

Date and Time: Thursday, November 9, 2023 4:20:00 PM CST

Job Number: 210088808

Documents (100)

1. United States v. International Boxing Club, 348 U.S. 236

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

2. INTERNATIONAL BOXING CLUB OF NEW YORK, INC. v. UNITED STATES, 358 U.S. 242

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

3. UNITED STATES v. RCA, 358 U.S. 334

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

4. Minneapolis & S. L. R. Co. v. United States, 361 U.S. 173

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

5. United States v. Parke, 362 U.S. 29

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

6. Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Ass'n v. United States, 362 U.S. 458

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

7. International Brotherhood of Teamsters, etc. v. Oliver, 362 U.S. 605

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

8. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 366 U.S. 316

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

9. California v. Federal Power Comm'n, 369 U.S. 482

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

10. United States v. Loew's, 371 U.S. 38

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
11. White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
12. United States v. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
13. United States v. First Nat'l Bank &amp; Trust Co., 376 U.S. 665
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
14. United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
15. United States v. Boston &amp; M. R.R., 380 U.S. 157
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

16. Columbia Artists Management v. United States, 381 U.S. 348

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

17. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co., 381 U.S. 311

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

18. FTC v. Borden Co., 383 U.S. 637

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

19. United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

20. United States v. Von's Grocery Co., 384 U.S. 270

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

21. FTC v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

22. FTC v. Dean Foods Co., 384 U.S. 597

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

23. Denver & R. G. W. R. Co. v. United States, 387 U.S. 485

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

24. Kaplan v. Lehman Bros., 389 U.S. 954

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

25. United States v. Third Nat'l Bank, 390 U.S. 171

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

26. Perma Life Mufflers v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

27. Hanover Shoe v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 392 U.S. 481

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

28. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 395 U.S. 100

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

29. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 401 U.S. 321

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

30. FTC v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 405 U.S. 233

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

31. United States v. Topco Assocs., 405 U.S. 596

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
32. Flood v. Kuhn, 407 U.S. 258
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
33. Tidewater Oil Co. v. United States, 409 U.S. 151
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
34. United States v. Glaxo Group, Ltd., 410 U.S. 52
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
35. United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
36. Missouri Portland Cement Co. v. Cargill, Inc., 418 U.S. 919
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

37. GULF OIL CORP. v. COPP, 419 U.S. 186

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

38. Connell Constr. Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, 421 U.S. 616

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

39. United States v. Citizens & Southern Nat'l Bank, 422 U.S. 86

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

40. Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

41. United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, Inc., 429 U.S. 610

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

42. Cont'l T.V. v. GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. 36

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

43. Vendo Co. v. Lektro-Vend Corp., 433 U.S. 623

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

44. Pfizer, Inc. v. Gov't of India, 434 U.S. 308

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

45. Lafayette v. La. Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

46. National Soc. of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

47. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

48. United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

49. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 440 U.S. 69

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

50. Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

51. Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

52. Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
53. J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
54. H. A. Artists &amp; Assocs. v. Actors' Equity Ass'n, 451 U.S. 704
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
55. Tex. Indus. v. Radcliff Materials, 451 U.S. 630
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
56. Nat'l Gerimedical Hosp. &amp; Gerontology Ctr. v. Blue Cross, 452 U.S. 378
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
57. Am. Soc'y of Mech. Eng'Rs v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

58. Ariz. v. Maricopa County Medical Soc., 457 U.S. 332

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

59. Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

60. Union Labor Life Ins. Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

61. Associated General Contractors v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

62. Ashley v. Jackson, 464 U.S. 900

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

63. Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

64. Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

65. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

66. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

67. Marrese v. American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, 470 U.S. 373

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

68. Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

69. Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference v. United States, 471 U.S. 48

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

70. Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

71. Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

72. Data General Corp. v. Digidyne Corp., 473 U.S. 908

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

73. Sedima v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
74. Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, 473 U.S. 614
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
75. Fisher v. Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
76. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
77. FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
78. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

79. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

80. 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

81. Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

82. Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, 486 U.S. 492

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

83. Christianson v. Colt Indus. Operating Corp., 486 U.S. 800

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

84. California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas &

Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

85. Browning-Ferris Indus. v. Kelco Disposal, 492 U.S. 257

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas &

Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

86. California v. American Stores Co., 492 U.S. 1301

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas &

Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

87. FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas &

Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

88. Tafflin v. Levitt, 493 U.S. 455

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas &

Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

89. Cal. v. Am. Stores Co., 495 U.S. 271

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

90. Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

91. Texaco, Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

92. Kansas v. Utilicorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. 199

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

93. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Am. Train Dispatchers' Ass'n, 499 U.S. 117

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

94. City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. 365

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
95. Summit Health v. Pinhas, 500 U.S. 322
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
96. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., 504 U.S. 451
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
97. FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
98. Spectrum Sports v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court
99. Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., 508 U.S. 49
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

100. Brooke Group v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Timeline: Jan 01, 1950 to Dec 31, 2022; Practice Areas &

Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Court: Supreme Court

United States v. International Boxing Club

Supreme Court of the United States

November 10, 1954, Argued ; January 31, 1955, Decided

No. 53

Reporter

348 U.S. 236 *; 75 S. Ct. 259 **; 99 L. Ed. 290 ***; 1955 U.S. LEXIS 1544 ****; 1955 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,941

UNITED STATES v. INTERNATIONAL BOXING CLUB OF NEW YORK, INC. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Disposition: Reversed.

Core Terms

---

contests, Baseball, boxing, promoters, championship, commerce, rights, exhibition, television, motion picture, exemption, sport, interstate, negotiate, boxers, radio, heavyweight, broadcast, bout, anti trust law, Sherman Act, Sherman Law, allegations, enterprises, arrange, fight, radio and television, exclusive right, sale of tickets, stare decisis

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Baseball

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 [down] Sports, Baseball

A boxing match, like the showing of a motion picture, or the performance of a vaudeville act, or the performance of a legitimate stage attraction, is of course a local affair. But that fact alone does not bar application of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., to a business based on the promotion of such matches, if the business is itself engaged in interstate commerce or if the business imposes illegal restraints on interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Baseball

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [down] Sports, Baseball

Businesses are not exempted from the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., merely because of the circumstance that they are also based on the performance of local exhibitions.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The government instituted a civil anti-trust action against the defendants, who were engaged in the business of promoting professional championship boxing contests on a multistate basis. The complaint alleged that over 25 per cent of the revenue from championship boxing was derived from interstate operations through the sale of radio, television, and motion picture rights. The District Court dismissed the complaint on the authority of Federal Baseball Club v. National League \(1922\) 259 US 200, 66 L ed 898, 42 S Ct 465, 26 ALR 357, followed in Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc. \(1953\) 346 US 356, 98 L ed 64, 74 S Ct 78, which held that the business of professional baseball is not interstate trade or commerce within the scope of the Sherman Anti-trust Act.

The Supreme Court reversed by a six-to-two decision. In an opinion by Warren, Ch. J., the decision was rested on the ground that defendants' business constituted interstate commerce within the meaning of the Sherman Act, and that the cases cited above were limited to the business of baseball.

Burton and Reed, JJ., joined the opinion of the Court, retaining the views expressed in their dissent in the Toolson Case.

Frankfurter, J., with the concurrence of Minton, J., dissented in reliance upon the Federal Baseball Club Case and the Toolson Case, there being no distinction between baseball and boxing.

Minton, J., in a separate dissenting opinion, also expressed the view that boxing is not trade or commerce.

Headnotes

---

PLEADING §104 > dismissal -- admissions. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [down] [1]

On dismissal of a complaint by the District Court, the allegations in the complaint must be taken as true.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §11 > interstate commerce -- boxing contests. -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

The promotion of professional championship boxing contests on a multistate basis, coupled with the sale of rights to televise, broadcast, and film the contests for interstate transmission, constitutes "trade and commerce among the several States" within the meaning of the Sherman Act.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §23 > interstate commerce -- boxing contests. -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The fact that a boxing match is a local affair does not, of itself, bar application of the Sherman Anti-trust Act to a business based on the promotion of such matches if the business is itself engaged in interstate commerce or if the business imposes illegal restraints on interstate commerce.

COURTS §141 > anti-trust laws -- functions of courts. -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Whether an exemption from the anti-trust acts should be granted is a question for Congress, and not the Supreme Court, to resolve.

Syllabus

---

In a civil antitrust action brought by the Government to restrain alleged violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, the complaint alleged, inter alia, that the defendants are engaged in the business of promoting professional championship boxing contests on a multistate basis and selling rights to televise, broadcast and film such contests for interstate transmission; that their receipts from the sale of television, radio and motion picture rights represent over 25% of their total revenue and in some instances exceed the revenue from the sale of admission tickets; and that the defendants have restrained and monopolized trade and commerce through a conspiracy to exclude competition in their line of business. Held: The complaint states a cause of action, and the Government is entitled to an opportunity to prove its allegations. Pp. 237-245.

(a) As described in the complaint, defendants' business of promoting professional championship boxing contests on a multistate basis and selling rights to televise, broadcast \*\*\*\*2 and film such contests for interstate transmission constitutes "trade or commerce among the several States" within the meaning of the Sherman Act. Pp. 240-243.

(b) That a boxing match is "a local affair" does not alone bar application of the Sherman Act to a business based on the promotion of such matches, if the business is itself engaged in interstate commerce or if the business imposes illegal restraints on interstate commerce. P. 241.

(c) Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U.S. 200, and Toolson v. New York Yankees, 346 U.S. 356, did not immunize from application of the Sherman Act all businesses based on professional sports. Pp. 241-243.

348 U.S. 236, *236; 75 S. Ct. 259, **259; 99 L. Ed. 290, ***290; 1955 U.S. LEXIS 1544, ****2

(d) Whether such a broad exemption should be granted is an issue to be resolved by Congress, not this Court. Pp. 243-245.

Counsel: Philip Elman argued the cause for the United States. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Sobeloff, Assistant Attorney General Barnes and Daniel M. Friedman.

Manuel Lee Robbins, Special Assistant Attorney General of New York, argued the cause for the New York State Athletic Commission, as amicus curiae, urging reversal. With him on the brief was [****3] Nathaniel L. Goldstein, Attorney General, for the State of New York and the New York State Athletic Commission, as amici curiae.

Whitney North Seymour and Charles H. Watson argued the cause for appellees. On the brief were Mr. Seymour, Benjamin C. Milner and Armand F. Macmanus for the International Boxing Club of New York, Inc. et al., and Mr. Watson for the International Boxing Club, Inc. et al., appellees.

Judges: Warren, Black, Reed, Frankfurter, Douglas, Burton, Clark, Minton, Harlan

Opinion by: WARREN

Opinion

---

[*237] [**259] [***293] MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a civil antitrust action brought by the Government in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. The defendants -- three corporations and two individuals -- are engaged in the business of promoting professional championship boxing contests.<sup>1</sup> The Government's complaint [**260] charges that the defendants, in the course of this business, have violated §§ 1 and 2 [*238] of the Sherman Act.<sup>2</sup> [***5] After this Court's decision in Toolson v. New York Yankees, 346 U.S. 356, the defendants moved to dismiss the complaint. [***4] The District Court granted the motion in reliance upon the Toolson decision and Federal Baseball Club of Baltimore v. National League of Professional Baseball Clubs, 259 U.S. 200.<sup>3</sup> The case, together with United States v. Shubert, ante, p. 222, is here on direct appeal under the Expediting Act, 15 U. S. C. § 29.

The Government's complaint alleges that promoters of professional championship boxing contests

---

<sup>1</sup> The corporate defendants are International Boxing Club of New York, Inc., International Boxing Club, and Madison Square Garden Corporation. The individual defendants are James D. Norris and Arthur M. Wirtz. The individual defendants, together with Madison Square Garden Corporation, own 80% of the stock of International Boxing Club of New York, Inc., and International Boxing Club. The nature of the business involved is described in an appendix to this opinion.

<sup>2</sup> 15 U. S. C. §§ 1 and 2. These sections provide:

HN1 [↑] "§ 1. . . . Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal . . . . Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy declared by sections 1-7 of this title to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor . . . ."

HN2 [↑] "§ 2. . . . Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor . . . ."

Section 4 confers jurisdiction on the district courts "to prevent and restrain violations of sections 1-7 of this title" in equity proceedings instituted under the direction of the Attorney General.

<sup>3</sup> The District Court's opinion was oral and not transcribed. All the parties agree, however, that the dismissal was based on Federal Baseball and Toolson.

"make a substantial utilization of the channels of interstate trade and commerce to:

"(a) negotiate contracts with boxers, advertising agencies, seconds, referees, judges, announcers, and other personnel living in states other than those in which the promoters reside;

"(b) arrange and maintain training quarters in states other than those in which the promoters reside;

[*239] "(c) lease suitable arenas, and arrange other details for boxing contests, particularly when the contests are held in states other than those in which the promoters reside;

"(d) sell tickets to contests across state lines;

"(e) negotiate for the sale of and sell rights to make and distribute motion pictures of boxing contests to the 18,000 theatres in the United States;

"(f) negotiate for the sale of and sell rights to broadcast and telecast boxing [****6] contests to homes through more than 3,000 radio stations and 100 television stations in the United States; and

"(g) negotiate for the sale of and [*294] sell rights to telecast boxing contests to some 200 motion picture theatres in various states of the United States for display by large-screen television."

The promoter's receipts from the sale of television, radio, and motion picture rights to championship matches, according to the complaint, represent on the average over 25% of the promoter's total revenue and in some instances exceed the revenue derived from the sale of admission tickets.<sup>4</sup> The complaint alleges that the defendants have restrained [*261] and monopolized this trade and commerce -- "the promotion, exhibition, broadcasting, telecasting, and motion picture production and distribution of professional championship boxing contests in the United States" -- through a conspiracy to exclude competition in their line of business. The conspiracy, it is claimed, began in 1949 with an agreement among the defendants and Joe Louis, then heavyweight champion of the world, that Louis would resign his title, that he would procure exclusive [*240] rights to the [*240] services of the four leading title contenders in a series of elimination contests which would result in the recognition of a new heavyweight champion, that he would also obtain exclusive rights to broadcast, televise, and film these contests, and that he would assign all such exclusive rights to the defendants. The defendants have allegedly sought to maintain and effectuate this conspiracy by the following means: by eliminating the "leading competing promoter" of championship matches; by acquiring the exclusive right to promote professional boxing contests in all the "principal arenas" where championship matches can be successfully presented; and by requiring each title contender to agree, as a condition of fighting for the championship, that if he wins he would, for a period of three (and sometimes five) years, take part only in title contests promoted by the defendants. As a consequence of these acts, the complaint alleges, the defendants have promoted, or participated in the promotion of, all but two of the 21 championship matches held in the United States between June 1949 and the filing of the complaint in March 1952.

[****8] LEdHN[1][↑] [1]LEdHN[2][↑] [2]These allegations must of course be taken as true at this stage of the proceeding. And the defendants do not deny that the allegations state a cause of action if their business is subject to the Sherman Act. The question thus presented is whether the defendants' business as described in the complaint -- the promotion of professional championship boxing contests on a multistate basis, coupled with the sale of rights to televise, broadcast, and film the contests for interstate transmission -- constitutes "trade or commerce among the several States" within the meaning of the Sherman Act.

---

<sup>4</sup> The complaint further alleges that "With the progressive and continuing expansion of television facilities, the proportion of the promoter's total revenue derived from television, radio and motion pictures, has been on an ascending curve . . . ."

LEdHN[3][] [3]The question is perhaps a novel one in that this Court has never before considered the antitrust status of the boxing business. Yet, if it were not for Federal Baseball and Toolson, we think that it would be too clear for dispute [*241] that the Government's allegations bring the defendants within the scope of the Act. HN3[] [****9] A boxing match -- like the showing of a motion picture (United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 183) or the performance of a vaudeville act (Hart v. B. F. Keith Vaudeville Exchange, 262 U.S. 271) or the performance of a legitimate stage attraction (United States v. Shubert, ante, p. [***295] 222) -- "is of course a local affair." But that fact alone does not bar application of the Sherman Act to a business based on the promotion of such matches, if the business is itself engaged in interstate commerce or if the business imposes illegal restraints on interstate commerce. Apart from Federal Baseball and Toolson, it would be sufficient, we believe, to rest on the allegation that over 25% of the revenue from championship boxing is derived from interstate operations through the sale of radio, television, and motion picture rights.<sup>5</sup> Compare United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 225-226; Times-Picayune Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 602, n. 11; Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 227-235; [****10] United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, 324 U.S. 293, 297-298; United States v. Women's Sportswear Mfrs. Assn., 336 U.S. 460, 464; United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn., 347 U.S. 186, 189; and cases collected in the Shubert opinion. See also Currin v. Wallace, 306 U.S. 1, 10; Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 127-128.

Notwithstanding these decisions, the defendants contend that they are exempt from the Sherman Act under the rule of stare decisis. They, like the defendants in the Shubert [****11] case, base this contention on Federal Baseball and Toolson. But they would be content with a more [*242] restrictive interpretation of Federal Baseball and Toolson than the defendants in the Shubert case. The Shubert defendants argue that Federal Baseball and Toolson immunized all businesses built around the live presentation of local exhibitions. The defendants in the instant case argue that Federal Baseball and Toolson immunized only such businesses as involve exhibitions of an athletic nature. We cannot accept either argument.

For the reasons stated in the Toolson opinion and restated in United States v. Shubert, ante, p. 222, Toolson neither overruled Federal Baseball nor necessarily reaffirmed all that was said in Federal Baseball. Instead, "without re-examination of the underlying issues," the Court adhered to Federal Baseball "so far as that decision determines that Congress had no intention of including the business of baseball within the scope of the federal antitrust laws." 346 U.S., at 357. We have held today in the Shubert case that Toolson is not authority for exempting [****12] other HN4[] businesses merely because of the circumstance that they are also based on the performance of local exhibitions. That ruling is fully applicable here.

LEdHN[4][] [4]Moreover, none of the factors underlying the Toolson decision are present in the instant case. At the time the Government's complaint was filed, no court had ever held that the boxing business was not subject to the antitrust laws.<sup>6</sup> Indeed, this Court's decision in the Hart case, [***296] less than a year after the Federal Baseball decision, clearly established that Federal Baseball could not be relied upon as a basis of exemption for other segments of the entertainment business, athletic or otherwise. Surely there is [*243] nothing in the Holmes opinion in the Hart case to suggest, even remotely, that the Court was drawing a line between athletic and nonathletic entertainment. Nor do we see the relevance of such a distinction for the purpose of determining what constitutes "trade or commerce among the several States." The [****13] controlling consideration in Federal Baseball and Hart was, instead, a very practical one -- the degree of interstate activity involved in the particular business under review. It follows that stare decisis cannot help the defendants here; for, contrary to their argument, Federal Baseball did not hold that all businesses based on professional sports were outside the scope of the antitrust laws. The issue confronting us is, therefore, not whether a previously granted exemption should continue, but whether an exemption [**263] should be granted in the first instance. And that issue is for Congress to resolve, not this Court. See United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 561.

---

<sup>5</sup> All three media are concededly engaged in interstate commerce. E. g., Federal Radio Comm'n v. Nelson Bros. Co., 289 U.S. 266, 279 (radio); Dumont Laboratories v. Carroll, 184 F.2d 153, 154 (C. A. 3d Cir.), cert. denied, 340 U.S. 929 (television); United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. 131 (motion pictures).

<sup>6</sup> Shall v. Henry, 211 F.2d 226 (C. A. 7th Cir.), was decided subsequent to the decision below. So also was Peller v. International Boxing Club, unreported, Civil 52 C 813, April 23, 1954 (D. C. N. D. Ill.). The unreported decision (D. C. N. D. Ill.) which Shall v. Henry affirmed was decided prior to the decision below but after the filing of the Government's complaint.

[****14] The issue was, in fact, before Congress only recently. In 1951, four identical bills were introduced in Congress -- three in the House and one in the Senate -- forbidding the application of the antitrust laws "to organized professional sports enterprises or to acts in the conduct of such enterprises." <sup>7</sup> [****16] Extensive hearings on the three House bills were conducted by the Subcommittee on Study of Monopoly Power of the Committee on the Judiciary; no hearings were held on the Senate bill. <sup>8</sup> At the conclusion [*244] of its hearings, the House Subcommittee unanimously declared its opposition to the four bills. Its report states:<sup>9</sup>

"The requested exemption would extend to all professional sports enterprises and to all acts in the conduct of such enterprises. The law would no longer require competition in any facet of business activity of any sport enterprise. Thus the sale of radio and television rights, the management of stadia, the purchase and sale of advertising, the concession industry, and many other business activities, as well as the aspects of baseball which are solely related to the promotion of competition on the playing field, would be immune and untouchable. [****15] Such a broad exemption could not be granted without substantially repealing the antitrust laws." (Italics added.)

With respect to baseball, the Subcommittee recommended a postponement of any legislation until the status of Federal Baseball was clarified in the courts.<sup>10</sup> No further action was taken on any of the bills; Congress thus left intact the then-existing coverage of the antitrust laws. Yet the defendants in the instant case are now asking this [***297] Court for precisely the same exemption which enactment of those bills would have afforded. Their remedy, if they are entitled to one, lies in further resort to Congress, as we have already stated. For we agree that "Such a broad exemption could not be granted without substantially repealing the antitrust laws."

As in the Shubert case, we are concerned here only with the sufficiency of the Government's complaint. We hold [*245] that the complaint states a cause of action and that the Government is entitled to an opportunity to prove its allegations. The judgment of the court below is

Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE BURTON, retaining the views expressed in his dissent in the Toolson case, 346 U.S. 356, 357, joins the opinion [***17] and judgment of the Court in this case. MR. JUSTICE REED joins in this concurrence.

[For dissenting opinion of MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, joined by MR. JUSTICE MINTON, see post, p. 248.]

[For dissenting opinion of MR. JUSTICE MINTON, see post, p. 251.]

[**264] APPENDIX TO OPINION OF THE COURT.

The complaint describes the "Nature of Trade and Commerce Involved" as follows:

---

<sup>7</sup> H. R. 4229, 4230, 4231, and S. 1526, 82d Cong., 1st Sess. These bills were introduced "by friends of baseball because they feared that the continued existence of organized baseball as America's national pastime was in substantial danger by the threat of impending litigation." H. R. Rep. No. 2002, 82d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 1.

<sup>8</sup> The House hearings were stated to be on "the problem of whether or not organized baseball should be exempted from the operation of the antitrust laws." Hearings on "Organized Baseball" before the House Subcommittee on Study of Monopoly Power of the Committee on the Judiciary, 82d Cong., 1st Sess., p. 1.

<sup>9</sup> H. R. Rep. No. 2002 (entitled "Organized Baseball"), 82d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 230. Between the hearings and the report, the Subcommittee on Study of Monopoly Power was reconstituted as the Antitrust Subcommittee. The report was submitted directly to the full House pursuant to H. Res. 95, 82d Cong., 1st Sess.

<sup>10</sup> Id. at 134-136, 231-232.

10. Boxers usually compete in amateur tournaments as a preliminary to becoming professionals. As amateurs they receive no pay and box under the sponsorship of local independent boxing clubs, associations or other organizations. When they become professionals, they contract to box an opponent on a per bout basis for local promoters and receive a fee. If their skill as professional boxers results in an increasing willingness of the public to pay to view their contests, they can demand higher fees and a greater percentage of receipts from the sale of tickets and other rights. If their skill increases, they engage in preliminary and other bouts throughout the United States and eventually participate in major bouts. The fee for a major bout is usually a sum guaranteed by the promoter or a predetermined [****18] percentage of the net receipts from the sale of tickets and motion picture, radio and television rights.

11. The most lucrative asset to a professional boxer is recognition and designation by the various state athletic [*246] commissions and others as "world champion" in the division in which he competes. These divisions are:

flyweight	112 lbs.
bantamweight	118 "
featherweight	126 "
lightweight	135 "
welterweight	147 "
middleweight	160 "
light heavyweight	175 "
heavyweight	All above 175 lbs.

A "world champion" gains his title by defeating the existing champion or by eliminating all contenders, and remains world champion in his division until he is, in turn, defeated by a contender or resigns the title. Such a title affords to its holder financial returns from personal appearances and exhibitions throughout the United States, from endorsements and other activities, as well as a greater percentage of the receipts from his bouts. The promotion of professional championship boxing contests is also more lucrative than the promotion of other boxing contests.

12. Of the various "world championships," the heavyweight division is the most important [****19] to boxers and promoters, as it returns the greatest financial benefits. The flyweight and bantamweight divisions are not of substantial importance in the United States because very few American boxers are of such light weights. No championship contest has been held in the flyweight division in the United States since 1935; none in the bantamweight division since 1947.

13. The promotion of professional championship boxing contests, in [***298] which the winners achieve "world champion" titles, includes negotiating and executing contracts with boxers for the main and preliminary bouts, arranging and maintaining training quarters, leasing suitable arenas, such as stadia or ball parks where substantial numbers of the public may be seated to view the contest, negotiating and executing contracts for the employment of matchmakers, advertising agencies, press agents, seconds, referees, judges, announcers and other personnel; organizing, assembling, and arranging other details necessary to the [*247] exhibition of the contests; selling tickets and rights to make motion pictures of the contests and to distribute them throughout the United States and in foreign countries; and selling [****20] rights to transmit the contests by radio or television throughout the United States and foreign countries.

14. Promoters of professional championship boxing contests make a substantial utilization of the channels of interstate trade and commerce to:

- (a) negotiate contracts with boxers, advertising agencies, seconds, referees, [**265] judges, announcers, and other personnel living in states other than those in which the promoters reside;
- (b) arrange and maintain training quarters in states other than those in which the promoters reside;
- (c) lease suitable arenas, and arrange other details for boxing contests, particularly when the contests are held in states other than those in which the promoters reside;
- (d) sell tickets to contests across state lines;

(e) negotiate for the sale of and sell rights to make and distribute motion pictures of boxing contests to the 18,000 theatres in the United States;

(f) negotiate for the sale of and sell rights to broadcast and telecast boxing contests to homes through more than 3,000 radio stations and 100 television stations in the United States; and

(g) negotiate for the sale of and sell rights to telecast boxing contests to some 200 [****21] motion picture theatres in various states of the United States for display by large-screen television.

15. Motion picture films of professional championship boxing contests are distributed and exhibited in theatres throughout the United States and in foreign countries. Similarly, radio and television broadcasts of such contests are transmitted throughout the United States and radio broadcasts of them are also transmitted to foreign countries.

16. The 21 major professional championship boxing contests promoted in the United States since June 1949 [*248] have produced a gross income from admissions and the sale of motion picture, radio and television rights of approximately $ 4,500,000.00. The total such gross income for all professional boxing contests in the United States during this period, including the championship contests, has been approximately $ 15,000,000.00.

16 (a). A promoter of a professional championship fight usually derives substantially all of his revenue from two sources: (a) sale of tickets of admission and (b) sale of rights to telecast, broadcast and produce and distribute motion pictures of the fight. In such fights, sale of television, radio and motion [****22] picture rights account for a substantial proportion of the promoter's total revenue. Since 1949 sale of these rights has represented, on the average, over 25% of the total revenue derived from championship fights, and has exceeded, in some instances, the revenue received from sale of tickets of admission. With the progressive and continuing expansion of television facilities, the proportion of the promoter's total revenue derived from television, radio and motion pictures, has been on an ascending curve, in relation to revenue derived from sale of tickets of [***299] admission. In the Marciano-Walcott heavyweight championship fight of May 15, 1953, at Chicago, Illinois, promoted by defendants IBC (N. Y.), IBC (Ill.), James D. Norris and Arthur M. Wirtz, the promoters' receipts from sale of tickets of admission were, after federal admission taxes, $ 253,462.37, while their television, radio and motion picture revenue was approximately $ 300,000.

Dissent by: FRANKFURTER; MINTON

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, with whom MR. JUSTICE MINTON joins, dissenting.

It would baffle the subtlest ingenuity to find a single differentiating factor between other sporting exhibitions, whether boxing [****23] or football or tennis, and baseball insofar as the conduct of the sport is relevant to the criteria or considerations by which the Sherman Law becomes applicable to a "trade or commerce." § 1, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 1. Indeed, the interstate aspects of baseball [*249] and the extent of the exploitation of baseball through mass media are far more extensive than [**266] is true of boxing. * If the intrinsic applicability of the Sherman Law were the issue, no attempt would be made to differentiate the two sports.

In 1922, the Court found commercialized baseball outside the scope of the Sherman Law. Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U.S. 200. Last Term the Court refused to re-examine "the underlying issues" of this adjudication and adhered [****24] to it. Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 346 U.S. 356. What were the "underlying issues"? They were the constituents of baseball in relation to the Sherman Law. By adhering to that decision, the Court refused to depart from a judgment necessarily based on these constituent elements. To my understanding, that is what is meant by "without re-examination of the underlying issues." The Court decided as it did in the Toolson case as an application of the doctrine of stare decisis. That doctrine is not, to be sure, an imprisonment of reason. But neither is it a whimsy. It can hardly be that this Court gave a preferred position to baseball because it is the great American sport. I do not suppose that the Court would treat the national anthem differently from other songs if the nature of a song became relevant to adjudication. If stare decisis be one aspect of law, as it is, to disregard it in identic situations is mere caprice.

---

* This opinion is concerned only with the sport as such, and not with the arrangements by which mass media show or report bouts. Such arrangements clearly are beyond the scope of the Toolson case, infra.

Congress, on the other hand, may yield to sentiment and be capricious, subject only to due process. As a matter of fact, one of the explicit factors that led to the result in Toolson was the recognition of congressional [****25] refusal to upset [*250] the Federal Baseball decision. But as the Government with commendable candor recognizes, Congress was not asked to avert the threat of litigation against baseball by providing a specific exemption of that sport from the provisions of the Sherman Law. The sponsors of this relief did not ask immunity for baseball as such. The "legislation" to which reference was made in the Toolson case consisted of bills which sought exemption for "organized professional sports enterprises [and] acts in the conduct of such enterprises." (H. R. 4229, 4230, 4231, and S. 1526, 82d Cong., 1st Sess.) Since, in the light of all the circumstances, Federal Baseball was left undisturbed by Toolson, I cannot bring myself to construe the respect that was thus accorded to stare decisis to be narrower than that all situations identic with what was passed on in the Federal Baseball case should be covered by it. I cannot translate even the narrowest conception of stare decisis into the equivalent of [***300] writing into the Sherman Law an exemption of baseball to the exclusion of every other sport different not one legal jot or tittle from it.

Between [****26] them, this case and Shubert illustrate that nice but rational distinctions are inevitable in adjudication. I agree with the Court's opinion in Shubert for precisely the reason that constrains me to dissent in this case. Within a year after Federal Baseball the Court, again unanimously and through the same writer, found that a bill against the show business based on the Sherman Law was not so frivolous as to call for dismissal. Hart v. B. F. Keith Vaudeville Exchange, 262 U.S. 271. For more than 30 years, therefore, these two decisions stood as the law. The Shubert case plainly falls within the adjudication of Hart. By the same process of reasoning, boxing falls within Federal Baseball, which this Court revitalized in Toolson despite all the new factors on which the dissent in Toolson relied.

[*251] [*267] Whatever unsavory elements there be in boxing contests is quite beside the mark. The States to which these exhibitions are distasteful are possessed of the honorable and effective remedy of self-help. They need not sanction pugilistic exhibitions, or may sanction them only under conditions that safeguard their [****27] notions of the public welfare.

MR. JUSTICE MINTON, dissenting.

To make a case under the Sherman Act, two things among others are essential: (1) there must be trade or commerce; (2) such trade or commerce must be among the States.

In the Federal Baseball case, 259 U.S. 200, this Court held that baseball was not trade or commerce. It said, "personal effort, not related to production, is not a subject of commerce," and since the baseball game was an exhibition wholly intrastate, there could be no trade or commerce among the States. 259 U.S. 200, 209.

In the Baseball case, this Court held that traveling from State to State to play the game and all the details of arrangements were incident to the exhibition. In Toolson v. New York Yankees, 346 U.S. 356, we did not overrule the Federal Baseball decision; in fact, we reaffirmed the holding of that case.

When boxers travel from State to State, carrying their shorts and fancy dressing robes in a ditty bag in order to participate in a boxing bout, which is wholly intrastate, it is now held by this Court that the boxing bout becomes interstate commerce. What this Court held [****28] in the Federal Baseball case to be incident to the exhibition now becomes more important than the exhibition. This is as fine an example of the tail wagging the dog as can be conjured up.

[*252] We are not dealing here with the question of whether the appellees have restrained trade in or monopolized the radio and television industries. That is a separate consideration. What others do with pictures they are allowed to take of a wholly local spectacle or exhibition by thereafter using the channels of interstate commerce to exhibit them does not make a package deal. The appellees have nothing to do with the transmission of sound or the pictures. Because these incidents are not directly involved, no effort was made to bring the radio and television companies and the sponsors into the case.

The Court says: "The conspiracy, it is claimed, began in 1949 with an agreement among the defendants and Joe Louis, then heavyweight champion of the world, that Louis would resign his title, . . . procure exclusive rights to the services of the four leading title contenders in a series of elimination contests which would result in the recognition of a new heavyweight champion, . . . [****29] and . . . [***301] assign all such exclusive rights to the defendants." Of course, there was at the time only one champion, Joe Louis. He had a monopoly on that, and while he got it by competition, he did not get it in trade or commerce. I do not suppose that Joe Louis had to go back into the ring and be walloped to a knockout or a decision before he could surrender his championship. And if he arranged with four other fellows to fight it out in elimination contests for the championship and no one else was restrained from doing the same, it is difficult for me to see how there was any conspiracy. If other promoters wanted to start an elimination contest, they were free to do so. Whether they received public acceptance depended upon something other than trade or commerce. What does a boxer or athlete have for sale but "personal effort, not related to production," which, as Justice Holmes said, is not commerce? Such services they may contract about free from any control of the Sherman Act. Suppose the [*253] appellee did, as the Court states, control what the parties called all but two of twenty-one [**268] championship contests, what trade or commerce have they restrained?

[****30] As I see it, boxing is not trade or commerce. There can be no monopoly or restraint of nonexistent commerce or trade. Whether Congress can control baseball and boxing I need not speculate. What I am saying is that Congress has not attempted to do so. If there is a conspiracy, it is not one to control commerce between the States.

---

End of Document

INTERNATIONAL BOXING CLUB OF NEW YORK, INC. v. UNITED STATES

Supreme Court of the United States

November 13, 1958, Argued ; January 12, 1959, Decided

No. 18

Reporter

358 U.S. 242 *; 79 S. Ct. 245 **; 3 L. Ed. 2d 270 ***; 1959 U.S. LEXIS 1930 ****; 1959 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,231

INTERNATIONAL BOXING CLUB OF NEW YORK, INC., ET AL. v. UNITED STATES

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Disposition: 150 F.Supp. 397, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

championship, boxing, contests, decree, promotion, Square, divestiture, conspiracy, stock, antitrust, Stadium, arenas, fights, staged, dissolution, professional boxing, Sherman Act, broadcasting, monopoly, rights, lease, trial court, trusteeship, provisions, television, effective, five-year, commerce, contracts, ownership

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up that part of the trade or commerce, monopolization of which may be illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The market will vary with the part of commerce under consideration. The tests are constant. That market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced: Price, use and qualities considered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HÍ Í ÁMÉRÍKA GLÄ JÄVÖDÄG Í ÉEGI LÄHESÖÖDÄG ÄÄTTÖ ELÄJÍ JÄVÜSÖYÖÄJHEÄTTE

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN3** Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A determination of the part of the trade or commerce encompassed by the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., involves distinctions in degree as well as distinctions in kind. One prime example of this is the application of the Act to trade or commerce in a localized geographical area.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

**HN4** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The framing of antitrust decrees should take place in the district rather than in appellate courts. They are invested with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case. The decree should (1) put an end to the combination or conspiracy when that is itself the violation; (2) deprive antitrust defendants of the benefits of their conspiracy; and (3) break up or render impotent the monopoly power which violates the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq..

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

**HN5** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The relief granted by a trial court in an antitrust case and brought to the Supreme Court on direct appeal, thus bypassing the usual appellate review, has always had the most careful scrutiny of the Court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN6** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is antitrust policy to decree dissolution where the creation of the combination is itself the violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN7** Sherman Act, Remedies

Sometimes relief, to be effective, must go beyond the narrow limits of the proven violation.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

HÍ Í ÁMÉRÍKA GLÄ JÁRÖDAG Í EÉG I LÄHSE ÓA EGA ÁG EÉTÖ ÖLÁJÍ JÁMESESÓY ÖLFJHE

Summary

The present action was instituted in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York by the government under the Sherman Anti- Trust Act against the defendants, who were engaged in the business of promoting professional boxing contests on a multistate basis. Originally, the District Court dismissed the complaint on the ground that the business of professional boxing is not interstate trade or commerce within the scope of the act. However, on appeal the United States Supreme Court reversed (348 US 236, 99 L ed 290, 75 S Ct 259), reaching a contrary conclusion and holding that the complaint stated a cause of action under the act. After a trial the District Court held that the government was entitled to relief by appropriate decree. (150 F Supp 397; 171 F Supp 841.) The decree, in addition to granting appropriate injunctive relief, ordered the individual defendants to divest themselves, within a 5-year period, of all stock owned by them in a corporation (Madison Square Garden); ordered the dissolution of two boxing clubs formed pursuant to, and as a means to effectuate, the conspiracy charged; ordered the defendants to lease buildings of corporations controlled by them to qualified promoters of championship contests, the matter, in the event the terms of a lease could not be agreed upon, to be submitted to the District Court; and prohibited exclusive contracts applying to all professional boxing contests and not merely to championship contests.

On appeal, the United States Supreme Court affirmed the judgment below. In an opinion by Clark, J., expressing the views of five members of the Court, it was held that the findings of the District Court were not clearly erroneous, that in view of the court's former holdings on the sufficiency of the complaint the judgment on the merits was properly entered, and that, in framing the decree, the court below, as to the relief granted, did not exceed the limits of allowable discretion.

Harlan, J., with the concurrence of Frankfurter and Whittaker, JJ., dissented in part, disapproving those parts of the decree below which ordered the divestiture of the stockholdings of the individual defendants and the dissolution of the corporations controlled by them.

Frankfurter, J., in a separate opinion, explained why he joined the dissent written by Mr. Justice Harlan.

Stewart, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §73 > decree -- scope. -- > Headnote:
LEdHN1 [1]

The District Court does not exceed the limits of allowable discretion in framing, in a suit under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, a decree that will, so far as practicable, cure the ill effects of the illegal conduct, and assure the public freedom from its continuance.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §19 > relevant market. -- > Headnote:
LEdHN2 [2]

In testing for the relevant market in cases arising under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, no more definite rule can be declared than that commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up that part of the trade or commerce monopolization of which may be illegal.

HÍ Í ÁMÉRÍKA GLÄ JÄVÖDÄG Í EÉGG Í LÄHŠEÖÄGA ÄÄTTÖ ELÄFJÍ JÄMÄESÖYÖÄJHEÄTTE

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §19 > extent of market. -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Although the "market" which one must study to determine when a producer has a monopoly power will vary with the part of commerce under consideration, the tests are constant, "market" being composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability--price, use, and qualities considered--for the purposes for which they are produced.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §68 > findings -- boxing contests. --
> Headnote:
[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

A general finding of the District Court, in a civil anti-trust action instituted by the government against the promoters of professional boxing contests, that there exists a separate, identifiable market for championship boxing contests, and the court's conclusion that nonchampionship fights are not reasonably interchangeable for the same purpose as championship contests, is not "clearly erroneous," within the meaning of Rule 52\(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (providing that findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous), where the general finding is supported by appropriate detailed findings.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §19 > extent -- local area. -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

A determination of the "part of the trade or commerce" encompassed by the Sherman Anti-Trust Act involves distinctions in degree as well as distinctions in kind, one prime example being the application of the act to trade or commerce in a localized geographical area.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §19 > relevant market -- boxing contests. --
> Headnote:
[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Championship boxing, being the "cream" of the boxing business, is a sufficiently separate part of the trade or commerce to constitute the relevant market for purposes of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

APPEAL §1304 > burden of proof -- findings -- anti-trust action -- boxing contests. -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

After the United States Supreme Court held that the complaint in an anti- trust action instituted by the government against the promoters of professional boxing contests stated a cause of action, and the District Court, upon a subsequent trial, found the allegations in the complaint to have been proven, the defendants, upon appeal from an adverse decree of the District Court, have the burden of showing that its findings, or at least the basic ones, are "clearly erroneous" within the meaning of Rule 52\(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, providing that findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and where the defendants have not been able to meet that burden the District Court's decree entered on the merits, adjudging them to have violated the Sherman Act, must be affirmed.

HÍ Í ÁMÉRÍKA GLÄ JÁVÖDAG Í ÉSÉG Í LÁHSEÓAÉGA ÁG ÉSÉG ELÁJÍ JÁVÜESÓYÓÁJHEÁLÉ

APPEAL §1663 > relief -- anti-trust action. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

In approaching the question of relief in an anti-trust action, the United States Supreme Court, on direct appeal from a judgment of a District Court, does not sit as a trial court.

APPEAL §1670 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §73 > framing of decrees in anti-trust suit -- discretion of District Court. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

The framing of decrees in anti-trust suits should take place in the District Courts, which are invested with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case, rather than in an appellate court.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §75 > decree -- scope. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

A decree in favor of the government in an anti-trust action based on unlawful monopoly should (1) put an end to the combination or conspiracy when that is itself the violation; (2) deprive the defendants of the benefits of their conspiracy; and (3) break up or render impotent the monopoly power which violates the act.

APPEAL §1340 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §73 > relief -- review. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

The relief granted by a trial court in an anti-trust case brought to the United States Supreme Court on direct appeal will be given the most careful scrutiny of the Supreme Court to make certain that justice has been done.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §78 > order -- divestiture of stock -- boxing contests. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [12A] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [12B]

HÍ Í ÁMÉRÍKA GLÄ JÄVÖDÄG Í ÉEGI LÄHESÖÖDÄG ÄÄTTÖ ELÄJÍ JÄVÜSÖYÖÄJHEÄTTE

An order directing the individual defendants in an action brought by the government against promoters of professional boxing contests to divest themselves, within a 5-year period, of stock owned by them in a corporation (Madison Square Garden) does not exceed the limits of allowable discretion of the District Court, where the stock, though not acquired pursuant to the conspiracy charged in the complaint and not the fruit of the conspiracy, may be utilized as part of the conspiracy to effect its ends; it is immaterial that the stock was not proven to be the lever by which the corporation was persuaded to join the conspiracy, that the sale of the stock, made in the manner outlined in the decree, would result in great loss to the defendants, and that the defendants were not permitted by the decree to exercise an option, as proposed by them, of a choice between Madison Square Garden and another corporation, the Chicago Stadium, both of which they still controlled.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §15 > knowledge of illegality -- prior proceedings -- boxing contests. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

It is reasonable to assume that the defendants in an anti-trust action instituted by the government against them, who were engaged in the business of promoting professional boxing contests, knew the illegality under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of their conduct continued after the United States Supreme Court, on the government's appeal from an adverse decision, had held that their business constituted interstate commerce within the meaning of the act, where no denial was made by them on that appeal of the sufficiency of the government's complaint.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §79 > relief -- corporations -- common control.

-- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Common control of corporations being one of the instruments in bringing about unity of purpose and unity of action and in making a conspiracy to violate the Sherman Anti-Trust Act effective, the proclivity of the past, on the part of the defendants, to use that affiliation for an unlawful end warrants effective assurance that no such opportunity will be available in the future, since, if that affiliation continues, there may be tempting opportunity to act in combination.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §79 > dissolution of combination. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

It is anti-trust policy to decree dissolution of a combination where the creation of the combination is itself the violation of the anti-trust laws.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §79 > decree -- dissolution -- boxing clubs. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

HÍ Í ÁMEÐAG GÉÐA GLÁ JÁÐODAG Í ÆÐG Í LÁHSEÐAÐGA ÁG EÐÐG ELÁFJÍ JÁÐEÐSÓYÓÐAÐHEÐAÐ

Even though a decree in favor of the government in an action under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act against promoters of professional boxing contests leaves the parent corporations of boxing clubs free to organize new corporations to handle their respective boxing promotions, the dissolution of the boxing clubs does not exceed the limits of the District Court's allowable discretion, where the boxing clubs were formed pursuant to, and were the means used to effectuate, the conspiracy charged in the complaint and their continued operation under the old charters might lead to a situation nominis umbra not conducive to the elimination of the old illegal practices.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §75 > decree -- leasing to others -- boxing clubs. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

In framing a decree in favor of the government in its action under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act against promoters of professional boxing contests, the District Court does not exceed the limits of its allowable discretion by ordering defendants to lease buildings of corporations controlled by them to qualified promoters of championship contests and by providing that in the event the terms of the lease cannot be agreed upon the matter should be submitted to the court.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §75 > decree -- exclusive contracts -- boxing clubs. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18]

The prohibition, in a decree in favor of the government in its action under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act against promoters of professional boxing contests, against exclusive contracts applying to all professional boxing contests, does not exceed the District Court's allowable discretion, even though the prohibition goes beyond the "relevant market" considered for purposes of determining violations of the act, such market being limited to professional championship boxing contests.

APPEAL §1400 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §75 > decree -- extent -- review. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[19\]](#) [19]

Relief in an anti-trust action, to be effective, must sometimes go beyond the narrow limits of the proven violation; when this sort of relief is granted, the Supreme Court of the United States, on appeal, will be especially wary lest the trial court overstep the correspondingly narrower limits of its discretion.

Syllabus

---

1. The Government's civil complaint charging appellants with a combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce among the States in the promotion, broadcasting and televising of professional world championship boxing contests, as well as a conspiracy to monopolize and monopolization of the same, in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, was sustained by this Court as stating a cause of action, and the case was remanded for trial on the merits. 348 U.S. 236. After a trial, the District Court, in an opinion incorporating detailed findings of fact and conclusions of law based on the principles laid down by this Court, found that the allegations of the complaint had been sustained, and adjudged that appellants had violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Held: The District Court's findings are not clearly erroneous, and its judgment on the merits is affirmed. Pp. 244-252.

HÍ ÁNÆÐAÐAG GÆRG GLÁ JÁUÆÐAÐAG Í ÆÆRG Í LÁHÆÐAÐAGA ÁG EÆÆRG ELAFJÍ JÁNÆÐASÓY QUÆFHEÆÐ

(a) The District Court's finding that the relevant [*****2] market was the promotion of championship boxing contests, in contrast to all professional boxing contests, was not clearly erroneous and it is sustained. Pp. 249-252.

2. After further hearings on the nature and extent of the relief necessary to protect the public interest, the District Court entered a final judgment dissolving the two international boxing clubs, directing the individual appellants to divest themselves of their stock in Madison Square Garden and granting injunctive relief designed to open up the market in the business of promoting professional world championship boxing matches. Held: The relief granted was not beyond the allowable discretion of the District Court and its judgment is affirmed. Pp. 253-263.

(a) At the time of the final decree, the Joe Louis agreements had lapsed; the exclusive-contract practice had been abandoned at least temporarily; the leases on Yankee Stadium, the Polo Grounds and St. Nicholas Arena in New York had been given up; and the appellants had no control over the new heavyweight champion; but this Court agrees with the District Court that the additional evidence taken by it showed that appellants still possessed all of the [***3] power of monopoly and restraint. Pp. 254-255.

(b) Even if the individual appellants' stock in Madison Square Garden was lawfully acquired and was not the fruit of the conspiracy, it had been utilized to effect the purposes of the conspiracy and could be so used again, and the record supports the District Court's conclusion that they should be required to divest themselves of this stock in order to break up the unlawful combination and restore competition in championship boxing contests -- without being granted the alternative options requested by them. Pp. 255-259.

(c) Since the two international boxing clubs were formed pursuant to the conspiracy and were the means used to effectuate it, the requirement that they be dissolved was justified. Pp. 259-261.

(d) The District Court having found that one of the means used in effectuating the conspiracy was the ownership and control of arenas and stadia, the requirement of the decree that Madison Square Garden and the Chicago Stadium be rented to any qualified promoter at a reasonable rental, subject to specified conditions, was justified. Pp. 261-262.

(e) Practical considerations justify the prohibition against exclusive contracts [****4] with contestants, even though they apply not only to championship bouts but to all professional boxing contests, thus going beyond the "relevant market" considered for the purposes of determining the Sherman Act violations. P. 262.

Counsel: Kenneth C. Royall argued the cause for appellants. On the brief were Mr. Royall and John F. Caskey for the Madison Square Garden Corporation et al., and Charles Sawyer for the International Boxing Club, Inc., of Illinois, et al.

Philip Elman argued the cause for the United States. On the brief were Solicitor General Rankin, Assistant Attorney General Hansen and Charles H. Weston.

Judges: Warren, Black, Frankfurter, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Whittaker; Stewart took no part in the consideration or decision of this case

Opinion by: CLARK

Opinion

[*244] [***273] [**247] MR. JUSTICE CLARK delivered the opinion of the Court.

HÍ Í ÁMEÐAG GÉÐA I LÁ JÁÐOÐAG Í ÆÐG Í LÁHSEÐAÐGA ÁG EÐÐEG HÁFJÍ JÁÐEÐSÓYÓÐAÐHEÐA

This civil Sherman Act<sup>1</sup> case was here four years ago on direct appeal from a dismissal by the District Court, which had held that the Act did not apply to the business of professional boxing. We reversed, finding [***274] that "the complaint states a cause of action [under the Act] and that the Government is [***5] entitled to an opportunity to prove its allegations," and remanded the case for trial on the merits. United States v. International Boxing Club, 348 U.S. 236 (1955). The complaint charged the appellants with a combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce among the States in the promotion, broadcasting, and televising of professional world championship boxing contests, as well as a conspiracy to monopolize and monopolization of the same. After a trial, the District Court, in an opinion incorporating detailed findings of fact and conclusions of law based on the principles laid down in our earlier opinion, found that the allegations of the complaint had been sustained. 150 F.Supp. 397. After further hearings on the nature and extent of the relief necessary to protect the public interest, the court entered its final judgment dissolving two of the corporate appellants, directing divestiture of certain stock owned by the individual appellants and granting injunctive relief designed to open up the market in the business of promoting professional world championship boxing matches.

[***6] LEdHN[1]↑ [1]The appellants, while not attacking any specific finding as clearly erroneous, claim that the proof did not show that they violated either Section 1 or 2 of the Act. In this regard appellants level their strongest blows at the District Court's definition of the relevant market. Out of the entire field of professional boxing, the District Court carved a market in championship contests alone, holding [*245] it to be the relevant market at which the conspiracy was aimed. In the alternative, appellants insist that the relief granted the Government was "unnecessarily punitive," even if liability is assumed. On a direct appeal to this Court we noted probable jurisdiction, 356 U.S. 910 (1958). We have concluded that the findings of the District Court are not clearly erroneous and that in view of our former holding on the sufficiency of the complaint the judgment on the merits was properly entered. As to the relief granted we find that the court did not exceed the limits of allowable discretion in framing a decree "that will, so far as practicable, cure the ill effects of the illegal conduct, [***7] and assure the public freedom from its continuance." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 340 U.S. 76, 88 (1950).

Our previous decision herein having decided that the promotion of professional [**248] championship boxing contests on an interstate basis constituted trade and commerce among the States, within the meaning of the Sherman Act, there is no contest here either on the findings or the law on that point. Since on that appeal we discussed in some detail the allegations of the complaint, which the trial court has now found amply proven by the evidence, we shall only summarize the findings here.

THE FINDINGS.

The conspiracy began in January 1949, when appellants Norris and Wirtz, who owned and controlled the Chicago Stadium, the Detroit Olympia Arena and the St. Louis Arena, made an agreement with Joe Louis, the then heavyweight boxing champion of the world. Wishing to retire, Louis agreed to give up his title after obtaining from each of the four [***275] leading contenders<sup>2</sup> exclusive promotion rights including rights to radio, television and [*246] movie revenues. Upon securing these exclusive contracts Louis assigned them to [***8] the appellant International Boxing Club, Illinois, which was organized by Norris and Wirtz for the purpose of promoting boxing for the combination in Illinois. They paid Louis $ 150,000 cash plus an employment contract and a 20% stock interest in I. B. C., Illinois.

In March 1949 Norris and Wirtz approached appellant Madison Square Garden, in which they had for many years owned 50,000 shares of stock. It was the "foremost sports arena in New York City and is the best known arena of its kind in the United States, if not the world."<sup>3</sup> However, its facilities were tied up by an exclusive lease it had

<sup>1</sup> 15 U. S. C. § 1 et seq.

<sup>2</sup> Ezzard Charles, Joe Walcott, Lee Savold, and Gus Lesnevich.

<sup>3</sup> The importance of Madison Square Garden in the present context is shown by the fact that of all the championship contests staged during the 12 years immediately preceding 1949, 45% were held in New York City, of which 75% were in Madison granted to Mike Jacobs' interests -- the leading professional boxing promoter in the field at that time. Norris and Wirtz proposed that they should all "work together now and keep the events for our buildings and not create a competitive situation that would be harmful to all." In order to effectuate this program, appellant Madison Square Garden bought [****9] out Mike Jacobs' interests, including, in addition to his lease on Madison Square Garden, his exclusive leases to Yankee Stadium and the St. Nicholas Arena and his contract with the then welterweight champion Sugar Ray Robinson. These contracts were assigned to International Boxing Club, New York, organized for the purpose of promoting boxing for the combination in New York.

HÍ Í ÁMÉRÍG GÉRÍ Í LÁ JÁRÓDÁG Í ÉEGI Í LÁHSEÓaÉCAÁG ÉÉTTOG Í LAFJÍ JÁNÚESÓYÓUÁJHEÁTTE

Once Jacobs' interests had been acquired, there remained only one substantial competitor in the field of [*247] promoting championship boxing matches. That was Tournament of Champions, Inc., owned in part by the Columbia Broadcasting System. It [****10] owned an exclusive lease on the Polo Grounds as well as an exclusive promotion contract covering the next two fights of the then middleweight champion of the world. In May 1949 Madison Square Garden bought all of the stock of Tournament of Champions at a cost of $ 100,000 plus 25% of the net profits on the next two middleweight championship matches. The assets thus acquired were likewise assigned to I. B. C., New York. By a simultaneous separate agreement, Columbia Broadcasting System agreed for a five-year period not to invest in or promote any professional boxing matches in return for a first refusal right to the broadcasting of certain boxing matches staged for a like period in Madison Square Garden.

This series of agreements, consummated within four months' time, gave appellants exclusive control of the promotion of boxing matches in three championship [**249] divisions, i. e., heavyweight, middleweight, and welterweight. Not satisfied with this temporary control, however, appellants perpetuated their hold on championship bouts by requiring each contender for the title to grant to them an exclusive promotion contract to his championship fights, including film and broadcasting, [****11] for a period of from three to five years. Over the facilities [***276] for the staging of contests appellants exercised like control, owning or managing the "key" arenas and stadia in the Nation.<sup>4</sup>

Tightening the ropes around the ring thus built, Norris and Wirtz increased their stockholdings in Madison Square Garden to where they controlled it and were able [*248] to "dictate its policies and boxing activities." This has continued their control over I. B. C., New York, the stock of which is now wholly owned by Madison Square Garden.<sup>5</sup> They are the sole stockholders of Chicago Stadium Corporation which in turn is the sole stockholder of I. B. C., Illinois. Their control over this boxing empire is revealed by the fact that Norris is president of each of the four top corporations, [****12] i. e., Madison Square Garden, I. B. C., New York, Chicago Stadium Corporation, and I. B. C., Illinois. He and Wirtz are directors in all four, while I. B. C., Illinois and I. B. C., New York, which have owned all of the promotion contracts with the contenders, have a joint board of directors.

The [****13] effect of the conspiracy is obvious. Using the facilities of I. B. C., Illinois, and I. B. C., New York, appellants entered into exclusive promotion contracts with title aspirants, requiring exclusive handling agreements in the event the contender became champion. In amassing their empire, appellants obtained control of champions in three divisions. The choice given a contender thereafter was clear, i. e., to sign with appellants or not to fight. With appellants in control of the key arenas and stadia of the country through Madison Square Garden, Chicago Stadium Corporation, and others, an event could not be successfully staged in any of these areas, the most fruitful in the Nation, without their [**249] consent. The exercise of this power brought immediate results. From June Square Garden. The balance of the New York championship bouts, with one exception, were held in Yankee Stadium, the Polo Grounds, or St. Nicholas Arena.

<sup>4</sup> Between 1937 and 1948, 50% of all championship contests were staged in either Madison Square Garden, Yankee Stadium, the Polo Grounds, St. Nicholas Arena, Chicago Stadium, Detroit Olympia Arena, or the St. Louis Arena.

<sup>5</sup> At the time the I. B. C.'s were formed, Joe Louis owned 20% of the stock of each and the other 80% was split evenly between Norris and Wirtz on one hand and Madison Square Garden on the other. At some point thereafter, Louis ceased to be a stockholder and his share was split evenly between Norris-Wirtz and Madison Square Garden. At the time of the final decree, apparently as the result of an effort to make a showing of separateness of control, the Norris-Wirtz interests owned all of the stock in I. B. C., Illinois, and Madison Square Garden owned all of the stock in I. B. C., New York. The trial court found that the two interests nevertheless still shared equally in the combined profits of both I. B. C.'s.

HÍ ÁMÈJÉG GÄG JLÄ JÄUÈÖdÄG I ÄÄEG JLÄHSEÖdÄG ÄÄEG I LÄJÍ JÄMÈJÄSÖYÖJHEÄFH

1949, when appellants staged their first championship fight, until May 15, 1953, the date of the amended complaint, they staged or controlled the promotion of 36 of the 44 championship battles held in this country, giving them approximately 81% of that field. In two of the classifications, heavyweight and middleweight, the combine staged all of the contests. The power of the combine to exclude competitors [****14] in the championship field is graphically shown by their promotion of 25 out of 27 fights in all divisions, a total of 93%, during the two-and-a-half-year period ending with the filing of the amended complaint. This power extended to the sale of film and broadcasting rights -- most valuable adjuncts to successful promotion in the business.

LEdHN[2] [2]Appellants launch a vigorous attack on the finding that the relevant market was the promotion of championship boxing contests in contrast to all professional boxing events. They rely [**250] primarily on *United States v. du Pont & Co., [**277] 351 U.S. 377 (1956)*. That case, involving an alleged monopoly of the market in cellophane, held that the relevant market was not cellophane alone but the entire field of flexible packaging materials. In testing for the relevant market in Sherman Act cases, the Court said:

". . . no more definite rule can be declared than that HN1 commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same [***15] purposes make up that 'part of the trade or commerce,' monopolization of which may be illegal." Du Pont, supra, at 395.

The appellants argue that the "physical identity of the products here would seem necessarily to put them in one and the same market." They say that any boxing contest, whether championship or not, always includes one ring, two boxers and one referee, fighting under the same rules before a greater or lesser number of spectators [*250] either present at ringside or through the facilities of television, radio, or moving pictures.

We do not feel that this conclusion follows. As was also said in du Pont, supra, at 404:

LEdHN[3] [3]HN2 "The 'market' . . . will vary with the part of commerce under consideration. The tests are constant. That market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced -- price, use and qualities considered."

LEdHN[4] [4] [****16] With this in mind, the lower court in the instant case found that there exists a "separate, identifiable market" for championship boxing contests. This general finding is supported by detailed findings to the effect that the average revenue from all sources for appellants' championship bouts was $ 154,000, compared to $ 40,000 for their nonchampionship programs; that television rights to one championship fight brought $ 100,000, in contrast to $ 45,000 for a nontitle fight seven months later between the same two fighters; that the average "Nielsen" ratings <sup>6</sup> over a two-and-one-half-year period were 74.9% for appellants' championship contests, and 57.7% for their nonchampionship programs (reflecting a difference of several million viewers between the two types of fights); that although the revenues from movie rights for six of appellants' championship bouts totaled over $ 600,000, no full-length motion picture rights were sold for a non-championship contest; and that spectators pay "substantially more" for tickets to championship fights than for [*251] nontitle fights. In addition, numerous representatives of the broadcasting, motion picture and advertising industries testified [****17] to the general effect that a "particular and special demand exists among radio broadcasting and telecasting [and motion picture]

---

<sup>6</sup> According to the District Court, the "Nielsen Average Audience rating is a percentage which purports to show the number of residential television sets that were tuned in to the program expressed as a percentage of the total residential television sets, whether turned off or on, which were in areas into which the program was telecast."

HÍ Í ÁMÈJEG GÄGG FLÅ JÅUÈÖDÅG I ÄÄEG ÈLÄHSEÖAEGÅG ÈÄÄEG I LÄJÍ JÄMÈJESÖYÖÄJHEÄTTI companies for the rights to broadcast and telecast [and make and distribute films of] championship contests in contradistinction to similar rights to non-championship contests."<sup>7</sup>

LEdHN[5]<sup>1</sup> [5]In view of these findings, we cannot say that the lower court was "clearly erroneous" [***18] in concluding [***278] that nonchampionship fights are not "reasonably interchangeable for the same purpose" as championship contests. HN3<sup>1</sup> A determination [**251] of the "part of the trade or commerce" encompassed by the Sherman Act involves distinctions in degree as well as distinctions in kind. One prime example of this is the application of the Act to trade or commerce in a localized geographical area. See, e. g., Schine Theatres v. United States, 334 U.S. 110 (1948); United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100 (1948); cf. Times-Picayune v. United States, 345 U.S. 594 (1953); United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495 (1948). The case which most squarely governs this case is United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. 131 (1948). There, the charge involved, inter alia, extensive motion picture theatre holdings. The District Court had refused to order a divestiture of such holdings on the grounds that no "national monopoly" had been intended or obtained. This Court [***19] felt that such a finding was not dispositive of the issue, saying:

"First, there is no finding as to the presence or absence of monopoly on the part of the five majors [*252] [defendants] in the first-run field for the entire country, in the first-run field in the 92 largest cities of the country, or in the first-run field in separate localities. Yet the first-run field, which constitutes the cream of the exhibition business, is the core of the present cases. Section 1 of the Sherman Act outlaws unreasonable restraints irrespective of the amount of trade or commerce involved ( United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 224, 225, n. 59), and § 2 condemns monopoly of 'any part' of trade or commerce." Paramount, supra, at 172-173. (Emphasis in the original.)

LEdHN[6]<sup>1</sup> [6]Similarly, championship boxing is the "cream" of the boxing business, and, as has been shown above, is a sufficiently separate part of the trade or commerce to constitute the relevant market for Sherman Act purposes.<sup>8</sup>

[***20] LEdHN[7]<sup>1</sup> [7]We have also examined the remainder of this characteristically lengthy record. When the case was here previously appellants did not deny that the allegations of the complaint stated a cause of action against them, provided their activity came within the meaning of the Sherman Act. We held that the complaint stated a cause of action. The District Court has now found these allegations to have been proven. With the case in this posture, appellants have an almost insurmountable burden. They must show that the findings, or at least the basic ones, are "clearly erroneous." Rule 52 (a), Rules of Civil Procedure. This they have not been able to do. It follows that the decree entered on the merits adjudging the appellants to have violated both §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act must be affirmed.

[*253] THE RELIEF.

---

<sup>7</sup> Approximately 25% of the revenue produced by the appellants' championship fights during the period covered by the complaint was derived through the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights.

<sup>8</sup> By analogy, it bears those sufficiently "peculiar characteristics" found in automobile fabrics and finishes such as to bring them within the Clayton Act's "line of commerce." United States v. du Pont & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 593-595 (1957).

HÍ ÁMÈJÉG GÆGÍ HLÀ JÁUÈDÆG Í FÆGÍ FLÁHSEÐAEGAG ÆFÆG Í LÆJÍ JÁMÈJÆSÓYQÆJHEÆTTE

LEdHN[8] [8] In approaching the question of relief we must remember that our [***279] function is not to sit as a trial court. Besser Mfg. Co. v. United States, 343 U.S. 444, 449-450 (1952); United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U.S. 319 (1947); [****21] cf. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 185 (1944). As was said in International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 400-401 (1947):

LEdHN[9] [9] HN4 [9] "The framing of [antitrust] decrees should take place in the District [**252] rather than in Appellate Courts. They are invested with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case."

LEdHN[10] [10] The yardstick which the trial court should apply in monopolization cases is well stated by the Court in Schine Theatres v. United States, 334 U.S. 110, 128-129 (1948). The decree should (1) put "an end to the combination or conspiracy when that is itself the violation"; (2) deprive "the antitrust defendants of the benefits of their conspiracy"; and (3) "break up or render impotent the monopoly power which violates the Act."

LEdHN[11] [11] HN5 [11] [****22] The relief granted by a trial court in an antitrust case and brought here on direct appeal, thus by-passing the usual appellate review, has always had the most careful scrutiny of this Court. Though the records are usually most voluminous and their review exceedingly burdensome, we have painstakingly undertaken it to make certain that justice has been done. See, e. g., United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra; Schine Theatres v. United States, supra; United States v. National Lead Co., supra. That we have done here. We have finally concluded that the relief granted was not beyond the allowable discretion of the District Court.

[*254] The Bounds of the Relief Ordered.

At the time of the final decree the Joe Louis agreements had elapsed; the exclusive-contract practice had been at least temporarily abandoned; the leases on Yankee Stadium, the Polo Grounds and St. Nicholas Arena in New York had been given up and the appellants had no control over the new heavyweight champion, Floyd Patterson. Nevertheless, the additional evidence taken by the District Court showed that they still possessed all of the power of [****23] monopoly and restraint. In this we agree. The appellants had exercised a strangle hold on the industry for a long period. It was evident at the time of the decree that, statistically, they still dominated the staging of championship bouts and completely controlled the filming and broadcasting of those contests. They had gained this leadership through the elimination by purchase of all of their major competitors in the field; by the control of contending boxers through exclusive agreements; and by the staging of events through the ownership or lease of key stadia and arenas. This illegal activity gave appellants an odorous monopoly background which was known and still feared in the boxing world. In addition, Norris and Wirtz still possessed the major tools, so well used previously, necessary to continue their control. They owned or controlled the key arena and stadium in New York and Chicago, the most [***280] lucrative communities in boxing; they continued to control all of the championship bouts staged there; they commanded the filming and broadcasting of all championship fights -- the cream of the business -- wherever staged; and though on the surface they owned no stock [****24] directly in the two I. B. C. corporations, each was the wholly owned subsidiary of corporations which Norris and Wirtz did control and manage.

In this setting the District Court ordered Norris and Wirtz to divest themselves, within a five-year period, of [*255] all stock which they owned "directly or indirectly" in Madison Square Garden. In addition, both of the International Boxing Clubs, Illinois and New York, were ordered dissolved. The Chicago Stadium and Madison Square Garden were each enjoined from staging more than two championship bouts annually. All exclusive agreements for the promotion of boxing events, including nonchampionship, were banned. Madison Square Garden was ordered for a period of five years to lease its premises when available at a "fair and reasonable" rental to any duly qualified promoter applying in writing therefor. Failure to agree on terms would require submission to the courts for determination. Like requirement [*253] was imposed on Chicago Stadium Corporation, provided Norris-and-Wirtz control continued.

HÍ Í ÁMÈJEG GÆG Í LÀ JÁUÈDÆG Í FÆGÍ HLAHSÉDÆGAG ÆFÆG ÆLÁJÍ JÁMÈJESÓYQAFJHEÆTIG

The District Judge concluded that it was necessary to include each of these provisions in the decree in order to put an end to the combination, [****25] deprive the appellants of the benefit of their conspiracy and break up their monopoly power. At the conclusion of the final hearing on relief he observed that prior to 1949 the Norris-Wirtz group was in Chicago while the Madison Square Garden enterprise was in New York. They were "two separate entities," one promoting contests in the mid-West and the other in New York. He declared that "in order to destroy this monopoly we have to return the situation as nearly as possible to the economic conditions as they existed in 1949" and, further, "I can see no way in this case . . . that a proper decree can be formulated unless that power that Wirtz and Norris have in Madison Square Garden is curtailed. They have to get out of the control."

The Order of Divestiture.

LEdHN[12A] [↑] [12A]

Appellants contend that since the stock owned by Norris and Wirtz was not acquired pursuant to the conspiracy, was not the fruit of illegal activity and was not [*256] proven to be the lever by which Madison Square Garden was persuaded to join the conspiracy, divestiture was but punishment rather than a necessary corrective remedy. [****26] They further say that the sale, even though made in the manner outlined in the decree,<sup>9</sup> would result in great loss to Norris and Wirtz. They contend that it was arbitrary for the District Court not to permit them to exercise an option, as proposed by them, of a choice between Madison Square Garden and the Chicago Stadium, both of which they still control.

It may be that the stock in Madison Square Garden was not the fruit of the conspiracy; but even if lawfully acquired it may be utilized as part of the conspiracy to effect its ends. See United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra, at 152. [***281] Moreover, since the inception of the conspiracy Norris and [****27] Wirtz have increased their holdings to over 219,000 shares. It was this stock ownership and their control of stock voting power that the trial court found dictated the election of the officers and directors of Madison Square Garden and gave to Norris and Wirtz the unquestioned control and management of its activities. Although reluctant at first to require a divestiture of this stock, the trial judge ultimately became convinced that it was the sine qua non of the relief. During the hearing he said:

"The great evil I found was the combination that Wirtz and Norris caused and created by joining up with Madison Square Garden. I regard Wirtz and Norris as one and Madison Square Garden as another, a separate entity and business interest. The evil [*257] primarily sprung from their combination, their concerted efforts and action. That has to be broken up." (Emphasis supplied.)

What is perhaps equally significant is that through the exercise of this power Norris and Wirtz elected the officers and board of directors of I. B. C., New York -- a joint board with I. B. C., Illinois, which they also controlled through the Chicago Stadium Corporation. This joint board [****28] was the bridge over which the conspiracy was made effective. Over it the control of the promotion of championship boxing contests was secured. That this control remained effective up to the very date of the final hearing, [*254] June 24, 1957, is shown by the following statement by the court on that date:

"The unlawful combination of the defendants still possesses and exercises its monopolistic control in the field of championship contests. It appears that since May 15, 1953 there have been held in the United States 37 championship contests, excluding one bantamweight contest. The defendants admit that they had promotional control over 24 of the 37 championship contests which were held or of 65 per cent of the market, but we find that the defendants were not financial strangers to the other 13 championship contests which were held in cities other than New York and Chicago. Because the defendants are licensed by state authorities to promote only in New York and Illinois, they could not be the persons actually designated as the promoter of the 13 championship contests, but all five of the championship contests which originated in cities other than Chicago or New York on Friday [****29] nights were televised on IBC's-New York Friday night television series.

<sup>9</sup> Norris and Wirtz were given five years to sell their stock in Madison Square Garden, which stock is listed on the New York Stock Exchange. During this time, the stock is to be held by two trustees named by the court. If the stock is not sold within five years, the trustees are ordered to sell it within the next two years.

HÍ ÁMÈJEG GÆG Í LÀ JÀÈDÆG I ÆEG I LÀHSEØAEGAG ÆAEG FLÁJÍ JÁMÈSØYØAFLHEAEG

"We find, too, that all of the 37 championship contests in this period from May 15, 1953, save [*258] only the five outdoor contests, were televised on either the defendants' Wednesday or Friday night television series, and that the profits of the sale of the telecasting rights inured to the benefit of the defendants."

LEdHN[13] [13]As this was some two and a half years after our opinion in the former appeal on January 31, 1955, it appears that appellants had continued exercising their unlawful control long after they well knew that this activity was within the coverage of the Sherman Act. In view of the fact that no denial was made on that appeal of the sufficiency of the Government's complaint it is reasonable to assume that appellants, subsequent to our opinion, knew that their conduct violated the Sherman Act, obedience to which is so important to our free enterprise system. Still they continued their [***282] illegal activity. In fact from all appearances it is continuing to this day. Such conduct, in addition to the interlocking [***30] nature of the ownership at the time of the final decree, fully justified the District Court's conclusion that the "dissolution of the combination can only be accomplished by an immediate and complete severance of the interlocking ownership of Norris and Wirtz in Madison Square Garden. . . . There must be a complete divestiture of the stockholdings of Norris and Wirtz in the Garden. The Government has established Norris and Wirtz control the Garden Corporation." Moreover, this was the only effective means at hand by which competition in championship events might be restored. It was intended to return the parties as near as possible to the status quo existing prior to the conspiracy.

LEdHN[12B] [12B]

For these reasons, we do not see why it was incumbent upon the court to give Norris and Wirtz certain options requested at the time of the decree. We shall mention only two. The first was that they have the right to exercise a choice of retaining either Madison Square Garden [*259] or the Chicago Stadium. But this would not be conducive to the re-establishment of competition between the two interests, [****31] which the District Court considered a necessity. Nor would it eliminate the "great evil" the trial court found in the Norris-Wirtz-Garden combination. Another requested option was that Norris and Wirtz be permitted to retain their control of Madison Square Garden and the latter be enjoined from promoting championship boxing events. But this would have eliminated the world's principal boxing center -- "the premier sports arena in the world," as appellants characterized it -- from promoting such events in competition with Norris and Wirtz.

[**255] In short, the Government in its effort to free the professional boxing business of monopoly and unreasonable restraints would have won the battle but lost the war under either of the proffered alternatives. As this Court said in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 189-190 (1944):

"

LEdHN[14] [14]Common control was one of the instruments in bringing about unity of purpose and unity of action and in making the conspiracy effective. If that affiliation continues, there will be tempting opportunity . . . to act in combination [****32] . . . . The proclivity in the past to use that affiliation for an unlawful end warrants effective assurance that no such opportunity will be available in the future."

The Dissolution of the Two International Boxing Clubs.

Admittedly these corporations were formed pursuant to and were the means used to effectuate the conspiracy. As the trial judge said:

"These corporations are the promotional arms of the defendants, conceived and used to enable defendants [*260] to restrain and monopolize promotion of championship boxing contests. Their assets are of but nominal value except for the goodwill attaching to their names by virtue of the conspiracy."

LEdHN[15] [15]The conditions existing here even subsequent to our former opinion confirm the need for such dissolution. Both corporations continued to share equally the profits the combination reaped from the staging of championship boxing contests. This also included revenues from championship contests promoted by others but televised by the combination. [***283] They continue even now as the bridge between the choice arenas Norris and [***33] Wirtz own or control and the boxers with whom they have exclusive promotion contracts. Through interlocking officers and directorates the two I. B. C.'s thus effectively hold the combination together. HN6[<sup>16</sup>] It is antitrust policy to decree dissolution "where the creation of the combination is itself the violation." United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra, at 189, and cases there cited. This is one of those situations where the injunctive process affords too little relief too late.

HÌ ÁMÈJÉG GÄG ÉLÀ JÀUÈDÄG I ÄÄG Í LÄÄSÖÄGÅÄG ÈÄÄG GLÄJÍ JÀMÈJÉSÖYØÄJHEÄÄH

[LEdHN\[16\]](#)[<sup>16</sup>] [16]Appellants argue that this is punitive; that the parent companies, under the decree, are left free to organize new corporations to handle their respective boxing promotions and, hence, dissolution is a useless act. The trial court felt, however, and we agree, that continued operation under the old I. B. C. charters might lead to a situation nominis umbra not conducive to the elimination of the old illegal practices. New corporations, if formed, would start off with clean slates free from numerous written [***34] and oral agreements and understandings now existent and known throughout the industry. Hence dissolution might well have the salutary effect of completely clearing new horizons that the trial judge was attempting to create in the boxing world, especially when effected in conjunction [<sup>261</sup>] with the stock divestiture provision. Moreover, there would be little inconvenience and nominal expense even if, as appellants contend, they "as a practical matter must [form new corporations] if they are to promote any boxing at all." This we think a poor excuse for not completely eliminating, by dissolution, these old trappings of monopoly and restraint.

The Compulsory Leasing Provisions.

[LEdHN\[17\]](#)[<sup>17</sup>] [17]The District Court, having found that one of the means used in effectuating the conspiracy was the ownership and control of arenas and stadia, entered a compulsory leasing provision in the decree as to Madison Square Garden and the Chicago Stadium Corporation.<sup>10</sup>

[***35] The [<sup>256</sup>] appellants' main concern with this provision of the decree is the requirement that in the event the terms of a lease cannot be agreed upon the matter will be submitted to the District Court. Appellants fear that this is not only an undesirable but an impractical activity for a District Court. But they have suggested no alternative to relieve the court of this burden. Obviously, such a provision may result in some disputes which must be settled. Until experience in the enforcement of the provision proves the reference to be too burdensome we see no reason to disturb it. If experience proves it unworkable the parties, under the decree, may apply to the court for [<sup>262</sup>] appropriate relief. See Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 156-157 (1951); *International ***284 Salt Co. v. United States, supra, at 401*.

Exclusive Contracts With Contestants.

[LEdHN\[18\]](#)[<sup>18</sup>] [18]Appellants object to the prohibition against exclusive contracts applying to all professional boxing contests. They question the Government's enlarging its base from [***36] championship bouts to all professional boxing. But human nature being what it is there is sound reason to say that exclusive contracts with boxers in nontitle contests would surely affect those same boxers when and if they arrive at the title. Such arrangements would give appellants, so experienced in the boxing field, a decided advantage over the independent promoter. Such a prohibition is fully justified at least until the effects of the conspiracy are fully dissipated. For the same reason we see no fault in the five-year prohibition against exclusive rights to a return bout.

[LEdHN\[19\]](#)[<sup>19</sup>] [19]The trial court recognized that these restrictions went beyond the "relevant market" which has been considered for purposes of determining the Sherman Act violations, but felt that "the relief here must be broader than the championship field because the evil to be remedied is broader." This Court has recognized that HN7<sup>15</sup> sometimes "relief, to be effective, must go beyond the narrow limits of the proven violation." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., supra, 340 U.S., at p. 90; [****37] Timken Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 600 (1951). When this sort of relief is granted, we must of course be especially wary lest the trial court overstep the correspondingly narrower limits of its discretion, but, for the reasons set out above, we feel that no such misuse of the trial court's power is present here.

---

<sup>10</sup> This provision of the decree, applying only to championship contests, ordered appellants to lease their respective buildings upon reasonable written request by a qualified promoter, if the proposed rent is reasonable, if the applicant furnishes adequate security, and if at the time of the application the building is neither already under lease to another for the specified day nor in conflict at that time with "any well-established event" which has been regularly conducted therein. If the parties cannot agree on what constitutes adequate security or a reasonable rental, either party may apply to the court for a determination thereof.

HÍ Í ÁMÈJEG GÆG GLÄ JÁUÈDÉG I ÉAEG Í LÁHSEÐAEGAG ÉAEG I LÁJÍ JÁMÈJESÓYQÁJHEHTÍ

We have considered the other objections of appellants to the decree and find them unsubstantial as presently [*263] posed. In the event experience proves that some of the provisions are so severe as to require modification or amendment, the parties may apply to the District Court as provided in paragraph 25 of the decree. The judgment should be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

MR. JUSTICE STEWART took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Dissent by: FRANKFURTER (In Part); HARLAN (In Part)

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, dissenting in part.

While I have heretofore expressed views in favor of the almost controlling deference to be paid to a District Court's considered formulation of the provisions appropriate to a decree designed [**257] to remedy adjudicated violations of the antitrust laws, those views have not prevailed, [****38] see the opinions in United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. 131, and this Court has felt free to modify and eliminate provisions of an antitrust decree, particularly when a single judge has imposed an unconventional and drastic remedy. The main issue dealt with in MR. JUSTICE HARLAN's dissent, while a narrow one, is, in my view, important. While divestiture has been decreed by the district judge, the mandatory disposition of the stock has been delayed for five years, and the stock placed in trusteeship. During this five-year period a series of detailed controls have been imposed, under the [***285] supervision of the District Court, in order to prevent appellants Norris and Wirtz from exercising the power their stock ownership has given them over the operations of Madison Square Garden. The ownership itself has been sterilized. I think it not an unreasonable forecast that, even were we to postpone for five years the decision whether to order the divestiture or continue the trusteeship, appellants Norris and Wirtz would not find it profitable to continue their sterilized ownership of the Garden stock. However, [*264] there is no compelling reason [***39] to order them to do what sound business judgment may compel. One has the right to assume that, in view of this Court's unanimous affirmance of the findings below that appellants were in violation of the Sherman Law, they will scrupulously obey the decree and not even by the subtlest indirection seek to avoid our decision. Therefore I think it is needless now to determine that divestiture must take place five years hence, rather than wait upon the event in order to determine whether divestiture should then be ordered.

Accordingly, I join MR. JUSTICE HARLAN's opinion.

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, whom MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER and MR. JUSTICE WHITTAKER join, dissenting in part.

I am unable to subscribe to the Court's approval of those parts of the decree below which ordered (1) the divestiture of the stockholdings of Norris and Wirtz in Madison Square Garden Corporation and (2) the dissolution of the New York and Illinois International Boxing Clubs. On the other aspects of the case I agree with the results the Court has reached.

DIVESTITURE.

HÍ ÁNÉUÉÁG GÉRDI I LÁ JÁUÉDÉÁG I ÉAEGI I LÁHSEÓAÉCAÁG I ÉAEGI I LÁJÍ JÁNÉUÉSÓY QJÁFHÉAEEU

As a starting point I accept the conclusion of the District Court that competition in the promotion and exhibition of professional championship boxing [***40] could not be effectively restored so long as Norris and Wirtz remained in control of Madison Square Garden's activities in this field. Because of the pre-eminence of the Garden as a site for boxing contests, the District Court found that its control by Norris and Wirtz constituted the fulcrum of the antitrust violations which were adjudged. That finding is supported by the evidence, and in turn justifies the court's conclusion that the elimination of their [*265] influence in the Garden was prerequisite to restoring competition.

It by no means follows, however, that the order divesting Norris and Wirtz of their Garden stockholdings was an appropriate method of accomplishing that objective in the circumstances of this case. Unless past pronouncements of this Court cautioning against the indiscriminate use of divestiture as a remedy in antitrust cases, see Timken Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, are to be taken less seriously than they should be, it seems to me that the Court has too lightly given approval to the use of that drastic measure here.

First. It is not at all clear to me just why the District Court, which in the early stages of the hearings [***41] on relief [**258] expressed itself strongly against divestiture, ultimately reached the conclusion that such a course was necessary. Indeed the record can be read as indicating the court's belief that the five-year trusteeship of the stock, though designed to alleviate some of the hardships of a forced sale, would at the same time effectively remove Norris and Wirtz from control over the Garden's affairs and therefore [***286] in conjunction with the other provisions of the decree result in restoring competitive conditions, whether or not the correlative requirement of sale was carried out within the five-year period.<sup>1</sup> The decree itself supports this [*266] reading. For despite the evident realization that the stock might not be sold within five years, the provisions of the decree especially aimed at opening up competition for the use of the Garden are all geared to this period. If in fact the District Court thought this five-year insulation of Norris and Wirtz from managerial and policy-making activities at the Garden would combine with the other restrictions to restore competition, justification for divestiture must then be found in a purpose to prevent a relapse [***42] into noncompetitive conditions after the five years have elapsed, something which the District Court quite properly considered to be a function of the decree. On this premise I am at a loss to see why continuance of the trusteeship, and, if necessary, the concomitant restrictions on the Garden's activities, should not have been considered adequate to serve that end.

[****43] Second. If I am mistaken in thus divining the thinking of the District Court, I still consider that in the circumstances of this case divestiture was at least ordered prematurely. Determination whether that drastic remedy was required should have been postponed until the expiration of the trusteeship period so that the necessity for its application could then be judged in light of the effectiveness of the other sanctions of the decree. I recognize that various contingencies can be conjured up to support the view that divestiture, rather than trusteeship, holds the more solid promise of assuring the preservation of competition. Nevertheless I think that rejection of a continuance of the trusteeship in favor of divestiture should, in the peculiar setting of this case, be based on experience rather than speculative apprehension.

[*267] Three factors seem to me especially compelling toward such a course. In the first place, this cannot properly be considered a case of reprehensible immoral conduct or willful lawbreaking.<sup>2</sup> Not until January 31, 1955,

<sup>1</sup> Apart from its divestiture and dissolution provisions, the decree imposes wide-ranging and pervasive restrictions on appellants' activities in boxing promotion and exhibition. It renders void all exclusive contracts which they may presently have with boxers. It prohibits the making of new exclusive contracts, with the exception that, after five years, exclusive provision may be made for return bouts. Similarly, exclusive leases with stadia not owned by appellants are proscribed. So, too, are such arrangements with television and radio broadcasters. Further, appellants are restrained, for a period of five years, from promoting more than four championship boxing programs annually, two by Madison Square Garden and two, cumulatively, by Norris and Wirtz. During that five-year period also, the compulsory leasing provisions discussed in the Court's opinion are to be in effect. Finally, the decree removes Norris and Wirtz as officers and directors of Madison Square Garden, and enjoins them from holding such positions in the future.

<sup>2</sup>The District Court put the matter in this way: "I don't charge them [Norris and Wirtz] with malicious intentional and moral wrongdoing, nor do I proceed to formulate the decree on such a basis. They are guilty, if anything, of a moral, prohibitive wrong when this Court handed down its opinion in United States v. International Boxing Club, 348 U.S. 236, [***44] did it become known that professional boxing was even subject to the federal antitrust laws. In view [***287] of this Court's earlier decisions in the baseball cases, Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U.S. 200, and Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 346 U.S. 356, I think it reasonable to say that in 1949 when this alleged conspiracy began most well-informed lawyers believed that professional boxing, like professional baseball, was beyond antitrust stricture. Hence the appellants had every reason to believe their actions were innocent when taken. Putting the matter somewhat differently, we should be slow in lending approval to the use of such a drastic remedy as this in a case where the appellants have never had the opportunity to demonstrate their willingness to comply with the law once they have learned that it applies to their activities. In my opinion, the thrust of this factor is not blunted by arguing, as the Court does, that appellants should voluntarily have done something to unscramble their relationships during the two and a half years that elapsed between the Court's decision in the original International [***45] Boxing case and the entry of the present decree. That sort of squeeze play should not be expected of those already involved in a lawsuit.

HÌ ÁMÈÙÉG GÆG Ì LÀ JÀÙÈØDÆG Í FÆG Ì LÀHÙØDÆGÀÁG ÆFÆG Ì LÀJÍ JÀMÈÙÉSØYØAØJHEØH

[*268] Further, divestiture here is brought to bear upon a large investment much of which was acquired long before the conduct charged in this case began, and the balance of which was obtained prior to the announcement of the International Boxing decision. The "unlawful fruits" doctrine accordingly offers no justification for this divestiture. Although recognizing this to be true, the Court states that the Garden stock was nonetheless utilized as means of [***46] accomplishing the antitrust violations. But this is just another way of saying that divestiture is a necessary element of effective relief; it affords no independent justification for the employment of that remedy.

Lastly, the divestiture order reaches far beyond the subject matter of the action. It permanently removes Norris and Wirtz from all interest in the Garden, over 90% of whose activities are entirely unrelated to professional boxing.

Third. It is true, of course, that the trial court's considered judgment on what is necessary to dissipate the effects and prevent recurrence of an adjudged antitrust violation is entitled to much deference from this Court. But by the same token this Court, before it is asked to put its stamp of approval on such a drastic remedy as divestiture, is entitled to have a clear and unambiguous expression of the district court's reasoning in choosing such a course. Especially is this so where, as here, this Court is the sole reviewing authority and in consequence has not had the benefit of an intermediate review of the issues by a Court of Appeals. In my opinion this record leaves much to be desired in this regard. The most I can make of [***47] it, taking the case for divestiture most favorably to the Government, is that the District Court would have been justified in reserving that issue for consideration at the time the five-year trusteeship of the Norris and Wirtz stock expired. Certainly no adequate case for a present order of divestiture has been made out. In this view of [*269] the matter it becomes unnecessary to discuss at this time the various "options" alternative to divestiture which were rejected by the District Court.

DISSOLUTION.

I can find no adequate basis for [***288] the order dissolving the two International Boxing Clubs. My difficulty with this aspect of the relief is sufficiently shown by the fact that, as I read the record, it would be permissible for Madison Square Garden and the Norris and Wirtz interests in Chicago to create new corporations carrying exactly the same name as [**260] the two present organizations. The only justification offered by the Government for this aspect of the decree is that the two clubs were instrumentalities of the antitrust conspiracy and that their dissolution was but an expedient for insuring that all of their illegal agreements had been put to an end. [***48] But since all such agreements, both written and oral, are already canceled by other provisions of the decree, and since there is no suggestion that the sweeping relief granted by the District Court has any loopholes which would permit these organizations to function improperly, this justification is hardly convincing. In these circumstances dissolution appears to me to be not only punitive but futile, something not promotive of sound antitrust law enforcement.

I would remand the case to the District Court with instructions to modify its decree by striking the provisions for compulsory sale of the Norris and Wirtz stock in the Madison Square Garden Corporation, reserving the issue of which was in doubt as to whether it was even prohibitive at the time some of these acts were done, and serious doubt, but most people held it was not."

---

HÍ Ì ÁNÈÙÉG GÀÉG JLÀ JÀÙÈÓdÉG I ÉÄEG ËLÁHÉDÉGÀÁG ÉÄEG Ì LÁJÍ JÁNÈÙÉSÓYØÁJHEÉTÌ

divestiture for further proceedings at the end of the five-year trusteeship period, and eliminating the requirement of dissolution of the two International Boxing Clubs.

---

End of Document

UNITED STATES v. RCA

Supreme Court of the United States

December 8, 1958, Argued ; February 24, 1959, Decided

No. 54

Reporter

358 U.S. 334 *; 79 S. Ct. 457 **; 3 L. Ed. 2d 354 ***; 1959 U.S. LEXIS 1936 ****

UNITED STATES v. RADIO CORPORATION OF AMERICA ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Disposition: 158 F.Supp. 333, judgment vacated and case remanded for further proceedings.

Core Terms

---

license, station, antitrust, anti trust law, radio, broadcasters, Communications, proceedings, sentence, regulatory scheme, rates, violations, monopoly, public interest, television, carriers, revoked, federal court, affiliation, conspiracy, questions, decree, repeal

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Communications Law > ... > Licensing > Renewals & Revocations > General Overview

HN1 Licensing, Renewals & Revocations

See 47 U.S.C.S. § 311.

Communications Law > ... > Licensing > Renewals & Revocations > General Overview

HN2 Licensing, Renewals & Revocations

See 47 U.S.C.S. § 313.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications

Communications Law > Public Enforcement > Orders & Hearings > Judicial Review

HÍ Í ÁMÉRÍKA HÍ LÁ JÁRÓDÁÍ Í Í LÁHSEÓAÉCAÁÍ I ÁKÍHÍ I LÁFÍ JÁMÉSÓYÓÁJHÍ ÁKÍHÍ

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Primary Jurisdiction

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Broadcasting > Rate Regulation

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Federal Communications Act > General Overview

Communications Law > Regulators > US Federal Communications Commission > Authorities & Powers

**HN3** Separation of Powers, Primary Jurisdiction

The legislative history of the Communications Act reveals that the Federal Communications Commission is not given the power to decide antitrust issues as such, and that Commission action is not intended to prevent enforcement of the antitrust laws in federal courts.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Exhaustion of Remedies

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Exhaustion of Remedies > Administrative Remedies

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Preclusion

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Exhaustion of Remedies > General Overview

**HN4** Reviewability, Exhaustion of Remedies

The doctrine of primary jurisdiction, like the rule requiring exhaustion of administrative remedies, is concerned with promoting proper relationships between the courts and administrative agencies charged with particular regulatory duties. "Exhaustion" applies where a claim is cognizable in the first instance by an administrative agency alone; judicial interference is withheld until the administrative process has run its course. "Primary jurisdiction," on the other hand, applies where a claim is originally cognizable in the courts, and comes into play whenever enforcement of the claim requires the resolution of issues which, under a regulatory scheme, have been placed within the special competence of an administrative body; in such a case the judicial process is suspended pending referral of such issues to the administrative body for its views.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

Communications Law > Regulators > US Federal Communications Commission > General Overview

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Definitions

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Broadcasting > General Overview

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Broadcasting > Rate Regulation

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Federal Communications Act > General Overview

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Telephone Services > General Overview

HÍ Í ÁMÉRÍKA HÍ LÁ JÁRÓDÁÍ Í Í LÁHSEÓdÁGÁÍ I ÁKÍ HÍ LÁFÍ JÁMÉSÓYÓÁJHÍ ÁKÍ

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Abandonment of Lines

HN5 [down] Interstate Commerce, US Interstate Commerce Commission

Radio broadcasters, including television broadcasters, are not included in the definition of common carriers in § 3(h) of the Communications Act, 47 U.S.C.S. § 153\(h\), as are telephone and telegraph companies. Thus the extensive controls, including rate regulation, of Title II of the Communications Act (Act), 47 U.S.C.S. §§ 201- 222, do not apply. Television broadcasters remain free to set their own advertising rates. In contradistinction to communication by telephone and telegraph, which the Act recognizes as a common carrier activity and regulates accordingly in analogy to the regulation of rail and other carriers by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Act recognizes that broadcasters are not common carriers and are not to be dealt with as such. Thus the Act recognizes that the field of broadcasting is one of free competition. The sections dealing with broadcasting demonstrate that Congress has not, in its regulatory scheme, abandoned the principle of free competition as it has done in the case of railroads.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Preclusion

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Broadcasting > Rate Regulation

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

HN6 [down] Reviewability, Preclusion

There being no pervasive regulatory scheme, and no rate structures to throw out of balance, sporadic action by federal courts can work no mischief. The justification for primary jurisdiction in an administrative agency accordingly disappears.

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Decisions > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Decisions > Res Judicata

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Communications Law > ... > Licensing > Renewals & Revocations > General Overview

HN7 [down] Decisions, Collateral Estoppel

Before the government can be collaterally estopped by a licensing decision of the Federal Communications Commission, a court must find whether or not in the earlier litigation the representative of the United States had authority to represent its interests in a final adjudication of the issue in controversy.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

HÍ Í ÁMEÉÁH ÉÉH LÁ JÁÉODÁ I Í ÉÉH I Í LÁHÉDÁÉGÁ ÁI ÉÉH I LAFJÍ JÁMEÉSÓYÓÁJH ÉÉH

Summary

An application by broadcasting companies to exchange television stations was granted by the Federal Communications Commission on December 21, 1955. The government, on December 4, 1956, instituted an action in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania attacking the exchange as being in furtherance of a conspiracy to violate the federal anti-trust laws. The defendants contended that this action was barred for various reasons. It was alleged that the commission had authority to pass on the anti-trust questions presented, and, in any case, that the regulatory scheme of the Federal Communications Act had so displaced that of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act that the commission had primary jurisdiction; that the only method available to the government for redressing its anti-trust grievances was to intervene in the proceedings before the commission; that, since it did not, the anti-trust issues were determined adversely to it by the commission's approval of the exchange, so that the government was barred by principles of collateral estoppel and res judicata; and that in any event the long delay between approval of the exchange and filing of the present suit barred it because of laches. The District Court decided in favor of the defendants. (158 F Supp 333.)

On appeal, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by Warren, Ch. J., expressing the views of six members of the Court, all the issues described above were resolved against the defendants.

Harlan, J., concurred in the result.

Frankfurter and Douglas, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

LAW §320 > COMMUNICATIONS §16 > broadcasting licenses -- anti-trust violations. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

The legislative history of 311 of the Communications Act of 1934 ( 47 USC 311), directing the Federal Communications Commission to refuse a broadcasting station license to any person whose license had been revoked by a court under 313, authorizing the court to revoke such a license for violation of the federal anti-trust laws, compels the conclusion that the commission is not intended to have any authority to pass on anti-trust violations as such; courts retain jurisdiction to pass on alleged anti-trust violations irrespective of commission action.

WAIVER §9 > STATUTES §259 > broadcasting license -- repeal of law. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

As shown by its legislative history, the repeal in the 1952 amendments to the Federal Communications Act (66 Stat 716) of the provision in 311 of the act, as originally enacted in 1934 (48 Stat 1086), that the granting by the Federal Communications Commission of a station license shall not estop the United States from proceeding against the licensee under the federal anti-trust laws, does not mean that, after the repeal, the United States is so estopped.

WAIVER §9 > broadcasting license -- anti-trust violations. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

HÍ Í ÁMÉRÍKA HÍ LÁ JÁVODAÍ Í Í LÁHSEÓAEGÁ ÁÍ I ÁKÍI I LAFJÍ JÁVÉSÓYÓÁJHÍ ÁKÍI

In the absence of persuasive legislative history to the contrary, the provision in 311 of the Federal Communications Act, as originally enacted in 1934 (48 Stat 1086) and repealed in 1952 (66 Stat 716), that the granting of a station license by the Federal Communications Commission shall not estop the United States from proceeding against the licensee for violation of the federal anti-trust laws, was not limited in scope to insure only that the granting of a license would not estop the government to prosecute anti-trust violations subsequent to the transaction giving rise to the license proceeding, or of which the transaction was merely a small part.

LAW §322 > primary jurisdiction. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The doctrine of primary jurisdiction, like the rule requiring exhaustion of administrative remedies, is concerned with promoting proper relationships between the courts and administrative agencies charged with particular regulatory duties.

LAW §226 > exhaustion of remedies. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The rule requiring exhaustion of administrative remedies applies where a claim is cognizable in the first instance by an administrative agency alone; judicial interference is withheld until the administrative process has run its course.

LAW §322 > primary jurisdiction. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The doctrine of primary jurisdiction applies where a claim is originally cognizable in the courts, and comes into play whenever enforcement of the claim requires the resolution of issues which, under a regulatory scheme, have been placed within the special competence of an administrative body; in such a case the judicial process is suspended pending referral of such issues to the administrative body for its views.

COMMUNICATIONS §8 > television broadcasting -- rates. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Radio broadcasters, including television broadcasters, are not included in the definition of common carriers in 3(h) of the Federal Communications Act (47 USC 153 \(h\)), as are telephone and telegraph companies, and, consequently, the extensive controls, including rate regulation, of Title II of the Act (47 USC 201-222), do not apply; television broadcasters remain free to set their own advertising rates.

COMMUNICATIONS §24 > anti-trust violations -- judicial review. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

HÍ Í ÁMEÐAÐH ÞEH LÁ JÁÐODA Í Í Í LÁ ÐEÐDA ÐAÐA Í ÞEH HÍ LAFJÍ JÁÐESÓYÐAÐH ÞEH

Exemptions of telephone and telegraph companies from the anti-trust laws by the Federal Communications Commission are subject to judicial review.

LAW §322 > COMMUNICATIONS §22 > primary jurisdiction -- television -- anti-trust violations. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

The doctrine of primary jurisdiction is not applicable so as to require submission to the Federal Communications Commission of the question whether an agreement, approved by the commission, of two broadcasting companies to exchange television stations violates the federal anti-trust laws; the government may bring an independent action attacking the agreement on that ground without first resorting to the commission.

COMMUNICATIONS §15 > television -- exchange of stations. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

The scope of approval by the Federal Communications Commission of an agreement between broadcasting companies to exchange television stations is limited to the statutory standard of "public interest, convenience, and necessity," the monetary terms of the exchange being of concern to the commission only as they might affect the ability of the parties to serve the public.

COMMUNICATIONS §15 > television -- anti-trust policy. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

Federal anti-trust policy may be considered by the Federal Communications Commission in determining whether the "public interest, convenience, and necessity" will be served by proposed action of a broadcaster.

LAW §169 > JUDGMENT §248 > collateral estoppel -- government. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

The government is not collaterally estopped by a former judgment or administrative decision unless it appears that in the earlier litigation the representative of the United States had authority to represent its interests in a final adjudication of the issue in controversy.

LAW §169 > COMMUNICATIONS §21 > res judicata -- television -- exchange of stations. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

Approval by the Federal Communications Commission of an agreement between broadcasting companies to exchange television stations does not, either under the doctrine of collateral estoppel or res judicata principles, preclude the government from maintaining against such a company an independent action which attacks the exchange as being in furtherance of a conspiracy to violate the federal anti-trust laws.

HÍ Ì ÁWÉÜÄH ÈH HÍ LÁ JÁ ÜÖÄÍ ÈH Í Í LÁHSEÖAÄGAÁH I ÈH HÍ LAFJÍ JÁ ÜESÖYÖÄJH ÈH

ACTIONS §28 > laches -- action by government -- anti-trust violations. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

An action by the government against broadcasting companies, attacking the exchange of television stations as violating the anti-trust laws, is not barred by laches because not instituted until more than 11 months after approval of the agreement by the Federal Communications Commission, since the commission had no power to decide the anti-trust issues and, consequently, the government had no duty either to enter the proceedings before the commission or to seek review of the license grant.

Syllabus

---

Approval by the Federal Communications Commission of appellees' agreement to exchange their television station in Cleveland for one in Philadelphia, which has since been consummated, does not bar this independent civil action by the Government under § 4 of the Sherman Act attacking the exchange as being in furtherance of a conspiracy to violate § 1 of that Act. Pp. 335-353.

1. The legislative history of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, reveals that the Commission was not given the power to decide antitrust issues as such and that Commission action was not intended to prevent enforcement of the antitrust laws in federal courts. Pp. 339-346.

(a) A different result is not required by the fact that the 1952 amendments to the Act repealed the last sentence of § 311, which specifically provided that the granting of a license should not estop the United States or any aggrieved [****2] person from proceeding against the licensee under the antitrust laws. Pp. 344-345.

(b) The last sentence of § 311 prior to its repeal in 1952 should not be construed narrowly as being intended to insure only that the granting of a license would not estop the Government from prosecuting antitrust violations subsequent to the transaction giving rise to the license proceeding, or of which the transaction was merely a small part. P. 345.

2. There being no pervasive regulatory scheme or rate structure involved, the scheme of the Act does not require application of the doctrine of primary jurisdiction so as to permit the Government to attack the exchange transaction as violative of the Sherman Act only by intervention in the proceedings before the Commission or by judicial review of the Commission's decision. Pp. 346-352.

3. Since the Commission has no power to decide antitrust questions, this independent antitrust suit is not barred by collateral estoppel, res judicata or laches. P. 352.

Counsel: Solicitor General Rankin argued the cause for the United States. With him on the brief were Assistant Attorney General Hansen, Daniel M. Friedman, Bernard M. Hollander and Raymond M. [****3] Carlson.

Bernard G. Segal argued the cause for appellees. With him on the brief were Edward W. Mullinix, Josephine H. Klein and Lawrence J. McKay.

Judges: Warren, Black, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Whittaker, Stewart; Frankfurter and Douglas took no part in the consideration or decision of this case

Opinion by: WARREN

Opinion

---

[*335] [***357] [**459] MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN delivered the opinion of the Court.

