competition with some form of regulation or restraint was not authorized or approved by the State then the rationale of Parker is inapposite. As a result, in cases [*569] involving the anticompetitive conduct of a nonsovereign state representative the Court has required a showing that the conduct is pursuant to a "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy" to replace competition with regulation. *Boulder, supra, at 54*. The Court also has found the degree to which the state legislature or supreme court supervises its representative to be relevant to the inquiry. See *Midcal Aluminum, supra, at 105*; *Goldfarb, supra, at 791*. When the conduct is that of the sovereign itself, on the other hand, the danger of unauthorized restraint of trade does not arise. Where the conduct at issue is in fact that of the state legislature or supreme court, we need not address the issues of "clear articulation" and "active supervision."

[****22] [**1996] Pursuant to the State Constitution, the Arizona Supreme Court has plenary authority to determine admissions to the Bar.<sup>18</sup> Therefore, the first critical step in our analysis must be to determine whether the conduct challenged here is that of the court. If so, the Parker doctrine applies and Ronwin has no cause of action under the Sherman Act.

[****23] III

At issue here is the Arizona plan of determining admissions to the bar, and petitioners' use thereunder of a grading formula. Ronwin has alleged that petitioners conspired to use [*570] that formula to restrain competition among lawyers.<sup>19</sup> His argument ***601 is that, although petitioners qualified as state officials in their capacity as <sup>17</sup> This case does not present the issue whether the Governor of a State stands in the same position as the state legislature and supreme court for purposes of the state-action doctrine.

<sup>18</sup> Ronwin does not dispute that regulation of the bar is a sovereign function of the Arizona Supreme Court. In *Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350, 361 \(1977\)*, the Court noted that HN4 [the regulation of the activities of the bar is at the core of the State's power to protect the public.] Likewise, in *Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 792 \(1975\)*, the Court stated: "The interest of the States in regulating lawyers is especially great since lawyers are essential to the primary governmental function of administering justice, and have historically been 'officers of the courts.'" See also *In re Griffiths, 413 U.S. 717, 722-723 \(1973\)*. Few other professions are as close to "the core of the State's power to protect the public." Nor is any trade or other profession as "essential to the primary governmental function of administering justice."

<sup>19</sup> Ronwin's complaint, see *supra, at 565*, focuses on the grading formula as the means used to "restrain competition." He describes it as follows:

"The Defendants did not grade on a Zero to One Hundred (0 to 100) scale; rather they used a "raw score" system. After the raw scores were known, the Defendants picked a particular raw score value as equal to the passing grade of Seventy (70). Thereby members of the Committee, they acted independently of the Arizona Supreme Court. As a result, the argument continues, the Committee's actions are those of a Supreme Court representative, rather than those of the court itself, and therefore are not entitled to immunity.

[****24] We cannot agree that the actions of the Committee can be divorced from the Supreme Court's exercise of its sovereign powers. The Court's opinion in Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S., at 360, is directly pertinent.

<sup>20</sup> [****26] In Bates, two [*571] attorneys were suspended temporarily from the practice of law in Arizona for violating a disciplinary rule of the American Bar Association (ABA) that prohibited most lawyer advertising. The Arizona Supreme Court had incorporated the ABA's advertising prohibition [**1997] into the local Supreme Court Rules.<sup>21</sup> Those Rules also provided that the Board of Governors of the Arizona State Bar Association, acting on the recommendation of a local Bar disciplinary committee, could recommend the censure or suspension of a member of the Bar for violating the advertising ban. Under the Rules, the Board of Governor's recommendation automatically would become effective if the aggrieved party did not object to the recommendation within 10 days. If the party objected, he was entitled to have the Arizona Supreme Court review the findings and recommendations of the Board of Governors and the local committee. The plaintiffs [****25] challenged the Rule on Sherman Act and First Amendment grounds. This Court ultimately concluded that the ABA Rule violated the First Amendment, but it first held that the State Bar Association was immune from Sherman Act liability because its enforcement of the disciplinary Rules was state action. In reaching this conclusion, the Court noted that, although only the State Bar was named as a defendant in the suit, the suspended attorneys' complaint was with the State. The Court stated:

"[The] appellants' claims are against the State. The Arizona Supreme Court is the real party in interest; it adopted the rules, and it is the ultimate trier of fact and law in the enforcement process. In [***602] re Wilson, 106 [*572] Ariz. 34, 470 P. 2d 441 (1970). Although the State Bar plays a part in the enforcement of the rules, its role is completely defined by the court; the [State Bar] acts as the agent of the court under its continuous supervision." Id., at 361.

The opinion and holding in Bates with respect to the state-action doctrine were unanimous.

the number of Bar applicants who would receive a passing grade depended upon the exact raw score value chosen as equal to Seventy (70); rather than achievement by each Bar applicant of a pre-set standard." App. 10.

Apparently Ronwin was trying to describe a "procedure commonly known as test standardization" or "scaled scoring." See Brief for State Bar of California as Amicus Curiae 7. This method of scoring, viewed as the fairest by the Educational Testing Service (ETS) for the Multistate Bar Examination (MBE), see S. Duhl, The Bar Examiners' Handbook 61-62 (2d ed. 1980), published by The National Conference of Bar Examiners, is described as follows:

"In addition to the 'raw' scores (number of correct answers), ETS reports a 'scaled' score for each applicant. In a series of tests, such as the MBE, which are intended to measure levels of competence, it is important to have a standardized score which represents the same level of competence from test to test. The raw score is not dependable for this purpose since the level of difficulty varies from test to test. It is not possible to draft two tests of exactly the same level of difficulty. Scaled scores are obtained by reusing some questions from earlier tests which have been standardized. A statistical analysis of the scores on the reused questions determines how many points are to be added to or subtracted from the raw score to provide an applicant's scaled score. Thus a particular scaled score represents the same level of competence from examination to examination."

<sup>20</sup> Although the Court of Appeals recognized the similarity between this case and Bates, it found the facts in Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, supra, to be more analogous. The court's reliance on Goldfarb was misplaced. As the dissent of Judge Ferguson noted, Goldfarb involved procedures that were not approved by the State Supreme Court or the state legislature. In contrast, petitioners here performed functions required by the Supreme Court Rules and that are not effective unless approved by the court itself.

<sup>21</sup> Rule 29(a) of the Supreme Court of Arizona provided: "The duties and obligations of members [of the Bar] shall be as prescribed by the Code of Professional Responsibility of the American Bar Association. . . ."

LEdHN[1B] [↑] [1B]The logic of the Court's holding in Bates applies with greater force to the Committee and its actions. The petitioners here were each members of an official body selected and appointed by the Arizona Supreme Court. Indeed, it is conceded that they were state officers. The court gave the members of the Committee discretion in compiling and grading the bar examination, but retained strict supervisory powers and ultimate full authority over its actions. The Supreme Court Rules specified the subjects to be tested, and the general qualifications required of applicants for the Bar. With respect to the specific conduct of which Ronwin complained -- establishment of an examination grading formula -- the Rules were explicit. Rule 28(c) VII A authorized the Committee to determine an appropriate "grading [****27] or scoring system" and Rule 28(c) VII B required the Committee to submit its grading formula to the Supreme Court at least 30 days prior to the examination.<sup>22</sup> After giving and grading the examination, the Committee's authority was limited to [*573] making recommendations to the Supreme Court. The court itself made the final decision to grant or deny admission to practice. Finally, Rule 28(c) XII F provided for a detailed mandatory review procedure by which an aggrieved candidate could challenge the Committee's grading formula.<sup>23</sup> [****29] In light of these provisions [**1998] and the Court's holding and reasoning in Bates, we conclude that, although the Arizona Supreme Court necessarily delegated the administration of the admissions process to the Committee, the court itself approved the particular grading formula and retained the sole authority to determine who should be admitted to the practice of law in Arizona. Thus, the conduct that Ronwin challenges was in reality that of the Arizona Supreme Court. See Bates, 433 U.S., at 361. It therefore is exempt from Sherman [***603] Act liability under the state-action doctrine of Parker v. Brown. [****28]<sup>24</sup>

[****30]

[*574] LEdHN[6] [↑] [6]LEdHN[7A] [↑] [7A]At oral argument, Ronwin suggested that we should not attribute to the Arizona Supreme Court an intent to approve the anticompetitive activity of petitioners in the absence of proof that the court was aware that petitioners had devised a grading formula the purpose of which was to limit the number of lawyers in the State. This argument misconceives the basis of the state-action doctrine. HN5 [↑] The reason that state action is immune from Sherman Act liability is not that the State has chosen to act in an anticompetitive fashion, but that the State itself has chosen to act. "There is no suggestion of a purpose to restrain

<sup>22</sup> Following petitioners' request for a rehearing in the Court of Appeals, the parties debated whether and to what extent the Committee complied with this Rule. For purposes of determining the application of the state-action doctrine, it is sufficient that the Rules contained an enforceable provision calling for submission of the grading formula. Moreover, the Rules contained a review procedure that allowed an aggrieved applicant to bring to the Supreme Court's attention any failure of the Committee to comply with the filing requirements in Rule 28(c) VII B. The record reveals that Ronwin, in fact, alleged in his petition for review in the Arizona Supreme Court that the Committee had not filed its grading formula within the time provided in the Rule. The court rejected the petition. See supra, at 564.

<sup>23</sup> This procedure allowed a disappointed applicant to challenge "[for] any substantial cause" a Committee decision other than "a claimed failure to award a satisfactory grade." Rule 28(c) XII F 1(C). As we have noted, Ronwin took full advantage of Rule 28(c) XII F 1(C) in his challenge to the action of the Committee and the court. See supra, at 564. He did not, however, challenge the particular grade assigned to any of his answers.

<sup>24</sup> The Solicitor General, on behalf of the United States as amicus, contends that our recent opinion in Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40 (1982), precludes a finding that the Committee's action was attributable to the Arizona Supreme Court. Contrary to the Solicitor General's suggestion, our reasoning in Boulder supports the conclusion we reach today. In Boulder, we reiterated the analysis of JUSTICE BRENNAN's opinion in Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389 (1978). We noted that the state-action doctrine is grounded in concepts of federalism and state sovereignty. 455 U.S., at 54. We stated that Parker did not confer state-action immunity automatically on municipalities, because the actions of a municipality are not those of the State itself. 455 U.S., at 53. Under our holding in Boulder, municipalities may be eligible for state-action immunity, but only "to the extent that they [act] pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy." Id., at 54; see also Lafayette, supra, at 411-412 (opinion of BRENNAN, J.). Consistent with our reasoning in Boulder, our decision today rests on our conclusion that the conduct Ronwin complains of clearly is the action of the State. Bates is explicit authority for this conclusion.

state action in the [Sherman] Act's legislative history." Parker, 317 U.S., at 351. The Court did not suggest in Parker, nor has it suggested since, that a state action is exempt from antitrust liability only if the sovereign acted wisely after full disclosure from its subordinate officers. [****31] The only requirement is that the action be that of "the State acting as a sovereign." Bates, supra, at 360. The action at issue here, whether anticompetitive or not, clearly was that of the Arizona Supreme Court.<sup>25</sup>

[****32] IV

The dissenting opinion of JUSTICE STEVENS would, if it were adopted, alter dramatically the doctrine of state-action immunity. We therefore reply directly. The dissent concedes, as it must, that "the Arizona Supreme Court exercises sovereign power with respect to admission to the Arizona Bar," and "if the challenged conduct were that of the court, it would be immune under Parker." Post, at 588. [***604] It also is conceded [*575] that the members of the court's Committee on Examinations and [**1999] Admissions -- petitioners here -- are state officers. These concessions are compelled by the Court's decision in Bates, and we think they dispose of Ronwin's contentions.

In its effort to distinguish Bates, the dissent notes that the Arizona Supreme Court "is not a petitioner [in this case], nor was it named as a defendant in respondent's complaint," and "because respondent is not challenging the conduct of the Arizona Supreme Court, Parker [v. Brown] is simply inapplicable." Post, at 588, 589. The dissent fails to recognize that this is precisely the situation that existed in Bates. In that case, that case, the Supreme Court of Arizona [****33] was not a party in this Court, nor was it named as a defendant by the complaining lawyers. Yet, in our unanimous opinion, we concluded that the claims by appellants in Bates were "against the State," and that the "Arizona Supreme Court [was] the real party in interest; it adopted the rules, and it [was] the ultimate trier of fact and law in the enforcement process." Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, supra, at 361; see supra, at 571.<sup>26</sup>

The core argument of the dissent is that Ronwin has challenged only the action of the Committee and not that of the Arizona Supreme Court. It states that "there is no claim that the court directed [the [****34] Committee] to artificially reduce the number of lawyers in Arizona," and therefore the Committee cannot assert the sovereign's antitrust immunity. Post, at 592 (emphasis in original). The dissent does not acknowledge that, despite as they might, the Committee could not reduce the number of lawyers in Arizona.<sup>27</sup> Only [*576] the Arizona Supreme Court had the authority to grant or deny admission to practice in the State.<sup>28</sup> As in Bates "[t]he Arizona Supreme Court is the real party in interest." 433 U.S., at 361.

<sup>25</sup> Our holding that petitioners' conduct is exempt from liability under the Sherman Act precludes the need to address petitioners' contention that they are immune from liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657 \(1965\); Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127 \(1961\).

[LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

We also do not address Ronwin's contention that the Arizona method of limiting bar admissions violates the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. As Ronwin concedes, he made this argument for the first time in his response to petitioners' motion for rehearing in the Court of Appeals. His failure to raise this issue in a timely manner precludes our consideration.

<sup>26</sup> The authority of the Arizona Supreme Court to determine who shall be admitted to the Bar, and by what procedure, is even more clearly defined than the role of that court in Bates. In that case, State Bar Committee members were not appointed by the court, and the court did not expressly accept or reject each of the Committee's actions.

<sup>27</sup> Under Arizona law, the responsibility is on the court -- and only on it -- to admit or deny admission to the practice of law. This Court certainly cannot assume that the Arizona court, in the exercise of its specifically reserved power under its Rules, invariably agrees with its Committee. Even if it did, however, it would be action of the sovereign.

<sup>28</sup> Even if Committee members had decided to grade more strictly, under the grading formula approved by the court, for the purpose of reducing the total number of lawyers admitted to practice, the court knew and approved the number of applicants. This was the definitive action. There is nothing in the state-action doctrine, or in antitrust law, that permits us to question the motives for the sovereign action of the court.

[****35] The dissent largely ignores the Rules of the Arizona Supreme Court.<sup>29</sup> A summary of the court's commands suggests why the dissent apparently prefers not to address [***605] them. The Arizona Supreme Court established the Committee for the sole purpose of examining and recommending applicants for admission to the Bar. Rule 28(a). Its Rules provided: "The examination and admission of applicants . . . shall conform to this Rule. . . . The committee shall examine applicants and recommend [qualified applicants] to this court. . . . Two examinations will be held each year. . . ." Ibid.; Rule 28(c) VI (1973), as amended, 110 Ariz. xxxii (1974) (emphasis added). The Rules also specified the subjects to be tested and required the Committee to submit its grading formula to the court in advance of each examination. Rule 28(c) VII (1973), as amended, 110 Ariz. xxxii (1974).

[****36] LEdHN/8 [8]As a further safeguard, a disappointed applicant was accorded the right to seek individualized review by filing a petition directly with the court -- as Ronwin did unsuccessfully. [**2000] Pursuant to Rule 28(c) XII F, Ronwin filed a complaint with the court that contained a plethora of charges [*577] including the substance of the complaint in this case. The court denied his petition as well as two petitions for rehearing. See supra, at 564. Thus, again there was state action by the court itself explicitly rejecting Ronwin's claim.<sup>30</sup> [****38] Finally, the [**578] case law, as well as the Rules, makes clear that the Arizona Supreme Court made the final decision [***606] on each applicant.<sup>31</sup> [****39] See n. 6, supra. Unlike the actions of the Virginia State

<sup>29</sup> The dissent recites the provisions of the Rules regulating the composition and origin of the Committee and notes that the Rules require the Committee to recommend qualified applicants to the Supreme Court. Post, at 586. The dissent does not mention, however, several critical provisions, summarized in the text infra, that articulate the Arizona Supreme Court's intent to retain full authority over, and responsibility for, the bar admissions process.

<sup>30</sup> The dissent states, post, at 591-592, n. 15, that we "advanced the theory that the relevant 'state action'" was the State Supreme Court's denial of Ronwin's postexamination petitions filed with the court. (Emphasis supplied.) The dissent is inaccurate. Our holding is based on the court's direct participation in every stage of the admissions process, including retention of the sole authority to admit or deny. The critical action in this case was the court's decision to deny Ronwin admission to the Bar. The dissent's suggestion that the Arizona Supreme Court never made this decision simply ignores Arizona law. The Arizona Supreme Court has stated on several occasions that it, and not the Committee, makes the decision to admit or deny admission to applicants. In Application of Burke, 87 Ariz., at 338, 351 P. 2d, at 171-172, the court stated:

"[It] is not the function of the committee to grant or deny admission to the bar. That power rests solely in the Supreme Court. . . . The committee's bounden duty is to 'put up the red flag' as to those applicants about whom it has some substantial doubt. If such doubt exists, then its recommendation should be withheld. The applicant may feel that any questions raised as to his character or qualifications are without substance. In such case, he may apply directly to this court for admission. In the final analysis -- it being a judicial function -- we have the duty of resolving those questions, one way or the other. . . ." (Emphasis supplied.)

In a similar vein, the court stated in Application of Levine, 97 Ariz. 88, 92, 397 P. 2d 205, 207 \(1964\):

"If the committee fails to recommend the admission of an applicant, he may challenge the committee's conclusions by an original application to this Court. . . . This Court will direct the committee to show cause why the applicant has been refused a favorable recommendation and on the applicant's petition and the committee's response, using our independent judgment, de novo determine whether the necessary qualifications have been shown."

See also Application of Kiser, 107 Ariz. 326, 327, 487 P. 2d 393, 394 \(1971\).

Thus, the Arizona Supreme Court repeatedly has affirmed its responsibility as the final decisionmaker on admissions to the Bar. The dissent, relying on the absence in the record before us of a specific order of the court at the time Ronwin was not admitted, nevertheless would have us hold that the Committee rather than the court made the final decisions as to admissions and denials of the applicants who took the examination in February 1974. If the dissent were correct, there would have been no valid action with respect to those who took that examination since, under Arizona law, the Committee had no independent power to act. Ronwin's complaint makes no such extreme averment, and certainly this Court will not assume that the Supreme Court of Arizona failed to discharge its responsibility. Moreover, as we have noted, supra, at 576-577, Ronwin's claims were specifically rejected by the court.

466 U.S. 558, *578; 104 S. Ct. 1989, **2000; 80 L. Ed. 2d 590, ***606; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 76, ****39

Bar in Goldfarb, the actions of the Committee are governed by the court's Rules. Those Rules carefully reserve to the court the authority to make the decision to admit or deny, and that [**2001] decision is the critical state action here.<sup>32</sup> [****40] See Bates, 433 U.S., at 359-361. Our opinion, therefore, [****37] also is wholly consistent with the Court's reasoning in Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389 \(1978\) and Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40 \(1982\).<sup>33</sup>

[****41] [LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]Our [***607] holding is derived directly from the reasoning of Parker and Bates. Those cases unmistakably hold that, HN6 where the action complained of -- here the failure to admit [*580] Ronwin to the Bar -- was that of the State itself, the action is exempt from antitrust liability regardless of the State's motives in taking the action. Application of that standard to the facts of this case requires that we reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

The reasoning adopted by the dissent would allow Sherman Act plaintiffs to look behind the actions of state sovereigns and base their claims on perceived conspiracies to restrain trade among the committees, commissions, or others who necessarily must advise the sovereign. Such a holding would emasculate the Parker v. Brown doctrine. For example, if a state legislature enacted a law based on studies performed, or advice given, by an <sup>31</sup> It is true, of course, that framing examination questions and particularly the grading of the examinations involved the exercise of judgment and discretion by the examiners. This discretion necessarily was delegated to the Arizona Committee, just as it must be unless state supreme courts themselves undertake the grading. By its Rules, the Arizona Supreme Court gave affirmative directions to the Committee with respect to every nondiscretionary function, reserving the ultimate authority to control the number of lawyers admitted to the Arizona Bar. Ronwin avers a "conspiracy to limit the number" of applicants admitted. He makes no claim of animus or discriminatory intent with respect to himself.

Ronwin apparently would have us believe that grading examinations is an exact science that separates the qualified from the unqualified applicants. Ideally, perhaps, this should be true. But law schools and bar examining committees must identify a grade below which students and applicants fail to pass. No setting of a passing grade or adoption of a grading formula can eliminate -- except on multiple choice exams -- the discretion exercised by the grader. By its very nature, therefore, grading examinations does not necessarily separate the competent from the incompetent or -- except very roughly -- identify those qualified to practice law and those not qualified. At best, a bar examination can identify those applicants who are more qualified to practice law than those less qualified.

<sup>32</sup> JUSTICE STEVENS' dissent states that "[any] possible claim that the challenged conduct is that of the State Supreme Court is squarely foreclosed by Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773 \(1975\)." Post, at 589. At issue in Goldfarb was a Sherman Act challenge to minimum-fee schedules maintained by the Fairfax County Bar Association and enforced by the Virginia State Bar. In Goldfarb, state law did not refer to lawyers' fees, the Virginia Supreme Court Rules did not direct the State Bar to supply fee schedules, and the Supreme Court did not approve the fee schedules established by the State Bar. To the contrary, the court "directed lawyers not 'to be controlled' by fee schedules." 421 U.S., at 789. Thus, even though the State Bar was a state agency, the Court concluded that "it cannot fairly be said that the State of Virginia through its Supreme Court Rules required the anticompetitive activities of either respondent." Id., at 790. As is evident from the provisions in the Arizona Supreme Court Rules, this case arises under totally different circumstances, although the relevant legal principles are the same. The dissent's reliance on Goldfarb simply misreads the decision in that case.

<sup>33</sup> The dissent relies on Boulder, arguing that the "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy" does not exist in this case. Post, at 594-596. What the dissent overlooks is that the Court in Boulder was careful to say that action is not "exempt from antitrust scrutiny unless it constitutes the action of the State of Colorado itself in its sovereign capacity, see Parker, or unless it constitutes municipal action in furtherance or implementation of clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy, see City of Lafayette. . ." 455 U.S., at 52. Thus, unlike the dissent here, JUSTICE BRENNAN in Boulder was careful to distinguish between action by the sovereign itself and action taken by a subordinate body.

The dissent also cites Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579 \(1976\), and California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97 \(1980\), as presenting situations analogous to the action of the Arizona Supreme Court. This argument overlooks the fundamental difference between this case and the several cases cited by respondent. In each of those cases, it was necessary for the Court to determine whether there had been a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy because the challenged conduct was not that of the State "acting as sovereign." Here, as we have noted above, the Arizona Supreme Court, acting in its sovereign capacity, made the final decision to deny admission to Ronwin. See n. 30, supra.

advisory committee, the dissent would find the State exempt from Sherman Act liability but not the committee. [****42] A party dissatisfied with the new law could circumvent the state-action doctrine by alleging that the committee's advice reflected an undisclosed collective desire to restrain trade without the knowledge of the legislature. The plaintiff certainly would survive a motion to dismiss -- or even summary judgment -- despite the fact that the suit falls squarely within the class of cases found exempt from Sherman Act liability in Parker.<sup>34</sup>

[****43]

[*581] [**2002] LEdHN/1C [1C]In [***608] summary, this case turns on a narrow and specific issue: who denied Ronwin admission to the Arizona Bar? The dissent argues, in effect, that since there is no court order in the record, the denial must have been the action of the Committee. This argument ignores the incontrovertible fact that under the law of Arizona only the State Supreme Court had authority to admit or deny admission to practice law:

"[It] is not the function of the committee to grant or deny admission to the bar. That power rests solely in the Supreme Court. . . ." Application of Burke, 87 Ariz. 336, 338, 351 P. 2d 169, 171 \(1960\) (see n. 30, supra).

Thus, if the dissent's argument were accepted all decisions made with respect to admissions and denials of those who took the examination in February 1974 are void. Ronwin did not allege that he alone was a victim: his complaint avers [*582] that he "was among those artificially prevented from entering into competition as an attorney in the state of Arizona" by the Committee's action with respect [****44] to the February 1974 examination. We are unwilling to assume that the Arizona Supreme Court failed to comply with state law, and allowed the Committee alone to make the decisions with respect to the February 1974 examination. In any event, the record is explicit that Ronwin's postexamination petition complaining about his denial was rejected by an order of the Arizona Supreme Court. That there was state action at least as to Ronwin could not be clearer.

V

---

<sup>34</sup> The amicus curiae brief of the National Conference of Bar Examiners points out that many States have bar admission processes like those at issue in this case. See Brief for National Conference of Bar Examiners as Amicus Curiae 1, 2, 8. Typically, the state supreme court is the ultimate decisionmaker and a committee or board conducts the examinations pursuant to court rules. It is customary for lawyers of recognized standing and integrity to serve on these bodies, usually as a public duty and with little or no compensation. See S. Duhl, The Bar Examiner's Handbook 95, 99 (2d ed. 1980). In virtually all States, a significant percentage of those who take the bar examination fail to pass. See 1982 Bar Examination Statistics, 52 Bar Examiner 24-26 (1983). Thus, every year, there are thousands of aspirants who, like Ronwin, are disappointed. For example, in 1974 (the year Ronwin first took the Arizona bar examination), of the 43,798 applicants who took bar examinations nationwide, 10,440 failed to pass. 44 Bar Examiner 115 (1975). The National Conference of Bar Examiners, in its amicus brief, cautions that affirmance of the Court of Appeals in this case could well invite numerous suits. It is no answer to say that, of course, such suits are likely to be frivolous. Ronwin, who failed the bar in 1974, has been litigating his claim for a decade on the basis of a complaint that basically challenges the motive of the Arizona Committee. His claim is that the grading formula was devised for the purpose of limiting competition. If such an allegation is sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss, examining boards and committees would have to bear the substantial "discovery and litigation burdens" attendant particularly upon refuting a charge of improper motive. See Areeda, Antitrust Immunity for "State Action" after Lafayette, 95 Harv. L. Rev. 435, 451 (1981). Moreover, Ronwin has brought a suit for damages under the Sherman Act, with the threat of treble damages. There can be no question that the threat of being sued for damages -- particularly where the issue turns on subjective intent or motive -- will deter "able citizens" from performing this essential public service. See Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 814 \(1982\). In our view, as the action challenged by Ronwin was that of the State, the motive of the Committee in its recommendations to the court was immaterial. We nevertheless think, particularly in view of the decision below, that the consequences of an affirmance should be understood. The consequences of reversal by the Court today will have only a limited effect. Our attention has not been drawn to any trade or other profession in which the licensing of its members is determined directly by the sovereign itself -- here the State Supreme Court.

We conclude that the District Court properly dismissed Ronwin's complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Therefore, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is Reversed.

JUSTICE REHNQUIST took no part in the decision of this case. JUSTICE O'CONNOR took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

---

JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE WHITE and JUSTICE BLACKMUN join, dissenting.

In 14th-century London the bakers' guild regulated the economics of the craft and [**2003] the quality of its product. In the year 1316, it was adjudged that one Richard de Lughteburgh "should have the punishment of the hurdle" because he sold certain loaves of bread in London; the [****45] bread had been baked in Suthwerke, rather than London, and the loaves were not of "the proper [***609] weight."<sup>1</sup> Thus Richard had violated [*583] a guild restriction designed to protect the economic interests of the local bakers<sup>2</sup> as well as a restriction designed to protect the public from the purchase of inferior products.

[****46] For centuries the common law of restraint of trade has been concerned with restrictions on entry into particular professions and occupations. As the case of the Suthwerke baker illustrates, the restrictions imposed by medieval English guilds served two important but quite different purposes. The guilds limited the number of persons who might engage in a particular craft in order to be sure that there was enough work available to enable guild members to earn an adequate livelihood.<sup>3</sup> [****47] They also protected the public by ensuring that apprentices, journeymen, and master craftsmen would have the skills that were required for their work. In numerous occupations today, licensing requirements<sup>4</sup> may serve [*584] either or both of the broad purposes of the medieval guild restrictions.

---

<sup>1</sup> H. Riley, Memorials of London and London Life in the XIIIth, XIVth, and XVth Centuries 119-120 (1868). The punishment is described in a footnote as "[being] drawn on a hurdle through the principal streets of the City." Id., at 119, n. 5.

<sup>2</sup> "The principal reason for the existence of the gild was to preserve to its own members the monopoly of trade. No one not in the gild merchant of the town could buy or sell there except under conditions imposed by the gild. Foreigners coming from other countries or traders from other English towns were prohibited from buying or selling in any way that might interfere with the interest of the gildsmen. They must buy and sell at such times and in such places and only such articles as were provided by the gild regulations." E. Cheyney, An Introduction to the Industrial and Social History of England 52-53 (1920).

<sup>3</sup> "The craft gilds existed usually under the authority of the town government, though frequently they obtained authorization or even a charter from the crown. They were formed primarily to regulate and preserve the monopoly of their own occupations in their own town, just as the gild merchant existed to regulate the trade of the town in general. No one could carry on any trade without being subject to the organization which controlled that trade." Id., at 55.

<sup>4</sup> Professor Handler has pointed out:

"Entry into various fields of endeavor is guarded by numerous licensing restrictions. Licenses are demanded of physicians and surgeons, dentists, optometrists, pharmacists and druggists, nurses, midwives, chiropodists, veterinarians, certified public accountants, lawyers, architects, engineers and surveyors, shorthand reporters, master plumbers, undertakers and embalmers, real estate brokers, junk dealers, pawnbrokers, ticket agents, liquor dealers, private detectives, auctioneers, milk dealers, peddlers, master pilots and steamship engineers, weighmasters, forest guides, motion picture operators, itinerant retailers on boats, employment agencies, commission merchants of farm produce, and manufacturers of frozen desserts, concentrated feeds, and commercial fertilizers. No factory, cannery, place of public assembly, laundry, cold storage warehouse, shooting gallery, bowling alley and billiard parlor, or place of storage of explosives can be operated nor can industrial house work be [****48] The risk that private regulation of market entry, prices, or output may be designed to confer monopoly profits on members of an industry at the expense of the consuming public has been the central concern of both the development of the common law of restraint of trade and our antitrust jurisprudence. At the same time, the risk that the free market [***610] may not adequately protect the public from purveyors of inferior goods and services has provided a legitimate justification for the public regulation of entry into a wide variety of occupations. Private regulation is generally proscribed by the antitrust laws; public regulation is generally consistent with antitrust [**2004] policy. A potential conflict arises, however, whenever government delegates licensing power to private parties whose economic interests may be served by limiting the number of competitors who may engage in a particular trade. In fact private parties have used licensing to advance their own interests in restraining competition at the expense of the public interest. See generally Gellhorn, The Abuse of Occupational Licensing, 44 U. Chi. L. Rev. 6 (1976).

The potential conflict with [****49] the antitrust laws may be avoided in either of two ways. The State may itself formulate the governing standards and administer the procedures [*585] that determine whether or not particular applicants are qualified. When the State itself governs entry into a profession, the evils associated with giving power over a market to those who stand to benefit from inhibiting entry into that market are absent. For that reason, state action of that kind, even if it is specifically designed to control output and to regulate prices, does not violate the antitrust laws. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943). Alternatively, the State may delegate to private parties the authority to formulate the standards and to determine the qualifications of particular applicants. When that authority is delegated to those with a stake in the competitive conditions within the market, there is a risk that public power will be exercised for private benefit. To minimize that risk, state policies displacing competition must be "clearly and affirmatively expressed" and must be appropriately supervised. See Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40 (1982); [****50] California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 103-106 (1980).

In this case respondent has been unable to obtain a license to practice law in Arizona. He alleges that this is not because of any doubts about his competence as a lawyer, but because petitioners have engaged in an anticompetitive conspiracy in which they have used the Arizona bar examination to artificially limit the number of persons permitted to practice law in that State. Petitioners claim that the alleged conspiracy is not actionable under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1, because it represents the decision of the State. But petitioners do not identify any state body that has decided that it is in the public interest to limit entry of even fully qualified persons into the Arizona Bar. Indeed, the conspiracy that is alleged is not the product of any regulatory scheme at all; there is no evidence that any criterion except competence has been adopted by Arizona as the basis for granting licenses to practice law. The conspiracy respondent has alleged is private; market participants are allegedly [*586] attempting to protect their [****51] competitive position through a misuse of their powers. Yet the Court holds that this conspiracy is cloaked in the [***611] State's immunity from the antitrust laws. In my judgment, the competitive ideal of the Sherman Act may not be so easily escaped.

|

Petitioners are members of the Arizona Supreme Court's Committee on Examinations and Admissions. The Arizona Supreme Court established the Committee to recommend applicants for admission to the Arizona Bar; it consists of seven members of the State Bar selected from a list of nominees supplied by the Arizona State Bar Association's Board of Governors.<sup>5</sup> Petitioners administered the 1974 bar examination which respondent took and failed. In his complaint, respondent alleged that after the scores of each candidate were known, petitioners selected a particular score which would equal the passing grade. The complaint alleges that the petitioners would adjust the grading formula in order to limit the number of persons who could enter the market and compete with carried on without registration or license. Licenses are also required for the sale of minnows, use of fishing nets, and the operation of educational institutions, correspondence schools, filling stations and motor vehicles. Motion pictures cannot be exhibited unless licensed, and canal boats must be registered." M. Handler, Cases and Other Materials on Trade Regulation 3-4 (1937) (footnotes omitted).

---

<sup>5</sup> Ariz. Sup. Ct. Rule 28(a).

members of the Arizona Bar. [**2005] In this manner, respondent was "artificially prevented from entering into competition as an attorney in the State of Arizona."<sup>6</sup> [****52]

The Arizona Supreme Court has instructed petitioners to recommend for admission to the Bar "[all] applicants who receive a passing grade in the general examination and who are found to be otherwise qualified. . . ." <sup>7</sup> There is no indication that any criterion other than competence is appropriate under the Supreme Court's Rules for regulating admission to the Bar.<sup>8</sup> Indeed with respect to respondent's application [*587] for admission, the Arizona Supreme Court wrote: "The practice of law is not a privilege but a right, conditioned solely upon the requirement that a person have the necessary mental, physical and moral qualifications." Application of Ronwin, 113 Ariz. 357, 358, 555 P.2d 315, 316 \(1976\), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 907 (1977). In short, one looks in vain in Arizona law, petitioners' briefs, or the pronouncements of the Arizona Supreme Court for an articulation of any policy beside that of admitting only competent [****53] attorneys to practice in Arizona.

Thus, respondent does not challenge any state policy. He contests neither the decision to license those who wish to practice law, nor the decision to require a certain level of competence, as measured in a bar examination, as a precondition to licensing. Instead, he challenges an alleged decision to exclude even competent attorneys from practice in Arizona in order to protect the interests of the Arizona Bar.

As we have often reiterated in cases that involve the sufficiency of a pleading, a federal court may not dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt, even when the complaint is liberally construed, that the plaintiff can [****54] prove no set of facts [***612] which would entitle him to relief.<sup>9</sup> The allegations of the complaint must be taken as true for purposes of a decision on the pleadings.<sup>10</sup>

[****55] A judge reading a complaint of this kind is understandably somewhat skeptical. It seems highly improbable that members of the profession entrusted by the State Supreme Court [*588] with a public obligation to administer an examination system that will measure applicants' competence would betray that trust, and secretly subvert that system to serve their private ends. Nevertheless, the probability that respondent will not prevail at trial is no justification for dismissing the complaint. "Indeed it may appear on the face of the pleadings that a recovery is very remote and unlikely but that is not the test." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236 \(1974\). The Court does not purport to justify dismissal of this complaint by reference to the low probability that respondent will prevail at trial. Instead, it substantially broadens the doctrine of antitrust immunity, using an elephant gun to kill a flea.

[**2006] II

If respondent were challenging a restraint of trade imposed by the sovereign itself, this case would be governed by Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 \(1943\), which held that the Sherman Act does not apply to the sovereign [****56] acts of States. See id., at 350-352. As the Court points out, the Arizona Supreme Court exercises sovereign power with respect to admission to the Arizona Bar; hence if the challenged conduct were that of the court, it would be immune under Parker. Ante, at 567-569.<sup>11</sup> [****57] The majority's conclusion that the challenged action was that

<sup>6</sup> See App. 10-11.

<sup>7</sup> Ariz. Sup. Ct. Rule 28(c) VIII.

<sup>8</sup> Petitioners certainly do not suggest the existence of any other criterion under Arizona law. To the contrary, at oral argument they expressly acknowledged that there is no state policy adopting any criterion but competence for admission to the Bar. Tr. of Oral Arg. 22-24.

<sup>9</sup> See McClain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, 444 U.S. 232, 246-247 \(1980\); Lake Country Estates v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency, 440 U.S. 391, 397, n. 11 \(1979\); Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 746 \(1976\); Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236 \(1974\); Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46 \(1957\).

<sup>10</sup> See Hughes v. Rowe, 449 U.S. 5, 10 \(1980\) (per curiam); Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 322 \(1972\) (per curiam); California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 515-516 \(1972\); Jenkins v. McKeithen, 395 U.S. 411, 421 \(1969\) (plurality opinion); Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 174-175 \(1965\).

of the Arizona Supreme Court is, however, plainly wrong. Respondent alleged that the decision to place an artificial limit on the number of lawyers was made by petitioners -- not by the State Supreme Court. There is no contention that petitioners made that decision at the direction or behest of the Supreme Court. That court is not a petitioner, nor was it named as a defendant in respondent's complaint. Nor, unlike the Court, have petitioners suggested that the Arizona Supreme Court played any part in establishing the grading standards for the bar examination [*589] or made any independent decision to admit or reject any individual applicant for admission [***613] to the Bar.<sup>12</sup> Because respondent is not challenging the conduct of the Arizona Supreme Court, Parker is simply inapplicable.

Any possible claim that the challenged conduct is that of the State Supreme Court is squarely foreclosed by Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773 (1975). There an antitrust action was brought challenging minimum-fee schedules published by a county bar association and enforced by the State Bar pursuant to its mandate from the Virginia Supreme Court to regulate the practice of law in that State. After acknowledging that the State Bar was a state agency which had enforced the schedules pursuant to the authority granted it by the State Supreme Court, we stated a simple test for antitrust [***58] immunity:

"The threshold inquiry in determining if an anticompetitive activity is state action of the type the Sherman Act was not meant to proscribe is whether the activity is required by the State acting as sovereign. Here we need not inquire further into the state-action question because it cannot fairly be said that the State of Virginia through its Supreme Court Rules required the anticompetitive activities of either respondent. Respondents have pointed to no Virginia statute requiring their activities; state law simply does not refer to fees, leaving regulation of the profession to the Virginia Supreme Court; although the Supreme Court's ethical codes mention advisory fee schedules they do not direct either respondent [*590] to supply them, or require the type of price floor which arose from respondents' activities." Id., at 790 (emphasis supplied) (citations omitted).

In Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350 (1977), the Court applied the Goldfarb test to a disciplinary rule restricting advertising by Arizona attorneys that the Supreme Court itself "has imposed and enforces," 433 U.S., at 353: [***59]

"In the instant case . . . the challenged restraint is the affirmative command of the Arizona Supreme Court under its Rules 27(a) and 29(a) and its Disciplinary Rule 2-101(B). That court is the ultimate body wielding the State's power [**2007] over the practice of law, see Ariz. Const., Art. 3; In re Bailey, 30 Ariz. 407, 248 P. 29 (1926), and, thus, the restraint is 'compelled by direction of the State acting as a sovereign.' 421 U.S., at 791 (footnote omitted)." Id., at 359-360.

The test stated in Goldfarb and Bates is that the sovereign must require the restraint. Indeed, that test is derived from Parker itself: " [***614] We find nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature [or supreme court]." 317 U.S., at 350-351 (emphasis supplied). Here, the sovereign is the State Supreme Court, not petitioners, and the court did not require petitioners to grade the bar examination as they did.<sup>13</sup> The fact that petitioners are part of a state agency under the direction [****60] of the sovereign is insufficient to cloak them in the sovereign's immunity; that much was also decided in Goldfarb:

<sup>11</sup> See Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350, 359-360 (1977).

<sup>12</sup> It should be noted that petitioners do not advance the imaginative argument on which this Court's decision rests -- that the examination procedure is merely advisory and that the Arizona Supreme Court itself "made the final decision on each applicant." Ante, at 578 (footnote omitted). Presumably petitioners are more familiar with how their own procedures work than is this Court. The Court shows precious little deference to "administrative expertise" in its analysis of the facts.

<sup>13</sup> It is not surprising that petitioners (who must practice before the Arizona Supreme Court) did not advance the theory on which this Court relies -- that their challenged conduct is actually conduct of the Arizona Supreme Court. They surely understand that they are not the court, but rather its subordinate.

[*591] "The fact that the State Bar is a state agency for some limited purposes does not create an antitrust shield that allows it to foster anticompetitive practices for the benefit of its members. The State Bar, by providing that deviation from County Bar minimum fees may lead to disciplinary action, has voluntarily joined in what is essentially a private anticompetitive activity, and in that posture cannot claim it is beyond the reach of the Sherman Act." 421 U.S., at 791-792 (footnotes and citation omitted).

"Goldfarb therefore made it clear that, for purposes of the Parker doctrine, not every act of a state agency is that of the State as sovereign." Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 410 \(1978\) (plurality opinion). Rather, "anticompetitive actions of a state instrumentality not compelled by the State acting as sovereign are not immune from the antitrust laws." Id., at 411, n. 41. See also id., at 425 (opinion of BURGER, C. J.); Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 604 \(1976\) [****61] (opinion of BURGER, C. J.). An antitrust attack falls under Parker only when it challenges a decision of the sovereign and not the decision of the state bar which indisputably is not the sovereign. See California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 104-105 \(1980\).

<sup>14</sup> [****62] Here no decision of the sovereign, the Arizona Supreme Court, is attacked; <sup>15</sup> only a [*592] conspiracy [***615] of petitioners which was neither compelled nor directed by the sovereign is at stake. Since there is no claim that the court directed petitioners to artificially reduce the number of lawyers in Arizona, petitioners [**2008] cannot utilize the sovereign's antitrust immunity.<sup>16</sup>

[****63] The majority's confused analysis is illustrated by its difficulty in identifying the sovereign conduct which it thinks is at issue here. To support its conclusion that the challenged action is that of the Arizona Supreme Court, the majority suggests that what respondent challenges is the court's decision to deny respondent's application for admission to the Bar. Ante, at 577-578, n. 30. I find nothing in the record to indicate that the court ever made such a decision. Respondent's complaint alleges only that petitioners "announced the results" of the bar examination. App. 9. In their answer, petitioners admitted this and added nothing else of significance. Id., at 17. The Rules of the Supreme Court do not call for the court to deny the application of a person who has failed the bar examination; rather they state only that any "applicant aggrieved by any decision of the Committee . . . may within 20 days after such occurrence file a verified petition [*593] with this Court for a review." Ariz. Sup. Ct. Rule 28(c) XII. Yet the Court disavows reliance on the Supreme Court's denial of Ronwin's petition, ante, at 577-578, n. 30,<sup>17</sup> [****65] and

<sup>14</sup> See also New Motor Vehicle Board of California v. Orrin W. Fox Co., 439 U.S. 96, 109 \(1978\); Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S., at 593-595.

<sup>15</sup> In response to this dissent, the Court has advanced the theory that the relevant "state action" was the State Supreme Court's rejection of an original complaint filed in that court containing a "plethora of charges, including the substance of the complaint in this case." Ante, at 576-577. See also ante, at 582. Presumably, that complaint was simply deficient as a matter of state law; if the allegations of respondent's current complaint are taken as true then the fact that respondent failed the bar examination would have provided an adequate ground for the dismissal of respondent's complaint without any review of respondent's allegations. Even if it were the case that the Arizona Supreme Court reviewed petitioner's complaint on its merits, all that would indicate is that the court has declined to exercise its power of revision with respect to petitioners' alleged anticompetitive policies. That is far different from having required petitioners to adopt those policies in the first place, which is what Goldfarb requires.

<sup>16</sup> The Court argues that "[only] the Arizona Supreme Court had the authority to grant or deny admission to practice in the State," ante, at 575-576 (footnote omitted), and therefore concludes that the challenged conduct is that of the court. But there is no allegation that the challenged policy was adopted by the court; at most the court has permitted it by accepting the recommendations of petitioners. Yet as Bates and Goldfarb make clear, the challenged policy must be required by the sovereign. The fact that the court retained the power to disapprove of the examination procedure adopted by petitioners is no different from the fact that the Virginia Supreme Court retained the power to disapprove of the fee schedules set by the bar association in Goldfarb. Similar powers of revision were held insufficient to justify immunity in Lafayette, Cantor, and Midcal.

with good reason, see n. [****64] 15, supra.<sup>18</sup> Thus, if the Supreme Court did not itself deny Ronwin's application, if its denial of Ronwin's petition for review is irrelevant, and if the only criterion it ever required petitioners to employ was competence, it is difficult to see why petitioners should have immunity from the requirements of federal law if, as [***616] alleged, they took the initiative in employing a criterion other than competence. "It is not enough that . . . anticompetitive conduct is 'prompted' by state action; rather, anticompetitive activities must be compelled by direction of the State acting as a sovereign." Goldfarb, 421 U.S., at 791.

III

It is, of course, true that the Arizona Supreme Court delegated to petitioners the task of administering the bar exam, and retained the authority to review or revise any action taken by petitioners. However, neither of these factors [*594] is sufficient to accord petitioners immunity under the Sherman Act.

In Bates, the Court held that the State Bar's restrictions on attorney advertising qualified for antitrust immunity, 433 U.S., at 359-362, because "the state policy requiring the anticompetitive restraint as part of a comprehensive regulatory system, was one [****66] clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state [**2009] policy, and that the State's policy was actively supervised by the State Supreme Court as the policymaker." Lafayette, 435 U.S., at 410 (plurality opinion) (footnote omitted). This Court has since "adopted the principle, expressed in the plurality opinion in Lafayette, that anticompetitive restraints engaged in by state municipalities or subdivisions must be 'clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy' in order to gain an antitrust exemption." Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S., at 51, n. 14 (quoting Midcal, 445 U.S., at 105).<sup>19</sup>

Here there is nothing approaching a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy favoring an artificial [****67] limit on the number of lawyers licensed to practice in Arizona. Indeed, the majority does not attempt to argue that petitioners satisfy this test. The only articulated policy to be found in Arizona law is that competent lawyers should be admitted to practice; indeed this is the only policy petitioners articulate in this Court. An agreement of the type alleged in respondent's complaint is entirely unrelated to any "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed" policy of Arizona. While the Arizona Supreme Court may have permitted petitioners to grade and score respondent's bar examination as they did, Parker itself indicates that "a state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action is lawful. . . ." 317 U.S., at 351. The Arizona Supreme Court [*595] may permit the challenged restraint, but it has hardly required it as a consequence of some affirmatively expressed and clearly articulated policy. What we said of a state home-rule provision that permitted but did not require municipalities to adopt a challenged restraint on competition applies fully here:

<sup>17</sup> While the majority's disavowal in its note 30 is quite unequivocal, at other points in its opinion, see ante, at 576-577, and in its ultimate statement of its holding, see ante, at 582, it does seem to rely on the denial of respondent's petition for review. If that truly is critical for the majority, then it would follow that an individual in respondent's position who did not file a petition for review would be able to mount an antitrust challenge free from the immunity barrier the majority erects. If it indeed is that easy to escape the majority's holding, then that holding will not protect bar examiners against the parade of horribles discussed by the majority ante, at 580, and n. 34.

<sup>18</sup> The cases the Court cites ante, at 577, n. 30, 581, all involve instances in which an applicant who had passed the bar examination was nevertheless not recommended for admission. If the applicant seeks judicial review, those cases indicate that the court will decide for itself whether to admit the applicant. However, none of those cases indicates that the court makes an independent decision, or indeed any decision at all, to deny the application of a person who has failed the bar examination.

<sup>19</sup> See also 455 U.S., at 51-52, 54; Midcal, 445 U.S., at 104-105; New Motor Vehicle Board of California v. Orrin W. Fox Co., 439 U.S., at 109.

"[***617] [****68] [Plainly] the requirement of 'clear articulation and affirmative expression' is not satisfied when the State's position is one of mere neutrality respecting the municipal actions challenged as anticompetitive. A State that allows its municipalities to do as they please can hardly be said to have 'contemplated' the specific anticompetitive actions for which municipal liability is sought. . . . Acceptance of such a proposition -- that the general grant of power to enact ordinances necessarily implies state authorization to enact specific anticompetitive ordinances -- would wholly eviscerate the concepts of 'clear articulation and affirmative expression' that our precedents require." Boulder, 455 U.S., at 55-56 (emphasis in original).

Unless the Arizona Supreme Court affirmatively directed petitioners to restrain competition by limiting the number of otherwise qualified lawyers admitted to practice in Arizona, it simply cannot be said that its position is anything more than one of neutrality; mere authorization for anticompetitive conduct is wholly insufficient to satisfy the test for antitrust immunity. See Midcal, 445 U.S., at 105-106; Lafayette, 435 U.S., at 414-415 [****69] (plurality opinion).

<sup>20</sup> [****70] [**2010] No [*596] affirmative decision of the Arizona Supreme Court to restrain competition by limiting the number of qualified persons admitted to the Bar is disclosed on the present record. The alleged conspiracy to introduce a factor other than competence into the bar examination process is not the product of a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy and hence does not qualify for antitrust immunity.<sup>21</sup>

[****71] IV

[***618] The conclusion that enough has been alleged in the complaint to survive a motion to dismiss does not warrant the further conclusion that the respondent is likely to prevail at [*597] trial, or even that his case is likely to survive a motion for summary judgment. For it is perfectly clear that the admissions policy that is described in the Arizona Supreme Court's Rules does not offend the Sherman Act. Any examination procedure will place a significant barrier to entry into the profession; moreover, a significant measure of discretion must be employed in

<sup>20</sup> See also Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S., at 604-605 (opinion of BURGER, C. J.). In Cantor, the Court wrote:

"Respondent could not maintain the lamp-exchange program without the approval of the Commission, and now may not abandon it without such approval. Nevertheless, there can be no doubt that the option to have, or not to have, such a program is primarily respondent's, not the Commission's. Indeed, respondent initiated the program years before the regulatory agency was even created. There is nothing unjust in a conclusion that respondent's participation in the decision is sufficiently significant to require that its conduct implementing the decision, like comparable conduct by unregulated businesses, conform to applicable federal law. Accordingly, even though there may be cases in which the State's participation in a decision is so dominant that it would be unfair to hold a private party responsible for his conduct in implementing it, this record discloses no such unfairness." Id., at 594-595 (footnotes omitted).

<sup>21</sup> In this Court petitioners appear to have abandoned the argument, advanced for the first time in a petition for rehearing in the Court of Appeals, that the examination grading formula was actually approved by the State Supreme Court. Because the majority appears to revive this abandoned contention, ante, at 572-573, and n. 22, see also ante, at 576, it is necessary to address it, though that requires no more than brief reference to the Court of Appeals' opinion:

"Defendants contend for the first time on rehearing that the Committee's grading formula 'was submitted to the Court, reviewed by the Court, and accepted by the Court.' In response, Ronwin has tendered to this court what purports to be the letter the Committee filed with the Supreme Court on February 8, 1974 pursuant to Rule 28(c) (VII)(B). If, as Ronwin alleges, the Committee scored the examination to admit a pre-determined number of applicants, the letter does not so advise the court. Accordingly, if the letter presented to us constitutes the submission to the Supreme Court, it cannot be the basis for a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy. Although dismissal might have been proper if the facts were as defendants now argue for the first time on rehearing, those facts were never brought to the district court's attention. Dismissal was therefore improper on the basis of the information before the district court." Ronwin v. State Bar of Arizona, 686 F.2d 692, 697 (CA9 1981).

It is, of course, equally improper for this Court to rely on evidence not presented to the District Court as a basis for holding that the complaint was not sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss. See Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 157-158, n. 16 (1970).

the administration of testing procedures. Yet ensuring that only the competent are licensed to serve the public is entirely consistent with the Sherman Act. See Goldfarb, 421 U.S., at 792-793.<sup>22</sup> [****72] The Court is concerned about the danger that because thousands of aspirants fail to pass bar examinations every year, "affirmance of the Court of Appeals in this case could well invite numerous suits" questioning bar examiners' motives; the Court fears that the burdens of discovery and trial and "the threat of treble damages" will deter "able citizens" from performing this essential public service." Ante, at 580-581, n. 34. The Court is, I submit, unduly alarmed.<sup>23</sup> [****74] A [*598] denial of antitrust immunity [**2011] in this case would not necessarily pose any realistic threat of liability, or even of prolonged litigation. Respondent must first produce sufficient evidence that petitioners have indeed abused their public trust to survive summary judgment, a task that no doubt will prove formidable.<sup>24</sup> Moreover, petitioners' motives will not necessarily [***619] be relevant to respondent's case. If the proof demonstrates that petitioners have adopted a reasonable means for regulating admission to the Arizona Bar on the basis of competence, respondent will be unable to show the requisite adverse effect on competition even if the subjective motivation of one or more bar [****73] examiners was tainted by sinister self-interest. Indeed, even if respondent can show that he was "arbitrarily" denied admission to the Bar for reasons unrelated to his qualifications, unless he can also show that this occurred as part of an anticompetitive scheme, his antitrust claim will fail.

In any event, there is true irony in the Court's reliance on these concerns. In essence, the Court is suggesting that a special protective shield should be provided to lawyers because they -- unlike bakers, engineers, or the members of any other craft -- may not have sufficient confidence in the ability of our legal system to identify and reject unmeritorious claims to be willing to assume the ordinary risks of litigation associated with the performance of civic responsibilities. I do not share the Court's fear that the administration of bar [*599] examinations by court-appointed lawyers cannot survive [****75] the scrutiny associated with rather ordinary litigation that persons in most other walks of life are expected to endure.

The Court also no doubt believes that lawyers -- or at least those leaders of the bar who are asked to serve as bar examiners -- will always be faithful to their fiduciary responsibilities. Though I would agree that the presumption is indeed a strong one, nothing in the sweeping language of the Sherman Act justifies carving out rules for lawyers inapplicable to any other profession. In Goldfarb we specifically rejected such parochialism. Indeed, the argument that it is unwise or unnecessary to require the petitioners to comply with the Sherman Act "is simply an attack upon the wisdom of the longstanding congressional commitment to the policy of free markets and open competition embodied in the antitrust laws." Boulder, 455 U.S., at 56. We should not ignore that commitment today.

Denial of antitrust immunity in this case would hardly leave the State helpless to cope with felt exigencies; should it wish to do so, the Arizona Supreme Court remains free to give petitioners an affirmative direction to engage in the precise conduct that respondent [****76] has alleged. The antitrust laws hardly create any inescapable burdens for the State; they simply require that decisions to displace the free market be made overtly by public officials subject to public accountability, rather than secretly in the course of a conspiracy involving representatives of a private guild accountable to the public indirectly if at all. See id., at 56-57; Lafayette, 435 U.S., at 416-417 (plurality opinion). "The national policy in favor of competition cannot be thwarted by casting such a gauzy cloak of state involvement over what is essentially a private price-fixing arrangement." Midcal, 445 U.S., at 106.

<sup>22</sup> See generally Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 348-349 (1982); National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 696 (1978).

<sup>23</sup> The majority makes the rather surprising suggestion that under the well-settled principles I have discussed, those who advise state legislatures on legislation which restrains competition could be sued under the Sherman Act. Ante, at 580. Such persons of course would have a complete defense since in such a case they would have been delegated no power which could be used to restrain competition and hence cannot be liable for a restraint they did not impose. Moreover, the Sherman Act protects the right to seek favorable legislation, even if the reason for doing so is to injure competitors. See California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508 (1972); Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127 (1961). The majority's focus on cases not before the Court surely reflects the weakness of its position with respect to the case that is here.

<sup>24</sup> In order to preserve the secrecy of bar examination questions, the test must vary from year to year; after a test has been given, it may become apparent that the anticipated passing grade should be adjusted in order to provide roughly the same measure of competence as was used in prior years. Thus respondent's burden of proving the conspiracy he has alleged requires far more than evidence that petitioners exercised discretion in setting the passing grade after the results were known.

The practical concerns identified by the Court pale when compared with the principle [**2012] that should govern [***620] the decision [*600] of this case. The rule of law that applies to this case is applicable to countless areas of the economy in which arbitrary restraints on entry may impose the very costs on the consuming public which the antitrust laws were designed to avoid.<sup>25</sup> [****78] Experience in the administration of the Sherman Act has demonstrated that there is a real risk that private [***77] associations that purport merely to regulate professional standards may in fact use their powers to restrain competition which threatens their members.<sup>26</sup> It is little short of irresponsible to tear a gaping hole in the fabric of antitrust law simply because we may be confident that respondent will be unable to prove what he alleges.

[*601] Frivolous cases should be treated as exactly that, and not as occasions for fundamental shifts in legal doctrine.<sup>27</sup> Our legal system has developed procedures for speedily disposing of unfounded claims; if they are inadequate to protect petitioners from vexatious litigation, then there is something wrong with those procedures, not with the law of antitrust immunity. That body of law simply does not permit the Sherman Act to be displaced when neither the state legislature nor the state supreme court has expressed [***79] any desire to preclude application of the antitrust laws to the conduct of those who stand to benefit from restraints of trade. A healthy respect for state regulatory policy does not require immunizing those who abuse their public trust; such a thin veneer of state involvement is insufficient justification for casting aside the competitive ideal of the Sherman Act. The commitment to free markets and open competition that has evolved over the centuries and is embodied in the Sherman Act [***621] should be sturdy enough to withstand petitioners' flimsy claim. That claim might have merited the support of the 14th-century guilds; today it should be accorded the "punishment of the hurdle."

[***80] I respectfully dissent.

References

---

<sup>25</sup> The conspiracy respondent has alleged, if proved, would have no procompetitive justification at all; it would be plainly inconsistent with the goals of the Sherman Act. Thus petitioners' claim of antitrust immunity arises in the least defensible context:

"[As] a general proposition . . . state-sanctioned anticompetitive activity must fall like any other if its potential harms outweigh its benefits. This does not mean that state-sanctioned and private activity are to be treated alike. The former is different because the fact of state sanction figures powerfully in the calculus of harm and benefit. If, for example, the justification for the scheme lies in the protection of health or safety, the strength of that justification is forcefully attested to by the existence of a state enactment. . . . A particularly strong justification exists for a state-sanctioned scheme if the State in effect has substituted itself for the forces of competition, and regulates private activity to the same ends sought to be achieved by the Sherman Act. Thus, an anticompetitive scheme which the State institutes on the plausible ground that it will improve the performance of the market in fostering efficient resource allocation and low prices can scarcely be assailed." Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S., at 610-611 (BLACKMUN, J., concurring in judgment).

<sup>26</sup> See, e. g., Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332 (1982); American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556 (1982); National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679 (1978); Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341 (1963); American Medical Assn. v. United States, 317 U.S. 519 (1943); Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457, 465-466 (1941).

<sup>27</sup> If, as seems likely, respondent's claim proves insubstantial, it should be dealt with in the same manner as other such claims -- by means of summary judgment, perhaps coupled with an award of attorneys' fees should it also develop that this case was "unreasonably and vexatiously" brought. See 28 U. S. C. § 1927.

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 18

15 USCS 1

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 9

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Attorneys; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Attorneys; Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

What constitutes "state action" under rule exempting state and local governmental action from antitrust laws. 70 L Ed 2d 973.

Valid governmental action as conferring immunity or exemption from private liability under the federal antitrust laws.
12 ALR Fed 329.

---

End of Document

Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

December 5, 1983, Argued ; June 19, 1984, Decided

No. 82-1260

Reporter

467 U.S. 752 *; 104 S. Ct. 2731 **; 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 ***; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 115 ****; 52 U.S.L.W. 4821; 1984-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,065

COPPERWELD CORP. ET AL. v. INDEPENDENCE TUBE CORP.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 691 F.2d 310, reversed.

Core Terms

---

conspiracy, Sherman Act, wholly owned subsidiary, subsidiary, integration, affiliation, conspiring, intra-enterprise, Cab, affiliated corporation, anticompetitive, concerted, enterprise, unilateral, cases, acquisition, antitrust, effected, entities, tubing, combinations, coordinated, compete, common ownership, competitor, restrain, unreasonable restraint, antitrust liability, restraint of trade, parent corporation

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN1** [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

**HN2** [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The Sherman Act contains a basic distinction between concerted and independent action. The conduct of a single firm is governed by 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 alone and is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization. It is not enough that a single firm appears to restrain trade unreasonably, for even a vigorous competitor may leave that impression.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Vertical Acquisitions

HN4 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a contract, combination or conspiracy between separate entities. It does not reach conduct that is "wholly unilateral." Concerted activity subject to § 1 is judged more sternly than unilateral activity under § 2. Certain agreements, such as horizontal price fixing and market allocation, are thought so inherently anticompetitive that each is illegal per se without inquiry into the harm it has actually caused. Other combinations, such as mergers, joint ventures, and various vertical agreements, hold the promise of increasing a firm's efficiency and enabling it to compete more effectively. Accordingly, such combinations are judged under a rule of reason, an inquiry into market power and market structure designed to assess the combination's actual effect. Whatever form the inquiry takes, however, it is not necessary to prove that concerted activity threatens monopolization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 agreement may be found when the conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act. To the extent that prior decisions of the United States Supreme Court are to the contrary, they are disapproved and overruled.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary held incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

Summary

A steel tubing company brought an antitrust suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois against a competing corporation, that corporation's wholly owned subsidiary, and a supplier of tubing mills. The jury found that the parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary had conspired to violate 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), but that the supplier was not part of the conspiracy. The jury also found that the parent company, but not the subsidiary, had interfered with the tubing company's contractual relationship with the supplier, that the subsidiary, but not the parent, had interfered with the tubing company's contractual relationship with a potential customer and had slandered the tubing company, and that the supplier had breached its contract to supply a tubing mill. The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed (691 F2d 310).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by Burger, Ch. J., joined by Blackmun, Powell, Rehnquist, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held that a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are legally incapable of conspiring with each other under 1 of the Sherman Act. The court said that the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as that of a single enterprise for purposes of 1, and that 1 is limited to concerted conduct and does not prohibit conduct that is wholly unilateral.

Stevens, J., joined by Brennan and Marshall, JJ., dissented, expressing the view that a parent corporation and a wholly owned subsidiary corporation are capable of conspiring in violation of 1 and that the rule announced in the majority opinion was inconsistent with what the Supreme Court has held on at least seven previous occasions.

White, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34 > parent and subsidiary corporation -- conspiracy -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [+] [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [+] [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [+] [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [+] [1D]

467 U.S. 752, *752; 104 S. Ct. 2731, **2731; 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, ***628; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****1

A parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are legally incapable of conspiring with each other under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1); the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as that of a single enterprise for purposes of 1. (Stevens, Brennan, and Marshall, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34 > pattern of acquisitions -- illegal combination -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [↓] [2]

A pattern of acquisitions may itself create a combination illegal under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), especially when an original anticompetitive purpose is evident from the affiliated corporations' subsequent conduct.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §41 > combination between subsidiaries and wholesalers -- resale price -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [↓] [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [↓] [3B]

A combination involving a maximum resale pricing scheme between subsidiaries and wholesalers can violate 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > conduct of single firm -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↓] [4]

Under the Sherman Act, the conduct of a single firm is governed by 2 of the Act (15 USCS 2) alone and is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization; it is not enough that a single firm appears to "restrain trade" unreasonably, for even a vigorous competitor may leave that impression.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > concerted and unilateral conduct --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [↓] [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [↓] [5B]

By making a conspiracy to monopolize unlawful, 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2) reaches both concerted and unilateral behavior, but purely unilateral conduct is illegal only under 2 and not under 1 of the Act (15 USCS 1); monopolization without conspiracy is unlawful under 2, but restraint of trade without a conspiracy or combination is not unlawful under 1.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §6 > purpose of antitrust laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [↓] [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [↓] [6B]

The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > separate entities -- unilateral conduct --> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy between separate entities; it does not reach conduct that is wholly unilateral.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > horizontal price fixing -- market allocation -> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Horizontal price-fixing agreements and market allocation agreements are illegal per se under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) without inquiry into the harm they have actually caused.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > mergers -- joint ventures -- vertical agreements --> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

For purposes of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), mergers, joint ventures, and various vertical agreements are judged under a rule of reason, an inquiry into market power and market structure designed to assess the combination's actual effect.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > concerted activity --> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

It is not necessary to prove that concerted activity threatens monopolization in order for there to be a violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34 > conspiracy -- officers or employees of same firm --> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

Officers or employees of the same firm do not provide the plurality of actors imperative for a conspiracy under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1); an internal "agreement" to implement a single, unitary firm's policies does not raise the antitrust dangers that 1 was designed to police.

467 U.S. 752, *752; 104 S. Ct. 2731, **2731; 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, ***628; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****1

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34 > conspiracy -- corporate officers --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [12A] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [12B] [LEdHN\[12C\]](#) [12C] [LEdHN\[12D\]](#) [12D]

Corporations are incapable of conspiring with their own officers or employees for purposes of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > activities of single firm -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13A\]](#) [13A] [LEdHN\[13B\]](#) [13B]

Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) excludes from unlawful combinations or conspiracies the activities of a single firm.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34 > conduct of corporation and unincorporated division -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) is not violated by the internally coordinated conduct of a corporation and one of its unincorporated divisions; the operations of a corporate enterprise organized into divisions must be judged as the conduct of a single actor.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §10 > conspiracy -- unity of purpose --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

An agreement violating 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) may be found when the conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > single firm -- anticompetitive conduct --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

The Sherman Act does not prohibit a single firm's anticompetitive conduct (short of threatened monopolization) that may be indistinguishable in economic effect from the conduct of two firms subject to liability under 1 of the Act (15 USCS 1).

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > Sherman Act -- concerted conduct --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) is limited to concerted conduct.

Syllabus

---

Petitioner Copperweld Corp. purchased petitioner Regal Tube Co., a manufacturer of steel tubing, from Lear Siegler, Inc., which had operated Regal as an unincorporated division, and which under the sale agreement was bound not to compete with Regal for five years. Copperweld then transferred Regal's assets to a newly formed, wholly owned subsidiary. Shortly before Copperweld acquired Regal, David Grohne, who previously had been an officer of Regal, became an officer of Lear Siegler, and, while continuing to work for Lear Siegler, formed respondent corporation to compete with Regal. Respondent then gave Yoder Co. a purchase order for a tubing mill, but Yoder voided the order when it received a letter from Copperweld warning that Copperweld would be greatly [****2] concerned if Grohne contemplated competing with Regal and promising to take the necessary steps to protect Copperweld's rights under the noncompetition agreement with Lear Siegler. Respondent then arranged to have a mill supplied by another company. Thereafter, respondent filed an action in Federal District Court against petitioners and Yoder. The jury found, inter alia, that petitioners had conspired to violate § 1 of the Sherman Act but that Yoder was not part of the conspiracy, and awarded treble damages against petitioners. The Court of Appeals affirmed. Noting that the exoneration of Yoder from antitrust liability left a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary as the only parties to the § 1 conspiracy, the court questioned the wisdom of subjecting an "intra-enterprise" conspiracy to antitrust liability, but held that such liability was appropriate "when there is enough separation between the two entities to make treating them as two independent actors sensible," and that there was sufficient evidence for the jury to conclude that Regal was more like a separate corporate entity than a mere service arm of the parent.

Held: Petitioner Copperweld and its [****3] wholly owned subsidiary, petitioner Regal, are incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Pp. 759-777.

(a) While this Court has previously seemed to acquiesce in the "intra-enterprise conspiracy" doctrine, which provides that § 1 liability is not foreclosed merely because a parent and its subsidiary are subject to common ownership, the Court has never explored or analyzed in detail the justifications for such a rule. Pp. 759-766.

(b) Section 1 of the Sherman Act, in contrast to § 2, reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" between separate entities, and does not reach conduct that is "wholly unilateral." Pp. 767-769.

(c) The coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as that of a single enterprise for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act. A parent and its wholly owned subsidiary have a complete unity of interest. Their objectives are common, not disparate, and their general corporate objectives are guided or determined not by two separate corporate consciousnesses, but one. With or without a formal "agreement," the subsidiary acts for the parent's [****4] benefit. If the parent and subsidiary "agree" to a course of action, there is no sudden joining of economic resources that had previously served different interests, and there is no justification for § 1 scrutiny. In reality, the parent and subsidiary always have a "unity of purpose or a common design." The "intra-enterprise conspiracy" doctrine relies on artificial distinctions, looking to the form of an enterprise's structure and ignoring the reality. Antitrust liability should not depend on whether a corporate subunit is organized as an unincorporated division or a wholly owned subsidiary. Here, nothing in the record indicates any meaningful difference between Regal's operations as an unincorporated division of Lear Siegler and its later operations as a wholly owned subsidiary of Copperweld. Pp. 771-774.

(d) The appropriate inquiry in this case is not whether the coordinated conduct of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary may ever have anticompetitive effects or whether the term "conspiracy" will bear a literal construction that includes a parent and its subsidiaries, but rather whether the logic underlying Congress' decision to exempt unilateral conduct from scrutiny [****5] under § 1 of the Sherman Act similarly excludes the conduct of a parent and subsidiary. It can only be concluded that the coordinated behavior of a parent and subsidiary falls outside the reach of § 1. Any anticompetitive activities of corporations and their wholly owned subsidiaries meriting antitrust remedies may be policed adequately without resort to an "intra-enterprise conspiracy" doctrine. A corporation's initial acquisition of control is always subject to scrutiny under § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 7 of the Clayton Act, and thereafter the enterprise is subject to § 2 of the Sherman Act and § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Pp. 774-777.

Counsel: Erwin N. Griswold argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were William R. Jentes, Sidney N. Herman, Robert E. Shapiro, and Donald I. Baker.

Deputy Solicitor General Wallace argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Lee, Assistant Attorney General Baxter, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Collins, Carolyn F. Corwin, Barry Grossman, and Nancy C. Garrison.

Victor E. Grimm argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief [****6] were John R. Myers and Scott M. Mendel.*

[****7]

---

* J. Randolph Wilson, Russell H. Carpenter, Jr., Stephen A. Bokat, Cynthia Wicker, William E. Blasier, and Quentin Riegel filed a brief for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States et al. as amici curiae urging reversal.

A brief of amici curiae urging affirmance was filed for the State of Alabama et al. by Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona, and Richard A. Alcorn and Charles L. Eger, Assistant Attorneys General; Charles A. Graddick, Attorney General of Alabama, and Richard Owen, Assistant Attorney General; John Steven Clark, Attorney General of Arkansas, and Jeffrey A. Bell, Assistant Attorney General; Duane Woodard, Attorney General of Colorado, and Thomas P. McMahon, Assistant Attorney General; Neil F. Hartigan, Attorney General of Illinois, and Robert E. Davy, Assistant Attorney General; Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, and John R. Perkins, Assistant Attorney General; Robert T. Stephan, Attorney General of Kansas, and Wayne E. Hundley, Deputy Attorney General; Steven L. Beshear, Attorney General of Kentucky, and James M. Ringo, Assistant Attorney General; Hubert H. Humphrey III, Attorney General of Minnesota, and Stephen P. Kilgriff, Assistant Attorney General; Bill Allain, Attorney General of Mississippi, and Robert Sanders, Special Assistant Attorney General; Mike Greely, Attorney General of Montana, and Joe R. Roberts, Assistant Attorney General; Paul L. Douglas, Attorney General of Nebraska, and Dale A. Comer, Assistant Attorney General; Robert O. Wefald, Attorney General of North Dakota, and Alan C. Hoberg, Assistant Attorney General; Michael C. Turpen, Attorney General of Oklahoma, and James B. Franks, Assistant Attorney General; Dave Frohnmayer, Attorney General of Oregon; John J. Easton, Jr., Attorney General of Vermont, and Glenn R. Jarrett, Assistant Attorney General; Ken Eikenberry, Attorney General of Washington, John R. Ellis, Deputy Attorney General, and Jon P. Ferguson, Assistant Attorney General; Bronson C. La Follette, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Michael L. Zaleski, Assistant Attorney General; Joseph I. Lieberman, Attorney General of Connecticut, and Robert M. Langer, Assistant Attorney General; Charles M. Oberly, Attorney General of Delaware, and Vincent M. Amberly, Deputy Attorney General; James E. Tierney, Attorney General of Maine, and Stephen L. Wessler, Senior Assistant Attorney General; Stephen H. Sachs, Attorney General of Maryland, and Charles O. Monk II, Assistant Attorney General; Frank J. Kelley, Attorney General of Michigan, and Edwin M. Bladen, Assistant Attorney General; Paul Bardacke, Attorney General of New Mexico; Rufus L. Edmisten, Attorney General of North Carolina, and H. A. Cole, Jr., Special Deputy Attorney General; Dennis J. Roberts II, Attorney General of Rhode Island, and Faith A. LaSalle, Special Assistant Attorney General; Mark V. Meierhenry, Attorney General of South Dakota, and Dennis R. Holmes, Deputy Attorney General; William M. Leech, Jr., Attorney General of Tennessee, and William J. Haynes, Jr., Deputy Attorney General; David L. Wilkinson, Attorney General of Utah, Stephen G. Schwendiman, Chief, Assistant Attorney General, and Suzanne M. Dallimore, Assistant Attorney General; A. G. McClintock, Attorney General of Wyoming, and Gay Vanderpoel, Senior Assistant Attorney General; Inez Smith Reid, Acting Corporation Council for the District of Columbia, and Francis S. Smith, Assistant Corporation Council.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed for the Canadian Manufacturers Association et al. by John DeQ. Briggs III, Scott E. Flick, and Jan Schneider; and for Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corporation by Milton Handler and John A. Moore.

Judges: BURGER, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BLACKMUN, POWELL, REHNQUIST, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which BRENNAN and MARSHALL, JJ., joined, post, p. 778. WHITE, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: BURGER

Opinion

---

[*755] [***633] [**2733] CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEDHN[1A] [1A] We granted certiorari to determine whether a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are legally capable of [**2734] conspiring with each other under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

I

A

The predecessor to petitioner Regal Tube Co. was established in Chicago in 1955 to manufacture structural steel [*756] tubing used in heavy equipment, cargo vehicles, and construction. From 1955 to 1968 it remained a wholly owned subsidiary of C. E. Robinson Co. In 1968 Lear Siegler, Inc., purchased Regal Tube Co. and operated it as an unincorporated division. David Grohne, who had previously served as vice president and general manager of Regal, became president of the division after the acquisition.

[****8] In 1972 petitioner Copperweld Corp. purchased the Regal division [***634] from Lear Siegler; the sale agreement bound Lear Siegler and its subsidiaries not to compete with Regal in the United States for five years. Copperweld then transferred Regal's assets to a newly formed, wholly owned Pennsylvania corporation, petitioner Regal Tube Co. The new subsidiary continued to conduct its manufacturing operations in Chicago but shared Copperweld's corporate headquarters in Pittsburgh.

Shortly before Copperweld acquired Regal, David Grohne accepted a job as a corporate officer of Lear Siegler. After the acquisition, while continuing to work for Lear Siegler, Grohne set out to establish his own steel tubing business to compete in the same market as Regal. In May 1972 he formed respondent Independence Tube Corp., which soon secured an offer from the Yoder Co. to supply a tubing mill. In December 1972 respondent gave Yoder a purchase order to have a mill ready by the end of December 1973.

When executives at Regal and Copperweld learned of Grohne's plans, they initially hoped that Lear Siegler's non-competition agreement would thwart the new competitor. Although their lawyer advised [****9] them that Grohne was not bound by the agreement, he did suggest that petitioners might obtain an injunction against Grohne's activities if he made use of any technical information or trade secrets belonging to Regal. The legal opinion was given to Regal and Copperweld along with a letter to be sent to anyone with whom Grohne attempted to deal. The letter warned that Copperweld would be "greatly concerned if [Grohne] contemplates [*757] entering the structural tube market . . . in competition with Regal Tube" and promised to take "any and all steps which are necessary to protect our rights under the terms of our purchase agreement and to protect the know-how, trade secrets, etc., which we purchased from Lear Siegler." Petitioners later asserted that the letter was intended only to prevent third parties from developing reliance interests that might later make a court reluctant to enjoin Grohne's operations.

When Yoder accepted respondent's order for a tubing mill on February 19, 1973, Copperweld sent Yoder one of these letters; two days later Yoder voided its acceptance. After respondent's efforts to resurrect the deal failed, respondent arranged to have a mill supplied by [****10] another company, which performed its agreement even though it too received a warning letter from Copperweld. Respondent began operations on September 13, 1974, nine months later than it could have if Yoder had supplied the mill when originally agreed.

Although the letter to Yoder was petitioners' most successful effort to discourage those contemplating doing business with respondent, it was not their only one. Copperweld repeatedly contacted banks that were considering financing respondent's operations. One or both petitioners also approached real estate firms that were considering providing plant space to respondent and contacted prospective suppliers and customers of the new company.

B

In 1976 respondent filed this action in the District Court against [***635] petitioners and Yoder.<sup>1</sup> The jury found that [*758] Copperweld [**2735] and Regal had conspired to violate § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1, but that Yoder was not part of the conspiracy. It also found that Copperweld, but not Regal, had interfered with respondent's contractual relationship with Yoder; that Regal, but not Copperweld, had interfered with [****11] respondent's contractual relationship with a potential customer of respondent, Deere Plow & Planter Works, and had slandered respondent to Deere; and that Yoder had breached its contract to supply a tubing mill.

[***12] At a separate damages phase, the judge instructed the jury that the damages for the antitrust violation and for the inducement of the Yoder contract breach should be identical and not double counted. The jury then awarded $ 2,499,009 against petitioners on the antitrust claim, which was trebled to $ 7,497,027. It awarded $ 15,000 against Regal alone on the contractual interference and slander counts pertaining to Deere. The court also awarded attorney's fees and costs after denying petitioners' motions for judgment n.o.v. and for a new trial.

C

The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed. 691 F.2d 310 (1982). It noted that the exoneration of Yoder from antitrust liability left a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary as the only parties to the § 1 conspiracy. The court questioned the wisdom of subjecting an "intra-enterprise" conspiracy to antitrust liability, when the same conduct by a corporation and an unincorporated [*759] division would escape liability for lack of the requisite two legal persons. However, relying on its decision in Photovest Corp. v. Fotomat Corp., 606 F.2d 704 (1979), cert. [***13] denied, 445 U.S. 917 (1980), the Court of Appeals held that liability was appropriate "when there is enough separation between the two entities to make treating them as two independent actors sensible." 691 F.2d, at 318. It held that the jury instructions took account of the proper factors for determining how much separation Copperweld and Regal in fact maintained in the conduct of their businesses.<sup>2</sup> It also held that there [***636] was sufficient evidence for the jury to conclude that Regal was more like a separate corporate entity than a mere service arm of the parent.

[***14] We granted certiorari to reexamine the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine, 462 U.S. 1131 (1983), and we reverse.

II

<sup>1</sup>The chairman of the board and chief executive officer of both Copperweld and Regal, Phillip H. Smith, was also named as a defendant. In addition, respondents originally charged petitioners and Smith with an attempt to monopolize the market for structural steel tubing in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 2. Before trial respondent dismissed Smith as a defendant and dismissed its § 2 monopolization count.

Petitioners counterclaimed on the ground that respondent and Grohne had used proprietary information belonging to Regal, had competed unfairly by hiring away key Regal personnel, and had interfered with prospective business relationships by filing the lawsuit on the eve of a large Copperweld debenture offering. At the close of the evidence, the court directed a verdict against petitioners on their counterclaims. The disposition of these claims is not at issue before this Court.

<sup>2</sup>The jury was instructed to consider many different factors: for instance, whether Copperweld and Regal had separate management staffs, separate corporate officers, separate clients, separate records and bank accounts, separate corporate offices, autonomy in setting policy, and so on. The jury also was instructed to consider "any other facts that you find are relevant to a determination of whether or not Copperweld and Regal are separate and distinct companies." App. to Pet. for Cert. B-9.

467 U.S. 752, *759; 104 S. Ct. 2731, **2735; 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, ***636; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****14

Review of this case calls directly into question whether the coordinated acts of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary can, in the legal sense contemplated by § 1 of the Sherman Act, constitute a combination or conspiracy.<sup>3</sup> The so-called "intra-enterprise" [**2736] conspiracy doctrine provides that § 1 liability is not foreclosed merely because a parent and its subsidiary are subject to common ownership. The doctrine derives from declarations in several of this Court's opinions.

[****15] [*760] In no case has the Court considered the merits of the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine in depth. Indeed, the concept arose from a far narrower rule. Although the Court has expressed approval of the doctrine on a number of occasions, a finding of intra-enterprise conspiracy was in all but perhaps one instance unnecessary to the result.

The problem began with United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218 (1947). The controlling shareholder of the Checker Cab Manufacturing Corp., Morris Markin, also controlled numerous companies operating taxicabs in four cities. With few exceptions, the operating companies had once been independent and had come under Markin's control by acquisition or merger. The complaint alleged conspiracies under §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act among Markin, Checker, and five corporations in the operating system. The Court stated that even restraints in a vertically integrated enterprise were not "necessarily" outside of the Sherman Act, observing that an unreasonable restraint

*"may result as readily from a conspiracy among those who are affiliated or integrated under common ownership as from a conspiracy among [****16] those who are otherwise independent. Similarly, any affiliation or integration flowing from an illegal conspiracy cannot insulate the conspirators from the sanctions which Congress has imposed. The corporate interrelationships of the conspirators, in other words, are not determinative of the applicability of the Sherman Act. That statute is aimed at substance rather than form. See Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U.S. 344, 360-361, 376-377.*

*"And so in this case, the common ownership and control of the various corporate appellees are impotent to liberate the alleged combination and conspiracy from the impact of the Act. The complaint charges that the restraint of interstate trade was not only [***637] effected by the combination of the appellees but was the primary object [*761] of the combination. The theory of the complaint . . . is that 'dominating power' over the cab operating companies 'was not obtained by normal expansion . . . but by deliberate, calculated purchase for control.' Id., at 227-228 (emphasis added) (quoting United States v. Reading Co., 253 U.S. 26, 57 (1920)).*

LEdHN2 [↑] [2] [****17] It is the underscored language that later breathed life into the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine. The passage as a whole, however, more accurately stands for a quite different proposition. It has long been clear that a pattern of acquisitions may itself create a combination illegal under § 1, especially when an original anticompetitive purpose is evident from the affiliated corporations' subsequent conduct.<sup>4</sup> [****18] The

<sup>3</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides in pertinent part:

HN1 [↑] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony." 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1.

<sup>4</sup> Under the arrangements condemned in Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 354 (1904) (plurality opinion), "all the stock [a railroad holding company] held or acquired in the constituent companies was acquired and held to be used in suppressing competition between those companies. It came into existence only for that purpose." In Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1 (1911), and United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106 (1911), the trust or holding company device brought together previously independent firms to lessen competition and achieve monopoly power. Although the Court in the latter case suggested that the contracts between affiliated companies, and not merely the original combination, could be

467 U.S. 752, *761; 104 S. Ct. 2731, **2736; 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, ***637; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****18

Yellow Cab passage is most fairly read in light of this settled rule. In Yellow Cab, the affiliation of the defendants was irrelevant because the original acquisitions were themselves illegal.<sup>5</sup> An [**2737] affiliation "flowing from an illegal conspiracy" would not avert sanctions. Common ownership and control were irrelevant because restraint of trade was "the primary object of the combination," which was created in a "deliberate, [*762] calculated" manner. Other language in the opinion is to the same effect.<sup>6</sup>

[****19] The [***638] Court's opinion relies on Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U.S. 344 (1933); however, examination of that case reveals that it gives very little support for the broad doctrine Yellow Cab has been thought to announce. On the contrary, the language of Chief Justice Hughes speaking for the Court in Appalachian Coals supports a contrary conclusion. After observing that "[the] restrictions the Act imposes are not mechanical or artificial," 288 U.S., at 360, he went on to state:

[*763] "The argument that integration may be considered a normal expansion of business, while a combination of independent producers in a common selling agency should be treated as abnormal -- that one is a legitimate enterprise and the other is not -- makes but an artificial distinction. The Anti-Trust Act aims at substance." Id. at 377.<sup>7</sup> viewed as the conspiracy, id. at 184, the Court left no doubt that "the combination in and of itself" was a restraint of trade and a monopolization, id. at 187.

---

<sup>5</sup> Contrary to the dissent's suggestion, post, at 779, 788, n. 18, our point is not that Yellow Cab found only the initial acquisition illegal; our point is that the illegality of the initial acquisition was a predicate for its holding that any postacquisition conduct violated the Act.

<sup>6</sup> When discussing the fact that some of the affiliated Chicago operating companies did not compete to obtain exclusive transportation contracts held by another of the affiliated companies, the Court stated:

"[The] fact that the competition restrained is that between affiliated corporations cannot serve to negative the statutory violation where, as here, the affiliation is assertedly one of the means of effectuating the illegal conspiracy not to compete." 332 U.S., at 229 (emphasis added).

The passage quoted in text is soon followed by a cite to United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 189 (1944). Crescent Amusement found violations of §§ 1 and 2 by film exhibitors affiliated (in most cases) by 50 percent ownership. The exhibitors used the monopoly power they possessed in certain towns to force film distributors to give them favorable terms in other towns. The Court found it unnecessary to view the distributors as part of the conspiracy, id. at 183, so the Court plainly viewed the affiliated entities themselves as the conspirators. The Crescent Amusement Court, however, in affirming an order of divestiture, noted that such a remedy was appropriate when "creation of the combination is itself the violation." Id. at 189. This suggests that both Crescent Amusement and Yellow Cab, which cited the very page on which this passage appears, stand for a narrow rule based on the original illegality of the affiliation.

The dissent misconstrues a later passage in Crescent Amusement stating that divestiture need not be limited to those affiliates whose "acquisition was part of the fruits of the conspiracy," 323 U.S., at 189. See post, at 780-781. This meant only that divestiture could apply to affiliates other than those who were driven out of business by the practices of the original conspirators and who were then acquired illegally to increase the combination's monopoly power. See 323 U.S., at 181. It did not mean that affiliates acquired for lawful purposes were subject to divestiture.

<sup>7</sup> Appalachian Coals does state that the key question is whether there is an unreasonable restraint of trade or an attempt to monopolize. "If there is, the combination cannot escape because it has chosen corporate form; and, if there is not, it is not to be condemned because of the absence of corporate integration." 288 U.S., at 377. Appalachian Coals, however, validated a cooperative selling arrangement among independent entities. The statement that intracorporate relationships would be subject to liability under § 1 is thus dictum. The statement may also envision merely the limited rule in Yellow Cab pertaining to acquisitions that are themselves anticompetitive.

467 U.S. 752, *763; 104 S. Ct. 2731, **2737; 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, ***638; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****19

As we shall see, infra, at 771-774, it is the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine itself that "makes but an artificial distinction" at the expense of substance.

[****20] The ambiguity of the Yellow Cab holding yielded the one case giving support to the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine.<sup>8</sup> In Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211 (1951), the Court held that two wholly owned subsidiaries of a liquor distiller [**2738] were guilty under § 1 of the Sherman Act for jointly refusing to supply a wholesaler who declined to abide by a maximum resale pricing scheme. The Court offhandedly dismissed the defendants' argument [*764] that "their status as 'mere instrumentalities of a single manufacturing-merchandizing unit' makes [***639] it impossible for them to have conspired in a manner forbidden by the Sherman Act." Id., at 215. With only a citation to Yellow Cab and no further analysis, the Court stated that the "suggestion runs counter to our past decisions that common ownership and control does not liberate corporations from the impact of the antitrust laws" and stated that this rule was "especially applicable" when defendants "hold themselves out as competitors." 340 U.S., at 215.

[****21] LEdHN[3A]↑ [3A]Unlike the Yellow Cab passage, this language does not pertain to corporations whose initial affiliation was itself unlawful. In straying beyond Yellow Cab, the Kiefer-Stewart Court failed to confront the anomalies an intra-enterprise doctrine entails. It is relevant nonetheless that, were the case decided today, the same result probably could be justified on the ground that the subsidiaries conspired with wholesalers other than the plaintiff.<sup>9</sup> An intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine thus would no longer be necessary to a finding of liability on the facts of Kiefer-Stewart.

[****22] Later cases invoking the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine do little more than cite Yellow Cab or Kiefer-Stewart, and in none of the cases was the doctrine necessary to the result reached. Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593 (1951), involved restrictive horizontal agreements [*765] between an American corporation and two foreign corporations in which it owned 30 and 50 percent interests respectively. The Timken Court cited Kiefer-Stewart to show that "[the] fact that there is common ownership or control of the contracting corporations does not liberate them from the impact of the antitrust laws." 341 U.S., at 598. But the relevance of this statement is unclear. The American defendant in Timken did not own a majority interest in either of the foreign corporate conspirators and, as the District Court found, it did not control them.<sup>10</sup> [****23] Moreover, as in Yellow

<sup>8</sup> In two cases decided soon after Yellow Cab on facts similar to Crescent Amusement, see n. 6, supra, affiliated film exhibitors were found to have conspired in violation of § 1. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. v. United States, 334 U.S. 110 (1948); United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100 (1948). Griffith simply assumed that the companies were capable of conspiring with each other; Schine cited Yellow Cab and Crescent Amusement for the proposition, 334 U.S., at 116. In both cases, however, an intra-enterprise conspiracy holding was unnecessary not only because the Court found a § 2 violation, but also because the affiliated exhibitors had conspired with independent film distributors. See ibid.; Griffith, supra, at 103, n. 6, 109.