Appellees, Radio Corporation of America and National Broadcasting Company, are defendants in this civil antitrust action brought by the Government under § 4 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 4. After holding a preliminary hearing on three of appellees' affirmative defenses to that action, the federal district judge dismissed the complaint. 158 F.Supp. 333. The Government appealed directly to this Court under the Expediting Act, 15 U. S. C. § 29. The principal question presented is whether approval by the Federal Communications Commission of appellees' agreement to exchange their Cleveland television station for one in Philadelphia bars this independent action by the Government which attacks the exchange as being [****4] in furtherance of a conspiracy to violate the federal antitrust laws.

The Government's complaint generally alleged the following facts. In 1954, National Broadcasting Company (NBC), a wholly owned subsidiary of Radio Corporation of America (RCA), owned five very high frequency (VHF) television stations. The stations were located in the following market areas: New York, which is the country's largest market; Chicago, second; Los Angeles, third; Cleveland, tenth; and Washington D. C., eleventh. According to the Government's allegations, in March 1954, NBC and RCA originated a continuing conspiracy [*336] to acquire stations in five of the eight largest market areas in the country. Since Philadelphia is the country's fourth largest market area, acquisition of a Philadelphia station in exchange for appellees' Cleveland or Washington station would achieve one goal of the conspiracy.<sup>1</sup>

[***5] One Philadelphia station, WPTZ, was owned by Westinghouse Broadcasting Company. This station and a Westinghouse-owned station in Boston were affiliated with the NBC network. In addition, Westinghouse desired NBC affiliation for a station to be acquired in Pittsburgh. In order to force Westinghouse to exchange its Philadelphia station for NBC's Cleveland station, it is alleged that NBC threatened Westinghouse with loss of the network affiliation of its Boston and Philadelphia stations, and threatened to withhold affiliation from its Pittsburgh station to be acquired. NBC also threatened to withhold network affiliation from any new VHF or UHF (ultra high frequency) stations which Westinghouse might acquire. By thus using its leverage as a network, [**460] NBC is alleged to have forced Westinghouse to agree to the exchange contract under consideration. Under the terms of that contract NBC was to acquire the Philadelphia station, while Westinghouse was to acquire NBC's Cleveland station plus three million dollars.

The Government asked that the conspiracy be declared violative of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1, that the appellees be divested of [***6] such assets as the District Court deemed appropriate, that "such other and additional relief as may be proper" be awarded, and that the Government recover costs of the suit.

Appellees' affirmative defenses [***358] arose out of the fact that the exchange had been approved by the Federal Communications [*337] Commission.<sup>2</sup> FCC approval was required under § 310 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, 48 Stat. 1086, as amended, 66 Stat. 716, 47 U. S. C. § 310 (b). Under that Section, appellees filed applications setting forth the terms of the transaction and the reasons for requesting the exchange. The Commission instituted proceedings to determine whether the exchange met the statutory requirements of § 310, that the "public interest, convenience, and necessity" would be served. They were not adversary proceedings. After extensive investigation of the transaction, the Commission was still not satisfied that the exchange would meet the statutory standards, and, over three dissents, issued letters seeking additional information on various subjects,

---

<sup>1</sup> Under present FCC regulations, NBC can own no more than five stations, 47 CFR, 1958, § 3.636, so that acquisition of a new station would require that an existing one be relinquished.

<sup>2</sup> Federal Communications Commission Report No. 2793, Public Notice 27067, December 28, 1955.

HÍ Í ÁMEĀĀH ĀĀH LÁ JÁĀĀDÁ ÁÍ ÁÁ ÁÍ ĚLÁĀĀSÉOĀĀCÁ ÁÍ ÁÁ ÁÍ LÁFJÍ JÁĀĀSÓYÓĀĀJH ÁÁ ÁÁ

including antitrust problems, under § 309 (b) of the Act. After receiving answers to the letters, [****7] the Commission, without holding a hearing, on December 21, 1955, granted the application to exchange stations.<sup>3</sup>

[****8] [*338] It was stipulated below that in passing upon the application, the Commission had all the information before it which has now been made the basis of the Government's complaint. It further appears that during the FCC proceedings the Justice Department was informed as to the evidence in the FCC's possession. It was further stipulated, and we assume, that the FCC decided all issues relative to the antitrust laws that were before it, and that the Justice Department had the right to request a hearing under § 309 (b), to file a protest under § 309 (c), to seek a rehearing under § 405, and to seek judicial review of the decision under § 402 (b). See Far East Conference v. United States, 342 U.S. 570, 576; U. S. ex rel. Chapman v. Federal Power Comm'n, 345 U.S. 153, 155, 156. The Department of Justice took none of these actions. Accordingly, on January 22, 1956, after the period in which the Department could have sought review had expired, NBC and Westinghouse consummated the exchange transaction according to [**461] their contract. The Department did not file the present complaint until December 4, 1956, over ten months [****9] later.

Against this background, appellees assert that the FCC had authority to pass on the antitrust questions presented, and, in any case, that the regulatory scheme of the Communications Act has so displaced that of the Sherman Act that the FCC had primary jurisdiction [**359] to license the exchange transaction, with the result that any attack for antitrust reasons on the exchange transaction must have been by direct review of the license grant. Relying on this premise, they then contend that the only method available to the Government for redressing its antitrust grievances was to intervene in the FCC proceedings; that since it did not, the antitrust issues were determined adversely to it when the exchange was approved, so that it is barred by principles of collateral estoppel and *res [*339] judicata*; and that in any case the long delay between approval of the exchange and filing of this suit bars the suit because of laches.

I.

Whether these contentions are to prevail depends substantially upon the extent to which Congress authorized the FCC to pass on antitrust questions, and this in turn requires examination of the relevant legislative history. Two sections [****10] of the Communications Act of 1934, 48 Stat. 1064, as amended, 47 U. S. C. § 151 et seq., deal specifically with antitrust considerations, Sections 311 and 313:

"SEC. 311. HN1 [+] The Commission is hereby directed to refuse a station license and/or the permit hereinafter required for the construction of a station to any person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) whose license has been revoked by a court under section 313.

....

"SEC. 313. HN2 [+] All laws of the United States relating to unlawful restraints and monopolies and to combinations, contracts, or agreements in restraint of trade are hereby declared to be applicable to the manufacture and sale of and to trade in radio apparatus and devices entering into or affecting interstate or foreign commerce and to interstate or foreign radio communications. Whenever in any suit, action, or proceeding, civil or criminal, brought under the provisions of any of said laws or in any proceedings brought to [****11] enforce or to review findings and orders of the Federal Trade Commission or other governmental agency in respect of any matters as to which said

<sup>3</sup> Commissioner Bartley dissented from the action, urging that hearings should have been held because the facts theretofore revealed by the investigation had raised "serious questions as to the desirability and possible legality of the competitive practices followed by the network in obtaining dominance of major broadcast markets." He suggested that there was "a substantial question whether, once the Commission grants its approval to these transfers, certain provisions of the Clayton Act (viz. 15 U. S. C. Section 18) might prevent Federal Trade Commission and Justice Department from taking any effective action in the event they concluded that possible violations of the anti-trust laws were involved." (Emphasis by the Commissioner.) Commissioner Doerfer, joined by Commissioner Mack, responded that it was unnecessary to hold a hearing because the investigation had fully revealed the facts. He concluded, however: "It is difficult to see how approval of this exchange may effectively preclude other governmental agencies from examining into this or any other transaction of the network companies."

HÍ ÁMÉRÍKA HÍ HULÁ JÁVEÓDÁÍ Í HÍ FLÁHSEÓAEGÁHÍ I HÍ JLÁJÍ JÁMEÓSÓYÓÁJHÍ HÍ HÍ

Commission or other governmental agency is by law authorized to act, any licensee shall be found [*340] guilty of the violation of the provisions of such laws or any of them, the court, in addition to the penalties imposed by said laws, may adjudge, order, and/or decree that the license of such licensee shall, as of the date the decree or judgment becomes finally effective or as of such other date as the said decree shall fix, be revoked and that all rights under such license shall thereupon cease: Provided, however, That such licensee shall have the same right of appeal or review as is provided by law in respect of other decrees and judgments of said court."

These provisions were taken from the Radio Act of 1927.<sup>4</sup> They appear to have originated in a bill drafted by Congressman White of Maine, H. R. 5589, 69th Cong., 1st Sess. What is now § 311 appeared as the third paragraph of § 2 (C)<sup>5</sup> [****13] [***360] of that bill, while what is now [**462] § 313 appeared as § 2 (G).

<sup>6</sup> [****14] In the hearings on the bill before [*341] the [****12] House Committee, Congressman Reid of Illinois asked Judge Davis, Department of Commerce representative, whether the Secretary of Commerce<sup>7</sup> had any discretion to refuse a license under § 2 (C) (now § 311) to a party which the Secretary believed to be violating the antitrust laws. The following colloquy ensued:

Judge DAVIS. "He has no discretion under this act."

Congressman REID. "They have to be found guilty first; is that the idea?"

Congressman WHITE. "Yes. In other words, I tried to get away from placing upon the secretary the determination of a judicial question of that character. That involves, of course, a determination as to the facts; it requires a knowledge of the law and it requires an application of the law to the facts, and then it requires the exercise of judicial powers, if you leave that in his discretion, and I tried to lift it away from the secretary."

[*342] Later on, the question arose as to what grounds were available to the Secretary to revoke licenses under § 2 (F) (now § 312). After Congressman White mentioned one statutory ground, Congressman Reid observed:<sup>9</sup>

"Yes; but you do not include unlawful combinations and monopolies and contracts or agreements in restraint of trade. That is not covered."

<sup>4</sup> 44 Stat. 1162. See H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 1918, 73d Cong., 2d Sess. 47, 49.

<sup>5</sup> "The Secretary of Commerce is hereby directed to refuse a station license and/or the permit hereinafter required for the construction of a station to any person, firm, company, or corporation, or any subsidiary thereof, which has been found guilty by any Federal court of unlawfully monopolizing or attempting to unlawfully monopolize radio communication, directly or indirectly, through the control of the manufacture or sale of radio apparatus, through exclusive traffic arrangements, or by any other means. The granting of a license shall not estop the United States or any person aggrieved from prosecuting such person, firm, company, or corporation for a violation of the law against unlawful restraints and monopolies and/or combinations, contracts, or agreements in restraint of trade."

<sup>6</sup> "All laws of the United States relating to unlawful restraints and monopolies and to combinations, contracts, or agreements in restraint of trade are hereby declared to be applicable to the manufacture and sale of and to trade in radio apparatus and devices entering into or affecting interstate or foreign commerce and to interstate or foreign radio communications. Whenever in any suit, action, or proceeding, civil or criminal, brought under the provisions of any of said laws or in any proceedings brought to enforce or to review findings and orders of the Federal Trade Commission or other governmental agency in respect of any matters as to which said commission or other governmental agency is by law authorized to act, any licensee shall be found guilty of the violation of the provisions of such laws or any of them, the court, in addition to the penalties imposed by said laws, may adjudge, order, and/or decree that the license of such licensee shall, as of the date the decree or judgment becomes finally effective or as of such other date as the said decree shall fix, be revoked and that all rights under such license shall thereupon cease: Provided, however, That such licensee shall have the same right of appeal or review as is provided by law in respect of other decrees and judgments of said court."

<sup>7</sup> As then phrased, the Act was to be administered primarily by the Secretary of Commerce.

<sup>8</sup> Hearings before the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on H. R. 5589, 69th Cong., 1st Sess. 27.

<sup>9</sup> Id., at 29.

HÍ ÁMÈJÉHÍ ÉÉH GLÄ JÄUÉÖDÄÍ Í ÉÉH Í GLÄ HÄSEÖGÄÁHÍ ÉÉH ÉLÁJÍ JÄMÈJÉSÖYÖJÄJHÍ ÉÉH FG

Congressman WHITE. "No; not in that section."

Congressman DAVIS of Tennessee. "Those are covered in 'G' now [§ 313]."

Congressman WHITE. "That is a judicial question and we have left it to the courts to pass on that."

This failure to include a provision permitting refusal of a license for antitrust [**463] violations [****15] in the absence of a judicial determination caused Congressman Davis to insert a lengthy Minority Report on H. R. 9108, which was old H. R. 5589 reintroduced by Congressman White.<sup>10</sup> Consequently, when the bill (then numbered H. R. 9971) reached the [***361] floor of the House, Congressman Davis attempted to insert a number of amendments which would have strengthened the antitrust aspects of the bill. See 67 Cong. Rec. 5484, 5485. All were defeated, including an amendment to § 2 (C) (now § 311) which would have required refusal of a license to any company "found by any Federal court or the commission to have been unlawfully monopolizing" radio communication. (Emphasis supplied.) See 67 Cong. Rec. 5501-5504, 5555.

Thus, in the Senate consideration of a version of the bill, when asked whether there was "anything in the bill providing in case the applicant for a permit is found to be acting in violation of the Sherman antitrust law or controls [****16] a monopoly that the commission may pass upon [*343] the question," Senator Dill of Washington, who was in charge of the bill in the Senate, replied:<sup>11</sup>

"The bill provides that in case anybody has been convicted under the Sherman antitrust law or any other law relating to monopoly he shall be denied a license; but the bill does not attempt to make the commission the judge as to whether or not certain conditions constitute a monopoly; it rather leaves that to the court."

Congress adjourned before any action could be taken on the bill at that session. At the next session, a Conference Committee reported out the version of the bills which became the Radio Act of 1927, with now § 311 being § 13 of the Act and now § 313 being § 15 of the Act, despite the vigorous but unsuccessful opposition of Congressman Davis in the House, see, e. g., 68 Cong. Rec. 2577, and Senator Pittman of Nevada in the Senate. See, e. g., 68 Cong. Rec. 3032, 3034.

Only one change was made in those [****17] two Sections when they were incorporated into the Communications Act. Section 311 was modified merely to authorize rather than to require the revocation of a license by the Commission after a court had found a radio broadcaster in violation of the antitrust laws, but had not ordered its license revoked, 48 Stat. 1086. In all other respects §§ 13 and 15 of the Radio Act were identical with, and had the same purpose as, §§ 311 and 313 of the Communications Act.<sup>12</sup>

LEdHN[1]↑ [1]While this history compels the conclusion that the FCC was not intended to have any authority to pass on antitrust violations as such, it is equally clear that courts retained jurisdiction to pass on alleged antitrust violations [*344] irrespective of Commission action. Thus § 311, as originally enacted in 1934, 48 Stat. 1086, read as follows:

"The Commission is hereby directed to refuse a station license [****18] and/or the permit hereinafter required for the construction of a station to any person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) whose license has been revoked by a court under section 313, and is hereby authorized to refuse such station license and/or permit to any other person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) which has been finally adjudged guilty by a Federal court of unlawfully monopolizing or attempting unlawfully to monopolize, radio communication, directly or indirectly, through the control of the manufacture or sale [**464] of radio apparatus, through exclusive traffic arrangements, or by any other means, or to have been using unfair methods of competition. *The granting of a [***362] license shall not estop the United States or any person aggrieved from*

<sup>10</sup> See H. R. Rep. No. 404, 69th Cong., 1st Sess. 6, 16, 23.

<sup>11</sup> 67 Cong. Rec. 12507.

<sup>12</sup> H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 1918, 73d Cong., 2d Sess. 47, 49.

HÌ ÁNÈÜÄHÌ ÉÉHÌ I LÀ JÀÙÖDÄÍ Í ÉÉHÌ I LÀ HÀÙÖDÄÍ ÉÉHÌ GLÄJÍ JÁNÈÜSÓYØÄJHÌ ÉÉHÌ

proceeding against such person for violating the law against unfair methods of competition or for a violation of the law against unlawful restraints and monopolies and/or combinations, contracts, or agreements in restraint of trade, or from instituting proceedings for the dissolution of such corporation." (Emphasis supplied.)

LEdHN[2] [2] [****19] Appellees attempt to avoid the force of the italicized sentence in two ways. First, they point to its repeal in the 1952 amendments to the Act, 66 Stat. 716. That repeal was occasioned by objections from the industry that it was unfair for radio broadcasters who had been found in violation of the antitrust laws to be subject to license refusals by the Commission, even when the court as a part of its decree did not see fit to order the license revoked under § 313. See S. Rep. No. 142, 82d Cong., [*345] 1st Sess. 9. Congress accordingly repealed all of the Section following the first comma, including the italicized sentence. It apparently considered that inherent in the scheme of the Act was the right to challenge under the antitrust laws even transactions approved by the Commission, for the Conference Committee carefully noted that repeal of the italicized sentence would not curtail such a right:<sup>13</sup>

"To the extent that this section of the conference substitute will eliminate from section 311 of the present law the last sentence, which is quoted above, the committee of conference does not feel that this is of any legal significance. It is the view of the members of the [****20] conference committee that the last sentence of the present section 311 is surplusage and that by omitting it from the present law the power of the United States or of any private person to proceed under the antitrust laws would not be curtailed or affected in any way."

Thus, appellees' reliance on repeal of the last sentence of § 311 is clearly misplaced.

LEdHN[3] [3]Second, appellees urge that the italicized sentence as originally enacted had a very narrow scope; that it was intended to insure only that the granting of a license would not estop the Government from prosecuting anti-trust violations subsequent to the transaction giving rise to the license proceeding, or of which the transaction was merely a small part. They argue that the sentence was intended to permit only actions such as in Packaged Programs v. Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., 255 F.2d 708. But [****21] the language of the sentence cannot be naturally read in such a narrow manner, and it would take persuasive legislative history so to restrict its application. Appellees point to no such history, nor to any cases so holding.

[*346] Thus, HN3 [4] the legislative history of the Act reveals that the Commission was not given the power to decide antitrust issues as such, and that Commission action was not intended to prevent enforcement of the antitrust laws in federal courts.

II.

We now reach the question whether, despite the legislative history, the over-all regulatory scheme of the Act requires invocation of a primary jurisdiction doctrine. The doctrine originated with Mr. Justice (later Chief Justice) White in Texas & Pacific R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co., 204 U.S. 426. It was [***363] grounded on the necessity for administrative uniformity, and, in that particular [**465] case, for maintenance of uniform rates to all shippers.<sup>14</sup> A second reason for the doctrine was suggested by Mr. Justice Brandeis in Great Northern R. Co. v.

---

<sup>13</sup> H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 2426, 82d Cong., 2d Sess. 19.

<sup>14</sup> We recently explained the nature of the doctrine in United States v. Western Pacific R. Co., 352 U.S. 59, 63-64:

HN4 [5] "The doctrine of primary jurisdiction, like the rule requiring exhaustion of administrative remedies, is concerned with promoting proper relationships between the courts and administrative agencies charged with particular regulatory duties. 'Exhaustion' applies where a claim is cognizable in the first instance by an administrative agency alone; judicial interference is withheld until the administrative process has run its course. 'Primary jurisdiction,' on the other hand, applies where a claim is originally cognizable in the courts, and comes into play whenever enforcement of the claim requires the resolution of issues which, under a regulatory scheme, have been placed within the special competence of an administrative body; in such a case the judicial process is suspended pending referral of such issues to the administrative body for its views."

HÍ ÁNÈJÉAH ÍÁH Í LÀ JÀUÉÓDÁÍ Í ÁH Í LÁHSEÓAEGÁHÍ Í ÁH Í HÁJÍ JÁNÈJÉSÓYÓÁJHÍ ÁH Í

Merchants Elevator Co., 259 U.S. 285, 291, [****22] where he pointed to the need for administrative skill "commonly to be found only in a body of experts" in handling the "intricate facts" of, in that case, the transportation industry.

[[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

[****23] Thus, when questions arose as to the applicability of the doctrine to transactions allegedly violative of the antitrust [*347] laws, particularly involving fully regulated industries whose members were forced to charge only reasonable rates approved by the appropriate commission, this Court found the doctrine applicable.<sup>15</sup> United States v. Pacific & Arctic R. Co., 228 U.S. 87; Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 260 U.S. 156; United States Navigation Co. v. Cunard S. S. Co., 284 U.S. 474; Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U.S. 439; Far East Conference v. United States, 342 U.S. 570. At the same time, this Court carefully noted that the doctrine did not apply when the action was only for the purpose of dissolving the conspiracy through which the allegedly invalid rates were set, for in such a case there would be no interference with rate structures or a regulatory scheme.<sup>16</sup> United States v. Pacific & Arctic R. Co., supra; Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., supra. [***364] The decisions sometimes emphasized the need for administrative [****24] uniformity and uniform rates, [*348] Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., supra, while at other times they emphasized the need for administrative experience in distilling the relevant facts in a complex industry as a foundation for later court action. United States Navigation Co. v. Cunard S. S. Co., supra, and Far East Conference <sup>**4661</sup> v. United States, supra, as explained in Federal Maritime Board v. Isbrandtsen Co., 356 U.S. 481, 497-499.

[****25] The cases all involved, however, common carriers by rail and water. These carriers could charge only the published tariff, and that tariff must have been found by the appropriate agency to have been reasonable. Free rate competition was modified by federal controls. The Court's concern was that the agency which was expert in, and responsible for, administering those controls should be given the opportunity to determine questions within its special competence as an aid to the courts in resolving federal antitrust policy and federal regulatory patterns into a cohesive whole. That some resolution is necessary when the antitrust policy of free competition is placed beside a regulatory scheme involving fixed rates is obvious. Cf. McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67. Accordingly, this Court consistently held that when rates and practices relating thereto were challenged under the antitrust laws, the agencies had primary jurisdiction to consider the reasonableness of such rates and practices in the light of the many relevant factors including alleged antitrust violations, for otherwise sporadic action by federal courts would disrupt an agency's delicate [****26] regulatory scheme, and would throw existing rate structures out of balance.

[[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]While the television industry is also a regulated industry, it is regulated in a very different way. That difference is controlling. HN5 Radio broadcasters, including television broadcasters, see Allen B. Dumont Laboratories <sup>**3491</sup> v. Carroll, 184 F.2d 153, are not included in the definition of common carriers in § 3 (h) of the

<sup>15</sup> See, generally, 3 Davis, Administrative Law Treatise, §§ 19.05, 19.06; Jaffe, Primary Jurisdiction Reconsidered: The Anti-Trust Laws, 102 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 577; Schwartz, Legal Restriction of Competition in the Regulated Industries: An Abdication of Judicial Responsibility, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 436; von Mehren, The Antitrust Laws and Regulated Industries: The Doctrine of Primary Jurisdiction, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 929.

<sup>16</sup> This followed because, in the words of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., supra, at 161, ". . . a combination of carriers to fix reasonable and non-discriminatory rates may be illegal." This Court in Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., supra, took the position that shippers were entitled to have rates filed by carriers who were not parties to a conspiracy, even though the rates filed were the lowest which would be found to be reasonable. The risk that future filings would be at the uppermost limits of the zone of reasonableness was too great, and damage from the conspiratorial filings was presumed to flow. Of course, when the agency is permitted to exempt from antitrust coverage rates filed cooperatively, the doctrine equally applies to an attack on the alleged conspiracy. United States Navigation Co. v. Cunard S. S. Co., supra; Far East Conference v. United States, supra.

HÍ ÁNĘĘÁH ĀĀH JLĀ JÁUĘOĀ Ā Ā Ā Ā LÁHSEĀGĀÁH Ā Ā Ā Ā LÁJÍ JÁNĘEŠÓYQĀJH Ā Ā Ā Ā

Communications Act, 47 U. S. C. § 153 \(h\), as are telephone and telegraph companies. Thus the extensive controls, including rate regulation, of Title II of the Communications Act, 47 U. S. C. §§ 201-222, do not apply.<sup>17</sup> [****28] Television broadcasters remain free to set their own advertising rates. As this Court said in Federal Communications Comm'n v. Sanders Bros. Radio Station, 309 U.S. 470, 474:

"In contradistinction to communication by telephone and telegraph, which the Communications Act recognizes as a common carrier [****27] activity [***365] and regulates accordingly in analogy to the regulation of rail and other carriers by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Act recognizes that broadcasters are not common carriers and are not to be dealt with as such. Thus the Act recognizes that the field of broadcasting is one of free competition. The sections dealing with broadcasting demonstrate that Congress has not, in its regulatory scheme, abandoned the principle of free competition as it has done in the case of railroads . . . ."

[*350] [LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9] Thus, HN6 there being no pervasive regulatory scheme, and no rate structures to throw out of balance, sporadic action by \*\*467 federal courts can work no mischief. The justification for primary jurisdiction accordingly disappears.<sup>18</sup>

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

[****29] [LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10] The facts of this case illustrate that analysis. Appellees, like unregulated business concerns, made a business judgment as to the desirability of the exchange. Like unregulated concerns, they had to make this judgment with knowledge that the exchange might run afoul of the antitrust laws. Their decision varied from that of an [*351] unregulated concern only in that they also had to obtain the approval of a federal agency. But scope of that approval in the case of the FCC was limited to the statutory standard, "public interest, convenience, and necessity." See, generally, Federal Radio Comm'n v. Nelson Bros. Co., 289 U.S. 266; Federal Communications Comm'n v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 309 U.S. 134; Federal Communications Comm'n v. Sanders Bros. Radio Station, supra; Federal Communications Comm'n v. RCA Communications, 346 U.S. 86. The monetary terms of the exchange were set by the parties, and were of concern to the Commission only as they might have affected the ability of the parties to serve the public. [****30] Even after approval, the parties were free to complete or not to complete the exchange as their sound business judgment dictated. In every sense, the question

<sup>17</sup> Under Title II, common carriers are required to furnish communications service on reasonable request and may charge only just and reasonable rates, § 201. Such carriers must file rates with the FCC, and can charge only the rates as filed, § 203. The Commission may hold hearings on the lawfulness of filed rates, § 204, and after hearings may itself set the applicable rate, § 205. Cf. 49 U. S. C. § 15 et seq., 46 U. S. C. § 817. In view of this extensive regulation, Congress has provided that certain actions of telephone and telegraph companies may be exempted from the antitrust laws by the Commission, § 221 \(a\) and § 222 \(c\)\(1\). Cf. 49 U. S. C. §§ 5 (11), 5b (9) and 46 U. S. C. § 814. Such exemptions are, however, subject to review, see Federal Maritime Board v. Isbrandtsen Co., 356 U.S. 481.

<sup>18</sup> This conclusion is re-enforced by the Commission's disavowal of either the power or the desire to foreclose the Government from antitrust actions aimed at transactions which the Commission has licensed. This position was taken both before the district judge below, and in a Supplemental Memorandum filed in this Court, page 8:

"Concurrent with the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice to enforce the Sherman Act, the Commission, of course, has jurisdiction to designate license applications for hearing on public interest questions arising out of facts which might also constitute violations of the antitrust laws. This does not mean, however, that its action on these public interest questions of communications policy is a determination of the antitrust issues as such. Thus, while the Commission may deny applications as not in the public interest where violations of the Sherman Act have been determined to exist, its approval of transactions which might involve Sherman Act violations is not a determination that the Sherman Act has not been violated, and therefore cannot forestall the United States from subsequently bringing an antitrust suit challenging those transactions."

Nor was this position taken merely for the purposes of this litigation, for it has been the view of the Commission over a period of years. See Report on Uniform Policy as to Violation by Applicants of Laws of United States, FCC Docket No. 9572 (1950), 1 Pike and Fischer, Radio Regulation, Part III, 91:495; National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 190. Since, as Mr. Justice Brandeis observed, the doctrine of primary jurisdiction rests in part upon the need for the skill of a "body of experts," it would be odd to impose the doctrine when the experts deny the relevance of their skill.

HÍ ÁMÈJÉHÍ ÍHÍ FLÄ JÁUÉDÄÍ ÍHÍ ÍI LÁHSE ÓAEGÄHÍ I ÍHÍ ÍLÁJÍ JÁMÈJÉSÓYØÁJHÍ ÍHÍ

faced by the parties was solely one of business judgment (as opposed to regulatory [***366] coercion), save only that the Commission must have found that the "public interest" would be served by their decision to make the exchange. No pervasive regulatory scheme was involved.

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11] This is not to imply that federal antitrust policy may not be considered in determining whether the "public interest, convenience, and necessity" will be served by proposed action of a broadcaster, for this Court has held the contrary.<sup>19</sup> National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 190, 222-224. Moreover, in a given case the Commission might find that antitrust considerations alone would keep the statutory [**468] standard from being met, as when the publisher of the sole newspaper in an area applies for a license for the only available radio and television [*352] facilities, which, if granted, would give him a monopoly of that [***31] area's major media of mass communication. See 98 Cong. Rec. 7399; Mansfield Journal Co. v. Federal Communications Comm'n, 86 U.S. App. D. C. 102, 107, 108, 180 F.2d 28, 33, 34.

III.

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12] [LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13] The other contentions of appellees fall of their own weight if the FCC has no power to decide antitrust questions. Thus, HNZ before we can find the Government collaterally estopped by the FCC licensing, we must find "whether or not in the earlier litigation the representative of the United States had authority to represent its interests in a final adjudication of the issue in controversy. [***32] " Sunshine Anthracite Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U.S. 381, 403. (Emphasis supplied.) But the issue in controversy before the Commission was whether the exchange would serve the public interest, not whether § 1 of the Sherman Act had been violated. Consequently, there could be no estoppel. Res judicata principles are even more inapposite.

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14] Similarly, there could be no laches unless the Government was under some sort of a duty to go forward in the FCC proceedings. But unless the FCC had power to decide the antitrust issues, and we have held that it did not, the Government had no duty either to enter the FCC proceedings or to seek review of the license grant.<sup>20</sup>

[***33] [*353] Accordingly, the judgment of the District Court dismissing the action is reversed and the case is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN concurs in the result, believing, as he understands part "I" of the Court's opinion to hold, that a Commission determination of "public interest, convenience, and necessity" cannot either constitute a binding adjudication upon any antitrust issues that may be involved in the Commission's proceeding or serve to exempt a licensee pro tanto from the antitrust laws, and that these considerations alone are dispositive of this appeal.

[***367] MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER and MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

References

---

Annotation References:

---

<sup>19</sup> See also Report on Uniform Policy as to Violation by Applicants of Laws of United States, FCC Docket No. 9572, 1 Pike and Fischer, Radio Regulation, Part III, 91:495.

<sup>20</sup> It is relevant to note that the Commission is not expressly required to give the Government notice that antitrust issues have been raised in a § 310 \(b\) proceeding. Compare § 222 (c)(1) of the Act relating to common carriers, which expressly makes consolidations and mergers exempt from antitrust coverage if approved by the Commission, but which also expressly requires that notice be given to the Attorney General of the United States prior to approval.

HÍ ÁMÈJÉHÍ ÓHÍ HLÀ JÀUÈÓdÁÍ Í HEE Ì LÀHSEÓaEGÁHÍ Í HEE Ì LÀJÍ JÀMÈJÉSÓYÓJHÍ ÓHEEH

1. Legal aspects of radio communication and broadcasting, 40 ALR 1513, 66 ALR 1361, 76 ALR 1272, 82 ALR 1106, 89 ALR 420, 104 ALR 872, 124 ALR 982, 171 ALR 765.
2. Legal aspects of television, 15 ALR2d 785.
3. Licensing and control of telecast facilities, 95 L ed 1075.

[****34] 4. Contracts of broadcast licensee as affected by action of Federal Communications Commission, 94 L ed 376.

5. The doctrine of primary jurisdiction, 94 L ed 806 and 1 L ed 2d 1596.

---

End of Document

Minneapolis & S. L. R. Co. v. United States

Supreme Court of the United States

November 16-17, 1959, Argued ; December 14, 1959, Decided *

No. 12

Reporter

361 U.S. 173 *; 80 S. Ct. 229 **; 4 L. Ed. 2d 223 ***; 1959 U.S. LEXIS 2 ****

MINNEAPOLIS & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY CO. v. UNITED STATES ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MINNESOTA.

Disposition: 165 F.Supp. 893, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

carrier, stock, acquisition, railroads, public interest, Commerce, intervened, anti trust law, transportation, Clayton Act, employees, relieved, acquire, per share, authorization, policies, approve, conditions, subsidiary, contracts, traffic, terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

HN1 Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

Section 5(2) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(2), provides, in part: (a) It shall be lawful, with the approval and authorization of the Commission, as provided in subdivision (b) for two or more carriers jointly, to acquire control of another through ownership of its stock or otherwise. (b) Whenever a transaction is proposed under subdivision (a) of this paragraph, the carrier seeking authority therefor shall present an application to the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall notify designated parties, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for interested parties to be heard. If the Commission shall consider it necessary in order to determine whether the findings specified below may properly be made, it shall set said application for public hearing; and a public hearing shall be held in all cases where carriers by railroad are involved unless the Commission determines that a public hearing is not necessary in the public interest. If the Commission finds that, subject to such terms and conditions and such modifications as it shall find to be just and reasonable, the proposed transaction is within the scope of subdivision (a) of this paragraph and will be consistent with the public interest, it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such transaction, upon the terms and conditions, and with the modifications, so found to be just and reasonable.

---

* Together with No. 27, South Dakota et al. v. United States et al., and No. 28, Minnesota et al. v. United States et al., also on appeals from the same Court.

Î FÁMEJEFÍ HÆFI HÀ ÆUÉÓÐEGGI ÆREGGJÁ ÁSEÐAÐGA ÁGGHÆREGHLÁJÍ JÁMEJESÓYÓÐAÐGÍ

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Boundaries

**HN2** [down] Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

Section 5(2)(c) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(2)(c), states: In passing upon any proposed transaction under the provisions of this paragraph, the Commission shall give weight to the following considerations, among others: (1) The effect of the proposed transaction upon adequate transportation service to the public; (2) the effect upon the public interest of the inclusion, or failure to include, other railroads in the territory involved in the proposed transaction; (3) the total fixed charges resulting from the proposed transaction; and (4) the interest of the carrier employees affected. Section 5(2)(d) states: The Commission shall have authority in the case of a proposed transaction under this paragraph involving a railroad or railroads, as a prerequisite to its approval of the proposed transaction, to require, upon equitable terms, the inclusion of another railroad or other railroads in the territory involved, upon petition by such railroad or railroads requesting such inclusion, and upon a finding that such inclusion is consistent with the public interest. Section 5(2)(f) states: As a condition of its approval, under this paragraph, of any transaction involving a carrier or carriers by railroad subject to the provisions of this chapter, the Commission shall require a fair and equitable arrangement to protect the interests of the railroad employees affected.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

**HN3** [down] Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

Section 5(11) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(11) provides in part that: The authority conferred by this section shall be exclusive and plenary, and any carrier or corporation participating in any transaction approved by the Commission thereunder, shall have full power to carry such transaction into effect and to own and operate any properties and exercise any control or franchises acquired through said transaction and any carriers participating in a transaction approved or authorized under the provisions of this section shall be and they are hereby relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws and of all other restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law insofar as may be necessary to enable it to carry into effect the transaction so approved or provided for in accordance with the terms and conditions, if any, imposed by the Commission, and to hold, maintain, and operate any properties and exercise any control or franchises acquired through such transaction.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

**HN4** [down] Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

Section 5(11) of the Interstate Commerce Act (ICA), 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(11) is both a more recent and a more specific expression of congressional policy than § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, and § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15

HÍ FÁMEJEFÍ HÆFI HLÀ ÆUÆÓÐEGGI ÆREGGJ LÁ ÆSEÐAÆGA AGH ÆREGGHÆFÍ JÁMEJESÓY Q/A GÍ

U.S.C.S. § 18, and in terms relieves the acquiring carrier, upon approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the acquisition, from the operation of the antitrust laws. Although § 5(11) of the ICA, 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(11), does not authorize the Commission to ignore the antitrust laws, there can be little doubt that the Commission is not to measure proposals for acquisitions by the standards of the antitrust laws. The problem is one of accommodation of § 5(2) of the ICA, 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(2), and the antitrust legislation. The Commission remains obligated to estimate the scope and appraise the effects of the curtailment of competition which will result from the proposed acquisition and consider them along with the advantages of improved service and other matters in the public interest to determine whether the acquisition will assist in effectuating the over-all transportation policy.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

HN5 Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

Even though a railroad acquisition might otherwise violate the antitrust laws, Congress has authorized the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve them, if it finds they are in the public interest, because it recognized that in some circumstances they were appropriate for effectuation of the national transportation policy. It was informed that this policy would be furthered by encouraging the organization of stronger units in the industry. And in authorizing those acquisitions it did not import the general policies of the anti-trust laws as a measure of their permissibility. It in terms relieved participants in appropriate acquisitions from the requirements of those laws. § 5(11) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(11). It must be presumed that, in enacting this legislation, Congress took account of the fact that railroads are subject to strict regulation and supervision. Against this background, no other inference is possible but that, as a factor in determining the propriety of railroad acquisitions the preservation of competition among carriers, although still a value, is significant chiefly as it aids in the attainment of the objectives of the national transportation policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Railroads

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Common Carriers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

HN6 Transportation, Railroads

As respects railroad acquisitions, the Interstate Commerce Commission is not so bound by the antitrust laws that it must permit them to overbear what it finds to be in the public interest. A contrary view would, in effect, permit the Commission to authorize only those acquisitions which would not offend those laws. This would render meaningless the exemption relieving the participants in a properly approved acquisition of the requirements of those antitrust laws. Resolution of the conflicting considerations is a complex task which requires extensive facilities, expert judgment and considerable knowledge of the transportation industry. Congress left that task to the Commission to the end that the wisdom and experience of that Commission may be used not only in connection with this form of transportation, but in its coordination of all other forms. The wisdom and experience of that Commission, not of the courts, must determine whether the proposed acquisition is consistent with the public interest.

HÌ FÁMEJEFÍ HÆFI HÀ ÆUÆÓÐEGGI ÆREGGJ LÁ ÁSE ÓAÐGA AGH ÆREGGHÁFÍ JÁMEJESÓY Q/A GÁTHA

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

**HN7** Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

Congress has left the task of making the determination as to the effects of a railroad acquisition on competition to the wisdom and experience of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Where the determination it makes rests upon adequate findings which are, in turn, supported by substantial evidence, it is well within the limits of its discretion under the Interstate Commerce Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

**HN8** Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 10 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 20, prohibits a common carrier engaged in commerce from having any dealings in securities of more than $ 50,000, in the aggregate, in any one year, with another corporation, when the said common carrier shall have upon its board of directors any person who is at the same time a director of such other corporation, except such purchases as shall be made by competitive bidding under regulations to be prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

**HN9** Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The evident purpose of § 10 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 20, was to prohibit a corporation from abusing a carrier by palming off upon it securities, supplies and other articles without competitive bidding and at excessive prices through overreaching by, or other misfeasance of, common directors, to the financial injury of the carrier and the consequent impairment of its ability to serve the public interest. Even if a purchase of securities might, under other circumstances, violate § 10 of the Clayton Act, Congress, by § 5(11) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(11), has authorized the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve it if it finds that so doing is in the public interest. Congress has expressly said that, upon such approval, the carrier shall be relieved from the operation of the anti-trust laws.

HÍ FÁMEÐAÐI HÆFI HLÀ ÆÐEÐEGGI ÞEÐGGJ LÁ Á SEÐAÐEGGA ÁGG HÆÐEGGLÁJÍ JÁMEÐAÐOÝÐAÐAÐI

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

HN10 [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 10 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 20, is included in the "anti-trust laws" referred to in § 5(11) of the Interstate Commerce Act (ICA), 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(11). Section 1 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 12, provides that: "anti-trust laws," as used in §§ 12, 13, 14-21, and 22-27 of this title, includes §§ 1-27 of this title. Moreover, § 5(11) of the ICA, 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(11), avoids any ambiguity by including all other restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law, Federal, State, or municipal.

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Decisions > Contents

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Administrative Law > ... > Formal Adjudicatory Procedure > Hearings > General Overview

HN11 [ ] Decisions, Contents

The Administrative Procedure Act (APA) applies to proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission. The last sentence of § 8(b) of the APA, 5 U.S.C.S. § 1007\(b\), provides in part: All administrative decisions shall become a part of the record and include a statement of: (1) findings and conclusions, as well as the reasons or basis therefor, upon all the material issues of fact, law, or discretion presented on the record; and (2) the appropriate rule, order, sanction, relief, or denial thereof.

Administrative Law > ... > Formal Adjudicatory Procedure > Hearings > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

HN12 [ ] Formal Adjudicatory Procedure, Hearings

By the express terms of § 8(b) of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C.S. § 1007\(b\), the Interstate Commerce Commission is not required to make subordinate findings on every collateral contention advanced, but only upon those issues of fact, law, or discretion which are material.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

Several rail carriers made rival applications to the Interstate Commerce Commission under 5(2) of the Interstate Commerce Act for authority to acquire control of another railroad company. The commission decided in favor of two applicants for joint control which proposed continued operation of the railroad company as a separate and independent carrier. (295 ICC 523.) The unsuccessful applicant then filed a complaint in the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota to vacate the commission's order. Various parties intervened. A three-judge court sustained the order. (165 F Supp 893.)

HÍ FÁMEJEFÍ HÉAFÍ HLA ÉAUÉOÉGGI ÉTEGGJ LÁ ÁSEÓAÉGGÁÁGGHÁÉGGHÁJÍ JÁMEJÉSÓYÓÁGÁÉGGH

On separate appeals, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment below. In an opinion by Whittaker, J., it was held that the order was within the discretion of the commission, even though the acquisition may have violated antitrust laws, and that the commission did not violate the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act requiring that all administrative decisions include a statement of findings upon all material issues.

Douglas, J., dissented without opinion.

Headnotes

---

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > findings -- consolidation -- public interest. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

Findings, made by the Interstate Commerce Commission upon applications by several rail carriers under 5(2) of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5(2)) for authority to acquire control of another railroad company, that the public interest would be best served by the continued operation of the latter company as a separate and independent carrier, as proposed by the successful applicant, do not deprive the unsuccessful applicant of fair comparative consideration, and are adequately supported by subsidiary findings that the unsuccessful applicant's plan contemplated the disappearance of the railroad company as an independent and neutral connection for the other 15 carriers with which it presently worked, that certain features of that plan would be extremely harmful to other carriers, that the plan contemplated the elimination of the railroad company's offices and the separation of its employees, and that numerous witnesses testified that the separate and independent operation of the railroad company under its present local management was a public necessity.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > consolidation -- antitrust laws. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Although 5(11) of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5(11)), providing that the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve combinations and consolidations of carriers under 5 shall be "exclusive and plenary," does not authorize the commission to ignore the antitrust laws, the commission is not to measure proposals for acquisition by one rail carrier of control of another by the standards of the antitrust laws, the problem being one of accommodation of 5(2) and the antitrust legislation, and the commission remaining obligated to estimate the scope and appraise the effects of the curtailment of competition which will result from the proposed acquisition and consider them along with the advantages of improved service and other matters in the public interest to determine whether the acquisition will assist in effectuating the over-all national transportation policy.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > consolidation -- antitrust laws. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

HÍ FÁMEJEFÍ HÉAFÍ HLÀ ÉAUÉOÉGGJ ÉAEGGJ LÁ ÁSEÓAÉGGÁÁGGHÁÉGGHÁJÍ JÁMEJÉSÓYÓÁGGHÁ

It must be presumed that, in enacting 5(11) of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5(11)), which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve acquisition by one rail carrier of control of another, if it finds it is in the public interest and which relieves participants in appropriate acquisitions from the requirements of the antitrust laws, Congress took account of the fact that railroads are subject to strict regulation and supervision.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > consolidation -- antitrust laws. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

As respects acquisition by one rail carrier of control of another, the Interstate Commerce Commission is not so bound by the antitrust laws that it must permit them to overbear what it finds to be in the public interest.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §255 > INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §176 > review -- consolidation. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The wisdom and experience of the Interstate Commerce Commission, not of the courts, must determine whether the proposed acquisition by one rail carrier of control of another is consistent with the public interest.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §176 > review -- discretion -- consolidation. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

A determination, made by the Interstate Commerce Commission upon applications by several rival rail carriers under 5(2) of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5(2)) for authority to acquire control of another railroad company, that the acquisition and plan of operation by the successful applicant would not result in any significant lessening of competition is within the limits of the commission's discretion where it rests upon adequate findings which are, in turn, supported by substantial evidence.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §5 > consolidation -- Clayton Act. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Section 10 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 20), which prohibits a common carrier from having any dealings in securities of more than a specified amount with another corporation when the carrier has upon its board of directors a person who is at the same time a director of such corporation, excepting purchases made by competitive bidding under regulations to be prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, is an antitrust law within the meaning of the rule that, as respects acquisition by one rail carrier of control of another, the commission is not so bound by the antitrust laws that it must permit them to overbear what it finds to be in the public interest.

HÌ FÁMEJEFÍ HÆFI HÀ ÆUÆÓÐEGGI ÆREGGJÁ ÁSEÐAÆGA AGGHÆREGHLÁJÍ JÁMEJESÓYÓÐAÆGHLÍ

SECURITIES REGULATION §3 > carriers -- purpose of statute. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

The purpose of 10 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 20) is to prohibit a corporation from abusing a carrier by palming off upon it securities, supplies, and other articles without competitive bidding and at excessive prices through overreaching by, or other misfeasance of, common directors to the financial injury of the carrier and the consequent impairment of its ability to serve the public interest.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > discretion -- consolidation. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

The approval, under 5(2) of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5(2)), by the Interstate Commerce Commission of contracts under which a rail carrier proposes to acquire a 50 per cent interest in the stock of another rail carrier does not exceed the statutory limits of the commission's discretion, even though the contracts are in violation of 10 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 20), dealing with purchases by common carriers in case of interlocking directorates.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > consolidation -- antitrust laws. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

Apart from criminal prosecutions, approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission of acquisition by one rail carrier of control of another operates under 5(11) of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5(11)) to relieve the acquiring carrier from the operation of the antitrust laws.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §4 > INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §8 > statute. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

The Administrative Procedure Act (5 USC 1001 et seq.) applies to proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §157 > findings. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

The requirement of 8(b) of the Administrative Procedure Act (5 USC 1007\(b\)) that all administrative decisions shall include a statement of findings and conclusions upon all material issues is satisfied where an administrative agency, although making no specific finding upon a contention, considers and discusses it.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §155 > findings. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

HÍ FÁMEJEFÍ HÉAFÍ HLÀ CÁJÉO ÓEGGI ÓEGGI LÁ ÁSEÓA ÓEGGA ÁGGHÁFEEGHÁFÍ JÁMEJESÓYÓGÁGÍ

Section 8(b) of the Administrative Procedure Act (5 USC 1007\(b\)), providing that all administrative decisions shall include a statement of findings and conclusions upon all material issues of fact does not require findings upon contentions that are collateral or immaterial.

APPEAL §1646 > affirmance -- insufficient reasons of court below. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Whether or not the United States Supreme Court approves all of the reasons and legal conclusions of the District Court, its judgment sustaining an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission will be affirmed, where the District Court fairly considered and decided all of the issues raised by appellants, accorded to them a full and fair judicial review, and reached a right result.

Syllabus

---

Under § 5 (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act, the Commission was confronted with rival applications by several railroads for authority to acquire control of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, an independent, short-line, "bridge carrier" of through east-west traffic by-passing the congested Chicago and St. Louis gateways and connecting with 16 other railroads. After extended hearings, the Commission found that the plan for joint control of Western by the Santa Fe and Pennsylvania Railroads contemplated that Western would continue to be operated as a separate and independent carrier with responsible local management and that all existing routes via Western would be maintained and kept open without discrimination between connecting lines of railroads; but that the plan of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad to acquire sole control of Western contemplated its disappearance as an independent and neutral connection for 15 other carriers, that it would be extremely harmful to other carriers and that it would result in termination of the employment of most of Western's [****2] 24 executives and 225 other employees. The Commission concluded that the acquisition and plan of operation by the Santa Fe and Pennsylvania, subject to stated conditions, was within the scope of § 5 (2) of the Act, that the proposed terms and conditions were just and reasonable, and that the transaction would be consistent with the public interest. It, therefore, approved the Santa Fe-Pennsylvania application, dismissed the Minneapolis application, and denied applications by several intervening railroads for permission to participate in the acquisition of Western's stock. The District Court sustained the Commission's order. Held: The judgment is affirmed. Pp. 176-194.

1. The record shows that the Commission's finding that continued operation of Western as a "separate and independent carrier" was required by the "public interest" did not deprive the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad of "fair comparative consideration" and that it was made after full and fair consideration; and the District Court did not err in so holding. Pp. 184-185.

2. Notwithstanding appellants' contention that acquisition of Western by Santa Fe and Pennsylvania would create a combination in restraint [****3] of commerce in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act and would lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, the record shows that the Commission fully estimated the scope and appraised the effects of any resulting curtailment of competition and concluded that the proposed acquisition and plan of operation would not result in any significant lessening of competition; and this determination rests upon adequate findings, supported by substantial evidence, and is well within the limits of the Commission's discretion under the Act. Pp. 185-189.

(a) Although § 5 (11) does not authorize the Commission to "ignore" the antitrust laws, it does authorize the Commission to approve acquisitions which might otherwise violate the antitrust laws, if it finds that such acquisitions are in the public interest, and, upon approval of the acquisitions by the Commission, it relieves the acquiring carriers from the operation of the antitrust laws. Pp. 185-187.

HÍ FÁMEJEFÍ HÆFI HLA ÆUÆÓÐEGGI ÞEYGGJ LÁ ÁSEÐA ÆGGA ÁGGHÆFEGHLÁFJÍ JÁMEJESÓÝÓÐAGHÉTH

(b) As respects railroad acquisitions, the Commission is not so bound by the antitrust laws that it must permit them to overbear what it finds to be in the public interest, and the wisdom and experience [***4] of the Commission, not of the courts, must determine whether the proposed acquisition is in the public interest. Pp. 187-188.

(c) The Commission gave extensive consideration to this contention of appellants and determined that the acquisition of Western by Santa Fe and Pennsylvania and their plan of operation of Western would not result in any significant lessening of competition; and that determination was based upon adequate findings, supported by substantial evidence, and was well within the limits of the Commission's discretion under the Act. Pp. 188-189.

3. Notwithstanding appellants' contention that Pennsylvania actually contracted to purchase 50% of Western's stock from a trust company which had four common directors with Pennsylvania and that such purchase would violate § 10 of the Clayton Act, the Commission's action in approving Pennsylvania's acquisition of the stock, after fully considering all factors bearing thereon, did not exceed the statutory limits of the Commission's discretion. Pp. 189-191.

4. Whether or not § 5 (11) operates only in futuro is immaterial in this case, since the existing contractual arrangements through which Pennsylvania asked authority [***5] to acquire 50% of Western's stock looked entirely to the future. Pp. 191-192.

5. Notwithstanding appellants' contention that the Commission violated § 8 (b) of the Administrative Procedure Act by failing to make findings which, they think, were compelled by the evidence, the record discloses that the Commission made adequate subsidiary findings upon all material issues and made the ultimate findings required by § 5 (2), that they support the Commission's order and that they are, in turn, supported by substantial evidence. Pp. 192-194.

6. The District Court fairly considered and decided all of the issues raised by appellants, accorded to them a full and fair judicial review, and reached a right result. P. 194.

Counsel: Max Swiren and Harold J. Soderberg argued the cause for appellants. Max Swiren, John G. Dorsey and Richard Musenbrock were on the brief for the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Co., appellant in No. 12; Parnell Donohue, Attorney General of South Dakota, Herman L. Bode, Assistant Attorney General, and Ernest W. Stephens for the State of South Dakota et al., appellants in No. 27; and Miles Lord, Attorney General of Minnesota, and Harold J. Soderberg, Assistant Attorney General, [***6] for the State of Minnesota et al., appellants in No. 28.

Robert W. Ginnane and Starr Thomas argued the cause for appellees. Solicitor General Rankin, Acting Assistant Attorney General Bicks, Richard A. Solomon, Robert W. Ginnane and B. Franklin Taylor, Jr. were on the brief for the United States and the Interstate Commerce Commission; Grenville Beardsley, Attorney General of Illinois, and Harry R. Begley, Special Assistant Attorney General, for the State of Illinois; Starr Thomas, Carl E. Bagge and Edwin A. Lucas for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. et al.; and Robert H. Walker for certain municipalities and shippers et al., appellees.

Judges: Warren, Black, Frankfurter, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Whittaker, Stewart

Opinion by: WHITTAKER

Opinion

---

[*176] [***226] [**232] MR. JUSTICE WHITTAKER delivered the opinion of the Court.

HÍ FÁMEJEFÍ HÉFI Í LÀ ÉAUÉÓDEGGI ÉTEGHGLÁ ÁSEÓAÉGÁÁGGHÁEEGGÍ LAFJÍ JÁMEJESÓYÓQÁÁGGHÍ

These appeals present questions arising out of rival applications by several rail carriers to the Interstate Commerce Commission under § 5 (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act <sup>1</sup> for authority to acquire control of Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad Company.

[***7] [*177] "Western [**233]" is an independent, short-line "bridge carrier" <sup>2</sup> of through east-west traffic bypassing the congested Chicago gateway. Its line is about 234 miles long, extending from its connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company ("Pennsylvania") at Effner, on the Illinois-Indiana state line, westward, through Peoria, to its connection [*227] with the main line of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company ("Santa Fe") at Lomax, Illinois, and thence southwesterly a short distance to Keokuk, Iowa. Its headquarters, shops and yards are located in East Peoria where it has 24 executives and where, and elsewhere along its line, it has about 225 other employees. It has connections for the interchange of traffic with 16 railroads, the principal ones being with the Pennsylvania at Effner, with the Santa Fe at Lomax, and with the New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Company ("Nickel Plate"), the Illinois Terminal Railroad Company, the [*178] Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company ("Burlington") and the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company ("Minneapolis") at Peoria. Its interchange connections with the other 10 railroads are at 17 other towns [***8] along its line.

Western has outstanding 90,000 shares of common capital stock, 82% of which is owned by the testamentary trustees of the estate of George P. McNear -- Wilmington Trust Company and Guy Gladson -- and the remaining 18% is owned by members of the McNear family, a bank and the president of Western. In 1954, the trustees determined to sell their Western stock, and rival efforts were commenced by Minneapolis, on the one hand, and by

<sup>1</sup> Section 5 (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act (24 Stat. 380, as amended, 54 Stat. 905, 49 U. S. C. § 5 (2)) HN1 provides, in pertinent part, that:

"(a) It shall be lawful, with the approval and authorization of the Commission, as provided in subdivision (b) of this paragraph --

"(i) for . . . two or more carriers jointly, to acquire control of another through ownership of its stock or otherwise . . . .

. . . .

"(b) Whenever a transaction is proposed under subdivision (a) of this paragraph, the carrier . . . seeking authority therefor shall present an application to the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall notify . . . [designated parties], and shall afford reasonable opportunity for interested parties to be heard. If the Commission shall consider it necessary in order to determine whether the findings specified below may properly be made, it shall set said application for public hearing; and a public hearing shall be held in all cases where carriers by railroad are involved unless the Commission determines that a public hearing is not necessary in the public interest. If the Commission finds that, subject to such terms and conditions and such modifications as it shall find to be just and reasonable, the proposed transaction is within the scope of subdivision (a) of this paragraph and will be consistent with the public interest, it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such transaction, upon the terms and conditions, and with the modifications, so found to be just and reasonable . . . .

HN2 "(c) In passing upon any proposed transaction under the provisions of this paragraph, the Commission shall give weight to the following considerations, among others: (1) The effect of the proposed transaction upon adequate transportation service to the public; (2) the effect upon the public interest of the inclusion, or failure to include, other railroads in the territory involved in the proposed transaction; (3) the total fixed charges resulting from the proposed transaction; and (4) the interest of the carrier employees affected.

"(d) The Commission shall have authority in the case of a proposed transaction under this paragraph involving a railroad or railroads, as a prerequisite to its approval of the proposed transaction, to require, upon equitable terms, the inclusion of another railroad or other railroads in the territory involved, upon petition by such railroad or railroads requesting such inclusion, and upon a finding that such inclusion is consistent with the public interest.

. . . .

"(f) As a condition of its approval, under this paragraph, of any transaction involving a carrier or carriers by railroad subject to the provisions of this chapter, the Commission shall require a fair and equitable arrangement to protect the interests of the railroad employees affected. . . ."

<sup>2</sup> The term "bridge carrier" appears to mean a short-line carrier which transports through traffic from one long-line carrier to another.

HÍ FÁMEÐAÐI HÆFI Í LA ÆÐEÐEGGI ÐEÐGHLÁ ÆÐEÐGA ÐEÐGHLÁ ÐEÐGHLÁ ÐEÐGHLÁ ÐEÐGHLÁ ÐEÐGHLÁ

the Santa Fe and Pennsylvania, on the other hand, to purchase it. (Four of Wilmington Trust Company's directors were also directors of Pennsylvania.) Those negotiations culminated in a contract between the trustees and the Santa Fe, dated May 26, 1955, providing for the sale by the former and purchase by the latter of the stock at a price of $ 135 per share, subject to the Commission's approval.<sup>3</sup> Soon afterward, [**234] like agreements [***9] [*179] were made by the Santa Fe with the holders of the remaining 18% of the Western stock.

[***10] On June 28, 1955, the Santa Fe entered into a contract to sell to the Pennsylvania Company, a wholly owned subsidiary of Pennsylvania, 50% of the outstanding capital stock of Western at $ 135 per share,<sup>4</sup> subject [***228] to approval of the Commission.

[***11] On July 8, 1955, the Santa Fe and Pennsylvania Company and its parent, Pennsylvania, applied to the Commission under § 5 (2) of the Act<sup>5</sup> for approval of [*180] those stock purchase agreements and the consequent joint control of Western. The Minneapolis intervened and objected to the application, as did also the States of Minnesota and South Dakota and their respective public service regulatory commissions.

Thereafter, on October 13, 1955, the Minneapolis applied to the Commission, under the same section of the Act, for authority to acquire sole control of Western, expressing its willingness to enter into contracts with Western's stockholders to purchase their stock at the same price and on the same terms as set forth in their existing contracts with the Santa Fe. The Santa Fe, the Pennsylvania Company and Pennsylvania intervened in the latter proceeding and objected to the Minneapolis application.

On motion of Minneapolis, the Commission consolidated the two proceedings. Thereafter, seven [***12] other railroads having interchange connections with Western's line intervened. Two of them sought authority, at all events,<sup>6</sup> and two others of them sought authority, under stated conditions,<sup>7</sup> to participate, under [**235] § 5 (2)(d)

<sup>3</sup> During the negotiations, Minneapolis first offered $ 69.50, and later $ 80, per share for the stock. On April 15, 1955, the Santa Fe and Pennsylvania each obtained letter commitments from the trustees for the sale to each of them of 26% of the Western stock at a price of $ 100 per share. (Near the same time the Rock Island made a like offer to the trustees for 26% of the Western stock, but that offer was not accepted.) But a dispute arose -- and apparently still exists between the trustees and Pennsylvania -- with respect to the validity of those commitments. Thereupon, Minneapolis offered the trustees $ 133 per share for the Western stock, but that offer was not accepted, and on May 26, 1955, the Santa Fe, acting, as the Commission found, "on behalf of that carrier alone," agreed with the trustees for the sale by the latter and purchase by the former of all the Western stock held by the trustees at a price of $ 135 per share, and those parties on that date entered into a contract, accordingly, subject to approval of the Commission.

<sup>4</sup> The contract of June 28, 1955, between the Santa Fe and the Pennsylvania Company provided that it was without prejudice to any claims, causes of action or rights which Pennsylvania may have against the trustees of the McNear estate with respect to the letter commitment of April 15, 1955, for the sale by the trustees to Pennsylvania of 26% of the Western stock; and that, in the event Pennsylvania should acquire from the trustees, under that letter commitment, all or any part of such shares, the obligation of the Santa Fe under the contract to sell Western shares to the Pennsylvania Company was to be reduced accordingly. It appears that litigation was then, and is yet, pending by Pennsylvania against the trustees for the enforcement of the letter commitment of April 15, 1955.

The contract also contained a covenant which, in essence, provided that (1) Western "will continue to be operated as a separate and independent carrier with responsible management located along its lines in order to preserve to shippers and communities the present direct access to its officials," (2) that Western's properties will be maintained and improved, (3) that Western "will continue to maintain its own solicitation forces and will be entirely free to solicit traffic in such manner as best to serve the interests of" Western, (4) that all "existing routes and channels of trade via [Western] will be maintained and kept open without discrimination between connecting lines of railroad," and (5) that the Board of Directors of Western shall consist of 11 members, of whom one shall be the president of the company, two shall be officers of the Santa Fe, two shall be officers of the Pennsylvania Company, or Pennsylvania, or both, and the remaining six shall be prominent citizens not connected with either of the parties but selected by them through mutual agreement.

<sup>5</sup> See note 1.

HÍ FÁMEJÉTI HÉFTI ELÀ €ÁUÉDZGJÉEGHÍ LÁ ÁSEÓaÉCAÁGHÉTEGÍ LAFJÍ JÁMEJÉSÓYÓGÁHÉTEGÍ

of the Act, [*181] in the acquisition of the Western stock on an equal basis with the successful applicant. The State of Illinois, 18 cities or towns and seven chambers of commerce located on or along Western's line, two labor organizations representing Western's employees, [**229] and a large number of shippers over Western's line, intervened in support of the Santa Fe-Pennsylvania application and in opposition to the Minneapolis application.

[****13] After an extended consolidated hearing before him, the Commission's examiner issued a proposed report recommending approval of the Santa Fe-Pennsylvania application and dismissal of the Minneapolis application. Thereafter, upon exceptions, and briefs and arguments in their support, Division 4 of the Commission issued its report. It was confronted, as it said, with four alternative proposals, (1) for authorization of joint control of Western by the Santa Fe and Pennsylvania, (2) for authorization of sole control by the Minneapolis, (3) for authorization of two other railroads, at all events, and of two more railroads, under stated conditions, to participate in the acquisition of the Western stock on an equal basis with the successful applicant,<sup>8</sup> and (4) denial of both applications.

The Commission observed that "these proceedings represent a new and more complicated phase in the administration of section 5, since [they involve] 2 applications for authority to control the same property, and [****14] petitions by 4 other carriers for inclusion in the transaction under varying circumstances." It recognized that, under § 5 (2) [*182] of the Act and the National Transportation Policy,<sup>9</sup> it was required to "weigh whether each application is consistent with the public interest, with or without inclusion of other railroads, considering not only other intervening petitioners seeking such inclusion but also the other applicant and nonparticipating railroads as well." It thought that the burden of proof was "most heavy for an applicant in a proceeding like this, because it must not only overbalance the claims of those seeking to share in the control but also of those seeking to exclude it from the transaction." It conceived it to be its duty, under the Act and the National Transportation Policy, to "arrive at a standard of public interest and determine which of the various plans of control most nearly approximates it."

The Commission found that the Santa Fe-Pennsylvania [****15] plan contemplates that Western "will continue to be operated as a separate and independent carrier with responsible management located along its lines"; that it "will continue to maintain its own solicitation forces and will be entirely free to solicit traffic in such manner as best to serve the interests of the Western," and that all "existing routes and channels of trade via the Western will be maintained and kept open without discrimination between connecting lines of railroad." It found, [**236] on the other hand, that the Minneapolis plan "unequivocally contemplates the disappearance of the Western as an independent and neutral connection for the other 15 carriers with which it presently works"; that "for all practical purposes the Western would be integrated, consolidated, and merged into the Minneapolis for ownership, management, and operation"; that features of the Minneapolis plan "would be extremely harmful to other carriers"; that Western's headquarters office at Peoria would be eliminated, leaving only a trainmaster and a roadmaster at <sup>6</sup>The New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Company ("Nickel Plate") and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Company ("Rock Island") sought authority, under § 5 (2)(d) of the Act (see note 1), to be included in the acquisition of Western's stock on an equal basis with the successful applicant or applicants.

<sup>7</sup>The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company ("Burlington") and the Wabash Railroad Company ("Wabash") did not object to approval of the Santa Fe-Pennsylvania application, provided the order required continuation of present routes and channels of trade via existing junctions and gateways and of all existing traffic and operating relations and arrangements, but they asked, in the event any railroad other than the Santa Fe and Pennsylvania be authorized to acquire an interest in Western's stock, that they, too, be authorized to participate therein to the same extent as any such other railroad.

The Illinois Central Railroad Company ("Illinois Central"), the Gulf, Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company ("Gulf") and the Chicago & North Western Railway Company ("North Western") asked that, if either application be approved, the order be conditioned to require the maintenance of all routes and channels of trade via existing gateways. The Monon Railroad Company asked that if the Santa Fe-Pennsylvania application be approved, the order contain a requirement that Pennsylvania shall grant to it certain trackage rights, and, if not done, that the Santa Fe-Pennsylvania application be denied.

<sup>8</sup>See notes 6 and 7.

<sup>9</sup>49 U. S. C., n. preceding § 1, 54 Stat. 899.

HÌ FÁMEJEFÍ HÉFÍ GLÀ ÉAUÉDZGJÉEGHÍ LÁ ÁSEÓAÉCAÁGHÉTEGGJLÁFJÍ JÁMEJESÓYÓGÁGHÉFFÍ

[*183] that point, and that the employment of most of Western's 24 executives and 225 other employees would be severed.

The Commission [****16] further found [***230] that "only the Minneapolis and its supporting interveners, the States of Minnesota and South Dakota, advocate the disappearance of the Western as a separate and independent operating carrier," and that all other parties to, and intervenors in, the proceedings "insist that the separate and independent operation of the Western under its present local management is a public necessity." It then found that the "public interest demands that the present policies of the Western in all respects be continued." It thereupon made the ultimate finding, required by § 5 (2)(b) of the Act, that the acquisition and plan of operation by the Santa Fe and Pennsylvania, subject to stated conditions, was "within the scope of section 5 (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended; that the terms and conditions proposed [by them] are just and reasonable, and that the transaction will be consistent with the public interest." The Commission then entered its order approving the Santa Fe-Pennsylvania application, dismissing the Minneapolis application, and denying the petitions of the several intervening railroads which sought to participate in the acquisition of the Western stock. [****17] 295 I. C. C. 523.

Thereafter, Minneapolis petitioned the whole Commission for a reconsideration, and alternatively requested that, if the approval of the Santa Fe-Pennsylvania application be permitted to stand, it be authorized to participate equally with those railroads in the purchase of Western's stock on the same terms. That petition was denied.

Minneapolis then timely filed a complaint in the District Court for Minnesota against the United States and the Interstate Commerce Commission to vacate the Commission's order. The States of Minnesota and South Dakota and their respective regulatory commissions, [*184] being interested in strengthening the Minneapolis, which operates in those States, intervened in support of the complaint. The defendants answered, asserting the full legality of the Commission's order. The Santa Fe, the Pennsylvania, the Pennsylvania Company, the State of Illinois, the 18 cities and seven chambers of commerce and the numerous shippers who were intervenors before the Commission, intervened in opposition to the complaint. The Nickel Plate intervened, complaining that the Commission had improperly denied its request to participate [****18] in the purchase of the Western stock.

A three-judge court was convened and, after hearing, rendered its opinion and judgment sustaining the Commission's order. 165 F.Supp. 893. On separate appeals by the Minneapolis, the State of Minnesota and its regulatory commission, and the State of South Dakota and its regulatory commission, the case was brought here and we noted probable jurisdiction. 359 U.S. 933. All of those who were defendants and intervenors in opposition to the complaint in the District Court, except the Nickel Plate, are appellees in this Court.

Minneapolis, supported by the States of Minnesota and South Dakota, contends, first, that the Commission improperly adopted at the outset of its report the standard of "separate and independent management" of Western as the criterion governing the comparative [**237] merits of the rival plans, which was antithetic to its application, and thereby deprived it of "fair comparative consideration," and that the District Court erred in approving the Commission's action.

LEdHN[1] [1]The record does not support that [***231] contention. Rather, it shows that the Commission's governing standard was the "public [****19] interest," although it ultimately did find that the public interest would be best served by Western's continued operation as a "separate and independent carrier." We believe that the recited findings show that the Commission [*185] carefully "weighed" and considered "each application" in its labors to determine which, if either, of them was "consistent with the public interest." Its subsidiary findings (a) that the Minneapolis plan "unequivocally contemplates the disappearance of the Western as an independent and neutral connection for the other 15 carriers with which it presently works," (b) that certain features of the Minneapolis plan "would be extremely harmful to other carriers," (c) that the Minneapolis plan contemplates the elimination of Western's office and the separation of its employees, and (d) that numerous witnesses insisted "that the separate and independent operation of the Western under its present local management is a public necessity," fully support its conclusional finding that the "public interest demands that the present policies of the Western in all respects be continued." That finding, though antithetic to Minneapolis' application, did not deprive it [****20] of "fair comparative consideration," but, on the contrary, it seems to us, was made by the Commission after full and fair consideration, and the District Court did not err in so holding.

HÌ FÁMÈJÉFÍ HÉFÍ I LÀ €ÙÉDZGJÉECHÍ LÀ ÁSÉOÀÉCAÁGHÉEFLÁJÍ JÁMÈJÉSÓYÓGÁHÉE

Appellants' principal contention appears to be that acquisition of control of Western by Santa Fe and Pennsylvania will create a combination in restraint of commerce in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act<sup>10</sup> and will lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act,<sup>11</sup> and that the Commission's approval of their application was an abuse of power.

On their face these contentions would seem to run in the teeth of the language and purpose of § 5 (11) of the Interstate Commerce Act. That section, in substance, HN3<sup>12</sup> provides that "The authority conferred by this section shall be exclusive and plenary, and any carrier or corporation [*186] participating in . . . any transaction approved by the Commission thereunder, shall have [***21] full power . . . to carry such transaction into effect and to own and operate any properties and exercise any control or franchises acquired through said transaction . . . and any carriers . . . participating in a transaction approved or authorized under the provisions of this section shall be and they are hereby relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws and of all other restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law . . . insofar as may be necessary to enable [it] to carry into effect the transaction so approved or provided for in accordance with the terms and conditions, if any, imposed by the Commission, and to hold, maintain, and operate any properties and exercise any control or franchises acquired through such transaction." 24 Stat. 380, as amended, 54 Stat. 908, 49 U. S. C. § 5 (11).

LEdHN[2]<sup>13</sup> [2]Section 5 (11) HN4<sup>14</sup> is both a more recent and a more specific expression of congressional policy than § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 7 of the Clayton Act, and in terms relieves the acquiring carrier, upon approval by the Commission of the acquisition, "from the operation of the antitrust [***232] laws . . ." Although § 5 (11) does not authorize the Commission to "ignore" the antitrust laws, [***22] McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67, 80, there can be "little doubt that the Commission is not to measure proposals for [acquisitions] [**238] by the standards of the antitrust laws." 321 U.S., at 85-86. The problem is one of accommodation of § 5 (2) and the antitrust legislation. The Commission remains obligated to "estimate the scope and appraise the effects of the curtailment of competition which will result from the proposed [acquisition] and consider them along with the advantages of improved service [and other matters in the public interest] to determine whether the [acquisition] will assist in effectuating the over-all transportation policy." 321 U.S., at 87.

[*187] LEdHN[3]<sup>15</sup> [3]HN5<sup>16</sup> Even though such acquisitions might otherwise violate the antitrust laws, Congress has authorized the Commission to approve them, if it finds they are in the public interest, "because it recognized that in some circumstances they were appropriate for effectuation of the national transportation policy. It was informed that this policy would be furthered by 'encouraging the organization of stronger units' in the . . . industry. And in [***23] authorizing those [acquisitions] it did not import the general policies of the anti-trust laws as a measure of their permissibility. It in terms relieved participants in appropriate [acquisitions] from the requirements of those laws. § 5 (11)." 321 U.S., at 85. It must be presumed that, in enacting this legislation, Congress took account of the fact that railroads are subject to strict regulation and supervision. "Against this background, no other inference is possible but that, as a factor in determining the propriety of [railroad acquisitions] the preservation of competition among carriers, although still a value, is significant chiefly as it aids in the attainment of the objectives of the national transportation policy." 321 U.S., at 85-86.

LEdHN[4]<sup>17</sup> [4]LEdHN[5]<sup>18</sup> [5]HN6<sup>19</sup> As respects railroad acquisitions, the Commission is not so bound by the antitrust laws that it must permit them to overbear what it finds to be in "the public interest." A contrary view would, in effect, permit the Commission to authorize only those acquisitions which would not offend those laws. "As has been said, this would render meaningless the exemption relieving the participants in a properly approved [***24] [acquisition] of the requirements of those laws . . ." 321 U.S., at 86. Resolution of the conflicting considerations "is a complex task which requires extensive facilities, expert judgment and considerable knowledge of the transportation industry. Congress left that task to the Commission 'to the end that the wisdom and experience of that Commission may be used not only in connection with this form of transportation, [*188] but in its coordination of all other forms.' 79 Cong. Rec. 12207. 'The wisdom and experience of that commission,' not of the courts, must determine whether the proposed [acquisition] is 'consistent with the public interest.' Cf. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois Central R. Co., 215 U.S. 452; Pennsylvania Co. v. United States, 236 U.S. 351; United States v. Chicago Heights Trucking Co., 310 U.S. 344; Purcell v. United States, 315 U.S. 381." 321 U.S., at 87-88.

<sup>10</sup> 15 U. S. C. § 1, 26 Stat. 209.

<sup>11</sup> 15 U. S. C. § 18, 38 Stat. 731.

HÌ FÁMÈJÉFÍ HÉFÍ Í LÀ €ÁU ĐÓ ĐÁGGÉECHÍ LÀ ÁSEÓA ÉCA AGHÉEFGHGLÁJÍ JÁMÈJÉSÓYÓGÁGÉEFG

Here, the Commission gave extensive consideration to the anti-competitive [***233] contentions advanced by appellants, devoting more than five pages of its report [****25] to that matter. It found that "all the carriers endeavoring to participate in its control are in competition with Western"; that the "important thing is not whether there is possibility of competition, but whether there is probability of existing or potential competition being diminished or strangled by the Western under the control of the Santa Fe and the Pennsylvania." After an extended analysis of the complex facts and conflicting evidence, the Commission found that control of Western by the Santa Fe and Pennsylvania [**239] would not result in any significant lessening of competition. It pointed to the fact that although the Santa Fe's "long haul" is to Chicago and the Pennsylvania's "next to longest haul" is also to Chicago (its longest haul being to St. Louis) the Santa Fe has agreed, and is bound, "to place Lomax on a parity with Chicago from a solicitation standpoint, and . . . the Pennsylvania will recognize Effner as one of its principal interchanges along with Chicago and St. Louis"; that "there may be some diversion of traffic, but such diversion would not jeopardize the maintenance of adequate transportation service by the objecting intervening carriers."

The Commission [****26] also pointed to the fact that Western had been in a prolonged receivership until 1927 when George P. McNear acquired its stock at a receiver's sale, [*189] Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. Acquisition, 124 I. C. C. 181. It further found that Western's modern existence began at that time and, under the guidance of McNear, was built into a fine railroad; that since McNear's death, in 1947, the present management has continued, with much success, the policies he established. Those policies, the Commission found, were, and are, "to maintain strict neutrality between all connections, and to participate in any haul of traffic no matter how slight [as a bridge] carrier through Peoria as an alternative route, bypassing the congested terminals of Chicago and St. Louis," and that those policies are to be continued under the Santa Fe-Pennsylvania plan.

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]We think it is clear from this summary of its analysis and findings that the Commission fully estimated the scope and appraised the effects of any curtailment of competition which might result from the acquisition of Western by the Santa Fe and Pennsylvania, and, after having done so, concluded that their acquisition and plan [****27] of operation of Western would not result in any significant lessening of competition. HN7 Congress has left the task of making that determination to the wisdom and experience of the Commission. The determination it has made rests upon adequate findings which are, in turn, supported by substantial evidence and is well within the limits of its discretion under the Act.

Appellants argue that the Pennsylvania, in actuality, contracted to purchase 50% of the Western stock from Wilmington Trust Company, a co-trustee of the McNear trust, and that, since four persons were directors of both companies, that proposed stock purchase violates § 10 of the Clayton Act; that the Commission was without power to approve it; that, in any event, its action in "condoning" it was an abuse of power; and that the District Court, for those reasons also, erred in upholding the Commission's order.

[*190] The Commission found that the Santa Fe in entering into the contract of May 26, 1955, with the trustees of the McNear trust was "acting on behalf of that carrier alone." [***234] But even if we assume, for present purposes, that it was acting as well for the Pennsylvania, the result must be the same. Section [****28] 10 of the Clayton Act HN8 prohibits a common carrier engaged in commerce from having "any dealings in securities" of more than $ 50,000, in the aggregate, in any one year, "with another corporation, . . . when the said common carrier shall have upon its board of directors . . . any person who is at the same time a director [of] such other corporation . . . , except such purchases [as] shall be made . . . by competitive bidding under regulations to be prescribed by [the] Commission." 38 Stat. 734, 15 U. S. C. § 20.

HÌ FÁMÆJÍ HÆFJELÀ ÆUÐÓGGJÆGULÁ ÁSEÐA ÆGA ÁGHEÍCHI LAFJÍ JÁMEJESÓYÓGÁGHEÍCHI

LEdHN[7] [7] LEdHN[8] [8]Section 10 of the Clayton Act is, of course, an anti-trust law,<sup>12</sup> [****30] and much of what we have just said relative [**240] to the problem of accommodation of § 5 (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act and the antitrust laws is equally applicable to this contention. HN9 [The evident purpose of § 10 of the Clayton Act was to prohibit a corporation from abusing a carrier by palming off upon it securities, supplies and other articles without competitive bidding and at excessive prices through overreaching by, or other misfeasance of, common directors, to the financial injury of the carrier and the consequent impairment of its ability to serve the public interest.<sup>13</sup> But, even if this [****29] purchase [*191] of securities might, under other circumstances, violate § 10 of the Clayton Act, Congress, by § 5 (11) of the Interstate Commerce Act, has authorized the Commission to approve it if it finds that so doing is in the public interest. And Congress has expressly said that, upon such approval, the carrier shall be relieved "from the operation of the anti-trust laws . . ." A contrary view would, in effect, permit the Commission to authorize only those stock purchases which would not, in the absence of § 5 (11), offend the antitrust laws. "As has been said, this would render meaningless the exemption relieving the participants in a properly approved [acquisition] of the requirements of those laws . . ." McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, supra, at 86.

LEdHN[9] [9]Here, the Commission fully considered the contracts under which the Pennsylvania proposes to acquire a 50% interest in the Western stock and all other factors bearing on that matter and, after doing so, approved them. That action by the Commission did not exceed the statutory limits within which Congress has confined its discretion.

LEdHN[10] [10]Minneapolis contends that § 5 (11) operates only in futuro and confers "no authority to purge the taint of a transaction illegal at the time it was brought to the Commission." Whether there is merit in that contention, [****31] [***235] as a legal abstraction, we need not decide, for here the existing contractual arrangements through which Pennsylvania asks authority to acquire 50% of the Western stock look entirely to the future. Neither the stock sale and purchase contract between the trustees and the Santa Fe nor the one between the Santa Fe and the Pennsylvania [*192] Company is a consummated transaction, but each is expressly subject to, and will become effective only upon, approval by the Commission. Apart from criminal prosecutions, with which we are not here concerned, it seems plain that approval of an acquisition by the Commission operates under § 5 (11), as that section says, to relieve the acquiring carrier "from the operation of the antitrust laws . . ."

Appellants next contend that the Commission violated § 8 (b) of the Administrative Procedure Act by failing to make findings which, they think, were compelled by the evidence.

LEdHN[11] [11]There can be no doubt that HN11 [the Administrative Procedure Act applies to proceedings before the Commission, Riss & Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 907, and see Chicago & Eastern Illinois R. Co. v. United [**241] States, 344 U.S. 917. [****32]

The last sentence of § 8 (b) provides:

"All [administrative] decisions . . . shall become a part of the record and include a statement of (1) findings and conclusions, as well as the reasons or basis therefor, upon all the material issues of fact, law, or discretion presented on the record; and (2) the appropriate rule, order, sanction, relief, or denial thereof."<sup>14</sup>

<sup>12</sup> It is clear that § 10 of the Clayton Act HN10 [is included in the "anti-trust laws" referred to in § 5 (11) of the Interstate Commerce Act. Section 1 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. (1952 ed.) § 12, provides that "Anti-trust laws," as used in sections 12, 13, 14-21, and 22-27 of this title, includes sections 1-27 of this title.] Moreover, § 5 (11) avoids any ambiguity by including "all other restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law, Federal, State, or municipal."

<sup>13</sup> The legislative history of § 10 of the Clayton Act, though meager, supports the view stated in the text. In fact, the language of the several drafts of § 10, together with the types of abuses cited in support of its enactment, suggests strongly that the words "dealings in securities" were intended to cover only a carrier's dealings with related persons in its own securities. See H. R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3; S. Rep. No. 698, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 47-48; S. Doc. No. 585, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 8-9; 51 Cong. Rec. 15943.

HÍ FÁVÉJÉFÍ HÉFJGLA ÉAUÉDZGJÉEIG FLÁ ÁSEÓaÉCA ÁGHÉTECHÍ LAFJÍ JÁVÉJÉSÓYÓGÁGÉHNG

Upon the basis of that language, appellants argue that the Commission should have found that the price which the Santa Fe agreed to pay for the Western stock of $ 135 per share was excessive. Though the Commission made no express finding upon that matter it did discuss it, pointing out that the certified value of Western's properties for ratemaking purposes was more than $ 13,500,000; that it has no outstanding preferred stock and is relatively free of debt; that it has a fine earning record; that the transaction was at arm's length; that Minneapolis had [*193] offered $ 133 per share for the stock within a few days of the time when the Santa Fe contracted for its purchase at $ 135 per share; and that the Minneapolis sought authority in this proceeding to acquire the stock at the same price. The Commission [****33] concluded that if $ 135 per share was a fair price for the one it was also for the other.

LEdHN[12] [12]Upon the same basis, appellants also argue that the Commission should have found that the Minneapolis application was in the public interest in that its acquisition of Western would greatly strengthen both Minneapolis and Western by eliminating many duplicating facilities and by reducing operating expenses by more than $ 1,770,000 annually. The Commission did not make a specific finding upon that matter, but it did give consideration to it and found that most of that saving -- more than $ 1,300,000 annually -- would be at the expense of Western's employees -- a matter which, because of the express command of clause 4 of § 5 (2)(c) of the Interstate Commerce Act (see note 1), it evidently thought was not [**236] consistent with the public interest. Appellants further argue that the Commission should have found that the Minneapolis plan afforded adequate protection to Western's employees [****34] by providing for their absorption into the Minneapolis as attrition among its own employees permitted. Again, although the Commission made no specific finding upon that contention it did consider and discuss it, and we think the law required no more.

LEdHN[13] [13]Appellants challenge the Commission's failure to make a number of other subsidiary findings, all of which have been considered, but we find that they relate to contentions that are so collateral or immaterial that the law did not require specific findings upon them. HN12 [1] By the express terms of § 8 (b), the Commission is not required to make subordinate findings on every collateral contention advanced, but only upon those issues of fact, law, or [*194] discretion which are "material." From a thorough examination of the record, we are persuaded that the Commission has made adequate subsidiary findings upon all material issues and has made the ultimate findings required by § 5 (2), that they support the Commission's order, and are, in turn, supported by substantial evidence.

LEdHN[14] [14]Finally, appellants contend that the District Court, because of inadequate subsidiary findings by the Commission, was unable to, or at least did not, afford them [****35] a proper judicial review, and merely "rubber stamped" the Commission's order. Whether or not we approve all of the reasons and legal conclusions of the District Court, it is clear that it fairly considered and decided all of the issues [**242] raised by appellants, accorded to them a full and fair judicial review, and reached a right result. Accordingly the judgment is

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS dissents.

References

---

Annotation References:

Construction and application of the Administrative Procedure Act, 94 L ed 631, 95 L ed 473, 97 L ed 884.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>14</sup> 60 Stat. 242, 5 U. S. C. § 1007 (b).

United States v. Parke

Supreme Court of the United States

November 10, 1959, Argued ; February 29, 1960, Decided

No. 20

Reporter

362 U.S. 29 *; 80 S. Ct. 503 **; 4 L. Ed. 2d 505 ***; 1960 U.S. LEXIS 2013 ****; 1960 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,611

UNITED STATES v. PARKE, DAVIS & CO.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Disposition: 164 F.Supp. 827, reversed.

Core Terms

---

retailers, wholesalers, Sherman Act, prices, products, announced, customers, resale price, manufacturer, adherence, advertising, conspiracy, observe, selling, minimum retail price, concerted action, contracts, seller, cooperation, cases, retail price, acquiescence, combinations, contractual arrangement, cutoff, indictment, unilateral, antitrust, discount, suppress

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 3, 4.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2[] Sherman Act, Scope

Where a state adopts a Fair Trade Law which permits sellers under certain circumstances to make price-fixing agreements with purchasers, such agreements are not illegal under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN3 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The purpose of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. is to prohibit monopolies, contracts, and combinations which probably would unduly interfere with the free exercise of their rights by those engaged, or who wish to engage, in trade and commerce, in a word to preserve the right of freedom to trade. In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the statute does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal. And, of course, he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN4 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

An unlawful combination is not just such as arises from a price maintenance agreement, express or implied; such a combination is also organized if the producer secures adherence to his suggested prices by means which go beyond his mere declination to sell to a customer who will not observe his announced policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. forbids combinations of traders to suppress competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN6 [] Sherman Act, Claims

When the manufacturer's actions go beyond mere announcement of his policy and the simple refusal to deal, and he employs other means which effect adherence to his resale prices, he has put together a combination in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. Thus, whether an unlawful combination or conspiracy is proved is to be judged by what the parties actually did rather than by the words they used.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Commerce With Foreign Nations

HÍ GÁMEJEGÉRGJÀ É ÁUJÓDÁ É HÉRÉLÁ ÁSÉDÁÉGÁ Á É ÁHÉ É LAFJÍ É ÁMÉJESÓYÓAÉFHÉRÉ

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7 International Aspects, Commerce With Foreign Nations

Under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., competition not combination is the law of trade, and a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce is illegal per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

HN8 US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

The courts have an obligation, once a violation of the antitrust laws has been established, to protect the public from a continuation of the harmful and unlawful activities. A trial court's wide discretion in fashioning remedies is not to be exercised to deny relief altogether by lightly inferring an abandonment of the unlawful activities from a cessation which seems timed to anticipate suit.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

In order to carry out its program for the maintenance of minimum retail prices, the defendant, a manufacturer of pharmaceutical products, discussed this program with retailers who sold below such minimum prices and told them that if they continued to do so it would refuse to deal with them. The defendant also informed wholesalers in the area that it would refuse to deal with them if they sold defendant's products to offending retailers. Similar tactics were followed to induce retailers not to advertise defendant's products at prices below its minimum retail prices. This program was carried out until the Department of Justice started an investigation under the Sherman Antitrust Act.

In the present action the government sought an injunction under the Sherman Act against the defendant, alleging that defendant conspired and combined, in violation of 1 and 3 of the act, with retail and wholesale druggists in Washington, D. C., and Richmond, Virginia, to maintain the wholesale and retail prices of its products. The violation was alleged to have occurred during the summer of 1956 when there was no Fair Trade Law in the District of Columbia or State of Virginia. At the close of the government's evidence, the District Court dismissed the complaint on the ground that the government's proofs did not establish a violation of the act, because defendant's actions were merely a refusal to have business relations with retailers who disregarded its price policy, and hence were sanctioned under the doctrine laid down in United States v Colgate Co. 250 US 300, 63 L ed 992, 39 S Ct 465, 7 ALR 443. Alternatively, the District Court rested its judgment of dismissal on the ground that in view of defendant's discontinuance of the practices attacked in the complaint there was no reason to believe that the alleged unlawful acts could possibly be repeated. (164 F Supp 827.)

On appeal, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case to the District Court with directions to enter an appropriate injunction unless defendant elected to submit evidence in defense and refuted the government's right to injunctive relief established by the present record. In an opinion by Brennan, J., expressing the views of five members of the Court, it was held that defendant's practices, as described above, went beyond a mere refusal to deal with offending customers, even if there was no agreement, express or implied, concerning price maintenance. It was also held that the mere discontinuance by defendant of its practices after investigation by the Department of Justice had been commenced did not preclude injunctive relief.

HÍ GÁMEJEGÉRGJÀ ÉÁUÉODÁ EHÉA EHÁLÁ ÁSÉDÀÉGÁ Á É ÁÉÉI É LAFJÍ ÉÁMÈJESÓYÓÁGÉFHÉFF

Stewart, J., concurred in the judgment. He found no occasion to question, even by innuendo, the continuing validity of the Colgate decision.

Harlan, J., with the concurrence of Frankfurter and Whittaker, JJ., dissented. He expressed the view that the opinion of the court, in effect, overruled the Colgate decision, and that under that decision the government had not established a violation of the antitrust laws, the defendant having merely exercised his right to refuse to deal with offending customers.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §41 > resale price maintenance -- refusal to sell. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

While a unilateral refusal to sell to customers who will not resell at prices suggested by the seller may be permissible under the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USC 1 et seq.), an unlawful combination is not just such as arises from a price maintenance agreement, express or implied; such a combination is also organized if the producer secures adherence to his suggested prices by means which go beyond his mere declination to sell to a customer who will not observe his announced policy.

ERROR §1477 > review of findings -- antitrust action. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Federal Civil Procedure Rule 52 \(a\), under which findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, has no application to a finding, made by the District Court in an antitrust action, that there were no contractual arrangements for price maintenance, where the District Court premised its ultimate finding that the defendant did not violate the Sherman Act on an erroneous interpretation of the standard to be applied.

MONOPOLIES §41 > resale price maintenance. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Judicial inquiry into the legality, under the Sherman Antitrust Act, of a producer's attempts toward price maintenance, does not stop with a search of the record for evidence of purely contractual arrangements made between the producer on the one hand and wholesalers and retailers on the other.

MONOPOLIES §14 > test of combination. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

HÍ GÁMEJEGJÉKGJÁ É ÁUJÓDÁ É HÁI É HLÁ ÁSÉDÁÉGÁ Á É ÁHÍ É LAFJÍ É ÁMÉJESÓYÓAÉFHÁHÍ

Whether an unlawful combination or conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act is proved is to be judged by what the parties actually did rather than by the words they used.

ERROR §1318 > question of law. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

For the purposes of appellate review, the question whether the District Court applied the proper standard to essentially undisputed facts is a question of law.

MONOPOLIES §41 > resale price maintenance -- unlawful combination. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

A producer creates a combination, prohibited by the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USC 1 et seq.), with retailers and wholesalers to maintain retail prices, where he does not content himself with announcing his policy regarding retail prices and following this with a simple refusal to have business relations with any offending customer, and instead uses the refusal to deal with the wholesalers in order to elicit their willingness to deny his products to offending retailers and thereby help gain the retailers' adherence to his suggested minimum retail prices, and where the offending retailers are promptly cut off when the producer supplied the wholesalers with their names, and a large retailer who said he would abide by the price policy, is not cut off.

MONOPOLIES §41 > resale price maintenance -- unlawful combination. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

A manufacturer is the organizer of a price-maintenance combination or conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USC 1 et seq.) where he, with a view to inducing retailers to suspend advertising of his product at prices below his suggested minimum retail prices, does not rest with the simple announcement to the trade of his policy in that regard followed by a refusal to sell to offending retailers, but seeks and obtains assurances of compliance as well as compliance itself by using the willingness of one of the retailers to co-operate as a lever to gain acquiescence of other retailers in his program.

MONOPOLIES §5 > competition. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Under the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USC 1 et seq.) competition, not combination, should be the law of trade.

MONOPOLIES §36 > control of prices. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

HÍ GÁMEJEGÉRGULÀ € ÁUJÓDA EHÉA EHÁLÁ ÁSÉDÁÉGÁ Á É ÁÉÉI É LAFJÍ € ÁMÉJESÓYÓÁGÉFHÉRÉ

Under the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USC 1 et seq.) a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce is illegal per se.

MONOPOLIES §68 > cessation of unlawful conditions -- findings -- evidence. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

A finding, made by the District Court in an antitrust action, that the unlawful conditions alleged in the complaint no longer exist and that there is no reason to believe that the unlawful acts alleged can possibly be repeated is not justified by the evidence, where there is no evidence that the compelling reason for defendant's ceasing these acts was forced upon it by business and economic conditions in its field, and it does not appear that defendant has announced to the trade that it will abandon its unlawful practices, and, moreover, there is evidence showing that defendant stopped its practices because the Department of Justice had instituted an investigation.

MONOPOLIES §68 > judicial relief. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

The courts have an obligation, once a violation of the antitrust laws has been established, to protect the public from a continuation of the harmful and unlawful activities.

MONOPOLIES §68 > cessation of unlawful activities. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

A trial court's wide discretion in fashioning remedies under the antitrust laws is not to be exercised to deny relief altogether by lightly inferring an abandonment of the unlawful activities from a cessation which seems timed to anticipate suit.

Syllabus

---

In a civil suit under § 4 of the Sherman Act charging appellee with combining and conspiring to maintain resale prices of its products in areas which have no "fair trade" laws, the Government introduced evidence showing that appellee had (1) announced a policy of refusing to deal with retailers who failed to observe appellee's suggested minimum resale prices or who advertised discount prices on appellee's products, (2) discontinued direct sales to those retailers who failed to abide by the announced policy, (3) induced wholesale distributors to stop selling appellee's products to the offending retailers, (4) secured unanimous adherence by informing a number of the retailers that if each of them would adhere to the announced policy one of their principal competitors would also do so, and (5) permitted the retailers to resume purchasing its products after they had indicated willingness to observe the policy. The evidence further established that [***2] appellee had terminated these practices after becoming aware that the Department of Justice had begun an investigation of its price maintenance activities. The District Court dismissed the complaint on the ground that the Government had not shown a right to relief. Held: The judgment is reversed and the case remanded with directions to enter an appropriate judgment enjoining appellee from further violations of the Sherman Act, unless it elects to submit evidence in defense and refutes the Government's right to injunctive relief established by the present record. Pp. 30-49.

HÌ GÁMÈJÀG ÈRÈGULÀ ÈUÈDÀ ÈHÈBÉ ÈHÀLÀ ÈSÈDÀ ÈCÀÁ È ÈKÈI È LÀFJÌ ÈAMÈJÈSÓYÒAÈFHÈRÈHÈG

(a) The District Court erred in holding that these practices constituted only unilateral action by appellee in selecting its customers, as permitted by United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300. Appellee did not merely announce its policy and then decline to have further dealings with retailers who failed to abide by it, but, by utilizing wholesalers and other retailers, it actively induced unwilling retailers to comply with the policy. The resulting concerted action to maintain the resale prices constituted a conspiracy or combination in violation of the Sherman Act, although it [***3] was not based on any contract, express or implied. Pp. 36-47.

(b) Rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure does not require affirmance of the District Court's ultimate finding that respondent did not violate the Sherman Act, because that conclusion was based on an erroneous interpretation of the law. Pp. 43-45.

(c) The District Court's alternative holding that dismissal of the complaint was warranted because there was no reasonable probability that appellee would resume its attempts to maintain resale prices is erroneous, because it is not supported by the evidence. Pp. 47-48.

Counsel: Daniel M. Friedman argued the cause for the United States. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Rankin, Acting Assistant Attorney General Bicks, Richard A. Solomon, Edward R. Kenney and Henry Geller.

Gerhard A. Gesell argued the cause for appellee. With him on the brief were Edward S. Reid, Jr. and Weaver W. Dunnan.

Judges: Warren, Black, Frankfurter, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Whittaker, Stewart

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

---

[*30] [***507] [**505] MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Government sought an injunction under § 4 of the Sherman Act [***4] against the appellee, Parke, Davis & Company, on a complaint alleging that Parke Davis conspired and [***508] combined, in violation of §§ 1 and 3 of the Act,<sup>1</sup> [***5] with [*31] retail and wholesale druggists in Washington, D. C., and Richmond, Virginia, to maintain the wholesale and retail prices of Parke Davis pharmaceutical products. The violation was alleged to have

---

<sup>1</sup> The pertinent provision of Sections 1, 3 and 4 of the Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended (15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 3, 4), commonly known as the Sherman Act, are as follows:

HN1 "Sec. 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal . . . . Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor . . . ."

"Sec. 3. Every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in . . . the District of Columbia, or in restraint of trade or commerce . . . between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations, is hereby declared illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor . . . ."

"Sec. 4. The several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several United States attorneys, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. . . ."

HÌ GÁMÈJÉGJÉHFLÀ € ÁUJÓDÀ EHÉE Í LÁ ÁSÉDÀÉCÁ Á Í ÉÉÉ Í LAFJÍ € ÁMÈJÉSÓYÓAÉFHÉE

occurred during the summer of 1956 when there was no Fair Trade Law in the District of Columbia or the State of Virginia.<sup>2</sup> After the Government completed the presentation of its evidence at the trial, and without hearing Parke Davis in defense, the District Court for the District of Columbia dismissed the complaint under Rule 41 (b) on the ground that upon the facts and the law the Government had not shown a right to relief. 164 F.Supp. 827. We noted probable jurisdiction of the Government's direct appeal under § 2 of the Expediting Act.<sup>3</sup> 359 U.S. 903.

Parke Davis makes some 600 pharmaceutical products which it markets nationally through drug wholesalers and [*32] drug retailers. The retailers buy these products from the drug wholesalers or make large quantity purchases directly from Parke Davis. Sometime before 1956 Parke Davis announced a resale price [****6] maintenance policy in its wholesalers' and retailers' catalogues. The wholesalers' catalogue contained a Net Price Selling Schedule listing suggested minimum resale prices on Parke Davis products sold by wholesalers to retailers. The catalogue stated that it was Parke Davis' continuing policy to deal only with drug wholesalers who observed that schedule and who sold only to drug retailers authorized by law to fill prescriptions. Parke Davis, when selling directly to retailers, quoted the same prices listed in the wholesalers' Net Price Selling Schedule but granted retailers discounts for volume purchases. Wholesalers were not authorized to grant similar discounts. The retailers' [**506] catalogue contained a schedule of minimum retail prices applicable in States with Fair Trade Laws and stated that this schedule was suggested [***509] for use also in States not having such laws. These suggested minimum retail prices usually provided a 50% markup over cost on Parke Davis products purchased by retailers from wholesalers but, because of the volume discount, often in excess of 100% markup over cost on products purchased in large quantities directly from Parke Davis.

There are [****7] some 260 drugstores in Washington, D. C., and some 100 in Richmond, Virginia. Many of the stores are units of Peoples Drug Stores, a large retail drug chain. There are five drug wholesalers handling Parke Davis products in the locality who do business with the drug retailers. The wholesalers observed the resale prices suggested by Parke Davis. However, during the spring and early summer of 1956 drug retailers in the two cities advertised and sold several Parke Davis vitamin products at prices substantially below the suggested minimum retail prices; in some instances the prices apparently [*33] reflected the volume discounts on direct purchases from Parke Davis since the products were sold below the prices listed in the wholesalers' Net Price Selling Schedule. The Baltimore office manager of Parke Davis in charge of the sales district which included the two cities sought advice from his head office on how to handle this situation. The Parke Davis attorney advised that the company could legally "enforce an adopted policy arrived at unilaterally" to sell only to customers who observed the suggested minimum resale prices. He further advised that this meant that "we can lawfully [***8] say 'we will sell you only so long as you observe such minimum retail prices' but cannot say 'we will sell you only if you agree to observe such minimum retail prices,' since except as permitted by Fair Trade legislations [sic] agreements as to resale price maintenance are invalid." Thereafter in July the branch manager put into effect a program for promoting observance of the suggested minimum retail prices by the retailers involved. The program contemplated the participation of the five drug wholesalers. In order to insure that retailers who did not comply would be cut off from sources of supply, representatives of Parke Davis visited the wholesalers and told them, in effect, that not only would Parke Davis refuse to sell to wholesalers who did not adhere to the policy announced in its catalogue, but also that it would refuse to sell to wholesalers who sold Parke Davis products to retailers who did not observe the suggested minimum retail prices. Each wholesaler was interviewed individually but each was informed that his competitors were also being apprised of this. The wholesalers without exception indicated a willingness to go along.

<sup>2</sup> Congress has provided that HN2↑ where a State adopts a "Fair Trade Law" which permits sellers under certain circumstances to make price-fixing agreements with purchasers, such agreements shall not be held illegal under the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1. The Fair Trade Laws adopted in 16 States have been invalidated by their state courts on state grounds. H. R. Rep. No. 467, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 6-7. On June 9, 1959, the House Committee on Interstate Commerce favorably reported a bill which, if passed, would enact a National Fair Trade Practice Act.

<sup>3</sup> 32 Stat. 823, 15 U. S. C. § 29, as amended by § 17 of the Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 989.

HÌ GÁMÈJÉGJÉHÀ ÉUÉDÀ EHÉI É LÀ ÁSÉDÀÉGÀ Á É HÉI ÉJLAFJÍ ÉAMÈJÉSÓYÓAÉFHÉI

Representatives called contemporaneously [***9] upon the retailers involved, individually, and told each that if he did not observe the suggested minimum retail prices, Parke Davis would refuse to deal with him, and that furthermore [*34] he would be unable to purchase any Parke Davis products from the wholesalers. Each of the retailers was also told that his competitors were being similarly informed.

Several retailers refused to give any assurances of compliance and continued after these July interviews to advertise and sell Parke Davis products at prices below the suggested minimum retail prices. Their names were furnished by Parke Davis to the wholesalers. Thereafter Parke Davis refused to fill direct orders from such retailers [***510] and the wholesalers likewise refused to fill their orders.<sup>4</sup> This ban was not limited [**507] to the Parke Davis products being sold below the suggested minimum prices but included all the company's products, even those necessary to fill prescriptions.

[***10] The president of Dart Drug Company, one of the retailers cut off, protested to the assistant branch manager of Parke Davis that Parke Davis was discriminating against him because a drugstore across the street, one of the Peoples Drug chain, had a sign in its window advertising Parke Davis products at cut prices. The retailer was told that if this were so the branch manager "would see Peoples and try to get them in line." The branch manager testified at the trial that thereafter he talked to a vice-president of Peoples and that the following occurred:

"Q. Well, now, you told Mr. Downey [the vice-president of Peoples] at this meeting, did you not, Mr. Powers, [the assistant branch manager of Parke Davis] that you noticed that Peoples were cutting prices?

"A. Yes.

[*35] "Q. And you told him, did you not, that it had been the Parke, Davis policy for many years to do business only with individuals that maintained the scheduled prices?

"A. I told Mr. Downey that we had a policy in our catalog, and that anyone that did not go along with our policy, we were not interested in doing business with them.

. . . .

"Q. . . . Now, Mr. Downey told you on the occasion of this visit, [***11] did he not, that Peoples would stop cutting prices and would abide by the Parke-Davis policy, is that right?

"A. That is correct.

. . . .

"Q. When you went to call on Mr. Downey, you solicited his support of Parke, Davis policies, is not that right?

"A. That is right.

"Q. And he said, I will abide by your policy?

"A. That is right."

The District Court found, apparently on the basis of this testimony, that "The Peoples' representative stated that Peoples would stop cutting prices on Parke, Davis' products and Parke, Davis continued to sell to Peoples."

But five retailers continued selling Parke Davis products at less than the suggested minimum prices from stocks on hand. Within a few weeks Parke Davis modified its program. Its officials believed that the selling at discount prices would be deterred, and the effects minimized of any isolated instances of discount selling which might continue, if all advertising of such prices were discontinued. In August the Parke Davis representatives again called on the retailers individually. When interviewed, the president of Dart Drug Company indicated [*36] that he might be willing to stop advertising, although continuing [****12] to sell at discount prices, if shipments to him were resumed. Each of the other retailers was then told individually by Parke Davis representatives that Dart was ready to discontinue advertising. Each thereupon said that if Dart stopped advertising he would also. On August 28 Parke Davis reported this reaction to Dart. Thereafter all of the retailers discontinued [***511] advertising of Parke Davis vitamins at less than suggested minimum retail prices and Parke Davis and the wholesalers resumed sales of Parke Davis products to them. However, the suspension of advertising lasted only a month. One of the retailers again started newspaper advertising in September and, despite efforts of Parke Davis to prevent it, the others quickly followed suit. Parke Davis then stopped trying to promote the retailers' adherence to its suggested resale prices, and neither it nor the wholesalers have since declined further dealings with [**508] them.<sup>5</sup> A reason for this was that the Department of Justice, on complaint of Dart Drug Company, had begun an investigation of possible violation of the antitrust laws.

---

<sup>4</sup> When Parke Davis learned from a wholesaler's invoice that he had filled an order of one of the retailers, Parke Davis protested but was satisfied when the wholesaler explained that this was an oversight.

HÌ GÁMEÙÉGJ ËTHÍ LÀ €ÁUÈDÁ €HÉE ËI LÀ ÅSÖÅÉGA Á ËI FELÁJÌ €ÁMÈÙÉSÓY QÁGEFHÉTTFF

[****13] The District Court held that the Government's proofs did not establish a violation of the Sherman Act because "the actions of [Parke Davis] were properly unilateral and sanctioned by law under the doctrine laid down in the case of United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300 . . . 164 F.Supp., at 829.

The Colgate case came to this Court on writ of error under the Criminal Appeals Act, 34 Stat. 1246, from a District Court judgment dismissing an indictment for violation of the Sherman Act. The indictment proceeded [*37] solely upon the theory of an unlawful combination between Colgate and its wholesale and retail dealers for the purpose and with the effect of procuring adherence on the part of the dealers to resale prices fixed by the company. However, the District Court construed the indictment as not charging a combination by agreement between Colgate and its customers to maintain prices. This Court held that it must disregard the allegations of the indictment since the District Court's interpretation of the indictment was binding and that without an allegation of unlawful agreement there was no Sherman Act violation charged. The [****14] Court said:

HN3 "The purpose of the Sherman Act is to prohibit monopolies, contracts and combinations which probably would unduly interfere with the free exercise of their rights by those engaged, or who wish to engage, in trade and commerce -- in a word to preserve the right of freedom to trade. In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the act does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal. And, of course, he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell." 250 U.S., at 307.

The Government concedes for the purposes of this case that under the Colgate doctrine a manufacturer, having announced a price maintenance policy, may bring about adherence to it by refusing to deal with customers who do not observe that policy. The Government contends, however, that subsequent decisions of this Court compel the holding that what Parke Davis did here by entwining the wholesalers and [****15] retailers in a program to promote general compliance with its price maintenance policy went [*38] beyond mere customer selection and [***512] created combinations or conspiracies to enforce resale price maintenance in violation of §§ 1 and 3 of the Sherman Act.

The history of the Colgate doctrine is best understood by reference to a case which preceded the Colgate decision, Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373. Dr. Miles entered into written contracts with its customers obligating them to sell its medicine at prices fixed by it. The Court held that the contracts were void because they violated both the common law and the Sherman Act. The Colgate decision distinguished Dr. Miles on the ground that the Colgate indictment did not charge that company with selling its products to dealers under agreements which obligated the latter not to resell except at prices fixed by the seller. The [**509] Colgate decision created some confusion and doubt as to the continuing vitality of the principles announced in Dr. Miles. This brought <sup>5</sup> Except that in December 1957, Parke Davis informed Dart Drug Company that it did not intend to have any further dealings with Dart. The latter has, however, continued to purchase Parke Davis products from wholesalers. Thus, Dart Drug cannot receive the volume discount on large quantity purchases.

---

HÌ GÁMEÙÉGJ Í LÀ ÉAUÉDÓA ÉHÍLÉ ÉJLÁ ÅSEØAÉGA Á É HÍLÉ FGLÁJÍ ÉÁMÈÙÉSÓY QÁGEFHÍ

United States v. Schrader's Son, Inc., 252 U.S. 85, to [****16] the Court. The case involved the prosecution of a components manufacturer for entering into price-fixing agreements with retailers, jobbers and manufacturers who used his products. The District Court dismissed, saying:

"Granting the fundamental proposition stated in the Colgate case, that the manufacturer has an undoubted right to specify resale prices and refuse to deal with any one who fails to maintain the same, or, as further stated, the act does not restrict the long-recognized right of a trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal, and that he of course may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell, it seems to me that it is a distinction without a difference to say that he may do so by the subterfuges [*39] and devices set forth in the [Colgate] opinion and not violate the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, yet if he had done the same thing in the form of a written agreement, adequate only to effectuate the same purpose, he would be guilty of a violation of the law. . ." 264 F. 175, 184.

This Court reversed, and [****17] said:

"The court below misapprehended the meaning and effect of the opinion and judgment in [Colgate]. We had no intention to overrule or modify the doctrine of Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., where the effort was to destroy the dealers' independent discretion through restrictive agreements." 252 U.S., at 99.

The Court went on to explain that the statement from Colgate quoted earlier in this opinion meant no more than that a manufacturer is not guilty of a combination or conspiracy if he merely "indicates his wishes concerning prices and declines further dealings with all who fail to observe them . . ."; however there is unlawful combination where a manufacturer "enters into agreements -- whether express or implied from a course of dealing or other circumstances -- with all customers . . . which undertake to bind them to observe fixed resale prices." Ibid.

The next decision was Frey & Son, Inc., v. Cudahy Packing Co., 256 U.S. 208. That was a treble damage suit alleging a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act between the manufacturer and jobbers to maintain resale prices. The plaintiff recovered a judgment. [****18] The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit reversed on the [***513] authority of Colgate. The Court of Appeals concluded: "There was no formal written or oral agreement with jobbers for the maintenance of prices" and in that circumstance held [*40] that under Colgate the trial court should have directed a verdict for the defendant. In holding that the Court of Appeals erred, this Court referred to the decision in Schrader as holding that the "essential agreement, combination or conspiracy might be implied from a course of dealing or other circumstances," so that in Cudahy, "Having regard to the course of dealing and all the pertinent facts disclosed by the present record, we think whether there existed an unlawful combination or agreement between the manufacturer and jobbers was a question for the jury to decide, and that the Circuit Court of Appeals erred when it held otherwise." 256 U.S., at 210.

But the Court also held improper an instruction which was given to the jury that a violation of the Sherman Act [**510] might be found if the jury should find as facts that the defendant "indicated a sales plan to the wholesalers and jobbers, [****19] which plan fixed the price below which the wholesalers and jobbers were not to sell to retailers, and . . . [that] . . . defendant called this particular feature of this plan to their attention on very many different occasions, and . . . [that] . . . the great majority of them not only [expressed] no dissent from such plan, but actually [cooperated] in carrying it out by themselves selling at the prices named . . ." 256 U.S. 210-211. However, the authority of this holding condemning the instruction has been seriously undermined by subsequent decisions which we are about to discuss. Therefore, Cudahy does not support the District Court's action in this case, and we cannot follow it here. Less than a year after Cudahy was handed down, the Court decided Federal Trade Comm'n v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, which presented a situation bearing a marked resemblance to the Parke Davis program.

HÌ GÁMEÙÉGJ ÍÍÍ ÉLÀ ÉAUÉDÓA ÉHÍÍÍ FELÁ ÁSÓDÁÉGÁ Á É HÍÍÍ FHLÁFJ Í ÉWÉJÉSÓYQ ÁGFHÍÍÍJ

In Beech-Nut the company had adopted a policy of refusing to sell its products to wholesalers or retailers who did not adhere to a schedule of resale prices. Beech-Nut [*41] later implemented this policy by refusing to sell to [****20] wholesalers who sold to retailers who would not adhere to the policy. To detect violations the company utilized code numbers on its products and instituted a system of reporting. When an offender was cut off, he would be reinstated upon the giving of assurances that he would maintain prices in the future. The Court construed the Federal Trade Commission Act to authorize the Commission to forbid practices which had a "dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly." 257 U.S., at 454. The Sherman Act was held to be a guide to what constituted an unfair method of competition. The company had urged that its conduct was entirely legal under the Sherman Act as interpreted by Colgate. The Court rejected this contention, saying that "the Beech-Nut system goes far beyond the simple refusal to sell goods to persons who will not sell at stated prices, which in the Colgate Case was held to be within the legal right of the producer." Ibid. The Court held further that the nonexistence of contracts covering the practices was irrelevant since "the specific facts found show suppression of the freedom of competition by methods in which the company [****21] secures the cooperation [***514] of its distributors and customers, which are quite as effectual as agreements express or implied intended to accomplish the same purpose." Id., at 455. That the Court considered that the Sherman Act violation thus established was dispositive of the issue before it is shown by the ground taken by Mr. Justice McReynolds in dissent. The parties had stipulated that there were no contracts covering the policy. Relying on his view of Colgate, he asked: "How can there be methods of cooperation . . . when the existence of the essential contracts is definitely excluded?" Id., at 459. The majority did not read Colgate as requiring such contracts; rather, the Court dispelled the confusion over whether a combination effected by contractual arrangements, [*42] express or implied, was necessary to a finding of Sherman Act violation by limiting Colgate to a holding that when the only act specified in the indictment amounted to saying that the trader had exercised his right to determine those with whom he would deal, and to announce the circumstances under which he would refuse to sell, no Sherman Act violation [****22] was made out. However, because Beech-Nut's methods were as effective as agreements in producing the result that "all who would deal in the company's products are constrained to sell at the suggested prices," 257 U.S., at 455, the Court held that [**511] the securing of the customers' adherence by such methods constituted the creation of an unlawful combination to suppress price competition among the retailers.

That Beech-Nut narrowly limited Colgate and announced principles which subject to Sherman Act liability the producer who secures his customers' adherence to his resale prices by methods which go beyond the simple refusal to sell to customers who will not resell at stated prices, was made clear in United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 722:

"The Beech-Nut case recognizes that a simple refusal to sell to others who do not maintain the first seller's fixed resale prices is lawful but adds as to the Sherman Act, 'He [the seller] may not, consistently with the act, go beyond the exercise of this right, and by contracts or combinations, express or implied, unduly hinder or obstruct the free and natural flow [****23] of commerce in the channels of interstate trade.' 257 U.S. at 453. The Beech-Nut Company, without agreements, was found to suppress the freedom of competition by coercion of its customers through special agents of the company, by reports of competitors about customers who violated resale prices, and by boycotts of price cutters. . . ."

[*43] [LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1] Bausch & Lomb, like the instant case, was an action by the United States to restrain alleged violations of §§ 1 and 3 of the Sherman Act. The Court, relying on Beech-Nut, held that a distributor, Soft-Lite Lens Company, Inc., violated the Sherman Act when, as was the case with Parke Davis, the refusal to sell to wholesalers was not used simply to induce acquiescence of the wholesalers in the distributor's published resale price list; the wholesalers "accepted Soft-Lite's proffer of a plan of distribution by cooperating in prices, limitation of sales to and approval of retail licensees. That is sufficient. . . . Whether this conspiracy and combination was achieved by agreement or by acquiescence of the wholesalers coupled with assistance [****24] in effectuating its purpose is immaterial." 321 U.S., at 723. [***515] Thus, whatever uncertainty previously existed as to the scope of the Colgate doctrine, Bausch & Lomb and Beech-Nut plainly fashioned its dimensions as meaning no more than that a simple refusal to sell to customers who will not resell at prices suggested by the seller is permissible under the Sherman Act. In other words, HN4<sup>1</sup> an unlawful combination is not just such as arises from a price maintenance agreement, express or implied; such a combination is also organized if the producer secures adherence to his suggested prices by means which go beyond his mere declination to sell to a customer who will not observe his announced policy.

HÌ GÁMEÙÈGJ ËÉ HÀ €ÙÈDÓA €HÈÉ FFLÁ ÅSEØAÈGA Á ËÉ FÍ LAFJ Í €ÁMÈÙÈSÓY QÁGEFHÅTTÅQ

[LEdHN\[2\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [2] [LEdHN\[3\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [3] [LEdHN\[4\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [4] [LEdHN\[5\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [5] In the cases decided before Beech-Nut the Court's inquiry [***25] was directed to whether the manufacturer had entered into illicit contracts, express or implied. The District Court in this case apparently assumed that the Government could prevail only by establishing a contractual arrangement, albeit implied, between Parke Davis and its customers. Proceeding from the same premise Parke Davis strenuously urges that Rule 52 of the Rules of Civil Procedure compels an affirmation of the [*44] District Court since under that Rule the finding that there were no contractual arrangements should "not be set aside unless clearly erroneous." But Rule 52 has no application here. The District Court premised its ultimate finding that Parke Davis did not violate the Sherman Act on an erroneous interpretation of the standard to be applied. The Bausch & Lomb and Beech-Nut decisions cannot be read as merely limited to particular fact complexes justifying the inference of an [**512] agreement in violation of the Sherman Act. Both cases teach that judicial inquiry is not to stop with a search of the record for evidence of purely contractual arrangements. [***26] The Sherman Act HN5<sup>1</sup> forbids combinations of traders to suppress competition. True, there results the same economic effect as is accomplished by a prohibited combination to suppress price competition if each customer, although induced to do so solely by a manufacturer's announced policy, independently decides to observe specified resale prices. So long as Colgate is not overruled, this result is tolerated but only when it is the consequence of a mere refusal to sell in the exercise of the manufacturer's right "freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal." HN6<sup>1</sup> When the manufacturer's actions, as here, go beyond mere announcement of his policy and the simple refusal to deal, and he employs other means which effect adherence to his resale prices, this countervailing consideration is not present and therefore he has put together a combination in violation of the Sherman Act. Thus, whether an unlawful combination or conspiracy is proved is to be judged by what the parties actually did rather than by the words they used. See Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 612. Because of the nature of the District Court's error we are reviewing a question of law, namely, whether the District Court applied the proper standard to essentially undisputed facts. See *Interstate [*45] Circuit v. United States*, 306 U.S. 208; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265; United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364; [***516] United States v. du Pont, 353 U.S. 586; and also United States v. Felin & Co., 334 U.S. 624; Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Supermarket Equipment Corp., 340 U.S. 147.

[LEdHN\[6\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [6] The program upon which Parke Davis embarked to promote general compliance with its suggested resale prices plainly exceeded the limitations of the Colgate doctrine and under Beech-Nut and Bausch & Lomb effected arrangements which violated the Sherman Act. Parke Davis did not content itself with announcing its policy regarding retail prices and following this with a simple [***28] refusal to have business relations with any retailers who disregarded that policy. Instead Parke Davis used the refusal to deal with the wholesalers in order to elicit their willingness to deny Parke Davis products to retailers and thereby help gain the retailers' adherence to its suggested minimum retail prices. The retailers who disregarded the price policy were promptly cut off when Parke Davis supplied the wholesalers with their names. The large retailer who said he would "abide" by the price policy, the multi-unit Peoples Drug chain, was not cut off.<sup>6</sup> In thus involving the wholesalers to stop the flow of Parke Davis products to the retailers, thereby inducing retailers' adherence to its suggested retail prices, Parke Davis created a combination with the retailers and the wholesalers to maintain retail prices and violated the Sherman Act. Although Parke Davis' originally announced wholesalers' policy would not under Colgate have violated the [*46] Sherman Act if its action thereunder [**513] was the simple refusal without more to deal with wholesalers who did not observe the wholesalers' Net Price Selling Schedule, that entire policy was tainted with the "vice [***29] of . . . illegality," cf. United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 724, when Parke Davis used it as the vehicle to gain the wholesalers' participation in the program to effectuate the retailers' adherence to the suggested retail prices.

---

<sup>6</sup> Indeed, if Peoples resumed adherence to the Parke Davis price scale after the interview between its vice-president and Parke Davis' assistant branch manager, p. 34, supra, shows that Parke Davis and Peoples entered into a price maintenance agreement, express, tacit or implied, such agreement violated the Sherman Act without regard to any wholesalers' participation.

HÌ GÁMEÙÉGJ Í LÀ €ÁUÉDÁ €HÁÉ FHLÁ ÁSÉDÁÉGÁ Á É ÁTÍ FÌ LÁJÍ €ÁMÈJÉSÓYQÁGÉFHÁTTÉQ

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7] [LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8] [LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9] Moreover, Parke Davis also exceeded the "limited dispensation which [Colgate] confers," Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 626, [***30] in another way, which demonstrates how far Parke Davis went beyond the limits of the Colgate doctrine. With regard to the retailers' suspension of advertising, Parke Davis did not rest with the simple announcement to the trade of its policy in that regard followed by a refusal to sell to the retailers who would not observe it. First it discussed the subject with Dart Drug. When Dart indicated willingness to go along the other retailers were approached and Dart's apparent willingness to cooperate was used as the lever to gain their acquiescence in the program. Having secured those acquiescences Parke Davis returned to Dart Drug with the report of that accomplishment. Not until all this was done was the advertising suspended and sales to all the retailers resumed. In this manner Parke Davis sought assurances of compliance [**517] and got them, as well as the compliance itself. It was only by actively bringing about substantial unanimity among the competitors that Parke Davis was able to gain adherence to its policy. It must be admitted that a seller's announcement that he will not deal with customers who do not observe his policy may tend to engender confidence in each [***31] customer that if he complies his competitors will also. But if a manufacturer is unwilling to rely on individual self-interest to bring [*47] about general voluntary acquiescence which has the collateral effect of eliminating price competition, and takes affirmative action to achieve uniform adherence by inducing each customer to adhere to avoid such price competition, the customers' acquiescence is not then a matter of individual free choice prompted alone by the desirability of the product. The product then comes packaged in a competition-free wrapping -- a valuable feature in itself -- by virtue of concerted action induced by the manufacturer. The manufacturer is thus the organizer of a price-maintenance combination or conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act. HNT Under that Act "competition not combination, should be the law of trade," National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U.S. 115, 129, and "a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce [***32] is illegal per se." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223. And see United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 351 U.S. 305; Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211; Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600.

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10] The District Court also alternatively rested its judgment of dismissal on the holding that ". . . even if the unlawful conditions alleged in the Complaint had actually been proved, since 1956 they no longer existed, and [there is] no reason to believe, or even surmise, the unlawful acts alleged can possibly be repeated . . ." 164 F.Supp. 827, 830. We are of the view that the evidence does not justify any such finding. The District Court stated that "the compelling reason for defendant's so doing [ceasing its efforts] was forced upon it by business and economic conditions in its field." There is no evidence in the record that this was [**514] the reason and any such conclusion must rest on speculation. It does not [***33] appear even that [*48] Parke Davis has announced to the trade that it will abandon the practices we have condemned. So far as the record indicates any reason, it is that Parke Davis stopped its efforts because the Department of Justice had instituted an investigation. The president of Dart Drug Company testified that he had told the Parke Davis representatives in August that he had just been talking to the Department of Justice investigators. He stated that the Parke Davis representatives had said that "they [knew] that the Antitrust Division was investigating them all over town," and that this was one of their reasons for visiting him. The witness testified that it was on this occasion, after the discussion of the investigation, that the Parke Davis representatives finally stated that if Dart would stop advertising, Parke Davis "would resume shipment, in so far as there was an Antitrust investigation going [***518] on." Moreover Parke Davis' own employees, who were called by the Government as witnesses at the trial, admitted that they were aware of the investigation at the time and that the investigation was a reason for the discontinuance of the program. It seems to [***34] us that if the investigation would prompt Parke Davis to discontinue its efforts, even more so would the litigation which ensued.

HÌ GÁMÈÙÈGJ ÈÈ Ì LÀ €ÁÙÈÓdÁ €HÈÈÍ FI LÀ ÅSØdÅÈGÅ Á ËÈÈÍ FI LAFJÌ €ÁMÈÙÈSØYQÀGÈFHÈÈHÈÈ

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11] [LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12] On the record before us the Government is entitled to the relief it seeks. HN8 The courts have an obligation, once a violation of the antitrust laws has been established, to protect the public from a continuation of the harmful and unlawful activities. A trial court's wide discretion in fashioning remedies is not to be exercised to deny relief altogether by lightly inferring an abandonment of the unlawful activities from a cessation which seems timed to anticipate suit. See *United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 333.*

The judgment is reversed and the case remanded to the District Court with directions to enter an appropriate [*49] judgment enjoining Parke Davis from further violations of the Sherman Act unless the company elects to submit evidence in defense [***35] and refutes the Government's right to injunctive relief established by the present record.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: STEWART

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE STEWART, concurring.

I concur in the judgment. The Court's opinion amply demonstrates that the present record shows an illegal combination to maintain retail prices. I therefore find no occasion to question, even by innuendo, the continuing validity of the Colgate decision, 250 U.S. 300, or of the Court's ruling as to the jury instruction in *Cudahy, 256 U.S. 210-211.*

Dissent by: HARLAN

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, whom MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER and MR. JUSTICE WHITTAKER join, dissenting.

The Court's opinion reaches much further than at once may meet the eye, and justifies fuller discussion than otherwise might appear warranted. Scrutiny of the opinion will reveal that the Court has done no less than send to its demise the Colgate doctrine which has been a basic part of antitrust law concepts since it was first announced in 1919 in *United States v. Colgate, 250 U.S. 300.*

I begin with that doctrine and how it was applied by the [***36] District Court in this case. In the words of the Court's opinion, Colgate held that in the absence of a monopolistic setting, "a manufacturer, having announced a price maintenance policy, may bring about adherence to it by refusing to deal with customers who do not observe that policy." "And," [**515] as said in Colgate (at 307), "of course, he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell."

[*50] The Government's complaint, seeking to enjoin alleged violations of §§ 1 and 3 of the Sherman Act,<sup>1</sup> in substance charged Parke Davis with having combined and conspired with wholesalers and retailers of its products in the District of Columbia and Virginia, in four respects: (1) with retailers, to fix retail prices; [***519] (2) with

---

<sup>1</sup> These are the "restraint of trade," not the "monopoly," provisions of the Sherman Act. See Note 1 of the Court's opinion.

HÌ GÀMÈÙÈGJ ËÈLÀ ÈÀÙÈDÀ ÈHÈÈÍ FÍ LÀ ÈSÈDÀÈGÀ Á ÈÈÈÍ FJLÀJÌ ÈÀMÈÙÈSÓYQÀGÈFÈHÈÈÍ

retailers, to suppress advertising of cut prices; (3) with wholesalers, to fix wholesale prices; and (4) with wholesalers, to boycott retail price cutters. The Company's defense was that the activities complained of simply constituted a legitimate exercise of its rights under the Colgate doctrine. The detailed findings of the District Court are epitomized in its opinion as follows:

- (1) Parke Davis [***37] "had well-established policies concerning the prices at which [its] products were to be sold by wholesalers and retailers, and the type of retailers to whom the wholesalers could re-sell";<sup>2</sup>
- (2) Parke Davis' "representatives . . . notified retailers concerning the policy under which its goods must be sold, but the retailers were free either to do without such goods or sell them in accordance with defendant's policy";
- (3) Parke Davis' "representatives likewise contacted wholesalers, notifying them of its policy and the wholesalers were likewise free to refuse to comply and thus risk being cut off by the defendant";
- (4) "every visit made by the representatives to the retailers and wholesalers was, to each of them, separate and apart from all others";
- (5) "the evidence is clear that both wholesalers and retailers valued [Parke Davis'] business so highly that they acceded to its policy";
- [*51] (6) "there was no coercion by defendant and no agreement with [wholesaler or retailer] co-conspirators as alleged in the Complaint";
- (7) as to the Government's contention that proof of the alleged conspiracy "is implicit in (1) defendant's calling the attention of both retailers [***38] and wholesalers to its policy, and (2) the distributors' acquiescence to the policy . . . the Court cannot agree to such a nebulous deduction from the record before it."

On these premises the District Court concluded: "Clearly, the actions of defendant were properly unilateral and sanctioned by law under the doctrine laid down in the case of United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300 . . ."

The Court appears to recognize that as the Colgate doctrine was originally understood, the District Court's findings would require affirmance of its judgment here. It is said, however, that reversal is required because Federal Trade Comm'n v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, and United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, subsequently "narrowly [***39] limited" the Colgate rule. The claim is that whereas prior to Beech-Nut it was considered that, fair trade laws apart, resale price maintenance came within the ban of the Sherman Act only if it was brought about by express or implied agreement between the parties -- which the Court says meant "contractual arrangements" -- Beech-Nut, which was carried forward by Bausch & Lomb, later established that such agreements or contractual arrangements need not be [**516] shown. Recognizing that §§ 1 and 3 of the Sherman Act explicitly require a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy," the Court says this requirement is satisfied by conduct which falls short of express or implied agreement, if it goes beyond the seller's mere announcement of terms and his refusal to deal with those who will not comply with them. Concluding that the District [*52] Court in the present case mistakenly [***520] proceeded solely on the "agreement" view of Colgate, it is then said that its findings of fact are not binding on us because they were based on an erroneous legal standard, and that therefore "Rule 52 has no application here."<sup>3</sup>

[***40] I think this reasoning not only misconceives the Beech-Nut and Bausch & Lomb cases, but also mistakes the premises on which the District Court decided this case, and its actual findings of fact.

<sup>2</sup> Those "authorized by law to fill or dispense prescriptions."

<sup>3</sup> Rule 52 \(a\), Fed. Rules Civ. Proc. provides in relevant part: "Findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the trial court to judge of the credibility of the witnesses."

HÌ GÁMÈÙÈGJ ËÉÍ GLÀ €ÁÙÈÓDÁ €HÉÉÍ FÌ LÀ ÅÙÓAÈGÀ Á ËÉÉÍ GELÁJÌ €ÁMÈÙÈSÓYQÁGÉFHÉÉÍ È

First. I cannot read Beech-Nut or Bausch & Lomb as introducing a new narrowing concept into the Colgate doctrine. Until today I had not supposed that any informed antitrust practitioner or judge would have had to await Beech-Nut to know that the concerted action proscribed by the Sherman Act need not amount to a contractual agreement. But neither do I think it would have been supposed that the Sherman Act does not require concerted action in some form. In Beech-Nut itself the Court stated the rule to be that a seller may not restrain trade "by contracts or combinations, express or implied," and there found suppression of competition "by methods in which the company secures the cooperation of its distributors and customers, which are quite as effectual as agreements express or implied intended to accomplish the same purpose." 257 U.S., at 453, 455. It is obvious that the "methods" thus referred to were the "cooperative methods" which the Federal [****41] Trade Commission had found to exist, for the Court expressly limited the Commission's order to the granting of relief against such methods. Id., 455-456. Far from announcing that no concerted action need be shown, the Court accepted the Commission's factual determination that such action did exist.

[*53] Similarly, in Bausch & Lomb, the District Court had found that Soft-Lite had entered into "agreements with wholesale customers" to fix prices and boycott unlicensed retailers. 321 U.S., at 717. This Court held that the facts "all amply support, indeed require, the inference of the trial court that a conspiracy to maintain prices down the distribution system existed between the wholesalers and Soft-Lite." Id., 720. The Court reiterated that resale price maintenance could not be achieved "by agreement, express or implied." Id., 721. In rejecting the applicability of the Colgate doctrine, it said that none of the cases applying the doctrine "involve, as the present case does, an agreement between the seller and purchaser to maintain resale prices." Ibid. It justified the finding of concerted action [****42] on the ground that "the wholesalers accepted Soft-Lite's proffer of a plan of distribution by cooperating in prices, limitation of sales to and approval of retail licensees." Id., 723.

The results in Beech-Nut and Bausch & Lomb, as in all Sherman Act cases, turned on the application of established standards of concerted action to the full sweep of the particular facts in those cases, and not upon any new meaning given to the words "contract, combination . . . [**517] or conspiracy." The Court now says that the seller runs afoul of the Sherman Act when he goes beyond mere announcement of his policy and refusal to sell, not because the bare announcement and refusal fall outside the statutory phrase, but because any additional step removes a "countervailing consideration" [***521] in favor of permitting a seller to choose his customers. But we are left wholly in the dark as to what the purported new standard is for establishing a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy."

Second. The Court is mistaken in attributing to the District Court the limited view that Parke Davis' activities should, under Colgate, be upheld unless they involved some [****43] express or implied "contractual arrangement" with [*54] wholesalers or retailers. The Government's complaint specifically charged a "combination and conspiracy" between Parke Davis and its wholesale and retail customers in the areas involved, comprising a "continuing agreement, understanding and concert of action" in the four aspects already noted. Ante, p. 50. In its 31 detailed findings of fact the District Court repeatedly emphasized that Parke Davis did not have an "agreement or understanding of any kind" with its distributors, and it concluded that the evidence as a whole did not support the Government's allegations. It determined with respect to each of the four facets of the alleged conspiracy that "there was no coercion" and that "Parke, Davis did not combine, conspire or enter into an agreement, understanding or concert of action" with the wholesalers, retailers, or anyone else. I cannot detect in the record any indication that the District Court in making these findings applied anything other than the standard which has always been understood to govern prosecutions based on §§ 1 and 3 of the Sherman Act.

Third. Bearing down heavily on the statement in [****44] Beech-Nut that the conduct there involved showed more than "the simple refusal to sell," 257 U.S., at 454 (see also Bausch & Lomb, supra, at 722), the Court finds that Parke Davis' conduct exceeded the permissible limits of Colgate in two respects. The first is that Parke Davis announced that it would, and did, cut off wholesalers who continued to sell to price-cutting retailers. The second is that the Company in at least one instance reported its talks with one or more retailers to other retailers; that in "this manner Parke Davis sought assurances of compliance and got them"; and that it "was only by actively bringing about substantial unanimity among the competitors that Parke Davis was able to gain adherence to its policy."

HÌ GÁMEÜÉGJÉÉÉ I LÀ ÉAUÉÉDÁ ÉHÉÉÉ FÍ LÁ ÁSEØAÉGÁ Á É ÉÉÉ GLÁFJÍ ÉÁMEÜÉSÓYQÁGEFHÉÉÉ I

[*55] There are two difficulties with the Court's analysis on these scores. The first is the findings of the District Court. As to refusals to sell to wholesalers, the lower court found that such conduct did not involve any concert of action, but was wholly unilateral on Parke Davis' part. And I cannot see how such unilateral action, permissible in itself, becomes any less unilateral because it is taken simultaneously with [****45] similar unilateral action at the retail level. As to the other respect in which the Court holds Parke Davis' conduct was illegal, the District Court found that the Company did not make "the enforcement of its policies as to any one wholesaler or retailer dependent upon the action of any other wholesaler or retailer." And it further stated that the "evidence is clear that both wholesalers and retailers valued defendant's business so highly that they acceded to its policy," and that such acquiescence was not brought about by "coercion" or "agreement." Even if this were not true, so that concerted action among the retailers at the "horizontal" level might be inferred, as the Court indicates, under the principles of Interstate Circuit, Inc., v. United [**518] States, 306 U.S. 208, [***522] I do not see how that itself would justify an inference that concerted action at the "vertical" level existed between Parke Davis and the retailers or wholesalers.

The second difficulty with the Court's analysis is that even reviewing the District Court's findings only as a matter of law, as the Court purports to do, the cases do not justify overturning the lower court's [***46] resulting conclusions. Beech-Nut did not say that refusals to sell to wholesalers who persisted in selling to cut-price retailers -- conduct which was present in that case (257 U.S., at 448) -- was a per se infraction of the Colgate rule, but only that it was offensive if it was the result of cooperative group action. While the Court in Beech-Nut and [*56] Bausch & Lomb inferred from the aggressive, widespread, highly organized, and successful merchandising programs involved there that such concerted action existed in those cases, the defensive, limited, unorganized, and unsuccessful effort of Parke Davis to maintain its resale price policy<sup>4</sup> [***47] does not justify our disregarding the District Court's finding to the contrary in this case.<sup>5</sup>

In light of the whole history of the Colgate doctrine, it is surely this Court, and not the District Court, that has proceeded on erroneous premises in deciding this case. Unless there is to be attributed to the Court a purpose to overturn the findings of fact of the District Court -- something which its opinion not only expressly disclaims doing, but which would also be in plain defiance of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 52 (a), [*57] and principles announced in past cases (see, e. g., United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 338 U.S. 338, 341-342; International Boxing Club of New York, Inc., v. United States, 358 U.S. 242, 252) [***48] -- I think that what the Court has really done here is to throw the Colgate doctrine into discard.

To be sure, the Government has explicitly stated that it does not ask us to overrule Colgate, and the Court professes not to do so. But contrary to the long understanding of bench and bar, the Court treats Colgate as turning not on the absence of the concerted action explicitly required by §§ 1 and 3 of the Sherman Act, but upon the Court's notion of "countervailing" social policies. I can regard the Court's profession as no more than a bow to the fact that Colgate, decided more than 40 years ago, has become part of the economic regime of the country upon [***523] which the commercial community and the lawyers who advise it have justifiably relied.

---

<sup>4</sup>The District Court found, among other things, that the efforts of Parke Davis in the District of Columbia and Virginia came about only after some of its competitors had engaged in damaging local "deep price cutting" on Parke Davis products (Fdg. 12); that Parke Davis' sales in those areas constituted less than 5% of the total pharmaceutical sales therein (Fdg. 3); that these efforts followed the legal advice previously given by the Company's counsel (Fdg. 12); that Parke Davis did not have "any regularized or systematic machinery for maintaining its suggested minimum prices as to either retailers or wholesalers" (Fdg. 10); that the entire episode lasted only from July to the fall of 1956, when the Company "in good faith" abandoned all further such efforts (Fdgs. 12, 27); and that since that time retailers in these areas "have continuously sold and advertised Parke, Davis products at cut prices, and have been able to obtain those products from both the wholesalers and/or Parke, Davis itself." (Fdg. 27.)

<sup>5</sup>It may be observed that the facts found by the District Court militate more strongly against violation of the Sherman Act than those which formed the basis of the charge held erroneous by this Court in Cudahy, 256 U.S., at 210-211. Although the Court now repudiates what was said in Cudahy in this respect, I submit that there is nothing in Beech-Nut, Bausch & Lomb, or any other case in this Court which justifies this.

HÌ GÀMÈÙÈGJ ÈÈ Ì LÀ €ÀÙÈDÀ ÈHÈÈ Ì FÌ LÀ ÅÙÒAÈGÀ Á Ì ÈÈ GHÀFJÌ €ÀMÈÙÈSÓYQÀGÈFHÈÈ Ì

[**519] If the principle for which Colgate stands is to be reversed, it is, as the Government's position plainly indicates, something that should be left to the Congress. It is surely the emptiest of formalisms to profess respect for Colgate and eviscerate it in application.

I would affirm.

References

---

Annotation References:

[****49] Right of manufacturer, producer, or wholesaler to control resale price, 7 ALR 449, 19 ALR 925, 32 ALR 1087, 103 ALR 1331, 125 ALR 1335.

---

End of Document

Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Ass'n v. United States

Supreme Court of the United States

January 19-20, 1960, Argued ; May 2, 1960, Decided *

No. 62

Reporter

362 U.S. 458 *; 80 S. Ct. 847 **; 4 L. Ed. 2d 880 ***; 1960 U.S. LEXIS 1864 ****; 1960 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,694

MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA MILK PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION, INC., v. UNITED STATES

Subsequent History: Judgment entered by, Injunction granted at United States v. Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Assn., Inc., 1960 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4806, 1960 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P69860 \(D.D.C., Nov. 22, 1960\)

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

United States v. Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Asso., 167 F. Supp. 45, 1958 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3371 \(D.D.C., 1958\)

United States v. Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Asso., 167 F. Supp. 799, 1958 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3185 \(D.D.C., 1958\)

United States v. Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Asso., 168 F. Supp. 880, 1959 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3909 \(D.D.C., 1959\)

Disposition: 167 F.Supp. 45, reversed. 167 F.Supp. 799, 168 F.Supp. 880, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

cooperative, Sherman Act, agricultural, milk, Clayton Act, Dairy, producers, Capper-Volstead Act, acquisition, anti trust law, dealers, exempt, charges, farmers, monopolization, practices, restraint of trade, associations, provisions, violations, contracts, monopoly

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

HN1 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

---

* Together with No. 73, United States v. Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, Inc., also on appeal from the same Court.

HÍ GÁVEJÁN ||| LÁ ÉAUÉAOÀ ||| ÉA ||| LÁ ÁSEÓdA ÉGÁÀ ||| ÉA ||| ÉLAFJÍ ÉÁVÉJÉSÓYÓWÁFÍ ||| ÉA

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 3.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN3 [blue downward arrow icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Product Promotions

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

See 7 U.S.C.S. § 291.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

H5 Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

See 7 U.S.C.S. § 292.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 17.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Product Promotions

HNT Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

The privilege the Capper-Volstead Act, 7 U.S.C.S. § 291, grants milk producers to conduct their affairs collectively does not include a privilege to combine with competitors so as to use a monopoly position as a lever further to suppress competition by and among independent producers and processors.

Lawyers' Edition Display

Summary

In an antitrust action brought by the United States in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia against an agricultural cooperative supplying about 86 per cent of the milk purchased by all milk dealers in the metropolitan area of Washington, D. C., and having as members about 2,000 Maryland and Virginia dairy farmers, the complaint charged that the defendant had: (1) attempted to monopolize and had monopolized interstate trade and commerce in fluid milk in Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia in violation of 2 of the Sherman Act; (2) through contracts and agreements combined and conspired with a dairy and others to eliminate competition in the same milk market area in violation of 3 of that act; and (3) bought all the assets of the dairy, the largest competitor of the defendant's dealers, the effect of which acquisition might be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in violation of 7 of the Clayton Act. The chief defense set up by the defendant was that, because of its being a co-operative composed exclusively of dairy farmers, 6 of the Clayton Act and 1 and 2 of the Capper- Volstead Act completely immunized it from the antitrust laws with respect to the charges made in the complaint. Sustaining this defense, the District Court dismissed the first charge, where the defendant was not alleged to have acted in combination with others, but upheld the right of the government to go to trial on the second and third charges. (167 F Supp 45) After trial the court found for the United States on the second and third charge and entered a decree ordering the defendant to divest itself within a reasonable time of all assets acquired from the dairy and to cancel all contracts ancillary to the acquisition. (167 F Supp 799, 168 F Supp 880) The court refused to grant additional relief the United States asked for, retaining the cause for future orders, including the right of visitation. The United States appealed from this refusal and the dismissal of its first charge, and the defendant association appealed to review the judgments against it on the second and third charges.

On these appeals, the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the judgment of the District Court on the second and third charges, and reversed the dismissal of the first charge, remanding the cause for a trial. In an opinion by Black, J., expressing the unanimous views of the court, the defendant's claim of immunity from the antitrust laws was rejected, in so far as all three charges made against defendant were concerned; it was also held that the findings of the District Court as to the violations referred to in the second and third charges were supported by the evidence.

The judgment of the District Court that the relief granted would be effective in undoing the violations found was accepted by the Supreme Court, in view of the fact that the District Court also retained the cause for future orders, including the right of visitation.

Headnotes

---

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §322 > AGRICULTURE §12 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §20 > co-operatives -- authority of Secretary of Agriculture. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

Section 2 of the Capper-Volstead Act (7 USC 292), which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to issue a cease-and-desist order upon a finding that a co-operative has monopolized or restrained trade to such an extent that the price of an agricultural commodity has been unduly enhanced, is not intended to give the Secretary of Agriculture primary jurisdiction, and does not exclude all prosecutions under the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USC 1 et seq.).

HÌ GÁEÜÄÍÍ ÈÍ LÀ €ÁEÖÄÍÍ ÈÍ LÀ ÄSEÖÄÍÍ ÈÍ LÀ ÄFJÍ €ÁEÜÄÍÍ ÈÍ

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §12 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES > exemptions -- agricultural associations. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Neither 1 of the Capper-Volstead Act (7 USC 291), authorizing persons engaged in the production of agricultural products to act together in associations, nor 6 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 17), providing that nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of agricultural organizations or to restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof, demonstrate a purpose wholly to exempt agricultural associations from the antitrust laws, it being immaterial whether charges under the Sherman Act are brought under 1 (15 USC 1) of the act, prohibiting combinations in restraint of trade, or under 2 (15 USC 2), prohibiting monopolies.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §5 > Sherman Act prohibitions. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1), prohibiting combinations in restraint of trade, and 2 (15 USC 2), prohibiting monopolies, closely overlap, and the same kind of predatory practices may show violations of all.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §12 > exemptions -- farmers' associations. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The full effect of 6 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 17) is that a group of farmers acting together as a single entity in an association cannot be restrained from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; the section does not give such an entity full freedom to engage in predatory trade practices at will.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §12 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §20 > exemptions -- agricultural associations -- purpose. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The general philosophy of both the Capper-Volstead Act (7 USC 291), extending to capital stock agricultural co-operatives the exemption from antitrust laws given to nonstock agricultural associations by 6 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 17), and of 6 of the Clayton Act is simply that individual farmers should be given, through agricultural co-operatives acting as entities, the same unified competitive advantage and responsibility available to businessmen acting through corporations as entities.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §20 > effect of Capper-Volstead Act. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

HÌ GÁVEA Ì Ì LÀ €ÁVÖDÀ I Ì ËÈI I Ì LÀ ÅSEØAÅGA Ì €ÅÅI I ELÅJÌ €ÁVÅESØYØAÌ Ì ËÅÅF

The Capper-Volstead Act (7 USC 291 et seq.) does not leave co-operatives which it authorizes free to engage in practices against other persons in order to monopolize trade, or restrain and suppress competition with the co-operative.

PLEADING §176 > complaint -- restraint of trade -- agricultural co-operative -- dairy farmers. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Allegations in a complaint, in an action brought by the United States against an agricultural co-operative, which supplies about 86 per cent of the milk purchased by all milk dealers in the metropolitan area of Washington, D. C., and has a membership of about 2,000 Maryland and Virginia dairy farmers, that the defendant had threatened and undertaken diverse action to induce or compel dealers to purchase milk from the defendant, and induced and assisted others to acquire dealer outlets which were not purchasing milk from the defendant, and that the defendant eliminated producers and producers' agricultural co-operative associations not affiliated with the defendant from supplying milk to dealers, the statement of particulars listing a number of instances in which the defendant attempted to interfere with truck shipments of non-members' milk, and to induce a Washington dairy to switch its nonassociation producers to the Baltimore market, and that the defendant engaged in a boycott of a feed and farm supply store to compel its owner to purchase milk from the defendant, and that it compelled a dairy to buy its milk by using the leverage of that dairy's indebtedness to the defendant, charge anticompetitive activities which are so far outside the legitimate object of a co-operative that, if approved, they would constitute clear violations of the antimonopoly provisions of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 2).

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §12 > RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34 > agricultural co-operative -- dairy farmers -- acquiring assets of competitor -- authority of Secretary of Agriculture. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Findings, in an antitrust action brought by the United States against an agricultural co-operative supplying about 86 per cent of the milk purchased by all milk dealers in the metropolitan area of Washington, D. C., and having as members about 2,000 Maryland and Virginia dairy farmers, that its motive for and result of purchasing the assets of a dairy in Washington was to eliminate the largest purchaser of nonassociation milk in the area, force former producers of such dairy either to join the defendant association or to ship to Baltimore, thus both bringing more milk to the defendant and diverting competing milk to another market, eliminate the defendant's prime competitive dealer from government contract milk bidding, and increase the defendant's control of the Washington market, support a District Court's conclusion that the acquisition of the dairy tended to create a monopoly or substantially lessen competition, and was therefore a violation of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18); the acquisition of the dairy is not protected by the last paragraph of 7 of the act providing, in part, that nothing contained in 7 shall apply to transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority given by the Secretary of Agriculture under any statutory provision vesting such power in him, there being no statutory provision that vests power in the Secretary to approve a transaction and thereby exempt a co-operative from the antitrust laws under the circumstances described above.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34 > agricultural co-operative -- dairy farmers -- acquiring assets of competitor. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

HÌ GÁWEJÀ Ì Ì LÀ €ÁUĐÀI Ì Ì LÀ ÁSEOÀGÀ Ì €ÁU Ì ELÁJÌ €ÁUÈSÓYÓAÌ Ì Ì

A classic combination or conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of 3 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 3) is shown by findings, in an action brought by the United States against an agricultural co-operative supplying about 86 per cent of the milk purchased by all milk dealers in the metropolitan area of Washington, D. C., and having as members about 2,000 Maryland and Virginia dairy farmers, that the defendant association purchased the assets of a dairy in Washington; that the motive for and result of the acquisition was to eliminate the largest purchaser of non-association milk in the area, force former non-association producers of the dairy either to join the defendant or to ship to Baltimore, thus both bringing more milk to the defendant and diverting competing milk to another market, eliminate the defendant's prime competitive dealer from government contract milk bidding, and increase the defendant's control of the Washington market; that the result of this transaction was a foreclosure of competition; that the transaction was entered into with the intent and purpose of restraining trade; and that an unreasonable restraint of trade, violative of the Sherman Act, has resulted from the acquisition of the dairy by the defendant.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > lawful activities. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

Even lawful contracts and business activities may help to make up a pattern of conduct unlawful under the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USC 1 et seq.).

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §20 > effect of Capper-Volstead Act. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

The privilege which the Capper-Volstead Act (7 USC 291 et seq.) grants agricultural producers to conduct their affairs collectively does not include a privilege to combine with competitors so as to use a monopoly position as a lever to suppress competition by and among independent producers and processors.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §73 > decree -- discretion of court. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

The formulation of a decree in an antitrust action is largely left to the discretion of the trial court.

APPEAL §1400 > review of discretion -- antitrust decree. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

A judgment of the District Court that the relief granted by it in an antitrust action against an association will be effective in undoing the violation found by the court will not be rejected by the Supreme Court of the United States, where the District Court also retains the cause for future orders, including the right of visitation if deemed appropriate.

Syllabus

The United States brought a civil antitrust action against an agricultural cooperative marketing association composed of about 2,000 Maryland and Virginia dairy farmers supplying about 86% of the milk purchased by all milk dealers in the Washington, D. C., metropolitan area. The complaint charged that the association had (1) monopolized and attempted to monopolize interstate trade and commerce in fluid milk in Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia, in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act; (2) through contracts and agreements combined and conspired with Embassy Dairy and others to eliminate and foreclose competition in the same milk market area, in violation of § 3 of the Sherman Act; and (3) bought all assets of Embassy Dairy (the largest milk dealer in the area which competed with the association's dealers), the effect of [***2] which might be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. The District Court dismissed the charge under § 2 of the Sherman Act; but it found for the Government on the charges under § 3 of the Sherman Act and § 7 of the Clayton Act and granted part, but not all, of the relief sought by the Government with respect to those charges. Held:

1. Section 2 of the Capper-Volstead Act, which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to issue a cease-and-desist order upon finding that a cooperative has monopolized or restrained trade to such an extent that the price of an agricultural commodity has been "unduly enhanced," does not exclude all prosecutions under the Sherman Act. United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188. Pp. 462-463.
2. Neither § 6 of the Clayton Act nor § 1 of the Capper-Volstead Act leaves agricultural cooperatives free to engage in practices against others which are designed to monopolize trade or to restrain and suppress competition. Pp. 463-468.
3. The allegations of the complaint and the statement of particulars in this case charge anticompetitive activities which are so far [***3] outside the legitimate objects of a cooperative that, if proved, they would constitute clear violations of § 2 of the Sherman Act; and the District Court erred in dismissing the charge of violating § 2. P. 468.
4. On the record in this case, the District Court properly found that the acquisition of Embassy Dairy by the association tended to create a monopoly or to substantially lessen competition, in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. Pp. 468-469.
5. The acquisition of Embassy Dairy by the association was not exempted from the provisions of § 7 of the Clayton Act by the last paragraph of that section, since there is no "statutory provision" that vests power in the Secretary of Agriculture to approve a transaction and thereby exempt a cooperative from the antitrust laws under the circumstances of this case, which involves no agricultural marketing agreement with the Secretary. Pp. 469-470.
6. The privilege the Capper-Volstead Act grants producers to conduct their affairs collectively does not include a privilege to combine with competitors so as to use a monopoly position as a lever further to suppress competition by and among independent producers and processors; and the [***4] record sustains the District Court's finding that the association had violated § 3 of the Sherman Act. Pp. 470-472.
7. Having entered a decree ordering the association to divest itself of all assets acquired from Embassy Dairy and to cancel all contracts ancillary to their acquisition, and having retained jurisdiction to grant such further relief as might be appropriate, the District Court did not err in denying part of the relief sought by the Government. Pp. 472-473.

Counsel: Herbert A. Bergson and William J. Hughes, Jr. argued the cause for the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, Inc. With them on the brief were Daniel J. Freed, Howard Adler, Jr. and Daniel H. Margolis.

Philip Elman argued the cause for the United States. On the brief were Solicitor General Rankin, Acting Assistant Attorney General Bicks, Charles H. Weston, Irwin A. Seibel and Joseph J. Saunders.

Judges: Warren, Black, Frankfurter, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Whittaker, Stewart

HÌ GÁEÜAÍ Ì ÁE Í LÀ ÉAÉOÀI Ì ÁE Í LÀ ÁSEOAÉCAÍ ÉAÉ Ì ELÁJÍ ÉAÉUÉSÓYÓAÍ Ì ÁE

Opinion by: BLACK

Opinion

---

[*460] [***884] [**849] MR. JUSTICE BLACK delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a civil antitrust action brought by the United States in a Federal District Court against an agricultural [****5] cooperative, the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, Inc. The Association supplies about 86% of the [**850] milk purchased by all milk dealers in the Washington, D. C., metropolitan area, and has as members about 2,000 Maryland and Virginia dairy farmers. The complaint charged that the Association had: (1) attempted to monopolize and had monopolized interstate trade and commerce in fluid milk in Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act;<sup>1</sup> [***8] (2) through contracts and agreements combined and conspired with Embassy Dairy and others to eliminate and foreclose competition in the same milk market area in violation of § 3 of that Act;<sup>2</sup> and (3) bought all the assets of Embassy Dairy, the largest milk dealer in the area which competed with the Association's dealers, the effect of which acquisition might be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create [*461] a monopoly in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act.<sup>3</sup> [***9] The chief defense set up by the Association was that, because of its being a cooperative composed exclusively of dairy farmers, § 6 of the Clayton Act<sup>4</sup> and §§ 1 and 2 of the Capper-Volstead [***885] [***6] Act<sup>5</sup> completely exempted and immunized it from the antitrust laws with respect to the charges made in the Government's complaint. The District Court concluded after arguments that

---

<sup>1</sup> Sherman Act § 2: HN1 [↑] "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding fifty thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." 26 Stat. 209 (1890), as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 2.

<sup>2</sup> Sherman Act § 3: HN2 [↑] "Every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in any Territory of the United States or of the District of Columbia . . . or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations, is declared illegal. . ." 26 Stat. 209 (1890), as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 3. Section 1 declares the same prohibition as to commerce "among the several States." Although there was also a charge against the Association under § 1 there was no judgment against it on this section, and that charge is no longer relevant here.

<sup>3</sup> Clayton Act § 7: HN3 [↑] "No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

....

"Nothing contained in this section shall apply to transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority given by the . . . [independent regulatory commissions] or the Secretary of Agriculture under any statutory provision vesting such power in such Commission, Secretary, or Board." 38 Stat. 731 (1914), as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 18.

<sup>4</sup> 38 Stat. 731 (1914), 15 U. S. C. § 17, set forth in note 11, infra.

<sup>5</sup> Capper-Volstead Act § 1: HN4 [↑] "Persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce, such products of persons so engaged. Such associations may have marketing agencies in common; and such associations and their members may make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect such purposes . . ." 42 Stat. 388 (1922), 7 U. S. C. § 291. Section 2 is set forth in note 7, infra.

HÌ GÁWEJÀ Ì Ì FLÀ €ÁUÒDÀ I Ì ÈÈ Ì ELÁ ÄSEÒAÉGÀ Ì ÈÈ Ì Í LAFJÌ €ÁWÈSÓYÓKÀ Ì Ì ÈÈ

"an agricultural cooperative is entirely exempt from the provisions of the antitrust laws, both as to its very existence as well as to all of its activities, provided it does not enter into conspiracies or combinations [\[\*\*851\]](#) with persons who are not producers of agricultural commodities." 167 F.Supp. 45, 52.

[\[\*462\]](#) Accordingly the court dismissed the Sherman Act § 2 monopolization charge, where the Association was not alleged to have acted in combination with others, but upheld the right of the Government to go to trial on the Sherman Act § 3 and Clayton Act § 7 charges because they involved alleged activities with the owners of Embassy and other persons who were not agricultural producers. After trial the court found for the United States on the latter two charges and entered a decree ordering the Association to divest itself within a reasonable time of all assets acquired from Embassy and to cancel all contracts ancillary to the acquisition. 167 F.Supp. 799, 168 F.Supp. 880. [\[\*\*\*\*7\]](#) The court refused to grant additional relief the United States asked for. It is from this refusal and the dismissal of its Sherman Act § 2 monopolization charge that the Government appealed directly to this Court under the Expediting Act.<sup>6</sup> The Association similarly appealed to review the judgments against it on the Sherman Act § 3 charge and the Clayton Act § 7 charge. We noted probable jurisdiction, 360 U.S. 927, and treat both appeals in this opinion.

[LEdHN\[1\]↑](#) [1]The Association's chief argument for antitrust exemption is based on § 2 of [\[\*\*\*\*10\]](#) the Capper-Volstead Act, which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to issue a cease-and-desist order upon a finding that a cooperative has monopolized or restrained trade to such an extent that the price of an agricultural commodity has been "unduly enhanced."<sup>7</sup> The contention is that this provision was [\[\*463\]](#) intended to give the Secretary of Agriculture primary jurisdiction, and thereby exclude any prosecutions at all under the Sherman Act. This Court unequivocally rejected the same contention in United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 206, after full consideration of the same legislative history that we are now asked to review again. We adhere to the reasoning and holding of the Borden opinion on this point.

[\[\*\*\*\*11\]](#) [LEdHN\[2\]↑](#) [2][LEdHN\[3\]↑](#) [3]The [\[\*\*\*886\]](#) Association also argues that without regard to § 2 of the Capper-Volstead Act, § 1 of that Act and § 6 of the Clayton Act demonstrate a purpose wholly to exempt agricultural associations from the antitrust laws. In the Borden case this Court held that neither § 6 of the Clayton Act nor the Capper-Volstead Act granted immunity from prosecution for the combination of a cooperative and others to restrain trade there charged as a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Although the Court was not confronted with charges under § 2 of the Sherman Act in that case we do not believe that Congress intended to immunize cooperatives engaged in competition-stifling practices from prosecution under the antimonopolization provisions of § 2 of the Sherman Act, while making them responsible for such practices as violations of the antitrade-restraint provisions of §§ 1 and 3 of that Act. These sections closely overlap, and the same kind of predatory practices may show violations of all.<sup>8</sup> The reasons underlying [\[\*\*852\]](#) [\[\*\*\*\*12\]](#) the Court's holding in the Borden case that the cooperative there was not completely exempt under § 1 apply equally well to §§ 2 and 3. The Clayton [*464] and Capper-Volstead Acts, construed in the light of their background, do not lend themselves to such an incongruous immunity-distinction between the sections as that urged here.

<sup>6</sup> 32 Stat. 823 (1903), as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 29.

<sup>7</sup> Capper-Volstead Act § 2: HN5↑ "If the Secretary of Agriculture shall have reason to believe that any such association monopolizes or restrains trade in interstate or foreign commerce to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is unduly enhanced by reason thereof [after a "show cause" hearing he may direct] such association to cease and desist from monopolization or restraint of trade. . . ." This order may be enforced by the Attorney General if not obeyed by the association. 42 Stat. 388 (1922), 7 U. S. C. § 292.

HÌ GÁMÈJÀ Ì Ì HÀ CÙÈDÀ I Ì Ì GLÁ ÁSÀOÀGÀ I CÀI Ì Ì LÀJÌ CÁMÈJÀSÓYQÀI Ì Ì ÁHNG

LEdHN[4] [4]In the early 1900's, when agricultural cooperatives were growing in effectiveness, there was widespread concern because the mere organization of farmers for mutual help was often considered to be a violation of the antitrust laws. Some state courts had sustained antitrust charges against agricultural cooperatives,<sup>9</sup> [****15] and as a result [****13] eventually all the States passed Acts authorizing their existence.<sup>10</sup> It was to bar such prosecutions by the Federal Government as to interstate transactions that Congress in 1914 inserted § 6 in the Clayton Act exempting agricultural organizations, along with labor unions, from the antitrust laws. This Court has held that the provisions of that section, set out below,<sup>11</sup> [****16] relating to labor [*465] unions do not manifest "a congressional [***887] purpose wholly to exempt" them from the antitrust laws,<sup>12</sup> and neither the language nor the legislative history of the section indicates a congressional purpose to grant any broader immunity to agricultural cooperatives. The language shows no more than a purpose to allow farmers to act together in cooperative associations without the associations as such being "held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, under the antitrust laws," as they otherwise might have been. This interpretation is supported by the House and Senate Committee Reports on the bill.<sup>13</sup> Thus, the [**853] full effect of § 6 is that a group of farmers acting together as a single entity in an association cannot be restrained [****14] "from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof" (emphasis supplied), but the section cannot support the contention that

<sup>8</sup> Klor's, Inc., v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 211; United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 226, n. 59; Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 59-60.

<sup>9</sup> See, e. g., Reeves v. Decorah Farmers' Cooperative Society, 160 Iowa 194, 140 N. W. 844 (1913); Burns v. Wray Farmers' Grain Co., 65 Colo. 425, 176 P. 487 (1918); Ford v. Chicago Milk Shippers' Assn., 155 Ill. 166, 39 N. E. 651 (1895). Contra, Burley Tobacco Society v. Gillaspy, 51 Ind. App. 583, 100 N. E. 89 (1912). Hanna, Antitrust Immunities of Cooperative Associations, 13 Law and Contemp. Prob. 488-490 (1948); Hanna, Cooperative Associations and the Public, 29 Mich. L. Rev. 148, 163-165 (1930); Jensen, The Bill of Rights of U.S. Cooperative Agriculture, 20 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 181, 184-189 (1948). See generally Att'y Gen. Nat'l Comm. Antitrust Rep. (1955), 306-313; Note, 57 Mich. L. Rev. 921 (1959).

<sup>10</sup> See statutes collected in Jensen, The Bill of Rights of U.S. Cooperative Agriculture, 20 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 181, 191, n. 29 (1948); Note, 38 Harv. L. Rev. 87, 89, n. 17 (1924). See Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U.S. 540, 556-558 (1902), holding Illinois exemption statute unconstitutional, and see dissent per McKenna, J., at 565, 571; overruled by Tigner v. Texas, 310 U.S. 141 (1940).

<sup>11</sup> Clayton Act § 6: HN6 [4] "The labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce. Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations, instituted for the purposes of mutual help, and not having capital stock or conducted for profit, or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, under the antitrust laws." 38 Stat. 730 (1914), 15 U. S. C. § 17.

<sup>12</sup> Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, 325 U.S. 797, 805; Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 468-469. Cf. United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219.

<sup>13</sup> "In the light of previous decisions of the courts and in view of a possible interpretation of the law which would empower the courts to order the dissolution of such organizations and associations, your committee feels that all doubt should be removed as to the legality of the existence and operations of these organizations and associations, and that the law should not be construed in such a way as to authorize their dissolution by the courts under the antitrust laws or to forbid the individual members of such associations from carrying out the legitimate and lawful objects of their associations." (Emphasis supplied.) H. R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess. 16; S. Rep. No. 698, 63d Cong., 2d Sess. 12.

HÌ GÁMÈJÀ Ì Ì LÀ CÀU ÈO ĐÀ I Ì HÀ ÁS DÀ ËGÀ I CÀI Ì LÀ JÌ CÀMÈJÀ SÓY QÀ I Ì HÀ

it gives such an entity full freedom to [*466] engage in predatory trade practices at will. See United States v. King, 229 F. 275, 250 F. 908, 910. Cf. United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 203-205.

LEdHN[5] [5]The Capper-Volstead Act of 1922 extended § 6 of the Clayton [****17] Act exemption to capital stock agricultural cooperatives which had not previously been covered by that section.<sup>14</sup> Section 1 of the Capper-Volstead Act also provided that among "the legitimate objects" of farmer organizations were "collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing" products through common marketing agencies and the making of "necessary contracts and agreements to effect such purposes." We believe it is reasonably clear from the very language of the Capper-Volstead Act, as it was in § 6 of the Clayton Act, that the general philosophy of both was simply that individual farmers should be given, through agricultural cooperatives acting as entities, the same unified competitive advantage -- and responsibility -- available to businessmen acting through corporations as entities. As the House Report on the Capper-Volstead Act said:

"Instead of granting a class privilege, it aims to equalize existing privileges by changing the law applicable to the ordinary business [***888] corporations so the farmers can take advantage of it."<sup>15</sup>

This indicates a purpose to make it possible for farmer-producers to organize together, set association policy, [****18] fix prices at which their cooperative will sell their produce, and otherwise carry on like a business corporation without thereby violating the antitrust laws. It does not suggest [*467] a congressional desire to vest cooperatives with unrestricted power to restrain trade or to achieve monopoly by preying on independent producers, processors or dealers intent on carrying on their own businesses in their own legitimate way. In the Senate hearings on the Capper-Volstead Act the Secretary of Agriculture, who was given a large measure of authority under this Act, and the Solicitor of his Department, testified that the Act would not authorize cooperatives to engage in predatory practices in violation of the Sherman Act.<sup>16</sup> [****20] And the [**854] House Committee Report assured the Congress that:

"In the event that associations authorized by this bill shall do anything forbidden by the Sherman Antitrust Act, they will be subject to the penalties imposed by that law."<sup>17</sup>

LEdHN[6] [6] Although contrary inferences could be drawn from some parts of the legislative history, we are satisfied that the part [****19] of the House Committee Report just quoted correctly interpreted the Capper-Volstead Act, and that the Act did not leave cooperatives free to engage in practices against other persons in order to monopolize trade, or restrain and suppress competition with the cooperative. [*468] Therefore, we turn now to a consideration of the District Court's judgments in this case.

LEdHN[7] [7]Sherman Act § 2 Dismissal. -- The complaint charging monopolization alleged that the Association had "threatened and undertaken diverse actions to induce or compel dealers to purchase milk from the defendant [Association], and induced and assisted others to acquire dealer outlets" which were not purchasing milk from the Association. It also alleged that the Association "excluded, eliminated, and attempted to eliminate others,

---

<sup>14</sup> Some Congressmen opposed § 6 of the Clayton Act because it did not include agricultural associations with capital stock. "Under the provisions of section 7 [now § 6] of this bill farmers' organizations with capital stock, organized for profit, would be left subject to the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law." H. R. Rep. No. 627, Pt. 4, 63d Cong., 2d Sess. 4. And see id., Pt. 3, 10.

<sup>15</sup> H. R. Rep. No. 24, 67th Cong., 1st Sess. 2.

<sup>16</sup> The Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture testified that it was his "opinion that if the farmers want to create monopolies or want to engage in unfair practices in commerce, this bill certainly would not give them the right to do it, and they would have to get another bill. . . . These organizations would not be allowed to adopt any illegal means or methods of conducting their business," and if they "engaged in some practice that prevented other people from selling their milk . . . they would be subject to the antitrust laws. . . . It does not say . . . that they may adopt any unfair methods of competition." The Secretary of Agriculture testified to the same effect. Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee on H. R. 2373, 67th Cong., 1st Sess. 203, 204, 205.

<sup>17</sup> Op. cit., supra, note 15, at 3.

HÌ GÁMÈJÀ Ì Ì LÀ CÙÈDÀ I Ì Ì LÀ ÁSÈOÀÈGÀ I CÀI Ì LÀ JÌ CÀMÈJÀ SÓYQÀ Ì Ì ÁMÈJÀ

including producers and producers' agricultural cooperative associations not affiliated with defendant, from supplying milk to dealers." Supporting this charge the statement of particulars listed a number of instances in which the Association attempted to interfere with truck shipments of nonmembers' milk, and an attempt during 1939-1942 to induce a Washington dairy to switch its non-Association producers to the Baltimore market. The statement of particulars also included charges that the Association engaged in a boycott of a feed and farm supply [****21] store to compel its owner, who also owned an Alexandria dairy, to purchase milk from [***889] the Association, and that it compelled a dairy to buy its milk by using the leverage of that dairy's indebtedness to the Association. We are satisfied that the allegations of the complaint and the statement of particulars, only a part of which we have set out, charge anticompetitive activities which are so far outside the "legitimate objects" of a cooperative that, if proved, they would constitute clear violations of § 2 of the Sherman Act by this Association, a fact, indeed, which the Association does not really dispute if it is subject to liability under this section. It was error for the District Court to dismiss the § 2 charge.

LEdHN[8] [8]Clayton Act § 7 Judgment. -- In 1954 the Association purchased the assets of Embassy Dairy in Washington. The complaint charged that this acquisition constituted [*469] a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, which prohibits a corporation engaged in commerce from acquiring all or any part of the assets of another corporation so engaged where the effect may be to tend [****22] to create a monopoly or substantially lessen competition. A trial was had before the District Court on this charge and the court found that the motive for and result of the Embassy acquisition was to: eliminate the largest purchaser of non-Association milk in the area; force former Embassy non-Association producers either to join the Association or to ship to Baltimore, thus both bringing more milk to the Association and diverting competing milk to another market; eliminate the Association's prime competitive dealer from government contract milk bidding; and increase the Association's control of the Washington [**855] market. On these findings, amply supported by evidence, the District Court could properly conclude, as it did, that the Embassy acquisition tended to create a monopoly or substantially lessen competition, and was therefore a violation of § 7.<sup>18</sup>

This leaves the contention that the acquisition of Embassy was protected by the last paragraph of § [****23] 7 of the Clayton Act which in pertinent part provides that:

"Nothing contained in this section shall apply to transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority given by . . . the Secretary of Agriculture under any statutory provision vesting such power in such . . . Secretary . . ."<sup>19</sup>

The Association contends that its purchase of Embassy Dairy was "consummated pursuant to authority given by . . . the Secretary of Agriculture." The trouble with this contention is that there is no "statutory provision" that vests power in the Secretary of Agriculture to approve a transaction and thereby exempt a cooperative [*470] from the antitrust laws under the circumstances of this case. While there is a "statutory provision" vesting power in the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into agricultural marketing agreements which "shall be deemed to be lawful" and "not . . . be in violation of any of the antitrust laws of the United States," no such marketing agreement is involved here.<sup>20</sup>

[****24] Sherman Act § 3 Judgment. -- The complaint charged that the Association, [***890] Embassy and others had violated § 3 of the Sherman Act by engaging in a combination and conspiracy to eliminate and foreclose competition with the Association and with dealers purchasing milk from the Association. The District Court, with the consent of the parties, considered and decided this § 3 charge on the evidence offered on the § 7 Clayton Act charge. A crucial element in this charge of concerted action was the Association's purchase of Embassy's assets

<sup>18</sup> 167 F.Supp. 799, 807-808.

<sup>19</sup> See note 3, supra.

<sup>20</sup> Agricultural Adjustment Act, § 8b, as amended, 7 U. S. C. § 608b. United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 198-202; United States v. Rock Royal Co-operative, Inc., 307 U.S. 533, 560; United States v. Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers' Assn., Inc., 90 F.Supp. 681, 688.

HÌ GÁMÈJÀ Ì Ì ÈÀ ÈÙÈÒdÀ I Ì ÈÀ Ì LÀ ÁÙÒdÀ ÈGÀ Ì ÈÀ JÈÁJÌ ÈMÈJÈSÓYØÀ Ì ÈÙÈG

under a contract containing an agreement by the former owners of Embassy not to compete with the Association in the milk business in the Washington area for 10 years, and to attempt to have all former Embassy producers either join the Association or ship their milk to the Baltimore market. Also, particularly pertinent to the charge of a § 3 combination, was evidence showing a long and spirited business rivalry between the Association and its producers on the one hand and Embassy and its independent producers on the other. The Association had been "unhappy" about Embassy's price cutting and its generally "disruptive" competitive [***25] practices that had made Embassy a "thorn in the side of the Association for many years." There was also evidence emphasized by the court in its [*471] Clayton Act § 7 opinion that "the price paid by the Association for the transfer was far in excess of the actual and intrinsic value of the property purchased." 167 F.Supp. 799, 806. After readopting its Clayton Act § 7 findings regarding the anticompetitive motives and results of the Embassy acquisition, see p. 469, supra, the District Court made the three following additional findings on the Sherman Act § 3 charge: (1) "that the result of the transaction complained of was a foreclosure of competition," (2) "that the transaction complained of was entered [**856] into with the intent and purpose of restraining trade,"<sup>21</sup> and (3) "that an unreasonable restraint of trade, violative of the Sherman Act, has resulted from the acquisition of Embassy Dairy by the defendant [Association]." On the basis of its findings and opinion the court then concluded that "the transaction involving the acquisition of Embassy Dairy by the defendant constitutes a violation of Section 3 of the Sherman Act." 168 F.Supp. 880, 881, 882. [***26]

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [↑] [9] [LEdHN\[10\]](#) [↑] [10] [LEdHN\[11\]](#) [↑] [11] The facts found by the court show a classic combination or conspiracy to restrain trade, unless, as the Association contends, "the transaction involving the acquisition of Embassy" upon which the judgment against it was based is protected against Sherman Act prosecutions by the Capper-Volstead Act's provisions that cooperatives can lawfully make "the necessary contracts and agreements" to process, handle and market milk for their producer-members. The Embassy assets the Association acquired are useful in processing and marketing milk, [***27] and we may assume, as it is contended, that their purchase simply for business use, without more, often would be permitted and would be lawful under the Capper-Volstead [*472] Act. But even lawful contracts and business activities may help to make up a pattern of conduct unlawful under the Sherman Act.<sup>22</sup> [***28] The contract of purchase here, viewed in the context [***891] of all the evidence and findings, was not one made merely to advance the Association's own permissible processing and marketing business; it was entered into by both parties, according to the court's findings as we understand them, because of its usefulness as a weapon to restrain and suppress competitors and competition in the Washington metropolitan area. We hold that HN7 [↑] the privilege the Capper-Volstead Act grants producers to conduct their affairs collectively does not include a privilege to combine with competitors<sup>23</sup> so as to use a monopoly position as a lever further to suppress competition by and among independent producers and processors.

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [↑] [12] [LEdHN\[13\]](#) [↑] [13] Adequacy of Relief. -- The Government's appeal in this case is directed in part at the relief granted it by the District Court. The judgment requires the Association to "dispose of as a unit and as a going dairy business all [Embassy] assets . . . tangible or intangible, which it acquired on July 26, 1954, and replacements therefor," and to do so in "good faith" to preserve the business in "as good condition as possible." The District Court refused to go further and require the Association to dispose of "all assets used" in the Embassy operation, to prohibit the Association from operating as a dealer in the Washington market for a period after divestiture, to prevent the future acquisition of distributors without prior approval of the Government, and to grant the Government general "visitation rights" as to the Association's [***29] records and employees. The District

<sup>21</sup> See United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 105. Cf. United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 525; United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 173.

<sup>22</sup> See Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., v. United States, 334 U.S. 110, 119.

<sup>23</sup> See United States v. Maryland Cooperative Milk Producers, Inc., 145 F.Supp. 151.

HÌ GÁMEJÀ Ì Ì Ì GLÀ €ÁUÈDÈ Ì Ì Ì LÀ ÁSÈOÀÈGÀ Ì €ÁHÌ JFLÁFJÌ €ÁMEJÈSÓYØÀ Ì Ì Ì Ì Ì EGJ

Court was of the view that the Government would either be adequately [*473] protected as to these matters by the "good faith" requirement or by subsequent orders of the District Court when the occasion necessitated. The formulation of decrees is largely left to the discretion of the trial court, and we see no reason to reject the judgment of the District Court that the relief it granted will be effective in undoing the violation it found in view of the fact that it also retains [**857] the cause for future orders, including the right of visitation if deemed appropriate. See Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 22-23.

Accordingly, the judgment of the District Court finding violations of § 7 of the Clayton Act and § 3 of the Sherman Act is affirmed, and its dismissal of the charges under § 2 of the Sherman Act is reversed and remanded for a trial.

Affirmed in part, reversed and remanded in part.

References

---

Annotation References:

1. The doctrine of primary administrative jurisdiction, 94 L ed 806, 1 L ed 2d 1596.
- [****30] 2. Legality of combination among farmers, 25 ALR 1113, 33 ALR 247, 47 ALR 936, 77 ALR 405, 98 ALR 1406, 130 ALR 1326.
3. Right of one corporation to acquire stock in another as affected by the antitrust acts, 74 L ed 431.

---

End of Document

International Brotherhood of Teamsters, etc. v. Oliver

Supreme Court of the United States

May 16, 1960, Decided

No. 813

Reporter

362 U.S. 605 *; 80 S. Ct. 923 **; 4 L. Ed. 2d 987 ***; 1960 U.S. LEXIS 1932 ****; 40 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P66,511; 1960 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,718; 14 Ohio Op. 2d 277; 46 L.R.R.M. 2180

LOCAL 24, INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF TEAMSTERS, CHAUFFEURS, WAREHOUSEMEN & HELPERS OF AMERICA, AFL-CIO, ET AL. v. OLIVER ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF OHIO.

Disposition: 170 Ohio St. 207, 163 N. E. 2d 383, reversed.

Core Terms

---

provisions, carriers, hired

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

**HN1** Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Ohio's antitrust law could not be applied to prevent contracting parties from carrying out their agreement upon a subject matter as to which federal law directed them to bargain.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

In a decision rendered on January 19, 1959 (358 US 283, 3 L ed 2d 312, 79 S Ct 297), the United States Supreme Court ruled that the state of Ohio could not invalidate, as violative of its antitrust law, a provision of a collective bargaining contract between motor carriers and a teamsters' union, prescribing terms and conditions regulating the minimum rental and other terms of lease when a motor vehicle is leased to a carrier by an owner who drives the vehicle in the carrier's service, this being a subject of mandatory collective bargaining under the amended National Labor Relations Act, and thus within the rule that a state may not apply its antitrust law to prevent a union and an employer from carrying out portions of a collective bargaining contract between them dealing with a subject as to which the federal labor relations statutes direct them to bargain. On remand, the Court of Appeals of the State of Ohio, Ninth Judicial District, conformed to the Supreme Court's decision, in so far as the lessor of the motor vehicles, acting as a lessor-driver, was concerned; but the Ohio court barred enforcement against the lessor of provisions of the collective bargaining contract in so far as the lessor was acting as a lessor-employer (that is, leasing trucks driven by his employees). The Supreme Court of Ohio dismissed the union's appeal. (170 Ohio St 207, 163 NE2d 383.) The union having sought a writ of certiorari in the United States Supreme Court, the Supreme Court granted the writ, and reversed the judgment below. The ruling of the court, as stated in a per curiam opinion reflecting the views of six of its members, is adequately stated in the headnote, infra.

Whittaker, J., dissented.

Frankfurter and Stewart, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

COMMERCE §129.5 > labor relations -- collective bargaining -- state antitrust law -- motor carriers. -- > Headnote:

A state may not apply its antitrust law to prevent a labor union and an employer from carrying out their agreement upon a subject matter as to which federal law directs them to bargain; hence a state court may not bar, on the ground that antitrust violations are involved, a teamsters union and the motor carriers with which the union has entered into a collective bargaining contract from enforcing against one who leases his trucks, operated by his employees, to the motor carriers, a provision of the collective bargaining contract which specifies that hired or leased equipment, if not owner-driven, shall be operated only by employees of the motor carriers and which requires those carriers to use their own available equipment before hiring any extra equipment, such provision being concerned with the wages paid the lessor of the trucks, and thus being a subject of mandatory collective bargaining under the amended National Labor Relations Act.

Syllabus

---

Ohio's antitrust law may not be applied to prevent the contracting parties from carrying out a collective bargaining agreement upon a subject matter as to which the National Labor Relations Act directs them to bargain. (Teamsters Union v. Oliver, 358 U.S. 283). Therefore, certiorari is granted and the judgment below is reversed. Pp. 605-606.

Counsel: David Previant, Robert C. Knee, Bruce Laybourne and David Leo Uelmen for petitioners.

Bernard J. Roetzel and Charles R. Iden for respondents.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Whittaker; Frankfurter and Stewart took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Opinion by: PER CURIAM

Opinion

---

[*605] [*988] [**924] The motion for leave to use the record in No. 49, October Term, 1958, is granted. The petition for certiorari is also granted. After our remand to the Court of Appeals of the State of Ohio, Ninth Judicial District, for proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of this (Court, 358 U.S. 283), the Court of Appeals set aside its previous order "as [****2] it concerns and applies to Revel Oliver, appellee, as a lessor-driver" but continued the order in full force and effect "as it concerns and applies to Revel Oliver, appellee, as a lessor-owner and employer of drivers of his equipment." We read the judgment of the Court of Appeals as enjoining petitioners and respondents A. C. E. Transportation Co. and Interstate Truck Service, Inc., from enforcing against respondent Oliver those parts of Article [*606] 32 which provide that hired or leased equipment, if not owner-driven, shall be operated only by employees of the certificated or permitted carriers and require those carriers to use their own available equipment before hiring any extra equipment. Art. XXXII, §§ 4 and 5, 358 U.S., at 298-299. While we do not think the issue was tendered to us when the case was last here, we are of opinion that these provisions are at least as intimately bound up with the subject of wages as the minimum rental provisions we passed on then. Accordingly, as in the previous case, we hold that HN1 Ohio's antitrust law here may not "be applied to prevent the contracting parties from carrying out their agreement upon a subject matter as [****3] to which federal law directs them to bargain." 358 U.S., at 295.

The judgment accordingly is

Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE WHITTAKER dissents.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER and MR. JUSTICE STEWART took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

References

---

Annotation References:

1. Subjects of mandatory collective bargaining under Federal Labor Relations Act, 12 ALR2d 265.
2. What are "wages" as to which amended National Labor Relations Act makes collective bargaining mandatory, 3 L ed 2d 1725.
3. National Labor Relations Act and Labor Management Relations Act as excluding state action, 93 L ed 470, 94 L ed 984, 95 L ed 384, 98 L ed 245, 99 L ed 559, 100 L ed 1174. See also 174 ALR 1051.

---

End of Document

United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

February 20-21, 1961, Argued ; May 22, 1961, Decided

No. 55

Reporter

366 U.S. 316 *; 81 S. Ct. 1243 **; 6 L. Ed. 2d 318 ***; 1961 U.S. LEXIS 2146 ****

UNITED STATES v. E. I. du PONT de NEMOURS & CO. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS.

Disposition: 177 F.Supp. 1, affirmed in part, vacated in part, and remanded for further proceedings.

Core Terms

---

divestiture, decree, stock, acquisition, stockholders, shares, effective, provisions, antitrust, Courts, percent, voting, cases, shareholders, monopoly, parties, violations, fashioned, public interest, Clayton Act, monopolization, conspiracy, commerce, framing, anti trust law, pass through, Sherman Act, injunction, ownership, officers and directors

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction on Certiorari > Considerations Governing Review > Federal Court Decisions

**HN1** [] Considerations Governing Review, Federal Court Decisions

Where the Court delegates to the district court the duty of formulating a decree in compliance with the principles announced in the Court's judgment of reversal, that gives the Court plenary power where the compliance has been attempted and the decree in any proper way is brought to the Court's attention to see that it follows the opinion of the Court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

**HN2** [] Settlements, Consent Judgments

Divestiture is itself an equitable remedy designed to protect the public interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Knowledge

HN3 Settlements, Consent Judgments

In considering the subject of divestiture, three dominant influences must guide our action: (1) The duty of giving complete and efficacious effect to the prohibitions of the statute; (2) the accomplishing of this result with as little injury as possible to the interest of the general public; and, (3) a proper regard for the vast interests of private property which may have become vested in many persons as a result of the acquisition either by way of stock ownership or otherwise of interests in the stock or securities of the combination without any guilty knowledge or intent in any way to become actors or participants in the wrongs that inspired and dominated the combination from the beginning.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN4 Sherman Act, Remedies

Divestiture or dissolution is the traditional remedy for Sherman Act violations, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 and 2, and it is reasonable to use the same remedy when § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, which particularizes the Sherman Act standard of illegality, is involved.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

In *United States v E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 US 586, 1 L ed 2d 1057, 77 S Ct 872*, the Supreme Court held that the acquisition in the period 1917-1919 by du Pont of approximately 23 per cent of the General Motors voting common stock was a violation of 7 of the Clayton Act because its effect might be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly. Upon remand the District Court for the Northern District of Illinois refused to order complete divestiture of the stock, as requested by the government, but ordered a divestiture only of voting rights in the stock. The decree also enjoined du Pont from exercising voting rights in respect of its General Motors stock. (177 F Supp 1.)

On appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the judgment of the District Court, except as to the provision enjoining du Pont from exercising the voting rights, and directed complete divestiture. In an opinion by Brennan, J., expressing the view of four members of the Court, it was held that complete divestiture was the only appropriate relief.

Frankfurter, J., joined by Whittaker and Stewart, JJ., dissented, expressing the view that, in ordering only divestiture of voting rights, the District Court did not abuse its discretion.

Clark and Harlan, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

HÌ ÁMÈUÁFÌ ÊHÌ LÀ FÀUÉDÁFG HÆFGI HÀ ÁSEÓaÁcaÁFÌ ÊHÌ LAFJÌ FÀMÈEÁSÓYÓÁGFI Ì ÊHÌ

APPEAL §1400 > discretion -- antitrust cases. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

While the District Courts have the responsibility initially to fashion the remedy in antitrust cases, and the Supreme Court accords due regard and respect to the conclusion of the District Court, the Supreme Court has a duty itself to make sure that a decree is fashioned which will effectively redress proved violations of the antitrust laws.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §63 > public interest -- decree. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

A public interest served by civil antitrust suits is that they effectively pry open to competition a market that has been closed by defendant's illegal restraints; the decree should accomplish no less than that.

APPEAL §1340 > direct appeal -- antitrust cases. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The congressional authorization, under 2 of the Expediting Act (15 USC 29), of a direct appeal to the Supreme Court from a final judgment of a District Court in an antitrust action, imposes upon the Supreme Court a special burden of reviewing the relief granted or denied by the district judge.

APPEAL §1759 > reversal -- compliance with mandate -- antitrust case -- remedy. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

A close examination by the Supreme Court of a District Court's action in fashioning a remedy in a government antitrust action in which the acquisition by one corporation of stock in another corporation was held to violate 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) because of the resultant likelihood of the creation of a monopoly is required where the District Court's decree was fashioned in obedience to the mandate sent down to the District Court by the Supreme Court after the latter court's reversal of the District Court's dismissal of the government's complaint, and, moreover, the District Court's inquiry was concerned mainly with the alleged adverse tax and market effects of complete divestiture of the stock, whereas the primary focus of inquiry should have been upon the question of the relief required effectively to eliminate the tendency of the acquisition condemned by 7.

APPEAL §1757 > compliance with mandate. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The Supreme Court has plenary power to determine whether its mandate was scrupulously and fully carried out.

HÌ ÁMÈUÁFI ÊHFI LÀ FÀUÓÁFG HÆFG HÀ ÁSEØAÉCAÁFI ÊHFI LAFJÌ FÀMÈEÁSÓYÓÁGFI Ì ÆHFI

APPEAL §1317 > compliance with mandate. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

No stipulation by the government can circumscribe the power of the Supreme Court to see that its mandate is carried out.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §74 > remedy -- stock ownership. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

The required relief in an action for violation of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which prohibits acquisition by one corporation of stock of another where the effect of such acquisition may be to tend to create a monopoly, is a remedy which reasonably assures the elimination of that tendency; findings of possible harsh consequences for the owners of the stock of the corporations involved are not of material assistance in fashioning the remedy.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §73 > remedy. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

The key to the question of an antitrust remedy is the discovery of measures effective to restore competition.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §74 > remedy -- punitive measures. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

Courts are not authorized in civil proceedings to punish antitrust violators, and relief must not be punitive; but courts are authorized and required to decree effective relief to redress the violations, whatever the adverse effect of such a decree on private interests.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §78 > divestiture. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

In civil antitrust actions divestiture is an equitable remedy designed to protect the public interest.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §78 > divestiture. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

HÌ ÁMÈUÁFÌ ÓHÌ LÀ FÀUÓÁFGÌ HÈFFGÌ HÀ ÁSEÓaÁFÌ ÓHÌ LÀFJÌ FÀMÈUÁSÓYÓÁFGÌ Ì HÈFF

If complete divestiture is a necessary element of effective relief in a civil antitrust action, the government cannot be denied the remedy because economic hardship, however severe, may result.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §74 > remedy -- hardship. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

Economic hardship can influence choice only as among two or more effective remedies in civil antitrust action; if the remedy chosen is not effective, it will not be saved because an effective remedy would entail harsh consequences.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §74 > remedy -- criteria. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

The criteria guiding the court in fashioning a remedy in civil antitrust actions are: (1) the duty of giving complete and efficacious effect to the prohibitions of the antitrust laws, (2) the accomplishing of this result with as little injury as possible to the interest of the general public, and (3) a proper regard for the vast interests of private property which may have become vested in many persons as a result of the acquisition either by way of stock ownership or otherwise of interest in the stock or securities of the unlawful combination without any guilty knowledge or intent in any way to become actors or participants in the wrongs; however, if the relief is not effective, there is no occasion to consider the third criterion.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §78 > remedy -- partial divestiture. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

The adverse tax and market consequences resulting from complete divestiture of stock acquired in violation of 7 of the Clayton Act ( 15 USC 18) cannot save the remedy of partial divestiture, passing to the stockholders of the offending corporation the right to vote the shares, if, though less harsh, partial divestiture is not an effective remedy.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §78 > remedy -- divestiture. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15A\]](#) [15A] [LEdHN\[15B\]](#) [15B]

Complete divestiture is peculiarly appropriate in cases of stock acquisitions which violate 7 of the Clayton Act ( 15 USC 18); however, even if administrative agencies charged with the duty of enforcing the statute are required by 11 of the act ( 15 USC 21) to order divestiture whenever they find a violation of 7, the powers of courts acting under 15 ( 15 USC 25) are not so restricted.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §78 > remedy -- divestiture. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

HÌ ÁMÈUÁFÌ ÊHÌ LÀ FÀUÉOÁFG HÆFFG HÀ ÁSEÓaÉcaÁFÌ ÊHÌ LAFJÌ FÀMÈEÁSÓYÓÁGFI Ì ÊHÌ

To remedy the violation of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) by du Pont's acquisition of 23 per cent of General Motors stock, complete divestiture, and not the divestiture only of voting rights, is the appropriate remedy.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §73 > remedy. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

Once the government has successfully borne the burden of establishing a violation of the antitrust laws, all doubts as to the remedy are to be resolved in its favor.

Syllabus

---

In this civil antitrust proceeding, this Court held that acquisition by the du Pont Company of 23% of the common stock of General Motors Corporation had led to the insulation from free competition of most of the General Motors market in automobile finishes and fabrics and tended to create a monopoly of a line of commerce, in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. Therefore, this Court reversed the District Court's judgment dismissing the complaint and remanded the case to that Court for a determination of the equitable relief necessary and appropriate in the public interest. 353 U.S. 586. After the taking of further evidence, pertaining mostly to the tax and market consequences to the shareholders of the two companies, the District Court declined to require du Pont to divest itself completely of the General Motors stock, as urged by the Government, and sought to satisfy the requirements of this [****2] Court's mandate by requiring du Pont to transfer its voting rights in most of the General Motors stock to certain of du Pont's shareholders, by enjoining the two companies from having any preferential or discriminatory trade relations with each other and by various other injunctive provisions designed to prevent du Pont from exercising any control over the management of General Motors. Held: This remedy is not adequate, and the District Court is directed to proceed expeditiously to enter a decree requiring du Pont to divest itself completely of the General Motors stock within not to exceed 10 years from the effective date of the decree. Pp. 318-335.

(a) When a violation of the antitrust laws has been proved, the initial responsibility to fashion an appropriate remedy lies with the District Court, and this Court accords due regard and respect to the conclusion of the District Court; but this Court has a duty to be sure that a decree is fashioned which will effectively redress the violations of the antitrust laws. Pp. 322-325.

(b) Since the decree in this case was fashioned by the District Court in obedience to the judgment sent to it by this Court after reversal of the District [****3] Court's judgment dismissing the Government's complaint, this Court has plenary power to determine whether its own judgment was scrupulously and fully carried out. Pp. 325-326.

(c) In civil proceedings, courts are not authorized to punish antitrust violators, and relief must not be punitive; but courts are required to decree relief effective to redress the violations and restore competition, whatever the adverse effect of such a decree on private interests. Pp. 326-328.

(d) In this case, the proposed partial divestiture through the transfer of voting rights would not be an effective remedy; and, notwithstanding the adverse tax and market consequences which the District Court found would result, the Government is entitled to a decree directing complete divestiture -- a remedy peculiarly appropriate in cases of stock acquisitions which violate § 7 of the Clayton Act. Pp. 326-333.

(e) The alternative, suggested belatedly by du Pont, that its General Motors stock be disenfranchised, would not provide effective relief, and it might have undesirable effects on the capital structure, management and control of General Motors. P. 333.

HÌ ÁMEÉÁFI ÉÉHÌ LÀ FÀUÉDÁFG HÉÉFG HÀ ÁSEÓaÉCAÁFI ÉÉHÌ LÁJÌ FÁWÉEÁSÓYÓÁGFI Í ÉÉH

(f) The injunctive provisions of the District Court's [****4] decree would not adequately remove the objections to the effectiveness of its main provision for the transfer of voting rights, and the public is entitled to the surer, cleaner remedy of complete divestiture. Pp. 333-334.

(g) Once the Government has successfully borne the considerable burden of establishing a violation of the antitrust laws, all doubts as to the remedy are to be resolved in its favor. P. 334.

(h) The District Court's decree is vacated in its entirety, except as to the provisions enjoining du Pont itself from exercising voting rights in respect of its General Motors stock. Pp. 334-335.

(i) In order that this protracted litigation may be concluded as soon as possible, the District Court is directed to proceed expeditiously to formulate and enter a decree providing for the complete divestiture by du Pont of its General Motors stock, to commence within 90 days, and to be completed within not to exceed 10 years, of the effective date of the decree. P. 335.

Counsel: John F. Davis argued the cause for the United States. With him on the briefs were former Solicitor General Rankin, Solicitor General Cox, Acting Assistant Attorney General Bicks, Acting Assistant Attorney [****5] General Kirkpatrick, Philip Elman, Charles H. Weston and Bill G. Andrews.

Hugh B. Cox argued the cause for E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., appellee. With him on the brief were John Lord O'Brian, Charles A. Horsky, Daniel M. Gibbon, Nestor S. Foley and Alvin Friedman.

Robert L. Stern argued the cause for General Motors Corp., appellee. With him on the brief were Leo F. Tierney, Bryson P. Burnham, Henry M. Hogan and Robert A. Nitschke.

Wilkie Bushby argued the cause for Christiana Securities Co. et al., appellees. With him on the brief was Philip C. Scott.

Briefs of amici curiae, urging affirmance, were filed by Andrew J. Dallstream and Manuel E. Cowen for du Pont and General Motors shareholders, respectively, and by Joseph M. Proskauer and Harold H. Levin for Clara M. Blum et al.

Judges: Warren, Black, Frankfurter, Douglas, Brennan, Whittaker, Stewart; Clark and Harlan took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

---

[*318] [***320] [**1246] Mr. JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

The United States filed this action in 1949 in the District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. The complaint alleged that the [****6] ownership and use by appellee E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. of approximately 23 percent of the voting common stock of appellee General Motors Corporation was a violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, and of section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 18. After trial, the District Court dismissed the complaint. 126 F.Supp. 235 (D. C. N. D. 1954). On the Government's appeal, we reversed. We held that du Pont's acquisition of the 23 percent of General Motors stock had led to the [***321] insulation from free competition of [*319] most of the General Motors market in automobile finishes and fabrics, with the resultant likelihood, at the time of suit, of the creation of a monopoly of a line of commerce, and, accordingly, that du Pont had violated § 7 of the Clayton Act. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586 (1957).<sup>1</sup> We did not, however, determine what equitable relief was necessary in the public interest. Instead, we observed that "the District Courts . . . are clothed 'with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies [****7] of the particular case.' International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 400-401," and remanded the cause to the District Court "for a determination, after further hearing, of the equitable relief necessary and appropriate in the public interest to eliminate the effects of the acquisition offensive to the statute." 353 U.S., at 607-608.

---

<sup>1</sup> Since a holding that the Clayton Act had been violated sufficed to dispose of the case, we did not decide whether du Pont had also violated the Sherman Act. See 353 U.S., at 588, note 5.

HÌ ÁMEÜÄFI ÈHFLJÀ FÄÜÖÄFG HÄEFG I LÀ ÁSEÖaÄCAÁFI ÈHFLÄFJÌ FÄMEÜÄSÖYÖÄGFI I ÈHFLÄ

On remand, the District Court invited the Government to submit a plan of relief which in its opinion would be effective to remedy the violation. The court also appointed two amici curiae to represent the interests of General Motors and du Pont shareholders, respectively, most of whom, of course, had not been made parties to this litigation. The Government submitted a proposed plan of relief. That plan included diverse forms of [****8] injunctive relief, but its principal feature was a requirement that within 10 years the du Pont company completely divest itself of its approximately 63 million General Motors shares. The Government proposed that about two-thirds of these shares be distributed pro rata to the generality of du Pont shareholders in the form of dividends over the 10-year period. The other one-third of du Pont's [**1247] General Motors holdings -- stock which [*320] would have gone to appellees Christiana Securities Company and Delaware Realty and Investment Company, holding companies long identified with the du Pont family itself -- were to go to a court-appointed trustee, to be sold gradually over the same 10-year period. Du Pont objected that the Government's plan of complete divestiture entailed harsh income-tax consequences for du Pont stockholders and, if adopted, would also threaten seriously to depress the market value of du Pont and General Motors stock. Du Pont therefore proposed its own plan designed to avoid these results. The salient feature of its plan was substitution for the Government's proposed complete divestiture of a plan for partial divestiture in the form of a so-called [****9] "pass through" of voting rights, whereby du Pont would retain all attributes of ownership of the General Motors stock, including the right to receive dividends and a share of assets on liquidation, except the right to vote. The vote was to be "passed through" to du Pont's shareholders proportionally to their holdings of du Pont's own shares, except that Christiana and Delaware would "pass through" the votes allocable to them to their own shareholders. The amicus curiae also proposed plans of compliance, substantially equivalent to the du Pont plan. The amicus representing the generality of du Pont shareholders proposed in addition a program of so-called [***322] "take-downs," by which du Pont shareholders would be allowed to exchange their du Pont common stock for a new class of du Pont "Special Common," plus their pro rata share of du Pont-held General Motors common stock.

The District Court held several weeks of hearings. The evidence taken at the hearings, largely of expert witnesses, fills some 3,000 pages in the record before us, and, together with the numerous financial charts and tables received as exhibits, bears mainly not on the competition-restoring effect [****10] of the several proposals, but [*321] rather on which proposal would have the more, and which the less, serious tax and market consequences for the owners of the du Pont and General Motors stock. The District Court concluded that although ". . . there is no need for the Court to resolve the conflict in the evidence as to how severe those consequences would be[, t]he Court is persuaded beyond any doubt that a judgment of the kind proposed by the Government would have very serious adverse consequences." 177 F.Supp. 1, 42 \(D. C. N. D. Ill. 1959\). The court for this reason rejected the Government's plan and adopted the du Pont proposal, with some significant modifications. The "pass through" of voting rights, for example, was so limited that neither Christiana, Delaware, nor their officers and directors (plus resident members of the latter's families), should be able to vote any of the du Pont-held General Motors stock; General Motors shares allocable to the two companies or to their officers and directors, or to the officers and directors of du Pont, or to resident members of the families of the officers and directors of the several companies, were to be sterilized, [****11] voted by no one. Du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware were forbidden to acquire any additional General Motors stock. Du Pont and General Motors might not have any preferential or discriminatory trade relations or contracts with each other. No officer or director of du Pont, Christiana, or Delaware might also serve as an officer or director of General Motors. Nor might du Pont, Christiana, or Delaware nominate or propose any person to be a General Motors officer or director, or seek in any way to influence the choice of persons to fill those posts. The Government objected that without a provision ordering complete divestiture the decree, although otherwise satisfactory, was inadequate to redress the antitrust violation, and filed its appeal here under § 2 of the Expediting Act, 15 U. S. C. § 29. We noted probable jurisdiction. [362 U.S. 986 \[\*\*1248\]](#) (1960).

HÎ ÁNÈJÈHÎ ÊHGFLÀ FÂUÈDÀFG HÂFG I LÀ ÁSÈOÀÈGÀHÎ ÊHGGLÁFÌ FÂMÈÈSÓYQÁGFI Ì ÊFFF

[*322] A threshold question -- and one which, although subsidiary, is most important -- concerns the scope of our review of the District Court's discharge of the duty delegated by our judgment to formulate a decree. In our former opinion we alluded to the "large discretion" of the [****12] District Courts in matters of remedy in antitrust cases. Many opinions of the Court in such cases observe that "the formulation of decrees is largely left to the discretion of the trial court . . . ," Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Assn. v. United States, 362 U.S. 458, 473 (1960); "in framing relief in antitrust cases, a range of discretion rests with the trial judge," Besser Mfg. Co. v. United States, 343 U.S. 444, 449 (1952); "the determination of the [***323] scope of the decree to accomplish its purpose is peculiarly the responsibility of the trial court," United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 340 U.S. 76, 89 (1950); "the framing of decrees should take place in the District rather than in Appellate Courts," International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 400 (1947). The Court has on occasion said that decrees will be upheld in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion. See, e. g., Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Assn. v. United States, supra, p. 473; United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 634 (1953); Timken Roller Bearing [****13] Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593 (1951);<sup>2</sup> United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U.S. 319, 334-335 (1947); United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 185 (1944).<sup>3</sup> These [*323] expressions are not, however, to be understood to imply a narrow review here of the remedies fashioned by the District Courts in antitrust cases. On the contrary, our practice, particularly in cases of a direct appeal from the decree of a single judge, is to examine the District Court's action closely to satisfy ourselves that the relief is effective to redress the antitrust violation proved. "The relief granted by a trial court in an antitrust case and brought here on direct appeal, thus by-passing the usual appellate review, has always had the most careful scrutiny of this Court. Though the records are usually most voluminous and their review exceedingly burdensome, we have painstakingly undertaken it to make certain that justice has been done." International Boxing Club v. United States, 358 U.S. 242, 253 (1959); see also id., at 263 (dissenting opinion). We have made it clear [****14] that a decree formulated by a District Court is not "subject only to reversal for gross abuse. Rather we have felt an obligation to intervene in this most significant phase of the case when we concluded there were inappropriate provisions in the decree." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., supra, p. 89.

LEdHN[1] [1] LEdHN[2] [2] [****15] In sum, we assign to the District Courts the responsibility initially to fashion the remedy, but recognize that while we accord due regard and respect to the conclusion of the District Court, [**1249] we have a duty ourselves to be sure that a decree is fashioned which will effectively redress proved violations of the antitrust laws. The proper disposition of antitrust cases is obviously of great public importance, and their remedial phase, more often than not, is crucial. For the suit has been a futile exercise if the Government proves a violation but fails to secure a remedy adequate to redress it. "A public interest served by such civil suits is that they effectively pry open to competition a market that has been closed by defendants' illegal restraints. If this decree accomplishes [*324] [***324] less than that, the Government has won a lawsuit and lost a cause." International Salt Co. v. United States, supra, p. 401.

LEdHN[3] [3] Our practice reflects the situation created by the congressional authorization, under § 2 of the Expediting Act,<sup>4</sup> [****17] of a direct appeal to this Court from [****16] the judgment of relief fashioned by a single

<sup>2</sup> In this case, however, a majority of the Court substantially modified the District Court's decree, in spite of expressions of deference written into the principal opinion.

<sup>3</sup> In Crescent Amusement the Court relied in part on the fact that the district judge had initially found the violation of law. This circumstance was said to enhance the deference owed to the district judge's determination of the measures appropriate to eliminate the violation, 323 U.S., at 185. This factor is not present in the case before us.

<sup>4</sup> 32 Stat. 823, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 29. The purpose of this statute was to expedite determination of antitrust cases by allowing the Attorney General to obtain a special Circuit (now District) Court of several judges by filing a certificate of public importance under § 1 of the Act, 32 Stat. 823, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 28 (no such certificate was filed in this case), and by providing for direct appeal to the Supreme Court from the decree of the trial court, whether composed of one or several judges, such appeal to be within this Court's obligatory jurisdiction. Congress was moved by the "far-reaching importance of the cases judge. Congress has deliberately taken away the shield of intermediate appellate review by a Court of Appeals, and left with us alone the responsibility of affording the parties a review of his determination.<sup>5</sup> This circumstance imposes a special burden upon us, for, as Mr. Justice Roberts said for the Court, ". . . it is unthinkable that Congress has entrusted the enforcement of a statute of such far-reaching [*325] importance to the judgment of a single judge, without review of the relief granted or denied by him," Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 324 U.S. 570, 571 (1945), clarifying 323 U.S. 386 (1945).