<sup>9</sup> LEdHN[3B]↑ [3B]

Although the plaintiff apparently never acquiesced in the resale price maintenance scheme, Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 182 F.2d 228, 231 (CA7 1950), rev'd, 340 U.S. 211 (1951), one of the subsidiaries did gain the compliance of other wholesalers after once terminating them for refusing to abide by the pricing scheme. See 182 F.2d, at 231; 340 U.S., at 213. A theory of combination between the subsidiaries and the wholesalers could now support § 1 relief, whether or not it could have when Kiefer-Stewart was decided. See Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 149-150, and n. 6 (1968); United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29 (1960).

467 U.S. 752, *765; 104 S. Ct. 2731, **2738; 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, ***639; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****23

Cab, there was evidence that the stock acquisitions were themselves designed to effectuate restrictive practices.<sup>11</sup> The Court's reliance on the intra-enterprise conspiracy [***640] doctrine was in no way necessary to the result.

[**2739] The same is true of Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134 (1968), which involved a conspiracy among a parent corporation and three subsidiaries to impose [****24] various illegal restrictions on plaintiff franchisees. The Court did suggest that, because the defendants "availed themselves of the privilege of doing business through separate corporations, the fact of common ownership [*766] could not save them from any of the obligations that the law imposes on separate entities [citing Yellow Cab and Timken Id., at 141-142.

But the Court noted immediately thereafter that "[in] any event" each plaintiff could "clearly" charge a combination between itself and the defendants or between the defendants and other franchise dealers. Ibid. Thus, for the same reason that a finding of liability in Kiefer-Stewart could today be justified without reference to the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine, see n. 9, supra, the doctrine was at most only an alternative holding in Perma Life Mufflers.

In short, while this Court has previously seemed to acquiesce in the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine, it has never explored or analyzed in detail the justifications for such a rule; the doctrine has played only a relatively minor role in the Court's Sherman Act holdings.

III

Petitioners, joined [****25] by the United States as amicus curiae, urge us to repudiate the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine.<sup>12</sup> The central criticism is that the doctrine gives undue significance to the fact that a subsidiary is separately incorporated and thereby treats as the concerted activity of two [*767] entities what is really unilateral behavior flowing from decisions of a single enterprise.

[****26] We limit our inquiry to the narrow issue squarely presented: whether a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary are capable of conspiring in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. We do not consider under what

---

<sup>10</sup> See United States v. Timken Roller Bearing Co., 83 F.Supp. 284, 311-312 (ND Ohio 1949), aff'd as modified, 341 U.S. 593 \(1951\). The agreement of an individual named Dewar, who owned 24 and 50 percent of the foreign corporations respectively, was apparently required for the American defendant to have its way.

<sup>11</sup> For almost 20 years before they became affiliated by stock ownership, two of the corporations had been party to the sort of restrictive agreements the Timken Court condemned. Three Justices upholding antitrust liability were of the view that Timken's "interests in the [foreign] companies were obtained as part of a plan to promote the illegal trade restraints" and that the "intercorporate relationship" was "the core of the conspiracy." Id., at 600-601. Because two Justices found no antitrust violation at all, see id., at 605 (Frankfurter, J., dissenting); id., at 606 (Jackson, J., dissenting), and two Justices did not take part, apparently only Chief Justice Vinson and Justice Reed were prepared to hold that there was a violation even if the initial acquisition itself was not illegal. See id., at 601-602 (Reed, J., joined by Vinson, C. J., concurring).

<sup>12</sup> The doctrine has long been criticized. See, e. g., Areeda, Intra-enterprise Conspiracy in Decline, 97 Harv. L. Rev. 451 \(1983\); Handler & Smart, The Present Status of the Intracorporate Conspiracy Doctrine, 3 Cardozo L. Rev. 23 (1981); Kempf, Bathtub Conspiracies: Has Seagram Distilled a More Potent Brew?, 24 Bus. Law. 173 (1968); McQuade, Conspiracy, Multicorporate Enterprises, and Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 41 Va. L. Rev. 183 (1955); Rahl, Conspiracy and the Anti-Trust Laws, 44 Ill. L. Rev. 743 (1950); Sprunk, Intra-Enterprise Conspiracy, 9 ABA Antitrust Section Rep. 20 (1956); Stengel, Intra-Enterprise Conspiracy Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 35 Miss. L. J. 5 (1963); Willis & Pitofsky, Antitrust Consequences of Using Corporate Subsidiaries, 43 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 20 (1968); Note, "Conspiring Entities" Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 95 Harv. L. Rev. 661 (1982); Note, Intra-Enterprise Conspiracy Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act: A Suggested Standard, 75 Mich. L. Rev. 717 (1977). circumstances, if any, a [***641] parent may be liable for conspiring with an affiliated corporation it does not completely own.

A

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4] [LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [↑] [5A] [LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [↑] [6A] The HN2 [↑] Sherman Act contains a "basic distinction between concerted and independent action." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761 (1984). The conduct of a single firm is governed by § 2 alone and is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization.<sup>13</sup> [****28] It is not enough that a single firm appears to "restrain trade" unreasonably, for even a vigorous competitor may leave that impression. For instance, an efficient firm may [**2740] capture unsatisfied customers from an inefficient [****27] rival, whose own ability to compete may suffer as a result. This is the rule of the marketplace and is precisely the sort of competition that promotes the consumer interests that the Sherman Act aims to foster.<sup>14</sup> In part because it is sometimes difficult to [*768] distinguish robust competition from conduct with long-run anticompetitive effects, Congress authorized Sherman Act scrutiny of single firms only when they pose a danger of monopolization. Judging unilateral conduct in this manner reduces the risk that the antitrust laws will dampen the competitive zeal of a single aggressive entrepreneur.

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [↑] [7] [LEdHN\[8\]](#) [↑] [8] [LEdHN\[9\]](#) [↑] [9] [LEdHN\[10\]](#) [↑] [10] Section 1 of the Sherman [****29] Act, in contrast, HN4 [↑] reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" between separate entities. It does not reach conduct that is "wholly unilateral." Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 149 (1968); accord, Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Corp., supra, at 761. Concerted activity subject to § 1 is judged more sternly than unilateral activity under § 2. Certain agreements, such as horizontal price fixing and market allocation, are thought so inherently anticompetitive that each is illegal per se without inquiry into the harm it has actually caused. See generally Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 (1958). Other combinations, such as mergers, joint ventures, and various vertical agreements, hold the promise of increasing a firm's efficiency and enabling it to compete more effectively. Accordingly, such combinations are judged under a rule of reason, an inquiry [***642] into market power and market structure designed to assess the combination's actual effect. See, e. g., Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977); [****30] Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231 (1918). Whatever form the inquiry takes, however, it is not necessary to prove that concerted activity threatens monopolization.

The reason Congress treated concerted behavior more strictly than unilateral behavior is readily appreciated. Concerted activity inherently is fraught with anticompetitive [*769] risk. It deprives the marketplace of the independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands. In any conspiracy, two or more entities that previously pursued their own interests separately are combining to act as one for their common benefit.

<sup>13</sup> [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [↑] [5B]

Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides in pertinent part:

HN3 [↑] "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony." 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 2. By making a conspiracy to monopolize unlawful, § 2 does reach both concerted and unilateral behavior. The point remains, however, that purely unilateral conduct is illegal only under § 2 and not under § 1. Monopolization without conspiracy is unlawful under § 2, but restraint of trade without a conspiracy or combination is not unlawful under § 1.

<sup>14</sup> [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [↑] [6B]

For example, the Court has declared that § 2 does not forbid market power to be acquired "as a consequence of a superior product, [or] business acumen." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571 (1966). We have also made clear that the "antitrust laws . . . were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488 (1977) (damages for violation of Clayton Act § 7) (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320 (1962)).

This not only reduces the diverse directions in which economic power is aimed but suddenly increases the economic power moving in one particular direction. Of course, such mergings of resources may well lead to efficiencies that benefit consumers, but their anticompetitive potential is sufficient to warrant scrutiny even in the absence of incipient monopoly.

B

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [↑] [11] [LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [↑] [12A] [LEdHN\[13A\]](#) [↑] [13A] [****31] The distinction between unilateral and concerted conduct is necessary for a proper understanding of the terms "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" in § 1. Nothing in the literal meaning of those terms excludes coordinated conduct among officers or employees of the same company. But it is perfectly plain that an internal "agreement" to implement a single, unitary firm's policies does not raise the antitrust dangers that § 1 was designed to police. The officers of a single firm are not separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests, so agreements among them do not suddenly [\[\*\*2741\]](#) bring together economic power that was previously pursuing divergent goals. Coordination within a firm is as likely to result from an effort to compete as from an effort to stifle competition. In the marketplace, such coordination may be necessary if a business enterprise is to compete effectively. For these reasons, officers or employees of the same firm do not provide the plurality of actors imperative for a § 1 conspiracy.<sup>15</sup>

[****32] [\[\*770\]](#) [LEdHN\[14\]](#) [↑] [14] There [\[\*\*\*643\]](#) is also general agreement that § 1 is not violated by the internally coordinated conduct of a corporation and one of its unincorporated divisions.<sup>16</sup> [****33] Although this Court has not previously addressed the question,<sup>17</sup> there can be little doubt that the operations of a corporate enterprise organized into divisions must be judged as the conduct of a single actor. The existence of an unincorporated division reflects no more than a firm's decision to adopt an organizational division of labor. A division within a corporate structure pursues the common interests of the whole rather than interests separate from those of the corporation itself; a business enterprise establishes divisions to further its own interests in the most efficient manner. Because coordination between a corporation [\[\*771\]](#) and its division does not represent a sudden joining of two independent sources of economic power previously pursuing separate interests, it is not an activity that warrants § 1 scrutiny.

Indeed, a rule that punished coordinated conduct simply because a corporation delegated certain responsibilities to autonomous units might well discourage corporations from creating divisions with their presumed benefits. This <sup>15</sup> See, e. g., Schwimmer v. Sony Corp. of America, 677 F.2d 946, 953 (CA2), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1007 \(1982\); Tose v. First Pennsylvania Bank, N. A., 648 F.2d 879, 893-894 (CA3), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 893 \(1981\); Morton Buildings of Nebraska, Inc. v. Morton Buildings, Inc., 531 F.2d 910, 916-917 (CA8 1976); Greenville Publishing Co. v. Daily Reflector, Inc., 496 F.2d 391, 399 (CA4 1974) (dictum); Chapman v. Rudd Paint & Varnish Co., 409 F.2d 635, 643, n. 9 (CA9 1969); Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 109 U. S. App. D. C. 170, 174, 284 F.2d 599, 603 (1960), rev'd on other grounds, 368 U.S. 464 \(1962\); Nelson Radio & Supply Co. v. Motorola, Inc., 200 F.2d 911, 914 (CA5 1952), cert. denied, 345 U.S. 925 \(1953\). Accord, Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 31 (1955). At the same time, many courts have created an exception for corporate officers acting on their own behalf. See, e. g., H & B Equipment Co. v. International Harvester Co., 577 F.2d 239, 244 (CA5 1978) (dictum); Greenville Publishing, supra; Johnston v. Baker, 445 F.2d 424, 427 (CA3 1971).

[LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [↑] [12B] [LEdHN\[13B\]](#) [↑] [13B] Nothing in the language of the Sherman Act is inconsistent with the view that corporations cannot conspire with their own officers. It is true that a "person" under the Act includes both an individual and a corporation. 15 U. S. C. § 7. But § 1 does not declare every combination between two "persons" to be illegal. Instead it makes liable every "person" engaging in a combination or conspiracy "hereby declared to be illegal." As we note, the principles governing § 1 liability plainly exclude from unlawful combinations or conspiracies the activities of a single firm.

<sup>16</sup> See 691 F.2d 310, 316 \(CA7 1982\) (decision below); Cliff Food Stores, Inc. v. Kroger, Inc., 417 F.2d 203, 205-206 (CA5 1969); Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc. v. Hawaiian Oke & Liquors, Ltd., 416 F.2d 71, 83-84 (CA9 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 1062 \(1970\); Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 109 U. S. App. D. C., at 174, 284 F.2d, at 603.

<sup>17</sup> The Court left this issue unresolved in Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S., at 469, n. 4.

would serve no useful antitrust purpose but could well deprive consumers of the efficiencies that decentralized management may bring.

C

LEdHN[1B] [1B] For similar reasons, the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as that of a single enterprise for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act. A parent and its wholly owned subsidiary have a complete unity of interest. Their objectives are common, not disparate; their general corporate actions are guided or determined not by two separate corporate consciousnesses, but one. They are not unlike a multiple team of [**2742] horses drawing a vehicle under the control of a single driver. [****34] With or without a formal "agreement," the subsidiary acts for the benefit of the parent, its sole shareholder. If a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary do "agree" to a course of action, there is no sudden joining of economic resources that had previously served different interests, and there is no justification for § 1 scrutiny.

LEdHN[15] [15] Indeed, the very notion of an "agreement" in Sherman Act terms between a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary lacks meaning. HN5 A § 1 agreement may be found when "the conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement." American [***644] Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810 (1946). But in reality a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary always have a "unity of purpose or a common design." They share a common purpose whether or not the parent keeps a tight rein over the subsidiary; the parent may assert [*772] full control at any moment if the subsidiary fails to [****35] act in the parent's best interests.<sup>18</sup>

[***36] The intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine looks to the form of an enterprise's structure and ignores the reality. Antitrust liability should not depend on whether a corporate subunit is organized as an unincorporated division or a wholly owned subsidiary. A corporation has complete power to maintain a wholly owned subsidiary in either form. The economic, legal, or other considerations that lead corporate management to choose one structure over the other are not relevant to whether the enterprise's conduct seriously threatens competition.<sup>19</sup> Rather, a corporation may adopt the subsidiary form of organization for valid management and related purposes. Separate incorporation may improve [*773] management, avoid special tax problems arising from multistate operations, or serve other legitimate interests.<sup>20</sup> [****38] Especially in view of the increasing complexity of corporate operations, a business enterprise should be free to structure itself in ways that serve efficiency of control, economy of

<sup>18</sup> As applied to a wholly owned subsidiary, the so-called "single entity" test is thus inadequate to preserve the Sherman Act's distinction between unilateral and concerted conduct. Followed by the Seventh Circuit below as well as by other Courts of Appeals, this test sets forth various criteria for evaluating whether a given parent and subsidiary are capable of conspiring with each other. See n. 2, supra; see generally Ogilvie v. Fotomat Corp., 641 F.2d 581 (CA8 1981); Las Vegas Sun, Inc. v. Summa Corp., 610 F.2d 614 (CA9 1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 906 (1980); Photovest Corp. v. Fotomat Corp., 606 F.2d 704 (CA7 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 917 (1980). These criteria measure the "separateness" of the subsidiary: whether it has separate control of its day-to-day operations, separate officers, separate corporate headquarters, and so forth. At least when a subsidiary is wholly owned, however, these factors are not sufficient to describe a separate economic entity for purposes of the Sherman Act. The factors simply describe the manner in which the parent chooses to structure a subunit of itself. They cannot overcome the basic fact that the ultimate interests of the subsidiary and the parent are identical, so the parent and the subsidiary must be viewed as a single economic unit.

<sup>19</sup> Because an "agreement" between a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary is no more likely to be anticompetitive than an agreement between two divisions of a single corporation, it does not matter that the parent "availed [itself] of the privilege of doing business through separate corporations," Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 141 (1968). The purposeful choice of a parent corporation to organize a subunit as a subsidiary is not itself a reason to heighten antitrust scrutiny, because it is not laden with anticompetitive risk.

<sup>20</sup> For example, "[separate] incorporation may reduce federal or state taxes or facilitate compliance with regulatory or reporting laws. Local incorporation may also improve local identification. Investors or lenders may prefer to specialize in a particular aspect of a conglomerate's business. Different parts of the business may require different pension or profitsharing plans or different accounting practices." Areeda, 97 Harv. L. Rev., at 453.

467 U.S. 752, *773; 104 S. Ct. 2731, **2742; 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, ***644; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****38

operations, and other factors dictated by business judgment without increasing its exposure to antitrust liability. Because there is nothing inherently anticompetitive about a corporation's [****37] decision [**2743] to create a subsidiary, the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine "[imposes] [***645] grave legal consequences upon organizational distinctions that are of de minimis meaning and effect." Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Citrus Products Co., 370 U.S. 19, 29 (1962).<sup>21</sup>

If antitrust liability turned on the garb in which a corporate subunit was clothed, parent corporations would be encouraged to convert subsidiaries into unincorporated divisions. Indeed, this is precisely what the Seagram company did after this Court's decision in Kiefer-Stewart Co [****39] . v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211 (1951).<sup>22</sup> Such an [*774] incentive serves no valid antitrust goals but merely deprives consumers and producers of the benefits that the subsidiary form may yield.

The error of treating a corporate division differently from a wholly owned subsidiary is readily seen from the facts of this case. Regal was operated as an unincorporated division of Lear Siegler for four years before it became a wholly owned subsidiary of Copperweld. Nothing in this record indicates any meaningful difference between Regal's operations as a division and its later operations as a separate corporation. Certainly nothing suggests that Regal was a greater threat to competition as a subsidiary of Copperweld than as a division of Lear Siegler. Under either arrangement, Regal might have acted to bar [****40] a new competitor from entering the market. In one case it could have relied on economic power from other quarters of the Lear Siegler corporation; instead it drew on the strength of its separately incorporated parent, Copperweld. From the standpoint of the antitrust laws, there is no reason to treat one more harshly than the other. As Chief Justice Hughes cautioned, "[realities] must dominate the judgment." Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U.S., at 360.<sup>23</sup>

[****41] D

LEdHN/16 [↑] [16]Any reading of the Sherman Act that remains true to the Act's distinction between unilateral and concerted conduct will necessarily [***646] disappoint those who find that distinction arbitrary. It cannot be denied that § 1's focus on concerted [*775] behavior leaves a "gap" in the Act's proscription against unreasonable restraints of trade. See post, at 789. An unreasonable restraint of trade may be effected not only by two independent firms acting in concert; a single firm may restrain trade to precisely the same extent if it alone possesses the combined market power of those same two firms. Because the Sherman Act does not prohibit unreasonable restraints of trade as such -- but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy -- it leaves untouched a single firm's anticompetitive [**2744] conduct (short of threatened monopolization) that may be indistinguishable in economic effect from the conduct of two firms subject to § 1 liability.

<sup>21</sup> Sunkist Growers provides strong support for the notion that separate incorporation does not necessarily imply a capacity to conspire. The defendants in that case were an agricultural cooperative, its wholly owned subsidiary, and a second cooperative comprising only members of the first. The Court refused to find a § 1 or § 2 conspiracy among them because they were "one 'organization' or 'association' even though they have formally organized themselves into three separate legal entities." 370 U.S., at 29. Although this holding derived from statutory immunities granted to agricultural organizations, the reasoning of Sunkist Growers supports the broader principle that substance, not form, should determine whether a separately incorporated entity is capable of conspiring under § 1.

<sup>22</sup> See Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc. v. Hawaiian Oke & Liquors, Ltd., 416 F.2d 71 (CA9 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 1062 (1970).

<sup>23</sup> The dissent argues that references in the legislative history to "trusts" suggest that Congress intended § 1 to govern the conduct of all affiliated corporations. See post, at 787-788. But those passages explicitly refer to combinations created for the very purpose of restraining trade. None of the cited debates refers to the postacquisition conduct of corporations whose initial affiliation was lawful. Indeed, Senator Sherman stated:

"It is the unlawful combination, tested by the rules of common law and human experience, that is aimed at by this bill, and not the lawful and useful combination." 21 Cong. Rec. 2457 (1890).

[LEdHN\[12C\]](#) [12C] [LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17] [****42] We have already noted that Congress left this "gap" for eminently sound reasons. Subjecting a single firm's every action to judicial scrutiny for reasonableness would threaten to discourage the competitive enthusiasm that the antitrust laws seek to promote. See supra, at 767-769. Moreover, whatever the wisdom of the distinction, the Act's plain language leaves no doubt that Congress made a purposeful choice to accord different treatment to unilateral and concerted conduct. Had Congress intended to outlaw unreasonable restraints of trade as such, § 1's requirement of a contract, combination, or conspiracy would be superfluous, as would the entirety of § 2.<sup>24</sup> Indeed, this Court has recognized [*776] that § 1 is limited to concerted conduct at least since the days of United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300 (1919). Accord, post, at 789.

[****43] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] The appropriate inquiry in this case, therefore, is not whether the coordinated conduct of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary may ever have anticompetitive effects, as the dissent suggests. Nor is it whether the term "conspiracy" will bear a literal construction that includes parent corporations and their wholly owned subsidiaries. For if these were the proper inquiries, a [***647] single firm's conduct would be subject to § 1 scrutiny whenever the coordination of two employees was involved. Such a rule would obliterate the Act's distinction between unilateral and concerted conduct, contrary to the clear intent of Congress as interpreted by the weight of judicial authority. See n. 15, supra. Rather, the appropriate inquiry requires us to explain the logic underlying Congress' decision to exempt unilateral conduct from § 1 scrutiny, and to assess whether that logic similarly excludes the conduct of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary. Unless we second-guess the judgment of Congress to limit § 1 to concerted conduct, we can only conclude that the coordinated behavior of a parent [****44] and its wholly owned subsidiary falls outside the reach of that provision.

Although we recognize that any "gap" the Sherman Act leaves is the sensible result of a purposeful policy decision by Congress, we also note that the size of any such gap is open [*777] to serious question. Any anticompetitive activities of corporations and their wholly owned subsidiaries meriting antitrust remedies may be policed adequately without resort to an intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine. A corporation's initial acquisition of control will always be subject to scrutiny under § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 7 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 18. Thereafter, the enterprise is fully subject to § 2 of the Sherman Act and § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 719, 15 U. S. C. I\*\*27451 § 45. That these statutes are adequate to control dangerous anticompetitive conduct is suggested by the fact that not a single holding of antitrust liability by this Court would today be different in the absence of an intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine. It is further suggested by the fact that the Federal Government, in its administration [****45] of the antitrust laws, no longer accepts the concept that a corporation and its wholly owned subsidiaries can "combine" or "conspire" under § 1.<sup>25</sup> Elimination of the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine with respect to corporations and their wholly owned subsidiaries will therefore not cripple

<sup>24</sup> [LEdHN\[12D\]](#) [12D]

Even if common-law intracorporate conspiracies were firmly established when Congress passed the Sherman Act, the obvious incompatibility of an intracorporate conspiracy with § 1 is sufficient to refute the dissent's suggestion that Congress intended to incorporate such a definition. See post, at 784-787. Moreover, it is far from clear that intracorporate conspiracies were recognized at common law in 1890. Even today courts disagree whether corporate employees can conspire with themselves or with the corporation for purposes of certain statutes, such as 42 U. S. C. § 1985\(3\). Compare, e. g., Novotny v. Great Am. Fed. Sav. & Loan Assn., 584 F.2d 1235 (CA3 1978) (en banc), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 442 U.S. 366 \(1979\), with Dombrowski v. Dowling, 459 F.2d 190 (CA7 1972). And in 1890 it was disputed whether a corporation could itself be guilty of a crime that required criminal intent, such as conspiracy. Commentators appear to agree that courts began finding corporate liability for such crimes only around the turn of the century. See generally Edgerton, Corporate Criminal Responsibility, 36 Yale L. J. 827, 828, and n. 11 (1927); Miller, Corporate Criminal Liability: A Principle Extended to Its Limits, 38 Fed. Bar J. 49 (1979); Note, 60 Harv. L. Rev. 283, 284, and n. 9 (1946). Of course, Congress changed that common-law rule when it explicitly provided that a corporation could be guilty of a § 1 conspiracy. But the point remains that the Sherman Act did not import a pre-existing common-law tradition recognizing conspiracies between corporations and their own employees.

<sup>25</sup> "[The] [intra-enterprise conspiracy] doctrine has played a relatively minor role in government enforcement actions, and the government has not relied on the doctrine in recent years." Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 26, n. 42.

antitrust enforcement. It will simply eliminate treble damages from private state tort suits masquerading as antitrust actions.

IV

LEDHN[1D] [1D] We hold that HN6 Copperweld and its wholly owned subsidiary Regal are incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act. To the extent that prior decisions of this Court are to the contrary, they are disapproved and overruled. Accordingly, [****46] the judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed.

It is so ordered.

[*778] JUSTICE WHITE took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

---

[***648] JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE BRENNAN and JUSTICE MARSHALL join, dissenting.

It is safe to assume that corporate affiliates do not vigorously compete with one another. A price-fixing or market-allocation agreement between two or more such corporate entities does not, therefore, eliminate any competition that would otherwise exist. It makes no difference whether such an agreement is labeled a "contract," a "conspiracy," or merely a policy decision, because it surely does not unreasonably restrain competition within the meaning of the Sherman Act. The Rule of Reason has always given the courts adequate latitude to examine the substance rather than the form of an arrangement when answering the question whether collective action has restrained competition within the meaning of § 1.

Today the Court announces a new per se rule: a wholly owned subsidiary is incapable of conspiring with its parent under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Instead of redefining the word "conspiracy," the Court would [****47] be better advised to continue to rely on the Rule of Reason. Precisely because they do not eliminate competition that would otherwise exist but rather enhance the ability to compete, restraints which enable effective integration between a corporate parent and its subsidiary -- the type of arrangement the Court is properly concerned with protecting -- are not prohibited by § 1. Thus, the Court's desire to shield such arrangements from antitrust liability provides no justification for the Court's new rule.

In contrast, the case before us today presents the type of restraint that has precious little to do with effective integration between parent and subsidiary corporations. Rather, the purpose of the challenged conduct was to exclude a potential competitor of the subsidiary from the market. The jury apparently concluded that the two defendant corporations -- [*779] Copperweld and its subsidiary Regal -- had successfully delayed Independence's entry into the steel tubing business by applying a form of economic coercion to potential suppliers of financing and capital equipment, as well as to potential customers. Everyone seems to agree that this conduct was tortious as a matter [****48] of state law. This type of exclusionary conduct is plainly distinguishable from vertical integration designed to achieve competitive efficiencies. If, as seems to be the case, the challenged conduct was manifestly anti-competitive, it should not be immunized from scrutiny under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

[**2746] I

Repudiation of prior cases is not a step that should be taken lightly. As the Court wrote only days ago: "[Any] departure from the doctrine of stare decisis demands special justification." Arizona v. Rumsey, ante, at 212. It is therefore appropriate to begin with an examination of the precedents.

467 U.S. 752, *779; 104 S. Ct. 2731, **2746; 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, ***648; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****48

In United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218 \(1947\), the Court explicitly stated that a corporate subsidiary could conspire with its parent:

"The fact that these restraints [***649] occur in a setting described by the appellees as a vertically integrated enterprise does not necessarily remove the ban of the Sherman Act. The test of illegality under the Act is the presence or absence of an unreasonable restraint on interstate commerce. Such a restraint may result as readily from a conspiracy among those who are affiliated or [****49] integrated under common ownership as from a conspiracy among those who are otherwise independent." *Id.*, at 227.

The majority attempts to explain Yellow Cab by suggesting that it dealt only with unlawful acquisition of subsidiaries. Ante, at 761-762. But the Court mentioned acquisitions only as an additional consideration separate from the passage [*780] quoted above,<sup>1</sup> and more important, the Court explicitly held that restraints imposed by the corporate parent on the affiliates that it already owned in themselves violated § 1.<sup>2</sup>

[****50] At least three cases involving the motion picture industry also recognize that affiliated corporations may combine or conspire within the meaning of § 1. In United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173 \(1944\), as the Court recognizes, ante, at 762, n. 6, the only conspirators were affiliated corporations. The majority's claim that the case involved only unlawful acquisitions because of the Court's comments concerning divestiture of the affiliates cannot be squared with the passage immediately following that cited by the majority, which states that there had been unlawful conduct going beyond the acquisition of subsidiaries:

"That principle is adequate here to justify divestiture of all interest in some of the affiliates since their acquisition was part of the fruits of the conspiracy. But the relief need not, and under these facts should not, be so restricted [to divestiture]. The fact that the companies were affiliated induced joint action and agreement. Common control was one of the instruments in bringing about unity of purpose and unity of action and in making the conspiracy effective. If that affiliation continues, [*781] [****51] there will be tempting opportunity for these exhibitors to continue to act in combination against the independents." *323 U.S., at 189-190* (emphasis supplied).

Similarly, in Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. v. United States, 334 U.S. 110 (1948), the Court held that concerted action by parents and subsidiaries [***650] constituted an unlawful conspiracy.<sup>3</sup> [**2747] That was also the holding in United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 109 \(1948\). The majority's observation that in these cases there were alternative grounds that could have been used to reach the same result, ante, at 763, n. 8, disguises neither the fact that the holding that actually appears in these opinions rests on conspiracy between affiliated entities, nor that today's holding is inconsistent with what was actually held in these cases.

[****52] In Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211 (1951), the Court's holding was plain and unequivocal:

<sup>1</sup> The language I have quoted, most of which is overlooked by the majority, makes it clear that the Court's adoption of the concept of conspiracy between affiliated corporations was unqualified. As the first word of the sentence indicates, the Court's following statement: "Similarly, any affiliation or integration flowing from an illegal conspiracy cannot insulate the conspirators from the sanctions which Congress has imposed," *332 U.S., at 227*, expresses a separate if related point.

<sup>2</sup> "[By] preventing the cab operating companies under their control from purchasing cabs from manufacturers other than CCM, the appellees deny those companies the opportunity to purchase cabs in a free, competitive market. The Sherman Act has never been thought to sanction such a conspiracy to restrain the free purchase of goods in interstate commerce." *Id., at 226-227* (footnote omitted).

<sup>3</sup> "[The] combining of the open and closed towns for the negotiation of films for the circuit was a restraint of trade and the use of monopoly power in violation of § 1 and § 2 of the Act. The concerted action of the parent company, its subsidiaries, and the named officers and directors in that endeavor was a conspiracy which was not immunized by reason of the fact that the members were closely affiliated rather than independent. See United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 227; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173." *334 U.S., at 116*.

467 U.S. 752, *781; 104 S. Ct. 2731, **2747; 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, ***650; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****52

"Respondents next suggest that their status as 'mere instrumentalities of a single manufacturing-merchandizing unit' makes it impossible for them to have conspired in a manner forbidden by the Sherman Act. But this suggestion runs counter to our past decisions that common ownership and control does not liberate corporations from the impact of the antitrust laws. E. g. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218. The rule is especially applicable where, as here, respondents hold themselves out as competitors." Id., at 215.

[*782] This holding is so clear that even the Court, which is not wanting for inventiveness in its reading of the prior cases, cannot explain it away. The Court suggests only that today Kiefer-Stewart might be decided on alternative grounds, ante, at 764, ignoring the fact that today's holding is inconsistent with the ground on which the case actually was decided.<sup>4</sup>

[****53] A construction of the statute that reaches agreements between corporate parents and subsidiaries was again embraced by the Court in Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593 (1951),<sup>5</sup> [****54] and Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134 (1968).<sup>6</sup> [***651] The majority only notes that there might have been other grounds for decision available in these cases, ante, at 764-766, but again it cannot deny that its new rule is inconsistent with what the Court actually did write in these cases.

[*783] Thus, the rule announced today is inconsistent with what this Court has held on at least seven previous occasions.<sup>7</sup> [****56] Perhaps [**2748] most illuminating is the fact that until today, whether they favored the doctrine or not, it had been the universal conclusion of both the lower courts<sup>8</sup> and the commentators<sup>9</sup> that this

<sup>4</sup> In Kiefer-Stewart, Seagram unsuccessfully argued that Yellow Cab was confined to cases concerning unlawful acquisitions, see Brief for Respondents, O. T. 1950, No. 297, p. 21. Thus the Kiefer-Stewart Court considered and rejected exactly the same argument embraced by today's majority.

<sup>5</sup> "The fact that there is common ownership or control of the contracting corporations does not liberate them from the impact of the antitrust laws. E. g., Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons, [340 U.S.] at 215. Nor do we find any support in reason or authority for the proposition that agreements between legally separate persons and companies to suppress competition among themselves and others can be justified by labeling the project a 'joint venture.' Perhaps every agreement and combination to restrain trade could be so labeled." 341 U.S., at 598.

<sup>6</sup> "There remains for consideration only the Court of Appeals' alternative holding that the Sherman Act claim should be dismissed because respondents were all part of a single business entity and were therefore entitled to cooperate without creating an illegal conspiracy. But since respondents Midas and International availed themselves of the privilege of doing business through separate corporations, the fact of common ownership could not save them from any of the obligations that the law imposes on separate entities. See Timken Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 598 (1951); United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 227 (1947)." 392 U.S., at 141-142.

<sup>7</sup> Also pertinent is United States v. Citizens & Southern National Bank, 422 U.S. 86 \(1975\), in which the Court wrote:

"The central message of the Sherman Act is that a business entity must find new customers and higher profits through internal expansion -- that is, by competing successfully rather than by arranging treaties with its competitors. This Court has held that even commonly owned firms must compete against each other, if they hold themselves out as distinct entities. 'The corporate interrelationships of the conspirators . . . are not determinative of the applicability of the Sherman Act.' United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 227. See also Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211, 215; Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 598; Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 141-142." Id., at 116-117.

<sup>8</sup> See, e. g., William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 668 F.2d 1014, 1054 (CA9), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 825 \(1982\); Ogilvie v. Fotomat Corp., 641 F.2d 581, 587-588 \(CA8 1981\); Las Vegas Sun, Inc. v. Summa Corp., 610 F.2d 614, 617-618 (CA9 1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 906 \(1980\); Photovest Corp. v. Fotomat Corp., 606 F.2d 704, 726 (CA7 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 917 \(1980\); Columbia Metal Culvert Co. v. Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp., 579 F.2d 20, 33-35, and n. 49 (CA3), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 876 \(1978\); H & B Equipment Co. v. International Harvester Co., 577 F.2d 239, 244-245

Court's cases establish that a parent [*784] [****55] and a [***652] wholly owned subsidiary corporation are capable of conspiring in violation of § 1. In this very case the Court of Appeals observed:

"[The] salient factor is that the Supreme Court's decisions, while they need not be read with complete literalism, of course they cannot be ignored. It is no accident that every Court of Appeals to consider the question has concluded that a parent and its subsidiary have the same capacity to conspire, whether or not they can be found to have done so in a particular case." 691 F.2d 310, 317 \(CA7 1982\) (footnotes omitted).

[****57] Thus, we are not writing on a clean slate. "[We] must bear in mind that considerations of stare decisis weigh heavily in the area of statutory construction, where Congress is free to change this Court's interpretation of its legislation." Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 736 \(1977\).<sup>10</sup> There can be no doubt that the Court today changes what has been taken to be the long-settled rule: a rule that Congress did not revise at any point in the last four decades. At a minimum there should be a strong presumption against the approach taken today by the Court. It is to the merits of that approach that I now turn.

II

The language of § 1 of the Sherman Act is sweeping in its breadth: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or [*785] otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, . . . is declared [****58] to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. This Court has long recognized that Congress intended this language to have a broad sweep, reaching any form of combination:

"[In] view of the many new forms of contracts and combinations which were being evolved from existing economic conditions, it was deemed essential by an all-embracing enumeration to make sure that no form of contract or combination by which an undue restraint of interstate or foreign commerce was brought about could save such restraint from condemnation. The statute under this view evidenced the intent not to restrain the right to make and enforce contracts, whether resulting from combination or otherwise, which did not unduly restrain interstate or foreign commerce, but to protect that commerce from being restrained by methods, whether old or new, which would constitute an interference that is an undue restraint." Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 59-60 \(1911\).

---

\(CA5 1978\); George R. Whitten, Jr., Inc. v. Paddock Pool Builders, Inc., 508 F.2d 547, 557 \(CA1 1974\), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 1004 \(1975\).

<sup>9</sup> See, e. g., Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 30-36 (1955) (hereinafter cited as Attorney General's Committee Report); L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust § 114 (1977); Areeda, Intraenterprise Conspiracy in Decline, 97 Harv. L. Rev. 451 \(1983\); Handler, Through the Antitrust Looking Glass -- Twenty-First Annual Antitrust Review, 57 Calif. L. Rev. 182, 182-193 (1969); Handler & Smart, The Present Status of the Intracorporate Conspiracy Doctrine, 3 Cardozo L. Rev. 23, 26-61 (1981); McQuade, Conspiracy, Multicorporate Enterprises, and Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 41 Va. L. Rev. 183, 188-212 (1955); Willis & Pitofsky, Antitrust Consequences of Using Corporate Subsidiaries, 43 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 20, 22-24 (1968); Comment, Intraenterprise Antitrust Conspiracy: A Decisionmaking Approach, 71 Calif. L. Rev. 1732, 1739-1745 \(1983\) (hereinafter cited as Comment, Decisionmaking); Comment, All in the Family: When Will Internal Discussions Be Labeled Intra-Enterprise Conspiracy?, 14 Duquesne L. Rev. 63 (1975); Note, "Conspiring Entities" Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 95 Harv. L. Rev. 661 (1982); Note, Intra-Enterprise Conspiracy Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act: A Suggested Standard, 75 Mich. L. Rev. 717, 718-727 (1977) (hereinafter cited as Note, Suggested Standard).

<sup>10</sup> See also Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Co., 465 U.S. 752, 769 \(1984\) (BRENNAN, J., concurring).

467 U.S. 752, *785; 104 S. Ct. 2731, **2749; 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, ***652; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****58

This broad construction is illustrated by the Court's refusal to limit the statute to actual agreements. Even mere acquiescence in an anticompetitive scheme has been held sufficient to [****59] satisfy the statutory language.<sup>11</sup>

Since the statute was written against the background of the common [***653] law,<sup>12</sup> [****61] reference to the common law is particularly enlightening in construing the statutory requirement of a "contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy." Under the common law, the question whether [*786] affiliated corporations constitute a plurality of actors within the meaning of the statute is easily answered. The well-settled rule is that a corporation is a separate legal entity; the separate corporate form cannot be disregarded.<sup>13</sup> The Congress that passed the Sherman Act was well acquainted with this rule. See 21 Cong. Rec. 2571 (1890) (remarks of Sen. Teller) ("Each corporation is a creature by itself"). [****60] Thus it has long been the law of criminal conspiracy that the officers of even a single corporation are capable of conspiring with each other or the corporation.<sup>14</sup> [****62] This Court has held that a corporation can conspire with its employee,<sup>15</sup> and [**2750] that a labor union can "combine" with its business agent within the meaning of § 1.<sup>16</sup> This concept explains the Timken Court's statement that the affiliated corporations in that case made [*787] "agreements between legally separate persons," 341 U.S., at 598. Thus, today's holding that agreements between parent and subsidiary corporations involve merely unilateral conduct is at odds with the way that this Court has traditionally understood the concept of a combination or conspiracy, and also at odds with the way in which the Congress that enacted the Sherman Act surely understood it.

Holding that affiliated corporations cannot constitute a plurality of actors is also inconsistent with the objectives of the Sherman Act. Congress [***654] was particularly concerned with "trusts," hence it named them in § 1 as a specific form of "combination" at which the statute was directed. Yet "trusts" consisted of affiliated corporations. As Senator Sherman explained:

"Because these combinations are always in many States and, as the Senator from Missouri says, it will be very easy for them to make a corporation within a State. So they can; but that is only one corporation of the combination. The combination [***63] is always of two or more, and in one case of forty-odd corporations, all

<sup>11</sup> See Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 149 (1968); United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 44 (1960). See also Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Co., 465 U.S., at 764, n. 9.

<sup>12</sup> E. g., Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 531-532 (1983); National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 687-688 (1978); Standard Oil, 221 U.S., at 59.

<sup>13</sup> See, e. g., Schenley Corp. v. United States, 326 U.S. 432, 437 (1946) (per curiam); New Colonial Ice Co. v. Helvering, 292 U.S. 435, 440-442 (1934); Burnet v. Clark, 287 U.S. 410 (1932); Louisville, C. & C. R. Co. v. Letson, 2 How. 497, 558-559 (1844); Bank of the United States v. Deveaux, 5 Cranch 61 (1809).

<sup>14</sup> Attorney General's Committee Report, supra n. 9, at 30-31 (citing Barron v. United States, 5 F.2d 799 (CA1 1925); Mininsohn v. United States, 101 F.2d 477 (CA3 1939); Egan v. United States, 137 F.2d 369 (CA8), cert. denied, 320 U.S. 788 (1943)). See also, e. g., United States v. Hartley, 678 F.2d 961, 971-972 (CA11 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1170 (1983); Alamo Fence Co. of Houston v. United States, 240 F.2d 179 (CA5 1957); Patterson v. United States, 222 F. 599, 618-619 (CA6), cert. denied, 238 U.S. 635 (1915); Union Pacific Coal Co. v. United States, 173 F. 737 (CA8 1909); United States v. Consolidated Coal Co., 424 F.Supp. 577, 579-581 (SD Ohio 1976); United States v. Griffin, 401 F.Supp. 1222, 1224-1225 (SD Ind. 1975), aff'd mem. sub nom. United States v. Metro Management Corp., 541 F.2d 284 (CA7 1976); United States v. Bridell, 180 F.Supp. 268, 273 (ND Ill. 1960); United States v. Kemmel, 160 F.Supp. 718 (MD Pa. 1958); Welling, Intracorporate Plurality in Criminal Conspiracy Law, 33 Hastings L. J. 1155, 1191-1199 (1982).

<sup>15</sup> See Hyde v. United States, 225 U.S. 347, 367-368 (1912). See also United States v. Sampson, 371 U.S. 75 (1962); Fong Foo v. United States, 369 U.S. 141 (1962) (per curiam); Lott v. United States, 367 U.S. 421 (1961); Nye & Nissen v. United States, 336 U.S. 613 (1949).

<sup>16</sup> See Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 465 (1921).

bound together by a link which holds them under the name of trustees, who are themselves incorporated under the laws of one of the States." 21 Cong. Rec. 2569 (1890).

The activities of these "combinations" of affiliated corporations were of special concern:

"[Associated] enterprise and capital are not satisfied with partnerships and corporations competing with each other, and have invented a new form of combination commonly called trusts, that seeks to avoid competition by combining the controlling corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the same business, and placing the power and property of the combination under the government of a few individuals, and often under the control of a single man called a trustee, a chairman, or a president.

[*788] "The sole object of such a combination is to make competition impossible. It can control the market, raise or lower prices, as will best promote its selfish interests, reduce prices in a particular locality and break down competition and advance prices at will where competition does not exist. Its governing motive is to increase the [****64] profits of the parties composing it. The law of selfishness, uncontrolled by competition, compels it to disregard the interest of the consumer. It dictates terms to transportation companies, it commands the price of labor without fear of strikes, for in its field it allows no competitors. . . . It is this kind of a combination we have to deal with now." Id., at 2457.<sup>17</sup>

Thus, the corporate subsidiary, when used as a device to eliminate competition, was one of the chief evils to which the Sherman Act was addressed.<sup>18</sup> The anomaly [**2751] in today's [***655] holding is that the corporate devices most similar to the original "trusts" are now those which free an enterprise from antitrust scrutiny.

[****65] [*789] III

The Court's reason for rejecting the concept of a combination or conspiracy among a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary is that it elevates form over substance -- while in form the two corporations are separate legal entities, in substance they are a single integrated enterprise and hence cannot comprise the plurality of actors necessary to satisfy § 1. Ante, at 771-774. In many situations the Court's reasoning is perfectly sensible, for the affiliation of corporate entities often is procompetitive precisely because, as the Court explains, it enhances efficiency. A challenge to conduct that is merely an incident of the desirable integration that accompanies such affiliation should fail. However, the protection of such conduct provides no justification for the Court's new rule, precisely because such conduct cannot be characterized as an unreasonable restraint of trade violative of § 1. Conversely, the problem with the Court's new rule is that it leaves a significant gap in the enforcement of § 1 with respect to anticompetitive conduct that is entirely unrelated to the efficiencies associated with integration.

Since at least United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300 (1919), [****66] § 1 has been construed to require a plurality of actors. This requirement, however, is a consequence of the plain statutory language, not of any economic principle. As an economic matter, what is critical is the presence of market power, rather than a plurality of actors.<sup>19</sup> [****67] From a competitive standpoint, a decision of a single firm possessing power to reduce output

<sup>17</sup> See also 21 Cong. Rec. 2562 (1890) (remarks of Sen. Teller); id., at 2570 (remarks of Sen. Sherman); id., at 2609 (remarks of Sen. Morgan).

<sup>18</sup> This legislative history thus demonstrates the error in the majority's conclusion that only acquisitions of corporate affiliates fall within § 1. See ante, at 761-762. The conduct of the trusts that Senator Sherman and others objected to went much further than mere acquisitions. Indeed, the irony of the Court's approach is that, had it been adopted in 1890, it would have meant that § 1 would have no application to trust combinations which had already been formed -- the very trusts to which Senator Sherman was referring.

I cannot believe that the Court really intends to express doubt as to whether the Congress that passed the Sherman Act thought conspiracy doctrine could apply to corporations. Ante, at 775-776, n. 24. If that were not the case, then the Sherman Act would have no application to corporations. Since, as is clear and as the Court concedes, the Sherman Act does apply to corporations, there can be no doubt that Congress intended to apply the law of conspiracy to agreements between corporations.

467 U.S. 752, *789; 104 S. Ct. 2731, **2751; 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, ***655; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****67

and raise prices above competitive levels has the same consequence as a decision by two firms acting together who have acquired an equivalent amount of market [*790] power through an agreement not to compete.<sup>20</sup> [****68] Unilateral conduct by a firm [***656] with market power has no less anticompetitive potential than conduct by a plurality of actors which generates or exploits the same power,<sup>21</sup> and probably more, since the [**2752] unilateral actor avoids the policing problems faced by cartels.

The rule of Yellow Cab thus has an economic justification. It addresses a gap in antitrust enforcement by reaching anticompetitive agreements between affiliated corporations which [*791] have sufficient market power to restrain marketwide competition, but [****69] not sufficient power to be considered monopolists within the ambit of § 2 of the Act.<sup>22</sup> [****70] The doctrine is also useful when a third party declines to join a conspiracy to restrain trade among affiliated corporations, and is harmed as a result through a boycott or similar tactics designed to penalize the refusal. In such cases, since there has been no agreement with the third party, only an agreement between the affiliated corporations can be the basis for § 1 inquiry.<sup>23</sup> Finally, it must be remembered that not all persons who restrain trade wear grey flannel suits. Businesses controlled by organized crime often attempt to gain control of an industry through violence or intimidation of competitors; in such cases § 1 can be applied to separately incorporated <sup>19</sup> Market power is the ability to raise prices above those that would be charged in a competitive market. See Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 27, n. 46 (1984); United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, Inc., 429 U.S. 610, 620 (1977); United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391 (1956).

<sup>20</sup> Significantly, the Court never suggests that the plurality-of-actors requirement has any intrinsic economic significance. Rather, it suggests that the requirement has evidentiary significance: combinations are more likely to signal anticompetitive conduct than is unilateral activity: "In any conspiracy, two or more entities that previously pursued their own interests separately are combining to act as one for their common benefit. This not only reduces the diverse directions in which economic power is aimed but suddenly increases the economic power moving in one particular direction." Ante, at 769. That is true, but it is also true of any ordinary commercial contract between separate entities, as can be seen if one substitutes the word "contract" for "conspiracy" in the passage I have quoted. The language of the Sherman Act indicates that it treats "contracts" and "conspiracies" as equivalent concepts -- both satisfy the multiplicity-of-actors requirement -- and yet one of the most fundamental points in antitrust jurisprudence, dating at least to Standard Oil, is that there is nothing inherently anticompetitive about a contract. Similarly, an agreement to act "for common benefit" in itself is unremarkable -- all agreements are in some sense a restraint of trade be they contracts or conspiracies. It is only when trade is unreasonably restrained that § 1 is implicated. The Court's evidentiary concern lacks merit.

<sup>21</sup> We made this point in the context of resale price maintenance in United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29 (1960):

"The Sherman Act forbids combinations of traders to suppress competition. True, there results the same economic effect as is accomplished by a prohibited combination to suppress price competition if each customer, although induced to do so solely by a manufacturer's announced policy, independently decides to observe specified resale prices. So long as Colgate is not overruled, this result is tolerated but only when it is the consequence of a mere refusal to sell in the exercise of a manufacturer's right 'freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal.'" Id., at 44 (quoting Colgate, 250 U.S., at 307).

<sup>22</sup> "[It] is the potential which this conspiracy concept holds for the development of a rational enforcement policy which, if anything, will ultimately attract the courts. If conduct of a single corporation which restrains trade were to violate Section 1, a forceful weapon would be available to the government with which to challenge conduct which in oligopolistic industries creates or reinforces entry barriers. Excessive advertising in the cereal, drug, or detergent industries, annual style changes in the auto industry, and other such practices could be reached as soon as they threatened to inhibit competition; there would be no need to wait until a 'dangerous probability' of monopoly had been reached, the requirement under Section 2 'attempt' doctrine. Nor would a single firm restraint of trade rule be overbroad. It would in no way threaten single firm activity -- setting a price, deciding what market it would deal in, or the like -- which did not threaten competitive conditions." L. Sullivan, supra n. 9, § 114, at 324 (footnotes omitted).

<sup>23</sup> This was the case in Kiefer-Stewart, for example. Seagram had refused to sell liquor to Kiefer-Stewart unless it agreed to an illegal resale price maintenance scheme. Kiefer-Stewart refused to agree, and as a result was injured by losing access to Seagram's products. See 340 U.S., at 213.

businesses which benefit from such tactics, but which may be ultimately controlled by a single criminal enterprise.
24

[*792] The [***657] rule of Yellow Cab and its progeny is not one that condemns every parent-subsidiary relationship. A single firm, no matter what its corporate structure may be, is not expected to compete with itself. 25 [****72] Functional [****71] integration by its very nature requires unified action; hence in itself it has never been sufficient to establish the [**2753] existence of an unreasonable restraint of trade: "In discussing the charge in the Yellow Cab case, we said that the fact that the conspirators were integrated did not insulate them from the act, not that corporate integration violated the act." United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 522 (1948). Restraints that act only on the parent or its subsidiary as a consequence of an otherwise lawful integration do not violate § 1 of the Sherman Act. 26 But if the behavior at issue is unrelated to any functional integration between the affiliated corporations and [*793] imposes a restraint on third parties of sufficient magnitude to restrain marketwide competition, as a matter of economic substance, as well as form, it is appropriate to characterize the conduct as a "combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade." 27

[****73] For example, in Yellow Cab the Court read the complaint as alleging that integration had assisted the parent in excluding competing manufacturers from the marketplace, 332 U.S., at 226-227, leading the Court to conclude that "restraint of interstate [***658] trade was not only effected by the combination of the appellees but was the primary object of the combination." Id., at 227. Similarly, in Crescent Amusement the Court noted that corporate affiliation between exhibitors enhanced their buying power and "was one of the instruments in . . . making the conspiracy effective" in excluding independents from the market. 323 U.S., at 189-190. Thus, in both cases the Court found that the affiliation enhanced the ability of the parent corporation to exclude the competition of third

<sup>24</sup> See United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 588-593 (1981) (discussing congressional findings underlying the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970). Section 1 of the Sherman Act has on occasion been used against various types of racketeering activity. See Hartwell, Criminal RICO and Antitrust, 52 Antitrust L. J. 311, 312-313 (1983); McLaren, Antitrust and Competition -- Review of the Past Year and Suggestions for the Future, in New York State Bar Assn., 1971 Antitrust Law Symposium 1, 3 (1971).

<sup>25</sup> See Comment, Decisionmaking, supra n. 9, at 1753-1757; Note, Suggested Standard, supra n. 9, at 735-738. Professor Sullivan elaborates:

"Picture, at one end of the spectrum, a family business which operates one retail store in each of three or four adjacent communities. All of the stores are managed as a unit by one individual, the founder of the business who sets policy, does all the buying, decides on all the advertising, sets prices, and hires and fires all employees other than family members. The fact that each store is operated by a separate corporation should not convert a family business into a cartel. . . . If there is, as a practical matter, an integrated ownership and management, this small business is a single firm. And a single firm cannot compete with itself. Hence it cannot restrain price competition with itself, or divide markets with itself, or act as a common purchasing agent for itself or otherwise restrain competition with itself, regardless of how many separate corporations the single firm may, for reasons unrelated to the act, be divided into." L. Sullivan, supra n. 9, § 114, at 326-327.

<sup>26</sup> Thus, the Court is wrong to suggest, ante, at 771-772, 774-776, and n. 24, that Yellow Cab could reach truly unilateral conduct involving only the employees of a single firm.

<sup>27</sup> If the rule of Yellow Cab and its progeny could be easily circumvented through, for example, use of unincorporated divisions instead of subsidiaries, then there would be reason to question its efficacy as a tool for rational antitrust enforcement. However, the Court is incorrect when it asserts, ante, at 770-771, 772-774, that there is no economic substance in a distinction between unincorporated divisions, which cannot provide a plurality of actors, and wholly owned subsidiaries, which under Yellow Cab can. If that were the case, incorporated subsidiaries would never be used to achieve integration -- the ready availability of an unincorporated alternative would always be employed in order to avoid antitrust liability. The answer is provided by the Court itself -- the use of subsidiaries often makes possible operating efficiencies that are unavailable through the use of unincorporated divisions. Ante, at 772-774. We may confidently assume that any corporate parent whose contingent antitrust liability exceeds the savings it realizes through the use of subsidiaries already utilizes unincorporated divisions instead of corporate subsidiaries. Thus, it is more than merely a question of form when a decision is made to use corporate subsidiaries instead of unincorporated divisions, and the rule is not that easily circumvented.

parties, and hence raised entry [*794] barriers faced by actual and potential competitors. When conduct restrains trade not merely by integrating affiliated corporations but rather by restraining the ability of others to compete, that conduct has competitive significance drastically different from procompetitive integration.<sup>28</sup> In [**2754] these [****74] cases, the affiliation assisted exclusionary conduct; it was not the competitive equivalent of unilateral integration but instead generated power to restrain marketwide competition.

[***75] There are other ways in which corporate affiliation can operate to restrain competition. A wholly owned subsidiary might market a "fighting brand" or engage in other predatory behavior that would be more effective if its ownership were concealed than if it was known that only one firm was involved. A predator might be willing to accept the risk of bankrupting a subsidiary when it could not afford to let a division incur similar risks. Affiliated corporations might enhance their power over suppliers by agreeing to refuse to deal with those who deal with an actual or potential competitor [*795] of one of them; such a threat might be more potent coming from both corporations than from only one.<sup>29</sup>

[***76] In [***659] this case, it may be that notices to potential suppliers of respondent emanating from Copperweld carried more weight than would notices coming only from Regal. There was evidence suggesting that Regal and Copperweld were not integrated, and that the challenged agreement had little to do with achieving procompetitive efficiencies and much to do with protecting Regal's market position. The Court does not even try to explain why their common ownership meant that Copperweld and Regal were merely obtaining benefits associated with the efficiencies of integration. Both the District Court and the Court of Appeals thought that their agreement had a very different result -- that it raised barriers to entry and imposed an appreciable marketwide restraint. The Court's discussion of the justifications for corporate affiliation is therefore entirely abstract -- while it dutifully lists the procompetitive justifications for corporate affiliation, ante, at 772-774, it fails to explain how any of them relate to the conduct at issue in this case. What is challenged here is not the fact of integration between Regal and Copperweld, but their specific agreement with respect to [***77] Independence. That agreement concerned the exclusion of [*796] Independence from the market, and not any efficiency resulting from integration. The facts of this very case belie the conclusion that affiliated corporations are incapable of engaging in the kind of conduct that threatens marketwide competition. The Court does not even attempt to assess the competitive significance of the conduct under challenge here -- it never tests its economic assumptions against the concrete facts before it. Use of economic theory without reference to the competitive impact of the particular economic arrangement at issue is

<sup>28</sup> See L. Sullivan, supra n. 9, § 114, at 328 ("To have two competitors acting concertedly two separate firms, not just persons, are needed. Thus 'concerted action' by two 'legal persons' which is limited solely to the internal management of a single firm does not restrain competition; but 'concerted action' by two 'legal persons' which erects barriers to entry by another separate firm, a competitor or potential competitor, can be a restraint of trade"); see also Willis & Pitofsky, supra n. 9, at 38-41. The Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws made the same point in 1955:

"The substance of the Supreme Court decisions is that concerted action between a parent and subsidiary or between subsidiaries which has for its purpose or effect coercion or unreasonable restraint on the trade of strangers to those acting in concert is prohibited by Section 1. Nothing in these opinions should be interpreted as justifying the conclusion that concerted action solely between a parent and subsidiary or subsidiaries, the purpose and effect of which is not coercive restraint of the trade of strangers to the corporate family, violates Section 1. Where such concerted action restrains no trade and is designed to restrain no trade other than that of the parent and its subsidiaries, Section 1 is not violated." Attorney General's Committee Report, supra n. 9, at 34.

<sup>29</sup> Professor Sullivan provides another example:

"[Picture] a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary (or two corporations wholly owned by the same parent or stockholder group) which operate, respectively, a newspaper and a radio station in the same city. If the radio station, which has no local competitors, were to deny advertising to a local business because the latter advertised in a rival newspaper, the integration between the two corporations, however close in terms of ownership or management or both, would not protect them from a charge of conspiracy to restrain trade. . . . [The] concerted action here involved is not merely carrying on the business of a single integrated firm, it is action which is aimed at restraining trade by utilizing such market power as is possessed by the firm because of its radio station in order to erect a competitive barrier in front of a competitor of the firm's newspaper." L. Sullivan, supra n. 9, § 114, at 327 (footnote omitted).

properly criticized when it produces overly broad per se rules of antitrust liability;<sup>30</sup> criticism is no less warranted when a per se rule of antitrust immunity is adopted in the same way.

In sum, the question that the Court should ask is not why a wholly owned subsidiary should be treated [****78] differently from a corporate division, since the immunity accorded that type of arrangement is a necessary consequence of Colgate. Rather the question should be why two corporations that engage in a predatory course of conduct which produces a marketwide restraint [**2755] on competition and which, as separate legal entities, can be easily fit within the language of § 1, should be immunized from liability because they are controlled by the same godfather. That is a question the Court simply fails to confront. I respectfully dissent.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 22

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:339

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:81 et seq.

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, Form 13

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 34

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick [****79] Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Supreme Court's views as to what constitutes per se illegal "price fixing" under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 64 L Ed 2d 997.

Business units or persons within single, commonly owned enterprise as conspiring with each other in violation of 1 or 3 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 3). 20 ALR Fed 682.

Measure and elements of damages under 15 USCS 15 entitling person injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in federal antitrust laws to recover treble damages. 16 ALR Fed 14.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>30</sup> E. g., Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977).

National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents

Supreme Court of the United States

March 20, 1984, Argued ; June 27, 1984, Decided

No. 83-271

Reporter

468 U.S. 85 *; 104 S. Ct. 2948 **; 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 ***; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 130 ****; 52 U.S.L.W. 4928; 1984-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,139

NATIONAL COLLEGIATE ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION v. BOARD OF REGENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 707 F.2d 1147, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

television, games, athletics, football, college football, broadcasters, networks, output, rights, institutions, telecasts, intercollegiate, schools, amateurism, Sherman Act, sports, teams, regulations, attendance, programs, anticompetitive, compete, enhance, appearances, competitors, attractive, antitrust, procompetitive, audience, consumer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

A horizontal restraint of trade is created where an agreement among competitors exists on the way in which they will compete with one another. A restraint of this type has often been held to be unreasonable as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Horizontal price fixing is ordinarily condemned as a matter of law under an "illegal per se" approach because the probability that these practices are anticompetitive is so high. A per se rule is applied when the practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output. In such circumstances a restraint is presumed unreasonable without inquiry into the particular market context in which it is found.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Business & Corporate Law > Nonprofit Corporations & Organizations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 Higher Education & Professional Associations, Colleges & Universities

There is no doubt that the sweeping language of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 applies to nonprofit entities. Courts impose antitrust liability on nonprofit entities that engage in anticompetitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A conclusion that a restraint of trade is unreasonable may be based either on the nature or character of the contracts, or on surrounding circumstances giving rise to the inference or presumption that they were intended to restrain trade and enhance prices. Under either branch of the test, the inquiry is confined to a consideration of impact on competitive conditions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., the criterion to be used in judging the validity of a restraint on trade is its impact on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

**HN7** [blue downward arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., prohibits every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the states.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN8** [blue downward arrow] Higher Education & Professional Associations, Colleges & Universities

A restraint that has the effect of reducing the importance of consumer preference in setting price and output is not consistent with this fundamental goal of anti-trust law. Restrictions on price and output are the paradigmatic examples of restraints of trade that the Sherman Act was intended to prohibit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

**HN9** [blue downward arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Market power is the ability to raise prices above those that would be charged in a competitive market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

**HN10** [blue downward arrow] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

The absence of proof of market power does not justify a naked restriction on price or output. To the contrary, when there is an agreement not to compete in terms of price or output, no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of such an agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Broadcasting > General Overview

**HN11** [blue downward arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

When a product is controlled by one interest, without substitutes available in the market, there is monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN12 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under the Rule of Reason, hallmarks of anticompetitive behavior place upon petitioner a heavy burden of establishing an affirmative defense, which competitively justifies a deviation from the operations of a free market.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

NCAA exclusive football telecasting plan held Sherman Act violation.

Summary

The University of Oklahoma and the University of Georgia brought suit in the United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma against the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), challenging the validity under the Sherman Act of the NCAA's restraints in the televising of college football games. The District Court ruled that the NCAA unlawfully restrained trade by fixing the price for particular telecasts, boycotting and threatening to boycott potential broadcasters by its exclusive network football-broadcast contracts, and placing an artificial limit on the production of televised college football (546 F Supp 1276). The United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit affirmed but remanded for an appropriate modification of the injunctive decree, holding that the NCAA television plan constituted illegal per se price fixing, and that even if the television plan was not per se illegal, its anticompetitive limitation on price and output was not offset by any procompetitive justification sufficient to save the plan even when the totality of the circumstances was examined (707 F2d 1147).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Stevens, J., expressing the views of Burger, Ch. J., and Brennan, Marshall, Blackmun, Powell, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held that (1) the record supported the District Court's conclusion that by curtailing output and blunting the ability of member institutions to respond to customer preference, the NCAA restricted rather than enhanced the place of intercollegiate athletics in the nation's life; and (2) the NCAA television plan, which limited the total amount of televised intercollegiate football and the number of games that an NCAA member might televise, and which forbade any member to make any sale of television rights except in accordance with the basic plan, constituted a restraint on the operation of a free market in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act.

White, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., dissented on the ground that the essentially noneconomic nature of the NCAA's program of self-regulation offset any minimal anticompetitive effects of the television plan.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §16 > TV contract -- > Headnote:

LEdHN1A [1A] LEdHN1B [1B] LEdHN1C [1C]

A television plan adopted by an association of colleges and universities, which limits the total amount of televised intercollegiate football and the number of games that an association member may televise, and which forbids any member to make any sale of television rights except in accordance with the basic plan, constitutes a restraint on the operation of a free market, in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), where the record supports the lower court's conclusion that by curtailing output and blunting the ability of member institutions to respond to customer preference, the association restricted rather than enhanced the place of intercollegiate athletics in the nation's life. (White and Rehnquist, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

468 U.S. 85, *85; 104 S. Ct. 2948, **2948; 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, ***70; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 130, ****1

APPEAL §1506 > findings -- two-court rule -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

The United States Supreme Court accords great weight to a finding of fact which has been made by a United States District Court and approved by a United States Court of Appeals.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §16 > reason -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) is intended to prohibit only unreasonable restraints of trade.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > per se rule -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

A per se rule is applied when a practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and restrict output, in which event a restraint is presumed unreasonable without inquiring into the particular market context in which it is found.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §11 > nonprofit entities -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) applies to nonprofit entities.

EVIDENCE §173 > motive -- NCAA -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

As the guardian of an important American tradition, the National Collegiate Athletic Association's motives must be accorded a respectful presumption of validity.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §15 > motive -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

Good motives do not validate an otherwise anticompetitive practice.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §16 > rule of reason -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

A conclusion that a restraint of trade is unreasonable may be based either (1) on the nature or character of the contracts or (2) on surrounding circumstances giving rise to the inference or presumption that they were intended to restrain trade and enhance prices; under either branch of the test, the inquiry is confined to a consideration of impact on competitive conditions.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > per se rule -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

Per se rules are invoked when surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct so great as to render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §19 > anticompetitive impact -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

Under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), the criterion to be used in judging the validity of a restraint on trade is its impact on competition.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §17 > consumer welfare -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

A restraint that has the affect of reducing the importance of consumer preference in setting price and output is not consistent with the fundamental goal of antitrust law of serving as a consumer welfare prescription.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §19 > market power -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

The absence of proof of market power does not justify a naked restriction on price or output; rather, a naked restraint on price and output requires some competitive justification even in the absence of a detailed market analysis.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > price -- output -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

When there is an agreement not to compete in terms of price or output, no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of the agreement.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §19 > market -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [down] [14]

The correct test for determining whether college football broadcasts constitute a separate market is whether there are other products that are reasonably substitutable for televised NCAA football games.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §19 > monopolies -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [down] [15]

When a product is controlled by one interest, without substitutes available in the market, there is monopoly power.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > price -- defense -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [down] [16]

Under the rule of reason, a price rise and output reduction place upon the one causing them a heavy burden of establishing an affirmative defense which competitively justifies the apparent deviation from the operations of a free market.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §16 > defense -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [down] [17]

The rule of reason does not support a defense based on the assumption that competition itself is unreasonable.

Syllabus

---

In 1981, petitioner National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) adopted a plan for the televising of college football games of its member institutions for the 1982-1985 seasons. The plan recites that it is intended to reduce the adverse effect of live television upon football game attendance. The plan limits the total amount of televised intercollegiate football games and the number of games that any one college may televise, and no member of the NCAA is permitted to make any sale of television rights except in accordance with the plan. The NCAA has separate agreements with the two carrying networks, the American Broadcasting Cos. and the Columbia Broadcasting System, granting each network the right to telecast the live "exposures" described in the plan. Each network agreed to pay a specified "minimum aggregate compensation" to the participating NCAA members, and was authorized [****2] to negotiate directly with the members for the right to televise their games. Respondent Universities, in addition to being NCAA members, are members of the College Football Association (CFA), which was originally organized to promote the interests of major football-playing colleges within the NCAA structure, but whose members eventually claimed that they should have a greater voice in the formulation of football television policy than they had in the NCAA. The CFA accordingly negotiated a contract with the National Broadcasting Co. that would have allowed a more liberal number of television appearances for each college and would have increased the revenues realized by CFA members. In response, the NCAA announced that it would take disciplinary action against any CFA member that complied with the CFA-NBC contract. Respondents then commenced an action in Federal District Court, which, after an extended trial, held that the controls exercised by the NCAA over the televising of college football games violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, and accordingly granted injunctive relief. The court found that competition in the relevant market -- defined as "live college football television" -- [***3] had been restrained in three ways: (1) the NCAA fixed the price for particular telecasts; (2) its exclusive network contracts were tantamount to a group boycott of all other potential broadcasters and its threat of sanctions against its members constituted a threatened boycott of potential competitors; and (3) its plan placed an artificial limit on the production of televised college football. The Court of Appeals agreed that the Sherman Act had been violated, holding that the NCAA's television plan constituted illegal per se price fixing and that even if it were not per se illegal, its anticompetitive limitation on price and output was not offset by any procompetitive justifications sufficient to save the plan even when the totality of the circumstances was examined.

Held: The NCAA's television plan violates § 1 of the Sherman Act. Pp. 98-120.

(a) While the plan constitutes horizontal price fixing and output limitation, restraints that ordinarily would be held "illegal per se," it would be inappropriate to apply a per se rule in this case where it involves an industry in which horizontal restraints on competition are essential if the product is to be available [***4] at all. The NCAA and its members market competition itself -- contests between competing institutions. Thus, despite the fact that restraints on the ability of NCAA members to compete in terms of price and output are involved, a fair evaluation of their competitive character requires consideration, under the Rule of Reason, of the NCAA's justifications for the restraints. But an analysis under the Rule of Reason does not change the ultimate focus of the inquiry, which is whether or not the challenged restraints enhance competition. Pp. 98-104.

(b) The NCAA television plan on its face constitutes a restraint upon the operation of a free market, and the District Court's findings establish that the plan has operated to raise price and reduce output, both of which are unresponsive to consumer preference. Under the Rule of Reason, these hallmarks of anticompetitive behavior place upon the NCAA a heavy burden of establishing an affirmative defense that competitively justifies this apparent deviation from the operations of a free market. The NCAA's argument that its television plan can have no significant anticompetitive effect since it has no market power must be rejected. As a matter [***5] of law, the absence of proof of market power does not justify a naked restriction on price or output and, as a factual matter, it is evident from the record that the NCAA does possess market power. Pp. 104-113.

(c) The record does not support the NCAA's proffered justification for its television plan that it constitutes a cooperative "joint venture" which assists in the marketing of broadcast rights and hence is procompetitive. The District Court's contrary findings undermine such a justification. Pp. 113-115.

(d) Nor, contrary to the NCAA's assertion, does the television plan protect live attendance, since, under the plan, games are televised during all hours that college football games are played. Moreover, by seeking to insulate live ticket sales from the full spectrum of competition because of its assumption that the product itself is insufficiently attractive to draw live attendance when faced with competition from televised games, the NCAA forwards a justification that is inconsistent with the Sherman Act's basic policy. "The Rule of Reason does not support a defense based on the assumption that competition itself is unreasonable." National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 696. [***6] Pp. 115-117.

(e) The interest in maintaining a competitive balance among amateur athletic teams that the NCAA asserts as a further justification for its television plan is not related to any neutral standard or to any readily identifiable group of competitors. The television plan is not even arguably tailored to serve such an interest. It does not regulate the amount of money that any college may spend on its football program or the way the colleges may use their football program revenues, but simply imposes a restriction on one source of revenue that is more important to some colleges than to others. There is no evidence that such restriction produces any greater measure of equality throughout the NCAA than would a restriction on alumni donations, tuition rates, or any other revenue-producing activity. Moreover, the District Court's well-supported finding that many more games would be televised in a free market than under the NCAA plan, is a compelling demonstration that the plan's controls do not serve any legitimate procompetitive purpose. Pp. 117-120.

Counsel: Frank H. Easterbrook argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were George H. Gangwere and James D. [***7] Fellers.

Andy Coats argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were Clyde A. Muchmore, Erwin N. Griswold, J. Ralph Beaird, and James F. Ponsoldt.

Solicitor General Lee argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging affirmance. With him on the brief were Assistant Attorney General McGrath, Deputy Solicitor General Wallace, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Ginsberg, Jerrold J. Ganzfried, Barry Grossman, and Andrea Limmer. *

Judges: STEVENS, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and BRENNAN, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, POWELL, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. WHITE, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which REHNQUIST, J., joined, post, p. 120.

Opinion by: STEVENS

Opinion

---

[*88] [***75] [**2953] JUSTICE STEVENS delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A] [***8] The University of Oklahoma and the University of Georgia contend that the National Collegiate Athletic Association has unreasonably restrained trade in the televising of college football games. After an extended trial, the District Court found that the NCAA had violated § 1 of the Sherman Act<sup>1</sup> and granted [***76] injunctive relief. 546 F.Supp. 1276 (WD Okla. 1982). The Court of Appeals agreed that the statute had been violated but modified the remedy in some respects. 707 F.2d 1147 (CA10 1983). We granted certiorari, 464 U.S. 913 (1983), and now affirm.

I

The NCAA

[***9] Since its inception in 1905, the NCAA has played an important role in the regulation of amateur collegiate sports. It has adopted and promulgated playing rules, standards of amateurism, standards for academic eligibility, regulations concerning recruitment of athletes, and rules governing the size of athletic squads and coaching staffs. In some sports, such as baseball, [**2954] swimming, basketball, wrestling, and track, it has sponsored and

---

* Gerald A. Caplan and Alexander Halpern filed a brief for the National Federation of State High School Associations as amicus curiae urging reversal.

Forrest A. Hainline III and J. Laurent Scharff filed a brief for the Association of Independent Television Stations, Inc., as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

<sup>1</sup> Section 1 provides in pertinent part:

HN1 [↑] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. . . ." 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1.

conducted national tournaments. It has not done so in the sport of football, however. With the [*89] exception of football, the NCAA has not undertaken any regulation of the televising of athletic events.<sup>2</sup>

The NCAA has approximately 850 voting members. The regular members are classified into separate divisions to reflect differences in size and scope of their athletic programs. Division I includes 276 colleges with major athletic programs; in this group only 187 [***10] play intercollegiate football. Divisions II and III include approximately 500 colleges with less extensive athletic programs. Division I has been subdivided into Divisions I-A and I-AA for football.

Some years ago, five major conferences together with major football-playing independent institutions organized the College Football Association (CFA). The original purpose of the CFA was to promote the interests of major football-playing schools within the NCAA structure. The Universities of Oklahoma and Georgia, respondents in this Court, are members of the CFA.

History of the NCAA Television Plan

In 1938, the University of Pennsylvania televised one of its home games.<sup>3</sup> From 1940 through the 1950 season all of Pennsylvania's home games were televised. App. 303. That was the beginning of the relationship between television and college football.

[***11] On January 11, 1951, a three-person "Television Committee," appointed during the preceding year, delivered a report to the NCAA's annual convention in Dallas. Based on preliminary surveys, the committee had concluded that "television does have an adverse effect on college football attendance and unless brought under some control threatens to seriously harm the nation's overall athletic and physical [*90] system." Id., at 265. The report emphasized that "the television problem is truly a national one and requires collective action by the colleges." Id., [***77] at 270. As a result, the NCAA decided to retain the National Opinion Research Center (NORC) to study the impact of television on live attendance, and to declare a moratorium on the televising of football games. A television committee was appointed to implement the decision and to develop an NCAA television plan for 1951. Id., at 277-278.

The committee's 1951 plan provided that only one game a week could be telecast in each area, with a total blackout on 3 of the 10 Saturdays during the season. A team could appear on television only twice during a season. The plan also provided that the NORC would [***12] conduct a systematic study of the effects of the program on attendance. Id., at 279. The plan received the virtually unanimous support of the NCAA membership; only the University of Pennsylvania challenged it. Pennsylvania announced that it would televise all its home games. The council of the NCAA thereafter declared Pennsylvania a member in bad standing and the four institutions scheduled to play at Pennsylvania in 1951 refused to do so. Pennsylvania then reconsidered its decision and abided by the NCAA plan. Id., at 280-281.

During each of the succeeding five seasons, studies were made which tended to indicate that television had an adverse effect on attendance at college football games. During those years the NCAA continued to exercise complete control over the number of games that could be televised. Id., at 325-359.

From 1952 through 1977 the NCAA television committee followed essentially the same procedure for developing its television plans. It would first circulate a questionnaire to the membership and then use the responses as a basis for formulating [**2955] a plan for the ensuing season. The plan was then submitted to a vote by means of a mail referendum. [***13] Once approved, the plan formed the basis for NCAA's negotiations [*91] with the networks. Throughout this period the plans retained the essential purposes of the original plan. See 546 F.Supp., at 1283.<sup>4</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> Presumably, however, it sells the television rights to events that the NCAA itself conducts.

<sup>3</sup> According to the NCAA football television committee's 1981 briefing book: "As far as is known, there were [then] six television sets in Philadelphia; and all were tuned to the game." App. 244.

Until 1977 the contracts were all for either 1- or 2-year terms. In 1977 the NCAA adopted "principles of negotiation" for the future and discontinued the practice of submitting each plan for membership approval. Then the NCAA also entered into its first 4-year contract granting exclusive rights to the American Broadcasting Cos. (ABC) for the 1978-1981 seasons. ABC had held the exclusive rights to network telecasts of NCAA football games since 1965. Id. at 1283-1284.

[****14] The Current Plan

The plan adopted in 1981 for the 1982-1985 seasons is at issue in this [***78] case.<sup>5</sup> [****15] This plan, like each of its predecessors, recites that it is intended to reduce, insofar as possible, the adverse effects of live television upon football game attendance.<sup>6</sup> It provides that "all forms of television of the football [*92] games of NCAA member institutions during the Plan control periods shall be in accordance with this Plan." App. 35. The plan recites that the television committee has awarded rights to negotiate and contract for the telecasting of college football games of members of the NCAA to two "carrying networks." Id., at 36. In addition to the principal award of rights to the carrying networks, the plan also describes rights for a "supplementary series" that had been awarded for the 1982 and 1983 seasons,<sup>7</sup> as well as a procedure for permitting specific "exception telecasts."<sup>8</sup>

[****16] In separate agreements with each of the carrying networks, ABC and the Columbia Broadcasting System (CBS), the NCAA granted each the right to telecast the 14 live "exposures" described in the plan, in accordance with the "ground rules" set [**2956] forth therein.<sup>9</sup> Each of the networks agreed to pay a specified "minimum

<sup>4</sup> The television committee's 1981 briefing book elaborates:

"In 1952, the NCAA Television Committee initiated a plan for controlling the televising of college football games. The plans have remained remarkably similar as to their essential features over the past 30 years. They have had the following primary objectives and purposes:

"1. To reduce, insofar as possible, the adverse effects of live television upon football game attendance and, in turn, upon the athletic and education programs dependent upon that football attendance;
 "2. To spread television among as many NCAA member colleges as possible; and
 "3. To provide football television to the public to the extent compatible with the other two objectives." Ibid.

<sup>5</sup> Because respondents sought and obtained only injunctive relief against future violations of § 1 in the District Court, we do not consider previous NCAA television plans except to the extent that they shed light on the purpose and effect of the current plan.

<sup>6</sup> "The purposes of this Plan shall be to reduce, insofar as possible, the adverse effects of live television upon football game attendance and, in turn, upon the athletic and related educational programs dependent upon the proceeds therefrom; to spread football television participation among as many colleges as practicable; to reflect properly the image of universities as educational institutions; to promote college football through the use of television, to advance the overall interests of intercollegiate athletics, and to provide college football television to the public to the extent compatible with these other objectives." Id., at 35 (parenthetical omitted).

<sup>7</sup> The supplementary series is described in a separate article of the plan. It is to consist of no more than 36 exposures in each of the first two years and no more than 40 exposures in the third and fourth years of the plan. Those exposures are to be scheduled on Saturday evenings or at other times that do not conflict with the principal football series that is scheduled for Saturday afternoons. Id., at 86-92.

<sup>8</sup> An "exception" telecast is permitted in the home team's market of games that are sold out, and in the visiting team's market of games played more than 400 miles from the visiting team's campus, but in both cases only if the broadcast would not be shown in an area where another college football game is to be played. Id., at 62-72. Also, Division II and Division III institutions are allowed complete freedom to televise their games, except that the games may not appear on a network of more than five stations without the permission of the NCAA. Id., at 73-74.

aggregate compensation [*93] to the participating NCAA member institutions" during the 4-year period in an amount that totaled $ 131,750,000. In essence the agreement authorized each network to negotiate directly with member schools for the right to televise their games. The agreement itself does not describe the method of computing the compensation for each game, but the practice that has developed over the years and that the District Court found would be followed under the current agreement involved the setting of a recommended fee by a representative of the NCAA for different types of telecasts, with national telecasts being [***79] the most valuable, regional telecasts being less valuable, and Division II or Division III games commanding a still lower price.

<sup>10</sup> [***18] The aggregate of all these payments presumably equals the total minimum aggregate compensation [***17] set forth in the basic agreement. Except for differences in payment between national and regional telecasts, and with respect to Division II and Division III games, the amount that any team receives does not change with the size of the viewing audience, the number of markets in which the game is telecast, or the particular characteristic of the game or the participating teams. Instead, the "ground rules" provide that the carrying networks make alternate selections of those games they wish to televise, and thereby obtain the exclusive right to submit a bid at an essentially fixed price to the institutions involved. See 546 F.Supp., at 1289-1293.<sup>11</sup>

[*94] The plan also contains "appearance requirements" and "appearance limitations" which pertain to each of the 2-year periods that the [***19] plan is in effect. The basic requirement imposed on each of the two networks is that it must schedule appearances for at least 82 different member institutions during each 2-year period. Under the appearance limitations no member institution is eligible to appear on television more than a total of six times and more than four times nationally, with the appearances to be divided equally between the two carrying networks. See id., at 1293. The number of exposures specified in the contracts also sets an absolute maximum on the number of games that can be broadcast.

Thus, although the current plan is more elaborate than any of its predecessors, it retains the essential features of each of them. It limits the total amount of televised intercollegiate football and the number of games that any one team may televise. No member is permitted to make any [**2957] sale of television rights except in accordance with the basic plan.

Background of this Controversy

Beginning in 1979 CFA members began to advocate that colleges with major football programs should have a greater voice in the formulation of football television policy than they [***80] had in the [***20] NCAA. CFA therefore investigated the possibility of negotiating a television agreement of its own, developed [*95] an <sup>9</sup> In addition to its contracts with the carrying networks, the NCAA has contracted with Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. (TBS), for the exclusive right to cablecast NCAA football games. The minimum aggregate fee for the initial 2-year period of the TBS contract is $ 17,696,000. 546 F.Supp., at 1291-1292.

<sup>10</sup> The football television committee's briefing book for 1981 recites that a fee of $ 600,000 was paid for each of the 12 national games telecast by ABC during the regular fall season and $ 426,779 was paid for each of the 46 regional telecasts in 1980. App. 250. The report further recites: "Division I members received $ 27,842,185 from 1980 football television revenue, 89.8 percent of the total. Division II's share was $ 625,195 (2.0 percent), while Division III received $ 385,195 (1.3 percent) and the NCAA $ 2,147,425 (6.9 percent)." Id., at 251.

<sup>11</sup> The District Court explained how the agreement eliminates competition for broadcasting rights:

"First, the networks have no intention to engage in bidding. Second, once the network holding first choice for any given date has made its choice and agreed to a rights fee for that game with the two teams involved, the other network is then in a monopsony position. The schools cannot threaten to sell the broadcast rights to any other network. They cannot sell to NBC without committing a violation of NCAA rules. They cannot sell to the network which had first choice over that particular date because, again, they would be in violation of NCAA rules, and the network would be in violation of its agreement with NCAA. Thus, NCAA creates a single eligible buyer for the product of all but the two schools selected by the network having first choice. Free market competition is thus destroyed under the new plan." 546 F.Supp., at 1292-1293.

independent plan, and obtained a contract offer from the National Broadcasting Co. (NBC). This contract, which it signed in August 1981, would have allowed a more liberal number of appearances for each institution, and would have increased the overall revenues realized by CFA members. See *id., at 1286.*

In response the NCAA publicly announced that it would take disciplinary action against any CFA member that complied with the CFA-NBC contract. The NCAA made it clear that sanctions would not be limited to the football programs of CFA members, but would apply to other sports as well. On September 8, 1981, respondents commenced this action in the United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma and obtained a preliminary injunction preventing the NCAA from initiating disciplinary proceedings or otherwise interfering with CFA's efforts to perform its agreement with NBC. Notwithstanding the entry of the injunction, most CFA members were unwilling to commit themselves to the new contractual arrangement with NBC in the face of [****21] the threatened sanctions and therefore the agreement was never consummated. See *id., at 1286-1287.*

Decision of the District Court

After a full trial, the District Court held that the controls exercised by the NCAA over the televising of college football games violated the Sherman Act. The District Court defined the relevant market as "live college football television" because it found that alternative programming has a significantly different and lesser audience appeal. *Id., at 1297-1300.*<sup>12</sup> The District Court then concluded that the NCAA [*96] controls over college football are those of a "classic cartel" with an "almost absolute control over the supply of college football which is made available to the networks, to television advertisers, and ultimately to the viewing public. Like all other cartels, NCAA members have sought and achieved a price for their product which is, in most instances, artificially high. The NCAA cartel imposes production limits on its members, and maintains mechanisms for punishing cartel members who seek to stray from these production quotas. The cartel has established a uniform price for the [****22] products of each of the member producers, with no regard for the differing quality of these products or the consumer demand for these various products." *Id., at 1300-1301.*

The District Court found that competition in the relevant market had been restrained in three ways: (1) NCAA fixed the price for particular telecasts; (2) its exclusive network contracts were tantamount to a group boycott of all other potential broadcasters and its threat of sanctions [***81] against its own members constituted a threatened boycott of potential competitors; and (3) its plan placed an artificial limit on the production of televised college football. *Id., at 1293-1295.*

In the District Court the NCAA offered two principal [****23] justifications for its television policies: that they protected the gate attendance of its members and that they tended to preserve a competitive balance among the football programs of the various schools. The District Court rejected the first justification because the evidence did not support the claim that college football television adversely affected gate attendance. *Id., at 1295-1296.* With respect to [**2958] the "competitive balance" argument, the District Court found that the evidence failed to show that the NCAA regulations on matters such as recruitment and the standards for preserving amateurism were not sufficient to maintain an appropriate balance. *Id., at 1296.*

[*97] Decision of the Court of Appeals

---

<sup>12</sup> The District Court held that the NCAA had monopolized the relevant market in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, *15 U. S. C. § 2.* See *546 F.Supp., at 1319-1323.* The Court of Appeals found it unnecessary to reach this issue, as do we.

468 U.S. 85, *97; 104 S. Ct. 2948, **2958; 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, ***81; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 130, ****23

The Court of Appeals held that the NCAA television plan constituted illegal per se price fixing, 707 F.2d, at 1152.<sup>13</sup> It rejected each of the three arguments advanced by NCAA to establish the procompetitive character of its plan.<sup>14</sup> First, the court rejected the argument that the television plan promoted live attendance, noting that since the plan involved a concomitant reduction in viewership the [****24] plan did not result in a net increase in output and hence was not procompetitive. Id., at 1153-1154. Second, the Court of Appeals rejected as illegitimate the NCAA's purpose of promoting athletically balanced competition. It held that such a consideration amounted to an argument that "competition will destroy the market" -- a position inconsistent with the policy of the Sherman Act. Moreover, assuming arguendo that the justification was legitimate, the court agreed with the District Court's finding "that any contribution the plan made to athletic balance could be achieved by less restrictive means." Id., at 1154. Third, the Court of Appeals refused to view the NCAA plan as competitively justified by the need to compete effectively with other types of television programming, since it entirely eliminated competition between producers of football and hence was illegal per se. Id., at 1155-1156.

[LEdHN\[2B\]](#)<sup>15</sup> Finally, the Court of Appeals concluded that even if the television plan were not per se illegal, its anticompetitive limitation on price and output was not offset by any [*98] procompetitive justification sufficient to save the plan even when the totality of the circumstances was examined. \*\*\*82 Id., at 1157-1160.<sup>16</sup> [****26] The case was remanded to the District Court for an appropriate modification in its injunctive decree. Id., at 1162.<sup>17</sup>

II

[LEdHN\[3\]](#)<sup>18</sup> [3]There can be no doubt that the challenged practices of the NCAA [****27] constitute a "restraint of trade" in the sense that they limit members' freedom to negotiate and [*2959] enter into their own television contracts. In that sense, however, every contract is a restraint of trade, and as we have repeatedly recognized, the Sherman Act was intended to prohibit only unreasonable restraints of trade.<sup>19</sup>

---

<sup>13</sup> [LEdHN\[2A\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [2A]

The Court of Appeals rejected the District Court's boycott holding, since all broadcasters were free to negotiate for a contract as carrying networks and the threat of sanctions against members for violating NCAA rules could not be considered a boycott if the rules were otherwise valid. 707 F.2d, at 1160-1161.

<sup>14</sup> In the Court of Appeals as well as the District Court, petitioner argued that respondents had suffered no injury of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent, relying on Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477 (1977). Both courts rejected its position, 707 F.2d, at 1150-1152; 546 F.Supp., at 1303-1304. Petitioner does not seek review on that question in this Court. Brief for Petitioner 5, n. 1.

<sup>15</sup> The Court of Appeals rejected petitioner's position that it should set aside many of the District Court's findings as clearly erroneous. In accord with our usual practice, we must now accord great weight to a finding of fact which has been made by a district court and approved by a court of appeals. See, e. g., Rogers v. Lodge, 458 U.S. 613, 623 (1982). In any event, petitioner does not now ask us to set aside any of the findings of the District Court, but rather argues only that both the District Court and the Court of Appeals erred as a matter of law. Brief for Petitioner 6, n. 2, 18-19.