HÌ ÁMÈJÈNÌ ÊHÌG LÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀEFG JLÀ ÁSEÒAÈGÀMFÌ ÊHÌG LÀFJÌ FÀMÈUÈSÒYQÀGFI Ì ÊHÌFÌ

LEdHN[4A][] [4A] LEdHN[5][] [5] These principles alone would require our close examination of the District Court's action. But the necessity for that examination in this case further appears [****18] in the light of additional considerations. First of all, the decree was fashioned in obedience to the judgment which we sent down to the District Court after our reversal of that court's dismissal of the Government's complaint. We have plenary power to determine whether our judgment was scrupulously and fully carried out. Chief Justice Taft, speaking for the Court, said in Continental Ins. Co. v. United States, 259 U.S. 156, 166 (1922), HN1[] "We delegated to the District Court the duty of formulating a decree in compliance with the principles announced in our judgment of reversal, and that gives us plenary power where the compliance [**1250] has been attempted and the decree in any proper way is brought to our attention to see that it follows our opinion."<sup>6</sup>

[***325] LEdHN[4B][] [4B] LEdHN[7][] [7] Secondly, the record is concerned mainly with the alleged adverse tax and market effects of the Government's proposal for complete divestiture. But the primary focus of inquiry, as we shall show, is upon the question of [****19] the relief required effectively to eliminate the tendency of the acquisition condemned by § 7. For it will be remembered that the violation was not actual monopoly but only a tendency towards [*326] monopoly. The required relief therefore is a remedy which reasonably assures the elimination of that tendency. Does partial divestiture in the form of the "pass through" of voting power, together with the ancillary relief, give an effective remedy, or is complete divestiture necessary to assure effective relief? Little in the record or in the District Court's opinion is concerned with that crucial question. The findings of possible harsh consequences relied upon to justify rejection of complete divestiture are thus hardly of material assistance in reaching judgment on the central issue. If our examination persuades us that the remedy decreed leaves the public interest in the elimination of the tendency inadequately protected, we should be derelict in our duty if we did not correct the error.

[****20] LEdHN[8][] [8] LEdHN[9][] [9] LEdHN[10][] [10] Before we examine the adequacy of the relief allowed by the District Court, it is appropriate to review some general considerations concerning that most drastic, but most effective, of antitrust remedies -- divestiture. The key to the whole question of an antitrust remedy is of course the discovery of measures effective to restore competition. Courts are not authorized in civil proceedings to punish antitrust violators, and relief must not be punitive. But courts are authorized, indeed required, to decree relief effective to redress the violations, whatever the adverse effect of such a decree on private interests. HN2[] Divestiture is itself an equitable remedy designed to protect the public interest. In United States v. Crescent arising under [the] antitrust laws . . . ." 36 Cong. Rec. 1679 (remarks of Senator Fairbanks, Feb. 4, 1903). See also H. R. Rep. No. 3020, 57th Cong., 2d Sess. 2 (1903).

<sup>5</sup> In one case this elimination of the normal review by the Court of Appeals almost prevented there being any review of the District Court at all. See United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 320 U.S. 708 (1943) (noting the absence of a quorum in this Court to hear an Expediting Act appeal from a District Court). But Congress acted to keep such an important matter from going unreviewed, see H. R. Rep. No. 1317, 78th Cong., 2d Sess. (1944), and enacted a special statute, 58 Stat. 272, 15 U. S. C. § 29, pursuant to which this Court immediately certified the case to a Circuit Court of Appeals, 322 U.S. 716 (1944), which proceeded to decide the appeal. 148 F.2d 416 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1945). See also United States v. United States District Court, 334 U.S. 258 (1948).

<sup>6</sup> LEdHN[6][] [6] Government counsel at the trial advised the District Court that he had no authority to suggest modes of divestiture different from the plan presented by the Government to the District Court. Appellees suggest that the Government is thus estopped from urging other modes of divestiture on this appeal. But plainly, under the rule of Continental Insurance, no stipulation by the Government could circumscribe this Court's power to see that its mandate is carried out.

HÌ ÁMÈJÈNÌ ÈHÌGÌ LÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÈFGÌ CLÀ ÁMÈOÀÈGÀMÌ ÈHÌGÌ LÀJÌ FÀMÈÈSÓYQÁGFI Ì ÈHÌGÌ

Amusement Co., supra, where we sustained divestiture provisions against an attack similar to that successfully made [****21] below, we said, at p. 189: "It is said that these provisions are inequitable and harsh income tax wise, that they exceed any reasonable requirement for the prevention of future violations, and that they are therefore punitive. . . . Those who violate the Act may not reap [*327] the benefits of their violations and avoid an undoing of their unlawful project on the plea of hardship or inconvenience." <sup>7</sup>

LEdHN[11]<sup>8</sup> [11] LEdHN[12]<sup>9</sup> [12] LEdHN[13]<sup>10</sup> [13] [****22] If the Court concludes that other measures will not be effective to redress a violation, and that complete divestiture is a necessary element of effective relief, the Government cannot [***326] be denied the latter remedy because economic hardship, however severe, may result. Economic hardship can influence choice only as among two or more effective remedies. If the remedy chosen is not effective, it will not be saved because an effective remedy would entail harsh consequences. This proposition is not novel; [**1251] it is deeply rooted in antitrust law and has never been successfully challenged.

<sup>8</sup> The criteria were announced in one of the earliest cases. In United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 185 (1911), we said:

HN3<sup>11</sup> "In considering the subject . . . three dominant influences must guide our action: 1. The duty of giving complete and efficacious effect to the prohibitions of the statute; 2, the accomplishing of this result with as little injury as possible to the interest [*328] of the general public; and, 3, a proper regard for [****23] the vast interests of private property which may have become vested in many persons as a result of the acquisition either by way of stock ownership or otherwise of interests in the stock or securities of the combination without any guilty knowledge or intent in any way to become actors or participants in the wrongs which we find to have inspired and dominated the combination from the beginning."

The Court concluded in that case that, despite the alleged hardship which would be involved, only dissolution of the combination would be effective, and therefore ordered dissolution. Plainly, if the relief is not effective, there is no occasion to consider the third criterion.

[****24] LEdHN[14]<sup>12</sup> [14] Thus, in this case, the adverse tax and market consequences which the District Court found would be concomitants of complete divestiture cannot save the remedy of partial divestiture through the "pass through" of voting rights if, though less harsh, partial divestiture is not an effective remedy. We do not think that the "pass through" is an effective remedy and believe that the Government is entitled to a decree directing complete divestiture.

LEdHN[15A]<sup>13</sup> [15A] It cannot be gainsaid that complete divestiture is peculiarly appropriate in cases of stock acquisitions which violate § 7.<sup>9</sup> [****26] That statute is specific and "narrowly [*329] directed,"<sup>10</sup> Standard Oil Co.

<sup>7</sup> Bills were introduced in the Eighty-sixth Congress to ameliorate the income-tax consequences of gain on disposition of stock pursuant to orders enforcing the antitrust laws. See Hearings on S. 200 before the Senate Committee on Finance, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. (1959); Hearings on H. R. 8126 before the House Committee on Ways and Means, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. (1959); H. R. Rep. No. 1128, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. (1959).

<sup>8</sup> See, e. g., United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 189 (1944); United States v. Corn Products Refining Co., 234 F. 964, 1018 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1916), appeal dismissed on motion of appellant, 249 U.S. 621 (1919); United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 188 F. 127, 153 (C. C. D. Del. 1911), modified, 273 F. 869 (D. C. D. Del. 1921); In re Crown Zellerbach Corp., CCH Trade Reg. Rep. 1957-1958 para. 26,923, at p. 36,462 (F. T. C. 1958).

<sup>9</sup>

LEdHN[15B]<sup>14</sup> [15B] We reject the Government's argument that the Federal Trade Commission and other administrative agencies charged with the duty of enforcing the statute are required by § 11 of the Clayton Act to order divestiture whenever they find a violation of § 7, and that therefore courts acting under § 15 must give the same relief. Even if the administrative

HÌ ÁMÈJÀNÌ ÊHGLÀ FÄÜÈDÄFG HÄEFG FLÀ ÅSEÖAÅGÅMÌ ÊHGLÄFJÌ FÄMÈÅSÖYQÅGFI Ì ÊHGLÄ

v. [United States, 337 U.S. 293, 312 \[\*\*\*327\] \(1949\)](#), and it outlaws a particular form of economic control -- stock acquisitions which tend to create a monopoly of any line of commerce. The very words of § 7 suggest that an undoing of the acquisition is a natural remedy. [***25] HN4↑ Divestiture or dissolution has traditionally been the remedy for Sherman Act violations whose heart is intercorporate combination and control,<sup>11</sup> [***27] and it is reasonable [*330] to [*1252] think immediately of the same remedy when § 7 of the Clayton Act, which particularizes the Sherman Act standard of illegality, is involved. Of the very few litigated<sup>12</sup> § 7 cases which have been reported, most decreed divestiture as a matter of course.<sup>13</sup> [***28] Divestiture [*331] has been [***328] called the most important of antitrust remedies.<sup>14</sup> It is simple, relatively easy to administer, and sure. It should always [*1253] be in the forefront of a court's mind when a violation of § 7 has been found.

[LEdHN\[16\]↑](#) [16]The divestiture only of voting rights does not seem to us to be a remedy adequate to promise elimination of the tendency of du Pont's acquisition offensive to § 7. Under the decree, two-thirds of du Pont's agencies were so limited, a question which we do not decide, Congress would not be deemed to have restricted the broad remedial powers of courts of equity without explicit language doing so in terms, or some other strong indication of intent. Hecht Co. v. Bowles, 321 U.S. 321, 329 (1944).

---

<sup>10</sup> The words were actually used of § 3 of the Clayton Act, but they are equally applicable to § 7.

<sup>11</sup> See Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197 (1904); Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1 (1911); United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106 (1911); United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 226 U.S. 61 (1912), modified, 226 U.S. 470 (1913); United States v. Reading Co., 226 U.S. 324 (1912), modified, 228 U.S. 158 (1913); United States v. Reading Co., 253 U.S. 26 (1920), modified after remand, Continental Ins. Co. v. United States, 259 U.S. 156 (1922); United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U.S. 255 (1920); United States v. Southern Pacific Co., 259 U.S. 214 (1922); United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173 (1944); Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U.S. 386 (1945), clarified, 324 U.S. 570 (1945); United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U.S. 319 (1947); Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., v. United States, 334 U.S. 110 (1948); United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131 (1948); Besser Mfg. Co. v. United States, 343 U.S. 444 (1952); International Boxing Club v. United States, 358 U.S. 242 (1959); United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 188 F. 127 (C. C. D. Del. 1911), modified, 273 F. 869 (D. C. D. Del. 1921); United States v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 203 F. 295 (D. C. S. D. Ohio 1912), modified, 281 F. 1007 (D. C. S. D. Ohio 1916); United States v. International Harvester Co., 214 F. 987 (D. C. D. Minn. 1914), modification denied, 10 F.2d 827 (D. C. D. Minn. 1926), aff'd, 274 U.S. 693 (1927); United States v. Eastman Kodak Co., 226 F. 62 (D. C. W. D. N. Y. 1915), decree entered, 230 F. 522 (D. C. W. D. N. Y. 1916), appeal dismissed on motion of appellant, 255 U.S. 578 (1921); United States v. Corn Products Refining Co., 234 F. 964 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1916), appeal dismissed on motion of appellant, 249 U.S. 621 (1919); United States v. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 92 F.Supp. 947 (D. C. D. Mass. 1950), modified, 96 F.Supp. 356 (D. C. D. Mass. 1951); United States v. Imperial Chemical Indus., Ltd., 100 F.Supp. 504 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1951), decree entered, 105 F.Supp. 215 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1952).

In many of these cases the courts referred to "dissolution" or "divorcement" instead of "divestiture." These terms have traditionally been treated as to a large degree interchangeable, and we so regard them. See Hale and Hale, Market Power: Size and Shape Under the Sherman Act 370 (1958); Adams, Dissolution, Divorcement, Divestiture: the Pyrrhic Victories of Antitrust, 27 Ind. L. J. 1, note 1 (1951).

<sup>12</sup> Appellees rely on several Clayton Act consent decrees granting relief short of divestiture, but the circumstances surrounding such negotiated agreements are so different that they cannot be persuasively cited in a litigation context.

<sup>13</sup> See, e. g., Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Assn. v. United States, 362 U.S. 458 (1960); Aluminum Co. of America v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 284 F. 401 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1922), cert. denied, 261 U.S. 616 (1923), modification denied, 299 F. 361 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1924); United States v. New England Fish Exchange, 258 F. 732 (D. C. D. Mass. 1919), modification denied, 292 F. 511 (D. C. D. Mass. 1923), on which appellees place great reliance, is not a clear exception. It is true that defendants there were allowed to retain the assets (not the stock) of one of the eight corporations whose stock they had acquired in violation of § 7. But probably acquisition of only one of those corporations' stock would not have been illegal. The only clear exception in the courts is American Crystal Sugar Co. v. Cuban-American Sugar Co., 152 F.Supp. 387 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1957), aff'd on the defendant's appeal, 259 F.2d 524 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1958). But the authority of that case is somewhat diminished by the fact that it was brought not by the Government but by a private plaintiff, and by the absence of any discussion in the opinion of the issue of divestiture vel non. See 152 F.Supp., at 400-401 and note 16.

<sup>14</sup> See Hale and Hale, op cit., supra, note 11, at 370.

HÌ ÁMÈJÀFÌ ÌHFLÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀÈFGÍ HÀ ÁMÈOÀÈGÀFÌ ÈÈHÌ LÀJÌ FÀMÈÈSÓYQÁGFI Ì ÈÈHÌ

holdings of General Motors stock will be voted by du Pont shareholders -- upwards of 40 million shares. Common sense tells us that under this arrangement there can be little assurance of the dissolution of the intercorporate community of interest which we found to violate the law. The du Pont shareholders will ipso facto also be General Motors voters. It will be in their interest to vote in such a way as to induce General Motors to favor du Pont, the very result which we found illegal on the first appeal. It may be true, as appellees insist, that these shareholders will not exercise as much influence on General Motors as did du Pont when it held and voted the shares as a block. And it is true that there is no showing in this record that the [***29] du Pont shareholders will combine to vote together, or that their information about General Motors' activities will be detailed enough to enable them to vote their shares as strategically as du Pont itself has done. But these arguments misconceive the nature of this proceeding. The burden is not on the Government to show de novo that a "pass through" of the General Motors vote, like du Pont's ownership of General Motors stock, would violate § 7. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 91 F.Supp. 333, 346 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1950. It need only appear that the decree entered leaves a substantial likelihood that the tendency towards monopoly of the acquisition condemned by § 7 has not [*332] been satisfactorily eliminated. We are not required to assume, contrary to all human experience, that du Pont's shareholders will not vote in their own self-interest. Moreover, the General Motors management, which over the years has become accustomed to du Pont's special relationship,<sup>15</sup> would know that the relationship continues to a substantial degree, and might well act accordingly. The same is true of du Pont's competitors. They might not try so vigorously [***30] to break du Pont's hold on General Motors' business, as if complete divestiture were ordered. And finally, the influence of the du Pont company itself would not be completely dissipated. For under the decree du Pont would have the power to sell its General Motors shares; the District Court expressly held that "there would be nothing [***329] in the decree to prevent such dispositions." 177 F.Supp., at 41. Such a sale would presumably restore the vote separated from the sold stock while du Pont owned it. This power to transfer the vote could conceivably be used to induce General Motors to favor du Pont products. In sum, the "pass through" of the vote does not promise elimination of the violation offensive to § 7. What was said of the Sherman Act in United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 226 U.S. 470, 477 (1913), applies here: "So far as is consistent with this purpose a court of equity dealing with such combinations should conserve the property interests involved, but never in such wise as to sacrifice the object and purpose of the statute. The decree of the courts must be faithfully executed and no form of dissolution be permitted that [***31] in substance or effect amounts to restoring the [*333] combination which it was the purpose of the decree to terminate."

Du Pont replies, inter alia, that it would be willing for all of its General Motors stock to be disenfranchised, if [**1254] that would satisfy the requirement for effective relief. This suggestion, not presented to the District Court, is distinctly an afterthought. If the suggestion is disenfranchisement only while du Pont retains the stock, it would not avoid the hazards inherent in du Pont's power to transfer the vote. If the suggestion is permanent loss of the vote, it would create a large and permanent separation of corporate ownership from control, which would not [***32] only run directly counter to accepted principles of corporate democracy, but also reduce substantially the number of voting General Motors shares, thereby making it easier for the owner of a block of shares far below an absolute majority to obtain working control, perhaps creating new antitrust problems for both General Motors and the Department of Justice in the future. And finally, we should be reluctant to effect such a drastic change in General Motors' capital structure, established under state corporation law.

LEDHN[17] [17]Appellees argue further that the injunctive provisions of the decree supplementary to the "pass through" of voting rights adequately remove any objections to the effectiveness of the "pass through." Du Pont is enjoined, for example, from in any way influencing the choice of General Motors' officers and directors, and from entering into any preferential trade relations with General Motors. And, under para. IX of the decree, the Government may reapply in the future should this injunctive relief prove inadequate. Presumably this provision could be used to prevent the exercise of the power [***33] to transfer the vote. But the public interest should not in this case be required to depend upon the often cumbersome and [*334] time-consuming injunctive remedy.

---

<sup>15</sup> For the significance of such long habit, see North American Co. v. Securities & Exchange Comm'n, 327 U.S. 686, 693 (1946); United States v. Imperial Chemical Indus., Ltd., 105 F.Supp. 215, 236-237 (D. C.S. D. N. Y. 1952); Douglas, Democracy and Finance 33 (1940).

HÌ ÁMÈJÀFÌ ÊHÌ LÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀEFG I LÀ ÁSEÒAÈGÀFÌ ËEÈHGJLÁJÌ FÀMÈÈSÓYQÁFÌ ÊHÌ

Should a violation of one of the prohibitions be thought to occur, the Government would have the burden of initiating contempt proceedings and of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that a violation had indeed been committed.<sup>16</sup> [****34] Such a remedy would, judging from the history of this litigation, take years to obtain. Moreover, an injunction can hardly be detailed enough to cover in advance all the many fashions in which [***330] improper influence might manifest itself. And the policing of an injunction would probably involve the courts and the Government in regulation of private affairs more deeply than the administration of a simple order of divestiture.<sup>17</sup> We think the public is entitled to the surer, cleaner remedy of divestiture. The same result would follow even if we were in doubt. For it is well settled that once the Government has successfully borne the considerable burden of establishing a violation of law, all doubts as to the remedy are to be resolved in its favor.<sup>18</sup>

We therefore direct complete divestiture. Since the District Court's decree was framed around the provision directing only partial divestiture, and since General Motors, Christiana, and Delaware acquiesced in its provisions only on that basis, we shall not pass upon the [**1255] provisions for ancillary relief but shall vacate the decree [*335] in its entirety except as to the provisions of para. VI enjoining du Pont itself from exercising voting rights in respect of its General Motors stock. In this way the District Court will be free to fashion a new decree consistent with this opinion at a new hearing at which all parties may be heard. General Motors, Christiana, and [****35] Delaware will thus be able to renew, for the District Court's decision in the first instance, any objections they may have to the power of the Court to grant relief against them.

We believe, however, that this already protracted litigation should be concluded as soon as possible. To that end we direct the District Court on receipt of our judgment to enter an order requiring du Pont to file within 60 days a proposed judgment providing for complete divestiture of its General Motors stock, to commence within 90 days, and to be completed within not to exceed 10 years, of the effective date of the District Court's judgment, and requiring the Government to file, within 30 days after service upon it of du Pont's proposed judgment, either proposed specific amendments to such du Pont judgment or a proposed alternate judgment of divestiture. The District Court shall give precedence to this cause on its calendar.

The judgment of the District Court, except to the extent para. VI is affirmed, is vacated and remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

MR. JUSTICE CLARK and MR. JUSTICE HARLAN took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.
[****36]

Dissent by: FRANKFURTER

Dissent

---

Mr. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, whom Mr. JUSTICE WHITTAKER and Mr. JUSTICE STEWART join, dissenting.

---

<sup>16</sup> United States v. Corn Products Refining Co., 234 F. 964, 1018 \(D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1916\), appeal dismissed on motion of appellant, 249 U.S. 621 \(1919\); 12 Ala. L. Rev. 214, 220-221 (1959); Note, 56 Col. L. Rev. 420, 430 (1956) ("contempt citations are a poor method of restoring competition . . ."); Berge, Some Problems in the Enforcement of the Antitrust Laws, 38 Mich. L. Rev. 462, 469 (1940).

<sup>17</sup> See Hale and Hale, op. cit., supra, note 11, at 379.

<sup>18</sup> United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 726 \(1944\); Local 167, International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. United States, 291 U.S. 293, 299 \(1934\). Cf. William R. Warner & Co. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 265 U.S. 526, 532 (1924) (same principle applied to private litigation).

HÎ Í ÁNÈJÈFÌ ÈHÍ LÀ FÂUÈDÄFG HÄEFG Í LÀ ÅSEÖaÈGåÄFI ÈHÈHÈLÄJÌ FÂMÈÈSÖYQÄGFI Ì ÈHÈHÌ

In United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, the Court held that the acquisition and continued ownership by E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. [*336] of twenty-three percent of the stock of the General Motors Corporation constituted a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act.<sup>1</sup> The question now before us is the [***331] adequacy of the terms of the enforcement of that judgment by the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, 177 F.Supp. 1. In order to determine whether the district judge satisfactorily discharged the duties assigned him, it is necessary to be clear about these underlying elements of the question for decision: (1) What did this Court hold and say in finding that du Pont had violated § 7? (2) What considerations guided the district judge in fashioning his decree? (3) What principles has this Court laid down for the formulation of decrees by District Courts, particularly under the antitrust laws, and for review of those decrees here?

[***37] I.

As the Court described it, the "primary issue" in the Government's suit against du Pont, General Motors, and related parties was "whether du Pont's commanding position as General Motors' supplier of automotive finishes and fabrics was achieved on competitive merit alone, or because its acquisition of the General Motors' stock, and the consequent close intercompany relationship, led to the insulation of most of the General Motors' market from free competition, with the resultant likelihood, at the time of suit, of the creation of a monopoly of a line of commerce." 353 U.S., at 588-589. [**1256] The question was asked in the context of these facts.

The transaction out of which the case arose was the acquisition by du Pont, during the period 1917-1919, of [*337] a twenty-three percent stock interest in General Motors. That "colossus of the giant automobile industry" absorbed "upwards of two-fifths of the total sales of automotive vehicles in the Nation" over the period from 1938 to 1955. In 1955 it ranked first in sales and second in assets among all United States industrial corporations. Purchases of automotive fabrics and finishes by General Motors from [***38] du Pont ran into millions of dollars annually in the years immediately preceding the institution of the Government's suit in 1949. Du Pont supplied sixty-seven percent of General Motors' requirements for finishes in 1946 and sixty-eight percent in 1947. The figures for fabrics supplied to General Motors by du Pont in those years are fifty-two and three-tenths percent and thirty-eight and five-tenths percent respectively.

Du Pont's "commanding position as a General Motors supplier" was not achieved until after its acquisition of a substantial fraction of General Motors' stock. At the time of this purchase, du Pont was actively seeking markets for its nitrocellulose, artificial leather, celluloid, rubber-coated goods, and paints and varnishes used by automobile manufacturers. Leading du Pont executives in 1917 and 1918 indicated that the acquisition of General Motors stock was due in part to a belief that it would secure for du Pont an important market for its automotive products.

"This background of the acquisition, particularly the plain implications of the contemporaneous documents, destroys any basis for a conclusion that the purchase was made 'solely for investment.' Moreover, [***39] immediately after the acquisition, du Pont's influence growing out of it [***332] was brought to bear within General Motors to achieve primacy for du Pont as General Motors' supplier of automotive fabrics and finishes." 353 U.S., at 602.

[*338] A former du Pont official became a General Motors vice president and set about maximizing du Pont's share of the General Motors market. Lines of communications were established between the two companies and several du Pont products were actively promoted. Within a few years various du Pont manufactured items were filling the entire requirements of from four to seven of General Motors' eight operating divisions. The Fisher Body division, long controlled by the Fisher brothers under a voting trust even though General Motors owned a majority of its stock, followed an independent course for many years, but by 1947 and 1948 "resistance had collapsed" and its purchases from du Pont "compared favorably" with purchases by other General Motors divisions. Competitors came to receive higher percentages of General Motors business in later years, but it is "likely" that this trend stemmed "at least in part" from the needs of General [***40] Motors outstripping du Pont's capacity.

<sup>1</sup> 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) § 18. The suit was brought prior to the enactment in 1950 of amendments to the Act which, by their terms, are inapplicable to previous acquisitions. 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 18.

HÌ ÁMÈJÀFÌ ÉHÌ LÀ FÀUÉDÀFG HÀEFG Ì LÀ ÁSÉOÀÉGÀFÌ ÉHÌHGÁJÌ FÀMÈJÉSÓYÓQÁFÌ Ì ÉHÌÉ €

"The fact that sticks out in this voluminous record is that the bulk of du Pont's production has always supplied the largest part of the requirements of the one customer in the automobile industry connected to du Pont by a stock interest. The inference is overwhelming that du Pont's commanding position was promoted by its stock interest and was not gained solely on competitive merit." 353 U.S., at 605.

This Court agreed with the trial court "that considerations of price, quality and service were not overlooked by either du Pont or General Motors." 353 U.S., at 606. However, it determined that neither this factor, [**1257] nor "the fact that all concerned in high executive posts in both companies acted honorably and fairly, each in the honest conviction that his actions were in the best interests of his own company and without any design to overreach anyone, including du Pont's competitors," [353 U.S., at 1\*339\] 607,](#) outweighed the Government's claim for relief. This claim, as submitted to the District Court and dismissed by it, 126 F.Supp. 235, alleged violation not only of [****41] § 7 of the Clayton Act, but also of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.<sup>2</sup> The latter provisions proscribe any contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of interstate or foreign trade, and monopolization of, or attempts, combinations, or conspiracies to monopolize, such trade. However, this Court put to one side without consideration the Government's appeal from the dismissal of its Sherman Act allegations.<sup>3</sup> It rested its decision solely on § 7, which reads in pertinent part:

"No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where the effect of such acquisition may be to substantially lessen competition between the corporation whose stock is so acquired and the corporation making the acquisition, or to restrain such commerce in any section or community, or tend to create a monopoly of any line of commerce.

....

"This section shall not apply to [***333] corporations purchasing such stock solely for investment and not using the same by voting or otherwise to bring about, or in attempting to bring about, the substantial lessening of competition. [****42] . . ."

The purpose of this provision was thus explained in the Court's opinion:

"Section 7 is designed to arrest in its incipiency not only the substantial lessening of competition from the acquisition by one corporation of the whole or [*340] any part of the stock of a competing corporation, but also to arrest in their incipiency restraints or monopolies in a relevant market which, as a reasonable probability, appear at the time of suit likely to result from the acquisition by one corporation of all or any part of the stock of any other corporation. The section is violated whether or not actual restraints or monopolies, or the substantial lessening of competition, have occurred or are intended. . . ." 353 U.S., at 589.

Thus, a finding of conspiracy to restrain trade or attempt to monopolize was excluded from the Court's decision. Indeed, as already [****43] noted, the Court proceeded on the assumption that the executives involved in the dealings between du Pont and General Motors acted "honorably and fairly" and exercised their business judgment only to serve what they deemed the best interests of their own companies. This, however, did not bar finding that du Pont had become pre-eminent as a supplier of automotive fabrics and finishes to General Motors; that these products constituted a "line of commerce" within the meaning of the Clayton Act; that General Motors' share of the market for these products was substantial; and that competition for this share of the market was endangered by the financial relationship between the two concerns:

"The statutory policy of fostering free competition is obviously furthered when no supplier has an advantage over his competitors from [**1258] an acquisition of his customer's stock likely to have the effects condemned by the statute. We repeat, that the test of a violation of § 7 is whether, at the time of suit, there is a reasonable probability that the acquisition is likely to result in the condemned restraints. The conclusion upon this record is inescapable that such [*341] likelihood [****44] was proved as to this acquisition. . ." 353 U.S., at 607.

<sup>2</sup> 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 50 Stat. 693, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2.

<sup>3</sup> See 353 U.S., at 588, n. 5.

HÌ ÁMÈJÀFÌ ÙHÌ CLÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀEFG Ì LÀ ÁSEÒAÈGÀFÌ ÙHÌ HÀJÌ FÀMÈJÈSÓYØÁFÌ ÙHÌ H

On the basis of the findings which led to this conclusion, the Court remanded the case to the District Court to determine the appropriate relief. The sole guidance given the Court for discharging the task committed to it was this:

"The judgment must therefore be reversed and the cause remanded to the District Court for a determination, after further hearing, of the equitable relief necessary and appropriate in the public interest to eliminate the effects of the acquisition offensive to the statute. The District Courts, in the framing of equitable decrees, are clothed 'with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case.' International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 400-401." 353 U.S., at 607-608.

This brings us to the course of the proceedings in the District Court.

II.

This Court's judgment was filed in the District Court on July 18, 1957. The first pretrial conference -- held to appoint amici curiae to [***344] represent the interests of the stockholders of du Pont and General Motors and to consider the procedure [****45] to be followed in the subsequent hearings -- took place on September 25, 1957. At the outset, the Government's spokesman explained that counsel for the Government and for du Pont had already held preliminary discussions with a view to arriving at a relief plan that both sides could recommend to the court. Du Pont, he said, had proposed disenfranchisement of its General Motors stock along with other restrictions on the du Pont-General Motors relationship. The Government, deeming these suggestions inadequate, had urged [*342] that any judgment include divestiture of du Pont's shares of General Motors. Counsel for the Government invited du Pont's views on this proposal before recommending a specific program, but stated that if the court desired, or if counsel for du Pont thought further discussion would not be profitable, the Government was prepared to submit a plan within thirty days.

Counsel for du Pont indicated a preference for the submission of detailed plans by both sides at an early date. No previous antitrust case, he said, had involved interests of such magnitude or presented such complex problems of relief. The submission of detailed plans would place the issues [****46] before the court more readily than would discussion of divestiture or disenfranchisement in the abstract. The Court adopted this procedure with an appropriate time schedule for carrying it out.

The Government submitted its proposed decree on October 25, 1957. The plan called for divestiture by du Pont of its 63,000,000 shares of General Motors stock by equal annual distributions to its stockholders, as a dividend, over a period of ten years. Christiana Securities Company and Delaware Realty & Investment Company, major stockholders in du Pont, and the stockholders of Delaware were dealt with specially by provisions requiring the annual sale by a trustee, again over a ten-year period, of du Pont's General Motors stock allocable to them, as well as any General Motors stock which Christiana and Delaware owned outright. If, in the trustee's judgment, "reasonable market conditions" did not prevail during any given year, he was to be allowed to [**1259] petition the court for an extension of time within the ten-year period. In addition, the right to vote the General Motors stock held by du Pont was to be vested in du Pont's stockholders, other than Christiana and Delaware and the [****47] stockholders of Delaware; du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware were to be enjoined from acquiring [*343] stock in or exercising control over General Motors; du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware were to be prohibited to have any director or officer in common with General Motors, and vice versa; and General Motors and du Pont were to be ordered to terminate any agreement that provided for the purchase by General Motors of any specified percentage of its requirements of any du Pont manufactured product, or for the grant of exclusive patent rights, or for a grant by General Motors to du Pont of a preferential right to make or sell any chemical discovery of General Motors, or for the maintenance of any joint commercial enterprise by the two companies.

On motion of the amici curiae, the court directed that a ruling be obtained from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to the federal income tax consequences of the Government's plan. On May 9, 1958, [***335] the

HÌ ÁNÈJÈNÌ ÌHÌ HÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀFG JÌA ÀSEÒAÈGÀÁFI ÌHÌ LÀFJÌ FÀMÈUÈSÓYØÁGFI ÌHÌ Ì

Commissioner announced his rulings. The annual dividends paid to du Pont stockholders in shares of General Motors stock would be taxable as ordinary income to the extent of du Pont's earnings and profits. The measure, [****48] for federal income tax purposes, of the dividend to individual stockholders would be the fair market value of the shares at the time of each annual distribution. In the case of taxpaying corporate stockholders, the measure would be the lesser of the fair market value of the shares or du Pont's tax basis for them, which is approximately $ 2.09 per share. The forced sale of the General Motors stock owned by or allocable to Christiana, Delaware, and the stockholders of Delaware, and deposited with the trustee, would result in a tax to those parties at the capital gains rate.

Du Pont's counterproposal was filed on May 14, 1958. Under its plan du Pont would retain its General Motors shares but be required to pass on to its stockholders the right to vote those shares. Christiana and Delaware would, in turn, be required to pass on the voting rights to the General Motors shares allocable to them to their own [*344] stockholders. Du Pont would be enjoined from having as a director, officer, or employee anyone who was simultaneously an officer or employee of General Motors, and no director, officer, or employee of du Pont could serve as a director of General Motors without court approval. [****49] Du Pont would be denied the right to acquire any additional General Motors stock except through General Motors' distributions of stock or subscription rights to its stockholders.

On June 6, 1958, General Motors submitted its objections to the Government's proposal. It argued, inter alia, that a divestiture order would severely depress the market value of the stock of both General Motors and du Pont, with consequent serious loss and hardship to hundreds of thousands of innocent investors, among them thousands of small trusts and charitable institutions; that there would be a similar decline in the market values of other automotive and chemical stocks, with similar losses to the stockholders of those companies; that the tremendous volume of General Motors stock hanging over the market for ten years would hamper the efforts of General Motors and other automobile manufacturers to raise equity capital; and that all this would have a serious adverse effect on the entire stock market and on general business activity. General Motors comprehensively contended that the Government plan would not be "in the public interest" as required by the mandate of this Court.

The decrees proposed [****50] by the amici curiae were filed in August of 1958. These plans, like du Pont's, contained provisions for passing the vote on du [**1260] Pont's General Motors shares on to the ultimate stockholders of du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware, except that officers and directors of the three companies, their spouses, and other people living in their households, as well as other specified [*345] persons, were to be totally disenfranchised. Both plans also prohibited common directors, officers, or employees between du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware, on the one hand, and General Motors on the other. Further, both plans placed restrictions on trade relations between du Pont and General Motors. Amicus Dallstream, representing the du Pont stockholders, proposed in addition a program termed a "takedown," by which du [***336] Pont would create a new class of stock, "du Pont Special Common," which would have no rights in du Pont's General Motors stock and which du Pont stockholders could obtain, along with their allocable portion of the General Motors shares owned by du Pont, at times suitable to them, in exchange for their present du Pont common. This proposal would have different, [****51] and in several respects more favorable, tax consequences than those of the Government's plan.<sup>4</sup>

In a memorandum filed on September 26, 1958, the Government, on the assumption that divestiture was required under the Clayton Act, suggested various ways in which its decree might be modified to ameliorate its harsh tax consequences. The Government stated that it would have no objections to the modifications discussed in the memorandum but it did not submit amendments to its original proposal.

On the same day, the Government filed a motion for a preliminary injunction, seeking to restrain du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware from exercising their voting rights in General Motors stock, to prevent du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware from having any director, officer, or employee in common with General Motors or nominating any such person to serve in General Motors, [*346] and [****52] to prohibit further acquisitions of General Motors stock by the three corporations. The Government urged that since all parties were in substantial agreement on these measures as the minimum appropriate relief, the court should adopt them without delay. The court denied the motion on November 3, 1958, on the ground that the Government had failed to show a likelihood of irreparable injury in the absence of immediate relief and that, with final determination of the case not far distant, it would be undesirable to begin deciding issues piecemeal at that late date.

---

<sup>4</sup> For a discussion of amicus Dallstream's recommendations, see the opinion of the District Court, 177 F.Supp., at 9-10.

HÌ ÁMÈJÀFÌ ÊHÌ Ì LÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀEFG CLÀ ÁSEÒAÈGÀFÌ ÊHÌ LÀJÌ FÀMÈSÓYØÁGFI Ì ÊHÌ G

After further preliminaries which need not be recounted, the trial of the issues on the appropriate relief commenced on February 16, 1959, and continued to a conclusion on April 9, 1959. The Government presented its evidence on twelve hearing days; the defendants and amici also presented evidence on twelve days; and the Government took four more hearing days for the presentation of rebuttal evidence. Briefs were filed and the case was submitted to the court in June 1959. The court's decision was announced on October 2, 1959.

The printed record of the proceedings below covers 3,340 pages. Of this, trial of the issues [***53] pertaining to the terms of the decree fills 2,380 pages. An additional 543 pages contain exhibits. In the course of the trial twenty-nine witnesses were called by the Government and thirty-two by the defendants and amici. The printed exhibits number 193 submitted by the Government, thirty-two by du Pont, thirty by General Motors, nine by Christiana and Delaware, and one by amicus Dallstream. The bulk of this mass of evidence bore principally upon disputes over the market and tax consequences of divestiture of du Pont's General Motors stock and upon the requirement of resort [**1261] to this remedy for the effective enforcement of § 7.

[*347] On occasion the Government objected to the attention that was being focused on the details of its proposed decree. The Government insisted that its ultimate aim was [***337] not to further a specific plan but to obtain any reasonable order of divestiture. However, late in the trial the Government indicated that its original divestiture proposal stood before the court unamended in any detail.

"Mr. Reycraft (chief counsel for the Government): . . .

. . .

"I might also add that it is rather an obvious thought that [***54] the judgment which we did file was approved by not only the Assistant Attorney General but the Attorney General, and that while I am authorized here to represent the Government, I have no authority to change the decisions they make.

"The Court: It is my understanding then that you are standing on the decree that you proposed before this hearing started

"Mr. Reycraft: That is right, sir.

. . .

"Mr. Cox (counsel for du Pont): . . .

". . . I understand Mr. Reycraft's position now to be that he stands on the judgment that was filed. But if the Government should come in on its brief with a brand new proposal sometime, may it please the Court, we may find ourselves in a position where we will have to come into Court and ask for some kind of an opportunity to have a look at that.

"The Court: That will depend entirely on the extent or the character of the deviation from the original proposal.

"Mr. Cox: I would assume that would be true.

[*348] "The Court: From what Mr. Reycraft has said, I am assuming that that is the decree, with probably minor changes.

"Mr. Reycraft: I have nothing further, your Honor.<sup>5</sup> (Emphasis added throughout.)

---

<sup>5</sup> Transcript of Proceedings, March 31, 1959.

HÌ ÁMÈJÀFÌ ÊHÌ Ì LÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀEFG FLÀ ÁSEÒAÈGÀFÌ ÊHÌ LÀFJÌ FÀMÈEÀSÓYQÀGFI Ì ÊHÌ I

Thus [***55] it appears that the Government stood on its original proposal, rather than on alternative suggestions.

And so one comes to consider how the court dealt with the issues presented by the parties.

III.

After disposing of two preliminary questions -- ruling in favor of the amenability of General Motors, Christiana, and Delaware, as parties not condemned as violators of § 7, to the enforcing power of the court, and against the amenability to direct enforcement of holders of both du Pont and Delaware stock who were not parties to the suit -- the court thus defined the central issue before it:

"Under the mandate of the Supreme Court it is the responsibility of this Court to frame a judgment which will eliminate the effects of du Pont's acquisition of stock of General Motors which are offensive to the statute. The effect of the acquisition which the Supreme Court found to be offensive to the statute was the 'reasonable probability' that the acquisition might result [***56] in restraint or monopolization of the market for automotive fabrics and finishes. 353 U.S. 586, 595, 607, 77 S. Ct. 872, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1057. Accordingly, the problem before this Court is one of devising a judgment that will effectively guard against the probability of restraint or monopolization which the Supreme [***338] Court found to exist." 177 F.Supp., at 12-13.

[*349] [**1262] In discharging its duty under this mandate, particularly since relevant circumstances might offer a choice between effective alternatives, the court deemed it appropriate not to exclude from consideration the vast multiform interests at stake -- both the hundreds of thousands of truly innocent stockholders and the bearing on the national economy of the nature of the disposition of du Pont's General Motors holdings.

"This does not mean that the private interests of the stockholders can outweigh the public interest in a judgment that will effectively dissipate the effects of the acquisition found to be unlawful. But it does mean that in the opinion of this Court the primary public purpose should be achieved so far as possible without inflicting unnecessary injury [***57] upon innocent stockholders in the various corporations involved. The purpose of the judgment should be remedial and not punitive. Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U.S. 386, 409, 65 S. Ct. 373, 89 L. Ed. 322; United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U.S. 319, 67 S. Ct. 1634, 91 L. Ed. 2077. No harsh and oppressive consequences should be visited upon the stockholders unless it can be shown on the facts that these results are inescapable if a decree is to be framed that will comply with the mandate of the Supreme Court. The cases leave no doubt that these are considerations which the Court should weigh in the framing of its final judgment. United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 185, 31 S. Ct. 632, 55 L. Ed. 663. Compare Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 604, 71 S. Ct. 971, 95 L. Ed. 1199." 177 F.Supp., at 13-14.

The Government's first major contention -- that by the terms of the Clayton Act the court had no choice but [*350] to order total divestiture -- was rejected on the basis of an analysis of the statute and this Court's reaffirmation of the "large discretion" [***58] possessed by the District Courts "to mold their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case." The court proceeded to a consideration of the evidence introduced by the parties. The first subject was the tax impact of the Government's proposed decree. Extensive expert evidence (much of which was derived from a statistical survey found by the court to have been soundly and objectively conducted) indicated that individual stockholders of du Pont would pay income taxes at a rate of fifty percent to sixty percent under the Government's plan, and that the taxes payable by such persons could amount to $ 1,000,000,000 if the value of the General Motors shares were $ 50 per share, and approximately $ 770,000,000 if $ 40 per share. The capital gains tax on the sale of the General Motors stock allocable to Christiana and Delaware would be perhaps as much as $ 200,000,000. The court determined that variations of the Government's plan would also result in vast tax levies. It found, for example, that if a single distribution were employed to dispose of the 63,000,000 General Motors shares, at an assumed market value of $ 45 per share the total tax cost would be $ 588,044,000.

A second [***59] economic consequence of the Government's divestiture scheme would be its impact on the market value of the securities involved. The Government relied on three types of evidence to show that [***339] its plan would have little influence on the market prices of General Motors and du Pont stock. The first type was expert testimony that there was a regular flow of investment money coming into the market. However, upon detailed review of the testimony of a dozen witnesses, the court concluded that "there was no convincing evidence in this category that any substantial portion of this investment [351] money would be directed to buying General Motors stock at the true value of the stock, if the Government decree were in effect." 177 F.Supp., at 22.

HÌ ÁMÈJÀFÌ ÙHÌ CLÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀEFG GLÀ ÁSEÒAÈGÀFÌ ÙHÌ HULÁFÌ FAMÈSÓYQÁFÌ ÙHÌ J

[**1263] The Government's second type of evidence relating to the market consequences of its decree was the statistical testimony of academic and professional analysts. The court noted that it was shown no charts or statistics relating to a situation "remotely approaching" the forced sale of 2,000,000 shares of General Motors stock each year for ten years, attended by additional sales of both General Motors and du [\[\*\*\*\*60\]](#) Pont stock for tax and other purposes. Further, it found that one Government expert admitted he would defer to the judgment of investment bankers in the matter of the price for which the General Motors stock could be sold; another testified that in the past an increase in stock supply of twenty percent had been associated with price declines of between ten and fifteen percent; the testimony of another Government witness was based on inadequately drawn statistical tables, and his demeanor on the witness stand deprived his evidence of credibility; a fourth witness' opinions had no foundation in factual evidence.

The Government's third type of evidence related to securities offerings in the recent past. The court determined that the circumstances of these offerings -- i. e., their background, magnitude, timing, and duration -- made them dissimilar to a divestiture of du Pont's interest in General Motors. In any event most of these offerings did have a depressing effect on the market value of the stock involved. None of this evidence, the court found, gave assurance that the Government proposal would not cause serious loss on the sale of General Motors and du Pont stock during [\[\*\*\*\*61\]](#) the divestiture period.

The defendants countered the Government's case with a variety of evidence. Two experienced underwriters testified that the Government's ten-year divestiture [\[352\]](#) plan would result in a decline in the value of General Motors stock of from twenty percent to thirty percent; that heavy tax sales of du Pont would lower its price at least twenty-five percent; that distribution of General Motors stock in lieu of cash dividends would be even worse from this standpoint; that even an extension of the divestiture period to twenty years would not prevent declines in the neighborhood of fifteen percent; that a further loss estimated at from $ 1.50 to $ 2 per share sold in underwriting expense would be incurred by Christiana and Delaware; and, finally, that the trustee could never make the sales during the divestiture period anyway, since he could not realize a price, in the words of the Government's proposed final judgment, "sufficiently high to reflect the fair value and true worth of the stock."

Several trust management executives testified that because of the tax consequences of the Government's decree and the difficulties of allocating equitably the General [\[\*\*\*\*62\]](#) Motors [\[\*\*\*340\]](#) shares received as dividends by the trusts, they, and presumably others in their position throughout the country, would be forced to make mass sales of du Pont stock. Executives of several insurance companies and an investment trust company predicted declines in the value of General Motors stock and expressed an intention to buy it for their concerns only at considerably reduced prices. Many witnesses concurred in the view that the Government's decree would render future financing by General Motors highly uneconomic and very difficult to accomplish.

The court then appraised the evidence bearing on possible voting control of General Motors, under a decree of less than total divestiture, by corporations or individuals affiliated with du Pont. It determined that the Government's broadest grouping -- individuals who were stockholders of Delaware, additional individuals named du Pont, and certain corporations in which both groups [\[353\]](#) (sixty-five persons in all) own stock or on whose boards they sit -- would, under the du Pont plan's "pass-through" of voting rights, aggregate the vote of about eight percent of the total vote of General Motors. It was unclear [\[\*\*\*\*63\]](#) to the court either [\[\*\*1264\]](#) that this combination had a reasonable basis in fact or that, even if it did represent a cohesive block of votes, it was a large enough block to exercise any real control over General Motors. However, the court deemed it unnecessary to resolve these questions, since it intended to frame a decree to guarantee that concerted action by these stockholders would be precluded.

On the basis of its appraisal of the evidence, the court reached its essential conclusions. The first question was what provision to make with respect to du Pont's 63,000,000 shares of General Motors. It determined that a careful and detailed plan for a "pass-through" of the votes of these shares to du Pont's stockholders and an injunction to prevent du Pont and General Motors from sharing common officers, directors, and employees were necessary. The court then considered whether title to the stock, stripped of these vital incidents of ownership, must also be taken from du Pont, "in order to remove and to guard against the probability of restraint or monopolization of trade which was the consequence the Supreme Court found to be offensive to the statute." 177 F.Supp., at 40. [***64] "There is no evidence," it concluded, "on which the Court could make such a finding." 177 F.Supp., at 40.

HÌ ÁMÈJÈHÌ ÊHÌ HÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀFG I LÀ ÁSÈOÀÈGÀHÌ ÊHÌ CLÀJÌ FÀMÈÈSÒYQÀGFI ÊHÌ H

"In essence, therefore, what would be left in du Pont would be the most sterile kind of an investment. The Court notes in this connection that Section 7 of the Clayton Act expressly excludes from its operation 'corporations purchasing such stock solely for investment and not using the same by voting or otherwise' to bring about anti-competitive effects. There would thus appear to be a recognition on the [*354] part of Congress that the holding of stock does not in all instances carry with it the power to bring about consequences offensive to the statute. The Court recognizes that the Supreme Court has held that in the past du Pont has not held its stock in General Motors solely for investment. This Court is of the opinion, however, that the divestiture and ancillary injunctive provisions referred to hereafter will be effective to assure that hereafter General Motors stock will be held by du Pont solely for investment.

....

" [***341] In the circumstances, therefore, the Court finds that there is nothing in the record made in the hearing on relief [***65] or in the record in the trial in chief which would support, even by inference, the conclusion that du Pont's possession of the bare legal title to General Motors stock, stripped of its right to vote and of its right to representation on the Board of General Motors, would create any possibility that the stock would have any influence on the practices and policies of General Motors or could be used in any way that would be inconsistent with the mandate of the Supreme Court." 177 F.Supp., at 41.

What was on the other side of the ledger? The evidence indicated that divestiture of legal title would visit upon thousands of innocent investors adverse tax and market consequences, always severe even if varying in detail depending on the variation of the Government's plan. The court concluded that any plan for divestiture of legal title to du Pont's interest in General Motors would either impair the value of the property interests involved or impose severe tax consequences on du Pont's stockholders. Moreover, any plan that produced as a by-product the accumulation of vast amounts of cash by du Pont would have the undesirable result [*355] of enhancing greatly du Pont's [***66] economic power and position. All this led the court to hold that total divestiture, while unnecessary to remove the anticompetitive consequences of du Pont's ownership of the General Motors stock, would impose unfair injury on the stockholders of those companies.

[**1265] The court dealt with the Government's two objections to its result. The fear that block voting of the passed-through votes on the General Motors shares by investors who were related by blood or business interest would leave control of General Motors in the hands of du Pont's close associates was met by precluding the stockholders of Christiana and Delaware, as well as other specified persons, from voting their allocable shares of du Pont's General Motors stock. The objection that retention by du Pont of any financial stake in General Motors, even on behalf of its stockholders, would provide incentive to intercorporate favoritism between the two, while deemed merely a "naked suggestion," was answered by providing specific relief against preferential trade relations between du Pont and General Motors. In light of the proof and of these precautionary prohibitions, the court concluded that to order divestiture [***67] of du Pont's title to the General Motors stock would "constitute a serious abuse of discretion." 177 F.Supp., at 49.<sup>6</sup>

---

<sup>6</sup> A summary of the detailed provisions of the decree carrying out the direction and purposes of the court's opinion follows.

Du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware were enjoined from acquiring additional General Motors stock except as stock or rights might be distributed to them as stockholders by General Motors.

HÎ Í ÁMÈJÈAFÌ ÈEHÍ Í LÀ FÂUÈDÄFG HÄEFG Í LÀ ÅSEÖAÈGÅAFÌ ÈEHÍ FLÄJÌ FÂMÈÈSÖYQÄGFI Ì ÈEHÍ Ï

[****68] [*356] IV.

[***342] The questions presented by this appeal must be considered in the setting of the proceedings, summarized above, that led [**1266] to the District Court's conclusions in formulating its decree. Since the Court rejects the Government's [*357] claim that total divestiture is statutorily required upon a finding of a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, I need say no more about it.

If a District Court is not subject to any statutory requirement to order divestiture in a § 7 case, is it left without guidance or direction in fashioning an appropriate decree as a court of equity? Of course not. There is a body of authority, both procedural and substantive, by which it is to be guided. It is, however, well to remember that the wise admonition that general principles do not decide concrete cases has sharp applicability to equity decrees. Any apparently applicable policy or rule, abstractly stated, must be related to the specific circumstances of a particular case in which it is invoked and applied. Care must be taken to consider phrases used in relation to the particular facts of the cases relied on.

One principle has comprehensive application. [***69] It is that courts of equity, as this Court advised the District Court in remanding the case to it to fashion the appropriate relief, "are clothed 'with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case.'" 353 U.S., at 607-608. This is a commonplace,<sup>7</sup> but one of Du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware, on the one hand, and General Motors, on the other, were prohibited to have common officers, directors, or employees. The former three were also restrained from nominating any person to be an officer or director of General Motors.

Du Pont and General Motors were compelled to terminate, for as long as du Pont, Christiana, or Delaware own any General Motors stock, any agreement between them which (1) requires General Motors to purchase from du Pont a specified percentage of its requirements of any product (with certain time provisos), or (2) grants to either concern exclusive patent rights, or grants to du Pont preferential rights to make or sell any chemical discovery of General Motors.

Du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware were restrained, for the same period, from entering into any joint business venture with General Motors and from knowingly holding stock in any business enterprise in which General Motors holds stock. The same restrictions were applied to General Motors.

Du Pont was enjoined, again for the stock-holding period, from dealing with General Motors with respect to du Pont products on terms more favorable than those on which it is willing to deal with General Motors' competitors. The same restriction was placed upon General Motors in its dealings with du Pont.

Du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware, and their directors and officers, and the members of the families of their directors and officers who reside in the same household with them, were enjoined from exercising their voting rights in General Motors stock owned by them or allocable to them under the decree, and from attempting to influence anyone voting General Motors stock.

The vote on the General Motors shares owned by du Pont was ordered "passed through" to the stockholders of du Pont (subject to the prohibitions of the preceding paragraph), and the notification and proxy machinery necessary to effectuate this provision was outlined. Provision was made for the appointment of a monitor of these voting procedures.

A procedure was established whereby du Pont and Christiana might sell or otherwise dispose of their General Motors stock.

Two separate provisions preserved the right of any party to apply to the court for modification of the decree in the event of a change of circumstances (such as the advent of legislative tax relief) and for further orders necessary for carrying out the judgment.

Du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware were directed to obtain from their officers and directors, and their families, written consents to be bound by the voting restrictions of the judgment.

For the purpose of securing compliance with the judgment, the Department of Justice was authorized to conduct reasonable inspections of the records and interviews with the employees of du Pont, Christiana, and Delaware and to apply to the court for similar privileges as to General Motors upon a showing of good cause.

<sup>7</sup> See, e. g., United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 185; International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 400-401; Besser Mfg. Co. v. United States, 343 U.S. 444, 449-450; International Boxing Club v. United States, 358 U.S. 242, 253.

HÌ ÁMÈJÈAFÌ ÈEHÌ Ì LÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀEFG Ì LÀ ÁSEÒAÈGÀAFÌ ÈEHÌ GLÁJÌ FÁMÈÈSÓYQÀAFÌ Ì ÈEHÌ J

compelling importance. To forget it is [***343] to forget equity's special function and historic significance. The transcendence of this doctrine derives from the recognition [*358] that without it the effort to dispense equal justice under law would all too often be frustrated. The landmark sentences of Hecht Co. v. Bowles, 321 U.S. 321, 329-330, express the principles that must guide the chancellor:

"We are dealing here with the requirements of equity practice with a background of several hundred years of history. . . . The essence of equity jurisdiction has been the power of the Chancellor to do equity and to mould each decree to the necessities of the particular case. Flexibility rather than rigidity has distinguished it. The qualities of mercy and practicality have made equity the instrument for nice adjustment and reconciliation [****70] between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims. . . ."

If, indeed, equity's characteristic flexibility is deeply rooted in history, the administration of justice makes greater demands upon it now than ever before. As business transactions become increasingly complex, they multiply and complicate the issues presented to courts even in litigation of ordinary dimensions. How much more is this true of a suit of the magnitude and reach of the one before us, with inevitable impact far beyond the interests of the immediate parties. In such a case we need to be specially mindful that the purpose of equity jurisdiction is to adapt familiar [****71] principles of law to intricate, elusive, and unfamiliar facts. As one member of this Court recently put it: "Equity decrees are not like the packaged goods this machine age produces. They are uniform only in that they seek to do equity in a given case." United Steelworkers of America v. United States, 361 U.S. 39, 62, 71 (dissenting opinion).<sup>8</sup>

[****72] [*359] [**1267] The District Court was duty bound to exercise discretion -- which means to weigh contending considerations and conflicting evidence as a matter of judgment -- in framing a decree to meet the needs of the case. It could not escape exercising discretion -- that is, exercising its judgment within an area of allowable choice -- which this Court committed to it. Discretion precludes whimsy or caprice. Discretion means the judicial discretion of a court of equity. Where precedent or judicial tradition has established limitations on the chancellor's range of choice, he must respect them. What limitations confined the court below? Consideration of the relevant authorities on the formulation of antitrust decrees becomes necessary.

[***344] First, what was open to consideration in the District Court? Its overriding concern had to be for the protection of the public interest. It was its duty to hear all the evidence bearing on that question and in any conflict with private interests decisively to resolve doubts in favor of the general welfare. The account of the District Court's procedures, and of the considerations on which it reached its reflective conclusions, [****73] in Parts II and III of this opinion establishes, I submit, that it fully conformed to this essential requirement. Although it considered the Government's case on the likelihood of block voting of the votes of the General Motors shares passed through to Delaware and Christiana of doubtful [*360] strength, it sterilized those shares to prevent their being voted at all. Again, although it found no proof in the record to support the Government's "naked suggestion" concerning the probability of future preferential trade relations between General Motors and du Pont, it constructed a set of prohibitions against such dealing between the two enterprises. As already noted, the court fashioned its decree in deference to its conception of its "primary duty" to devise a judgment "that will effectively guard against the probability of restraint or monopolization which the Supreme Court found to exist." 177 F.Supp., at 13.

<sup>8</sup> In addition, see, for example, McClintock, Equity (2d ed. 1948), § 30:

"A court of equity may frame its decree so as to protect to the greatest extent possible the conflicting interests of the parties; to accomplish this it may require the performance of conditions, may experiment to determine how best to accomplish its purpose, and may use either the negative or the positive form of decree."

Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence (5th ed. 1941), § 109:

"Equitable remedies . . . are distinguished by their flexibility, their unlimited variety, their adaptability to circumstances, and the natural rules which govern their use. There is in fact no limit to their variety and application; the court of equity has the power of devising its remedy and shaping it so as to fit the changing circumstances of every case and the complex relations of all the parties."

HÎ Ì ÁÑÈJÈHÎ ÙHÎ CLÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀFG Ì LÀ ÁSEÒAÈGÀHÎ ÙHÎ I LÀJÎ FÀMÈSÓYQÀGFI ÙHÎ H

Did the District Court fail in its duty because it deemed relevant for consideration as one factor in striking the balance involved in its conclusion the consequences of divestiture to thousands upon thousands of blameless stockholders and other so-called [****74] private interests? The decisions of this Court gave full warrant to the District Court that it did not exceed its discretionary powers in doing so. The weighty words of United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 185, are apposite:

"In considering the subject . . . three dominant influences must guide our action: 1. The duty of giving complete and efficacious effect to the prohibitions of the statute; 2, the accomplishing of this result with as little injury as possible to the interest of the general public; and, 3, a proper regard for the vast interests of private property which may have become vested in many persons as a result of the acquisition either by way of stock ownership [**1268] or otherwise of interests in the stock or securities of the combination without any guilty knowledge or intent in any way to become actors or participants in the wrongs which we find to have inspired and dominated the combination from the beginning. . . ."

And in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 78, the Court admonished that "the fact must not be [*361] overlooked that injury to the public by the prevention of [****75] an undue restraint on, or the monopolization of trade or commerce is the foundation upon which the prohibitions of the statute rest, and moreover that one of the fundamental purposes of the statute is to protect, not to destroy, rights of property." The importance of these considerations was reiterated in Continental Ins. Co. v. United States, 259 U.S. 156, with the Government actively championing their propriety, and suggesting that "it seemed wise not to amputate any more than was necessary to secure the great policy of the Sherman law." 259 U.S., at 169. In *United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co., ***345J 247 U.S. 32, 46*, the Court labeled dissolution a remedy "extreme, even in its mildest demands" and counseled "If there be need for this the difficulties of achievement should not deter; but the difficulties may admonish against the need . . . ." This holds for divestiture.<sup>9</sup>

[****76] This Court's decisions leave no doubt that it was proper for the District Court to attend to the likelihood of danger to the public welfare that might arise from the serious adverse market consequences of divestiture and to the likelihood of extensive loss to innocent investors through both market decline and tax levy. It is apparent that the Department of Justice recognized the relevance of the tax impact. In a statement on proposed legislation to alleviate the tax burden of divestiture decrees, Robert A. Bicks, then Acting Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division of the Justice Department, said:

"Bear in mind, the 1890 Sherman and the 1914 Clayton Acts, the basic antitrust statutes, became law before the income tax was a reality. And the landmark [*362] antitrust cases -- dissolving illegal trusts and monopolies via divestiture -- were largely a product of an era marked by no income tax or much lower tax rates. Indeed, there is real basis for concluding that some bench-mark antitrust divestiture cases . . . might well not have been decreed had today's tax rates prevailed." Bicks, Statement on H. R. 7361 and H. R. 8126 before the House Committee [****77] on Ways and Means, July 20, 1959, 4 Antitrust Bulletin 557 (1959).

It is obvious from the context of these remarks that their immediate objective was to smooth the way toward obtaining divestiture in this very case.<sup>10</sup>

In a case such as du Pont, in which the challenged transaction occurred approximately thirty years prior to the initiation of suit, the force of these considerations [**1269] is greatly enhanced. The relationship between General Motors and du Pont stood uncondemned by the Government through successive [****78] administrations

<sup>9</sup> See also United States v. Terminal R. Assn., 224 U.S. 383; United States v. American Can Co., 234 F. 1019; United States v. Great Lakes Towing Co., 208 F. 733, 217 F. 656.

<sup>10</sup> The Bicks statement itself makes repeated reference to the pending du Pont case. See 4 Antitrust Bulletin, at 561, n. 7, 562, n. 8, 567, n. 13. And the Committee Report and Hearings recur again and again to the serious tax problem engendered by the case. See H. R. Rep. No. 1128, 86th Cong., 1st Sess.; Hearings on H. R. 8126 before the House Committee on Ways and Means, 86th Cong., 1st Sess.; Hearings on S. 200 before the Senate Committee on Finance, 86th Cong., 1st Sess.

HÌ ÁMÈJÈHÌ ÊHÌ GLÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀEFG JÌA ÀSEÒA ÈGÀAMÌ ÊHÌ I LÀJÌ FÀMÈÈSÓYØÀGFI Ì ÊHÌ I

throughout that period. This is not remotely to hint any form of estoppel against resort to divestiture as relief for the illegality, however belatedly established, were it otherwise the required means for correction of past misconduct or its future avoidance. I do maintain that, as this Court has recognized, it was altogether proper for the District Court -- even incumbent upon it -- to take "account of what was done during that time -- the many millions of dollars spent, the developments made, and the [*363] enterprises undertaken, the investments by the public that have been invited and are not to be ignored." United States v. United States Steel Corp., 251 U.S. 417, 453.

In short, the factors that influenced [***346] the District Court were fit considerations for judicial scrutiny. But we still have to inquire what criteria were open to the District Court for appraising the relevant variables and how that court's determinations are to be reviewed by this Court.

The very foundation for judgment in reviewing a District Court's decree in a case like this is the inherent nature of its task in adjudicating claims arising under the antitrust [***79] laws. The sweeping generality of the antitrust laws differentiates them from ordinary statutes. "As a charter of freedom," wrote Mr. Chief Justice Hughes for the Court, "the [Sherman] Act has a generality and adaptability comparable to that found to be desirable in constitutional provisions." Appalachian Coals, Inc., v. United States, 288 U.S. 344, 359-360. This is no less true of the Clayton Act's prohibition "where the effect . . . may be to substantially lessen competition." Correspondingly broad is the area within which a District Court must move to fit the remedy to the range of the outlawry. Far-reaching responsibility is vested in the court charged with fashioning a decree and the decree it fashions must be judged on review in light of this responsibility.

"In the anti-trust field the courts have been accorded, by common consent, an authority they have in no other branch of enacted law. . . . They would not have been given, or allowed to keep, such authority in the anti-trust field, and they would not so freely have altered from time to time the interpretation of its substantive provisions, if courts were in the habit of proceeding with the [***80] surgical ruthlessness that [*364] might commend itself to those seeking absolute assurance that there will be workable competition, and to those aiming at immediate realization of the social, political, and economic advantages of dispersal of power." United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 110 F.Supp. 295, 348 (a decision affirmed by this Court without opinion, 347 U.S. 521).

Partly on the basis of these views, the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws recommended that divestiture "not be decreed as a penalty," that it "not be invoked where less drastic remedies will accomplish the purpose of the litigation," and that possible disruption of industry and markets as well as effect on the public, investors, customers, and employees be taken into account. Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws (1955), pp. 355-356. This statement fairly reflects the views of this Court, to the effect that a decree must not "impose penalties in the guise of preventing future violations," Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U.S. 386, 409; that the least harsh of [***81] available measures should be adopted when the Court is satisfied that they will be effective, e. g., Timken Roller [*1270] Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 603 (concurring opinion); and that injunctive relief may well be an adequate sanction against continued wrongdoing, id., at 604 (concurring opinion), and Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 77. Add to this that we have recognized a sound basis in reason for distinguishing palpably illegal activity from conduct that was arguably permissible, [*347] and for dealing with the latter less severely than the former. See Federal Trade Comm'n v. National Lead Co., 352 U.S. 419, 429; United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 340 U.S. 76, 89-90.

[*365] The principles thus pronounced by this Court were duly heeded by the District Court. The salient feature of its attitude was its disposition to favor the Government's claims on behalf of the public interest. It even rejected the defendants' argument, based on National Lead and Gypsum, supra,<sup>11</sup> that it should take into account [***82] that the question whether the acquisition violated the law was, to say the least, reasonably in doubt, and that therefore

---

<sup>11</sup> And see United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 110 F.Supp. 295, 348.

HÌ ÁMÈJÈNÌ ÊHÌ Í LÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀEFG CLÀ ÁSEÒAÈGÀMFÌ ÊHÌ Í LÀFÌ FÀMÈÈSÓYQÁGFI Ì ÊHÌ G

no blame should be imputed to the officers and directors of the defendants. "The Court . . . approaches the problem on the assumption that the appropriate relief is that which is necessary to eliminate the effects of the acquisition offensive to the statute, notwithstanding that the acquisition might reasonably have been believed to be permissible when made." 177 F.Supp., at 14.

The Government urges, however, that divestiture is, if not the required relief, at least the normal and ordinary relief in stock acquisition cases. The contention is that, as the safest remedy, i. e., the surest of anticompetitive results, divestiture is, and has been considered to be, the preferred relief for all save a few exceptional cases. Support for this view is drawn from a long line of [****83] cases in which divestiture has been decreed. The contention calls for detailed scrutiny.

The objectives of divestiture were thus stated in Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., v. United States, 334 U.S. 110, 128-129:

"Divestiture or dissolution must take account of the present and future conditions in the particular industry as well as past violations. It serves several functions: (1) It puts an end to the combination or conspiracy when that is itself the violation. (2) It [*366] deprives the antitrust defendants of the benefits of their conspiracy. (3) It is designed to break up or render impotent the monopoly power which violates the Act. . ." <sup>12</sup>

[****84] This tripartite formulation summarizes the considerations that have guided this Court's rulings on divestiture. In Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, the source of modern antitrust law, the defendants were charged with combination and conspiracy to restrain trade in and monopolize interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum products, in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The lower court found both provisions offended by a combination of seven individual defendants and thirty-eight corporate defendants to lodge in the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey substantial stock ownership of and control over many subsidiary corporations in the [**1271] petroleum industry and [***348] to cause Standard Oil to manage their affairs so as to throttle competition, findings sustained here. Coming to the problem of remedy, while acknowledging that "ordinarily" injunctive relief would be adequate to restrain repetition of the illegal activity, the Court found that the situation presented by the Standard Oil aggrandizement called for stiffer measures: "But in a case like this, where the condition which has been brought about in violation of the statute, [****85] in and of itself, is not only a continued attempt to monopolize, but also a monopolization, the duty to enforce the statute requires the application of broader and more controlling remedies." 221 U.S., at 77. (Emphasis added.) Recognition of this need -- that intercorporate [*367] connections call for severance when persistence of the relationship in itself would constitute a violation of the antitrust laws -- has been steadfastly adhered to. "Dissolution of the combination will be ordered where the creation of the combination is itself the violation." United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 189. It has been the controlling factor in the majority of the divestiture decrees in the intervening years, since most situations before the Court have similarly demanded this relief.<sup>13</sup>

[****86] The second element of the Schine rationale -- depriving antitrust defendants "of the benefits of their conspiracy" -- is equally well established. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, was a Sherman Act suit in which certain motion picture exhibitors were found to have used their combined buying power

<sup>12</sup> For a similar statement see United States v. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 96 F.Supp. 356, 357.

"In general the object of the remedies under the anti-trust laws is to prevent the continuance of wrongful conduct, and to deprive the wrongdoers of the fruits of their unlawful conduct, and to prevent the creation anew of restraint forbidden by law. . . ."

<sup>13</sup> In the Crescent case, 323 U.S., at 189, the Court placed in this category Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106; United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 226 U.S. 61; United States v. Reading Co., 253 U.S. 26; United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U.S. 255; and United States v. Southern Pacific Co., 259 U.S. 214. Our survey of these cases sustains this classification. To this list may be added International Boxing Club v. United States, 358 U.S. 242, in which the Court accepted the District Court's finding that "The great evil" in the case "was the combination that Wirtz and Norris caused and created by joining up with Madison Square Garden." 358 U.S., at 256.

HÌ ÁMÈJÈAFÌ ÈHÌ Ì LÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀEFG FLÀ ÁSEÒAÈGÀAFÌ ÈHÌ Ì LÀJÌ FÀMÈÈSÓYQÀGFI Ì ÈHÌ Ì

to obtain terms more favorable than those received by their independent competitors in licensing films, whereby independents were driven from the field and a monopoly in theater operation developed in many towns. Each corporate exhibitor was required to divest itself of its interest in any other corporate defendant or its affiliates.

"Those who violate the Act may not reap the benefits of their violations and avoid an undoing of their [*368] unlawful project on the plea of hardship or inconvenience. That principle is adequate here to justify divestiture of all interest in some of the affiliates since their acquisition was part of the fruits of the conspiracy." 323 U.S., at 189.<sup>14</sup>

[****87] The third Schine objective of divestiture was "to break up or render impotent the monopoly power which violates the Act." The role of divestiture in meeting this need was spelled out in the Crescent case:

"Common control was one of the [***349] instruments in bringing about unity of purpose and unity of action and in making the conspiracy effective. [**1272] If that affiliation continues, there will be tempting opportunity for these exhibitors to continue to act in combination against the independents. The proclivity in the past to use that affiliation for an unlawful end warrants effective assurance that no such opportunity will be available in the future. . ." 323 U.S., at 189-190.

These, then, are the justifiable bases for compelling divestiture. They explain and define the authorities on which the Government relies. Do they, or any of them, invalidate the District Court's refusal to decree divestiture in the circumstances of this case and justify this Court in overruling that court's exercise of discretion in finding divestiture uncalled for?

The notion that the very existence of an interest by du Pont in the stock of General Motors constitutes [****88] a violation of the Act need not detain us. It cannot be questioned that, as the Court's opinion on the merits in this case makes clear, the violation condemned is the effect of the stockholding on competition, not the [*369] stockholding as such.<sup>15</sup> To be sure, this illegal tendency to lessen competition may be ended by terminating any intercorporate relationship. But just as surely the unlawfulness of the tendentious stockholding may be ended by preventing its harmful consequences.

[****89] Nor is divestiture required as a means of depriving the defendant of the fruits of its violation. While du Pont's interest in General Motors might serve as a tool for the accomplishment of antitrust violations, it is certainly not the fruit of any such violation. The fruit -- the benefit -- of a violation of § 7 is the unfair competitive position of one corporation through its stock interest in another. Effective termination of this competitive advantage was precisely the design of the elaborate injunctive provisions devised by the District Court.

<sup>14</sup> See additionally, International Boxing Club v. United States, 358 U.S. 242, 253.

<sup>15</sup> This construction of the statute had long been settled. See International Shoe Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 280 U.S. 291, 297-298.

"Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as its terms and the nature of the remedy prescribed plainly suggest, was intended for the protection of the public against the evils which were supposed to flow from the undue lessening of competition. . . .

....

"Mere acquisition by one corporation of the stock of a competitor, even though it result in some lessening of competition, is not forbidden; the act deals only with such acquisitions as probably will result in lessening competition to a substantial degree . . . that is to say, to such a degree as will injuriously affect the public. . . ."

HÌ ÁNÈJÈNÌ ÈHÌ JLÀ FÀUÈDÀFG HÀEFG GLÀ ÁSEÒAÈGÀMFÌ ÈHÌ JLÁJÌ FÁMÈÈSÓYQÁGFI Ì ÈHÌ J

The final desideratum -- vitiating a monopoly power -- is not literally applicable to the du Pont situation, since the District Court dismissed the monopoly charge under the Sherman Act and this Court refused to review the dismissal. 353 U.S., at 588, n. 5. But even if this criterion were carried over into a Clayton Act setting to enforce the desirability of avoiding every potentiality of monopoly power, there is no compulsion to decree divestiture. Such [*370] argumentative power does not preclude restraints, by injunctive relief, that render it "impotent," to use the language of the Schine case. Nor is there [****90] in the record before us any basis in fact for the fears that have evoked the application of this principle in previous divestiture cases. There is no finding in this case, as there were in Crescent and Schine, of a deliberate conspiracy aimed at the destruction of competition. [***350] We cannot point in this case, as we have on occasion in the past, to any blatantly anticompetitive scheme. See, e. g., United States v. Reading Co., 253 U.S. 26, 59. Instead we have only the finding that "there is a reasonable [**1273] probability that the acquisition is likely to result in the condemned restraints," 353 U.S., at 607, i. e., to restrain commerce. Moreover, the Court explicitly ruled executive misconduct out of the case -- "without any design to overreach anyone, including du Pont's competitors." 353 U.S., at 607.

Even in the Crescent case, the Court voiced its concern for the future only by way of support for its conclusion that the District Court's severance of the defendants could not be reversed for abuse of discretion. 323 U.S., at 190. The Court sustained, rather than overturned, the lower [****91] court's judgment. To infer that the Court would have found an abuse of discretion had the District Court in Crescent limited itself to a decree of injunctive relief is an unwarranted assumption. But the Government in effect draws such an inference for the purpose of this case, even though the facts of du Pont's violation do not faintly resemble the offense of the movie exhibitors in Crescent. When the powerful interests of James J. Hill and J. Pierpont Morgan coalesce to place in one controlling parent the stock of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railways, Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197; when the Standard Oil Co. or the American Tobacco Co. obtain monopoly positions in their vast industrial empires, see Standard Oil Co. v. [371] United States, 221 U.S. 1, and United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106; when the rail carriers controlling the means of transportation of anthracite coal combine to destroy a potential competitor, United States v. Reading Co., 226 U.S. 324, the facts demand the major surgery of divestiture -- destruction of the [****92] offending combinations. But to hold that the treatment of these conscious conspiracies to restrain trade and to achieve monopoly power is compelling precedent for determining the relief necessary and appropriate to remedy the only wrong judicially found by this Court under § 7, is to treat situations flagrantly different as though they were the same. Surely there is merit to the notion of shaping the punishment to fit the crime, even beyond the precincts of the Mikado's palace.

The grounds thus canvassed furnish the relevant considerations for this Court's review of the District Court's decree. The obvious must be restated. We do not sit to draft antitrust decrees de novo. This is a court of appeal, not a trial court. We do not see the witnesses, sift the evidence in detail, or appraise the course of extended argument, session after session, day after day. (A review of Part III of this opinion abundantly shows the extent to which the District Court's appraisal of the credibility of witnesses, analysis of expert testimony, and reconciliation of the claims of counsel entered into the painstaking process that led to the court's views on complicated issues and ultimately to [****93] the formulation of its decree.) In short, this Court does not partake of the procedure and is not charged with the responsibility demanded of the court entrusted with the task of devising the details of a decree appropriate [***351] for the governance of a vastly complicated situation arising out of unique circumstances. By its nature, this Court, as an appellate tribunal, lacks the means -- the procedural facilities -- to evolve a decree in a case like this. For these reasons this [*372] Court sent this case back to the District Court, quoting in part (353 U.S., at 608), without specific limitation, the comprehensively general guidelines of an earlier case:

"The framing of decrees should take place in the District rather than in Appellate Courts. They are invested with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case." International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 400-401.<sup>16</sup>

---

<sup>16</sup> To the same effect, see Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1; Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143; International Boxing Club v. United States, 358 U.S. 242; Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Assn. v. United States, 362 U.S. 458.

HÎ ÁNÈJÈHÎ ÊHÎ GLÀ FÂUÈDÄFG HÄEFG HLA ÅSEÖA ÈGÅÄFI ËEEHÍ FLÄJÎ FÂMÈSÖYQÄFI ï ËEEHJH

[****94] [**1274] To tell a trial judge that he has discretion in certain matters is to tell him that there is a range of choices available to him. It is to tell him that the responsibility is his, and that he will not be reversed except for straying outside the permissible range of choice, i. e., for abuse of discretion. See, e. g., United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 189; Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 600-601. In sustaining the judgment in Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 156, the Court stated its standard for upholding the trial court's decree as simply that "The decree is reasonably consistent with the requirements of the case and remains within the control of the court below." (Emphasis in the original.) Certainly we ought not to reverse the carefully wrought results of a conscientious trial judge without a showing amounting almost to a demonstration that he exceeded the fair limits of judicial choice which this Court explicitly reposed in him.<sup>17</sup>

[****95] [*373] When a district judge has failed to accord parties an adequate hearing [***352] or has been otherwise wanting in the administration of fair procedure, there is the best of reasons for this Court to secure for them the full measure of judicial consideration which they are owed but failed to receive. But when, as in this case, the comprehensiveness of the hearing, the full consideration of the issues, both through evidence and argument, the evident diligence and searching competence of the judge -- reflected throughout the long hearing -- and his care in expounding the reasons for his judgment demonstrate a deep awareness of the duty with which this Court charged him without any restrictions on his task except that he was entrusted "with large discretion," reversal of the lower court's result can be justified only by a showing of patent misconception of [*374] governing law or want of [**1275] conscientious regard for "the exigencies of the particular case." When judged by the relevant decisions and pronouncements of this Court, such legal defects or inadequacies are impressively disproved by this record.

It may be suggested that however faithfully the trial [****96] court abided by the other teachings of this Court, it forgot one, namely, "that relief, to be effective, must go beyond the narrow limits of the proven violation." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 340 U.S. 76, 90. See International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 400. This principle is important but it carries no warrant for reversal in this case. It has already been pointed out that the District Court specifically applied this principle in significant provisions of its decree. This Court found a danger of restraint of trade only in the market for automobile fabrics and finishes. The District Court nevertheless extended the injunctive provisions of its decree to all trade relations between du Pont and General Motors, regardless of the products involved. This Court proceeded on the assumption that the officers and directors of the companies had acted honorably and in the best interests of their respective corporations. Yet the District Court, responsive to the Government's urging, though without substantial evidence in the record, chose to sterilize the voting power not only of du Pont's officers and directors, but also [****97] of a major block of its large shareholders, the shareholders of Christiana and Delaware. In fact, the District Court exceeded the Government's requests in several substantial respects. This is true with respect to the injunction against cooperative and preferential <sup>17</sup> The Court should not allow itself to be led to a contrary conclusion by the language of United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 340 U.S. 76, or Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 324 U.S. 570. The Gypsum case says only that the District Court's conclusions should not be subject to reversal merely for gross abuse of discretion, and that this Court must intervene when the provisions of the decree are "inappropriate." I could not agree more, either with these views or with those expressed in the remarks that formed their preface:

"The determination of the scope of the decree to accomplish its purpose is peculiarly the responsibility of the trial court. Its opportunity to know the record and to appraise the need for prohibitions or affirmative actions normally exceeds that of any reviewing court." 340 U.S., at 89.

In Hartford-Empire the opinion of the Court says "it is unthinkable that Congress has entrusted the enforcement of a statute of such far-reaching importance to the judgment of a single judge, without review of the relief granted or denied by him." 324 U.S., at 571. These words, if given the reading they seem most readily to bear, are certainly unobjectionable, for our power to review the antitrust relief determinations of trial judges is not in doubt. If this language is to be read to authorize de novo consideration here of all the details of a lower court's decree, then it marks a real aberration in this branch of the law. Whatever respect such a view might once have deserved, it deserves none now, for our recent decisions have uniformly adopted the principle of appellate deference to trial court discretion. See cases cited in notes 7 and 16, supra.

HÎ Í ÁNÈJÈNÌ ÈHÌ I LÀ FÂUÈDÄFG HÄEFG Í LÀ ÅSEÖAÈGÅÄFI ÈHÌ GLÄJÌ FÄMÈSÖYQÄFI I ÈHÌJÌ

business practices between du Pont and General Motors,<sup>18</sup> the prohibition against interlocking corporate personnel,<sup>19</sup> [*375] and the detail of the retention of jurisdiction and reopening clauses.<sup>20</sup>

Moreover, the principle of extending relief beyond the narrow limits of the violation has an important limiting corollary. The trial court is not authorized to order relief which it is without findings to support. "A full exploration of facts is usually necessary [****98] in order properly to draw such a decree." Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 22. [***353] This Court has unhesitatingly reversed remedial action by the lower courts, both for and against the Government, when wanting in supporting findings. See Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U.S. 386, 418; Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., v. United States, 334 U.S. 110; United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. 131, 170-174; Hughes v. United States, 342 U.S. 353, 357-358. But if findings on questions of fact, or mixed questions of law and fact, are essential to the formulation of a decree, it becomes virtually impossible to develop a basis for a divestiture order at this stage on this record. The District Court found that once all of du Pont's ties to General Motors, save its stock interest, were severed the record is barren of justification for an inference of reasonable probability of restraint of trade. Conversely, it found that the tax and market consequences of divestiture would be so onerous that, in the absence of any serious anticompetitive danger, it would [****99] have constituted an abuse of discretion to enter such a decree. These conclusions were based in significant measure on the firsthand factual analysis [**1276] that only a trial judge is in a position to make. For the Court to require divestiture, thereby overturning a trial court judgment [*376] founded on an appraisal of voluminous conflicting evidence and opinion, is in effect to displace the trial court's function as a fact-finder.

The Government suggests that possibly, in "exceptional" cases, some remedy other than divestiture may suffice, but that this is not the "exceptional" case. If this is not an "exceptional" case, what would be? Is it really tenable to regard this an ordinary, a conventional, a run-of-the-mill case?

Du Pont began to acquire General Motors stock while World War I was still in progress. It owned that stock openly for three decades before this suit was instituted to challenge the validity of the acquisition. During that period the number of General Motors and du Pont stockholders expanded from a few thousand to many hundreds of thousands. The value of the General Motors stock greatly increased. The tax laws were substantially changed. The [****100] District Court has fashioned a closely knit network of provisions to prevent preferential dealings between General Motors and du Pont. So certain was it that divestiture would, on the basis of its findings, work great and unjustifiable loss on wholly innocent investors, that it considered a divestiture order beyond its discretionary power. The precedents of this Court to which the District Court could look for guidance in the discharge of its duty permitted, at the least, the inferences (1) that the framing of the decree lay within its discretion, (2) that within the scope of that discretion it was free to consider all relevant consequences, both public and private, of the plans proposed, (3) that it was under no compulsion to order divestiture, (4) that there was ample reason to avoid a harsh remedy if it were to conclude that a less severe one would be effective, (5) that both the facts and the formulated reasoning of prior divestiture cases made them distinguishable from the [*377] du Pont problem, and (6) that unless the District Court abused its discretion by disregarding this Court's guides for its decision, [***354] its judgment would stand on review. In the face [****101] of all this, it is indeed "exceptional" for this Court to upset the lower court's judgment that its decree met the needs established in the proceeding before it.

The essential appeal of the Government's position lies in its excitation of fear of any intercorporate relationship between two such colossi as du Pont and General Motors. It is easy to calm this fear by a requirement of divestiture. Insofar as the Court yields to that fear, it is strange, indeed, that this was not obvious to the Court when it found the illegality for which it directed the District Court to evolve a corrective remedy. Not a single consideration now advanced by the Court for directing divestiture was not available when the case was originally here. For not one of these considerations is based on evidence elicited at the hearing before the District Court, directed by this Court, for determining the relief. Such a limitation on the discretionary decree-fashioning power, upon full hearing in

<sup>18</sup> Compare the Government's proposed Article IX with Section V of the final judgment.

<sup>19</sup> Compare the Government's proposed Article X with Section IV of the final judgment.

<sup>20</sup> Compare the Government's proposed Article XIII with Sections IX and XII of the final judgment.

HÌ Í ÁÑEÜÄFI ÈHÌ I LÀ FÁUÖDÉFG HÆFGI Í LÀ ÅSEØaÅGAÅFI ÈHÌ I LÆJÌ FÁMÆSØYØAGFI Í ÈHÌEF

the District Court, certainly could not have been in this Court's mind when it remitted that function to the District Court, otherwise it would have spoken its mind and not left it all to the "large discretion" of the [****102] court. In any event it requires prophetic confidence to conclude that that decree is so obviously inadequate as to require reversal before it can be tried in practice. Neither the record when the case was first here nor the facts adduced at the hearing on molding the decree give warrant for this Court to set aside the trial court's finding on the improbability of future restraint of trade in view of the safeguarding terms of the decree. If the Court were to allow the District Court's maturely considered scheme for protecting the dominant public interest [*378] with less than "surgical ruthlessness" [**1277] to proceed, time might show that the relief granted by the District Court was well based, and that this Court's willingness to give it a try properly averted reasonably founded fear of serious economic dislocation.

Reversal by way of commanding divestiture is a "judgment from speculation," carrying with it irreversible consequences, whereas the District Court's decree leaves the door open for "judgment from experience," Tanner v. Little, 240 U.S. 369, 386, under its clauses retaining jurisdiction to modify the judgment in the light of changed circumstances. [****103] Resort to such safety valve clauses is an established practice in review of antitrust remedies, for they allow the courts to act on the basis of informed hindsight rather than treacherous conjecture. In International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 401, the Court enunciated this principle in language pertinent here:

"The District Court has retained jurisdiction, by the terms of its judgment, for the purpose of 'enabling any of the parties . . . to apply to the court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment' and 'for the amendment, modifications or termination of any of the provisions . . .' We think it would not be good judicial administration to strike paragraph VI from the judgment to meet a hypothetical situation when the District Court has [***355] purposely left the way open to remedy any such situations if and when the need arises. The factual basis of the claim for modification should appear in evidentiary form before the District Court rather than in the argumentative form in which it is before us. . . ."

[*379] The wisdom of this [****104] policy is reflected in many of our decisions.<sup>21</sup> Why should it not guide the Court's decision in this case? The Government's presentation boils down to an unsubstantiated assertion that any tie between du Pont and General Motors gravely jeopardizes the play of competitive forces. When we are asked to assume this, we are asked to assume that even after a decree fashioned with the circumspection with which this was, a "reasonable probability" exists that the defendants will, in a wholly undefined way, combine to violate the antitrust laws. We are asked, in essence, to enter Alice's Wonderland where proof is unnecessary and the governing rule of law is "Sentence first, verdict after."

[****105] The District Court here concluded that the relief it devised would dispel all potential restraints upon free competition as effectively as would divestiture, while divestiture was likely to cause serious economic disturbance unwarranted by a need for that remedy. Neither in its procedures nor in its consideration of the data presented to it did the court fail to discharge the obligations placed upon it by the decisions of this Court and by the only instruction -- to exercise "large discretion" -- given it by the Court in this case. In no way did the District Court abuse the discretion entrusted to it. Its judgment should therefore be affirmed.

End of Document

<sup>21</sup> See Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 22-23; Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 604 (opinion of Mr. Justice Reed); Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 157; Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Assn. v. United States, 362 U.S. 458, 473.

California v. Federal Power Comm'n

Supreme Court of the United States

March 1, 1962, Argued ; April 30, 1962, Decided

No. 187

Reporter

369 U.S. 482 *; 82 S. Ct. 901 **; 8 L. Ed. 2d 54 ***; 1962 U.S. LEXIS 2161 ****; 1962 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,302; 16 Oil & Gas Rep. 1065

CALIFORNIA v. FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 111 U. S. App. D. C. 226, 296 F.2d 348, reversed.

Core Terms

---

antitrust, merger, antitrust suit, Clayton Act, proceedings, anti trust law, acquisition, courts, stock, natural gas, consummated, public convenience, interlocutory, immunity, restrain, approve, matters, unscrambling, entrusted, lessening, temporary, hearings

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN1** [PDF] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Capper-Volstead Act

Governments > Local Governments > Administrative Boards

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Clayton Act

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Antitrust Immunity

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

HÌ JÁMÈUÀ Ì GÀ Ì GLÀ GÀUÒDÀ Ë FÄE ËFLÀ ÅSEÒAÅCÀ Á I ÅÅÍ I LÀFJÌ GÀMÈUÅSÓYØÅGÌ FÄÅEE

**HN2** [down] Collectives & Cooperatives, Capper-Volstead Act

Immunity from the antitrust laws is not lightly implied.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Clayton Act

Real Property Law > Common Interest Communities > Cooperatives > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN3** [down] Collectives & Cooperatives, Clayton Act

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 gives immunity to transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority given by the Secretary of Agriculture under any statutory provision vesting such power in such Secretary, however the only authority of the Secretary is to approve "marketing agreements," and not other types of agreements or restraints typically covered by the antitrust laws.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN4** [down] Legislation, Interpretation

When there are two acts upon the same subject, the rule is to give effect to both if possible.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

**HN5** [down] Regulated Industries, Transportation

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. 18, which prohibits stock acquisitions, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly, contains a proviso that nothing contained in § 7 shall apply to transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority given by the Federal Power Commission under any statutory provision vesting such power in such commission.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HÌ JÁMÈÙÀ Ì GÈÙ Ì GLÀ GÀÙÒDÀ ËFÈE ËFLÀ ÅSEÒAÅCÀ Á I ÅÙÍ I LÀFJÌ GÀÙÈÅSÓYØÀGÌ FÀÅEE

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

HN6 [↓] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The words "transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority" given the Federal Power Commission under any statutory provision vesting such power in it are not a grant of power to adjudicate antitrust issues. Congress makes clear that by this proviso in § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. 18, it is not intended that any agency mentioned shall be granted any authority or powers which it does not already possess.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

HN7 [↓] Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

The Federal Power Commission's standard, set forth in § 7 of the Natural Gas Act (Act), 15 U.S.C.S. 717, is that the acquisition or merger, will serve the public convenience and necessity. If existing natural gas companies violate the antitrust laws, the commission is advised by § 20(a) of the Act to transmit such evidence to the Attorney General whom, in his discretion, may institute the necessary criminal proceedings. Other administrative agencies are authorized to enforce section seven of the Clayton Act when it comes to certain classes of companies or persons, but the Commission is not included in the list.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

HN8 [↓] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 21.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

HN9 [↓] Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

Approval of a transaction by the Federal Power Commission is no bar to an antitrust suit.

HÌ JÁMÈÙÀ Ì GÈÙ Ì GLÀ GÀÙÒDÀ ËFÈE ËFLÀ ÅSEÒÅ ËCAÁ I ÅÙÍ I LÀFJÌ GÀÙÈÅSÓYØ ÁGFÌ FÀÅÅÅ

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

HN10 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 is designed to arrest in its incipency not only the substantial lessening of competition from the acquisition by one corporation of the whole or any part of the stock of a competing corporation, but also to arrest in their incipency restraints or monopolies in a relevant market which, as a reasonable probability, appear at the time of suit likely to result from the acquisition by one corporation of all or any part of the stock of any other corporation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Once the government has successfully borne the considerable burden of establishing a violation of the Clayton Act, all doubts as to the remedy are to be resolved in its favor.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Communications Law > Regulators > US Federal Communications Commission > Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Civil Actions > Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

HÌ JÁMÈÙÀ Ì GÈBÌ Ì GLÀ GÀÙÒDÀ ËFÈE ËFLÀ ÅSEÒAÅCÀ Á I ÈBÌ Ì LÀFJÌ GÀÙÈÅSÓYØÀGÌ FÀHÈE

Section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits stock acquisitions having a prescribed effect. Section 7 of the Natural Gas Act confers jurisdiction on the Federal Power Commission over the acquisition of assets of natural gas companies, not over stock acquisitions in them.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Marketing & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Natural Gas Transportation

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Buying & Selling of Power

HN13 [L] Natural Gas Industry, Distribution & Sale

See 15 U.S.C.S. 717\(7\)\(c\).

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Exhaustion of Remedies

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Primary Jurisdiction

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Jurisdiction

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

HN14 [L] Reviewability, Exhaustion of Remedies

The function of the United States Supreme Court is to see that the policy entrusted to the courts is not frustrated by an administrative agency. Where the primary jurisdiction is in the agency, courts withhold action until the agency has acted.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

A natural gas company acquired the stock of a pipeline corporation, and after the United States brought an action in a Federal District Court against the two companies charging that this acquisition violated 7 of the Clayton Act, the natural gas company applied to the Federal Power Commission for a certificate of convenience and necessity allowing it to acquire the pipeline corporation's assets. The federal court hearing the antitrust suit continued the suit until final decision in the administrative proceedings, in which the Commission authorized the merger. (22 FPC 1091, 23 FPC 350.) An intervenor in the administrative proceedings obtained review of this decision by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, which affirmed the Commission. \(111 App DC 226, 296 F2d 348.\)

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeals, vacated the Commission's order approving the merger, and remanded the case to the Commission. In an opinion by Douglas,

HÌ JÁMÈUÀ Ì GÈBÌ Ì GLÀ GÀUÒDÀ ËFÈE ËFLÀ ÅSEÒAÅCÀ Á I ÅHÌ I LÀFJÌ GÀMÈUÅSÓYØÅGÌ FÀHÌ

J., expressing the views of five members of the Court, it was held that the Commission should not have proceeded to a decision on the merits of the application while the antitrust suit was pending in the courts.

Harlan, J., joined by Stewart, J., dissented on the ground that the rule announced by the Court disturbs the proper relationship between courts hearing antitrust cases and administrative agencies which have before them matters with respect to which the antitrust laws are applicable.

Frankfurter and White, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §123 > PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS §31 > merger -- evidence -- antitrust violations. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

Evidence of antitrust violations is relevant in an application by the alleged violator to the Federal Power Commission for a certificate of public convenience and necessity authorizing the acquisition of another corporation's facilities for the transportation or sale of natural gas.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §5 > immunity. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Immunity from the antitrust laws is not lightly implied.

STATUTES §229 > on same subject. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Where there are two legislative acts upon the same subject, the rule is to give effect to both if possible.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > mergers -- antitrust immunity. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Under 49 USC 5(11), which provides that any carriers participating in or resulting from any transaction approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission are relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws, mergers of carriers that are approved have an antitrust immunity.

HÌ JÁMÈUÀ Ì GÈBÌ Ì GLÀ GÀUÒDÀ ËFÈE ËFLÀ ÅSEÒAÅCÀ Á I ÅBÌ I LÀFJÌ GÀMÈUÅSÓYØÀGÌ FÀÅHÉ

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS §26 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES
§86 > jurisdiction -- deciding antitrust issues. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The proviso in 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which makes "transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority" given by the Federal Power Commission "under any statutory provisions vesting such power in such Commission" not subject to the provision prohibiting stock acquisitions substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly, does not authorize the Federal Power Commission to adjudicate antitrust issues.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §320 > COMMISSIONS §26 > merger -- antitrust issue -- awaiting court's decision. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The Federal Power Commission should not proceed to a decision on the merits of an application for a certificate of convenience and necessity authorizing the acquisition of another corporation's facilities for the transportation or sale of natural gas where there is pending in the courts a suit challenging the validity of the transaction under the antitrust laws, but should await the decision of the courts.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §174 > PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS §32 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §44 > order approving merger -- effect -- antitrust suit. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Approval by the Federal Power Commission of a merger, by the issuance of a certificate of public convenience and necessity authorizing the acquisition of facilities for the transportation or sale of natural gas, is no bar to an antitrust suit brought by the Federal Government against the companies permitted to merge, charging unlawful acquisition by one of the companies of the stock of the other.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS §26 > jurisdiction -- mergers. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Section 7 of the Natural Gas Act (15 USC 717f\(c\)) confers upon the Federal Power Commission jurisdiction over the acquisition of assets of natural gas companies, but not over stock acquisitions in them.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §320 > primary jurisdiction. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

Where primary jurisdiction is in an administrative agency, courts withhold action until the agency has acted, and where primary jurisdiction is in the courts, administrative agencies should withhold action until the courts have acted.

Syllabus

---

HÌ JÁMÈUÀ Ì GÈBÌ Ì GLÀ GÀUÒDÀ ËFÈE ËFLÀ ÅSEÒA ÈCÀ Á I ÈKÍ I LÀFJÌ GÀMÈUÅSÓYØÀGÌ FÀKEEE

One natural gas company acquired nearly all of the stock of another, and the Federal Government commenced an action in a Federal District Court to have the acquisition of stock declared to be in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act and to require divestiture. Shortly thereafter, the company which had acquired the stock applied to the Federal Power Commission under § 7 of the Natural Gas Act for authority to merge the assets of the two companies. The Commission authorized the merger of assets while the antitrust action was still pending in the District Court. The Court of Appeals sustained the Commission's action. Held: The Commission should not have proceeded to a decision on the merits of the merger application when there was pending in the courts a suit challenging the validity of that transaction under the antitrust laws. It should have awaited the decision of the courts. [***2] Pp. 483-490.

Counsel: William M. Bennett argued the cause and filed briefs for petitioner.

Solicitor General Cox argued the cause for the Federal Power Commission, respondent. With him on the briefs were Assistant Attorney General Orrick, John G. Laughlin, Jr., John C. Mason, Ralph S. Spritzer, Howard E. Wahrenbrock, Robert L. Russell and Arthur H. Fribourg.

Arthur H. Dean argued the cause for the El Paso Natural Gas Co., respondent. With him on the briefs were Charles V. Shannon, Stanley M. Morley and Stephen Rackow Kaye.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart; Frankfurter took no part in the decision of this case; White took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Opinion by: DOUGLAS

Opinion

---

[*483] [**56] [**902] Opinion of the Court by MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, announced by MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN.

El Paso Natural Gas Company first acquired the stock of the Pacific Northwest Pipeline Corp. and then applied to the Federal Power Commission for authority to acquire the assets pursuant to § 7 of the Natural Gas Act, 52 Stat. 825, 15 U. S. C. § 717f\(c\). This application was dated August 7, 1957. Prior thereto, on [***3] July 22, 1957, the Federal Government commenced an action against El Paso and Pacific Northwest, alleging that El Paso's acquisition of the stock of Pacific Northwest violated [**903] § 7 of the Clayton Act,<sup>1</sup> 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 18. On September 30, 1957, El Paso and Pacific Northwest filed a motion to dismiss the antitrust suit or to stay it, pending completion of the proceedings before the Commission. On October 21, 1957, that motion was denied after hearing; and we denied certiorari. 355 U.S. 950.

[***4] [*484] In May and June 1958, the Department of Justice wrote four letters to the Commission, asking that the proceeding be stayed pending the outcome of the antitrust suit. On July 29, 1958, the Department of Justice

---

<sup>1</sup> Section 7 of the Clayton Act provides in relevant part:

HN1 "No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

"No corporation shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of one or more corporations engaged in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition, of such stocks or assets, or of the use of such stock by the voting or granting of proxies or otherwise, may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

HÌ JÁMÈÙÀ Ì GÈBÌ Ì LÀ GÀÙÒDÀ ËFÈE ËHÀ ÁSÈOÀ ËGÀÁ I ÈBÌ Ì LÀJÌ GÀÙÈÙSÓYØÀGÌ FÀRÈBÌ

was advised by the Commission that it would not stay its proceedings. The Commission invited the Antitrust Division of the Department to participate in the administrative proceedings; but it did not do so.

The hearings before the Commission started September 17, 1958. On October 2, 1958, El Paso and Pacific Northwest moved in the District Court for a continuance of the antitrust suit. On October 6, 1958, the Department of Justice asked the Commission to postpone its hearing, pending final outcome of the antitrust suit which had then been set for trial November 17, 1958. On October 7, 1958, the Commission wrote the District Court that if the court denied El Paso and Pacific Northwest's motion for a continuance and proceeded with the antitrust trial, the Commission would continue its merger hearings to a date that would not conflict with the trial date of the antitrust case, but [***57] that if the court granted the motion for continuance, the Commission would [***5] proceed with its hearing. On October 13, 1958, the District Court continued the antitrust suit until the final decision in the administrative proceedings. The latter proceedings were concluded, the Commission authorizing the merger on December 23, 1959. 22 F. P. C. 1091, 23 F. P. C. 350. The merger was consummated December 31, 1959.

Petitioner intervened in the administrative proceedings August 27, 1957, and obtained review by the Court of Appeals, which affirmed the Commission \(111 U. S. App. D. C. 226, 296 F.2d 348\), Judge Fahy dissenting. We granted certiorari, 368 U.S. 810.

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1] Evidence of antitrust violations is plainly relevant in merger applications, for part of the content of "public convenience and necessity" as used in § 7 of the Natural [\[\*485\]](#) Gas Act is found in the laws of the United States. City of Pittsburgh v. Federal Power Commission, 99 U. S. App. D. C. 113, 237 F.2d 741.

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3] [***6] [LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4] HN2 Immunity from the antitrust laws is not lightly implied. The exemption of agricultural cooperatives from the antitrust laws granted by § 6 of the Clayton Act and § 1 and § 2 of the Capper-Volstead Act of 1922 became relevant in Milk Producers Assn. v. United States, 362 U.S. 458. HN3 While § 7 of the Clayton Act gave immunity [\[\*904\]](#) to "transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority given by . . . the Secretary of Agriculture under any statutory provision vesting such power in such . . . Secretary," we held that the only authority of the Secretary was to approve "marketing agreements" (id., 469-470) and not other types of agreements or restraints, typically covered by the antitrust laws. Accordingly, we held that the District Court was authorized to direct the cooperative to dispose as a unit of the assets of an independent producer that had been acquired to stifle competition and restrain trade. We could not assume that Congress, having granted only a limited exemption [\[\*7\]](#) from the antitrust laws, nonetheless granted an overall inclusive one. See United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 198-202. HN4 "When there are two acts upon the same subject, the rule is to give effect to both if possible." Id., at 198. Here, as in United States v. R. C. A., 358 U.S. 334, while "antitrust considerations" are relevant to the issue of "public interest, convenience, and necessity" (id., at 351), there is no "pervasive regulatory scheme" (ibid.) including the antitrust laws that has been entrusted to the Commission. And see National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 190, 223. Under the Interstate Commerce Act, mergers of carriers that are approved have an antitrust immunity, as § 5 (11) of that Act specifically provides that the carriers involved "shall be and they are hereby relieved from the operation of the antitrust [\[\*486\]](#) laws . . ." See McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67.

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5] [\[\*8\]](#) There is no comparable provision under the Natural Gas Act. HN5 Section 7 of the Clayton Act -- which prohibits stock acquisitions "where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create [\[\*58\]](#) a monopoly" -- contains a proviso that "Nothing contained in this section shall apply to transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority given by the . . . Federal Power Commission . . . under any statutory provision vesting such power in such Commission . . ." HN6 The words "transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority" given the Commission "under any statutory provision vesting such power" in it are plainly not a grant of power to adjudicate antitrust issues. Congress made clear that by this proviso in § 7 of the Clayton Act ". . . it is not intended that . . . any . . . agency" mentioned "shall be granted any authority or powers which it does not already possess." S. Rep.

HÌ JÁMÈÙÀ Ì GÈÙ Ì LÀ GÀÙÒDÀ ËFÈE ËLÀ ÅSEØAÅCÀ Ì ÅÙ Ì LÀJÌ GÀÙÈSØYØAØFÌ FÀÙ

No. 1775, 81st Cong., [****9] 2d Sess., p. 7. HN7 The Commission's standard, set forth in § 7 of the Natural Gas Act, is that the acquisition, merger, etc., will serve the "public convenience and necessity." If existing natural gas companies violate the antitrust laws, the Commission is advised by § 20 (a) to "transmit such evidence" to the Attorney General "who, in his discretion, may institute the necessary criminal proceedings." Other administrative agencies are authorized to enforce § 7 of the Clayton Act when it comes to certain classes of companies or persons;<sup>2</sup> but the Federal Power Commission is not included in the list.

[****10]

[*487] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]We do not decide whether in this case there were any violations of the antitrust [**905] laws. We rule only on one select issue and that is: should the Commission proceed to a decision on the merits of a merger application when there is pending in the courts a suit challenging the validity of that transaction under the antitrust laws? We think not. We think the Commission in those circumstances should await the decision of the courts.

The Commission considered the interplay between § 7 of the Clayton Act and § 7 of the Natural Gas Act and said:

"Section 7 of the Clayton Act, under which the antitrust suit was brought, prohibits the acquisition by one corporation of the stock or assets of another corporation where 'the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.' Exempt, however, are transactions consummated pursuant to Commission authority. This shows, reasons the presiding examiner, that Congress placed reliance on the Commission not to approve an acquisition of assets in violation of the injunction of the Clayton Act, [****11] unless in the carefully exercised judgement of the Commission, the acquisition would nevertheless be in the public interest. What we are attempting to arrive at is the public convenience and necessity. In reaching our determination, we do not have authority to determine whether a given transaction is in violation of the [***59] Clayton Act, but we are required to consider the bearing [*488] of the policy of the antitrust laws on the public convenience and necessity. City of Pittsburgh v. F. P. C., 237 F.2d 741, 754 (CADC). With the presiding examiner, we find that any lessening of competition whether in the consumer markets or the producing fields, does not prevent our approving the merger because there are other factors which outweigh the elimination of Pacific as a competitor. In any case, it appears that any lessening of competition is not substantial." 22 F. P. C. 1091, 1095.

Apart from the fact that the Commission did undertake to make a finding reserved to the courts by § 7 of the Clayton Act,<sup>3</sup> there are practical reasons why it should have held its hand until the courts had acted.

[****12] [LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]One is that if the Commission approves the transaction and the courts in the antitrust suit later hold it to be illegal, an unscrambling is necessary. Milk Producers Assn. v. United States, supra. Thus a needless waste of time and money may be involved. Also these unscrambling processes often raise complicated and perplexing problems on tax matters and otherwise, as our recent decision in United States v. du Pont & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 366 U.S. 316, shows.<sup>4</sup> Such complexities [*489] are inherent in the situation, as HN9 approval

<sup>2</sup> Section 11 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 21, vests authority to enforce compliance with § 7 by the persons subject thereto:

HN8 ". . . in the Interstate Commerce Commission where applicable to common carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended; in the Federal Communications Commission where applicable to common carriers engaged in wire or radio communication or radio transmission of energy; in the Civil Aeronautics Board where applicable to air carriers and foreign air carriers subject to the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938; in the Federal Reserve Board where applicable to banks, banking associations, and trust companies; and in the Federal Trade Commission where applicable to all other character of commerce to be exercised as follows: . . ."

<sup>3</sup> Where "the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition." Section 7, supra, note 1.

<sup>4</sup> In that case, which also was under § 7 of the Clayton Act, we said: HN10 "Section 7 is designed to arrest in its incipency not only the substantial lessening of competition from the acquisition by one corporation of the whole or any part of the stock of a competing corporation, but also to arrest in their incipency restraints or monopolies in a relevant market which, as a reasonable of the [**906] transaction by the Commission would be no bar to the antitrust suit. See United States v. R. C. A., supra.

HÎ JÁMÈËA Ì GÊA Ì JLÀ GÂUÈO ËA FÄÄE ËI LÀ ÅSEÖA ÈGÅA Í FÄÄE JIÄJÎ GÂMÈËSÖY QÄGFÎ FÄÄEFG

[****13] Another practical reason is that a transaction consummated under the aegis of the Commission as being a matter of "public convenience and necessity" is bound to carry momentum into the antitrust suit. The very prospect of undoing what was done raises a powerful influence in the antitrust litigation, as United States v. du Pont & Co., supra, illustrates.

The orderly procedure is for the Commission to await decision in the antitrust suit before taking action.

LEdHN[8]↑ [8]HN12↑ Section 7 of the Clayton Act, so far as material here, prohibits stock acquisitions having a prescribed effect. Section 7 of the Natural Gas Act confers jurisdiction on the Commission over the acquisition of assets of natural gas companies,<sup>5</sup> not over stock acquisitions in them. [***60] Had the Commission stayed its hand and had the courts found the stock acquisition unlawful, the entire transaction would have been set aside in limine. Had the courts found the stock acquisition lawful, presumably no problems under § 7 of the Clayton Act would have remained. [*490] When the Commission proceeds in the face of a pending but [****14] undecided antitrust suit and approves a merger that has been preceded, as this one was, by a stock acquisition, it in substance treats the entire relation of the companies -- from the acquisition of stock to the merger -- as an integrated transaction. If that administrative action were approved, the Commission would be allowed to do by indirection what it has no jurisdiction to do directly.

[****15] LEdHN[9]↑ [9]It is not for us to say that the complementary legislative policies reflected in § 7 of the Clayton Act on the one hand and in § 7 of the Natural Gas Act on the other should be better accommodated. HN14↑ Our function is to see that the policy entrusted to the courts is not frustrated by an administrative agency. Where the primary jurisdiction is in the agency, courts withhold action until the agency has acted. Texas & Pac. R. Co. v. Abilene Oil Co., 204 U.S. 426. The converse should also be true, lest the antitrust policy whose enforcement Congress in this situation has entrusted to the courts is in practical effect taken over by the Federal Power Commission. Moreover, as noted, the Commission in holding that "any lessening of competition is not substantial" was in the domain of the Clayton Act, a domain which is entrusted to the court in which the antitrust suit was pending.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed and the case is remanded for proceedings in conformity with this [****16] opinion.

It is so ordered.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER took no part in the decision of this case.

[**907] MR. JUSTICE WHITE took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Dissent by: HARLAN

probability, appear at the time of suit likely to result from the acquisition by one corporation of all or any part of the stock of any other corporation." 353 U.S., at 589. As to the remedy we stated in United States v. du Pont & Co., 366 U.S., at 334: "We think the public is entitled to the surer, cleaner remedy of divestiture. The same result would follow even if we were in doubt. HN11↑ For it is well settled that once the Government has successfully borne the considerable burden of establishing a violation of law, all doubts as to the remedy are to be resolved in its favor."

<sup>5</sup> Section 7 (c) provides in relevant part:

HN13↑ "No natural-gas company or person which will be a natural-gas company upon completion of any proposed construction or extension shall engage in the transportation or sale of natural gas, subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or undertake the construction or extension of any facilities therefor, or acquire or operate any such facilities or extensions thereof, unless there is in force with respect to such natural-gas company a certificate of public convenience and necessity issued by the Commission authorizing such acts or operations."

Dissent

---

[*491] MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, whom MR. JUSTICE STEWART joins, dissenting.

In this case originating in the Federal Power Commission, the Court today announces a new and surprising antitrust procedural rule: If the Commission is asked to "proceed to a decision on the merits of a merger application when there is pending in the courts a suit challenging the validity of that [merger and its antecedent] transaction[s] under the antitrust laws," the Commission must abstain from a determination and "await decision in the antitrust suit before taking action." (Ante, pp. 487, 489.)

The holding does not turn on any facts or circumstances which may be said to be peculiar to this particular case. It is not limited to Federal Power Commission proceedings. Without advertizing to any legal principle or statute to support [***61] its decision, the Court appears to lay down a pervasive rule, born solely of its own abstract notions of what "orderly procedure" requires, that seemingly [***17] will henceforth govern every agency action involving matters with respect to which the antitrust laws are applicable and antitrust litigation is then pending in the courts.

I cannot subscribe to a decision which broadly works such havoc with the proper relationship between the administrative and judicial functions in matters of this kind. The decision, on the one hand, in effect transfers to the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice regulatory functions entrusted to administrative agencies, and on the other hand deprives the courts in government antitrust litigation of the authority given them by statute to determine whether or not interlocutory relief is necessary or appropriate. What this new rule entails is illustrated by this case: A business transaction of great magnitude and importance, which the Federal Power [*492] Commission has found to be in the public interest, is, at least for the time being, set for naught, without the slightest inquiry into whether the antitrust charges leveled against it are weighty or not. The Court's action is the more unusual because it is taken (1) despite the antitrust court's denial of interlocutory relief when such relief was [***18] belatedly sought by the Government; (2) in the face of the considered judgment of the Solicitor General, representing the public interests respectively involved in the administrative and antitrust proceedings, that determination of the ultimate effect of the Commission's order should be left to abide the event of the antitrust case, and that meanwhile such order should be allowed to stand; and (3) at the instance only of an intervenor in the Commission's proceeding which was not even a party to the Government's antitrust suit.

The undiscriminating nature and reach of this decision become apparent when attention is focused on the procedural events occurring prior to the order of the Commission which is here under attack. On July 22, 1957, the Department of Justice instituted a civil action in the United States District Court in Utah against the El Paso Natural Gas Company and the Pacific Northwest Pipeline Company, seeking to restrain an alleged violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. This violation was said to have occurred when, beginning in January 1957, El Paso embarked on a program of acquiring nearly all of Pacific's outstanding common stock. The complaint asked that the purchase [***19] be declared to be a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act and that El Paso be directed to divest itself of Pacific's stock. No interlocutory relief appears to have been requested.

On August 7, 1957, El Paso filed with the Federal Power Commission its application for authorization to merge Pacific's assets with its own. Despite this announced intention further to intermingle the affairs of the two corporations, [*493] the Government did not seek temporary [**908] relief from the District Court in Utah. El Paso, on the other hand, contended that "primary jurisdiction" with regard to the merger resided with the Commission and sought to have the antitrust action stayed. Its motion was denied by the District Court, and on March 3, 1958, we denied leave to file a petition for common-law certiorari to that decision. 355 U.S. 950.

When the case was returned to [***62] the District Court the Government again made no effort to obtain from that court an order maintaining the status quo pending the outcome of the suit. Instead, the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division suggested to the Commission that it stay its own proceedings until the [***20] antitrust suit had terminated. When this request was rejected by the Commission, the Antitrust Division withdrew from the Commission proceedings despite an express invitation from the Commission that it participate.

HÌ JÁMÈËÀ Ì GËË JHLÀ GÀUËOËÀN EFÉEJ Ë LA ÅSEØAËGÀÁ I FÄÅÈ GLÄJÌ GÀMÈËSØYQÄGÌ FÄÅÈ

Hearings before the Commission's examiner were scheduled to begin on September 17, 1958, and the trial of the antitrust suit in the District Court was set for November 17, 1958. At a hearing on several pretrial matters held in the District Court on September 5 and 6, the Government, for the first time, moved for a temporary injunction to restrain the asset merger even if the Commission's approval were forthcoming.<sup>1</sup> That motion was denied and not renewed thereafter. The Commission's hearings began on September 17 and were recessed on September 26 until November 12.

El Paso again moved in the District Court [****21] for a continuance of the antitrust trial until after the Commission had passed on the merger application, and the Government [*494] once more asked the Commission to stay its proceedings pending the outcome of the antitrust case. While noting that the Government had refused the Commission's invitation to intervene in the merger proceedings, the Commission agreed to defer to the District Court. It notified the court that if El Paso's motion for a continuance of the trial were denied, the Commission would continue its merger proceeding to a later date. On October 13, 1958, the District Court issued an order granting El Paso's motion and continued the antitrust trial "until the final determination by the Federal Power Commission of the applications now pending before it." The Government has never sought to review this order by mandamus or by any other available means. The Commission subsequently held its hearings and authorized the merger of El Paso and Pacific in an order dated December 23, 1959. It is that order which the Court today in effect holds to have been entered without jurisdiction.

The Court relies on three "practical reasons" to support its perplexing conclusion [****22] that despite the Government's failure promptly to seek relief pendente lite in the antitrust suit, its failure to press for review of the denial of such relief when belatedly sought, and the Commission's expressed willingness to defer to the antitrust court, the Commission was nonetheless required to withhold approval of the merger application: (1) If the asset merger were approved and executed, and the stock purchase thereafter held to be illegal, an "unscrambling" involving "needless waste of time and money" would be necessary; (2) such an "unscrambling" would "raise complicated and perplexing problems on tax matters and otherwise"; (3) the Commission's approval of the asset merger "is bound to carry momentum into the antitrust suit." (Ante, pp. 488-489.) Whatever weight these considerations may be deemed to have, I think that "orderly [**909] procedure" [*495] [***63] required their determination, at least in the first instance, by the antitrust court, if indeed they were not rejected by the District Court on the Government's 1958 motion to enjoin consummation of the merger. Their consideration by this Court as an original matter is entirely inappropriate, and [****23] in no event do any of them affect the validity of the Commission's order approving the merger.<sup>2</sup>

I.

Section 15 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 25, grants jurisdiction to the United States District Courts "to prevent and restrain violations" of the Clayton Act, and empowers the United States Attorneys "to institute proceedings in equity to [****24] prevent and restrain such violations." The same statutory section provides that pending determination of the merits of a complaint filed by the United States "and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises." Consequently, it is the duty of the District Court before which an antitrust suit is pending to pass on the desirability of temporary relief in order to avoid later problems of "unscrambling." In the case before us, it was not until more than a year after the Government knew of El Paso's intention to merge Pacific's assets with its own that it requested the District Court to enjoin the execution of [*496] this plan. The court's denial of the temporary injunction must be presumed to have been based on its evaluation of the likelihood of success of the antitrust suit and of the difficulties that might <sup>1</sup> The fact that such a motion was made and denied does not appear in the record before this Court. However, it is asserted in El Paso's brief and is not denied by any of the other parties.

<sup>2</sup> Because of the posture of this case, I would not reach the question as to what weight should be given to the pendency of administrative merger proceedings by an antitrust court which is asked to grant interlocutory relief. However, I think more can be said than the Court does in favor of staying the hand of an antitrust court pending consideration by the appropriate agency of matters touching on "those areas . . . in which active regulation has been found necessary to compensate for the inability of competition to provide adequate regulation." Federal Communications Comm'n v. RCA Communications, Inc., 346 U.S. 86, 92.

HÌ JÁMÈÙÀ Ì GÀÙ JÌ LÀ GÀÙÈO ÐÀN ËFÀÙÈJ ÈJ LÀ ÁÙÈO ÆGÀÁ Ì HÀÙÈ HÀÙJÌ GÀÙÈÙSÓÙQÁGÌ FÀÙÈQ

arise if interlocutory relief were denied. Not having renewed its motion, the Government may surely not revive it indirectly by attacking the Commission's order. Moreover, by what authority is petitioner, the State of California, an intervenor only in the Commission's proceedings, [****25] empowered to assert claims relating to the enforcement of the antitrust laws that are unavailable to the Government, the plaintiff in the antitrust action?

II.

Similarly, whatever is meant by the suggestion that the Commission's approval carries "momentum" into the antitrust suit, this factor is one that should be remedied, if necessary, by purging the antitrust proceedings of any improper influence deriving from the agency determination, not by invalidating the administrative action. The Court's holding -- which is unnecessary to a decision of this case and, as the Government argues, also premature<sup>3</sup> -- that the concluding proviso of § 7 of the Clayton Act gives the Commission's approval of this asset merger no immunizing effect against the [***64] antitrust claim, surely lends added support to the view that the agency is permitted to consider this application as it might consider any other which suggests no difficulties under the antitrust laws. If the Commission's approval is irrelevant to the merits of the Government's [*497] antitrust suit, it is the court considering the antitrust claim which should guard itself against giving weight to this irrelevancy, not the [****26] Commission passing on the merger application. And if the lower courts should ultimately go wrong in this [**910] regard, their error would be correctible in this Court.

Likewise there is little substance to the difficulty which this Court finds in a court "undoing what was done" (ante, p. 489) by the Commission. Had the antitrust trial court been fearful on that score it could have entered an appropriate interlocutory order ensuring that nothing would be done while the litigation was pending.

III.

Finally, I do not think that the record in this case justifies a conclusion that the Commission's refusal to postpone consideration of the merger application amounted to an abuse of [****27] discretion. On the Court's premise that the agency's approval did not immunize the transaction from antitrust liability, the Commission's action in granting the certificate of public convenience and necessity did no more than permit the merger to be consummated subject to all possible antitrust infirmities. And even proceeding on the Commission's premise that the proviso of § 7 of the Clayton Act gives it the power to immunize mergers from antitrust liability, its decision to go ahead after being notified by the District Court that the motion to continue the antitrust suit had been granted could hardly be regarded as an abuse of discretion.

In conclusion, the Court's decision in this case creates a wholly artificial imbalance between antitrust law enforcement and administrative regulation with respect to federally regulated industries. By displacing the continuing supervision of a court over such interlocutory [*498] terms as are "just in the premises" with an absolute rule prohibiting the regulating agency from considering applications relating to matters which are also involved in a pending antitrust suit, this decision seems to leave no room for sensible accommodation [****28] of the two sets of interests in a given instance. Neither the inflexible rule announced by the Court nor its decision on the facts of this case is supported by reason or authority.

I would affirm.

References

---

Annotation References:

1. Factors properly considered by Federal Power Commission upon application for certificate of public convenience and necessity under Natural Gas Act. 5 L ed 2d 1000.

---

<sup>3</sup> Whatever may be the impact on a § 7 action of the Commission's approval of this merger, it can be felt only in the antitrust suit. Consequently, I would, as the Solicitor General has suggested, leave this issue open for consideration in the District Court should the agency's order be asserted as a defense in that action.

HÌ JÁMÈÙÈÀ Ì GÀÀ JÌ LÀ GÀÙÈOÀÙ ÈFÀÀJ FÈÀ ÀÙÈOÀÙGÀÀ I ÀÀÈÌ I LÀJÌ GÀÙÈÙSÒYQÀÙGÌ FÀÀÈÌQ

2. The doctrine of primary administrative jurisdiction. 94 L ed 806; 1 L ed 2d 1596.

---

End of Document

United States v. Loew's

Supreme Court of the United States

October 16, 1962, Argued ; November 5, 1962, Decided *

No. 42

Reporter

371 U.S. 38 *; 83 S. Ct. 97 **; 9 L. Ed. 2d 11 ***; 1962 U.S. LEXIS 2332 ****; 135 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 201

UNITED STATES v. LOEW'S INCORPORATED ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Disposition: 189 F.Supp. 373, judgments vacated and causes remanded.

Core Terms

---

films, license, package, Station, decree, patent, Pictures, block, television station, block booking, tying arrangement, distributors, contracts, Artists, negotiations, television, monopoly, booked, economic power, tying product, feature film, Differentials, conditioning, cases, tied product, Sherman Act, modification, products, anti trust law, judgments

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN1 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Tying agreements serve hardly any purpose beyond the suppression of competition. They are an object of antitrust concern for two reasons -- they may force buyers into giving up the purchase of substitutes for the tied product, and they may destroy the free access of competing suppliers of the tied product to the consuming market. A tie-in contract may have one or both of these undesirable effects when the seller, by virtue of his position in the market for the tying product, has economic leverage sufficient to induce his customers to take the tied product along with the tying item.

---

* Together with No. 43, Loew's Incorporated et al. v. United States, and No. 44, C & C Super Corp. v. United States, also on appeals from the same Court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The standard of illegality of a tying agreement is that the seller must have sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain free competition in the market for the tied product. Market dominance -- some power to control price and to exclude competition -- is by no means the only test of whether the seller has the requisite economic power. Even absent a showing of market dominance, the crucial economic power may be inferred from the tying product's desirability to consumers or from uniqueness in its attributes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Multilateral Treaties > Berne Convention > Formalities

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The requisite economic power for an illegal tying agreement is presumed when the tying product is patented or copyrighted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN4 Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

The existence of a valid patent on the tying product, without more, establishes a distinctiveness sufficient to conclude that any tying arrangement involving the patented product would have anticompetitive consequences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The mere presence of competing substitutes for a tying product is insufficient to destroy the legal, and indeed the economic, distinctiveness of a copyrighted product. By the same token, the distinctiveness of a copyrighted tied product is not inconsistent with the fact of competition which is suppressed by the tying arrangements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Remedies > Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN6 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Accommodation between the statutorily dispensed monopoly in the combination of contents in a patented or copyrighted product and the statutory principles of free competition demands that extension of a patent or copyright monopoly by the use of tying agreements be strictly confined.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN7 Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

The thrust of the antitrust laws cannot be avoided merely by claiming that otherwise illegal conduct is compelled by contractual obligations. Were it otherwise, the antitrust laws could be nullified. Contractual obligations cannot thus supersede statutory imperatives. Hence, tying arrangements, once found to exist in a context of sufficient economic power, are illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the business excuse for their use.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN8 Entry of Judgments, Consent Decrees

A trial judge's ability to formulate a decree tailored to deal with the violations existent in each case is normally superior to that of any reviewing court, due to his familiarity with testimony and exhibits. Notwithstanding the policy that primary responsibility for the decree must rest with the trial judge if workable results are to obtain, it is the reviewing court's duty to examine the decree in light of the record to see that the relief it affords is adequate to prevent the recurrence of the illegality which brought on the given litigation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

HN9 Injunctions, Grounds for Injunctions

To ensure that injunctive relief is effectual, otherwise permissible practices connected with the acts found to be illegal must sometimes be enjoined.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The main issue in the present case was the validity, under 1 of the Sherman Act, of the practice by distributors of copyrighted motion-picture films of conditioning the sale or licensing of one or more copyrighted feature films to television stations upon the purchase of one or more other unwanted or inferior films. In a civil action brought by the United States in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York for the purpose of enjoining the practice, the District Court granted injunctive relief. (189 F Supp 373.)

HÌ FÁMÈÙÀÌ ÈHÌ LÀ HÀUÈÔCÀÌ ÈEJÌ LÀ ÆSEÒAÈGÀ AFFÄFFFLÁJÌ GÀMÈÙÈSÓYÒAÈGÀHÄFFFLÁ 35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 201, ÈHÌÈOF

On direct appeal of the distributors, the Supreme Court, in an opinion by Goldberg, J., unanimously held that the practice violated 1 of the Sherman Act.

Upon the government's cross appeal asserting the inadequacy of the relief granted by the decree below, the Court vacated the decree, ordering an enlargement of its provision in the particulars specified in headnote 22, infra. Harlan, J., with the concurrence of Stewart, J., dissented, expressing the view that the decree should be left undisturbed.

Headnotes

---

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 62 > tying agreements -- copyrighted motion-picture films. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

The practice by distributors of motion picture films of conditioning the sale of one or more copyrighted feature films to television stations upon the purchase of one or more other films violates 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1), declaring illegal every contract in restraint of trade; these tying arrangements both by their inherent nature and by their effect injuriously restrain trade.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 30 > tying agreements. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Tying agreements serve hardly any purpose beyond the suppression of competition; they are an object of antitrust concern because they may force buyers into giving up the purchase of substitutes for the tied product and may destroy the free access of competing suppliers of the tied product to the consuming market.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 30 > tying agreements -- economic power. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The standard of illegality of a tying agreement is that the seller must have sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain free competition in the market for the tied product; market dominance, that is, some power to control price and to exclude competition, is by no means the only test of the seller's requisite economic power; even absent a showing of market dominance, the crucial economic power may be inferred from the tying product's desirability to consumers or from uniqueness in its attributes.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 62 > tying agreements -- market dominance.

-- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

HÃ FÃMÃUÃNÃ ãHÃ LÃ HÃUÃOÃNÃ ãEJÃ LÃ ãSEÃOÃ ãGÃ AFFÃEFLÃJÃ GÃMÃUÃSÃOYÃQÃGÃHÃGÃEFLÃ 35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 201, EEDGEF

Market dominance on the part of the seller of a tying product as one of the tests of the illegality of the tying agreement does not necessitate a demonstration of market power in the sense of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 2), which makes it a criminal offense to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, interstate or foreign commerce.

EVIDENCE § 343.5 > tying agreements -- copyrighted motion-picture films. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

As to tying agreements involving a product which is patented or copyrighted, it is presumed that the seller has sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain free competition in the market for the tied product.

PATENTS § 4 > extent of right. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

A patentee may not use his patent rights to exact tribute for other articles.

PATENTS § 4 > purpose of patent laws. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

One of the objectives of the patent laws is to reward uniqueness.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 55 > patents -- tying agreements. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Any tying arrangement involving a patented product has anticompetitive consequences.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 62 > tying arrangements -- motion pictures. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

The rule under which tying agreements involving copyrighted motion pictures are in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1) embraces tying agreements between distributors of motion picture films and television stations, a copyrighted feature film not losing its legal or economic uniqueness because it is shown on a television rather than a movie screen.

HÌ FÁMÈJÈHÌ FÀHÌ LÀ HÀUÈOÀJÌ FÀJÌ LÀ ÆSÈOÀFÀCÀ ÁFÀHÌFÀLÀJÌ GÀMÈSÒYÒAHCÀHÌFÀ 35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 201, ÆSÈOÀFÀ

EVIDENCE § 343.5 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 62 > tying agreements -- copyrighted motion-picture films -- presumption of uniqueness. -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[10] [  ] [10]

The findings of a district judge, supported by the record in an action by the United States to enjoin distributors of copyrighted motion-picture films from conditioning the sale of one or more of such films to television stations upon the purchase of one or more other films, that each film block booked by the television stations was in itself a unique product, that feature films varied in theme, in artistic performance, stars, audience appeal, etc., and were not fungible, and that since each of the distributors by reason of its copyright had a monopolistic position as to each tying product, sufficient economic power to impose an appreciable restraint on free competition in the tied product was present, confirm the presumption of uniqueness resulting from the existence of the copyright itself.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 62 > tying agreements -- motion-picture films
-- effect on competition. -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[11] [  ] [11]

There can be no question as to the adverse effects on free competition resulting from illegal block booking contracts between distributors of copyrighted motion-picture films and television stations where it appears that the television stations forced by the distributors to take unwanted films were denied access to films marketed by other distributors who, in turn, were foreclosed from selling the stations.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 27 > tying agreements -- motion- picture films
-- substantiality of commerce involved. -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[12] [  ] [12]

There is no question as to the substantiality of the commerce involved in illegal block booking contracts between distributors of copyrighted motion- picture films and television stations, where 25 contracts found to have been illegally block booked involved payments to distributors ranging from $ 60,800 to over $ 2,500,000, and a substantial portion of the licensing fees represented the cost of the inferior films which the stations were required to accept.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 62 > tying agreements -- motion-picture films -- competing substitutes. -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[13] [  ] [13]

In determining the illegality of tying agreements involving copyrighted products, the mere presence of competing substitutes for the tying product--such as in the case of block booking contracts between distributors of copyrighted motion-picture films and television stations, the availability of other programming material as well as other feature films--is insufficient to destroy the legal and economic distinctiveness of the copyrighted product; by the same token, the distinctiveness of the copyrighted tied product is not inconsistent with the fact of competition, in the form of other programming material and other films, which is suppressed by the tying arrangements.

HI FAMUJAHI EHJI LA HAUJOEAN JI EAJI LAJSEOAECA AFFAFLAFJJI CAMEJESOYQAGHGAFLA 35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 201, EAEF

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 55 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 62 > tying agreements -- patents -- copyrights. -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Accommodation between the statutorily dispensed monopoly in the combination of contents in the patented or copyrighted product and the statutory principles of free competition demands that extension of the patent or copyright monopoly by the use of tying agreements be strictly confined.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 62 > licensing. -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

A refusal to license one or more copyrights unless another is accepted is illegal.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 68 > illegal block booking contracts -- motion pictures -- injunctive relief. -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[16] [  ] [16]

Even though the number of illegal block booking contracts between distributors of copyrighted motion-picture films and television stations is small, injunctive relief is warranted, where the trial court, exercising sound judgment, concludes that such relief is necessary to prevent further violations; this is particularly so where the record shows that one of the distributors instituted its policy of making individual films available only shortly after suit was brought, and another distributor publicized its willingness to deal in individual films only after the commencement of suit was imminent.

APPEAL § 1482 > review of injunctive relief -- in antitrust action. -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[17] [  ] [17]

The legal conclusions and decree of a district judge granting injunctive relief under the Sherman Act against illegal block booking contracts between distributors of copyrighted motion-picture films and television stations will not be disturbed by the United States Supreme Court merely because the judge did not find illegal more than a small number of contracts, where the illegal behavior of each defendant had substantial anticompetitive effects.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 5 > contractual obligations as defense. --> Headnote:

LEdHN[18] [18]

The thrust of the antitrust laws cannot be avoided merely by claiming that the otherwise illegal conduct is compelled by contractual obligations; such obligations cannot supersede statutory imperatives.

HÌ FÁM ĐỂ HÌ LÀ HÀU ĐÓ CẤI HÌ LÀ SĘO ĐA CẤI ÁP FÁM FLÁJÍ GÁM ĐẾ SÓY QÁH GÁT FLÁ 35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 201,
██████████

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 30 > tying agreements. -- > Headnote: LEdHN/19 [19]

Tying agreements, once found to exist in a context of sufficient economic power, are illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the business excuse for their use.

APPEAL § 1400 > scope of decree in antitrust suit -- reviewability. -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[20] [  ] [20]

Although primary responsibility for the formulation of a decree in an antitrust suit must rest with the trial judge if workable results are to obtain, it is the duty of the United States Supreme Court to examine the decree in the light of the record to see that the relief it affords is adequate to prevent the recurrence of the illegality which brought on the given litigation.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 75 > decree in antitrust suit -- scope of relief.

-- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[21\]](#) [  ] [21]

To insure effectual relief in an antitrust action, otherwise permissible practices connected with the acts found to be illegal must sometimes be enjoined.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 81 > decree in antitrust suit -- enlargement. --> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[22A\]](#) [  ] [22A] [LEdHN\[22B\]](#) [  ] [22B] [LEdHN\[22C\]](#) [  ] [22C]

A decree of a District Court enjoining as illegal block booking contracts between distributors of copyrighted motion-picture films and television stations should be enlarged so as to (1) require the distributors to price the films individually and offer them on a picture-by-picture basis; (2) prohibit, with the exception of all legitimate cost justifications, differentials in price between a film when sold individually and when sold as part of a package; (3) proscribe temporary refusals by a distributor to deal on less than a block basis while he is negotiating with a competing television station for a package sale, but permitting a seller briefly to defer licensing or selling to a customer pending the expeditious conclusion of bona fide negotiations already being conducted with a competing station on a proposal wherein the distributor has simultaneously offered to license or sell films either individually or in a package.

Syllabus

1. Section 1 of the Sherman Act was violated when individual distributors of copyrighted feature motion picture films for television exhibition engaged in block booking such films to television broadcasting stations -- i. e., conditioning the license or sale of the right to exhibit one or more feature films upon acceptance by each station of a package or block of films containing one or more unwanted or inferior films -- even in the absence of any combination or conspiracy between the distributors and any monopolization or attempt to monopolize. Pp. 39-50, 52.

HÌ FÁMÈÙÀÌ ÈHÌ LÀ HÀUÈÔCÀÌ ÈEJÌ LÀ ÁSEÒAÈGÀ ÁFFÈÈFLÁJÌ GÁMÈÙÈSÓYÓQÁGHGÈÈFLÁ 35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 201, ÈHÈÈGF

2. The fact that, on the records in these cases, each defendant was found to have entered into a comparatively small number of illegal contracts did not make it improper for the District Court to grant injunctive relief. Pp. 50-51.

3. The block booking engaged in by one of the defendants cannot be justified or excused by its plea of business necessity, since the thrust of [***2] the antitrust laws cannot be avoided merely by claiming that the otherwise illegal conduct was compelled by contractual obligations to a third party. Pp. 51-52.

4. The decrees entered by the District Court should be amended so as to:

(a) Require the defendants to price films individually and offer them on a picture-by-picture basis. Pp. 52-54.

(b) Prohibit differentials in price between a film when sold individually and when sold as part of a package, except when such price differentials are justified by relevant and legitimate cost considerations. Pp. 54-55.

(c) Proscribe "temporary" refusals by a distributor to deal on less than a block basis, except that a distributor may briefly defer licensing or selling to a customer pending the expeditious conclusion of bona fide negotiations already being conducted with a competing station on a proposal wherein the distributor has simultaneously offered to license or sell films either individually or in a package. P. 55.

Counsel: Daniel M. Friedman argued the cause for the United States. With him on the briefs were Solicitor General Cox, Assistant Attorney General Loewinger, Lionel Kestenbaum and Richard A. Solomon.

Louis Nizer argued [***3] the cause for Loew's Incorporated et al., appellees in No. 42 and appellants in No. 43. With him on the briefs was Benjamin Melniker.

Myles J. Lane argued the cause and filed briefs for Screen Gems, Inc., appellee in No. 42 and appellant in No. 43. With him on the briefs was Everett A. Frohlich.

Mervin C. Pollak argued the cause and filed briefs for C & C Super Corp., appellee in No. 42 and appellant in No. 44.

Justin M. Golenbock argued the cause for National Telefilm Associates, Inc., appellee in No. 42. With him on the brief were Russell S. Knapp and Seymour Shainswit.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Goldberg

Opinion by: GOLDBERG

Opinion

---

[202] [*39] [**15] [**99] MR. JUSTICE GOLDBERG delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A]

These consolidated appeals present as a key question the validity under § 1 of the Sherman Act<sup>1</sup> of block booking of copyrighted feature motion pictures for television exhibition. We hold that the tying agreements here are illegal and in violation of the Act.

---

<sup>1</sup> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal . . ." 26 Stat. 209 (1890), as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1.

HÃ FÃMÃUÃNÃ ÊTHU LÃ HÃU ÊO CÃI ÊT JÃ LÃ ÆSÃO ÆGÃ AFFÃLÍ LÃJÃ GÃMÃU ÆSÃO YÃQÃ GÃH GÃMÃU HÃ 35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 201, ÆHÃGÃF

[****4] [*40] The United States brought separate civil antitrust actions in the Southern District of New York in 1957 against six major distributors of pre-1948 copyrighted motion picture feature films for television exhibition, alleging that each defendant had engaged in block booking in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The complaints asserted that the defendants had, in selling to television stations, conditioned the license or sale of one or more feature films upon the acceptance by the station of a package or block containing one or more unwanted or inferior films. No combination or conspiracy among the distributors was alleged; nor was any monopolization or attempt to monopolize under § 2 of the Sherman Act averred. The sole claim of illegality rested on the manner in which each defendant had marketed its product. The successful pressure applied to television station customers to accept inferior films along with desirable pictures was the gravamen of the complaint.

After a lengthy consolidated trial, the district judge filed exhaustive findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a carefully reasoned opinion, 189 F.Supp. 373, in which he found that the actions [****5] of the defendants constituted violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The conclusional finding of fact and law was that ". . . the several defendants have each, from time to time and to the extent set forth in the specific findings of fact, licensed or offered [**100] to license one or more feature films to television stations on condition that the licensee also license one or more other such feature films, and have, from time to time and to the extent set forth in the specific findings of fact, refused, expressly or impliedly, to license feature films to television stations unless one or more other such feature films were accepted by the licensee." 189 F.Supp., at 397-398.

[*41] The judge recognized that there was keen competition between the defendant distributors, and therefore rested his conclusion solely on the individual behavior of each in engaging in block booking. In reaching his decision he carefully considered the evidence relating to each of the 68 licensing agreements that the Government had contended involved block booking. He concluded that only 25 of the contracts were illegally entered into. Nine of these belonged to defendant C & C Super [****6] Corp., which had an admitted policy of insisting on block booking that it sought to justify on special grounds.

Of the others, defendant Loew's, Incorporated, had in two negotiations that resulted in licensing agreements declined to furnish stations KWTV of Oklahoma City and WBRE of Wilkes-Barre with individual [***16] film prices and [203] had refused their requests for permission to select among the films in the groups. Loew's exacted from KWTV a contract for the entire Loew's library of 723 films, involving payments of $ 314,725.20. The WBRE agreement was for a block of 100 films, payments to total $ 15,000.

Defendant Screen Gems, Inc., was also found to have block booked two contracts, both with WTOP of Washington, D. C., one calling for a package of 26 films and payments of $ 20,800 and the other for 52 films and payments of $ 40,000. The judge accepted the testimony of station officials that they had requested the right to select films and that their requests were refused.

Associated Artists Productions, Inc., negotiated four contracts that were found to be block booked. Station WTOP was to pay $ 118,800 for the license of 99 pictures, which were divided into three groups [****7] of 33 films, based on differences in quality. To get "Treasure of the Sierra Madre," "Casablanca," "Johnny Belinda," "Sergeant York," and "The Man Who Came to Dinner," among others, WTOP also had to take such films as "Nancy Drew [*42] Troubleshooter," "Tugboat Annie Sails Again," "Kid Nightingale," "Gorilla Man," and "Tear Gas Squad." A similar contract for 100 pictures, involving a license fee of $ 140,000, was entered into by WMAR of Baltimore. Triangle Publications, owner and operator of five stations, was refused the right to select among Associated's packages, and ultimately purchased the entire library of 754 films for a price of $ 2,262,000 plus 10% of gross receipts. Station WJAR of Providence, which licensed a package of 58 features for a fee of $ 25,230, had asked first if certain films it considered undesirable could be dropped from the offered packages and was told that the packages could not be split.

HÌ FÁMÈJÀ HÌ ÈÈ GLÀ HÀUÈOÀNÌ ÈÈF CELÁ ÆSÒ ÆGÀ ÁÆEÈFÍ LÀF JÌ GÀMÈSÓYØÁG HÀMÈLÁ 35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 201, ÈÈÈÈÈF

Defendant National Telefilm Associates was found to have entered into five block booked contracts. Station WMAR wanted only 10 Selznick films, but was told that it could not have them unless it also bought 24 inferior films from the "TNT" package and 12 unwanted [***8] "Fabulous 40's." It bought all of these, for a total of $ 62,240. Station WBRE, before buying the "Fox 52" package in its entirety for $ 7,358.50, requested and was refused the right to eliminate undesirable features. Station WWLP of Springfield, Massachusetts, inquired about the possibility of splitting two of the packages, was told this was not possible, and then bought a total of 59 films in two packages for $ 8,850. A full package contract for National's "Rocket 86" group of 86 films was entered into by KPIX of San Francisco, payments to total $ 232,200, after KPIX requested and was denied permission [**101] to eliminate undesirable films from the package. Station WJAR wanted to drop 10 or 12 British films from this defendant's "Champagne 58" package, was told that none could be deleted, and then bought the block for $ 31,000.

The judge found that defendant United Artists Corporation had in three consummated negotiations conditioned the sale of films on the purchase of an entire [*43] package. The "Top 39" were licensed by WAAM of Baltimore for $ 40,000 only after receipt of a refusal to sell 13 of the 39 films in the package. Station WHTN of Huntington, West Virginia, [***9] purchased "Award 52" for $ 16,900 after United Artists refused to deal on any basis other than [***17] purchase of the entire 52 films. Thirty-nine films were purchased by WWLP for $ 5,850 after an initial inquiry about selection of titles was refused.

Since defendant C & C was found to have had an overall policy of block booking, the court did not analyze the particular circumstances of the nine negotiations which had resulted in the licensing of packages of films. C & C's policies resulted in at least one station having to take a package in which "certain of the films were unplayable since they had a foreign language sound track." 189 F.Supp., at 389.

The court entered separate final judgments against the defendants, wherein each was enjoined from

"(A) Conditioning or tying, or attempting to condition or tie, the purchase or license of the right to exhibit any feature film over any television station upon the purchase or license of any other film;

"(B) Conditioning the purchase or license of the right to exhibit any feature film over any television station upon the purchase or license for exhibition over any other television station of that feature film, or [***10] any other film;

"(C) Entering into any agreement to sell or license the right to exhibit any feature film over any television station in which the differential between the price or fee for such feature film when sold or licensed alone and the price or fee for the same film when sold or licensed with one or more other film [sic] has the effect of conditioning the sale or license of such film upon the sale or license of one or more other films."

[*44] [204] All of the defendants except National Telefilm<sup>2</sup> appeal from the decree. The appeals of defendants Loew's, Screen Gems, Associated Artists, and United Artists raise identical issues and are consolidated as No. 43. The appeal of defendant C & C raises additional issues, and is therefore separately numbered as No. 44. The Government, although it won on the merits below, asserts in a cross-appeal (No. 42) that the scope and specificity of the decree entered by the District Court were inadequate to prevent the continued attainment of illegal objectives. It seeks to have the decree broadened in a number of ways. All of the defendants below oppose these modifications. The cases are here on direct appeal from the District Court [***11] under § 2 of the Expediting Act, 32 Stat. 823, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 29. We noted probable jurisdiction, 368 U.S. 973, and consolidated the appeals. We shall consider No. 43 first, since appellants there raise the fundamental question whether their activities were in violation of the antitrust laws. We shall thereafter consider No. 44, the special arguments of appellant C & C, and finally No. 42, the Government's request for broadening the decree.

I.

---

<sup>2</sup>National Telefilm has, however, filed a brief in opposition to the Government's requests for modifications in the decree, discussed below.

[**102] [LEdHN\[2\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [2][LEdHN\[3\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [3] his case raises the recurring question of whether specific tying arrangements violate § 1 of the Sherman Act.<sup>3</sup> This Court has recognized that " [***12] HN1<sup>1</sup> tying agreements [***18] serve hardly any purpose beyond the suppression of competition," Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 305-306. They are an object of anti-trust [*45] concern for two reasons -- they may force buyers into giving up the purchase of substitutes for the tied product, see Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 605, and they may destroy the free access of competing suppliers of the tied product to the consuming market, see International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 396. A tie-in contract may have one or both of these undesirable effects when the seller, by virtue of his position in the market for the tying product, has economic leverage sufficient to induce his customers to take the tied product along with the tying item. HN2<sup>1</sup> The standard of illegality is that the seller must have "sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain free competition in the market for the tied product . . . ." [Northern Pacific R. Co \[\*\*\*13\] . v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 6](#). Market dominance -- some power to control price and to exclude competition -- is by no means the only test of whether the seller has the requisite economic power. Even absent a showing of market dominance, the crucial economic power may be inferred from the tying product's desirability to consumers or from uniqueness in its attributes.<sup>4</sup>

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [4A]

[****14] [LEdHN\[5\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [5][LEdHN\[6\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [6]HN3<sup>1</sup> The requisite economic power is presumed when the tying product is patented or copyrighted, [International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392; United States \[\*46\] v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131](#). This principle grew out of a long line of patent cases which had eventuated in the doctrine that a patentee who utilized tying arrangements would be denied all relief against infringements of his patent. Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U.S. 502; Carbice Corp. v. American Patents Dev. Corp., 283 U.S. 27; Leitch Mfg. Co. v. Barber Co., 302 U.S. 458; Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436; Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co., 314 U.S. 488; Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U.S. 661. [***19] These [***15] cases reflect a hostility to use of the statutorily granted patent monopoly to extend the patentee's economic control to unpatented products. The patentee is protected as to his invention, but may not use his patent rights to exact tribute for other articles.

[**103] [LEdHN\[7\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [7][LEdHN\[8\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [8] Since one of the objectives of the patent laws is to reward uniqueness, the principle of these cases was carried over into antitrust law on the theory that HN4<sup>1</sup> the [205] existence of a valid patent on the tying product, without more, establishes a distinctiveness sufficient to conclude that any tying arrangement involving the patented product would have anticompetitive consequences. E. g., International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392. In United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 156-159, the principle

<sup>3</sup> See International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392; United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131; Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594; Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1.

<sup>4</sup> Since the requisite economic power may be found on the basis of either uniqueness or consumer appeal, and since market dominance in the present context does not necessitate a demonstration of market power in the sense of § 2 of the Sherman Act, it should seldom be necessary in a tie-in sale case to embark upon a full-scale factual inquiry into the scope of the relevant market for the tying product and into the corollary problem of the seller's percentage share in that market. This is even more obviously true when the tying product is patented or copyrighted, in which case, as appears in greater detail below, sufficiency of economic power is presumed. Appellants' reliance on United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, is therefore misplaced.

HÃ FÃMÈUÃÌ ÊÌ LÃ HÃUÃÓÃÌ ÊÌ FÃLÃÁÃSEÃÓÃGÃÃFÃLÃJÃLÃJÃ GÃMÈUÃÓÃQÃÃHÃGÃÃÍ LÃ35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
~~GÃFÃLÃGÃF~~

of the patent cases was applied to copyrighted feature films which had been block booked into movie theaters.
 [****16] The Court reasoned that "The copyright law, like the patent statutes, makes reward to the owner a secondary consideration. In Fox Film Corp. v. Doyal, 286 U.S. 123, 127, Chief Justice Hughes spoke as follows respecting the copyright monopoly granted by Congress, 'The sole interest of the United States and the primary object in conferring the monopoly lie in the general benefits [*47] derived by the public from the labors of authors.' It is said that reward to the author or artist serves to induce release to the public of the products of his creative genius. But the reward does not serve its public purpose if it is not related to the quality of the copyright. Where a high quality film greatly desired is licensed only if an inferior one is taken, the latter borrows quality from the former and strengthens its monopoly by drawing on the other. The practice tends to equalize rather than differentiate the reward for the individual copyrights. Even where all the films included in the package are of equal quality, the requirement that all be taken if one is desired increases the market for some. Each stands not on its own footing but in whole or in [****17] part on the appeal which another film may have. As the District Court said, the result is to add to the monopoly of the copyright in violation of the principle of the patent cases involving tying clauses." 334 U.S., at 158.

Appellants attempt to distinguish the Paramount decision in its relation to the present facts: the block booked sale of copyrighted feature films to exhibitors in a new medium -- television. Not challenging the District Court's finding that they did engage in block booking, they contend that the uniqueness attributable to a copyrighted feature film, though relevant in the movie-theater context, is lost when the film is being sold for television use. Feature films, they point out, constitute less than 8% of television programming, and they assert that films are "reasonably interchangeable" with other types of programming material and with other feature films as well. Thus they argue that their behavior is not to be judged by the principle of the patent cases, as applied to copyrighted materials in Paramount Pictures, but by the general [*48] principles which govern the validity of tying arrangements of nonpatented products, e. g. [****18], Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 6, 11. [***20] They say that the Government's proof did not establish their "sufficient economic power" in the sense contemplated for nonpatented products.<sup>5</sup>

LEdHN[4B] [↑] [4B]

LEdHN[9] [↑] [9] Appellants cannot escape the applicability of Paramount Pictures. A copyrighted feature film does not lose its [**104] legal or economic uniqueness because it is shown on a television rather than a movie screen.

LEdHN[10] [↑] [10] [****19] The district judge found that each copyrighted film block booked by appellants for television use "was in itself a unique product"; that feature films "varied in theme, in artistic performance, in stars, in audience appeal, etc., and were not fungible; and that since each defendant by reason of its copyright had a "monopolistic" position as to each tying product, "sufficient economic power" to impose an appreciable restraint on free competition in the tied product was present, as demanded by the Northern Pacific decision. 189 F.Supp., at

---

<sup>5</sup> Appellants' framing of their argument in terms of each of them not having dominance in the market for television exhibition of feature films misconceives the applicable legal standard. As noted, supra, p. 45, "sufficient economic power" as contemplated by the Northern Pacific case is a term more inclusive in scope than "market dominance."

HÃ FÃMÈÙÃÌ Æ Ì LÃ HÃUÈOÃÀI Æ Æ FÃI LÃ Æ SÃOÃÆGÃA FÃMÈÙÃÌ GÃMÈÙÃÓQÃÁH GÃMÈÙÃÌ JÃ 35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
~~GÃMÈÙÃÌ GÃF~~

381.<sup>6</sup> We agree. These findings of the district judge, supported by the record, confirm the presumption of uniqueness resulting from the existence of the copyright itself.

LEdHN[11] [11] LEdHN[12] [12] LEdHN[13] [13] Moreover, there can be no question in this case of the adverse effects on free competition resulting from appellants' [*49] illegal block booking contracts. Television stations forced by appellants to take unwanted films were denied access to films marketed by other distributors who, in turn, were foreclosed from selling to the stations. Nor can there be any question as to the substantiality of the commerce involved. The 25 contracts found to have been illegally block booked involved payments to appellants ranging from $ 60,800 in the case of Screen Gems [206] to over $ 2,500,000 in the case of Associated Artists. A substantial portion of the licensing fees represented the cost of the inferior films which the stations were required to accept. These anticompetitive consequences are an apt illustration of the reasons underlying our recognition that HN5 the mere presence of competing [***21] substitutes for the tying product, here taking the form of other programming material as well as other feature films, is insufficient to destroy the legal, and indeed the economic, distinctiveness of the copyrighted product. Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 307; Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611 and n. 30. By the same token, the distinctiveness of the copyrighted tied product is not inconsistent with the fact of competition, in the form of other programming material and other films, which is suppressed by the tying arrangements.

LEdHN[1B] [1B] LEdHN[14] [14] It is therefore clear that the tying [***21] arrangements here both by their "inherent nature" and by their "effect" injuriously restrained trade. United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 179.HN6 Accommodation between the statutorily dispensed monopoly in the combination [***22] of contents in the patented or copyrighted product and the statutory principles of free competition demands that extension of the patent or copyright monopoly by the use of tying agreements be strictly confined. There may be rare circumstances in which the doctrine we have enunciated under § 1 of the Sherman Act prohibiting tying arrangements involving patented or copyrighted [*50] tying products is inapplicable. However, we find it difficult to conceive of such a case, and the present case is clearly not one.

LEdHN[15] [15] The principles underlying our Paramount Pictures decision have general application to tying arrangements involving copyrighted products, and govern here. Applicability of Paramount Pictures brings with it a meeting of the test of Northern Pacific, since Paramount Pictures is but a particularized application of the general doctrine as reaffirmed in Northern Pacific. Enforced block [*105] booking of films is a vice in both the motion picture and television industries, and that the sin is more serious (in dollar amount) in one than the other does not expiate the [***23] guilt for either. Appellants' block booked contracts are covered by the flat holding in Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S., at 159, that "a refusal to license one or more copyrights unless another copyright is accepted" is "illegal."

LEdHN[16] [16] LEdHN[17] [17] Appellants (other than C & C) make the additional argument that each of them was found to have entered into such a small number of illegal contracts as to make it improper to enter injunctive relief. Appellants urge that their over-all sales policies were to allow selective purchasing of films, and that in light of this, the fact that a few contracts were found to be illegal does not justify the entering of injunctive relief. We disagree. Illegality having been properly found, appellants cannot now complain that its incidence was too scattered to warrant injunctive relief. The trial judge, exercising sound judgment, has concluded that injunctive relief is necessary to prevent further violations. We think that finding wholly warranted. Moreover, the record shows that Loew's [***24] only instituted its policy of making individual films available shortly after suit was brought, and there is evidence that United Artists was conscientious in publicizing its willingness [*51] to deal in individual films only after the commencement of suit was imminent. There is no reason to disturb the judge's legal conclusions and decree merely because he did not find more illegal agreements when, as here, the illegal behavior of each defendant had substantial anticompetitive effects.

---

<sup>6</sup> To use the trial court's apt example, forcing a television station which wants "Gone With The Wind" to take "Getting Gertie's Garter" as well is taking undue advantage of the fact that to television as well as motion picture viewers there is but one "Gone With The Wind."

HÃÍ FÁMÆJËHÃÍ ËÁ FLÀ HÀUËOÐÄI ËÁFÉI LÁJÆSOa ËÁCA ÁFÄTTÖFLÁFJÍ GÁMÆJÆSØYÓÁGHGÄTTÖG LÁ 35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
GEFÄTTÖGEF

11.

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [↑] [1C] [LEdHN\[18\]](#) [↑] [18] [LEdHN\[19\]](#) [↑] [19] Appellant C & C in its separate appeal raises certain arguments which amount to an attempted business justification for its admitted block booking policy. C & C purchased the telecasting rights in some 742 films known as the "RKO Library." It did so with a bank loan for the total purchase price, and to get the bank loan it needed a guarantor, which it found in the [***22] International Latex Corporation. Latex, however, demanded and secured an agreement [****25] from C & C that films would not be sold without obtaining in return a commitment from television stations to show a minimum number of Latex spot advertisements in conjunction with the films. Thus, since stations could not feasibly telecast the minimum number of spots without buying a large number of films to spread them over, C & C by requiring the minimum number of advertisements effectively forced block booking on those stations which purchased its films. C & C contends the block booking was merely the by-product of two legitimate business motives -- Latex' desire for a saturation advertising campaign, and C & C's wish to buy a large film library. However, the obvious answer to this contention is that HN7 [↑] the thrust of the antitrust laws cannot be avoided merely by claiming that the otherwise illegal [207] conduct is compelled by contractual obligations. Were it otherwise, the antitrust laws could be nullified. Contractual obligations cannot thus supersede statutory imperatives. Hence, tying arrangements, once found to exist in a context [*52] of sufficient economic power, are illegal "without [****26] elaborate inquiry as to . . . the business excuse for their use," Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5.

In Nos. 43 and 44, therefore, we agree with the merits of the District Court's decision. It correctly found that the conditioning of the sale of one or more copyrighted feature films to television stations upon the purchase of one or more other films is illegal. The antitrust laws do not permit a compounding of the statutorily conferred monopoly.

III.

LEdHN|201↑] [20] HN8↑] The trial judge's ability to formulate a decree tailored to deal with [**106] the violations existent in each case is normally superior to that of any reviewing court, due to his familiarity with testimony and exhibits. Notwithstanding our belief that primary responsibility for the decree must rest with the trial judge if workable results are to obtain, it is our duty to examine the decree in light of the record to see that the relief it affords is adequate to prevent the recurrence of the illegality which brought [***27] on the given litigation.

United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 340 U.S. 76, 89.

The United States contends that the relief afforded by the final judgments<sup>7</sup> is inadequate and that to be adequate it must also: (1) require the defendants to price the films individually and offer them on a picture-by-picture basis; (2) prohibit noncost-justified differentials in price between a film when sold individually and when sold as part of a package; (3) proscribe "temporary" refusals by a distributor to deal on less than a block basis while he is negotiating with a competing television station for a package sale.

[*53] [LEdHN\[21\]](#) [↑] [21]Some of the practices which the Government seeks to have enjoined with its requested modifications are acts which may be entirely proper when viewed alone. [****28] HNg [↑] To ensure, however, that relief is effectual, otherwise permissible practices connected [***23] with the acts found to be illegal must sometimes be enjoined. Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436, 461; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 724; Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U.S. 386, 409; International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 401; United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 340 U.S. 76, 88-89. When the Government has won the lawsuit, it is entitled to win the cause as well, International Salt Co. v. United States, supra, 332 U.S., at 401.

<sup>7</sup> The operative portion of the injunctions appears at p. 43, supra.

HÃ FÃMÈÙÃÀ ÊÃ HÃ HÃUÔCÃI ÊÃF Ë LÃ ÆSÃOÃÉGÃ ÁFFÃHÃLÃJÃ GÃMÈÙÃSÓYÃÁHÃGÃTÃGÃ LÃ 35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
~~GÃFÃHÃLÃGÃF~~

A. Initial Offer of Individual Films, Individually Priced.

Under the final judgments entered by the court, a distributor would be free to offer films in a package initially, without stating individual prices. If, however, he delayed at all in producing individual prices upon request, he would subject himself to a possible contempt sanction. The Government's first request would prevent this "first bite" possibility, forcing the offer of the films [****29] on an individual basis at the outset (but, as we view it, not precluding a simultaneous package offer, United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., supra, 334 U.S., at 159.)

[LEdHN\[22A\]](#) [↑] [22A]

This is a necessary addition to the decrees, in view of the evidence appearing in the record. Television stations which asked for the individual prices of some of the better pictures "couldn't get any sort of a firm kind of an answer," according to one station official. He stated that they received a "certain form of equivocation, like the price for the better pictures that we wanted was so high that it wouldn't be worth our while to discuss the matter, [*54] . . . the implication being that it wouldn't happen." A Screen Gems intracompany memorandum about a Baton Rouge station's price request stated that "I told him that I would be happy to talk to him about it, figuring we could start the old round robin that worked so well in Houston & San Antonio." Without the proposed amendment to the decree, distributors might surreptitiously violate it by allowing or directing their salesmen to be reluctant to [****30] produce the individual price list on request. This subtler form of sales pressure, though not accompanied by any observable delay over time, might well result [**107] in some television stations buying the block rather than trying to talk the seller into negotiating on an individual basis. Requiring the production of the individual list on first approach will obviate this danger.

B. Prohibition of Noncost-justified Price Differentials.

[LEdHN\[22B\]](#) [↑] [22B]

The final judgments as entered only prohibit a price differential between a [208] film offered individually and as part of a package which "has the effect of conditioning the sale or license of such film upon the sale or license of one or more other films." The Government contends that this provision appearing by itself is too vague and will lead to unnecessary litigation. Differentials unjustified by cost savings may already be prohibited under the decree as it now appears. Nevertheless, the addition of a specific provision to prevent such differentials will prevent uncertainty in the operation of the decree. To ensure that litigation [***24] over [****31] the scope and application of the decrees is not left until a contempt proceeding is brought, the second requested modification should be added. The Government, however, seeks to make distribution costs the only saving which can legitimately be the basis of a discount. We would not so limit the relevant cost justifications. To prevent definitional arguments, and to ensure [*55] that all proper bases of quantity discount may be used, the modification should be worded in terms of allowing all legitimate cost justifications.

C. Prohibition of "Temporary" Refusals to Deal.

[LEdHN\[22C\]](#) [↑] [22C]

The Government's third request is, like the first, designed to prevent distributors from subjecting prospective purchasers to a "run-around" on the purchase of individual films. No doubt temporary refusal to sell in broken lots to one customer while negotiating to sell the entire block to another is a proper business practice, viewed in vacuo, but we think that if permitted here it may tend to force some stations into buying pre-set packages to forestall a competitor's getting the entire group. In recognition of this [****32] the Government seeks a blanket prohibition against all temporary refusals to deal. We agree in the main, except that the modification proposed by the Government fails to give full recognition to that part of this Court's holding in Paramount Pictures which said,

"We do not suggest that films may not be sold in blocks or groups, when there is no requirement, express or implied, for the purchase of more than one film. All we hold to be illegal is a refusal to license one or more copyrights unless another copyright is accepted." 334 U.S., at 159.

HÃ FÃMÈÙÃÌ ÆÍ LÀ HÃU ÆOÃÌ ÆÍ FÃI LÃI ÆSEØA ÆGÃÁFÃEËG LÃFJÌ GÃMÈÙÃSØYØÁHÃGÃTTHGLÁ 35 U.S.P.Q. (BNA)
GEFÃTTHGEF

We therefore grant the Government's request, but modify it only to the limited degree necessary to permit a seller briefly to defer licensing or selling to a customer pending the expeditious conclusion of bona fide negotiations already being conducted with a competing station on a proposal wherein the distributor has simultaneously offered to license or sell films either individually or in a package.

The modifications we have specified will bring about a greater precision in the operation of the decrees. We [*56] have concluded that they will properly protect the interest of the Government in guarding against [***33] violations and the interest of the defendants in seeking in good faith to comply.

The judgments are vacated and the causes are remanded to the District Court for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

Vacated and remanded.

Concur by: HARLAN (In Part)

Dissent by: HARLAN (In Part)

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, with whom MR. JUSTICE STEWART joins, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I agree with and join in Parts I and II of the Court's opinion, relating to No. 43 and No. 44, respectively. As to Part III, relating to No. 42, I dissent. My disagreement [*108] goes not so much to the particular additional relief granted, but to the fact that the Court has deemed it appropriate to concern itself at all with such comparatively trivial remedial glosses upon the District Court's decree.

[**25] I think it distorts the proper relationship of this Court to the lower federal courts, whose assessment of a particular situation is bound to be more informed than ours, for us to exercise revisory power over the terms of antitrust relief, except in instances where things have manifestly gone awry. This is not such a case, as the meticulous handling of it by the District [***34] Court abundantly shows. In my view its decree should be left undisturbed.

---

End of Document

White Motor Co. v. United States

Supreme Court of the United States

January 14-15, 1963, Argued ; March 4, 1963, Decided

No. 54

Reporter

372 U.S. 253 *; 83 S. Ct. 696 **; 9 L. Ed. 2d 738 ***; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2578 ****; 1963 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,679; 6 Fed. R. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 1077

WHITE MOTOR CO. v. UNITED STATES

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

Disposition: 194 F.Supp. 562, reversed.

Core Terms

---

distributors, dealers, territorial, trucks, customers, restrictions, manufacturer, contracts, sales, summary judgment, competitors, price-fixing, limitations, compete, territorial limits, anti trust law, Sherman Act, horizontal, purchasing, accessories, practices, vertical, markets, selling, fleet, political subdivision, prices, per se violation, discounts, franchise

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Hearings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

**HN1**  Summary Judgment, Hearings

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

**HN2**  US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

HÃI GÃÃU ĐÃI HÃÃA HÃÃU ĐÃA JÃI HÃÃA JÃI LÃÃU SÃÃO ĐÃA Á HÃÃA HÃÃA LÃÃF JÃI HÃÃU SÃÃY QUÃÃI Í HÃÃA

Summary judgments have a place in the antitrust field, as elsewhere, though they are not appropriate where motive and intent play leading roles. Some of the law in this area is so well developed that where the gist of the case turns on documentary evidence, the rule at times can be divined without a trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Every agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains. To bind, to restrain, is of their very essence. The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question a court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Per se antitrust violations are agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The United States brought a civil action in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio against a truck manufacturer, seeking a permanent injunction against an alleged unlawful combination and conspiracy in violation of 1 and 3 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The complaint alleged, and the truck manufacturer admitted, that it had entered into identical contracts with its approximately 300 distributors and dealers, providing that (1) each distributor would charge dealers the same price for trucks that the manufacturer charged its direct dealers; (2) all distributors and dealers would give "national accounts," "fleet accounts," and governmental agencies the same discount on parts and accessories as the manufacturer gave them; (3) each distributor had the exclusive right to sell the manufacturer's trucks within a described territory, but would not sell such trucks except to individuals, firms, or corporations having a place of business and/or purchasing headquarters in the territory; and (4) each distributor would not sell or authorize its dealers to sell such trucks to any federal or state government or any department or political subdivision thereof, without the manufacturer's written consent. Finding that these provisions were per se violations of the Sherman Act, the District Court granted summary judgment accordingly. (194 F Supp 562.)

On direct appeal from the ruling that provisions (3) and (4) above are unlawful, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed. In an opinion by Douglas, J., expressing the views of five members of the Court, it was held that summary judgment was inappropriate and that the legality of the territorial and customer limitations should be determined only after a trial, since not enough was known about the impact of vertical territorial and customer limitations on competition to decide whether they are per se violations of the Sherman Act.

HÌ GÁM ĐỀ CỦA HÌ LÁI SỐ DÀI HÌ LÁI SỐ DÀI

Brennan, J., while joining in the judgment and opinion of the Court, concurred in an opinion setting forth the factors relevant to determining whether the territorial and customer limitations are valid.

Clark, J., joined by Warren, Ch. J., and Black, J., dissented on the ground that the vertical limitations were illegal per se.

White, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

PLEADING §48.5 > summary judgments -- antitrust cases. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

Summary judgments have a place in the antitrust field, although they are not appropriate where motive and intent play leading roles.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §55 > tied sales of patented and unpatented products. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

The sale of an unpatented product when tied to a patented article is a per se violation of the antitrust laws, since it is a bald effort to enlarge the monopoly of the patent beyond its terms.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §53 > dividing markets. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

If competitors agree to divide markets, they run afoul of the antitrust laws.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §30 > group boycotts. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Group boycotts are per se violations of the antitrust laws.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §36 > PLEADING §48.5 > price fixing -- trial. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Price fixing, both vertical and horizontal, is a per se violation of the antitrust laws, and a trial to show its nature, extent, and degree is not necessary.

HI GÁEÜÉG HÉRÍ HÀ HÀUÖDÀ JÌ ÉÉÉ JÌ LÁJÉSÉOaÉGÁ Á HÌ ÉÉÉ HÌ LÁFJÍ HÁMÉESÓYÓGÁ Í I ÉÉÉ

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §75 > injunctions -- scope. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

In any price-fixing case restrictive practices ancillary to the price- fixing scheme are properly restrained.

PLEADING §48.5 > antitrust laws -- sales territories -- summary judgment. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

In a civil antitrust suit brought by the government against a truck manufacturer which has two types of price-fixing agreements, (1) requiring its distributors to charge its dealers the same price for trucks as the manufacturer charges its direct dealers, and (2) requiring all distributors and dealers to give certain truck purchasers the same discount on parts and accessories as the manufacturer gives to such purchasers, and which also has agreements limiting the territories in which, and the customers to which, each distributor can sell, the government is not entitled, on motion for summary judgment, without more detailed findings, to an injunction restraining the nonprice-fixing arrangements on the ground that they are ancillary to the price-fixing scheme.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §16 > rule of reason. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

There is read into the Sherman Act a "rule of reason" which normally requires an ascertainment of the facts peculiar to the particular business.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §3 > legality -- test. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

The true test of the legality under the antitrust laws of an agreement concerning trade is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition; to determine this question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied, the condition of the business before and after the restraint is imposed, and the history, purpose, and nature of the restraint, as well as its effect.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > presumptions -- restraint of trade -- per se violations. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

The category of per se violations of the antitrust laws is made up of agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.

HI GÁWEÜÄG HERG HÀ HÀUÖDÀ JÌ ÈÈÈ JÌ LÁI ÄSEÖAÄGAÄ HÌ ÈÈÈ HÌ LAFJÌ HÀWÜESÖYÖGÄ IÌ ÈÈÈ

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §30 > tying arrangements -- per se violations. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

Tying arrangements or agreements by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different or tied product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier, may fall in the category of per se violations of the antitrust laws, although not necessarily so.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §30 > tying arrangements. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

Tying agreements are unreasonable in and of themselves whenever a party has sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain free competition in the market for the tied product and a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce is affected.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §30 > tying arrangements. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

Where a seller who has entered into a tying agreement has no control or dominance over the tying product so that it does not represent an effectual weapon to pressure buyers into taking the tied item, any restraint of trade attributable to such tying arrangement is insignificant at most.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §30 > tying device. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Unless a tying device is employed by a small company in an attempt to break into a market, the use of such a device can rarely be harmonized with the strictures of the antitrust laws, which are intended primarily to preserve and stimulate competition.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §53 > horizontal territorial limitations. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

Horizontal territorial limitations, like group boycotts or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders, are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition, and are classified as per se violations of the antitrust laws.

HÌ GÁMÈUÉG HÉC HÀ HÀUÉOÀ JÌ ÉÉÉ JÌ LÁI ÄÉOÀÄGÀ Á HÌ ÉÉÉ HÌ LÁFJÌ HÁMÈUÉSÓYÓUÁ Í I ÉÉÉ

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §53 > vertical territorial limitations. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

The question whether a vertical territorial limitation is a per se violation of the Sherman Act depends on the actual impact of the agreement on competition.

PLEADING §48.5 > mergers -- summary judgment. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

A trial, rather than the use of summary judgment, is normally necessary in antitrust cases involving mergers, where the question is presented as to whether the merger will tend substantially to lessen competition or whether, despite a substantial lessening of competition, a merger will be held immune from the antitrust laws because the acquired company was a failing one.

PLEADING §48.5 > summary judgment -- distributor's agreement -- validity. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18]

Summary judgment is improperly employed, and a trial is necessary, to determine the validity under the Sherman Act of a truck manufacturer's agreements with its distributors in which each distributor is granted the exclusive right to sell trucks purchased from the manufacturer in a defined territory, and is forbidden to sell trucks purchased from the manufacturer except to individuals, firms, or corporations having a place of business and/or purchasing headquarters in the territory, and in which the distributor agrees not to sell or authorize his dealers to sell such trucks to any federal or state government or any department or political subdivision thereof, without the manufacturer's written consent. Points from Separate Opinion

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §53 > exclusive sales territories -- validity. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[19\]](#) [19]

Territorial restrictions on sales, if induced solely or even primarily by a manufacturer's dealers and distributors, are unlawful under the antitrust laws, even though they are formally imposed by the manufacturer rather than through interdealer agreement. [From separate opinion of Brennan, J.]

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §51 > antitrust laws -- forbidding sales to certain customers -- validity. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[20\]](#) [20]

The validity of distributors' agreements with a truck manufacturer that the distributors will not sell to certain customers depends upon whether, but for the restrictions, the distributors could compete with the manufacturer for the customers' business, or whether it appears as a practical matter that the distributors could neither fill such customers' orders nor service the trucks purchased by them. [From separate opinion of Brennan, J.]

Syllabus

---

The United States brought this civil suit to restrain alleged violations of the Sherman Act by appellant, a manufacturer of trucks, and moved for a summary judgment, contending that appellant's franchise contracts constituted per se violations of §§ 1 and 3. Such contracts restricted the geographic areas within which distributors and dealers were permitted to sell trucks and parts, restricted the persons to whom distributors and dealers were permitted to sell trucks for resale, precluded distributors and dealers from selling trucks to any federal or state government or subdivision thereof and other large customers without permission of appellant, fixed the resale price for trucks and parts sold by distributors to dealers for retail sale, and fixed the retail price of parts and accessories sold by distributors and dealers to certain designated customers. Appellant did not file any affidavit denying the Government's allegations; but it did [****2] file a brief containing allegations of fact, denying that its agreements were illegal, and contending that it should be allowed to present, at trial, evidence of the reasonableness of its contracts when considered in their own unique business and economic context. The District Court granted summary judgment for the Government. Appellant appealed directly to this Court from all but the price-fixing aspects of the judgment. Held: Apart from the price-fixing aspects of the case, summary judgment was improperly granted, and the legality of the territorial and customer limitations of appellant's franchise contracts should be determined only after a trial. Pp. 254-264.

(a) Summary judgments have a place in the antitrust field; but they are not appropriate "where motive and intent play leading roles." Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 368 U.S. 464. Pp. 259-261.

(b) This is the first case involving a territorial restriction in a vertical arrangement; and this Court knows too little of the actual impact of that restriction and the one respecting customers to reach a conclusion on the bare bones of the documentary evidence before it. Pp. 261-264.

Counsel: [****3] Gerhard A. Gesell argued the cause for appellant. With him on the briefs were Rufus S. Day, Jr. and Nestor S. Foley.

Solicitor General Cox argued the cause for the United States. With him on the brief were Assistant Attorney General Loewinger and Robert B. Hummel.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed by Sigmund Timberg for Serta Associates, Inc., et al., and by John Bodner, Jr. for the Sandura Company.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, Goldberg; White took no part in the consideration or decision of this case

Opinion by: DOUGLAS

Opinion

---

[*254] [****741] [**697] MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a civil suit under the antitrust laws that was decided below on a motion for summary judgment. Rule 56 of the Rules of Civil Procedure at the time of the hearing below permitted summary judgment to be entered HN1 [↑] "if the pleadings, depositions, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Since that time, an amendment to Rule 56, which is included in proposed changes submitted to [****4] Congress pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2072, would add the following requirement:

HI GÁWEJÉG HÉRÍ I LÀ HÀU ĐÀ JÌ ÉTÉ JÌ LÁJÉOÀ ÉCA Á HÌ ÉTÉ I FLÁFJÍ HÁWÉSÓYÓQÁ Í I ÉTÉ

"When a motion for summary judgment is made and supported as provided in this rule, an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of his pleading, but his response, by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule, must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. If he does not so respond, summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against him."

But no such requirement was present when the present case was decided; and appellant, though strenuously opposing summary judgment and demanding a trial, submitted no such affidavits. It did, however, in its brief in [*255] opposition to the motion for summary judgment, make allegations concerning factual matters which the District Court thought were properly raised and which we think were relevant to a decision on the merits.

Appellant manufactures trucks and sells them (and parts) to distributors,<sup>1</sup> to dealers, and to various large users. Both the distributors and dealers sell trucks (and parts) [***742] to users. Moreover, some distributors resell trucks (and [***5] parts) to dealers, selected with appellant's consent. All of the dealers sell trucks (and parts) only to users. The principal practices charged as violations of §§ 1 and 3 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 3, concern limitations or restrictions on the territories within which distributors or dealers may sell and limitations or restrictions on [**698] the persons or classes of persons to whom they may sell. Typical of the territorial clause is the following:

"Distributor is hereby granted the exclusive right, except as hereinafter provided, to sell during the life of this agreement, in the territory described below, White and Autocar trucks purchased from Company hereunder.

"STATE OF CALIFORNIA: Territory to consist of all of Sonoma County, south of a line starting at the western boundary, or Pacific Coast, passing through the City of Bodega, and extending due east to the east boundary line of Sonoma County, with the exception of the sale of fire truck chassis to the State of California and all political subdivisions thereof.

"Distributor agrees to develop the aforementioned territory to the satisfaction of Company, and not to [***6] [*256] sell any trucks purchased hereunder except in accordance with this agreement, and not to sell such trucks except to individuals, firms, or corporations having a place of business and/or purchasing headquarters in said territory."

Typical of the customer clause is the following:

"Distributor further agrees not to sell nor to authorize his dealers to sell such trucks to any Federal or State government or any department or political subdivision thereof, unless the right to do so is specifically granted by Company in writing."

These provisions, applicable to distributors and dealers alike, are claimed by appellee to be per se violations of the Sherman Act.<sup>2</sup> The District Court adopted that view and granted summary judgment accordingly. 194 F.Supp. 562. We noted probable jurisdiction. 369 U.S. 858. [***7] See 15 U. S. C. § 29.

Appellant, in arguing for a trial of the case on the merits, made the following representations to the District Court: the territorial clauses are necessary in order for appellant to compete with those who make other competitive kinds of trucks; appellant could theoretically have its own retail outlets throughout the country and sell to users directly; that method, however, is not feasible as it entails a costly and extensive sales organization; the only feasible method is the distributor or dealer system; for that system to be effective against the existing competition of the larger companies, a distributor or dealer must make vigorous and intensive efforts in a restricted territory, and if he is to be held responsible for energetic performance, it is fair, reasonable, and necessary that appellant protect him against invasions of [***8] his territory by other distributors or dealers of appellant; that appellant in order to obtain [*257] maximum sales in a given area must insist that its distributors and dealers concentrate on trying to take

---

<sup>1</sup> We are advised by appellant that since the judgment below, White "no longer uses distributors as a separate tier in its system, but sells directly to dealers instead."

<sup>2</sup> Appellant does not appeal from the District Court's ruling that the provisions of the contracts fixing resale prices were unlawful.

HÃ GÃ MÃU VÃG HÃM CÃ Í LÃ HÃM DÃA JÃ Í HÃM JÃ LÃM SÃO DÃA HÃM CÃ Í I GÃM JÃ HÃM DÃS SÃY CÃ Í Í HÃM

sales away from other competing [***743] truck manufacturers rather than from each other. Appellant went on to say:

"The plain fact is, as we expect to be able to show to the satisfaction of the Court at a trial of this case on the merits, that the outlawing of exclusive distributorships and dealerships in specified territories would reduce competition in the sale of motor trucks and not foster such competition."

As to the customer clauses, appellant represented to the District Court that one of their purposes was to assure appellant "that 'national accounts,' 'fleet accounts' and Federal and State governments and departments and political subdivisions thereof, which are classes of customers with respect to which the defendant [**699] is in especially severe competition with the manufacturers of other makes of trucks and which are likely to have a continuing volume of orders to place, shall not be deprived of their appropriate discounts on their purchases of repair [***9] parts and accessories from any distributor or dealer, with the result of becoming discontented with The White Motor Company and the treatment they receive with reference to the prices of repair parts and accessories for White trucks."

The agreements fixing prices of parts and accessories to these customers<sup>3</sup> were, according to appellant, only an adjunct to the customer restriction clauses and amounted merely to an agreement to give these classes of customers their proper discounts. "In a way this affects the prices which these classes of customers have to pay for such parts and accessories, but it affects, as a practical matter, only spare and repair parts and accessories and it affects only the discounts to be given to these particular classes of customers. The provisions are necessary if the defendant's [*258] future sales to 'National Accounts,' 'Fleet Accounts' and Federal and State governments and departments and political subdivisions thereof, in competition with other truck manufacturers, are not to be seriously jeopardized."

[***10] White also argued below:

"On principle, there is no reason whatsoever why a manufacturer should not have one distributor who is limited to selling to one class of customers and another distributor who is limited to selling to another class of customers or why a distributor should not be limited to one class of customers and the manufacturer reserve the right to sell to another class of customers. There are many circumstances under which there could be no possible objection to limiting the class of customers to which distributors or dealers resell goods, and there are many reasons why it would be reasonable and for the public interest that distributors or dealers should be limited to reselling to certain classes of customers.

"In the instant case, it is both reasonable and necessary that the distributors (except for sales to approved dealers) and direct dealers and dealers be limited to selling to the purchasing public, in order that they may be compelled to develop properly the full potential of sales of White trucks in their respective territories, and to assure The White Motor Company that the persons selling White trucks to the purchasing public shall be fair and honest, to [***11] the end of increasing and perpetuating sales of White trucks in competition with other makes of trucks; [***744] and it is reasonable and necessary that The White Motor Company reserve to itself the exclusive right to sell White trucks to Federal and State governments or any department or political subdivision thereof rather than to sell such trucks to such governments or [*259] departments or political subdivisions thereof through distributors or dealers, and The White Motor Company should have a perfect right so to do.

"Therefore, based both on the decisions of the Federal Courts and on principle, the limitations on the classes of customers to whom distributors or dealers may sell White trucks are not only not illegal per se, as the plaintiff must prove to succeed on its motion for summary judgment, but these limitations have proper purposes and effects and are fair and reasonable and not violative of the antitrust laws as being in unreasonable [**700] restraint of competition or trade and commerce."

---

<sup>3</sup> See note 2, supra.

In this Court appellant defends the customer clauses on the ground that "the only sure way to make certain that something really important is done right, is to do it for [****12] oneself. The size of the orders, the technicalities of bidding and delivery, and other factors all play a part in this decision."

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [↑] HN2 [↑] Summary judgments have a place in the antitrust field, as elsewhere, though, as we warned in *Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 368 U.S. 464, 473*, they are not appropriate "where motive and intent play leading roles." Some of the law in this area is so well developed that where, as here, the gist of the case turns on documentary evidence, the rule at times can be divined without a trial.

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [↑] [2] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [↑] [3] [LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [↑] [5] Where the sale of an unpatented product is tied to a patented article, that is a per se violation since it is a bald effort to enlarge the monopoly of the patent [****13] beyond its terms. Mercoid Corp. v. Honeywell Co., 320 U.S. 680, 684; International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 395-396. And see Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436. If competitors agree to divide markets, they run afoul of the antitrust laws. Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593. Group boycotts [*260] are another example of a per se violation. Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 312 U.S. 457; Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, 359 U.S. 207. Price-fixing arrangements, both vertical ( United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons, 220 U.S. 373) and horizontal ( United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150; Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons, 340 U.S. 211), have also been held to be per se violations of the antitrust laws; and a trial to show their nature, extent, and degree is no longer necessary.

LEdHN[6][↑] [6] [****14] As already stated, there was price fixing here and that part of the injunction issued by the District Court is not now challenged. In any price-fixing case restrictive practices ancillary to the price-fixing scheme [***745] are also quite properly restrained. Such was United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U.S. 707, where price fixing was "an integral part of the whole distribution system" ( id., 720) including customer restrictions. No such finding was made in this case; and whether or not the facts would permit one we do not stop to inquire.

LEDHN[7] [7]Appellant apparently maintained two types of price-fixing agreements. Under the first, a distributor was allowed to appoint dealers under him, but each distributor had to agree with appellant that he would charge the dealers the same price for trucks that appellant charged its direct dealers. The agreement affected only five percent of the trucks sold by appellant. And there were no price-fixing provisions pertaining to truck sales to ultimate purchasers. The other price-fixing arrangement required all distributors [****15] and dealers to give "national accounts," "fleet accounts," and governmental agencies the same discount on parts and accessories as White gave them. No figures are given, but it was assumed by the District Court that the amount of commerce involved under this agreement was relatively small. Without more [*261] detailed findings we therefore cannot say that the case is governed by United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., supra.

We are asked to extend the holding in Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, supra (which banned horizontal arrangements among competitors to divide territory), to a vertical arrangement by one manufacturer restricting the territory of his distributors or dealers. We intimate no view one way or the other on the legality of such an arrangement, for we believe that the applicable rule of law should be designed after a trial.

This is the first case involving a territorial restriction in a vertical arrangement; and we know too little of the actual impact of both that restriction and the one respecting customers to reach a conclusion on the bare bones of the documentary evidence before us.

[***HR8] [****16] Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 62, read into the Sherman Act the "rule of reason." That "rule of reason" normally requires an ascertainment of the facts peculiar to the particular business. As stated in Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238:

HÌ GÁMÈJÈGÍ HÈRGÍ FLÀ HÀUÈDÈ JÌ ÈFLÀ ÁSÈOÀÈGÀ À HÌ ÈFLÀ I Í LÀJÌ HÀMÈJÈSÒYÒGÀ Ì ÈFLÀ

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [↑] [9]HN3 [↑] "Every agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains. To bind, to restrain, is of their very essence. The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, [****17] the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention [*262] will save an otherwise [**746] objectionable regulation or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences."

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [↑] [10][LEdHN\[11\]](#) [↑] [11]We recently reviewed per se violations of the antitrust laws in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1. That category of HN4 [↑] antitrust violations is made up of "agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." *Id., p. 5*. Tying arrangements or agreements by a party "to sell one product but only on the condition that [****18] the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier" (*id., pp. 5-6*) may fall in that category, though not necessarily so.

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [↑] [12][LEdHN\[13\]](#) [↑] [13]"They are unreasonable in and of themselves whenever a party has sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain free competition in the market for the tied product and a 'not insubstantial' amount of interstate commerce is affected. . . . Of course where the seller has no control or dominance over the tying product so that it does not represent an effectual weapon to pressure buyers into taking the tied item any restraint of trade attributable to such tying arrangements would obviously be insignificant at most. As a simple example, if one of a dozen food stores in a community were to refuse to sell flour unless the buyer also took sugar it would hardly tend to restrain competition in sugar if its competitors were ready and able to sell flour by itself. [****19] " *Id., pp. 6-7*.

[*263] [**702] We recently noted the importance of the nature of the tying arrangement in its factual setting:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [↑] [14]"Thus, unless the tying device is employed by a small company in an attempt to break into a market, cf. Harley-Davidson Motor Co., 50 F. T. C. 1047, 1066, the use of a tying device can rarely be harmonized with the strictures of the antitrust laws, which are intended primarily to preserve and stimulate competition." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 330.

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [↑] [15][LEdHN\[16\]](#) [↑] [16]Horizontal territorial limitations, like "group boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders" (Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, supra, 212), are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition. A vertical territorial limitation may or may not have that purpose or effect. We do not know enough of the economic [****20] and business stuff out of which these arrangements emerge to be certain. They may be too dangerous to sanction or they may be allowable protections against aggressive competitors or the only practicable means a small company has for breaking into or staying in business (cf. Brown Shoe, supra, at 330; United States v. Jerrold Electronics Corp., 187 F.Supp. 545, 560-561, aff'd, 365 U.S. 567) [***747] and within the "rule of reason." We need to know more than we do about the actual impact of these arrangements on competition to decide whether they have such a "pernicious effect on competition and lack . . . any redeeming virtue" (Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, supra, p. 5) and therefore should be classified as per se violations of the Sherman Act.

HÃ GÃMÈJÈG HÃMÈG HÃMÈDÈ JÌ ÈMÈ ÈGLÃMÈDÈGÃM HÃMÈ I Í LÃFJÌ HÃMÈSÓYQÃM I ÈMÈ

LEdHN[17] [↑] [17]There is an analogy from the merger field that leads us to conclude that a trial should be had. A merger that would otherwise offend the antitrust laws because of a [*264] substantial lessening of competition has been given immunity where the acquired company was a failing one. See *International [***21] Shoe Co. v. Commission, 280 U.S. 291, 302-303*. But in such a case, as in cases involving the question whether a particular merger will tend "substantially to lessen competition" (Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, pp. 328-329), a trial rather than the use of the summary judgment is normally necessary. United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654.

LEdHN[18] [↑] [18]We conclude that the summary judgment, apart from the price-fixing phase of the case, was improperly employed in this suit. Apart from price fixing, we do not intimate any view on the merits. We only hold that the legality of the territorial and customer limitations should be determined only after a trial.

Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE WHITE took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Concur by: BRENNAN

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, concurring.

While I join the opinion of the Court, the novelty of the antitrust questions prompts me to add a few words. I fully agree that it would be premature to declare either the territorial or the customer restrictions illegal per se, since "we know [***22] too little of the actual impact [of either form of restraint] . . . to reach a conclusion on the bare bones of the . . . evidence before us." But it seems to me that distinct problems are raised by the two types of restrictions and that the District Court will wish to have this distinction in mind at the trial.

I.

I discuss first the territorial limitations. The insulation of a dealer or distributor through territorial restraints [*703] against sales by neighboring dealers who would otherwise [*265] be his competitors involves a form of restraint upon alienation, which is therefore historically and inherently suspect under the antitrust laws.<sup>1</sup> [***24] See Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 404-408. That proposition does not, however, tell us that every form of such restraint is utterly without justification and is therefore to be [***748] deemed unlawful per se. That is true only of those "agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm [***23] they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5. Specifically, the per se rule of prohibition has been applied to price-fixing agreements, group boycotts, tying arrangements, and horizontal divisions of markets. As to each of these practices, experience and analysis have established the utter lack of justification to excuse its inherent threat to competition.<sup>2</sup> To gauge the appropriateness of a per se test for the forms of restraint involved in this case, then, we must determine whether experience warrants, at this stage, a conclusion that inquiry into effect upon competition

---

<sup>1</sup>For a general consideration of the history and legality of restraints upon alienation, both at common law and under the Sherman Act, see Levi, The Parke, Davis-Colgate Doctrine: The Ban on Resale Price Maintenance, Supreme Court Review (Kurland ed. 1960), 258, 270-278.

<sup>2</sup>The general principle which the Court has stated with respect to price-fixing agreements is applicable alike to boycotts, divisions of markets, and tying arrangements: "Whatever economic justification particular . . . agreements may be thought to have, the law does not permit an inquiry into their reasonableness. They are all banned because of their actual or potential threat to the central nervous system of the economy." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 224, n. 59, at 226.

HÃ GÃMÈJÈG HÃMÃG Í LÃ HÃMÈDÃ JÌ ÉHÃI CHÃLÃ ÄSÃOÄEGÃA HÃMÃI I Ì LÃFJÌ HÃMÈJÈSÖYQÃA Í Ì ÉHÃI CCH

and economic justification [*266] would be similarly irrelevant.<sup>3</sup> With respect to the territorial limitations of the type at bar, I agree that the courts have as yet been shown no sufficient experience to warrant such a conclusion.

[****25] The Government urges, and the District Court found, that these restrictions so closely resemble two traditionally outlawed forms of restraint -- horizontal market division and resale price maintenance -- that they ought to be governed by the same absolute legal test. Both [**704] analogies are surely instructive, and all the more so because the practices at bar are sui generis; but both are, at the same time, misleading. It seems to me that consideration of the similarities has thus far obscured consideration of the equally important differences, which serve in my [*267] view to distinguish the practice here from others as to which we have held a per se test clearly appropriate.

LEdHN19 [19]Territorial limitations bear at least [***749] a superficial resemblance to horizontal divisions of markets among competitors, which we have held to be tantamount to agreements not to compete, and hence inevitably violative of the Sherman Act,<sup>4</sup> Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593. If it were clear that the territorial restrictions involved in this case had [***26] been induced solely or even primarily by appellant's dealers and distributors, it would make no difference to their legality that the restrictions were formally imposed by the manufacturer rather than through inter-dealer agreement.<sup>5</sup> Cf. Interstate Circuit, Inc., v. United States, 306 U.S. 208; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265, 275-276. But for aught that the present record discloses, an equally plausible inference is that the territorial restraints were imposed upon unwilling distributors by the manufacturer to serve exclusively his own interests. That inference gains some credibility from the fact that these limitations -- unlike, for example, exclusive franchise agreements -- bind the dealers to a rather harsh bargain while leaving the manufacturer unfettered. In any event, neither the source nor the purpose of these restraints can be conclusively determined on the pleadings or the supporting affidavits. The crucial question whether, despite the differences in form, these restraints serve the same pernicious purpose and have the same [*268] inhibitory effects upon competition as horizontal divisions of markets, [***27] is one which cannot be answered without a trial.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Outside the categories of restraint which are per se unlawful, this Court has said that the question to be answered is "whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts." Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238.

While the Government urges upon us the adoption of a per se rule of illegality, it nonetheless recognizes that not all the considerations relevant to the validity of this particular form of restraint are or could be presented by the present case: "What is the importance of interbrand as opposed to intrabrand competition? . . . Will White's restrictions remain reasonable if its share of the market increases? . . . These are only a few of the issues relevant to a trial of the 'reasonableness' of any particular set of territorial restrictions. Nor could one be content with a single investigation. Business conditions change. The effect of restricting competition among dealers today may be different tomorrow." Brief for the United States, pp. 31-32.

<sup>4</sup> See Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 240-245; United States v. National Lead Co., 63 F.Supp. 513, aff'd, 332 U.S. 319. See also Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws (1955), 26.

<sup>5</sup> For contrasting views on this question, compare Kessler and Stern, Competition, Contract, and Vertical Integration, 69 Yale L. J. 1, 113 (1959), with Robinson, Restraints on Trade and the Orderly Marketing of Goods, 45 Cornell L. Q. 254, 267-268 (1960).

<sup>6</sup> See, for an elaboration and discussion of some of the factors which might enter such an inquiry, Snap-On Tools Corp., FTC Docket 7116, 3 CCH Trade Reg. Rep. para. 15,546; Jordan, Exclusive and Restricted Sales Areas Under the Antitrust Laws, 9 U. C. L. A. L. Rev. 111, 125-129 (1962). For further discussion of the reasons which make such an inquiry desirable with respect to restraints of this very kind, see Turner, The Definition of Agreement Under the Sherman Act: Conscious Parallelism and Refusals to Deal, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 655, 698-699 (1962).

HÃ GÃMÃUÃG HÃNG I LÃ HÃUÃOÃA JÃ ÊTÃI Æ LÃÃSÃOÃEÃGÃA HÃ ÊTÃI I JLÃJÃ HÃMÃUÃSÃOYÃQÃA I ÊTÃI

[****28] The analogy to resale price maintenance agreements is also appealing, but is no less deceptive. Resale price maintenance is not only designed to, but almost invariably does in fact, reduce price competition not only among sellers of the affected product, but quite as much between that product and competing brands. See United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 45-47. While territorial restrictions may indirectly have a similar effect upon intra-brand competition, the effect upon inter-brand competition is not necessarily the same as that of resale price maintenance.<sup>7</sup>

[****29] [***750] [**705] Indeed, the principal justification which the appellant offers for the use of these limitations is that they foster a vigorous inter-brand competition which might otherwise be absent. Thus, in order to determine the lawfulness of this form of restraint, it becomes necessary to assess the merit of this and other extenuations offered by the appellant. Surely it would be significant to the disposition of [*269] this case if, as appellant claims, some such arrangement were a prerequisite for effective competition on the part of independent manufacturers of trucks. Whatever relationship such restraints may bear to the ultimate survival of producers like White should be fully explored by the District Court if we are properly to appraise this excuse for resort to these practices.

There are other situations, not presented directly by this case, in which the possibility of justification cautions against a too hasty conclusion that territorial limitations are invariably unlawful. Arguments have been suggested against that conclusion, for example, in the case of a manufacturer starting out in business or marketing a new and risky product; the suggestion is [****30] that such a manufacturer may find it essential, simply in order to acquire and retain outlets, to guarantee his distributors some degree of territorial insulation as well as exclusive franchises. It has also been suggested that it may reasonably appear necessary for a manufacturer to subdivide his sales territory in order to ensure that his product will be adequately advertised, promoted, and serviced.<sup>8</sup> It is, I think, the [*270] inappropriateness or irrelevance of such justifications as these to the practices traditionally condemned under the per se test that principally distinguishes the territorial restraints involved in the present case from horizontal market divisions and resale price maintenance.

[****31] Another issue which seems to me particularly to require a full inquiry into the pros and cons of these territorial restrictions is whether, assuming that some justification for these limitations can be shown, their operation is reasonably related to the needs which brought them into being. To put the question another way, the problem is not simply whether some justification can be found, but whether the restraint so justified is more restrictive than necessary, or excessively anticompetitive, when viewed in light of the [***751] extenuating interests.<sup>9</sup> That

<sup>7</sup> See Note, Restricted Channels of Distribution Under the Sherman Act, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 795, 800-801 (1962). It may be relevant to the question whether the territorial restrictions were intended to suppress price competition that appellant also maintained a schedule of resale prices in its distributor agreements, though there has been no challenge here to the District Court's finding that those provisions were unlawful per se.

<sup>8</sup> For situations in which such extenuations might be relevant, compare, e. g., Packard Motor Car Co. v. Webster Motor Car Co., 100 U. S. App. D. C. 161, 243 F.2d 418; Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp., 138 F.Supp. 899 (D. C. D. Md.), aff'd, 239 F.2d 176 (C. A. 4th Cir.). In the former case the court observed, in holding an exclusive franchise arrangement not violative of the Sherman Act:

"The short of it is that a relatively small manufacturer, competing with large manufacturers, thought it advantageous to retain its largest dealer in Baltimore, and could not do so without agreeing to drop its other Baltimore dealers. To penalize the small manufacturer for competing in this way not only fails to promote the policy of the antitrust laws but defeats it." 100 U. S. App. D. C., at 164, 243 F.2d, at 421. The doctrine of the Packard and Schwing cases is, however, of necessarily limited scope; not only were the manufacturers involved much smaller than the "big three" of the automobile industry against whom they competed, but both had experienced declines in their respective market shares. And the exclusive franchises involved in those cases apparently were not accompanied by territorial limitations. See Jordan, supra, note 6, at 135-139. See, for consideration of a similar problem by the Federal Trade Commission, Columbus Coated Fabrics Corp., 55 F. T. C. 1500, 1503-1504.

<sup>9</sup> If the restraint is shown to be excessive for the manufacturer's needs, then its presence invites suspicion either that dealer pressures rather than manufacturer interests brought it about, or that the real purpose of its adoption was to restrict price question [**706] is one which can be adequately treated only by examining the operation and practical effect of the restraints, whatever may be their form. And in order to appraise that effect, it is necessary to know what sanctions are imposed against distributors who "raid," or sell across territorial boundaries in violation of the agreements. If, for example, such a cross-sale incurs only an obligation to share (or "pass over") the profit with the dealer whose territory has been invaded -- as is most often, and apparently [*271] here, the case<sup>10</sup> -- then the practical effect upon competition of a territorial [***32] limitation may be no more harmful than that of the typical exclusive franchise -- the lawfulness of which the Government does not dispute here. If, on the other hand, the dealer who cross-sells runs the risk under the agreement of losing his franchise altogether, intra-brand competition across territorial boundaries involves serious hazards which might well deter any effort to compete.

HÌ GÁMÈJÉG HÀNG ÈLÀ HÀUÈDÈ JÌ ÈBÈ É LÀ ÈSÈOÀÈGÀ HÌ ÈBÈ Í FLÁJÌ HÀMÈJÉSÓYQÁG Ì ÈBÈH

[***33] Another pertinent inquiry would explore the availability of less restrictive alternatives. In the present case, for example, as the Government suggests, it may appear at the trial that whatever legitimate business needs White advances for territorial limitations could be adequately served, with less damage to competition, through other devices -- for example, an exclusive franchise,<sup>11</sup> [***34] an assignment of areas of primary responsibility to each distributor,<sup>12</sup> or a revision of the levels of profit pass-over so [*272] as to minimize the deterrence to cross-selling by neighboring dealers where competition is feasible.<sup>13</sup> But no such inquiry as this into the question of [***752] alternatives could meaningfully be undertaken until the District Court has ascertained the effect upon competition of the particular territorial restraints in suit, and of the [**707] particular sanctions by which they are enforced.

[***35] II.

I turn next to the customer restrictions. These present a problem quite distinct from that of the territorial limitations. The customer restraints would seem inherently the more dangerous of the two, for they serve to suppress all competition between manufacturer and distributors for the custom of the most desirable accounts. At the same time they seem to lack any of the countervailing tendencies to foster competition between brands which may accompany the territorial limitations. In short, there is far more difficulty in supposing that such customer restrictions can be justified.

competition, cf. Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436, 457-459; United States v. Masonite Corp., supra. See Turner, supra, note 6, at 698-699, 704-705.

<sup>10</sup> In its complaint, the Government charged that any dealer or distributor who sells in another's reserved territory must pay to the injured distributor "a specified amount of money for violation of said exclusive territory . . ." There has been no suggestion in this case that more drastic sanctions, such as withdrawal or cancellation of a franchise, have ever been invoked by the appellant to check cross-selling. The pass-over provisions contained in the typical White contract (in a provision governing "adjustment on outside deliveries") seem representative of exclusive-territory sanctions generally employed. See Note, Restricted Channels of Distribution Under the Sherman Act, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 795, 814-816 (1962).

<sup>11</sup> The District Court suggested, 194 F.Supp., at 585-586, and the Government seems to concede, that certain types of exclusive franchises would not violate the Sherman Act, although a determination of the legality of such arrangements would seem also to require an examination of their operation and effect.

<sup>12</sup> See Snap-On Tools Corp., FTC Docket No. 7116, 3 CCH Trade Reg. Rep. para. 15,546, p. 20,414. A number of consent decrees have recently recognized the lawfulness of area-of-primary-responsibility covenants as substitutes for the more restrictive exclusive arrangements. See, e. g., United States v. Bostitch, Inc., CCH 1958 Trade Cases para. 69,207 (D. C. D. R. I.); United States v. Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., CCH 1958 Trade Cases para. 69,011 (D. C. W. D. N. Y.). The thrust of such provisions is, however, only that the dealer must adequately represent the manufacturer in the assigned area, not that he must stay out of other areas. See generally 60 Mich. L. Rev. 1008 (1962).

<sup>13</sup> The essential question whether such restraints exceed the appellant's competitive needs cannot be answered, as the Government suggests, simply by reference to the views of major automobile manufacturers that territorial limitations are unnecessary to ensure effective promotion and servicing for their products. See Hearings Before a Subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on Automobile Marketing Legislation, 84th Cong., pp. 160, 248, 285, 323.

HÌ GÁMÈJÉG HÀNG GLÀ HÀUÈÔĐÀ JÌ ÉÉÉ Ï LÁI ÁSĐAÉGÀ Á HÌ ÉÉÉ I GLÁJÌ HÀMÈJÉSÓYQÁG Ï ÉÉÉHÍ

LEdHN[20] [↑] [20]The crucial question to me is whether, in any meaningful sense, the distributors could, but for the restrictions, [*273] compete with the manufacturer for the reserved outlets.<sup>14</sup> If they could, but are prevented from doing so only by the restrictions, then in the absence of some justification neither presented nor suggested by this record, their invalidity would seem to be apparent. Cf. United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 351 U.S. 305, 312; United States v. Klearflax Linen Looms, Inc., 63 F.Supp. 32. [***36] If, on the other hand, it turns out that as a practical matter the restricted dealers could neither fill the orders nor service the fleets of the governmental and fleet customers, then the District Court might conclude that because there would otherwise be no meaningful competition, the restrictive agreements do no more than codify the economically obvious. It might even be that such restrictions were originally designed to foreclose the distributors from soliciting the reserved accounts, but that now the restrictions have become meaningless because the distributors would in any event be unable to compete.

[***37] The reasons given by White for the use of customer restrictions strike me as untenable if in operation and effect the restrictions are found to stifle competition. These justifications are of three types. First, White argues that such restrictions are required because "[a] distributor or dealer is not competent to handle this intricate process [of servicing large accounts] until he has had [*274] many months of specialized White training"; and that there is a consequent danger of "unauthorized dealers" who "will be unqualified to work out specifications [***753] for trucks to meet customers' peculiar requirements." To the extent that these fears are well founded, they represent the concerns which any manufacturer may legitimately have about his distributors' ability to deal effectively with large or demanding customers. By their very terms, however, these concerns seem to call not for cutting the distributors completely out of this segment of the market, but rather for such less drastic measures as, for example, improved supervision and training, or perhaps a special form of manufacturer's warranty to the governmental and fleet purchasers to protect against unsatisfactory [***38] distributor servicing.

The second justification White offers is that "the only sure way to make certain that something really important is done right, is to do it for oneself." This argument [**708] seems to me to prove too much, for if the distributors truly cannot be counted on to solicit and service the governmental and fleet accounts -- not all of which are, in fact, large or demanding -- then this suggests that the only adequate solution may be vertical integration, the elimination of all independent or franchised distribution. But that White is either unwilling or unable to do. Instead, it seeks the best of both worlds -- to retain a distribution system for the general run of its customers, while skimming off the cream of the trade for its own direct sales. That, it seems to me, the antitrust laws would not permit, cf. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U.S. 359, 375, if in fact the distributors could compete for the reserved accounts without the restrictions.

The third justification, which White offered in its jurisdictional statement, is that customer limitations are essential to enable it to "more effectively compete against [***39] its competitors by selling trucks directly" to the reserved [*275] customers rather than "through the interposition of distributors or dealers." This argument invites consideration of what to me is the essential vice of the customer restrictions. The manufacturer's very position in the channels of distribution should afford him an inherent cost advantage over his distributors. In the nature of things, it would seem that the large purchasers would buy from whichever outlet gave them the lowest prices. Thus, if the manufacturer always did grant discounts which the distributors were unable to grant, there would seem to be no reason whatever for denying the distributors able to overcome that advantage access to the preferred customers. Conversely, the presence of such restrictions in the agreements between White and its distributors suggests that they are designed, at least in part, to protect a noncompetitive pricing structure, in which the manufacturer in fact does not always charge the lowest prices.

---

<sup>14</sup> In an analogous case, brought under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Commission dismissed the complaint because of insufficient evidence that customer limitations had foreclosed meaningful competition. In the Matter of Roux Distributing Co., 55 F. T. C. 1386. The finding that non-contractual customer restrictions had a clearly anticompetitive effect in United States v. Klearflax Linen Looms, Inc., 63 F.Supp. 32, was one which could seemingly not have been made without a trial on the merits, even though the manufacturer involved held a position of virtual monopoly. See Note, Restricted Channels of Distribution Under the Sherman Act, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 795, 817-818 (1962).

HÌ GÁMÈJÉGÍ HÈRGÍ Í LÀ HÀUÈÔDÀ JÌ ÈKÈ Ä LÀ JÈOÀÈGÀ Á HÌ ÈKÈ Í HÀFJÌ HÀMÈJÉSÓYQÁG Ì ÈKÈHÙ

In sum, the proffered justifications do not seem to me to sanction customer restrictions which suppress all competition between the manufacturer and his distributors for the [****40] most desirable customers. On trial, as I see it, the Government will necessarily prevail unless the proof warrants a finding that, even in the absence of the restrictions, the economics of the trade are such that the distributors cannot compete for the reserved accounts.