<sup>16</sup> Judge Barrett dissented on the ground that the NCAA television plan's primary purpose was not anticompetitive. "Rather, it is designed to further the purposes and objectives of the NCAA, which are to maintain intercollegiate football as an amateur sport and an adjunct of the academic endeavors of the institutions. One of the key purposes is to insure that the student athlete is fully integrated into academic endeavors." 707 F.2d, at 1163. He regarded the television restraints as fully justified "in that they are necessary to maintain intercollegiate football as amateur competition." Id., at 1165. He added: "The restraints upon Oklahoma and Georgia and other colleges and universities with excellent football programs insure that they confine those programs within the principles of amateurism so that intercollegiate athletics supplement, rather than inhibit, academic achievement." Id., at 1167.

<sup>17</sup> See, e. g., Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 342-343 (1982); National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 687-688 (1978); Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238 (1918).

[*99] It is also undeniable that these practices share characteristics of restraints we have previously held unreasonable. The NCAA is an association of schools which compete against each other to attract television revenues, not to mention fans and athletes. As the District Court found, the policies of the NCAA with respect to television rights are ultimately [****28] controlled by the vote of member institutions. By participating in an association which prevents member institutions from competing against each other on the basis of price or kind of television rights that can be offered to broadcasters, the NCAA member institutions have created HN2<sup>18</sup> a horizontal restraint -- an agreement among competitors on the way in which they will compete with one another.<sup>18</sup> A restraint of this type has often been held to be unreasonable as a matter of law. Because it places a ceiling on the [***83] number of games member institutions may televise, the horizontal agreement places an artificial limit on the quantity of televised football that is available to broadcasters and consumers. By restraining the quantity of television rights available for sale, the challenged practices create a limitation on output; our cases have held that such limitations are unreasonable restraints of trade.<sup>19</sup> Moreover, the District Court found that the minimum aggregate price in fact operates to preclude any price negotiation between broadcasters and institutions, [*100] thereby [****29] constituting horizontal price fixing, perhaps the paradigm of an unreasonable restraint of trade.<sup>20</sup>

[****30] [LEdHN\[4\]](#)<sup>18</sup> [4][LEdHN\[5A\]](#)<sup>18</sup> [5A][LEdHN\[6A\]](#)<sup>18</sup> [6A][LEdHN\[7A\]](#)<sup>18</sup> [7A]HN3<sup>18</sup> Horizontal price fixing and output limitation are ordinarily condemned as a matter of law under an "illegal per se" approach because the probability that these practices are anticompetitive is so high; a per se rule is applied when "the practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output." Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20 (1979). In such circumstances a restraint is presumed unreasonable without inquiry into the particular market context in which it is found. Nevertheless, we have decided that it would be inappropriate to apply a per se rule to this case. This decision is not based [**2960] on a lack of judicial experience with this [****31] type of arrangement,<sup>21</sup> [****32] on the fact that the NCAA is organized as a nonprofit entity,<sup>22</sup> or [***84] on [*101] our respect for the NCAA's historic role in the preservation

<sup>18</sup> See Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S., at 356-357; National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S., at 694-696; United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608-611 (1972). See also United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S. 350, 352-354 (1967) (marketing association controlled by competing distributors is a horizontal combination). See generally Blecher & Daniels, Professional Sports and the "Single Entity" Defense Under Section One of the Sherman Act, 4 Whittier L. Rev. 217 (1982).

<sup>19</sup> See, e. g., United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S., at 608-609; United States v. Sealy, Inc., supra; United States v. American Linseed Oil Co., 262 U.S. 371, 388-390 (1923); American Column & Lumber Co. v. United States, 257 U.S. 377, 410-412 (1921).

<sup>20</sup> See, e. g., Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S., at 344-348; Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 646-647 (1980) (per curiam); Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211, 213 (1951); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 212-214 (1940); United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 396-398 (1927).

<sup>21</sup> While judicial inexperience with a particular arrangement counsels against extending the reach of per se rules, see Broadcast Music, 441 U.S., at 9-10; United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S., at 607-608; White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263 (1963), the likelihood that horizontal price and output restrictions are anticompetitive is generally sufficient to justify application of the per se rule without inquiry into the special characteristics of a particular industry. See Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S., at 349-351; National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S., at 689-690.

<sup>22</sup> [LEdHN\[5B\]](#)<sup>18</sup> [5B]HN4<sup>18</sup> There is no doubt that the sweeping language of § 1 applies to nonprofit entities, Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 786-787 (1975), and in the past we have imposed antitrust liability on nonprofit entities which have engaged in anticompetitive conduct, American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 576 (1982). Moreover, the economic significance of the NCAA's nonprofit character is questionable at best. Since the District and encouragement of intercollegiate amateur athletics.<sup>23</sup> Rather, what is critical is that this case involves an industry in which horizontal restraints on competition are essential if the product is to be available at all.

[****33] As Judge Bork has noted: "[Some] activities can only be carried out jointly. Perhaps the leading example is league sports. When a league of professional lacrosse teams is formed, it would be pointless to declare their cooperation illegal on the ground that there are no other professional lacrosse teams." R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 278 (1978). What the NCAA and its member institutions market in this case is competition itself -- contests between competing institutions. Of course, this would be completely ineffective if there were no rules on which the competitors agreed to create and define the competition to be marketed. A myriad of rules affecting such matters as the size of the field, the number of players on a team, and the extent to which physical violence is to be encouraged or proscribed, all must be agreed upon, and all restrain the manner in which institutions compete. Moreover, the NCAA seeks to market a particular brand of football -- college football. The identification of this "product" with an academic tradition differentiates [*102] college football from and makes it more popular than professional sports to which it might otherwise be comparable, such [****34] as, for example, minor league baseball. In order to preserve the character and quality of the "product," athletes must not be paid, must be required to attend class, and the like. And the integrity of the "product" cannot be preserved except by mutual agreement; if an institution adopted such restrictions unilaterally, its effectiveness as a competitor on the playing field might soon be destroyed. Thus, the NCAA plays a vital role in enabling college football to preserve its character, and as a result enables a product to be marketed which might otherwise be unavailable. In performing this role, its actions widen consumer choice -- not only the choices available to sports fans but also [**2961] those available to athletes -- and hence can be viewed as procompetitive.<sup>24</sup>

Court found that the NCAA and its member institutions are in fact organized to maximize revenues, see 546 F.Supp., at 1288-1289, it is unclear why petitioner is less likely to restrict output in order to raise revenues above those that could be realized in a competitive market than would be a for-profit entity. Petitioner does not rely on its nonprofit character as a basis for reversal. Tr. of Oral Arg. 24.

<sup>23</sup> LEdHN/6B [↑] [6B] LEdHN/7B [↑] [7B]

While as the guardian of an important American tradition, the NCAA's motives must be accorded a respectful presumption of validity, it is nevertheless well settled that good motives will not validate an otherwise anticompetitive practice. See United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 105-106 \(1948\); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 16, n. 15 \(1945\); Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S., at 238; Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Co. v. United States, 226 U.S. 20, 49 \(1912\); United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 342 \(1897\).

<sup>24</sup> See Justice v. NCAA, 577 F.Supp. 356, 379-383 \(Ariz. 1983\); Jones v. NCAA, 392 F.Supp. 295, 304 \(Mass. 1975\); College Athletic Placement Service, Inc. v. NCAA, 1975-1 Trade Cases para. 60,117 \(NJ\), aff'd mem., 506 F.2d 1050 \(CA3 1974\). See also Brenner v. World Boxing Council, 675 F.2d 445, 454-455 \(CA2 1982\); Neeld v. National Hockey League, 594 F.2d 1297, 1299, n. 4 \(CA9 1979\); Smith v. Pro Football, Inc., 193 U. S. App. D. C. 19, 26-27, 593 F.2d 1173, 1180-1181 \(1978\); Hatley v. American Quarter Horse Assn., 552 F.2d 646, 652-654 \(CA5 1977\); Mackey v. National Football League, 543 F.2d 606, 619 \(CA8 1976\), cert. dism'd, 434 U.S. 801 \(1977\); Bridge Corp. of America v. The American Contract Bridge League, Inc., 428 F.2d 1365, 1370 \(CA9 1970\), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 940 \(1971\); Gunter Harz Sports, Inc. v. United States Tennis Assn., 511 F.Supp. 1103, 1116 \(Neb.\), aff'd, 665 F.2d 222 \(CA8 1981\); Cooney v. American Horse Shows Assn., Inc., 495 F.Supp. 424, 430 \(SDNY 1980\); Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm'n v. National Football League, 468 F.Supp. 154, 165-166 \(CD Cal. 1979\), preliminary injunction entered, 484 F.Supp. 1274 \(1980\), rev'd on other grounds, 634 F.2d 1197 \(CA9 1980\); Kupec v. Atlantic Coast Conference, 399 F.Supp. 1377, 1380 \(MDNC 1975\); Closius, Not at the Behest of Nonlabor Groups: A Revised Prognosis for a Maturing Sports Industry, 24 Boston College L. Rev. 341, 344-345 (1983); Kurlantzick, Thoughts on Professional Sports and the Antitrust Law; Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum v. National Football League, 15 Conn. L. Rev. 183, 189-194 \(1983\); Note, Antitrust and Nonprofit Entities, 94 Harv. L. Rev. 802, 817-818 (1981). See generally Hennessey v. NCAA, 564 F.2d 1136, 1151-1154 \(CA5 1977\); Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women v. NCAA, 558 F.Supp. 487, 494-495 \(DC 1983\); Warner Amex Cable Communications, Inc. v. American Broadcasting Cos., 499 F.Supp. 537, 545-546 \(SD Ohio 1980\); Board of Regents v. NCAA, 561 P.2d 499, 506-507 \(Okla. 1977\); Note, Tackling Intercollegiate Athletics: An Antitrust Analysis, 87 Yale L. J. 655, 665-666, 673-675 (1978).

[****35] [*103] [***85] Broadcast Music squarely holds that a joint selling arrangement may be so efficient that it will increase sellers' aggregate output and thus be procompetitive. See 441 U.S., at 18-23. Similarly, as we indicated in Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 51-57 \(1977\), a restraint in a limited aspect of a market may actually enhance marketwide competition. Respondents concede that the great majority of the NCAA's regulations enhance competition among member institutions. Thus, despite the fact that this case involves restraints on the ability of member institutions to compete in terms of price and output, a fair evaluation of their competitive character requires consideration of the NCAA's justifications for the restraints.

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8] Our analysis of this case under the Rule of Reason, of course, does not change the ultimate focus of our inquiry. Both per se rules and the Rule of Reason are employed "to form a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint." National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692 \(1978\). [****36] HN5 [9] A conclusion that a restraint of trade is unreasonable may be "based either (1) on the nature or character of the contracts, or (2) on surrounding circumstances giving rise to the inference or presumption that they were intended to restrain trade and enhance prices. Under either branch of the test, the inquiry is confined to a consideration of impact on competitive conditions." Id., at 690 (footnotes omitted).

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9] [LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10] Per se rules are invoked when surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct so great as to [*104] render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct.<sup>25</sup> But whether the ultimate finding is the product of a presumption or actual market analysis, the essential inquiry remains the same -- whether or not the challenged restraint enhances [***86] competition.<sup>26</sup> [****37] HN6 [1] Under the Sherman \*\*2962 Act the criterion to be used in judging the validity of a restraint on trade is its impact on competition.<sup>27</sup>

[****38] III

Because it restrains price and output, the NCAA's television plan has a significant potential for anticompetitive effects.<sup>28</sup> [****39] The findings of the District Court indicate that this [*105] potential has been realized. The <sup>25</sup> See Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 15-16, n. 25 \(1984\); Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S., at 350-351; Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 50, n. 16 \(1977\).

<sup>26</sup> Indeed, there is often no bright line separating per se from Rule of Reason analysis. Per se rules may require considerable inquiry into market conditions before the evidence justifies a presumption of anticompetitive conduct. For example, while the Court has spoken of a "per se" rule against tying arrangements, it has also recognized that tying may have procompetitive justifications that make it inappropriate to condemn without considerable market analysis. See Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S., at 11-12.

<sup>27</sup> "The Sherman Act was designed to be a comprehensive charter of economic liberty aimed at preserving free and unfettered competition as the rule of trade. It rests on the premise that the unrestrained interaction of competitive forces will yield the best allocation of our economic resources, the lowest prices, the highest quality and the greatest material progress, while at the same time providing an environment conducive to the preservation of our democratic political and social institutions. But even were that premise open to question, the policy unequivocally laid down by the Act is competition. HN7 [1] And to this end it prohibits 'Every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the Several States.'" Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 4-5 \(1958\).

<sup>28</sup> In this connection, it is not without significance that Congress felt the need to grant professional sports an exemption from the antitrust laws for joint marketing of television rights. See 15 U. S. C. §§ 1291-1295. The legislative history of this exemption demonstrates Congress' recognition that agreements among league members to sell television rights in a cooperative fashion

468 U.S. 85, *105; 104 S. Ct. 2948, **2962; 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, ***86; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 130, ****39

District Court found that if member institutions were free to sell television rights, many more games would be shown on television, and that the NCAA's output restriction has the effect of raising the price the networks pay for television rights.<sup>29</sup> [****40] [***87] Moreover, the [*106] court found that by fixing a price for television rights to all games, the NCAA creates a price structure that is unresponsive to viewer demand and unrelated to the prices that would prevail in a competitive market.<sup>30</sup> [****41] And, of course, [**2963] since as a practical matter all member institutions need NCAA approval, members have no real choice but to adhere to the NCAA's television controls.<sup>31</sup> could run afoul of the Sherman Act, and in particular reflects its awareness of the decision in United States v. National Football League, 116 F.Supp. 319 (ED Pa. 1953), which held that an agreement among the teams of the National Football League that each team would not permit stations to telecast its games within 75 miles of the home city of another team on a day when that team was not playing at home and was televising its game by use of a station within 75 miles of its home city, violated § 1 of the Sherman Act. See S. Rep. No. 1087, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. (1961); H. R. Rep. No. 1178, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., 2-3 (1961); 107 Cong. Rec. 20059-20060 (1961) (remarks of Rep. Cellar); id., at 20061-20062 (remarks of Rep. McCulloch); Telecasting of Professional Sports Contests: Hearings on H. R. 8757 before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., 1-2 (1961) (statement of Chairman Cellar); id., at 3 (statement of Rep. McCulloch); id., at 10-28 (statement of Pete Rozelle); id., at 69-70 (letter from Assistant Attorney General Loewinger).

<sup>29</sup> "It is clear from the evidence that were it not for the NCAA controls, many more college football games would be televised. This is particularly true at the local level. Because of NCAA controls, local stations are often unable to televise games which they would like to, even when the games are not being televised at the network level. The circumstances which would allow so-called exception telecasts arise infrequently for many schools, and the evidence is clear that local broadcasts of college football would occur far more frequently were it not for the NCAA controls. This is not a surprising result. Indeed, this horizontal agreement to limit the availability of games to potential broadcasters is the very essence of NCAA's agreements with the networks. The evidence establishes the fact that the networks are actually paying the large fees because the NCAA agrees to limit production. If the NCAA would not agree to limit production, the networks would not pay so large a fee. Because NCAA limits production, the networks need not fear that their broadcasts will have to compete head-to-head with other college football telecasts, either on the other networks or on various local stations. Therefore, the Court concludes that the membership of NCAA has agreed to limit production to a level far below that which would occur in a free market situation." 546 F.Supp., at 1294.

<sup>30</sup> "Turning to the price paid for the product, it is clear that the NCAA controls utterly destroy free market competition. NCAA has commandeered the rights of its members and sold those rights for a sum certain. In so doing, it has fixed the minimum, maximum and actual price which will be paid to the schools appearing on ABC, CBS and TBS. NCAA has created the mechanism which produces a uniform price for each national telecast, and a uniform price for each regional telecast. Because of the NCAA controls, the price which is paid for the right to televise any particular game is responsive neither to the relative quality of the teams playing the game nor to viewer preference."

"In a competitive market, each college fielding a football team would be free to sell the right to televise its games for whatever price it could get. The prices would vary for the games, with games between prominent schools drawing a larger price than games between less prominent schools. Games between the more prominent schools would draw a larger audience than other games. Advertisers would pay higher rates for commercial time because of the larger audience. The telecaster would then be willing to pay larger rights fees due to the increased prices paid by the advertisers. Thus, the price which the telecaster would pay for a particular game would be dependent on the expected size of the viewing audience. Clearly, the NCAA controls grossly distort the prices actually paid for an individual game from that to be expected in a free market." Id., at 1318.

<sup>31</sup> Since, as the District Court found, NCAA approval is necessary for any institution that wishes to compete in intercollegiate sports, the NCAA has a potent tool at its disposal for restraining institutions which require its approval. See Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 347-349, and n. 5 (1963); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S., at 17-18.

LEdHN[11] [11]The anticompetitive consequences of this arrangement are apparent. Individual competitors lose their freedom to compete.<sup>32</sup> [*107] Price is higher and output lower than they would otherwise be, and both are unresponsive to consumer preference.<sup>33</sup> [****43] This latter point is perhaps [***88] the most significant, since "Congress designed the Sherman Act as a 'consumer welfare prescription.'" Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 343 (1979). HN8 [1] A restraint that has the effect of reducing [****42] the importance of consumer preference in setting price and output is not consistent with this fundamental goal of anti-trust law.<sup>34</sup> Restrictions on price and output are the paradigmatic examples of restraints of trade that the Sherman [*108] Act was intended to prohibit. See Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 52-60 (1911).<sup>35</sup> [****44] At the same time, the [**2964] television plan eliminates competitors from the market, since only those broadcasters able to bid on

---

<sup>32</sup> See Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457, 465 (1941); Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Co. v. United States, 226 U.S., at 47-49; Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38 (1904).

<sup>33</sup> "In this case the rule is violated by a price restraint that tends to provide the same economic rewards to all practitioners regardless of their skill, their experience, their training, or their willingness to employ innovative and difficult procedures." Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S., at 348. The District Court provided a vivid example of this system in practice:

"A clear example of the failure of the rights fees paid to respond to market forces occurred in the fall of 1981. On one weekend of that year, Oklahoma was scheduled to play a football game with the University of Southern California. Both Oklahoma and USC have long had outstanding football programs, and indeed, both teams were ranked among the top five teams in the country by the wire service polls. ABC chose to televise the game along with several others on a regional basis. A game between two schools which are not well-known for their football programs, Citadel and Appalachian State, was carried on four of ABC's local affiliated stations. The USC-Oklahoma contest was carried on over 200 stations. Yet, incredibly, all four of these teams received exactly the same amount of money for the right to televise their games." 546 F.Supp., at 1291.

<sup>34</sup> As the District Court observed:

"Perhaps the most pernicious aspect is that under the controls, the market is not responsive to viewer preference. Every witness who testified on the matter confirmed that the consumers, the viewers of college football television, receive absolutely no benefit from the controls. Many games for which there is a large viewer demand are kept from the viewers, and many games for which there is little if any demand are nonetheless televised." Id., at 1319.

<sup>35</sup> Even in the context of professional football, where Congress was willing to pass a limited antitrust exemption, see n. 28, supra, it was concerned about ensuring that telecasts not be subject to output limitations:

"Mr. GARY. On yesterday I had the opportunity of watching three different games. There were three different games on three different channels. . . .

"Would this bill prevent them from broadcasting three different games at one time and permit the league to enter into a contract so that only one game would be permitted?

"Mr. CELLER. The bill does not prevent what the gentleman saw yesterday. As a matter of fact the antitrust exemption provided by the bill shall not apply to any package contract which prohibits the person to whom league television rights are sold or transferred from televising any game within any area except the home area of a member club on the day when that club is playing a home game.

....

"Mr. GARY. I am an avid sports fan. I follow football, baseball, basketball, and track, and I am very much interested in all sports. But I am also interested in the people of the United States being able to see on television the games that are played. I am interested in the television audience. I want to know that they are not going to be prohibited from seeing games that might otherwise be telecast.

"Mr. CELLER. I can assure the gentleman from Virginia that he need have no fears on that score." 107 Cong. Rec. 20060 (1961).

television rights covering the entire NCAA can compete.<sup>36</sup> Thus, as the District Court found, many telecasts that would occur in a competitive market are foreclosed by the NCAA's plan.<sup>37</sup>

[****45] [*109] [***89] Petitioner argues, however, that its television plan can have no significant anticompetitive effect since the record indicates that it has no market power -- no ability to alter the interaction of supply and demand in the market.<sup>38</sup> We must reject this argument for two reasons, one legal, one factual.

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [↑] [12][LEdHN\[13\]](#) [↑] [13] [****46] As a matter of law, HN10 [↑] the absence of proof of market power does not justify a naked restriction on price or output. To the contrary, when there is an agreement not to compete in terms of price or output, "no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of such an agreement." Professional Engineers, 435 U.S., at 692.<sup>39</sup> [****47] Petitioner does not quarrel with [**2965] the District Court's [*110] finding that price and output are not responsive to demand. Thus the plan is inconsistent with the Sherman Act's command that price and supply be responsive to consumer preference.

<sup>36</sup> The impact on competitors is thus analogous to the effect of block booking in the motion picture industry that we concluded violated the Sherman Act:

"In the first place, they eliminate the possibility of bidding for films theater by theater. In that way they eliminate the opportunity for the small competitor to obtain the choice first runs, and put a premium on the size of the circuit." United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 154 (1948).

<sup>37</sup> 546 F.Supp., at 1294. One of respondents' economists illustrated the point:

"[It's] my opinion that if a free market operated in the market for intercollegiate television of football, that there would be substantially more regional and even more local games being televised than there are currently. I can take a specific example from my home state of Indiana.

"I am at Ball State University, which until recently was a division one-A institution, although now is a division one-AA institution in terms of intercollegiate football. When Ball State plays Indiana State, that is a hotly contested game in an intrastate sense. That is a prime example of the type of game that probably would be televised. For example, when Ball State is playing Indiana State at Terre Haute, Indiana, that [would be] a popular game to be televised in the Muncie area, and, vice versa, in Terre Haute when the game happens to be in Muncie." App. 506-507.

See also id., at 607-608.

<sup>38</sup> HN9 [↑] Market power is the ability to raise prices above those that would be charged in a competitive market. Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S., at 27, n. 46; United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, 429 U.S. 610, 620 (1977); United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391 (1956).

<sup>39</sup> "The fact that a practice is not categorically unlawful in all or most of its manifestations certainly does not mean that it is universally lawful. For example, joint buying or selling arrangements are not unlawful per se, but a court would not hesitate in enjoining a domestic selling arrangement by which, say, Ford and General Motors distributed their automobiles nationally through a single selling agent. Even without a trial, the judge will know that these two large firms are major factors in the automobile market, that such joint selling would eliminate important price competition between them, that they are quite substantial enough to distribute their products independently, and that one can hardly imagine a pro-competitive justification actually probable in fact or strong enough in principle to make this particular joint selling arrangement 'reasonable' under Sherman Act § 1. The essential point is that the rule of reason can sometimes be applied in the twinkling of an eye." P. Areeda, The "Rule of Reason" in Antitrust Analysis: General Issues 37-38 (Federal Judicial Center, June 1981) (parenthetical omitted).

<sup>40</sup> We have never required proof of market power in such a case. <sup>41</sup> This naked restraint on price and output requires some competitive justification even in the absence of a detailed market analysis. <sup>42</sup>

[****48]

[*111] [***90] [LEdHN\[14\]](#)[] [14][LEdHN\[15\]](#)[] [15]As a factual matter, it is evident that petitioner does possess market power. The District Court employed the correct test for determining whether college football broadcasts constitute a separate market -- whether there are other products that are reasonably substitutable for televised NCAA football games. <sup>43</sup> Petitioner's argument that it cannot obtain supracompetitive prices from broadcasters since advertisers, and hence broadcasters, can switch from college football to other types of programming simply ignores the findings of the District Court. It found that intercollegiate football telecasts generate an audience uniquely attractive to advertisers and that competitors are unable to offer programming that can attract a similar audience. <sup>44</sup> These findings amply support its conclusion that the NCAA possesses market power. <sup>45</sup> Indeed, the District Court's subsidiary finding that advertisers will pay a premium price per viewer to reach audiences watching college football because of their demographic [****49] characteristics <sup>46</sup> [**2966] is vivid evidence of the uniqueness of this product. <sup>47</sup> [***51] Moreover, the District Court's market [*112] analysis is firmly supported by our decision in International Boxing Club of New York, Inc. v. United States, 358 U.S. 242 (1959), that championship boxing events are uniquely attractive to fans <sup>48</sup> and hence constitute a market separate

---

<sup>40</sup> Moreover, because under the plan member institutions may not compete in terms of price and output, it is manifest that significant forms of competition are eliminated. See Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S., at 648-649 (per curiam); Professional Engineers, 435 U.S., at 692-695; Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U.S. 30, 43-44 (1930).

<sup>41</sup> See United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 351 U.S. 305, 309-310 (1956); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S., at 221. See also Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213 (1959).

<sup>42</sup> The Solicitor General correctly observes:

"There was no need for the respondents to establish monopoly power in any precisely defined market for television programming in order to prove the restraint unreasonable. Both lower courts found not only that NCAA has power over the market for intercollegiate sports, but also that in the market for television programming -- no matter how broadly or narrowly the market is defined -- the NCAA television restrictions have reduced output, subverted viewer choice, and distorted pricing. Consequently, unless the controls have some countervailing procompetitive justification, they should be deemed unlawful regardless of whether petitioner has substantial market power over advertising dollars. While the 'reasonableness' of a particular alleged restraint often depends on the market power of the parties involved, because a judgment about market power is the means by which the effects of the conduct on the market place can be assessed, market power is only one test of 'reasonableness.' And where the anti-competitive effects of conduct can be ascertained through means short of extensive market analysis, and where no countervailing competitive virtues are evident, a lengthy analysis of market power is not necessary." Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 19-20 (footnote and citation omitted).

<sup>43</sup> See, e. g., United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571 (1966); United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S., at 394-395; Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 612, n. 31 (1953).

<sup>44</sup> See 546 F.Supp., at 1297-1300. See also Hochberg & Horowitz, Broadcasting and CATV: The Beauty and the Bane of Major College Football, 38 Law & Contemp. Prob. 112, 118-120 (1973).

<sup>45</sup> See, e. g., Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S., at 27, n. 46; id., at 37-38, n. 7 (O'CONNOR, J., concurring in judgment); Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 504-506, and n. 2 (1969).

<sup>46</sup> See 546 F.Supp., at 1298-1300.

<sup>47</sup> As the District Court observed, id., at 1297, the most analogous programming in terms of the demographic characteristics of its audience is professional football, and as a condition of its limited exemption from the antitrust laws the professional football leagues are prohibited from telecasting games at times that conflict with intercollegiate football. See 15 U. S. C. § 1293.

from that for nonchampionship events. See id., at 249-252.<sup>49</sup> Thus, respondents [***91] have demonstrated that there is a separate market for telecasts of college football which "[rests] on generic qualities differentiating" viewers. Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 613 (1953). It inexorably follows that if college football broadcasts be defined as a separate market -- and we are convinced they are -- then the NCAA's complete control over those broadcasts provides a solid basis for the District Court's conclusion that the NCAA possesses market power with respect to those broadcasts. HN11[<sup>50</sup>] "When a product is controlled by one interest, [***50] without substitutes available in the market, there is monopoly power." United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 394 (1956).<sup>50</sup>

[***52]

[*113] LEdHN[1B][<sup>51</sup>] [1B]LEdHN[16][<sup>52</sup>] [16]Thus, the NCAA television plan on its face constitutes a restraint upon the operation of a free market, and the findings of the District Court establish that it has operated to raise prices and reduce output. HN12[<sup>53</sup>] Under the Rule of Reason, these hallmarks of anticompetitive behavior place upon petitioner a heavy burden of establishing an affirmative defense which competitively justifies this apparent deviation from the operations of a free market. See Professional Engineers, 435 U.S., at 692-696. We turn now to the NCAA's proffered justifications.

IV

Relying on Broadcast Music, petitioner argues that its television plan constitutes a cooperative "joint venture" which assists in the marketing of broadcast rights and hence is procompetitive. While joint ventures have no immunity from the antitrust laws,<sup>54</sup> as Broadcast Music indicates, a joint selling arrangement may "[make] possible a new [***53] product by reaping otherwise unattainable efficiencies." Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 365 (1982) (POWELL, J., dissenting) (footnote omitted). The essential contribution [**2967] made by the NCAA's arrangement is to define the number of games that may be televised, to establish the price for each exposure, and to define the basic terms of each contract between the network and a home team. The NCAA does not, however, act as a selling agent for any school or for any conference of schools. The selection of individual games, and the negotiation of particular agreements, are matters left to the networks and the individual schools. Thus, the effect of the network plan is not to eliminate [***92] individual sales of broadcasts, since these still occur, albeit subject to fixed prices and output limitations. Unlike Broadcast Music's blanket license covering broadcast rights [*114] to a large number of individual compositions, here the same rights are still sold on an individual basis, only in a noncompetitive market.

[***54] The District Court did not find that the NCAA's television plan produced any procompetitive efficiencies which enhanced the competitiveness of college football television rights; to the contrary it concluded that NCAA

<sup>48</sup> We approved of the District Court's reliance on the greater revenue-producing potential and higher television ratings of championship events as opposed to other events to support its market definition. See 358 U.S., at 250-251.

<sup>49</sup> For the same reasons, it is also apparent that the unique appeal of NCAA football telecasts for viewers means that "from the standpoint of the consumer -- whose interests the statute was especially intended to serve," Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S., at 15, there can be no doubt that college football constitutes a separate market for which there is no reasonable substitute. Thus we agree with the District Court that it makes no difference whether the market is defined from the standpoint of broadcasters, advertisers, or viewers.

<sup>50</sup> See, e. g., Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S., at 24-25; Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S., at 7-8; Times-Picayune, 345 U.S., at 611-613. Petitioner seems to concede as much. See Brief for Petitioner 36-37; Tr. of Oral Arg. 6.

<sup>51</sup> See Citizen Publishing Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131, 134-136 (1969); United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S., at 353; Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 597-598 (1951); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S., at 15-16.

football could be marketed just as effectively without the television plan.<sup>52</sup> There is therefore no predicate in the findings for petitioner's efficiency justification. Indeed, petitioner's argument is refuted by the District Court's finding concerning price and output. If the NCAA's television plan produced procompetitive efficiencies, the plan would increase output and reduce the price of televised games. The District Court's contrary findings accordingly undermine petitioner's position. In light of these findings, it cannot be said that "the agreement on price is necessary to market the product at all." Broadcast Music, 441 U.S., at 23.<sup>53</sup> In Broadcast Music, the availability of a package product that no individual could offer enhanced the total volume of music that was sold. Unlike this case, there was no limit of any kind placed on the volume that might be sold in the entire market and each individual remained free to sell his own music [****55] without restraint. Here production has been limited, not enhanced.<sup>54</sup> [*115] No individual school is free to televise its own games without restraint. The NCAA's efficiency justification is not supported by the record.

[****56] Neither is the NCAA's television plan necessary to enable the NCAA to penetrate the market through an attractive package sale. Since broadcasting rights to college football constitute a unique product for which there is no ready substitute, there is no need for collective action in order to enable the product to compete against its nonexistent competitors.<sup>55</sup> This is borne out by the District Court's finding that the NCAA's television plan reduces the volume of television rights sold.

V

[***93] Throughout the history of its regulation of intercollegiate football telecasts, the NCAA has indicated its concern with [**2968] [****57] protecting live attendance. This concern, it should be noted, is not with protecting live attendance at games which are shown on television; that type of interest is not at issue in this case. Rather, the concern is that fan interest in a televised game may adversely affect ticket sales for games that will not appear on television.<sup>56</sup>

Although the NORC studies in the 1950's provided some support for the thesis that live attendance would suffer if [*116] unlimited television were permitted,<sup>57</sup> [****58] the District Court found that there was no evidence to

<sup>52</sup> See 546 F.Supp., at 1306-1308.

<sup>53</sup> Compare id., at 1307-1308 ("The colleges are clearly able to negotiate agreements with whatever broadcasters they choose. We are not dealing with tens of thousands of relatively brief musical works, but with three-hour football games played eleven times each year"), with Broadcast Music, 441 U.S., at 22-23 (footnotes omitted) ("[To] the extent the blanket license is a different product, ASCAP is not really a joint sales agency offering the individual goods of many sellers, but is a separate seller offering its blanket license, of which the individual compositions are raw material. ASCAP, in short, made a market in which individual composers are inherently unable to compete fully effectively").

<sup>54</sup> Ensuring that individual members of a joint venture are free to increase output has been viewed as central in evaluating the competitive character of joint ventures. See Brodley, Joint Ventures and Antitrust Policy, 95 Harv. L. Rev. 1523, 1550-1552, 1555-1560 (1982). See also Note, United Charities and the Sherman Act, 91 Yale L. J. 1593 (1982).

<sup>55</sup> If the NCAA faced "interbrand" competition from available substitutes, then certain forms of collective action might be appropriate in order to enhance its ability to compete. See Continental T. V., Inc., 433 U.S., at 54-57. Our conclusion concerning the availability of substitutes in Part III, supra, forecloses such a justification in this case, however.

<sup>56</sup> The NCAA's plan is not even arguably related to a desire to protect live attendance by ensuring that a game is not televised in the area where it is to be played. No cooperative action is necessary for that kind of "blackout." The home team can always refuse to sell the right to telecast its game to stations in the immediate area. The NCAA does not now and never has justified its television plan by an interest in assisting schools in "blacking out" their home games in the areas in which they are played.

<sup>57</sup> During this period, the NCAA also expressed its concern to Congress in urging it to limit the antitrust exemption professional football obtained for telecasting its games to contests not held on Friday or Saturday when such telecasts might interfere with attendance at intercollegiate games. See H. R. Rep. No. 1178, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., 3-4 (1961); 107 Cong. Rec. 20060-20061 support that theory in today's market.<sup>58</sup> [****59] Moreover, as the District Court found, the television plan has evolved in a manner inconsistent with its original design to protect gate attendance. Under the current plan, games are shown on television during all hours that college football games are played. The plan simply does not protect live attendance by ensuring that games will not be shown on television at the same time as live events.<sup>59</sup>

[LEdHN/17] [↑] [17]There is, however, a more fundamental reason for rejecting this defense. The NCAA's argument that its television plan is necessary to protect live attendance is not based on a desire to maintain the integrity of college football as a distinct and attractive product, [****60] but rather on a fear that the product will not prove sufficiently attractive to draw live attendance when faced with competition from televised games. At bottom the NCAA's position is that ticket sales for most college games are unable to compete in a free market.<sup>60</sup> The [*117] television plan protects ticket sales by limiting [***94] output -- just as any monopolist increases revenues by reducing output. By seeking to insulate live ticket sales from the full spectrum of competition because of its assumption that the product itself is insufficiently attractive to consumers, petitioner forwards a justification that is inconsistent with the basic policy of the Sherman Act. "[The] Rule of Reason does not support a defense based on the assumption that competition itself is unreasonable." Professional Engineers, 435 U.S., at 696.

[****61] VI

Petitioner argues that the interest in maintaining a competitive balance among amateur athletic teams is legitimate and important and that it justifies the regulations challenged in this case. We agree [**2969] with the first part of the argument but not the second.

Our decision not to apply a per se rule to this case rests in large part on our recognition that a certain degree of cooperation is necessary if the type of competition that petitioner and its member institutions seek to market is to be preserved.<sup>61</sup> It is reasonable to assume that most of the regulatory controls of the NCAA are justifiable means of fostering competition among amateur athletic teams and therefore procompetitive because they enhance public interest in intercollegiate athletics. The specific restraints on football telecasts that are challenged in this case do not, however, fit into the same mold as do rules defining the conditions of the contest, the eligibility of participants, or the manner in which members of a joint enterprise shall share the responsibilities and the benefits of the total venture.

[****62] The NCAA does not claim that its television plan has equalized or is intended to equalize competition within any [*118] one league.<sup>62</sup> [****63] The plan is nationwide in scope and there is no single league or

---

(1961) (remarks of Rep. Celler); id., at 20662; Hearings, supra n. 28, at 66-68 (statement of William R. Reed). The provision enacted as a result is now found in 15 U. S. C. § 1293.

<sup>58</sup> See 546 F.Supp., at 1295-1296, 1315.

<sup>59</sup> "[The] greatest flaw in the NCAA's argument is that it is manifest that the new plan for football television does not limit televised football in order to protect gate attendance. The evidence shows that under the new plan, many areas of the country will have access to nine hours of college football television on several Saturdays in the coming season. Because the 'ground rules' eliminate head-to-head programming, a full nine hours of college football will have to be shown on television during a nine-to-twelve hour period on almost every Saturday of the football season in most of the major television markets in the country. It can hardly be said that such a plan is devised in order to protect gate attendance." Id., at 1296.

<sup>60</sup> Ironically, to the extent that the NCAA's position has merit, it rests on the assumption that football telecasts are a unique product. If, as the NCAA argues, see supra, at 111-112, all television programming is essentially fungible, it would not be possible to protect attendance without banning all television during the hours at which intercollegiate football games are held.

<sup>61</sup> See Part II, supra.

<sup>62</sup> It seems unlikely, for example, that there would have been a greater disparity between the football prowess of Ohio State University and that of Northwestern University in recent years without the NCAA's television plan. The District Court found that in fact the NCAA has been strikingly unsuccessful if it has indeed attempted to prevent the emergence of a "power elite" in tournament in which all college football teams compete. There is no evidence of any intent to equalize the strength of teams in Division I-A with those in Division II or Division III, and not even a colorable basis for giving colleges that have no football program at all a voice in the management of the revenues generated by the football programs at other schools.<sup>63</sup> The [**95] interest in maintaining a competitive balance that is asserted by the NCAA as a justification for regulating all television of intercollegiate football is not related to any neutral standard or to any readily identifiable group of competitors.

[***64] [*119] The television plan is not even arguably tailored to serve such an interest. It does not regulate the amount of money that any college may spend on its football program, nor the way in which the colleges may use the revenues that are generated by their football programs, whether derived from the sale of television rights, the sale of tickets, or the sale of concessions or program advertising.<sup>64</sup> The plan simply imposes a restriction on one source of revenue that is more important to some colleges than to others. There is no evidence that this restriction produces any greater measure of equality throughout the NCAA than would a restriction on alumni donations, tuition rates, or any other revenue-producing activity. At the same time, as [**2970] the District Court found, the NCAA imposes a variety of other restrictions designed to preserve amateurism which are much better tailored to the goal of competitive balance than is the television plan, and which are "clearly sufficient" to preserve competitive balance to the extent it is within the NCAA's power to do so.<sup>65</sup> And much more than speculation supported the District Court's findings on this score. No other NCAA [***65] sport employs a similar plan, and in particular the court found that in the most closely analogous sport, college basketball, competitive balance has been maintained without resort to a restrictive television plan.<sup>66</sup>

Perhaps the most important reason for rejecting the argument that the interest in competitive balance is served by the television plan is the District Court's unambiguous and well-supported finding that many more games would be televised in a free market than under the NCAA plan. The hypothesis that legitimates the maintenance of competitive balance as a procompetitive justification under the Rule of [*120] Reason is that equal competition will maximize consumer demand [***66] for the product.<sup>67</sup> The finding that consumption will materially increase if the controls are removed is a compelling demonstration that they do not in fact serve any such legitimate purpose.<sup>68</sup> intercollegiate football. See 546 F.Supp., at 1310-1311. Moreover, the District Court's finding that there would be more local and regional telecasts without the NCAA controls means that Northwestern could well have generated more television income in a free market than was obtained under the NCAA regime.

<sup>63</sup> Indeed, the District Court found that the basic reason the television plan has endured is that the NCAA is in effect controlled by schools that are not restrained by the plan:

"The plaintiffs and other CFA members attempted to persuade the majority of NCAA members that NCAA had gone far beyond its legitimate role in football television. Not surprisingly, none of the CFA proposals were adopted. Instead the membership uniformly adopted the proposals of the NCAA administration which 'legitimized' NCAA's exercises of power. The result was not surprising in light of the makeup of the voting membership. Of approximately 800 voting members of the NCAA, 500 or so are in Divisions II and III and are not subjected to NCAA television controls. Of the 275 Division I members, only 187 play football, and only 135 were members of Division I-A at the time of the January Convention. Division I-A was made up of the most prominent football-playing schools, and those schools account for most of the football games shown on network television. Therefore, of some 850 voting members, less than 150 suffer any direct restriction on their right to sell football games to television." Id., at 1317.

<sup>64</sup> Moreover, the District Court found that those schools which would realize increased revenues in a free market would not funnel those revenues into their football programs. See id., at 1310.

<sup>65</sup> See id., at 1296, 1309-1310.

<sup>66</sup> See id., at 1284-1285, 1299.

<sup>67</sup> See Continental T. V., Inc., 433 U.S., at 54-57. See also n. 55, supra.

VII

[***96] LEdHN1C [↑] [1C] The NCAA plays a critical role in the maintenance of a revered tradition of amateurism in college sports. There can be no question but that it needs ample latitude to play that role, or that the preservation of the student-athlete [****67] in higher education adds richness and diversity to intercollegiate athletics and is entirely consistent with the goals of the Sherman Act. But consistent with the Sherman Act, the role of the NCAA must be to preserve a tradition that might otherwise die; rules that restrict output are hardly consistent with this role. Today we hold only that the record supports the District Court's conclusion that by curtailing output and blunting the ability of member institutions to respond to consumer preference, the NCAA has restricted rather than enhanced the place of intercollegiate athletics in the Nation's life. Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is

Affirmed.

Dissent by: WHITE

Dissent

---

JUSTICE WHITE, with whom JUSTICE REHNQUIST joins, dissenting.

The NCAA is an unincorporated, nonprofit, educational association whose membership includes almost 800 nonprofit public and private colleges and universities and more than [*121] 100 nonprofit athletic conferences and other organizations. Formed in 1905 in response to a public outcry concerning abuses in intercollegiate athletics, the NCAA, through its annual convention, establishes policies and rules governing its members' [****68] participation in college sports, conducts national championships, exerts control over some of the economic aspects of revenue-producing sports, and engages in some more-or-less commercial activities. See Note, Tackling Intercollegiate Athletics: An Antitrust Analysis, 87 Yale L. J. 655, 656-657 (1978). Although some of the NCAA's activities, viewed in isolation, bear a resemblance to those undertaken by professional sports leagues and associations, the Court errs in treating intercollegiate athletics under the NCAA's control as a purely commercial venture in which colleges and universities participate solely, or [**2971] even primarily, in the pursuit of profits. Accordingly, I dissent.

I

"While it would be fanciful to suggest that colleges are not concerned about the profitability of their ventures, it is clear that other, non-commercial goals play a central role in their sports programs." J. Weistart & C. Lowell, The Law of Sports § 5.12 (1979). The NCAA's member institutions have designed their competitive athletic programs "to be a vital part of the educational system." Constitution and Interpretations of the NCAA, Art. II, § 2(a) (1982-1983), reprinted [****69] in App. 216. Deviations from this goal, produced by a persistent and perhaps inevitable desire to "win at all costs," have in the past led, and continue to lead, to a wide range of competitive excesses that prove harmful to students and institutions alike. See G. Hanford, Report to the American Council on Education, An Inquiry into the Need for and Feasibility of a National Study of Intercollegiate Athletics 74-76 (1974) (Hanford); [***97] Marco, The Place of Intercollegiate Athletics in Higher Education: The Responsibility of the Faculty, 31 J. Higher Educ. 422, 426 (1968). The fundamental policy [*122] underlying the NCAA's regulatory program, therefore, is to minimize such deviations and "to maintain intercollegiate athletics as an integral part of the educational program and the athlete as an integral part of the student body and, by so doing, retain a clear line of demarcation between college athletics and professional sports." Constitution and Interpretations of the NCAA, Art. II, § 2(a), reprinted in App. 216. See 546 F.Supp. 1276, 1309 (WD Okla. 1982).

---

<sup>68</sup> This is true not only for television viewers, but also for athletes. The District Court's finding that the television exposure of all schools would increase in the absence of the NCAA's television plan means that smaller institutions appealing to essentially local or regional markets would get more exposure if the plan is enjoined, enhancing their ability to compete for student athletes.

The NCAA, in short, "[exists] primarily to enhance the contribution made by amateur athletic [****70] competition to the process of higher education as distinguished from realizing maximum return on it as an entertainment commodity." Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women v. NCAA, 558 F.Supp. 487, 494 (DC 1983), aff'd, 236 U. S. App. D. C. 311, 735 F.2d 577 (1984). In pursuing this goal, the organization and its members seek to provide a public good -- a viable system of amateur athletics -- that most likely could not be provided in a perfectly competitive market. See Hennessey v. NCAA, 564 F.2d 1136, 1153 (CA5 1977). "Without regulation, the desire of member institutions to remain athletically competitive would lead them to engage in activities that deny amateurism to the public. No single institution could confidently enforce its own standards since it could not trust its competitors to do the same." Note, Antitrust and Nonprofit Entities, 94 Harv. L. Rev. 802, 817-818 (1981). The history of intercollegiate athletics prior to the advent of the NCAA provides ample support for this conclusion. By mitigating what appears to be a clear failure of the free market to serve the ends and goals of higher [****71] education, the NCAA ensures the continued availability of a unique and valuable product, the very existence of which might well be threatened by unbridled competition in the economic sphere.

In pursuit of its fundamental goal and others related to it, the NCAA imposes numerous controls on intercollegiate athletic competition among its members, many of which "are similar to those which are summarily condemned when [*123] undertaken in a more traditional business setting." Weistart & Lowell, supra, § 5.12.b. Thus, the NCAA has promulgated and enforced rules limiting both the compensation of student-athletes, see, e. g., Justice v. NCAA, 577 F.Supp. 356 (Ariz. 1983), and the number of coaches a school may hire for its football and basketball programs, see, e. g., Hennessey v. NCAA, supra; it also has prohibited athletes who formerly have been compensated for playing from participating in intercollegiate competition, see, e. g., Jones v. NCAA, 392 F.Supp. 295 (Mass. 1975), restricted the number of athletic scholarships its members may award, and established minimum academic standards for recipients of those scholarships; [****72] and it has pervasively regulated the recruitment process, student eligibility, practice schedules, squad size, the number of games [*2972] played, and many other aspects of intercollegiate athletics. See 707 F.2d 1147, 1153 (CA10 1983); 546 F.Supp., at 1309. One clear effect of most, if not all, of these regulations is to prevent institutions [***98] with competitively and economically successful programs from taking advantage of their success by expanding their programs, improving the quality of the product they offer, and increasing their sports revenues. Yet each of these regulations represents a desirable and legitimate attempt "to keep university athletics from becoming professionalized to the extent that profit making objectives would overshadow educational objectives." Kupec v. Atlantic Coast Conference, 399 F.Supp. 1377, 1380 (MDNC 1975). Significantly, neither the Court of Appeals nor this Court questions the validity of these regulations under the Rule of Reason. See ante, at 100-102, 117; 707 F.2d, at 1153.

Notwithstanding the contrary conclusion of the District Court, 546 F.Supp., at 1316, [****73] and the majority, ante, at 117, I do not believe that the restraint under consideration in this case -- the NCAA's television plan -- differs fundamentally for antitrust purposes from the other seemingly anticompetitive aspects of the organization's broader program of self-regulation. [*124] The television plan, like many of the NCAA's actions, furthers several complementary ends. Specifically, the plan is designed "to reduce, insofar as possible, the adverse effects of live television . . . upon football game attendance and, in turn, upon the athletic and related educational programs dependent upon the proceeds therefrom; to spread football television participation among as many colleges as practicable; to reflect properly the image of universities as educational institutions; to promote college football through the use of television, to advance the overall interests of intercollegiate athletics, and to provide college football television to the public to the extent compatible with these other objectives." App. 35.

See also id., at 244, 323, 640, 651, 672. More generally, in my view, the television plan reflects the NCAA's fundamental policy of preserving [****74] amateurism and integrating athletics and education. Nor does the District Court's finding that the plan is intended to maximize television revenues, 546 F.Supp., at 1288-1289, 1315-1316, warrant any implication that the NCAA and its member institutions pursue this goal without regard to the organization's stated policies.

Before addressing the infirmities in the Court's opinion, I should state my understanding of what the Court holds. To do so, it is necessary first to restate the essentials of the NCAA's television plan and to refer to the course of this case in the lower courts. Under the plan at issue, 4-year contracts were entered into with the American Broadcasting Cos. (ABC), Columbia Broadcasting System (CBS), and Turner Broadcasting System (Turner) after competitive bidding. Every fall, ABC and CBS were to present 14 exposures of college football and Turner would show 19 evening games. The overall price for each network was stated in the contracts. The networks select the games to be telecast and pay directly to the colleges involved what has developed to be [*125] a uniform fee for each game telecast. Unless within one of the exceptions, only the [****75] designated number of games may be broadcast, and no NCAA member [***99] may arrange for televising its games other than pursuant to the plan. Under this scheme, of course, NCAA members must compete against one another for television appearances, although this competition is limited somewhat by the fact that no college may appear on television more than six times in any 2-year period. In 1983, 242 games were televised, 89 network games and 153 under the exceptions provided in the television plan. In 1983, 173 schools appeared on television, 89 on network games and an additional 84 teams under the exceptions. Report of the 1983 NCAA Football Television Committee to [**2973] the 78th Annual Convention of the NCAA 61-65 (1984).<sup>1</sup> [****76] The District Court held that the plan constituted price fixing and output limitation illegal per se under § 1 of the Sherman Act; it also held that the scheme was an illegal group boycott, was monopolization forbidden by § 2, and was in any event an unreasonable restraint of trade. It then entered an injunction that for all practical purposes excluded the NCAA from interfering with or regulating its members' arrangements for televising their football games. The Court of Appeals, while disagreeing with the boycott and monopolization holdings, otherwise upheld the District Court's judgment that the television plan violated the Sherman Act, focusing almost entirely on the price-fixing and output-limiting aspects of the television plan. The Court of Appeals, however, differed with the District Court with respect to the injunction. After noting that the injunction vested exclusive control of television rights in the individual schools, the court stated that, "[while] we hold that the NCAA cannot [*126] lawfully maintain exclusive control of the rights, how far such rights may be commonly regulated involves speculation that should not be made on the record of the instant [****77] case." 707 F.2d, at 1162. The court expressly stated, for example, that the NCAA could prevent its members from telecasting games on Friday night in competition with high school games, ibid., emphasized that the disparity in revenue between schools could be reduced by "[a] properly drawn system of pass-over payments to ensure adequate athletic funding for schools that do not earn substantial television revenues," id., at 1159, and indicated that it was not outlawing "membership-wide [contracts] with opt-out and pass-over payment provisions, or blackout rules." Id., at 1162. It nevertheless left the District Court's injunction in full force and remanded the case for further proceedings in light of its opinion. Anticipating that the Court would grant certiorari, I stayed the judgment of the Court of Appeals. 463 U.S. 1311 \(1983\).

In affirming the Court of Appeals, the Court first holds that the television plan has sufficient redeeming virtues to escape condemnation as a per se violation of the Sherman Act, this because of the inherent characteristics of competitive athletics and the justifiable role of the [****78] NCAA in regulating college athletics. It nevertheless [***100] affirms the Court of Appeals' judgment that the NCAA plan is an unreasonable restraint of trade because of what it deems to be the plan's price-fixing and output-limiting aspects. As I shall explain, in reaching this result, the Court traps itself in commercial antitrust rhetoric and ideology and ignores the context in which the restraints have been imposed. But it is essential at this point to emphasize that neither the Court of Appeals nor this Court purports to hold that the NCAA may not (1) require its members who telecast their games to pool and share the compensation received among themselves, with other schools, and with the NCAA; (2) limit the number of times any member may arrange to have its games shown on [*127] television; or (3) enforce reasonable blackout rules to avoid head-to-head competition for television audiences. As I shall demonstrate, the Court wisely and correctly does not condemn such regulations. What the Court does affirm is the Court of Appeals' judgment that the NCAA may not limit the number of games that are broadcast on television and that it may not contract for an overall <sup>1</sup> Television plans with similar features have been in place since 1951. The 1951-1953 plans were submitted to the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice for review. The Department took the matter "under study," App. 284-285, and, until this litigation, has apparently never taken the position that the NCAA's television plans were unlawful.

price [****79] that has the effect of setting the price for individual game broadcast rights.<sup>2</sup> I disagree with the Court in these respects.

[**2974] //

"In a competitive market," the District Court observed, "each football-playing institution would be an independent seller of the right to telecast its football games. Each seller would be free [****80] to sell that right to any entity it chose," and "for whatever price it could get." 546 F.Supp., at 1318. Under the NCAA's television plan, member institutions' competitive freedom is restrained because, for the most part, television rights are bought and sold, not on a per-game basis, but as a package deal. With limited exceptions not particularly relevant to antitrust scrutiny of the plan, broadcasters wishing to televise college football must be willing and able to purchase a package of television rights without knowing in advance the particular games to which those rights apply. The real negotiations over price and terms take place between the broadcasters and the NCAA rather [*128] than between the broadcasters and individual schools. Knowing that some games will be worth more to them than others, the networks undoubtedly exercise whatever bargaining power they possess to ensure that the minimum aggregate compensation they agree to provide for the package bears some relation to the average value to them of the games they anticipate televising. Because some schools' games contribute disproportionately to the total value of the package, see id., at 1293, [****81] the manner in which the minimum aggregate compensation is distributed among schools whose games [***101] are televised has given rise to a situation under which less prominent schools receive more in rights fees than they would receive in a competitive market and football powers like respondents receive less. Id., at 1315.

As I have said, the Court does not hold, nor did the Court of Appeals hold, that this redistributive effect alone would be sufficient to subject the television plan to condemnation under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Nor should it, for an agreement to share football revenues to a certain extent is an essential aspect of maintaining some balance of strength among competing colleges and of minimizing the tendency to professionalism in the dominant schools. Sharing with the NCAA itself is also a price legitimately exacted in exchange for the numerous benefits of membership in the NCAA, including its many-faceted efforts to maintain a system of competitive, amateur athletics. For the same reasons, limiting the number of television appearances by any college is an essential attribute of a balanced amateur athletic system. Even with shared television [****82] revenues, unlimited appearances by a few schools would inevitably give them an insuperable advantage over all others and in the end defeat any efforts to maintain a system of athletic competition among amateurs who measure up to college scholastic requirements.

The Court relies instead primarily on the District Court's findings that (1) the television plan restricts output; and (2) the plan creates a noncompetitive price structure that is unresponsive to viewer demand. Ante, at 104-106. See, [*129] e. g., 546 F.Supp., at 1318-1319. These findings notwithstanding, I am unconvinced that the television plan has a substantial anticompetitive effect.

First, it is not clear to me that the District Court employed the proper measure of output. I am not prepared to say that the District Court's finding that "many more college football games would be televised" in the absence of the NCAA controls, id., at 1294, is clearly erroneous. To the extent that output is measured solely in terms of the number of televised games, I need not [**2975] deny that it is reduced by the NCAA's television plan. But this measure of output is not the proper [****83] one. The District Court found that eliminating the plan would reduce the number of games on network television and increase the number of games shown locally and regionally. Id., at 1307. It made no finding concerning the effect of the plan on total viewership, which is the more appropriate measure of output or, at least, of the claimed anticompetitive effects of the NCAA plan. This is the NCAA's position, <sup>2</sup> This litigation was triggered by the NCAA's response to an attempt by the College Football Association (CFA), an organization of the more dominant football-playing schools and conferences, to develop an independent television plan. To the extent that its plan contains features similar to those condemned as anticompetitive by the Court, the CFA may well have antitrust problems of its own. To the extent that they desire continued membership in the NCAA, moreover, participation in a television plan developed by the CFA will not exempt football powers like respondents from the many kinds of NCAA controls over television appearances that the Court does not purport to invalidate.

---

and it seems likely to me that the television plan, by increasing network coverage at the expense of local broadcasts, actually expands the total television audience for NCAA football. The NCAA would surely be an irrational "profit maximizer" if this were not the case. In the absence of a contrary finding by the District Court, I cannot conclude that respondents carried their burden of showing that the television plan has an adverse effect on output and is therefore anticompetitive.

Second, and even more important, I am unconvinced that respondents have proved that any reduction in the number of televised college football [***102] games brought about by the NCAA's television plan has resulted in an anticompetitive increase in the price of television rights. [***84] The District Court found, of course, that "the networks are actually paying the large fees because the NCAA agrees to limit production. If the NCAA would not agree to limit production, the networks would not pay so large a fee." Id., at 1294. Undoubtedly, this is true. But the market for television rights to college football competitions should not be equated to the markets [*130] for wheat or widgets. Reductions in output by monopolists in most product markets enable producers to exact a higher price for the same product. By restricting the number of games that can be televised, however, the NCAA creates a new product -- exclusive television rights -- that are more valuable to networks than the products that its individual members could market independently.

The television plan makes a certain number of games available for purchase by television networks and limits the incidence of head-to-head competition between football telecasts for the available viewers. Because competition is limited, the purchasing network can count on a larger share of the audience, which translates into greater advertising revenues and, accordingly, into larger payments [***85] per game to the televised teams. There is thus a relationship between the size of the rights payments and the value of the product being purchased by the networks; a network purchasing a series of games under the plan is willing to pay more than would one purchasing the same games in the absence of the plan since the plan enables the network to deliver a larger share of the available audience to advertisers and thus to increase its own revenues. In short, by focusing only on the price paid by the networks for television rights rather than on the nature and quality of the product delivered by the NCAA and its member institutions, the District Court, and this Court as well, may well have deemed anticompetitive a rise in price that more properly should be attributed to an increase in output, measured in terms of viewership.

Third, the District Court's emphasis on the prices paid for particular games seems misdirected and erroneous as a matter of law. The distribution of the minimum aggregate fees among participants in the television plan is, of course, not wholly based on a competitive price structure that is responsive to viewer demand and is only partially related to the value those [***86] schools contribute to the total package the networks agree to buy. But as I have already indicated, see [*131] supra, at 128, this "redistribution" of total television revenues is a wholly justifiable, even necessary, aspect of maintaining a system of truly competitive college teams. As long as the NCAA cannot artificially fix the price of the entire package and demand supercompetitive prices, this aspect of the plan should be of little concern. And I find little, if anything, in the record to support [**2976] the notion that the NCAA has power to extract from the television networks more than the broadcasting rights are worth in the marketplace.

III

Even if I were convinced that the [***103] District Court did not err in failing to look to total viewership, as opposed to the number of televised games, when measuring output and anticompetitive effect and in failing fully to consider whether the NCAA possesses power to fix the package price, as opposed to the distribution of that package price among participating teams, I would nevertheless hold that the television plan passes muster under the Rule of Reason. The NCAA argues strenuously that the plan and the network [***87] contracts "are part of a joint venture among many of the nation's universities to create a product -- high-quality college football -- and offer that product in a way attractive to both fans in the stadiums and viewers on [television]. The cooperation in producing the product makes it more competitive against other [television] (and live) attractions." Brief for Petitioner 15. The Court recognizes that, "[if] the NCAA faced 'interbrand' competition from available substitutes, then certain forms of collective action might be appropriate in order to enhance its ability to compete." Ante, at 115, n. 55. See Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 54-57 (1977). It rejects the NCAA's proffered procompetitive justification, however, on the ground that college football is a unique product for which there are no available substitutes and "there is no need for collective action in [*132] order to enable the product to compete against its nonexistent competitors." Ante, at 115 (footnote omitted). This proposition is singularly unpersuasive.

It is one thing to say that "NCAA football is a unique product," 546 F.Supp., at 1299, [****88] that "intercollegiate football telecasts generate an audience uniquely attractive to advertisers and that competitors are unable to offer programming that can attract a similar audience." Ante, at 111 (footnote omitted). See 707 F.2d, at 1158-1159; 546 F.Supp., at 1298-1300. It is quite another, in my view, to say that maintenance or enhancement of the quality of NCAA football telecasts is unnecessary to enable those telecasts to compete effectively against other forms of entertainment. The NCAA has no monopoly power when competing against other types of entertainment. Should the quality of the NCAA's product "deteriorate to any perceptible degree or should the cost of 'using' its product rise, some fans undoubtedly would turn to another form of entertainment. . . . Because of the broad possibilities for alternative forms of entertainment," the NCAA "properly belongs in the broader 'entertainment' market rather than in . . . [a] narrower [market]" like sports or football. Grauer, Recognition of the National Football League as a Single Entity Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act: Implications of the Consumer Welfare Model, 82 Mich. L. Rev. 1, 34, n. 156 \(1983\). [****89] See National Football League v. North American Soccer League, 459 U.S. 1074, 1077 (1982) (REHNQUIST, J., dissenting from the denial of certiorari); R. Atwell, B. Grimes, & D. Lopiano, The Money Game 32-33 (1980); Hanford, at 67; J. Michener, Sports in America 208-209 (1976); Note, 87 Yale L. J., at 661, and n. 31.

The NCAA has suggested a number of plausible ways in which its television plan might enhance the [***104] ability of college football telecasts to compete against other forms of entertainment. Brief for Petitioner 22-25. Although the District Court did conclude that the plan is "not necessary for effective marketing of the product," 546 F.Supp., at 1307, its [*133] finding was directed only at the question whether college football telecasts would continue in the absence of the plan. It made no explicit findings concerning the effect of the plan on viewership and thus did not reject the factual premise of the NCAA's argument that the plan might enhance competition by increasing [**2977] the market penetration of NCAA football. See also 707 F.2d, at 1154-1156, 1160. The District Court's finding [****90] that network coverage of NCAA football would likely decrease if the plan were struck down, 546 F.Supp., at 1307, in fact, strongly suggests the validity of the NCAA's position. On the record now before the Court, therefore, I am not prepared to conclude that the restraints imposed by the NCAA's television plan are "such as may suppress or even destroy competition" rather than "such as merely [regulate] and perhaps thereby [promote] competition." Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238 (1918).

IV

Finally, I return to the point with which I began -- the essentially noneconomic nature of the NCAA's program of self-regulation. Like Judge Barrett, who dissented in the Court of Appeals, I believe that the lower courts "erred by subjugating the NCAA's educational goals (and, incidentally, those which Oklahoma and Georgia insist must be maintained in any event) to the purely competitive commercialism of [an] 'every school for itself' approach to television contract bargaining." 707 F.2d, at 1168. Although the NCAA does not enjoy blanket immunity from the antitrust laws, cf. Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773 (1975), [****91] it is important to remember that the Sherman Act "is aimed primarily at combinations having commercial objectives and is applied only to a very limited extent to organizations . . . which normally have other objectives." Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213, n. 7 (1959).

The fact that a restraint operates on nonprofit educational institutions as distinguished from business entities is as "relevant [*134] in determining whether that particular restraint violates the Sherman Act" as is the fact that a restraint affects a profession rather than a business. Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, supra, at 788, n. 17. Cf. Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 56, n. 20 (1982). The legitimate noneconomic goals of colleges and universities should not be ignored in analyzing restraints imposed by associations of such institutions on their members, and these noneconomic goals "may require that a particular practice, which could properly be viewed as a violation of the Sherman Act in another context, be treated differently." Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, supra, at 788, n. 17. [****92] The Court of Appeals, like the District Court, flatly refused to consider what it termed "noneconomic" justifications advanced by the NCAA in support of the television plan. It was of the [***105] view that our decision in National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679 (1978), precludes reliance on noneconomic factors in assessing the reasonableness of the television plan. 707 F.2d, at 1154; see Tr. of Oral Arg. 24-25. This view was mistaken, and I note that the Court does not in so many words repeat this error.

Professional Engineers did make clear that antitrust analysis usually turns on "competitive conditions" and "economic conceptions." 435 U.S., at 690, and n. 16. Ordinarily, "the inquiry mandated by the Rule of Reason is whether the challenged agreement is one that promotes competition or one that suppresses competition." Id., at 691. The purpose of antitrust analysis, the Court emphasized, "is to form a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint; it is not to decide whether a policy favoring competition is in the public interest, or in the interest of [****93] the members of an industry." Id., at 692. Broadly read, these statements suggest that noneconomic values like the promotion of amateurism and fundamental educational objectives could not save the television plan from condemnation under the Sherman Act. [*135] But these [**2978] statements were made in response to "public interest" justifications proffered in defense of a ban on competitive bidding imposed by practitioners engaged in standard, profit-motivated commercial activities. The primarily non-economic values pursued by educational institutions differ fundamentally from the "overriding commercial purpose of [the] day-to-day activities" of engineers, lawyers, doctors, and businessmen, Gulland, Byrne, & Steinbach, Intercollegiate Athletics and Television Contracts: Beyond Economic Justifications in Antitrust Analysis of Agreements Among Colleges, 52 Ford. L. Rev. 717, 728 \(1984\), and neither Professional Engineers nor any other decision of this Court suggests that associations of nonprofit educational institutions must defend their self-regulatory restraints solely in terms of their competitive impact, without regard for the legitimate [****94] noneconomic values they promote.

When these values are factored into the balance, the NCAA's television plan seems eminently reasonable. Most fundamentally, the plan fosters the goal of amateurism by spreading revenues among various schools and reducing the financial incentives toward professionalism. As the Court observes, the NCAA imposes a variety of restrictions perhaps better suited than the television plan for the preservation of amateurism. Ante, at 119. Although the NCAA does attempt vigorously to enforce these restrictions, the vast potential for abuse suggests that measures, like the television plan, designed to limit the rewards of professionalism are fully consistent with, and essential to the attainment of, the NCAA's objectives. In short, "[the] restraints upon Oklahoma and Georgia and other colleges and universities with excellent football programs insure that they confine those programs within the principles of amateurism so that intercollegiate athletics supplement, rather than inhibit, educational achievement." 707 F.2d, at 1167 (Barrett, J., dissenting). The collateral consequences of the spreading of [*136] regional and national [****95] [***106] appearances among a number of schools are many: the television plan, like the ban on compensating student-athletes, may well encourage students to choose their schools, at least in part, on the basis of educational quality by reducing the perceived economic element of the choice, see Note, 87 Yale L. J., at 676, n. 106; it helps ensure the economic viability of athletic programs at a wide variety of schools with weaker football teams; and it "[promotes] competitive football among many and varied amateur teams nationwide." Gulland, Byrne, & Steinbach, supra, at 722 (footnote omitted). These important contributions, I believe, are sufficient to offset any minimal anticompetitive effects of the television plan.

For all of these reasons, I would reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals. At the very least, the Court of Appeals should be directed to vacate the injunction of the District Court pending the further proceedings that will be necessary to amend the outstanding injunction to accommodate the substantial remaining authority of the NCAA to regulate the telecasting of its members' football games.

References

---

[54 \[\*\*\*\*96\] Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 210](#)

15 USCS 1

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 16

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

468 U.S. 85, *136; 104 S. Ct. 2948, **2978; 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, ***106; 1984 U.S. LEXIS 130, ****96

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; Sports

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Application of federal antitrust laws to professional sports. 18 ALR Fed 489.

Application of state antitrust laws to athletic leagues or associations. 85 ALR3d 970.

---

End of Document

Marrese v. American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons

Supreme Court of the United States

December 4, 1984, Argued ; March 4, 1985, Decided

No. 83-1452

Reporter

470 U.S. 373 *; 105 S. Ct. 1327 **; 84 L. Ed. 2d 274 ***; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 61 ****; 53 U.S.L.W. 4265; 1985-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,449

MARRESE ET AL. v. AMERICAN ACADEMY OF ORTHOPAEDIC SURGEONS

Subsequent History: [****1] Petition For Rehearing Denied April 22, 1985; As Amended.

Prior History: CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 726 F.2d 1150, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

federal court, state court, preclusive effect, claim preclusion, antitrust claim, court of appeals, preclusion, district court, state law, discovery order, exclusive jurisdiction, judgments, courts, cause of action, petitioners', competency, principles, plurality opinion, antitrust suit, contempt order, res judicata, Sherman Act, proceedings, membership, litigate, lawsuit, judgment of contempt, denial of a motion, criminal contempt, federal statute

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Contempt > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > State Court Review

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Obstruction of Administration of Justice > Contempt > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Final Judgment Rule

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Right to Appeal > Defendants

HN1 Sanctions, Contempt

470 U.S. 373, *373; 105 S. Ct. 1327, **1327; 84 L. Ed. 2d 274, ***274; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 61, ****1

Criminal contempt judgments are immediately appealable pursuant to 28 U.S.C.S. § 1291 because they result from a separate and independent proceeding to vindicate the authority of the court and are not a part of the original cause.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

Governments > Federal Government > Employees & Officials

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > Full Faith & Credit Statutes

Constitutional Law > Relations Among Governments > Full Faith & Credit

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

**HN2** [down] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

The preclusive effect of state court judgment in subsequent federal lawsuit generally is determined by full faith and credit statute, which provides that state judicial proceedings shall have same full faith and credit in every court within United States as they have by law or usage in courts of such state from which they are taken. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1738. This statute directs federal court to refer to preclusion law of state in which judgment was rendered. Section 1738 does not allow federal courts to employ their own rules of res judicata in determining effect of state judgments. Rather, it goes beyond common law and commands federal court to accept rules chosen by state from which judgment is taken. Section 1738 embodies concerns of comity and federalism that allow states to determine, subject to requirements of statute and Due Process Clause, preclusive effect of judgments in their own courts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Patent Law > Preclusion > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

**HN3** [down] Jurisdiction, Exclusive Jurisdiction

A state court judgment may in some circumstances have preclusive effect in a subsequent action within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

470 U.S. 373, *373; 105 S. Ct. 1327, **1327; 84 L. Ed. 2d 274, ***274; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 61, ****1

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

HN4 Jurisdiction Over Actions, Exclusive Jurisdiction

28 U.S.C.S. § 1738 requires a federal court to look first to state preclusion law in determining the preclusive effects of a state court judgment. An exception to §1738 will not be recognized unless a later statute contains an express or implied repeal. The basic approach adopted in Kremer applies in a lawsuit involving a claim within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts. A federal court may rely on state preclusion principles to determine the extent to which an earlier state judgment bars subsequent litigation. Kremer illustrates that a federal court can apply state rules of issue preclusion to determine if a matter actually litigated in state court may be relitigated in a subsequent federal proceeding.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Res Judicata

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN5 Jurisdiction Over Actions, Exclusive Jurisdiction

Claim preclusion generally does not apply where the plaintiff was unable to rely on a certain theory of the case or to seek a certain remedy because of the limitations on the subject matter jurisdiction of the courts. If state preclusion law includes this requirement of prior jurisdictional competency, which is generally true, a state judgment will not have claim preclusive effect on a cause of action within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts. Even in the event that a party asserting the affirmative defense of claim preclusion can show that state preclusion rules in some circumstances bar a claim outside the jurisdiction of the court that rendered the initial judgment, the federal court should first consider whether application of the state rules would bar the particular federal claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > Full Faith & Credit Statutes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN6 Full Faith & Credit, Full Faith & Credit Statutes

The issue whether there is an exception to 28 U.S.C.S. § 1738 arises only if state law indicates that litigation of a particular claim or issue should be barred in the subsequent federal proceeding. To the extent that state preclusion law indicates that a judgment normally does not have claim preclusive effect as to matters that the court lacked jurisdiction to entertain, lower courts and commentators have correctly concluded that a state court judgment does not bar a subsequent federal antitrust claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > Full Faith & Credit Statutes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN7 Full Faith & Credit, Full Faith & Credit Statutes

Under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1738, state law determines the preclusive effect of the state judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Challenges to Jury Venire > Bias & Prejudice > Implied Bias

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > Full Faith & Credit Statutes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN8 Jurisdiction, Exclusive Jurisdiction

Only if state law indicates that a particular claim or issue would be barred, is it necessary to determine if an exception to 28 U.S.C.S. § 1738 should apply.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Determining preclusive effect of state court judgment in subsequent federal antitrust suit, without considering state preclusion law, held improper.

Summary

Board-certified orthopaedic surgeons filed suit in a state court after they were denied membership in the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons (Academy). The state court complaints were dismissed for failure to state a cause of action, and the surgeons then filed a federal antitrust suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois based on the same events underlying their unsuccessful state court actions. The Academy filed a motion to dismiss arguing that claim preclusion barred the federal antitrust claim, since the earlier state court actions concerned the same facts and were dismissed with prejudice. The District Court denied this motion, reasoning that state courts lack jurisdiction over federal antitrust claims and, therefore, a state court judgment cannot have claim preclusive effect in a subsequent federal antitrust suit. Subsequently, the Academy was held in contempt for refusal to respond to discovery requests. While an appeal of the contempt order was pending, the District Court certified its denial of the motion to dismiss for immediate appeal. On consolidated appeals, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit held that as a matter of federal law, claim preclusion barred the federal antitrust suit, and reversed the contempt order because the discovery order was invalid (726 F2d 1150).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. In an opinion by O'Connor, J., joined by Brennan, White, Marshall, Powell, and Rehnquist, JJ., it was held (1) that the pendency of the appeal from the contempt judgment did not prevent the District Court from certifying the denial of the motion to dismiss for immediate interlocutory appeal, under 28 USCS 1292\(b\), and, therefore, the Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to review the District Court's decision and (2) that, pursuant to the full faith and credit statute (28 USCS 1738), the lower federal courts erred in determining the preclusive effect of a state court judgment without regard to the law of the state in which the judgment was rendered.

Burger, Ch. J., concurred in the judgment, stating that in a situation in which state law is indeterminate as to the preclusive effect a state court judgment may have on a federal action, it may be consistent with 1738 for a federal court to formulate a federal rule to resolve the matter.

Blackmun and Stevens, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

JUDGMENT §386 > federal full faith and credit statute -- determination as to preclusive effect of state court judgments in subsequent federal lawsuit -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E]

In determining the preclusive effect of a state court judgment in a subsequent lawsuit involving federal antitrust claims that could not have been raised in the state proceeding, the federal court, pursuant to the full faith and credit statute (28 USCS 1738), must consider the preclusion law of the state in which the judgment was rendered; there is no exception to 1738 for federal antitrust claims that would give state court judgments greater preclusive effect than would the courts of the state rendering the judgment.

APPEAL §31 > interlocutory appeal certification -- pendency of other appeal -- court's jurisdiction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C]

A Federal District Court which denies a motion to dismiss and subsequently holds a party in criminal contempt for refusing to comply with a discovery order has jurisdiction to amend its initial denial of the motion to dismiss to certify it for immediate interlocutory appeal under 28 USCS 1292\(b\), even though the appeal from the contempt judgment is still pending, and a Federal Court of Appeals which authorizes the interlocutory appeal and orders its consolidation with the appeal from the contempt judgment can properly exercise jurisdiction over the consolidated appeals.

JUDGMENT §392 > issue or claim preclusion -- federal reliance on state rules -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Although a state court will not have occasion to address the specific question whether a state judgment has issue or claim preclusive effect in a later action that can be brought only in federal court, a federal court may rely in the first instance on state preclusion principles to determine the extent to which an earlier state judgment bars subsequent litigation; a federal court can apply state rules of issue preclusion to determine if a matter actually litigated in state court may be relitigated in a subsequent federal proceeding.

Syllabus

---

After being denied membership in respondent American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, petitioner orthopaedic surgeons each filed an action in an Illinois Circuit Court, alleging that the denial of membership violated their associational rights under Illinois common law. After the Illinois Appellate Court ultimately held that the complaint in one action failed to state a cause of action, the Circuit Court then dismissed the other complaint. Subsequently, petitioners filed an action in Federal District Court, alleging that the denial of membership constituted a boycott in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Respondent filed a motion to dismiss on the ground that claim preclusion barred the federal antitrust claim because the state actions concerned the same facts and were dismissed with prejudice. The District Court denied the motion, holding, in reliance on federal law, that the state judgments did not bar the Sherman Act claim. Thereafter, the District Court held respondent in criminal contempt [****2] for refusing to comply with a discovery order as to its membership application files. Respondent then appealed from the contempt order, and, while this appeal was pending, the District Court certified its denial of the motion to dismiss for immediate appeal. The Court of Appeals authorized an interlocutory appeal and ordered it consolidated with the appeal from the contempt order. Ultimately, the Court of Appeals held that, as a matter of federal law, claim preclusion barred the federal antitrust action, and reversed the contempt order because the discovery order was invalid.

Held:

1. The Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to review the District Court's denial of the motion to dismiss. The pendency of the appeal from the contempt order did not prevent the District Court from certifying such denial for immediate appeal. Pp. 378-379.
2. The courts below erred in not considering Illinois law in determining the preclusive effect of the state judgments. Pp. 379-386.

(a) Title 28 U. S. C. § 1738 -- which provides that state judicial proceedings "shall have the same full faith and credit in every court within the United States . . . as they have by law or usage in the courts of [****3] such State . . . from which they are taken" -- requires a federal court to look first to state law in determining the preclusive effects of a state-court judgment. Kremer v. Chemical Construction Corp., 456 U.S. 461. The fact that petitioners' antitrust claim is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts does not necessarily make § 1738 inapplicable in this case. While a state court will have no occasion to address the question whether a state judgment has issue or claim preclusive effect in a later action that can be brought only in federal court, a federal court may nevertheless rely in the first instance on state preclusion principles to determine the extent to which an earlier state judgment bars subsequent litigation. Pp. 379-382.

(b) Reference to state preclusion law may make it unnecessary to determine if a federal court, as an exception to § 1738, should refuse to give preclusive effect to a state-court judgment. Here, unless application of Illinois preclusion law suggests that petitioners' federal antitrust claim is barred, there will be no need to decide if there is an exception to § 1738. This Court will not create a special [****4] exception to § 1738 for federal antitrust claims that would give state-court judgments greater preclusive effect than would the courts of the State rendering judgment, and that effectively holds as a matter of federal law that a plaintiff can bring state-law claims initially in state court only at the cost of forgoing subsequent federal antitrust claims. Pp. 383-386.

Counsel: Michael T. Sawyier argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Stephen B. Cohen, George C. Pontikes, and John J. Casey, Jr.

Charles W. Murdock, Deputy Attorney General of Illinois, argued the cause for the State of Illinois et al. as amici curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were Neil F. Hartigan, Attorney General of Illinois, and Robert E. Davy, Thomas J. DeMay, and James N. O'Hara, Assistant Attorneys General, Linley E. Pearson, Attorney General of Indiana, and Frank A. Baldwin, Deputy Attorney General, Bronson C. La Follette, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Michael L. Zaleski, Assistant Attorney General.

D. Kendall Griffith argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Thomas M. Crisham, Robert E. Nord, and Pamela S. Hollis.

Judges: O'CONNOR, J., delivered the opinion of the [****5] Court, in which BRENNAN, WHITE, MARSHALL, POWELL, and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined. BURGER, C. J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, post, p. 387. BLACKMUN and STEVENS, JJ., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: O'CONNOR

Opinion

---

[*375] [*378] [**1329] JUSTICE O'CONNOR delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A]This case concerns the preclusive effect of a state court judgment in a subsequent lawsuit involving federal antitrust claims within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, sitting en banc, held as a matter of federal law that the earlier state court judgments barred the federal antitrust suit. 726 F.2d 1150 (1984). Under 28 U. S. C. § 1738, a federal court generally is required to consider first the law of the State in which the judgment was rendered to determine its preclusive effect. Because the lower courts did not consider state preclusion law in this case, we reverse and remand.

I

Petitioners are board-certified orthopaedic surgeons who applied for membership in respondent American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons (Academy). Respondent denied the membership applications without [****6] providing a hearing or a statement of reasons. In November 1976, petitioner Dr. Treister filed suit in the Circuit Court of Cook County, State of Illinois, alleging that the denial of membership in the Academy violated associational rights protected by Illinois common law. Petitioner Dr. Marrese separately filed a similar action in state court. Neither petitioner alleged a violation of state antitrust law in his state court action; nor did either petitioner contemporaneously file a federal antitrust suit. The Illinois Appellate Court ultimately held that Dr. Treister's complaint failed to state a cause of action, Treister v. American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, 78 Ill. App. 3d 746, 396 N. E. 2d 1225 (1979), and the Illinois Supreme Court denied leave to appeal. 79 Ill. 2d 630 (1980). After the Appellate Court ruled against Dr. Treister, the Circuit Court dismissed Dr. Marrese's complaint.

[*376] In March 1980, petitioners filed a federal antitrust suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois based on the same events underlying their unsuccessful state court actions. As amended, the [****7] complaint alleged that respondent Academy possesses monopoly power, that petitioners were denied membership in order to discourage competition, and that their exclusion constituted a boycott in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1. App. 8, 26-30, 33. Respondent filed a motion to dismiss arguing that claim preclusion barred the federal antitrust claim because the earlier state court actions concerned the same facts and were dismissed with prejudice.<sup>1</sup> In denying this [**1330] motion, the District Court reasoned that state courts lack jurisdiction over federal antitrust claims, and therefore a state court judgment cannot have claim preclusive effect in a subsequent federal [***279] antitrust suit. 496 F.Supp. 236, 238-239 \(1980\), on reconsideration, 524 F.Supp. 389 \(1981\). Discovery began and respondent refused to allow petitioners access to certain files relating to membership applications. After respondent persisted in this refusal despite a discovery order, the District Court held respondent in criminal contempt. App. to Pet. for Cert. N-1.

11 ÈÁWÈJÉH HÉHÍ Í LAFJÍ ÁUØGÄFHGÍ ÈFHGUÀ I ÅSEØAÈGAÁI I ÈFHGÍ Í LAFJÍ Í ÁWÈJÉSÓYØJÀ FÄHÉH

[***8] The judgment of contempt was reversed by a divided panel of the Court of Appeals in an opinion holding that the District Judge had abused his discretion by authorizing discovery of the membership files and also suggesting that the federal action was barred by claim preclusion and that the antitrust claims were groundless. 692 F.2d 1083 \(1982\). This opinion was vacated by an en banc vote, and the original panel issued a narrower opinion that did not discuss claim preclusion. [*377] 706 F.2d 1488 \(1983\). The Court of Appeals then vacated the second opinion and ordered rehearing en banc. In a divided vote, the Court of Appeals held that claim preclusion barred the federal antitrust suit and reversed the contempt order because the discovery order was invalid. 726 F.2d 1150 \(1984\).

On the claim preclusion issue, no opinion commanded the votes of a majority of the Court of Appeals. A plurality opinion concluded that a state court judgment bars the subsequent filing of a federal antitrust claim if the plaintiff could have brought a state antitrust claim under a state statute "materially identical" to the Sherman Act. Id. at 1153. [***9] The plurality examined the Illinois Antitrust Act, Ill. Rev. Stat., ch. 38, para. 60-3(2) (1981), and found that it is sufficiently similar to the Sherman Act to bar petitioners' federal antitrust claims in the instant case. Id. at 1155-1156. An opinion concurring in part concluded that res judicata required petitioners to bring their "entire cause of action within a reasonable period of time." Id. at 1166 (Flaum, J.). To avoid preclusion of their federal antitrust claim, petitioners should have either filed concurrent state and federal actions or brought their state claims in federal court pendent to their Sherman Act claim. Ibid.

Five judges also concluded that the discovery order was invalid and therefore the contempt judgment should be reversed. A plurality opinion first observed that the discovery order was invalid because the District Court should have dismissed the suit on claim preclusion grounds before the discovery order was entered. Id. at 1158. Alternatively, the order constituted an abuse of discretion because it did not adequately prevent petitioners from misusing the discovery process. Id. at 1158-1162. [***10] Three judges joined the entire discussion concerning the discovery order. A fourth judge did not believe that claim preclusion applied, but he agreed that the discovery order constituted an abuse of discretion. Id. at 1162 (Eschbach, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). Finally, the fifth judge observed that it was sufficient [*378] to hold that the complaint should have been dismissed on claim preclusion grounds; he added, however, that if he thought it necessary he would join the portion of the plurality opinion holding the discovery order invalid. Id. at 1162 (Bauer, J., concurring).

We granted certiorari limited to [***280] the question whether the Court of Appeals correctly held that claim preclusion requires dismissal of the federal antitrust action, 467 U.S. 1258 \(1984\), and we now reverse.

II

LEdHN/2A [↑] [2A] Before addressing the merits of the decision below, we first examine whether the Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to review the District Court's denial of the motion to dismiss. Although the parties did not <sup>1</sup> In this opinion we use the term "claim preclusion" to refer to "res judicata" in a narrow sense, i. e., the preclusive effect of a judgment in foreclosing litigation of matters that should have been raised in an earlier suit. In contrast, we use the term "issue preclusion" to refer to the effect of a judgment in foreclosing relitigation of a matter that has been litigated and decided. See Migra v. Warren City School Dist. Bd. of Ed., 465 U.S. 75, 77, n. 1 \(1984\).

---

I Í ÉÁÈJÉHÍ HÉHÍ I LÁFÍ ÁÙÈÖDÄFHGÍ ÉÄFHHELÀ I ÅSEØAÉGAÁGÍ I ÉÄEGÍ ELÁJÍ I ÁÙÈSØYØÅ FÄÄHE

raise the jurisdictional issue before this Court, we address it to assure that the claim preclusion [***11] issue is properly before us. See, [**1331] e. g., United States v. Storer Broadcasting Co., 351 U.S. 192, 197 (1956). In the present case, the District Court initially refused to certify its denial of the motion to dismiss for immediate appeal pursuant to 28 U. S. C. § 1292(b). The District Court subsequently held respondent in criminal contempt for refusing to comply with a discovery order. Respondent then appealed from the judgment of criminal contempt pursuant to 28 U. S. C. § 1291. See Bray v. United States, 423 U.S. 73 (1975) (per curiam). While the appeal from the contempt judgment was pending, the District Court amended the earlier denial of the motion to dismiss in order to certify it for immediate appeal. App. to Pet. for Cert. I-1. The Court of Appeals authorized interlocutory appeal pursuant to § 1292(b), and ordered proceedings consolidated with the appeal from the contempt order. 726 F.2d, at 1152; App. to Pet. for Cert. J-1.

LEdHN[2B] [2B]Petitioners argued below that because the appeal from the contempt order was pending, the District Court lacked jurisdiction to amend its order denying the motion to [***12] dismiss to [*379] allow interlocutory appeal. In general, filing of a notice of appeal confers jurisdiction on the court of appeals and divests the district court of control over those aspects of the case involved in the appeal. Griggs v. Provident Consumer Discount Co., 459 U.S. 56, 58 (1982) (per curiam). This proposition, however, does not imply that an appeal from a judgment of criminal contempt based on noncompliance with a discovery order transfers jurisdiction over the entire case to the court of appeals. HN1 [2C]Criminal contempt judgments are immediately appealable pursuant to § 1291 because they result from "a separate and independent proceeding . . . to vindicate the authority of the court" and are "not a part of the original cause." Bray, supra, at 75, quoting Gompers v. Bucks Stove & Range Co., 221 U.S. 418, 445, 451 (1911).

LEdHN[2C] [2C]Thus, prior to certification of the claim preclusion issue pursuant to § 1292(b), the contempt judgment was the only matter before the Court of Appeals. See 706 F.2d, at 1497-1498; 692 F.2d, at 1096. The District Court's amendment of its initial [***13] denial of the motion to dismiss did not interfere with but instead facilitated review of the pending appeal from the contempt order. We agree with the Court of Appeals, 726 F.2d, at 1152, that the pendency of the appeal from the contempt judgment did not prevent the District Court from certifying the denial of the motion to dismiss for immediate appeal under § 1292(b). [***281] Accordingly, the Court of Appeals properly exercised jurisdiction over the consolidated appeals, and we have jurisdiction to review that court's decision with respect to dismissal of the antitrust claim.

III

LEdHN[1B] [1B]The issue presented by this case is whether a state court judgment may have preclusive effect on a federal antitrust claim that could not have been raised in the state proceeding. Although federal antitrust claims are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts, see, e. g., General Investment [*380] Co. v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 260 U.S. 261, 286-288 (1922), the Court of Appeals ruled that the dismissal of petitioners' complaints in state court barred them from bringing a claim based on the same facts under the Sherman Act. The Court of [***14] Appeals erred by suggesting that in these circumstances a federal court should determine the preclusive effect of a state court judgment without regard to the law of the State in which judgment was rendered.

LEdHN[1C] [1C]HN2 [1C]The preclusive effect of a state court judgment in a subsequent federal lawsuit generally is determined by the full faith and credit statute, which provides that state judicial proceedings "shall have the same full faith and credit in every court within the United States . . . as they have [**1332] by law or usage in the courts of such State . . . from which they are taken." 28 U. S. C. § 1738. This statute directs a federal court to refer to the preclusion law of the State in which judgment was rendered. "It has long been established that § 1738 does not allow federal courts to employ their own rules of res judicata in determining the effect of state judgments. Rather, it goes beyond the common law and commands a federal court to accept the rules chosen by the State from which the judgment is taken." Kremer v. Chemical Construction Corp., 456 U.S. 461, 481-482 (1982); see also

I Í ÉÁÈJÉHÍ HÉHÍ ELÁÉÍ ÁÙÉÖDÉFHGÍ ÉÁEFHGLÁ I ÁSEÓaÉGAÁGÍ I ÉÁEEGÍ FLÁJÍ I ÁMÉÉSÓYÓAÁ FÉHIFI

Allen v. McCurry, 449 U.S. 90, 96 (1980). Section [****15] 1738 embodies concerns of comity and federalism that allow the States to determine, subject to the requirements of the statute and the Due Process Clause, the preclusive effect of judgments in their own courts. See Kremer, supra, at 478, 481-483. Cf. Riley v. New York Trust Co., 315 U.S. 343, 349 (1942) (discussing preclusive effect of state judgment in proceedings in another State).