Dissent by: CLARK

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE CLARK, with whom THE [***754] CHIEF JUSTICE and MR. JUSTICE BLACK join, dissenting.

The Court is reluctant to declare vertical territorial arrangements illegal per se because "This is the first case involving a territorial restriction in a vertical arrangement; and we know too little of the actual impact . . . of that restriction . . . to reach a conclusion on the bare bones of the documentary evidence before us." The "bare bones" consist of the complaint and answer, excerpts from interrogatories, exhibits and deposition of the secretary [*276] of White Motor on behalf of the Government, taken in 1959, the formal motion of the Government for summary judgment and an excerpt entitled "Argument" from the brief of White Motor in opposition thereto. I believe that these "bare bones" really lay bare one of the most brazen violations of the Sherman Act that I have experienced [***41] in a quarter of a century.

This "argument," which the appellant has convinced the Court raises a factual issue requiring a trial, points out that each distributor is required to maintain a sales room, service station and a representative number of White trucks. "In return for these agreements of the distributor . . . it is only fair and reasonable and, in fact, necessary . . . that the distributor shall be protected [**709] in said distributor's territory against selling therein by defendant's other distributors . . . who have not made the investment of money and effort . . . in the said territory." Likewise, appellant's argument continues, "similar provisions in direct dealers' contracts and in contracts between the distributors and their respective dealers have the same purposes and the same effects." These limitations have "the purpose and effect of promoting the business and increasing the sales of White trucks in competition with The White Motor Company's powerful competitors." Emphasizing that the motor-truck manufacturing industry is one of "the most highly competitive industries in this country," appellant points up that its share "is very small" and "by no stretch of [***42] the imagination, could be said to dominate the market in trucks." It insists that there are but two ways to market trucks: (1) selling to the public through its own sales and service stations, and (2) through the distributor-dealer distribution system which it presently follows. It discards the first as being "feasible only for a very large company." As to the second, the distributors and dealers must not be allowed to spread their efforts "too thinly over more territory [*277] than they can vigorously and intensively work." It is therefore necessary, appellant says, "to confine their efforts to a territory no larger than they have the financial means and sales and service facilities and capabilities to intensively cultivate . . ." In return "it is only fair and reasonable, and indeed necessary, that The White Motor Company protect its dealers and distributors in their respective allotted territories against the exploitation by other White distributors or dealers, and indeed by the Company itself . . ." In order to procure "distributors and dealers that will adequately represent The White Motor Company's line of motor trucks, [it] has to agree that these men shall be exclusive [***43] sales representatives in a given territory." For this reason appellant "will not allow any other of its distributors or dealers [***755] to come into the territory and scalp the market for White trucks therein." Rather than "cutting each other's throats" White Motor insists that they "concentrate on trying to take sales away from other competing truck manufacturers . . ." The net effect of its justification for the territorial allocation is that "these limitations have proper purposes and effects and are fair and reasonable . . ." (Italicized in original.)

On the price-fixing requirement in the contracts, which White Motor has abandoned on appeal, the "argument" points out that this requirement was limited to about 5% of its sales and was not followed in sales to the public. Justification for its use otherwise was that it insured that all of its agents "get an equal break pricewise," which was a necessary step to having "satisfied and efficient dealer organizations." As to the required discounts provision on repair parts and accessories, it says that these are necessary "if the defendant's future sales to 'National Accounts,'

HÌ GÁMÈJÈG HÈRG Ì LÀ HÀUÈDÈ JÌ ÈBÌI ÈJ LÀ ÁSÈOÀÈGÀ À HÌ ÈBÌI Í LÀJÌ HÀMÈJÈSÓYQÀG Ì ÈBÌI H

'Fleet Accounts' and Federal and State governments [****44] . . . and political subdivisions . . . are not to be seriously jeopardized." After all, it says, "probably [*278] nothing will make the owner of a motor vehicle so peeved as to be overcharged for repair parts and accessories."

The situation in which White Motor finds itself may be summed up in its own words, i. e., that its contracts are "the only feasible way for [it] to compete effectively with its bigger and more powerful competitors . . ." In this justification it attempts but to make a virtue of business necessity, which has long been rejected as a defense in such cases. See Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 407-408 (1911); Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 312 U.S. 457, 467-468 (1941), and Northern Pac. R. Co. [**710] v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 (1958). This is true because the purpose of these provisions in its contracts as shown by White Motor's own "argument" is to enable it to compete with its "powerful competitors" and "protect its dealers and distributors in their respective allotted territories against the exploitation by other White [****45] distributors or dealers" and thus prevent them from "cutting each other's throats." These grounds for its action may be good for White Motor but they are disastrous for free competitive enterprise and, if permitted, will destroy the effectiveness of the Sherman Act. For under these contracts a person wishing to buy a White truck must deal with only one seller who by virtue of his agreements with dealer competitors has the sole power as to the public to set prices, determine terms and even to refuse to sell to a particular customer. In the latter event the customer could not buy a White truck because a neighboring dealer must reject him under the White Motor contract unless he has "a place of business and/or purchasing headquarters" in the latter's territory. He might buy another brand of truck, it is true, but the existence of interbrand competition has never been a justification for an explicit agreement to eliminate competition. See United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 351 U.S. 305 (1956). Likewise [*279] each White Motor dealer is isolated from all competition with other White Motor dealers. One cannot make a sale or purchase of a White Motor truck [****46] outside of his own territory. [***756] He is confined to his own economic island.

I have diligently searched appellant's offer of proof but fail to find any allegation by it that raises an issue of fact. All of its statements are economic arguments or business necessities none of which have any bearing on the legal issue. It clearly appears from its contracts that "all room for competition between retailers [dealers], who supply the public, is made impossible." John D. Park & Sons Co. v. Hartman, 153 F. 2d, 42 (C. A. 6th Cir.), opinion by Mr. Justice Lurton, then circuit judge, and adopted by Mr. Justice Hughes, later Chief Justice, in Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., supra, at 400 (1911). I have read and re-read appellant's "argument" and even though I give it the dignity of proof I return to the conclusion, as did Mr. Justice Lurton, that "If these contracts leave any room at any point of the line for the usual play of competition between the dealers . . . it is not discoverable." Ibid.

This Court, it is true, has never held whether there is a difference between market divisions voluntarily undertaken by a [****47] manufacturer such as White Motor and those of dealers in a commodity, agreed upon by themselves, such as were condemned in Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593 (1951). White does not contend that its distribution system has any less tendency to restrain competition among its distributors and dealers than a horizontal agreement among such distributors and dealers themselves. It seems to place some halo around its agreements because they are vertical. But the intended and actual effect is the same as, if not even more destructive than, a price-fixing agreement or any of its per se counterparts. This is true because price-fixing [*280] agreements, being more easily breached, must be continually policed by those forming the combination, while contracts for a division of territory, being easily detected, are practically self-enforcing. Moreover, White Motor has admitted that each of its distributors and dealers, numbering some 300, has entered into identical contracts. In its "argument" it says that "it has to" agree to these exclusive territorial arrangements in order to get financially able and capable distributors and dealers. It [****48] has [**711] nowise denied that it has been required by the distributors or dealers to enter into the contracts. Indeed the clear inference is to the contrary. The motivations of White Motor and its distributors and dealers are inextricably intertwined; the distributors and dealers are each acquainted with the contracts and have readily complied with their requirements, without which the contracts would be of no effect. It is hard for me to draw a distinction on the basis of who initiates such a plan. Indeed, under Interstate Circuit, Inc., v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 223 (1939), the unanimity of action by some 300 parties here forms the basis of an "understanding that all were to join" and the economics of the situation would certainly require as much. There this Court on a much weaker factual basis held:

HÃ GÃMÈJÃG HÃEG CÃA HÃUÈDÃ JÃ FFLÃÃ SÃOÃEGÃA HÃ Ì LÃFJÃ HÃMÈJÃSÃYQÃG Ì

"It taxes credulity to believe that the several distributors would, in the circumstances, have accepted and put into operation with substantial unanimity such . . . methods without some understanding that all were to join, and we reject as beyond the range of probability [***757] that it was the result of mere chance."

Likewise, the other [****49] restrictions in the contracts run counter to the Sherman Act. This Court has held the restriction on the withholding of customers to be illegal as a contract between potential competitors not to compete, United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., supra, at 312 (1956), [*281] and White Motor's prohibition on resales without its approval is condemned by United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U.S. 707, 721 (1944). Experience, as well as our cases, has shown that these restrictions have a "pernicious effect on competition and lack . . . any redeeming virtue . . ." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, supra, at 5.

The Court says that perhaps the reasonableness or the effect of such arrangements might be subject to inquiry. But the rule of reason is inapplicable to agreements made solely for the purpose of eliminating competition. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150 (1940) (price fixing); Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra (group boycotts); International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392 (1947), and United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U.S. 319 (1947) [****50] (tying arrangements); Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, supra; Nationwide Trailer Rental System v. United States, 355 U.S. 10 (1957), affirming 156 F.Supp. 800 (D. C. D. Kan. 1957), and United States v. National Lead Co., supra (division of markets). The same rule applies to the contracts here. The offered justification must fail because it involves a contention contrary to the public policy of the Sherman Act, which is that the suppression of competition is in and of itself a public injury. To admit, as does the petitioner, that competition is eliminated under its contracts is, under our cases, to admit a violation of the Sherman Act. No justification, no matter how beneficial, can save it from that interdiction.

The thrust of appellant's contention seems to be in essence that it cannot market its trucks profitably without the advantage of the restrictive covenants. I note that other motor car manufacturers -- including the "big three" -- abandoned the practice over a decade ago. One of these, American Motors, told the Eighty-fourth Congress, before which legislation was pending to permit division [*282] of territory, [****51] <sup>1</sup> that it was "not in favor of any legislation, permissive or otherwise, that restricts the right of the customer to choose any dealers from whom he desires to purchase." Hearings before a Subcommittee [**712] of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on Automobile Marketing Legislation, 84th Cong., p. 285. American Motors seems to have been able to survive and prosper against "big three" competition. But even though White Motor gains an advantage through the use of the restrictions, "the question remains whether it is one which [it] is entitled to secure by agreements restricting the freedom of trade on the part of dealers who own what they sell." Dr. Miles Medical [***758] Co., supra, at 407-408. And, Mr. Justice Hughes continued:

"As to this, the complainant can fare no better with its plan of identical contracts than could the dealers themselves if they formed a combination and endeavored to establish the same restrictions, and thus to achieve the same result, by agreement with each other. If the immediate advantage they would thus obtain would not be sufficient to sustain such a direct agreement, the asserted ulterior benefit to the complainant [***52] cannot be regarded as sufficient to support its system." Id. at 408.

The milk in the coconut is that White Motor "having sold its product at prices satisfactory to itself, the public is entitled to whatever advantage may be derived from competition in the subsequent traffic." Id. at 409.

Today the Court does a futile act in remanding this case for trial. In my view appellant cannot plead nor prove an issue upon which a successful defense of its contracts can be predicated. Neither time (I note the case is [*283] now in its sixth year) nor all of the economic analysts, the statisticians, the experts in marketing, or for that matter the ingenuity of lawyers, can escape the unalterable fact that these contracts eliminate competition and under our cases are void. The net effect of the remand is therefore but to extend for perhaps an additional five years White

---

<sup>1</sup> H. R. 6544, 84th Cong., 1st Sess. The bill was never reported from the Committee.

HÌ GÀMÈUÀGÌ HÉRG HÀ HÀUÈOÀDÀ JÌ ÈÅÍ FGLÁJ ÅSEÖAÈGåA HÌ ÈÅÍ IÍ LAFJÌ HÀVÈSÖYQÅGÌ IÍ ÈÅÍ G

Motor's enjoyment of the fruits of its illegal [***53] action. Certainly the decision has no precedential value<sup>2</sup> in substantive antitrust law.

References

Validity under federal antitrust laws of agreement conferring exclusive sales agency for designated territory

Annotation References:

Extent of trader's right to exercise his own discretion as to the persons with whom he will or will not deal. 68 L ed 448.

End of Document

<sup>2</sup> Our recent certification of the amendment to the summary judgment procedure under Rule 56, quoted in the Court's opinion, will eliminate the problem posed here, i. e., the sufficiency of the record.

United States v. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank

Supreme Court of the United States

February 20-21, 1963, Argued ; June 17, 1963, Decided

No. 83

Reporter

374 U.S. 321 *; 83 S. Ct. 1715 **; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915 ***; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413 ****; 1963 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,812

UNITED STATES v. PHILADELPHIA NATIONAL BANK ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Disposition: 201 F.Supp. 348, reversed.

Core Terms

---

merger, banks, acquisitions, Clayton Act, stock, concentration, bank merger, agencies, consolidation, effects, regulation, anti trust law, national bank, insured, Sherman Act, commerce, commercial bank, largest, proposed merger, anticompetitive, antitrust, deposits, loophole, loans, Currency, factors, merge, banking industry, legislative history, four-county

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[ Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

HN2[ Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Banking Interests

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

374 U.S. 321, *321; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1715; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***915; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****1

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Commercial Banks > Mergers & Consolidations

HN3 Financial Institutions, Bank Mergers

See 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Sales of Assets > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > Scope & Enforcement

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

HN4 Clayton Act, Jurisdiction

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, reaches acquisitions of corporate stock or share capital by any corporation engaged in commerce, but it reaches acquisitions of corporate assets only by corporations subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC). The FTC, under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, has no jurisdiction over banks. 15 U.S.C.S. §45\(a\)\(6\).

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

HN5 Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

The stock-acquisition provision of § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, embraces every corporation engaged in commerce, including banks.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Immunity from the antitrust laws is not lightly implied.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN7** Legislation, Interpretation

The views of a subsequent Congress form a hazardous basis for inferring the intent of an earlier one.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Antitrust

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

**HN8** Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Repeals of the antitrust laws by implication from a regulatory statute are strongly disfavored, and are found in cases of plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

**HN9** Separation of Powers, Primary Jurisdiction

The doctrine of primary jurisdiction requires judicial abstention in cases where protection of the integrity of a regulatory scheme dictates preliminary resort to the agency which administers the scheme.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Commercial Banks > Mergers & Consolidations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

**HN10** Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

The tests of illegality under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2, and the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, are complementary. The public policy announced by § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §18, is to be taken into consideration in determining whether acquisition of assets violates the prohibitions of the Sherman Act against unreasonable restraints.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

HN11[] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

The statutory test of whether a proposed merger is lawful under § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S § 18, is whether the effect of the merger may be substantially to lessen competition in any line of commerce in any section of the country.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

HN12[] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

The proper question to be asked in determination of the appropriate section of the country is not where the parties to the merger do business or even where they compete, but where, within the area of competitive overlap, the effect of the merger on competition will be direct and immediate. This depends upon the geographic structure of supplier-customer relations. The area of effective competition in the known line of commerce must be chartered by careful selection of the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

HN13[] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

The determination of whether the effect of a merger may be to substantially lessen competition in the relevant market requires not merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future. Such a prediction is sound only if it is based upon a firm understanding of the structure of the relevant market; yet the relevant economic data are both complex and elusive. Unless businessmen can assess the legal consequences of a merger with some confidence, sound business planning is retarded. The courts must be alert to the danger of subverting congressional intent by permitting a too-broad economic investigation. In any case in which it is possible, without doing violence to the congressional objective embodied in § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, to simplify the test of illegality, the courts ought to do so in the interest of sound and practical judicial administration.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

**HN14** [down] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

A merger which produces a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market, is so inherently likely to lessen competition substantially that it must be enjoined in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anticompetitive effects.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

**HN15** [down] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

The test of a competitive market is not only whether small competitors flourish but also whether consumers are well served.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

Two Philadelphia banks, both engaged in interstate commerce, one organized under the laws of the United States and the other under Pennsylvania law, proposed a merger. In accordance with the Bank Merger Act of 1960 (12 USC 1828\(c\)), an application for approval of the merger was filed with, and approved by, the Comptroller of the Currency. The United States then brought the present civil action in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania to enjoin the merger as violating 1 of the Sherman Act and 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which in its pertinent part prohibits the acquisition by one corporation of the stock of another where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly. After trial, the District Court dismissed the action with prejudice. (201 F Supp 348.)

On appeal, the United States Supreme Court reversed with direction to enter judgment enjoining the proposed merger. In an opinion by Brennan, J., expressing the views of five members of the Court, it was held that the merger violated 7 of the Clayton Act. This decision was rested on the grounds that 7 was applicable to bank mergers, that the Bank Merger Act of 1960 did not immunize mergers approved thereunder by the appropriate administrative agencies from challenge under the federal antitrust laws, and that 7 was violated because the merger, if realized, would result in a single bank's controlling at least 30 percent of the commercial bank business in the four-county Philadelphia metropolitan area.

374 U.S. 321, *321; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1715; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***915; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****1

Harlan, J., joined by Stewart, J., dissented on the ground that 7 of the Clayton Act did not apply to a bank merger.

Goldberg, J., in a memorandum, agreed with the view expressed in the dissenting opinion by Harlan, J., but made it clear that he did not necessarily dissent from the judgment of the Court invalidating the merger, because the result might be justified under the Sherman Act, expressing, however, no ultimate conclusion concerning the latter issue.

White, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > merger of banks -- injunctive relief. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

The merger of two banks resulting in a single bank's controlling at least 30 percent of the commercial bank business in the four-county Philadelphia metropolitan area must be enjoined because forbidden by 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), prohibiting the acquisition by a corporation engaged in commerce of stock of another corporation so engaged, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition.

BANKS §3.5 > consolidation -- merger. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

A consolidation of two banks exists where the resulting bank is a different entity from either of the constituent banks; in a merger one bank disappears in the other surviving bank.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §35 > acquisition by bank of assets of other bank. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

In view of 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, (15 USC 45 \(a\)\(6\)), exempting banks from the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, the acquisition by one bank of the assets of another is not within 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), providing that no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation where in any line of commerce in any section of the country the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §86 > banks -- jurisdiction of Federal Trade Commission. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

374 U.S. 321, *321; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1715; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***915; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****1

No jurisdiction over banks is conferred upon the Federal Trade Commission by 11 of the amended Clayton Act (15 USC 21), providing that authority to enforce compliance with 2, 3, 7, and 8 of the act by persons respectively subject thereto is vested in the Federal Reserve Board where applicable to banks, and in the Federal Trade Commission where applicable to "all other character of commerce"; bank mergers do not fall into the residual category of "all other character of commerce."

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §22 > banking as commerce. -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Banking is, where the operations stretch across state lines, commerce within the meaning of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), directed against the acquisition by one corporation engaged in commerce of the stock or assets of another corporation so engaged.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §86 > RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §103 > remedial powers of FTC. -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The question of the Federal Trade Commission's remedial powers under 11 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 21) regarding violations of the act is to be distinguished from that of its remedial powers under 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45\(b\)); the Commission has no power to order divestiture in 5 proceedings.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > stock acquisition -- assets acquisition -- merger. -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Read together, the stock-acquisition and assets-acquisition provisions of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18)--providing that no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the assets of another corporation so engaged, where the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly--reach mergers, which fit neither category perfectly but lie somewhere between the two ends of the spectrum; so construed, the specific exception for acquiring corporations not subject to the Commission's jurisdiction excludes from the coverage of 7 only assets acquisitions by such corporations when not accomplished by merger.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §20 > RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §86 > bank mergers -- jurisdiction of administrative agencies to enforce 7 of Clayton Act. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

The Bank Merger Act of 1960 (12 USC 1828 \(c\)), assigning roles in merger applications to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Comptroller of the Currency as well as to the Federal Reserve Board, supplants whatever authority the Federal Reserve Board may have acquired under 11 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 21), by virtue of the 1950 amendment of 7 thereof (15 USC 18), to enforce the stock- acquisition provisions of 7 against bank mergers; since the Bank Merger Act applies only to mergers, consolidations, acquisitions of assets, and assumptions of liabilities, but not to outright stock acquisitions, the Federal Reserve Board's authority under 11, as it existed before the 1950 amendment (64 Stat 1125) of 7 of the Clayton Act, remains unaffected.

374 U.S. 321, *321; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1715; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***915; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****1

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > stock-acquisition provision -- assets-acquisition provision -- merger. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

Though re-enacted in haec verba by the 1950 amendment (64 Stat 1125), the stock-acquisition provision of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18)--providing that no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire the stock and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the assets of another corporation so engaged, where the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly--must be deemed expanded in its new context to include, at the very least, acquisitions by merger or consolidation, transactions which entail a transfer of stock of the parties, while the assets-acquisition provision clearly reaches corporate acquisitions involving no such transfer.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §6 > purpose of amended 7 of Clayton Act. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

The objective of including the phrase "corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission" in 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), as amended in 1950 (64 Stat 1125)--providing that no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire the stock and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the assets of another corporation so engaged, where the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly--is not to limit the amalgamations to be covered by the amended statute but to make explicit the role of the Federal Trade Commission in administering the section.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §7 > immunity. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

Immunity from the antitrust laws is not lightly implied.

STATUTES §151.5 > STATUTES §155 > administrative construction -- views of members of Congress. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

The construction of the amended 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) as applicable to bank mergers is not foreclosed because, after the passage of the amendment, some members of Congress, and for a time the Justice Department, voiced a contrary view.

EVIDENCE §167 > inferences -- congressional intent. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

The views of a subsequent Congress form a hazardous basis for inferring the intent of an earlier one.

EVIDENCE §167 > STATUTES §154 > inferences -- congressional intent -- Clayton Act -- Bank Merger Act. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

The views of Congress in enacting the Bank Merger Act of 1960 (12 USC 1828\(c\)) form a hazardous basis for inferring the intent of Congress in enacting the 1950 amendment (64 Stat 1125) of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), even though misunderstanding of the scope of 7 may have played some part in the passage of the 1960 act; the design fashioned in the Bank Merger Act being predicated upon uncertainty as to the scope of 7, the court may, in construing that scope, dispel the uncertainty.

BANKS §3.5 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §20 > mergers -- immunity from antitrust laws. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15A\]](#) [15A] [LEdHN\[15B\]](#) [15B]

By directing the appropriate banking agencies to consider competitive factors before approving mergers, the Bank Merger Act of 1960 (12 USC 1828\(c\)) does not immunize approved mergers from challenge under the federal antitrust laws, the act not requiring such agencies either to give competitive factors any particular weight or to hold a hearing before approving an application for merger, and there being no specific provision for judicial review of the administrative decision.

APPEAL §1092 > waiver of error in appellate court. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

Although appellees' contention below that the Bank Merger Act (12 USC 1828\(c\)), by directing the appropriate banking agencies to consider competitive factors before approving mergers, immunizes approved mergers from challenge under the federal antitrust laws, was abandoned on appeal, the United States Supreme Court will consider this contention because it touches the proper relations of the judicial and administrative spheres.

STATUTES §248.5 > implied repeal -- antitrust laws. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

Repeals of the antitrust laws by implication from a regulatory statute are strongly disfavored, and will be found only in cases of plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions.

374 U.S. 321, *321; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1715; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***915; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****1

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §322 > primary jurisdiction. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18]

The doctrine of "primary jurisdiction" requires judicial abstention in cases where protection of the integrity of a regulatory scheme dictates preliminary resort to the agency which administers the scheme; court jurisdiction is not thereby ousted, but only postponed.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §324 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §68 > bank merger -- primary administrative jurisdiction. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[19\]](#) [19]

Decision of the question whether a bank merger violates 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) and hence is enjoinable is not subject to postponement under the doctrine of primary administrative jurisdiction, where there may be no power of judicial review of the decision of the appropriate administrative agency approving the merger, and such approval does not in any event confer immunity from the antitrust laws, and moreover, even if the doctrine were applicable, the action would not be barred since the agency proceeding was completed before the action was commenced.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §20 > effect of Bank Merger Act. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[20\]](#) [20]

The Bank Merger Act of 1960 (12 USC 1828\(c\)) is not intended to extinguish other sources of federal restraint of bank acquisitions having anticompetitive effects.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > mergers. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[21\]](#) [21]

The Sherman Act forbids mergers effecting an unreasonable restraint of trade.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §5 > Sherman Act -- Clayton Act. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[22\]](#) [22]

The Clayton and Sherman Acts do not embody approaches to antitrust policy inconsistent with or unrelated to each other; the tests of illegality under both acts are complementary.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §7 > construction of federal legislation -- acquisition of stock. -- > Headnote:

LEdHN/23 [↓] [23]

The public policy announced by 7 of the Clayton Act, which is directed against the acquisition by one corporation of the stock or assets of another corporation, is to be taken into consideration in determining whether acquisition of assets violates the prohibitions of the Sherman Act against unreasonable restraints, even though not every violation of 7 of the Clayton Act is necessarily a violation of the Sherman Act.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > bank merger -- line of commerce. --

> Headnote:

LEdHN/24 [↓] [24]

The cluster of products (various kinds of credit) and services (such as checking accounts and trust administration) denoted by the term "commercial banking" composes a distinct line of commerce within the meaning of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of the stock or assets of another corporation where "in any line of commerce" the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > bank merger -- lessening of competition -- appropriate "section of the country." -- > Headnote:

LEdHN/25 [↓] [25]

In determining the appropriate "section of the country" within the meaning of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which prohibits the acquisition by one corporation of the stock of another corporation where in any line of commerce "in any section of the country" the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, the proper question to be asked is not where the banks which are parties to a merger do business or even where they compete, but where, within the area of competitive overlap, the effect of the merger on competition will be direct and immediate; this depends upon the geographic structure of supplier-customer relations.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > merger -- area of effective competition. -- > Headnote:

LEdHN/26 [↓] [26]

In determining whether a merger violates 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of the assets of another where "in any line of commerce in any section of the country" the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, the area of effective competition in a known line of commerce must be chartered by careful selection of the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > bank mergers -- lessening competition -- area. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[27\]](#) [27]

The four-county Philadelphia metropolitan area, which state law recognizes as a meaningful banking community in allowing Philadelphia banks to branch within it, and which would seem roughly to delineate the area in which bank customers who are neither very large nor very small find it practical to do their banking business, is--for the purposes of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of the stock of another where in any line of commerce in any section of the country the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition--a more appropriate "section of the country" in which to appraise the merger of two Philadelphia banks than any larger or smaller or different area; this conclusion is fortified by the fact that three federal banking agencies regard the area in which banks have their offices as an "area of effective competition."

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > merger -- impact on competition. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[28\]](#) [28]

Determination of the question whether the effect of a merger "may be substantially to lessen competition" in the relevant market, so as to bring the merger within the prohibition of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), requires not merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future; such a prediction is sound only if it is based upon a firm understanding of the structure of the relevant market.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34 > acquisition of stock and assets of corporation -- simplification of test of illegality. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[29\]](#) [29]

In any case in which it is possible, without doing violence to the congressional objective embodied in 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18)--prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of the stock or assets of another corporation where in any line of commerce in any section of the country the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition--to simplify the test of illegality, the courts ought to do so in the interest of sound and practical judicial administration.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > merger -- illegality -- burden of proof. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[30\]](#) [30]

Under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of the stock of another where the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, a merger which produces a firm control of an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market, is so inherently likely to lessen competition substantially that it must be enjoined in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anticompetitive effects; such a test lightens the burden of proving illegality only with respect to mergers whose size makes them inherently suspect in the light of Congress' design in 7 to prevent undue concentration.

374 U.S. 321, *321; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1715; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***915; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****1

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > merger -- integration by contract. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[31\]](#) [31]

Integration by a corporate merger is more suspect as violating the antitrust laws than integration by contract, because of the greater permanence of the former.

EVIDENCE §979 > weight -- in antitrust case involving bank merger. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[32A\]](#) [32A] [LEdHN\[32B\]](#) [32B]

In a suit to enjoin the merger of two Philadelphia commercial banks as violating 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) in which there is nothing in the record to rebut the inherently anticompetitive tendency manifested by the percentages of the business which would be controlled by the bank resulting from the merger, testimony by bank officers to the effect that competition among banks in Philadelphia was vigorous and would continue to be so after the merger is entitled to little weight, in view of the witnesses' failure to give concrete reasons for their conclusions, and of equally little value are the assurances offered by bank witnesses that customers dissatisfied with the services of the resulting bank may readily turn to the 40 other banks in the Philadelphia area; that some of the bank officers who testified represented small banks in competition with defendants does not substantially enhance the probative value of their testimony.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > competitive market -- test. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[33\]](#) [33]

For the purposes of the antitrust laws, the test of a competitive market is not only whether the competitors flourish but also whether the consumers are well served; congressional concern is with the protection of competition, not competitors.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §11 > coverage of antitrust laws -- commercial banking. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[34\]](#) [34]

Commercial banking is not, because it is subject to a high degree of governmental regulation or because it deals in the intangibles of credit and services rather than in the manufacture or sale of tangible commodities, immune from the anticompetitive effects of undue concentration.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > bank merger -- justifications. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[35A\]](#) [ ] [35A] [LEdHN\[35B\]](#) [ ] [35B]

A bank merger otherwise falling within the prohibitions of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) cannot be justified on the grounds that only through mergers can banks follow their customers to suburbs and retain their business, or that the increased lending limit of the resulting bank will enable it to compete with large out-of-state banks for very large loans, or that the area in which the banks operate needs a bank larger than it presently has in order to bring business to the area and stimulate its economic development.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > effects of competition. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[36\]](#) [ ] [36]

Anticompetitive effects in one market cannot be justified by procompetitive consequences in another.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §17 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > merger. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[37\]](#) [ ] [37]

A corporate merger the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition" is not saved because, on some ultimate reckoning of social or economic debits and credits, it may be deemed beneficial; 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) proscribes anticompetitive mergers, the benign and the malignant alike.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > bank mergers -- justification. --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[38\]](#) [ ] [38]

Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), as applied to prohibit bank mergers, does not mandate cutthroat competition in the banking industry, and does not exclude defenses based on dangers to liquidity or solvency, if to avert them a merger is necessary; it does require, however, that the forces of competition be allowed to operate within the broad framework of governmental regulation of the industry, and the fact that banking is a highly regulated industry critical to the nation's welfare makes the play of competition not less important but more so.

Syllabus

---

Appellees, a national bank and a state bank, are the second and third largest of the 42 commercial banks in the metropolitan area consisting of Philadelphia and its three contiguous counties, and they have branches throughout that area. Appellees' boards of directors approved an agreement for their consolidation, under which the national bank's stockholders would retain their stock certificates, which would represent shares in the consolidated bank, while the state bank's stockholders would surrender their shares in exchange for shares in the consolidated bank. After obtaining reports, as required by the Bank Merger Act of 1960, from the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Attorney General, all of whom advised that the proposed merger would substantially lessen competition in the area, the Comptroller of the Currency approved it. The United States sued to enjoin consummation [****2] of the proposed consolidation, on the ground, inter alia, that it would violate § 7 of the Clayton Act. Held: The proposed consolidation of appellee banks is forbidden by § 7 of the Clayton Act, and it must be enjoined. Pp. 323-372.

1. By the amendments to § 7 of the Clayton Act enacted in 1950, Congress intended to close a loophole in the original section by broadening its scope so as to cover the entire range of corporate amalgamations, from pure stock acquisitions to pure acquisitions of assets, and it did not intend to exclude bank mergers. Pp. 335-349.
2. The Bank Merger Act of 1960, by directing the banking agencies to consider competitive factors before approving mergers, did not immunize mergers approved by them from operation of the federal antitrust laws; and the doctrine of primary jurisdiction is not applicable here. *California v. Federal Power Commission*, 369 U.S. 482. Pp. 350-355.
3. The proposed consolidation of appellee banks would violate § 7 of the Clayton Act, and it must be enjoined. Pp. 355-372.
  - (a) The "line of commerce" here involved is commercial banking. Pp. 355-357.
  - (b) The "section of the country" which is relevant [****3] here is the metropolitan area consisting of Philadelphia and its three contiguous counties. Pp. 357-362.
  - (c) The consolidated bank would control such an undue percentage share of the relevant market (at least 30%) and the consolidation would result in such a significant increase in the concentration of commercial banking facilities in the area (33%) that the result would be inherently likely to lessen competition substantially, and there is no evidence in the record to show that it would not do so. Pp. 362-367.
  - (d) The facts that commercial banking is subject to a high degree of governmental regulation and that it deals with the intangibles of credit and services, rather than in the manufacture or sale of tangible commodities, do not immunize it from the anticompetitive effects of undue concentration. Pp. 368-370.
  - (e) This proposed consolidation cannot be justified on the theory that only through mergers can banks follow their customers to the suburbs and retain their business, since this can be accomplished by establishing new branches in the suburbs. P. 370.
  - (f) This proposed consolidation cannot be justified on the ground that the increased lending limit would enable the [****4] consolidated bank to compete with the large out-of-state banks, particularly the New York banks, for very large loans. Pp. 370-371.
  - (g) This proposed consolidation cannot be justified on the ground that Philadelphia needs a bank larger than it now has in order to bring business to the area and stimulate its economic development. P. 371.
  - (h) This Court rejects appellees' pervasive suggestion that application of the procompetitive policy of § 7 to the banking industry will have dire, although unspecified, consequences for the national economy. Pp. 371-372.

Counsel: Assistant Attorney General Loewinger argued the cause for the United States. With him on the briefs were Solicitor General Cox, Charles H. Weston, George D. Reycraft, Lionel Kestenbaum and Melvin Spaeth.

Philip Price and Arthur Littleton argued the cause for appellees. With them on the brief were Ernest R. von Starck, Donald A. Scott, Carroll R. Wetzel, John J. Brennan and Minturn T. Wright III.

Judges: Warren, Black, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, Goldberg; White took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

---

[*323] [***921] [**1720] MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered [****5] the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A]

The United States, appellant here, brought this civil action in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania under § 4 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 4, and § 15 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 25, to enjoin a proposed merger of The Philadelphia National Bank (PNB) and Girard Trust Corn Exchange Bank (Girard), appellees here. The complaint charged violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1, and [***922] § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 18.<sup>1</sup> From a judgment for appellees after trial, see 201 F.Supp. 348, the United States appealed to this Court under § 2 of the Expediting Act, 15 U. S. C. § 29. Probable jurisdiction was noted. 369 U.S. 883. We reverse the judgment of the District Court. We hold that the merger of appellees is forbidden by § 7 of the [*324] Clayton Act and so must be enjoined; we need not, and therefore do not, reach the further question of alleged violation [***6] of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

[***7] I. THE FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS BELOW.

A. The Background: Commercial Banking in the United States.

Because this is the first case which has required this Court to consider the application of the antitrust laws to the commercial banking industry, and because aspects of the industry and of the degree of governmental regulation of it will recur throughout our discussion, we deem it appropriate to begin with a brief background description.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides in pertinent part: HN1 [↑] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended in 1950 by the Celler-Kefauver Antimerger Act, provides in pertinent part: HN2 [↑] "No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

<sup>2</sup> The discussion in this portion of the opinion draws upon undisputed evidence of record in the case, supplemented by pertinent reference materials. See Board of Govs. of the Fed. Res. System, Financing Small Business (Comm. print 1958); The Federal Reserve System (3d ed. 1954); Concentration of Banking in the United States (Comm. print 1952); Bogen, The Competitive Position of Commercial Banks (1959); Commission on Money and Credit, Money and Credit (1961); Freeman, The Problems of Adequate Bank Capital (1952); Hart, Money, Debt, and Economic Activity (2d ed. 1953); Lent, The Changing Structure of Commercial Banking (1960); Sayers, Modern Banking (5th ed. 1960); Staff of House Select Comm. on Small Business, 86th Cong., 2d Sess., Banking Concentration and Small Business (1960); U.S. Attorney General's Comm. on Administrative Procedure, Federal Control of Banking (S. Doc. No. 186, 76th Cong., 3d Sess., 1940); Fox, Supervision of Banking by the Comptroller of the Currency, in Public Administration and Policy Formation (Redford ed. 1956), 117; Stokes, Public Convenience and Advantage in Applications for New Banks and Branches, 74 Banking L. J. 921 (1957). For materials which focus specifically on the question of competition in the banking industry, see also Alhadeff, Monopoly and Competition in Banking (1954); Chapman, Concentration of Banking (1934); Horvitz, Concentration and Competition in New England Banking (1958); Lawrence, Banking Concentration in the United States (1930); Berle, Banking Under the Anti-Trust Laws, 49 Col. L. Rev. 589 (1949); Chandler, Monopolistic Elements in Commercial Banking, 46 J. Pol. Econ. 1 (1938); Gruis, Antitrust Laws and Their Application to Banking, 24 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 89 (1955); Funk, Antitrust Legislation Affecting Bank Mergers, 12 Bus. Law. 496 (1957); Klebaner, Federal Control of Commercial Bank Mergers, 37 Ind. L. J. 287 (1962); Wemple and Cutler, The Federal Bank Merger Law and the Antitrust Laws, 16 Bus. Law. 994 (1961); Comment, Bank Charter, Branching, Holding Company and

[****8] [*325] Commercial [**1721] banking in this country is primarily unit banking. That is, control of commercial banking is [**923] diffused throughout a very large number of independent, local banks -- 13,460 of them in 1960 -- rather than concentrated in a handful of nationwide banks, as, for example, in England and Germany. There are, to be sure, in addition to the independent banks, some 10,000 branch banks; but branching, which is controlled largely by state law -- and prohibited altogether by some States -- enables a bank to extend itself only to state lines and often not that far.<sup>3</sup> It is also the case, of course, that many banks place loans and solicit deposits outside their home area. But with these qualifications, it remains true that ours is essentially a decentralized system of community banks. Recent years, however, have witnessed a definite trend toward concentration. Thus, during the decade ending in 1960 the number of commercial banks in the United [*326] States declined by 714, despite the chartering of 887 new banks and a very substantial increase in the Nation's credit needs during the period. Of the 1,601 independent banks which thus disappeared, [****9] 1,503, with combined total resources of well over $ 25,000,000,000, disappeared as the result of mergers.

Commercial banks are unique among financial institutions in that they alone are permitted by law to accept demand deposits. This distinctive power gives commercial banking a key role in the national economy. For banks do not merely deal in, but are actually a source of, money and credit; when a bank makes a loan by crediting the borrower's demand deposit account, it augments the Nation's credit supply.<sup>4</sup> Furthermore, the [****10] power to accept demand deposits makes banks the intermediaries in most financial transactions (since transfers of substantial moneys are almost always by check rather than by cash) and, concomitantly, the repositories of very substantial individual and corporate funds. The banks' use of these funds is conditioned by the fact that their working capital consists very largely of demand deposits, which makes liquidity the guiding principle of bank lending and investing policies; thus it is that banks are the chief source of the country's short-term business credit.

Banking operations are varied and complex; "commercial banking" describes a congeries of services and credit devices.<sup>5</sup> But among [***924] them the creation of additional [*327] money and credit, the management [*1722] [****11] of the checking-account system, and the furnishing of short-term business loans would appear to be the most important. For the proper discharge of these functions is indispensable to a healthy national economy, as the role of bank failures in depression periods attests. It is therefore not surprising that commercial banking in the United States is subject to a variety of governmental controls, state and federal. Federal regulation is the more extensive, and our focus will be upon it. It extends not only to the national banks, i. e., banks chartered under federal law and supervised by the Comptroller of the Currency, see 12 U. S. C. § 21 et seq. For many state banks, see 12 U. S. C. § 321, as well as virtually all the national banks, 12 U. S. C. § 222, are members of the Federal Reserve System (FRS), and more than 95% of all banks, see 12 U. S. C. § 1815, are insured by the Merger Laws: Competition Frustrated, 71 Yale L. J. 502 (1962); Note, Federal Regulation of Bank Mergers: The Opposing Views of the Federal Banking Agencies and the Department of Justice, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 756 (1962).

<sup>3</sup> In addition, there is a certain amount of bank holding company activity. The Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, 12 U. S. C. §§ 1841-1848, brought bank holding companies under stringent federal regulation. As of 1958, the 43 registered bank holding companies controlled 5.7% of all banking offices and 7.4% of all deposits. Lent, The Changing Structure of Commercial Banking (1960), 19. See also Comment, supra, note 2, 71 Yale L. J., at 516-522.

<sup>4</sup> Such creation is not, to be sure, pure sleight of hand. A bank may not make a loan without adequate reserves. Nevertheless, the element of bank money creation is real. E. g., Samuelson, Economics (5th ed. 1961), 331-343.

<sup>5</sup> The principal banking "products" are of course various types of credit, for example: unsecured personal and business loans, mortgage loans, loans secured by securities or accounts receivable, automobile installment and consumer goods installment loans, tuition financing, bank credit cards, revolving credit funds. Banking services include: acceptance of demand deposits from individuals, corporations, governmental agencies, and other banks; acceptance of time and savings deposits; estate and trust planning and trusteeship services; lock boxes and safety-deposit boxes; account reconciliation services; foreign department services (acceptances and letters of credit); correspondent services; investment advice. It should be noted that many other institutions are in the business of supplying credit, and so more or less in competition with commercial banks (see further, pp. 356-357, infra), for example: mutual savings banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions, personal-finance companies, sales-finance companies, private businessmen (through the furnishing of trade credit), factors, direct-lending government agencies, the Post Office, Small Business Investment Corporations, life insurance companies.

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC). State member and nonmember insured banks are subject to a federal regulatory scheme almost as elaborate as that which governs the national banks.

[****12] The governmental controls of American banking are manifold. First, the Federal Reserve System, through its open-market operations, see 12 U. S. C. §§ 263 \(c\), 353-359, control of the rediscount rate, see 12 U. S. C. § 357, and modifications of reserve requirements, see 12 U. S. C. §§ 462, 462b, [*328] regulates the supply of money and credit in the economy and thereby indirectly regulates the interest rates of bank loans. This is not, however, rate regulation. The Reserve System's activities are only designed to influence the prime, i. e., minimum, bank interest rate. There is no federal control of the maximum, although all banks, state and national, are subject to state usury laws where applicable. See 12 U. S. C. § 85. In the range between the maximum fixed by state usury laws and the practical minimum set by federal fiscal policies (there is no law against undercutting the prime rate but bankers seldom do), bankers are free to price their loans as they choose. Moreover, charges for other banking services, such as service charges for checking privileges, are free of governmental [****13] regulation, state or federal.

Entry, branching, and acquisitions are covered by a network of state and federal statutes. A charter for a new bank, state or national, will not be granted unless the invested capital and management of the applicant, and its prospects for doing sufficient business to operate at a reasonable profit, give adequate protection against undue competition and possible failure. See, e. g., 12 U. S. C. §§ 26, 27, 51; 12 CFR § 4.1 \(b\); Pa. Stat. Ann., Tit. 7, § 819-306. Failure to meet these standards may cause the FDIC to refuse an application for insurance, 12 U. S. C. §§ 1815, 1816, and may cause the FDIC, Federal Reserve Board (FRB), and Comptroller to refuse permission to branch to insured, member, and national banks, respectively. 12 U. S. C. §§ 36, 321, 1828 \(d\). Permission to merge, consolidate, acquire assets, or assume liabilities may be refused by the agencies on the same grounds. 12 U. S. C. \(1958 ed., Supp. IV\) § 1828 \(c\), note 8, infra. Furthermore, national banks appear to be subject to state geographical [****14] limitations on branching. See 12 U. S. C. § 36 \(c\).

[*329] Banks are also subject to a number of specific provisions aimed at ensuring sound banking practices. For example, member banks of the Federal Reserve [**1723] System may not pay interest on demand deposits, 12 U. S. C. § 371a, may not invest in common stocks or hold for their own account investment securities of any one obligor in excess of 10% of the bank's unimpaired capital and surplus, see 12 U. S. C. §§ 24 Seventh, 335, and may not pay interest on time or savings deposits above the rate fixed by the FRB, 12 U. S. C. § 371b. The payment of interest on deposits by nonmember insured banks is also federally regulated. 12 U. S. C. \(1958 ed., Supp. IV\) § 1828 \(g\); 12 CFR, 1962 Supp., Part 329. In the case of national banks, the 10% limit on the obligations of a single obligor includes loans as well as investment securities. See 12 U. S. C. § 84. Pennsylvania imposes the same limitation upon banks chartered under its laws, such as Girard. Pa. Stat. Ann. (1961 Supp.), Tit. [****15] 7, § 819-1006.

But perhaps the most effective weapon of federal regulation of banking is the broad visitatorial power of federal bank examiners. Whenever the agencies deem it necessary, they may order "a thorough examination of all the affairs of the bank," whether it be a member of the FRS or a nonmember insured bank. 12 U. S. C. §§ 325, 481, 483, 1820 \(b\); 12 CFR § 4.2. Such examinations are frequent and intensive. In addition, the banks are required to furnish detailed periodic reports of their operations to the supervisory agencies. 12 U. S. C. §§ 161, 324, 1820 \(e\). In this way the agencies maintain virtually a day-to-day surveillance of the American banking system. And should they discover unsound banking practices, they are equipped with a formidable array of sanctions. If in the judgment of the FRB a member bank is making "undue use of bank credit," the Board may suspend the bank from the use of the credit facilities of the FRS. 12 U. S. C. § 301. The FDIC has an even more formidable [*330] power. If it finds "unsafe or unsound practices" in the conduct of the business [****16] of any insured bank, it may terminate the bank's insured status. 12 U. S. C. § 1818 \(a\). Such involuntary termination severs the bank's membership in the FRS, if it is a state bank, and throws it into receivership if it is a national bank. 12 U. S. C. § 1818 \(b\). Lesser, but nevertheless drastic, sanctions include publication of the results of bank examinations. 12 U. S. C. §§ 481, 1828 \(f\). As a result of the existence of this panoply of sanctions, recommendations by the agencies concerning banking practices tend to be followed by bankers without the necessity of formal compliance proceedings. 1 Davis, Administrative Law (1958), § 4.04.

Federal supervision of banking has been called "probably the outstanding example in the federal government of regulation of an entire industry through methods of supervision . . . . The system may be one of the most successful [systems of economic regulation], if not the most successful." Id., § 4.04, at 247. To the efficacy of this system we may owe, in part, the virtual disappearance of bank failures from the American economic scene.<sup>6</sup>

[****17] B. [***926] The Proposed Merger of PNB and Girard.

The Philadelphia National Bank and Girard Trust Corn Exchange Bank are, respectively, the second and third largest of the 42 commercial banks with head offices in the Philadelphia metropolitan area, which consists of the City of Philadelphia and its three contiguous counties in Pennsylvania. The home county of both banks is the [*331] city itself; Pennsylvania law, however, permits branching [**1724] into the counties contiguous to the home county, Pa. Stat. Ann. (1961 Supp.), Tit. 7, § 819-204.1, and both banks have offices throughout the four-county area. PNB, a national bank, has assets of over $ 1,000,000,000, making it (as of 1959) the twenty-first largest bank in the Nation. Girard, a state bank, is a member of the FRS and is insured by the FDIC; it has assets of about $ 750,000,000. Were the proposed merger to be consummated, the resulting bank would be the largest in the four-county area, with (approximately) 36% of the area banks' total assets, 36% of deposits, and 34% of net loans. It and the second largest (First Pennsylvania Bank and Trust Company, now the largest) would have between them 59% of [****18] the total assets, 58% of deposits, and 58% of the net loans, while after the merger the four largest banks in the area would have 78% of total assets, 77% of deposits, and 78% of net loans.

The present size of both PNB and Girard is in part the result of mergers. Indeed, the trend toward concentration is noticeable in the Philadelphia area generally, in which the number of commercial banks has declined from 108 in 1947 to the present 42. Since 1950, PNB has acquired nine formerly independent banks and Girard six; and these acquisitions have accounted for 59% and 85% of the respective banks' asset growth during the period, 63% and 91% of their deposit growth, and 12% and 37% of their loan growth. During this period, the seven largest banks in the area increased their combined share of the area's total commercial bank resources from about 61% to about 90%.

In November 1960 the boards of directors of the two banks approved a proposed agreement for their consolidation under the PNB charter. By the terms of the agreement, PNB's stockholders were to retain their share certificates, which would be deemed to represent an equal [*332] number of shares in the consolidated bank, while [****19] Girard's stockholders would surrender their shares in exchange for shares in the consolidated bank, receiving 1.2875 such shares for each Girard share. Such a consolidation is authorized, subject to the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, by 12 U. S. C. (1958 ed., Supp. IV) § 215.<sup>7</sup> [****21] But under the Bank Merger Act of 1960, 12 U. S. C. (1963 ed., Supp. IV) § 1828 [***927] (c), the Comptroller may not give his approval until he has received reports from the other two banking agencies and the Attorney General respecting the probable effects of the proposed transaction on competition.<sup>8</sup> All three reports [**1725] advised that the proposed [*333] merger

<sup>6</sup> In 1957, for example, there were three bank suspensions in the entire country by reason of financial difficulties; in 1960, two; and in 1961, nine. Of these nine, four involved state banks which were neither members of the FRS nor insured by the FDIC. 1961 Annual Report of the Comptroller of the Currency 286. In a typical year in the 1920's, roughly 600 banks failed throughout the country, about 100 of them national banks. See S. Rep. No. 196, Regulation of Bank Mergers, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 17-18.

<sup>7</sup> The proposed "merger" of appellees is technically a consolidation, since the resulting bank will be a different entity from either of the constituent banks, whereas if the transaction were a merger, Girard would disappear into PNB and PNB would survive. However, the proposed transaction resembles a merger very closely, in that PNB's shareholders are not to surrender their present share certificates and the resulting bank is to operate under PNB's charter. In any event, the statute treats mergers and consolidations essentially alike, compare 12 U. S. C. (1958 ed., Supp. IV) § 215 with § 215a, and it is not suggested that the legal question of the instant case would be affected by whether the transaction is technically a merger or a consolidation. Therefore, throughout this opinion we use the term "merger."

<sup>8</sup> Section 1828 (c) provides in pertinent part:

would have substantial anticompetitive effects in the Philadelphia metropolitan area. However, on February 24, 1961, the Comptroller approved the merger. No opinion was rendered at that time. But as required by S. 1828 \(c\), the Comptroller explained the basis for his decision to approve the merger in a statement to be included in his annual report to Congress. As to effect upon competition, he reasoned that "since there will remain an adequate number of alternative [****20] sources of banking service in Philadelphia, and in view of the beneficial effects of this consolidation upon international and national competition it was concluded that the over-all effect upon competition would not be unfavorable." He also stated that the consolidated bank "would be far better able to serve the convenience and needs of its community by being of material assistance to its city and state in their efforts to attract new industry and to retain existing industry." The day after the Comptroller approved the [*334] merger, the United States commenced the present action. No steps have been taken to consummate the merger pending the outcome of this litigation.

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [↑] [2]

[****22] C. [***928] The Trial and the District Court's Decision.

The Government's case in the District Court relied chiefly on statistical evidence bearing upon market structure and on testimony by economists and bankers to the effect that, notwithstanding the intensive governmental regulation of banking, there was a substantial area for the free play of competitive forces; that concentration of commercial banking, which the proposed merger would increase, was inimical to that free play; that the principal anticompetitive effect of the merger would be felt in the area in which the banks had their offices, thus making the four-county metropolitan area the relevant geographical market; and that commercial banking was the relevant product market. The defendants, in addition to offering contrary evidence on these points, attempted to show business justifications for the merger. They conceded that both banks were economically strong and had sound management, but offered the testimony of bankers to show that the resulting bank, with its greater prestige and increased lending limit,<sup>9</sup> would be better able to compete with large out-of-state [**1726] (particularly New York) banks, would [****23] attract new business to Philadelphia, and in general would promote the economic development of the metropolitan area.<sup>10</sup>

HN3 [↑] "No insured [by FDIC] bank shall merge or consolidate with any other insured bank or, either directly or indirectly, acquire the assets of, or assume liability to pay any deposits made in, any other insured bank without the prior written consent (i) of the Comptroller of the Currency if the acquiring, assuming, or resulting bank is to be a national bank or a District [of Columbia] bank, or (ii) of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System if the acquiring, assuming, or resulting bank is to be a State member bank (except a District bank), or (iii) of the [Federal Deposit Insurance] Corporation if the acquiring, assuming, or resulting bank is to be a nonmember insured bank (except a District bank). . . . In granting or withholding consent under this subsection, the Comptroller, the Board, or the Corporation, as the case may be, shall consider the financial history and condition of each of the banks involved, the adequacy of its capital structure, its future earnings prospects, the general character of its management, the convenience and needs of the community to be served, and whether or not its corporate powers are consistent with the purposes of this chapter. In the case of a merger, consolidation, acquisition of assets, or assumption of liabilities, the appropriate agency shall also take into consideration the effect of the transaction on competition (including any tendency toward monopoly), and shall not approve the transaction unless, after considering all of such factors, it finds the transaction to be in the public interest. In the interests of uniform standards, before acting on a merger, consolidation, acquisition of assets, or assumption of liabilities under this subsection, the agency (unless it finds that it must act immediately in order to prevent the probable failure of one of the banks involved) shall request a report on the competitive factors involved from the Attorney General and the other two banking agencies referred to in this subsection . . . . The Comptroller, the Board, and the Corporation shall each include in its annual report to the Congress a description of each merger, consolidation, acquisition of assets, or assumption of liabilities approved by it during the period covered by the report, along with the following information: . . . a statement by the Comptroller, the Board, or the Corporation, as the case may be, of the basis for its approval."

<sup>9</sup> See 12 U. S. C. § 84, p. 329, supra. The resulting bank would have a lending limit of $ 15,000,000, of which $ 1,000,000 would not be attributable to the merger but to unrelated accounting factors.

<sup>10</sup> There was evidence that Philadelphia, although it ranks fourth or fifth among the Nation's urban areas in terms of general commercial activity, ranks only ninth in terms of the size of its largest bank, and that some large business firms which have their head offices in Philadelphia must seek elsewhere to satisfy their banking needs because of the inadequate lending limits of [****24] [*335] Upon this record, the District Court held that: (1) the passage of the Bank Merger Act of 1960 did not repeal by implication the antitrust laws insofar as they may apply to bank mergers; (2) § 7 of the Clayton Act is inapplicable to bank mergers because banks are not corporations "subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission"; (3) but assuming that § 7 is applicable, the four-county Philadelphia metropolitan area is not the relevant geographical market because PNB and Girard actively compete with other banks for bank business throughout the greater part of the northeastern United States; (4) but even assuming that § 7 is applicable and that the four-county area is the relevant market, there is no reasonable probability that competition among commercial banks in the area will be substantially lessened as the result of the merger; (5) since the merger does not violate § 7 of the Clayton Act, a fortiori it does not violate § 1 of the Sherman Act; (6) the merger will benefit the Philadelphia metropolitan area economically. The District Court also ruled that for the purposes of § 7, commercial banking is a line of commerce; the appellees do not contest [****25] this ruling.

[[**929] II. THE APPLICABILITY OF SECTION 7 OF THE CLAYTON ACT TO BANK MERGERS.]

A. The Original Section and the 1950 Amendment.

LEdHN[3] [3]By its terms, the present § 7 HN4 reaches acquisitions of corporate stock or share capital by any corporation engaged [*336] in commerce, but it reaches acquisitions of corporate assets only by corporations "subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission." The FTC, under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, has no jurisdiction over banks. 15 U. S. C. § 45 (a)(6).<sup>11</sup> Therefore, [[**1727]] if the proposed merger be deemed an assets acquisition, it is not within § 7.<sup>12</sup> Appellant argues vigorously that a merger is crucially different from a pure assets acquisition,<sup>13</sup> [*337] and [*337] appellees argue with equal vigor that it is crucially different

---

Philadelphia's banks; First Pennsylvania and PNB, currently the two largest banks in Philadelphia, each have a lending limit of $ 8,000,000. Girard's is $ 6,000,000.

Appellees offered testimony that the merger would enable certain economies of scale, specifically, that it would enable the formation of a more elaborate foreign department than either bank is presently able to maintain. But this attempted justification, which was not mentioned by the District Court in its opinion and has not been developed with any fullness before this Court, we consider abandoned.

<sup>11</sup> We reject the argument that § 11 of the Clayton Act, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 21, confers jurisdiction over banks upon the FTC. That section provides in pertinent part: "Authority to enforce compliance with sections 13, 14, 18, and 19 of this title [§§ 2, 3, 7, and 8 of the Clayton Act, as amended] by the persons respectively subject thereto is vested . . . in the Federal Reserve Board where applicable to banks, banking associations, and trust companies; and in the Federal Trade Commission where applicable to all other character of commerce . . ." The argument is that since the FRB has no authority to enforce the Clayton Act against bank mergers, see note 22, infra, bank mergers must fall into the residual category of "all other character of commerce" and so be subject to the FTC. However, there is no intimation in the legislative history of the 1950 amendment to § 7 and 11 that the FTC's traditional lack of jurisdiction over banks was to be disturbed. Moreover, it is clear from the language of § 11 that "banks, banking associations, and trust companies" are meant to comprise a distinct "character of commerce," and so cannot be part of the "other character of commerce" reserved to the FTC.

The exclusion of banks from the FTC's jurisdiction appears to have been motivated by the fact that banks were already subject to extensive federal administrative controls. See T. C. Hurst & Son v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 268 F. 874, 877 (D. C. E. D. Va. 1920).

<sup>12</sup> No argument is made in this case that banking is not commerce, and therefore that § 7 is inapplicable; plainly, such an argument would have no merit. See Transamerica Corp. v. Board of Govs. of Fed. Res. Sys., 206 F.2d 163, 166 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1953); cf. United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533.

<sup>13</sup> "A merger necessarily involves the complete disappearance of one of the merging corporations. A sale of assets, on the other hand, may involve no more than a substitution of cash for some part of the selling company's properties, with no change in corporate structure and no change in stockholder interests. Shareholders of merging corporations surrender their interests in those corporations in exchange for their very different rights in the resulting corporation. In an asset acquisition, however, the shareholders of the selling corporation obtain no interest in the purchasing corporation and retain no interest in the assets from a pure stock acquisition.<sup>14</sup> [***930] Both positions, we think, have merit; a merger fits neither category neatly. Since the literal terms of § 7 thus do not dispose [****26] of our question, we must determine whether a congressional design to embrace bank mergers is revealed in the history of the statute. The question appears to be one of first impression; we have been directed to no previous case in which a merger or consolidation was challenged under § 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, where the acquiring corporation was not subject to the FTC's jurisdiction.

LEdHN[4] [4]

[****27] LEdHN[5] [5]

When it was first enacted in 1914, § 7 referred only to corporate acquisitions of stock and share capital; it was silent as to assets acquisitions and as to mergers and consolidations. [*338] Act of October 15, 1914, c. 323, § 7, 38 Stat. 731-732, note 18, infra. It is true that the omission may not have been an oversight. Congress' principal concern was with the activities of holding companies, [****29] and specifically with the practice whereby corporations secretly acquired control of their competitors by purchasing the stock of those companies. Although assets acquisitions and mergers were known forms of corporate amalgamation at the time, their no less dangerously anticompetitive effects may not have been fully apparent to the Congress.<sup>15</sup> Still, the statutory language, read in the light of the overriding congressional purpose to [*1728] control corporate concentrations tending to monopoly, lent itself to a construction whereby § 7 would have reached at least mergers and consolidations. It would hardly have done violence to the language so to have interpreted the vague term "share capital," see 30 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 1024, 1027-1028 (1962), or to have adopted the view that: "where the assets are exchanged for the stock of the purchasing company, assuming that the two companies were previously in competition, it is apparent that the seller has acquired stock in a competing company . . . [and] therefore, that in effecting the merger section 7 was violated and hence the distribution of the stock received by the selling company to its shareholders and its subsequent [****30] dissolution are no bar to proceedings by the government to set aside the purchase." Handler, Industrial Mergers and the Anti-Trust Laws, 32 Col. L. Rev. 179, 266 (1932).<sup>16</sup>

But the courts found mergers to be beyond the reach of § 7, even when the merger technique had supplanted [*339] stock acquisitions as the prevalent mode of corporate amalgamation. United States v. Celanese Corp. of America, 91 F.Supp. 14 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1950); see Thatcher Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n and Swift & Co. v. Federal Trade [****31] Comm'n, decided together with Federal Trade Comm'n v. Western Meat Co., 272 U.S. 554; Arrow-Hart & Hegeman Elec. Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, [***931] 291 U.S. 587.<sup>17</sup> As a result, § 7 transferred. In a merger, unlike an asset acquisition, the resulting firm automatically acquires all the rights, powers, franchises, liabilities, and fiduciary rights and obligations of the merging firms. In a merger, but not in an asset acquisition, there is the likelihood of a continuity of management and other personnel. Finally, a merger, like a stock acquisition, necessarily involves the acquisition by one corporation of an immediate voice in the management of the business of another corporation; no voice in the decisions of another corporation is acquired by purchase of some part of its assets." Brief for the United States, 75-76.

<sup>14</sup> "[A] merger such as appellees' may be effected upon the affirmative vote of the holders of only two-thirds of the outstanding stock of each bank . . . but if PNB were acquiring all of the Girard stock each Girard shareholder could decide for himself whether to transfer his shares. A merger requires public notice whereas stock can be acquired privately. A shareholder dissenting from a merger has the right to receive the appraised value of his shares . . . whereas no shareholder has a comparable right in an acquisition of stock. Furthermore the corporate existence of a merged company is terminated by a merger, but remains unaffected by an acquisition of stock." Brief for Appellees, 30-31.

<sup>15</sup> The legislative history of the 1914 Act is reviewed in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 313-314, and notes 22-24.

<sup>16</sup> In the case of an acquisition like the instant one, in which shares in the acquired corporation are to be exchanged for shares in the resulting corporation, a fortiori we discern no difficulty in conceptualizing the transaction as a "stock acquisition." Compare note 13, supra.

[**1729] became largely [*340] a dead letter. Comment, 68 Yale L. J. 1627, 1629-1630 (1959); see Federal Trade Commission, The Merger Movement: A Summary Report (1948), 1, 3-6; Henderson, The Federal Trade Commission (1924), 40. Meanwhile, this Court's decision in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, stirred concern whether the Sherman Act alone was a check against corporate acquisitions. Note, 52 Col. L. Rev. 766, 768 (1952).

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

[****32] [LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7] It was against this background that Congress in 1950 amended § 7 to include an assets-acquisition provision. Act of December 29, 1950 (Celler-Kefauver Antimerger Act), c. 1184, 64 Stat. 1125-1126, 15 U. S. C. § 18.<sup>18</sup> [****34] [*341] The legislative history is [***932] silent on the specific questions why the amendment made no explicit reference to mergers, why assets acquisitions by corporations not subject to FTC

---

<sup>17</sup> Statements to the same effect may be found in, e. g., Brown Shoe Co., supra, at 313-314, 316; United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 592; United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 507, n. 7; United States v. Columbia Pictures Corp., 189 F.Supp. 153, 182 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1960). See also 33 Op. Atty. Gen. 225, 241 (1922); Hernacki, Mergerism and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 20 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 659, 676-677 (1952); Wemple and Cutler, The Federal Bank Merger Law and the Antitrust Laws, 16 Bus. Law. 994, 999-1000 (1961); Note, Section 7 of the Clayton Act: A Legislative History, 52 Col. L. Rev. 766, 768-769 (1952).

Actually, the holdings in the three cases that reached this Court, Thatcher, Swift, and Arrow-Hart, were quite narrow. See generally Note, 26 Col. L. Rev. 594-596 (1926). They were based not on a lack of substantive power under § 7, but on the enforcement section, § 11, which limited the FTC's remedial powers to "an order requiring such person to cease and desist from such violations [of §§ 2, 3, 7, and 8 of the Clayton Act], and divest itself of the stock held or rid itself of the directors chosen contrary to the provisions of sections seven and eight of this Act." 38 Stat. 735. Faced with Congress' evident refusal to confer upon the FTC the ordinary powers of a court of equity, this Court held that unless the assets were acquired after the FTC's order of stock divestiture had been issued (which was the case in Federal Trade Comm'n v. Western Meat Co., supra, where the Commission was sustained), the Commission could not order a divestiture of assets. Compare Board of Govs. of Fed. Res. Sys. v. Transamerica Corp., 184 F.2d 311 (C. A. 9th Cir. 1950), with Federal Trade Comm'n v. International Paper Co., 241 F.2d 372 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1956). Since under this Court's decisions the FTC was powerless even where the transfer of assets was an evasive maneuver aimed at defeating the FTC's remedial jurisdiction over stock acquisitions violative of § 7, a fortiori the Commission was powerless against the typical merger. See Arrow-Hart & Hegeman Elec. Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra, at 595, 598-599. As part of the 1950 amendments to the Clayton Act, § 11 was amended to read: "an order requiring such person to . . . divest itself of the stock, or other share capital, or assets, held . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 21. Whether as an original matter Thatcher, Swift and Arrow-Hart were correctly decided is no longer an open question, since they were the explicit premise of the 1950 amendment to § 7. See State Bd. of Ins. v. Todd Shipyards Corp., 370 U.S. 451, 458, p. 349, infra.

The question of the FTC's remedial powers under § 11 of the Clayton Act is to be distinguished from that of its remedial powers under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45(b). In Federal Trade Comm'n v. Eastman Kodak Co., 274 U.S. 619, the Court, relying on Thatcher and Swift, held that the Commission had no power to order divestiture in § 5 proceedings. But cf. Gilbertville Trucking Co. v. United States, 371 U.S. 115, 129-131; Pan American World Airways v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 312, and n. 17.

<sup>18</sup> See note 1, supra, for text of amended § 7. The original § 7 read in pertinent part: "no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where the effect of such acquisition may be to substantially lessen competition between the corporation whose stock is so acquired and the corporation making the acquisition, or to restrain such commerce in any section or community, or tend to create a monopoly of any line of commerce."

The passage of the 1950 amendment followed many years of unsuccessful attempts to enact legislation plugging the assets-acquisition loophole. See Note, 52 Col. L. Rev. 766-767, notes 3 and 4 (1952). To be sure, the 1950 amendment was intended not only to enlarge the number of transactions covered by § 7 but also to change the test of illegality. The legislative history pertinent to the latter point is reviewed in Brown Shoe Co., supra, at 315-323, and is not directly relevant to the present discussion. jurisdiction were not included, and what these omissions signify. Nevertheless, the basic congressional design clearly emerges and from that design the answers to these questions may be inferred. Congress primarily sought to bring mergers within § 7 and thereby close what it regarded as a loophole in the section.<sup>19</sup> [****35] But, in addition, it sought [**1730] to reach transactions such as that involved in Columbia Steel, which was a simple purchase [*342] of assets and not a merger.<sup>20</sup> In other words, Congress contemplated that the 1950 amendment would give § 7 a reach which would bring the entire range of corporate amalgamations, from pure stock acquisitions [***33] to pure [***933] assets acquisitions, within the scope of § 7. Thus, the stock-acquisition and assets-acquisition provisions, read together, reach mergers, which fit neither category perfectly but lie somewhere between the two ends of the spectrum. See pp. 336-337, and notes 13, 14, supra. So construed, the specific exception for acquiring corporations not subject to the FTC's jurisdiction excludes from the coverage of § 7 only assets acquisitions by such corporations when not accomplished by merger.

[****36] [*343] This construction is supported by a number of specific considerations.

First. Any other construction would be illogical and disrespectful of the plain congressional purpose in amending § 7, because it would create a large loophole in a statute designed to close a loophole. It is unquestioned that HN5 [the stock-acquisition provision of § 7] embraces every corporation engaged in commerce, including banks. And it is plain that Congress, in amending § 7, considered a distinction for antitrust purposes between acquisition of corporate control by purchase of stock and acquisition by merger unsupportable in reason, and sought to overrule the decisions of this Court which had recognized such a distinction.<sup>21</sup> If, therefore, mergers in industries outside <sup>19</sup> "The purpose of the proposed legislation [the 1950 amendments to § 7] is to prevent corporations from acquiring another corporation by means of the acquisition of its assets, whereunder [sic] the present law it is prohibited from acquiring the stock of said corporation. Since the acquisition of stock is significant chiefly because it is likely to result in control of the underlying assets, failure to prohibit direct purchase of the same assets has been inconsistent and paradoxical as to the over-all effect of existing law." S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. 2. This theme pervaded congressional consideration of the proposed amendments. See, e. g., H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., passim; Hearing before Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary on Amending Sections 7 and 11 of the Clayton Act, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., ser. 10, pp. 11-13, 28-29, 39, 117; Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on Corporate Mergers and Acquisitions, 81st Cong., 1st and 2d Sess. 4-5, 15, 20, 62-63, 126-129, 139, 321; 95 Cong. Rec. 11485 (Congressman Celler, sponsor of the bill to amend § 7 in the House: "this bill seeks to plug a loophole in the present antitrust laws. . . . It is time to stop, look, and listen and to call a halt to the merger movement that is going on in this country"), 11493-11494, 11497, 11502; 96 Cong. Rec. 16433, 16443.

<sup>20</sup> Columbia Steel involved the cash purchase by United States Steel Corporation of the physical assets of Consolidated Steel Corporation; there was no exchange of shares and no alteration of Consolidated's corporate identity. See Transcript of Record, United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495 (No. 461, October Term, 1947), pp. 453-475. As a result of the purchase, in its horizontal aspect, U.S. Steel controlled about 24% of the structural steel fabricating market in an 11-state western area. This Court held that the acquisition could not be reached under § 7 of the Clayton Act, see 334 U.S., at 507, n. 7, and did not violate the Sherman Act. It should be noted, however, that the Court regarded the 24% market-share figure proposed by the Government as a "doubtful assumption" and also pointed to "unusual conditions" tending to mitigate the anticompetitive effect of the acquisition. 334 U.S., at 529. Columbia Steel was repeatedly cited by Congressmen considering the amendment of § 7 as an example of what they conceived to be the inability of the Sherman Act, as then construed, to deal with the problems of corporate concentration. See, e. g., H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 10-11, and n. 16; Hearing before Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary on Amending Sections 7 and 11 of the Clayton Act, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., ser. 10, pp. 28, 73; Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on Corporate Mergers and Acquisitions, 81st Cong., 1st and 2d Sess. 24; 96 Cong. Rec. 16453 (Senator Kefauver, Senate sponsor of the bill to amend § 7: "the Columbia Steel Co. case is a vivid illustration of the necessity for the proposed amendment of the Clayton Act"), 16503; and cf. 96 Cong. Rec. 16498-16499.

<sup>21</sup> See note 19, supra. The congressional attitude toward this Court's Thatcher, Swift, and Arrow-Hart decisions is typified in this remark of Senator O'Conor's: "The Court, in effect, said that the [Federal Trade] Commission was quite free to use the power which Congress had conferred upon it, so long as it confined the use of that power to ordering the divestiture of pieces of paper which happened to be worthless." 96 Cong. Rec. 16433. Senator O'Mahoney remarked, for example, that there was "no doubt

374 U.S. 321, *343; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1730; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***933; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****36

[*344] the FTC's [**1731] jurisdiction were deemed beyond the reach of § 7, the result would be precisely that difference in treatment which Congress rejected. On the other hand, excluding from the section assets acquisitions not by merger in those industries does not appear to create a lacuna of practical importance.<sup>22</sup> [****37]

[****38] LEdHN[8] [↑] [8]

[****39] [*345] Second. [***934] The Congress which debated the bill to amend § 7 was fully aware of the important differences between a [**1732] merger and a pure purchase of assets. For example, Senator Kilgore remarked:

"When you talk about mergers, you are talking about a stock transaction. . . .

. . . .

of the fundamental fact that an innocent defect in the drafting of section 7 of the Clayton Act back in 1914 had resulted in creating a great opportunity for escape by flagrant violators of the law." 96 Cong. Rec. 16443. After sharply criticizing this Court's decisions, the Senator continued: "I take it the record is perfectly clear that what this bill purports to do is to correct an omission in the original Clayton Act. When the authors of the Clayton Act and the Congress which passed it enacted the bill into law they thought they were giving the Federal Trade Commission administrative authority to prevent monopolistic mergers . . ." Ibid. So also, Senator Kefauver observed: "it would have been much better for the economy of the country to have repealed sections 7 and 11 of the Clayton Act rather than let this wide-open loophole to remain. Most of the large and monopolistic mergers which have become detrimental to the free-enterprise system of our Nation have occurred by way of this plain evasion of the intent of the original Clayton Act." 96 Cong. Rec. 16451.

<sup>22</sup> A cash purchase of another bank's assets would not seem to be a fully effective method of corporate acquisition. In other industries, a cash purchase of plant, inventory, patents, trade secrets, and the like will often directly enhance the competitive position of the acquiring corporation, as in Columbia Steel Co. But a bank desiring to increase its share of banking business through corporate acquisition would ordinarily need to acquire the other bank's deposits and capital, not merely its assets. For more deposits mean more working capital, and additions to capital and surplus increase the lending limit. A cash purchase, in effect, only substitutes cash for cash, since bank assets consist principally of cash and very liquid securities and loans receivable, and adds nothing to the acquiring bank's capital and surplus or to its working capital. True, an exchange of its stock for assets would achieve the acquiring bank's objectives. We are clear, however, that in light of Congress' overriding purpose, in amending § 7, to close the loophole in the original section, if such an exchange (or other clearly evasive transaction) were tantamount in its effects to a merger, the exchange would not be an "assets" acquisition within the meaning of § 7 but would be treated as a transaction subject to that section.

We have not overlooked the fact that there are corporations in other industries not subject to the FTC's jurisdiction. Chief among these are air carriers subject to the Civil Aeronautics Board and other carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Both agencies have been given, expressly, broad powers to exempt mergers and acquisitions in whatever form from the antitrust laws. See 49 U. S. C. §§ 1378, 1384; 49 U. S. C. § 5 (11) and (13). Therefore, the exclusion of assets acquisitions in such industries from § 7 would seem to have little significance.

Section 11 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 21, vests the FRB with authority to enforce § 7 "where applicable to banks." This provision has been in the Act since it was first passed in 1914 and was not changed by the 1950 amendments. The Bank Merger Act of 1960, assigning roles in merger applications to the FDIC and the Comptroller of the Currency as well as to the FRB, plainly supplanted, we think, whatever authority the FRB may have acquired under § 11, by virtue of the amendment of § 7, to enforce § 7 against bank mergers. Since the Bank Merger Act applies only to mergers, consolidations, acquisitions of assets, and assumptions of liabilities but not to outright stock acquisitions, the FRB's authority under § 11 as it existed before the 1950 amendment of § 7 remains unaffected. See, e. g., Transamerica Corp. v. Board of Govs. of Fed. Res. Sys., 206 F.2d 163 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1953).

Nothing in this opinion, of course, limits the power of the FTC, under §§ 7 and 11, as amended, to reach any transaction, including mergers and consolidations, in the broad range between and including pure stock and pure assets acquisitions, where the acquiring corporation is subject to the FTC's jurisdiction, see 15 U. S. C. § 45 (a)(6), and to order divestiture of the stock, share capital, or assets acquired in the transaction, see 15 U. S. C. § 21.

". . . Actually what you do is merge the stockholdings of both corporations, and instead of that -- I am thinking in practical terms -- you merge the corporate entities of the two corporations and you get one corporation out of it, and you issue stock in the one corporation in lieu of the stock in the other corporation, whereupon the stock of the corporation which had been merged is canceled by the new corporation, and you have one corporation handling the operation of two. So it really is a stock transaction in the final wind-up, regardless of what you call it. But what I call a purchase of assets is where you purchase physical assets, things upon which you could lay your hand, either in the records or on the ground . . . ." Hearings before a Subcommittee of [*346] the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on Corporate Mergers and Acquisitions, 81st Cong. [****40], 1st and 2d Sess. 176; to the same effect, see, e. g., id. at 100, 139, 320-325.

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9] Plainly, acquisition of "assets" as used in amended § 7 was not meant to be a simple equivalent of acquisition by merger, but was intended rather to ensure against the blunting of the antimerger thrust of the section by evasive transactions such as had rendered the original section ineffectual. Thus, the stock-acquisition provision of § 7, though reenacted in haec verba by the 1950 amendment, must be deemed expanded in its new context to include, at the very least, acquisitions by [***935] merger or consolidation, transactions which entail a transfer of stock of the parties, while the assets-acquisition provision clearly reaches corporate acquisitions involving no such transfer. And see note 22, supra. This seems to be the point of Congressman Patman's remark, typical of many, that: "What this bill does is to put all corporate mergers on the same footing, whether the result of the acquisitions of stock or the acquisition of physical assets." Hearings, supra, at 126. To the same effect is the House [****41] Report on the bill to amend § 7: "The bill retains language of the present statute which is broad enough to prevent evasion of the central purpose. It covers not only purchase of assets or stock but also any other method of acquisition . . . . It forbids not only direct acquisitions but also indirect acquisitions . . . ." H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 8-9.

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10] Third. The legislative history shows that the objective of including the phrase "corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission" in § 7 was not to limit the amalgamations to be covered by the amended statute but to make explicit the role of the FTC in administering the section. The predominant focus of the hearings, [*347] debates, and committee reports was upon the powers of the FTC. The decisions of this Court which had uncovered the loophole in the original § 7 -- Thatcher, Swift, and Arrow-Hart -- had not rested directly upon the substantive coverage of § 7, but rather upon the limited scope of the FTC's divestiture powers under § 11. See note 17, supra. There were intimations [****42] that the courts' power to enforce § 7 might be far greater. See Thatcher Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra, at 561; Swift & Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra, at 563; Federal Trade Comm'n v. Eastman Kodak Co., 274 U.S. 619, 624; Arrow-Hart & Hegeman Elec. Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra, at 598-599; Irvine, The Uncertainties of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 14 Cornell L. Q. 28 (1928). Thus, [**1733] the loophole was sometimes viewed as primarily a gap in the FTC's jurisdiction.<sup>23</sup> Furthermore, although the Clayton Act has always provided for dual enforcement by court and agency, see 15 U. S. C. § 25; United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629; United States Alkali Export Assn. v. United States, 325 U.S. 196, 208, prior to the 1950 amendment enforcement of § 7 was left largely to the FTC. Martin, Mergers and the Clayton Act (1959), 205, 219; Montague, The Celler Anti-Merger Act: An Administrative Problem in an Economic Crisis, 37 A. B. A. J. 253 [*348] (1951). And the impetus [****43] to amend § 7 came in large part from the FTC. See, e. g., Martin, supra, 187-194; Federal [***936] Trade Commission, Annual Reports, 1928, pp. 18-19; 1940, pp. 12-13; 1948, pp. 11-22; The Merger Movement: A Summary Report (1948). Congress in 1950 clearly intended to remove all question concerning the FTC's remedial power over corporate acquisitions, and therefore explicitly enlarged the FTC's jurisdiction. Congress' choice of this means of underscoring the FTC's role in enforcing § 7 provides no basis for a construction which would undercut the dominant congressional purpose of eliminating the difference in treatment accorded stock acquisitions and mergers by the original § 7 as construed.

<sup>23</sup> See, e. g., statement of Assistant Attorney General Bergson: "If it § 7 is to have any significant effect for the future, it is essential that it be amended so that the Federal Trade Commission will be in a position to deal with the merger problem as it exists today." Hearing before Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary on Amending Sections 7 and 11 of the Clayton Act, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., ser. 10, p. 28. See also 96 Cong. Rec. 16437, 16452-16453; 95 Cong. Rec. 11490-11491, 11499, 11504 (Representative Byrne: "the suggested amendment to sections 7 and 11 of the Clayton Act would merely give the [Federal Trade] Commission the same power in regard to asset acquisitions that it already possesses over acquisitions of stock. This would close the loophole and restore meaning to the statute.").

[****44] LEdHN[11]↑ [11] Fourth. It is settled law that HN6↑ "immunity from the antitrust laws is not lightly implied." California v. Federal Power Comm'n, 369 U.S. 482, 485. Cf. United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 198-199; United States v. Southern Pac. Co., 259 U.S. 214, 239-240. This canon of construction, which reflects the felt indispensable role of antitrust policy in the maintenance of a free economy, is controlling here. For there is no indication in the legislative history to the 1950 amendment of § 7 that Congress wished to confer a special dispensation upon the banking industry; if Congress had so wished, moreover, surely it would have exempted the industry from the stock-acquisition as well as the assets-acquisition provision.

LEdHN[12]↑ [12]LEdHN[13]↑ [13]LEdHN[14]↑ [14] [****45] Of course, our construction of the amended § 7 is not foreclosed because, after the passage of the amendment, some members of Congress, and for a time the Justice Department, voiced the view that bank mergers were still beyond the reach of the section.<sup>24</sup> [****47] "HN7↑ The views of a subsequent [*349] Congress form a hazardous basis for inferring the intent of an earlier one." United States v. Price, 361 U.S. 304, 313; see Rainwater v. United [**1734] States, 356 U.S. 590, 593; United States v. United Mine Workers, 330 U.S. 258, 282; cf. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 590. This holds true even though misunderstanding of the scope of § 7 may have played some part in the passage of the Bank Merger Act of 1960.<sup>25</sup> There is a question, to which we shall shortly turn, whether there exists such inconsistency between the Bank Merger Act and § 7, as we now construe it, as to require a holding that § 7 must be deemed repealed pro tanto; but that is a different question from [****46] whether misunderstanding of the scope of § 7 is relevant to our task of defining what scope Congress gave the section in 1950. When Congress enacted the Bank Merger Act, [***937] the applicability of § 7 to bank mergers was still to be authoritatively determined; it was a subject of speculation. Thus, this is not a case in which our "earlier decisions are part of the arch on which the new structure rests, [and] we [must] refrain from disturbing them lest we change the design that Congress fashioned." State Board of Ins. v. Todd Shipyards Corp., 370 U.S. 451, 458. Cf. note 17, supra. The design fashioned in the Bank Merger Act was predicated upon uncertainty as to the scope of § 7, and we do no violence to that design by dispelling the uncertainty.

[*350] B. The Effect of the Bank Merger Act of 1960.

LEdHN[15A]↑ [15A]LEdHN[17]↑ [17] Appellees contended below that the Bank Merger Act, by directing the banking agencies to consider competitive factors before approving mergers, 12 U. S. C. (1958 ed., Supp. IV) § 1828 (c), note 8, supra, immunizes approved mergers from challenge under the federal antitrust laws.<sup>26</sup> [****49] We think the District Court was correct in rejecting this contention. No express immunity is conferred by the Act.<sup>27</sup> HN8↑ Repeals of the antitrust laws by implication from a regulatory statute are strongly [****48] disfavored,

---

<sup>24</sup> See, e. g., Staff of Subcommittee No. 5 of House Committee on the Judiciary, 82d Cong., 2d Sess., Bank Mergers and Concentration of Banking Facilities (1952) vii; H. R. 5948, printed in 102 Cong. Rec. 2108-2109 (1956); Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency on the Financial Institutions Act of 1957, 85th Cong., 1st Sess., pt. 2, p. 1030 (testimony of Attorney General Brownell); H. R. Rep. No. 1416, Regulation of Bank Mergers, 86th Cong., 2d Sess. 9; S. Rep. No. 196, Regulation of Bank Mergers, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 1-2, 5.

<sup>25</sup> See, e. g., remarks of Representative Spence: "The Clayton Act is ineffective as to bank mergers because in the case of banks it covers only stock acquisitions and bank mergers are not accomplished that way." 106 Cong. Rec. 7257 (1960). See also note 24, supra.

<sup>26</sup> This contention was abandoned on appeal. We consider it, nevertheless, because it touches the proper relations of the judicial and administrative spheres. United States v. Western Pac. R. Co., 352 U.S. 59, 63.

374 U.S. 321, *350; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1734; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***937; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****48

<sup>28</sup> [****50] and [*351] have only been found [**1735] in cases of plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions. <sup>29</sup> Two recent cases, Pan American World Airways v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, and California v. Federal Power Comm'n, 369 U.S. 482, [***938] illustrate this principle. In Pan American, the Court held that because the Civil Aeronautics Board had been given broad powers to enforce the competitive standard clearly delineated by the Civil Aeronautics Act, and to immunize a variety of transactions from the operation of the antitrust laws, the Sherman Act could not be applied to facts composing the precise ingredients of a case subject to the Board's broad regulatory and remedial powers; in contrast, the banking agencies have authority neither to enforce the antitrust laws against mergers, cf. note 22, supra, nor to grant immunity from those laws.

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [↑] [16]

[LEdHN\[15B\]](#) [↑] [15B]

In the California case, on the other hand, the Court held that the FPC's approval of a merger did not confer immunity from § 7 of the Clayton Act, even though, as in the instant case, the agency had taken the competitive factor into account in passing upon the merger application. See 369 U.S., at 484-485, 487-488. We think California is controlling here. Although the Comptroller was required to consider effect upon competition in passing upon appellees' merger application, he was not required to give this factor any particular weight; he was not even required to (and did not) hold a hearing before approving the application; and there is no specific provision for judicial review of his decision.<sup>30</sup> Plainly, the [*352] range [****51] and scope of administrative powers under the Bank Merger Act bear little resemblance to those involved in Pan American.

Nor did Congress, in passing the Bank Merger Act, embrace the view that federal regulation of banking is so comprehensive that enforcement of the antitrust laws would be either unnecessary, in light of the completeness of the regulatory structure, or disruptive of that structure. On the contrary, the legislative history of the Act seems clearly to refute any suggestion that applicability of the antitrust laws was to be affected. Both the House and Senate Committee Reports stated that the Act would not affect in any way the applicability [****52] of the antitrust laws to bank acquisitions. H. R. Rep. No. 1416, 86th Cong., 2d Sess. 9; S. Rep. No. 196, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 3. See also, e. g., 105 Cong. Rec. 8131 (remarks of Senator Robertson, the Act's sponsor). Moreover, bank regulation is in most respects less complete than public utility regulation, to which interstate rail and air carriers, among others, are subject. Rate regulation in the banking industry is limited and largely indirect, see p. 328, supra;

<sup>27</sup> Contrast this with the express exemption provisions of, e. g., the Federal Aviation Act, 49 U. S. C. § 1384; Federal Communications Act, 47 U. S. C. §§ 221 (a), 222 (c)(1); Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U. S. C. §§ 5 (11), 5b (9), 22; Shipping Act, 46 U. S. C. (1958 ed. Supp. III) § 814; Webb-Pomerene Act, 15 U. S. C. § 62; and the Clayton Act itself, § 7, 15 U. S. C. § 18.

<sup>28</sup> See United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 314-315; United States v. Joint Traffic Assn., 171 U.S. 505; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 343 (plurality opinion), 374-376 (dissenting opinion); United States v. Pacific & Arctic Ry. & Nav. Co., 228 U.S. 87, 105, 107; Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 161-162; Central Transfer Co. v. Terminal Railroad Assn., 288 U.S. 469, 474-475; Terminal Warehouse Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 297 U.S. 500, 513-515; United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 197-206; United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 226-228; Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 456-457; United States Alkali Export Assn. v. United States, 325 U.S. 196, 205-206; Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, 325 U.S. 797, 809-810; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1; United States v. Radio Corp. of America, 358 U.S. 334; Maryland & Va. Milk Producers Assn. v. United States, 362 U.S. 458, 464-467; California v. Federal Power Comm'n, 369 U.S. 482; Pan American World Airways v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 304, 305; Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341.

<sup>29</sup> See, e. g., Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., supra, at 163; Pan American World Airways v. United States, supra, at 309-310. Cf. Texas & Pac. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co., 204 U.S. 426.

<sup>30</sup> With respect to the question (upon which we intimate no view) whether judicial review of the Comptroller's decision is possible notwithstanding the absence of a specific provision, see Note, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 756, 762-763 (1962); Note, 37 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 735, 750, n. 95 (1962); cf. 1 Davis, Administrative Law (1958), § 4.04.

banks are under no duty not to discriminate in their services; and though the location of bank offices is regulated, banks may do business -- place loans and solicit deposits -- [**1736] where they please. The fact that the banking agencies maintain a close surveillance of the industry with a view toward preventing unsound practices that might impair liquidity or lead to insolvency does not make federal banking regulation all-pervasive, although it does minimize the hazards of intense competition. Indeed, that there are so many direct public controls over unsound competitive practices in the industry refutes the argument that private controls of competition are necessary in the [***939] public interest [****53] and ought therefore to be immune from scrutiny under the antitrust laws. Cf. Kaysen and Turner, Antitrust Policy (1959), 206.

[*353] [LEdHN\[18\]](#) [↑] [18] [LEdHN\[19\]](#) [↑] [19] We note, finally, that the doctrine of "primary jurisdiction" is not applicable here. HN9 [↑] That doctrine requires judicial abstention in cases where protection of the integrity of a regulatory scheme dictates preliminary resort to the agency which administers the scheme. See Far East Conference v. United States, 342 U.S. 570; Great Northern R. Co. v. Merchants Elevator Co., 259 U.S. 285; Schwartz, Legal Restriction of Competition in the Regulated Industries: An Abdication of Judicial Responsibility, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 436, 464 (1954).<sup>31</sup> Court jurisdiction is not thereby ousted, but only postponed. See General Am. Tank Car Corp. v. El Dorado Terminal Co., 308 U.S. 422, 433; Federal Maritime Bd. v. Isbrandtsen Co., 356 U.S. 481, 498-499; [***54] 3 Davis, Administrative Law (1958), 1-55. Thus, even if we were to assume the applicability of the doctrine to merger-application proceedings before the banking agencies,<sup>32</sup> the present action would not be barred, for the agency proceeding was completed before the antitrust action was commenced. Cf. United States v. Western Pac. R. Co., 352 U.S. 59, 69; Retail Clerks Int'l Assn. v. Schermerhorn, 373 U.S. 746, 756. We recognize that the practical effect of applying the doctrine of primary [*354] jurisdiction has sometimes been to channel judicial enforcement of antitrust policy into appellate review of the agency's decision, see Federal Maritime Bd. v. Isbrandtsen Co., supra; cf. D. L. Piazza Co. v. West Coast Line, Inc., 210 F.2d 947 \(C. A. 2d Cir. 1954\), or even to preclude such enforcement entirely if the agency has the power to approve the challenged activities, see United States Nav. Co. v. Cunard S. S. Co., 284 U.S. 474; cf. United States v. Railway Express Agency, 101 F.Supp. 1008 \(D. C. D. Del. 1951\); but see [Federal Maritime Bd. v. \[\*\*\*55\] Isbrandtsen Co., supra](#). But here there may be no power of judicial review of the administrative decision approving the merger, and such approval does not in any event confer immunity from the antitrust laws, see pp. 350-352, supra. Furthermore, the considerations that militate against finding a repeal of the antitrust laws by implication from the existence of a regulatory scheme also argue persuasively against attenuating, by postponing, the courts' jurisdiction to enforce those laws.

[***56] [LEdHN\[20\]](#) [↑] [20] [LEdHN\[21\]](#) [↑] [21] [LEdHN\[22\]](#) [↑] [22] [LEdHN\[23\]](#) [↑] [23] It [***940] [**1737] should be unnecessary to add that in holding as we do that the Bank Merger Act of 1960 does not preclude application of § 7 of the Clayton Act to bank mergers, we deprive the later statute of none of its intended force. Congress plainly did not intend the 1960 Act to extinguish other sources of federal restraint of bank acquisitions having anticompetitive effects. For example, Congress certainly knew that bank mergers would continue subject to the Sherman Act, see p. 352, supra, as well as that pure stock acquisitions by banks would continue subject to § 7 of the Clayton Act. If, in addition, bank mergers are subject to § 7, we do not see how the objectives of the 1960 Act are thereby thwarted. It is not as if the Clayton and Sherman Acts embodied approaches to antitrust policy inconsistent with or unrelated to each other. The [***57] Sherman Act, of course, forbids mergers effecting an unreasonable restraint of trade. See, e. g., Northern [355] Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197; United States v. Union Pac. R. Co., 226 U.S. 61; indeed, there is presently pending before this Court a challenge to a bank merger predicated solely on the Sherman Act. United States v. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Lexington, prob. juris. noted, post, p. 824. And HN10[<sup>1</sup>] the tests of illegality under the Sherman and Clayton Acts are complementary. "The public policy announced by § 7 of the Clayton Act is to be taken into consideration in determining whether acquisition of assets . . . violates the prohibitions of the Sherman Act against unreasonable restraints." United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 507, n. 7; see Note, 52 Col. L. Rev. 766, 768, n. 10 (1952). To be sure, not every violation of § 7, as amended, would necessarily be a violation of the Sherman Act; our point is simply that since Congress passed the 1960 Act with [****58] no intention of displacing the enforcement of the Sherman Act against bank mergers -- or even of § 7 against pure stock acquisitions by banks -- continued application of § 7 to bank mergers cannot be repugnant to the design of the 1960 Act. It would be anomalous to conclude that Congress, while intending the Sherman Act to remain fully applicable to bank mergers, and § 7 of the Clayton Act to remain fully applicable to pure stock acquisitions by banks, nevertheless intended § 7 to be completely inapplicable to bank mergers.

<sup>31</sup> See generally Jaffe, Primary Jurisdiction Reconsidered. The Anti-Trust Laws, 102 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 577 (1954); Latta, Primary Jurisdiction in the Regulated Industries and the Antitrust Laws, 30 U. of Cin. L. Rev. 261 (1961); Note, Regulated Industries and the Antitrust Laws: Substantive and Procedural Coordination, 58 Col. L. Rev. 673 (1958).

<sup>32</sup> In California v. Federal Power Comm'n, supra, the Court held that the FPC must stay its proceeding on a merger application until the completion of a pending antitrust suit by the Justice Department; a fortiori, the court entertaining the suit would not be required to abstain pending consideration of the merger application by the FPC. We need not and do not consider the question whether the California decision would control here had the Comptroller been denied an opportunity to approve the merger before the antitrust suit was commenced.

III. THE LAWFULNESS OF THE PROPOSED MERGER UNDER SECTION 7.

HN11[<sup>1</sup>] The statutory test is whether the effect of the merger "may be substantially to lessen competition" "in any line of commerce in any section of the country." We analyzed the test in detail in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, and that analysis need not be repeated or extended here, for the instant case presents only a straightforward problem of application to particular facts.

[*356] LEdHN[24][<sup>1</sup>] [24] [****59] We have no difficulty in determining the "line of commerce" (relevant product or services market) and "section of the country" (relevant geographical market) in which to appraise the probable competitive effects of appellees' proposed merger. We agree with the District Court that the cluster of products (various kinds of credit) and services [***941] (such as checking accounts and trust administration) denoted by the term "commercial banking," see note 5, supra, composes a distinct line of commerce. Some commercial banking products or services are so distinctive that they are entirely free of effective competition from products or services of other financial institutions; the checking account is in this category. Others enjoy such cost advantages as to be insulated within a broad range from substitutes furnished by other institutions. For example, commercial banks compete with small-loan companies in the personal-loan market; but the small-loan companies' rates are [**1738] invariably much higher than the banks', in part, it seems, because the companies' working capital consists in substantial part of bank loans.<sup>33</sup> [****61] Finally, there are banking facilities which, [*357] [****60] although in terms of cost and price they are freely competitive with the facilities provided by other financial institutions, nevertheless enjoy a settled consumer preference, insulating them, to a marked degree, from competition; this seems to be the case with savings deposits.<sup>34</sup> In sum, it is clear that commercial banking is a market "sufficiently <sup>33</sup> Cf. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 425 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1945). In the instant case, unlike Aluminum Co., there is virtually no time lag between the banks' furnishing competing financial institutions (small-loan companies, for example) with the raw material, i. e., money, and the institutions' selling the finished product, i. e., loans; hence the instant case, compared with Aluminum Co. in this respect, is a fortiori. As one banker testified quite frankly in the instant case in response to the question: "Do you feel that you are in substantial competition with these institutions [personal-finance and sales-finance companies] that you lend . . . such money to for loans that you want to make?" -- "Oh, no, we definitely do not. If we did, we would stop making the loans to them." (R. 298.) The reason for the competitive disadvantage of most lending institutions vis-a-vis banks is that only banks obtain the bulk of their working capital without having to pay interest or comparable charges thereon, by virtue of their unique power to accept demand deposits. The critical area of short-term commercial credit, see pp. 326-327, supra, appears to be one in which banks have little effective competition, save in the case of very large companies which can meet their financing needs from retained earnings or from issuing securities or paper.

<sup>34</sup> As one witness for the defendants testified:

"We have had in Philadelphia for 50 years or more the mutual savings banks offering 1/2 per cent and in some instances more than 1/2 per cent higher interest than the commercial banks. Nevertheless, the rate of increase in savings accounts in inclusive to be meaningful in terms of trade realities." Crown Zellerbach Corp. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 296 F.2d 800, 811 (C. A. 9th Cir. 1961).

374 U.S. 321, *357; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1738; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***941; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****60

LEdHN[25] [25] [****62] LEdHN[26] [26] We part company with the District Court on the determination of the appropriate "section of the country." HN12 [26] The proper question to be asked in this case is not where the parties to the merger do business or even where they compete, but where, within the area of competitive overlap, the effect of the merger on competition will be direct and immediate. [***942] See Bock, Mergers and Markets (1960), 42. This depends upon "the geographic structure of supplier-customer relations." Kaysen and Turner, Antitrust [*358] Policy (1959), 102. In banking, as in most service industries, convenience of location is essential to effective competition. Individuals and corporations typically confer the bulk of their patronage on banks in their local community; they find it impractical to conduct their banking business at a distance.<sup>35</sup> [****65] See Transamerica Corp. v. Board [**1739] of Govs. of Fed. Res. Sys., 206 F.2d 163, 169 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1953). The factor of inconvenience localizes banking competition [****63] as effectively as high transportation costs in other industries. See, e. g., American [*359] Crystal Sugar Co. v. Cuban-American Sugar Co., 152 F.Supp. 387, 398 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1957), aff'd, 259 F.2d 524 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1958). Therefore, since, as we recently said in a related context, the "area of effective competition in the known line of commerce must be charted by careful selection of the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies," Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327 (emphasis supplied); see Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 299 and 300, n. 5, the four-county area in which appellees' offices are located would seem to be the relevant geographical market. Cf. Brown Shoe Co., supra, at 338-339. In fact, the vast bulk of appellees' business originates in the four-county area.<sup>36</sup> [****66] Theoretically, we should be concerned with the [***943] possibility commercial banks has kept pace with and in many of the banks exceeded the rate of increase of the mutual banks paying 3 1/2 per cent. . . .

"I have made some inquiries. There are four banks on the corner of Broad and Chestnut. Three of them are commercial banks all offering 3 per cent, and one is a mutual savings bank offering 3 1/2. As far as I have been able to discover, there isn't anybody in Philadelphia who will take the trouble to walk across Broad Street to get 1/2 of 1 per cent more interest. If you ask me why, I will say I do not know. Habit, custom, personal relationships, convenience, doing all your banking under one roof appear to be factors superior to changes in the interest rate level." (R. 1388-1389.)

<sup>35</sup> Consider the following colloquy between governmental counsel and a witness for the defendants:

"Q. What do you consider to be the area of a branch office?

"A. Well, there is no set rule on that. We hope to have an area from 1 1/2 to 2 miles.

"However, we have opened branches directly in the communities where other banks are established, in fact, across the street from them because it is not only a question of getting new business, it's a question of servicing and retaining the accounts that we now have.

. . . .

"Q. And your business is not necessarily dependent upon it [the customer] being within a mile or two of a branch, is it?

"A. To a large degree, it is, because we found that we were losing deposit accounts regularly from our in-town offices because other banks were opening or had offices in other sections of the city; and in order to retain those accounts and to get additional business we felt it was necessary to establish branches." (R. 1815.)

As far as the customer for a bank loan is concerned, "the size of his market is somewhat dependent upon his own size, how well he is known, and so on. For example, for small business concerns known primarily locally, they may consider that their market is a strictly local one, and they may be forced by circumstances to do business with banks in a nearby geographic relationship to them. On the other hand, as businesses increase in size, the scope of their business activities, their national reputation, the alternatives they have available to them will be spread again over a very large area, possibly as large as the entire United States." (R. 1372.) (Defendants' testimony on direct examination.)

<sup>36</sup> The figures for PNB and Girard respectively are: 54% and 63% of the dollar volume of their commercial and industrial loans originate in the four-county area; 75% and 70%, personal loans; 74% and 84%, real estate loans; 41% and 62%, lines of credit; 94% and 72%, personal trusts; 81% and 94%, time and savings deposits; 56% and 77%, demand deposits; 93% and 87%, demand deposits of individuals. Actually, these figures may be too low. The evidence discloses that most of the business done that bank offices on the perimeter of the area may be in [*360] effective competition with bank offices within; actually, this seems to be a [****64] factor of little significance.<sup>37</sup>

[****67] LEdHN/271 [27] We recognize that the area in which appellees have their offices does not [**1740] delineate with perfect accuracy an appropriate "section of the country" in which to appraise the effect of the merger upon competition. Large borrowers and large depositors, the record shows, may find it practical to do a large part of their banking business outside their home community; very small borrowers and depositors may, as a practical matter, be confined to bank offices in their immediate neighborhood; and customers [*361] of intermediate size, it would appear, deal with banks within an area intermediate between these extremes. See notes 35-37, supra. So also, some banking services are evidently more local in nature than others. But that in banking the relevant geographical market is a function of each separate customer's economic scale means simply that a workable compromise must be found: some fair intermediate delineation which avoids the indefensible extremes of drawing the market either so expansively as to make the effect of the merger upon competition seem insignificant, because only the [****68] very largest bank customers are taken into account in defining the market, or so narrowly as to place appellees in different markets, because only the smallest customers are considered. We think that the four-county Philadelphia metropolitan area, which state law apparently recognizes as a meaningful banking community in allowing [***944] Philadelphia banks to branch within it, and which would seem roughly to delineate the area in which bank customers that are neither very large nor very small find it practical to do their banking business, is a more appropriate "section of the country" in which to appraise the instant merger than any larger or smaller or different area. Cf. Hale and Hale, Market Power: Size and Shape Under the Sherman Act (1958), 119. We are helped to this conclusion by the fact that the three federal banking agencies regard the area in which banks have their offices as an "area of effective competition." Not only did the FDIC and FRB, in the reports they submitted to the Comptroller of the Currency in connection with appellees' application for permission to merge, so hold, but the Comptroller, in his statement approving the merger, agreed: "With respect to [****69] the effect upon competition, there are three separate levels and effective areas of competition involved. These are the national level for national [*362] accounts, the regional or sectional area, and the local area of the City of Philadelphia and the immediately surrounding area."

outside the area is with large borrowers and large depositors; appellees do not, by and large, deal with small businessmen and average individuals not located in the four-county area. For example, of appellees' combined total business demand deposits under $ 10,000, 94% originate in the four-county area. This reinforces the thesis that the smaller the customer, the smaller is his banking market geographically. See note 35, supra.

The appellees concede that the four-county area has sufficient commercial importance to qualify, under Brown Shoe Co., supra, at 336-337, as a "section of the country" within the meaning of § 7. See Maryland & Va. Milk Producers Assn. v. United States, 362 U.S. 458, 469; cf. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 226; Indiana Farmer's Guide Publishing Co. v. Prairie Farmer Publishing Co., 293 U.S. 268, 279.