The fact that petitioners' antitrust claim is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts does not necessarily make § 1738 inapplicable to this case. Our decisions indicate that HN3[<sup>1</sup>] a state court judgment may in some circumstances have preclusive effect in a subsequent action within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts. Without discussing § 1738, [*381] this Court has held that the issue preclusive effect of a state court judgment barred a subsequent patent suit that could not have been brought in state court. Becher v. Contoure Laboratories, Inc., 279 U.S. 388 (1929). Moreover, Kremer held that § 1738 applies to a claim of employment discrimination under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 78 [****16] Stat. 253, as amended, 42 U. S. C. § 2000e et seq., although the Court expressly declined to decide [***282] whether Title VII claims can be brought only in federal courts. 456 U.S., at 479, n. 20. Kremer implies that absent an exception to § 1738, state law determines at least the issue preclusive effect of a prior state judgment in a subsequent action involving a claim within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts.

More generally, HN4[<sup>1</sup>] Kremer indicates that § 1738 requires a federal court to look first to state preclusion law in determining the preclusive effects of a state court judgment. Cf. Haring v. Prosise, 462 U.S. 306, 314, and n. 8 (1983); Smith, Full Faith and Credit and Section 1983: A Reappraisal, 63 N. C. L. Rev. 59, 110-111 (1984). The Court's analysis in Kremer began with the finding that state law would in fact bar relitigation of the discrimination issue decided in the earlier state proceedings. 456 U.S., at 466-467. That finding implied that the plaintiff could not relitigate the same issue in federal court unless some exception to § 1738 applied. Ibid. Kremer[****17] observed that "an exception to § 1738 will not be recognized unless a later statute contains an express or implied repeal." Id., at 468; see also Allen v. McCurry, supra, at 99. Title VII does not expressly repeal § 1738, and the Court concluded that the statutory provisions and legislative history do not support a finding of implied repeal. 456 U.S., at 476. We conclude that the basic approach adopted in Kremer applies in a lawsuit involving a claim within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts.

LEdHN[3][<sup>1</sup>] [3]To be sure, a state court will not have occasion to address the specific question whether a state judgment has issue or claim preclusive effect in a later action that can be brought [*382] only in federal court. Nevertheless, a federal court may rely in the first instance on state preclusion principles to determine the extent to which an earlier state judgment bars subsequent litigation. Cf. FDIC v. Eckhardt, 691 F.2d 245, 247-248 (CA6 1982) (applying state law to determine preclusive effect on claim [**1333] within concurrent jurisdiction of state and federal courts). Kremer [****18] illustrates that a federal court can apply state rules of issue preclusion to determine if a matter actually litigated in state court may be relitigated in a subsequent federal proceeding. See 456 U.S., at 467.

With respect to matters that were not decided in the state proceedings, we note that HN5[<sup>1</sup>] claim preclusion generally does not apply where "[the] plaintiff was unable to rely on a certain theory of the case or to seek a certain remedy because of the limitations on the subject matter jurisdiction of the courts . . . ." Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 26(1)(c) (1982). If state preclusion law includes this requirement of prior jurisdictional competency, which is generally true, a state judgment will not have claim preclusive effect on a cause of action within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts. Even in the event that a party asserting the affirmative defense of claim preclusion can show that state preclusion rules in some circumstances bar a claim outside the jurisdiction of the court that rendered the initial judgment, the federal court should first consider whether application of the state [***283] rules would bar the particular federal claim. [****19]<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup>Our analysis does not necessarily suggest that the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit erred in its holding in Nash County Board of Education v. Biltmore Co., 640 F.2d 484, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 878 (1981). The Court of Appeals there applied federal

I Í ÉÁÈJÉHÍ HÉHÍ GLÁÉI ÁÙÈÓDÉFHGÍ ÉÁEFHHLÀ I ÁSEÓaÉGAÁGÍ I ÉÁEEGÍ HÁFJÍ I ÁÙÈSÓYQÁ FÉHFFJ

[*383] Reference to state preclusion law may [****20] make it unnecessary to determine if the federal court, as an exception to § 1738, should refuse to give preclusive effect to a state court judgment. HN6↑ The issue whether there is an exception to § 1738 arises only if state law indicates that litigation of a particular claim or issue should be barred in the subsequent federal proceeding. To the extent that state preclusion law indicates that a judgment normally does not have claim preclusive effect as to matters that the court lacked jurisdiction to entertain, lower courts and commentators have correctly concluded that a state court judgment does not bar a subsequent federal antitrust claim. See 726 F.2d, at 1174 (Cudahy, J., dissenting) (citing cases); 692 F.2d, at 1099 (Stewart, J., dissenting); Restatement, supra, § 25(1), Comment e; id., § 26\(1\)\(c\), Illustration 2; 18 C. Wright, A. Miller, & E. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure § 4470, pp. 687-688 (1981). Unless application of Illinois preclusion law suggests, contrary to the usual view, that petitioners' federal antitrust claim is somehow barred, there will be no need to decide in this case if there is an exception to § 1738.<sup>3</sup>

[****21] [*384] [*1334] The Court of Appeals did not apply the approach to § 1738 that we have outlined. Both the plurality opinion, see 726 F.2d, at 1154, and an opinion concurring in part, see id., at 1163-1164 (Flaum, J.), express the view that § 1738 allows a federal court to give a state court judgment greater preclusive effect than the state courts themselves would give to it. This proposition, however, was rejected by Migra v. Warren City School Dist. Bd. of Ed., 465 U.S. 75 [**284] (1984), a case decided shortly after the Court of Appeals announced its decision in the instant case. In Migra, a discharged schoolteacher filed suit under 42 U. S. C. § 1983 in federal court after she prevailed in state court on a contract claim involving the same underlying events. The Federal District Court dismissed the § 1983 action as barred by claim preclusion. The opinion of this Court emphasized that HN7↑ under § 1738, state law determined the preclusive effect of the state judgment. Id., at 81. Because it was unclear from the record whether the District Court's ruling was based on state preclusion law, [****22] we remanded for clarification on this point. Id., at 87. Such a remand obviously would have been unnecessary were a federal court free to give greater preclusive effect to a state court judgment than would the judgment-rendering State. See id., at 88 (WHITE, J., concurring).

[LEdHN\[1D\]](#)↑ [1D] We are unwilling to create a special exception to § 1738 for federal antitrust claims that would give state court judgments greater preclusive effect than would the courts of the State rendering the judgment. Cf. Haring v. Prosise, 462 U.S., at 317-318 (refusing to create special preclusion rule for § 1983 claim subsequent to plaintiff's guilty plea). The plurality opinion for the Court of Appeals relied on Federated [*385] Department Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394 (1981), to observe that the doctrine of claim preclusion protects defendants from repetitive lawsuits based on the same conduct, 726 F.2d, at 1152, and that there is a practical need to require plaintiffs "to litigate their claims in an economical and parsimonious fashion." Id., at 1153. We agree that these [****23] are valid and important concerns, and we note that under § 1738 state issue preclusion law may promote preclusion principles to conclude that a state judgment approving settlement of state antitrust claims barred a subsequent federal antitrust claim. Although our decision today indicates that the Court of Appeals should have looked in the first instance to state law to determine the preclusive effect of the state judgment, the same holding would result if application of state preclusion law suggests that the settlement bars the subsequent federal claim and if there is no exception to § 1738 in these circumstances. Cf. 640 F.2d, at 487, n. 5 (noting that state law gives preclusive effect to consent judgment). We, of course, do not address those issues here.

---

<sup>3</sup> THE CHIEF JUSTICE notes that preclusion rules bar the splitting of a cause of action between a court of limited jurisdiction and one of general jurisdiction, and suggests that state requirements of jurisdictional competency may leave unclear whether a state court action precludes a subsequent federal antitrust claim. Post, at 388-390. The rule that the judgment of a court of limited jurisdiction concludes the entire claim assumes that the plaintiff might have commenced his action in a court in the same system of courts that was competent to give full relief. See Restatement \(Second\) of Judgments § 24, Comment g (1982). Moreover, the jurisdictional competency requirement generally is understood to imply that state court litigation based on a state statute analogous to a federal statute, e. g., a state antitrust law, does not bar subsequent attempts to secure relief in federal court if the state court lacked jurisdiction over the federal statutory claim. Id., § 26\(1\)\(c\), Illustration 2. Although a particular State's preclusion principles conceivably could support a rule similar to that proposed by THE CHIEF JUSTICE, post, at 390-391, where state preclusion rules do not indicate that a claim is barred, we do not believe that federal courts should fashion a federal rule to preclude a claim that could not have been raised in the state proceedings.

I Í ÉÁÈJÉHÍ HÉHÍ I LÁFÍ ÁÙÈÓDÉFHGÍ ÉÁEFHÍ LÀ I ÁSEÓaÉGAÁGÍ I ÉÁEEGÍ I LÁFJÍ I ÁMÈLÉSÓYÓAÁ FÉÁEFGH

the goals of repose and conservation of judicial resources by preventing the relitigation of certain issues in a subsequent federal proceeding. See Kremer, 456 U.S., at 485 (state judgment barred subsequent Title VII action in federal court).

If we had a single system of courts and our only concerns were efficiency and finality, it might be desirable to fashion claim preclusion rules that would require a plaintiff to bring suit initially in the forum of most general jurisdiction, thereby resolving as many issues as possible in one proceeding. See Restatement \(Second\) of Judgments § 24, Comment g (1982); C. Wright, A. Miller, & E. Cooper, supra, § 4407, p. 51; id. § 4412, p. 93. The decision of the Court of Appeals approximates such a rule inasmuch as it encourages plaintiffs to file suit initially in federal district court and to attempt to bring any state law claims pendent to their federal antitrust claims. Whether this result would reduce the overall burden of litigation is debatable, see 726 F.2d, at 1181-1182 (Cudahy, J., dissenting); [****24] C. Wright, A. Miller, & E. Cooper, supra, § 4407, p. 51-52, and we decline to base our interpretation of § 1738 on our opinion on this question.

More importantly, we have parallel systems of state and federal courts, and the concerns of comity reflected in § 1738 generally allow States to determine the preclusive [***285] scope of their own courts' judgments. See Kremer, supra, at 481-482; Allen v. McCurry, 449 U.S., at 96; cf. Currie, Res Judicata: The Neglected Defense, 45 U. Chi. L. Rev. 317, 327 (1978) (state policies may seek to limit preclusive effect of state court judgment). These concerns certainly are not made less compelling because state courts lack jurisdiction [*386] over federal antitrust [**1335] claims. We therefore reject a judicially created exception to § 1738 that effectively holds as a matter of federal law that a plaintiff can bring state law claims initially in state court only at the cost of forgoing subsequent federal antitrust claims. Federated Department Stores, Inc. v. Moitie does not suggest a contrary conclusion. That case did not involve § 1738; rather it held that "accepted [***25] principles of res judicata" determine the preclusive effect of a federal court judgment. See 452 U.S., at 401.

LEdHN1E[↑] [1E] In this case the Court of Appeals should have first referred to Illinois law to determine the preclusive effect of the state judgment. HN8[↑] Only if state law indicates that a particular claim or issue would be barred, is it necessary to determine if an exception to § 1738 should apply. Although for purposes of this case, we need not decide if such an exception exists for federal antitrust claims, we observe that the more general question is whether the concerns underlying a particular grant of exclusive jurisdiction justify a finding of an implied partial repeal of § 1738. Resolution of this question will depend on the particular federal statute as well as the nature of the claim or issue involved in the subsequent federal action. Our previous decisions indicate that the primary consideration must be the intent of Congress. See Kremer, supra, at 470-476 (finding no congressional intent to depart from § 1738 for purposes of Title VII); cf. Brown v. Felsen, 442 U.S. 127, 138 \(1979\) (finding congressional intent that [***26] state judgments would not have claim preclusive effect on dischargeability issue in bankruptcy).

IV

The decisions below did not consider Illinois preclusion law in their discussion of the claim preclusion issue. The District Court relied on federal law to conclude that the state judgments did not bar the claims under the Sherman Act. See 496 F.Supp., at 238-239. Similarly, the plurality opinion of the Court of Appeals did not discuss Illinois principles of [*387] claim preclusion. See 726 F.2d, at 1154. Although an opinion concurring in part also concluded that petitioners' antitrust claim was barred as a matter of federal law, it did suggest that this conclusion was consistent with Illinois law. See id., at 1164 (Flaum, J.). A dissenting opinion vigorously argued that principles of Illinois claim preclusion law did not require dismissal of the federal antitrust claims. See id., at 1176-1177 (Cudahy, J.). Before this Court, the parties have continued to disagree about the content of Illinois preclusion law. We believe that this dispute is best resolved in the first instance by the District Court. [***27] Cf. Migra v. Warren City School Dist. Bd. of Ed., 465 U.S., at 87.

Petitioners also urge us to reverse the decision of the Court of Appeals with respect to the contempt order. [***286] We specifically declined to grant certiorari on questions related to the discovery order or the subsequent contempt order, and we do not address those issues here.

I Í €ÁNÈJÉHÍ HÉHÍ Í LÁFÍ ÁÙÈÖDÄFHGÍ FÄEFHÍ LÀ I ÁSEØAÉGAÁGÍ I FÄEGÍ Í LÁFJÍ Í ÁMÈLÉSØYQÅ FÄEFGÍ

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

JUSTICE BLACKMUN and JUSTICE STEVENS took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Concur by: BURGER

Concur

---

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER, concurring in the judgment.

I agree with the Court's implicit conclusion that the Court of Appeals approached 28 U. S. C. § 1738 too narrowly and technically by holding it irrelevant on the ground that Illinois law does not address the preclusive effect of a state court judgment on a federal antitrust suit, see 726 F.2d 1150, 1154 \(1984\). In the circumstances presented by this case, a fair reading of § 1738 requires federal courts to look first to general principles of state preclusion law. Those principles control if they [***28] clearly establish that the state court judgment does not bar the later federal action: Only [**1336] recently, we reaffirmed [*388] in Migra v. Warren City School District Board of Education, 465 U.S. 75 \(1984\), that a federal court is not free to accord greater preclusive effect to a state court judgment than the state courts themselves would give to it.

The Court now remands with directions for the District Court to consider Illinois claim preclusion law, but no guidance is given as to how the District Court should proceed if it finds state law silent or indeterminate on the claim preclusion question. The Court's refusal to acknowledge this potential problem appears to stem from a belief that the jurisdictional competency requirement of res judicata doctrine will dispose of most cases like this. See ante, at 382.

I cannot agree with the Court's interpretation of the jurisdictional competency requirement. If state law provides a cause of action that is virtually identical with a federal statutory cause of action, a plaintiff suing in state court is able to rely on the same theory of the case and obtain the same remedy as would be available in [***29] federal court, even when the plaintiff cannot expressly invoke the federal statute because it is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts. In this situation, the jurisdictional competency requirement is effectively satisfied. Therefore, the fact that state law recognizes the jurisdictional competency requirement does not necessarily imply that a state court judgment has no claim preclusive effect on a cause of action within exclusive federal jurisdiction.

The states that recognize the jurisdictional competency requirement do not all define it in the same terms. Illinois courts have expressed the doctrine in the following manner: "The principle [of res judicata] extends not only to questions which were actually litigated but also to all questions which could have been raised or determined." [Spiller v. Continental Tube Co., 95 Ill. 2d 423, 432, \[\*\*287\] 447 N. E. 2d 834, 838 \(1983\)](#) (emphasis added); see also, e. g., LaSalle National Bank v. County Board of School Trustees, 61 Ill. 2d 524, 529, 337 N. E. 2d 19, 22 \(1975\); People v. Kidd, 398 Ill. 405, 408, 75 N. E. 2d 851, 853-854 \(1947\). [***30] In the present case, each [*389] petitioner could have alleged a cause of action under the Illinois Antitrust Act, Ill. Rev. Stat., ch. 38, para. 60-1 et seq. (1981), in his prior state court lawsuit against respondent. The principles of Illinois res judicata doctrine appear to be indeterminate as to whether petitioners' ability to raise state antitrust claims in their prior state court suits should preclude their assertion of essentially the same claims in the present federal action. This indeterminacy arises from the fact that the Illinois courts have not addressed whether the notion of "questions which could have been raised" should be applied narrowly <sup>1</sup> [***31] or broadly. <sup>2</sup> No Illinois court has considered how the

---

<sup>1</sup> E. g., by inquiring whether the plaintiff could have raised the question whether the defendant violated a particular statute.

<sup>2</sup> E. g., by inquiring whether the plaintiff could have raised the question whether the defendant engaged in a group boycott.

I Í €ÁNÈJÄH HÄH Í JLÄFÍ ÁÙÈÖDÄFHG ËÄFH H LÀ I ÅSEÖAËGAÄG I ÈÄEG Í LÄJÌ Í ÁÙÈSÖYQÄ FÄÄFH jurisdictional competency requirement should apply in the type of situation presented by this case, where the same theory of recovery may be asserted under different statutes. Nor has any Illinois court considered whether res judicata precludes splitting a cause of action between a court of limited jurisdiction and one of general jurisdiction.<sup>3</sup>

[***32] [*390] Hence it is likely that the principles of Illinois claim preclusion law do not speak to [**1337] the preclusive effect that petitioners' state court judgments should have on the present action. In this situation, it may be consistent with § 1738 for a federal court to formulate a federal rule to resolve the matter. If state law is simply indeterminate, the concerns of comity and federalism underlying § 1738 do not come into play. At the same time, the federal courts have direct interests in ensuring that their resources are used efficiently and not as a means of harassing defendants with repetitive lawsuits, as well as in ensuring that parties asserting federal rights have an adequate [***288] opportunity to litigate those rights. Given the insubstantiality of the state interests and the weight of the federal interests, a strong argument could be made that a federal rule would be more appropriate than a creative interpretation of ambiguous state law.<sup>4</sup> When state law is indeterminate or ambiguous, a clear federal rule would promote substantive interests as well: "Uncertainty intrinsically works to defeat the opportunities for repose and reliance sought by the rules [***33] of preclusion, and confounds the desire for efficiency by inviting repetitious litigation to test the preclusive effects of the first effort." 18 C. Wright, A. Miller, & E. Cooper, supra n. 3, § 4407, at 49.

A federal rule might be fashioned from the test, which this Court has applied in other contexts, that a party is precluded [*391] from asserting a claim that he had a "full and fair opportunity" to litigate in a prior action. See, e.g., Kremer v. Chemical Construction Corp., 456 U.S. 461, 485 (1982); Allen v. McCurry, 449 U.S. 90, 95 (1980); Montana v. United States, 440 U.S. 147, 153 (1979); Blonder-Tongue Laboratories, Inc. v. University of Illinois Foundation, 402 U.S. 313, 328 (1971). [***34] Thus, if a state statute is identical in all material respects with a federal statute within exclusive federal jurisdiction, a party's ability to assert a claim under the state statute in a prior state court action might be said to have provided, in effect, a "full and fair opportunity" to litigate his rights under the federal statute. Cf. Derish v. San Mateo-Burlingame Board of Realtors, 724 F.2d 1347 (CA9 1983); Nash County Board of Education v. Biltmore Co., 640 F.2d 484 (CA4), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 878 (1981).

The Court will eventually have to face these questions; I would resolve them now.

References

---

47 Am Jur 2d, Judgments 1217, 1289

---

<sup>3</sup> Compare Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 24, Comment g, Illustration 14, pp. 204-205 (1982):

"In an automobile collision, A is injured and his car damaged as a result of the negligence of B. Instead of suing in a court of general jurisdiction of the state, A brings his action for the damage to his car in a justice's court, which has jurisdiction in actions for damage to property but has no jurisdiction in actions for injury to the person. Judgment is rendered for A for the damage to the car. A cannot thereafter maintain an action against B to recover for the injury to his person arising out of the same collision."

See also 18 C. Wright, A. Miller, & E. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure § 4412, p. 95 (1981), stating that the "general rule" in state courts is that "[a] second action will not be permitted on parts of a single claim that could have been asserted in a court of broader jurisdiction simply because the plaintiff went first to a court of limited jurisdiction in the same state that could not hear them." The holding in Lucas v. Le Compte, 42 Ill. 303 (1866), is similar to this "general rule," but that holding was based on a construction of an Illinois statute, Ill. Rev. Stat., ch. 59, § 35 (1845), which (a) has been repealed, see Act of Apr. 15, 1965, 1965 Ill. Laws 331, and (b) had a broader preclusive effect than general Illinois res judicata doctrine has. Clancey v. McBride, 338 Ill. 35, 169 N.E. 729 (1929), involved the same circumstances as the above-quoted illustration from the Restatement. The court resolved the case, however, without reference to the limited jurisdiction of the justice's court, by concluding that injury to the person and injury to property are distinct legal wrongs that can be the subject of separate lawsuits.

<sup>4</sup> By contrast, when a federal court construes substantive rights and obligations under state law in the context of a diversity action, the federal interest is insignificant and the state's interest is much more direct than it is in the present situation, even if the relevant state law is ambiguous.

I Í €ÁNÈJÉHÍ HÄHUFHÁÍ ÁUÈÖDÄFHGÍ FÄEFHÍ LÀ I ÅSEØAËGAÄGÍ I FÄEEGÍ LÄJÍ I ÁNÈJESÖYQÄ FÄEHHÍ

21 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Judgments and Orders 51:221

28 USCS 1292(b), 1738

US L Ed Digest, Appeal 31; Judgment 386, 392.

L Ed Index to Annos, Full Faith and Credit; Judgment

ALR Quick Index, Full Faith and Credit; Judgments

Federal Quick Index, Full Faith and Credit; Judgments and Decrees

Annotation References:

Supreme Court's views as to res judicata or collateral estoppel effect of state court judgment [****35] on federal courts. 72 L Ed 2d 911.

State or federal law as governing applicability of doctrine of res judicata or collateral estoppel in federal court action. 19 ALR Fed 709.

---

End of Document

Hallie v. Eau Claire

Supreme Court of the United States

November 26, 1984, Argued ; March 27, 1985, Decided

No. 82-1832

Reporter

471 U.S. 34 *; 105 S. Ct. 1713 **; 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 ***; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 191 ****; 53 U.S.L.W. 4418; 1985-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,484; 23 ERC (BNA) 1544; 15 ELR 20373

TOWN OF HALLIE ET AL. v. CITY OF EAU CLAIRE

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 700 F.2d 376, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

municipality, sewage, state policy, state action, supervision, exemption, anticompetitive, articulated, anticompetitive conduct, anti trust law, regulation, private party, displace, effects, home rule, authorization, Sherman Act, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Public Improvements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

**HN1** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Relying on principles of federalism and state sovereignty, the United States Supreme Court has refused to construe the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., as applying to the anticompetitive conduct of a State acting through its legislature. Rather, the Court has ruled that the Sherman Act was intended to prohibit private restraints on trade, and it refused to infer an intent to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents in activities directed by the legislature. Municipalities, on the other hand, are not beyond the reach of the antitrust laws by virtue of their status because they are not themselves sovereign. Rather, to obtain exemption, municipalities must demonstrate that their anticompetitive activities were authorized by the State pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service.

I Í FÁMEÙÉHÍ ÉÉHÍ LÁFÍ ÁUÉÓdÉFÍ FHÁÉEFÍ FHLÁ I ÁSÉOaÉGÁG FÁEEG LÁFJÍ I ÁMÈÉSÓYÓJFÉHÍ

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Before a municipality will be entitled to the protection of the state action exemption from the antitrust laws, it must demonstrate that it is engaging in the challenged activity pursuant to a clearly expressed state policy.

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

Governments > Public Improvements > Sanitation & Water

HN3[] Local Governments, Duties & Powers

Wis. Stat. § 62.18(1) (1981-1982) grants authority to cities to construct, add to, alter, and repair sewage systems. The authority includes the power to describe with reasonable particularity the district to be served. This grant of authority is supplemented by Wis. Stat. § 66.069(2)(c) (1981-1982) providing that a city operating a public utility may by ordinance fix the limits of such service in unincorporated areas. Such ordinance shall delineate the area within which service will be provided and the municipal utility shall have no obligation to serve beyond the area so delineated.

Governments > Local Governments > Boundaries

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

Governments > Public Improvements > Sanitation & Water

HN4[] Local Governments, Boundaries

Wis. Stat. § 144.07(1) (1981-1982) provides that the State's Department of Natural Resources may require a city's sewage system to be constructed so that other cities, towns, or areas may connect to the system, and the Department may order that such connections be made. Wis. Stat. § 144.07(1m) provides, however, that an order by the Department of Natural Resources for the connection of unincorporated territory to a city system shall be void if that territory refuses to become annexed to the city.

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

HN5[] Local Governments, Duties & Powers

A municipality is an arm of the State. It is presumed, absent a showing to the contrary, that the municipality acts in the public interest. A private party, on the other hand, may be presumed to be acting primarily on his or its own behalf.

I Í FÁMEÙÉHÍ ÉÉHÍ LÁFÍ ÁUÉÓDÉFÍ FHÁÉEFÍ FHÀÍ ÁSEÓaÉGÁG ÉAEEG LÁFÌ Í ÁMEÙÉSÓYÓJÁFÉÉHÍ

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The application of the state action exemption to a municipality has required that compulsion be shown. This is so because where the actor is a municipality, acting pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy, compulsion is simply unnecessary as an evidentiary matter to prove that the challenged practice constitutes state action. In short, although compulsion affirmatively expressed may be the best evidence of state policy, it is by no means a prerequisite to a finding that a municipality acted pursuant to clearly articulated state policy. Where state or municipal regulation by a private party is involved, however, active state supervision must be shown, even where a clearly articulated state policy exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

Governments > Local Governments > Finance

HN7 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Where a private party is engaging in the anticompetitive activity, there is a real danger that he is acting to further his own interests, rather than the governmental interests of the State. Where the actor is a municipality, there is little or no danger that it is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement. The only real danger is that it will seek to further purely parochial public interests at the expense of more overriding state goals. This danger is minimal, however, because of the requirement that the municipality act pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy. Once it is clear that state authorization exists, there is no need to require the State to supervise actively the municipality's execution of what is a properly delegated function.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN8 Scope, Exemptions

Active state supervision is not a prerequisite to exemption from the antitrust laws where the actor is a municipality rather than a private party.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Municipality's anticompetitive activities, authorized but not compelled or actively supervised by state, held to be within the "state action" exemption from the federal antitrust laws.

Summary

I Í FÁMEÙÉHÍ ÉÉHÍ LÁFÍ ÁUÉDÉFÍ FHÁEEFÍ FHÀÍ ÁSEÓaÉGÁG ÉAEEG LÁFJÍ Í ÁMEÙÉSÓYÓJAFÉEHH

A group of unincorporated Wisconsin townships filed suit against an adjacent city in the United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin, alleging that the city had violated the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) by acquiring a monopoly over sewage treatment in the area and providing that service only to areas which were willing to be annexed by the city and to use its sewage collection services rather than those of the towns. The District Court ruled in favor of the city, pointing to a Wisconsin law which authorized cities providing sewage services to limit the unincorporated areas covered by their service unless ordered by the state to service certain areas, and holding that the city's conduct fell within the "state action" exemption from the federal antitrust laws. The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed (700 F2d 376).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Powell, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that anticompetitive conduct by a municipality is protected by the state action exemption to the federal antitrust laws where it is authorized by state law, even though the state does not compel or actively supervise the anticompetitive conduct or expressly assert that the law is intended to have an anticompetitive effect.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > "state action" exemption -- municipalities -- sewage service -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

A city's actions in acquiring a monopoly over sewage treatment services in two counties, and making those services available only to areas which agree to be annexed by the city and to use its sewage collection services rather than those of adjacent towns, are exempt from challenge under the federal antitrust laws as "state action," where such actions are authorized, though not compelled, by the state pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy to replace competition in the provision of sewage services with regulation.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > "state action" exemption -- municipalities -- action pursuant to state policy -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

Municipalities are not beyond the reach of the federal antitrust laws by virtue of their status because they are not themselves sovereign; rather, in order to obtain the protection of the "state action" exemption, municipalities must demonstrate that their anticompetitive activities were authorized by the state pursuant to a clearly expressed state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > "state action" exemption -- municipalities -- express statement of policy -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

A state legislature need not expressly state in a statute or its legislative history that it intends actions delegated to municipalities therein to have anticompetitive effects, in order for that statute to constitute a "clear articulation" of an anticompetitive policy and thus bring municipal actions based on that statute within the "state action" exemption from the federal antitrust laws.

I Í FÁMEÙÉHÍ ÉÉHÍ LÁFÍ ÁUÉÓdÉFÍ FHÁÉEFÍ FHÀÍ ÁSEÓaÉGáÁG FÁEEG LÁFJÌ Í ÁMEÙÉSÓYÓJFÉHÍ

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > "state action" exemption -- municipalities -- state compulsion -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

It is not necessary to show that a municipality's anticompetitive conduct was compelled by the state in order to find that the municipality acted pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy, and thus bring such conduct within the "state action" exemption from the federal antitrust laws.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > "state action" exemption -- municipalities -- state supervision -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

A municipality need not show that its anticompetitive conduct was actively supervised by the state in order to bring that conduct within the "state action" exemption from the federal antitrust laws.

Syllabus

---

Petitioners, unincorporated townships located in Wisconsin adjacent to respondent city, filed suit against respondent in Federal District Court, alleging that petitioners were potential competitors of respondent in the collection and transportation of sewage, and that respondent had violated the Sherman Act by acquiring a monopoly over the provision of sewage treatment services in the area and by tying the provision of such services to the provision of sewage collection and transportation services. Respondent refused to supply sewage treatment services to petitioners, but supplied the services to individual landowners in petitioners' areas if a majority of the individuals in the area voted by referendum election to have their homes annexed by respondent and to use its sewage collection and transportation services. The District Court dismissed the complaint, finding, inter alia, that Wisconsin statutes regulating the municipal provision of sewage services expressed a clear state policy to replace competition with regulation. The court concluded that respondent's [***2] allegedly anticompetitive conduct fell within the "state action" exemption to the federal antitrust laws established by Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341. The Court of Appeals affirmed.

Held: Respondent's anticompetitive activities are protected by the state action exemption to the federal antitrust laws. Pp. 38-47.

(a) Before a municipality may claim the protection of the state action exemption, it must demonstrate that it is engaging in the challenged activity pursuant to a "clearly articulated" state policy. Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389. Pp. 38-40.

(b) Wisconsin statutes grant authority to cities to construct and maintain sewage systems, to describe the district to be served, and to refuse to serve unannexed areas. The statutes are not merely neutral on state policy but, instead, clearly contemplate that a city may engage in anticompetitive conduct. To pass the "clear articulation" test, the legislature need not expressly state in a statute or the legislative history that it intends for the delegated action to have anticompetitive effects. The Wisconsin statutes evidence a clearly articulated state [***3] policy to displace competition with regulation in the area of municipal provision of sewage services. Pp. 40-44.

(c) The "clear articulation" requirement of the state action test does not require that respondent show that the State "compelled" it to act. Although compulsion affirmatively expressed may be the best evidence of state policy, it is by no means a prerequisite to a finding that a municipality acted pursuant to clearly articulated state policy. Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, and Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, distinguished. Pp. 45-46.

(d) Active state supervision of anticompetitive conduct is not a prerequisite to exemption from the antitrust laws where the actor is a municipality rather than a private party. The requirement of active state supervision serves essentially the evidentiary function of ensuring that the actor is engaging in the challenged conduct pursuant to state policy. Where the actor is a municipality rather than a private party, there is little or no danger that it is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement. The danger that a municipality will seek to further [****4] purely parochial public interests at the expense of more overriding state goals is minimal, because of the requirement that the municipality act pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy. Pp. 46-47.

Counsel: John J. Covelli argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs was Michael P. May.

Frederick W. Fischer argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent.*

[****5]

Judges: POWELL, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court.

Opinion by: POWELL

Opinion

---

[*36] [*27] [**1715] JUSTICE POWELL delivered the opinion of the Court.

[LEdHN\[1A\]!\[\]\(7f4569f4d9dcdb5c8fdad0daca5f84d7_img.jpg\)](#) [1A] This case presents the question whether a municipality's anticompetitive activities are protected [***28] by the state action exemption to the federal antitrust laws established by Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 \(1943\), when the activities are authorized, but not compelled, by the State, and the State does not actively supervise the anticompetitive conduct.

I

---

* Ronald A. Zumbrun and Robert K. Best filed a brief for the Pacific Legal Foundation as amicus curiae urging reversal.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the United States by Solicitor General Lee, Assistant Attorney General McGrath, Deputy Solicitor General Wallace, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Rule, Carter G. Phillips, Catherine G. O'Sullivan, and Nancy C. Garrison; for the State of Illinois et al. by Neil F. Hartigan, Attorney General of Illinois, Robert E. Davy, Thomas J. DeMay, Linley E. Pearson, Attorney General of Indiana, Frank A. Baldwin, Deputy Attorney General, Bronson C. LaFollette, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Michael L. Zaleski, Assistant Attorney General; for the Commonwealth of Virginia et al. by Gerald L. Baliles, Attorney General of Virginia, Elizabeth B. Lacy, Deputy Attorney General, Craig Thomas Merritt, Assistant Attorney General, Joseph I. Lieberman, Attorney General of Connecticut, Robert M. Langer, Assistant Attorney General, Hubert H. Humphrey III, Attorney General of Minnesota, Stephen P. Kilgriff, Assistant Attorney General, LeRoy S. Zimmerman, Attorney General of Pennsylvania, Eugene F. Waye, Deputy Attorney General, Brian McKay, Attorney General of Nevada, David L. Wilkerson, Attorney General of Utah, and Suzanne M. Dallimore, Assistant Attorney General; for the U.S. Conference of Mayors et al. by Stephen Chapple, Frederic Lee Ruck, and Ross D. Davis; for the American Public Power Association et al. by Carlos C. Smith, Frederick L. Hitchcock, Edward D. Meyer, Stanley P. Hebert, John W. Pestle, John D. Maddox, June W. Wiener, Clifford D. Pierce, Jr., Donald W. Jones, Eugene N. Collins, and Randall L. Nelson; and for the National Institute of Municipal Law Officers by Roger F. Cutler, Roy D. Bates, George Agnost, Benjamin L. Brown, J. Lamar Shelley, John W. Witt, Robert J. Alfton, James K. Baker, Clifford D. Pierce, Jr., William H. Taube, William I. Thornton, Jr., Henry W. Underhill, Jr., and Charles S. Rhyne.

David Epstein filed a brief for the American Ambulance Association et al. as amici curiae.

I Í FÁMEÙÉHÍ ÉÉHÍ LÁFÍ ÁUÉÖDÉFÍ FHÁEEFÍ FÍ LÁ I ÁSEØAÉGÁG ÉÁEEG LÁFJÍ I ÁMEÙÉSÓYØJFÉHÍ

Petitioners -- Town of Hallie, Town of Seymour, Town of Union, and Town of Washington (the Towns) -- are four Wisconsin unincorporated townships located adjacent to respondent, the City of Eau Claire (the City). Town of Hallie is located in Chippewa County, and the other three towns are located in Eau Claire County.<sup>1</sup> The Towns filed suit against the City in United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin seeking injunctive relief and alleging that the City violated the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1 et seq., by acquiring a monopoly over the provision of sewage treatment services in Eau Claire and Chippewa Counties, and by tying [<sup>*37</sup>] [<sup>****6</sup>] the provision of such services to the provision of sewage collection and transportation services.<sup>2</sup> Under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, 33 U. S. C. § 1251 et seq., the City had obtained federal funds to help build a sewage treatment facility within the Eau Claire Service Area, that included the Towns; the facility is the only one in the market available to the Towns. The City has refused to supply sewage treatment services to the Towns. It does supply the services to individual landowners in areas of the Towns if a majority of the individuals in the area vote by referendum election to have their homes annexed by the City, see Wis. Stat. §§ 66.024(4), 144.07(1) (1982), and to use the City's sewage collection and transportation services.

[<sup>****7</sup>] Alleging that they are potential competitors of the City in the collection and transportation of sewage, the Towns contended in the District Court that the City used its monopoly over sewage treatment to gain an unlawful monopoly over the provision of sewage collection and transportation services, in violation of the Sherman Act. They also contended that the City's actions constituted an illegal tying arrangement and an unlawful refusal to deal with the Towns.

[<sup>**1716</sup>] The District Court ruled for the City. It found that Wisconsin's statutes regulating the municipal provision of sewage service expressed a clear state policy to replace competition with regulation. The court also found that the State adequately supervised the municipality's conduct through the State's Department of Natural Resources, that was authorized to review municipal decisions concerning provision of sewage services and corresponding annexations of land. The court concluded that the City's allegedly anticompetitive conduct fell within the state action exemption to the federal antitrust laws, as set forth in Community Communications [<sup>*38</sup>] Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40 [<sup>***291</sup> (1982)], [<sup>****8</sup>] and Parker v. Brown, supra. Accordingly, it dismissed the complaint.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed. 700 F.2d 376 \(1983\). It ruled that the Wisconsin statutes authorized the City to provide sewage services and to refuse to provide such services to unincorporated areas. The court therefore assumed that the State had contemplated that anticompetitive effects might result, and concluded that the City's conduct was thus taken pursuant to state authorization within the meaning of Parker v. Brown, supra. The court also concluded that in a case such as this involving "a local government performing a traditional municipal function," 700 F.2d, at 384, active state supervision was unnecessary for Parker immunity to apply. Requiring such supervision as a prerequisite to immunity would also be unwise in this situation, the court believed, because it would erode traditional concepts of local autonomy and home rule that were clearly expressed in the State's statutes.

We granted certiorari, 467 U.S. 1240 (1984), and now affirm.

II

The starting point in any [<sup>****9</sup>] analysis involving the state action doctrine is the reasoning of Parker v. Brown. In Parker, HN1 relying on principles of federalism and state sovereignty, the Court refused to construe the Sherman Act as applying to the anticompetitive conduct of a State acting through its legislature. 317 U.S., at 350-351. Rather, it ruled that the Sherman Act was intended to prohibit private restraints on trade, and it refused to infer an intent to "nullify a state's control over its officers and agents" in activities directed by the legislature. Id., at 351.

---

<sup>1</sup> The City is located in both Eau Claire and Chippewa Counties.

<sup>2</sup> The complaint also alleged violations of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, 33 U. S. C. § 1251 et seq., and of a common-law duty of a utility to serve. The District Court dismissed these claims, and they are not at issue in this Court.

I Ì FÁMEÙÉHÌ ÉÉHÌ LÁFÍ ÁUÉÓDÉFÌ FHÁEEFÌ FÌ LÀ I ÁSEÓaÉGÀÁG FÁREGJLÁFÌ I ÁMEÙÉSÓYÓJFÉEJ

LEdHN[2A][↑] [2A]Municipalities, on the other hand, are not beyond the reach of the antitrust laws by virtue of their status because they are not themselves sovereign. Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 412 (1978) (opinion of BRENNAN, J.). Rather, to obtain exemption, municipalities [*39] must demonstrate that their anticompetitive activities were authorized by the State "pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service." Id., at 413.

The determination that a municipality's activities constitute [***10] state action is not a purely formalistic inquiry; the State may not validate a municipality's anticompetitive conduct simply by declaring it to be lawful. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S., at 351. On the other hand, in proving that a state policy to displace competition exists, the municipality need not "be able to point to a specific, detailed legislative authorization" in order to assert a successful Parker defense to an antitrust suit. 435 U.S., at 415. Rather, Lafayette suggested, without deciding the issue, that it would be sufficient to obtain Parker immunity for a municipality to show that it acted pursuant to a "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed . . . state policy" that was "actively supervised" by the State. 435 U.S., at 410. The [***30] plurality viewed this approach as desirable because it "[preserved] to the States their freedom . . . to administer state regulatory policies free of the inhibitions of the federal antitrust laws" [**1717] without at the same time permitting purely parochial interests to disrupt the Nation's free-market goals." Id., at 415-416.

In California [***11] Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97 (1980), a unanimous Court applied the Lafayette two-pronged test to a case in which the state action exemption was claimed by a private party.<sup>3</sup> In [*40] that case, we found no antitrust immunity for California's wine-pricing system. Even though there was a clear legislative policy to permit resale liquor price maintenance, there was no state supervision of the anticompetitive activity. Thus, the private wine producers who set resale prices were not entitled to the state action exemption. When we again addressed the issue of a municipality's exemption from the antitrust laws in Boulder, supra, we declined to accept Lafayette's suggestion that a municipality must show more than that a state policy to displace competition exists. We held that Colorado's Home Rule Amendment to its Constitution, conferring on municipal governments general authority to govern local affairs, did not constitute a "clear articulation" of a state policy to authorize anticompetitive conduct with respect to the regulation of cable television in the locale. Because the city could not meet [***12] this requirement of the state action test, we declined to decide whether governmental action by a municipality must also be actively supervised by the State. 455 U.S., at 51-52, n. 14.

LEdHN[2B][↑] [2B]It is therefore clear from our cases that HN2[↑] before a municipality will be entitled to the protection of the state action exemption from the antitrust laws, it must demonstrate that it is [***13] engaging in the challenged activity pursuant to a clearly expressed state policy. We have never fully considered, however, how clearly a state policy must be articulated for a municipality to be able to establish that its anticompetitive activity constitutes state action. Moreover, we have expressly left open the question whether action by a municipality -- like action by a private party -- must satisfy the "active state supervision" requirement. Boulder, supra, at 51-52, n. 14. We consider both of those issues below.

III

The City cites several provisions of the Wisconsin code to support its claim that its allegedly anticompetitive activity [*41] constitutes state action. We therefore examine the statutory structure in some detail.

[***31] A

Wisconsin Stat. § 62.18(1) (1981-1982) HN3[↑] grants authority to cities to construct, add to, alter, and repair sewage systems. The authority includes the power to "describe with reasonable particularity the district to be <sup>3</sup> Midcal was originally brought as a mandamus action seeking an injunction against a state agency, the California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control. The State played no role, however, in setting prices or reviewing their reasonableness, activities carried out by the private wine dealers. 445 U.S., at 100-101. The mere fact that the state agency was a named defendant was not sufficient to alter the state action analysis from that appropriate to a case involving the state regulation of private anticompetitive acts. See Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, post, at 56-57.

I Í FÁMEJÍ ÁÍ FLÁFÍ ÁUÓDÁÍ FHEÁFÍ FÍ LÁÍ ÁSEÓaÉGÁ ÁÍFLÁFÍ JÍ ÁNÚESÓYÓUÁJFÉH

[served]." Ibid. This grant of authority is supplemented by Wis. Stat. § 66.069(2)(c) (1981-1982), providing that a city operating a public utility

"may by ordinance fix the limits of such service [****14] in unincorporated areas. Such ordinance shall delineate the area within which service will be provided and the municipal utility shall have no obligation to serve beyond the area so delineated."

With respect to joint sewage systems, Wis. Stat. § 144.07(1) (1981-1982) HN4↑ provides that the State's Department of Natural Resources may require a city's sewage system to be constructed so that other cities, towns, or areas may connect to the system, and the Department may order that such \*\*1718 connections be made. Subsection (1m) provides, however, that an order by the Department of Natural Resources for the connection of unincorporated territory to a city system shall be void if that territory refuses to become annexed to the city.<sup>4</sup>

B

The Towns contend that these statutory provisions do not evidence a state policy to displace competition in the provision of sewage services because they make no express mention [\[\*42\]](#) of anticompetitive [\[\*\*\*\*15\]](#) conduct.<sup>5</sup> As discussed above, the statutes clearly contemplate that a city may engage in anticompetitive conduct. Such conduct is a foreseeable result of empowering the City to refuse to serve unannexed areas. It is not necessary, as the Towns contend, for the state legislature to have stated explicitly that it expected the City to engage in conduct that would have anticompetitive effects. Applying the analysis of *Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389 \(1978\)*, it is sufficient that the statutes authorized the City to provide sewage services and also to determine the areas to be served. We think it is clear that anticompetitive effects logically would result from this broad authority to regulate. See [*New Motor Vehicle Board v. Orrin W. Fox Co., 439 U.S. 96, 109 \[\*\*321 \(1978\)\]*](#) (no express intent to displace the antitrust laws, but statute provided regulatory structure that inherently "[displaced] unfettered business freedom"). Accord, 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, *Antitrust Law* para. 212.3, p. 54 (Supp. 1982).

[\[\*\*\*\*16\]](#) [\[\*43\]](#) Nor do we agree with the Towns' contention that the statutes at issue here are neutral on state policy. The Towns attempt to liken the Wisconsin statutes to the Home Rule Amendment involved in Boulder, arguing that the Wisconsin statutes are neutral because they leave the City free to pursue either anticompetitive conduct or free-market competition in the field of sewage services. The analogy to the Home Rule Amendment involved in Boulder is inapposite. That Amendment to the Colorado Constitution allocated only the most general authority to municipalities to govern local affairs. We held that it was neutral and did not satisfy the "clear articulation" component of the state action test. The Amendment simply did not address the regulation of cable television. Under Home Rule the municipality was to be free to decide every aspect of policy relating to cable television, as well as policy relating to any other field of regulation of local concern. Here, in contrast, the State has specifically authorized Wisconsin cities to provide sewage services and has delegated to the cities the express

---

<sup>4</sup> There is no such order of the Department of Natural Resources at issue in this case.

<sup>5</sup> The Towns also rely on Wis. Stat. Ann. §§ 66.076(1) and 66.30 (1965 and Supp. 1984) to argue that the State's policy on the provision of sewage services is actually procompetitive. This claim must fail because, aside from the fact that it was not raised below, the provisions relied upon do not support the contention. First, it is true that § 66.076(1) permits certain municipalities, including towns, to operate sewage systems. The provision is simply a general enabling statute, however, not a mandatory prescription. In addition, subsection (8) of § 66.076 incorporates into the enabling statute all of the limitations of § 66.069, including the power to limit the area of service. Thus, § 66.076(1) does not express a procompetitive state attitude.

Nor does § 66.30 aid the Towns. It is a general provision concerning all utilities -- not just sewage systems -- that permits municipalities to enter into cooperative agreements. The statute is not mandatory, but merely permissive. Moreover, even assuming two municipalities agreed pursuant to this section to cooperate in providing sewage services, the result would not necessarily be greater competition. Rather, the two combined might well be more effective than either alone in keeping other municipalities out of the market.

I Í FÁMEJÍ Í Ú HÁFÍ ÁUÉÓDÁFÍ FHÁFÍ FÍ LÁ I ÁSEÓaÉGÁ ÁÉHGLÁFJÍ Í ÁNÚESÓYÓUÁFJFÁFÍ authority to take action that foreseeably will result in anticompetitive [****17] effects. No reasonable argument can be made that these statutes are neutral in the same way that Colorado's Home Rule Amendment was.<sup>6</sup>

[**1719] [LEdHN\[3\]](#)↑ [3]The Towns' argument amounts to a contention that to pass the "clear articulation" test, a legislature must expressly state in a statute or its legislative history that the legislature intends for the delegated action to have anticompetitive effects. This contention embodies an unrealistic view of how legislatures work and of how statutes are written. No legislature can be expected to catalog all of the anticipated effects of a statute of this kind.

[*44] Furthermore, requiring such explicit authorization by the State might have deleterious and unnecessary consequences. Justice Stewart's dissent in Lafayette was concerned that the plurality's opinion would [****18] impose this kind of requirement on legislatures, with detrimental side effects upon municipalities' local autonomy and authority to govern themselves. 435 U.S., at 434-435. In fact, this Court has never required the degree of specificity that the Towns insist is necessary.<sup>7</sup>

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#)↑ [1B]In sum, we conclude that the Wisconsin statutes evidence a "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed" state policy to displace competition with regulation in the area of municipal provision of [***33] sewage services. These statutory [****19] provisions plainly show that "the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of." Lafayette, supra, at 415 (quoting the decision of the Court of Appeals, 532 F.2d 431, 434 \(CA5 1976\)).<sup>8</sup> This is sufficient to satisfy the "clear articulation" requirement of the state action test.

[****20] [*45] C

The Towns further argue that the "clear articulation" requirement of the state action test requires at least that the City show that the State "compelled" it to act. In so doing, they rely on language in Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579 \(1976\), and Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773 \(1975\). We disagree with this contention for several reasons. Cantor and Goldfarb concerned private parties -- not municipalities -- claiming the state action exemption. This fact distinguishes those cases because HN5↑ a municipality is an arm of the State. We may <sup>6</sup> Nor does it help the Towns' claim that the statutes leave to the City the discretion whether to provide sewage services. States must always be free to delegate such authority to their political subdivisions.

<sup>7</sup> Requiring such a close examination of a state legislature's intent to determine whether the federal antitrust laws apply would be undesirable also because it would embroil the federal courts in the unnecessary interpretation of state statutes. Besides burdening the courts, it would undercut the fundamental policy of Parker and the state action doctrine of immunizing state action from federal antitrust scrutiny. See 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 212.3(b) (Supp. 1982).

<sup>8</sup> Our view of the legislature's intent is supported by Town of Hallie v. City of Chippewa Falls, 105 Wis. 2d 533, 314 N. W. 2d 321 \(1982\), in which the Supreme Court of Wisconsin rejected the Town of Hallie's challenge under state antitrust laws against the City of Chippewa Falls in a case quite similar to the one at bar. There, the Town of Hallie argued that the City's refusal to provide it with sewage treatment services, the requirement of annexation, and the City's conditioning of the provision of treatment services on the acceptance also of sewage collection and other city services, violated the state antitrust laws. The State Supreme Court disagreed, concluding that the legislature intended the City to undertake the challenged actions. Those actions therefore were exempt from the State's antitrust laws. Analyzing §§ 66.069(2)(c) and 144.07(1m), the court concluded that the legislature had "viewed annexation by the city of a surrounding unincorporated area as a reasonable quid pro quo that a city could require before extending sewer services to the area." Id., at 540-541, 314 N. W. 2d, at 325.

Although the Wisconsin Supreme Court's opinion does not, of course, decide the question presented here of the City's immunity under the federal antitrust laws, it is instructive on the question of the state legislature's intent in enacting the statutes relating to the municipal provision of sewage services.

I Í FÁMEJÁH ÚBÍ LAFÉ ÁUÉÓDÁFÍ FHÉAÉFÍ FJLÀÍ ÁSEÓAÉGÁ ÁÉHÁFJÍ Í ÁMÉEÉSÓYÓUÁFJFÉ presume, absent a showing to the contrary, that the municipality acts in the public interest.<sup>9</sup> A private party, on the [**1720] other hand, may be presumed to be acting primarily on his or its own behalf.

[***21] LEdHN[4]↑ [4]None of our cases involving HN6↑ the application of the state action exemption to a municipality has required that compulsion be shown. Both Boulder, 455 U.S., at 56-57, and Lafayette, 435 U.S., at 416-417, spoke in terms of the State's direction or authorization of the anticompetitive practice at issue. This is so because where the actor is a municipality, acting pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy, compulsion is simply unnecessary as an evidentiary matter to prove that the challenged practice constitutes state action. In short, although compulsion affirmatively [*46] expressed may be the best evidence of state policy, it is by no means a prerequisite to a finding that a municipality [***34] acted pursuant to clearly articulated state policy.

IV

LEdHN[5]↑ [5]Finally, the Towns argue that as there was no active state supervision, the City may not depend on the state action exemption. The Towns rely primarily on language in Lafayette. It is fair to say that our cases have not been entirely clear. The plurality opinion in Lafayette did suggest, without elaboration and without deciding the issue, that a city claiming the exemption [***22] must show that its anticompetitive conduct was actively supervised by the State. 435 U.S., at 410. In California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97 (1980), a unanimous Court held that supervision is required where the anticompetitive conduct is by private parties. In Boulder, however, the most recent relevant case, we expressly left this issue open as to municipalities. 455 U.S., at 51-52, n. 14. We now conclude that the active state supervision requirement should not be imposed in cases in which the actor is a municipality.<sup>10</sup> [***23] As with respect to the compulsion argument discussed above, the requirement of active state supervision serves essentially an evidentiary function: it is one way of ensuring that the actor is engaging in the challenged conduct pursuant to state policy. In Midcal, we stated that the active state supervision requirement was necessary to prevent a State from circumventing the Sherman Act's proscriptions "by casting . . . a gauzy cloak of state involvement over what is [*47] essentially a private price-fixing arrangement." 445 U.S., at 106. HN7↑ Where a private party is engaging in the anticompetitive activity, there is a real danger that he is acting to further his own interests, rather than the governmental interests of the State. Where the actor is a municipality, there is little or no danger that it is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement. The only real danger is that it will seek to further purely parochial public interests at the expense of more overriding state goals. This danger is minimal, however, because of the requirement that the municipality act pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy. Once it is clear that state authorization [***24] exists, there is no need to require the State to supervise actively the municipality's execution of what is a properly delegated function.

V

LEdHN[1C]↑ [1C]We conclude that the actions of the City of Eau Claire in this case are exempt from the Sherman Act. They were taken pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy to replace competition in the provision of sewage services with regulation. We further hold that HN8↑ active state supervision is not a prerequisite to <sup>9</sup> Among other things, municipal conduct is invariably more likely to be exposed to public scrutiny than is private conduct. Municipalities in some States are subject to "sunshine" laws or other mandatory disclosure regulations, and municipal officers, unlike corporate heads, are checked to some degree through the electoral process. Such a position in the public eye may provide some greater protection against antitrust abuses than exists for private parties.

<sup>10</sup> In cases in which the actor is a state agency, it is likely that active state supervision would also not be required, although we do not here decide that issue. Where state or municipal regulation by a private party is involved, however, active state supervision must be shown, even where a clearly articulated state policy exists. See Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, post, at 62.

I Í FÁMEÐA Í LÍFÉ AÐÓÐÍ FHEIFI GELA Í ÁSEÐAGA Á Í LÍFJÍ Í ÁMÆÐSÓYÓU Á JFÉ

[***35] exemption from the antitrust laws where the actor is a municipality rather than a private party. We accordingly [**1721] affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

It is so ordered.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practice 15

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:1 et seq.

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:81 et seq.

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1 et seq.

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair [****25] Trade Practices 9

L Ed Index to Annos, Municipal Corporations; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Municipal Corporations; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

What constitutes "state action" under rule exempting state and local governmental action from antitrust laws. 70 L Ed 2d 973.

Supreme Court's views as to what constitutes per se illegal "price fixing" under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 64 L Ed 2d 997.

Applicability of federal antitrust laws as affected by other federal statutes or by Federal Constitution. 45 L Ed 2d 841.

Valid governmental action as conferring immunity or exemption from private liability under the federal antitrust laws. 12 ALR Fed 329.

---

End of Document

Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference v. United States

Supreme Court of the United States

November 26, 1984, Argued ; March 27, 1985, Decided

No. 82-1922

Reporter

471 U.S. 48 *; 105 S. Ct. 1721 **; 85 L. Ed. 2d 36 ***; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 196 ****; 53 U.S.L.W. 4422; 1985-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,485

SOUTHERN MOTOR CARRIERS RATE CONFERENCE, INC., ET AL. v. UNITED STATES

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 702 F.2d 532, reversed.

Core Terms

---

immunity, ratemaking, Sherman Act, compulsion, bureaus, regulated, rates, anti trust law, private party, price fixing, anticompetitive, articulated, exemption, anticompetitive conduct, regulatory program, common carrier, motor carrier, state-action, intrastate, carriers, state action, antitrust, sovereign, policies, state policy, Commissions, transportation, supervise, state agency, proposals

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Charters

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

**HN1** Air & Space Transportation, Charters

The Interstate Commerce Act expressly reserves to the states the regulation of common carriers' intrastate rates, even if these rates affect interstate commerce. 49 U.S.C.S. § 10521\(b\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

**HN2** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

There is a two-pronged test for determining whether state regulation of private parties is shielded from the federal antitrust laws. First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy. Second, the state must supervise actively any private anticompetitive conduct. This supervision requirement prevents the state from frustrating the national policy in favor of competition by casting a gauzy cloak of state involvement over what is essentially private anticompetitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN3 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

State action immunity is not dependent on a finding that an exemption from the federal antitrust laws is "necessary."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The success of an antitrust action should depend upon the nature of the activity challenged, rather than on the identity of the defendant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN5 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The federal antitrust laws do not forbid the states to adopt policies that permit, but do not compel, anticompetitive conduct by regulated private parties. The state must clearly articulate its intent to adopt a permissive policy.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Rates & Tariffs

HN6 Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, Rates & Tariffs

Under the Interstate Commerce Act, motor common carriers are permitted, but not compelled, to engage in collective interstate ratemaking. 49 U.S.C.S. §§ 10706\(b\)\(2\) and 10706\(d\)\(2\)\(C\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

HN7 Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

Private parties are entitled to Parker immunity only if the state "acting as sovereign" intended to displace competition. For purposes of the Parker doctrine, not every act of a state agency is that of the state as sovereign.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN8 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A state policy that expressly permits, but does not compel, anticompetitive conduct may be "clearly articulated" within the meaning of Midcal. A clearly articulated permissive policy will satisfy the first prong of the Midcal test. The second prong, however, prevents states from casting a gauzy cloak of state involvement over what is essentially a private price-fixing arrangement. This active supervision requirement ensures that a state's actions will immunize the anticompetitive conduct of private parties only when the state has demonstrated its commitment to a program through its exercise of regulatory oversight.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN9 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

When other evidence conclusively shows that a state intends to adopt a permissive policy, the absence of compulsion should not prove fatal to a claim of Parker immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN10 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A private party may claim state action immunity only if both prongs of the Midcal test are satisfied.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN11 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Parker immunity is available only when the challenged activity is undertaken pursuant to a clearly articulated policy of the state itself, such as a policy approved by a state legislature.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

Communications Law > Regulators > State Agencies Regulating Intrastate Communications > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

HN12[ Interstate Commerce, State Powers

The Mississippi Motor Carrier Regulatory Law of 1938, *Miss. Code Ann. § 77-7-1 et seq.* (1972 and Supp. 1984), gives the State Public Service Commission authority to regulate common carriers. The statute provides that the Commission is to prescribe "just and reasonable" rates for the intrastate transportation of general commodities. *Miss. Code Ann. § 77-7-221*.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN13[ Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A private party acting pursuant to an anticompetitive regulatory program need not point to a specific, detailed legislative authorization for its challenged conduct, as long as the state as sovereign clearly intends to displace competition in a particular field with a regulatory structure.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN14[ Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

If a state's intent to establish an anticompetitive regulatory program is clear, the state's failure to describe the implementation of its policy in detail will not subject the program to the restraints of the federal antitrust laws.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Collective ratemaking activities of rate bureaus, composed of motor common carriers operating in four southeastern states, held immune from federal antitrust liability under the state action doctrine even though such activities were not compelled by the states.

Summary

"Rate bureaus" composed of motor common carriers operating in four southeastern states, on behalf of their members, submit joint rate proposals to the public service commissions in each state for approval or rejection. This collective ratemaking is authorized, but not compelled, by the states in which the rate bureaus operate. The United States, contending that collective ratemaking violates the federal antitrust laws, filed an action in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia to enjoin the rate bureaus' alleged anticompetitive practices. The rate bureaus responded that their conduct was exempt from the federal antitrust laws by virtue of the "state action" doctrine. The District Court found the rate bureaus' arguments meritless, and entered a summary judgment in favor of the government, enjoining the rate bureaus from engaging in collective ratemaking activities with their members (*476 F Supp 471*). The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, sitting en banc, affirmed (*702 F2d 532*).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by Powell, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and Brennan, Marshall, Blackmun, Rehnquist, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held (1) that the two-pronged test for determining the applicability of the state action exemption from the federal antitrust laws--the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy and the state must supervise actively any private anticompetitive conduct--is applicable to private parties' claims of state action immunity, (2) that a state policy that expressly permits but does not compel anticompetitive conduct may be clearly articulated within the meaning of the first prong of this test, and (3) that the collective ratemaking activities of the rate bureaus were thus immune from federal antitrust liability, even though such activities were not compelled by the states, since the challenged conduct was taken pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy--three of the four states expressly permit collective ratemaking and the fourth state, while not expressly approving collective ratemaking, has articulated clearly its intent to displace price competition among common carriers with a regulatory structure--and since the government conceded that the states, through their agencies, actively supervise the parties' conduct, thereby satisfying both prongs of the test.

Stevens, J., joined by White, J., dissented, expressing the view that private parties may not claim state action immunity unless their unlawful conduct is compelled by the state.

Headnotes

---

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §45 > carriers' rates and charges -- motor common carriers -- state action doctrine -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]

The collective ratemaking activities of "rate bureaus" composed of motor common carriers operating in four southeastern states, whereby the rate bureaus, on behalf of their members, submit joint rate proposals to the public service commissions in each state for approval or rejection, are immune from federal antitrust liability under the state action doctrine where such activities, though not compelled by the states, are taken pursuant to a clearly articulated policy of each of the states and the states, through their agencies, actively supervise the rate bureaus' activities. (Stevens and White, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > acts prohibited -- state action exemption -- private parties -- compulsion -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C] [LEdHN\[2D\]](#) [2D]

The two-pronged test for determining the applicability of the state action exemption from the federal antitrust laws--(1) the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy, and (2) the state must supervise actively any private anticompetitive conduct--is applicable to private parties' claims of state action immunity; moreover, a state policy that expressly permits, but does not compel, anticompetitive conduct may be "clearly articulated" within the meaning of the first prong of this test, and thus when other evidence conclusively shows that a state intends to adopt a permissive policy, the absence of compulsion should not prove fatal to a claim of state action immunity. (Stevens and White, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > acts prohibited -- exemption -- test --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [ ] [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [ ] [3B]

The state action immunity from federal antitrust laws is not dependent on a finding that an exemption from the federal antitrust laws is necessary to make a state regulatory program work. (Stevens and White, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

Syllabus

---

Petitioner Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference and petitioner North Carolina Motor Carriers Association (petitioners), "rate bureaus" composed of motor common carriers operating in North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, and Mississippi, submit, on behalf of their members, joint rate proposals to the Public Service Commission in each State. This collective ratemaking is authorized, but not compelled, by the respective States. The United States, contending that petitioners' collective ratemaking violates the federal antitrust laws, filed an action in Federal District Court to enjoin it. Petitioners responded that their conduct was immune from the federal antitrust laws by virtue of the "state action" doctrine of *Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341*. The District Court entered a summary judgment in the Government's favor. The Court of Appeals affirmed, holding that compulsion is a threshold requirement to a finding of Parker immunity. The court reasoned that the two-pronged test of *California Retail Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97*, [****2] for determining whether state regulation of private parties is shielded from the federal antitrust laws -- the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as a state policy and the State must supervise actively any private anticompetitive conduct -- is inapplicable to suits against private parties; that even if Midcal is applicable, private conduct that is not compelled cannot be taken pursuant to a "clearly articulated state policy" within the meaning of Midcal's first prong; and that because *Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773* -- which held that a State Bar, acting alone, could not immunize from the federal antitrust laws its anticompetitive conduct in fixing minimum fees for lawyers -- was cited with approval in Midcal, the Midcal Court endorsed the continued validity of a "compulsion requirement."

Held: Petitioners' collective ratemaking activities, although not compelled by the respective States, are immune from federal antitrust liability under the state action doctrine. The Midcal test should be used to determine whether the private rate bureaus' collective ratemaking activities [****3] are protected under the federal antitrust laws. Moreover, the actions of a private party can be attributed to a "clearly articulated state policy," within the meaning of the Midcal test's first prong, even in the absence of compulsion. The anticompetitive conduct is taken pursuant to a "clearly articulated state policy" under the first prong of the Midcal test. Here North Carolina, Georgia, and Tennessee statutes expressly permit collective ratemaking. Mississippi, while not expressly approving of collective ratemaking, has clearly articulated its intent to displace price competition among common carriers with a regulatory structure. Because the Government conceded that there was adequate state supervision, both prongs of the Midcal test are satisfied. Pp. 55-66.

Counsel: Allen I. Hirsch argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the brief for petitioner Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc., was Simon A. Miller. Bryce Rea, Jr., and Patrick McEligot filed briefs for petitioner North Carolina Motor Carriers Association, Inc. William Paul Rodgers, Jr., filed briefs for petitioner National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners.

Deputy Solicitor General [****4] Wallace argued the cause for the United States. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Lee, Assistant Attorney General McGrath, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Rule, Carter G. Phillips, Catherine G. O'Sullivan, Elliott M. Seiden, and Nancy C. Garrison.*

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the American Movers Conference et al. by James A. Calderwood, Edward J. Kiley, and Robert R. Harris; and for the Edison Electric Institute by S. Eason Balch and H. Hampton Boles.

[****5]

Judges: POWELL, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and BRENNAN, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, REHNQUIST, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which WHITE, J., joined, post, p. 66.

Opinion by: POWELL

Opinion

---

[*50] [*40] [**1723] JUSTICE POWELL delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A]Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. (SMCRC), and North Carolina Motor Carriers Association, Inc. (NCMCA), petitioners, are "rate bureaus" composed of motor common carriers operating in four Southeastern States. The rate bureaus, on behalf of their members, submit joint rate proposals to the Public Service Commission in each State for approval or rejection. This collective ratemaking is authorized, but not compelled, by the States in which the rate bureaus operate. The United States, contending that collective ratemaking violates the federal antitrust laws, filed this action to enjoin the rate bureaus' alleged anticompetitive practices. We here [***41] consider whether the petitioners' collective ratemaking activities, though not compelled by the States, are entitled to Sherman Act immunity under the "state action" doctrine of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943).

[****6] I

A

In North Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and Tennessee, Public Service Commissions set motor common carriers' rates for the intrastate transportation of general commodities.<sup>1</sup> [****7] Common carriers are required to submit proposed rates to the relevant Commission for approval.<sup>2</sup> A proposed [*51] rate becomes effective if the state agency takes no action within a specified period of time. If a hearing is scheduled, however, a rate will become effective only after affirmative agency approval.<sup>3</sup> The State Public Service Commissions thus have and exercise ultimate authority and control over all intrastate rates.

---

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the State of Iowa et al. by Thomas G. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, John R. Perkins and William F. Raisch, Assistant Attorneys General, Charles M. Oberly III, Attorney General of Delaware, Dennis J. Roberts II, Attorney General of Rhode Island, Faith A. La Salle, Special Assistant Attorney General, Bronson C. La Follette, Attorney General of Wisconsin, Michael L. Zaleski, Assistant Attorney General, Linley E. Pearson, Attorney General of Indiana, and Frank A. Baldwin, Deputy Attorney General; for the National Industrial Transportation League by John F. Donelan and Frederic L. Wood; and for the National Small Shipments Traffic Conference et al. by Daniel J. Sweeney.

<sup>1</sup> N. C. Gen. Stat. § 62-130(a) (1982); Ga. Code Ann. § 46-7-18 (Supp. 1984); Miss. Code Ann. § 77-7-217 (1972); Tenn. Code Ann. § 65-15-106(a) (Supp. 1984).

The Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to fix common carriers' rates for the interstate transportation of general commodities. 49 U. S. C. § 10704. HN1 The Interstate Commerce Act, however, expressly reserves to the States the regulation of common carriers' intrastate rates, even if these rates affect interstate commerce. 49 U. S. C. § 10521(b).

<sup>2</sup> N. C. Gen. Stat. § 62-134(a) (1982); Ga. Code Ann. § 46-2-25(a) (1982); Miss. Code Ann. §§ 77-7-211 and 77-7-215 (1972); Tenn. Code Ann. § 65-5-202 (1982).

<sup>3</sup> N. C. Gen. Stat. § 62-134(b) (1982); Ga. Code Ann. § 46-2-25(b) (1982); Miss. Code Ann. §§ 77-7-217 and 77-7-219 (1972); Tenn. Code Ann. § 65-5-203(a) (Supp. 1984).

In all four States, common carriers are allowed to agree on rate proposals prior to their joint submission to the regulatory agency.<sup>4</sup> [****8] By reducing the number of proposals, collective ratemaking permits the agency to consider more carefully each submission. In fact, some Public Service Commissions have stated that without collective [**1724] ratemaking they would be unable to function effectively as rate-setting bodies.<sup>5</sup> Nevertheless, collective ratemaking is not compelled by any of the States; every common carrier remains free to submit individual rate proposals to the Public Service Commissions.<sup>6</sup>

[*52] As indicated above, SMCRC and NCMCA are private associations composed of motor common carriers operating in North Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and [***42] Tennessee.<sup>7</sup> Both organizations have committees that consider possible rate changes.<sup>8</sup> If a rate committee concludes that an intrastate rate should be changed, a collective [****9] proposal for the changed rate is submitted to the State Public Service Commission. Members of the Bureau, however, are not bound by the joint proposal. Any disapproving member may submit an independent rate proposal to the state regulatory Commission.<sup>9</sup>

[****10] B

On November 17, 1976, the United States instituted this action against SMCRC and NCMCA in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia.<sup>10</sup> [****11] The [*53] United States charged that the two rate bureaus had violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by conspiring with their members to fix rates for the intrastate transportation of general commodities. The rate bureaus responded that their conduct was exempt from the federal <sup>4</sup> N. C. Gen. Stat. § 62-152.1\(b\) (1982); Ga. Code Ann. § 46-7-18 (Supp. 1984), Ga. Pub. Serv. Comm'n Rule 1-3-1-14 (1983); Response of the State of Mississippi and the Mississippi Public Service Comm'n as Amici Curiae in No. 76-1909A (ND Ga. 1977), p. 11; Tenn. Code Ann. § 65-15-119 (Supp. 1984), Tenn. Pub. Serv. Comm'n Rule 1220-2-1-40, Rules, Regulations and Statutes Governing Motor Carriers, p. 29 (1974).

<sup>5</sup> See, e. g., Response of the State of Mississippi and the Mississippi Public Service Comm'n, supra, at 15-16.

Moreover, the uniformity in prices that collective ratemaking tends to produce is considered desirable by the legislature of at least one State and the Public Service Commission of another. See N. C. Gen. Stat. § 62-152.1\(b\) (1982); Miss. Pub. Serv. Comm'n Rule 39D(4), Rules of Practice and Procedure and General Rules and Regulations under the Miss. Motor Carrier Act of 1938, as amended, p. 37 (1972).

<sup>6</sup> N. C. Gen. Stat. § 62-152.1\(e\) (1982); Ga. Pub. Serv. Comm'n Rule 1-3-1-14, supra; Response of the State of Mississippi and the Mississippi Public Service Comm'n, supra, at 11; Tenn. Pub. Serv. Comm'n Rule 1220-2-1-40, supra.

<sup>7</sup> At the time this action was filed, SMCRC represented its common carrier members before Public Service Commissions in North Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Alabama. SMCRC, however, is no longer active before the Alabama Public Service Commission. Brief for Petitioners 3, n. 2. NCMCA represents its members before the regulatory agency in North Carolina.

<sup>8</sup> SMCRC has a separate rate committee for each of the States in which its members operate -- North Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and Tennessee. NCMCA, which is concerned solely with matters before the North Carolina Public Service Commission, has only one rate committee.

<sup>9</sup> In addition to providing a forum for their members to discuss rate proposals, the rate bureaus: "[(i)] publish tariffs and supplements containing the rates on which the carriers agree; and [(ii)] provide counsel, staff experts, and facilities for the preparation of cost studies, other exhibits and testimony for use in support of proposed rates at hearings held by the regulatory commissions." 702 F.2d 532, 534 \(1983\).

<sup>10</sup> Motor Carriers Traffic Association, Inc. (MCTA), another rate bureau operating in North Carolina, also was named as a defendant. MCTA did not appeal from the District Court's judgment, and is not a party before this Court.

The District Court permitted the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners (NARUC), an organization composed of state agencies, to intervene as a defendant. See Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 24\(a\). Throughout this litigation, the NARUC has represented the interests of the Public Service Commissions of those States in which the defendant rate bureaus operate.

471 U.S. 48, *53; 105 S. Ct. 1721, **1724; 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, ***42; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 196, ****11

antitrust laws by virtue of the state action doctrine. See *Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 \(1943\)*.<sup>11</sup> They further asserted that their collective ratemaking activities did not violate the Sherman Act because the rates ultimately were determined by the appropriate state agencies. The District Court found the rate bureaus' arguments meritless, and entered a summary [**1725] judgment in favor of the Government. *467 F.Supp. 471 \(1979\)*. The defendants were enjoined from engaging in collective ratemaking activities with their members.

The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit (Unit B, now the Eleventh Circuit), sitting en banc, affirmed the judgment of the District Court. *702 F.2d 532, \*\*\*431 \(1983\)*.<sup>12</sup> Relying primarily on *Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773 \(1975\)*, the court held that the rate bureaus' challenged conduct, because it was not compelled by the State, was not entitled to Parker immunity. The two-pronged test set forth in *California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97 \(1980\)*, was irrelevant, the court reasoned, for in that case a public official was the [*54] named [****12] defendant.<sup>13</sup> *702 F.2d, at 539*. The Court of Appeals further held that even if Midcal were applicable to a private party's claim of state action immunity, the rate bureaus were not shielded from liability under the Sherman Act. The court concluded that only if the anticompetitive acts of a private party are compelled can a State's policy be held "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed" within the meaning of Midcal. *702 F.2d, at 539*.

After finding the rate bureaus not entitled to Parker immunity, the Court of Appeals held that their collective ratemaking activities violated [****13] the *Sherman Act, 672 F.2d 469, 481 \(1982\)*.<sup>14</sup> It rejected the rate bureaus' contention that because the regulatory agencies had ultimate authority and control over the rates charged, the federal antitrust laws were not violated. The Court of Appeals found that "joint ratesetting . . . [reduced] the amount of independent rate filing that otherwise would characterize the market process," and thus raised the prices charged for intrastate transportation of general commodities. *Id., at 478*. This "naked price restraint," the court reasoned, is per se illegal. Ibid.

Four judges strongly dissented. They argued that Midcal was applicable to a private party's claim of state action immunity. The success of an antitrust action should depend upon the activity challenged rather than the identity of the defendant. *702 F.2d, at 543-544*. [****14] After asserting that Midcal provided the relevant test, the dissenters concluded that the lack of compulsion was not dispositive. Even in the absence of compulsion, a "state can articulate a clear and express policy." *Id., at 546*. The dissent further concluded that a per se compulsion requirement denies States needed flexibility in the formation of regulatory programs, and thus is [*55] inconsistent with the principles of federalism that Congress intended to embody in the Sherman Act.<sup>15</sup>

We granted certiorari,<sup>16</sup> [****15] *467 U.S. 1240 \(1984\)*, to decide whether petitioners' collective ratemaking activities, though not compelled by the States [***44] in which they operate, are entitled to Parker immunity.<sup>17</sup>

<sup>11</sup> The defendants also contended that their collective ratemaking activities were protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See *Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127 \(1961\)*; *Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657 \(1965\)*. Both the District Court and the Court of Appeals rejected this defense, and we do not address it. See n. 17, infra.

<sup>12</sup> A panel of that court, with one judge dissenting, had affirmed the District Court's judgment. *United States v. Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc., 672 F.2d 469 \(1982\)*.

<sup>13</sup> In this case, the Government elected, without explanation, not to name as defendants the state Public Service Commissions that regulated the motor common carriers' intrastate rates.

<sup>14</sup> The en banc Court of Appeals reinstated the part of the panel's opinion that addressed the Sherman Act violation. *702 F.2d, at 542*.

<sup>15</sup> Judge Clark's separate dissenting opinion criticized the majority for ignoring "the Interstate Commerce Act, public policy, history, and fairness." *Id., at 548*.

<sup>16</sup> The joint petition for a writ of certiorari was filed by SMCRC, NCMCA, and the NARUC.

II

In *Parker v. Brown*, 317 U.S., at 341, this Court held that the Sherman Act was not intended to prohibit [**1726] States from imposing restraints on competition.<sup>18</sup> There, a raisin producer [*56] filed an action against the California Director of Agriculture to enjoin the enforcement of the State's Agricultural Prorate Act. Under that statute, a cartel of private raisin producers was created in order to stabilize prices and prevent "economic waste." *Id., at 346*. The Court recognized that the State's program was anticompetitive, and it assumed that Congress, "in the exercise of its commerce power, [could] prohibit a state from maintaining [such] a stabilization program. . . ." *Id., at 350*. Nevertheless, the Court refused to find in the Sherman Act "an unexpressed purpose to nullify [****16] a state's control over its officers and agents. . . ." *Id., at 351*.

[****17] [*LEdHN\[2A\]*](#) [2A]Although Parker involved an action against a state official, the Court's reasoning extends to suits against private parties. The Parker decision was premised on the assumption that Congress, in enacting the Sherman Act, did not intend to compromise the States' ability to regulate their domestic commerce.<sup>19</sup> If Parker immunity were limited to the actions of public officials, this assumed congressional purpose would be frustrated, for a State would be unable to implement programs that restrain competition among private parties. A plaintiff could frustrate any such program merely by filing suit against the regulated private parties, rather than the [*57] state officials who implement the plan. We decline to reduce Parker's holding to a formalism that would stand for little more than the proposition that Porter Brown sued the wrong parties. *Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co.*, 428 U.S. 579, 616-617, n. 4 \(1976\) (Stewart, J., dissenting).

[****18]

[***45] [*LEdHN\[2B\]*](#) [2B] [*LEdHN\[3A\]*](#) [3A]The circumstances in which Parker immunity is available to private parties, and to state agencies or officials regulating the conduct of private parties, are defined most specifically by our decision in California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S., at 97. See

---

<sup>17</sup> Although we granted certiorari on the Noerr-Pennington issue as well, see n. 11, supra, our disposition of this case makes it unnecessary to consider the applicability of that doctrine to the petitioners' collective ratemaking activities.

<sup>18</sup> JUSTICE STEVENS, noting that "[implied] antitrust immunities . . . are disfavored . . . , post, at 67, cites *United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn.*, 322 U.S. 533 \(1944\), for the proposition that "if exceptions are to be written into the Sherman Act, they must come from Congress, and not this Court." *Id., at 561*. The dissent apparently finds some significance in the fact that no federal statute expressly exempts the petitioners' collective ratemaking activities from the antitrust laws. See post, at 70.

The dissent's argument on this point, of course, does not suggest that compulsion should be a prerequisite to a finding of state action immunity. Instead, the logical result of its reasoning would require us to overrule Parker v. Brown and its progeny, for the state action doctrine is an implied exemption to the antitrust laws. After over 40 years of congressional acquiescence, we are unwilling to abandon the Parker doctrine.

JUSTICE STEVENS relies primarily upon *United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters, supra*, and *Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co.*, 324 U.S. 439 \(1945\), in the first section of his dissent. Neither of these cases, however, has any bearing on the scope of Parker immunity. In *South-Eastern Underwriters, supra*, the Court held only that the "business of insurance is interstate commerce," Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 217 (1979), and thus is subject to the Sherman Act's proscriptions. The Court did not suggest that, because of congressional silence, state regulation could not immunize insurance companies from the federal antitrust laws. Instead, it reasoned that Parker did not protect the insurance companies because "no states authorize combinations of insurance companies to coerce, intimidate, and boycott competitors and consumers in the manner . . . [there] alleged." *322 U.S., at 562*. In *Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., supra*, the Court was concerned with whether Congress intended to immunize a federal regulatory program from the antitrust laws. See n. 21, infra.

<sup>19</sup> In holding that the States were free to regulate "domestic commerce," the Parker Court relied upon congressional silence. There are, however, some statements in the legislative history that affirmatively express a desire not "to invade the legislative authority of the several States. . . ." H. R. Rep. No. 1707, 51st Cong., 1st Sess., 1 (1890). See *Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co.*, 428 U.S. 579, 632 \(1976\) (Stewart, J., dissenting).

Hallie v. Eau Claire, ante, at 46, n. 10. [**1727] In Midcal, we affirmed a state-court injunction prohibiting officials from enforcing a statute requiring wine producers to establish resale price schedules. HN2[↑] We set forth a two-pronged test for determining whether state regulation of private parties is shielded from the federal antitrust laws. First, the challenged restraint must be "one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy." 445 U.S., at 105, quoting Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 410 \(1978\) (opinion of BRENNAN, J.). Second, the State must supervise actively any private anticompetitive conduct. 445 U.S., at 105.<sup>20</sup> This supervision requirement prevents the State from frustrating the national policy in favor of competition by casting [****19] a "gauzy cloak of state involvement" over what is essentially private anticompetitive conduct. Id., at 106.<sup>21</sup>

[LEdHN\[3B\]](#)[↑] [3B]

[***20] [*58] [***46] III

[LEdHN\[2C\]](#)[↑] [2C]The Midcal test does not expressly provide that the actions of a private party must be compelled by a State in order to be protected from the federal antitrust laws. The Court of Appeals, however, held that compulsion is a threshold requirement to a finding of Parker immunity. It reached this conclusion by finding that: (i) Midcal is inapplicable to suits brought against private parties; (ii) even if Midcal is applicable, private conduct that is not compelled cannot be taken pursuant to a "clearly articulated state policy," within the meaning of Midcal's first prong; and (iii) because Goldfarb was cited with approval in Midcal, the Midcal Court endorsed the continued validity of a "compulsion requirement." We consider these points in order.

A

The Court of Appeals held that Midcal, that involved a suit against a state agency, is inapplicable where a private party is the named defendant. Midcal, however, should not be given such a narrow reading. In that case we were concerned, as we are here, with state regulation restraining competition among private parties. Therefore, the two-pronged test set forth in Midcal[****21] should be used to determine whether the private rate bureaus' collective ratemaking activities are protected from the federal antitrust laws. HN4[↑] The success of an antitrust action should depend upon the nature of the activity challenged, rather than on the identity of the [*59] defendant. See Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., supra, at 604 (BURGER, C. J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment); Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., supra, at 420 (BURGER, C. J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment).

[[**1728]] B

The Court of Appeals held that even if Midcal were applicable here, the rate bureaus would not be immune from federal antitrust liability. According to that court, the actions of a private party cannot be attributed to a clearly articulated state policy, within the meaning of the Midcal test's first prong, "when it is left to the private party to carry out that policy or not as he sees fit." 702 F.2d, at 539. In the four States in which petitioners operate, all common <sup>20</sup> As we hold today in Hallie v. Eau Claire, ante, at 46, the second prong of the Midcal test is inapplicable to municipalities. Although its anticompetitive conduct must be taken pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy, a municipality need not be supervised by the State in order to qualify for Parker immunity. See ante, at 46.

<sup>21</sup> The dissent argues that a state regulatory program is entitled to Parker immunity only if an antitrust exemption is "necessary . . . to make the [program] work. . . ." Post, at 74 (quoting Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., supra, at 597). This argument overlooks the fact that, with the exception of a questionable dictum in Cantor, supra, the dissent's proposed test has been used only in deciding whether Congress intended to immunize a federal regulatory program from the Sherman Act's proscriptions. See, e. g., Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 357 \(1963\). In this context, if the federal courts wrongly conclude that an antitrust exemption is "unnecessary," Congress can correct the error. As the dissent recognizes, however, the Supremacy Clause would prevent state legislatures from taking similar remedial action. Post, at 67. Moreover, the proposed test would prompt the "kind of interference with state sovereignty . . . that . . . Parker was intended to prevent." 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 214, p. 88 (1978). Therefore, we hold that HN3[↑] state action immunity is not dependent on a finding that an exemption from the federal antitrust laws is "necessary."

carriers are free to submit proposals individually. The court therefore reasoned that the States' policies are neutral [****22] with respect to collective ratemaking, and that these policies will not be frustrated if the federal antitrust laws are construed to require individual submissions.

In reaching its conclusion, the Court of Appeals assumed that if anticompetitive activity is not compelled, the State can have no interest in whether private parties engage in that conduct. This type of analysis ignores the manner in which the States in this case clearly have intended their permissive policies to work. Most common carriers probably will engage in collective ratemaking, as that will allow them to share the cost of preparing rate proposals. If the joint rates are viewed as too high, however, carriers individually may submit lower proposed [***47] rates to the Commission in order to obtain a larger share of the market. Thus, through the self-interested actions of private common carriers, the States may achieve the desired balance between the efficiency of collective ratemaking and the competition fostered by individual submissions. Construing the Sherman Act to prohibit collective rate proposals eliminates the free choice necessary to ensure that these policies function in the manner intended [*60] [****23] by the States. HN5↑ The federal antitrust laws do not forbid the States to adopt policies that permit, but do not compel, anticompetitive conduct by regulated private parties. As long as the State clearly articulates its intent to adopt a permissive policy, the first prong of the Midcal test is satisfied.<sup>22</sup>

C

In Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773 \(1975\), this Court said that "[the] threshold inquiry in determining if an anticompetitive activity is state action of the type the Sherman Act was not meant to proscribe is whether the activity is required by the State [****24] acting as sovereign." Id., at 790. Midcal cited Goldfarb with approval. 445 U.S., at 104. On the basis of this citation, the Court of Appeals reasoned that Midcal did not eliminate the "compulsion requirement" of Goldfarb.

Goldfarb, however, is not properly read as making compulsion a sine qua non to state action immunity. In that case, the Virginia State Bar, a state agency, compelled Fairfax County lawyers to adhere to a minimum-fee schedule. 421 U.S., at 776-778. The Goldfarb Court therefore was not concerned with the necessity of compulsion -- its presence in the case was not an issue. The focal point of the Goldfarb opinion was the source of the anticompetitive policy, rather than whether the challenged conduct was compelled. The Court held that a State Bar, acting alone, could not immunize its anticompetitive conduct. Instead, the Court held that HNT↑ private parties were entitled to Parker immunity only if the State "acting as sovereign" intended to displace competition. 421 U.S., at 790; see [Lafayette v. Louisiana Power \[\*61\] & Light Co., 435 U.S., at 410](#) [****25] (opinion of BRENNAN, J.) ("Goldfarb . . . made it clear that, for purposes of the [**1729] Parker doctrine, not every act of a state agency is that of the State as sovereign").

Although Goldfarb did employ language of compulsion, it is beyond dispute that the Court would have reached the same result had it applied the two-pronged test later set forth in Midcal. As stated above, Virginia "as sovereign" did not have a "clearly articulated policy" designed to displace price competition among lawyers. In fact, the Supreme Court of Virginia had explicitly directed lawyers not "to be controlled" [***48] by minimum-fee schedules. Goldfarb, supra, at 789, n. 19. Although we recognize that the language in Goldfarb is not without ambiguity, we do not read that opinion as making compulsion a prerequisite to a finding of state action immunity.

D

The Parker doctrine represents an attempt to resolve conflicts that may arise between principles of federalism and the goal of the antitrust laws, unfettered competition in the marketplace. A compulsion requirement is inconsistent with both values. It reduces the range of regulatory alternatives available [****26] to the State. At the same time, <sup>22</sup> HN6↑ Under the Interstate Commerce Act, motor common carriers are permitted, but not compelled, to engage in collective interstate ratemaking. 49 U. S. C. §§ 10706\(b\)\(2\) and 10706\(d\)\(2\)\(C\). It is clear, therefore, that Congress has recognized the advantages of a permissive policy. We think it unlikely that Congress intended to prevent the States from adopting virtually identical policies at the intrastate level.

insofar as it encourages States to require, rather than merely permit, anticompetitive conduct, a compulsion requirement may result in greater restraints on trade. We do not believe that Congress intended to resolve conflicts between two competing interests by impairing both more than necessary.

LEdHN[2D] [↑] [2D] In summary, we hold Midcal's two-pronged test applicable to private parties' claims of state action immunity. Moreover, HN8 [↑] a state policy that expressly permits, but does not compel, anticompetitive conduct may be "clearly articulated" within the meaning of Midcal.<sup>23</sup> Our holding today does not [*62] suggest, however, that compulsion is irrelevant. To the contrary, compulsion often is the best evidence that the State has a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed policy to displace competition. See Hallie v. Eau Claire, ante, at 45-46; 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 212.5, p. 62 (Supp. 1982) (compulsion is "powerful evidence" of existence of state policy). Nevertheless, HN9 [↑] when other evidence conclusively shows that a State intends to adopt a permissive policy, the absence of compulsion should not prove fatal [****27] to a claim of Parker immunity.

IV

A

LEdHN[1B] [↑] [1B] Our holding that there is no inflexible "compulsion [****28] requirement" does not suggest necessarily that petitioners' collective ratemaking activities are shielded from the federal antitrust laws. HN10 [↑] A private party may claim state action immunity only if both prongs of the Midcal test are satisfied. Here the Court of Appeals found, and the Government concedes, that the State Public Service Commissions actively supervise the collective ratemaking activities of the rate bureaus. Therefore, the only issue left to resolve is whether the petitioners' challenged conduct was [***49] taken pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy.

The Public Service Commissions in North Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and Tennessee permit collective ratemaking. See n. 4, supra. Acting alone, however, these agencies [*63] [**1730] could not immunize private anticompetitive conduct. In Goldfarb, the State Bar -- a special type of "state agency" -- prohibited lawyers from charging fees lower than those set forth in schedules published by the local bar. Nevertheless, this Court held that the local lawyers were not immune from antitrust liability because their anticompetitive conduct was not required by the State as sovereign. 421 U.S., at 790. [****29] HN11 [↑] Parker immunity is available only when the challenged activity is undertaken pursuant to a clearly articulated policy of the State itself, such as a policy approved by a state legislature, see New Motor Vehicle Bd. of Cal. v. Orrin W. Fox Co., 439 U.S. 96 (1978), or a State Supreme Court, Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350 (1977).

In this case, therefore, the petitioners are entitled to Parker immunity only if collective ratemaking is clearly sanctioned by the legislatures of the four States in which the rate bureaus operate. North Carolina, Georgia, and Tennessee have statutes that explicitly permit collective ratemaking by common carriers.<sup>24</sup> The rate bureaus' challenged actions, at least in these States, are taken pursuant to an express and clearly articulated state policy. Mississippi's legislature, however, has not specifically addressed collective ratemaking. We therefore must consider whether, in the absence of a statute expressly permitting the challenged conduct, the first prong of the Midcal test can be satisfied.

[****30] B

---

<sup>23</sup> Contrary to the Government's arguments, our holding here does not suggest that a State may "give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it." Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S., at 351; see Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384 (1951). A clearly articulated permissive policy will satisfy the first prong of the Midcal test. The second prong, however, prevents States from "casting . . . a gauzy cloak of state involvement over what is essentially a private price-fixing arrangement." Midcal, 445 U.S., at 106. This active supervision requirement ensures that a State's actions will immunize the anticompetitive conduct of private parties only when the "state has demonstrated its commitment to a program through its exercise of regulatory oversight." See 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law § 213a, p. 73 (1978).

<sup>24</sup> N. C. Gen. Stat. § 62-152.1(b) (1982); Ga. Code Ann. § 46-7-18 (1982 and Supp. 1984); Tenn. Code Ann. § 65-15-119 (1982).

HN12[↑] The Mississippi Motor Carrier Regulatory Law of 1938, Miss. Code Ann. § 77-7-1 et seq. (1972 and Supp. 1984), gives the State Public Service Commission authority to regulate common carriers. The statute provides that the Commission is to prescribe "just and reasonable" rates for the intrastate transportation of general commodities. § 77-7-221. The legislature thus made clear its intent that intrastate rates [*64] would be determined by a regulatory agency, rather than by the market. The details of the inherently anticompetitive rate-setting process, however, are left to the agency's discretion. The State Commission has exercised its discretion by actively encouraging collective ratemaking among common carriers. See Response of the State of Mississippi and the Mississippi Public Service Comm'n as Amici Curiae in District Court, No. 76-1909A (ND Ga. 1977), p. 11. We do not believe that the actions petitioners took pursuant to this regulatory program should be deprived of Parker immunity.

HN13[↑] A private party acting pursuant to an anticompetitive regulatory program need not "point to a specific, detailed legislative authorization" for its challenged conduct. Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S., at 415 [****31] (opinion of BRENNAN, [***50] J.). As long as the State as sovereign clearly intends to displace competition in a particular field with a regulatory structure, the first prong of the Midcal test is satisfied. In Goldfarb, the Court held that Parker immunity was unavailable only because the State as sovereign did not intend to do away with competition among lawyers. 421 U.S., at 790. Similarly, in Cantor the anticompetitive acts of a private utility were held unprotected because the Michigan Legislature had indicated no intention to displace competition in the relevant market. 428 U.S., at 584-585.

If more detail than a clear intent to displace competition were required of the legislature, States would find it difficult to implement through regulatory agencies their anticompetitive policies. Agencies are created because they are able to deal with problems unforeseeable to, or outside [**1731] the competence of, the legislature. Requiring express authorization for every action that an agency might find necessary to effectuate state policy would diminish, if not destroy, its usefulness. Cf. Hallie v. Eau Claire, ante [****32], at 44 (requiring explicit legislative authorization of anticompetitive activity would impose "detrimental side effects upon municipalities' local autonomy"). Therefore, we hold [*65] that HN14[↑] if the State's intent to establish an anticompetitive regulatory program is clear, as it is in Mississippi,<sup>25</sup> the State's failure to describe the implementation of its policy in detail will not subject the program to the restraints of the federal antitrust laws.

[****33] C

LEdHN1C[↑] [1C]In summary, we hold that the petitioners' collective ratemaking activity is immune from Sherman Act liability. This anticompetitive conduct is taken pursuant to a "clearly articulated state policy." The legislatures of North Carolina, Georgia, and Tennessee expressly permit motor common carriers to submit collective rate proposals to Public Service Commissions, which have the authority to accept, reject, or modify any recommendation. Mississippi, the fourth State in which the petitioners [***51] operate, has not expressly approved of collective ratemaking, but it has articulated clearly its intent to displace price competition among common carriers with a regulatory structure. Anticompetitive conduct taken pursuant to such a regulatory program satisfies the first <sup>25</sup> The Mississippi statute stands in sharp contrast to the Colorado Home Rule Amendment, which we considered in Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40 (1982). In Boulder, the State Constitution gave municipalities extensive powers of self-government. Id., at 43-44. Pursuant to this authority, the City of Boulder prohibited a cable television company from expanding its operations. The Court held that because the Home Rule Amendment did not evidence an intent to displace competition in the cable television industry, id., at 55, Boulder's anticompetitive ordinance was not enacted pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy. This holding was premised on the fact that Boulder, as a "home rule municipality," was authorized to elect free-market competition as an alternative to regulation. Id., at 56.

In this case, on the other hand, the Mississippi Public Service Commission is not authorized to choose free-market competition. Instead, it is required to prescribe rates for motor common carriers on the basis of statutorily enumerated factors. Miss. Code Ann. § 77-7-221 (1972). These factors bear no discernible relationship to the prices that would be set by a perfectly efficient and unregulated market. Therefore, the Mississippi statute clearly indicates that the legislature intended to displace competition in the intrastate trucking industry with a regulatory program.

[*66] prong of the Midcal test. The second prong of the Midcal test likewise is met, for the Government has conceded that the relevant States, through their agencies, actively supervise the conduct of private parties.

V

[LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] We conclude that the petitioners' collective ratemaking activities, although not compelled by the States, are immune from antitrust liability under the doctrine of Parker v. Brown [****34]. Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

---

JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE WHITE joins, dissenting.

The term "price fixing" generally refers to a process by which competitors agree upon the prices that will prevail in the market for the goods or services they offer. Such behavior is not essential to every public program for regulating industry. In this case, for example, four Southern States have established programs for evaluating the reasonableness of rates that motor carriers propose to charge for intrastate transport, but the States do not require price fixing by motor carriers. They merely tolerate it.

Reasoning deductively from a dictum in California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105 (1980), the Court holds that Congress did not intend [**1732] to prohibit price fixing by motor carrier rate bureaus -- at least when such conduct is prompted, but not required, by a State Public Service Commission. The result is inconsistent with the language<sup>1</sup> and policies of the Sherman Act, and this Court's precedent. The Sherman Act only would interfere with the regulatory [***35] process if the States compelled price [*67] fixing that is unlawful under federal law. In that situation, the regulated carriers would face conflicting obligations under state and federal law, and the success of the States' regulatory programs would be threatened. Except under those circumstances, immunity from the antitrust laws under the state-action doctrine is not available for private persons.
2

[***36] I

"Whatever may be its peculiar problems and characteristics, the [***52] Sherman Act, so far as price-fixing agreements are concerned, establishes one uniform rule applicable to all industries alike":<sup>3</sup> [***37] agreements and combinations tampering with competitive price structures are unlawful. State legislatures, whose powers are limited by the Supremacy Clause,<sup>4</sup> may not expressly modify the obligations of any person under this federal law.

---

<sup>1</sup> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U. S. C. § 1.

<sup>2</sup> Of course, public agencies like municipalities need only establish that their anticompetitive conduct is taken pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy. Hallie v. Eau Claire, ante, at 46-47. The less stringent requirement reflects the presumption "that the municipality acts in the public interest." Ante, at 45; cf. Affiliated Capital Corp. v. City of Houston, 735 F.2d 1555, 1571-1572 (CA5 1984) (en banc) (Higginbotham, J., concurring), cert. pending, No. 84-951.

<sup>3</sup> United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 222 (1940); see also Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 785 (1975); United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 351 U.S. 305, 309-310 (1956); United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 143 (1948).

Only Congress, expressly or by implication, may authorize price fixing, and has done so in particular industries or compelling circumstances. Implied antitrust immunities, however, are disfavored,<sup>5</sup> and any exemptions [*68] from the antitrust laws are to be strictly construed.<sup>6</sup> These "[canons] of construction . . . [reflect] the felt indispensable role of antitrust policy in the maintenance of a free economy." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 348 (1963).

Applying these principles, this Court has consistently embraced the view that "[regulated] industries are not per se exempt from the Sherman Act." Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 456 (1945). For many years prior to the enactment of the Sherman Act, state agencies regulated [****38] the business of insurance, but we rejected the view that these programs of public scrutiny supported "our reading into the Act an exemption" allowing insurance businesses to fix premium rates and agents' commissions. United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 559 (1944). In South-Eastern Underwriters, the Court [**1733] tersely observed that "if exceptions are to be written into the Act, they must come from Congress, not this Court." Id., at 561. Thereafter, in the McCarran-Ferguson Act of 1945, 59 Stat. 33, Congress decided, as a matter of policy, that the Sherman Act's prohibition of price fixing "shall [only] be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State Law." 15 U. S. C. § 1012(b).

Consistent with its treatment of the insurance business in South-Eastern Underwriters, this Court has repeatedly held that collusive price fixing by railroads is unlawful even though the end result is a reasonable charge approved by a public rate commission.<sup>7</sup> Georgia v. Pennsylvania [***53] R. Co., *691 324 U.S., at 455-463.; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 337-340 (1897). [***39] In the Pennsylvania Railroad case, the Court explained why this is so:

---

"The fact that the rates which have been fixed may or may not be held unlawful by the [Interstate Commerce] Commission is immaterial to the issue before us. . . . [Even] a combination to fix reasonable and non-discriminatory

<sup>4</sup> "This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof . . . shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding." U.S. Const., Art. VI, cl. 2.

<sup>5</sup> E. g., National Gerimedical Hospital and Gerontology Center v. Blue Cross of Kansas City, 452 U.S. 378, 388-389 (1981); United States v. National Assn. of Securities Dealers, Inc., 422 U.S. 694, 719-720 (1975).

<sup>6</sup> E. g., Group Life & Health Insurance Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 231 (1979); Abbott Laboratories v. Portland Retail Druggists Assn., Inc., 425 U.S. 1, 11 (1976).

<sup>7</sup> "In [Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co., 260 U.S. 156 (1922)], the suit was one for damages under the Sherman Act. The charge was that the defendant carriers had formed a rate bureau or committee to secure agreement in respect to freight rates among the constituent railroad companies which would otherwise be competing carriers. As we have seen, the Court held that damages could not be recovered. But Mr. Justice Brandeis speaking for a unanimous Court stated that a conspiracy to fix rates might be illegal though the rates fixed were reasonable and nondiscriminatory. He said . . . : 'All the rates fixed were reasonable and non-discriminatory. That was settled by the proceedings before the Commission. . . . But under the Anti-Trust Act, a combination of carriers to fix reasonable and non-discriminatory rates may be illegal; and if so, the Government may have redress by criminal proceedings under § 3, by injunction under § 4, and by forfeiture under § 6. That was settled by United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290 [1897], and United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505 [1898]. The fact that these rates had been approved by the Commission would not, it seems, bar proceedings by the Government.' [260 U.S., at 161-162]." Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 457-458 (1945). Although the Court in Pennsylvania Railroad was divided on the question whether Georgia could pursue its antitrust remedy by invoking this Court's original jurisdiction, the dissenting Justices recognized that the United States could obtain an injunction against the alleged price fixing in an appropriate forum. See id., at 484, 489 (Stone, C. J., dissenting). It is, of course, the United States that seeks relief in the case now before us.

rates may be illegal. [Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 161 (1922)]. The reason is that the Interstate Commerce Act does not provide remedies for the correction of all the abuses of rate-making which might constitute violations of the anti-trust laws. Thus a 'zone of reasonableness exists between maxima and minima within which a carrier is ordinarily free to adjust its charges for itself.' United States v. Chicago, M., St. P. & P. R. Co., 294 U.S. 499, 506 [1935]. Within that zone the Commission lacks power to grant relief even though the rates are raised to the maxima by a conspiracy among carriers who employ [*70] unlawful tactics. . . . Damage must be presumed to flow from a conspiracy to manipulate rates within that zone." 324 U.S., at 460-461.

Collusive price fixing by regulated carriers [****40] causes upward pressure on rates within the zone of reasonableness, and such combinations and conspiracies are generally actionable under the Sherman Act on the theory of the Pennsylvania Railroad case.

[****41] Congress reacted to the Pennsylvania Railroad decision much as it reacted to the South-Eastern Underwriters decision. It decided, as a matter of policy, that some price fixing should be permitted in the transportation industry, and enacted the Reed-Bulwinkle Act of 1948 to effectuate [**1734] that policy choice.<sup>8</sup> In [***54] the Motor Carrier Act of 1980,<sup>9</sup> however, Congress sharply curtailed the availability of this antitrust exemption. Collective ratemaking is still permitted in limited circumstances, but rate bureaus must comply with strict procedural requirements. See n. 19, infra.

[****42] The defendants have stipulated that their price-fixing arrangements are identical to those followed by the Carrier Rate Committees in the Pennsylvania Railroad case which were declared unlawful under the Sherman Act. See App. 40-41. They also acknowledge that neither the Reed-Bulwinkle Act nor any other federal statute expressly exempts their price fixing from the antitrust laws. Nevertheless, they contend that Congress would not have intended to prohibit collective ratemaking by intrastate motor carriers when it is permitted, but not required, by state law.

[*71] II

The basis for the defendants' claim of implied immunity from the antitrust laws is the state-action doctrine of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943). This Court, however, has repeatedly recognized that private entities may not claim the state-action immunity unless their unlawful conduct is compelled by the state.

In the Parker case, this Court held that the Sherman Act does not reach "state action or official action directed by a state." Id., at 351. The case involved price fixing that was mandated by a California statute in the furtherance of a price-support [***43] program for raisin farmers. The Court held that the price fixing was not prohibited by the Sherman Act:

"[The] prorate program here was never intended to operate by force of individual agreement or combination. It derived its authority and its efficacy from the legislative command of the state and was not intended to operate or become effective without that command. We find nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature." Id., at 350-351.

<sup>8</sup> "Parties to any agreement approved by the Commission under this section and other persons are . . . hereby relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws with respect to the making of such agreement, and with respect to the carrying out of such agreement in conformity with its provisions and in conformity with the terms and conditions prescribed by the Commission." 62 Stat. 473. The current version of the exemption is codified at 49 U. S. C. § 10706(b)(2).

<sup>9</sup> 94 Stat. 803, 49 U. S. C. §§ 10706(b)(3)(B)-(D).

Under Parker, private anticompetitive conduct must be "directed" by the State to be eligible for the state-action immunity.

In a later case involving price fixing by attorneys through minimum-fee schedules, the Court unanimously stated: "The threshold inquiry in determining if an anticompetitive activity is state action of the type the Sherman Act was not meant to proscribe is whether the activity is required by the State acting as sovereign. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S., at 350-352; Continental Co. v. Union Carbide, 370 U.S. 690, 706-707 (1962). [****44] " Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 790 (1975). In Goldfarb, no state [***55] statute or Supreme Court rule required the defendant County Bar Association to [*72] adopt the minimum-fee schedule, and this Court concluded that this "is not state action for Sherman Act purposes. It is not enough that, as the County Bar puts it, anticompetitive conduct is 'prompted' by state action; rather, anticompetitive activities must be compelled by direction of the State acting as a sovereign." Id. at 791.

In Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579 (1976), the Court was also unanimous in its understanding that sovereign compulsion was a prerequisite for state-action immunity.<sup>10</sup> [**1735] The opinion for the Court observed that it has long been settled "that state authorization, approval, encouragement, or participation in restrictive private conduct confers no antitrust immunity." Id., at 592-593 (footnotes omitted).<sup>11</sup> The dissenting Justices agreed: "private conduct, if it is to come within the state-action exemption, must be not merely 'prompted' but 'compelled' by state action." [****45] Id. at 637 (Stewart, J., dissenting, joined by POWELL and REHNQUIST, JJ.).

In Cantor, the Court only divided on the question whether the compulsion requirement alone was sufficient to confer antitrust immunity. The dissent argued that Congress would not have intended to penalize Detroit Edison for engaging in a light-bulb-distribution program that had been approved by the Michigan Public Service [****46] Commission and that could not be discontinued without approval of the Commission. Id., at 614-615. The Court, on the other hand, acknowledged that continuation of the light-bulb program was ostensibly required by the State, but went on to consider [*73] whether an antitrust exemption for this conduct was fundamental to the State's regulatory program. Since Michigan's statutes only expressed an interest in regulating the electricity market, and not the light-bulb market, the Court concluded that "[regardless] of the outcome of this case, Michigan's interest in regulating its utilities' distribution of electricity will be almost entirely unimpaired." Id., at 598. Because the State had not articulated any intention to regulate the light-bulb market, and the idea for the distribution program had come from the private utility, the State's requirement that the program continue was not sufficient to establish state-action immunity from the antitrust laws.

The Court's unanimous decision in California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97 (1980), signaled no departure from settled principles in this area. In discussing the [****47] principles of law applicable to state-action immunity, the Court quoted extensively from [***56] the language in Parker and Goldfarb<sup>12</sup> [****48] that recognized the compulsion requirement. In any case, it was quite clear in Midcal that the California statutes required the unlawful resale-price-maintenance activities. Thus, this Court had no occasion in that case to explore the contours of the compulsion requirement. The references, in the Midcal opinion, to "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed" policies and "actively supervised" activities merely restated the standards to be applied in evaluating whether conduct ostensibly compelled by the State is entitled to the state-action immunity. These requirements limited the scope of the [*74] state-action immunity for private entities; they did not expand the immunity to protect conduct that is merely prompted by the State.<sup>13</sup>

<sup>10</sup> See, e. g., Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S., at 609 (BLACKMUN, J., concurring in judgment).

<sup>11</sup> For the proposition stated, the Court relied on Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S., at 791; Continental Co. v. Union Carbide, 370 U.S. 690, 706-707 (1962); Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 351 (1943); Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 313 U.S. 450, 467-468 (1941); and Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 346 (1904).

<sup>12</sup> Several recent decisions have applied Parker's analysis. In Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773 (1975), the Court concluded that fee schedules enforced by a state bar association were not mandated by ethical standards established by the State Supreme Court. The fee schedules therefore were not immune from antitrust attack. 'It is not enough that . . . anticompetitive conduct is 'prompted' by state action; rather, anti-competitive activities must be compelled by direction of the State acting as a sovereign.' Id., at 791." 445 U.S., at 104.

[**1736] III

Today the Court abandons the settled view that a private party is not entitled to state-action immunity unless the State compelled him to act in violation of federal law. Hereafter, a State may exempt price fixing from the federal antitrust laws if it clearly articulates its intention to supplant competition with regulation in the relevant market, and if it actively supervises the unlawful conduct by [****49] evaluating the reasonableness of the prices charged. The Court justifies this change in the law by finding it more consistent with "principles of federalism and the goal of the antitrust laws, unfettered competition in the marketplace." Ante, at 61. I believe these conclusions are unsound.

Deference to State Regulatory Programs

The Court's reliance today on vague "principles of federalism" obscures our traditional disfavor for implied exemptions to the Sherman Act. We have only authorized exemptions from the Sherman Act for businesses regulated by federal law when "that exemption was necessary in order to make the regulatory Act work 'and even then only to the minimum extent necessary.'"<sup>14</sup> No [***57] lesser showing of repugnancy [*75] should be sufficient to justify an implied exemption based on a state regulatory program.

[****50] Any other view separates the state-action exemption from the reason for its existence. The program involved in the Parker case was designed to enhance the market price of raisins by regulating both output and price.<sup>15</sup> In other words, the state policy was one that replaced price competition with economic regulation. Price support programs like the one involved in Parker cannot possibly succeed if every individual producer is free to participate or not participate in the program at his option. In Parker, the challenged price fixing was the heart of California's support program for agriculture; without immunity from the Sherman Act, the State would have had to abandon the project.

<sup>13</sup> As in Cantor, the Court concluded in the Midcal case that the State's ostensible compulsion of the resale-price-maintenance program was not alone sufficient to confer state-action immunity. The State neither set the prices nor reviewed their reasonableness, nor did it monitor market conditions and evaluate the effectiveness of the program. Under those conditions, the "State simply authorizes price setting and enforces the prices set by private parties. . . . The national policy in favor of competition cannot be thwarted by casting such a gauzy cloak of state involvement over what is essentially a private price-fixing arrangement." 445 U.S., at 105-106.

<sup>14</sup> Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S., at 597 (quoting Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 357 \(1963\)). In United States v. National Assn. of Securities Dealers, the Court pointed out that "[implied] antitrust immunity is not favored, and can be justified only by a convincing showing of clear repugnancy between antitrust laws and the regulatory system. See, e. g., United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S., at 348; United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 197-206 \(1939\)." 422 U.S., at 719-720; see also nn. 5, 6, supra. These cases are, of course, consistent with the "cardinal rule," applicable to legislation generally, that repeals by implication are not favored. Posadas v. National City Bank, 296 U.S. 497, 503. (1936).

<sup>15</sup> "The California Agricultural Prorate Act authorizes the establishment, through action of state officials, of programs for the marketing of agricultural commodities produced in the state, so as to restrict competition among the growers and maintain prices in the distribution of their commodities to packers. The declared purpose of the Act is to 'conserve the agricultural wealth of the State' and to 'prevent economic waste in the marketing of agricultural products' of the state." 317 U.S., at 346.

"The declared objective of the California Act is to prevent excessive supplies of agricultural commodities from 'adversely affecting' the market, and although the statute speaks in terms of 'economic stability' and 'agricultural waste' rather than of price, the evident purpose and effect of the regulation is to 'conserve agricultural wealth of the state' by raising and maintaining prices, but 'without permitting unreasonable profits to producers.'" Id. at 355.

[****51] In this case, the common denominator in the States' regulatory programs for motor carriers is their reservation of the power to evaluate the reasonableness of proposed rates and [*76] terms of carriage.<sup>16</sup> In these [**1737] programs, "no State requires that all rates among competing carriers for identical service be uniform, [and] no State requires, either by statute or regulation, or other express legislative or administrative mandate, that rates proposed by carriers be formulated by rate conferences." 467 F.Supp. 471, 477 (ND Ga. 1979). When, as here, state regulatory policies are permissive rather than mandatory, there is no necessary conflict between the antitrust laws and the regulatory systems; the regulated entity may comply with the edicts of each sovereign. Indeed, it is almost meaningless to contemplate a "regulatory" policy that gives every regulated entity carte blanche to excuse itself from the consequences of the regulation. Even a policy against speeding could not be enforced if every motorist could drive as fast as he chose. When a State declares that a regulated entity need not follow a regulatory procedure, it as much as admits that [****52] this element is inconsequential [***58] to the ultimate success of the regulatory program.<sup>17</sup>

[****53] [*77] As I have noted, the Reed-Bulwinkle Act<sup>18</sup> [****54] authorizes collective ratemaking by interstate carriers under some circumstances. The Court doubts whether "Congress intended to prevent the States from adopting virtually identical policies at the intrastate level." Ante, at 60, n. 22. The Reed-Bulwinkle exemption, however, has been abolished for single-line rate requests, and to the extent that it still applies to general rate requests, the rate bureaus must follow stringent procedural safeguards which channel their conduct into useful informational tasks and thereby diminish the threat of anticompetitive misconduct.<sup>19</sup> [****55] Even if there were sound policy reasons<sup>20</sup> for extending the Reed-Bulwinkle [**1738] exemption, [*78] as amended, to a state

<sup>16</sup> See Ga. Code Ann. §§ 46-2-25(b), 46-7-18 (Supp. 1984); Miss. Code Ann. §§ 77-7-217, 77-7-221 (1972); N. C. Gen. Stat. §§ 62-134(b), 62-146, 62-147 (1982); Tenn. Code Ann. §§ 65-5-203, 65-15-119 (1982).

<sup>17</sup> By consolidating petitions for rate modifications, collective ratemaking arguably preserves the resources of the state regulatory Commissions and promotes simplicity and uniformity in the intrastate rate structure. See App. 60-61, 83-84, 90-91. Under the statutes governing the state regulatory programs, however, the carriers may, at any time, decline to participate in collective ratemaking, and deprive the States of these purported advantages. Ante, at 51. That being so, it is difficult for the States to argue that these facets of their regulatory systems are essential to the program's success. Brief for State of Iowa et al. as Amici Curiae 6 ("The authorization of the price-fixing agreement, collective ratemaking, by the states serves no cognizable state interest").

The States also contend that the defendants provide a valuable information-gathering service for motor carriers. App. 60-61, 84, 90. The District Court's final judgment, however, would not have interfered with this function. Id., at 99 ("Each defendant may provide statistical and other economic data and advice to any carrier wishing to avail itself of defendants' expertise").

<sup>18</sup> See n. 8, supra.

<sup>19</sup> Under the exemption, as amended, the ratemaking conferences, among other things, must disclose the names of their members and affiliates of their members, 49 U. S. C. § 10706(b)(3)(A); the organization must limit discussion and voting to allowed subjects and parties, § 10706(b)(3)(B)(i); "the organization may not file a protest or complaint with the Commission against any tariff item published by or for the account of any motor carrier," § 10706(b)(3)(B)(ii); "the organization may not permit one of its employees or any employee committee to docket or act upon any proposal effecting a change in any tariff item," § 10706(b)(3)(B)(iv); "upon request, the organization must divulge to any person the name of the proponent of a rule or rate docketed with it, must admit any person to any meeting at which rates or rules will be discussed or voted upon, and must divulge to any person the vote cast by any member carrier on any proposal before the organization," § 10706(b)(3)(B)(v); and the organization shall make a final disposition of rate proposals within 120 days, § 10706(b)(3)(B)(vii). See generally ICC v. American Trucking Assns., Inc., 467 U.S. 354 (1984).

<sup>20</sup> In the legislative history of the 1980 Motor Carrier Act, however, Congress suggested otherwise:

"During the course of its hearings, the Committee heard a good deal of criticism of the rate bureau process. . . . The disadvantage is that the system inherently tends to result in rates that will be compensatory for even the least efficient motor carrier participating in the rate discussions. When this happens, consumers lose the benefit of price competition that would occur if more efficient carriers were able to offer more attractive rates. Another serious problem has been the closed nature of regulatory program that did not contain comparable procedural safeguards, "[these] considerations are . . . not for us. . . . Congress is the body to amend [the statute] and not this court, by a process of judicial legislation wholly unjustifiable." United States v. Trans-Missouri [\[\*\*\*59\]](#) Freight Assn., 166 U.S., at 340.

The Policy of Competition

The Court embraces the defendants' specious argument that "insofar as it encourages States to require, rather than merely permit, anticompetitive conduct, a compulsion requirement may result in greater restraints on trade." Ante, at 61. The Court finds this "result" inconsistent with the \*\*\*\*56 policies of the Sherman Act. This argument is seriously flawed.

On a practical level, the Court's argument assumes that a decision for the Government today would cause the States to rush into enactment legislation compelling price fixing in the motor carrier industry. Moreover, the Court's argument assumes that a Congress that only recently has acted to increase competition in the interstate motor carrier field would remain silent in the face of anticompetitive legislation at the intrastate level. These assumptions are wholly speculative.

On a more theoretical level, the Court ignores the anticompetitive effect of the collective ratemaking practices challenged in this litigation.<sup>21</sup> The Court of Appeals correctly observed that "[collective] [rate] formulation clearly tampers with the price structure for intrastate commodities; the rate \*79 bureau arrangement substitutes concerted pricing decisions among competing carriers for the influence of impersonal market forces on proposed rates." 672 F.2d 469, 478 (CA5, Unit B, now CA11, 1982). The increased rates for transportation caused by this behavior are especially grave in a basic industry, like transportation, \*\*\*\*57 where the ripple effects of the increased rates are magnified as raw materials, semifinished and finished goods are transported at various stages of production and distribution.

Active supervision of the rate bureau process -- like that provided in the Motor Carrier Act of 1980 -- might minimize the anticompetitive effects of collective ratemaking.<sup>22</sup> To the extent that the State Regulatory Commissions are structured like the ICC in the Pennsylvania Railroad case, however, they only have the power to reject the rates proposed by the carriers if those rates fall outside the "zone of reasonableness." Unless the Commissions "actively supervise" the price-fixing \*\*\*\*58 process itself, they cannot eliminate the upward pressure on rates caused by collusive ratemaking. Unfortunately, the nature of the "active supervision" of those carriers who take part in collective ratemaking is not fully disclosed by the record.<sup>23</sup>

IV

Whether it is wise or unwise policy \*\*\*\*60 for the Federal Government to seek to enforce the Sherman Act in this case is not a question that this Court is authorized to consider. The District Court and the Court of Appeals \*\*\*\*59 correctly applied established precedent \*\*1739 in holding that the Government is entitled \*80 to an injunction against the defendants' price fixing. Such price fixing is unlawful unless it is expressly authorized by statute, or the rate bureau proceedings. Voting upon specific rate proposals is done behind closed doors." S. Rep. No. 96-641, p. 13 (1980). See also H. R. Rep. No. 96-1069, p. 27 (1980).

---

<sup>21</sup> "It has been held too often to require elaboration now that price fixing is contrary to the policy of competition underlying the Sherman Act and that its illegality does not depend on a showing of unreasonableness since it is conclusively presumed to be unreasonable." United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 351 U.S., at 309-310.

<sup>22</sup> The Court of Appeals, however, found that the State Commissions' scrutiny of the reasonableness of proposed rates satisfies the active supervision requirement. 702 F.2d 532, 539, n. 12 (CA5, Unit B, now CA11, 1983) (en banc).

<sup>23</sup> Some of the States' statutes and implementing regulations indicate that the process of collective ratemaking is being supervised on a limited basis. See, e. g., N. C. Gen. Stat. § 62-152.1\(c\) (1982); Ga. Pub. Serv. Comm'n Rule 1-3-1-14 (1983); Tenn. Pub. Serv. Comm'n Rule 1220-2-1-40 (1974).

required by a State's regulatory program. Today the Court authorizes collective ratemaking by intrastate motor carriers even though the State has only permitted it in a program regulating the reasonableness of prices in the industry. Immunity of this type was rejected by the Court in the South-Eastern Underwriters and Pennsylvania Railroad cases, but today, under the shroud of the state-action doctrine,<sup>24</sup> it is resurrected.

Accordingly, I respectfully [****60] dissent.

References

---

13 Am Jur 2d, Carriers 105; 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 15, 45

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:1 et seq.

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:101 et seq.

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, Forms 21-30

12 Am Jur Legal Forms 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 178:1 et seq.

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1 et seq.

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 9, 45

L Ed Index to Annos, Carriers; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; "State Action"; States

ALR Quick Index ,Carriers ;Restraints of Trade and Monopolies ;States

Federal Quick Index, Carriers; Monopolies [****61] and Restraints of Trade; States

Annotation References:

What constitutes "state action" under rule exempting state and local governmental action from antitrust laws. 70 L Ed 2d 973.

Supreme Court's views as to what constitutes per se illegal "price fixing" under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 64 L Ed 2d 997.

Applicability of federal antitrust laws as affected by other federal statutes or by Federal Constitution. 45 L Ed 2d 841.

Valid governmental action as conferring immunity or exemption from private liability under the federal antitrust laws.
12 ALR Fed 329.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>24</sup> Since the Court does not reach it, ante, at 53, n. 11, 55, n. 17, I do not address the merits of the Noerr-Pennington question. See Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657 \(1965\); Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127 \(1961\).

Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

February 19, 1985, Argued ; June 11, 1985, Decided

No. 83-1368

Reporter

472 U.S. 284 *; 105 S. Ct. 2613 **; 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 ***; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 94 ****; 53 U.S.L.W. 4733; 1985-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,640

NORTHWEST WHOLESALE STATIONERS, INC. v. PACIFIC STATIONERY & PRINTING CO.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 715 F.2d 1393, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

cooperative, expulsion, anticompetitive, retailers, wholesale, Sherman Act, concerted refusal, antitrust, self-regulation, effects, per se rule, rule-of-reason, predominantly, nonmember, procedural protections, procedural safeguards, per se violation, group boycott, Securities Exchange Act, expel, stock, Robinson-Patman Act, purchasing, immunity, supplies, markets

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN1** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Rule-of-reason analysis guides the inquiry into whether an action constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade, unless the challenged action falls into the category of agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN2** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The decision to apply the per se rule turns on whether the practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output or instead one designed to increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive. Per se rules are invoked when surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct so great as to render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Eminent Domain Proceedings

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN3 [] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Certain concerted refusals to deal or group boycotts are so likely to restrict competition without any offsetting efficiency gains that they should be condemned as per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Cooperatives > Member Duties & Liabilities

Business & Corporate Law > Cooperatives > General Overview

HN4 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The act of expulsion from a wholesale cooperative does not necessarily imply anticompetitive animus and thereby raise a probability of anticompetitive effect. Unless the cooperative possesses market power or exclusive access to an element essential to effective competition, the conclusion that expulsion is virtually always likely to have an anticompetitive effect is not warranted.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Expulsion of a member from a cooperative buying agency held not to be a per se violation of the antitrust laws.

Summary

This case presented the question whether a per se violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) occurs when a cooperative buying agency comprising various retailers expels a member without providing any procedural means for challenging the expulsion. The United States District Court for the District of Oregon entered summary judgment in favor of the cooperative, holding that a rule-of-reason analysis should govern the case, and finding no anticompetitive effect of the expulsion on the basis of the record as presented. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed, holding that the expulsion of a member from a cooperative providing favorable prices to members amounts to a group boycott, which is a per se violation of 1 of the Sherman Act unless sanctioned by a specific legislative mandate for industry self-regulation, and that, while 4 of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13b) provides such a mandate by authorizing price discrimination by cooperatives in favor of their members, this does not immunize an expulsion from per se invalidation unless the cooperative provides procedural safeguards sufficient to prevent arbitrary expulsions and to furnish a basis for judicial review (715 F2d 1393).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. In an opinion by Brennan, J., expressing the unanimous view of the seven participating members of the court, it was held (1) that 4 of the Robinson-Patman Act insulates cooperatives only from the price discrimination provisions of that Act, and is not a mandate for self-regulation by cooperatives which limits the application of the Sherman Act; (2) that the presence or absence of procedural safeguards in the expulsion of a cooperative member thus does not determine the appropriate mode of antitrust analysis; and (3) that the act of expulsion from a wholesale cooperative does not raise a probability of anticompetitive effect, allowing the application of the per se rule, unless the party seeking the application of that rule makes some showing that the cooperative possesses market power or unique access to a business element necessary for effective competition.

Marshall and Powell, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > per se rule -- application to cooperatives -- effect of procedure in expulsion of member -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

Whether a per se violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) occurs when a cooperative buying agency comprising various retailers expels a member, and thus allegedly engages in a concerted refusal to deal with the former member on an equal footing, does not depend on whether or not the cooperative has adequate procedural safeguards governing the expulsion decision; if the challenged concerted activity amounts to a per se violation, no amount of procedural protection will save it, and if it does not, no lack of procedural protections will convert it into a per se violation.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > per se rule -- application to expulsion of member from cooperative -- required showing of anticompetitive effect -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

The expulsion of a member from a cooperative buying agency, allegedly resulting in a concerted refusal to deal with the former member on an equal basis, is not properly analyzed as a per se violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) unless the member challenging expulsion makes some showing that the cooperative possesses market power or unique access to a business element necessary for effective competition.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > per se rule -- when applicable -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The decision to apply a per se rule in determining whether a practice violates 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), rather than undertaking a full-fledged rule-of-reason inquiry, turns on whether the practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and to decrease output, or whether it is instead one designed to increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §12 > cooperatives -- scope of exemption from antitrust laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

Section 4 of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13b) is no more than a narrow immunity for cooperatives from the price discrimination provisions of that Act, and cannot be construed as granting cooperatives a blanket exception from that Act or from any portion of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.); it does not provide a broad mandate for industry self-regulation which would have to be accommodated by narrowing the application of the Sherman Act.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > joint ventures -- process requirement -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The antitrust laws do not themselves impose on joint ventures a requirement of process.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > per se rule -- required showing by plaintiff -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

A plaintiff seeking application of the per se rule in an antitrust case must present a threshold case that the challenged activity falls into a category likely to have predominantly anticompetitive effects.

Syllabus

---

Petitioner is a wholesale purchasing cooperative whose membership consists of office supply retailers in the Pacific Northwest States. Nonmember retailers can purchase supplies from petitioner at the same price as members, but since petitioner annually distributes its profits to members in the form of a percentage rebate, members effectively purchase supplies at a lower price than do nonmembers. Petitioner expelled respondent from membership without any explanation, notice, or hearing. Thereafter, respondent brought suit in Federal District Court, alleging that the expulsion without procedural protections was a group boycott that limited its ability to compete and should be considered per se violative of § 1 of the Sherman Act. On cross-motions for summary judgment, the District Court rejected application of the per se rule and held instead that rule-of-reason analysis should govern the case. Finding no anticompetitive effect on the basis of the record, the court granted summary judgment for petitioner. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding [****2] that although § 4 of the Robinson-Patman Act expressly approves price discrimination occasioned by such an expulsion as the one in question and thus provides a mandate for self-regulation, nevertheless, because petitioner had not provided any procedural safeguards, the expulsion of respondent was not shielded by § 4 and therefore constituted a per se group boycott in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Held: Petitioner's expulsion of respondent does not fall within the category of activity that is conclusively presumed to be anticompetitive so as to mandate per se invalidation under § 1 of the Sherman Act as a group boycott or concerted refusal to deal. Pp. 289-298.

(a) Section 4 of the Robinson-Patman Act, which is no more than a narrow immunity from the price discrimination prohibitions of that Act, cannot properly be construed as an exemption from or repeal of any portion of the Sherman Act or as a broad mandate for industry self-regulation. Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, distinguished. In any event, the absence of procedural safeguards in this case can in no sense determine the antitrust analysis, since if the challenged [***3] expulsion amounted to a per se violation of § 1, no amount of procedural protection would save it, whereas if the expulsion did not amount to a violation of § 1, no lack of procedural protections would convert it into a per se violation. Pp. 291-293.

(b) The act of expulsion from a wholesale cooperative does not necessarily imply anticompetitive animus so as to raise a probability of anticompetitive effect. Unless it is shown that the cooperative possesses market power or exclusive access to an element essential to effective competition, the conclusion that expulsion is virtually always likely to have an anticompetitive effect is not warranted. Absent such a showing with respect to a cooperative buying arrangement, courts should apply a rule-of-reason analysis. Here, respondent, focusing on the argument that the lack of procedural safeguards required per se liability, made no such showing. But because the Court of Appeals applied an erroneous per se analysis, it never evaluated the District Court's rule-of-reason analysis rejecting respondent's claim, and therefore a remand is appropriate to permit appellate review of that determination. Pp. 293-298.

Counsel: David J. [***4] Sweeney argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Douglas R. Grim and Mark B. Weintraub.

Catherine G. O'Sullivan argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging reversal. With her on the brief were Solicitor General Lee, Assistant Attorney General McGrath, Deputy Solicitor General Wallace, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Rule, and Edward T. Hand.

Joseph P. Bauer argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief was Robert R. Carney. *

Judges: BRENNAN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which all other Members joined except MARSHALL and POWELL, JJ., who took no part in the decision of the case.

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

---

[*285] [***206] [**2615] JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [↑] [1A] [LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [↑] [2A] This case requires that we decide whether a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1, occurs when a cooperative buying agency comprising various retailers expels a member without providing any procedural means for [*286] challenging the expulsion.<sup>1</sup> The case also raises

---

* Ira S. Sacks filed a brief for Indian Head Inc. as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

<sup>1</sup> That section reads in relevant part:

"Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal."

broader questions as to when per se antitrust analysis is appropriately [****5] applied to joint activity that is susceptible of being characterized as a concerted refusal to deal.

I

Because the District Court ruled on cross-motions for summary judgment after only limited discovery, this case comes to us on a sparse record. Certain background facts are undisputed. Petitioner Northwest Wholesale Stationers is a purchasing cooperative made up of approximately 100 office supply retailers in the Pacific Northwest States. The cooperative acts as the primary wholesaler for the retailers. Retailers that are not members of the cooperative can purchase wholesale supplies from Northwest at the same price as members. At the end of each year, however, Northwest distributes its profits to members in the form of a percentage rebate on purchases. Members therefore effectively [****6] purchase supplies at a price significantly lower than do nonmembers.<sup>2</sup> Northwest also provides certain warehousing facilities. The cooperative arrangement thus permits the participating retailers to achieve economies of scale in purchasing and warehousing that would otherwise be [*287] unavailable to them. In fiscal 1978 Northwest had $ 5.8 million in sales. App. 73.

Respondent Pacific Stationery & Printing Co. sells office supplies at [****7] both the retail and wholesale levels. Its total sales in fiscal 1978 were approximately $ 7.6 million; the record does not indicate what percentage of revenue is attributable to retail and what percentage is attributable to wholesale. Pacific became a member of Northwest in 1958. In 1974 Northwest amended its bylaws [***207] to prohibit members from engaging in both retail and wholesale operations. See id., at 50, 59. A grandfather clause preserved Pacific's membership rights. See id., at 59. In 1977 ownership of a controlling share of the stock of Pacific changed hands, id., at 70, and the new owners did not officially bring this change to the attention of the directors of Northwest. This failure to notify apparently violated another of Northwest's bylaws. See id., at 59 (Bylaws, Art. VIII, § 5).

In 1978 the membership of Northwest voted to expel Pacific. Most factual matters relevant to the expulsion are in dispute. No explanation for the expulsion was advanced at the time, and Pacific was given neither notice, a hearing, nor any other opportunity to challenge the decision. Pacific argues that the expulsion resulted from Pacific's decision to maintain [****8] a wholesale [**2616] operation. See Brief in Opposition 11. Northwest contends that the expulsion resulted from Pacific's failure to notify the cooperative members of the change in stock ownership. See Pet. for Cert. 8. The minutes of the meeting of Northwest's directors do not definitively indicate the motive for the expulsion. App. 75-77. It is undisputed that Pacific received approximately $ 10,000 in rebates from Northwest in 1978, Pacific's last year of membership. Beyond a possible inference of loss from this fact, however, the record is devoid of allegations indicating the nature and extent of competitive injury the expulsion caused Pacific to suffer.

[*288] Pacific brought suit in 1980 in the United States District Court for the District of Oregon alleging a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The gravamen of the action was that Northwest's expulsion of Pacific from the cooperative without procedural protections was a group boycott that limited Pacific's ability to compete and should be considered per se violative of § 1. See Complaint para. 8, App. 4-5. On cross-motions for summary judgment the District Court rejected application of the per se rule [****9] and held instead that rule-of-reason analysis should govern the case. Finding no anticompetitive effect on the basis of the record as presented, the court granted summary judgment for Northwest. See App. to Pet. for Cert. 22-24.

<sup>2</sup> Although this patronage rebate policy is a form of price discrimination, § 4 of the Robinson-Patman Act specifically sanctions such activity by cooperatives:

"Nothing in this Act shall prevent a cooperative association from returning to its members, producers, or consumers the whole, or any part of, the net earnings or surplus resulting from its trading operations, in proportion to their purchases or sales from, to, or through the association." 49 Stat. 1528, 15 U. S. C. § 13b.

A relevant state-law provision provides analogous protection. Ore. Rev. Stat. § 646.030 (1983).

472 U.S. 284, *288; 105 S. Ct. 2613, **2616; 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, ***207; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 94, ****9

The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed, holding "that the uncontested facts of this case support a finding of per se liability." 715 F.2d 1393, 1395 \(1983\). The court reasoned that the cooperative's expulsion of Pacific was an anticompetitive concerted refusal to deal with Pacific on equal footing, which would be a per se violation of § 1 in the absence of any specific legislative mandate for self-regulation sanctioning the expulsion. The court noted that § 4 of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13b, specifically approves the price discrimination occasioned by such expulsion and concluded that § 4 therefore provided a mandate for self-regulation. Such a legislative mandate, according to the court, would ordinarily result in evaluation of the challenged practice under the rule of reason. But, drawing on Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 348-349 \(1963\), the court decided [****10] that rule-of-reason analysis was appropriate only on the condition that the cooperative had provided procedural safeguards sufficient to prevent arbitrary expulsion [***208] and to furnish a basis for judicial review. Because Northwest had not provided any procedural safeguards, the court held that the expulsion of Pacific was not shielded by Robinson-Patman immunity and therefore constituted [*289] a per se group boycott in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. 715 F.2d, at 1395-1398.

We granted certiorari to examine this application of Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, supra, in an area of antitrust law that has not been free of confusion.<sup>3</sup> 469 U.S. 814 (1984). We reverse.

II

The decision of the cooperative members to expel Pacific was certainly a restraint of trade [****11] in the sense that every commercial agreement restrains trade. Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238 \(1918\). Whether this action violates § 1 of the Sherman Act depends on whether it is adjudged an unreasonable restraint. Ibid. HN1 Rule-of-reason analysis guides the inquiry, see Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1 \(1911\), [**2617] unless the challenged action falls into the category of "agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 \(1958\).

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]This per se approach permits categorical judgments with respect to certain business practices that have proved to be predominantly anticompetitive. Courts can thereby avoid the "significant costs" in "business certainty and litigation efficiency" that a full-fledged rule-of-reason inquiry entails. Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 343-344 \(1982\). [****12] See also United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 609-610 \(1972\). HN2 The decision to apply the per se rule turns on "whether the practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict [*290] competition and decrease output . . . or instead one designed to 'increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive.'" Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20 \(1979\) (citations omitted). See also National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 103-104 \(1984\) ("Per se rules are invoked when surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct so great as to render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct").

This Court has long held that HN3 certain concerted refusals to deal or group boycotts are so likely to restrict competition without any offsetting efficiency gains that they should be condemned as per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act. See Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207 [**209] (1959); [****13] United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 \(1966\); Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656 \(1961\); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1 \(1945\); Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457 \(1941\); Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600 \(1914\). The question presented in this case is whether Northwest's decision to expel Pacific should fall within this category of activity that is conclusively presumed to be anticompetitive.<sup>4</sup> The Court of Appeals held that the exclusion of Pacific from the cooperative should conclusively be presumed unreasonable on the ground that Northwest provided no procedural protections to Pacific. Even if the lack of procedural protections does not justify a conclusive presumption of predominantly anticompetitive effect, the mere act of expulsion of a competitor from a wholesale cooperative might be argued to be sufficiently likely to have such effects under [*291] the present circumstances and therefore to justify application of the [****14] per se rule. These possibilities will be analyzed separately.

---

<sup>3</sup>See L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 229-230 (1977); Bauer, Per Se Illegality of Concerted Refusals to Deal: A Rule Ripe for Reexamination, 79 Colum. L. Rev. 685 (1979).

A

The Court of Appeals drew from *Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341 \(1963\)*, a broad rule that the conduct of a cooperative venture -- including a concerted refusal to deal -- undertaken pursuant to a [**2618] legislative mandate for self-regulation is immune from per se scrutiny and subject to rule-of-reason analysis only if adequate procedural safeguards accompany self-regulation. We disagree and conclude that the approach of the Court in Silver has no proper application to the present controversy.

The Court in Silver framed the issue as follows:

"[Whether] the New York Stock Exchange is to be held liable to a nonmember broker-dealer under the antitrust [***15] laws or regarded as impliedly immune therefrom when, pursuant to rules the Exchange has adopted under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, it orders a number of its members to remove private direct telephone wire connections previously in operation between their offices and those of the nonmember, without giving the nonmember notice, assigning him any reason for the action, or affording him an opportunity to be heard."
Id., at 343.

Because the New York Stock Exchange occupied such a dominant position in the securities trading markets that the boycott would devastate the nonmember, the Court concluded that the refusal to deal with the nonmember would amount to a per se violation of § 1 unless the Securities Exchange Act provided an immunity. Id., at 347-348. The question for the Court thus was whether effectuation of the policies of the Securities Exchange Act required partial repeal of the Sherman Act insofar as [***210] it proscribed this aspect of exchange self-regulation.

[*292] Finding exchange self-regulation -- including the power to expel members and limit dealings with nonmembers -- to be an essential policy of the Securities [***16] Exchange Act, the Court held that the Sherman Act should be construed as having been partially repealed to permit the type of exchange activity at issue. But the interpretive maxim disfavoring repeals by implication led the Court to narrow permissible self-policing to situations in which adequate procedural safeguards had been provided.

"Congress . . . cannot be thought to have sanctioned and protected self-regulative activity when carried out in a fundamentally unfair manner. The point is not that the antitrust laws impose the requirement of notice and a hearing here, but rather that, in acting without according petitioners these safeguards in response to their request, the Exchange has plainly exceeded the scope of its authority under the Securities Exchange Act to engage in self-regulation." Id., at 364 (footnote omitted).

---

<sup>4</sup> Northwest raises no challenge before this Court to the conclusion of the Court of Appeals that the cooperative's decision to expel Pacific was a "combination or conspiracy" affecting interstate commerce within the meaning of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Thus it was the specific need to accommodate the important national policy of promoting effective exchange self-regulation, tempered by the principle that the Sherman Act should be narrowed only to the extent necessary to effectuate that policy, that dictated the result in Silver.

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A]Section 4 of the Robinson-Patman Act is not comparable [****17] to the self-policing provisions of the Securities Exchange Act. That section is no more than a narrow immunity from the price discrimination prohibitions of the Robinson-Patman Act itself. The Conference Report makes clear that the exception was intended solely to "safeguard producer and consumer cooperatives against any charge of violation of the act based on their distribution of earnings or surplus among their members on a patronage basis." H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 2951, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., 9 (1936) (emphasis added). This section has never been construed as granting cooperatives a blanket exception from the Robinson-Patman Act and cannot plausibly be construed as an exemption to or [*293] repeal of any portion of the Sherman Act.<sup>5</sup> "There is nothing in the last section of the bill [containing § 4] [**2619] that distinguishes cooperatives, either favorably or unfavorably, from other agencies in the streams of production and trade, so far as concerns their dealings with others." 80 Cong. Rec. 9419 (1936) (remarks of Rep. Utterback).

[****18] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]In light of this circumscribed congressional intent, there can be no argument that § 4 of the Robinson-Patman Act should be viewed as a broad mandate for industry self-regulation. No need exists, therefore, to narrow the Sherman Act in order to accommodate any competing congressional policy requiring discretionary self-policing. Indeed, Congress would appear to have taken some care to make clear that no constriction of the Sherman Act was intended. In any event, the absence of procedural safeguards can in no sense determine the antitrust analysis. If the challenged concerted [***211] activity of Northwest's members would amount to a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, no amount of procedural protection would save it. If the challenged action would not amount to a violation of § 1, no lack of procedural protections would convert it into a per se violation because the antitrust laws do not themselves impose on joint ventures a requirement of process.

B

This case therefore turns not on the lack of procedural protections but on whether the decision to expel Pacific is properly viewed as a group boycott or concerted refusal to deal mandating per se invalidation. [****19] "Group boycotts" are often listed among the classes of economic activity that merit per se invalidation under § 1. See Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S., at 212; Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S., at 5; Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S., at 348; White Motor Co. v. United [\*294] States, 372 U.S. 253, 259-260 \(1963\). Exactly what types of activity fall within the forbidden category is, however, far from certain. "[There] is more confusion about the scope and operation of the per se rule against group boycotts than in reference to any other aspect of the per se doctrine." L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 229-230 (1977). Some care is therefore necessary in defining the category of concerted refusals to deal that mandate per se condemnation. See St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 543 \(1978\) (concerted refusals to deal "are not a unitary phenomenon"). Cf. Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S., at 9.

Cases to which this Court [****20] has applied the per se approach have generally involved joint efforts by a firm or firms to disadvantage competitors by "either directly denying or persuading or coercing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in the competitive struggle." Sullivan, supra, at 261-262. See, e. g., Silver, supra (denial of necessary access to exchange members); Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656 \(1961\) (denial of necessary certification of product); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1 \(1945\) (denial of important sources of news); Klor's, Inc., supra (denial of wholesale supplies). In these cases, the boycott often cut off access to a supply, facility, or market necessary to enable the boycotted firm to compete, Silver, supra; Radiant Burners, Inc., supra, and frequently the boycotting firms possessed a dominant position in the relevant market. E. g., Silver, supra; Associated Press, supra; Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457 (1941). See generally Brodley, Joint [****21] Ventures and Antitrust Policy, 95 Harv. L. Rev. 1523, 1533, 1563-1565 (1982). In addition, the practices were generally not justified [**2620] by plausible arguments that they were intended to enhance overall efficiency and make markets more competitive. Under such circumstances the likelihood of anticompetitive effects is clear and the possibility of countervailing procompetitive effects is remote.

---

<sup>5</sup> See, e. g., American Motor Specialties Co. v. FTC, 278 F.2d 225, 229 \(CA2\), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 884 \(1960\).

[*295] [***212] Although a concerted refusal to deal need not necessarily possess all of these traits to merit per se treatment, not every cooperative activity involving a restraint or exclusion will share with the per se forbidden boycotts the likelihood of predominantly anticompetitive consequences. For example, we recognized last Term in National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma that per se treatment of the NCAA's restrictions on the marketing of televised college football was inappropriate -- despite the obvious restraint on output -- because the "case involves an industry in which horizontal restraints on competition are essential if the product is to be available at all." 468 U.S., at 101. [***22]

Wholesale purchasing cooperatives such as Northwest are not a form of concerted activity characteristically likely to result in predominantly anticompetitive effects. Rather, such cooperative arrangements would seem to be "designed to increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive." Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., supra, at 20. The arrangement permits the participating retailers to achieve economies of scale in both the purchase and warehousing of wholesale supplies, and also ensures ready access to a stock of goods that might otherwise be unavailable on short notice. The cost savings and order-filling guarantees enable smaller retailers to reduce prices and maintain their retail stock so as to compete more effectively with larger retailers.

Pacific, of course, does not object to the existence of the cooperative arrangement, but rather raises an antitrust challenge to Northwest's decision to bar Pacific from continued membership.<sup>6</sup> [***25] It is therefore the action of expulsion that [*296] must be evaluated to determine whether per se treatment is appropriate. HN4[ The act of expulsion from [***23] a wholesale cooperative does not necessarily imply anticompetitive animus and thereby raise a probability of anticompetitive effect. See Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., supra, at 9. Wholesale purchasing cooperatives must establish and enforce reasonable rules in order to function effectively. Disclosure rules, such as the one on which Northwest relies, may well provide the cooperative with a needed means for monitoring the creditworthiness of its members.<sup>7</sup> [***213] Nor would the expulsion characteristically be likely to result in predominantly anticompetitive effects, at least in the type of situation this case presents. Unless the cooperative possesses market power or exclusive access to an element [**2621] essential to effective competition, the conclusion that expulsion is virtually always likely to have an anticompetitive effect is not warranted. See L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 292-293 (1977); Brodley, 95 Harv. L. Rev., at 1563-1565. Cf. Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12-15 (1984) (absent indication of market power, tying arrangement does not warrant [***24] per se invalidation). See generally *National [*297] Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma*, 468 U.S., at 104, n. 26 ("Per se rules may require considerable inquiry into market conditions before the evidence justifies a presumption of anticompetitive conduct"). Absent such a showing with respect to a cooperative buying arrangement, courts should apply a rule-of-reason <sup>6</sup> Because Pacific has not been wholly excluded from access to Northwest's wholesale operations, there is perhaps some question whether the challenged activity is properly characterized as a concerted refusal to deal. To be precise, Northwest's activity is a concerted refusal to deal with Pacific on substantially equal terms. Such activity might justify per se invalidation if it placed a competing firm at a severe competitive disadvantage. See generally Brodley, Joint Ventures and Antitrust Policy, 95 Harv. L. Rev. 1521, 1532 (1982) ("Even if the joint venture does deal with outside firms, it may place them at a severe competitive disadvantage by treating them less favorably than it treats the [participants in the joint venture]").

<sup>7</sup> Pacific argues, however, that this justification for expulsion was a pretext because the members of Northwest were fully aware of the change in ownership despite lack of formal notice. According to Pacific, Northwest's motive in the expulsion was to place Pacific at a competitive disadvantage to retaliate for Pacific's decision to engage in an independent wholesale operation. Such a motive might be more troubling. If Northwest's action were not substantially related to the efficiency-enhancing or procompetitive purposes that otherwise justify the cooperative's practices, an inference of anticompetitive animus might be appropriate. But such an argument is appropriately evaluated under the rule-of-reason analysis.

analysis. At no time has Pacific made a threshold showing that these structural characteristics are present in this case. See Complaint, App. 2; Motion for Partial Summary Judgment, App. 9.<sup>8</sup>

[****26] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [↑] [2B] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [↑] [6]The District Court appears to have followed the correct path of analysis -- recognizing that not all concerted refusals to deal should be accorded per se treatment and deciding this one should not.<sup>9</sup> The foregoing discussion suggests, however, that a satisfactory threshold determination whether anticompetitive effects would be likely might require a more detailed factual picture of market structure than the District [*298] Court had before it. Nonetheless, in our judgment the District Court's rejection of per se analysis in this case was correct. A plaintiff seeking application of the per se rule must present a threshold case that the challenged activity falls into a category likely to have predominantly anticompetitive effects. The mere allegation of a concerted refusal to deal does not suffice because not all concerted refusals to deal are predominantly anticompetitive. When [***214] the plaintiff challenges expulsion from a joint buying cooperative, some showing must be made that the cooperative possesses market power or unique access to a business element necessary for effective competition. Focusing on the argument that the lack of procedural safeguards [****27] required per se liability, Pacific did not allege any such facts. Because the Court of Appeals applied an erroneous per se analysis in this case, the court never evaluated the District Court's rule-of-reason analysis rejecting Pacific's claim. A remand is therefore appropriate for the limited purpose of permitting appellate review of that determination.

[****28] III

"The per se rule is a valid and useful tool of antitrust policy and enforcement." Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S., at 8. It does not denigrate the [**2622] per se approach to suggest care in application. In this case, the Court of Appeals failed to exercise the requisite care and applied per se analysis inappropriately. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is therefore reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

JUSTICE MARSHALL and JUSTICE POWELL took no part in the decision of this case.

References

---

18 Am Jur 2d, Cooperative Associations 5, 22; 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 30-32, 80

74 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1, 136

---

<sup>8</sup> Given the state of this record it is difficult to understand how the Court of Appeals could have concluded that Pacific "loses the ability to use Northwest's superior warehousing and expedited order-filling facilities, as well as any competitive advantages that may flow simply from being known in the industry as a member of an established cooperative." 715 F.2d 1393, 1395 \(1983\). The District Court had specifically found no anticompetitive effect.

<sup>9</sup> The District Court stated:

"I think that in a case of this nature, in order to move an antitrust violation, it is necessary to show some restraint of competition, and I don't believe that is shown here. Even if it is a group boycott, I still believe under [Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc. v. Hawaiian Oke & Liquors, Ltd., 416 F.2d 71 (CA9 1969)], and Ron Tonkin Gran Turismo, Inc. v. Fiat Distributors, Inc., 637 F.2d 1376 (CA9 1981)], that the Rule of Reason operates. And I think if you apply the Rule of Reason to the facts that are submitted by the parties here that are not disputed in this case, you come to the conclusion that there is [sic] simply been no showing by the Plaintiff in this case of a restraint of competition as distinguished from possible damage to the Plaintiff by being expelled from the association." App. to Pet. for Cert. 23-24.

472 U.S. 284, *298; 105 S. Ct. 2613, **2622; 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, ***214; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 94, ****28

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 9, 12, 16

L Ed Index to Annos, Co-operatives; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Co-operative Associations; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Cooperative Associations; Monopolies [****29] and Restraints of Trade

---

End of Document

Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

March 27, 1985, Argued ; June 19, 1985, Decided

No. 84-510

Reporter

472 U.S. 585 *; 105 S. Ct. 2847 **; 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 ***; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 115 ****; 53 U.S.L.W. 4818; 1985-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,653

ASPEN SKIING CO. v. ASPEN HIGHLANDS SKIING CORP.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 738 F.2d 1509, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

Ski, ticket, mountains, all-Aspen, skiers, season, monopoly power, usage, coupons, competitor, monopolization, lift, exclusionary, consumers, anticompetitive, monopolist, cooperate, marketing, rivals, Sherman Act, interchangeable, advertising, customers, monitored, reasons, pattern of conduct, relevant market, instructions, facilities, multiarea

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN1** [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

**HN2** [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a business generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN4[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

If a firm has been attempting to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency, it is fair to characterize its behavior as predatory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

"Exclusionary" comprehends at the most behavior that not only (1) tends to impair the opportunities of rivals, but also (2) either does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Ski facility operator's refusal to continue marketing arrangement with smaller competitor held to violate 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2).

Summary

A ski resort operator filed suit in the United States District Court for the District of Colorado against the operator of three other skiing facilities in the area, alleging that the latter had monopolized the local market for downhill ski services, in violation of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), by refusing to continue a long-standing marketing arrangement whereby skiers could purchase 6-day tickets usable on a given day at any of the four facilities and the competitors would divide up the revenues based on statistics as to actual usage, and by taking additional actions which made it difficult for the smaller operator to market a multi-area package of its own. The District Court entered judgment on a jury verdict in favor of the smaller operator, after instructing the jury that a firm possessing monopoly power violates 2 of the Sherman Act if it willfully acquires, maintains, or uses that power by anticompetitive or exclusionary means or for anticompetitive or exclusionary purposes, but does not violate the law by refusing to deal with a competitor if there are valid business reasons for that refusal. The United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit affirmed, holding that the multi-day, multi-area tickets in question could be characterized as an "essential facility" which the larger operator had a duty to market jointly with its competitor, and that there was sufficient evidence to support a finding that the larger operator's intent in refusing to continue the marketing arrangement was to create or maintain a monopoly (738 F2d 1509).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Stevens, J., expressing the unanimous view of the eight participating members of the court, it was held that the actions of the larger operator were properly held to violate 2 of the Sherman Act since the evidence was sufficient to support a conclusion that they were not taken for legitimate business reasons, but for the purpose of injuring a competitor.

White, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > acts prohibited -- refusal to continue joint marketing arrangement with competitor -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]

The operator of three of the four skiing facilities in a locality is properly found to have violated 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2) by refusing to continue a long-standing joint marketing arrangement with the operator of the remaining facility whereby skiers could purchase 6-day tickets redeemable on a given day at any of the four facilities and the competitors would divide up the revenues based on statistics as to actual usage, and by taking additional actions which made it difficult for the smaller operator to market a multi-area package of its own, where there is sufficient evidence to support a conclusion that the larger operator did not take these actions because of legitimate business concerns, but instead made a deliberate effort to discourage its customers from doing business with its smaller rival, sacrificing short-run benefits and consumer good will in exchange for a perceived long-run impact on that rival; such a judgment is not based on any erroneous assumption that a firm with monopoly power has a general duty to cooperate with its smaller rivals in a marketing arrangement in order to avoid violating the law.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30 > acts prohibited -- refusal to deal with competitors -- co-operative ventures -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C]

Even a firm with monopoly power has no general duty to engage in a joint marketing program with a competitor, but the absence of an unqualified duty to co-operate does not mean that every time a firm declines to participate in a particular co-operative venture, that decision may not have evidentiary significance, or that it may not give rise to antitrust liability in certain circumstances; under 1 of the Sherman Act, a business generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, but the high value placed on that right does not mean that it is unqualified.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §15 > application of antitrust laws -- effect of motive or intent -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

In determining violations of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), the question of intent is relevant to both the offense of attempt to monopolize and that of monopolization: in the former case, it is necessary to prove a specific intent to accomplish the forbidden objective, an intent which goes beyond the mere intent to do the act; but in the latter case, evidence of intent is merely relevant to the question whether the challenged conduct is fairly characterized as exclusionary, anticompetitive, or predatory.

Syllabus

---

Respondent, which owns one of the four major mountain facilities for downhill skiing at Aspen, Colo., filed a treble-damages action in Federal District Court in 1979 against petitioner, which owns the other three major facilities, alleging that petitioner had monopolized the market for downhill skiing services at Aspen in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. The evidence showed that in earlier years, when there were only three major facilities operated by three independent companies (including both petitioner and respondent), each competitor offered both its own tickets for daily use of its mountain and an interchangeable 6-day all-Aspen ticket, which provided convenience to skiers who visited the resort for weekly periods but preferred to remain flexible about what mountain they might ski each day. Petitioner, upon acquiring its second of the three original facilities and upon opening the fourth, also offered, during most of the ski seasons, a weekly multiarea ticket covering only its mountains, but eventually the all-Aspen ticket outsold petitioner's own multiarea [****2] ticket. Over the years, the method for allocation of revenues from the all-Aspen ticket to the competitors developed into a system based on random-sample surveys to determine the number of skiers who used each mountain. However, for the 1977-1978 ski season, respondent, in order to secure petitioner's agreement to continue to sell all-Aspen tickets, was required to accept a fixed percentage of the ticket's revenues. When respondent refused to accept a lower percentage -- considerably below its historical average based on usage -- for the next season, petitioner discontinued its sale of the all-Aspen ticket; instead sold 6-day tickets featuring only its own mountains; and took additional actions that made it extremely difficult for respondent to market its own multiarea package to replace the joint offering. Respondent's share of the market declined steadily thereafter. The jury returned a verdict against petitioner, fixing respondent's actual damages, and the court entered a judgment for treble damages. The Court of Appeals affirmed, rejecting petitioner's contention that there cannot be a requirement of cooperation between competitors, even when one possesses monopoly powers.

[****3] Held:

1. Although even a firm with monopoly power has no general duty to engage in a joint marketing program with a competitor (and the jury was so instructed here), the absence of an unqualified duty to cooperate does not mean that every time a firm declines to participate in a particular cooperative venture, that decision may not have evidentiary significance, or that it may not give rise to liability in certain circumstances. Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143. The question of intent is relevant to the offense of monopolization in determining whether the challenged conduct is fairly characterized as "exclusionary," "anticompetitive," or "predatory." In this case, the monopolist did not merely reject a novel offer to participate in a cooperative venture that had been proposed by a competitor, but instead elected to make an important change in a pattern of distribution of all-Aspen tickets that had originated in a competitive market and had persisted for several years. It must be assumed that the jury, as instructed by the trial court, drew a distinction "between practices which tend to exclude or restrict competition on the one hand, [****4] and the success of a business which reflects only a superior product, a well-run business, or luck, on the other," and that the jury concluded that there were no "valid business reasons" for petitioner's refusal to deal with respondent. Pp. 600-605.
2. The evidence in the record, construed most favorably in support of respondent's position, is adequate to support the verdict under the instructions given. In determining whether petitioner's conduct may properly be characterized as exclusionary, it is appropriate to examine the effect of the challenged pattern of conduct on consumers, on respondent, and on petitioner itself. Pp. 605-611.

(a) The evidence showed that, over the years, skiers developed a strong demand for the all-Aspen ticket, and that they were adversely affected by its elimination. Pp. 605-607.

(b) The adverse impact of petitioner's pattern of conduct on respondent was established by evidence showing the extent of respondent's pecuniary injury, its unsuccessful attempt to protect itself from the loss of its share of the patrons of the all-Aspen ticket, and the steady decline of its share of the relevant market after the ticket was terminated. Pp. 607-608.

(c) The [****5] evidence relating to petitioner itself did not persuade the jury that its conduct was justified by any normal business purpose, but instead showed that petitioner sought to reduce competition in the market over the long run by harming its smaller competitor. That conclusion is strongly supported by petitioner's failure to offer any efficiency justification whatever for its pattern of conduct. Pp. 608-611.

Counsel: Richard M. Cooper argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Edward Bennett Williams, Harold Ungar, David G. Palmer, and William W. Maywhort.

Tucker K. Trautman argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were John H. Evans, Owen C. Rouse, and John H. Shenefield.*

Judges: STEVENS, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which all other Members joined, except WHITE, J., who took no part in the decision of the case.

Opinion by: STEVENS

Opinion

---

[*587] [**471] [**2849] JUSTICE STEVENS delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN1A [↑] [1A] In a private treble-damages action, the jury found that petitioner Aspen Skiing Company (Ski Co.) had monopolized the market for [****6] downhill skiing services in Aspen, Colorado. The question presented is whether that finding is erroneous as a matter of law because it rests on an assumption that a firm with monopoly power has a duty to cooperate with its smaller rivals in a marketing arrangement in order to avoid violating § 2 of the Sherman Act.<sup>1</sup>

I

[**2850] Aspen is a destination ski resort with a reputation for "super powder," "a wide range of runs," and an "active night life," including "some of the best restaurants in North America." Tr. 765-767. Between 1945 and 1960, private investors independently developed three major facilities for downhill skiing: Aspen Mountain (Ajax),<sup>2</sup> Aspen

---

* Robert E. Cooper and Theodore B. Olson filed a brief for American Airlines, Inc., as amicus curiae urging reversal.

<sup>1</sup> The statute provides, in relevant part:

HN1 [↑] "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 2.

<sup>2</sup> Ski Co. developed Ajax in 1946. The runs are quite steep and primarily designed for expert or advanced intermediate skiers. The base area of Ajax is located within the village of Aspen.

Highlands [*588] (Highlands), <sup>3</sup> [****8] and [****7] Buttermilk. <sup>4</sup> A [***472] fourth mountain, Snowmass, <sup>5</sup> opened in 1967.

The development [****9] of any major additional facilities is hindered by practical considerations and regulatory obstacles. <sup>6</sup> The identification of appropriate topographical conditions for a new site and substantial financing are both essential. Most of the terrain in the vicinity of Aspen that is suitable for downhill skiing cannot be used for that purpose without the approval of the United States Forest Service. That approval is contingent, in part, on environmental concerns. Moreover, the county government must also approve the [*589] project, and in recent years it has followed a policy of limiting growth.

Between 1958 and 1964, three independent companies operated Ajax, Highlands, and Buttermilk. In the early years, each company offered its own day or half-day tickets for use of its mountain. Id., at 152. In 1962, however, the three competitors also introduced an interchangeable ticket. <sup>7</sup> Id., at 1634. The 6-day, all-Aspen ticket provided convenience to [****10] the vast majority of skiers who visited the resort for weekly periods, but preferred to remain flexible about what mountain they might ski each day during the visit. App. 92. It also emphasized the unusual variety in ski mountains available in Aspen.

As initially designed, the all-Aspen ticket program consisted of booklets containing six coupons, each redeemable for a daily lift ticket at Ajax, Highlands, or Buttermilk. The price of the booklet was often discounted from the price of six daily tickets, but [****11] all six coupons had to be used [**2851] within a limited period of time -- seven days, for example. The revenues from the sale of the 3-area coupon books were distributed in accordance with the number of coupons collected at each mountain. Tr. 153, 1634-1638.

In 1964, Buttermilk was purchased by Ski Co., but the interchangeable ticket program continued. In most seasons after it acquired Buttermilk, Ski Co. offered 2-area, 6- or 7-day tickets featuring Ajax and Buttermilk in competition with the 3-area, 6-coupon booklet. Although it sold briskly, the all-Aspen ticket did not sell as well as Ski Co.'s multiarea ticket until Ski Co. opened Snowmass in 1967. Thereafter, [*590] the all-Aspen coupon booklet began to outsell Ski Co.'s ticket featuring only its mountains. Record Ex. LL; Tr. 1646, 1675-1676.

<sup>3</sup> In 1957, the United States Forest Service suggested that Ajax "was getting crowded, and . . . that a ski area ought to be started at Highlands." Tr. 150. Whipple V. N. Jones, who owned an Aspen lodge at the time, discussed the project with Ski Co. officials, but they expressed little interest, telling him that they had "plenty of problems at Aspen now, and we don't think we want to expand skiing in Aspen." Id., at 150-151. Jones went ahead with the project on his own, and laid out a well-balanced set of ski runs: 25% beginner, 50% intermediate, 25% advanced. The base area of Highlands Mountain is located 1 1/2 miles from the village of Aspen. Id., at 154. Respondent Aspen Highlands Skiing Corporation provides the downhill skiing services at Highlands Mountain. Throughout this opinion we refer to both the respondent and its mountain as Highlands.

<sup>4</sup> In 1958, Friedl Pfeiffer and Arthur Pfister began developing the ranches they owned at the base of Buttermilk Mountain into a third ski area. Pfeiffer, a former Olympian, was the director of the ski school for Ski Co., and the runs he laid out were primarily for beginners and intermediate skiers. More advanced runs have since been developed. The base area of Buttermilk is located approximately 2 1/4 miles from the village of Aspen. Id., at 152, 1471-1472, 1526; Deposition of Paul Nitze 6-7.

<sup>5</sup> In the early 1960's William Janss, a former ski racer, and his associates had acquired three ranches in the Snowmass Valley, and had secured Forest Service permits for a ski area. The developer sold the company holding the permits to Ski Co. to allow it to develop a downhill skiing facility for the project, leaving him to develop the land at the base of the site. A fairly balanced mountain was developed with a mixture of beginner, intermediate, and advanced runs. Id., at 14-16; Tr. 1475-1476. The base area of Snowmass is eight miles from the village of Aspen.

<sup>6</sup> Id., at 378-379, 638, 2040-2051, 2069-2070, 2078-2082.

<sup>7</sup> Friedl Pfeiffer, one of the developers of Buttermilk, initiated the idea of an all-Aspen ticket at a luncheon with the owner of Highlands and the President of Ski Co. Pfeiffer, a native of Austria, informed his competitors that "[in] St. Anton, we have a mountain that has three different lift companies -- lifts owned by three different lift companies. . . . We sell a ticket that is interchangeable.' It was good on any of those lifts; and he said, 'I think we should do the same thing here.'" Id., at 153.

[***473] In the 1971-1972 season, the coupon booklets were discontinued and an "around the neck" all-Aspen ticket was developed. This refinement on the interchangeable ticket was advantageous to the skier, who no longer found it necessary to visit the ticket window every morning before gaining access to the slopes. Lift operators at Highlands monitored usage of the ticket [***12] in the 1971-1972 season by recording the ticket numbers of persons going onto the slopes of that mountain. Highlands officials periodically met with Ski Co. officials to review the figures recorded at Highlands, and to distribute revenues based on that count. Id., at 1622, 1639.

There was some concern that usage of the all-Aspen ticket should be monitored by a more scientific method than the one used in the 1971-1972 season. After a one-season absence, the 4-area ticket returned in the 1973-1974 season with a new method of allocating revenues based on usage. Like the 1971-1972 ticket, the 1973-1974 4-area ticket consisted of a badge worn around the skier's neck. Lift operators punched the ticket when the skier first sought access to the mountain each day. A random-sample survey was commissioned to determine how many skiers with the 4-area ticket used each mountain, and the parties allocated revenues from the ticket sales in accordance with the survey's results.

In the next four seasons, Ski Co. and Highlands used such surveys to allocate the revenues from the 4-area, 6-day ticket. Highlands' share of the revenues from the ticket was 17.5% in 1973-1974, 18.5% in 1974-1975, [***13] 16.8% in 1975-1976, and 13.2% in 1976-1977.<sup>8</sup> During these four seasons, Ski Co. did not offer its own 3-area, multiday ticket in competition [*591] with the all-Aspen ticket.<sup>9</sup> By 1977, multiarea tickets accounted for nearly 35% of the total market. Id., at 614, 1367. Holders of multiarea passes also accounted for additional daily ticket sales to persons skiing with them.

[***14] Between 1962 and 1977, Ski Co. and Highlands had independently offered various mixes of 1-day, 3-day, and 6-day passes at their own mountains.<sup>10</sup> In every season except one, however, they had also offered some form of all-Aspen, 6-day ticket, and divided the revenues from those sales on the basis of usage. Nevertheless, for the 1977-1978 season, Ski Co. offered to continue the all-Aspen ticket only if Highlands would accept a 13.2% fixed share of the ticket's revenues.

Although [**2852] that had been Highlands' share of the ticket revenues [***474] in 1976-1977, Highlands contended that that season was an inaccurate measure of its market performance since it had been marked by unfavorable weather and an unusually low number of visiting skiers.<sup>11</sup> Moreover, Highlands wanted to continue [***15] to divide revenues on the basis of actual usage, as that method of distribution allowed it to compete [*592] for the daily loyalties of the skiers who had purchased the tickets. Tr. 172. Fearing that the alternative might be no interchangeable ticket at all, and hoping to persuade Ski Co. to reinstate the usage division of revenues, Highlands eventually accepted a fixed percentage of 15% for the 1977-1978 season. Ibid. No survey was made during that season of actual usage of the 4-area ticket at the two competitors' mountains.

<sup>8</sup> Id., at 167. Highlands' share of the total market during those seasons, as measured in skier visits was 15.8% in 1973-1974, 17.1% in 1974-1975, 17.4% in 1975-1976, and 20.5% in 1976-1977. Record Ex. No. 97, App. 183.

<sup>9</sup> In 1975, the Colorado Attorney General filed a complaint against Ski Co. and Highlands alleging, in part, that the negotiations over the 4-area ticket had provided them with a forum for price fixing in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act and that they had attempted to monopolize the market for downhill skiing services in Aspen in violation of § 2. Record Ex. X. In 1977, the case was settled by a consent decree that permitted the parties to continue to offer the 4-area ticket provided that they set their own ticket prices unilaterally before negotiating its terms. Tr. 229-231.

<sup>10</sup> About 15-20% of each company's ticket revenues were derived from sales to tour operators at a wholesale discount of 10-15%, while 80-85% of the ticket revenues were derived from sales to skiers in Aspen. Id., at 623, 1772.

<sup>11</sup> The 1976-1977 season was "a no snow year." There were less than half as many skier visits (529,800) in that season as in either 1975-1976 (1,238,500) or 1977-1978 (1,273,400). Record Ex. No. 97, App. 183. In addition, Highlands opened earlier than Ski Co.'s mountains and its patrons skied off all the good snow. Ski Co. waited until January and had a better base for the rest of the season. Tr. 228.

In the 1970's the management of Ski Co. increasingly expressed their dislike [****16] for the all-Aspen ticket. They complained that a coupon method of monitoring usage was administratively cumbersome. They doubted the accuracy of the survey and decried the "appearance, deportment, [and] attitude" of the college students who were conducting it. Id., at 1627. See also id., at 398, 405-407, 959. In addition, Ski Co.'s president had expressed the view that the 4-area ticket was siphoning off revenues that could be recaptured by Ski Co. if the ticket was discontinued. Id., at 586-587, 950, 960. In fact, Ski Co. had reinstated its 3-area, 6-day ticket during the 1977-1978 season, but that ticket had been outsold by the 4-area, 6-day ticket nearly two to one. Id., at 613-614.

In March 1978, the Ski Co. management recommended to the board of directors that the 4-area ticket be discontinued for the 1978-1979 season. The board decided to offer Highlands a 4-area ticket provided that Highlands would agree to receive a 12.5% fixed percentage of the revenue -- considerably below Highlands' historical average based on usage. Id., at 396, 585-586. Later in the 1978-1979 season, a member of Ski Co.'s board of directors candidly informed a Highlands official [****17] that he had advocated making Highlands "an offer that [it] could not accept." Id., at 361.

Finding the proposal unacceptable, Highlands suggested a distribution of the revenues based on usage to be monitored by coupons, electronic counting, or random sample surveys. Id., at 188. If Ski Co. was concerned about who was to conduct the survey, Highlands proposed to hire disinterested [*593] ticket counters at its own expense -- "somebody like Price Waterhouse" -- to count or survey usage of the 4-area ticket at Highlands. Id., at 191. Ski Co. refused to consider any counterproposals, and Highlands finally rejected the offer of the fixed percentage.

As far as Ski Co. was concerned, the all-Aspen ticket was dead. In its place Ski Co. offered the 3-area, 6-day ticket featuring only its mountains. In an effort to promote this ticket, Ski Co. embarked on a national advertising campaign that strongly implied to people who were unfamiliar with Aspen that Ajax, [***475] Buttermilk, and Snowmass were the only ski mountains in the area. For example, Ski Co. had a sign changed in the Aspen Airways waiting room at Stapleton Airport in Denver. The old sign had a picture of [****18] the four mountains in Aspen touting "Four Big Mountains" whereas the new sign retained the picture but referred only to three. Id., at 844, 847, 858-859.<sup>12</sup>

Ski [**2853] Co. took additional actions that made it extremely difficult for Highlands to market its own multiarea package to replace the joint offering. Ski Co. discontinued the 3-day, 3-area pass for the 1978-1979 season,<sup>13</sup> and also refused to sell Highlands any lift tickets, either at the tour operator's discount or at retail. Id., at 327.<sup>14</sup> Highlands finally developed [*594] an alternative product, the "Adventure Pack," which consisted of a 3-day pass at Highlands and three vouchers, each equal to the price of a daily lift [****19] ticket at a Ski Co. mountain. The vouchers were guaranteed by funds on deposit in an Aspen bank, and were redeemed by Aspen merchants at full value. Id., at 329-334. Ski Co., however, refused to accept them.

<sup>12</sup> Ski Co. circulated another advertisement to national magazines labeled "Aspen, More Mountains, More Fun." App. 184. The advertisement depicted the four mountains of Aspen, but labeled only Ajax, Buttermilk, and Snowmass. Buttermilk's label is erroneously placed directly over Highlands Mountain. Tr. 860, 1803.

<sup>13</sup> Highlands' owner explained that there was a key difference between the 3-day, 3-area ticket and the 6-day, 3-area ticket: "with the three day ticket, a person could ski on the . . . Aspen Skiing Corporation mountains for three days and then there would be three days in which he could ski on our mountain; but with the six-day ticket, we are absolutely locked out of those people." Id., at 245. As a result of "tremendous consumer demand" for a 3-day ticket, Ski Co. reinstated it late in the 1978-1979 season, but without publicity or a discount off the daily rate. Id., at 622.

<sup>14</sup> In the 1977-1978 negotiations, Ski Co. previously had refused to consider the sale of any tickets to Highlands, noting that it was "obviously not interested in helping sell" a package competitive with the 3-area ticket. Record Ex. No. 16; Tr. 269-270. Later, in the 1978-1979 negotiations, Ski Co.'s vice president of finance told a Highlands official that "[we] will not have anything to do with a four-area ticket sponsored by the Aspen Highlands Skiing Corporation." Id., at 335. When the Highlands official inquired why Ski Co. was taking this position considering that Highlands was willing to pay full retail value for the daily lift tickets, the Ski Co. official answered tersely: "we will not support our competition." Ibid.

472 U.S. 585, *594; 105 S. Ct. 2847, **2853; 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, ***475; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****19

[****20] Later, Highlands redesigned the Adventure Pack to contain American Express Traveler's Checks or money orders instead of vouchers. Ski Co. eventually accepted these negotiable instruments in exchange for daily lift tickets.<sup>15</sup> Id., at 505, 507, 549. Despite some strengths of the product, the Adventure Pack met considerable resistance from tour operators and consumers who had grown accustomed to the convenience and flexibility provided by the all-Aspen ticket. Id., at 784-785, 1041.

Without a convenient all-Aspen ticket, Highlands basically "becomes a day ski area in a destination resort." Id., at 1425. [****21] Highlands' share of the market for downhill skiing services in Aspen declined steadily [***476] after the 4-area ticket based on usage was abolished in 1977: from 20.5% in 1976-1977, to 15.7% in 1977-1978, to 13.1% in 1978-1979, to [*595] 12.5% in 1979-1980, to 11% in 1980-1981.<sup>16</sup> Record Ex. No. 97, App. 183. Highlands' revenues from associated skiing services like the ski school, ski rentals, amateur racing events, and restaurant facilities declined sharply as well.<sup>17</sup>

[****22] II

In 1979, Highlands filed a complaint in the United States District Court for the District of Colorado naming Ski Co. as a [**2854] defendant. Among various claims,<sup>18</sup> the complaint alleged that Ski Co. had monopolized the market for downhill skiing services at Aspen in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, and prayed for treble damages. The case was tried to a jury which rendered a verdict finding Ski Co. guilty of the § 2 violation and calculating Highlands' actual damages at $ 2.5 million. App. 187-190.

In her instructions to the jury, the District Judge explained that the offense of monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in a relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition, maintenance, or use of that power by anticompetitive [****23] or exclusionary means or for anticompetitive or exclusionary [*596] purposes.<sup>19</sup> Tr. 2310. Although the first element was vigorously disputed at the trial and in the Court of Appeals, in this Court Ski Co. does not challenge the jury's special verdict finding that it possessed monopoly power.<sup>20</sup> Nor does Ski Co. criticize the trial court's instructions to the jury concerning the second element of the § 2 offense.

<sup>15</sup> Of course, there was nothing to identify Highlands as the source of these instruments, unless someone saw the skier "taking it out of an Adventure Pack envelope." Id., at 505. For the 1981-1982 season, Ski Co. set its single ticket price at $ 22 and discounted the 3-area, 6-day ticket to $ 114. According to Highlands, this price structure made the Adventure Pack unprofitable. Id., at 535.

<sup>16</sup> In these seasons, Buttermilk Mountain, in particular, substantially increased its market share at the expense of Highlands. Record Ex. BB; Tr. 1806.

<sup>17</sup> See Record Ex. No. 91; Tr. 488, 571-572, 692-694, 698, 701-702. Highlands' ski school had an outstanding reputation, and its share of the ski school market had always outperformed Highlands' share of the downhill skiing market. Id., at 1822. Even some Ski Co. officials had sent their children to ski school at Highlands. Id., at 560-570, 588. After the elimination of the 4-area ticket, however, families or groups purchasing 3-area tickets were reluctant to enroll a beginner among them in the Highlands ski school when the more experienced skiers would have to leave to ski at Ajax, Buttermilk, or Snowmass. Id., at 571.

<sup>18</sup> Highlands also alleged that Ski Co. had conspired with various third parties in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The District Court allowed this claim to go to the jury which rendered a verdict in Ski Co.'s favor. App. 189.

<sup>19</sup> In United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-571 (1966), we explained:

HN2 [↑] "The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident."

<sup>20</sup> The jury found that the relevant product market was "[downhill] skiing at destination ski resorts," that the "Aspen area" was a relevant geographic submarket, and that during the years 1977-1981, Ski Co. possessed monopoly power, defined as the power to control prices in the relevant market or to exclude competitors. See App. 187-188.

[****24] On this element, the jury was instructed that it had to consider whether "Aspen Skiing Corporation willfully acquired, maintained, or used that power by anti-competitive or exclusionary means or for anti-competitive or exclusionary purposes." App. 181. The instructions elaborated:

[***477] "In considering whether the means or purposes were anti-competitive or exclusionary, you must draw a distinction here between practices which tend to exclude or restrict competition on the one hand and the success of a business which reflects only a superior product, a well-run business, or luck, on the other. The line between legitimately gained monopoly, its proper use and maintenance, and improper conduct has been described in various ways. It has been said that obtaining or maintaining monopoly power cannot represent monopolization if the power was gained and maintained by conduct that was honestly industrial. Or it is said that monopoly power which is thrust upon a firm due to its [*597] superior business ability and efficiency does not constitute monopolization.

"For example, a firm that has lawfully acquired a monopoly position is not barred from taking advantage of scale economies [***25] by constructing a large and efficient factory. These benefits are a consequence of size and not an exercise of monopoly power. Nor is a corporation which possesses monopoly power under a duty to cooperate with its business rivals. Also a company which possesses monopoly power and which refuses to enter into a joint operating agreement with a competitor or otherwise refuses to deal with a competitor in some manner does not violate Section 2 if valid business reasons exist for that refusal.

"In other words, if there were legitimate business reasons for the refusal, then the defendant, even if he is found to possess monopoly power in a relevant market, has not violated the law. We are concerned with conduct which unnecessarily excludes or handicaps competitors. This is conduct which does not benefit consumers by making a better product or service available -- or in other [**2855] ways -- and instead has the effect of impairing competition.

"To sum up, you must determine whether Aspen Skiing Corporation gained, maintained, or used monopoly power in a relevant market by arrangements and policies which rather than being a consequence of a superior product, superior business sense, [***26] or historic element, were designed primarily to further any domination of the relevant market or sub-market." Id., at 181-182.

The jury answered a specific interrogatory finding the second element of the offense as defined in these instructions.<sup>21</sup>

[*598] Ski Co. filed a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, contending that the evidence was insufficient to support a § 2 violation as a matter of law. In support of that motion, Ski Co. incorporated the arguments that it had advanced in support of its motion for a directed verdict, at which time it had primarily [***27] contested the sufficiency of [***478] the evidence on the issue of monopoly power. Counsel had, however, in the course of the argument at that time, stated: "Now, we also think, Judge, that there clearly cannot be a requirement of cooperation between competitors." Tr. 1452.<sup>22</sup> [***28] The District Court denied Ski Co.'s motion and entered a judgment awarding Highlands treble damages of $ 7,500,000, costs, and attorney's fees.<sup>23</sup> App. 191-192.

<sup>21</sup> It answered this interrogatory affirmatively:

"Willful Acquisition, Maintenance or Use of Monopoly Power: Do you find by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendants willfully acquired, maintained or used monopoly power by anticompetitive or exclusionary means or for anticompetitive or exclusionary purposes, rather than primarily as a consequence of a superior product, superior business sense, or historic accident?" Id., at 189.