<sup>37</sup> Appellees suggest not that bank offices skirting the four-county area provide meaningful alternatives to bank customers within the area, but that such alternatives are provided by large banks, from New York and elsewhere, which solicit business in the Philadelphia area. There is no evidence of the amount of business done in the area by banks with offices outside the area; it may be that such figures are unobtainable. In any event, it would seem from the local orientation of banking insofar as smaller customers are concerned, see notes 35 and 36, supra, that competition from outside the area would only be important to the larger borrowers and depositors. If so, the four-county area remains a valid geographical market in which to assess the anticompetitive effect of the proposed merger upon the banking facilities available to the smaller customer -- a perfectly good "line of commerce," in light of Congress' evident concern, in enacting the 1950 amendments to § 7, with preserving small business. See Brown Shoe Co., supra, at 315-316. As a practical matter the small businessman can only satisfy his credit needs at local banks. To be sure, there is still some artificiality in deeming the four-county area the relevant "section of the country" so far as businessmen located near the perimeter are concerned. But such fuzziness would seem inherent in any attempt to delineate the relevant geographical market. Note, 52 Col. L. Rev. 766, 778-779, n. 77 (1952). And it is notable that outside the four-county area, appellees' business rapidly thins out. Thus, the other six counties of the Delaware Valley account for only 2% of appellees' combined individual demand deposits; 4% demand deposits of partnerships and corporations; 7%, loans; 2%, savings deposits; 4%, business time deposits.

374 U.S. 321, *362; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1740; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***944; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****69

[**1741] [LEdHN\[28\]](#)↑ [28] [LEdHN\[29\]](#)↑ [29] Having determined the relevant market, we come to the ultimate question under § 7: whether the effect of the merger "may be substantially to lessen competition" in the relevant market. Clearly, this is not the kind of question which is susceptible of a ready and precise answer in most cases. HN13↑ It requires not merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future; this is what is meant when it is said that the amended § 7 was intended to arrest anticompetitive tendencies in their "incipiency." See Brown Shoe Co., supra, at 317, 322. [****70] Such a prediction is sound only if it is based upon a firm understanding of the structure of the relevant market; yet the relevant economic data are both complex and elusive. See generally Bok, Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the Merging of Law and Economics, 74 Harv. L. Rev. 226 (1960). And unless businessmen can assess the legal consequences of a merger with some confidence, sound business planning is retarded. See Crown Zellerbach Corp. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 296 F.2d 800, 826-827 (C. A. 9th Cir. 1961). So also, we must be alert to the danger of subverting congressional intent by permitting a too-broad economic investigation. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 313. And so in any case in which it is possible, without doing violence to the congressional objective embodied in § 7, to simplify the test of illegality, the courts ought to do so in the interest of sound and practical judicial administration. See Union Carbide Corp., Trade Reg. Rep., FTC Complaints and Orders, 1961-1963, para. 15503, at 20375-20376 (concurring opinion). This is such a case.

[LEdHN\[30\]](#)↑ [30] [****71] We noted in Brown Shoe Co., supra, at 315, that "the dominant theme pervading congressional consideration of [*363] the 1950 amendments to [§ 7] was a fear of what was considered to be a rising tide of economic concentration in the American economy." This intense congressional concern with the trend toward concentration warrants dispensing, in certain cases, with elaborate proof of market structure, market behavior, or probable [***945] anticompetitive effects. Specifically, we think that HN14↑ a merger which produces a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market, is so inherently likely to lessen competition substantially that it must be enjoined in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anticompetitive effects. See United States v. Koppers Co., 202 F.Supp. 437 (D. C. W. D. Pa. 1962).

Such a test lightens the burden of proving illegality only with respect to mergers whose size makes them inherently suspect [****72] in light of Congress' design in § 7 to prevent undue concentration. Furthermore, the test is fully consonant with economic theory.<sup>38</sup> That "competition is likely to be greatest when there are many sellers, none of which has any significant market share,"<sup>39</sup> is common ground among most economists, and was undoubtedly a premise [**1742] of congressional reasoning about the antimerger statute.

[****73]

[*364] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#)↑ [1B] The merger of appellees will result in a single bank's controlling at least 30% of the commercial banking business in the four-county Philadelphia metropolitan area.<sup>40</sup> [****74] Without attempting to

<sup>38</sup> See Kayser and Turner, Antitrust Policy (1959), 133; Stigler, Mergers and Preventive Antitrust Policy, 104 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 176, 182 (1955); Bok, supra, at 308-316, 328. Cf. Markham, Merger Policy Under the New Section 7: A Six-Year Appraisal, 43 Va. L. Rev. 489, 521-522 (1957).

<sup>39</sup> Comment, "Substantially to Lessen Competition . . .": Current Problems of Horizontal Mergers, 68 Yale L. J. 1627, 1638-1639 (1959); see, e. g., Machlup, The Economics of Sellers' Competition (1952), 84-93, 333-336; Bain, Barriers to New Competition (1956), 27. Cf. Mason, Market Power and Business Conduct: Some Comments, 46-2 Am. Econ. Rev. (1956), 471.

<sup>40</sup> See p. 331, supra. We note three factors that cause us to shade the percentages given earlier in this opinion, in seeking to calculate market share. (1) The percentages took no account of banks which do business in the four-county area but have no offices there; however, this seems to be a factor of little importance, at least insofar as smaller customers are concerned, see note 37, supra. (2) The percentages took no account of banks which have offices in the four-county area but not their home offices there; however, there seem to be only two such offices and appellees in this Court make no reference to this omission. (3) There are no percentages for the amount of business of banks located in the area, other than appellees, which originates in the area. Appellees contend that since most of the 40 other banks are smaller, they do a more concentratedly local business specify the smallest market share which would still be considered to threaten undue concentration, we are clear that 30% presents that threat.<sup>41</sup> [*365] Further, [***946] whereas presently the two largest banks in the area (First Pennsylvania and PNB) control between them approximately 44% of the area's commercial banking business, the two largest after the merger (PNB-Girard and First Pennsylvania) will control 59%. Plainly, we think, this increase of more than 33% in concentration must be regarded as significant.<sup>42</sup>

[****75] [LEdHN\[31\]](#) [↑] [31]Our conclusion that these percentages raise an inference that the effect of the contemplated merger of appellees may be substantially to lessen competition is not an arbitrary one, although neither the terms of § 7 nor the legislative history suggests that any particular percentage share was deemed critical. The House Report states that the tests of illegality under amended § 7 "are intended to be similar to those which the courts have applied in interpreting the same language as used in other sections of the Clayton Act." H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 8. Accordingly, we [**1743] have relied upon decisions under these other sections in applying § 7. See Brown Shoe Co., supra, passim; cf. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 595, and n. 15. In Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, cited in S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. 6, this Court held violative of § 3 of the Clayton Act exclusive contracts [*366] whereby the defendant company, which accounted for 23% of the sales in the relevant [****76] market and, together with six other firms, accounted for 65% of such sales, maintained control over outlets through which approximately 7% of the sales were made. In Federal Trade Comm'n v. Motion Picture Adv. Serv. Co., 344 U.S. 392, we held unlawful, under § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, rather than under § 3 of the Clayton Act, exclusive arrangements whereby the four major firms in the industry had foreclosed 75% of the relevant market; the respondent's market share, evidently, was 20%. Kessler and Stern, Competition, Contract, and Vertical Integration, 69 Yale L. J. 1, 53 n. 231 (1959). In the instant case, by way of comparison, the four largest banks after the merger will foreclose 78% of the relevant market. P. 331, supra. And in Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co., 258 U.S. 346, the Court held violative of § 3 a series of exclusive contracts whereby a single manufacturer controlled 40% of the industry's retail outlets. [***947] Doubtless these cases turned to some extent upon whether "by the nature of the market there is room for newcomers." Federal Trade Comm'n v. Motion Picture Adv. Serv. Co., supra, at 395. [****77] But they remain highly suggestive in the present context, for as we noted in Brown Shoe Co., supra, at 332, n. 55, integration by merger is more suspect than integration by contract, because of the greater permanence of the former. The market share and market concentration figures in the contract-integration cases, taken together with scholarly opinion, see notes 41 and 42, supra, support, we believe, the inference we draw in the instant case from the figures disclosed by the record.

than appellees, and hence account for a relatively larger proportion of such business. If so, we doubt much correction is needed. The five largest banks in the four-county area at present control some 78% of the area banks' assets. Thus, even if the small banks have a somewhat different pattern of business, it is difficult to see how that would substantially diminish the appellees' share of the local banking business.

No evidence was introduced as to the quantitative significance of these three factors, and appellees do not contend that as a practical matter such evidence could have been obtained. Under the circumstances, we think a downward correction of the percentages to 30% produces a conservative estimate of appellees' market share.

<sup>41</sup> Kayser and Turner, supra, note 38, suggest that 20% should be the line of prima facie unlawfulness; Stigler suggests that any acquisition by a firm controlling 20% of the market after the merger is presumptively unlawful; Markham mentions 25%. Bok's principal test is increase in market concentration, and he suggests a figure of 7% or 8%. And consult note 20, supra. We intimate no view on the validity of such tests for we have no need to consider percentages smaller than those in the case at bar, but we note that such tests are more rigorous than is required to dispose of the instant case. Needless to say, the fact that a merger results in a less-than-30% market share, or in a less substantial increase in concentration than in the instant case, does not raise an inference that the merger is not violative of § 7. See, e. g., Brown Shoe Co., supra.

<sup>42</sup> See note 41, supra. It is no answer that, among the three presently largest firms (First Pennsylvania, PNB, and Girard), there will be no increase in concentration. If this argument were valid, then once a market had become unduly concentrated, further concentration would be legally privileged. On the contrary, if concentration is already great, the importance of preventing even slight increases in concentration and so preserving the possibility of eventual deconcentration is correspondingly great. Comment, note 39, supra, at 1644.

374 U.S. 321, *366; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1743; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***947; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****77

LEdHN[32A] [32A] There is nothing in the record of this case to rebut the inherently anticompetitive tendency manifested by these percentages. There was, to be sure, testimony by bank officers to the effect that competition among banks in [*367] Philadelphia was vigorous and would continue to be vigorous after the merger. We think, however, that the District Court's reliance on such evidence was misplaced. This lay evidence on so complex an economic-legal problem as the substantiality of the effect of this merger upon competition was entitled to little weight, in view of the witnesses' failure to give concrete reasons [****78] for their conclusions.<sup>43</sup>

LEdHN[32B] [32B] LEdHN[33] [33]

Of equally [****79] little value, we think, are the assurances offered by appellees' witnesses that customers dissatisfied with the services of the resulting [**1744] bank may readily turn to the 40 other banks in the Philadelphia area. In every case short of outright monopoly, the disgruntled customer has alternatives; even in tightly oligopolistic markets, there may be small firms operating. A fundamental purpose of amending S.7 was to arrest the trend toward concentration, the tendency to monopoly, before the consumer's alternatives disappeared through merger, and that purpose would be ill-served if the law stayed its hand until 10, or 20, or 30 more Philadelphia banks were absorbed. This is not a fanciful eventuality, in view of the strong trend toward mergers evident in the area, see p. 331, supra; and we might note also that entry of new competitors into the banking field is far from easy.<sup>44</sup>

[****80]

[*368] LEdHN[34] [34] So also, we reject the position that commercial banking, because it is subject to a high degree of governmental regulation, or because it deals in the intangibles of credit and services rather than in the manufacture or sale of tangible commodities, is [***948] somehow immune from the anticompetitive effects of undue concentration. Competition among banks exists at every level -- price, variety of credit arrangements, convenience of location, attractiveness of physical surroundings, credit information, investment advice, service charges, personal accommodations, advertising, miscellaneous special and extra services -- and it is keen; on this appellees' own witnesses were emphatic.<sup>45</sup> [*369] There is no reason to [**1745] think that concentration is less

<sup>43</sup> The fact that some of the bank officers who testified represented small banks in competition with appellees does not substantially enhance the probative value of their testimony. HN15 The test of a competitive market is not only whether small competitors flourish but also whether consumers are well served. See United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F.Supp. 576, 588, 592 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1958). "Congressional concern [was] with the protection of competition, not competitors." Brown Shoe Co., supra, at 320. In an oligopolistic market, small companies may be perfectly content to follow the high prices set by the dominant firms, yet the market may be profoundly anticompetitive.

<sup>44</sup> Entry is, of course, wholly a matter of governmental grace. See p. 328, supra. In the 10-year period ending in 1961, only one new bank opened in the Philadelphia four-county area. That was in 1951. At the end of 10 years, the new bank controlled only one-third of 1% of the area's deposits.

<sup>45</sup> The following colloquy is representative:

"Q. Mr. Jennings, what is the nature of competition among commercial banks?

"A. Keen, highly competitive. I think, from my own observation, that I have never known competition among banks to be keener than it is today. . . .

"Q. In what area does competition exist? . . .

"A. I think the stiffest, sternest competition of all is in the field to obtain demand deposits and loans. . . .

"Q. What form does the competition take?

"A. It takes many forms. If we are dealing with the deposits of large corporations, wealthy individuals, I would say that most, if not all, of the major banks of the country are competing for such deposits. The same would hold true as regards loans to those corporations or wealthy individuals.

"If we go into the field of smaller loans, smaller deposits, the competition is more regional -- wide but nevertheless regional -- and there the large banks as well as the small banks are after that business with everything they have.

inimical to the free play of competition in banking than in other service industries. On the contrary, it is in all probability more inimical. For example, banks compete to fill the credit needs of businessmen. Small businessmen especially are, as a practical matter, confined to their locality for the satisfaction of their [****81] credit needs. See note 35, supra. If the number of banks in the locality is reduced, the vigor of competition for filling the marginal small business borrower's needs is likely to diminish. [*370] At the same time, his concomitantly greater difficulty in obtaining credit is likely to put him at a disadvantage vis-a-vis larger businesses with [***949] which he competes. In this fashion, concentration in banking accelerates concentration generally.

[****82] [LEdHN\[35A\]](#) [35A]

We turn now to three affirmative justifications which appellees offer for the proposed merger. The first is that only through mergers can banks follow their customers to the suburbs and retain their business. This justification does not seem particularly related to the instant merger, but in any event it has no merit. There is an alternative to the merger route: the opening of new branches in the areas to which the customers have moved -- so-called de novo branching. Appellees do not contend that they are unable to expand thus, by opening new offices rather than acquiring existing ones, and surely one premise of an antimerger statute such as § 7 is that corporate growth by internal expansion is socially preferable to growth by acquisition.

[LEdHN\[36\]](#) [36] Second, it is suggested that the increased lending limit of the resulting bank will enable it to compete with the large out-of-state banks, particularly the New York banks, for very large loans. We reject this application of the concept of "countervailing power." Cf. [****83] Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, 340 U.S. 211. If anticompetitive effects in one market could be justified by procompetitive consequences in another, the logical upshot would be that every firm in an industry could, without violating § 7, embark on a series of mergers that would make it in the end as large as the industry leader. For if all the commercial banks in the Philadelphia area merged into one, it would be smaller than the largest bank in New York City. This is not a case, plainly, where two small firms in a market propose to merge in order to be able to compete more successfully with the leading firms in that [*371] market. Nor is it a case in which lack of adequate banking facilities is causing hardships to individuals or businesses in the community. The present two largest banks in Philadelphia have lending limits of $ 8,000,000 each. The only businesses located in the Philadelphia area which find such limits inadequate are large enough readily to obtain bank credit in other cities.

---

....

"Q. What form does the competition take? Is it competition in price?

"A. No, I wouldn't say that it is competition as to price. After all, interest rates are regulated at the top level by the laws of the 50 states. Interest rates at the bottom level have no legal limitation, but for practical purposes the prime rate . . . furnishes a very effective floor. I would say that the area of competition for interest rates would range between, let us say, the prime rate of 4 1/2 and 6 per cent for normal loans exclusive of consumer loans, where higher rates are permitted.

....

"In the area of service charges, I would say that banks are competitive in that field. They base their service charges primarily on their costs, but they have to maintain a weather eye to windward as to what the competitors are charging in the service charge field. The minute they get out of line in connection with service charges they find their customers will start to protest, and if something isn't done some of the customers will leave them for a differential in service charges of any significance.

"I do not believe that competition is really affected by the price area. I think it is affected largely by the quality and the caliber of service that banks give and whether or not they feel they are being received in the right way, whether they are welcome in the bank. Personalities enter into it very heavily, but I do not think price as such is a major factor in banking competition. It is there, it is a factor, but not major." (R. 1940-1942.)

It should be noted that besides competition in interest rates, there is a great deal of indirect price competition in the banking industry. For example, the amount of compensating balance a bank requires of a borrower (i. e., the amount the borrower must always retain in his demand deposit account with the bank) affects the real cost of the loan, and varies considerably in the bank's discretion.

LEdHN[35B] [↑] [35B] LEdHN[37] [↑] [37] [****84] This brings us to appellees' final contention, that Philadelphia needs a bank larger than it now has in order to bring business to the area and stimulate its economic development. See p. 334 and note 10, supra. We are clear, however, that a merger the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition" is not saved because, on some ultimate reckoning of social or economic debits and credits, it may be deemed beneficial. A value choice of such magnitude is beyond the ordinary limits of judicial competence, and in any event has been made for us already, by Congress when it enacted the amended § 7. Congress determined to preserve our traditionally competitive economy. [**1746] It therefore proscribed anticompetitive mergers, the benign and the malignant alike, fully aware, we must assume, that some price might have to be paid.

LEdHN[38] [↑] [38] In holding as we do that the merger of appellees would violate § 7 and must therefore be enjoined, we reject appellees' pervasive suggestion that application of the procompetitive policy of § 7 to the banking industry will have dire, although unspecified, [****85] consequences for the national economy. Concededly, [***950] PNB and Girard are healthy and strong; they are not undercapitalized or overloaned; they have no management problems; the Philadelphia area is not overbanked; ruinous competition is not in the offing. Section 7 does not mandate cutthroat competition in the banking industry, and does not exclude defenses based on dangers to liquidity or [*372] solvency, if to avert them a merger is necessary.<sup>46</sup> It does require, however, that the forces of competition be allowed to operate within the broad framework of governmental regulation of the industry. The fact that banking is a highly regulated industry critical to the Nation's welfare makes the play of competition not less important but more so. At the price of some repetition, we note that if the businessman is denied credit because his banking alternatives have been eliminated by mergers, the whole edifice of an entrepreneurial system is threatened; if the costs of banking services and credit are allowed to become excessive by the absence of competitive pressures, virtually all costs, in our credit economy, will be affected; and unless competition is allowed to fulfill [****86] its role as an economic regulator in the banking industry, the result may well be even more governmental regulation. Subject to narrow qualifications, it is surely the case that competition is our fundamental national economic policy, offering as it does the only alternative to the cartelization or governmental regimentation of large portions of the economy. Cf. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 4. There is no warrant for declining to enforce it in the instant case.

The judgment of the District Court [****87] is reversed and the case remanded with direction to enter judgment enjoining the proposed merger.

It is so ordered.

MR. JUSTICE WHITE took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Dissent by: HARLAN

Dissent

---

[*373] MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, whom MR. JUSTICE STEWART joins, dissenting.

I suspect that no one will be more surprised than the Government to find that the Clayton Act has carried the day for its case in this Court.

In response to an apparently accelerating trend toward concentration in the commercial banking system in this country, a trend which existing laws were evidently illsuited to control, numerous bills were introduced in Congress from 1955 to 1960.<sup>1</sup> During this period, the Department of Justice and the federal banking agencies<sup>2</sup> advocated

---

<sup>46</sup> Thus, arguably, the so-called failing-company defense, see International Shoe Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 280 U.S. 291, 299-303, might have somewhat larger contours as applied to bank mergers because of the greater public impact of a bank failure compared with ordinary business failures. But the question what defenses in § 7 actions must be allowed in order to avert unsound banking conditions is not before us, and we intiate no view upon it.

[***951] divergent methods of dealing with the competitive aspects of bank mergers, the former urging [**1747] the extension of § 7 of the Clayton Act to cover such mergers and the latter supporting a regulatory scheme under which the effect of a bank merger on competition would be only one of the factors to be considered in determining whether the merger would be in the public interest. The Justice Department's [****88] proposals were repeatedly rejected by Congress, and the regulatory approach of the banking agencies was adopted in the Bank Merger Act of 1960. See infra, pp. 379-383.

Sweeping aside the "design fashioned in the Bank Merger Act" as "predicated upon uncertainty as to the scope of § 7" of the Clayton Act (ante, p. 349), the Court today holds § 7 to be applicable to bank mergers and concludes that it has been violated in this case. I respectfully submit that this holding, which sanctions a remedy [*374] regarded [****89] by Congress as inimical to the best interests of the banking industry and the public, and which will in large measure serve to frustrate the objectives of the Bank Merger Act, finds no justification in either the terms of the 1950 amendment of the Clayton Act or the history of the statute.

I.

The key to this case is found in the special position occupied by commercial banking in the economy of this country. With respect to both the nature of the operations performed and the degree of governmental supervision involved, it is fundamentally different from ordinary manufacturing and mercantile businesses.

The unique powers of commercial banks to accept demand deposits, provide checking account services, and lend against fractional reserves permit the banking system as a whole to create a supply of "money," a function which is indispensable to the maintenance of the structure of our national economy. And the amount of the funds held by commercial banks is very large indeed; demand deposits alone represent approximately three-fourths of the money supply in the United States.<sup>3</sup> Since a bank's assets must be sufficiently liquid to accommodate demand withdrawals, short-term commercial [****90] and industrial loans are the major element in bank portfolios, thus making commercial banks the principal source of short-term business credit. Many other services are also provided by banks, but in these more or less collateral areas they receive more active competition from other financial institutions.<sup>4</sup>

[*375] Deposit banking operations affect not only the volume of money and credit, but also the value of the dollar and the stability of the currency system. In this field, considerations other than simply the preservation of competition are relevant. Moreover, commercial banks are entrusted with the safekeeping of large amounts of funds belonging to individuals and corporations. Unlike the ordinary investor, these depositors do not [****91] regard their funds as [****952] subject to a risk of loss and, at least in the case of demand depositors, they do not receive a return for taking such a risk. A bank failure is a community disaster; its impact first strikes the bank's depositors most heavily, and then spreads throughout the economic life of the community.<sup>5</sup> Safety and soundness of banking practices are thus critical factors in any banking system.

The [**1748] extensive blanket of state and federal regulation of commercial banking, much of which is aimed at limiting competition, reflects these factors. Since the Court's opinion describes, at some length, aspects of the supervision exercised by the federal banking agencies (ante, pp. 327-330), I do no more here than point

<sup>1</sup> See Wemple and Cutler, The Federal Bank Merger Law and the Antitrust Laws, 16 Bus. Law. 994, 995 (1961). Many of the bills are summarized in Funk, Antitrust Legislation Affecting Bank Mergers, 75 Banking L. J. 369 (1958).

<sup>2</sup> These agencies and the areas of their primary supervisory responsibility are: (1) the Comptroller of the Currency -- national banks; (2) the Federal Reserve System -- state Reserve-member banks; (3) the FDIC -- insured nonmember banks.

<sup>3</sup> Samuelson, Economics (5th ed. 1961), p. 311.

<sup>4</sup> For example, savings and loan associations, credit unions, and other institutions compete with banks in installment lending to individuals, and banks are in competition with individuals in the personal trust field.

<sup>5</sup> Since bank insolvencies destroy sources of credit, not only borrowers but also others who rely on the borrowers' ability to secure loans may be adversely affected. See Berle, Banking Under the Anti-Trust Laws, 49 Col. L. Rev. 589, 592 (1949).

out [****92] that, in my opinion, such regulation evidences a plain design grounded on solid economic considerations to deal with banking as a specialized field.

This view is confirmed by the Bank Merger Act of 1960 and its history.

Federal legislation dealing with bank mergers<sup>6</sup> dates from 1918, when Congress provided that, subject to the [*376] approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, two or more national banks could consolidate to form a new national bank;<sup>7</sup> similar provision was made in 1927 for the consolidation of a state and a national bank resulting in a national bank.<sup>8</sup> In 1952 mergers of national and state banks into national banks were authorized, also conditioned on approval by the Comptroller of the Currency.<sup>9</sup> In 1950 Congress authorized the theretofore prohibited<sup>10</sup> [****94] merger or consolidation of a national bank with a state bank when the assuming or resulting bank would be a state bank.<sup>11</sup> In addition, the Federal Deposit Insurance Act was amended to require the approval of the FDIC for all mergers and consolidations between insured and noninsured banks, and of specified federal banking agencies for conversions of insured banks into insured state banks if the conversion [****93] would result in the capital stock or surplus of the newly formed bank being less than that of the converting bank.<sup>12</sup> The Act further required insured banks merging with insured state banks to secure the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency if the assuming bank would be a national bank, and the [*377] approval of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and the FDIC, respectively, if the assuming or resulting bank would be a state member bank or nonmember insured bank.<sup>13</sup>

None [***953] of this legislation prescribed standards by which the appropriate federal banking agencies were to be guided in determining the significance to be attributed to the anticompetitive effects of a proposed merger. As previously noted (supra, p. 373), Congress became increasingly concerned with this problem in the 1950's. The antitrust laws apparently provided no solution; in only one case prior to 1960, United States v. Firstamerica Corp., Civil No. 38139, N. D. Cal., March 30, 1959, settled by consent decree, had either the Sherman or Clayton Act been invoked to attack a commercial bank merger.

[**1749] Indeed the [****95] inapplicability to bank mergers of § 7 of the Clayton Act, even after it was amended in 1950, was, for a time, an explicit premise on which the Department of Justice performed its antitrust duties. In passing upon an application for informal clearance of a bank merger in 1955, the Department stated:

"After a complete consideration of this matter, we have concluded that this Department would not have jurisdiction to proceed under section 7 of the Clayton Act. For this reason this Department does not presently plan to take any

<sup>6</sup>The term "merger" is generally used throughout this opinion to designate any form of corporate amalgamation. See note 7 in the Court's opinion, ante, p. 332. Occasionally, however, as in the above paragraph, the terms "merger" and "consolidation" are used in their technical sense.

<sup>7</sup> 40 Stat. 1043, as amended, 12 U. S. C. (Supp. IV, 1963) § 215.

<sup>8</sup> 44 Stat. 1225, as amended, 12 U. S. C. (Supp. IV, 1963) § 215.

<sup>9</sup> 66 Stat. 599, as amended, 12 U. S. C. (Supp. IV, 1963) § 215a.

<sup>10</sup> See Paton, Conversion, Merger and Consolidation Legislation -- "Two-Way Street" For National and State Banks, 71 Banking L. J. 15 (1954).

<sup>11</sup> 64 Stat. 455, as amended, 12 U. S. C. § 214a.

<sup>12</sup> 64 Stat. 457; see 64 Stat. 892 (now 74 Stat. 129, 12 U. S. C. (Supp. IV, 1963) § 1828 (c)).

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. However, under the Act, insured banks merging with insured state banks did not have to obtain approval unless the capital stock or surplus of the resulting or assuming bank would be less than the aggregate capital stock or surplus of all the merging banks.

374 U.S. 321, *377; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1749; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***953; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****95

action on this matter." Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., Ser. 3, pt. 3, p. 2141 (1955).

[*378] And in testifying before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency in 1957 Attorney General Brownell, speaking of bank mergers, noted:

"On the basis of these provisions the Department of Justice has concluded, and all apparently agree, that asset acquisitions by banks are not covered by section 7 [of the Clayton Act] as amended in 1950." Hearings on the Financial Institutions Act of 1957 before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, 85th Cong. [****96], 1st Sess., pt. 2, p. 1030 (1957).

Similar statements were repeatedly made to Congress by Justice Department representatives in the years prior to the enactment of the Bank Merger Act.<sup>14</sup>

The inapplicability of § 7 to bank mergers was also an explicit basis on which Congress acted in passing the Bank Merger Act of 1960. The Senate Report on S. 1062, the bill that was finally enacted, stated:

"Since bank mergers are customarily, if not invariably, carried out by asset acquisitions, they are exempt from section 7 of the Clayton Act. (Stock acquisitions by bank holding companies, as distinguished from mergers and consolidations, [****97] are subject to both the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 and sec. 7 of the Clayton Act.)" S. Rep. No. 196, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 1-2 (1959).

"In 1950 (64 Stat. 1125) section 7 of the Clayton Act was amended to correct these deficiencies. Acquisitions of assets were included within the section, [*379] in addition to stock acquisitions, but only in the [***954] case of corporations subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission (banks, being subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Reserve Board for purposes of the Clayton Act by virtue of section 11 of that act, were not affected)." Id. at 5.<sup>15</sup> [****98]

During the floor debates Representative Spence, the Chairman of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, recognized the same difficulty: "The Clayton Act is ineffective as to bank mergers because [**1750] in the case of banks it covers only stock acquisitions and bank mergers are not accomplished that way." 106 Cong. Rec. 7257 (1960).<sup>16</sup>

But instead of extending the scope of § 7 to cover bank mergers, as numerous proposed amendments to that section were designed to accomplish,<sup>17</sup> Congress made the [*380] deliberate policy judgment that "it is

<sup>14</sup> See Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., Ser. 3, pt. 1, pp. 243-244 (1955); Hearings on S. 3911 before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. 60-61, 84 (1956); Hearings on S. 1062 before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 9 (1959).

<sup>15</sup> See also H. R. Rep. No. 1416, 86th Cong., 2d Sess. 5 (1960) ("The Federal antitrust laws are also inadequate to the task of regulating bank mergers; while the Attorney General may move against bank mergers to a limited extent under the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act offers little help."); id. at 9 ("Because section 7 [of the Clayton Act] is limited, insofar as banks are concerned, to cases where a merger is accomplished through acquisition of stock, and because bank mergers are accomplished by asset acquisitions rather than stock acquisitions, the act offers 'little help,' in the words of Hon. Robert A. Bicks, acting head of the Antitrust Division, in controlling bank mergers.").

<sup>16</sup> In the Senate, a sponsor of S. 1062, Senator Fulbright, reported that the "1950 amendment to section 7 of the Clayton Act, which for the first time imposed controls over mergers by means other than stock acquisitions, did not apply to bank mergers which are practically invariably accomplished by means other than stock acquisition. Accordingly for all practical purposes bank mergers have been and still are exempt from section 7 of the Clayton Act." 106 Cong. Rec. 9711 (1960).

<sup>17</sup> E. g., H. R. 5948, 84th Cong. 1st Sess. (1955); S. 198, 85th Cong., 1st Sess. (1957); S. 722, 85th Cong., 1st Sess. (1957); see note 1, supra.

374 U.S. 321, *380; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1750; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***954; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****98

impossible to subject bank mergers to the simple rule of section 7 of the Clayton Act. Under that act, a merger would be barred if it might tend substantially to lessen competition, regardless of the effects on the public interest." 105 Cong. Rec. 8076 (1959) (remarks of Senator Robertson, a sponsor of S. 1062). Because of the peculiar nature of the commercial banking industry, its crucial role in the economy, [****99] and its intimate connection with the fiscal and monetary operations of the Government, Congress rejected the notion that the general economic and business premises of the Clayton Act should be the only considerations applicable to this field. Unrestricted bank competition was thought to have been a major cause of the panic of 1907 and of the bank failures of the 1930's,<sup>18</sup> [****101] and was regarded as a highly undesirable condition to impose on banks in the future:

[***955] "Banking is too important to depositors, to borrowers, to the Government, and the public generally, to permit unregulated and unrestricted competition in that field.

[*381] "The antitrust laws have reflected an awareness of the difference between banking and other regulated industries on the one hand, and ordinary unregulated industries and commercial enterprises on the other hand." 106 Cong. Rec. 9711 (1960) (remarks of Senator Fulbright, a sponsor of S. 1062).

"It is this distinction between banking and other businesses which justifies different treatment for bank mergers and other mergers. It was this distinction that led the Senate to reject the flat prohibition of the Clayton Act test which applies [****100] to other mergers." Id., at 9712.<sup>19</sup>

Thus the Committee on Banking and Currency recommended "continuance of the existing exemption from section 7 [**1751] of the Clayton Act." 105 Cong. Rec. 8076 (1959). Congress accepted this recommendation; it decided to handle the problem of concentration in commercial banking "through banking laws, specially framed to fit the particular needs of the field . . ." S. Rep. No. 196, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 18 (1959). As finally enacted in 1960, the Bank Merger Act embodies the regulatory approach advocated by the banking agencies, vesting in them responsibility for its administration and placing the scheme within the framework of existing banking laws as an amendment to § 18(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, 12 U. S. C. (Supp. IV, 1963), § 1828(c).<sup>20</sup> [****103] It [****102] maintains the latter Act's requirement of advance approval by the appropriate federal agency for mergers between insured banks and between insured and noninsured [*382] banks (supra, pp. 375-377), but establishes that such approval is necessary in every merger of this type. To aid the respective agencies in determining whether to approve a merger, and in "the interests of uniform standards" (12 U. S. C. (Supp. IV, 1963) § 1828(c)), the Act requires the two agencies not making the particular decision and the Attorney General to submit to the immediately responsible agency reports on the competitive factors involved. It further provides that in addition to considering the banking factors examined by the FDIC in connection with applications to become an insured bank, which focus primarily on matters of safety and soundness,<sup>21</sup> the approving agency "shall also take <sup>18</sup> S. Rep. No. 196, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 17 (1959): "Time and again the Nation has suffered from the results of unregulated and uncontrolled competition in the field of banking, and from insufficiently regulated competition. . . . The rapid increase in the number of small weak banks, to such a large number that the Comptroller could not effectively supervise them or control any but the worst abuses, was one of the factors which led to the panic of 1907.

"The banking collapse in the early 1930's again was in large part the result of insufficient regulation and control of banks, in effect the result of too much competition." See also 105 Cong. Rec. 8076 (1959): "But unlimited and unrestricted competition in banking is just not possible. We have had too many panics and banking crises and bank failures, largely as the result of excessive competition in banking, to consider for a moment going back to the days of free banking or unregulated banking."

<sup>19</sup> See also S. Rep. No. 196, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 16 (1959): "But it is impossible to require unrestricted competition in the field of banking, and it would be impossible to subject banks to the rules applicable to ordinary industrial and commercial concerns, not subject to regulation and not vested with a public interest."

<sup>20</sup> For the pertinent text of the statute, see note 8 in the Court's opinion, ante, pp. 332-333.

<sup>21</sup> These factors are: "the financial history and condition of each of the banks involved, the adequacy of its capital structure, its future earnings prospects, the general character of its management, the convenience and needs of the community to be served,

374 U.S. 321, *382; 83 S. Ct. 1715, **1751; 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, ***955; 1963 U.S. LEXIS 2413, ****102

into consideration the effect of the transaction on competition (including any tendency toward monopoly), and shall not approve the transaction unless, after considering all of such factors, it finds the transaction to [***956] be in the public interest." 12 U. S. C. \(Supp. IV, 1963\) § 1828 \(c\).

The congressional purpose clearly emerges from the terms of the statute and from the committee reports, hearings, and floor debates on the bills. Time and again it was repeated that effect on competition was not to be the controlling factor in determining whether to approve a bank merger, that a merger could be approved as being in the public interest even though it would cause a substantial lessening of competition. The following statement is typical:

"The committee wants to make crystal clear its intention that the various banking factors in any particular [*383] case may be held to outweigh [****104] the competitive factors, and that the competitive factors, however favorable or unfavorable, are not, in and of themselves, controlling on the decision. And, of course, the banking agencies are not bound in their consideration of the competitive factors by the report of the Attorney General." S. Rep. No. 196, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 24 (1959); *id.* at 19, 21.<sup>22</sup> [****105]

[**1752] The foregoing statement also shows that it was the congressional intention to place the responsibility for approval squarely on the banking agencies; the report of the Attorney General on the competitive aspects of a merger was to be advisory only.<sup>23</sup> And there was deliberately omitted any attempt to specify or restrict the kinds of circumstances in which the agencies might properly determine that a proposed merger would be in the public interest notwithstanding its adverse effect on competition.<sup>24</sup>

[****106] [*384] What Congress has chosen to do about mergers and their effect on competition in the highly specialized field of commercial banking could not be more "crystal clear." (Supra, p. 382.) But in the face of overwhelming evidence to the contrary, the Court, with perfect equanimity, finds "uncertainty" in the foundations of the Bank Merger Act (ante, p. 349) and on this premise puts it aside as irrelevant to the task of construing the scope of § 7 of the Clayton Act.

I am unable to conceive of a more inappropriate case in which to overturn the considered opinion of all concerned as to the reach of prior [***957] legislation.<sup>25</sup> For 10 years everyone -- the department responsible for antitrust law enforcement, the banking industry, the Congress, and the bar -- proceeded on the assumption that the 1950 amendment of the Clayton Act did not affect bank mergers. This assumption provided a major impetus to the and whether or not its corporate powers are consistent with the purposes of this chapter." 12 U. S. C. \(Supp. IV, 1963\) § 1828 \(c\). Compare § 6 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, 12 U. S. C. § 1816.

<sup>22</sup> See also 106 Cong. Rec. 7259 (1960): "The language of S. 1062 as amended by the House Banking and Currency Committee and as it appears in the bill we are now about to pass in the House makes it clear that the competitive and monopolistic factors are to be considered along with the banking factors and that after considering all of the factors involved, if the resulting institution will be in the public interest, then the application should be approved and otherwise disapproved."

<sup>23</sup> 106 Cong. Rec. 7257 (1960): "This puts the responsibility for acting on a proposed merger where it belongs -- in the agency charged with supervising and examining the bank which will result from the merger. Out of their years of experience in supervising banks, our Federal banking agencies have developed specialized knowledge of banking and the people who engage in it. They are experts at judging the condition of the banks involved, their prospects, their management, and the needs of the community for banking services. They should have primary responsibility in deciding whether a proposed merger would be in the public interest." (Emphasis added.)

<sup>24</sup> H. R. Rep. No. 1416, 86th Cong., 2d Sess. 11-12 (1960): "We are convinced, also, that approval of a merger should depend on a positive showing of some benefit to be derived from it. As previously indicated, your committee is not prepared to say that the cases enumerated in the hearings are the only instances in which a merger is in the public interest, nor are we prepared to devise a specific and exclusive list of situations in which a merger should be approved."

<sup>25</sup> Compare State Board of Ins. v. Todd Shipyards Corp., 370 U.S. 451, 457, in which this Court refused to reconsider certain prior decisions because Congress had "posed a regime of state regulation" of the insurance business on their continuing validity. Cf. Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 346 U.S. 356.

enactment of remedial legislation, and Congress, when it finally settled on what it thought was the solution to the problem at hand, emphatically rejected the remedy now brought to life by the Court.

[****107] The result is, of course, that the Bank Merger Act is almost completely nullified; its enactment turns out to have been an exorbitant waste of congressional time and energy. As the present case illustrates, the Attorney General's report to the designated banking agency is no longer truly advisory, for if the agency's decision is not [*385] satisfactory a § 7 suit may be commenced immediately.<sup>26</sup> [****108] The bank merger's legality will then be judged solely from its competitive aspects, unencumbered by any considerations peculiar [**1753] to banking.<sup>27</sup> And if such a suit were deemed to lie after a bank merger has been consummated, there would then be introduced into this field, for the first time to any significant extent, the threat of divestiture of assets and all the complexities and disruption attendant upon the use of that sanction.<sup>28</sup> The only vestige of the Bank Merger Act which remains is that the banking agencies will have an initial veto.<sup>29</sup>

[****109] [*386] [***958] This frustration of a manifest congressional design is, in my view, a most unwarranted intrusion upon the legislative domain. I submit that whatever may have been the congressional purpose in 1950, Congress has now so plainly pronounced its current judgment that bank mergers are not within the reach of § 7 that this Court is duty bound to effectuate its choice.

But I need not rest on this proposition, for, as will now be shown, there is nothing in the 1950 amendment to § 7 or its legislative history to support the conclusion that Congress even then intended to subject bank mergers to this provision of the Clayton Act.

II.

Prior to 1950, § 7 of the Clayton Act read, in pertinent part, as follows:

---

<sup>26</sup> If a bank merger such as this falls within the category of a "stock" acquisition, a § 7 suit to enjoin it may be brought not only by the Attorney General, but by the Federal Reserve Board as well. See § 11 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 21 (vesting authority in the Board to enforce § 7 "where applicable to banks"). In an attempt to retain some semblance of the structure erected by Congress in the Bank Merger Act, the Court states that it "supplanted . . . whatever authority the FRB may have acquired under § 11, by virtue of the amendment of § 7, to enforce § 7 against bank mergers." Ante, p. 344, note 22. Since both the Attorney General and the Federal Reserve Board have purely advisory roles where a bank merger will result in a national bank, the Court's reasoning with respect to the effect of the Bank Merger Act upon enforcement authority should apply with equal force to both.

<sup>27</sup> Indeed the Court has erected a simple yardstick in order to alleviate the agony of analyzing economic data -- control of 30% of a commercial banking market is prohibited. Ante, pp. 363-364.

<sup>28</sup> Although § 7 of the Clayton Act is applicable to an outright purchase of bank stock, this form of amalgamation is infrequently used in the banking field and does not involve divestiture problems of the same magnitude as does an asset acquisition.

<sup>29</sup> It is true, as the Court points out (ante, p. 354), that Congress, in enacting the Bank Merger Act, agreed that the applicability of the Sherman Act to banking should not be disturbed. See, e. g., 105 Cong. Rec. 8076 (1959). But surely this alone provides no conceivable justification for applying the Clayton Act as well. Apart from the fact that the Sherman Act covers many kinds of restraints besides mergers, one of the sponsors of the Bank Merger Act (Senator Fulbright) expressed his expectation that in a Sherman Act case a bank merger would not be subjected to strict antitrust standards to the exclusion of all other considerations: "And even if the Sherman Act is held to apply to banking and to bank mergers, it seems clear that under the rule of reason spelled out in the Standard Oil case, different considerations will be found applicable, in a regulated field like banking, in determining whether activities would 'unduly diminish competition,' in the words of the Supreme Court in that case." 106 Cong. Rec. 9711 (1960). Moreover, this Court has recognized in other areas that it may be necessary to accommodate the Sherman Act to regulatory policy. McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67, 83; Federal Communications Comm'n v. RCA Communications, Inc., 346 U.S. 86, 91-92. See also United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 527. And of course the Sherman Act is concerned more with existing anticompetitive effects than with future probabilities, and thus would not reach incipient restraints to the same extent as would § 7 of the Clayton Act. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 317-318 and notes 32, 33.

"That no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where the effect of [*387] such acquisition may be to substantially lessen competition between the corporation whose stock is so acquired and the corporation making the acquisition, [**1754] or to restrain such commerce in any section or community, or tend to [****110] create a monopoly of any line of commerce."

In 1950 this section was amended to read (the major amendments being indicated in italics):

"That no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

If Congress did intend the 1950 amendment to reach bank mergers, it certainly went at the matter in a very peculiar way. While prohibiting asset acquisitions having the anticompetitive effects described in § 7, it limited the applicability of that provision to corporations subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, which does not include banks. And it reenacted the stock-acquisition provision in the very same language which -- as it was fully aware -- had been interpreted not to reach the type of merger customarily used in the banking industry. [****111] See infra, pp. 389-393. In the past this Court has drawn the normal inference that such a reenactment indicates congressional adoption of the prior judicial statutory construction. E. g., United States v. Dixon, 347 U.S. 381; Overstreet v. North Shore Corp., 318 U.S. 125, 131-132. [***959]

[*388] In this instance, however, the Court holds that the stock-acquisition provision underwent an expansive metamorphosis, so that it now embraces all mergers or consolidations involving an exchange of stock. Since bank mergers usually, if not always, do involve exchanges of stock, the effect of this construction is to rob the Federal Trade Commission provision relating to asset acquisitions of all force as a substantive limitation upon the scope of § 7; according to the Court the purpose of that provision was merely to ensure the Commission's role in the enforcement of § 7. Ante, pp. 346-348. In short, under this reasoning bank mergers to all intents and purposes are fully within the reach of § 7.

A more circumspect look at the 1950 amendment of § 7 and its background will show that this construction is not tenable.

The language [****112] of the stock-acquisition provision itself is hardly congenial to the Court's interpretation. The PNB-Girard merger is technically a consolidation, governed by § 20 of the national banking laws, 12 U. S. C. (Supp. IV, 1963) § 215. Under that section, the corporate existence of both PNB and Girard, all of their rights, franchises, assets, and liabilities, would be automatically vested in the resulting bank, which would operate under the PNB charter. PNB itself would acquire nothing. Rather, the two banks would be creating a new entity by the amalgamation of their properties, and the subsequent conversion of Girard stock (which would then represent ownership in a nonfunctioning entity) into stock of the resulting bank would simply be part of the mechanics by which ownership in the new entity would be reflected. Clearly this is not a case of a corporation acquiring the stock of another functioning corporation, which is the only situation where "the effect of . . . [a stock] acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition." (Emphasis added.)

[*389] There are further crucial differences between a merger and a stock acquisition. A merger normally requires public [****113] [**1755] notice and the approval of the holders of two-thirds of the outstanding shares of each corporation, and dissenting shareholders have the right to receive in cash the appraised value of their shares.<sup>30</sup> A purchase of stock may be done privately, and the only approval involved is that of the individual parties to the transaction. Unlike a merged company, a corporation whose stock is acquired usually remains in business as a subsidiary of the acquiring corporation.<sup>31</sup>

---

<sup>30</sup> In these respects a merger is precisely the contrary of what § 7 was originally designed to proscribe -- the secret acquisition of corporate control. See the Court's opinion, ante, p. 338.

[****114] The Government, however, contends that a merger more closely resembles a stock acquisition than an asset acquisition because of one [***960] similarity of central importance: the acquisition by one corporation of an immediate voice in the management of the business of another corporation. But this is obviously true a fortiori of asset acquisitions of sufficient magnitude to fall within the prohibition of § 7; if a corporation buys the plants, equipment, inventory, etc., of another corporation, it acquires absolute control over, not merely a voice in the management of, another business.

The legislative history of the 1950 amendment also unquestionably negates any inference that Congress intended [*390] to reach bank mergers. It is true that the purpose was "to plug a loophole" in § 7 (95 Cong. Rec. 11485 (1949) (remarks of Representative Celler)). But simply to state this broad proposition does not answer the precise questions presented here: what was the nature of the loophole sought to be closed; what were the means chosen to close it?

The answer to the latter question is unmistakably indicated by the relationship between the 1950 amendment and previous judicial [****115] decisions. In Arrow-Hart & Hegeman Elec. Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 291 U.S. 587, this Court, by a divided vote, ruled on the scope of the Federal Trade Commission's remedial powers under the original Clayton Act. After the Commission had issued a § 7 complaint against a holding company which had been formed by the stockholders of two manufacturing corporations, steps were taken to avoid the Commission's jurisdiction. Two new holding companies were formed, each acquired all the common stock of one of the manufacturing companies, and each issued its stock directly to the stockholders of the original holding company. This company then dissolved and the two new holding companies and their respective manufacturing subsidiaries merged into one corporation. This Court held that the Commission had no authority, after the merger, to order the resulting corporation to divest itself of assets. An essential part of this holding was that the merger in question, which was technically a consolidation similar to that here planned by PNB and Girard, was not a stock acquisition within the prohibitions of § 7: "If the merger of the two manufacturing corporations and the [****116] combination of their assets was in any respect a violation of any antitrust law, as to which we express no opinion, it was necessarily a [**1756] violation of statutory prohibitions other [*391] than those found in the Clayton Act." 291 U.S., at 599; see id., at 595.<sup>32</sup>

This decision, along with two others earlier handed down by this Court (Thatcher Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n and Swift & Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, decided together with Federal Trade Comm'n v. Western Meat Co., 272 U.S. 554), perhaps provided more of a spur to enactment of the "assets" amendment to § 7 than any other single factor. These decisions were universally regarded as opening the unfortunate loophole whereby § 7 could be evaded through the use of an asset acquisition. Representative Celler expressed the view of Congress in this fashion:

"The result of these decisions has so weakened sections 7 and 11 . . . as to give to the Federal Trade Commission [***961] and the Department of Justice merely a paper sword to prevent improper mergers." 95 Cong. Rec. 11485 (1949).<sup>33</sup>

<sup>31</sup> That the stock-acquisition provision was not intended to cover mergers is strongly suggested by the second paragraph of § 7: "No corporation shall acquire . . . any part of the stock . . . of one or more corporations . . . where . . . the effect . . . of the use of such stock by the voting or granting of proxies . . . may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." 15 U. S. C. § 18. (Emphasis added.) After a merger has been consummated, the resulting corporation holds no stock in any party to the merger; thus there can be in this situation no such thing as a restraint of trade by "the use" of the voting power of acquired stock.

<sup>32</sup> On this point, the dissenters agreed: "It is true that the Clayton Act does not forbid corporate mergers . . ." 291 U.S., at 600. See also United States v. Celanese Corp. of America, 91 F.Supp. 14.

[****118] [*392] Since this Court's decisions were cast in terms of the scope of the Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction, Congress, in amending § 7 so as to close that gap, emphasized its expectation -- made plain in the committee reports, hearings, and debates -- that the Commission would assume the principal role in enforcing the section.<sup>34</sup> Implicit here is that no change in the enforcement powers of the other agencies named in § 11 was contemplated.<sup>35</sup> Of more importance, the legislative history demonstrates that it was the asset-acquisition provision that was designed to plug the loophole created by Thatcher, Swift, and Arrow. Although Arrow, unlike Thatcher and Swift, involved a consolidation of the same type as the PNB-Girard merger, the members of Congress drew no distinction among these cases, invariably discussing all three of them in the same breath as examples of asset acquisitions.<sup>36</sup> Indeed, the House report stated that "the Supreme Court . . . held [in Arrow] that if an acquiring corporation secured title to the physical [**1757] assets of a corporation whose stock it had acquired before the Federal Trade Commission issues [****119] its final order, the Commission lacks power to direct divestiture of the physical assets . . ." H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 5 (1949). (Emphasis added.)

And on the Senate floor it was pointed out that "the method by which . . . [the merger in Arrow] had been [*393] accomplished was an innocent one . . ." 96 Cong. Rec. 16505 (1950). (Emphasis added.) Clearly the understanding of Congress was that a consolidation of two corporations was an acquisition of assets.<sup>37</sup>

[****120] Nor [***962] did Congress act inadvertently or without purpose in limiting the asset-acquisition provision to corporations subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, thereby excluding bank mergers. The reports, hearings, and debates on the 1950 amendment reveal that Congress was then concerned with the rising tide of industrial concentration -- i. e., "the external expansion . . . through mergers, acquisitions, and consolidations"<sup>38</sup> of corporations engaged in manufacturing, mining, merchandising, and of other kindred commercial endeavors. Specialized areas of the economy such as banking were not even considered. Thus the Federal Trade Commission's 1948 report on mergers recounted the statistics on concentration in a multitude of industries -- e. g., steel, cement, electrical equipment, food and dairy products, tobacco, textiles, paper, chemicals, rubber -- but included not one figure on banking concentration.<sup>39</sup> [****122] This report was repeatedly cited and

<sup>33</sup> See also Hearings on H. R. 988, H. R. 1240, H. R. 2006, H. R. 2734 before Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 38-39 (1949); Hearings on H. R. 2734 before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 81st Cong., 1st & 2d Sess. 109-110 (1950): "The loophole sought to be filled resulted from a series of Supreme Court decisions. (Swift & Co. v. FTC and Thatcher Mfg. Co. v. FTC (272 U.S. 554); Arrow-Hart & Hegeman Co. v. FTC (291 U.S. 587).) In these decisions the Supreme Court held that section 7 of the Clayton Act, while prohibiting the acquisition of stock of a competitor, gave the Federal Trade Commission no authority under section 11 to order divestiture of assets which had been acquired before a cease-and-desist order was issued, even though the acquisition resulted from the voting of illegally held stock."

<sup>34</sup> The Federal Trade Commission had assumed primary enforcement responsibility before the 1950 amendment. See Martin, Mergers and the Clayton Act (1959), p. 197.

<sup>35</sup> Compare note 26, supra.

<sup>36</sup> See note 33 supra; Hearings on H. R. 2734 before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 81st Cong., 1st & 2d Sess. 97 (1950). And this Court has, after the 1950 amendment, described Arrow as a case involving an asset acquisition. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 313 and note 20.

<sup>37</sup> The single excerpt quoted by the Court (ante, p. 345) casts no doubt on this proposition, for Senator Kilgore's remark occurred in the course of a discussion in which he was trying to make the point that there is no difference in practical effect, as opposed to the legal distinction, between a merger and a stock acquisition. Thus at the end of the paragraph quoted by the Court the Senator stated: ". . . I cannot see how on earth you can get the idea that the purchase of the stock of the corporation, all of it, does not carry with it the transfer of all of the physical assets in that corporation." Hearings on H. R. 2734 before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 81st Cong., 1st & 2d Sess. 176 (1950).

<sup>38</sup> H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 2 (1949).

heavily relied on by members of Congress and others to demonstrate the magnitude [*394] of the merger movement and the economic dangers it presented.<sup>40</sup> In the committee hearings the focus was [****121] exclusively upon amalgamation in the ordinary commercial fields,<sup>41</sup> and similarly the Senate and House reports spoke solely of industrial concentration as the evil to be remedied.<sup>42</sup> On the floor of the House, Representative Celler indicated the extent of concentration of industrial power:

"Four companies now have 64 percent of the steel business, four have 82 percent of the copper business, two have 90 percent of the aluminum [**1758] business, three have 85 percent of the automobile business, two have 80 percent of the electric lamp business, four have 75 percent of the electric refrigerator business, two have 80 percent of the glass business, four have 90 percent of the cigarette business, and so forth.

"The antitrust laws are a complete bust unless we pass this bill." 95 Cong. Rec. 11485 (1949).

The legislative history is thus singularly devoid of any evidence that Congress sought to deal with the special problem of banking concentration.

I do not mean to suggest, of course, that § 7 of the Clayton Act is thereby rendered applicable only to ordinary commercial and industrial corporations and not to firms in any "regulated" sector of the economy. The [*395] point is that when Congress included in § 7 asset acquisitions by corporations subject to the Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction, and at the same time [***963] continued in § 11 the Federal Reserve Board's jurisdiction [****123] over banks, it was not acting irrationally. Rather, the absence of any mention of banks in the legislative history of the 1950 amendment, viewed in light of the prior congressional treatment of banking as a distinctive area with special characteristics and needs, compels the conclusion that bank mergers were simply not then regarded as part of the loophole to be plugged.<sup>43</sup>

This conclusion is confirmed by a number of additional considerations. It was not until after the passage of the 1950 amendment of § 7 that Representative Celler, its cosponsor requested the staff of the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary "to prepare a report indicating the concentration existing in our banking system." Staff of Subcommittee No. 5, House Committee on the Judiciary, [****124] 82d Cong., 2d Sess., Report on Bank Mergers and Concentration of Banking Facilities III (1952). The introduction to the report reveals that:

"On March 21, 1945, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System wrote to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary requesting that the provisions of H. R. 2357, Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, one of the early predecessors of the Celler Antimerger Act, be extended so as to include corporations subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Reserve Board under section 11 of the Clayton Act. Because of the revisions made in subsequent versions of antimerger bills, however, it became impracticable [*396] to include within the scope of the act corporations other than those subject to regulation by the Federal Trade Commission. Banks, which are placed squarely within the authority of the Federal Reserve Board by section 11 of the Clayton Act, are therefore circumscribed insofar as mergers are concerned only by the old provisions of section 7, and certain additional statutes which do not presently concern themselves substantively with the question of competition in the field of banking." Id., at VII.

<sup>39</sup> Federal Trade Commission, The Merger Movement: A Summary Report (1948), passim.

<sup>40</sup> E. g., Hearings on H. R. 988, H. R. 1240, H. R. 2006, H. R. 2734 before Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 39-40 (1949); 95 Cong. Rec. 11503 (1949); 96 Cong. Rec. 16505 (1950).

<sup>41</sup> Hearings on H. R. 2734 before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 81st Cong., 1st & 2d Sess. 5-6, 17, 57-59 (1950); Hearings on H. R. 988, H. R. 1240, H. R. 2006, H. R. 2734 before Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 40, 113 (1949).

<sup>42</sup> S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. 3 (1950); H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 2-3 (1949).

<sup>43</sup> It is interesting to note that in the same year in which § 7 was amended Congress passed an act facilitating certain kinds of bank mergers which had theretofore been prohibited. See note 11, supra, and accompanying text.

It is also worth [****125] noting that in 1956 Representative Celler himself introduced another amendment to § 7, explaining that "all the bill [H. R. 5948] does is plug a loophole in the present law dealing with bank mergers . . . . This loophole exists because section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits bank mergers . . . only if such mergers are accomplished by [**1759] stock acquisition." 102 Cong. Rec. 2109 (1956). The bill read in pertinent part: "No bank . . . shall acquire . . . the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce . . ." Ibid. The amendment passed the House but was defeated in the Senate.

For all these reasons, I think the conclusion is inescapable that § 7 of the Clayton Act does not apply to the PNB-Girard merger. The Court's contrary conclusion seems to me little better than a tour de force.<sup>44</sup>

Memorandum of MR. JUSTICE GOLDBERG.

I agree fully [****126] with my Brother HARLAN that § 7 of the Clayton Act has no application to bank mergers [***964] of the type involved here, and I therefore join in the conclusions expressed in his opinion on that point. However, while I [*397] thus dissent from the Court's holding with respect to the applicability of the Clayton Act to this merger, I wish to make clear that I do not necessarily dissent from its judgment invalidating the merger. To do so would require me to conclude in addition that on the record as it stands the Government has failed to prove a violation of the Sherman Act, which is fully applicable to the commercial banking business. In my opinion there is a substantial Sherman Act issue in this case, but since the Court does not reach it and since my views relative thereto would be superfluous in light of today's disposition of the case, I express no ultimate conclusion concerning it. Compare Rescue Army v. Municipal Court of Los Angeles, 331 U.S. 549, 585 (Murphy, J., dissenting); Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 555 (STEWART, J., dissenting).

References

---

[****127] Annotation References:

1. Application to banks and banking institutions of antimonopoly or antitrust laws. 83 ALR2d 374.
2. Validity and construction of statute creating Federal Trade Commission. 6 ALR 366, 11 ALR 797, 18 ALR 549, 30 ALR 1129, 32 ALR 792, 51 ALR 331, 68 ALR 847, 79 ALR 1200.
3. The doctrine of primary administrative jurisdiction. 94 L ed 806, 1 L ed 2d 1596.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>44</sup> Since the Court does not reach the Sherman Act aspect of this case, it would serve no useful purpose for me to do so.

United States v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

March 4-5, 1964, Argued ; April 6, 1964, Decided

No. 36

Reporter

376 U.S. 665 *; 84 S. Ct. 1033 **; 12 L. Ed. 2d 1 ***; 1964 U.S. LEXIS 2172 ****; 1964 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,072

UNITED STATES v. FIRST NATIONAL BANK & TRUST CO. OF LEXINGTON ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY.

Disposition: 208 F.Supp. 457, reversed.

Core Terms

---

consolidation, banking, Sherman Act, deposits, cases, commerce, Steel, factors, loans, interstate, mergers, competitors, constitutes, elimination, antitrust, bigness, merging, commercial bank, relevant market, probable, compete, traffic, dollar, volume

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN1** [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Consolidation & Merger

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

**HN2** [down arrow] Railroads & Rail Transportation, Consolidation & Merger

Where merging companies are major competitive factors in a relevant market, the elimination of significant competition between them, by merger or consolidation, itself constitutes a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The United States brought a civil antitrust suit in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky to enjoin the consolidation of two commercial banks whose principal places of business were Lexington, Kentucky, on the ground that the consolidation would violate 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1, 2). The District Court dismissed the complaint on the ground that no violation of the Sherman Act was shown. (208 F Supp 457.)

On direct appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed. In an opinion by Douglas, J., expressing the views of five members of the Court, it was held that although there was no underlying predatory purpose, the proposed consolidation would violate 1 of the Sherman Act because (1) under the doctrine of Northern Securities Co. v U. S., 193 US 197, 48 L ed 679, 24 S Ct 436, the consolidation of the two banks, which were the largest and the fourth largest commercial banks in Lexington, would put an end to their not insubstantial competition with each other, without reference to the remaining competition from the other commercial banks in Lexington, and (2) under the factors relied on in U. S. v Columbia Steel Co., 334 US 495, 92 L ed 1533, 68 S Ct 1107--the percentage of the business controlled, the strength of the remaining competition, the presence of a purpose to monopolize rather than to satisfy business requirements, the probable development of the industry, consumer demands, and other characteristics of the market--the proposed consolidation was unlawful under 1. The opinion also stated that the Columbia Steel Case, holding that a merger of steel companies did not violate the Sherman Act, must be confined to its special facts.

Brennan and White, JJ., while agreeing that the proposed consolidation would violate 1 of the Sherman Act, indicated that they would rest the decision solely on the Columbia Steel Case.

Harlan, J., joined by Stewart, J., dissented on the grounds that the doctrine of the Northern Securities Case had been rejected and that the proposed consolidation was not illegal under the factors set forth in the Columbia Steel Case.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §35 > bank consolidation -- relevant market --
> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

In determining whether a bank consolidation constitutes a combination in restraint of trade and commerce in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1), commercial banking is one relevant market in a county where commercial banks are the only financial institutions authorized to receive demand deposits and to offer checking accounts; commercial banks are the only financial institutions in the county which accept time deposits from partnerships and corporations and make single-payment loans to individuals and commercial and industrial loans to businesses; and commercial banks in the county offer a wider variety of financial services than the other financial institutions, including deposit boxes, Christmas clubs, correspondent bank facilities, collection services, and trust department services.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §35 > bank consolidation -- effect on competition -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

A bank consolidation should be judged in the light of its effect on competition in a certain county, in determining whether the consolidation constitutes a combination in restraint of trade and commerce in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1), where the factor of inconvenience localizes banking competition as effectively as high transportation costs in other industries, practically all of the business of the banks in the city where the consolidation would occur originates in the county, businesses in the area (except for large national companies) are restricted to banks in the county for working capital loans, commercial banks outside the city do a negligible amount of business in the county, and there is a negligible amount of competition from corporate fiduciaries outside the county.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §15 > RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §18 > RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §35 > bank consolidation -- purpose -- size -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Even though there is no predatory purpose, a consolidation of the largest and fourth largest banks in a county would constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade, in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1), where the county has only six banks and the bank to be established by the consolidation would be larger than all the remaining banks combined; the banks to be consolidated are close competitors in the trust department business, and between them hold 94.82 percent of all trust assets, 92.20 per cent of all trust department earnings, and 79.62 percent of all trust accounts; and the testimony of three of the four remaining banks is that the consolidation would seriously affect their ability to compete effectively over the years, that the "image" of "bigness" is a powerful attraction to customers and an advantage which increases progressively with disparity in size, and that the multiplicity of extra services in the trust field which the new company could offer would tend to foreclose competition there.

Syllabus

---

In this civil action the United States, the appellant, charges that the consolidation of the largest and fourth largest of the six commercial banks in Fayette County, Kentucky, violates §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The Comptroller of the Currency had approved the consolidation although reports, required by the Bank Merger Act of 1960, from the Attorney General, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System all concluded that it would adversely affect competition in the area. Although recognizing that approval by the Comptroller of the Currency did not immunize the consolidation from the operation of the Act, the District Court found that no violation was shown. Held: The consolidation of the appellee banks constitutes a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Pp. 666-673.

(a) Commercial banking is one relevant product market in which to judge the effect of the consolidation on \*\*\*\*2 competition. Pp. 666-668.

(b) The consolidation should be judged by its effect on competition in Fayette County, the geographical market. P. 668.

(c) The new bank controls over half of the relevant market and by its disparity of size, as attested by three of the four remaining banks, will seriously affect their long-range ability to compete, despite the absence of any "predatory" purpose. P. 669.

(d) The elimination of significant competition between the parties to the consolidation, which were major competitive factors in the relevant market, of itself constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Act. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, followed; United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, distinguished. Pp. 669-673.

Counsel: Daniel M. Friedman argued the cause for the United States. On the brief were Solicitor General Cox, Assistant Attorney General Orrick, Robert B. Hummel, Larry L. Williams, Melvin Spaeth and Richard J. Wertheimer.

Robert M. Odear argued the cause for appellees. With him on the brief were Gladney Harville, Rufus Lisle and Clinton M. Harbison.

Judges: [***3] Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Goldberg

Opinion by: DOUGLAS

Opinion

---

[*666] [***3] [**1033] Opinion of the Court by MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, announced by MR. JUSTICE BLACK.

This is a civil suit in which the United States charges that the consolidation of First National Bank and Trust Co. of Lexington, Kentucky (First National), and Security Trust Co. of Lexington (Security Trust), to form First Security National Bank and Trust Co. (First Security), [**1034] constitutes a combination in restraint of trade and commerce in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act and a combination and an attempt to monopolize trade and commerce in violation of § 2 of that Act.<sup>1</sup> 26 Stat. 209 as amended, HN1 [↑] 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2.

[***4] The plan of consolidation was submitted to the Comptroller of the Currency and he, pursuant to the provision of the Bank Merger Act of 1960, 74 Stat. 129, 12 U. S. C. (Supp. IV) § 1828 (c), requested and received reports of the probable competitive effects of the proposed consolidation [*667] from the Attorney General, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. Each report concluded that the consolidation would adversely affect competition among commercial banks in Fayette County. Nevertheless, the Comptroller of the Currency approved the consolidation on February 27, 1961; it was effected March 1, and this Sherman Act suit was filed the same day. The District Court, while agreeing that the Comptroller of the Currency's approval of the consolidation did not render it immune from challenge under the Sherman Act,<sup>2</sup> held that no violation of that Act had been shown. 208 F.Supp. 457. The case is here on direct appeal. 15 U. S. C. § 29. We noted probable jurisdiction. 374 U.S. 824.

---

<sup>1</sup> Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act provide in pertinent part:

"SEC. 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. . . ."

"SEC. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. . . ."

<sup>2</sup> That issue was put to rest by United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 350-355.

[****5] LEdHN[1]↑ [1]We agree with the District Court that commercial banking is one relevant market<sup>3</sup> for determining the § 1 issue in the case. In Fayette County commercial banks are the only financial institutions authorized to receive demand deposits and to offer checking accounts. They are also the only financial institutions in the county that accept time deposits from partnerships and corporations and that make single-payment loans to individuals<sup>4</sup> and commercial and industrial loans to businesses. Moreover, commercial banks offer a wider variety of financial services than the other financial institutions, e. g., deposit [*668] boxes, Christmas Clubs, [***4] correspondent bank facilities, collection services, and trust department services.

[****6] LEdHN[2]↑ [2]We also agree with the District Court that the consolidation should be judged in light of its effect on competition in Fayette County.<sup>5</sup> The record establishes that here, as in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, the "factor of inconvenience" does indeed localize [**1035] banking competition "as effectively as high transportation costs in other industries." 374 U.S., at 358. Practically all of the business of the banks in Lexington originates in Fayette County. Only 4.8% of First National's demand deposit accounts and 4.5% of Security Trust's were held by depositors who did not maintain offices in Lexington. In dollar volume the percentage was 2.8 for each bank. Apart from large national companies, businesses in the area are restricted to the Fayette County banks for their working capital loans; and commercial banks outside Lexington do a negligible amount of business in the county. There is also a negligible amount of competition from corporate fiduciaries outside Fayette County.

[****7] We turn then to the facts relevant to the alleged restraint of trade under the Sherman Act.

Prior to the consolidation the relative size of First National as compared to its five competitors was as follows:

	Assets	Deposits	Loans
Fir st Na tio nal	39.83%	40.06%	40.22%
Citi ze ns Un ion	17.06	16.78	16.41
Ba nk of Co m me rce	12.99	13.32	14.46
Se cur	12.87	11.88	13.98

---

<sup>3</sup> In view of our disposition of the case we find it unnecessary to determine whether trust department services alone are another relevant market.

<sup>4</sup> Small loan companies make personal loans of $ 800 or less at interest rates higher than those charged by commercial banks. Since commercial banks carry a large volume of demand deposits, their real estate loans are generally of a shorter duration than those offered by savings and loan associations or insurance companies.

<sup>5</sup> The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and the Federal Reserve Board used Fayette County as the geographical market, the latter saying that "since there are no concentrations of population in other counties close enough to create competition with other banks, the competitive effects of the proposed consolidation would be confined to the Lexington banks."

	Assets	Deposits	Loans
ity Tr ust
Ce ntr al Ba nk	9.14	9.66	8.85
Se co nd Na tio nal	8.10	8.30	6.09

[*669] The bank established by the consolidation was larger than all the remaining banks combined:

	Assets	Deposits	Loans
Fir st Se cur ity	52.70%	51.95%	54.20%
Citi ze ns Un ion	17.06	16.78	16.41
Ba nk of Co m me rce	12.99	13.32	14.46
Ce ntr al Ba nk	9.14	9.66	8.85
Se co nd Na tio nal	8.10	8.30	6.09

Prior to the consolidation, First National and Security Trust had been close competitors in the trust department business. Between them they held 94.82% of all trust assets, 92.20% of all trust department earnings, and 79.62% of all trust accounts:

	Trust Assets	Trust Dept. Earnings	Number of Trust Accounts
Se cu ri ty Tr	50.55%	46.91%	54.31%

	Trust Assets	Trust Dept. Earnings	Number of Trust Accounts
First National Bank of Commerce	44.27	45.29	25.31
Citizen's Second National Bank	3.41	4.21	16.01
Security First National Bank	1.33	.63	2.12
Bancorp	.44	2.96	2.26

[***8] [***5] [**1036] There was here no "predatory" purpose. But we think it clear that significant competition will be eliminated by the consolidation. There is testimony in the record from three of the four remaining banks that the consolidation will seriously affect their ability to compete effectively over the years; that the "image" of "bigness" is a powerful attraction to customers, an advantage that increases progressively with disparity in size; and that the multiplicity of extra services in the trust field which the new company could offer tends to foreclose competition there.

LEdHN[3] [↑] [3]We think it clear that the elimination of significant competition between First National and Security Trust constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation [*670] of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The case, we think, is governed by Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, and its progeny. The Northern Pacific and the Great Northern operated parallel lines west of Chicago. A holding company acquired the controlling stock in each company. A violation of § 1 was adjudged [***9] without reference to or a determination of the extent to which the traffic of the combined roads was still subject to some competition. It was enough that the two roads competed, that their competition was not insubstantial, and that the combination put an end to it. Id., at 326-328.

United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 226 U.S. 61, was in the same tradition. Acquisition by Union Pacific of a controlling stock interest in Southern Pacific was held to violate § 1 of the Sherman Act. As in the Northern Securities case the Court held the combination illegal because of the elimination of the inter se competition between the merging companies, without reference to the strength or weakness of whatever competition remained. The Court said:

"It is urged that this competitive traffic was infinitesimal when compared with the gross amount of the business transacted by both roads, and so small as only to amount to that incidental restraint of trade which ought not to be held to be within the law; but we think the testimony amply shows that, while these roads did a great deal of business for which they did not compete and that the competitive business [***10] was a comparatively small part of the sum total of all traffic, state and interstate, carried over them, nevertheless such competing traffic was large in volume, amounting to many millions of dollars. Before the transfer of the stock this traffic was the subject of active competition between these systems, but by reason of the power arising from such transfer it has since been placed under a common control. [*671] It was by no means a negligible part, but a large and valuable part, of interstate commerce which was thus directly affected." Id., at 88-89.

[**6] United States v. Reading Co., 253 U.S. 26, is the third of the series. There a holding company brought under common control two competing interstate carriers and two competing coal companies. That was held "without more" to be a violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Id., at 59.

The fourth of the series is United States v. Southern Pacific Co., 259 U.S. 214, in which the acquisition by Southern Pacific of stock of Central Pacific -- a connecting link for transcontinental shipments by a competitor of Southern Pacific -- was held [****11] [**1037] to violate the Sherman Act. In reference to the earlier cases<sup>6</sup> the Court said:

"These cases, collectively, establish that one system of railroad transportation cannot acquire another, nor a substantial and vital part thereof, when the effect of such acquisition is to suppress or materially reduce the free and normal flow of competition in the channels of interstate trade." Id., at 230-231.

We need not go so far here as we went in United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 225, where we said:

". . . the amount of interstate trade thus affected by the conspiracy is immaterial in determining whether a violation of the Sherman Act has been charged in the complaint. Section 1 of the Act outlaws unreasonable restraints on interstate commerce, regardless of the amount of the commerce affected."

The four [****12] railroad cases at least stand for the proposition that HN2↑ where merging companies are major competitive [*672] factors in a relevant market, the elimination of significant competition between them, by merger or consolidation, itself constitutes a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. That standard was met in the present case in view of the fact that the two banks in question had such a large share of the relevant market.

It is said that United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, is counter to this view. There the United States Steel Corp. acquired the assets of Consolidated Steel Corp. Both made fabricated structural steel products, the former selling on a nation-wide basis, the latter in 11 States. The conclusion that the acquisition was lawful was reached after the Court observed, inter alia, that because of rate structures and the location of United States Steel's fabricating subsidiaries, the latter were unable to compete effectively in Consolidated's market. Id., at 511-518, 529-530. The Columbia Steel case must be confined [****13] to its special facts. The Court said:

"In determining what constitutes unreasonable restraint, we do not think the dollar volume is in itself of compelling significance; we look rather to the percentage of business controlled, the strength of the remaining competition, whether the action springs from business requirements or purpose to monopolize, the probable development of the industry, consumer demands, and other characteristics of the market. We do not undertake to prescribe any set of percentage figures by which to measure the reasonableness of a corporation's enlargement of its activities by the purchase of the assets of a competitor. The relative effect of percentage command [***7] of a market varies with the setting in which that factor is placed." Id., at 527-528.

In the present case all those factors clearly point the other way, as we have seen. Where, as here, the [*673] merging companies are major competitive factors in a relevant market, the elimination of significant competition between them constitutes a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. In view of our conclusion under § 1 of the Sherman Act, we do not reach the questions posed [****14] under § 2.

Reversed.

---

<sup>6</sup> Two of which had been decided after Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, which announced "the rule of reason."

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN and MR. JUSTICE WHITE agree with the Court that the elimination of competition between [**1038] the two banks in the circumstances here presented was a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. They would rest the reversal, however, solely on the conclusion that the factors relied on in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 527-528, quoted by the Court, as applied to the facts of this case, clearly compel the reversal.

Dissent by: HARLAN

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, whom MR. JUSTICE STEWART joins, dissenting.

But for the Court's return to a discarded theory of antitrust law, this case would have little future importance. The decision last Term in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, that § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 18, is applicable to bank mergers surely marks the end of cases like this one, in which the Government relies solely on §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2. Since, however, this case, doomed to be a novelty in the reports, has become the vehicle for turning the clock back to antitrust [****15] law of days long past, I am constrained to do more than merely register my dissent.

I.

Stripped of embellishments, the Court's opinion amounts to an invocation of formulas of antitrust numerology and a presumption that in the antitrust field good [*674] things come usually, if not always, in small packages.<sup>1</sup> The "facts relevant to the alleged restraint of trade under the Sherman Act," ante, p. 668, on which the Court relies, are: (1) the size relative to their competitors of First National and Security Trust before the consolidation and of First Security after the consolidation; (2) the competitive position before the consolidation of First National and Security Trust in the more limited area of trust business;<sup>2</sup> and (3) "testimony in the record from three of the four remaining banks that the consolidation will seriously affect their ability to compete effectively over the years . . . ," ante, p. 669.

[****16] The testimony to which the Court adverts was provided by competitors of First Security and was characterized [**8] by the district judge who heard it as seemingly "based merely upon surmise and . . . lacking in factual support." 208 F.Supp. 457, 460. Since the Court suggests no reason for regarding this evidentiary finding of the trial court as "clearly erroneous," it must be accepted here, e. g., United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 338 U.S. 338, 341-342, leaving as the factual basis for the Court's decision only the statistics unquestionably showing that First National and Security Trust were big and First Security is bigger. The embellishment which adorns these statistics is the proposition that "where merging companies are major competitive factors in a relevant market, the elimination of significant competition between them, by [*675] merger or consolidation, itself constitutes a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act," ante, pp. 671-672.

The sole support for this proposition, which is defended by no independent reasoning whatever, is the four "railroad cases," a reiteration of which forms the [**1039] bulk of the Court's opinion. [****17]<sup>3</sup> It is questionable whether those cases, three of which involved the combination of massive transportation systems<sup>4</sup> and the fourth a

---

<sup>1</sup> Compare the dissenting opinion in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 534.

<sup>2</sup> The reason for singling out this aspect of the banks' activities is unclear, since the Court does not determine even whether trust department services should be regarded as a relevant market. See ante, p. 667, note 3. In view of the majority's disposition of the case, I do not set out here my reasons for believing that the District Court's determination that the consolidation in question does not violate § 2 of the Sherman Act (monopoly) should be affirmed.

<sup>3</sup> United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, cited by the Court, ante, p. 671, is wholly irrelevant.

combination of "two great competing interstate carriers and . . . two great competing coal companies extensively engaged in interstate commerce" <sup>5</sup> have any relevance to the present factual situation. That question, however, need not be explored.

In United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, these same cases were cited by the Government for the same proposition urged here: that "control by one competitor over [****18] another violates the Sherman Act . . .," id. at 531. The Court relegated the cases to a footnote and stated that it would not "examine those cases to determine whether we would now approve either their language or their holdings." Ibid. The facts of the "railroad cases" were found to be "so dissimilar from that presented" that they could "furnish little guidance" in deciding the later case. Ibid. Beyond this explicit rejection of these cases as a basis for decision is their further rejection clearly implicit in the portion of the Columbia Steel opinion which the Court quotes, ante, p. 672.

"In determining what constitutes unreasonable restraint, we do not think the dollar volume is in itself of compelling significance; we look rather to the [*676] percentage of business controlled, the strength of the remaining competition, whether the action springs from business requirements or purpose to monopolize, the probable development of the industry, consumer demands, and other characteristics of the market." 334 U.S., at 527.

Quite obviously, if "bigness" alone provided a sufficient answer to the questions involved in [****19] a § 1 charge, it would be pointless to attend to the factors set out in Columbia Steel and reiterated here, in form approvingly but in fact without regard.

[***9] II.

If regard be had to the criteria enumerated in Columbia Steel, none of them except perhaps those which deal with "bigness" favor the Government here. Although for purposes of the Sherman Act, such statistics have little meaning in the absence of a context,<sup>6</sup> [****20] it may be admitted that the figures in this case of dollar volume<sup>7</sup> and the percentage of business controlled are large. So far as [**1040] these figures have relevance under the Columbia Steel test, they perhaps speak against the appellee.

[*677] On the other hand, the strength of the remaining competition is attested by findings of fact in the District Court, not refuted or even mentioned in the Court's opinion:

"As of December 31, 1960, there were in operation in Lexington, beside the First National Bank and Trust Company and Security Trust Company, four other commercial banks, namely:

<sup>4</sup> Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197; United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 226 U.S. 61; United States v. Southern Pacific Co., 259 U.S. 214.

<sup>5</sup> United States v. Reading Co., 253 U.S. 26, 59.

<sup>6</sup> The presumption which the Court laid down in Philadelphia National Bank, supra, at 363, that "a merger which produces a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market, is . . . inherently likely to lessen competition substantially . . ." was concerned with the application of § 7 of the Clayton Act. Compare Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 612, a Sherman Act case in which the Court noted that "no magic inheres in numbers," and quoted with approval the statement in Columbia Steel, supra, at 528, that "the relative effect of percentage command of a market varies with the setting in which that factor is placed."

<sup>7</sup> As found by the District Court, in 1960, First National had "total assets of $ 65,069,000, total deposits of $ 58,673,000 and total net loans and discounts of $ 35,434,000." 208 F.Supp., at 459. Security Trust, in 1960, had "total assets of $ 21,033,000, total deposits of $ 17,402,000 and total net loans and discounts of $ 12,317,000." Ibid.

"Citizens Union National Bank and Trust Company, with total assets of $ 27,876,000, total deposits of $ 24,569,000 and total net loans and discounts of $ 14,457,000;

"Bank of Commerce, with total assets of $ 21,230,000, total deposits of $ 19,500,000 and total net loans and discounts of $ 12,738,000;

"Central Bank and Trust Company, with total assets of $ 14,930,000, with [****21] total deposits of $ 14,144,000, and with total net loans and discounts of $ 7,799,000;

"Second National Bank and Trust Company, with total assets of $ 13,240,000, total deposits of $ 12,157,000 and total net loans and discounts of $ 5,362,000.

....

"Before and since the consolidation herein referred to, all the banks in Fayette County have been operated successfully in the field of commercial banking and in competition with each other.

....

"In the trial of the case, other than the officials and employees of the defendant, First Security National Bank and Trust Company, numerous witnesses, most of whom were men of long experience in the field of banking, testified to the effect that, in their opinion, the consolidation of the two Lexington banks herein referred to would not lessen [*678] competition in the banking field in Fayette County and did not tend to create a monopoly in that field.

"According to their testimony, the fact that the merged bank had a large percentage of the trust business of the community did not and [***10] would not substantially restrain or lessen competition in the field of commercial banking." 208 F.Supp., at 459-460.<sup>8</sup> [****22]

The motive behind the consolidation also is indicated by the findings below, similarly unchallenged, that ". . . the consolidation herein referred to clearly appears to have been the result of a lawful program of expansion on the part of the merging banks rather than an invidious scheme to restrain competition or to secure monopoly in the local field of banking." 208 F.Supp., at 460. Any doubts on this score are removed by the explicit concession of government counsel at oral argument before this Court that there is no evidence at all in the record of an anticompetitive motive behind the consolidation.

There is nothing whatever in the findings below or in [****23] the opinion of this Court pertinent to the other criteria laid down in Columbia Steel -- the probable development of the industry, consumer demands, [**1041] and other market characteristics -- which supports the Court's conclusion.<sup>9</sup> [*679] In sum, the Court's analysis of the facts of this case ends where it begins; the conclusion that the consolidation violates the Sherman Act collapses into the agreed premise that First Security is "big."

[****24] III.

---

<sup>8</sup> The only contrary evidence, testimony of presidents of three of the four competing local banks who "expressed considerable fear that the consolidation would result in serious loss to the other banks and would be disastrous to some of them," 208 F.Supp., at 460, was discredited by the District Court. See supra, p. 674.

<sup>9</sup> With reference to the probable development of the industry, the Government turns to the past and notes that the number of local banks decreased from 10 to 7 between 1929 and 1938; but this statistic, more at home in a Clayton Act case, is of doubtful significance in the present context, particularly in view of the period during which the decrease occurred. The same may be said of the Government's reference to the testimony of the president of a competing bank that the consolidation from which his bank resulted was carried through (years before the First Security consolidation) principally to enable it "to better compete with the First National." In fact, in the three years since the First Security consolidation, there has been no further concentration.

The truth is, of course, that this is, if anything, a Clayton Act case masquerading in the garb of the Sherman Act. One can hardly doubt that it comes to us under these false colors only because the decision last Term that bank mergers could be reached under the Clayton Act was indeed a surprise to the Government. See my dissenting opinion in Philadelphia National Bank, supra, at 373. No one has more sympathy for the Government in this respect than I. Nevertheless, having "at the outset elected to proceed not under the Clayton but the Sherman Act," Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 609, "the Government here must measure up to the criteria of the more stringent law," id., at 610.

The pernicious effect of allowing the Government to change horses in midstream in fact if not quite in form <sup>10</sup> goes beyond this case and, in the field of banking, beyond even the revitalization of a properly moribund [***11] rule of antitrust law. In combination with the Philadelphia National Bank case, today's decision effectively precludes any possibility that the will of the Congress with respect to bank mergers [****25] will be carried out. The Congress has plainly indicated that it does not intend that mergers in [*680] the banking field be measured solely by the antitrust considerations which are applied in other industries. Characteristic of such indications, set out in detail in my dissenting opinion in the Philadelphia National Bank case, supra, at 374-386, is the following excerpt from the Senate Report on the bill which became the Bank Merger Act of 1960, 12 U. S. C. (Supp. IV, 1963) § 1828 (c):

"The committee wants to make crystal clear its intention that the various banking factors in any particular case may be held to outweigh the competitive factors, and that the competitive factors, however favorable or unfavorable, are not, in and of themselves, controlling on the decision." S. Rep. No. 196, 86th Cong., 1st Sess., 24.

[****26] Adherence to the principles enunciated in Columbia Steel, supra, would leave room for an accommodation within the framework of the antitrust laws of the special features of banking recognized by Congress. It is difficult to see how features peculiar to banking [**1042] or indeed any other features of a particular case which, in reason, should lead to a different result, can stand up against the bludgeon with which the Court now strikes at combinations which may well have no fault except "bigness."

I would affirm.

References

---

Annotation References:

Application to banks and banking institutions of antimonopoly or antitrust laws. 83 ALR2d 374.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>10</sup> It is one thing to say, as the Court did in Times-Picayune, supra, at 609, that "the Clayton Act's more specific standards illuminate the public policy which the Sherman Act was designed to subserve . . ." It is quite another thing to treat them as interchangeable. See id., at 609-610.

United States v. Continental Can Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

April 28, 1964, Argued ; June 22, 1964, Decided

No. 367

Reporter

378 U.S. 441 *; 84 S. Ct. 1738 **; 12 L. Ed. 2d 953 ***; 1964 U.S. LEXIS 2224 ****; 1964 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,146

UNITED STATES v. CONTINENTAL CAN CO. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Disposition: 217 F.Supp. 761, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

merger, glass container, glass, metal, containers, commerce, metal container, products, lines, interindustry, manufacturers, producer, combined, effects, sales, beer, baby food, anticompetitive, acquisition, largest, shipped, bottle, packaging, customer, probable, billion, food, soft drink, compete, markets

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN1** [ Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act]

That competition may be called inter-industry competition and is between products with distinctive characteristics does not automatically remove it from the reach of § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN2** [ Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act]

Interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand are not to be used to obscure competition but to recognize competition where, in fact, competition exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Distribution, Processing & Storage

HÌ Ì ÁMÈJÀ I FÊI I FLÀ I ÁMÈDÖFÌ HÌ FÊEFTI HÌ LÁFGSE OÀÉGÀ ÁÍ HÀEJÌ HÀFJÌ I ÁMÈSÓYÒÁGGI FÊEFTI

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN3 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

That there are price differentials between the two products or that the demand for one is not particularly or immediately responsive to changes in the price of the other are relevant matters but not determinative of the product market issue under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

HN4 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Market shares are the primary indicia of market power but a judgment under § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, is not to be made by any single qualitative or quantitative test. The merger must be viewed functionally in the context of the particular market involved, its structure, history and probable future. Where a merger is of such a size as to be inherently suspect, elaborate proof of market structure, market behavior and probable anticompetitive effects may be dispensed with in view of § 7's design to prevent undue concentration. Moreover, the competition with which § 7 deals includes not only existing competition but that which is sufficiently probable and imminent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN5 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Where there has been a history of tendency toward concentration in the industry tendencies toward further concentration are to be curbed in their incipiency. Where concentration is already great, the importance of preventing even slight increases in concentration and so preserving the possibility of eventual deconcentration is correspondingly great.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

In a civil antitrust suit brought in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, the United States sought an order requiring the nation's second largest producer of metal containers to divest itself of the assets of the nation's third largest producer of glass containers, whose assets it had acquired in exchange for stock and the assumption of liabilities. After the close of the government's case, the District Court dismissed the complaint, finding only three relevant product markets or lines of commerce--the metal can industry, the glass container industry, and containers for the beer industry--and concluding that the merger had no significant effect on competition in any of these three product markets, and therefore did not violate 7 of the Clayton Act. (217 F Supp 761.)

HÌ Í ÁMÈJÀ I FÊI I FLÀ I ÁMÈDÖFÌ HÌ FÊEFTI HÌ LÁFGSE OÀÉGÀÁÍ HÀEEJÌ HÀFJÌ I ÁMÈÉSÓYQÁGGI FÊEFTI

On direct appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed. In an opinion by White, J., expressing the views of six members of the Court, it was held that under the evidence thus far adduced (1) the relevant product market was the combined glass and metal container industries and all end uses for which they compete, and (2) the merger's anticompetitive impact on this line of commerce rendered the merger illegal under 7 of the Clayton Act.

Goldberg, J., concurring, stated that in his view the Court was not finally deciding the relevant line of commerce, and that on remand the defendants could "rebut the prima facie inference" that metal and glass containers constitute one line of commerce.

Harlan, J., joined by Stewart, J., dissented on the ground that metal and glass containers did not constitute a single line of commerce.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §14 > product markets -- submarkets -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

Although the outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it, there may be, within this broad market, well-defined sub-markets which in themselves constitute product markets for antitrust purposes.

MONOPOLIES §34 > assets acquisitions -- protected competition -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which forbids the acquisition by a corporation subject to the Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction of any part of the assets of another corporation engaged in commerce where in any line of commerce in any section of the country the effect of the acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, the protected competition is not limited to competition between identical products.

MONOPOLIES §34 > assets acquisitions -- competition -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The fact that competition may be called "inter-industry competition" and is between products with distinctive characteristics does not automatically remove it from the reach of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which forbids the acquisition by a corporation subject to the Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction of any part of the assets of another corporation engaged in commerce where in any line of commerce in any section of the country the effect of the acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition.

MONOPOLIES §34 > assets acquisitions -- recognition of competition -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

HÌ ÁMÈJÀ I FÊI I FLÀ I ÁMÈDÄFÌ HÌ FÄEFÌ HÌ LÄFGÄSEÖAËGÄÁÍ HÄEEJÌ HÄFJÌ I ÁMÈEÄÖYÖÄGGI FÄEEF

In a suit under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which forbids the acquisition by a corporation subject to the Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction of any part of the assets of another corporation engaged in commerce where in any line of commerce in any section of the country the effect of the acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand are not to be used to obscure competition but to recognize competition where, in fact, competition exists.

MONOPOLIES §34.5 > competition -- glass and metal container industries -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The competition between the metal container industry and the glass container industry falls within the competition-preserving proscriptions of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) by reason of the customer response to innovation and other competitive stimuli, even though the interchangeability of use may not be so complete and the cross-elasticity of demand may not be so immediate as in the case of most intraindustry mergers.

MONOPOLIES §34 > competition -- price differentials -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

That there are price differentials between two products or that the demand for one is not particularly or immediately responsive to changes in the price of the other are relevant matters, but not determinative of the product market issue under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which forbids the acquisition by a corporation subject to the Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction of any part of the assets of another corporation where in any line of commerce in any section of the country the effect of the acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition.

MONOPOLIES §34.5 > line of commerce -- delineation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which forbids certain mergers where their effect may be to substantially lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly "in any line of commerce in any section of the country," the contours of a "line of commerce" must, as nearly as possible, conform to competitive reality, and where the area of effective competition cuts across industry lines, so must the relevant line of commerce.

MONOPOLIES §34.5 > line of commerce -- glass and metal containers -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

In a suit to require a metal container manufacturer to divest itself of the assets of a glass container manufacturer, on the ground that the assets acquisition violates 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) by reason of its anticompetitive effect on a line of commerce, the relevant product market or line of commerce is the combined glass and metal container industries and all end uses for which they compete, where there is a rather general confrontation between metal and glass containers and the competition between them for the same end uses is insistent, continuous, effective, and quantity-wise, very substantial, even though there are some end uses for which glass and metal cannot compete.

HÌ Ì ÁMÈJÀ I FÊI I FLÀ I ÁMÈDÖFÌ HÌ FÊFÌ HÌ LÁFGSEÒA Òa ÈGÀ ÁÍ HÀEJÌ HÀFJÌ I ÁMÈÈSÓYÒÁGGI FÊFÌ

ERROR §1112.5 > matters not urged below -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

In reviewing a federal court judgment in a suit for divestment of corporate assets as acquired in violation of the Clayton Act's proscription of such acquisitions where they may have the effect of substantially lessening competition in any "line of commerce," the Supreme Court of the United States is not precluded from reaching the question of the prima facie existence of a particular "line of commerce" by reason of the fact that that line of commerce was not pressed on the lower court, where the line of commerce is composed largely, if not entirely, of more particularized lines of commerce urged in the lower court.

MONOPOLIES §34 > lines of commerce -- submarkets -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

Under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which proscribes certain corporate stock and assets acquisitions where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition in any "line of commerce," the fact that there may be a broader product market or line of commerce made up of metal, glass, and other competing containers does not necessarily negative the existence of submarkets of cans, glass, plastic, or cans and glass together.

MONOPOLIES §34.5 > merger -- anticompetitive effect -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

In determining the anticompetitive effect of a merger governed by 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), market shares are the primary indicia of market power, but judgment is not to be made by any single qualitative or quantitative test; the merger must be viewed functionally in the context of the particular market involved, its structure, history, and probable future.

EVIDENCE §979 > merger -- anticompetitive effect -- weight of evidence -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

Under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), forbidding certain mergers where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition in any line of commerce in any section of the country, elaborate proof of market structure, market behavior, and probable anticompetitive effects may be dispensed with where a merger is of such a size as to be inherently suspect.

MONOPOLIES §34 > assets acquisitions -- imminent competition -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

HÃÌ ÁMÈJÃÌ FÃÌ I FLÃÌ I ÁMÈDÃÌ HÌ ÆÆFÃÌ HÌ LÃÌFÃÌ SEÃÌ ÆGÃÌ ÁI HÃÌÆJÃÌ HÃÌJÃÌ I ÁMÈÆSÃÌ ÆGGÃÌ ÆÆFÃÌ

Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), forbidding certain stock and assets acquisitions the effect of which may be substantially to lessen competition, deals not only with existing competition but also with competition which is sufficiently probable and imminent.

MONOPOLIES §34.5 > merger -- glass and metal container manufacturers -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which forbids acquisition by a corporation subject to the Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction of any part of the assets of another corporation engaged in commerce where the effect of the acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, is violated by a metal container manufacturer's acquisition of all the assets of a glass container manufacturer where before the merger the metal container manufacturer ranked second and the glass container manufacturer sixth in the product market embracing the combined metal and glass container industries.

MONOPOLIES §34.5 > merger -- determining anticompetitive effect -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

In a government action under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) to require a metal container manufacturer to divest itself of all the assets of a glass container manufacturer, acquired as the result of a corporate merger, a Federal District Court errs when, in determining the anticompetitive effect of the merger, it places heavy reliance on the metal container manufacturer's management of the acquired assets after the merger while the metal container manufacturer was under some pressure because of the pending antitrust suit.

MONOPOLIES §34 > Clayton Act -- purpose -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

The purpose of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), forbidding certain corporate stock and assets acquisitions, is to arrest anticompetitive arrangements in their incipency.

Syllabus

---

The Government seeks an order requiring the divestiture, as a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, by Continental Can Company (CCC), the second largest producer of metal containers, of the assets acquired in 1956 of Hazel-Atlas Glass Company (HAG), the third largest producer of glass containers. CCC, which had a history of acquiring other companies, produced no glass containers in 1955, but shipped 33% of all metal containers sold in this country. HAG, which produced no metal containers, shipped 9.6% of the glass containers that year. The geographic market was held by the District Court to be the entire country. The Government had urged ten product markets, including the can industry, the glass container industry, and various lines of commerce defined by the end use of the containers. The District Court found three product markets, metal containers, glass containers, and metal and glass beer containers. Although finding [***2] interindustry competition between metal, glass and plastic containers, the District Court held them to be separate lines of commerce. Holding that the Government had failed to prove reasonable probability of lessening competition in any line of commerce, the District Court dismissed the complaint at the end of the Government's case. Held:

HÌ Ì ÁMÈJÀ I FÊI I FLÀ I ÁMÈDÀFÌ HÌ FÊI HÌ LÀFGÀOÀÈGÀÁÍ HÀEJÌ HÀFÌ JÌ ÁMÈSÓYÒÁGGI FÊI

1. Interindustry competition between glass and metal containers may provide the basis for defining a relevant product market. Pp. 447-458.

(a) The competition protected by § 7 is not limited to that between identical products. P. 452.

(b) Cross-elasticity of demand and interchangeability of use are used to recognize competition where it exists, not to obscure it. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 326. P. 453.

(c) There has been insistent, continuous, effective and substantial end-use competition between metal and glass containers; and though interchangeability of use may not be so complete and cross-elasticity of demand not so immediate as in the case of some intra-industry mergers, the long-run results bring the competition between them within § 7. Pp. 453-455.

(d) There is a large area of effective competition [***3] between metal and glass containers, which implies one or more other lines of commerce encompassing both industries. Pp. 456-457.

(e) If an area of effective competition cuts across industry lines, the relevant line of commerce must do likewise. P. 457.

(f) Based on the present record, the interindustry competition between glass and metal containers warrants treating the combined glass and metal container industries and all end uses for which they compete as a relevant product market. P. 457.

(g) Complete interindustry competitive overlap is not required before § 7 is applicable and some noncompetitive segments in a proposed market area do not prevent its identification as a line of commerce. P. 457.

(h) That there may be a broader product market, including other competing containers, does not prevent the existence of a submarket of cans and glass containers. Pp. 457-458.

2. On the basis of the evidence so far presented the merger between CCC and HAG violates § 7 because it will have a probable anticompetitive effect within the relevant line of commerce. Pp. 458-466.

(a) In determining whether a merger will have probable anticompetitive effect, it must be looked at functionally [***4] in the context of the market involved, its structure, history and future. P. 458.

(b) Where a merger is of such magnitude as to be inherently suspect, detailed market analysis and proof of likely lessening of competition are not required in view of § 7's purpose of preventing undue concentration. P. 458.

(c) The product market of the combined metal and glass container industries was dominated by six companies, of which CCC ranked second and HAG sixth. P. 461.

(d) The 25% of the product market held by the merged firms approaches the percentage found presumptively bad in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, and nearly the same as that involved in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, and the addition to CCC's share is larger here than in Aluminum Co. P. 461.

(e) Where there has been a trend toward concentration in an industry, any further concentration should be stopped. P. 461.

(f) Where an industry is already highly concentrated, it is important to prevent even slight increases therein. Pp. 461-462.

HÌ Ì ÁMÈJÀ I FÊI I FLÀ I ÁMÈDÀFÌ HÌ FÊI HÌ LÁFGÀOÀÉGÀÁÍ HÀEJÌ HÀJÌ I ÁMÈSÓYÒÁGGI FÊI

(g) The argument that CCC's and HAG's products were not in direct competition at the [***5] time of the merger and that therefore the merger could have no effect on competition ignores the fact that the removal of HAG as an independent factor in the glass container industry and in the combined metal and glass container market foreclosed its potential competition with CCC, neglects the further fact that CCC, already a dominant firm in an oligopolistic market, has increased its power and effectiveness, and fails to consider the triggering effect that a merger of such large companies has on the rest of the industry which seeks to follow the pattern with anticompetitive results. Pp. 462-465.

Counsel: Ralph S. Spritzer argued the cause for the United States. On the brief were Solicitor General Cox, Assistant Attorney General Orrick, Lionel Kestenbaum and Arthur J. Murphy, Jr.

Helmer R. Johnson argued the cause for appellees. With him on the brief was Mark F. Hughes.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Goldberg

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[*443] [***956] [**1740] MR. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

In 1956, Continental Can Company, the Nation's second largest producer of metal containers, acquired all of the assets, [***6] business and good will of Hazel-Atlas Glass Company, the Nation's third largest producer of glass containers, in exchange for 999,140 shares of Continental's common stock and the assumption by Continental of all the liabilities of Hazel-Atlas. The Government brought this action seeking a judgment that the acquisition violated § 7 of the Clayton Act <sup>1</sup> [***7] and requesting an [*444] appropriate divestiture order. Trying the case without a jury, the District Court found that the Government had failed to prove reasonable probability of anticompetitive effect in any line of commerce, and accordingly dismissed the complaint at the close of the Government's case. United States v. Continental Can Co., 217 F.Supp. 761 (D. C. S. D. N. Y.). We noted probable jurisdiction to consider the specialized problems incident to the application of § 7 to interindustry mergers and acquisitions.<sup>2</sup> 375 U.S. 893. [***957] We reverse the decision of the District Court.

I.

---

<sup>1</sup> Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended by the Celler-Kefauver Antimerger Act, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 18, provides in relevant part:

"No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

<sup>2</sup> Both parties and the District Court refer to this as an interindustry merger. The word "industry" is susceptible of more than one meaning. It might be defined in terms of end uses for which various products compete; so defined it would be roughly equivalent to the concept of a "line of commerce." According to this interpretation the glass and metal container businesses, to the extent they compete, are in the same industry. On the other hand, "industry" might also denote an aggregate of enterprises employing similar production and marketing facilities and producing products having markedly similar characteristics. In many instances, the segments of economic endeavor embraced by these two concepts of "industry" will be substantially coextensive, since those who employ the same types of machinery to turn out the same general product often compete in the same market. Since this is not such a case it will be helpful to use the word "industry" as referring to similarity of production facilities and products. So viewed, "interindustry competition" becomes a meaningful concept.

HÌ Ì ÁMÈJÀ I FÈI I I LÀ I ÁMÈDÀFÌ HÌ ÈFÌ I ÉLÀFGÀSÈOÀÈGÀÁÍ HÀÈEJÌ I LÀJÌ I ÁMÈÈSÓYÒÀGGI ÈFÌ

The industries [***8] with which this case is principally concerned are, as found by the trial court, the metal can industry, the glass container industry and the plastic container industry, each producing one basic type of container made of metal, glass, and plastic, respectively.

Continental Can is a New York corporation organized in 1913 to acquire all the assets of three metal container [*445] manufacturers. Since 1913 Continental has acquired 21 domestic metal container companies as well as numerous others engaged in the packaging business, including producers of flexible packaging; a manufacturer of polyethylene bottles and similar plastic containers; 14 producers of paper containers and paperboard; four companies making closures [**1741] for glass containers; and one -- Hazel-Atlas -- producing glass containers. In 1955, the year prior to the present merger, Continental, with assets of $ 382 million, was the second largest company in the metal container field, shipping approximately 33% of all such containers sold in the United States. It and the largest producer, American Can Company, accounted for approximately 71% of all metal container shipments. National Can Company, the third largest, [***9] shipped approximately 5%, with the remaining 24% of the market being divided among 75 to 90 other firms.<sup>3</sup>

[***10] During 1956, Continental acquired not only the Hazel-Atlas Company but also Robert Gair Company, Inc. -- a leading manufacturer of paper and paperboard products -- and White Cap Company -- a leading producer of vacuum-type metal closures for glass food containers -- so that Continental's assets rose from $ 382 million in 1955 [*446] to more than $ 633 million in 1956, and its net sales and operating revenues during that time increased from $ 666 million to more than $ 1 billion.