<sup>22</sup> Counsel also appears to have argued that Ski Co. was under a legal obligation to refuse to participate in any joint marketing arrangement with Highlands:

"Aspen Skiing Corporation is required to compete. It is required to make independent decisions. It is required to price its own product. It is required to make its own determination of the ticket that it chooses to offer and the tickets that it chooses not to offer." Tr. 1454.

472 U.S. 585, *598; 105 S. Ct. 2847, **2855; 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, ***478; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****28

[*599] The Court of Appeals affirmed in all respects. 738 F.2d 1509 \(CA10 1984\). The court advanced two reasons for rejecting Ski Co.'s argument that "there was insufficient evidence to present a jury issue of monopolization because, as a matter of law, the conduct at issue was pro-competitive conduct that a monopolist could lawfully engage in."<sup>24</sup> First, relying on United States v. Terminal Railroad Assn. of St. Louis, 224 U.S. 383 \(1912\), [****29] the Court of Appeals held that the multiday, multiarea ticket could be characterized as an "essential facility" that Ski Co. had a duty to market jointly with Highlands. 738 F.2d, at 1520-1521. Second, it held that there was sufficient evidence to support a finding that Ski Co.'s intent in refusing to market the 4-area ticket, "considered together with its other conduct," was to create or maintain a monopoly. Id., at 1522.

In its review of the evidence on the question of intent, the Court of Appeals considered the record "as a whole" and concluded [**2856] that it was not necessary for Highlands to prove that each allegedly anticompetitive act was itself sufficient to demonstrate an abuse of monopoly power. Id., at 1522, n. 18.<sup>25</sup> The court noted that by "refusing to cooperate" with Highlands, Ski Co. "became the only business in Aspen that could offer a multi-day multi-mountain [****30] skiing experience"; that the refusal to offer a 4-mountain ticket resulted in "skiers' frustration over its unavailability"; that there was apparently no valid business reason for refusing to accept the coupons in Highlands' [***479] Adventure Pack; and that after Highlands had modified its Adventure Pack to meet Ski Co.'s objections, Ski Co. had increased its single ticket price to $ 22 "thereby making it unprofitable . . . to market [the] Adventure Pack." Id., at 1521-1522. In reviewing Ski Co.'s argument that it was entitled to a directed verdict, the Court of Appeals assumed that the jury had resolved all contested questions of fact in Highlands' favor.

[*600] III

In this Court, Ski Co. contends that even a firm with monopoly power has no duty to engage in joint marketing with a competitor, that a [***31] violation of § 2 cannot be established without evidence of substantial exclusionary conduct, and that none of its activities can be characterized as exclusionary. It also contends that the Court of Appeals incorrectly relied on the "essential facilities" doctrine and that an "anticompetitive intent" does not transform nonexclusionary conduct into monopolization. In response, Highlands submits that, given the evidence in the record, it is not necessary to rely on the "essential facilities" doctrine in order to affirm the judgment.<sup>26</sup> Tr. of Oral Arg. 34.

In this Court, Ski Co. does not question the validity of the joint marketing arrangement under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Thus, we have no occasion to consider the circumstances that might permit such combinations in the skiing industry. See generally National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 113-115 \(1984\); Broadcast Music, Inc., v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 18-23 \(1979\); Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 51-57 \(1977\).

<sup>23</sup> The District Court also entered an injunction requiring the parties to offer jointly a 4-area, 6-out-of-7-day coupon booklet substantially identical to the "Ski the Summit" booklet accepted by Ski Co. at its Breckenridge resort in Summit County, Colorado. See n. 30, infra. See also supra, at 589. The injunction was initially for a 3-year period, but was later extended through the 1984-1985 season by stipulation of the parties. Highlands represents that "it will not seek an extension of the injunction." Brief for Respondent 1, n. 1. No question is raised concerning the character of the injunctive relief ordered by the District Court.

<sup>24</sup> 738 F.2d, at 1516-1517 (quoting Ski Co.'s brief below).

<sup>25</sup> See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699 \(1962\); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 14 \(1945\).

<sup>26</sup> Highlands also contends that Ski Co.'s present contentions were not properly raised in the District Court. In that court, Ski Co. primarily questioned whether the evidence supported a finding that it possessed monopoly power in a properly defined market. In this Court, on the other hand, Ski Co.'s entire argument relates to the question whether it misused that power. Nevertheless, we agree with the Court of Appeals' conclusion, 738 F.2d, at 1517-1518, that Ski Co.'s motion for a directed verdict did raise the question whether the judgment improperly rested on an assumption that § 2 required a monopolist to cooperate with its rivals.

472 U.S. 585, *600; 105 S. Ct. 2847, **2856; 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, ***479; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****31

[****32] "

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B] [LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [↑] [2A] The central message of the Sherman Act is that a business entity must find new customers and higher profits through internal expansion -- that is, by competing successfully rather than by arranging treaties with its competitors." United States v. Citizens & Southern National Bank, 422 U.S. 86, 116 \(1975\). Ski Co., therefore, is surely correct in submitting that even a firm with monopoly power has no general duty to engage in a joint marketing program with a competitor. Ski Co. is quite wrong, however, in suggesting that the judgment in this case rests on any such proposition of law. For the trial court unambiguously instructed the jury that a firm possessing monopoly power has no duty to cooperate with its business rivals. Supra, at 596-597.

[*601] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [↑] [2B] The absence of an unqualified duty to cooperate does not mean that every time a firm declines to participate in a particular cooperative venture, that decision may not have evidentiary significance, or that it may not give rise to liability in certain circumstances. The absence of a duty to transact business with another firm is, in some respects, merely the counterpart of the independent businessman's [****33] cherished right to select his customers and his associates. The high value that we have placed on the right to refuse to deal with other firms does not mean that the right is unqualified.<sup>27</sup>

[LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [↑] [2C]

In [***480] [**2857] Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143 (1951), we squarely held that this right was not unqualified. Between 1933 and 1948 the publisher of the Lorain Journal, a newspaper, was the only local business disseminating news and advertising in that Ohio town. In 1948, a small radio station was established in a nearby community. In an effort to destroy its small competitor, and thereby regain its "pre-1948 substantial monopoly over the mass dissemination [****34] of all news and advertising," the Journal refused to sell advertising to persons that patronized the radio station. Id., at 153.

In holding that this conduct violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, the Court dispatched the same argument raised by the monopolist here:

"The publisher claims a right as a private business concern to select its customers and to refuse to accept advertisements from whomever it pleases. We do not dispute that general right. 'But the word "right" is one of the most deceptive of pitfalls; it is so easy to slip from a qualified meaning in the premise to an unqualified one in the conclusion. Most rights are qualified.' *American [*602] Bank & Trust Co. v. Federal Bank, 256 U.S. 350, 358*. The right claimed by the publisher is neither absolute nor exempt from regulation. Its exercise as a purposeful means of monopolizing interstate commerce is prohibited by the Sherman Act. The operator of the radio station, equally with the publisher of the newspaper, is entitled to the protection of that Act. HN4 [↑] 'In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the act does not restrict the long recognized right [****35] of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal.' (Emphasis supplied.) United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307. See Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 15; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U.S. 707, 721-723. 342 U.S. at 155.

The Court approved the entry of an injunction ordering the Journal to print the advertisements of the customers of its small competitor.

<sup>27</sup> HN3 [↑] Under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a business "generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761 (1984); United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307 (1919).

472 U.S. 585, *602; 105 S. Ct. 2847, **2857; 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, ***480; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****35

LEdHN[3] [3] In Lorain Journal, the violation of § 2 was an "attempt to monopolize," rather than monopolization, but the question of intent is relevant to both offenses. In the former case it is necessary to prove a "specific intent" to accomplish the forbidden objective -- as Judge Hand explained, "an intent which goes beyond the mere intent to do the act." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 432 (CA2 1945). In the latter case evidence of intent is merely relevant to the question whether the challenged conduct is fairly characterized as "exclusionary" or "anticompetitive" [****36] -- to use the words in the trial court's instructions -- or "predatory," to use a word that scholars seem to favor. Whichever label is used, there is agreement on the proposition that "no monopolist monopolizes unconscious [***481] of what he is doing."<sup>28</sup> As Judge [*603] Bork stated more recently: "Improper exclusion (exclusion not the result of superior efficiency) is always deliberately intended."<sup>29</sup>

[****37] The qualification on the right of a monopolist to deal with whom he pleases is [**2858] not so narrow that it encompasses no more than the circumstances of Lorain Journal. In the actual case that we must decide, the monopolist did not merely reject a novel offer to participate in a cooperative venture that had been proposed by a competitor. Rather, the monopolist elected to make an important change in a pattern of distribution that had originated in a competitive market and had persisted for several years. The all-Aspen, 6-day ticket with revenues allocated on the basis of usage was first developed when three independent companies operated three different ski mountains in the Aspen area. Supra, at 589, and n. 7. It continued to provide a desirable option for skiers when the market was enlarged to include four mountains, and when the character of the market was changed by Ski Co.'s acquisition of monopoly power. Moreover, since the record discloses that interchangeable tickets are used in other multimountain areas which apparently are competitive,<sup>30</sup> it seems appropriate to infer that such tickets satisfy consumer demand in free competitive markets.

[****38] [*604] Ski Co.'s decision to terminate the all-Aspen ticket was thus a decision by a monopolist to make an important change in the character of the market.<sup>31</sup> Such a decision is not necessarily [***482] anticompetitive, and Ski Co. contends that neither its decision, nor the conduct in which it engaged to implement that decision, can fairly be characterized as exclusionary in this case. It recognizes, however, that as the case is presented to us, we must interpret the entire record in the light most favorable to Highlands and give to it the benefit of all inferences

<sup>28</sup> "In order to fall within § 2, the monopolist must have both the power to monopolize, and the intent to monopolize. To read the passage as demanding any 'specific,' intent, makes nonsense of it, for no monopolist monopolizes unconscious of what he is doing. So here, 'Alcoa' meant to keep, and did keep, that complete and exclusive hold upon the ingot market with which it started. That was to 'monopolize' that market, however innocently it otherwise proceeded." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d, at 432.

<sup>29</sup> R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 160 (1978) (hereinafter Bork).

<sup>30</sup> Ski Co. itself participates in interchangeable ticket programs in at least two other markets. For example, since 1970, Ski Co. has operated the Breckenridge resort in Summit County, Colorado. Breckenridge participates in the "Ski the Summit" 4-area interchangeable coupon booklet which allows the skier to ski at any of the four mountains in the region: Breckenridge, Copper Mountain, Keystone, and Arapahoe Basin. Tr. 188, 590, 966, 1070-1081. In the 1979-1980 season Keystone and Arapahoe Basin -- which are jointly operated -- had about 40% of the Summit County market, and the other two ski mountains each had a market share of about 30%. Id., at 1100. During the relevant period of time, Ski Co. also operated Blackcomb Mountain, northeast of Vancouver, British Columbia, which has an interchangeable ticket arrangement with nearby Whistler Mountain, an independently operated facility. Id., at 369, 873-874. Interchangeable lift tickets apparently are also available in some European skiing areas. See n. 7, supra; Tr. 720.

<sup>31</sup> "In any business, patterns of distribution develop over time; these may reasonably be thought to be more efficient than alternative patterns of distribution that do not develop. The patterns that do develop and persist we may call the optimal patterns. By disturbing optimal distribution patterns one rival can impose costs upon another, that is, force the other to accept higher costs." Bork 156.

In § 1 cases where this Court has applied the per se approach to invalidity to concerted refusals to deal, "the boycott often cut off access to a supply, facility or market necessary to enable the boycotted firm to compete, . . . and frequently the boycotting firms possessed a dominant position in the relevant market." Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., ante, at 294.

which the evidence fairly supports, even though contrary inferences might reasonably be drawn. Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 696 (1962).

[****39] LEdHN1C [↑] [1C] Moreover, we must assume that the jury followed the court's instructions. The jury must, therefore, have drawn a distinction "between practices which tend to exclude or restrict competition on the one hand, and the success of a business which reflects only a superior product, a well-run business, or luck, on the other." Supra, at 596. Since the jury was unambiguously instructed that Ski Co.'s refusal to [*605] deal with Highlands "does not violate Section 2 if valid business reasons exist for that refusal," supra, at 597, we must assume that the jury concluded that there were no valid business reasons for the refusal. The question then is whether that conclusion finds support in the record.

IV

The question whether Ski Co.'s conduct may properly be characterized as \*\*2859 exclusionary cannot be answered by simply considering its effect on Highlands. In addition, it is relevant to consider its impact on consumers and whether it has impaired competition in an unnecessarily restrictive way.<sup>32</sup> HN5 [↑] If a firm has been "attempting to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency,"<sup>33</sup> it is fair to characterize its behavior as predatory. It is, accordingly, appropriate \*\*\*\*40 to examine the effect of the challenged pattern of conduct on consumers, on Ski Co.'s smaller rival, and on Ski Co. itself.

Superior Quality of the All-Aspen Ticket

The average Aspen visitor "is a well-educated, relatively affluent, experienced skier who has skied a number of times in the past . . ." Tr. 764. Over 80% of the skiers visiting the resort each year have been there before -- 40% of these repeat visitors have skied Aspen at least five times. Id., at 768. Over the years, they developed a strong demand for the 6-day, all-Aspen ticket in its various refinements. Most experienced skiers quite logically prefer to purchase their tickets at once for the whole period that they will spend \*\*\*\*41 at the resort; they can then spend more time on the slopes and enjoying apres-ski amenities and less time standing in ticket lines. The 4-area attribute of the ticket allowed the skier to \*606 purchase his 6-day ticket in advance while reserving the right to decide in his own time and for his own reasons which mountain he would ski on each day. \*\*\*483 It provided convenience and flexibility, and expanded the vistas and the number of challenging runs available to him during the week's vacation.<sup>34</sup>

[****42] While the 3-area, 6-day ticket offered by Ski Co. possessed some of these attributes, the evidence supports a conclusion that consumers were adversely affected by the elimination of the 4-area ticket. In the first place, the actual record of competition between a 3-area ticket and the all-Aspen ticket in the years after 1967 indicated that skiers demonstrably preferred four mountains to three. Supra, at 589-590, 592. Highlands' expert marketing witness testified that many of the skiers who come to Aspen want to ski the four mountains, and the abolition of the 4-area pass made it more difficult to satisfy that ambition. Tr. 775. A consumer survey undertaken

<sup>32</sup> "Thus, HN6 [↑] 'exclusionary' comprehends at the most behavior that not only (1) tends to impair the opportunities of rivals, but also (2) either does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way." 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law 78 (1978).

<sup>33</sup> Bork 138.

<sup>34</sup> Highlands' expert marketing witness testified that visitors to the Aspen resort "are looking for a variety of skiing experiences, partly because they are going to be there for a week and they are going to get bored if they ski in one area for very long; and also they come with people of varying skills. They need some variety of slopes so that if they want to go out and ski the difficult areas, their spouses or their buddies who are just starting out skiing can go on the bunny hill or the not-so-difficult slopes." Tr. 765. The owner of a condominium management company added: "The guest is coming for a first-class destination ski experience, and part of that, I think, is the expectation of perhaps having available to him the ability to ski all of what is there; i.e., four mountains vs. three mountains. It helps enhance the quality of the vacation experience." Id., at 720. See also id., at 685.

472 U.S. 585, *606; 105 S. Ct. 2847, **2859; 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, ***483; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****42

in the 1979-1980 season indicated that 53.7% of the respondents wanted to ski Highlands, but would not; 39.9% said that they would not be skiing at the mountain of their choice because their ticket would not permit it. Record Ex. No. 75, pp. 36-37.

Expert testimony and anecdotal evidence supported these statistical measures of consumer preference. A major wholesale [*607] tour operator asserted that he would not even consider marketing a 3-area ticket if a 4-area ticket were available.<sup>35</sup> During the 1977-1978 and [****43] 1978-1979 seasons, people with Ski Co.'s 3-area ticket came to Highlands "on a very regular basis [**2860]" and attempted to board the lifts or join the ski school.<sup>36</sup> [****44] Highlands officials were left to explain to angry skiers that they could only ski at Highlands or join its ski school by paying for a 1-day lift ticket. Even for the affluent, this was an irritating situation because it left the skier the option of either wasting 1 day of the 6-day, 3-area pass or obtaining a refund which could take all morning and entailed the forfeit of the 6-day discount.<sup>37</sup> An active officer in the Atlanta Ski Club [***484] testified that the elimination of the 4-area pass "infuriated" him. Tr. 978.

Highlands' Ability to Compete

The adverse impact of Ski Co.'s pattern of conduct on Highlands is not disputed in this Court. Expert testimony described the extent of its pecuniary injury. The evidence concerning its attempt to develop a substitute product either by buying Ski Co.'s daily tickets in bulk, or by marketing its [*608] own Adventure Pack, demonstrates that it tried to protect itself from the loss of its share of the patrons of the all-Aspen ticket. The development of a new distribution system for providing the experience that skiers had learned to expect in Aspen proved to be prohibitively expensive. As a result, Highlands' share of the relevant market steadily declined after the 4-area ticket was terminated. The size of the damages award also confirms the substantial character of the effect of Ski Co.'s conduct upon Highlands.<sup>38</sup>

[****45] Ski Co.'s Business Justification

Perhaps most significant, however, is the evidence relating to Ski Co. itself, for Ski Co. did not persuade the jury that its conduct was justified by any normal business purpose. Ski Co. was apparently willing to forgo daily ticket sales both to skiers who sought to exchange the coupons contained in Highlands' Adventure Pack, and to those who would have purchased Ski Co. daily lift tickets from Highlands if Highlands had been permitted to purchase them in bulk. The jury may well have concluded that Ski Co. elected to forgo these short-run benefits because it was more interested in reducing competition in the Aspen market over the long run by harming its smaller competitor.

<sup>35</sup> "Our philosophy is that . . . to offer [Aspen] as a premier ski resort, our clients should be offered all of the terrain. Therefore, we would never consciously consider offering a three-mountain ticket if there were a four-mountain ticket available." Id., at 1026.

<sup>36</sup> Id., at 356, 492, 572, 679, 1001-1002. For example, the marketing director of Highlands' ski school reported that one frustrated consumer was a dentist from "the Des Moines area [who] came out with two of his children, and he had been told by our base lift operator that he could not board. He became somewhat irate and she had referred him to my office, which is right there on the ski slopes. He came into my office and started out, 'Well, I want to go skiing here, and I don't understand why I can't.' When we got the situation slowed down and explained that there were two different tickets, well, what came out is irritation occurred because he had intended when he came to Aspen to be able to ski all areas . . ." Id., at 356.

<sup>37</sup> The refund policy was cumbersome, and poorly publicized. Id., at 994, 1044, 1053.

<sup>38</sup> In considering the competitive effect of Ski Co.'s refusal to deal or cooperate with Highlands, it is not irrelevant to note that similar conduct carried out by the concerted action of three independent rivals with a similar share of the market would constitute a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. See Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., ante, at 294. Cf. Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 154 (1951).

472 U.S. 585, *608; 105 S. Ct. 2847, **2860; 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, ***484; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****45

That conclusion is strongly supported by Ski Co.'s failure to offer any efficiency justification whatever for its pattern of conduct.<sup>39</sup> [****47] In defending the decision to terminate the jointly [**609] offered ticket, Ski Co. claimed that usage could not be properly monitored. The evidence, however, established that Ski Co. itself monitored the use [**2861] of the 3-area passes based on a count taken by lift operators, and distributed the revenues among its mountains on [****46] that basis.<sup>40</sup> Ski Co. contended that coupons [***485] were administratively cumbersome, and that the survey takers had been disruptive and their work inaccurate. Coupons, however, were no more burdensome than the credit cards accepted at Ski Co. ticket windows. Tr. 330-331. Moreover, in other markets Ski Co. itself participated in interchangeable lift tickets using coupons, n. 30, supra. As for the survey, its own manager testified that the problems were much overemphasized by Ski Co. officials, and were mostly resolved as they arose. Tr. 663-667, 673. Ski Co.'s explanation for the rejection of Highlands' offer to hire -- at its own expense -- a reputable national accounting firm to audit usage of the 4-area tickets at Highlands' mountain, was that there was no way to "control" the audit. Id., at 598.

In the end, Ski Co. was pressed to justify its pattern of conduct on a desire to disassociate itself from -- what it considered [*610] -- the inferior skiing services offered at Highlands. Id., at 401, 422. The all-Aspen ticket based on usage, however, allowed consumers to [****48] make their own choice on these matters of quality. Ski Co.'s purported concern for the relative quality of Highlands' product was supported in the record by little more than vague insinuations, and was sharply contested by numerous witnesses. Moreover, Ski Co. admitted that it was willing to associate with what it considered to be inferior products in other markets. Id., at 964.

LEdHN[1D] [1D] Although Ski Co.'s pattern of conduct may not have been as "bold, relentless, and predatory" as the publisher's actions in Lorain Journal,<sup>41</sup> the record in this case comfortably supports an inference that the monopolist made a deliberate effort to discourage its customers from doing business with its smaller rival. The sale of its 3-area, 6-day ticket, particularly when it was discounted below the daily ticket price, deterred the ticket holders from skiing at Highlands.<sup>42</sup> [****50] The refusal to accept the Adventure Pack coupons in exchange for daily tickets was apparently motivated entirely by a decision to avoid providing any benefit to Highlands even though accepting the coupons would have entailed no cost to Ski Co. itself, would have provided it with immediate benefits, and would have satisfied [****49] its potential customers. Thus the evidence supports an inference that Ski Co. was <sup>39</sup> "The law can usefully attack this form of predation only when there is evidence of specific intent to drive others from the market by means other than superior efficiency and when the predator has overwhelming market size, perhaps 80 or 90 percent. Proof of specific intent to engage in predation may be in the form of statements made by the officers or agents of the company, evidence that the conduct was used threateningly and did not continue when a rival capitulated, or evidence that the conduct was not related to any apparent efficiency. These matters are not so difficult of proof as to render the test overly hard to meet." Bork 157 (emphasis added).

<sup>40</sup> Under the Ski Co. system, each skier's ticket, whether a daily or weekly ticket, is punched before he goes out on the slopes for the day. Revenues are distributed between the mountains on the basis of this count. Tr. 650-651. Ski Co.'s vice president for finance testified that Ski Co. "would never consider" a system like that for monitoring usage on a 4-area ticket: "it's fine to approximate within your own company." Id., at 599. The United States Forest Service, however, required the submission of financial information on a mountain-by-mountain basis as a condition of the permits issued for each mountain. Id., at 643, 945. A lift operator at Ajax conceded that the survey count during the years of the 4-area ticket was "generally pretty close" to the count made by Ski Co.'s staff. Id., at 1627.

<sup>41</sup> Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S., at 149 (quoting opinion below, 92 F.Supp. 794, 796 (ND Ohio 1950)).

<sup>42</sup> "[Why] didn't they buy an individual daily lift ticket at Aspen Highlands? . . . For those who had bought six-day tickets, I think despite the fact that they are all relatively affluent -- a lot of them are relatively affluent when they go to Aspen -- they are all sort of managerial types and they seem to be pretty cautious. Certainly the comments that I have had from individual skiers and from the tour operators, club people that I have talked to -- they are pretty careful with their money and they would feel -- these are the people who will buy the six-day, three-area ticket that giving up one of those days and going over to ski at Aspen Highlands would mean spending extra money." Tr. 777.

not motivated by efficiency concerns and that it was willing to sacrifice [*611] short-run benefits and consumer goodwill in exchange for a [***486] perceived long-run impact on its smaller rival.<sup>43</sup>

Because [**2862] we are satisfied that the evidence in the record,<sup>44</sup> construed most favorably in support of Highlands' position, is adequate to support the verdict under the instructions given by the trial court, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is

Affirmed.

[***51] JUSTICE WHITE took no part in the decision of this case.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practice 42, 76, 77

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 52

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 15, 30

L Ed Index to Annos, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Federal Quick Index, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade

Annotation References:

Refusals to deal as violations of the federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1, 2, 13). 41 ALR Fed 175.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>43</sup> The Ski Co. advertising that conveyed the impression that there were only three skiing mountains in Aspen, supra, at 593, and n. 12, is consistent with this conclusion, even though this evidence would not be sufficient in itself to sustain the judgment.

<sup>44</sup> Given our conclusion that the evidence amply supports the verdict under the instructions as given by the trial court, we find it unnecessary to consider the possible relevance of the "essential facilities" doctrine, or the somewhat hypothetical question whether nonexclusionary conduct could ever constitute an abuse of monopoly power if motivated by an anticompetitive purpose. If, as we have assumed, no monopolist monopolizes unconscious of what he is doing, that case is unlikely to arise.

Data General Corp. v. Digidyne Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

July 1, 1985, Decided

No. 84-761

Reporter

473 U.S. 908 *; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 2529 **; 105 S. Ct. 3534; 87 L. Ed. 2d 657; 53 U.S.L.W. 3910; 1985-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,668

DATA GENERAL CORP. v. DIGIDYNE CORP. ET AL.

Prior History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) C. A. 9th Cir.

Reported below: 734 F.2d 1336.

Disposition: Certiorari denied

Core Terms

---

market power, operating system, processing, customers, forcing, buyers, tying arrangement, anti trust law, jury verdict, tied product, reinstated, consumers, locked, tie-in, buy

Opinion

---

[\[\*908\]](#) Certiorari denied.

Dissent by: WHITE

Dissent

---

JUSTICE WHITE, with whom JUSTICE BLACKMUN joins, dissenting.

Petitioner in this case manufactured and sold a central processing unit for computers known as NOVA. Petitioner also created and sold a copyrighted operating system for NOVA called RDOS. RDOS was a very popular operating system, but petitioner's licensing agreement prevented customers from using it with any central processing unit other than petitioner's NOVA.

Respondents sued, claiming that petitioner's marketing strategy amounted to an illegal tie-in in violation of the antitrust laws. After a jury trial, the District Court granted petitioner's motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, defining the appropriate market as the "market for general purpose minicomputers and microprocessors." In re Data General Corp. Antitrust Litigation, 529 F.Supp. 801, 821 \(ND Cal. 1981\). No reasonable juror could find, the court determined, that within this large and dynamic market with much larger competitors petitioner had the market power to restrain trade through an illegal tie-in arrangement. [\[\*\*2\]](#) The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed and reinstated the jury verdict in favor of respondents. 734 F.2d 1336 \(1984\). The court concluded that the tying arrangement was illegal per se, because petitioner's RDOS operating system was sufficiently unique and desirable to an appreciable number of buyers to enable petitioner to force those consumers to buy its tied product, the NOVA central processing unit.

The Court of Appeals' decision in this case is suspect on several grounds. As we have consistently explained, a particular tying arrangement may have procompetitive justifications, and it is thus inappropriate to condemn such an arrangement without considerable market analysis. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 104, n. 26 (1984); Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 11-14 (1984). Anticompetitive forcing only exists if consumers are forced to buy a tied product as a result of the [*909] sellers' market power, not simply because of the desirability of the package. Id., at 24-25. The Court of Appeals [**3] looked to market power over "locked in" customers who had already purchased petitioner's wares, viewed the copyright on the operating system as creating a presumption of market power, and seemingly concluded that forcing power is sufficiently established to demonstrate per se antitrust liability if some buyers find the tying product unique and desirable.

Drawing distinctions between the permissible and the forbidden in this area is difficult, and the posture of this case -- a jury verdict overturned by the District Court but reinstated on appeal -- creates an additional layer of complexity, since each court below took a different view of what facts were relevant. Nonetheless, this case raises several substantial questions of antitrust law and policy, including what constitutes forcing power in the absence of a large share of the general market, whether market power over "locked in" customers must be analyzed at the outset of the original decision to purchase, and what effect should be given to the existence of a copyright or other legal monopoly in determining market power.

At stake is more than the resolution of this single controversy or even the clarification of what may [**4] seem at times to be a collection of arcane legal distinctions. In the highly competitive, multibillion dollar a year computer industry, bundling of software and hardware, or of operating systems and central processing units, is somewhat common, and any differentiated product is especially attractive to some buyers. The reach of the decision in this case is potentially enormous, and as the United States strongly urges us to do, I would grant certiorari to address the substantial issues of federal law presented.

---

End of Document

Sedima v. Imrex Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

April 17, 1985, Argued ; July 1, 1985, Decided

No. 84-648

Reporter

473 U.S. 479 *; 105 S. Ct. 3275 **; 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 ***; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 119 ****; 53 U.S.L.W. 3914; 53 U.S.L.W. 5034; 1985-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,666; Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P92,086

SEDIMA, S.P.R.L. v. IMREX CO., INC., ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 741 F.2d 482, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

racketeering, predicate act, organized crime, legislative history, enterprise, antitrust, provisions, mail, courts, wire fraud, civil remedy, racketeering activity, infiltration, cases, treble-damages, pattern of racketeering activity, treble damages, remedies, Hearings, anti trust law, civil action, competitors, damages, legitimate business, statutory language, businessmen, federal law, customers, target, suits

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Remedies

Education Law > ... > Gender & Sex Discrimination > Title IX > Enforcement of Title IX

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Education Law > ... > Gender & Sex Discrimination > Title IX > Scope of Title IX

Education Law > ... > Gender & Sex Discrimination > Title IX > Remedies

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN1[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Remedies

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act provides a private civil action to recover treble damages for injury by reason of a violation of its substantive provisions. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\).

I Í HÁMEÍ JÉG Í JLÁEÍ ÁUÉDÉG Í ÉHÉG Í LÁI ÁSEÓaÉGAH Í ÉHÉH Í LÁJÍ Í ÁMEÉSÓYQÁFFJÉHÉH

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Securities Fraud > Elements

Securities Law > RICO Actions > Elements of Proof > Definition of Racketeering Activity

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN2 Securities Fraud, Elements

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act defines "racketeering activity" as any act "chargeable" under several generically described state criminal laws, any act "indictable" under numerous specific federal criminal provisions, including mail and wire fraud, and any "offense" involving bankruptcy or securities fraud or drug-related activities that is "punishable" under federal law. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(1\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN3 Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act prohibits the use of income derived from a "pattern of racketeering activity" to acquire an interest in or establish an enterprise engaged in or affecting interstate commerce; the acquisition or maintenance of any interest in an enterprise "through" a pattern of racketeering activity; conducting or participating in the conduct of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity; and conspiring to violate any of these provisions. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Forfeitures > General Overview

HN4 Sentencing, Fines

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act provides criminal penalties of imprisonment, fines, and forfeiture for violation of its provisions. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1963.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

I Í HÁMEĀ Í JÉH Í JLAFÍ ÁUÉDÉHG Í ÉEHG Í LÀ Í ÁSEOAÉGAÁH Í ÉEHH Í LÁJÍ Í ÁMEASÓYQÁFFJÉHHF

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN5 [down] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

See 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN6 [down] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The language of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act gives no obvious indication that a civil action can proceed only after a criminal conviction. The word "conviction" does not appear in any relevant portion of the statute. To the contrary, the predicate acts involve conduct that is "chargeable" or "indictable," and "offenses" that are "punishable, " under various criminal statutes. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(1\). As defined in the statute, racketeering activity consists not of acts for which the defendant has been convicted, but of acts for which he could be.

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > General Overview

HN7 [down] Civil Procedure, Sanctions

In a number of settings, conduct that can be punished as criminal only upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt will support civil sanctions under a preponderance standard.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN8 [down] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

That the offending conduct under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961-68, is described by reference to criminal statutes does not mean that its occurrence must be established by criminal standards or that the consequences of a finding of liability in a private civil action are identical to the consequences of a criminal conviction.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Adjustments & Enhancements > Criminal History > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

I Í HÀMÈJÀ Í JÉH Í JLÁFÍ ÁÙÈDÈNG Í ÉEHG Í LÀ Í ÁÙÈDÈGA ÁH Í ÉEHH Í LÁJÌ Í ÁÙÈDÈSÓYQÁFFJÉHH

HN9 [blue down arrow] Adjustments & Enhancements, Criminal History

To the extent an action under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\), might be considered quasi-criminal, requiring protections normally applicable only to criminal proceedings, the solution is to provide those protections, not to ensure that they were previously afforded by requiring prior convictions.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN10 [blue down arrow] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

There is no support in the statute's history, its language, or considerations of policy for a requirement that a private treble-damages action under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act can proceed only against a defendant who has already been criminally convicted. To the contrary, every indication is that no such requirement exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Actions > Actions Against Corporations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN11 [blue down arrow] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961-1968, imposes no distinct "racketeering injury" requirement for civil liability to attach.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Actions > Actions Against Corporations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN12 [blue down arrow] Shareholder Actions, Actions Against Corporations

A violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\) requires (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. The plaintiff must allege each of these elements to state a claim. In addition, the plaintiff only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Remedies

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Actions > Actions Against Corporations > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN13 [ ] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Remedies

The "extraordinary" uses to which civil RICO has been put appear to be primarily the result of the breadth of the predicate offenses, in particular the inclusion of wire, mail, and securities fraud, and the failure of Congress and the courts to develop a meaningful concept of "pattern."

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

RICO private action under 18 USCS 1964\(c\) held not to require either distinct racketeering injury or prior conviction of defendant.

Summary

A Belgian corporation which had entered into a joint business venture with an American corporation filed an action in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, asserting, inter alia, claims against the American corporation and two of its officers under 18 USCS 1964\(c\) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) for alleged violations of 18 USCS 1962\(c\), based on predicate acts of mail and wire fraud. The District Court dismissed the RICO counts for failure to state a claim (574 F Supp 963). The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed, holding that the complaint was defective (1) for failing to allege a "racketeering injury"--an injury "different in kind from that occurring as a result of the predicate acts themselves, or not simply caused by the predicate acts, but also caused by an activity which RICO was designed to deter," and (2) for not alleging that the defendants had already been criminally convicted of the predicate acts of mail and wire fraud, or of a RICO violation (741 F2d 482).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. In an opinion by White, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and Rehnquist, Stevens, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held that the plaintiffs' complaint was not deficient for failure to allege either an injury separate from the financial loss stemming from the alleged predicate acts of mail and wire fraud, or prior convictions of the defendants.

Marshall, J., joined by Brennan, Blackmun, and Powell, JJ., dissented on the ground that 18 USCS 1964\(c\) contemplates recovery for injury resulting from the confluence of events described in 18 USCS 1962 and not merely from the commission of a predicate act.

Powell, J., dissented on the ground that 18 USCS 1964\(c\) should not be applied to authorize private civil actions against respected businesses to redress ordinary fraud and breach of contract cases.

Headnotes

---

EXTORTION AND BLACKMAIL §1 > FRAUD AND DECEIT §4 > RICO private civil action -- prior conviction as not required --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [ ] [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [ ] [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [ ] [1C]

A private civil action under 18 USCS 1964\(c\), which authorizes recovery of treble damages by any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of the substantive provisions of the Racketeer Influenced and

I Ì HÀMÈJÀ Ì JÈH Ì JLÁFÍ ÀUÈDÈNG Ì ÈHÈG Ì LÀ Ì ÁSEÒAÈGÀ ÁH Ì ÈHÈH Ì LÀJÌ Ì ÁMÈSÓYQÀFFJÈHÈH

Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) (18 USCS 1961-1968), does not require the defendant's prior conviction of a RICO violation, or of the underlying predicate offenses.

EXTORTION AND BLACKMAIL §1 > FRAUD AND DECEIT §4 > RICO private civil action -- distinct racketeering injury as not required -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C]

A private civil action under 18 USCS 1964\(c\), which authorizes recovery of treble damages by any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of the substantive provisions of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) (18 USCS 1961-1968), does not require that the plaintiff establish a racketeering injury distinct from that occurring as a result of the predicate acts themselves. (Marshall, Brennan, Blackmun, and Powell, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

STATUTES §184 > Racketeer Influence and Corrupt Organizations Act -- broad construction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (18 USCS 1961-1968) is to be read broadly not only because of Congress' expansive language and overall approach, but also because of its express admonition that the Act is to be liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes.

Syllabus

---

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U. S. C. §§ 1961-1968, which is directed at "racketeering activity" -- defined in § 1961\(1\) to encompass, inter alia, acts "indictable" under specific federal criminal provisions, including mail and wire fraud -- provides in § 1964\(c\) for a private civil action to recover treble damages by any person injured in his business or property "by reason of a violation of section 1962." Section 1962\(c\) prohibits conducting or participating in the conduct of an enterprise "through a pattern of racketeering activity." Petitioner corporation, which had entered into a joint business venture with respondent company and which believed that it was being cheated by alleged overbilling, filed suit in Federal District Court, asserting, inter alia, RICO claims against respondent company and two of its officers (also respondents) under § 1964\(c\) for alleged violations of § 1962\(c\), based on predicate acts of mail and wire fraud. The court dismissed the RICO counts for failure to state a claim. The Court [****2] of Appeals affirmed, holding that under § 1964\(c\) a RICO plaintiff must allege a "racketeering injury" -- an injury "caused by an activity which RICO was designed to deter," not just an injury occurring as a result of the predicate acts themselves -- and that the complaint was also defective for not alleging that respondents had been convicted of the predicate acts of mail and wire fraud, or of a RICO violation.

Held:

1. There is no requirement that a private action under § 1964\(c\) can proceed only against a defendant who has already been convicted of a predicate act or of a RICO violation. A prior-conviction requirement is not supported by RICO's history, its language, or considerations of policy. To the contrary, every indication is that no such requirement exists. Accordingly, the fact that respondents have not been convicted under RICO or the federal mail and wire fraud statutes does not bar petitioner's action. Pp. 488-493.

I Í HÁJÉA Í JÉH Í JLÁFÍ ÁUÉDÉGÍ Í ÉEKGÍ LÁ Í ÁSEÓaÉGÁH Í ÉEHHÍ LÁJÍ Í ÁMÉÉSÓYQÁFJÉEKG

2. Nor is there any requirement that in order to maintain a private action under § 1964(c) the plaintiff must establish a "racketeering injury," not merely an injury resulting from the predicate acts themselves. A reading of the statute belies any [****3] "racketeering injury" requirement. If the defendant engages in a pattern of racketeering activity in a manner forbidden by § 1962, and the racketeering activities injure the plaintiff in his business or property, the plaintiff has a claim under § 1964(c). There is no room in the statutory language for an additional, amorphous "racketeering injury" requirement. Where the plaintiff alleges each element of a violation of § 1962, the compensable injury necessarily is the harm caused by predicate acts sufficiently related to constitute a pattern, for the essence of the violation is the commission of those acts in connection with the conduct of an enterprise. Pp. 493-500.

Counsel: Franklyn H. Snitow argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the brief was William H. Pauley III.

Richard Eisenberg argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were Alfred Weintraub and Joel I. Klein.*

[****4]

Judges: WHITE, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and REHNQUIST, STEVENS, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. MARSHALL, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which BRENNAN, BLACKMUN, and POWELL, JJ., joined, post, p. 500. POWELL, J., filed a dissenting opinion, post, p. 523.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[*481] [***349] [**3277] JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A][↑] [1A] LEdHN[2A][↑] [2A]HN1[↑] The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), Pub. L. 91-452, Title IX, 84 Stat. 941, as amended, 18 U. S. C. §§ 1961-1968, provides a private civil action to recover treble damages for injury "by reason of a violation of" its substantive provisions. 18 U. S. C. § 1964(c). The initial dormancy of this provision and its recent greatly increased utilization<sup>1</sup> [****5] are now familiar history.<sup>2</sup>

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the State of Arizona et al. by the Attorneys General for their respective States as follows: Robert K. Corbin of Arizona, Norman C. Gorsuch of Alaska, John Van de Kamp of California, Duane Woodard of Colorado, Joseph Lieberman of Connecticut, Jim Smith of Florida, Michael Lilly of Hawaii, Jim Jones of Idaho, Neil Hartigan of Illinois, Linley E. Pearson of Indiana, David L. Armstrong of Kentucky, William J. Guste, Jr., of Louisiana, Frank J. Kelley of Michigan, Edward L. Pittman of Mississippi, William L. Webster of Missouri, Mike Greely of Montana, Brian McKay of Nevada, Irwin L. Kimmelman of New Jersey, Paul Bardacke of New Mexico, Lacy H. Thornburg of North Carolina, Nicholas J. Spaeth of North Dakota, Anthony Celebrezze of Ohio, Michael Turpen of Oklahoma, David Fronmayer of Oregon, Dennis J. Roberts II of Rhode Island, T. Travis Medlock of South Carolina, Mark V. Meierhenry of South Dakota, W. J. Michael Cody of Tennessee, David L. Wilkinson of Utah, John J. Easton of Vermont, Kenneth O. Eikenberry of Washington, Charlie Brown of West Virginia, Bronson C. La Follette of Wisconsin, Archie G. McClintock of Wyoming; for the State of New York by Robert Abrams, Attorney General, and Robert Hermann, Solicitor General; for the City of New York et al. by Frederick A. O. Schwarz, Jr., James D. Montgomery, and Barbara W. Mather; and for the County of Suffolk, New York, by Mark D. Cohen.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the Alliance of American Insurers et al. by James F. Fitzpatrick and John M. Quinn; for the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants by Philip A. Lacovara, Jay Kelly Wright, Kenneth J. Bialkin, and Louis A. Craco; and for the Securities Industry Association by Joel W. Sternman, Eugene A. Gaer, and William J. Fitzpatrick.

I Í HÁNEJÁ Í JÉH Í FLÁEÍ ÁUÉDÉNG Í ÉHEG Í LÁ Í ÁSEÓaÉGAÁH Í ÉHEH JIÁFJÍ Í ÁMEJÉSÓYQÁFJÉHEH

In response to what it perceived to be misuse of civil RICO by private plaintiffs, the court below construed § 1964\(c\) to permit private actions only against defendants who had been convicted on criminal charges, and only where there had occurred a "racketeering injury." While we understand the court's concern over the consequences of an unbridled reading of the statute, we reject both of its holdings.

I

HN2 RICO takes aim at "racketeering activity," which it defines as any act "chargeable" under several generically described state criminal laws, [\[\*\*\*350\]](#) any act "indictable" under numerous specific federal criminal provisions, including mail and wire fraud, and any "offense" involving bankruptcy or securities [\[\*482\]](#) fraud or drug-related activities that is "punishable" under federal law. § 1961\(1\).<sup>3</sup> [\[\*\*\*6\]](#) Section 1962, entitled "Prohibited [\[\*\*3278\]](#) Activities," HN3 outlaws the use of income derived from a "pattern of racketeering activity" to acquire an interest in or establish an enterprise engaged in or affecting interstate commerce; the acquisition or maintenance of any interest in an enterprise "through" a pattern of racketeering activity; [\[\*483\]](#) conducting or participating in the conduct of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity; and conspiring to violate any of these provisions.

<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Of 270 District Court RICO decisions prior to this year, only 3% (nine cases) were decided throughout the 1970's, 2% were decided in 1980, 7% in 1981, 13% in 1982, 33% in 1983, and 43% in 1984. Report of the Ad Hoc Civil RICO Task Force of the ABA Section of Corporation, Banking and Business Law 55 (1985) (hereinafter ABA Report); see also id., at 53a (table).

<sup>2</sup> For a thorough bibliography of civil RICO decisions and commentary, see Milner, A Civil RICO Bibliography, 21 C.W.L.R. 409 (1985).

<sup>3</sup> RICO defines "racketeering activity" to mean

"(A) any act or threat involving murder, kidnaping, gambling, arson, robbery, bribery, extortion, or dealing in narcotic or other dangerous drugs, which is chargeable under State law and punishable by imprisonment for more than one year; (B) any act which is indictable under any of the following provisions of title 18, United States Code: Section 201 (relating to bribery), section 224 (relating to sports bribery), sections 471, 472, and 473 (relating to counterfeiting), section 659 (relating to theft from interstate shipment) if the act indictable under section 659 is felonious, section 664 (relating to embezzlement from pension and welfare funds), sections 891-894 (relating to extortionate credit transactions), section 1084 (relating to the transmission of gambling information), section 1341 (relating to mail fraud), section 1343 (relating to wire fraud), section 1503 (relating to obstruction of justice), section 1510 (relating to obstruction of criminal investigations), section 1511 (relating to the obstruction of State or local law enforcement), section 1951 (relating to interference with commerce, robbery, or extortion), section 1952 (relating to racketeering), section 1953 (relating to interstate transportation of wagering paraphernalia), section 1954 (relating to unlawful welfare fund payments), section 1955 (relating to the prohibition of illegal gambling businesses), sections 2312 and 2313 (relating to interstate transportation of stolen motor vehicles), sections 2314 and 2315 (relating to interstate transportation of stolen property), section 2320 (relating to trafficking in certain motor vehicles or motor vehicle parts), sections 2341-2346 (relating to trafficking in contraband cigarettes), sections 2421-2424 (relating to white slave traffic), (C) any act which is indictable under title 29, United States Code, section 186 (dealing with restrictions on payments and loans to labor organizations) or section 501(c) (relating to embezzlement from union funds), (D) any offense involving fraud connected with a case under title 11, fraud in the sale of securities, or the felonious manufacture, importation, receiving, concealment, buying, selling, or otherwise dealing in narcotic or other dangerous drugs, punishable under any law of the United States, or (E) any act which is indictable under the Currency and Foreign Transactions Reporting Act." 18 U. S. C. § 1961\(1\) \(1982 ed., Supp. III\).

<sup>4</sup> In relevant part, 18 U. S. C. § 1962 provides:

"(a) It shall be unlawful for any person who has received any income derived, directly or indirectly, from a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt . . . to use or invest, directly or indirectly, any part of such income, or the proceeds of such income, in acquisition of any interest in, or the establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce. . . .

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person through a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt to acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce.

I Í HÀNÈJÀ Í JÉH Í HÁFÍ ÁUÈDÉNG Í ÉEHEG Í LÀ Í ÁSEÓaÉGAÁH Í ÉEHEH ÉLÁJÌ Í ÁMÈJÉSÓYQÁFFJÉEHH

[***7] HN4 [+] Congress provided criminal penalties of imprisonment, fines, and forfeiture [***351] for violation of these provisions. § 1963. In addition, it set out a far-reaching civil enforcement scheme, § 1964, including the following provision for private suits:

HN5 [+] "Any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter may sue therefor in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." § 1964\(c\).

In 1979, petitioner Sedima, a Belgian corporation, entered into a joint venture with respondent Imrex Co. to provide electronic components to a Belgian firm. The buyer was to order parts through Sedima; Imrex was to obtain the parts [*484] in this country and ship them to Europe. The agreement called for Sedima and Imrex to split the net proceeds. Imrex filled roughly $ 8 million in orders placed with it through Sedima. Sedima became convinced, however, that Imrex was presenting inflated bills, cheating Sedima out of a portion of its proceeds by collecting for nonexistent expenses.

In 1982, Sedima filed this action in the Federal [***8] District Court for the Eastern District of New York. The complaint set out common-law claims of unjust enrichment, conversion, and breach of contract, fiduciary duty, and a constructive trust. In addition, it asserted RICO claims under § 1964\(c\) against Imrex and two of its officers. Two counts alleged violations of § 1962\(c\), based on predicate acts of mail and wire fraud. See 18 U. S. C. §§ 1341, 1343, 1961\(1\)\(B\). A third count alleged a conspiracy to violate § 1962\(c\). Claiming injury of at least $ 175,000, the amount of the alleged over-billing, Sedima sought treble damages and attorney's fees.

The District Court held that for an injury to be "by reason of a violation of section 1962," as required by § 1964\(c\), it must be somehow different in kind from the direct injury resulting from the predicate acts of [**3279] racketeering activity. 574 F.Supp. 963 \(1983\). While not choosing a precise formulation, the District Court held that a complaint must allege a "RICO-type injury," which was either some sort of distinct "racketeering injury," or a "competitive injury." It found "no allegation here of any injury apart from that which would result directly from [***9] the alleged predicate acts of mail fraud and wire fraud," id., at 965, and accordingly dismissed the RICO counts for failure to state a claim.

A divided panel of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed. 741 F.2d 482 \(1984\). After a lengthy review of the legislative history, it held that Sedima's complaint was defective in two ways. First, it failed to allege an injury "by reason of a violation of section 1962." In the court's view, [*485] this language was a limitation on standing, reflecting Congress' intent to compensate victims of "certain specific kinds of organized criminality," not to provide additional remedies for already compensable injuries. Id., at 494. Analogizing to the Clayton Act, which had been the model for § 1964\(c\), the court concluded that just as an antitrust plaintiff must allege an "antitrust injury," so a RICO plaintiff must allege a "racketeering injury" -- an injury "different in kind from that occurring as a result of the [***352] predicate acts themselves, or not simply caused by the predicate acts, but also caused by an activity which RICO was designed to deter." Id., at 496. [***10] Sedima had failed to allege such an injury.

The Court of Appeals also found the complaint defective for not alleging that the defendants had already been criminally convicted of the predicate acts of mail and wire fraud, or of a RICO violation. This element of the civil cause of action was inferred from § 1964\(c\)'s reference to a "violation" of § 1962, the court also observing that its prior-conviction requirement would avoid serious constitutional difficulties, the danger of unfair stigmatization, and problems regarding the standard by which the predicate acts were to be proved.

---

"(c) It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.

"(d) It shall be unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of subsections (a), (b), or (c) of this section."

I Í HÁEÜÄÍ JÄE Í LÄE ÁUÉÖÄÄGÍ Í ÄÄHGÍ JIÄ I ÁSEÖÄÄGÁÍ Í ÄÄHÍ GLÄJÍ I ÁNÈÄSÖYÖÄFFJÄÄFFÉ

The decision below was one episode in a recent proliferation of civil RICO litigation within the Second Circuit<sup>5</sup> [****11] and [*486] in other Courts of Appeals.<sup>6</sup> In light of the variety [**3280] of approaches taken by the lower courts and the importance of the issues, we granted certiorari. 469 U.S. 1157 (1984). We now reverse.

[***12] //

As a preliminary matter, it is worth briefly reviewing the legislative history of the private treble-damages action. RICO formed Title IX of the Organized Crime Control [***353] Act of 1970, Pub. L. 91-452, 84 Stat. 922. The civil remedies in the bill passed by the Senate, S. 30, were limited to injunctive actions by the United States and became §§ 1964(a), (b), and [*487] (d). Previous versions of the legislation, however, had provided for a private treble-damages action in exactly the terms ultimately adopted in § 1964(c). See S. 1623, 91st Cong., 1st Sess., § 4(a) (1969); S. 2048 and S. 2049, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. (1967).

During hearings on S. 30 before the House Judiciary Committee, Representative Steiger proposed the addition of a private treble-damages action "similar to the private damage remedy found in the anti-trust laws. . . . [Those] who have been wronged by organized crime should at least be given access to a legal remedy. In addition, the availability of such a remedy would enhance the effectiveness of title IX's prohibitions." Hearings on S. 30, and Related Proposals, before Subcommittee No. 5 of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 91st Cong., 2d Sess., [****13] 520 (1970) (hereinafter House Hearings). The American Bar Association also proposed an amendment "based upon the concept of Section 4 of the Clayton Act." Id., at 543-544, 548, 559; see 116 Cong. Rec. 25190-25191 (1970). See also H. R. 9327, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. (1969) (House counterpart to S. 1623).

Over the dissent of three members, who feared the treble-damages provision would be used for malicious harassment of business competitors, the Committee approved the amendment. H. R. Rep. No. 91-1549, pp. 58, 187 (1970). In summarizing the bill on the House floor, its sponsor described the treble-damages provision as <sup>5</sup> The day after the decision in this case, another divided panel of the Second Circuit reached a similar conclusion. Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhoades, 741 F.2d 511 (1984), cert. pending, No. 84-657. It held that § 1964(c) allowed recovery only for injuries resulting not from the predicate acts, but from the fact that they were part of a pattern. "If a plaintiff's injury is that caused by the predicate acts themselves, he is injured regardless of whether or not there is a pattern; hence he cannot be said to be injured by the pattern," and cannot recover. Id., at 517 (emphasis in original).

The following day, a third panel of the same Circuit, this time unanimous, decided Furman v. Cirrito, 741 F.2d 524 (1984), cert. pending, No. 84-604. In that case, the District Court had dismissed the complaint for failure to allege a distinct racketeering injury. The Court of Appeals affirmed, relying on the opinions in Sedima and Bankers Trust, but wrote at some length to record its disagreement with those decisions. The panel would have required no injury beyond that resulting from the predicate acts.

<sup>6</sup> A month after the trio of Second Circuit opinions was released, the Eighth Circuit decided Alexander Grant & Co. v. Tiffany Industries, Inc., 742 F.2d 408 (1984), cert. pending, Nos. 84-1084, 84-1222. Viewing its decision as contrary to Sedima but consistent with, though broader than, Bankers Trust, the court held that a RICO claim does require some unspecified element beyond the injury flowing directly from the predicate acts. At the same time, it stood by a prior decision that had rejected any requirement that the injury be solely commercial or competitive, or that the defendants be involved in organized crime. 742 F.2d, at 413; see Bennett v. Berg, 685 F.2d 1053, 1058-1059, 1063-1064 (CA8 1982), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 710 F.2d 1361 (en banc), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1008 (1983).

Two months later, the Seventh Circuit decided Haroco, Inc. v. American National Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, 747 F.2d 384 (1984), aff'd, post, p. 606. Dismissing Sedima as the resurrection of the discredited requirement of an organized crime nexus, and Bankers Trust as an emasculation of the treble-damages remedy, the Seventh Circuit rejected "the elusive racketeering injury requirement." 747 F.2d, at 394, 398-399. The Fifth Circuit had taken a similar position. Alcorn County v. U.S. Interstate Supplies, Inc., 731 F.2d 1160, 1169 (1984).

The requirement of a prior RICO conviction was rejected in Bunker Ramo Corp. v. United Business Forms, Inc., 713 F.2d 1272, 1286-1287 (CA7 1983), and USACO Coal Co. v. Carbomin Energy, Inc., 689 F.2d 94 (CA6 1982). See also United States v. Cappetto, 502 F.2d 1351 (CA7 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 925 (1975) (civil action by Government).

I Í HÁEÜÄÍ JÄÍ I Í LÄÍ ÁUÉÖÄHÄG I ÄÄHG ELÄ I ÄSEÖäÄGAÄI I ÄÄHÄI HÄFJÄ I ÁNÄEÄSÖYÖÄFFJÄÄFH

"another example of the antitrust remedy being adapted for use against organized criminality." 116 Cong. Rec. 35295 (1970). The full House then rejected a proposal to create a complementary treble-damages remedy for those injured by being named as defendants in malicious private suits. Id., at 35342. Representative Steiger also offered an amendment that would have allowed private injunctive actions, fixed a statute of limitations, and clarified venue and process requirements. Id., at 35346; see id., at 35226-35227. The proposal was greeted with [****14] some hostility because it had not been reviewed in Committee, [*488] and Steiger withdrew it without a vote being taken. Id., at 35346-35347. The House then passed the bill, with the treble-damages provision in the form recommended by the Committee. Id., at 35363-35364.

The Senate did not seek a conference and adopted the bill as amended in the House. Id., at 36296. The treble-damages provision had been drawn to its attention while the legislation was still in the House, and had received the endorsement of Senator McClellan, the sponsor of S. 30, who was of the view that the provision would be "a major new tool in extirpating the baneful influence of organized crime in our economic life." Id., at 25190.

III

HN6 The language of RICO gives no obvious indication that a civil action can proceed only after a criminal conviction. The word "conviction" does not appear in any relevant portion of the statute. See § 1961, 1962, 1964(c). To the contrary, the predicate acts involve conduct that is "chargeable" or "indictable," and "[offenses]" that [**3281] are "punishable, [**354]" under various criminal statutes. § 1961(1). As defined in the statute, racketeering [****15] activity consists not of acts for which the defendant has been convicted, but of acts for which he could be. See also S. Rep. No. 91-617, p. 158 (1969): "a racketeering activity . . . must be an act in itself subject to criminal sanction" (emphasis added). Thus, a prior-conviction requirement cannot be found in the definition of "racketeering activity." Nor can it be found in § 1962, which sets out the statute's substantive provisions. Indeed, if either § 1961 or § 1962 did contain such a requirement, a prior conviction would also be a prerequisite, nonsensically, for a criminal prosecution, or for a civil action by the Government to enjoin violations that had not yet occurred.

The Court of Appeals purported to discover its prior-conviction requirement in the term "violation" in § 1964(c), 741 F.2d, at 498-499. However, even if that term were [*489] read to refer to a criminal conviction, it would require a conviction under RICO, not of the predicate offenses. That aside, the term "violation" does not imply a criminal conviction. See United States v. Ward, 448 U.S. 242, 249-250 (1980). It refers only to a failure to adhere to [****16] legal requirements. This is its indisputable meaning elsewhere in the statute. Section 1962 renders certain conduct "unlawful"; § 1963 and § 1964 impose consequences, criminal and civil, for "violations" of § 1962. We should not lightly infer that Congress intended the term to have wholly different meanings in neighboring subsections.<sup>7</sup>

The legislative history also undercuts the reading of the court below. The clearest current in that history is the reliance on the Clayton Act model, under which private and governmental actions are entirely distinct. E. g., United States v. Borden Co., 347 U.S. 514, 518-519 (1954). [****17]<sup>8</sup> The only [*490] specific reference in the <sup>7</sup> When Congress intended that the defendant have been previously convicted, it said so. Title 18 U. S. C. § 1963(f) (1982 ed., Supp. III) states that "[upon] conviction of a person under this section," his forfeited property shall be seized. Likewise, in Title X of the same legislation Congress explicitly required prior convictions, rather than prior criminal activity, to support enhanced sentences for special offenders. See 18 U. S. C. § 3575(e).

<sup>8</sup> The court below considered it significant that § 1964(c) requires a "violation of section 1962," whereas the Clayton Act speaks of "anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 741 F.2d, at 488; see 15 U. S. C. § 15(a). The court viewed this as a deliberate change indicating Congress' desire that the underlying conduct not only be forbidden, but also have led to a criminal conviction. There is nothing in the legislative history to support this interpretation, and we cannot view this minor departure in wording, without more, to indicate a fundamental departure in meaning. Representative Steiger, who proposed this wording in the House, nowhere indicated a desire to depart from the antitrust model in this regard. See 116 Cong. Rec. 35227, 35246 (1970). To the contrary, he viewed the treble-damages provision as a "parallel private remedy." Id., at 27739 (letter to House Judiciary legislative history to prior convictions of which we are aware is an objection that the treble-damages provision is too broad precisely because "there need [\[\*\*\*355\]](#) not be a conviction under any of these laws for it to be racketeering." 116 Cong. Rec. 35342 (1970) (emphasis added). The history is otherwise silent on this point and contains nothing to contradict the import of the language appearing in the statute. Had Congress intended to impose this novel requirement, there would have been at least some mention of it in the legislative history, even if not in the statute.

I Ì HÀMÈÙÃ Ì JÃœ JE LÃÆÍ ÅU ÒDÃÄG Ì ÈE Ì HÌ FLÀ Ì ÅSE Æ ÙA ËGÁ Ì ÈE Ì HÌ LÀFJÌ Ì ÁNÈ Æ SÓY QÀFFJÀE

[\[\*\*\*\*18\]](#) The Court of Appeals was of the view that its narrow construction of the statute was essential to avoid intolerable practical [\[\*\*3282\]](#) consequences.<sup>9</sup> First, without a prior conviction to rely on, the plaintiff would have to prove commission of the predicate acts beyond a reasonable doubt. This would require instructing the jury as to different standards of proof for different aspects of the case. To avoid this awkwardness, [\[\*491\]](#) the court inferred that the criminality must already be established, so that the civil action could proceed smoothly under the usual preponderance standard.

[\[\*\*\*\*19\]](#) We are not at all convinced that the predicate acts must be established beyond a reasonable doubt in a proceeding under § 1964\(c\). HN7 In a number of settings, conduct that can be punished as criminal only upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt will support civil sanctions under a preponderance standard. See, e. g., United States v. One Assortment of 89 Firearms, 465 U.S. 354 (1984); One Lot Emerald Cut Stones v. United States, 409 U.S. 232, 235 (1972); Helvering v. Mitchell, 303 U.S. 391, 397 (1938); United States v. Regan, 232 U.S. 37, 47-49 (1914). There is no indication that Congress sought to depart from this general principle here. See Measures Relating to Organized Crime, Hearings on S. 30 et al. before the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 91st Cong., 1st Sess., 388 (1969) (statement of Assistant Attorney General Wilson); House Hearings, at 520 (statement of Rep. Steiger); id., at 664 (statement of Rep. Poff); 116 Cong. Rec. 35313 (1970) (statement of Rep. Minish). HN8 That the offending conduct is described by reference to criminal statutes [\[\*\*\*\*20\]](#) does not mean that its occurrence must be established by criminal standards or that the consequences of a finding of liability in a private civil action are identical [\[\*\*\*356\]](#) to the consequences of a criminal conviction. Cf. United States v. Ward, supra, at 248-251. But we need not decide the standard of proof issue today. For even if the stricter standard is applicable to a portion of the plaintiff's proof, the resulting logistical difficulties, which are accepted in other contexts, would not be so great as to require invention of a requirement that cannot be found in the statute and that Congress, as even the Court of Appeals had to concede, 741 F.2d, at 501, did not envision.<sup>10</sup> Committee). Likewise, Senator Hruska's discussion of his identically worded proposal gives no hint of any such intent. See 115 Cong. Rec. 6993 (1969). In any event, the change in language does not support the court's drastic inference. It seems more likely that the language was chosen because it is more succinct than that in the Clayton Act, and is consistent with the neighboring provisions. See §§ 1963\(a\), 1964\(a\).

<sup>9</sup> It is worth bearing in mind that the holding of the court below is not without problematic consequences of its own. It arbitrarily restricts the availability of private actions, for lawbreakers are often not apprehended and convicted. Even if a conviction has been obtained, it is unlikely that a private plaintiff will be able to recover for all of the acts constituting an extensive "pattern," or that multiple victims will all be able to obtain redress. This is because criminal convictions are often limited to a small portion of the actual or possible charges. The decision below would also create peculiar incentives for plea bargaining to non-predicate-act offenses so as to ensure immunity from a later civil suit. If nothing else, a criminal defendant might plead to a tiny fraction of counts, so as to limit future civil liability. In addition, the dependence of potential civil litigants on the initiation and success of a criminal prosecution could lead to unhealthy private pressures on prosecutors and to self-serving trial testimony, or at least accusations thereof. Problems would also arise if some or all of the convictions were reversed on appeal. Finally, the compelled wait for the completion of criminal proceedings would result in pursuit of stale claims, complex statute of limitations problems, or the wasteful splitting of actions, with resultant claim and issue preclusion complications.

<sup>10</sup> The Court of Appeals also observed that allowing civil suits without prior convictions "would make a hash" of the statute's liberal-construction requirement. 741 F.2d, at 502; see RICO § 904(a). Since criminal statutes must be strictly construed, the court reasoned, allowing liberal construction of RICO -- an approach often justified on the ground that the conduct for which liability is imposed is "already criminal" -- would only be permissible if there already existed criminal convictions. Again, we have doubts about the premise of this rather convoluted argument. The strict-construction principle is merely a guide to statutory interpretation. Like its identical twin, the "rule of lenity," it "only serves as an aid for resolving an ambiguity; it is not to be used to beget one." Callanan v. United States, 364 U.S. 587, 596 (1961); see also United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 587-588

I Í HÀMÈÙÃ Í JÃM JFLÁFÍ ÁUÑOÄHÙG Í ÈHÙG GLÃ Í ÆSOâÆGAÁI Í ÈHÙH Í LAFJÌ Í ÁNÈÆSØYØAFFJÄHÈGÈ

[***21] [*492] The [**3283] court below also feared that any other construction would raise severe constitutional questions, as it "would provide civil remedies for offenses criminal in nature, stigmatize defendants with the appellation 'racketeer,' authorize the award of damages which are clearly punitive, including attorney's fees, and constitute a civil remedy aimed in part to avoid the constitutional protections of the criminal law." Id. at 500, n. 49. We do not view the statute as being so close to the constitutional edge. As noted above, the fact that conduct can result in both criminal liability and treble damages does not mean that there is not a bona fide civil action. The familiar provisions for both criminal liability and treble damages under the antitrust laws indicate as much. Nor are attorney's fees "clearly punitive." Cf. 42 U. S. C. § 1988. As for stigma, a civil RICO proceeding leaves no greater stain than do a number of other civil proceedings. Furthermore, requiring conviction of the predicate acts would not protect against an unfair imposition of the "racketeer" label. If there is a problem with thus stigmatizing a garden variety defrauder [***22] by means of a civil action, it is not reduced by making certain that the defendant is guilty of fraud beyond a reasonable doubt. Finally, HN9 [↑] to the extent an [*493] action under § 1964\(c\) might be considered quasi-criminal, requiring protections normally applicable only to criminal proceedings, cf. One 1958 Plymouth Sedan v. Pennsylvania, 380 U.S. 693 \(1965\), the solution is to provide those protections, not to ensure that they were previously afforded by requiring prior convictions.<sup>11</sup>

Finally, [***357] we note that a prior-conviction requirement would be inconsistent with Congress' [***23] underlying policy concerns. Such a rule would severely handicap potential plaintiffs. A guilty party may escape conviction for any number of reasons -- not least among them the possibility that the Government itself may choose to pursue only civil remedies. Private attorney general provisions such as § 1964\(c\) are in part designed to fill prosecutorial gaps. Cf. Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 344 \(1979\). This purpose would be largely defeated, and the need for treble damages as an incentive to litigate unjustified, if private suits could be maintained only against those already brought to justice. See also n. 9, supra.

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B]In sum, HN10 [↑] we can find no support in the statute's history, its language, or considerations of policy for a requirement that a private treble-damages action under § 1964\(c\) can proceed only against a defendant who has already been criminally convicted. To the contrary, every indication is that no such requirement exists. Accordingly, the fact that Imrex and the individual defendants have not been convicted under RICO or the federal mail and wire fraud statutes does not bar Sedima's action.

IV

In considering the Court of Appeals' [***24] second prerequisite for a private civil RICO action -- "injury . . . caused by an [*494] activity which RICO was designed to deter" -- we are somewhat hampered by the vagueness of that concept. Apart from reliance on the general purposes of RICO and a reference to "mobsters," the court provided scant indication of what the requirement of [**3284] racketeering injury means. It emphasized Congress' undeniable desire to strike at organized crime, but acknowledged and did not purport to overrule Second Circuit precedent rejecting a requirement of an organized crime nexus. 741 F.2d, at 492; see Moss v. Morgan Stanley, Inc., 719 F.2d 5, 21 \(CA2 1983\), cert. denied sub nom. Moss v. Newman, 465 U.S. 1025 (1984). The court also stopped short of adopting a "competitive injury" requirement; while insisting that the plaintiff show "the kind of economic injury which has an effect on competition," it did not require "actual anticompetitive effect." 741 F.2d, at 496; see also id. at 495, n. 40.

---

(1981). But even if that principle has some application, it does not support the court's holding. The strict- and liberal-construction principles are not mutually exclusive; § 1961 and § 1962 can be strictly construed without adopting that approach to § 1964\(c\). Cf. United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 443, n. 19 \(1978\). Indeed, if Congress' liberal-construction mandate is to be applied anywhere, it is in § 1964, where RICO's remedial purposes are most evident.

<sup>11</sup> Even were the constitutional questions more significant, any doubts would be insufficient to overcome the mandate of the statute's language and history. "Statutes should be construed to avoid constitutional questions, but this interpretative canon is not a license for the judiciary to rewrite language enacted by the legislature." United States v. Albertini, 472 U.S. 675, 680 \(1985\).

ÍÍ HÁWEJÁ Í JÉB JI LÁFÉ ÁUÉDÉCHÍ Í FÁEEHG | LÁ Í ÁSÉDÓA ÉGÁ AHÍ Í FÁEEHG | LÁFÍJÍ Í ÁNÉEJESÓY QUÁFFJ FÁEEHG

The court's statement that the plaintiff must seek redress for an injury caused by conduct that [***25] RICO was designed to deter is unhelpfully tautological. Nor is clarity furnished by a negative statement of its rule: standing is not provided by the injury resulting from the predicate acts themselves. That statement is itself apparently inaccurate when applied to those predicate acts that unmistakably constitute the kind of conduct Congress sought to deter. See id., at 496, n. 41. The opinion does not explain how to distinguish such crimes from the other predicate acts Congress has lumped together in § 1961(1). The court below is not alone in struggling to define "racketeering injury," and the difficulty of [***358] that task itself cautions against imposing such a requirement.<sup>12</sup>

[*****26]

[*495] LEdHN[2B] [↑] [2B] We need not pinpoint the Second Circuit's precise holding, for we perceive HN11 [↑] no distinct "racketeering injury" requirement. Given that "racketeering activity" consists of no more and no less than commission of a predicate act, § 1961(1), we are initially doubtful about a requirement of a "racketeering injury" separate from the harm from the predicate acts. A reading of the statute belies any such requirement. Section 1964(c) authorizes a private suit by "[any] person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of § 1962." Section 1962 in turn makes it unlawful for "any person" -- not just mobsters -- to use money derived from a pattern of racketeering activity to invest in an enterprise, to acquire control of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity, or to conduct an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. §§ 1962(a)-(c). If the defendant engages in a pattern of racketeering activity in a manner forbidden by these provisions, and the racketeering activities injure the plaintiff in his business or property, the plaintiff has a claim under § 1964(c). There is no room in the statutory language for an additional, amorphous [****27] "racketeering injury" requirement.<sup>13</sup>

[*496] HN12 A \*\*3285 violation of § 1962\(c\), the section on which Sedima relies, requires (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern <sup>14</sup> (4) of racketeering \*\*\*359 activity. The plaintiff must, of course, allege each

<sup>12</sup> The decision below does not appear identical to Bankers Trust. It established a standing requirement, whereas Bankers Trust adopted a limitation on damages. The one focused on the mobster element, the other took a more conceptual approach, distinguishing injury caused by the individual acts from injury caused by their cumulative effect. Thus, the Eighth Circuit has indicated its agreement with Bankers Trust but not Sedima. Alexander Grant & Co. v. Tiffany Industries, Inc., 742 F.2d, at 413. See also Haroco, Inc. v. American National Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, 747 F.2d, at 396. The two tests were described as "very different" by the ABA Task Force. See ABA Report, at 310.

Yet the Bankers Trust court itself did not seem to think it was departing from Sedima, see 741 F.2d, at 516-517, and other Second Circuit panels have treated the two decisions as consistent, see Furman v. Cirrito, 741 F.2d 524 \(1984\), cert. pending, No. 84-604; Durante Brothers & Sons, Inc. v. Flushing National Bank, 755 F.2d 239, 246 (1985). The evident difficulty in discerning just what the racketeering injury requirement consists of would make it rather hard to apply in practice or explain to a jury.

<sup>13</sup> Given the plain words of the statute, we cannot agree with the court below that Congress could have had no "inkling of § 1964(c)'s implications." 741 F.2d, at 492. Congress' "inklings" are best determined by the statutory language that it chooses, and the language it chose here extends far beyond the limits drawn by the Court of Appeals. Nor does the "clanging silence" of the legislative history, ibid., justify those limits. For one thing, § 1964(c) did not pass through Congress unnoticed. See Part II, supra. In addition, congressional silence, no matter how "clanging," cannot override the words of the statute.

<sup>14</sup> As many commentators have pointed out, the definition of a "pattern of racketeering activity" differs from the other provisions in § 1961 in that it states that a pattern "requires at least two acts of racketeering activity," § 1961(5) (emphasis added), not that it "means" two such acts. The implication is that while two acts are necessary, they may not be sufficient. Indeed, in common parlance two of anything do not generally form a "pattern." The legislative history supports the view that two isolated acts of racketeering activity do not constitute a pattern. As the Senate Report explained: "The target of [RICO] is thus not sporadic activity. The infiltration of legitimate business normally requires more than one 'racketeering activity' and the threat of continuing activity to be effective. It is this factor of continuity plus relationship which combines to produce a pattern." S. Rep. No. 91-617, p. 158 (1969) (emphasis added). Similarly, the sponsor of the Senate bill, after quoting this portion of the Report, pointed out to his colleagues that "[the] term 'pattern' itself requires the showing of a relationship . . . . So, therefore, proof of two acts of racketeering activity, without more, does not establish a pattern . . . ." 116 Cong. Rec. 18940 (1970) (statement of Sen. McClellan). See also id., at 35193 (statement of Rep. Poff) (RICO "not aimed at the isolated offender"); House Hearings, at 665.

I Ī HÀEÙĀ Ī JĒ JÌ LÀ Í ÁUÈOÄNG Í ÈHNG Í LÀ Í ÅEOÅÄGA ÁI Í ÈHNG JLAFJÌ Í ÁNÈEÅSÓY QÄFFJÄHNG of these elements to state a claim. Conducting an enterprise that affects interstate commerce is obviously [****28] not in itself a violation of § 1962, nor is mere commission of the predicate offenses. In addition, the plaintiff only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the violation. As the Seventh Circuit has stated, "[a] defendant who violates section 1962 is not liable [*497] for treble damages to everyone he might have injured by other conduct, nor is the defendant liable to those who have not been injured." Haroco, Inc. v. American National Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, 747 F.2d 384, 398 (1984), aff'd, post, p. 606.

[****29] But the statute requires no more than this. Where the plaintiff alleges each element of the violation, the compensable injury necessarily is the harm caused by predicate acts sufficiently related to constitute a pattern, for the essence of the violation is the commission of those acts in connection with the conduct of an enterprise. Those acts are, when committed in the circumstances delineated in § 1962\(c\), "an activity which RICO was designed to deter." Any recoverable damages occurring by reason of a violation of § 1962\(c\) will flow from the commission of the predicate acts.<sup>15</sup>

[****30] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3] This less restrictive reading is amply supported by our prior cases and the general principles surrounding this statute. RICO is to be read broadly. This is the lesson not only [*498] of Congress' self-consciously [**3286] expansive language and overall approach, see United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 586-587 [***360] (1981), but also of its express admonition that RICO is to "be liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes," Pub. L. 91-452, § 904(a), 84 Stat. 947. The statute's "remedial purposes" are nowhere more evident than in the provision of a private action for those injured by racketeering activity. See also n. 10, supra. Far from effectuating these purposes, the narrow readings offered by the dissenters and the court below would in effect eliminate § 1964\(c\) from the statute.

RICO was an aggressive initiative to supplement old remedies and develop new methods for fighting crime. See generally Russello v. United States, 464 U.S. 16, 26-29 (1983). While few of the legislative statements about novel remedies and attacking crime on all fronts, see ibid., were made with direct reference to § 1964\(c\), it is in this spirit that all of the Act's provisions should be read. The specific references to § 1964\(c\) are consistent with this overall approach. Those supporting § 1964\(c\) hoped it would "enhance the effectiveness of title IX's prohibitions," House Hearings, at 520, and provide "a major new tool," 116 Cong. Rec. 35227 (1970). See also id., at 25190; 115 Cong. Rec. 6993-6994 (1969). Its opponents, also recognizing the provision's scope, complained that it provided too easy a weapon against "innocent businessmen," H. R. Rep. No. 91-1549, p. 187 (1970), and would be prone to abuse, 116 Cong. Rec. 35342 (1970). It is also significant that a previous proposal to add RICO-

---

Significantly, in defining "pattern" in a later provision of the same bill, Congress was more enlightening: "[Criminal] conduct forms a pattern if it embraces criminal acts that have the same or similar purposes, results, participants, victims, or methods of commission, or otherwise are interrelated by distinguishing characteristics and are not isolated events." 18 U. S. C. § 3575(e). This language may be useful in interpreting other sections of the Act. Cf. Iannelli v. United States, 420 U.S. 770, 789 (1975).

<sup>15</sup> Such damages include, but are not limited to, the sort of competitive injury for which the dissenters would allow recovery. See post, at 521-522. Under the dissent's reading of the statute, the harm proximately caused by the forbidden conduct is not compensable, but that ultimately and indirectly flowing therefrom is. We reject this topsy-turvy approach, finding no warrant in the language or the history of the statute for denying recovery thereunder to "the direct victims of the [racketeering] activity," post, at 522, while preserving it for the indirect. Even the court below was not that grudging. It would apparently have allowed recovery for both the direct and the ultimate harm flowing from the defendant's conduct, requiring injury "not simply caused by the predicate acts, but also caused by an activity which RICO was designed to deter." 741 F.2d, at 496 (emphasis added).

The dissent would also go further than did the Second Circuit in its requirement that the plaintiff have suffered a competitive injury. Again, as the court below stated, Congress "nowhere suggested that actual anticompetitive effect is required for suits under the statute." Ibid. The language it chose, allowing recovery to "[any] person injured in his business or property," § 1964\(c\) (emphasis added), applied to this situation, suggests that the statute is not so limited.

I Ī HÀMÈJÀ ī JĒ JÌ LÀ ĀUÈOĀNG ī ĀEĀH ī LÀ Ā SEOĀEĀGĀ ī ĀEĀH ēLĀJÌ ī ÁNÈEĀSÓY ēAFFJĀEĀH like provisions to the Sherman Act had come to grief in part precisely because it "could create inappropriate and unnecessary obstacles in the way of . . . a private litigant [who] would have to contend with a body of precedent -- appropriate in a purely antitrust context -- setting strict requirements on questions such as 'standing to sue' and 'proximate cause.'" 115 Cong. Rec. 6995 (1969) (ABA comments on S. 2048); see also id., at 6993 (S. 1623 proposed as an amendment to Title 18 to avoid [***32] these problems). In borrowing its "racketeering" [*499] injury" requirement from antitrust standing principles, the court below created exactly the problems Congress sought to avoid.

Underlying the Court of Appeals' holding was its distress at the "extraordinary, if not outrageous," uses to which civil RICO has been put. 741 F.2d, at 487. Instead of being used against mobsters and organized criminals, it has become a tool for everyday fraud cases brought against "respected and legitimate 'enterprises.'" Ibid. Yet Congress wanted to reach both "legitimate" and "illegitimate" enterprises. United States v. Turkette, supra. The former enjoy neither an inherent incapacity for criminal activity nor immunity from its consequences. The fact that § 1964(c) is used against respected businesses allegedly engaged in a pattern of specifically identified criminal conduct is hardly a sufficient reason for assuming that the provision is being misconstrued. Nor does it reveal the "ambiguity" discovered by the court below. "[The] fact that RICO has been applied in situations not expressly anticipated by Congress does not demonstrate ambiguity. [***33] It demonstrates breadth." Haroco, Inc. v. American National Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, supra, at 398.

[***361] It is true that private civil actions under the statute are being brought almost solely against such defendants, rather than against the archetypal, intimidating mobster.<sup>16</sup> Yet this defect -- if defect it is -- is [*3287] inherent in the statute as written, and its correction must lie with Congress. It is not for the judiciary to eliminate the private action in situations [*500] where Congress has provided it simply because plaintiffs are not taking advantage of it in its more difficult applications.

[***34] We nonetheless recognize that, in its private civil version, RICO is evolving into something quite different from the original conception of its enactors. See generally ABA Report, at 55-69. Though sharing the doubts of the Court of Appeals about this increasing divergence, we cannot agree with either its diagnosis or its remedy. HN13 [↑] The "extraordinary" uses to which civil RICO has been put appear to be primarily the result of the breadth of the predicate offenses, in particular the inclusion of wire, mail, and securities fraud, and the failure of Congress and the courts to develop a meaningful concept of "pattern." We do not believe that the amorphous standing requirement imposed by the Second Circuit effectively responds to these problems, or that it is a form of statutory amendment appropriately undertaken by the courts.

V

LEdHN[1C] [↑] [1C] LEdHN[2C] [↑] [2C] Sedima may maintain this action if the defendants conducted the enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. The questions whether the defendants committed the requisite predicate acts, and whether the commission of those acts fell into a pattern, are not before us. The complaint is not deficient for failure to allege either an injury separate from [***35] the financial loss stemming from the alleged acts of mail and wire fraud, or prior convictions of the defendants. The judgment below is accordingly reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: MARSHALL; POWELL

<sup>16</sup> The ABA Task Force found that of the 270 known civil RICO cases at the trial court level, 40% involved securities fraud, 37% common-law fraud in a commercial or business setting, and only 9% "allegations of criminal activity of a type generally associated with professional criminals." ABA Report, at 55-56. Another survey of 132 published decisions found that 57 involved securities transactions and 38 commercial and contract disputes, while no other category made it into double figures. American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, The Authority to Bring Private Treble-Damage Suits Under "RICO" Should be Removed 13 (Oct. 10, 1984).

Dissent

---

JUSTICE MARSHALL, with whom JUSTICE BRENNAN, JUSTICE BLACKMUN, and JUSTICE POWELL join, dissenting.*

The Court today recognizes that "in its private civil version, RICO is evolving into something quite different from [*501] the original conception of its enactors." Ante, at 500. The Court, however, expressly validates this result, imputing it to the manner in which the statute was drafted. I fundamentally ***362 disagree both with the Court's reading of the statute and with its conclusion. I believe that the statutory language and history disclose a narrower interpretation of the statute [***36] that fully effectuates Congress' purposes, and that does not make compensable under civil RICO a host of claims that Congress never intended to bring within RICO's purview.

I

The Court's interpretation of the civil RICO statute quite simply revolutionizes private litigation; it validates the federalization of broad areas of state common law of frauds, and it approves the displacement of well-established federal remedial provisions. We do not lightly infer a congressional intent to effect such fundamental changes. To infer such intent here would be untenable, for there is no indication that Congress even considered, much less approved, the scheme that the Court today defines.

The single most significant reason for the expansive use of civil RICO has been the presence in the statute, as predicate acts, of mail and wire fraud violations. See 18 U. S. C. § 1961\(1\) \(1982 ed., Supp. III\). Prior to RICO, no federal statute had expressly provided a private damages remedy based upon a violation of the mail or wire fraud statutes, which make it a federal crime to use the mail or wires in furtherance of a scheme to defraud. See 18 U. S. C. §§ 1341, 1343. Moreover, the Courts of Appeals [***37] consistently had held that no implied federal private causes of action accrue to victims of these federal violations. See, e. g., Ryan v. Ohio Edison Co., 611 F.2d 1170, 1178-1179 \(CA6 1979\) (mail fraud); Napper v. Anderson, Henley, Shields, Bradford & Pritchard, 500 F.2d 634, 636 \(CA5 1974\) (wire fraud), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 837 (1975). The victims normally were restricted to bringing actions in state court under common-law fraud theories.

[*502] Under the Court's opinion today, two fraudulent mailings or uses of the wires occurring within 10 years of each other might constitute a "pattern of racketeering activity," § 1961\(5\), leading to civil RICO liability. See § 1964\(c\). The effects of making a mere two instances of mail or wire fraud potentially actionable under civil RICO are staggering, because in recent years the Courts of Appeals have "tolerated an extraordinary expansion of mail and wire fraud statutes to permit federal prosecution for conduct that some had thought was subject only to state criminal and civil law." United States v. Weiss, 752 F.2d 777, 791 \(CA2 1985\) (Newman, [***38] J., dissenting). In bringing criminal actions under those statutes, prosecutors need not show either a substantial connection between the scheme to defraud and the mail and wire fraud statutes, see Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1, 8 \(1954\), or that the fraud involved money or property. Courts have sanctioned prosecutions based on deprivations of such intangible rights as a shareholder's right to "material" information, United States v. Siegel, 717 F.2d 9, 14-16 \(CA2 1983\); a client's right to the "undivided loyalty" of his attorney, United States v. Bronston, 658 F.2d 920, 927 \(CA2 1981\), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 915 (1982); an employer's right to the honest and faithful service of his employees, [United States \[\*\*\*363\] v. Bohonus, 628 F.2d 1167, 1172 \(CA9\)](#), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 928 (1980); and a citizen's right to know the nature of agreements entered into by the leaders of political parties, United States v. Margiotta, 688 F.2d 108, 123-125 \(CA2 1982\), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 913 (1983).

The only restraining [***39] influence on the "ineluctable expansion of the mail and wire fraud statutes," United States v. Siegel, supra, at 24 (Winter, J., dissenting in part and concurring in part), has been the prudent use of prosecutorial discretion. Prosecutors simply do not invoke the mail and wire fraud provisions in every case in which a violation of the relevant statute can be proved. See U.S. Dept. of Justice, United States Attorney's Manual § 9-43.120 (Feb. 16, 1984). [*503] For example, only where the scheme is directed at a "class of persons or the general public" and includes "a substantial pattern of conduct," will "serious consideration . . . be given to [mail fraud] prosecution." In all other cases, "the parties should be left to settle their differences by civil or criminal litigation in the state courts." Ibid.

---

* [This opinion applies also to No. 84-822, American National Bank & Trust Company of Chicago et al. v. Haroco, Inc., et al., post, p. 606.]

I Í HÁEJÀ Í JÉÉ ÉCLAFÉ ÁUÉDÄNG Í ÉEÉH G Í LÀ Í ÅÉOÅÉGÁH Í ÉEÉH HÁFJÍ Í ÁNÈÉSÓYQÁFFJÉEÉH

The responsible use of prosecutorial discretion is particularly important with respect to criminal RICO prosecutions - - which often rely on mail and wire fraud as predicate acts -- given the extremely severe penalties authorized by RICO's criminal provisions. Federal prosecutors are therefore instructed that "[utilization] of the RICO statute, more [****40] so than most other federal criminal sanctions, requires particularly careful and reasoned application." Id., § 9-110.200 (Mar. 9, 1984). The Justice Department itself recognizes that a broad interpretation of the criminal RICO provisions would violate "the principle that the primary responsibility for enforcing state laws rests with the state concerned." Ibid. Specifically, the Justice Department will not bring RICO prosecutions unless the pattern of racketeering activity required by 18 U. S. C. § 1962 has "some relation to the purpose of the enterprise." United States Attorney's Manual § 9-110.350 (Mar. 9, 1984).

Congress was well aware of the restraining influence of prosecutorial discretion when it enacted the criminal RICO provisions. It chose to confer broad statutory authority on the Executive fully expecting that this authority would be used only in cases in which its use was warranted. See Measures Relating to Organized Crime: Hearings on S. 30 et al. before the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 91st Cong., 1st Sess., 346-347, 424 (1969) (hereinafter cited as Senate Hearings). Moreover, in seeking a broad interpretation [****41] of RICO from this Court in United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576 \(1981\), the Government stressed that no "extreme cases" would be brought because the Justice Department would exercise [*504] "sound discretion" through a centralized review process. See Brief for United States in No. 80-808, O.T. 1980, p. 25, n. 20.

In the context of civil RICO, however, the restraining influence of prosecutors is completely absent. Unlike the Government, private litigants have no reason to avoid displacing state common-law remedies. Quite to the contrary, such litigants, lured by the prospect of treble damages and attorney's fees, have a [***364] strong incentive to invoke RICO's provisions whenever they can allege in good faith two instances of mail or wire fraud. Then the defendant, facing a tremendous financial exposure in addition to the threat of being labeled a "racketeer," will have a strong interest in settling the dispute. See Rakoff, Some Personal Reflections on the Sedima Case and on Reforming RICO, in RICO: Civil and Criminal 400 (Law Journal Seminars-Press 1984). The civil RICO provision consequently stretches the mail and wire fraud statutes to their [****42] absolute limits and federalizes important areas of civil litigation that until now were solely within the domain of the States.

In addition to altering fundamentally the federal-state balance in civil remedies, the broad reading of the civil RICO provision also displaces important areas of federal law. For example, one predicate offense under RICO is "fraud in the sale of securities." 18 U. S. C. § 1961\(1\) \(1982 ed., Supp. III\). By alleging two instances of such fraud, a plaintiff might be able to bring a case within the scope of the civil RICO provision. It does not take great legal insight to realize that such a plaintiff would pursue his case under RICO rather than do so solely under the Securities Act of 1933 or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, which provide both express and implied causes of action for violations of the federal securities laws. Indeed, the federal securities laws contemplate only compensatory damages and ordinarily do not authorize recovery of attorney's fees. By invoking RICO, in contrast, a successful [*505] plaintiff will recover both treble damages and attorney's fees.

More importantly, under the Court's interpretation, the civil RICO provision [****43] does far more than just increase the available damages. In fact, it virtually eliminates decades of legislative and judicial development of private civil remedies under the federal securities laws. Over the years, courts have paid close attention to matters such as standing, culpability, causation, reliance, and materiality, as well as the definitions of "securities" and "fraud." See, e. g., Blue Chip Stamps v. Manor Drug Stores, 421 U.S. 723 \(1975\) (purchaser/seller requirement). All of this law is now an endangered species because plaintiffs can avoid the limitations of the securities laws merely by alleging violations of other predicate acts. For example, even in cases in which the investment instrument is not a "security" covered by the federal securities laws, RICO will provide a treble-damages remedy to a plaintiff who can prove the required pattern of mail or wire fraud. Cf. Crocker National Bank v. Rockwell International Corp., 555 F.Supp. 47 \(ND Cal. 1982\). Before RICO, of course, the plaintiff could not have recovered under federal law for the mail or wire fraud violation.

I Í HÀMÌA Í JÁA É LÀ Í ÁU ĐÓNG Í EENH Í LÀ Í ÁSEOÀECA ÁI Í EENH Í LÀJÌ Í ÁNÈESÓYQ AFFJÄEHH

Similarly, a customer who refrained from selling [***44] a security during a period in which its market value was declining could allege that, on two occasions, his broker recommended by telephone, as part of a scheme to defraud, that the customer not sell the security. The customer might thereby prevail under civil RICO even though, as neither a purchaser nor a seller, he would not have had standing to bring an action under the federal securities laws. See also 741 F.2d 482, 499 \(1984\) ("two misstatements [***365] in a proxy solicitation could subject any director in any national corporation to 'racketeering' charges and the threat of treble damages and attorneys' fees").

The effect of civil RICO on federal remedial schemes is not limited to the securities laws. For example, even though [*506] commodities fraud is not a predicate offense listed in § 1961, the carefully crafted private damages causes of action under the Commodity Exchange Act may be circumvented in a commodities case through civil RICO actions alleging mail or wire fraud. See, e. g., Parnes v. Heinold Commodities, Inc., 487 F.Supp. 645 \(ND Ill. 1980\). The list goes on and on.

The dislocations caused by the Court's reading [***45] of the civil RICO provision are not just theoretical. In practice, this provision frequently has been invoked against legitimate businesses in ordinary commercial settings. As the Court recognizes, the ABA Task Force that studied civil RICO found that 40% of the reported cases involved securities fraud and 37% involved common-law fraud in a commercial or business setting. See ante, at 499, n. 16. Many a prudent defendant, facing ruinous exposure, will decide to settle even a case with no merit. It is thus not surprising that civil RICO has been used for extortive purposes, giving rise to the very evils that it was designed to combat. Report of the Ad Hoc Civil RICO Task Force of the ABA Section of Corporation, Banking and Business Law 69 (1985) (hereinafter cited as ABA Report).

Only 9% of all civil RICO cases have involved allegations of criminal activity normally associated with professional criminals. See ante, at 499, n. 16. The central purpose that Congress sought to promote through civil RICO is now a mere footnote.

In summary, in both theory and practice, civil RICO has brought profound changes to our legal landscape. Undoubtedly, Congress has the power to [***46] federalize a great deal of state common law, and there certainly are no relevant constraints on its ability to displace federal law. Those, however, are not the questions that we face in this case. What we have to decide here, instead, is whether Congress in fact intended to produce these far-reaching results.

[*507] Established canons of statutory interpretation counsel against the Court's reading of the civil RICO provision. First, we do not impute lightly a congressional intention to upset the federal-state balance in the provision of civil remedies as fundamentally as does this statute under the Court's view. For example, in Santa Fe Industries, Inc. v. Green, 430 U.S. 462 (1977), we stated that "[absent] a clear indication of congressional intent, we are reluctant to federalize the substantial portion of the law of corporations that deals with transactions in securities." Id., at 479. Here, with striking nonchalance, the Court does what it declined to do in Santa Fe Industries -- and much more as well. Second, with respect to effects on the federal securities laws and other federal regulatory statutes, we should be reluctant [***47] to displace the well-entrenched federal remedial schemes absent clear direction from Congress. See, e. g., Train v. Colorado Public Interest Research Group, Inc., 426 U.S. 1, 23-24 \(1976\); [Radzanower \[\*\*\*366\] v. Touche Ross & Co., 426 U.S. 148, 153 \(1976\)](#).

In this case, nothing in the language of the statute or the legislative history suggests that Congress intended either the federalization of state common law or the displacement of existing federal remedies. Quite to the contrary, all that the statute and the legislative history reveal as to these matters is what Judge Oakes called a "clanging silence," 741 F.2d, at 492.

I Í HÁEÜÄÍ JÄÄ ËÍ LÄÉ ÁUÉÖÄÄG Í ÄÄH G Í LÄÍ ÅÉÖÅÄGAÄÍ Í ÄÄHÄÍ LÄFJÌ Í ÁNÈÅSÓYÖÄFFJÄÄH Í

Moreover, if Congress had intended to bring about dramatic changes in the nature of commercial litigation, it would at least have paid more than cursory attention to the civil RICO provision. This provision was added in the House of Representatives after the Senate already had passed its version of the RICO bill; the House itself adopted a civil remedy provision almost as an afterthought; and the Senate thereafter accepted the House's version of the bill without even requesting a Conference. See [****48] infra, at 518-519. Congress simply does not act in this way when it intends to effect fundamental changes in the structure of federal law.

[*508] II

The statutory language and legislative history support the view that Congress did not intend to effect a radical alteration of federal civil litigation. In fact, the language and history indicate a congressional intention to limit, in a workable and coherent manner, the type of injury that is compensable under the civil RICO provision. As the following demonstrates, Congress sought to fill an existing gap in civil remedies and to provide a means of compensation that otherwise did not exist for the honest businessman harmed by the economic power of "racketeers."

A

I begin with a review of the statutory language. Section 1964(c) grants a private right of action to any person "injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962." Section 1962, in turn, makes it unlawful to invest, in an enterprise engaged in interstate commerce, funds "derived . . . from a pattern of racketeering activity," to acquire or operate an interest in any such enterprise through "a pattern of racketeering activity," or to conduct [****49] or participate in the conduct of that enterprise "through a pattern of racketeering activity." Section 1961 defines "racketeering activity" to mean any of numerous acts "chargeable" or "indictable" under enumerated state and federal laws, including state-law murder, arson, and bribery statutes, federal mail and wire fraud statutes, and the antifraud provisions of federal securities laws. It states that "a pattern" of racketeering activity requires proof of at least two acts of racketeering within 10 years.

By its terms, § 1964(c) therefore grants a cause of action only to a person injured "by reason of a violation of § 1962." The Court holds today that the only injury a plaintiff need allege is injury occurring by reason of a predicate, or racketeering, act -- i. e., one of the offenses listed in § 1961. But § 1964(c) does not by its terms provide a remedy for injury by [**509] reason of § 1961; it requires an injury by reason of § 1962. In other words:

"[***367] While section 1962 prohibits the involvement of an 'enterprise' in 'racketeering activity,' racketeering itself is not a violation of § 1962. Thus, a construction of RICO permitting recovery [****50] for damages arising out of the racketeering acts simply does not comport with the statute as written by Congress. In effect, the broad construction replaces the rule that treble damages can be recovered only when they occur 'by reason of a violation of section 1962,' with a rule permitting recovery of treble damages whenever there has been a violation of section 1962. Such unwarranted judicial interference with the Act's plain meaning cannot be justified." Comment, 76 Nw. U. L. Rev. 100, 128 (1981) (footnotes omitted).

See also Bridges, Private RICO Litigation Based Upon "Fraud in the Sale of Securities," 18 Ga. L. Rev. 43, 67 (1983).

In addition, the statute permits recovery only for injury to business or property. It therefore excludes recovery for personal injuries. However, many of the predicate acts listed in § 1961 threaten or inflict personal injuries -- such as murder and kidnaping. If Congress in fact intended the victims of the predicate acts to recover for their injuries, as the Court holds it did, it is inexplicable why Congress would have limited recovery to business or property injury. It simply makes no sense to allow [****51] recovery by some, but not other victims of predicate acts, and to make recovery turn solely on whether the defendant has chosen to inflict personal pain or harm to property in order to accomplish its end.

In summary, the statute clearly contemplates recovery for injury resulting from the confluence of events described in § 1962 and not merely from the commission of a predicate act. The Court's contrary interpretation distorts the statutory language under the guise of adopting a plain-meaning definition, and it does so without offering any indication of congressional [**510] intent that justifies a deviation from what I have shown to be the plain meaning of the statute. However, even if the statutory language were ambiguous, see Haroco, Inc. v. American National Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, 747 F.2d 384, 389 (CA7 1984), aff'd, post, p. 606, the scope of the civil RICO provision would be no different, for this interpretation of the statute finds strong support in the legislative history of that provision.

I Í HÁEÜÄÍ JÄÍ €JLAFÍ ÁUÉÖÄHГ I ÉÄHG I LÀÍ ÅSEØAÅGÁÍ I ÉÄHÍ I LAFJÍ I ÁNÈÆSØYØAFFJÄÄÍ F

B

In reviewing the legislative history of civil RICO, numerous federal courts have become mired in controversy about the extent to which Congress intended [***52] to adopt or reject the federal antitrust laws as a model for the RICO provisions. The basis for the dispute among the lower courts is the language of the treble-damages provision, which tracks virtually word for word the treble-damages provision of the antitrust laws, § 4 of the Clayton Act;<sup>1</sup> given this parallel, [***368] there can be little doubt that the latter served as a model for the former. Some courts have relied heavily on this congruity to read an antitrust-type "competitive injury" requirement into the civil RICO statute. See, e. g., North Barrington Development, Inc. v. Fanslow, 547 F.Supp. 207 (ND Ill. 1980). Other courts have rejected a competitive-injury requirement, or any antitrust analogy, relying in significant part on what [*511] they perceive as Congress' rejection of a wholesale adoption of antitrust precedent. See, e. g., Yancoski v. E.F. Hutton & Co., Inc., 581 F.Supp. 88 (ED Pa. 1983); Mauriber v. Shearson/American Express, Inc., 567 F.Supp. 1231, 1240 (SDNY 1983).

[***53] Many of these courts have read far too much into the antitrust analogy. The legislative history makes clear that Congress viewed the form of civil remedies under RICO as analogous to such remedies under the antitrust laws, but that it did not thereby intend the substantive compensable injury to be exactly the same. The legislative history also suggests that Congress might have wanted to avoid saddling the civil RICO provisions with the same standing requirements that at the time limited standing to sue under the antitrust laws. However, the Committee Reports and hearings in no way suggest that Congress considered and rejected a requirement of injury separate from that resulting from the predicate acts. Far from it, Congress offered considerable indication that the kind of injury it primarily sought to attack and compensate was that for which existing civil and criminal remedies were inadequate or nonexistent; the requisite injury is thus akin to, but broader than, that targeted by the antitrust laws and different in kind from that resulting from the underlying predicate acts.

A brief look at the legislative history makes clear that the antitrust laws in no relevant respect constrain [***54] our analysis or preclude formulation of an independent RICO-injury requirement. When Senator Hruska first introduced to Congress the predecessor to RICO, he proposed an amendment to the Sherman Act that would have prohibited the investment or use of intentionally unreported income from one line of business to establish, operate, or invest in another line of business. S. 2048, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. (1967). After studying the provision, the American Bar Association issued a report that, while acknowledging the effects of organized crime's infiltration of legitimate business, stated a preference for a [*512] provision separate from the antitrust laws. See 115 Cong. Rec. 6994 (1969). According to the report:

<sup>1</sup> Section 1964\(c\) provides:

"Any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter may sue therefor in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 15, provides in relevant part:

"[Any] person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover three-fold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

I Í HÀMÈÙA Í JÉÁ FOLÁFÍ ÁUÉÓÄNG Í ÉÉH G Í LÀ Í ÁSÉOÀÉGÁH Í ÉÉH H Í LAFJÌ Í ÁNÈÉSÓYQÙAFFJÄHÉI

"By placing the antitrust-type enforcement and recovery procedures in a separate statute, a commingling of criminal enforcement goals with the goals of regulating competition is avoided.

....

"Moreover, the use of antitrust laws themselves as a vehicle for combating organized crime could create inappropriate and unnecessary obstacles in the way of persons injured by organized crime who might seek treble damage recovery. Such a private litigant [***369] would have to [****55] contend with a body of precedent -- appropriate in a purely antitrust context -- setting strict requirements on questions such as 'standing to sue' and 'proximate cause.'" Id., at 6995.

Congress subsequently decided not to pursue an addition to the antitrust laws but instead to fashion a wholly separate criminal statute. If in fact that decision was made in response to the ABA's statement and not to other political concerns, it may be interpreted at most as a rejection of antitrust standing requirements. Court-developed standing rules define the requisite proximity between the plaintiff's injury and the defendant's antitrust violation. See Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 476 (1982) (discussing antitrust standing rules developed in the Federal Circuits). Thus, at most we may read the early legislative history to eschew wholesale adoption of the particular nexus requirements that limit the class of potential antitrust plaintiffs. Courts that read this history to bar any analogy to the antitrust laws simply read too much into the scant evidence available to us. In particular, courts that read this history to bar an injury requirement [****56] akin to "antitrust" injury are in error. The requirement of antitrust injury, as articulated in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477 (1977), differs in kind from the standing requirement to [*513] which the ABA referred and, in fact, had not been articulated at the time of the ABA comments.

At the same time, courts that believe civil RICO doctrine should mirror civil antitrust doctrine also read too much into the legislative history. It is absolutely clear that Congress intended to adopt antitrust remedies, such as civil actions by the Government and treble damages. The House of Representatives added the civil provision to Title IX in response to suggestions from the ABA and Congressmen that there be a remedy "similar to the private damage remedy found in the anti-trust laws," Organized Crime Control: Hearings on S. 30 and Related Proposals, before Subcommittee No. 5 of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 91st Cong., 2d Sess., 520 (1970) (statement of Rep. Steiger) (hereinafter House Hearings); see also id., at 543 (statement of Edward L. Wright, ABA president-elect) (suggesting an amendment "to include the [***57] additional civil remedy of authorizing private damage suits based upon the concept of Section 4 of the Clayton (Antitrust) Act"); 116 Cong. Rec. 35295 (1970) (remarks of Rep. Poff, chief spokesman for the bill) (explaining bill's adoption of the antitrust remedy for use against organized crime). The decision to adopt antitrust remedies does not, however, compel the conclusion that Congress intended to adopt substantive antitrust doctrine. Courts that construe these references to the antitrust laws as indications of Congress' intent to adopt the substance of antitrust doctrine also read too much into too little language.

C

While the foregoing establishes that Congress sought to adopt remedies akin to those used in antitrust law -- such as civil government enforcement -- and to reject antitrust standing rules, other portions of the legislative history reveal just what [***370] Congress intended the substantive dimensions of the civil action to be. Quite simply, its principal target was the economic power of racketeers, and its toll on legitimate businessmen. [*514] To this end, Congress sought to fill a gap in the civil and criminal laws and to provide new remedies broader than [***58] those already available to private or government antitrust plaintiffs, different from those available to government and private citizens under state and federal laws, and significantly narrower than those adopted by the Court today.

In 1967, Senator Hruska proposed two bills, S. 2048 and S. 2049, 90th Cong., 1st Sess., which were designed in part to implement recommendations of the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice (the Katzenbach Commission) on the fight against organized crime. See 113 Cong. Rec. 17998-18001 (1967). The former bill proposed an amendment to the Sherman Act prohibiting the investment or use of unreported income derived from one line of business in another business. Id., at 17999. The latter bill, which was separate from the Sherman Act, prohibited the acquisition of a business interest with income derived from criminal activity. Ibid. Representative Poff introduced similar bills in the House of Representatives. See H. R. 11266, H. R. 11268, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. (1967); 113 Cong. Rec. 17976 (1967).

HÁNEJÍ JÍ ŽE FI LÁFÉ ÁUÉDÁHGI I FÁEHGI I LÁ I ÁSEZÁAŽGÁAH I FÁEHGI I ÁMEZSÓVQÁFFJ FÁEHGI I

Introducing S. 2048, Senator Hruska explained that "[by] limiting its application to intentionally unreported [****59] income, this proposal highlights the fact that the evil to be curbed is the unfair competitive advantage inherent in the large amount of illicit income available to organized crime." Id., at 17999 (emphasis added). He described how organized crime had infiltrated a wide range of businesses, and he observed that "[in] each of these instances, large amounts of cash coupled with threats of violence, extortion, and similar techniques were utilized by mobsters to achieve their desired objectives: monopoly control of these enterprises." Id., at 17998 (emphasis added). He identified four means by which control of legitimate business had been acquired:

"First. Investing concealed profits acquired from gambling and other illegal enterprises.

[*515] "Second. Accepting business interests in payment of the owner's gambling debts.

"Third. Foreclosing on usurious loans.

"Fourth. Using various forms of extortion." Id., at 17998-17999.

The Senator then explained how this infiltration takes its toll:

"The proper functioning of a free economy requires that economic decisions be made by persons free to exercise their own judgment. Force or fear limits choice, ultimately [****60] reduces quality, and increases prices. When organized crime moves into a business, it brings all the techniques of violence and intimidation which it used in its illegal businesses. Competitors are eliminated and customers confined to sponsored suppliers. Its effect is even more unwholesome than other monopolies because its position does not rest on economic superiority." Id., at 17999.

Congress never took action on these bills.

[***371] In 1969, Senator McClellan introduced the Organized Crime Control Act, which altered numerous criminal law areas such as grand juries, immunity, and sentencing, but which contained no provision like that now known as RICO. See S. 30, 91st Cong., 1st Sess.; 115 Cong. Rec. 769 (1969). Shortly thereafter, Senator Hruska introduced the Criminal Activities Profits Act. S. 1623, 91st Cong., 1st Sess.; 115 Cong. Rec. 6995-6996 (1969). He explained that S. 1623 was designed to synthesize the earlier two bills (S. 2048 and S. 2049) while placing the "unified whole" outside the Sherman Act in response to the ABA's concerns. According to the Senator, the bill was meant to attack "*the economic power of organized crime and its exercise of unfair [****61] competition with honest businessmen,*" and to address "[the] power of organized crime to establish a monopoly within numerous business fields" and the impact on the free market and honest [*516] competitors of "a racketeer dominated venture." Id., at 6993 (emphasis added).

As introduced, S. 1623 contained a provision for a private treble-damages action; the language of that provision was virtually identical to that in § 1964\(c\), and it likely served as the model for § 1964\(c\). See id., at 6996. Explaining this provision, Senator Hruska said:

"In addition to this criminal prohibition, the bill also creates civil remedies for the honest businessman who has been damaged by unfair competition from the racketeer businessman. Despite the willingness of the courts to apply the Sherman Anti-Trust Act to organized crime activities, as a practical matter the legitimate businessman does not have adequate civil remedies available under that act. This bill fills that gap." Id., at 6993 (emphasis added).

The Senate did not act directly on either S. 30 or S. 1623. Instead, Senators McClellan and Hruska jointly introduced S. 1861, the Corrupt Organizations Act of 1969, 91st [****62] Cong., 1st Sess.; 115 Cong. Rec. 9568-9571, which combined features of the two other bills and added to them. The new bill expanded the list of offenses that would constitute "racketeering activity" and required that the proscribed conduct be committed through a pattern of "racketeering activity." It did not, however, contain a private civil remedy provision, but only authorization for an injunctive action brought by the Attorney General. Senator McClellan thereafter requested that the provisions of S. 1861 be incorporated by amendment into the broad Organized Crime Control Act, S. 30. See 115 Cong. Rec. 9566-9571 (1969).

I Í HÁEÜÄÍ JÄÍ FÍ LÁÉ ÁUÉÖÄÄG Í ÄÄH G Í LÁÍ ÅÉOÅÄGÁÍ Í ÄÄH FLÄJÌ Í ÁNÈÅSÓYQÄFFJÄÄH G

In December 1969, the Senate Judiciary Committee reported on the Organized Crime Control Act, S. 30, as amended to include S. 1861 as Title IX, "Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations." Title IX, it is clear, was [*517] aimed at precisely the same evil that Senator Hruska had targeted in 1967 -- the infiltration of legitimate business by organized crime. According to the Committee Report, the Title

"has as its purpose the elimination of the infiltration of organized crime and racketeering into legitimate organizations operating in interstate commerce. [****63] It seeks to achieve this objective by the fashioning of new criminal and civil remedies and investigative procedures. [***372] " S. Rep. No. 91-617, p. 76 (1969).

In language taken virtually verbatim from the earlier floor statements of Senator Hruska, the Report described the extraordinary range of legitimate businesses and unions that had been infiltrated by racketeers, and the means by which the racketeers sought to profit from the infiltration. It described "scams" involving bankruptcy and insurance fraud, and the use of "force or fear" to secure a monopoly in the service or product of the business, and it summed up: "When the campaign is successful, the organization begins to extract a premium price from customers." Id., at 77.

Similarly, Senator Byrd spoke in favor of Title IX and gave other examples of the "awesome power" of racketeers and their methods of operation. He described, for example, how one racketeer had gained a foothold in a detergent company and then had used arson and murder to try to get the A & P Tea Co. to buy a detergent that A & P had tested and rejected. 116 Cong. Rec. 607 (1970). As another example, he explained that racketeers would corner [****64] the market on a good or service and then withhold it from a businessman until he surrendered his business or made some other related economic concession. Ibid. In each of these cases, I note, the racketeer engaged in criminal acts in order to accomplish a commercial goal -- e. g., to destroy competition, create a monopoly, or infiltrate a legitimate business. See also id., at 602 (statement of Sen. Hruska) ("[Organized crime] employs [*518] physical brutality, fear and corruption to intimidate competitors and customers to achieve increased sales and profits") (emphasis added). In sum, "[scrutiny] of the Senate Report . . . establishes without a doubt a single dominating purpose of the Senate in proposing the RICO statute: 'Title IX represents the committee's careful efforts to fashion new remedies to deal with the infiltration of organized crime into legitimate organizations operating in interstate commerce.'" ABA Report 105.

The bill passed the Senate after a short debate by a vote of 73 to 1, without a treble-damages provision, and it was then considered by the House. In hearings before the House Judiciary Committee, it was suggested that the bill should [****65] include "the additional civil remedy of authorizing private damage suits based upon the concept of Section 4 of the Clayton Act." House Hearings, at 543-544 (statement of Edward Wright, ABA president-elect); see also id., at 520 (statement of Rep. Steiger) (suggesting addition of a private civil damages remedy). Before reporting the bill favorably in September 1970, the House Judiciary Committee made one change to the civil remedy provision -- it added a private treble-damages provision to the civil remedies already available to the Government; the Committee accorded this change only a single statement in the Committee Report: "The title, as amended, also authorizes civil treble damage suits on the part of private parties who are injured." H. R. Rep. No. 91-1549, p. 35 (1970). Three Congressmen dissented from the Report. Their views are particularly telling because, with language that is narrow compared to the extraordinary scope the civil provision has acquired, these three challenged the possible breadth and abuse of the private civil remedy by plaintiff-competitors:

"[***373] Indeed, [§ 1964(c)] provides invitation for disgruntled and malicious competitors to [****66] harass innocent businessmen [*519] engaged in interstate commerce by authorizing private damage suits. A competitor need only raise the claim that his rival has derived gains from two games of poker, and, because this title prohibits even the 'indirect use' of such gains -- a provision with tremendous outreach -- litigation is begun. What a protracted, expensive trial may not succeed in doing, the adverse publicity may well accomplish -- destruction of the rival's business." Id., at 187 (emphasis added).

I Í HÁEJÁ Í JÉÍ FJLÁFÍ ÁUÉOÄHÍ I ÉEHG Í LÀÍ ÁSEÓaÉGAÁI Í ÉEHÍ HÁFJÍ Í ÁNÈESÓYQÁFFJÉEHÍ Í

The bill then returned to the Senate, which passed it without a conference, apparently to assure passage during the session. Thus, the private remedy at issue here slipped quietly into the statute, and its entrance evinces absolutely no intent to revolutionize the enforcement scheme, or to give undue breadth to the broadly worded provisions -- provisions Congress fully expected Government enforcers to narrow.

Putting together these various pieces, I can only conclude that Congress intended to give to businessmen who might otherwise have had no available remedy a possible way to recover damages for competitive injury, infiltration injury, or other economic injury resulting [***67] out of, but wholly distinct from, the predicate acts. Congress fully recognized that racketeers do not engage in predicate acts as ends in themselves; instead, racketeers threaten, burn, and murder in order to induce their victims to act in a way that accrues to the economic benefit of the racketeer, as by ceasing to compete, or agreeing to make certain purchases. Congress' concern was not for the direct victims of the racketeers' acts, whom state and federal laws already protected, but for the competitors and investors whose businesses and interests are harmed or destroyed by racketeers, or whose competitive positions decline because of infiltration in the relevant market. Its focus was on the victims of the extraordinary economic power that racketeers are able to acquire through a wide [*520] range of illicit methods. Indeed, that is why Congress provided for recovery only for injury to business or property -- that is, commercial injuries -- and not for personal physical or emotional injury.

The only way to give effect to Congress' concern is to require that plaintiffs plead and prove that they suffered RICO injury -- injury to their competitive, investment, or other [***68] business interests resulting from the defendant's conduct of a business or infiltration of a business or a market, through a pattern of racketeering activity. As I shall demonstrate, this requirement is manageable, and it puts the statute to the use to which it was addressed. In addition, this requirement is faithful to the language of the statute, which does not appear to provide recovery for injuries incurred by reason of individual predicate acts. It also avoids most of the "extraordinary uses" to which the statute has been put, in which legitimate businesses that have engaged in two criminal acts have been labeled "racketeers," have faced treble-damages judgments in favor of the direct victims, and often have settled to avoid the destructive publicity and the resulting harm to reputation. These cases take their toll; [***374] their results distort the market by saddling legitimate businesses with uncalled-for punitive bills and undeserved labels. To allow punitive actions and significant damages for injury beyond that which the statute was intended to target is to achieve nothing the statute sought to achieve, and ironically to injure many of those lawful businesses that [***69] the statute sought to protect. Under such circumstances, I believe this Court is derelict in its failure to interpret the statute in keeping with the language and intent of Congress.

Several lower courts have remarked, however, that a "RICO injury" requirement, while perhaps contemplated by the statute, defies definition. I disagree. The following series of examples, culled in part from the legislative history of the RICO statute, illustrates precisely what does and does not fall within this definition.

[*521] First. If a "racketeer" uses "[threats], arson and assault . . . to force competitors out of business and obtain larger shares of the market," House Hearings, at 106 (statement of Sen. McClellan), the threats, arson, and assault represent the predicate acts. The pattern of those acts is designed to accomplish, and accomplishes, the goal of monopolization. Competitors thereby injured or forced out of business could allege "RICO" injury and recover damages for lost profits. So, too, purchasers of the racketeer's goods or services, who are forced to buy from the racketeer/monopolist at higher prices, and whose businesses therefore are injured, might recover damages [***70] for the excess costs of doing business. The direct targets of the predicate acts -- whether competitors, suppliers, or others -- could recover for damages flowing from the predicate acts themselves, but under state or perhaps other federal law, not RICO.

Second. If a "racketeer" uses arson and threats to induce honest businessmen to pay protection money, or to purchase certain goods, or to hire certain workers, the targeted businessmen could sue to recover for injury to their business and property resulting from the added costs. This would be so if they were the direct victims of the predicate acts or if they had reacted to offenses committed against other businessmen. In each case, the predicate acts were committed in order to accomplish a certain end -- e. g., to induce the prospective plaintiffs to take action to the economic benefit of the racketeer; in each case the result would have taken a toll on the competitive position of the prospective plaintiff by increasing his costs of doing business.

I Í HÁEJÁ Í JÉA GFLÁE ÁUÉDÁHG Í ÉEHG Í LÀ Í ÁSEÓaÉGÁH Í ÉEHHÍ I LAFJÍ Í ÁNÈESÓYQÁFFJÉEÉ €

At the same time, the plaintiffs could not recover under RICO for the direct damages from the predicate acts. They could not, for example, recover for the cost of the building [***71] burned, or for personal injury resulting from the threat. Indeed, compensation for this latter injury is barred already by RICO's exclusion of personal injury claims. As in the previous [*522] example, these injuries are amply protected by state-law damages actions.

Third. If a "racketeer" infiltrates and obtains control of a legitimate business either through fraud, foreclosure on usurious loans, extortion, or acceptance of business interests in payment of gambling debts, the honest investor who is thereby displaced could bring a civil RICO action claiming infiltration injury resulting [**375] from the infiltrator's pattern of predicate acts that enabled him to gain control. Thereafter, if the enterprise conducts its business through a pattern of racketeering activity to enhance its profits or perpetuate its economic power, competitors of that enterprise could bring civil RICO actions alleging injury by reason of the enhanced commercial position the enterprise has obtained from its unlawful acts, and customers forced to purchase from sponsored suppliers could recover their added costs of doing business. At the same time, the direct victims of the activity -- for example, [***72] customers defrauded by an infiltrated bank -- could not recover under civil RICO. The bank does not, of course, thereby escape liability. The customers simply must rely on the existing causes of action, usually under state law.

Alternatively, if the infiltrated enterprise operates a legitimate business to a businessman's competitive disadvantage because of the enterprise's strong economic base derived from perpetration of predicate acts, the competitor could bring a civil RICO action alleging injury to his competitive position. The predicate acts then would have enabled the "enterprise" to gain a competitive advantage that brought harm to the plaintiff-competitor. Again, the direct victims of the predicate acts whose profits were invested in the "legitimate enterprise," would not be able to recover damages under civil RICO for injury resulting from the predicate acts alone.

These examples are not exclusive, and if this formulation were adopted, lower courts would, of course, have the opportunity [*523] to smooth numerous rough edges. The examples are designed simply to illustrate the type of injury that civil RICO was, to my mind, designed to compensate. The construction [***73] I describe offers a powerful remedy to the honest businessmen with whom Congress was concerned, who might have had no recourse against a "racketeer" prior to enactment of the statute. At the same time, this construction avoids both the theoretical and practical problems outlined in Part I. Under this view, traditional state-law claims are not federalized; federal remedial schemes are not inevitably displaced or superseded; and, consequently, ordinary commercial disputes are not misguidedly placed within the scope of civil RICO.<sup>2</sup>

III

The Court today permits two civil actions for treble damages to go forward that are not authorized either by the language and legislative history of the civil RICO statute, or by the policies that underlay passage of that statute. In so doing, the Court shirks [***74] its well-recognized responsibility to assure that Congress' intent is not thwarted by maintenance of unintended litigation, and it does so based on an unfounded and ill-considered reading of a statutory provision. Because I believe the provision at issue is susceptible of a narrower interpretation that comports both with the statutory language and the legislative history, I dissent.

JUSTICE POWELL, dissenting.

[**376] I agree with JUSTICE MARSHALL that the Court today reads the civil RICO statute in a way that validates uses of the statute that were never intended by Congress, and I join his dissent. I write separately to emphasize my disagreement [*524] with the Court's conclusion that the statute must be applied to authorize the

---

<sup>2</sup>The analysis in my dissent would lead to the dismissal of the civil RICO claims at stake here. I thus do not need to decide whether a civil RICO action can proceed only after a criminal conviction. See ante, at 488-493.

Í Í HÁWEJÁÍ JÉÍ G LÍFÍ ÁUÉOÄNGÍ ÉEHEGÍ LÁÍ ÁSEÓaÉGAÁÍ Í ÉEHEHÍ LAFJÍ ÁNÈESÓYQÁFFJÉEÉI types of private civil actions now being brought frequently against respected businesses to redress ordinary fraud and breach-of-contract cases.<sup>1</sup>

[****75] I

In United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576 (1981), the Court noted that in construing the scope of a statute, its language, if unambiguous, must be regarded as conclusive "in the absence of 'a clearly expressed legislative intent to the contrary.'" Id., at 580 (emphasis added) (quoting Consumer Product Safety Comm'n v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 447 U.S. 102, 108 (1980)). Accord, Russello v. United States, 464 U.S. 16, 20 (1983). In both Turkette and Russello, we found that the "declared purpose" of Congress in enacting the RICO statute was "to seek the eradication of organized crime in the United States." United States v. Turkette, supra, at 589 (quoting the statement of findings prefacing the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970, Pub. L. 91-452, 84 Stat. 923); accord, Russello v. United States, supra, at 26-27. That organized crime was Congress' target is apparent from the Act's title, is made plain throughout the legislative history of the statute, see, e. g., S. Rep. No. 91-617, p. 76 (1969) (S. Rep.), and is acknowledged by [****76] all parties to these two [**3288] cases. Accord, Report of the Ad Hoc Civil RICO Task Force of the ABA Section of Corporation, Banking and Business Law 70-92 (1985) (ABA Report). The legislative history cited by the Court today amply supports this conclusion, see ante, at 487-488, and the Court concedes that "in its private civil version, RICO is evolving into something quite [*525] different from the original conception of its enactors. See generally ABA Report 55-69." Ante, at 500. Yet, the Court concludes that it is compelled by the statutory language to construe § 1964(c) to reach garden-variety fraud and breach of contract cases such as those before us today. Ibid.

As the Court of Appeals observed in this case, "[if] Congress had intended to provide a federal forum for plaintiffs for so many common law wrongs, it would at least have discussed it."<sup>2</sup> 741 F.2d 482, 492 (1984). The Court today concludes that Congress was aware of the broad scope of the statute, relying on the fact that some Congressmen objected to the possibility of abuse of [***377] the RICO statute by arguing that it could be used "to harass innocent businessmen." [***77] H. R. Rep. No. 91-1549, p. 187 (1970) (dissenting views of Reps. Conyers, Mikva, and Ryan); 116 Cong. Rec. 35342 (1970) (remarks of Rep. Mikva).

In the legislative history of every statute, one may find critics of the bill who predict dire consequences in the event of its enactment. A court need not infer from such statements by opponents that Congress intended those consequences to occur, particularly where, as here, there is compelling evidence to the contrary. The legislative history reveals that Congress did not state explicitly that the statute would reach only members of the Mafia because it believed there were constitutional problems with establishing such a specific status offense. E. g., id., at 35343-35344 (remarks of Rep. Celler); id., at 35344 (remarks of Rep. Poff). Nonetheless, the legislative history makes clear that the statute was intended [***78] to be applied to organized crime, and an influential sponsor of the bill emphasized that any effect it had beyond such crime was meant to be only incidental. Id., at 18914 (remarks of Sen. McClellan).

[*526] The ABA study concurs in this view. The ABA Report states:

"In an attempt to ensure the constitutionality of the statute, Congress made the central proscription of the statute the use of a 'pattern of racketeering activities' in connection with an 'enterprise,' rather than merely outlawing membership in the Mafia, La Cosa Nostra, or other organized criminal syndicates. 'Racketeering' was defined to embrace a potpourri of federal and state criminal offenses deemed to be the type of criminal activities frequently engaged in by mobsters, racketeers and other traditional members of 'organized crime.' The 'pattern' element of the statute was designed to limit its application to planned, ongoing, continuing crime as opposed to sporadic, unrelated, isolated criminal episodes. The 'enterprise' element, when coupled with the 'pattern' requirement, was intended by the Congress to keep the reach of RICO focused directly on traditional organized crime and comparable ongoing [***79] criminal activities carried out in a structured, organized environment. The reach of the statute beyond traditional mobster and racketeer activity and comparable ongoing structured criminal enterprises, was intended to be incidental, and only to the extent necessary to maintain the constitutionality of a statute aimed primarily at organized crime." Id., at 71-72 (footnote omitted).

<sup>1</sup> The Court says these suits are not being brought against the "archetypal, intimidating mobster" because of a "defect" that is "inherent in the statute." Ante, at 499. If RICO must be construed as the Court holds, this is indeed a defect that Congress never intended. I do not believe that the statute must be construed in what in effect is an irrational manner.

<sup>2</sup> The force of this observation is accented by RICO's provision for treble damages -- an enticing invitation to litigate these claims in federal courts.

I Í HÀMÌA Í JÁA GÌ LÀ Í ÁU ĐÓNG Í ÉÉH GÌ LÀ Í ÁU ÓA ÓGÁA Í ÉÉH Í LÀJÌ Í ÁU ÓSÓY QÁFFJÁA Í

It has turned out in this case that the naysayers' dire predictions have come true. As the Court notes, ante, at 499, and n. 16, RICO has been interpreted so broadly that it has been used more often against respected businesses with no ties to organized crime, than against the mobsters who were the clearly intended target of the [**3289] statute. While I acknowledge that the language of the statute may be read as broadly as the Court interprets it today, I do not believe that it must [*527] be so read. Nor do I believe that interpreting the statutory language more narrowly than the Court does will "eliminate the [civil RICO] private action," ante, at 499, in cases of the [***378] kind clearly identified by the legislative history. The statute may and should be read narrowly [***80] to confine its reach to the type of conduct Congress had in mind. It is the duty of this Court to implement the unequivocal intention of Congress.

II

The language of this complex statute is susceptible of being read consistently with this intent. For example, the requirement in the statute of proof of a "pattern" of racketeering activity may be interpreted narrowly. Section 1961\(5\), defining "pattern of racketeering activity," states that such a pattern "requires at least two acts of racketeering activity." This contrasts with the definition of "racketeering activity" in § 1961\(1\), stating that such activity "means" any of a number of acts. The definition of "pattern" may thus logically be interpreted as meaning that the presence of the predicate acts is only the beginning: something more is required for a "pattern" to be proved. The ABA Report concurs in this view. It argues persuasively that "[the] 'pattern' element of the statute was designed to limit its application to planned, ongoing, continuing crime as opposed to sporadic, unrelated, isolated criminal episodes," ABA Report 72, such as the criminal acts alleged in the case before us today.

The legislative history bears [***81] out this interpretation of "pattern." Senator McClellan, a leading sponsor of the bill, stated that "proof of two acts of racketeering activity, without more, does not establish a pattern." 116 Cong. Rec. 18940 (1970). Likewise, the Senate Report considered the "concept of 'pattern' [to be] essential to the operation of the statute." S. Rep., at 158. It stated that the bill was not aimed at sporadic activity, but that the "infiltration of legitimate business normally requires more than one 'racketeering [*528] activity' and the threat of continuing activity to be effective. It is this factor of continuity plus relationship which combines to produce a pattern." Ibid. (emphasis added). The ABA Report suggests that to effectuate this legislative intent, "pattern" should be interpreted as requiring that (i) the racketeering acts be related to each other, (ii) they be part of some common scheme, and (iii) some sort of continuity between the acts or a threat of continuing criminal activity must be shown. ABA Report, at 193-208. By construing "pattern" to focus on the manner in which the crime was perpetrated, courts could go a long way toward limiting the reach of [***82] the statute to its intended target -- organized crime.

The Court concedes that "pattern" could be narrowly construed, ante, at 496, n. 14, and notes that part of the reason civil RICO has been put to such extraordinary uses is because of the "failure of Congress and the courts to develop a meaningful concept of 'pattern,'" ante, at 500. The Court declines to decide whether the defendants' acts constitute such a pattern in this case, however, because it concludes that that question is not before the Court. Ibid. I agree that the scope of the "pattern" requirement is not included in the questions on which we granted certiorari. I am concerned, however, that in the course of rejecting the Court of Appeals' ruling that the statute requires proof of a "racketeering injury" the Court has read [***379] the entire statute so broadly that it will be difficult, if not impossible, for courts to adopt a reading of "pattern" that will conform to the intention of Congress.

The Court bases its rejection of the "racketeering injury" requirement on the general principles that the RICO statute is to be read "broadly," that it is to be "liberally construed to effectuate its remedial [***83] purposes," ante, at 498 (quoting Pub. L. 91-452, § 904(a), 84 Stat. 947), and that the statute was part of "an aggressive initiative [**3290] to supplement old remedies and develop new methods for fighting crime." Ante, at 498. Although the Court acknowledges that few of the legislative statements supporting these principles were made [*529] with reference to RICO's private civil action, it concludes nevertheless that all of the Act's provisions should be read in the "spirit" of these principles. Ibid. By constructing such a broad premise for its rejection of the "racketeering injury" requirement, the Court seems to mandate that all future courts read the entire statute broadly.

It is neither necessary to the Court's decision, nor in my view correct, to read the civil RICO provisions so expansively. We ruled in Turkette and Russello that the statute must be read broadly and construed liberally to effectuate its remedial purposes, but like the legislative history to which the Court alludes, it is clear we were referring there to RICO's criminal provisions. It does not necessarily follow that the same principles apply to RICO's private civil provisions. [***84] The Senate Report recognized a difference between criminal and civil enforcement in describing proposed civil remedies that would have been available to the Government. It emphasized that although those proposed remedies were intended to place additional pressure on organized crime, they were intended to reach "essentially an economic, not a punitive goal." S. Rep., at 81 (emphasis added). The Report elaborated as follows:

"However remedies may be fashioned, it is necessary to free the channels of commerce from predatory activities, but there is no intent to visit punishment on any individual; the purpose is civil. Punishment as such is limited to the criminal remedies . . ." Ibid. (emphasis added; footnote omitted).

The reference in the Report to "predatory activities" was to organized crime. Only a small fraction of the scores of civil RICO cases now being brought implicate organized crime in any way.<sup>3</sup> Typically, these suits are being brought -- in the [*530] unfettered discretion of private litigants -- in federal court against legitimate businesses seeking treble damages in ordinary fraud and contract cases. There is nothing comparable in those cases [***85] to the restraint on the institution of criminal suits exercised by Government prosecutorial discretion. Today's opinion inevitably will encourage continued expansion of resort to RICO in cases of alleged fraud or contract violation [***380] rather than to the traditional remedies available in state court. As the Court of Appeals emphasized, it defies rational belief, particularly in light of the legislative history, that Congress intended this far-reaching result. Accordingly, I dissent.

References

---

Return To Full Text Opinion

31 Am Jur 2d, Extortion, Blackmail, and Threats 31, 32, 37

18 USCS 1962, 1964\(c\)

US L Ed Digest, Extortion and Blackmail 1; Fraud and Deceit 4; Statutes 184

L Ed Index to Annos, Organized [***86] Crime Control Act of 1970; Racketeering

ALR Quick Index, Racketeering

Federal Quick Index, Antiracketeering Act

Annotation References:

Civil action for damages under 18 USCS 1964\(c\) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO, 18 USCS 1961 et seq.) for injuries sustained by reason of racketeering activity. 70 ALR Fed 538.

---

<sup>3</sup> As noted in the ABA Report, of the 270 District Court RICO decisions prior to this year, only 3% (9 cases) were decided throughout the entire decade of the 1970's, whereas 43% (116 cases) were decided in 1984. ABA Report, at 53a (Table). See ante, at 481, n. 1.

I Í HÁEÜÍ JÉÍ HÉLÉÍ ÁUÉÓÄGÍ I ÉHIGJELÁÍ ÁSEÓaÉGÁÍ I ÉHÉHÉLÁJÍ I ÁNÈÉSÓYQÁFFJÉHÉI

What is an "enterprise," as defined at 18 USCS 1961\(4\), for purposes of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) statute (18 USCS 1961 et seq.). 52 ALR Fed 818.

Validity, construction, and application of 18 USCS 1962, making unlawful certain acts involving "pattern of racketeering activity" or "collection of unlawful debt." 29 ALR Fed 826.

---

End of Document

Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth

Supreme Court of the United States

March 18, 1985, Argued ; July 2, 1985, Decided *

No. 83-1569

Reporter

473 U.S. 614 *; 105 S. Ct. 3346 **; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 ***; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129 ****; 53 U.S.L.W. 5069; 1985-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,669

MITSUBISHI MOTORS CORP. v. SOLER CHRYSLER-PLYMOUTH, INC.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIRST CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 723 F.2d 155, affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

Core Terms

---

arbitration, antitrust, Convention, disputes, parties, antitrust claim, arbitration clause, courts, agreement to arbitrate, anti trust law, Sherman Act, tribunal, rights, dealers, contractual, court of appeals, encompass, awards, district court, federal policy, manufactured, distributor, public interest, statutory claim, damages, cases, statutory right, subject matter, contracts, commerce

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Maritime Contracts > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Arbitration > General Overview

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Arbitration > Judicial Review

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

HN1[] Admiralty & Maritime Law, Maritime Contracts

See 9 U.S.C.S. § 4.

---

* Together with No. 83-1733, Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc. v. Mitsubishi Motors Corp., also on certiorari to the same court.

473 U.S. 614, *614; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3346; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***444; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****1

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > Foreign Arbitral Awards

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration

HN2 Arbitration, Foreign Arbitral Awards

See § 201 of the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards, (1970), 21 U.S.T. 2519, 9 U.S.C.S. § 201.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Arbitration > Enforcement of Arbitration

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Arbitration > General Overview

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Maritime Contracts > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > Arbitration Agreements

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Validity of ADR Methods

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

HN3 Arbitration, Enforcement of Arbitration

The Federal Arbitration Act (Act) makes a written agreement to arbitrate in any maritime transaction or a contract evidencing a transaction involving commerce valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract. 9 U.S.C.S. § 2. The Act guarantees the enforcement of private contractual arrangements by creating a body of federal substantive law establishing and regulating the duty to honor an agreement to arbitrate.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > Arbitration Agreements

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

473 U.S. 614, *614; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3346; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***444; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****1

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > Scope

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Validity of ADR Methods

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

HN4 [down arrow] Federal Arbitration Act, Arbitration Agreements

The first task of a court asked to compel arbitration of a dispute is to determine whether the parties agreed to arbitrate that dispute. The court is to make this determination by applying the federal substantive law of arbitrability, applicable to any arbitration agreement within the coverage of the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > Arbitrability

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Waiver & Preservation of Defenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Validity of ADR Methods

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

HN5 [down arrow] Arbitration, Arbitrability

The Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., establishes that, as a matter of federal law, any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues should be resolved in favor of arbitration, whether the problem at hand is the construction of the contract language itself or an allegation of waiver, delay, or a like defense to arbitrability.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

HN6 [down arrow] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Arbitration Clauses

By agreeing to arbitrate a statutory claim, a party does not forgo the substantive rights afforded by the statute; it only submits to their resolution in an arbitral, rather than a judicial, forum. It trades the procedures and opportunity for review of the courtroom for the simplicity, informality, and expedition of arbitration. Having made the bargain to arbitrate, the party should be held to it unless congress has evinced an intention to preclude a waiver of judicial remedies for the statutory rights at issue. Nothing prevents a party from excluding statutory claims from the scope of an agreement to arbitrate.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Validity of ADR Methods

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

HN7 [] Alternative Dispute Resolution, Validity of ADR Methods

A court must first determine whether the parties' agreement to arbitrate reaches any statutory issues raised, and then, upon a finding that it does, the court will consider whether legal constraints external to the parties' agreement forecloses the arbitration of those claims.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Maritime Contracts > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > Agreements

International Law > ... > Comity Doctrine > Areas of Law > Commercial Transactions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Dispute Resolution > Conflict of Law > Forum Selection

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

HN8 [] Admiralty & Maritime Law, Maritime Contracts

Concerns of international comity, respect for the capacities of foreign and transnational tribunals, and sensitivity to the need of the international commercial system for predictability in the resolution of disputes require that the court enforce the parties' agreement, even assuming that a contrary result would be forthcoming in a domestic context.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Forum Selection Clauses

HN9 [] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Arbitration Clauses

Agreements to arbitrate before a specified tribunal as in effect a specialized kind of forum-selection clause that posits not only the situs of suit but also the procedure to be used in resolving the dispute.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > Agreements

473 U.S. 614, *614; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3346; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***444; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****1

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Judicial Review

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

International Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > Orders to Compel

International Trade Law > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor Arbitration > Enforcement

HN10[] Arbitration & Mediation, Agreements

A parochial refusal by the courts of one country to enforce an international arbitration agreement would not only frustrate these purposes, but would invite unseemly and mutually destructive jockeying by the parties to secure tactical litigation advantages. It would damage the fabric of international commerce and trade, and imperil the willingness and ability of businessmen to enter into international commercial agreements.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Validity of ADR Methods

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Coercion & Duress > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor Arbitration > Enforcement

HN11[] Alternative Dispute Resolution, Validity of ADR Methods

The mere appearance of an antitrust dispute does not alone warrant invalidation of the selected forum on the undemonstrated assumption that the arbitration clause is tainted. A party resisting arbitration of course may attack directly the validity of the agreement to arbitrate. Moreover, the party may attempt to make a showing that would warrant setting aside the forum-selection clause -- that the agreement was affected by fraud, undue influence, or overweening bargaining power; that enforcement would be unreasonable and unjust; or that proceedings in the contractual forum will be so gravely difficult and inconvenient that the resisting party will for all practical purposes be deprived of his day in court. But absent such a showing there is no basis for assuming the forum inadequate or its selection unfair.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Validity of ADR Methods

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

**HN12** [blue icon] Alternative Dispute Resolution, Validity of ADR Methods

Potential complexity should not suffice to ward off arbitration.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN13** [blue icon] Private Actions, Remedies

A claim under the antitrust laws is not merely a private matter. The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., is designed to promote the national interest in a competitive economy; thus, the plaintiff asserting his rights under the Act has been likened to a private attorney-general who protects the public's interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

**HN14** [blue icon] Remedies, Damages

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, is in essence a remedial provision. It provides treble damages to any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. Of course, treble damages also play an important role in penalizing wrongdoers and deterring wrongdoing. It nevertheless is true that the treble-damages provision, which makes awards available only to injured parties, and measures the awards by a multiple of the injury actually proved, is designed primarily as a remedy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

International Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

**HN15** [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

An international arbitral tribunal owes no prior allegiance to the legal norms of particular states; hence, it has no direct obligation to vindicate their statutory dictates. The tribunal, however, is bound to effectuate the intentions of the parties. Where the parties have agreed that the arbitral body is to decide a defined set of claims which includes those arising from the application of American antitrust law, the tribunal therefore should be bound to decide that dispute in accord with the national law giving rise to the claim. And so long as the prospective litigant effectively may vindicate its statutory cause of action in the arbitral forum, the statute will continue to serve both its remedial and deterrent function.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Claims arising under the Sherman Act and encompassed within a valid arbitration clause in an agreement embodying an international commercial transaction held arbitrable pursuant to the federal Arbitration Act.

Summary

A Puerto Rico corporation entered into distribution and sales agreements with a Swiss corporation and a Japanese corporation which manufactures automobiles in Japan. This automobile manufacturer was the product of a joint venture between the Swiss corporation and another Japanese corporation. The sales agreement contained a clause providing for arbitration by the Japan Commercial Arbitration Association of all disputes arising out of certain articles of the agreement or for the breach thereof. Subsequently, disputes arose from a slackening of the sale of the automobiles. After attempts to work out these disputes failed, the Japanese manufacturer brought an action against the Puerto Rico corporation in the United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico under the federal Arbitration Act (9 USCS 1 et seq.) and the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards, seeking an order to compel arbitration of the disputes in accordance with the arbitration clause. The Puerto Rico corporation filed an answer and counterclaims, asserting, among others, causes of action under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) and other statutes. The District Court ordered arbitration of all the issues raised in the complaint and most of the issues raised in the counterclaims, including the federal antitrust issues, holding that the international character of the undertaking in question required enforcement of the arbitration clause even as to the antitrust claims. The United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit reversed insofar as the District Court ordered submission of the antitrust claims to arbitration (723 F2d 155).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded. In an opinion by Blackmun, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and White, Rehnquist, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held that claims arising under the Sherman Act and encompassed within a valid arbitration clause in an agreement embodying an international commercial transaction are arbitrable pursuant to the federal Arbitration Act.

Stevens, J., joined by Brennan, J., and also by Marshall, J., except as to Part II, dissented on the grounds that (1) a fair construction of the language in the arbitration clause in the parties' contract does not encompass a claim that auto manufacturers entered into a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws; (2) an arbitration clause should not normally be construed to cover a statutory remedy that it does not expressly identify (Part II); (3) Congress did not intend Part 2 of the federal Arbitration Act (9 USCS 2) to apply to antitrust claims; and (4) Congress did not intend the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards to apply to disputes that are not covered by the federal Arbitration Act.

Powell, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

473 U.S. 614, *614; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3346; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***444; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****1

ARBITRATION §2 > antitrust claims -- international commercial transaction -- arbitrability -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

Antitrust claims arising under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) and encompassed within a valid arbitration clause in an agreement embodying an international commercial transaction are arbitrable pursuant to the federal Arbitration Act (9 USCS 1 et seq.); concerns of international comity, respect for the capacities of foreign and transactional tribunals, and sensitivity to the need of the international commercial system for predictability in the resolution of disputes require enforcement of such arbitration clause, even assuming that a contrary result would be forthcoming in a domestic context. (Stevens, Brennan, and Marshall, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

ARBITRATION §2 > federal Arbitration Act -- arbitrability of statutory claims -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

There is no warrant in the federal Arbitration Act (9 USCS 1 et seq.) for implying in every contract within its ken a presumption against arbitration of statutory claims.

ARBITRATION §2 > policy favoring arbitration -- statutory claims -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

There is no reason to depart from the federal policy favoring arbitration where a party bound by an arbitration agreement raises claims founded on statutory rights.

ARBITRATION §2 > statutory claims -- substantive rights afforded by statute -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

By agreeing to arbitrate a statutory claim, a party does not forgo the substantive rights afforded by the statute; it only submits to their resolution in an arbitral, rather than a judicial, forum.

Syllabus

---

Petitioner-cross-respondent (hereafter petitioner), a Japanese corporation that manufactures automobiles, is the product of a joint venture between Chrysler International, S.A. (CISA), a Swiss corporation, and another Japanese corporation, aimed at distributing through Chrysler dealers outside the continental United States automobiles manufactured by petitioner. Respondent-cross-petitioner (hereafter respondent), a Puerto Rico corporation, entered into distribution and sales agreements with CISA. The sales agreement (to which petitioner was also a party) contained a clause providing for arbitration by the Japan Commercial Arbitration Association of all disputes arising out of certain articles of the agreement or for the breach thereof. Thereafter, when attempts to work out disputes arising from a slackening of the sale of new automobiles failed, petitioner withheld shipment of automobiles to respondent, which disclaimed responsibility for them. Petitioner then brought an action in Federal District Court under the Federal Arbitration [****2] Act and the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards, seeking an order to compel arbitration of the disputes in accordance with the arbitration clause. Respondent filed an answer and counterclaims, asserting, inter alia, causes of action under the Sherman

Act and other statutes. The District Court ordered arbitration of most of the issues raised in the complaint and counterclaims, including the federal antitrust issues. Despite the doctrine of American Safety Equipment Corp. v. J. P. Maguire & Co., 391 F.2d 821 (CA2), uniformly followed by the Courts of Appeals, that rights conferred by the antitrust laws are inappropriate for enforcement by arbitration, the District Court, relying on Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co., 417 U.S. 506, held that the international character of the undertaking in question required enforcement of the arbitration clause even as to the antitrust claims. The Court of Appeals reversed insofar as the District Court ordered submission of the antitrust claims to arbitration.

Held:

1. There is no merit to respondent's contention that because it falls within the class for whose [****3] benefit the statutes specified in the counterclaims were passed, but the arbitration clause at issue does not mention these statutes or statutes in general, the clause cannot be properly read to contemplate arbitration of these statutory claims. There is no warrant in the Arbitration Act for implying in every contract within its ken a presumption against arbitration of statutory claims. Nor is there any reason to depart from the federal policy favoring arbitration where a party bound by an arbitration agreement raises claims founded on statutory rights. Pp. 624-628.
2. Respondent's antitrust claims are arbitrable pursuant to the Arbitration Act. Concerns of international comity, respect for the capacities of foreign and transnational tribunals, and sensitivity to the need of the international commercial system for predictability in the resolution of disputes, all require enforcement of the arbitration clause in question, even assuming that a contrary result would be forthcoming in a domestic context. See Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co., supra. The strong presumption in favor of freely negotiated contractual choice-of-forum provisions is reinforced here [****4] by the federal policy in favor of arbitral dispute resolution, a policy that applies with special force in the field of international commerce. The mere appearance of an antitrust dispute does not alone warrant invalidation of the selected forum on the undemonstrated assumption that the arbitration clause is tainted. So too, the potential complexity of antitrust matters does not suffice to ward off arbitration; nor does an arbitration panel pose too great a danger of innate hostility to the constraints on business conduct that antitrust law imposes. And the importance of the private damages remedy in enforcing the regime of antitrust laws does not compel the conclusion that such remedy may not be sought outside an American court. Pp. 628-640.

Counsel: Wayne A. Cross argued the cause for petitioner in No. 83-1569 and respondent in No. 83-1733. With him on the briefs were Robert L. Sills, William I. Sussman, Samuel T. Cespedes, and Ana Matilde Nin.

Benjamin Rodriguez-Ramon argued the cause for respondent in No. 83-1569 and petitioner in No. 83-1733. With him on the briefs was Jerome Murray.

Jerrold Joseph Ganzfried argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae supporting respondent [****5] in No. 83-1569. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Lee, Assistant Attorney General McGrath, Deputy Solicitor General Wallace, Carolyn F. Corwin, Robert B. Nicholson, and Marion L. Jetton.*

Judges: BLACKMUN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and WHITE, REHNQUIST, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which BRENNAN, J., joined, and in which MARSHALL, J., joined except as to Part II, post, p. 640. POWELL, J., took no part in the decision of the cases.

Opinion by: BLACKMUN

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the American Arbitration Association by Michael F. Hoellering, Joseph T. McLaughlin, Wayne D. Collins, Alfred Ferrer, Rosemary S. Page, Thomas Thacher, John R. Stevenson, Robert B. von Mehren, Gerald Aksen, Henry P. de Vries, Andreas F. Lowenfeld, and J. Stewart McClendon; and for the National Automobile Dealers Association by Jerry S. Cohen.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed for the International Chamber of Commerce by James S. Campbell and Andrew N. Vollmer; and for the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico by Hector Rivera Cruz, Secretary of Justice of Puerto Rico, E. Edward Bruce, and Oscar M. Garibaldi.

Opinion

---

[*616] [****6] [***448] [**3348] JUSTICE BLACKMUN delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A]The principal question presented by these cases is the arbitrability, pursuant to the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U. S. C. § 1 et seq., and the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement [***449] of Foreign Arbitral Awards (Convention), [1970] 21 U.S.T. 2517, T.I.A.S. No. 6997, of claims arising under the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1 et seq., and encompassed within a valid arbitration clause in an agreement embodying an international commercial transaction.

|

Petitioner-cross-respondent Mitsubishi Motors Corporation (Mitsubishi) is a Japanese corporation which manufactures automobiles and has its principal place of business in Tokyo, Japan. Mitsubishi is the product of a joint venture between, on the one hand, Chrysler International, S.A. (CISA), a Swiss corporation registered in [**3349] Geneva and wholly owned by Chrysler Corporation, and, on the other, Mitsubishi Heavy Industries, Inc., a Japanese corporation. The [*617] aim of the joint venture was the distribution through Chrysler dealers outside the continental United States of vehicles manufactured by Mitsubishi and bearing Chrysler [****7] and Mitsubishi trademarks. Respondent-cross-petitioner Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc. (Soler), is a Puerto Rico corporation with its principal place of business in Pueblo Viejo, Guaynabo, Puerto Rico.

On October 31, 1979, Soler entered into a Distributor Agreement with CISA which provided for the sale by Soler of Mitsubishi-manufactured vehicles within a designated area, including metropolitan San Juan. App. 18. On the same date, CISA, Soler, and Mitsubishi entered into a Sales Procedure Agreement (Sales Agreement) which, referring to the Distributor Agreement, provided for the direct sale of Mitsubishi products to Soler and governed the terms and conditions of such sales. Id., at 42. Paragraph VI of the Sales Agreement, labeled "Arbitration of Certain Matters," provides:

"All disputes, controversies or differences which may arise between [Mitsubishi] and [Soler] out of or in relation to Articles I-B through V of this Agreement or for the breach thereof, shall be finally settled by arbitration in Japan in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Japan Commercial Arbitration Association." Id., at 52-53.

Initially, Soler did a brisk business in Mitsubishi-manufactured [****8] vehicles. As a result of its strong performance, its minimum sales volume, specified by Mitsubishi and CISA, and agreed to by Soler, for the 1981 model year was substantially increased. Id., at 179. In early 1981, however, the new-car market slackened. Soler ran into serious difficulties in meeting the expected sales volume, and by the spring of 1981 it felt itself compelled to request that Mitsubishi delay or cancel shipment of several orders. 1 Record 181, 183. About the same time, Soler attempted to arrange for the [*618] transshipment of a quantity of its vehicles for sale in the continental United States and Latin America. Mitsubishi and CISA, however, refused permission for any such diversion, citing a variety of reasons,<sup>1</sup> and no [***450] vehicles were transshipped. Attempts to work out these difficulties failed. Mitsubishi eventually withheld shipment of 966 vehicles, apparently representing orders placed for May, June, and July 1981 production, responsibility for which Soler disclaimed in February 1982. App. 131.

---

<sup>1</sup>The reasons advanced included concerns that such diversion would interfere with the Japanese trade policy of voluntarily limiting imports to the United States, App. 143, 177-178; that the Soler-ordered vehicles would be unsuitable for use in certain proposed destinations because of their manufacture, with use in Puerto Rico in mind, without heaters and defoggers, id., at 182; that the vehicles would be unsuitable for use in Latin America because of the unavailability there of the unleaded, high-octane fuel they required, id., at 177, 181-182; that adequate warranty service could not be ensured, id., at 176, 182; and that diversion to the mainland would violate contractual obligations between CISA and Mitsubishi, id., at 144, 183.

[****9] The following month, Mitsubishi brought an action against Soler in the United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico under the Federal Arbitration Act and the Convention.<sup>2</sup> [****10] Mitsubishi sought an order, pursuant to 9 U. S. C. §§ 4 and 201,<sup>3</sup> [****11] to [**3350] compel arbitration in accord with [*619] para. VI of the Sales Agreement. App. 15.<sup>4</sup> Shortly after filing the complaint, Mitsubishi filed a request for arbitration before the Japan Commercial Arbitration Association. Id., at 70.

Soler denied the allegations and counterclaimed against both Mitsubishi and CISA. It alleged numerous breaches by Mitsubishi of the Sales Agreement,<sup>5</sup> raised a pair of defamation claims,<sup>6</sup> and asserted causes of [***451] action under the Sherman [*620] Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1 et seq.; the federal Automobile Dealers' Day in Court Act, 70 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 1221 et seq.; the Puerto Rico competition statute, P.R. Laws Ann., Tit. 10, § 257 et seq. (1976); and the Puerto Rico Dealers' Contracts Act, P.R. Laws Ann., Tit. 10, § 278 et seq. (1976 and Supp. 1983). In the counterclaim premised on the Sherman Act, Soler alleged that Mitsubishi and CISA had conspired to divide markets in restraint of trade. To effectuate the plan, according to Soler, Mitsubishi had refused to permit Soler to resell to buyers in North, Central, or South America vehicles it had obligated itself to purchase from Mitsubishi; had refused to ship ordered vehicles or the parts, such as heaters and defoggers, that would be necessary [****12] to permit Soler to make its vehicles suitable for resale outside Puerto Rico; and had coercively attempted to replace <sup>2</sup>The complaint alleged that Soler had failed to pay for 966 ordered vehicles; that it had failed to pay contractual "distress unit penalties," intended to reimburse Mitsubishi for storage costs and interest charges incurred because of Soler's failure to take shipment of ordered vehicles; that Soler's failure to fulfill warranty obligations threatened Mitsubishi's reputation and goodwill; that Soler had failed to obtain required financing; and that the Distributor and Sales Agreements had expired by their terms or, alternatively, that Soler had surrendered its rights under the Sales Agreement. Id., at 11-14.

<sup>3</sup>Section 4 provides in pertinent part:

HN1 [↑] "A party aggrieved by the alleged failure, neglect, or refusal of another to arbitrate under a written agreement for arbitration may petition any United States district court which, save for such agreement, would have jurisdiction under title 28, in a civil action or in admiralty of the subject matter of a suit arising out of the controversy between the parties, for an order directing that such arbitration proceed in the manner provided for in such agreement. . . . The court shall hear the parties, and upon being satisfied that the making of the agreement for arbitration or the failure to comply therewith is not in issue, the court shall make an order directing the parties to proceed to arbitration in accordance with the terms of the agreement."

Section 201 provides: HN2 [↑] "The Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards of June 10, 1958, shall be enforced in United States courts in accordance with this chapter." Article II of the Convention, in turn, provides:

"1. Each Contracting State shall recognize an agreement in writing under which the parties undertake to submit to arbitration all or any differences which have arisen or which may arise between them in respect of a defined legal relationship, whether contractual or not, concerning a subject matter capable of settlement by arbitration.

....

"3. The court of a Contracting State, when seized of an action in a matter in respect of which the parties have made an agreement within the meaning of this article, shall, at the request of one of the parties, refer the parties to arbitration, unless it finds that the said agreement is null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed." 21 U.S.T., at 2519.

Title 9 U. S. C. § 203 confers jurisdiction on the district courts of the United States over an action falling under the Convention.

<sup>4</sup>Mitsubishi also sought an order against threatened litigation. App. 15-16.

<sup>5</sup>The alleged breaches included wrongful refusal to ship ordered vehicles and necessary parts, failure to make payment for warranty work and authorized rebates, and bad faith in establishing minimum-sales volumes. Id., at 97-101.

<sup>6</sup>The fourth counterclaim alleged that Mitsubishi had made statements that defamed Soler's good name and business reputation to a company with which Soler was then negotiating the sale of its plant and distributorship. Id., at 96. The sixth counterclaim alleged that Mitsubishi had made a willfully false and malicious statement in an affidavit submitted in support of its application for a temporary restraining order, and that Mitsubishi had wrongfully advised Soler's customers and the public in its market area that they should no longer do business with Soler. Id., at 98-99.

473 U.S. 614, *620; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3350; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***451; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****12

Soler and its other Puerto Rico distributors with a wholly owned subsidiary which would serve as the exclusive Mitsubishi distributor in Puerto Rico. App. 91-96.

[****13] After a hearing, the District Court ordered Mitsubishi and Soler to arbitrate each of the issues raised in the complaint and in all the counterclaims save two and a portion of a third.<sup>7</sup> With regard to the [**3351] federal antitrust issues, it recognized that the Courts of Appeals, following *American Safety Equipment [*621] Corp. v. J. P. Maguire & Co.*, 391 F.2d 821 (CA2 1968), uniformly had held that the rights conferred by the antitrust laws were "of a character inappropriate for enforcement by arbitration."<sup>8</sup> App. to Pet. for Cert. in No. 83-1569, p. B9, quoting Wilko v. Swan, 201 F.2d 439, 444 (CA2 1953), rev'd, 346 U.S. 427 (1953). The District Court held, however, that the international character of the Mitsubishi-Soler undertaking required enforcement of the agreement to arbitrate even as to the antitrust claims. It relied on Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co., 417 U.S. 506, 515-520 (1974), in which this Court ordered arbitration, pursuant to a provision embodied in an international agreement, of a claim arising under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 notwithstanding its assumption, [****14] arguendo, that Wilko, supra, which held nonarbitrable claims arising under the Securities Act of 1933, [***452] also would bar arbitration of a 1934 Act claim arising in a domestic context.

[****15] The United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit affirmed in part and reversed in part. 723 F.2d 155 (1983). It first rejected Soler's argument that Puerto Rico law precluded enforcement of an agreement obligating a local dealer to arbitrate controversies outside Puerto Rico.<sup>9</sup> [****16] It also rejected Soler's suggestion that it could not have intended to arbitrate statutory claims not mentioned in the arbitration agreement. Assessing arbitrability "on an allegation-by-allegation basis," id., at 159, the court then read the arbitration [*622] clause to encompass virtually all the claims arising under the various statutes, including all those arising under the Sherman Act.<sup>9</sup>

---

<sup>7</sup>The District Court found that the arbitration clause did not cover the fourth and sixth counterclaims, which sought damages for defamation, see n. 6, supra, or the allegations in the seventh counterclaim concerning discriminatory treatment and the establishment of minimum-sales volumes. App. to Pet. for Cert. in No. 83-1569, pp. B10-B11. Accordingly, it retained jurisdiction over those portions of the litigation. In addition, because no arbitration agreement between Soler and CISA existed, the court retained jurisdiction, insofar as they sought relief from CISA, over the first, second, third, and ninth counterclaims, which raised claims under the Puerto Rico Dealers' Contracts Act, the federal Automobile Dealers' Day in Court Act, the Sherman Act, and the Puerto Rico competition statute, respectively. Id., at B12. These aspects of the District Court's ruling were not appealed and are not before this Court.

<sup>8</sup>Soler relied on P.R. Laws Ann., Tit. 10, § 278b-2 (Supp. 1983), which purports to render null and void "[any] stipulation that obligates a dealer to adjust, arbitrate or litigate any controversy that comes up regarding his dealer's contract outside of Puerto Rico, or under foreign law or rule of law." See Walborg Corp. v. Superior Court, 104 P.R.R. 258 (1975). The Court of Appeals held this provision pre-empted by 9 U. S. C. § 2, which declares arbitration agreements valid and enforceable "save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract." 723 F.2d, at 158. See Southland Corp. v. Keating, 465 U.S. 1 (1984). See also Ledee v. Ceramiche Rагno, 684 F.2d 184 (CA1 1982). Soler does not challenge this holding in its cross-petition here.

<sup>9</sup>As the Court of Appeals saw it, "[the] question . . . is not whether the arbitration clause mentions antitrust or any other particular cause of action, but whether the factual allegations underlying Soler's counterclaims -- and Mitsubishi's bona fide defenses to those counterclaims -- are within the scope of the arbitration clause, whatever the legal labels attached to those allegations." 723 F.2d, at 159. Because Soler's counterclaim under the Puerto Rico Dealers' Contracts Act focused on Mitsubishi's alleged failure to comply with the provisions of the Sales Agreement governing delivery of automobiles, and those provisions were found in that portion of Article I of the Agreement subject to arbitration, the Court of Appeals placed this first counterclaim within the arbitration clause. Id., at 159-160.

The court read the Sherman Act counterclaim to raise issues of wrongful termination of Soler's distributorship, wrongful failure to ship ordered parts and vehicles, and wrongful refusal to permit transshipment of stock to the United States and Latin America. Because the existence of just cause for termination turned on Mitsubishi's allegations that Soler had breached the Sales Agreement by, for example, failing to pay for ordered vehicles, the wrongful termination claim implicated at least three provisions within the arbitration clause: Article I-D(1), which rendered a dealer's orders "firm"; Article I-E, which provided for "distress unit penalties" where the dealer prevented timely shipment; and Article I-F, specifying payment obligations and procedures. The [****17] [*623] [**3352] Finally, [***453] after endorsing the doctrine of American Safety, precluding arbitration of antitrust claims, the Court of Appeals concluded that neither this Court's decision in Scherk nor the Convention required abandonment of that doctrine in the face of an international transaction. 723 F.2d, at 164-168. Accordingly, it reversed the judgment of the District Court insofar as it had ordered submission of "Soler's antitrust claims" to arbitration.<sup>10</sup> [***18] Affirming the remainder of the judgment,<sup>11</sup> the court directed the District Court to consider in the first instance how the parallel judicial and arbitral proceedings should go forward.<sup>12</sup>

[***19] [*624] We granted certiorari primarily to consider whether an American court should enforce an agreement to resolve antitrust claims by arbitration when that agreement arises from an international transaction. 469 U.S. 916 (1984).

II

At the outset, we address the contention raised in Soler's cross-petition that the arbitration clause at issue may not be read to encompass the statutory counterclaims stated in its answer to the complaint. In making this argument, Soler does not question the Court of Appeals' application of para. VI of the Sales Agreement to the disputes involved here as a matter of standard contract interpretation.<sup>13</sup> Instead, it argues [*625] [**3353] that as a matter court therefore held the arbitration clause to cover this dispute. Because the nonshipment claim implicated Soler's obligation under Article I-F to proffer acceptable credit, the court found this dispute covered as well. And because the transshipment claim prompted Mitsubishi defenses concerning the suitability of vehicles manufactured to Soler's specifications for use in different locales and Soler's inability to provide warranty service to transshipped products, it implicated Soler's obligation under Article IV, another covered provision, to make use of Mitsubishi's trademarks in a manner that would not dilute Mitsubishi's reputation and goodwill or damage its name and reputation. The court therefore found the arbitration agreement also to include this dispute, noting that such trademark concerns "are relevant to the legality of territorially based restricted distribution arrangements of the sort at issue here." 723 F.2d, at 160-161, citing Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 \(1977\).

The Court of Appeals read the federal Automobile Dealers' Day in Court Act claim to raise issues as to Mitsubishi's good faith in establishing minimum-sales volumes and Mitsubishi's alleged attempt to coerce Soler into accepting replacement by a Mitsubishi subsidiary. It agreed with the District Court's conclusion, in which Mitsubishi acquiesced, that the arbitration clause did not reach the first issue; it found the second, arising from Soler's payment problems, to restate claims already found to be covered. 723 F.2d, at 161.

Finally, the Court of Appeals found the antitrust claims under Puerto Rico law entirely to reiterate claims elsewhere stated; accordingly, it held them arbitrable to the same extent as their counterparts. Ibid.

<sup>10</sup> Soler suggests that the court thereby declared antitrust claims arising under Puerto Rico law nonarbitrable as well. We read the Court of Appeals' opinion to have held only the federal antitrust claims nonarbitrable. See id., at 157 ("principal issue on this appeal is whether arbitration of federal antitrust claims may be compelled under the Federal Arbitration Act"); id., at 161 ("major question in this appeal is whether the antitrust issues raised by Soler's third counterclaim [grounded on Sherman Act] are subject to arbitration"). In any event, any contention that the local antitrust claims are nonarbitrable would be foreclosed by this Court's decision in Southland Corp. v. Keating, 465 U.S., at 10, where we held that the Federal Arbitration Act "withdrew the power of the states to require a judicial forum for the resolution of claims which the contracting parties agreed to resolve by arbitration."

<sup>11</sup> In this Court, Soler suggests for the first time that Congress intended that claims under the federal Automobile Dealers' Day in Court Act be nonarbitrable. Brief for Respondent and Cross-Petitioner 21, n. 12. Because Soler did not raise this question in the Court of Appeals or present it in its cross-petition, we do not address it here.

<sup>12</sup> Following entry of the District Court's judgment, both it and the Court of Appeals denied motions by Soler for a stay pending appeal. The parties accordingly commenced preparation for the arbitration in Japan. Upon remand from the Court of Appeals, however, Soler withdrew the antitrust claims from the arbitration tribunal and sought a stay of arbitration pending the completion of the judicial proceedings on the ground that the antitrust claims permeated the claims that remained before that tribunal. The District Court denied the motion, instead staying its own proceedings pending the arbitration in Japan. The arbitration recommenced, but apparently came to a halt once again in September 1984 upon the filing by Soler of a petition for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U. S. C. § 1101 et seq. of law a court may [***454] not construe an arbitration agreement to encompass claims arising out of statutes designed to protect a class to which the party resisting arbitration belongs "unless [that party] has expressly agreed" to arbitrate those claims, see Pet. for Cert. in No. 83-1733, pp. 8, i, by which Soler presumably means that the arbitration clause must specifically mention the statute giving rise to the claims that a party to the clause seeks to arbitrate. See [****20] 723 F.2d, at 159. Soler reasons that, because it falls within the class for whose benefit the federal and local antitrust laws and dealers' Acts were passed, but the arbitration clause at issue does not mention these statutes or statutes in general, the clause cannot be read to contemplate arbitration of these statutory claims.

[****21] [LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2] We do not agree, for we find no warrant in the Arbitration Act for implying in every contract within its ken a presumption against arbitration of statutory claims. HN3 The Act's centerpiece provision makes a written agreement to arbitrate "in any maritime transaction or a contract evidencing a transaction involving commerce . . . valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract." 9 U. S. C. § 2. The "liberal federal policy favoring arbitration agreements," Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital v. Mercury Construction Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 24 \(1983\), manifested by this provision and the Act as a whole, is at bottom a policy guaranteeing the enforcement of private contractual arrangements: the Act simply "creates a body of federal substantive law establishing and regulating the duty to honor an agreement to arbitrate." Id., at 25, n. 32.<sup>14</sup> As this Court recently observed, "[the] preeminent concern of Congress in passing the Act was to enforce private agreements into which parties had entered," [*626] a concern which "requires that we rigorously enforce agreements to arbitrate." [****22] Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. v. Byrd, 470 U.S. 213, 221 \(1985\).

Accordingly, HN4 the first task of a court asked to compel arbitration of a dispute is to determine whether the parties agreed to arbitrate that dispute. The court is to make this [***455] determination by applying the "federal substantive law of arbitrability, applicable to any arbitration agreement within the coverage of the Act." Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital, 460 U.S., at 24. See Prima Paint Corp. v. Flood & Conklin Mfg. Co., 388 U.S. 395, 400-404 \(1967\); Southland Corp. v. Keating, 465 U.S. 1, 12 \(1984\). [****23] And that body of law counsels

"that questions of arbitrability must be addressed with a healthy regard for the federal policy favoring arbitration. . . . HN5 The Arbitration Act establishes that, as a matter of federal law, any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues should be resolved in favor of arbitration, whether the problem at hand is the construction of the contract language itself [**3354] or an allegation of waiver, delay, or a like defense to arbitrability." Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital, 460 U.S., at 24-25.

<sup>13</sup> We therefore have no reason to review the Court of Appeals' construction of the scope of the arbitration clause in the light of the allegations of Soler's counterclaims. See n. 9, supra; Southland Corp. v. Keating, 465 U.S., at 15, n. 7.

Soler does suggest that, because the title of the clause referred only to "certain matters," App. 52, and the clause itself specifically referred only to "Articles I-B through V," ibid., it should be read narrowly to exclude the statutory claims. Soler ignores the inclusion within those "certain matters" of "[all] disputes, controversies or differences which may arise between [Mitsubishi] and [Soler] out of or in relation to [the specified provisions] or for the breach thereof." Contrary to Soler's suggestion, the exclusion of some areas of possible dispute from the scope of an arbitration clause does not serve to restrict the reach of an otherwise broad clause in the areas in which it was intended to operate. Thus, insofar as the allegations underlying the statutory claims touch matters covered by the enumerated articles, the Court of Appeals properly resolved any doubts in favor of arbitrability. See 723 F.2d, at 159.

<sup>14</sup> The Court previously has explained that the Act was designed to overcome an anachronistic judicial hostility to agreements to arbitrate, which American courts had borrowed from English common law. See Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. v. Byrd, 470 U.S. 213, 219-221, and n. 6 \(1985\); Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co., 417 U.S. 506, 510, and n. 4 \(1974\).

See, e.g., *Steelworkers v. Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co.*, 363 U.S. 574, 582-583 \(1960\). Thus, as with any other contract, the parties' intentions control, but those intentions are generously construed as to issues of arbitrability.

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]There is no reason to depart from these guidelines where a party bound by an arbitration agreement raises claims founded on statutory rights. Some time ago this Court expressed "hope for [the Act's] usefulness both in controversies based on statutes or on standards otherwise created," *Wilko v. Swan*, 346 U.S. 427, 432 \(1953\) (footnote omitted); see *Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. v. Ware*, 414 U.S. 117, 135, n. 15 \(1973\), and we are well past the time [*627] when judicial suspicion of the desirability of arbitration and of the competence of arbitral tribunals inhibited the development of arbitration as an alternative means of dispute resolution. Just last Term in Southland Corp., supra, where we held that § 2 of the Act declared a national policy applicable equally in state as well as federal courts, we construed an arbitration clause to encompass the disputes at issue without pausing at the source in a state statute of the rights asserted by the parties resisting arbitration. *465 U.S. at 15*, and n. 7.<sup>15</sup> Of course, courts should remain attuned to well-supported claims that the agreement to arbitrate resulted from the sort of fraud or overwhelming economic power that would provide grounds "for the revocation of any contract." *9 U.S.C. § 2*; see *Southland Corp.*, 465 U.S., at 16, n. 11; *The Bremen v. Zapata Off-Shore Co.*, 407 U.S. 1, 15 \(1972\). But, absent such compelling considerations, the Act itself provides no [****25] basis for disfavoring agreements to arbitrate statutory claims by skewing the otherwise hospitable inquiry into arbitrability.

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]That [***456] is not to say that all controversies implicating statutory rights are suitable for arbitration. There is no reason to distort the process of contract interpretation, however, in order to ferret out the inappropriate. Just as it is the congressional policy manifested in the Federal Arbitration Act that requires courts liberally to construe the scope of arbitration agreements covered by that Act, it is the congressional intention expressed in some other statute on which the [****26] courts must rely to identify any category of claims as to which agreements to arbitrate will be held unenforceable. [*628] See *Wilko v. Swan*, 346 U.S., at 434-435; *Southland Corp.*, 465 U.S., at 16, n. 11; *Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.*, 470 U.S., at 224-225 (concurring opinion). For that reason, Soler's concern for statutorily protected classes provides no reason to color the lens through which the arbitration clause is read. HN6 By agreeing to arbitrate a statutory claim, a party does not forgo the substantive rights afforded by the statute; it only submits to their resolution in an arbitral, rather than a judicial, forum. It trades the procedures and opportunity for review of the courtroom for the simplicity, informality, and expedition of arbitration. We must assume that if Congress intended the substantive protection afforded by a given statute to include protection against waiver of the right to a judicial forum, that intention will be deducible from text or legislative history. See *Wilko v. Swan*, *supra*. Having made the bargain to arbitrate, the party should be held to it unless Congress [**3355] itself [****27] has evinced an intention to preclude a waiver of judicial remedies for the statutory rights at issue. Nothing, in the meantime, prevents a party from excluding statutory claims from the scope of an agreement to arbitrate. See Prima Paint Corp., 388 U.S., at 406.

In sum, the Court of Appeals correctly conducted a two-step inquiry, HN7 first determining whether the parties' agreement to arbitrate reached the statutory issues, and then, upon finding it did, considering whether legal constraints external to the parties' agreement foreclosed the arbitration of those claims. We endorse its rejection of Soler's proposed rule of arbitration-clause construction.

III

---

<sup>15</sup> The claims whose arbitrability was at issue in Southland Corp. arose under the disclosure requirements of the California Franchise Investment Law, *Cal. Corp. Code Ann. § 31000 et seq.* (West 1977). While the dissent in Southland Corp. disputed the applicability of the Act to proceedings in the state courts, it did not object to the Court's reading of the arbitration clause under examination.

473 U.S. 614, *628; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3355; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***456; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****27

LEdHN[1B] [1B] We now turn to consider whether Soler's antitrust claims are nonarbitrable even though it has agreed to arbitrate them. In holding that they are not, the Court of Appeals followed the decision of the Second Circuit in American Safety Equipment Corp. v. J. P. Maguire & Co., 391 F.2d 821 (1968). Notwithstanding the absence of any explicit support [*629] for such an exception in either the Sherman Act or the Federal Arbitration Act, the Second Circuit there reasoned that "the pervasive [***28] public interest in enforcement of the antitrust laws, and the nature of the claims that arise in such cases, combine to make . . . antitrust claims . . . inappropriate for arbitration." Id., at 827-828. We find it unnecessary to assess the legitimacy of the American Safety doctrine as applied to agreements to arbitrate arising from domestic transactions. As in Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co., 417 U.S. 506 (1974), we conclude that HN8 [concerns of international comity, respect for the capacities of foreign [***457] and transnational tribunals, and sensitivity to the need of the international commercial system for predictability in the resolution of disputes require that we enforce the parties' agreement, even assuming that a contrary result would be forthcoming in a domestic context.

Even before Scherk, this Court had recognized the utility of forum-selection clauses in international transactions. In The Bremen, supra, an American oil company, seeking to evade a contractual choice of an English forum and, by implication, English law, filed a suit in admiralty in a United States District Court against the German corporation [***29] which had contracted to tow its rig to a location in the Adriatic Sea. Notwithstanding the possibility that the English court would enforce provisions in the towage contract exculpating the German party which an American court would refuse to enforce, this Court gave effect to the choice-of-forum clause. It observed:

"The expansion of American business and industry will hardly be encouraged if, notwithstanding solemn contracts, we insist on a parochial concept that all disputes must be resolved under our laws and in our courts. . . . We cannot have trade and commerce in world markets and international waters exclusively on our terms, governed by our laws, and resolved in our courts." 407 U.S., at 9.

[*630] Recognizing that "agreeing in advance on a forum acceptable to both parties is an indispensable element in international trade, commerce, and contracting," id., at 13-14, the decision in The Bremen clearly eschewed a provincial solicitude for the jurisdiction of domestic forums.

Identical considerations governed the Court's decision in Scherk, which categorized HN9 [an] agreement to arbitrate before a specified tribunal [as], [***30] in effect, a specialized kind of forum-selection clause that posits not only the situs of suit but also the procedure to be used in resolving the dispute." 417 U.S., at 519. In Scherk, the American company Alberto-Culver purchased several interrelated business enterprises, organized under the laws of Germany and Liechtenstein, as well as the rights held by those enterprises in certain trademarks, from a German citizen who at the time of trial resided in Switzerland. [**3356] Although the contract of sale contained a clause providing for arbitration before the International Chamber of Commerce in Paris of "any controversy or claim [arising] out of this agreement or the breach thereof," Alberto-Culver subsequently brought suit against Scherk in a Federal District Court in Illinois, alleging that Scherk had violated § 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 by fraudulently misrepresenting the status of the trademarks as unencumbered. The District Court denied a motion to stay the proceedings before it and enjoined the parties from going forward before the arbitral tribunal in Paris. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed, relying on this [***31] Court's holding in Wilko v. Swan, 346 U.S. 427 (1953), that agreements to arbitrate disputes arising under the Securities Act of 1933 are nonarbitrable. This Court reversed, enforcing the arbitration agreement even while assuming for purposes of the [***458] decision that the controversy would be nonarbitrable under the holding of Wilko had it arisen out of a domestic transaction. Again, the Court emphasized:

[*631] "A contractual provision specifying in advance the forum in which disputes shall be litigated and the law to be applied is . . . an almost indispensable precondition to achievement of the orderliness and predictability essential to any international business transaction. . . .

473 U.S. 614, *631; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3356; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***458; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****31

HN10 [↑] "A parochial refusal by the courts of one country to enforce an international arbitration agreement would not only frustrate these purposes, but would invite unseemly and mutually destructive jockeying by the parties to secure tactical litigation advantages. . . . [It would] damage the fabric of international commerce and trade, and imperil the willingness and ability of businessmen to enter into international commercial agreements." 417 U.S., at 516-517.

[****32] Accordingly, the Court held Alberto-Culver to its bargain, sending it to the international arbitral tribunal before which it had agreed to seek its remedies.

The Bremen and Scherk establish a strong presumption in favor of enforcement of freely negotiated contractual choice-of-forum provisions. Here, as in Scherk, that presumption is reinforced by the emphatic federal policy in favor of arbitral dispute resolution. And at least since this Nation's accession in 1970 to the Convention, see [1970] 21 U.S.T. 2517, T.I.A.S. 6997, and the implementation of the Convention in the same year by amendment of the Federal Arbitration Act,<sup>16</sup> that federal policy applies with special force in the field of international commerce. Thus, we must weigh the concerns of American Safety against a strong belief in the efficacy of arbitral procedures for the resolution of international commercial disputes and an equal commitment to the enforcement of freely negotiated choice-of-forum clauses.

[****33] [*632] At the outset, we confess to some skepticism of certain aspects of the American Safety doctrine. As distilled by the First Circuit, 723 F.2d, at 162, the doctrine comprises four ingredients. First, private parties play a pivotal role in aiding governmental enforcement of the antitrust laws by means of the private action for treble damages. Second, "the strong possibility that contracts which generate antitrust disputes may be contracts of adhesion militates against automatic forum determination by contract." Third, antitrust issues, prone to complication, require sophisticated legal and economic analysis, and thus are "ill-adapted to strengths of the arbitral process, i. e., expedition, minimal requirements of written rationale, simplicity, resort to basic concepts of common sense and simple equity." Finally, just as "issues of war and peace are too important to be vested in the generals, . . . decisions as to antitrust regulation of business are too important to be lodged in arbitrators chosen from the business community -- particularly those \*\*3357 from a foreign community that has had \*\*\*459 no experience with or exposure to our law \*\*\*\*34 and values." See American Safety, 391 F.2d, at 826-827.

Initially, we find the second concern unjustified. HN11 [↑] The mere appearance of an antitrust dispute does not alone warrant invalidation of the selected forum on the undemonstrated assumption that the arbitration clause is tainted. A party resisting arbitration of course may attack directly the validity of the agreement to arbitrate. See Prima Paint Corp. v. Flood & Conklin Mfg. Co., 388 U.S. 395 (1967). Moreover, the party may attempt to make a showing that would warrant setting aside the forum-selection clause -- that the agreement was "[affected] by fraud, undue influence, or overweening bargaining power"; that "enforcement would be unreasonable and unjust"; or that proceedings "in the contractual forum will be so gravely difficult and inconvenient that [the resisting party] will for all practical purposes be deprived of his day in court." The Bremen, 407 U.S., at 12, 15, 18. [*633] But absent such a showing -- and none was attempted here -- there is no basis for assuming the forum inadequate or its selection unfair.

Next, HN12 [↑] potential complexity should not suffice \*\*\*\*35 to ward off arbitration. We might well have some doubt that even the courts following American Safety subscribe fully to the view that antitrust matters are inherently insusceptible to resolution by arbitration, as these same courts have agreed that an undertaking to arbitrate antitrust claims entered into after the dispute arises is acceptable. See, e. g., Coenen v. R. W. Pressprich & Co., 453 F.2d 1209, 1215 (CA2), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 949 (1972); Cobb v. Lewis, 488 F.2d 41, 48 \(CA5 1974\). See also, in the present cases, 723 F.2d, at 168, n. 12 (leaving question open). And the vertical restraints which most frequently give birth to antitrust claims covered by an arbitration agreement will not often occasion the monstrous proceedings that have given antitrust litigation an image of intractability. In any event, adaptability and access to expertise are hallmarks of arbitration. The anticipated subject matter of the dispute may be taken into account when the arbitrators are appointed, and arbitral rules typically provide for the participation of experts either employed by the parties or [****36] appointed by the tribunal.<sup>17</sup> Moreover, it is often a judgment that streamlined proceedings and expeditious results will best serve their needs that causes parties to agree to arbitrate their disputes; it is typically a desire to keep the effort and expense required to resolve a dispute within manageable bounds that prompts them mutually to forgo access to judicial remedies. In sum, the factor of potential complexity [*634] alone does not persuade us that an arbitral tribunal could not properly handle an antitrust matter.

---

<sup>16</sup> Act of July 31, 1970, Pub. L. 91-368, 84 Stat. 692, codified at 9 U. S. C. §§ 201-208.

473 U.S. 614, *633; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3357; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***459; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****35

For similar reasons, we also reject the proposition that an arbitration panel will pose too great a danger of innate hostility to the constraints [****37] on business conduct that antitrust law imposes. International arbitrators [***460] frequently are drawn from the legal as well as the business community; where the dispute has an important legal component, the parties and the arbitral body with whose assistance they have agreed to settle their dispute can be expected to select arbitrators accordingly.<sup>18</sup> We [**3358] decline to indulge the presumption that the parties and arbitral body conducting a proceeding will be unable or unwilling to retain competent, conscientious, and impartial arbitrators.

[****38] We are left, then, with the core of the American Safety doctrine -- the fundamental importance to American democratic capitalism of the regime of the antitrust laws. See, [*635] e. g., United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 610 (1972); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 4 (1958). Without doubt, the private cause of action plays a central role in enforcing this regime. See, e. g., Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 262 (1972). As the Court of Appeals pointed out:

HN13 [+] "A claim under the antitrust laws is not merely a private matter. The Sherman Act is designed to promote the national interest in a competitive economy; thus, the plaintiff asserting his rights under the Act has been likened to a private attorney-general who protects the public's interest." 723 F.2d, at 168, quoting American Safety, 391 F.2d, at 826.

The treble-damages provision wielded by the private litigant is a chief tool in the antitrust enforcement scheme, posing a crucial deterrent to potential violators. See, e. g., *Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. [****39] International Parts Corp.*, 392 U.S. 134, 138-139 (1968).

The importance of the private damages remedy, however, does not compel the conclusion that it may not be sought outside an American court. Notwithstanding its important incidental policing function, the treble-damages cause of

<sup>17</sup> See, e. g., Japan Commercial Arbitration Association Rule 26, reprinted in App. 218-219; L. Craig, W. Park, & J. Paulsson, International Chamber of Commerce Arbitration §§ 25.03, 26.04 (1984); Art. 27, Arbitration Rules of United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) (1976), reprinted in 2 Yearbook Commercial Arbitration 167 (1977).

<sup>18</sup> See Craig, Park, & Paulsson, supra, § 12.03, p. 28; Sanders, Commentary on UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules § 15.1, in 2 Yearbook Commercial Arbitration, supra, at 203.

We are advised by Mitsubishi and amicus International Chamber of Commerce, without contradiction by Soler, that the arbitration panel selected to hear the parties' claims here is composed of three Japanese lawyers, one a former law school dean, another a former judge, and the third a practicing attorney with American legal training who has written on Japanese antitrust law. Brief for Petitioner in No. 83-1569, p. 26; Brief for International Chamber of Commerce as Amicus Curiae 16, n. 28.

The Court of Appeals was concerned that international arbitrators would lack "experience with or exposure to our law and values." 723 F.2d, at 162. The obstacles confronted by the arbitration panel in this case, however, should be no greater than those confronted by any judicial or arbitral tribunal required to determine foreign law. See, e. g., Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 44.1. Moreover, while our attachment to the antitrust laws may be stronger than most, many other countries, including Japan, have similar bodies of competition law. See, e. g., 1 Law of Transnational Business Transactions, ch. 9 (Banks, Antitrust Aspects of International Business Operations), § 9.03[7] (V. Nanda ed. 1984); H. Iyori & A. Uesugi, The Antimonopoly Laws of Japan (1983).

473 U.S. 614, *635; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3358; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***460; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****39

action conferred on private parties by § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 15, and pursued by Soler here by way of its third counterclaim, seeks primarily to enable an injured competitor to gain compensation for that injury.

HN14 [↑] "Section 4 . . . is in essence a [***461] remedial provision. It provides treble damages to '[any] person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws . . . .' Of course, treble damages also play an important role in penalizing wrongdoers and deterring wrongdoing, as we also have frequently observed. . . . It nevertheless is true that the treble-damages provision, which makes awards available only to injured parties, and measures the awards by a [*636] multiple of the injury actually proved, is designed primarily as a remedy." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 485-486 (1977). [****40]

After examining the respective legislative histories, the Court in Brunswick recognized that when first enacted in 1890 as § 7 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 210, the treble-damages provision "was conceived of primarily as a remedy for '[the] people of the United States as individuals,'" 429 U.S., at 486, n. 10, quoting 21 Cong. Rec. 1767-1768 (1890) (remarks of Sen. George); when reenacted in 1914 as § 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, it was still "conceived primarily as [**3359] [opening] the door of justice to every man, whenever he may be injured by those who violate the antitrust laws, and [giving] the injured party ample damages for the wrong suffered." 429 U.S., at 486, n. 10, quoting 51 Cong. Rec. 9073 (1914) (remarks of Rep. Webb). And, of course, the antitrust cause of action remains at all times under the control of the individual litigant: no citizen is under an obligation to bring an antitrust suit, see Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 746 (1977), and the private antitrust plaintiff needs no executive or judicial approval before settling one. It follows that, at least where the international [****41] cast of a transaction would otherwise add an element of uncertainty to dispute resolution, the prospective litigant may provide in advance for a mutually agreeable procedure whereby he would seek his antitrust recovery as well as settle other controversies.

There is no reason to assume at the outset of the dispute that international arbitration will not provide an adequate mechanism. To be sure, HN15 [↑] the international arbitral tribunal owes no prior allegiance to the legal norms of particular states; hence, it has no direct obligation to vindicate their statutory dictates. The tribunal, however, is bound to effectuate the intentions of the parties. Where the parties have agreed that the arbitral body is to decide a defined set of claims which includes, as in these cases, those arising from the application of American antitrust law, the tribunal therefore [*637] should be bound to decide that dispute in accord with the national law giving rise to the claim. Cf. Wilko v. Swan, 346 U.S., at 433-434.<sup>19</sup> And so long as the prospective [***462] litigant <sup>19</sup> In addition to the clause providing for arbitration before the Japan Commercial Arbitration Association, the Sales Agreement includes a choice-of-law clause which reads: "This Agreement is made in, and will be governed by and construed in all respects according to the laws of the Swiss Confederation as if entirely performed therein." App. 56. The United States raises the possibility that the arbitral panel will read this provision not simply to govern interpretation of the contract terms, but wholly to displace American law even where it otherwise would apply. Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 20. The International Chamber of Commerce opines that it is "[conceivable], although we believe it unlikely, [that] the arbitrators could consider Soler's affirmative claim of anticompetitive conduct by CISA and Mitsubishi to fall within the purview of this choice-of-law provision, with the result that it would be decided under Swiss law rather than the U.S. Sherman Act." Brief for International Chamber of Commerce as Amicus Curiae 25. At oral argument, however, counsel for Mitsubishi conceded that American law applied to the antitrust claims and represented that the claims had been submitted to the arbitration panel in Japan on that basis. Tr. of Oral Arg. 18. The record confirms that before the decision of the Court of Appeals the arbitral panel had taken these claims under submission. See District Court Order of May 25, 1984, pp. 2-3.

We therefore have no occasion to speculate on this matter at this stage in the proceedings, when Mitsubishi seeks to enforce the agreement to arbitrate, not to enforce an award. Nor need we consider now the effect of an arbitral tribunal's failure to take cognizance of the statutory cause of action on the claimant's capacity to reinitiate suit in federal court. We merely note that in the event the choice-of-forum and choice-of-law clauses operated in tandem as a prospective waiver of a party's right to pursue statutory remedies for antitrust violations, we would have little hesitation in condemning the agreement as against public policy. See, e. g., Redel's Inc. v. General Electric Co., 498 F.2d 95, 98-99 (CA5 1974); Gaines v. Carrollton Tobacco Board of Trade, Inc., 386 F.2d 757, 759 (CA6 1967); Fox Midwest Theatres v. Means, 221 F.2d 173, 180 (CA8 1955). Cf. Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp., 349 U.S. 322, 329 (1955). See generally 15 S. Williston, Contracts § 1750A (3d ed. 1972).

473 U.S. 614, *637; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3359; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***462; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****41

effectively may vindicate its statutory cause of action in the arbitral forum, the statute will continue to [****42] serve both its remedial and deterrent function.

[****43] [*638] Having permitted the arbitration to go forward, the national courts of the United States will have the opportunity at the award-enforcement stage to ensure that the legitimate interest in the enforcement of the antitrust laws has been addressed. The Convention reserves to each signatory country the right to refuse enforcement of an award where the "recognition or enforcement of the award would be contrary to the public policy of that country." Art. [**3360] V(2)(b), 21 U.S.T., at 2520; see Scherk, 417 U.S., at 519, n. 14. While the efficacy of the arbitral process requires that substantive review at the award-enforcement stage remain minimal, it would not require intrusive inquiry to ascertain that the tribunal took cognizance of the antitrust claims and actually decided them.<sup>20</sup>

[****44] As international trade has expanded in recent decades, so too has the use of international arbitration to resolve disputes arising in the course of that trade. The controversies that international arbitral institutions are called upon to resolve have increased in diversity as well as in complexity. Yet the potential of these tribunals for efficient disposition of legal disagreements arising from commercial relations has not yet been tested. If they are to take a central place in the international legal order, national courts will need to "shake off the old judicial hostility to arbitration," Kulukundis Shipping Co. v. Amtorg Trading Corp., 126 F.2d 978, 985 \(CA2 1942\), and also [***463] their customary and understandable unwillingness to cede jurisdiction of a claim arising under domestic law to a foreign or transnational tribunal. To this extent, at [*639] least, it will be necessary for national courts to subordinate domestic notions of arbitrability to the international policy favoring commercial arbitration. See Scherk, supra.<sup>21</sup>

---

<sup>20</sup> See n. 19, supra. We note, for example, that the rules of the Japan Commercial Arbitration Association provide for the taking of a "summary record" of each hearing, Rule 28.1; for the stenographic recording of the proceedings where the tribunal so orders or a party requests one, Rule 28.2; and for a statement of reasons for the award unless the parties agree otherwise, Rule 36.1(4). See App. 219 and 221.

Needless to say, we intimate no views on the merits of Soler's antitrust claims.

<sup>21</sup> We do not quarrel with the Court of Appeals' conclusion that Art. II(1) of the Convention, which requires the recognition of agreements to arbitrate that involve "subject matter capable of settlement by arbitration," contemplates exceptions to arbitrability grounded in domestic law. See 723 F.2d, at 164-166; G. Gaja, International Commercial Arbitration: New York Convention I. B.2 (1984); A. van den Berg, The New York Convention of 1958: Towards a Uniform Judicial Interpretation 152-154 (1981); Contini, International Commercial Arbitration: The United Nations Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards, 8 Am. J. Comp. L. 283, 296 (1959). But see Van den Berg, supra, at 154, and n. 98 (collecting contrary authorities); Gaja, supra, at I.D., n. 43 (same). And it appears that before acceding to the Convention the Senate was advised by a State Department memorandum that the Convention provided for such exceptions. See S. Exec. Doc. E, 90th Cong., 2d Sess., 19 (1968).

In acceding to the Convention the Senate restricted its applicability to commercial matters, in accord with Art. I(3). See 21 U.S.T., at 2519, 2560. Yet in implementing the Convention by amendment to the Federal Arbitration Act, Congress did not specify any matters it intended to exclude from its scope. See Act of July 31, 1970, Pub. L. 91-368, 84 Stat. 692, codified at 9 U.S.C. §§ 201-208. In Scherk, this Court recited Art. II(1), including the language relied upon by the Court of Appeals, but paid heed to the Convention delegates' "frequently [voiced] concern that courts of signatory countries in which an agreement to arbitrate is sought to be enforced should not be permitted to decline enforcement of such agreements on the basis of parochial views of their desirability or in a manner that would diminish the mutually binding nature of the agreements." 417 U.S., at 520, n. 15, citing G. Haight, Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards: Summary Analysis of Record of United Nations Conference, May/June 1958, pp. 24-28 (1958). There, moreover, the Court dealt, arguendo, with an exception to arbitrability grounded in express congressional language; here, in contrast, we face a judicially implied exception. The utility of the Convention in promoting the process of international commercial arbitration depends upon the willingness of national courts to let go of matters they normally would think of as their own. Doubtless, Congress may specify categories of claims it wishes to reserve for decision by our own courts without contravening this Nation's obligations under the Convention. But we decline to subvert the spirit of the United States' accession to the Convention by recognizing subject-matter exceptions where Congress has not expressly directed the courts to do so.

[****45]

[*640] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] Accordingly, we "require this representative of the American business community to honor its bargain," Alberto-Culver Co. v. Scherk, 484 F.2d 611, 620 (CA7 1973) (Stevens, J., dissenting), by holding this agreement to arbitrate "[enforceable] . . . in accord with the explicit provisions of the [**3361] Arbitration Act." Scherk, 417 U.S., at 520.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the cases are remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

JUSTICE POWELL took no part in the decision of these cases.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

---

JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE BRENNAN joins, and with whom JUSTICE MARSHALL joins except as to Part II, dissenting.

One element of this rather complex litigation is a claim asserted by an American dealer in Plymouth automobiles that two major automobile [***464] companies are parties to an international cartel that has restrained competition in the American market. Pursuant to an agreement that is alleged to have violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1, those companies allegedly prevented the dealer from transshipping some [***46] 966 surplus vehicles from Puerto Rico to other dealers in the American market. App. 92.

Petitioner denies the truth of the dealer's allegations and takes the position that the validity of the antitrust claim must be resolved by an arbitration tribunal in Tokyo, Japan. Largely because the auto manufacturers' defense to the antitrust allegation is based on provisions in the dealer's franchise agreement, the Court of Appeals concluded that the arbitration clause in that agreement encompassed the antitrust [*641] claim. 723 F.2d 155, 159 \(CA1 1983\). It held, however, as a matter of law, that arbitration of such a claim may not be compelled under either the Federal Arbitration Act<sup>1</sup> or the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards.<sup>2</sup> Id. at 161-168.

This Court agrees with the Court of Appeals' interpretation of the scope of the arbitration clause, but disagrees with its conclusion [***47] that the clause is unenforceable insofar as it purports to cover an antitrust claim against a Japanese company. This Court's holding rests almost exclusively on the federal policy favoring arbitration of commercial disputes and vague notions of international comity arising from the fact that the automobiles involved here were manufactured in Japan. Because I am convinced that the Court of Appeals' construction of the arbitration clause is erroneous, and because I strongly disagree with this Court's interpretation of the relevant federal statutes, I respectfully dissent. In my opinion, (1) a fair construction of the language in the arbitration clause in the parties' contract does not encompass a claim that auto manufacturers entered into a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws; (2) an arbitration clause should not normally be construed to cover a statutory remedy that it does not expressly identify; (3) Congress did not intend § 2 of the Federal Arbitration Act to apply to antitrust claims; and (4) Congress did not intend the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards to apply to disputes that are not covered by the Federal Arbitration Act.

---

<sup>1</sup> 9 U. S. C. §§ 4, 201.

<sup>2</sup> [1970] 21 U.S.T. 2517, T.I.A.S. No. 6997.

[****48] I

On October 31, 1979, respondent, Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc. (Soler), entered into a "distributor agreement" to govern the sale of Plymouth passenger cars to be manufactured by petitioner, Mitsubishi Motors Corporation [*642] of Tokyo, Japan (Mitsubishi).<sup>3</sup> [****49] Mitsubishi, [***465] however, was not a [**3362] party to that agreement. Rather the "purchase rights" were granted to Soler by a wholly owned subsidiary of Chrysler Corporation that is referred to as "Chrysler" in the agreement.<sup>4</sup> The distributor agreement does not contain an arbitration clause. Nor does the record contain any other agreement providing for the arbitration of disputes between Soler and Chrysler.

Paragraph 26 of the distributor agreement authorizes Chrysler to have Soler's orders filled by any company affiliated with Chrysler, that company thereby becoming the "supplier" of the products covered by the agreement with Chrysler.<sup>5</sup> Relying on paragraph 26 of their distributor [*643] agreement,<sup>6</sup> [***51] Soler, Chrysler, and Mitsubishi entered into a separate Sales Procedure Agreement designating Mitsubishi as the supplier of the products covered by the distributor agreement.<sup>7</sup> The arbitration clause the Court construes today is found in that agreement.<sup>8</sup> As a matter of ordinary contract interpretation, there are at least two reasons why [***50] that clause does not apply to Soler's antitrust claim against Chrysler and Mitsubishi.

<sup>3</sup> The distributor agreement provides, in part:

"This Agreement is made by and between CHRYSLER INTERNATIONAL S.A., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Swiss Confederation with its principal office in Geneva, Switzerland (hereinafter sometimes called CHRYSLER), and SOLER CHRYSLER-PLYMOUTH INC., . . . (hereinafter sometimes called DISTRIBUTOR), and will govern the sale by CHRYSLER to DISTRIBUTOR of PLYMOUTH PASSENGER CARS AND CAR DERIVATIVES MANUFACTURED BY MITSUBISHI MOTORS CORPORATION OF TOKYO, JAPAN and automotive replacement parts and accessories (said motor vehicles, replacement parts and accessories hereinafter sometimes called Products)." App. 18.

<sup>4</sup> "PURCHASE RIGHTS

"Subject to the provisions of this Agreement, CHRYSLER grants to DISTRIBUTOR the non-exclusive right to purchase Products from CHRYSLER, and DISTRIBUTOR agrees to buy Products from CHRYSLER, for resale within the following described territory (hereinafter called Sales Area): METROPOLITAN SAN JUAN, PUERTO RICO. . ." Ibid.

This is the same company that is referred to as "CISA" in the sales purchase agreement and in the Court's opinion.

<sup>5</sup> Paragraph 26 of the distributor agreement provides:

"DIRECT SALES

"CHRYSLER and DISTRIBUTOR agree that CHRYSLER may, at its option, forward orders received from DISTRIBUTOR pursuant to this Agreement to its parent company, Chrysler Corporation, or to any subsidiary, associated or affiliated company (hereinafter called 'SUPPLIER') which will then sell the Products covered by such order directly to DISTRIBUTOR, CHRYSLER and DISTRIBUTOR hereby acknowledge and agree that, unless otherwise agreed in writing, any such direct sales between SUPPLIER and DISTRIBUTOR will be governed by the terms and conditions contained on the order form and in this Agreement and that any such sales will not constitute the basis forming a distributor relationship between SUPPLIER and DISTRIBUTOR. Further, DISTRIBUTOR acknowledges and agrees that any claim or controversy resulting from such direct sales by SUPPLIER will be handled by CHRYSLER as though such sale had been made by CHRYSLER." Id., at 39-40.

<sup>6</sup> "WHEREAS, pursuant to Article 26 of the Distributor Agreement, CISA may forward orders received from BUYER to an associated company;

"WHEREAS, MMC and CISA have agreed that MMC, which is an associated company of CISA, may sell such MMC Products directly to BUYER pursuant to Article 26 of the Distributor Agreement." Id., at 43.

<sup>7</sup> Mitsubishi is jointly owned by Chrysler and by Mitsubishi Heavy Industries, Ltd., a Japanese corporation. Id., at 200-201.

<sup>8</sup> That clause reads as follows:

"ARBITRATION OF CERTAIN MATTERS

First, the clause only applies to two-party disputes between Soler and Mitsubishi. The antitrust violation [***466] alleged in Soler's counterclaim is a three-party dispute. Soler has joined both Chrysler and its associated company, Mitsubishi, as counterdefendants. The pleading expressly alleges that [*644] both of those companies are "engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy to restrain and divide markets in interstate and foreign commerce, in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act and the Clayton Act." App. 91. It is further alleged that Chrysler authorized [****52] and participated in several overt acts directed at Soler. At this stage of the case we must, of course, assume the truth of those allegations. Only by stretching the language of the arbitration clause far beyond its ordinary meaning [**3363] could one possibly conclude that it encompasses this three-party dispute.

Second, the clause only applies to disputes "which may arise between MMC and BUYER out of or in relation to Articles I-B through V of this Agreement or for the breach thereof. . ." Id., at 52. Thus, disputes relating to only 5 out of a total of 15 Articles in the Sales Procedure Agreement are arbitrable. Those five Articles cover: (1) the terms and conditions of direct sales (matters such as the scheduling of orders, deliveries, and payment); (2) technical and engineering changes; (3) compliance by Mitsubishi with customs laws and regulations, and Soler's obligation to inform Mitsubishi of relevant local laws; (4) trademarks and patent rights; and (5) Mitsubishi's right to cease production of any products. It is immediately obvious that Soler's antitrust claim did not arise out of Articles I-B through V and it is not a claim "for the breach thereof." The question [****53] is whether it is a dispute "in relation to" those Articles.

Because Mitsubishi relies on those Articles of the contract to explain some of the activities that Soler challenges in its antitrust claim, the Court of Appeals concluded that the relationship between the dispute and those Articles brought the arbitration clause into play. I find that construction of the clause wholly unpersuasive. The words "in relation to" appear between the references to claims that arise under the contract and claims for breach of the contract; I believe all three of the species of arbitrable claims must be predicated on contractual rights defined in Articles I-B through V.

[*645] The federal policy favoring arbitration cannot sustain the weight that the Court assigns to it. A clause requiring arbitration of all claims "relating to" a contract surely could not encompass a claim that the arbitration clause was itself part of a contract in restraint of trade. Cf. Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U.S. 30 (1930); see also United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 176 (1948). Nor in my judgment should it be read to encompass [****54] a claim that relies, not on a failure to perform the contract, but on an independent violation of federal law. The matters asserted by way of defense do not control the character, or the source, of the claim that Soler has asserted.<sup>9</sup> Accordingly, simply as [***467] a matter of ordinary contract interpretation, I would hold that Soler's antitrust claim is not arbitrable.

II

Section 2 of the Federal Arbitration Act describes three kinds of arbitrable agreements.<sup>10</sup> [****56] Two -- those including maritime transactions and those covering the submission of an existing dispute to arbitration -- are not

"All disputes, controversies or differences which may arise between MMC and BUYER out of or in relation to Articles I-B through V of this Agreement or for the breach thereof, shall be finally settled by arbitration in Japan in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Japan Commercial Arbitration Association." Id., at 52-53.

<sup>9</sup> Even if Mitsubishi can prove that it did not violate any provision of the contract, such proof would not necessarily constitute a defense to the antitrust claim. In contrast, in Prima Paint Corp. v. Flood & Conklin Mfg. Co., 388 U.S. 395 (1967), Prima Paint's claim of fraud in the inducement was asserted to rescind the contract, not as an independent basis of recovery.

<sup>10</sup> Section 2 provides:

"A written provision in any maritime transaction or a contract evidencing a transaction involving commerce to settle by arbitration a controversy thereafter arising out of such contract or transaction, or the refusal to perform the whole or any part thereof, or an agreement in writing to submit to arbitration an existing controversy arising out of such a contract, transaction, or refusal, shall involved in this case. The language [****55] of § 2 relating to the Soler-Mitsubishi arbitration clause reads as follows:

473 U.S. 614, *645; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3363; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***467; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****56

[*646] "A written provision in . . . a contract evidencing a transaction involving commerce to settle by arbitration a controversy thereafter arising out of such contract . . . or the refusal to perform the whole or any part thereof, . . . shall be valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, save upon such grounds as exist at law [**3364] or in equity for the revocation of any contract."

The plain language of this statute encompasses Soler's claims that arise out of its contract with Mitsubishi, but does not encompass a claim arising under federal law, or indeed one that arises under its distributor agreement with Chrysler. Nothing in the text of the 1925 Act, nor its legislative history, suggests that Congress intended to authorize the arbitration of any statutory claims.<sup>11</sup>

[****57] Until today all of our cases enforcing agreements to arbitrate under the Arbitration Act have involved contract claims. In one, the party claiming a breach of contractual warranties also claimed that the breach amounted to fraud actionable under § 10\(b\) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co., 417 U.S. 506 \(1974\).<sup>12</sup> [****58] [*647] But this is the first time the Court has considered the question whether a standard arbitration clause referring to claims arising out of or relating to a contract should be construed to cover statutory claims that have only an indirect relationship to the contract.<sup>13</sup> In my opinion, neither the Congress that enacted the Arbitration Act in 1925, nor the many parties who have agreed to such standard clauses, could have anticipated the Court's answer to that question.

On several occasions we have drawn a distinction between statutory rights and contractual rights and refused to hold that an arbitration barred the assertion of a statutory right. Thus, in Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co., 415 U.S. 36 \(1974\), we held that the arbitration of a claim of employment discrimination would not bar an employee's statutory right to damages under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U. S. C. §§ 2000e -- 2000e-17, notwithstanding the strong federal policy favoring the arbitration of labor disputes. In that case the Court explained at some length why it would be unreasonable to assume that Congress intended to give arbitrators the final authority to implement [****59] the federal statutory policy:

be valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract." 9 U. S. C. §2.

<sup>11</sup> In his dissent in Prima Paint Corp. v. Flood & Conklin Mfg. Co., 388 U.S., at 415, Justice Black quoted the following commentary written shortly after the statute was passed:

"Not all questions arising out of contracts ought to be arbitrated. It is a remedy peculiarly suited to the disposition of the ordinary disputes between merchants as to questions of fact -- quantity, quality, time of delivery, compliance with terms of payment, excuses for non-performance, and the like. It has a place also in the determination of the simpler questions of law -- the questions of law which arise out of these daily relations between merchants as to the passage of title, the existence of warranties, or the questions of law which are complementary to the questions of fact which we have just mentioned." Cohen & Dayton, The New Federal Arbitration Law, 12 Va. L. Rev. 265, 281 (1926).

In the Prima Paint case the Court held that the Act applied to a claim of fraud in the inducement of the contract, but did not intimate that it might also cover federal statutory claims. See n. 9, Supra.

<sup>12</sup> "The dispute between these parties over the alleged shortage in defendant's inventory of European trademarks, a matter covered by contract warranties and subject to pre-closing verification, is the kind of commercial dispute for which arbitration is entirely appropriate. In my opinion, the fact that the 'fraud' language of Rule 10(b)(5) has been included in the complaint is far less significant than the desirability of having the Court of Arbitration of the International Chamber of Commerce in Paris, France, decide the various questions of foreign law which should determine the rights of these parties." Alberto-Culver Co. v. Scherk, 484 F.2d 611, 619-620 \(CA7 1973\) (Stevens, J., dissenting), rev'd, 417 U.S. 506 \(1974\).

<sup>13</sup> It is interesting to note that in Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital v. Mercury Construction Corp., 460 U.S. 1 \(1983\), the Court referred to the standard clause describing claims "arising out of, or relating to, this Contract or the breach thereof" as a provision "for resolving disputes arising out of the contract or its breach." Id., at 4-5.

"[We] have long recognized that 'the choice of forums inevitably affects the scope of the substantive right to be vindicated.' U.S. Bulk Carriers v. Arguelles, 400 U.S. 351, 359-360 [**3365] (1971) [*648] (Harlan, J., concurring). Respondent's deferral rule is necessarily premised on the assumption that arbitral processes are commensurate with judicial processes and that Congress impliedly intended federal courts to defer to arbitral decisions on Title VII issues. We deem this supposition unlikely.

"Arbitral procedures, while well suited to the resolution of contractual disputes, make arbitration a comparatively inappropriate forum for the final resolution of rights created by Title VII. This conclusion rests first on the special role of the arbitrator, whose task is to effectuate the intent of the parties rather than the requirements of enacted legislation. . . . But other facts may still render arbitral processes comparatively inferior to judicial processes in the protection of Title VII rights. Among [***468] these is the fact that the specialized competence of arbitrators pertains primarily to the law of the [***60] shop, not the law of the land. United Steelworkers of America v. Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co., 363 U.S. 574, 581-583 (1960). Parties usually choose an arbitrator because they trust his knowledge and judgment concerning the demands and norms of industrial relations. On the other hand, the resolution of statutory or constitutional [***469] issues is a primary responsibility of courts, and judicial construction has proved especially necessary with respect to Title VII, whose broad language frequently can be given meaning only by reference to public law concepts." 415 U.S., at 56-57 (footnote omitted).

In addition, the Court noted that the informal procedures which make arbitration so desirable in the context of contractual disputes are inadequate to develop a record for appellate review of statutory questions.<sup>14</sup> Such review is essential on [*649] matters of statutory interpretation in order to assure consistent application of important public rights.

[***61] In Barrentine v. Arkansas-Best Freight System, Inc., 450 U.S. 728 (1981), we reached a similar conclusion with respect to the arbitrability of an employee's claim based on the Fair Labor Standards Act, 29 U. S. C. §§ 201-219. We again noted that an arbitrator, unlike a federal judge, has no institutional obligation to enforce federal legislative policy:

"Because the arbitrator is required to effectuate the intent of the parties, rather than to enforce the statute, he may issue a ruling that is inimical to the public policies underlying the FLSA, thus depriving an employee of protected statutory rights.

"Finally, not only are arbitral procedures less protective of individual statutory rights than are judicial procedures, see Gardner-Denver, supra, at 57-58, but arbitrators very often are powerless to grant the aggrieved employees as broad a range of relief. Under the FLSA, courts can award actual and liquidated damages, reasonable attorney's fees, and costs. 29 U. S. C. § 216\(b\). An arbitrator, by contrast, can award only that [**3366] compensation authorized by the wage provision of the collective-bargaining agreement. . . . It [***62] is most unlikely that he will be authorized to award liquidated damages, costs, or attorney's fees." 450 U.S., at 744-745 (footnote omitted).

---

<sup>14</sup> "Moreover, the factfinding process in arbitration usually is not equivalent to judicial factfinding. The record of the arbitration proceedings is not as complete; the usual rules of evidence do not apply; and rights and procedures common to civil trials, such as discovery, compulsory process, cross-examination, and testimony under oath, are often severely limited or unavailable. See Bernhardt v. Polygraphic Co., 350 U.S. 198, 203 (1956); Wilko v. Swan, 346 U.S., at 435-437. And as this Court has recognized, '[arbitrators] have no obligation to the court to give their reasons for an award.' United Steelworkers of America v. Enterprise Wheel & Car Corp., 363 U.S. [593], at 598. Indeed, it is the informality of arbitral procedure that enables it to function as an efficient, inexpensive, and expeditious means for dispute resolution. This same characteristic, however, makes arbitration a less appropriate forum for final resolution of Title VII issues than the federal courts." 415 U.S., at 57-58 (footnote omitted).

473 U.S. 614, *649; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3366; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***469; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****62

[*650] The Court has applied the same logic in holding that federal claims asserted under the Ku Klux Act of 1871, 42 U. S. C. § 1983, and claims arising under § 12(2) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U. S. C. § 77l\(2\), may not be finally resolved by an [***470] arbitrator. McDonald v. City of West Branch, 466 U.S. 284 \(1984\); Wilko v. Swan, 346 U.S. 427 \(1953\).

The Court's opinions in Alexander, Barrentine, McDonald, and Wilko all explain why it makes good sense to draw a distinction between statutory claims and contract claims. In view of the Court's repeated recognition of the distinction between federal statutory rights and contractual rights, together with the undisputed historical fact that arbitration has functioned almost entirely in either the area of labor disputes or in "ordinary disputes between merchants as to questions of fact," see n. 11, supra, it is reasonable to assume that most lawyers and executives would not expect the language in the [****63] standard arbitration clause to cover federal statutory claims. Thus, in my opinion, both a fair respect for the importance of the interests that Congress has identified as worthy of federal statutory protection, and a fair appraisal of the most likely understanding of the parties who sign agreements containing standard arbitration clauses, support a presumption that such clauses do not apply to federal statutory claims.

III

The Court has repeatedly held that a decision by Congress to create a special statutory remedy renders a private agreement to arbitrate a federal statutory claim unenforceable. Thus, as I have already noted, the express statutory remedy provided in the Ku Klux Act of 1871,<sup>15</sup> the express statutory remedy in the Securities Act of 1933,<sup>16</sup> the express statutory remedy in the Fair Labor Standards Act,<sup>17</sup> and the express [*651] statutory remedy in Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964,<sup>18</sup> each provided the Court with convincing evidence that Congress did not intend the protections afforded by the statute to be administered by a private arbitrator. The reasons that motivated those decisions apply with special force to the federal policy that is protected [***64] by the antitrust laws.

To make this point it is appropriate to recall some of our past appraisals of the importance of this federal policy and then to identify some of the specific remedies Congress has designed to implement it. It was Chief Justice Hughes who characterized the Sherman Antitrust Act as "a charter of freedom" that may fairly be compared to a constitutional provision. See Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U.S. 344, 359-360 \(1933\). In United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 371 \(1963\), the Court referred to the extraordinary "magnitude" of the value choices made by Congress in enacting the [***65] Sherman Act. More recently, the Court described the weighty public interests underlying the basic philosophy of the statute:

"Antitrust laws in general, and [***471] the Sherman Act in particular, are the Magna Carta of free enterprise. They are as important to the preservation of economic freedom and our free-enterprise system as the Bill of Rights is to the protection [**3367] of our fundamental personal freedoms. And the freedom guaranteed each and every business, no matter how small, is the freedom to compete -- to assert with vigor, imagination, devotion, and ingenuity whatever economic muscle it can muster. Implicit in such freedom is the notion that it cannot be foreclosed with respect to one sector of the economy because certain private citizens or groups believe that such foreclosure might promote greater competition in a more important sector of the economy." United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 610 \(1972\).

<sup>15</sup> McDonald v. City of West Branch, 466 U.S. 284 \(1984\).

<sup>16</sup> Wilko v. Swan, 346 U.S. 427 \(1953\).

<sup>17</sup> Barrentine v. Arkansas-Best Freight System, Inc., 450 U.S. 728 \(1981\).

<sup>18</sup> Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co., 415 U.S. 36 \(1974\).

473 U.S. 614, *651; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3367; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***471; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****65

[*652] The Sherman and Clayton Acts reflect Congress' appraisal of the value of economic freedom; they guarantee the vitality of the entrepreneurial spirit. Questions arising under these Acts are among the most [****66] important in public law.

The unique public interest in the enforcement of the antitrust laws is repeatedly reflected in the special remedial scheme enacted by Congress. Since its enactment in 1890, the Sherman Act has provided for public enforcement through criminal as well as civil sanctions. The pre-eminent federal interest in effective enforcement once justified a provision for special three-judge district courts to hear antitrust claims on an expedited basis, as well as for direct appeal to this Court bypassing the courts of appeals.<sup>19</sup> See, e. g., United States v. National Assn. of Securities Dealers, Inc., 422 U.S. 694 \(1975\).

The special interest in encouraging private enforcement of the Sherman Act has been reflected in the statutory scheme ever since [****67] 1890. Section 7 of the original Act,<sup>20</sup> used the broadest possible language to describe the class of litigants who may invoke its protection. "The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated." Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 236 \(1948\); see also [Associated \[\*653\] General Contractors of California, Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 529 \(1983\)](#).

[****68] The provision for mandatory treble damages -- unique in federal law when the statute was enacted -- provides a special incentive to the private enforcement of the statute, as well as an especially powerful deterrent [***472] to violators.<sup>21</sup> [****69] What we have described [**3368] as "the public interest in vigilant enforcement of the antitrust laws through the instrumentality of the private treble-damage action," Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp., 349 U.S. 322, 329 \(1955\), is buttressed by the statutory mandate that the injured party also recover costs, "including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U. S. C. § 15\(a\). The interest in wide and effective enforcement has thus, for almost a century, been vindicated by enlisting the assistance [*654] of "private Attorneys General";<sup>22</sup>

<sup>19</sup> See 32 Stat. 823, 88 Stat. 1708, repealed 98 Stat. 3358 (Pub. L. 98-620, § 402(11)). The Act still provides an avenue for directly appealing to this Court from a final judgment in a Government antitrust suit. 15 U. S. C. § 29\(b\).

<sup>20</sup> "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act, may sue therefor in any circuit court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover three fold the damages by him sustained, and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 26 Stat. 210.

The current version of the private remedy is codified at 15 U. S. C. § 15\(a\).

<sup>21</sup> "We have often indicated the inappropriateness of invoking broad common-law barriers to relief where a private suit serves important public purposes. It was for this reason that we held in Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons, 340 U.S. 211 \(1951\), that a plaintiff in an antitrust suit could not be barred from recovery by proof that he had engaged in an unrelated conspiracy to commit some other antitrust violation. Similarly, in Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13 \(1964\), we held that a dealer whose consignment agreement was canceled for failure to adhere to a fixed resale price could bring suit under the antitrust laws even though by signing the agreement he had to that extent become a participant in the illegal, competition-destroying scheme. Both Simpson and Kiefer-Stewart were premised on a recognition that the purposes of the antitrust laws are best served by insuring that the private action will be an ever-present threat to deter anyone contemplating business behavior in violation of the antitrust laws. The plaintiff who reaps the reward of treble damages may be no less morally reprehensible than the defendant, but the law encourages his suit to further the overriding public policy in favor of competition. A more fastidious regard for the relative moral worth of the parties would only result in seriously undermining the usefulness of the private action as a bulwark of antitrust enforcement. And permitting the plaintiff to recover a windfall gain does not encourage continued violations by those in his position since they remain fully subject to civil and criminal penalties for their own illegal conduct." Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 138-139 \(1968\).

<sup>22</sup> Under the Panama Canal Act, any private shipper -- in addition to the United States -- may also bring an action seeking to bar access to the canal for any vessel owned by a company "doing business" in violation of the antitrust laws. 37 Stat. 567, 15 U. S. C. § 31.

473 U.S. 614, *654; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3368; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***472; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****69

we have always attached special importance to their role because "[every] violation of the antitrust laws is a blow to the free-enterprise system envisaged by Congress." Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 262 \(1972\).

There are, in addition, several unusual features of the antitrust enforcement scheme that unequivocally require rejection of any thought that Congress would tolerate private arbitration of antitrust claims in lieu of the statutory remedies that it fashioned. As we explained in Blumenstock Brothers Advertising Agency v. Curtis Publishing Co., 252 U.S. 436, 440 \(1920\), an antitrust treble-damages case "can only be brought in a District Court of the United States." The determination that these cases are "too important to be decided otherwise than by competent tribunals" <sup>23</sup> surely cannot allow \*\*\*473 private arbitrators to assume a jurisdiction that is denied to courts of the sovereign States.

[\[\*\*\*\*70\] \[\*655\]](#) The extraordinary importance of the private antitrust remedy has been emphasized in other statutes enacted by Congress. Thus, in 1913, Congress passed a special Act guaranteeing public access to depositions in Government civil proceedings to enforce the Sherman Act. 37 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 30.<sup>24</sup> The purpose of that Act plainly was to enable victims of antitrust violations to make evidentiary use of information developed in a public enforcement proceeding. This purpose was further implemented in the following year by the enactment of § 5 of the Clayton Act providing that a final judgment or decree in a Government case may constitute prima facie proof of a violation in a subsequent treble-damages case. 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 16\(a\). These special remedial provisions attest to the importance that Congress has attached to the private remedy.

In view of the history of antitrust enforcement in the United [\[\*\*\*\*71\]](#) States, it is not surprising that all of the federal courts that have considered the question have uniformly \*\*3369 and unhesitatingly concluded that agreements to arbitrate federal antitrust issues are not enforceable. In a landmark opinion for the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, Judge Feinberg wrote:

"A claim under the antitrust laws is not merely a private matter. The Sherman Act is designed to promote the national interest in a competitive economy; thus, the plaintiff asserting his rights under the Act has been likened to a private attorney-general who protects the public's interest. . . . Antitrust violations can affect hundreds of thousands -- perhaps millions -- of people and inflict staggering economic damage. . . . We do not believe that Congress intended such claims to be resolved elsewhere than in the courts. We do not suggest that all antitrust litigations attain these swollen proportions; the courts, no less than the public, are thankful [\[\*656\]](#) that they do not. But in fashioning a rule to govern the arbitrability of antitrust claims, we must consider the rule's potential effect. For the same reason, it is also proper to ask whether contracts [\[\*\*\*\*72\]](#) of adhesion between alleged monopolists and their customers should determine the forum for trying antitrust violations." American Safety Equipment Corp. v. J.P. Maguire & Co., 391 F.2d 821, 826-827 \(1968\) (footnote omitted).

This view has been followed in later cases from that Circuit <sup>25</sup> and by the \*\*\*474 First, <sup>26</sup> Fifth, <sup>27</sup> Seventh, <sup>28</sup> Eighth, <sup>29</sup> [\[\*\*\*\*73\]](#) and Ninth Circuits.<sup>30</sup> It is clearly a correct statement of the law.

<sup>23</sup> In University Life Insurance Co. v. Unimarc Ltd., 699 F.2d 846 \(CA7 1983\), Judge Posner wrote:

"The suit brought by Unimarc and Huff . . . raises issues of state tort and contract law and federal antitrust law. The tort and contract issues may or may not be within the scope of the arbitration clauses in the coinsurance and second marketing agreements but they are arbitrable in the sense that an agreement to arbitrate them would be enforceable. Federal antitrust issues, however, are nonarbitrable in just that sense. Applied Digital Technology, Inc. v. Continental Casualty Co., 576 F.2d 116, 117 \(7th Cir. 1978\). They are considered to be at once too difficult to be decided competently by arbitrators -- who are not judges, and often not even lawyers -- and too important to be decided otherwise than by competent tribunals. See American Safety Equipment Corp. v. J. P. Maguire & Co., 391 F.2d 821, 826-27 \(2d Cir. 1968\). The root of the doctrine is in the same soil as the principle, announced in Blumenstock Bros. Adv. Agency v. Curtis Pub. Co., 252 U.S. 436, 440-41 \(1920\), that federal antitrust suits may not be brought in state courts." Id., at 850-851.

<sup>24</sup> See United States v. Procter & Gamble Co., 356 U.S. 677, 683 \(1958\).

473 U.S. 614, *656; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3369; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***474; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****73

This Court would be well advised to endorse the collective wisdom of the distinguished judges of the Courts of Appeals who have unanimously concluded that the statutory remedies fashioned by Congress for the enforcement of the antitrust laws render an agreement to arbitrate antitrust disputes unenforceable. Arbitration awards are only reviewable for manifest disregard of the law, 9 U. S. C. §§ 10, 207, and the rudimentary procedures which make arbitration so desirable in the context of a private dispute often mean that the record is so inadequate that the arbitrator's decision is virtually [\[\*657\] \[\*\*\*\*74\]](#) unreviewable.<sup>31</sup> [\[\*\*\*\*75\]](#) Despotic decisionmaking of this kind is fine for parties who are willing to agree in advance to settle for a best approximation of the correct result in order to resolve quickly and inexpensively any contractual dispute that may arise in an ongoing commercial relationship. Such informality, however, is simply unacceptable when every error may have devastating consequences for important businesses in our national economy and may undermine their ability to compete in world markets.<sup>32</sup> Instead [\[\*\*3370\]](#) of "muffling a grievance in the cloakroom of arbitration," the public interest in free competitive markets would be better served by having the issues resolved "in the light of impartial public court adjudication." See Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. v. Ware, 414 U.S. 117, 136 \(1973\).<sup>33</sup>

[\[\*658\] \[\*\*\*\*76\]](#) IV

[\[\*\*\*475\]](#) The Court assumes for the purposes of its decision that the antitrust issues would not be arbitrable if this were a purely domestic dispute, ante, at 629, but holds that the international character of the controversy makes it arbitrable. The holding rests on vague concerns for the international implications of its decision and a misguided application of Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co., 417 U.S. 506 \(1974\).

International Obligations of the United States

---

<sup>25</sup> N. V. Maatschappij Voor Industriele Waarden v. A.O. Smith Corp., 532 F.2d 874, 876 \(1976\) \(per curiam\).

<sup>26</sup> 723 F.2d 155, 162 \(1983\) (Coffin, J., for the court) (opinion below).

<sup>27</sup> Cobb v. Lewis, 488 F.2d 41, 47 \(1974\) (Wisdom, J., for the court).

<sup>28</sup> University Life Insurance Co. v. Unimarc Ltd., 699 F.2d, at 850-851 \(1983\) (Posner, J., for the court); Applied Digital Technology, Inc. v. Continental Casualty Co., 576 F.2d 116, 117 \(1978\) (Pell, J., for the court).

<sup>29</sup> Helfenbein v. International Industries, Inc., 438 F.2d 1068, 1070 (Lay, J., for the court), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 872 \(1971\).

<sup>30</sup> Lake Communications, Inc. v. ICC Corp., 738 F.2d 1473, 1477-1480 \(1984\) (Browning, C. J., for the court); Varo v. Comprehensive Designers, Inc., 504 F.2d 1103, 1104 \(1974\) (Chambers, J., for the court); Power Replacements, Inc. v. Air Preheater Co., 426 F.2d 980, 983-984 \(1970\) (Jameson, J., for the court); A. & E. Plastik Pak Co. v. Monsanto Co., 396 F.2d 710, 715-716 \(1968\) (Merrill, J., for the court).

<sup>31</sup> The arbitration procedure in this case does not provide any right to evidentiary discovery or a written decision, and requires that all proceedings be closed to the public. App. 220-221. Moreover, Japanese arbitrators do not have the power of compulsory process to secure witnesses and documents, nor do witnesses who are available testify under oath. Id., at 218-219. Cf. 9 U. S. C. § 7 (arbitrators may summon witnesses to attend proceedings and seek enforcement in a district court).

<sup>32</sup> The greatest risk, of course, is that the arbitrator will condemn business practices under the antitrust laws that are efficient in a free competitive market. Cf. Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284 \(1985\), rev'd 715 F.2d 1393 \(CA9 1983\). In the absence of a reviewable record, a reviewing district court would not be able to undo the damage wrought. Even a Government suit or an action by a private party might not be available to set aside the award.

<sup>33</sup> The Court notes that some courts which have held that agreements to arbitrate antitrust claims generally are unenforceable have nevertheless enforced arbitration agreements to settle an existing antitrust claim. Ante, at 633. These settlement agreements, made after the parties have had every opportunity to evaluate the strength of their position, are obviously less destructive of the private treble-damages remedy that Congress provided. Thus, it may well be that arbitration as a means of settling existing disputes is permissible.

473 U.S. 614, *658; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3370; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***475; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****76

Before relying on its own notions of what international comity requires, it is surprising that the Court does not determine the specific commitments that the United States has made to enforce private agreements to arbitrate disputes arising under public law. As the Court acknowledges, the only treaty relevant here is the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards. [1970] 21 U.S.T. 2517, T.I.A.S. No. 6997. The Convention was adopted in 1958 at a multilateral conference sponsored by the United Nations. This Nation did not sign the proposed convention at that time; displaying its characteristic caution before entering into international compacts, the United [****77] States did not accede to it until 12 years later.

As the Court acknowledged in Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co., 417 U.S., at 520, n. 15, the principal purpose of the Convention "was to encourage the recognition and enforcement of commercial arbitration agreements in international contracts and to unify the standards by which agreements to arbitrate are observed and arbitral awards are enforced in the signatory countries." However, the United States, as amicus curiae, advises the Court that the Convention "clearly contemplates" that signatory nations will enforce domestic laws prohibiting the arbitration of certain subject matters. Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 28. This interpretation of the Convention was adopted by the Court of Appeals, 723 F.2d, at 162-166, and the Court [*659] declines to reject it, ante, at 639-640, n. 21. The construction is beyond doubt.

Article II(3) of the Convention provides that the court of a Contracting State, "when seized of an action in a matter in respect of which the parties have made an agreement within the meaning of this article, shall, at the request of one of the parties, refer [****78] the parties to arbitration." This obligation does not arise, however, (i) if the agreement "is null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed," Art. II(3), or (ii) if the dispute does not concern "a subject matter capable of settlement by arbitration," Art. II(1). The former qualification principally applies to matters of fraud, mistake, and duress in the inducement, or problems of procedural fairness and feasibility. 723 F.2d, at 164. The latter clause plainly suggests the possibility [**3371] that some subject matters are not capable of arbitration under the domestic laws of the signatory nations, and that agreements to arbitrate such disputes need not be enforced.

This construction is confirmed by [***476] the provisions of the Convention which provide for the enforcement of international arbitration awards. Article III provides that each "Contracting State shall recognize arbitral awards as binding and enforce them." However, if an arbitration award is "contrary to the public policy of [a] country" called upon to enforce it, or if it concerns a subject matter which is "not capable of settlement by arbitration under the law of that country," the [****79] Convention does not require that it be enforced. Arts. V(2)(a) and (b). Thus, reading Articles II and V together, the Convention provides that agreements to arbitrate disputes which are nonarbitrable under domestic law need not be honored, nor awards rendered under them enforced.<sup>34</sup>

[*660] This construction is also supported by the legislative history of the Senate's advice and consent to the Convention. In presenting the Convention for the Senate's consideration the President offered the following [***80] interpretation of Article II(1):

"The requirement that the agreement apply to a matter capable of settlement by arbitration is necessary in order to take proper account of laws in force in many countries which prohibit the submission of certain questions to arbitration. In some States of the United States, for example, disputes affecting the title to real property are not arbitrable." S. Exec. Doc. E, at 19.

The Senate's consent to the Convention presumably was made in light of this interpretation, and thus it is to be afforded considerable weight. Sumitomo Shoji America, Inc. v. Avagliano, 457 U.S. 176, 184-185 (1982).

<sup>34</sup> Indeed, it has been argued that a state may refuse to enforce an agreement to arbitrate a subject matter which is nonarbitrable in domestic law under Article II(3) as well as under Article II(1). Since awards rendered under such agreements need not be enforced under Article V(2) the agreement is "incapable of being performed." Art. II(3). S. Exec. Doc. E, 90th Cong., 2d Sess., 19 (1968) (hereinafter S. Exec. Doc. E); G. Haight, Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards 27-28 (1958).

International Comity

It is clear then that the international obligations of the United States permit us to honor Congress' commitment to the exclusive resolution of antitrust disputes in the federal courts. The Court today refuses to do so, offering only vague concerns for comity among nations. The courts of other nations, on the other hand, have applied the exception provided in the Convention, and refused to enforce agreements to arbitrate specific subject matters of concern to them.<sup>35</sup>

[****81] [*661] It may be that the subject-matter exception to the Convention ought to be reserved -- as a matter of domestic law -- for matters of the greatest public interest which involve concerns that are shared by other nations. The Sherman Act's commitment to free competitive markets is [***477] among our most important civil policies. Supra, at 650-657. This commitment, shared by other nations which are signatory to the Convention,<sup>36</sup> is hardly the sort of parochial [**3372] concern that we should decline to enforce in the interest of international comity. Indeed, the branch of Government entrusted with the conduct of political relations with foreign governments has informed us that the "United States' determination that federal antitrust claims are nonarbitrable under the Convention . . . is not likely to result in either surprise or recrimination on the part of other signatories to the Convention." Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 30.

[****82] Lacking any support for the proposition that the enforcement of our domestic laws in this context will result in international recriminations, the Court seeks refuge in an obtuse application of its own precedent, Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co., 417 U.S. 506 (1974), in order to defend the contrary result. The Scherk case was an action for damages brought by an American purchaser of three European businesses in which it was claimed that the seller's fraudulent representations concerning the status of certain European trademarks constituted a violation of § 10(b) of the Securities Exchange [*662] Act of 1934, 15 U. S. C. § 78j(b). The Court held that the parties' agreement to arbitrate any dispute arising out of the purchase agreement was enforceable under the Federal Arbitration Act. The legal issue was whether the Court's earlier holding in Wilko v. Swan, 346 U.S. 427 (1953) -- "that an agreement to arbitrate could not preclude a buyer of a security from seeking a judicial remedy under the Securities Act of 1933," see 417 U.S., at 510 -- was "controlling authority." Ibid.

The Court carefully identified two [****83] important differences between the Wilko case and the Scherk case. First, the statute involved in Wilko contained an express private remedy that had "no statutory counterpart" in the statute involved in Scherk, see 417 U.S., at 513. Although the Court noted that this difference provided a "colorable argument" for reaching a different result, the Court did not rely on it. Id., at 513-514.

Instead, it based its decision on the second distinction -- that the outcome in Wilko was governed entirely by American law whereas in Scherk foreign rules of law would control and, if the arbitration clause were not enforced, a host of international conflict-of-laws problems would arise. The Court explained:

"Alberto-Culver's contract to purchase the business entities belonging to Scherk was a truly international agreement. Alberto-Culver is an American corporation with its principal place of business and the vast bulk of its activity in this country, while Scherk is a citizen [***478] of Germany whose companies were organized under the laws of Germany and Liechtenstein. The negotiations leading to the signing of the contract in [****84] Austria and <sup>35</sup> For example, the Cour de Cassation in Belgium has held that disputes arising under a Belgian statute limiting the unilateral termination of exclusive distributorships are not arbitrable under the Convention in that country, Audi-NSU Auto Union A.G. v. S. A. Adelin Petit & Cie. (1979), in 5 Yearbook Commercial Arbitration 257, 259 (1980), and the Corte di Cassazione in Italy has held that labor disputes are not arbitrable under the Convention in that country, Compagnia Generale Construzioni v. Piersanti, [1980] Foro Italiano I 190, in 6 Yearbook Commercial Arbitration 229, 230 (1981).

<sup>36</sup> For example, the Federal Republic of Germany has a vigorous antitrust program, and prohibits the enforcement of predispute agreements to arbitrate such claims under some circumstances. See Act Against Restraints of Competition § 91(1), in 1 Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, Guide to Legislation on Restrictive Business Practices, Part D, p. 49 (1980). See also 2 G. Delaume, Transnational Contracts § 13.06, p. 31, and n. 3 (1982).

to the closing in Switzerland took place in the United States, England, and Germany, and involved consultations with legal and trademark experts from each of those countries and from Liechtenstein. Finally, and most significantly, the subject matter of the contract concerned the [*663] sale of business enterprises organized under the laws of and primarily situated in European countries, whose activities were largely, if not entirely, directed to European markets.

"Such a contract involves considerations and policies significantly different from those found controlling in Wilko. In Wilko, quite apart from the arbitration provision, there was no question but that the laws of the United States generally, and the federal securities laws in particular, would govern disputes arising out of the stock-purchase agreement. The parties, the negotiations, and the subject matter of the contract were all situated in this country, and no credible claim could have been entertained that any international conflict-of-laws problems would arise. In this case, by contrast, [**3373] in the absence of the arbitration provision considerable uncertainty existed at the time of [****85] the agreement, and still exists, concerning the law applicable to the resolution of disputes arising out of the contract." 417 U.S., at 515-516 (footnote omitted).

Thus, in its opinion in Scherk, the Court distinguished Wilko because in that case "no credible claim could have been entertained that any international conflict-of-laws problems would arise." 417 U.S., at 516. That distinction fits this case precisely, since I consider it perfectly clear that the rules of American antitrust law must govern the claim of an American automobile dealer that he has been injured by an international conspiracy to restrain trade in the American automobile market.<sup>37</sup>

The critical importance of the foreign-law [****86] issues in Scherk was apparent to me even before the case reached this Court. See n. 12, supra. For that reason, it is especially distressing [*664] to find that the Court is unable to perceive why the reasoning in Scherk is wholly inapplicable to Soler's antitrust claims against Chrysler and Mitsubishi. The merits of those claims are controlled entirely by American law. It is true that the automobiles are manufactured in Japan and that Mitsubishi is a Japanese corporation, but the same antitrust questions would be presented if Mitsubishi were owned by two American companies instead of by one American and one Japanese partner. When Mitsubishi enters the American market and plans to engage in business in that market over a period of years, it must recognize its obligation to comply with American law and to be subject to [***479] the remedial provisions of American statutes.<sup>38</sup>

[****87] The federal claim that was asserted in Scherk, unlike Soler's antitrust claim, had not been expressly authorized by Congress. Indeed, until this Court's recent decision in Landreth Timber Co. v. Landreth, 471 U.S. 681 \(1985\), the federal cause of action asserted in Scherk would not have been entertained in a number of Federal Circuits because it did not involve the kind of securities transaction that Congress intended to regulate when it enacted the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.<sup>39</sup> The fraud claimed in Scherk was virtually identical to the breach of warranty claim; arbitration of such claims arising out of an agreement between parties of equal bargaining strength does not conflict with any significant federal policy.

<sup>37</sup> Cf. Compagnia Generale Construzioni v. Piersanti, [1980] Foro Italiano I 190 (Corte Cass. Italy), in 6 Yearbook Commercial Arbitration, at 230; Audi-NSU Auto Union A. G. v. S. A. Adelin Petit & Cie. (Cour Cass. Belgium 1979), in 5 Yearbook Commercial Arbitration, at 259.

<sup>38</sup> Cf. Sumitomo Shoji America, Inc. v. Avagliano, 457 U.S. 176 \(1982\) (Japanese general trading company's wholly owned subsidiary which is incorporated in the United States is not exempt under bilateral commercial treaty from obligations under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964).

<sup>39</sup> The Court's opinion in Landreth Timber, 471 U.S., at 694-695, n. 7, does not take issue with my assertion, in dissent, that Congress never "intended to cover negotiated transactions involving the sale of control of a business whose securities have never been offered or sold in any public market." Id., at 699.

473 U.S. 614, *664; 105 S. Ct. 3346, **3373; 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, ***479; 1985 U.S. LEXIS 129, ****87

[****88] In contrast, Soler's claim not only implicates our fundamental antitrust policies, supra, at 650-657, but also should [*665] be evaluated in the light of an explicit congressional finding concerning the disparity in bargaining power between automobile manufacturers and their franchised dealers. In 1956, when Congress enacted special legislation to protect dealers from bad-faith franchise terminations,<sup>40</sup> it recited its intent "to balance the power now heavily weighted in favor of automobile manufacturers." 70 Stat. 1125. The special federal interest in protecting automobile dealers from overreaching by car manufacturers, as well as the policies underlying the Sherman Act, underscore the folly of the Court's decision today.

[**3374] V

The Court's repeated incantation of the high ideals of "international arbitration" creates the impression that this case involves the fate of an institution designed to implement a formula for world peace. [****89]<sup>41</sup> But just as it is improper to subordinate the public interest in enforcement of antitrust policy to the private interest in resolving commercial disputes, so is it equally unwise to allow a vision of world unity to distort the importance of the selection of the proper forum for resolving this dispute. Like any other mechanism for resolving controversies, international arbitration will only succeed if it is realistically limited to tasks it is capable of performing well -- the prompt and inexpensive resolution of essentially contractual disputes between commercial partners. As for [***480] matters involving the political passions and the fundamental interests of nations, even the multilateral convention adopted under the auspices of the United Nations recognizes that private international arbitration is incapable of achieving satisfactory results.

[****90] [*666] In my opinion, the elected representatives of the American people would not have us dispatch an American citizen to a foreign land in search of an uncertain remedy for the violation of a public right that is protected by the Sherman Act. This is especially so when there has been no genuine bargaining over the terms of the submission, and the arbitration remedy provided has not even the most elementary guarantees of fair process. Consideration of a fully developed record by a jury, instructed in the law by a federal judge, and subject to appellate review, is a surer guide to the competitive character of a commercial practice than the practically unreviewable judgment of a private arbitrator.

Unlike the Congress that enacted the Sherman Act in 1890, the Court today does not seem to appreciate the value of economic freedom. I respectfully dissent.

References

---

5 Am Jur 2d, Arbitration and Award 15, 30, 42; 55 Am Jur 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 255

3 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Arbitration 4:149-4:154, 4:158, 4:159

3 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Arbitration 4:201-4:207

2 Am Jur Pl [****91] & Pr Forms (Rev), Arbitration and Award, Forms 11, 12, 18, 19

2 Am Jur Legal Forms 2d Arbitration and Award 23:171-23:174

3 Am Jur Trials 681, Tactics and Strategy of Pleading 50-51

---

<sup>40</sup> Automobile Dealer's Day in Court Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1221-1225.

<sup>41</sup> E. g., Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice, 59 Stat. 1031, T.S. No. 993 (1945); Constitution of the International Labor Organisation, 49 Stat. 2712, T.S. No. 874 (1934); Treaty of Versailles, S. Doc. 49, 66th Cong., 1st Sess., pt. 1, pp. 8-17 (1919) (Covenant of the League of Nations); Kant, Perpetual Peace, A Philosophical Sketch, in Kant's Political Writings 93 (H. Reiss ed. 1971).

9 USCS 1 et seq.; 15 USCS 1 et seq.

US L Ed Digest, Arbitration 2

L Ed Index to Annos, Arbitration and Award

ALR Quick Index, Arbitration and Award

Federal Quick Index, Arbitration and Award

Annotation References:

Arbitrability of federal antitrust claims. 3 ALR Fed 918.

Validity and enforceability of provisions for binding arbitration, and waiver thereof. 24 ALR3d 1325.

Validity and effect, and remedy in respect, of contractual stipulation to submit disputes to arbitration in another jurisdiction. 12 ALR3d 892.

---

End of Document

Fisher v. Berkeley

Supreme Court of the United States

November 12, 1985, Argued ; February 26, 1986, Decided

No. 84-1538

Reporter

475 U.S. 260 *; 106 S. Ct. 1045 **; 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 ***; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 12 ****; 54 U.S.L.W. 4222; 1986-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,965

FISHER ET AL. v. CITY OF BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA, ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF CALIFORNIA.

Disposition: 37 Cal. 3d 644, 693 P. 2d 261, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

Ordinance, rent, landlords, Sherman Act, prices, anti trust law, rent control, municipal, antitrust, exemption, anticompetitive, Stabilization, wine, unilaterally, rental, articulated, pre-emption, conspiracy, pre-empted, retailers, concerted action, levels, charter amendment, rent ceiling, residential, price competition, state statute, state policy, initiative, measures

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A state statute is not preempted by federal antitrust laws simply because the state scheme may have an anticompetitive effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A state statute should be struck down on preemption grounds under the Sherman Antitrust Act only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

475 U.S. 260, *260; 106 S. Ct. 1045, **1045; 89 L. Ed. 2d 206, ***206; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 12, ****1

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

HN3 [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Only where state legislation is found to conflict "irreconcilably" with the antitrust laws does the level of government responsible for its enactment become important. Legislation that would otherwise be preempted under the Rice standard may nonetheless survive if it is found to be state action immune from antitrust scrutiny under the Parker State-Action Doctrine. The ultimate source of that immunity can be only the state, not its subdivisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN4 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The reach of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, § 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is limited to unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy between separate entities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Real Property Law > Landlord & Tenant > Rent Regulation > General Overview

HN5 [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Independent activity by a single entity is distinguished from a concerted effort by more than one entity to fix prices or otherwise restrain trade. Even where a single firm's restraints directly affect prices and have the same economic effect as concerted action might have, there can be no liability under § 1 of the Sherman Act in the absence of agreement. Thus, if an ordinance stabilizes rents without this element of concerted action, the program it establishes cannot run afoul of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Briefs

HN6 [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A restraint imposed unilaterally by government does not become concerted action within the meaning of the statute simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law. The ordinary relationship between the government and those who must obey its regulatory commands whether they wish to or not is not enough to establish a conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[ Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Not all restraints imposed upon private actors by government units necessarily constitute unilateral action outside the purview of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Certain restraints may be characterized as "hybrid," in that nonmarket mechanisms merely enforce private marketing decisions. Where private actors are thus granted a degree of private regulatory power, the regulatory scheme may be attacked under § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN8[ Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The mere existence of legal compulsion does not turn an ordinance into unilateral action by the state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Real Property Law > Landlord & Tenant > Rent Regulation > General Overview

HN9[ Sherman Act, Claims

Under settled principles of antitrust law, rent controls which establish a ceiling lack the element of concerted action needed before they can be characterized as a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

City ordinance imposing rent ceilings on residential real property held not unconstitutional as being pre-empted by Sherman Act.

Summary

The City of Berkeley, California, adopted an ordinance imposing rent ceilings on residential real property. Landlords owning rental property brought suit in the Superior Court of Alameda County, California, and sought declaratory and injunctive relief on the grounds of alleged violations of their federal constitutional rights, under the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Superior Court held the ordinance not unconstitutional on its face. The California Supreme Court affirmed, holding not only that the ordinance did not violate the Fourteenth Amendment, but also that the ordinance was not pre-empted by the federal antitrust laws (37 Cal 3d 644, 209 Cal Rptr 682, 693 P2d 261).

On appeal, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Marshall, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and White, Blackmun, Rehnquist, Stevens, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held that because the rent controls were unilaterally imposed by government upon landlords to the exclusion of private control and lacked concerted action, they could not be characterized as a per se violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), and the ordinance could not be held facially inconsistent with the federal antitrust laws.

Powell, J., concurred in the judgment on the grounds that because the state legislature had expressly authorized Berkeley to control rents, the rent control ordinance fell within the "state action" exemption from the federal antitrust laws.

Brennan, J., dissented on the grounds (1) that the rent control ordinance facially conflicted with the Sherman Act because the ordinance mandated price fixing, a per se violation of the Sherman Act, and involved a combination between the City of Berkeley and its officials on the one hand, and the landlords on the other hand, and (2) that the ordinance did not fall within the "state action" exemption from the antitrust laws.

Headnotes

---

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §36 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES

§10 > ordinance imposing rent ceilings -- lack of concerted action or conspiracy -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F] [LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [1G]

A city ordinance imposing rent ceilings on residential real property is not unconstitutional as pre-empted by 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), where such rent controls are unilaterally imposed by government upon landlords to the exclusion of private control and lack concerted action, and where the ordinance, adopted by popular initiative, cannot be viewed as a cloak for any price-fixing conspiracy among landlords or between landlords and the city; the mere fact that all competing property owners must comply with the same provisions of the ordinance does not establish a conspiracy among landlords. (Brennan, J., dissented from this holding.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §10 > concerted action -- conspiracy --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

A restraint imposed unilaterally by government does not become concerted action, within the meaning of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law; the ordinary relationship between the government and those who must obey its regulatory commands whether they wish to or not is not enough to establish a conspiracy. (Brennan, J., dissented from this holding.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §10 > unilateral action -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Not all restraints imposed upon private actors by government units necessarily constitute unilateral action outside the purview of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1); where private actors are granted a degree of private regulatory power, the regulatory scheme is subject to attack under 1.

Syllabus

---

A Berkeley, California, ordinance, enacted pursuant to popular initiative, imposes rent ceilings on residential real property in the city. The rent ceilings are under the control of a Rent Stabilization Board. Appellant landlords brought suit in California Superior Court challenging the constitutionality of the ordinance on Fourteenth Amendment grounds and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. The Superior Court upheld the ordinance but was reversed by the California Court of Appeal. In the meantime, based on the intervening decision in Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, the question arose as to whether the ordinance was unconstitutional because it was pre-empted by the Sherman Act. The California Supreme Court held that there was no conflict between the ordinance and the Sherman Act.

Held: The ordinance is not unconstitutional as being pre-empted by the Sherman Act. Pp. 264-270.

(a) The rent ceilings established by the ordinance and maintained by the Rent Stabilization Board were unilaterally imposed by the city [****2] upon landlords to the exclusion of private control. Thus, the rent ceilings lack the element of concerted action needed before they can be characterized as a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. A restraint imposed unilaterally by government does not become concerted action within the meaning of § 1 simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law. And the mere fact that all competing landlords must comply with the ordinance is not enough to establish a conspiracy among landlords. Pp. 265-267.

(b) While the ordinance gives tenants some power to trigger its enforcement, it places complete control over maximum rent levels exclusively in the Rent Stabilization Board's hands. Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, and California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, distinguished. Pp. 267-270.

Counsel: Jon D. Smock argued the cause for appellants. On the briefs were James R. Parrinello, John E. Mueller, and Peter J. Donnici.

Laurence H. Tribe argued the cause for appellees. With him on the brief were Kathleen M. Sullivan, Myron Moskovitz, and Manuela Albuquerque. [****3] *

[****4]

Judges: MARSHALL, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and WHITE, BLACKMUN, REHNQUIST, STEVENS, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. POWELL, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, post, p. 270. BRENNAN, J., filed a dissenting opinion, post, p. 274.

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the California Housing Council, Inc., by Carla A. Hills and William C. Kelly, Jr.; for the Mid-America Legal Foundation by John M. Cannon, Susan W. Wanat, and Ann Plunkett Sheldon; for the Pacific Legal Foundation et al. by Ronald A. Zumbrun and Robert K. Best; and for the Washington Legal Foundation by Daniel J. Popeo and Paul D. Kamenar.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the State of New Jersey Department of the Public Advocate by Richard E. Shapiro; and for the United States Conference of Mayors et al. by Benna Ruth Solomon, Joyce Holmes Benjamin, Stephen Chapple, and Cynthia M. Pols.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed for the City and County of San Francisco by George P. Agnost and Burk E. Delventhal; for the City of Santa Monica et al. by Robert M. Myers, Stephen S. Stark, Karl M. Manheim, Raymond E. Ott, and K. D. Lyders; for the Berkeley Property Owners' Association by Thomas A. Seaton; for the California Apartment Association by Jon D. Smock, Wilbur H. Haines III, and Jeffrey J. Gale; for the Coalition for Competition in Apartment Rentals by E. Barrett Prettyman, Jr., and Elwood S. Kendrick; and for the National Apartment Association et al. by Jon D. Smock.

Opinion by: MARSHALL

Opinion

---

[*261] [***209] [**1046] JUSTICE MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A]The question presented here is whether a rent control ordinance enacted by a municipality pursuant to popular initiative is unconstitutional because pre-empted by the Sherman Act.

I

In June 1980, the electorate of the city of Berkeley, California, enacted an initiative entitled "Ordinance 5261-N. S., Rent Stabilization and Eviction for Good Cause Ordinance" [*262] (hereafter Ordinance). Section 3 of the Ordinance stated the measure's purposes:<sup>1</sup> [**1047] "The purposes of this Ordinance are to regulate residential rent increases in the City of Berkeley and to protect tenants from unwarranted rent increases and arbitrary, discriminatory, or retaliatory evictions, in order to help maintain the diversity of the Berkeley community and to ensure compliance with legal obligations relating to the rental of housing. This legislation [****5] is designed to address the City of Berkeley's housing crisis, preserve the public peace, health and safety, and advance the housing policies of the City with regard to low and fixed income persons, minorities, students, handicapped, and the aged." App. to Juris. Statement A-111.

To accomplish these goals, the Ordinance places strict rent controls on all real property that "is being rented or is available for rent for residential use in whole or in part," § 5, id., at A-113. Excepted are government-owned units, transient units, cooperatives, hospitals, certain [***210] small [****6] owner-occupied buildings, and all newly constructed buildings. For the remaining units, numbering approximately 23,000, 37 Cal. 3d 644, 678, 693 P. 2d 261, 288 (1984), the Ordinance establishes a base rent ceiling reflecting the rents in effect at the end of May 1980. A landlord may raise his rents from these levels only pursuant to an annual general adjustment of rent ceilings by a Rent Stabilization Board of appointed commissioners or after he is successful in petitioning the Board for an individual adjustment. A landlord who fails to register with the Board units covered by the Ordinance or who fails to adhere [*263] to the maximum allowable rent set under the Ordinance may be fined by the Board, sued by his tenants, or have rent legally withheld from him. If his violations are willful, he may face criminal penalties.

Shortly after the passage of the initiative, appellants, a group of landlords owning rental property in Berkeley, brought this suit in California Superior Court, claiming, inter alia, that the Ordinance violates their rights under the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment, and seeking declaratory [****7] and injunctive relief. The Superior Court upheld the Ordinance on its face, but was reversed by the Court of Appeal. While that appeal was pending, however, this Court's decision in Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40 (1982), led certain amici to raise the question whether the Ordinance was unconstitutional because pre-empted by the federal antitrust laws. When the California Supreme Court heard the appeal from the Court of Appeal's decision, it therefore chose to consider plaintiffs' pre-emption claim along with their Fourteenth Amendment challenge.

Although fully briefed on the question whether the Berkeley Ordinance constitutes state action exempt from antitrust scrutiny under the standard established in Boulder, supra, the California Supreme Court noted that consideration of this issue would become necessary only were there to be "truly a conflict between the Sherman Act and the challenged regulatory scheme," 37 Cal. 3d, at 660, 693 P. 2d, at 275 (quoting First American Title Co. v. South

---

<sup>1</sup> In 1982, while this case was pending in the California Court of Appeal, the Berkeley electorate enacted the "Tenants' Rights Amendments Act of 1982," revising certain sections of the 1980 Ordinance. Like the California Supreme Court, we review the Ordinance as amended, see 37 Cal. 3d 644, 654, n. 2, 693 P. 2d 261, 270, n. 2 (1984); all reference herein will therefore be to the 1982 version of the Ordinance.

475 U.S. 260, *263; 106 S. Ct. 1045, **1047; 89 L. Ed. 2d 206, ***210; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 12, ****7

Dakota Land Title Assn., 714 F.2d 1439, 1452 (CA8 1983), cert. denied, [****8] 464 U.S. 1042 (1984)). Such a conflict would exist, the Supreme Court concluded, only if the Ordinance on its face mandated conduct prohibited by either § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act. See Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 661 (1982). After reviewing the two "traditional standards" that have consistently been used to determine whether conduct violates § 1 of the Sherman Act -- the per se rules and the rule of reason, see [*264] National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692 (1978) -- the court concluded that both standards, with their exclusive focus on competition and concern for the selfish motives of private actors, failed to give due deference to a municipality's legitimate [**1048] interest in promoting public health, safety, and welfare. 37 Cal. 3d, at 667-673, 693 P. 2d, at 280-285. The Supreme Court therefore found both standards inappropriate and proceeded to apply a standard of its own devising, based upon this Court's Commerce Clause cases. Applying [***211] this test, the court found no conflict between the Ordinance and either [****9] § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act.

We noted probable jurisdiction limited to the antitrust pre-emption question, 471 U.S. 1124 (1985), and now affirm, although on grounds different from those relied on by the California Supreme Court. While that court was correct in noting that consideration of state action is not necessary unless an actual conflict with the antitrust laws is established, we find traditional antitrust analysis adequate to resolve the issue presented here.

II

We begin by noting that appellants make no claim under either § 4 or § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 15 and 26, that the process by which the Rent Stabilization Ordinance was passed renders the Ordinance the product of an illegal "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy." Appellants instead claim that, regardless of the manner of its enactment, the regulatory scheme established by the Ordinance, on its face, conflicts with the Sherman Act and therefore is preempted.

Recognizing that the function of government may often be to tamper with free markets, correcting their failures and aiding their victims, this Court noted in Rice v. Norman Williams Co., supra, that [***10] HN1[↑] a "state statute is not pre-empted by the federal antitrust laws simply because the state scheme may have an anticompetitive effect," id., at 659. See Exxon Corp. v. Governor of Maryland, 437 U.S. 117, 133 (1978). We have therefore held that HN2[↑] a state statute should be struck down on pre-emption grounds "only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute." 458 U.S., at 661.

While Rice involved a state statute rather than a municipal ordinance, the rule it established does not distinguish between the two. As in other pre-emption cases, the analysis is the same for the acts of both levels of government. See, e. g., White v. Massachusetts Council of Construction Employers, Inc., 460 U.S. 204 (1983). HN3[↑] Only where legislation is found to conflict "irreconcilably" with the antitrust laws, Rice, supra, at 659, does the level of government responsible for its enactment become important. [****11] Legislation that would otherwise be pre-empted under Rice may nonetheless survive if it is found to be state action immune from antitrust scrutiny under Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943). The ultimate source of that immunity can be only the State, not its subdivisions. See Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, supra, at 50-51; Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 412-413 (1978) (opinion of BRENNAN, J.).

A

Appellants argue that Berkeley's Ordinance is pre-empted under Rice [***212] because it imposes rent ceilings across the entire rental market for residential units. Such a regime, they contend, clearly falls within the per se rule against price fixing, a rule that has been one of the settled points of antitrust enforcement since the earliest days of the Sherman Act, see Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 344-348 (1982); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 218 (1940). [**1049] That the prices set here are ceilings rather than floors and that the public interest has been invoked [****12] to justify this stabilization should not, appellants [*266] argue, save Berkeley's regulatory scheme from condemnation under the per se rule.

LEdHN[1B] [1B] Certainly there is this much truth to appellants' argument: Had the owners of residential rental property in Berkeley voluntarily banded together to stabilize rents in the city, their activities would not be saved from antitrust attack by claims that they had set reasonable prices out of solicitude for the welfare of their tenants. See National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, supra, at 695; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290 (1897). Moreover, it cannot be denied that Berkeley's Ordinance will affect the residential housing rental market in much the same way as would the philanthropic activities of this hypothetical trade association. What distinguishes the operation of Berkeley's Ordinance from the activities of a benevolent landlords' cartel is not that the Ordinance will necessarily have a different economic effect, but that the rent ceilings imposed by the Ordinance and maintained by the Rent Stabilization Board have been unilaterally imposed [****13] by government upon landlords to the exclusion of private control.

LEdHN[1C] [1C] The distinction between unilateral and concerted action is critical here. Adhering to the language of § 1, HN4 this Court has always limited the reach of that provision to "unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a 'contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy' between separate entities." Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768 (1984) (emphasis in original). We have therefore deemed it "of considerable importance" that HN5 independent activity by a single entity be distinguished from a concerted effort by more than one entity to fix prices or otherwise restrain trade, Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763 (1984). Even where a single firm's restraints directly affect prices and have the same economic effect as concerted action might have, there can be no liability under § 1 in the absence of agreement. Id. at 760-761; United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 44 (1960). Thus, if the Berkeley Ordinance stabilizes rents without this element of concerted action, [****14] the program it establishes cannot run afoul of § 1.

LEdHN[1D] [1D] LEdHN[2] [2] Recognizing this concerted-action requirement, appellants argue that the Ordinance "forms a combination between [the city of Berkeley and its officials], on the one hand, and the property owners on the other. It also creates a horizontal combination among the landlords." [**213] Reply Brief for Appellants 10, n. 7. In so arguing, appellants misconstrue the concerted-action requirement of § 1. HN6 A restraint imposed unilaterally by government does not become concerted action within the meaning of the statute simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law. The ordinary relationship between the government and those who must obey its regulatory commands whether they wish to or not is not enough to establish a conspiracy. Similarly, the mere fact that all competing property owners must comply with the same provisions of the Ordinance is not enough to establish a conspiracy among landlords. Under Berkeley's Ordinance, control over the maximum rent levels of every affected residential unit has been unilaterally removed from the owners of those properties and given to the Rent Stabilization Board. While [****15] the Board may choose to respond to an individual landlord's petition for a special adjustment of a particular rent ceiling, it may decide not to. There is no meeting of the minds here. See American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810 (1946), quoted in Monsanto, supra, at 764. The owners of residential property in Berkeley have no more freedom to resist [**1050] the city's rent controls than they do to violate any other local ordinance enforced by substantial sanctions.

B

LEdHN[3] [3] HN7 Not all restraints imposed upon private actors by government units necessarily constitute unilateral action outside the purview of § 1. Certain restraints may be characterized as [*268] "hybrid," in that nonmarket mechanisms merely enforce private marketing decisions. See Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. at 665 (STEVENS, J., concurring in judgment). Where private actors are thus granted "a degree of private regulatory power," id. at 666, n. 1, the regulatory scheme may be attacked under § 1. Indeed, this Court has twice found such hybrid restraints to violate the Sherman Act. See Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384 (1951); [****16] California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97 (1980).

In Schwegmann, a Louisiana statute authorized a distributor to enforce agreements fixing minimum retail prices not only against parties to such contracts, but also against retailers who sold the distributor's products without having agreed to the price restrictions. After finding that the statute went far beyond the now-repealed Miller-Tydings Act, which offered a limited antitrust exemption to certain "contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale" of specified commodities, the Court held that two liquor distributors had violated § 1 when they attempted to hold a retailer to the price-fixing terms of a contract it had refused to sign. In so holding, the Court noted that "when a state compels retailers to follow a parallel price policy, it demands private conduct which the Sherman Act forbids." 341 U.S., at 389. [***214] However, under the Louisiana statute, both the selection of minimum price levels and the exclusive power to enforce those levels were left to the discretion of distributors. While the petitioner-retailer in that [***17] case may have been legally required to adhere to the levels so selected, the involvement of his suppliers in setting those prices made it impossible to characterize the regulation as unilateral action by the State of Louisiana.

The trade restraint condemned in Midcal entailed a similar degree of free participation by private economic actors. That case presented an antitrust challenge to California's requirement that all wine producers, wholesalers, and rectifiers [*269] file fair trade contracts or price schedules with the State. If a wine producer did not set prices, wholesalers had to post a resale price schedule for that producer's brands. No state-licensed wine merchant could sell wine to a retailer at other than those prices. 445 U.S., at 99. The Court found: "California's system for wine pricing plainly constitutes resale price maintainance in violation of the Sherman Act . . . . The wine producer holds the power to prevent price competition by dictating the prices charged by wholesalers." Id., at 103. Here HN8[↑] again, the mere existence of legal compulsion did not turn California's scheme into unilateral action by the State. The [***18] Court noted: "The State has no direct control over wine prices, and it does not review the reasonableness of the prices set by wine dealers." Id., at 100.

[LEdHN\[1E\]](#)[↑] [1E]The hybrid restraints condemned in Schwegmann and Midcal were thus quite different from the pure regulatory scheme imposed by Berkeley's Ordinance. While the Ordinance does give tenants -- certainly a group of interested private parties -- some power to trigger the enforcement of its provisions, it places complete control over maximum rent levels exclusively in the hands of the Rent Stabilization Board. Not just the controls themselves but also the rent ceilings they mandate have been unilaterally imposed on the landlords by the city.

C

[LEdHN\[1F\]](#)[↑] [1F]There may be cases in which what appears to be a state- or municipality-administered [**1051] price stabilization scheme is really a private price-fixing conspiracy, concealed under a "gauzy cloak of state involvement," Midcal, supra, at 106. This might occur even where prices are ostensibly under the absolute control of government officials. However, we have been given no indication that such corruption has tainted the rent controls imposed by [***19] Berkeley's Ordinance. Adopted by popular initiative, the Ordinance can hardly be viewed as a cloak for any conspiracy among landlords or between the landlords and the municipality. Berkeley's landlords have [*270] simply been deprived of the power freely to raise their rents. That is why they are here. And that is why their role in the stabilization program does not alter the restraint's unilateral nature.<sup>2</sup>

III

[***215] [***20] [LEdHN\[1G\]](#)[↑] [1G]Because HN9[↑] under settled principles of antitrust law, the rent controls established by Berkeley's Ordinance lack the element of concerted action needed before they can be

---

<sup>2</sup>Though they have not pressed the point with any vigor in this Court, appellants have suggested that Berkeley's rent controls constitute attempted monopolization because the city "is clearly engaged in the provision of housing in the public sector" and using the controls to depress the prices of residential properties as a prelude to taking them over. Tr. of Oral Arg. 14-15. As to this claim, we note only that the inquiry demanded by appellants' allegations goes beyond the scope of the facial challenge presented here. See Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S., at 661. characterized as a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, we cannot say that the Ordinance is facially inconsistent with the federal antitrust laws. See Rice v. Norman Williams Co., supra, at 661. We therefore need not address whether, even if the controls were to mandate § 1 violations, they would be exempt under the state-action doctrine from antitrust scrutiny. See Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34 (1985).

The judgment of the California Supreme Court is

Affirmed.

Concur by: POWELL

Concur

---

JUSTICE POWELL, concurring in the judgment.

The Court today reaches out to decide a difficult preemption question when a straightforward and well-settled ground for decision is available. In my view, Berkeley's Ordinance plainly falls within the "state action" exemption of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943), and its progeny. I therefore concur in the judgment, but on grounds different from those discussed in the Court's opinion.

[*271] When a municipal [****21] government engages in anticompetitive activity pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy to displace competition with regulation, the "state action" exemption removes the conduct from the coverage of the antitrust laws. Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 38-39 (1985); Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 54 (1982). In Hallie, we found such a policy embodied in a state statute that "delegated to [municipalities] the express authority to take action that foreseeably will result in anti-competitive effects." 471 U.S., at 43. See also Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 415 (1978) (opinion of BRENNAN, J.) ("[An] adequate state mandate for anticompetitive activities . . . exists when it is found 'from the authority given a governmental entity to operate in a particular area, that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of'" (citation omitted)). Thus, the question in this case is whether California has expressly delegated to Berkeley regulatory power that foreseeably would lead to the anticompetitive effects challenged by appellants.

[****22] The history of Berkeley's ordinance is illuminating. Prior to 1974, *Article XI, § 3, [**1052] of the California Constitution*<sup>1</sup> [*24] [***216] required the state legislature to approve all changes in municipal charters. In 1972, in a citywide initiative, Berkeley's citizens approved a charter amendment authorizing rent [*272] control. This charter amendment effectively froze rents at 1971 levels, subject to individual adjustments by a popularly elected rent control board. Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 17 Cal. 3d 129, 138, 550 P. 2d 1001, 1008 (1976). The California Legislature ratified the charter amendment on August 2, 1972, and the rent control plan went into effect. 1972 Cal. Stat. 3370. A group of landlords challenged the rent control plan on a number of constitutional and statutory grounds. In the ensuing litigation, the California Supreme Court invalidated the plan on the ground that it lacked procedural safeguards necessary to protect landlords from confiscatory rent ceilings.<sup>2</sup> Birkenfeld, supra, at 170-

---

<sup>1</sup> When Berkeley's charter amendment was passed in 1972, Article XI, § 3(a), of the California Constitution read:

"For its own government, a county or city may adopt a charter by majority vote of its electors voting on the question. The charter is effective when filed with the Secretary of State. A charter may be amended, revised, or repealed in the same manner. A charter, amendment, revision, or repeal thereof shall be published in the official state statutes. . . . The provisions of a charter are the law of the State and have the force and effect of legislative enactments."

This provision was construed to require that charter amendments be approved by concurrent resolution of both houses of the state legislature. Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 17 Cal. 3d 129, 137, n. 2, 550 P. 2d 1001, 1007, n. 2 (1976).

172, 550 P. 2d, at 1030-1032. In 1980, in another initiative, Berkeley's citizens adopted [****23] the ordinance at issue in this case. This Ordinance provided the procedural protections that the 1972 charter provision lacked, and it subsequently survived constitutional challenge in state court. 37 Cal. 3d 644, 679-691, 693 P. 2d 261, 289-298 \(1984\).

The challenged Ordinance thus replaces a rent control plan that was expressly authorized by the state legislature. Under Hallie, a general grant of authority to regulate rents would have sufficed to exempt Berkeley's Ordinance from the antitrust laws. 471 U.S., at 42. It follows that the legislature's ratification of a particular rent control plan must also trigger the state-action exemption. See ibid.; Boulder, supra, at 55-56. The remaining issue is whether the authority granted in 1972 remains intact.

Appellants contend that it does not. First, [****25] appellants argue that the California Supreme Court's decision in Birkenfeld, [*273] invalidating the 1972 charter provision, effectively canceled the legislature's ratification of that provision. Birkenfeld did not, however, decide that rent control was bad policy, or that it was inconsistent with state law. See Birkenfeld, supra, at 159-164, 550 P. 2d, at 1023-1026 (finding that enacting a rent control plan was a permissible exercise of the city's police power); Note, 65 Calif. L. Rev. 304, 305 (1977) ("Birkenfeld offers California [***217] cities . . . the judicial equivalent of a rent control enabling act"). Rather, the decision stands only for the proposition that cities must couple rent control with procedures for adjusting rent ceilings to avoid fixing rents at confiscatory levels. 17 Cal. 3d, at 167-173, 550 P. 2d, at 1028-1033. Birkenfeld thus left Berkeley's basic power to impose rent controls unaffected.

Second, appellants contend that since 1972 the state legislature has declared its neutrality respecting a city's decision to control rents. See Boulder, supra, at 55 [****26] [**1053] (clear articulation requirement is not satisfied "when the State's position is one of mere neutrality respecting the municipal actions challenged as anticompetitive"). This argument rests on the passage in 1980 of a comprehensive planning and zoning law, one provision of which states:

"Nothing in this article shall be construed to be a grant of authority or a repeal of any authority which may exist of a local government to impose rent controls or restrictions on the sale of real property." Cal. Govt. Code Ann. § 65589\(b\) (West 1983) (emphasis added).

By its express terms this statute leaves intact cities' preexisting authority to adopt rent control provisions. For purposes of the clear articulation requirement, Berkeley's preexisting authority is defined by the legislature's ratification of the city's 1972 charter amendment.

For these reasons, I would find that Berkeley's Ordinance is exempt from the antitrust laws under our decisions in Hallie and Boulder. By ratifying Berkeley's charter amendment, the state legislature expressly authorized Berkeley to [*274] control rents. The State has not since rescinded that authorization. That is all [****27] we need decide in this case.

I therefore concur in the judgment, and express no view on the merits of the pre-emption issue decided by the Court.

Dissent by: BRENNAN

Dissent

---