[***958] Hazel-Atlas was a West Virginia corporation which in 1955 had net sales in excess of $ 79 million and assets of more than $ 37 million. Prior to the absorption of Hazel-Atlas into Continental the pattern of dominance among a few firms in the glass container industry was similar to that which prevailed in the metal container field. Hazel-Atlas, with approximately 9.6% of the glass container shipments in 1955, was third. Owens-Illinois Glass Company had 34.2% and Anchor-Hocking Glass Company 11.6%, with the remaining 44.6% being divided among at least 39 other firms.<sup>4</sup>

[***11] After an initial attempt to prevent the merger under a 1950 consent decree failed, the terms of the decree being [*447] held inapplicable to the proposed acquisition, the Government moved for a preliminary [**1742]

<sup>3</sup> The District Court found that the basic raw material used in the manufacture of cans, and the major cost factor bearing on their price is tin-coated steel (tin plate). In some instances uncoated steel (blackplate) or aluminum is used instead of tin plate. Other raw materials include soldering compounds, paints, varnishes, lithographic inks, paper and cartons for packaging. Cans are rigid and unbreakable, can be hermetically sealed and are impermeable to gases. They are lighter than glass containers, can be heat-processed faster, and are not chemically inert.

Forty-nine members of the metal can industry are organized in a trade association known as the Can Manufacturers Institute which maintains a professional staff of three. Acting largely through committees, it deals with various technical problems of the industry and carries out some promotional activities emphasizing the advantages of the metal can.

<sup>4</sup> According to the findings of the District Court, glass containers are made principally from sand, lime, and soda ash, and the major factor in determining their price is the cost of labor. Glass containers are rigid, breakable, and chemically inert. They can be hermetically sealed and, unlike many cans, can be easily resealed after they have been opened. The industry recognizes two basic types of containers, the wide mouth and the narrow neck. Members of this industry also have a trade association, the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute, which, through its 45 employees and its standing committees, carries on such activities as market research and promotion, technical research, package design and specifications, the development of standard testing and quality control procedures, problems of freight rates, labor relations, and liaison work with government. In recent decades the expansion of the glass container industry has been more rapid than, and often realized at the expense of, the metal can industry. During World War II, for example, substantial increments in the market served by glass container manufacturers were made possible by the short supply of tin plate.

The third industry found by the District Court to be involved in this multi-industry competitive picture was the plastic container industry, which, though a relative newcomer, has enjoyed impressive growth since making its debut in the mid-1940's. Its dollar sales volume is small compared with that of its metal and glass counterparts, but its growth has been and continues to be steady and rapid.

HÌ ÀMÈÙÀ I FÈÙ I Ì LÀ I ÀUÈOÀFFI HÌ ÈFFI I GLÀGÀSEÒAÀCÀ ÁI HÈÈJÌ I LÀFJÌ I ÀMÈÙÀSÓYÓÀGGG ÈÈFFF injunction against its consummation and sought a temporary restraining order pending the determination of its motion. The temporary restraining order was denied, and on the same day the merger was accomplished. The Government then withdrew its motion for a preliminary injunction and continued the action as one for divestiture.

At the conclusion of the Government's case, Continental moved for dismissal of the complaint. After the District Court had granted the motion under Rule 41 \(b\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure but before a formal opinion was filed, this Court handed down its decision in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294; additional briefs directed to the applicability of Brown Shoe were filed. The trial judge held that under the guidelines laid down by Brown Shoe the Government had not established its right to relief under § 7 of the Clayton Act. This appeal followed.

II.

We deal first with the relevant [***12] market. It is not disputed here, and the District Court held, that the geographical market is the entire United States. As for the product market, the court found, as was conceded by the parties, that the can industry and the glass container industry were relevant lines of commerce. Beyond these two product markets, however, the Government urged the recognition of various other lines of commerce, some of them defined in terms of the end uses for which tin and glass containers [***959] were in substantial competition. These end-use claims were containers for the beer industry, containers for the soft drink industry, containers for the canning industry, containers for the toiletry and cosmetic industry, containers for the medicine and health industry, and containers for the household and chemical industry. 217 F.Supp., at 778-779.

[*448] The court, in dealing with these claims, recognized that there was interindustry competition and made findings as to its extent and nature:

"There was substantial and vigorous inter-industry competition between these three industries and between various of the products which they manufactured. Metal can, glass container [***13] and plastic container manufacturers were each seeking to enlarge their sales to the thousands of packers of hundreds of varieties of food, chemical, toiletry and industrial products, ranging from ripe olives to fruit juices to tuna fish to smoked tongue; from maple syrup to pet food to coffee; from embalming fluid to floor wax to nail polish to aspirin to veterinary supplies, to take examples at random.

"Each industry and each of the manufacturers within it was seeking to improve their products so that they would appeal to new customers or hold old ones." 217 F.Supp., at 780-781.

Furthermore the court found that:

"Hazel-Atlas and Continental were part of this overall industrial pattern, each in a recognized separate industry producing distinct products but engaged in inter-industry competition for the favor of various end users of their products." Id., at 781.

The court, nevertheless, with one exception -- containers for beer -- rejected the Government's claim that existing competition between metal and glass containers had resulted in the end-use product markets urged by the Government: "The fact that there is inter-industry or inter-product [***14] competition between metal, glass and plastic containers is not determinative of the metes and bounds of a relevant product market." Ibid. In the trial court's view, the Government failed to make "appropriate distinctions . . . between inter-industry or overall commodity [*449] [**1743] competition and the type of competition between products with reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand which has Clayton Act significance." Id., at 781-782. The interindustry competition, concededly present, did not remove this merger from the category of the conglomerate combination, "in which one company in two separate industries combined with another in a third industry for the purpose of establishing a diversified line of products." Id., at 782.

HÌ ÁMEĀĀ I FĀĀ I JLĀĀ ÁUĒĀĀ ĀFĀĀ HÌ ÁFĀĀ I HĀĀGĀĀ SĀĀDĀĀ ÁĀ HĀĀJĀĀ JĀĀFĀĀ JĀĀ ÁĀEĀĀSÓYÓĀĀGGG FĀĀFĀĀ

LEDHN[1] [1] We cannot accept this conclusion. The District Court's findings having established the existence of three product markets -- metal containers, glass containers and metal and glass beer containers -- the disputed issue on which that court erred is whether the admitted competition between metal and [****15] glass containers for uses other than packaging beer was of the type and quality deserving of § 7 protection and therefore the basis for defining a relevant product market. In resolving this issue we are instructed on the one hand that "for every product, substitutes exist. But a relevant market cannot meaningfully encompass that infinite range." Times-Picayune v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 612, n. 31. [***960] On the other hand it is improper "to require that products be fungible to be considered in the relevant market." United States v. du Pont, 351 U.S. 377, 394. In defining the product market between these terminal extremes, we must recognize meaningful competition where it is found to exist. Though the "outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it," there may be "within this broad market, well-defined submarkets . . . which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325. Concededly these guidelines offer [****16] no precise formula for judgment and they necessitate, rather than avoid, careful consideration based upon the entire record.

[*450] It is quite true that glass and metal containers have different characteristics which may disqualify one or the other, at least in their present form, from this or that particular use; that the machinery necessary to pack in glass is different from that employed when cans are used; that a particular user of cans or glass may pack in only one or the other container and does not shift back and forth from day to day as price and other factors might make desirable; and that the competition between metal and glass containers is different from the competition between the can companies themselves or between the products of the different glass companies. These are relevant and important considerations but they are not sufficient to obscure the competitive relationships which this record so compellingly reveals.

Baby food was at one time packed entirely in metal cans. Hazel-Atlas played a significant role in inducing the shift to glass as the dominant container by designing "what has become the typical baby food jar." According to Continental's estimate, [****17] 80% of the Nation's baby food now moves in glass containers. Continental has not been satisfied with this contemporary dominance by glass, however, and has made intensive efforts to increase its share of the business at the expense of glass. In 1954, two years before the merger, the Director of Market Research and Promotion for the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute concluded, largely on the basis of Continental's efforts to secure more baby food business, that "the can industry is beginning to fight back more aggressively in this field where it is losing ground to glass." In cooperation with some of the baby food companies Continental carried out what it called a Baby Food Depth Survey in New York and Los Angeles to [**1744] discover specific reasons for the preference of glass-packed baby food. Largely in response to this and other in-depth surveys, advertising campaigns were conducted which were designed [*451] to overcome mothers' prejudices against metal containers.<sup>5</sup>

[****18] In [***961] the soft drink business, a field which has been, and is, predominantly glass territory, the court recognized that the metal can industry had "after considerable initial difficulty . . . developed a can strong enough to resist the pressures generated by carbonated beverages" and "made strenuous efforts to promote the use of metal cans for carbonated beverages as against glass bottles." 217 F.Supp., at 798. Continental has been a major factor in this rivalry. It studied the results of market tests to determine the extent to which metal cans could "penetrate this

<sup>5</sup> In 1952 Continental ran a series of advertisements emphasizing the following "5 reasons why cans are an ideal container for baby foods:"

- "1. ECONOMICAL. Baby food in cans is usually priced as low or lower than baby food packed in other containers."
- "2. STERILE. Processing sterilizes the inside, and light, dust and germs can't get into a hermetically sealed can."
- "3. EXTRA SAFETY. Cans are sealed to stay sealed until the consumer opens them."
- "4. SHATTERPROOF. Steel and tin won't break, shatter or chip."
- "5. SAFE FOR LEFT-OVERS. Food can be safely left in the can, just keep it covered and under refrigeration."

HÌ Ì ÁÑEJÁ I FËI Í FLÀ I ÁÑEÓDËI HÌ ËEFÌ I I LÄGÄSEÖAËCAÁÍ HÄEJÌ FLÄFJÌ I ÁÑEESÖYÖÄGGI ËEËFI tremendous market," and its advertising has centered around the advantages of cans over glass as soft drink containers, emphasizing such features as convenience in stacking and storing, freedom from breakage and lower distribution costs resulting from the lighter weight of cans.

The District Court found that "although at one time almost all packaged beer was sold in bottles, in a relatively short period the beer can made great headway and may well have become the dominant beer container." 217 F.Supp., at 795. Regardless of which industry may have the upper hand at a given moment, [****19] however, an [*452] intense competitive battle on behalf of the beer can and the beer bottle is being waged both by the industry trade associations and by individual container manufacturers, one of the principal protagonists being Continental. Technological development has been an important weapon in this battle. A significant factor in the growth of the beer can appears to have been its no-return feature. The glass industry responded with the development of a lighter and cheaper one-way bottle.

In the food canning, toiletry and cosmetic, medicine and health, and household and chemical industries the existence of vigorous competition was also recognized below. In the case of food it was noted that one type of container has supplanted the other in the packing of some products and that in some instances similar products are packaged in two or more different types of containers. In the other industries "glass container, plastic container and metal container manufacturers are each seeking to promote their lines of containers at the expense of other lines, . . . all are attempting to improve their products or to develop new ones so as to have a wider customer appeal," 217 F.Supp., at 804, [****20] the result being that "manufacturers from time to time may shift a product from one type of container to another." Id., at 805.

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [↑] [2][LEdHN\[3\]](#) [↑] [3]In the light of this record and these findings, we think the District Court employed an unduly narrow construction of the "competition" protected by § 7 and of "reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand" in judging the facts of this case. We reject the opinion below insofar as it holds that these terms as used in the statute or in Brown Shoe were intended [**1745] to limit the competition protected by § 7 to competition between identical products, to the kind of competition which exists, for example, between the metal containers of one company and those of another, or between the several manufacturers of glass [***962] containers. Certainly, HN1 [↑] that [*453] the competition here involved may be called "inter-industry competition" and is between products [****21] with distinctive characteristics does not automatically remove it from the reach of § 7.

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4][LEdHN\[5\]](#) [↑] [5]HN2 [↑] Interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand are not to be used to obscure competition but to "recognize competition where, in fact, competition exists." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 326.In our view there is and has been a rather general confrontation between metal and glass containers and competition between them for the same end uses which is insistent, continuous, effective and quantitywise very substantial. Metal has replaced glass and glass has replaced metal as the leading container for some important uses; both are used for other purposes; each is trying to expand its share of the market at the expense of the other;<sup>6</sup> [****23] and each is attempting to preempt for itself every use for which its product is physically suitable, even though some such uses have traditionally been regarded as the exclusive [****22] domain of the competing industry.<sup>7</sup> [****24] In differing [**1746] degrees [*454] for different end uses manufacturers

<sup>6</sup> Consumer preferences for glass or metal are often regional and traceable to factors other than the intrinsic superiority of the preferred container. For example, the one-way beer bottle was highly successful in Baltimore -- due in part to the efforts of "a highly motivated leading brewer" -- but failed to make headway in Detroit. And though glass appears to have about 80% of the Nation's baby food business, as of the time of the merger cans had over 60% of the business west of the Mississippi. According to one opinion in the record, all Canadian baby food moves in cans. And an official of the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute reported to that body that pickles, preserves, and jams are packed in tin cans in Canada.

<sup>7</sup> Ford Sammis & Company, a firm of market economists, conducted for the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute market surveys of 28 different product classifications. On the basis of over 3 1/4 million individual answers to questions asked in more than 12,000 personal interviews, Ford Sammis concluded the following:

HÌ ÁMÈJÀ I FÈB Í I LÀI ÁMÈDÉFÍ HÌ ÈFFÍ I Í LÀGÀSÈOÀÈCA ÁI HÈFFÍ JÌ GLAFJÌ ÁMÈJÀSÓYÓAGGG ÈFFÍG

[***963] in each industry take into consideration the price of the containers of the opposing industry in formulating their own pricing [*455] policy.<sup>8</sup> Thus, though the interchangeability of use may not be so complete and the cross-elasticity of demand not so immediate as in the case of most intraindustry mergers, there is over the long run the kind of customer response to innovation and other competitive stimuli that brings the competition between these two industries within § 7's competition-preserving proscriptions.

LEdHN[6] [6]Moreover, price is only one factor in a user's choice between one container or the [****25] other. HN3 That there are price differentials between the two products or that the demand for one is not particularly or immediately responsive to changes in the price of the other are relevant matters but not determinative of the product market issue. Whether a packager will use glass or cans may depend not only on the price of the package but also upon other equally important considerations. The consumer, for example, may begin to prefer one type of container over the other and the manufacturer of baby food cans may therefore find that his problem is the

"Every consumer product tends to standardize on a single type of container. Glass has become the standard, traditional container for a host of products, including catsup, salad dressings, salad oil, instant coffee, prune juice, mayonnaise, peanut butter, jams and syrup. Other products have standardized on tin cans -- regular coffee, evaporated milk, dog food, and most fruits, vegetables and juices.

"However, no traditional market is ever secure for any type of container. Marketers are apt to try out new containers at any time, in their constant search for ways to increase sales.

"When this happens, the result is a period of container competition, which may run through one or more of three separate stages."

1. Stage 1, according to the Sammis report, occurs when a new type of container is first introduced by a secondary brand. Thus "[a] new container can become a potent sales force for a brand, if strong consumer preference exists (or is promoted) for that type of container. Recognizing this, secondary brands are constantly trying out new types of containers as sales incentive. While leading brands are ordinarily satisfied to maintain the status quo, secondary brands are willing to gamble to improve their positions."

2. The second stage comes about in this manner: "If a secondary brand increases its sales during the period when it is introducing a new type of container, the sales increase is usually attributed to the new container, by marketer and competitors alike. Advertising, product changes or other factors may actually be more important than the new container, but circumstantial evidence points to the container.

"Leading brands are not prone to sit idly by while competitors cut into their share of the market. They tend to cover competitors' bets by offering both traditional and new types of containers to their customers. This creates Stage 2 of container competition."

3. "When leading brands are available in a choice of containers, consumers' container preference is no longer in conflict with their brand preferences. They can have the brand they want in the container they want. Sales of leading brands under these circumstances seek the level of consumer preference for each type of container.

"If preference for one type of container greatly exceeds preference for the other type, the products then tends [sic] eventually to standardize once again on a single type of container -- the container most consumers prefer. This process is subject to promotion of container by brand marketers or container manufacturers. The alternate outcome can be favorable to either the new or the traditional container."

<sup>8</sup>The chairman of the board of Owens-Illinois Glass Co. testified that he takes into account the price of metal containers in pricing glass containers for beer, soft drinks, and household and chemical products, and to a lesser degree for toiletries and cosmetics. In assessing the likelihood that it could "penetrate [the] tremendous market" for soft drink containers Continental concluded "assuming that the merchandising factors are favorable and that the product quality is well received, the upper limit on market acceptance will then be determined by price." Continental also stated in an intercompany memorandum that in the fight between the beer can and the one-way bottle "the key factor, in our estimation, is pricing," and concluded that a reduction in the price of one-way beer bottles was to "be regarded as a further attempt on the part of the glass manufacturers to maintain their position in the one-way package field."

HÌ ÁMÈJÀ I FÈB Í LÀI ÁMÈOËFÌ HÌ ÈFÌ I Í LÀGÀSEÒAÈCA ÁI HÈÈJÌ HLÀFJÌ ÁMÈJÀSÓYÓAGGÌ ÈFÈEGÌ

housewife rather [*456] than the packer or the price of his cans.<sup>9</sup> This may not be price competition but it is nevertheless meaningful competition between interchangeable containers.

[****26] We therefore conclude that the area of effective competition between the metal and glass container industry is far broader than that of containers for beer. It is true that the record in this case does not identify with particularity all end uses for which competition exists and all those for which competition may be non-existent, too remote, or too ephemeral to warrant § 7 application. Nor does the record furnish the exact quantitative share of the relevant market which is enjoyed by the individual participating can and glass companies. But "the 'market,' as most concepts in law or economics, cannot be measured by [***964] metes and bounds. . . . Obviously no magic [**1747] inheres in numbers." Times-Picayune v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611-612. "Industrial activities cannot be confined to trim categories." United States v. du Pont, 351 U.S. 377, 395. The claimed deficiencies in the record cannot sweep aside the existence of a large area of effective competition between the makers of cans and the makers of glass containers. We know enough to conclude that the rivalry between cans and glass containers is pervasive and that [****27] the area of competitive overlap between these two product markets is broad enough to make the position of the individual companies within their own industries very relevant to the merger's impact within the broader competitive area that embraces both of the merging firms' respective industries.

LEdHN[7] [7]Glass and metal containers were recognized to be two separate lines of commerce. But given the area of effective [*457] competition between these lines, there is necessarily implied one or more other lines of commerce embracing both industries. Since the purpose of delineating a line of commerce is to provide an adequate basis for measuring the effects of a given acquisition, its contours must, as nearly as possible, conform to competitive reality. Where the area of effective competition cuts across industry lines, so must the relevant line of commerce; otherwise an adequate determination of the merger's true impact cannot be made.

LEdHN[8] [8]Based on the evidence thus far revealed by this record we hold that the interindustry competition [****28] between glass and metal containers is sufficient to warrant treating as a relevant product market the combined glass and metal container industries and all end uses for which they compete. There may be some end uses for which glass and metal do not and could not compete, but complete interindustry competitive overlap need not be shown. We would not be true to the purpose of the Clayton Act's line of commerce concept as a framework within which to measure the effect of mergers on competition were we to hold that the existence of noncompetitive segments within a proposed market area precludes its being treated as a line of commerce.

LEdHN[9] [9]This line of commerce was not pressed upon the District Court. However, since it is coextensive with the two industries, which were held to be lines of commerce, and since it is composed largely, if not entirely, of the more particularized end-use lines urged in the District Court by the Government, we see nothing to preclude us from reaching the question of its prima facie existence at this stage of the case.

LEdHN[10] [10] [****29] Nor are we concerned by the suggestion that if the product market is to be defined in these terms it must include plastic, paper, foil and any other materials competing for the same business. That there may be a [*458] broader product market made up of metal, glass and other competing containers does not necessarily negative the existence of submarkets of cans, glass, plastic or cans and glass together, for "within this broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust [***965] purposes." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 325.

III.

---

<sup>9</sup> An official of the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute described that organization's advertising program as three-pronged, directed at the packer, the retailer, and the ultimate consumer.

HÌ Ì ÁÑEJÁ I FÑA Ì Ì LÀ I ÁÑEÓÄFI HÌ ÄEFÍ I Ì LÄGÄSEÖAÄCAÁÍ HÄEJÍ I LÄFJÍ I ÁÑEÆSÓYÓÄGGG ÄEEFGJ

[\[11\]](#) [11] [\[12\]](#) [12] [\[13\]](#) [13] We approach the ultimate judgment under § 7 having in mind the teachings of Brown Shoe, supplemented by their application and elaboration in *United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321*, and *United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651*. The [****30] issue is whether the merger between Continental and Hazel-Atlas will have probable anticompetitive effect within the relevant line of commerce. HN4 Market shares are the primary indicia of market power but a judgment [**1748] under § 7 is not to be made by any single qualitative or quantitative test. The merger must be viewed functionally in the context of the particular market involved, its structure, history and probable future. Where a merger is of such a size as to be inherently suspect, elaborate proof of market structure, market behavior and probable anticompetitive effects may be dispensed with in view of § 7's design to prevent undue concentration. Moreover, the competition with which § 7 deals includes not only existing competition but that which is sufficiently probable and imminent. See *United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., supra*.

Continental occupied a dominant position in the metal can industry. It shipped 33% of the metal cans shipped by the industry and together with American shipped about 71% of the industry total. Continental's share amounted [****31] to 13 billion metal containers out of a total of 40 billion and its $ 433 million gross sales of metal containers [*459] amounted to 31.4% of the industry's total gross of $ 1,380,000,000. Continental's total assets were $ 382 million, its net sales and operating revenues $ 666 million.

In addition to demonstrating the dominant position of Continental in a highly concentrated industry, the District Court's findings clearly revealed Continental's vigorous efforts all across the competitive front between metal and glass containers. Continental obviously pushed metal containers wherever metal containers could be pushed. Its share of the beer can market ran from 43% in 1955 to 46% in 1957. Its share of both beer can and beer bottle shipments, disregarding the returnable bottle factor, ran from 36% in 1955 to 38% in 1957. Although metal cans have so far occupied a relatively small percentage of the soft drink container field, Continental's share of this can market ranged from 36% in 1955 to 26% in 1957 and its portion of the total shipments of glass and metal soft drink and beverage containers, disregarding the returnable bottle factor, was 7.2% in 1955, approximately 5.4% in [****32] 1956 and approximately 6.2% in 1957 (for 1956 and 1957 these figures include Hazel-Atlas' share). In the category covering all nonfood products, Continental's share was approximately 30% of the total shipments of metal containers for such uses.

Continental's major position in the relevant product market -- the combined metal and glass container industries -- prior to the merger is undeniable. Of the 59 billion containers shipped in 1955 by the metal (39 3/4 billion) and glass (19 1/3 billion) [***966] industries, Continental shipped 21.9%, to a great extent dispersed among all of the end uses for which glass and metal compete.<sup>10</sup> Of the [**1749] six largest firms in the product market, it ranked second.

---

<sup>10</sup> Determination of market shares is made somewhat more difficult in this case than in the ordinary intraindustry merger because the indices of total production of the two industries are expressed differently, the metal container industry reporting to the Census Bureau in terms of tinplate consumed in manufacture, and the glass container industry in terms of units of containers. On the basis of figures and data supplied by the Census Bureau and the Can Manufacturers Institute the Government has derived a conversion factor showing the relationship between tinplate consumption and total containers manufactured, thereby permitting a comparison of the relative positions of the firms competing within the glass and metal container line of commerce. It would appear that the District Court relied on figures disclosed by application of this factor, since it found that American and Continental shipped approximately 38% and 33%, respectively, of the metal cans sold in the United States. 217 F.Supp., at 773.

Continental objects to the use of this conversion scheme, however, arguing that it ignores such considerations as size of cans and the returnable feature of some types of bottles. We are not persuaded. Since different systems of statistical notation are employed by these industries, a common referential standard is an absolute prerequisite to a comparison of market shares. Consistent with this Court's declarations in other cases concerning the high degree of relevance of market shares to the effect of mergers on competition, we believe that slight variations one way or the other which may inhere in the use of a conversion formula should not blind us to the broad significance of the resulting percentages. In the compilation of statistics "precision in detail is less important than the accuracy of the broad picture presented." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 342, n. 69.

HÍ ÁNÉJÁÍ FÉBÁÍ JЛА ÁJÉAOCAFÍ HÍ ÉAFÍÍ JI LÁGASÉDÀ ÚGÁ ÁÍ HÍÁEJÍ Í LÁJÍ ÁÍ ÁNÉJÉSÓY ÓJÁOGÍ FÁEEHG

[****33] [*460] When Continental acquired Hazel-Atlas it added significantly to its position in the relevant line of commerce. Hazel-Atlas was the third largest glass container manufacturer in an industry in which the three top companies controlled 55.4% of the total shipments of glass containers. Hazel-Atlas' share was 9.6%, which amounted to 1,857,000,000 glass containers out of a total of 19 1/3 billion industrial total. Its annual sales amounted to $ 79 million, its assets exceeded $ 37 million and it had 13 plants variously located in the United States. In terms of total containers shipped, Hazel-Atlas ranked sixth in the relevant line of commerce, its almost 2 billion containers being 3.1% of the product market total.

[*461] [LEDHN\[14\]](#) [14]The evidence so far presented leads us to conclude that the merger between Continental and Hazel-Atlas is in violation of § 7. The product market embracing the combined metal and glass container industries was dominated by six firms having a total of 70.1% of the business.<sup>11</sup> Continental, with 21.9% of the shipments, ranked second within this product market, and [****34] Hazel-Atlas, with 3.1%, ranked sixth. Thus, of this vast market -- amounting at the time of the merger to almost $ 3 billion in annual sales -- a large percentage already belonged to Continental before the merger. By the acquisition of Hazel-Atlas stock Continental not only increased its own share more than 14% from 21.9% to 25%, but also reduced from five to four the most significant competitors [***967] who might have threatened its dominant position. The resulting percentage of the combined firms approaches that held presumptively bad in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, and is almost the same as that involved in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271. The incremental addition to the acquiring firm's share is considerably larger than in Aluminum Co. The case falls squarely within the principle that HNS where there has been a "history of tendency toward concentration in the industry" tendencies toward further concentration "are to be curbed in their incipency." Brown Shoe Co. v. United

<sup>11</sup> The six largest firms, and their respective percentages of the relevant market as of the year prior to the merger are:

American Can Co

26.8%

Continental Can Co

21.9%

Owens-Illinois Glass Co

11.2%

Anchor-Hocking Glass Co

3.8%

National Can Co

3.3%

Hazel-Atlas Glass Co

3.1%

Total

70.1%

HÌ ÁMEÑÁ I FËI Ì FLÀ I ÁUÑÓDEI HÌ ÁEFEI I JLÁFGASEOÀECAÁÍ HÆEEJÌ Ì LAFJÌ I ÁMEÑSÓYÓAGGI ËEEHI

States, 370 U.S., at 345, 346. [****35] Where "concentration is already great, the importance of preventing [*462] even slight increases in concentration and so preserving the possibility of eventual deconcentration is correspondingly great." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 365, n. 42; United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra.

Continental insists, however, that whatever the nature of interindustry competition in general, the types of containers produced by Continental and Hazel-Atlas at the time of the merger were for the most part not in competition with each other and hence the merger could have no effect on competition. This argument ignores several important [****36] matters.

First: The District Court found that both Continental and Hazel-Atlas were [**1750] engaged in interindustry competition characteristic of the glass and metal can industries. While the position of Hazel-Atlas in the beer and soft drink industries was negligible in 1955, its position was quite different in other fields. Hazel-Atlas made both wide-mouthed glass jars and narrow-necked containers but more of the former than the latter. Both are used in packing food, medicine and health supplies, household and industrial products and toiletries and cosmetics, among others, and Hazel-Atlas' position in supplying the packaging needs of these industries was indeed important. In 1955, it shipped about 8% of the narrow-necked bottles and about 14% of the wide-mouthed glass containers for food; about 10% of the narrow-necked and 40% of the wide-mouthed glass containers for the household and chemical industry; about 9% of the narrow-necked and 28% of the wide-mouthed glass containers for the toiletries and cosmetics industry; and about 6% of the narrow-necked and 25% of the wide-mouthed glass containers for the medicine and health industry. Continental, as we have said, in 1955 [****37] shipped 30% of the containers used for these same nonfood purposes. In these industries the District Court found that the glass container and metal [*463] container manufacturers were each seeking to promote their lines of containers at the expense of the other lines and that all were attempting to improve their products or to develop new ones so as to have a wider customer appeal. We think it quite clear that Continental and Hazel-Atlas were set off directly against one another in this process and that the merger therefore carries with it the probability of foreclosing actual and potential competition between these two concerns. Hazel-Atlas has been removed as an independent factor in the glass industry and in the line of commerce which includes both metal cans and glass containers.

LEdHN[15] [15]We think the District Court erred [***968] in placing heavy reliance on Continental's management of its Hazel-Atlas division after the merger while Continental was under some pressure because of the pending government antitrust suit. Continental acquired by the merger the power to guide the development of Hazel-Atlas [****38] consistently with Continental's interest in metal containers; contrariwise it may find itself unwilling to push metal containers to the exclusion of glass for those end uses where Hazel-Atlas is strong. It has at the same time acquired the ability, know-how and the capacity to satisfy its customers' demands whether they want metal or glass containers. Continental need no longer lose customers to glass companies solely because consumer preference, perhaps triggered by competitive efforts by the glass container industry, forces the packer to turn from cans to glass. And no longer does a Hazel-Atlas customer who has normally packed in glass have to look elsewhere for metal containers if he discovers that the can rather than the jar will answer some of his pressing problems.

Second: Continental would view these developments as representing an acceptable effort by it to diversify its product lines and to gain the resulting competitive advantages, thereby strengthening competition which it [*464] declared the antitrust laws are designed to promote. But we think the answer is otherwise when a dominant firm in a line of commerce in which market power is already concentrated among a [****39] few firms makes an acquisition which enhances its market power and the vigor and effectiveness of its own competitive efforts.

Third: A merger between the second and sixth largest competitors in a gigantic line of commerce is significant not only for its intrinsic effect on competition but also for its tendency to endanger a much broader anticompetitive effect by triggering other mergers by companies seeking the same competitive advantages sought by Continental in this case. As the Court said in Brown Shoe, "if a merger achieving 5% control were now [**1751] approved, we might be required to approve future merger efforts by Brown's competitors seeking similar market shares." 370 U.S., at 343-344.

HÌ Ì ÁÑEJÁ I FËB Ì I LÀ I ÁÑEÓDÉI HÌ ÉÆFI Ì FLÄGÄSE Òa ËCA ÁÍ HÄEJÌ Ì LÄFJÌ I ÁÑEJÄSÖYÓ ÓÄGGI ËÆH

Fourth: It is not at all self-evident that the lack of current competition between Continental and Hazel-Atlas for some important end uses of metal and glass containers significantly diminished the adverse effect of the merger on competition. Continental might have concluded that it could effectively insulate itself from competition by acquiring a major firm not presently directing its market acquisition efforts toward the same end uses as Continental, but possessing [***40] the potential to do so. Two examples will illustrate. Both soft drinks and baby food are currently packed predominantly in glass, but Continental has engaged in vigorous and imaginative promotional activities attempting to overcome consumer preferences for glass and secure a larger share of these two markets for its tin cans. Hazel-Atlas was not at the time of the merger a significant producer of either of these containers, but with comparatively little difficulty, if it were an independent firm making independent business judgments, [*465] it could have developed its soft drink and baby food capacity. The acquisition of Hazel-Atlas by a company engaged in such intense efforts to effect a [***969] diversion of business from glass to metal in both of these lines cannot help but diminish the likelihood of Hazel-Atlas realizing its potential as a significant competitor in either line. Our view of the record compels us to disagree with the District Court's conclusion that Continental, as a result of the merger, was not "likely to cease being an innovator in either [the glass or metal container] line." 217 F.Supp., at 790. It would make little sense for one [***41] entity within the Continental empire to be busily engaged in persuading the public of metal's superiority over glass for a given end use, while the other is making plans to increase the Nation's total glass container output for that same end use. Thus, the fact that Continental and Hazel-Atlas were not substantial competitors of each other for certain end uses at the time of the merger may actually enhance the long-run tendency of the merger to lessen competition.

LEdHN[16] [16]We think our holding is consonant with the purpose of § 7 to arrest anticompetitive arrangements in their incipiency. Some product lines are offered in both metal and glass containers by the same packer. In such areas the interchangeability of use and immediate interindustry sensitivity to price changes would approach that which exists between products of the same industry. In other lines, as where one packer's products move in one type container while his competitor's move in another, there are inherent deterrents to customer diversion of the same type that might occur between brands of cans or bottles. But the possibility of such transfers [***42] over the long run acts as a deterrent against attempts by the dominant members of either industry to reap the possible benefits of their position by raising prices above the competitive [*466] level or engaging in other comparable practices. And even though certain lines are today regarded as safely within the domain of one or the other of these industries, this pattern may be altered, as it has been in the past. From the point of view not only of the static competitive situation but also the dynamic long-run potential, we think that the Government has discharged its burden of proving prima facie anticompetitive effect. Accordingly the judgment is reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

Concur by: GOLDBERG

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE GOLDBERG, concurring.

I fully agree with the Court that "since the purpose of delineating a line of commerce is to provide an adequate [**1752] basis for measuring the effects of a given acquisition, its contours must, as nearly as possible, conform to competitive reality." Ante, at p. 457. I also agree that "on the evidence thus far revealed by this record," there has been a prima facie [***43] showing "that the interindustry competition between glass and metal containers . . . [warrants] treating as a relevant product market the combined glass and metal container industries and all end uses for which they compete." Ibid. I wish to make it clear, however, that, as I read the opinion of the Court, the Court does not purport finally to decide the determinative line of commerce. Since the District Court "dismissed the complaint at the close of the Government's case, [***970]" ante, at p. 444, upon remand it will be open to the defendants not only to rebut the prima facie inference that metal and glass containers may be considered together as a line of commerce but also to prove that plastic or other containers in fact compete with metal and glass to such an extent that as a matter of "competitive reality" they must be considered as part of the determinative line of commerce.

HÌ Ì ÁÑEJÁ I FÑA Ì Í LÀ I ÁÑEÓÐÍ HÌ ÑEFÍ Í GLÁGÅSE Óa ÆCA ÁÍ HÆTEJÍ ÆLFJÍ I ÁÑEÆSØYÓAGG ÆFH H

Dissent by: HARLAN

Dissent

---

[*467] MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, whom MR. JUSTICE STEWART joins, dissenting.

Measured by any antitrust yardsticks with which I am familiar, the Court's conclusions are, to say the least, remarkable. Before the merger which is the subject of this case, Continental Can [****44] manufactured metal containers and Hazel-Atlas manufactured glass containers.<sup>1</sup> The District Court found, with ample support in the record, that the Government had wholly failed to prove that the merger of these two companies would adversely affect competition in the metal container industry, in the glass container industry, or between the metal container industry and the glass container industry. Yet this Court manages to strike down the merger under § 7 of the Clayton Act, because, in the Court's view, it is anticompetitive.<sup>2</sup> With all respect, the Court's conclusion is based on erroneous analysis, which makes an abrupt and unwise departure from established antitrust law.

[****45] I agree fully with the Court that "we must recognize meaningful competition where it is found," ante, p. 449, and that "inter-industry" competition, such as that involved in this case, no less than "intra-industry" competition is protected by § 7 from anticompetitive mergers. As [*468] this Court has, in effect, recognized in past cases, the concept of an "industry," or "line of commerce," is not susceptible of reduction to a precise formula. See Brown Shoe Co., Inc., v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325; United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 394-396; Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611. It would, therefore, be artificial and inconsistent with the broad protective purpose of § 7, see Brown Shoe, supra, at 311-323, to attempt to differentiate between permitted and prohibited mergers [**1753] merely by asking whether a probable reduction in competition, if it is found, will be within a single "industry" or between two or more "industries."

Recognition that the purpose of § 7 is not to be thwarted by limiting its protection to intramural [****46] competition within strictly defined "industries," does not mean, however, that the concept of a "line of commerce" is no longer serviceable. More precisely, it does not, as the majority [***971] seems to think, entail the conclusion that wherever "meaningful competition" exists, a "line of commerce" is to be found. The Court declares the initial question of this case to be "whether the admitted competition between metal and glass containers for uses other than packaging beer was of the type and quality deserving of § 7 protection and therefore the basis for defining a relevant product market." Ante, p. 449. (Emphasis added.) And the Court's answer is similarly phrased: ". . . We hold that the interindustry competition between glass and metal containers is sufficient to warrant treating as a relevant product market the combined glass and metal container industries and all end uses for which they compete." Ante, p. 457. (Emphasis added.) Quite obviously, such a conclusion simply reads the "line of commerce" element out of § 7, and destroys its usefulness as an aid to analysis.

---

<sup>1</sup> Both companies manufactured other related products which for present purposes may be disregarded. See the description of the two companies in the opinion of the District Court, 217 F.Supp. 761, 769-770.

<sup>2</sup> Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Act of December 29, 1950, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 18, provides in pertinent part:

"No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

HÌ ÁMÈJÀ I FÈB Ì LÀ I ÁMÈDÉFÌ HÌ ÈFFÌ I HÀFGÀSÈOÀÈCA ÁI HÀEJÌ FLÀFJÌ I ÁMÈSÓYÓAGGÌ ÈFFÌ Ì

The distortions to which this approach leads are evidenced by the Court's application [***47] of it in this case. [*469] Having found that there is "interindustry competition between glass and metal containers" the Court concludes that "the combined glass and metal container industries" is the relevant line of commerce or "product market" in which anticompetitive effects must be measured. Ante, p. 457. Applying that premise, the Court then notes Continental's "dominant position" in the metal can industry, ante, p. 458, and finds that Continental has a "major position" in the "relevant product market -- the combined metal and glass container industries," ante, p. 459. (Emphasis added.) Hazel-Atlas, being the third largest producer of glass containers, is found to rank sixth in the relevant product market -- again, the combined metal and glass container industries. Ante, p. 460. This "evidence," coupled with the market shares of Continental and Hazel-Atlas in the combined product market,<sup>3</sup> leads the Court to conclude that the merger violates § 7.

[***48] "The resulting percentage of the combined firms," the Court says, "approaches that held presumptively bad in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321." Ante, p. 461. The Philadelphia Bank case, which involved the merger of two banks plainly engaged in the same line of commerce,<sup>4</sup> is, however, entirely distinct from the present situation, which involves two separate industries. The bizarre result of the Court's approach [*470] is that market percentages of a nonexistent market enable the Court to dispense with "elaborate proof of market structure, market behavior and probable anticompetitive effects," ante, p. 458. As I shall show, the Court has "dispensed [**1754] with" proof which, given heed, shows how completely fanciful its market-share analysis is.

[***49] In fairness to the District Court it [**972] should be said that it did not err in failing to consider the "line of commerce" on which this Court now relies. For the Government did not even suggest that such a line of commerce existed until it got to this Court.<sup>5</sup> And it does not seriously suggest even now that such a line of commerce exists.<sup>6</sup> The truth [*471] is that "glass and metal containers" form a distinct line of commerce only in the mind of this Court.

<sup>3</sup> The Court confesses to some difficulty in determining market shares. See ante, pp. 459-460, n. 10.

<sup>4</sup> "We have no difficulty in determining the 'line of commerce' (relevant product or services market) . . . in which to appraise the probable competitive effects of appellees' proposed merger. We agree with the District Court that the cluster of products (various kinds of credit) and services (such as checking accounts and trust administration) denoted by the term 'commercial banking' . . . composes a distinct line of commerce. . . . In sum, it is clear that commercial banking is a market 'sufficiently inclusive to be meaningful in terms of trade realities.' Crown Zellerbach Corp. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 296 F.2d 800, 811 (C. A. 9th Cir. 1961)." 374 U.S., at 356-357.

<sup>5</sup> In the District Court, the Government relied on 10 "lines of commerce." In addition to "the packaging industry," "the can industry," "the glass container industry," and "metal closures" (not relevant here), the Government argued that there were six "lines of commerce" which were defined by the end product for which the containers were used, e. g., "containers for the beer industry." See 217 F.Supp., at 778-779.

<sup>6</sup> Although the Government makes the suggestion, which the Court now accepts, that wherever there is competition there is a "line of commerce," so that "the 'line of commerce' within which the merger's effect on competition should be appraised is the production and sale of containers used for all purposes for which metal or glass containers may be used . . ." (Brief, p. 18), it concedes the artificiality of this approach and, in so doing, itself rejects the market-share analysis adopted by the Court. The Government states that its suggested test of illegality of a merger involving inter-industry competition "omits analysis of statistics regarding market shares simply because those traditional yardsticks are generally unavailable to measure the full consequences which an interindustry merger would have on competition." (Brief, p. 22.)

The test which the Government advocates is that it "can satisfy its burden of showing that the merger may have the effect of substantially lessening competition by proving (a) the existence of substantial competition between two industries; (b) a high degree of concentration in either or both of the competing industries; and (c) the dominant positions of each of the merging companies in its respective industry." (Brief, p. 22.) This approach, which has at least the virtue of facing up to its own logic, frankly disavows attention to a "line of commerce." The effect of the Court's approach is not markedly different from that of the Government's test, see infra, p. 476, and there is some suggestion in the last few pages of the Court's opinion that the Court appreciates this. As discussed hereafter, however, there is nothing in the Court's opinion to support adoption of the

HÌ ÁMEÑÁ I FËB Ì FLÀ I ÁUÑOËFÌ HÌ ÈFÌ Ì I LÀGÀSEÒAÈCA ÁI HÈEJÌ GLÀFJÌ I ÁMEÑSÓYÓAGGÌ ÈFÌ J

[****50] The District Court found, and this Court accepts the finding, that this case "deals with three separate and distinct industries manufacturing separate and distinct types of products": metal, glass, and plastic containers. 217 F.Supp., at 780.

"Concededly there was substantial and vigorous inter-industry competition between these three industries and between various of the products which they manufactured. Metal can, glass container and plastic container manufacturers were each seeking to enlarge their sales to the thousands of packers of hundreds of varieties of food, chemical, toiletry and industrial products, ranging from ripe olives to fruit juices to tuna fish to smoked tongue; from maple syrup to pet food to coffee; from embalming fluid to floor wax to nail polish to aspirin to veterinary supplies, to take examples at random."

"Each industry and each of the manufacturers within it was seeking to improve their products so that they would appeal to new customers or hold old ones. Hazel-Atlas and Continental were part of this overall [\[\*\*1755\]](#) industrial pattern, each in a recognized separate industry producing distinct products but engaged in inter-industry [\[\*\*\*51\]](#) competition for the favor of various end users of their products." 217 F.Supp., at 780-781.

[*472] Only this Court will not be "concerned," [\[\*\*\*973\]](#) ante, p. 457, that without support in reason or fact, it dips into this network of competition and establishes metal and glass containers as a separate "line of commerce," leaving entirely out of account all other kinds of containers: "plastic, paper, foil and any other materials competing for the same business," ibid.<sup>7</sup> [\[\*\*\*52\]](#) Brown Shoe, supra, on which the Court relies for this travesty of economics, ante, p. 458, spoke of "well-defined submarkets" within a broader market, and said that "the boundaries of such a submarket" were to be determined by "practical indicia," 370 U.S., at 325.<sup>8</sup> (Emphasis added.) Since the Court here provides its own definition of a market, unrelated to any market reality whatsoever, Brown Shoe must in this case be regarded as a bootstrap.

The Court is quite wrong when it says that the District Court "employed an unduly narrow construction of the 'competition' protected by § 7" and that it held that "the competition protected by § 7 [is limited] to competition between identical products," ante, p. 452. Quite to the contrary, the District Court expressly stated that [\[\*473\]](#) "Section 7 is applicable to conglomerate mergers where the facts warrant," 217 F.Supp., at 783 [\[\*\*\*53\]](#) (footnote omitted).<sup>9</sup> The difference between the District Court and this Court lies rather in the District Court's next sentence: "But there must be evidence that the facts warrant such application." Ibid.

If attention is paid to the conclusions of the court below, it is obvious that this Court's analysis has led it to substitute a meaningless figure -- the merged companies' share of a nonexistent "market" -- for the sound, careful factual findings of the District Court.

The District Court found:<sup>10</sup>

---

Government's "per se" approach, and the facts developed in the District Court demonstrate that, so far as one can tell from this case at least, a per se approach to the problem of inter-industry competition is wholly inappropriate.

<sup>7</sup> If the competition between metal and glass containers is sufficient to constitute them collectively a "line of commerce," why does their competition with plastic containers and "other materials competing for the same business" not require that all such containers be included in the same line of commerce? The Court apparently concedes that the competition is multilateral.

<sup>8</sup> The "practical indicia" specified by the Court were: "industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." 370 U.S., at 325 (footnote omitted). While many of these factors weigh against the Court's conclusion that metal and glass containers should be combined in a single line of commerce, not one of them speaks for the Court's conclusion that they should be segregated from all other kinds of containers and together form a separate line of commerce.

<sup>9</sup> The District Court observed also that "relevant markets are neither economic abstractions nor artificial conceptions." 217 F.Supp., at 768. In this respect, in view of the majority's present opinion, the district judge must, I suppose, be deemed to have erred.

HÌ Ì ÁÑEJÁ I FËB Ì HÀ I ÁÑEÓDÉI HÌ ÉÆFI Ì I LÁGSEÓ ÒA ËCA ÁI HÆEJÍ HLAJÍ I ÁÑEJÁSÓYÓAGGI ËÆBÍ H

[***54] (1) With respect to the merger's effect on competition within the metal container industry, that "prior to its acquisition Hazel-Atlas did not manufacture or sell metal cans . . ." 217 F.Supp., at 770.

[***974] (2) With respect to the merger's effect on competition within the glass container industry, that "Continental did not, directly [**1756] or through subsidiaries, manufacture or sell glass containers . . ." Ibid.

[*474] (3) With respect to the merger's effect on the metal container industry's efforts to compete with the glass container industry,

"The Government fared no better on its claim that as a result of the merger Continental was likely to lose the incentive to push can sales at the expense of glass. The Government introduced no evidence showing either that there had been or was likely to be any slackening of effort to push can sales. On the contrary, as has been pointed out, the object of the merger was diversification, and Continental was actively promoting intra-company competition between its various product lines. Since by far the largest proportion of Continental's business was in metal cans, it scarcely seemed likely [***55] that cans would suffer at the expense of glass."

"Moreover, subsequent to the merger Continental actively engaged in a vigorous research and promotion program in both its metal and glass container lines. In the light of the record and of the competitive realities, the notion that it was likely to cease being an innovator in either line is patently absurd." 217 F.Supp., at 790 (footnote omitted). (Emphasis added.)

(4) With respect to the merger's effect on the glass container industry's efforts to compete with the metal container industry,

"In addition the Government advanced the converse of the proposition which it urged with respect to the metal can line -- that as a result of the merger Continental was likely to lose the incentive to push glass container sales at the expense of cans. In view of what has been said concerning the purpose of Continental's diversification program and the course it pursued after the merger, it is no more likely that Continental would slacken its efforts to promote glass [*475] than that it would slacken its efforts to promote cans. Indeed, if it had planned to do so there would have been little, if any, point to acquiring [***56] Hazel-Atlas, a major glass container producer." 217 F.Supp., at 793.

It is clear from the foregoing that the District Court fully considered the possibility that a merger of leading producers in two industries between which there was competition would dampen the inter-industry rivalry. The basis of the decision below was not, therefore, an erroneous belief that § 7 did not reach such competition but a careful study of the Government's proof, which led to the conclusion that "in the light of the record and of the competitive realities, the notion that . . . [the merged company] was likely to cease being an innovator in either line is patently absurd."

Surely this failure of the Court's mock-statistical analysis to reflect the facts as found on the record demonstrates what the Government concedes,<sup>11</sup> and what one would in any event have thought to be [**1757] obvious: When a merger is attacked on the ground that competition between two distinct industries, or lines of [***975] commerce, will be affected, the shortcut "market share" approach developed in the Philadelphia Bank case, see 374 U.S., at

<sup>10</sup> This summary of the District Court's findings includes only so much as is relevant to the majority's opinion. The District Court gave detailed attention to each of the Government's contentions, in an opinion of 48 pages. Its conclusions were summarized in the following statement:

"Viewing the evidence as a whole, quite apart from theory, there was a total failure by the Government to establish the essential elements of a violation of Section 7. As will be apparent from a discussion of the proof relating to each specific line of commerce, the Government did not lay either the statistical or testimonial foundations required to establish its case. It was this failure of proof which required the dismissal of the complaint and entry of judgment for the defendants." 217 F.Supp., at 787.

<sup>11</sup> See note 6, supra.

HÌ Ì ÁMEÑÁ I FËB Ì LÀI ÁUÑOËFÌ HÌ ËFFÌ Ì Í LÁGSEÒAËCA ÁÍ HÆEJÌ Í LAFJÌ I ÁMEÑSÓYÓÁGGI ËBBÉ Ì

362-365; ante, p. 458, has no place. [****57] In such a case, the legality of the merger must surely depend, as it did below, on an inquiry into competitive effects in the actual lines of commerce which are involved. In this case, the result depends -- or should depend -- on the impact of the merger in the two lines of commerce here involved: the metal container industry and the glass container industry.<sup>12</sup> As the findings [*476] of the District Court which are quoted above make plain, reference to these two actual lines of commerce does not preclude protection of inter-industry competition. Indeed, by placing the merged company in the setting of other companies in each of the respective lines of commerce which are also engaged in inter-industry competition, this approach is far more likely than the Court's to give § 7 full, but not artificial, scope.

[****58] The Court's spurious market-share analysis should not obscure the fact that the Court is, in effect, laying down a "per se" rule that mergers between two large companies in related industries are presumptively unlawful under § 7. Had the Court based this new rule on a conclusion that such mergers are inherently likely to dampen interindustry competition or that so few mergers of this kind would fail to have that effect that a "per se" rule is justified, I could at least understand the thought process which lay behind its decision. It would, of course, be inappropriate to prescribe per se rules in the first case to present a problem, cf. White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, let alone a case in which the facts suggest that a per se rule is unsound. And to lay down a rule on either of the bases suggested would require a much more careful look at the nature of competition between industries than the Court's casual glance in that direction.

In any event, the Court does not take this tack. It chooses instead to invent a line of commerce the existence of which no one, not even the Government, has imagined; for which businessmen and [****59] economists will look in vain; a line of commerce which sprang into existence only when the merger took place and will cease to exist when the [*477] merger is undone. I have no idea where § 7 goes from here, nor will businessmen or the antitrust bar. Hitherto, it has been thought that the validity of a merger was to be tested by examining its effect in identifiable, "well-defined" (Brown Shoe, supra, at 325) markets. Hereafter, however slight (or even nonexistent) the competitive impact of a merger on any actual market, businessmen must rest uneasy lest the Court create some "market," in which the merger presumptively dampens competition, out of bits and pieces of real ones. No one could say that such a fear is unfounded, since the Court's creative powers in this respect are declared to be as extensive as the competitive relationships [**976] between industries. This is said to be recognizing "meaningful competition where it is found to exist." It is in fact imagining effects on competition where none has been shown.

I would affirm the judgment of the District Court.

References

---

[****60] Annotation References:

Right of one corporation to acquire stock in another, as affected by the antitrust acts. 74 L ed 431.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>12</sup> The Government urged other lines of commerce below, see note 5, supra, but has abandoned all of them here except "containers for the canning industry," a line of commerce defined by end use and including "all metal cans and glass containers for the end uses of 'canning' food." 217 F.Supp., at 799. The District Court gave detailed reasons, which the record fully supports, for rejecting the Government's contention that this was a distinct line of commerce. See 217 F.Supp., at 799-802.

United States v. Boston & M. R.R.

Supreme Court of the United States

January 21, 1965, Argued ; March 8, 1965, Decided

No. 232

Reporter

380 U.S. 157 *; 85 S. Ct. 868 **; 13 L. Ed. 2d 728 ***; 1965 U.S. LEXIS 2435 ****; 1965 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,390

UNITED STATES v. BOSTON & MAINE RAILROAD ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Disposition: 225 F.Supp. 577, vacated and remanded.

Core Terms

---

substantial interest, railroad, interlocking, common carrier, dealings, bidding

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Right to Appeal > Government

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1[] Clayton Act, Penalties

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 20.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN2[] Legislation, Interpretation

A criminal statute is to be construed strictly, not loosely.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HÌ ĂŃEŃEFÍ Ī ḦEFÍ ī LÀ ī ĂŃEŃOđA ī ḦEFÍ ī LAFHSEŃOđA ēGA ā GÌ ḦEFÍ GÌ LAFJÍ ī ĂŃEŃSÖYQĀ GÌ HÌ ḦEFÍ

**HN3** [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The fact that a particular activity may be within the same general classification and policy of those covered does not necessarily bring it within the ambit of the criminal prohibition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

**HN4** [down] Regulated Industries, Transportation

Bribery might well be in the family of offenses covered under a conflict of interest statute. But it is more remote from an antitrust frame of reference. While history shows a rather wide pattern of railroad misconduct leading to § 10 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 20, that section is a rather narrow prohibition applicable to activity that is conceptually within the antitrust philosophy.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Bill of Particulars > General Overview

**HN5** [down] Accusatory Instruments, Bill of Particulars

See Fed. R. Crim. P. 7\(f\).

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

In a federal criminal proceeding in the District Court of Massachusetts, count I of the indictment charged that a railroad and three of its officers violated 10 of the Clayton Act by the railroad's sale of 10 coaches, valued in excess of $ 50,000, to another corporation, in which the railroad's three officers had a "substantial interest," competitive bidding not having been used. A bill of particulars described the officers' "substantial interest" in the purchasing corporation as consisting of an agreement for the purpose of producing profits for the purchasing corporation from dealings by it in property acquired from the railroad through the assistance of the three officers and pursuant to which the officers were to and did receive substantial moneys. Granting motions to dismiss count I, the District Court held that 10 was limited to one who had a present legal interest in the purchasing corporation and did not include one whose only interest was in the outcome of what may have been an illegal and illicit plan to siphon off for his personal benefit property of the railroad through the medium of the purchasing corporation. (225 F Supp 577.)

On direct appeal, the United States Supreme Court vacated and remanded the case, giving the government an opportunity to file an amended bill of particulars in the District Court. In an opinion by Douglas, J., expressing the unanimous view of the Court, it was held that the District Court properly concluded that the defendants' conduct, as alleged in the bill of particulars, was not within the scope of 10; but it was also held that the District Court's construction of 10 had been too narrow and that the words "substantial interest in such other corporation," as used in 10, presupposed either an existing investment in the corporation, or the creation of the corporation for one's own use, or a joint venture or continued course of dealings with the corporation for profit sharing.

HÌ €ÁÑÜÉAFÍ Í ÉÉFÍ Í LÀ Í ÁÙÉODÀ Í ÉÉ Í LÁFHÅÓAÉGÀÄ G ËÉÉ Í LÁJÌ Í ÁÙÉÉSÓYÓQÁ HÍ ÉÉÉÉ

Headnotes

---

CRIMINAL LAW §61 > bill of particulars -- demurrer -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

For purposes of a demurrer to a federal indictment, the bill of particulars forms no part of the record.

APPEAL §1150 > raising question in court below -- bill of particulars -- motion to dismiss -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

The United States Supreme Court is not required to express any view as to the applicability, on motions to dismiss under Federal Criminal Procedure Rule 12, of the rule that a bill of particulars forms no part of the record for purposes of a demurrer to an indictment, where the parties made no attempt to invoke this rule at any stage of the proceeding.

STATUTES §184 > construction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Penal statutes are to be construed strictly.

STATUTES §185 > construction -- enlarging meaning -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The fact that a particular activity may be within the same general classification and policy of those covered by a particular criminal statute does not necessarily bring it within the ambit of the criminal prohibition.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §35 > Clayton Act 10 -- nature of statute --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Section 10 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 20), dealing with purchases by common carriers in case of interlocking directorates and similar matters, is an antitrust law and is not strictly a conflict of interest statute.

HÌ ĂMỀUĂFÍ Ī ĂFÍ ī LÀ ī ĂUËOđÀ ī ĂE ì LÀFHSÉOăEgĂ G ĂEJĂ G LÀJÌ ī ĂMỀUĂSÓYQĂG HÌ ĂEJĂ

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §35 > Clayton Act 10 -- meaning of "substantial interest" -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The words "substantial interest in such other corporation," as used in 10 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 20), prohibiting common carriers from specified dealings with a corporation where the common carrier's officers have any substantial interest in such corporation, presuppose either an existing investment in the corporation, or the creation of the corporation for one's own use, or a joint venture or continued course of dealings, licit or illicit, with the corporation for profit sharing; but the meaning of these words is not broad enough to be applicable to a railroad's officers who have agreed to assist another corporation in obtaining profits by purchasing the railroad's coaches and who have received substantial monies from the purchasing corporation pursuant to the agreement.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §35 > Clayton Act 10 -- nature of statute --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Although history shows a rather wide pattern of railroad misconduct leading to the enactment of 10 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 20), dealing with purchases by common carriers in case of interlocking directorates and similar matters, that section is a rather narrow prohibition applicable to activity which is conceptually within the antitrust philosophy.

CRIMINAL LAW §61 > bill of particulars -- amendment -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

If, by reason of the bill of particulars, an indictment is insufficient against a motion to dismiss, the government should be granted an opportunity to file an amended bill of particulars, pursuant to Rule 7\(f\) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Syllabus

---

Appellees, a railroad and three of its officers, were indicted under § 10 of the Clayton Act for participating in the noncompetitive sale of equipment to another corporation in which the officers had a "substantial interest," described in a bill of particulars as an agreement for substantial payment to the individual appellees for effecting the sale. Holding that § 10 applies to a "then present legal interest," and not one dependent on the outcome of an illegal plan, the District Court dismissed the indictment. Held:

1. Under the strict construction applicable to a criminal statute, the words "substantial interest" in § 10 presuppose, not bribery (which the indictment here in effect charges) under a conflict of interest law, but either an existing investment in the purchaser, the creation of the purchaser for the use of those acting for the seller, or a joint venture or continued course of dealings for profit sharing with [****2] the purchaser, each of which would be within the concept of this antitrust statute. Pp. 160-162.
2. Since an amended bill of particulars may be filed under Rule 7 \(f\) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the case is vacated and remanded. P. 162.

HÌ ĂMỀUĂFÍ ĂĂFÍ ĂĂLÀ ĂĂUĂOĐĂ ĂĂI ĂĂĂI ĂĂLĂFĂSĂOĂĂGĂ ĂĂĂI ĂĂLĂJĂ ĂĂI ĂĂMỀUĂSĂOĂĂGĂ HÌ ĂĂĂI

Counsel: Robert B. Hummel argued the cause for the United States. With him on the briefs were Solicitor General Cox, Assistant Attorney General Orrick and John H. Dougherty.

Edward O. Proctor, Sr., argued the cause for appellees. On the brief for appellee Boston & Maine Railroad was Edward B. Hanify. With Mr. Proctor on the brief for appellees McGinnis et al. were William T. Griffin, Lothrop Withington and John M. Reed.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Goldberg

Opinion by: DOUGLAS

Opinion

---

[*158] [***730] [**869] MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a direct appeal under the Criminal Appeals Act, 18 U. S. C. § 3731, from the District Court's order dismissing Count I of an indictment (225 F.Supp. 577) for failure to state an offense under § 10 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 734, [****3] 15 U. S. C. § 20. HN1[<sup>1</sup>] That section provides in relevant part:

"No common carrier engaged in commerce shall have any dealings in securities, supplies, or other articles of commerce, or shall make or have any contracts for construction or maintenance of any kind, to the amount of more than $ 50,000, in the aggregate, in any one year, with another corporation, firm, partnership, or association when the said common carrier shall have upon its board of directors or as its president, manager, or as its purchasing or selling officer, or agent in the particular transaction, any person who is at the same time a director, manager, or purchasing or selling officer of, or who has any substantial interest in, such other corporation, firm, partnership, or association, unless and except such purchases shall be made from, or such dealings shall be with, the bidder whose bid is the most favorable to such common carrier, to be ascertained by competitive bidding under regulations to be prescribed by rule or otherwise by the Interstate Commerce Commission. . ." (Italics added.)

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#)[<sup>1</sup>] [1A] [****4] [LEdHN\[2A\]](#)[<sup>1</sup>] [2A]Count I charged that appellee railroad and the three other appellees, officers of the railroad, violated § 10 by the road's sale on August 14, 1958, of 10 coaches valued in excess of $ 50,000 to the International Railway Equipment Corp. in which the three officers had "a substantial interest," competitive bidding not having been used. That count charged that appellee McGinnis knowingly voted [*159] for the sale and that all three appellee officers knowingly directed the act. A bill of particulars <sup>1</sup> described the "substantial interest" of those officers in the purchasing corporation as follows:

"The substantial interest of defendants McGinnis and Glacy in defendant International consisted of an understanding, agreement, relationship, arrangement and concert of action among the said defendants McGinnis, Glacy, and International, and others, for, among other things, the purpose of producing profits for International from dealings by it in property acquired from the B&M through the intervention, direction or assistance of defendants McGinnis, Glacy, and Benson, and pursuant to which defendants McGinnis, [****5] Glacy, and Benson were to and did receive substantial monies."

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#)[<sup>1</sup>] [1B] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#)[<sup>1</sup>] [2B]

The District Court held:

---

<sup>1</sup> This case was decided below and argued here on the assumption that, although the indictment itself was sufficient against a motion to dismiss, it became insufficient for that purpose by reason of the bill of particulars. We have held, however, that "the bill of particulars . . . forms no part of the record for the purposes of the demurrer." United States v. Comyns, 248 U.S. 349, 353 (emphasis supplied); Dunlop v. United States, 165 U.S. 486. Since the parties have made no attempt to invoke this rule at any stage in this proceeding, we are not required to express any view as to whether this rule for demurrs is applicable on motions to dismiss under Rule 12, Fed. Rules Crim. Proc.

HÌ ĂMỀUĂFÍ Ī ĂFÍ JLÀ ĀUĘOđÀ Ī ĂEJ Í JLĂFHĂSĂOăEgĂ G ĂEJ HĽAJ Ī ĂMỀUĂSÓYQĂG HÌ ĂEJ

"The statute is limited [****6] to one who has a then present legal interest in the buying corporation and does not include one whose only interest is in [***731] the outcome of what may have been an illegal and illicit plan to siphon off for his personal benefit property of the Boston and Maine [**870] Railroad through the medium of International." 225 F.Supp., at 578.

[*160] [LEdHN\[3\]\[↑\]](#) [3]HN2[↑] A criminal statute is to be construed strictly, not loosely. Such are the teachings of our cases from United States v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. 76, down to this day. Chief Justice Marshall said in that case:

"The rule that penal laws are to be construed strictly, is, perhaps, not much less old than construction itself. It is founded on the tenderness of the law for the rights of individuals; and on the plain principle that the power of punishment is vested in the legislative, not in the judicial department." Id. p. 95. [LEdHN\[4\]\[↑\]](#) [4]HN3[↑] [****7] The fact that a particular activity may be within the same general classification and policy of those covered does not necessarily bring it within the ambit of the criminal prohibition. United States v. Weitzel, 246 U.S. 533. [LEdHN\[5\]\[↑\]](#) [5]What is the reach of § 10? It is not strictly a conflict of interest statute such as we dealt with in United States v. Mississippi Valley Co., 364 U.S. 520. In Minneapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. United States, 361 U.S. 173, 190, we described § 10 as "an antitrust law."

Section 10, indeed, has its roots in President Wilson's message to Congress of January 20, 1914, on the subject of "trusts," in which he denounced the abuses of "interlockings of the personnel of the directorates of great corporations." 51 Cong. Rec. 1962-1964; H. R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 17-18. Section 10 started as part of § 9 of the House bill and forbade certain types of interlocking office-holding. See S. Doc. No. 584, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 10. The Senate made two main changes. First, it did not prohibit interlocking [****8] office-holding but seized rather on competitive bidding as the control. S. Rep. No. 698, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 47-48. Second, the Senate required competitive bidding not only when a director or other officer or agent of a common carrier was also a director or other officer of any firm with which the carrier had dealings to the amount of more than [*161] $ 50,000 in any one year, but also when the director or other officer of a common carrier had "any direct or indirect interest in" the other firm. S. Doc. No. 584, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 13. The Conference changed the phrase "any direct or indirect interest in" to the present wording "any substantial interest in." Id., pp. 13-14. As Senator Chilton, one of the Conferees, reported:

". . . It not only prevents corporations which are interlocked by officers and directors, but it says: 'Or who has any substantial interest in such of them.'

"The Senator will recall all we had before us, the ease by which interlocking directorates could be gotten around; in other words, you could have your son, or your cousin, or your lawyer, or your agent upon the corporation and accomplish the same thing as if you were on the board [****9] yourself. . . .

....

". . . They can not dodge it by having a supply company, and even though they have discarded the form of interlocking directors, if there be the interest of the railroad or the [***732] common carrier in the supply company, as the Senator chooses to call it, then it is prohibited." 51 Cong. Rec. 15943.

[LEdHN\[6\]\[↑\]](#) [6][LEdHN\[7\]\[↑\]](#) [7]As we have seen, Count I charges a "transaction" to sell 10 coaches to International, and the bill of particulars suggests that it was agreed that the three individual appellees would receive "substantial monies" for their part in effecting the sale. It is earnestly urged that since those appellees stood to profit from the deal with International, they [**871] had a "substantial interest in" International within the meaning of § 10. It is pointed out that the railroad scandals of that age were not limited to interlocking directorates and multiple shareholding, but that suppliers of railroad materials had made substantial gifts to the railroad officials with whom they dealt. See [In re Financial Transactions of the New York, \[\*162\] N. H. & H. R. Co., 31 I. C. C.](#)

HÌ ĂMỀUĂFÍ Ī ĂFÍ GLÀ ĀUĘOđÀ Ī ĂFÍ Ī FLĂFHĂSEOăEĂGĂ ĂG ĂFĂH HGLĂFJ Ī ĂMỀUĂSÓYQĂG HÌ ĂFĂH

32. [****10]<sup>2</sup> But we are confined by the words that Congress used in § 10. If the rule of strict construction is to be followed, the words "substantial interest in," as used in § 10, presuppose either an existing investment of some kind in International, or the creation of International by the three individual appellees for their use, or a joint venture or continued course of dealings, licit or illicit, with International for profit sharing. But it is doubtful that this indictment, as illuminated by the bill of particulars, alleges anything more in substance than a bribe. HN4↑ Bribery might well be in the family of offenses covered under a conflict of interest statute. But it is more remote from an antitrust frame of reference. While history shows a rather wide pattern of railroad misconduct leading to § 10, that section is a rather narrow prohibition applicable to activity that is conceptually within the antitrust philosophy. We cannot broaden it to include the present case, unless we attribute to Congress a purpose to make it a more general panacea for conflict of interest activities; but neither [****11] do we take the same narrow view of the statute as the District Court.

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#)↑ [8A] Since the Government may choose to file, and the District Court may choose to allow, an amended bill of particulars,<sup>3</sup> we vacate and remand the case, leaving open all questions except our construction of the statute.

[LEdHN\[8B\]](#)↑ [8B]

[****12] Vacated and remanded.

References

---

Annotation References:

Right of one corporation to acquire stock in another as affected by the antitrust acts. 74 L ed 431.

Right of accused to bill of particulars in antitrust case. 5 ALR2d 444, 468.

---

End of Document

<sup>2</sup>The Commission reported: "Purchases of cars and coal are two large expenditures that railroads make. The New Haven purchased cars almost exclusively from James B. Brady without competition and to the extent of some $ 37,000,000. Mr. Brady, as a witness, made no secret of his generosity to the officials with whom he had business. His methods were justified by him on the ground that the officers of the New Haven were old friends." 31 I. C. C., at 61.

<sup>3</sup>HN5↑ Rule 7 \(f\) of the Rules of Criminal Procedure provides, "A bill of particulars may be amended at any time subject to such conditions as justice requires."

Columbia Artists Management v. United States

Supreme Court of the United States

May 24, 1965, Decided

No. 775

Reporter

381 U.S. 348 *; 85 S. Ct. 1553 **; 14 L. Ed. 2d 679 ***; 1965 U.S. LEXIS 2425 ****; 1965 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,450

COLUMBIA ARTISTS MANAGEMENT INC. ET AL. v. UNITED STATES ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

concert, artist, decree, consent decree, resale price, modification, contract provision, Sherman Act, audience, modified, margin

Counsel: Seymour D. Lewis and Ralph F. Colin for appellants.

Solicitor General Cox, Assistant Attorney General Orrick, Lionel Kestenbaum and Elliott H. Moyer for the United States, and Theodore R. Kupferman for appellee Summy-Birchard, Inc.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Goldberg

Opinion by: PER CURIAM

Opinion

---

[***679] [*348] [**1553] The motion to affirm is granted and the judgment is affirmed.

Dissent by: HARLAN; STEWART; GOLDBERG

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, MR. JUSTICE STEWART, and MR. JUSTICE GOLDBERG, dissenting.

An examination of the proceedings in this case convinces us that a summary disposition of this matter is not appropriate.

In 1955 the Government brought an antitrust action against appellant Columbia, appellant Community Concerts, Inc. (Columbia's wholly owned subsidiary), and two corporations whose successor is appellee Summy-Birchard,

HÌ FÁMEJÉH I ÉÉH I LÀ I ÁUÉDÓÉFÍ I HÉÉFÍ I HÁFI ÁSEÓaÉGÁA I JÁÉH I JIÁFJÍ I ÁMÉÉSÓYÓÁA GÍ ÉÉÉÉ

Inc.* Columbia and Summy-Birchard manage professional concert artists, and their affiliates, Community and the Civic Concert Service division of Summy-Birchard, are "concert services," organizing [***2] and maintaining [*349] local nonprofit "audience associations" throughout the country which sponsor concert series. Normally an audience association pays an artist an established fee set by the artist and his manager, out of which the artist's manager retains a share and the concert service also retains a share known as the "margin." The Government's complaint charged a conspiracy to monopolize the business of managing and booking concert artists and the business of forming and maintaining audience associations.

On October 20, 1955, a consent decree was entered by the District Court for the Southern District of New York, the terms of which provide that the managing companies must make their artists available to all concert services at the same rate and that the concert services must make performers available to audience associations without reference to the management [***3] of the artists. Paragraph VI (D) of the decree requires that each defendant make available "to any financially responsible concert service any artist managed by such defendant and reasonably available for the desired performance, at the same margin allowed to the defendant or its affiliate concert service by that artist for a performance for the same fee."

Columbia's standard contract with concert services contains a provision, which Columbia argues is required by a collective bargaining agreement among managers and the concert artists' union, prohibiting a concert service from booking an engagement at less than the artist's established fee without the consent of the artist. After Summy-Birchard protested against signing contracts containing this provision on the ground that it constituted illegal resale price maintenance, [**1554] Columbia petitioned the District Court on July 18, 1963, for a construction of the 1955 consent decree, alleging in part that the decree specifically sanctioned this contract provision and thus insulated it from attack by a party to the decree. The Government and Summy-Birchard were joined as parties. The [*350] District Court held that this [***4] contract provision prevented competition among concert services, for it required all of them to be paid the same "margin" for each artist, and concluded that such a provision was illegal. After reargument, the District Court reaffirmed its prior opinion and stated in its final order:

"The provision in Columbia's contract . . . that each engagement before an audience association shall be performed [***680] at the artist's established fee constitutes illegal resale price maintenance and is a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. § 1). To the extent that the Final Judgment operates to allow Columbia to set such resale prices, it is illegal and void as contrary to the Sherman Act, and any continued reliance by Columbia upon such portion or portions of the Final Judgment will not be construed by the Court to be in any way valid."

Columbia appeals from this judgment claiming that it constitutes a modification of the 1955 consent decree and that the District Court is without power to modify the decree without Columbia's agreement.

I.

In our view there is substance to Columbia's contention that the District Court modified [***5] the 1955 consent decree. As we read the District Court's opinion, that court held that the 1955 decree affirmatively sanctioned the use of the contract provision, and then went on to modify the decree, invalidating that portion of the decree which permitted Columbia to include the provision at issue in its contracts. The District Judge stated in his original opinion:

"The scheme of the concert service business conducted by Community and the Civic division of Summy-Birchard which is embodied in the decree [*351] clearly envisions that the artist or his manager will be able to control the ultimate price paid by the 'consumer' -- audience association, impresario, or whoever assumes the risk of 'producing' a show. Were this not so, the definition of 'margin' in the decree would be meaningless. Since this court by its decree -- albeit a consent order -- has sanctioned pro tanto this structuring of the industry, it should not be slow to consider charges of illegality against the system."

---

* Summy-Birchard is successor to both the National Concert and Artists Corp. and its wholly owned subsidiary, Civic Concert Services, Inc.

HÌ FÁMEJÉH Ì ÉÉHÍ FLÀ Í ÁUÉDÓÉFÍ Í HÄEEFÍ Í LÁFI ÅSEØAÉGÅÄI JÄÅHÌ Ì ÉLÄJÌ Í ÁMÈUÉSÖYÓQÁ GÍ ÉÅHÌ

The District Judge suggested that Summy-Birchard's answer might be treated as a "petition for declaratory judgment" or a "petition for modification." After discussing whether or not [***6] the contract provision constituted resale price maintenance, he concluded by stating:

"Thus, insofar as the decree-imposed requirement of margin operates to allow Columbia to set resale prices, the decree is illegal and void as contrary to the letter and policy of the Sherman Act, and this court will not construe Columbia's continued reliance upon that portion of the decree to be in any way valid."

The District Judge characterized what he had done as "invalidation of . . . part of the consent decree." The District Court's opinion on rehearing states, "The opinion of November 19 is accordingly reaffirmed," and the judgment of the District Court, set out above, states that "to the extent that the Final Judgment operates to allow Columbia to set such resale prices, it is illegal and void as contrary to the Sherman Act." In our view the language of the opinion and judgment of the District Court conclusively shows that the court modified [**1555] the 1955 consent decree despite Columbia's opposition to such modification.

We believe that the modification of a previously entered consent decree under the circumstances present here raises [*352] substantial questions of law. [***7] This Court has held that a consent decree ordinarily may not be modified without the consent of the parties involved. In United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U.S. 106, 119, Mr. Justice Cardozo stated for the Court: "Nothing less than a clear showing of grievous wrong evoked by new and unforeseen conditions should lead us to change what was decreed after years of litigation with the consent of all concerned." See United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U.S. 693; Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 335 U.S. 303. While the Court has allowed modifications in consent decrees upon occasion, see Chrysler Corp. v. United States, 316 U.S. 556; cf. Hughes v. United States, 342 U.S. 353, a showing of changed circumstances is usually necessary. Whether a modification of the consent decree was proper in this case, where no changed circumstances were claimed, should not be determined by this Court summarily. Additionally, the District Court's determination that Columbia's contract provision constitutes resale price maintenance prohibited by the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, raises [***8] substantial issues of antitrust law which we believe also ought to be briefed and argued.

II.

Apart from what has already been said, there is another reason why this case should not be dealt with summarily. If the District Court's action is not viewed as a modification of the decree, but rather [***681] as a determination that the decree neither specifically sanctioned nor prohibited Columbia's contract provision, the court's judgment must be viewed as a declaratory judgment that Columbia's conduct violated the Sherman Act. In that event no appeal lies to this Court, for the Expediting Act, 32 Stat. 823, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 29, allows direct appeals to this Court only in civil actions "wherein the United States is complainant." If appellant is appealing from a declaratory [*353] judgment, this case should be transferred to the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. If the Court is holding by its action that the case is properly here because of the fact that the 1955 action was commenced by the Government, then the case raises substantial questions as to the scope of the Expediting Act which should be resolved only after plenary consideration. [***9] See Shenandoah Valley Broadcasting, Inc. v. ASCAP, 375 U.S. 39.

We would therefore "postpone jurisdiction" and set the case for argument.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

April 29, 1965, Argued ; May 24, 1965, Decided

No. 291

Reporter

381 U.S. 311 *; 85 S. Ct. 1473 **; 14 L. Ed. 2d 405 ***; 1965 U.S. LEXIS 2424 ****; 1965 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,449

MINNESOTA MINING & MANUFACTURING CO. v. NEW JERSEY WOOD FINISHING CO.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 332 F.2d 346, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

proceedings, Insulation, decree, products, Wires, antitrust, manufacture, electrical, limitations, tolled, suits, legislative history, tolling provision, tolling statute, Clayton Act, statute of limitations, distributors, prima facie evidence, private litigant, anti trust law, final judgment, acquisition, conspiracy, suspend, criminal prosecution, criminal proceeding, instituted, violations, benefits, hearings

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN1 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(b\).

HÌ FÁMEJÄFFÍHFFLÀ Í ÁUÉODÄFI Í HÄEIFI Í HÄFI ÁSEÓAÉGÁ Á EÍ ÁFJÍ Í ÁMÈÉSÓYÓQÁ G Í ÁEFFF

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN3 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN4 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(b\) is readily severable from 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The limitation provision of 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b is tolled by Federal Trade Commission proceedings to the same extent and in the same circumstances as it is by Justice Department actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

An attempt to monopolize may be illegal though not successful.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

In 1961 the plaintiff commenced an action in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey for treble damages based on the defendant's alleged violations in 1956 of the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act. The defendant moved for dismissal of the action on the ground that it was barred by the 4-year period of limitations of 4B of the Clayton Act, but the plaintiff contended that the statute of limitations had been tolled under 5(b) of the Clayton Act because of an antitrust proceeding filed against the defendant in 1960 by the Federal Trade Commission. Section 5(b) provides that "a civil or criminal proceeding" instituted "by the United States" to prevent, restrain, or punish violations of any of the antitrust laws suspends the running of the statute of limitations during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter with respect to a private antitrust action based on any "matter complained of" in the suit by the United States. The District Court denied the defendant's motion to dismiss, holding that the statute of limitations had been tolled and that the action was timely filed. (216 F Supp 507.) The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit affirmed. (332 F2d 346.)

HÌ FÁMEJÉAFFÍHFFLÀ Í ÁUÉODÁFI Í HÁEIFI Í HÁFI ÁSEÓAÉGÁ Á É ÁÉE Í LÁJÍ Í ÁUÉEÁSÓYÓÁ Á G ÁÉE

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Clark, J., expressing the views of five members of the Court, it was held that although the tolling provision of 5(b) does not expressly refer to Federal Trade Commission proceedings, the statute of limitations in 4B is tolled by Commission proceedings to the same extent and in the same circumstances as it is by Justice Department proceedings, and that since the same conduct of the defendant was involved in both the Commission's proceedings and the plaintiff's action, the plaintiff's action was based on a "matter complained of" in the Commission's proceedings, which proceedings therefore tolled the statute of limitations.

Black, J., and Goldberg, J., dissented, each in a separate opinion, on the ground that the institution of Federal Trade Commission proceedings does not toll the limitation period of 4B.

Harlan and Stewart, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

ACTIONS §223 > suspension -- antitrust proceedings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

Under 5(b) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 16\(b\)), the tolling, by the United States' instituting a proceeding under the antitrust laws, of the statute of limitations on private antitrust actions does not depend upon whether a final judgment is entered in, or the government is successful in the prosecution of, the proceeding.

ACTIONS §223 > suspension -- antitrust proceedings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Whatever the applicability to Federal Trade Commission proceedings of 5(a) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 16\(a\)), dealing with the use of an antitrust judgment obtained by the government as prima facie evidence in a private antitrust action, it does not control the question whether such proceedings toll the statute of limitations on such private actions under 5(b) of the Act.

EVIDENCE §486 > 5(a) of Clayton Act -- purpose -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The purpose of 5(a) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 16\(a\)), dealing with the use of an antitrust judgment as prima facie evidence in a subsequent action, is to minimize the burdens of litigation for injured private suitors by making available to them all matters previously established by the government in antitrust actions and to permit them as large an advantage as the estoppel doctrine would afford had the government brought suit.

ACTIONS §223 > suspension -- antitrust proceedings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

HÌ FÁMEJÉAUFFÍHFFLÀ Í ÁUÉODÁFI Í HÆFFI Í HÁFI ÁSEÓaÉGÁ Á ÆÍ ÉÍ LÁJÍ Í ÁMÈJÉSÓYÓÁ Á G ÆÍFF

The purpose of 5(b) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 16\(b\)), providing for the tolling, by the government's institution of antitrust proceedings, of the statute of limitations on private antitrust actions, is to assist private litigants in utilizing any benefits they might cull from government antitrust actions.

EVIDENCE §486 > ACTIONS §223 > 5(a) and 5(b) of Clayton Act -- interrelation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 16\(a\)), dealing with the effect of antitrust judgments obtained by the United States as prima facie evidence in private antitrust actions, and 5(b) of the act, providing for the tolling, by the government's institution of antitrust proceedings, of the statute of limitations on private actions, are not necessarily coextensive, and are governed by different considerations as well as congressional policy objectives.

ACTIONS §223 > suspension -- antitrust proceedings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Even though 5(b) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 16\(b\)), dealing with the tolling, by the government's institution of antitrust proceedings, of the statute of limitations on private antitrust actions, complements 5(a) of the act, dealing with the use of an antitrust judgment obtained by the government as prima facie evidence in a private antitrust action, by permitting a litigant to await the outcome of government proceedings and use any judgment rendered therein, it is not restricted to that effect.

ACTIONS §223 > 5(b) of Clayton Act -- applicability to FTC proceedings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Although 5(b) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 16\(b\)) provides for the tolling of the statute of limitations in the event of a "civil or criminal proceeding" instituted "by the United States," the necessity that the tolling provision also include proceedings by the Federal Trade Commission is implicit in the clearly expressed congressional objective that private parties be permitted the benefits of prior government actions, and the enjoyment of these intended benefits should not turn on the arbitrary allocation of antitrust enforcement responsibility between the Commission and the Justice Department.

STATUTES §100.5 > literal meaning -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

The literal wording of a statutory provision is not controlling where such an interpretation defeats its clearly expressed congressional purpose.

HÌ FÁMEJÉA FFÍFFÍFLÀ Í ÁUÈÓDÄFI Í HÆFFI Í HÁFI ÁSEÓAÆGÁ Á EÍ ÁEJÍ Í ÁUÈÆSÓYÓGÁ G ÆFFF

ACTIONS §220 > tolling statute -- legislative intent -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

Whether, under a given set of facts, a statute of limitations is to be tolled, is a question of legislative intent whether the right shall be enforceable after the prescribed time; in order to determine that intent, the court must examine the purposes and policies underlying the limitation provision, the act containing it, and the remedial scheme developed for the enforcement of the rights given by the act.

ACTIONS §223 > tolling -- Clayton Act -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

Under 5(b) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 16\(b\)), providing for the tolling, by the United States' institution of antitrust proceedings, of the statute of limitations on private antitrust actions, the 4-year statute of limitations of 4B of the Act is tolled by the institution of Federal Trade Commission proceedings to the same extent and in the same circumstances as it is by Justice Department actions.

ACTIONS §223 > private antitrust action -- tolling by FTC proceedings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

A private party's claim for treble damages under the Sherman Act is based, at least in part, on matters complained of in Federal Trade Commission proceedings against the same defendant, so that 5(b) of the Clayton Act, providing for the tolling, by the United States' institution of antitrust proceedings, of the statute of limitations on private antitrust actions, is applicable, where both suits set up substantially the same claims; that the Commission's Clayton Act proceeding required proof only of a potential anticompetitive effect while the Sherman Act carries the more onerous burden of proof of an actual restraint is immaterial, where the Commission's complaint alleged an actual as well as a potential lessening of competition and, moreover, the monopolization count was phrased in terms of an attempt to monopolize.

MONOPOLIES §9 > attempt to monopolize -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

Under the federal antitrust laws, an attempt to monopolize may be illegal though not successful.

Syllabus

---

Respondent filed this private antitrust suit in 1961, alleging violations of § 7 of the Clayton Act and §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, arising out of petitioner's acquisition in 1956 of the assets of Insulation and Wires, Inc., which had been the primary distributor of electric insulation materials manufactured by respondent. Petitioner claimed that the action was barred by the four-year limitation provision of § 4B of the Clayton Act, but respondent asserted that the bar of the statute was tolled under § 5 (b) by a proceeding timely filed in 1960 against petitioner pursuant to § 7 of the Clayton Act by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC). That proceeding resulted in a consent order under which petitioner was directed to divest itself of the acquired assets. Section 5 (a) of the Clayton Act makes a final judgment or decree in any civil or criminal proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States prima facie evidence in later private suits [****2] as to all matters respecting which that judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties. Section 5 (b) provides that a civil or criminal proceeding instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain or punish violations of the antitrust laws tolls the statute of limitations during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter for private actions arising under those laws and based on any matter complained of in the government suit. The District Court held that the statute had been tolled by § 5 (b) and that the suit was timely filed, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. Held:

HÌ FÁMEJÉA FFÉHFFLÀ Í ÁUÈDÖÄFI Í HÄEFLÍ HÄFI ÅSEÖAÅEGÅÁ É ÁÅÅ Í LÄJÍ Í ÁUÈÅSOYÖÅÁ G ÅÅÅÅ

1. Sections 5 (a) and 5 (b) of the Clayton Act are not wholly interdependent or coextensive. Pp. 316-318.

(a) The words "final judgment or decree" are important in the application of § 5 (a), while § 5 (b), which applies to every private right of action based on any matter complained of in the government suit and is not limited to matters which would operate as an estoppel, tolls the statute of limitations regardless of whether a final judgment or decree is entered. Pp. 316-317.

(b) In § 5 (a) Congress was concerned with the narrow issue of the use of judgments or decrees as prima [****3] facie evidence in private suits, whereas in § 5 (b) Congress meant to assist private litigants in obtaining all the benefits they might cull from government antitrust actions. P. 317.

2. Absent any specific legislative history on the inclusion of FTC actions within the tolling provision, the issue is resolved by reliance on the clear expression of congressional intention that private suitors be given the benefits of prior government actions, which would necessarily include FTC proceedings. The benefits of § 5 (b) should not depend on an arbitrary allocation of enforcement responsibility between the Department of Justice and the FTC. Pp. 320-322.

3. Petitioner's Sherman Act claims, arising from the asset acquisition which was the basis of the FTC proceeding, although requiring a greater burden of proof than the Clayton Act charges, clearly are based "in part on any matter complained of" in the FTC action. Pp. 322-324.

Counsel: Sidney P. Howell, Jr., argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Charles C. Trelease and Edwin E. McAmis.

Albert G. Besser argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent.

Lewis C. Green and Gustav B. Margraf filed a brief for Reynolds [****4] Metals Co., as amicus curiae, urging reversal.

Briefs of amici curiae, urging affirmance, were filed by Solicitor General Cox, Assistant Attorney General Orrick, Frank Goodman, Robert B. Hummel and Irwin A. Seibel for the United States, and by Alex Akerman, Jr., Thomas A. Ziebarth and Robert E. Staed for Highland Supply Corp.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Brennan, White, Goldberg; Harlan and Stewart did not participate in the decision of this case.

Opinion by: CLARK

Opinion

---

[*312] [***407] [**1474] MR. JUSTICE CLARK delivered the opinion of the Court.

HÌ FÁMEJÉA FFÉH GLÀ Í ÁUÉDÖÄFI Í HÄEIFI Í LAFI ÅSEÖAÅEGÅÁ É ÆÅÅ ËI LAFJÍ Í ÁUÉEÅSÖYÖÅÁ G ÅÅÅÅ

This private treble-damage antitrust action was brought by the New Jersey Wood Finishing Company against Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Company and the [*313] Essex Wire Corporation.<sup>1</sup> Respondent's original complaint was filed on November 20, 1961.<sup>2</sup> It alleged violations [***408] of § 7 of the Clayton Act,<sup>3</sup> a conspiracy to restrain commerce in electrical insulation products in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act and an attempt to monopolize the same as prohibited by § 2.<sup>4</sup> The substance of the complaint concerned the acquisition in 1956 of all the assets of Insulation and Wires, Inc., a subsidiary [****5] of Essex, by Minnesota Mining and an alleged conspiracy to restrain trade in electrical insulation products. The latter claimed that the suit was barred by the four-year limitation provision of the Clayton Act.<sup>5</sup> [***7] [**1475] However, New Jersey Wood asserted that the bar of the statute had been tolled by a proceeding filed in 1960 against Minnesota Mining by the Federal Trade Commission under § 7 of the Clayton Act. That action resulted in a consent order under which Minnesota Mining was directed to divest itself of the assets acquired. Section 5 (b) of the Clayton Act<sup>6</sup> provides [*314] that a "civil or criminal proceeding . . . instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain, or punish violations of any of the antitrust laws" suspends the running of the statute of limitations during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter with respect to private actions arising under those laws and based on any matter complained of in the government suit. The questions here are whether proceedings by the Federal Trade Commission toll the running of the § 4B statute of limitations to the same extent as do judicial proceedings and, if they do, whether the claim of New Jersey [***6] Wood is based on "any matter complained of" in the Commission action. The District Court denied Minnesota Mining's motion to dismiss, holding that the four-year statute had been tolled by § 5 (b) and that this suit was timely filed. 216 F.Supp. 507. The Court of Appeals affirmed. 332 F.2d 346. We granted certiorari because of a conflict between circuits<sup>7</sup> and the importance of the question in the administration of the Clayton Act. 379 U.S. 877.

[***8] I.

---

<sup>1</sup> The case was considered on interlocutory appeal. 28 U. S. C. § 1292 (b) (1958 ed.). Essex did not appeal and is not a party here.

<sup>2</sup> During the pendency of the case in the District Court respondent filed an amended complaint. However, respondent's theories of recovery and the controlling legal questions are common to both pleadings.

<sup>3</sup> 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 18 (1964 ed.).

<sup>4</sup> 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2 (1964 ed.).

<sup>5</sup> Section 4B of the Clayton Act, 69 Stat. 283, 15 U. S. C. § 15b (1964 ed.), provides that:

HN1 [↑] "Any action to enforce any cause of action under sections 15 or 15a of this title shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued. No cause of action barred under existing law on the effective date of this section and sections 15a and 16 of this title shall be revived by said sections."

<sup>6</sup> Section 5 (b), 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 16 (b) (1964 ed.), provides:

HN2 [↑] "(b) Whenever any civil or criminal proceeding is instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain, or punish violations of any of the antitrust laws, but not including an action under section 15a of this title, the running of the statute of limitations in respect of every private right of action arising under said laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in said proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter: Provided, however, That whenever the running of the statute of limitations in respect of a cause of action arising under section 15 of this title is suspended hereunder, any action to enforce such cause of action shall be forever barred unless commenced either within the period of suspension or within four years after the cause of action accrued."

<sup>7</sup> See Highland Supply Corp. v. Reynolds Metals Co., 327 F.2d 725 (C. A. 8th Cir. 1964).

HÌ FÁMEJÉAFFÍHFI LÀ I ÁUÈDÖÄFI Í HÄFFI Í LAFI ÅSEÖAÅEGÅÁ É ÁÅÅ Ë LAFJÍ I ÁUÈÅÅSOYÓQÁ G ÅÅÅÅ

New Jersey Wood is engaged in the manufacture of electrical insulation materials, some of which it sells to independent distributors who, in [***409] turn, sell to wire and [*315] cable manufacturers and fabricators. Minnesota Mining is a diversified company, with one of its divisions producing electrical insulation materials. Essex is a substantial consumer of electrical insulation material. It owned Insulation Wires which distributes that type of material.

In August 1956 Minnesota Mining bought all the assets of Insulation Wires and in 1960 the Federal Trade Commission filed a proceeding against it under § 7 of the Clayton Act which resulted in a consent order directing the divestiture by Minnesota Mining of the assets so acquired. This order was dated August 24, 1961. The Commission charged that prior to 1953 Minnesota Mining was the leading manufacturer of electrical insulation tape; that through five transactions in the years 1952 through 1956 it had also brought under its control substantial shares of other major electrical product lines; and that its subsequent acquisition of two of the three largest distributors of these products might have the effect of [***9] actually or potentially lessening competition and tending to create a monopoly in various aspects of that commerce. One of the two distributors so acquired was Insulation Wires.

Thereafter, within a year, this suit was filed. We need not detail the allegations [**1476] of the complaint. It is sufficient to say that the gist of it was that prior to August 1956 Insulation Wires was the primary distributor of New Jersey Wood products throughout the United States; that in August 1956 Minnesota Mining acquired all of the assets of Insulation Wires and during the next month notified New Jersey Wood that beginning in January 1957 Insulation Wires would no longer distribute its products. The complaint also charged Minnesota Mining and Essex with conspiring to restrain trade and commerce in the manufacture, sale and distribution of electrical insulation products beginning with the acquisition of Insulation [*316] Wires and continuing until the filing of this suit. There were numerous overt acts alleged as being in furtherance of the conspiracy, the first of which was that acquisition.

II.

LEdHN[1] [1] At the [***10] outset it is necessary to examine § 5 (a) of the Clayton Act<sup>8</sup> and its relationship to § 5 (b). The former makes a final judgment or decree in any civil or criminal proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States prima facie evidence in subsequent private suits "as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto." Several distinctions between these sections are apparent and suggest that they are not wholly interdependent. First, the [***410] words "final judgment or decree" are used in § 5 (a) and are of crucial significance in its application. However, § 5 (b) tolls the statute of limitations set out in § 4B from the time suit is instituted by the United States regardless of whether a final judgment or decree is ultimately entered. Its applicability in no way turns on the success of the Government in prosecuting its case. Moreover, under § 5 (a) the judgment or decree may be used only as to matters respecting which it would operate as an estoppel between the parties. No such limitation appears [*317] in the tolling provision. It applies to every private right of action based in whole or in part [***11] on "any matter" complained of in the government suit.

LEdHN[2] [2] [***12] LEdHN[3] [3] LEdHN[4] [4] When we turn from the express language of these two statutory provisions to the congressional policies underlying them, it becomes even more apparent that the applicability of § 5 (a) to Federal Trade Commission actions should not control the question whether such proceedings toll the statute of limitations. We have discussed these policies at greater length below. At this juncture it is sufficient to say that in framing § 5 (a) Congress focused on the narrow issue of the use by private parties of judgments or decrees as prima facie evidence. This was recognized in Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 340 U.S. 558 (1951), where we stated that the purpose of § 5 (a) was "to minimize the burdens of

<sup>8</sup> Section 5 (a), 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 16 (a) (1964 ed.), provides:

HN3 [1] "(a) A final judgment or decree heretofore or hereafter rendered in any civil or criminal proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws to the effect that a defendant has violated said laws shall be prima facie evidence against such defendant in any action or proceeding brought by any other party against such defendant under said laws or by the United States under section 15a of this title, as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto: Provided, That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken or to judgments or decrees entered in actions under section 15a of this title."

HÌ FÁMEJÉ ÁFFÉHFI LÀ I ÁUÉÓÉFI Í HÉFFI Í LÁI ÁSEÓAÉCAÁ ÉÍ ÁFFÉHFI LÁI ÁUÉÓÉFI Í HÉFFI

litigation for injured private suitors by making available to them all matters previously established by the Government in antitrust actions" and to permit them "as large an advantage as the estoppel doctrine would afford had the Government brought suit." Id., at 568. As we shall show, however, [****13] its purpose in adopting § 5 (b) was not so limited, for it was not then dealing [**1477] with the delicate area in which a judgment secured in an action between two parties may be used by a third. Whatever ambiguities may exist in the legislative history of these provisions as to other questions, it is plain that in § 5 (b) Congress meant to assist private litigants in utilizing any benefits they might cull from government antitrust actions. See S. Rep. No. 619, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., 6. The distinction was emphasized in Union Carbide & Carbon Corp. v. Nisley, 300 F.2d 561 (1962), where the court, after noting the analysis of § 5 (a) set out in Emich Motors Corp., supra, stated that:

"The corollary purpose of the tolling provisions of the second paragraph of Section 5 [now § 5 (b)] is [*318] to vouchsafe the intended benefits of related government proceedings by suspending the running of the statute of limitations until the termination of the government proceedings, and allowing the private suitor one year thereafter in which to prepare and file his suit. The competency of a government judgment in a private suit is necessarily [****14] restricted to the requirements of due process. But the tolling of the statute during the pendency of the government litigation is not so limited." Id., at 569.

LEdHN[5] [5]In our view, therefore, the two sections are not necessarily coextensive; they are governed by different considerations as well as congressional policy objectives. This makes § 5 (b) HN4 readily severable from § 5 (a). Even if we assumed arguendo that § 5 (a) is inapplicable to Commission proceedings -- a question [***411] upon which we venture no opinion -- that conclusion would be immaterial in our consideration of § 5 (b) and § 4B. Congress has expressed its belief that private antitrust litigation is one of the surest weapons for effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. This construction will lend considerable impetus to that policy.

III.

Section 5, later §§ 5 (a) and 5 (b), was passed in response to the plea of President Wilson. In a speech to the Congress on January 20, 1914, he urged that a law be enacted which [****15] would permit victims of antitrust violations to have "redress upon the facts and judgments proved and entered in suits by the Government" and that "the statute of limitations . . . be suffered to run against such litigants only from the date of the conclusion of the Government's action." 51 Cong. Rec. 1964. The broad aim of this enactment was to use "private self-interest as a means of enforcement" of the antitrust laws. Bruce's Juices, Inc. v. American Can Co., 330 U.S. 743, 751 (f<sup>319</sup>) (1947). The "entire provision [was] intended to help persons of small means who are injured in their property or business by combinations or corporations violating the antitrust laws." H. R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 14. See S. Rep. No. 619, supra, at 6.

LEdHN[6] [6]It may be, as Minnesota Mining contends, that when it was enacted the tolling provision was a logical backstop for the prima facie evidence clause of § 5 (a). But even though § 5 (b) complements § 5 (a) in this respect by permitting a litigant to await the outcome of government proceedings and use any judgment or decree [****16] rendered therein -- a benefit which often is of limited practical value<sup>9</sup> -- it is certainly not restricted to that effect. As we have pointed out, the textual distinctions as well as the policy basis of § 5 (b) indicate that it was to serve a more comprehensive function in the congressional scheme of things. The Government's initial action may aid the private litigant in a number of other [**1478] ways. The pleadings, transcripts of testimony, exhibits and documents are available to him in most instances. In fact, the rules of the Commission so provide. 16 CFR § 1.132 (e). See generally 16 CFR § 1.131 et seq. Moreover, difficult questions of law may be tested and definitively resolved before the private litigant enters the fray. The greater resources and expertise of the Commission and its staff render the private suitor a tremendous benefit aside from any value he may derive from a judgment or decree. Indeed, so useful is this service that government proceedings are recognized as a major source of evidence for private parties. See Bicks, The Department of Justice and Private Treble Damage Actions, 4 Antitrust Bull. 5 (1959); [***17] Loewinger, Handling a Plaintiff's Antitrust Damage Suit, 4 Antitrust Bull. 29 (1959).

---

<sup>9</sup> See Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537 (1954).

HÌ FÁMEJÁ ÁFFÉH JÁ I ÁUÉÓÉFI Í HÉÉFI Í LÁFI ÁSEÓaÉCAÁ ÉÍ FFLÁFJÍ ÁMÉÉSÓYÓGÁG G ÉÉÉÉFÍ

[*320] Admittedly, there is little in the legislative history to suggest that Congress consciously intended to include Commission actions within the sweep of the tolling provision. But neither is there any substantial evidence that it consciously intended to exclude them. The fact of the matter is that the record of the 1914 legislative proceedings reveals an almost complete absence of any discussion on the tolling problem. It seems that Congress simply did [***412] not consider the extent of its coverage in the course of its deliberations.

LEdHN[7] [7]It is in light of this legislative silence that we must determine whether § 4B is tolled by Commission proceedings. In resolving this question we must necessarily rely on [***18] the one element of congressional intention which is plain on the record -- the clearly expressed desire that private parties be permitted the benefits of prior government actions. Implicit in such an objective is the necessity that the tolling provision include Commission proceedings. Otherwise the benefits flowing from a major segment of the Government's enforcement effort would, in many cases, be denied to private parties. In this connection, and of crucial significance, is the fact that the potential advantages available to such litigants because of § 5 (b) reach far beyond the specific and limited benefits accruing to them under § 5 (a). Furthermore, the § 5 (b) advantages flow as naturally from Commission proceedings as they do from Justice Department actions. Yet petitioner contends that § 4B must be tolled in the latter but not in the former. Such a grudging interpretation of the interrelationship of § 5 (b) and § 4B, however, would collide head-on with Congress' basic policy objectives. Acceptance of petitioner's position would make enjoyment of these intended benefits turn on the arbitrary allocation of enforcement responsibility between the Department and the [***19] Commission, and we must therefore reject it.

[*321] LEdHN[8] [8] LEdHN[9] [9]It is true that the precise language of § 5 (b) does not clearly encompass Commission proceedings. But it is not the literal wording of such a provision that is controlling where, as here, Congress has evidenced neither acceptance nor rejection of either interpretation, yet one effects a clearly expressed congressional purpose while the other defeats it. We stated the pivotal question for determination in such an event only this Term in Burnett v. New York Central R. Co., 380 U.S. 424, 427 (1965): "Whether congressional purpose is effectuated by tolling the statute of limitations in given circumstances." In order to determine that intent, we must examine "the purposes and policies underlying the limitation provision, the Act itself, and the remedial scheme developed for the enforcement of the rights given by the Act." Ibid. Guided by these criteria, we think it clear that congressional policy sustaining § 5 (b) would be effectively served [***20] only by tolling the statute of limitations in cases such as this, and we deem that policy controlling. This analysis is not a novel one. Mr. Justice Holmes, sitting on circuit, noted in Johnson v. United States, 163 F. 30, 32:

[**1479] "A statute may indicate or require as its justification a change in the policy of the law, although it expresses that change only in the specific cases most likely to occur to the mind. The Legislature has the power to decide what the policy of the law shall be, and if it has intimated its will, however indirectly, that will should be recognized and obeyed. The major premise of the conclusion expressed in a statute, the change of policy that induces the enactment, may not be set out in terms, but it is not an adequate discharge of duty for courts to say: We see what you are driving at, but you have not said it, and therefore we shall go on as before."

[***413] LEdHN[10] [10]We hold, therefore, that HN5 [5] the limitation provision of § 4B is tolled by Commission [***21] proceedings to the same extent [*322] and in the same circumstances as it is by Justice Department actions. In so holding we give effect to Congress' basic policy objectives in enacting § 5 (b) -- objectives which would be frustrated should we reach a contrary conclusion and thereby deprive large numbers of private litigants of the benefits of government antitrust suits simply because those suits were pursued by one governmental agency rather than the other.

HÌ FÁMEÙÍ ÁUÉOÉFI Í HÉÉFI Í JLÁFI ÁSEÓaÉCAÁ ÉÍ FHÁFJÍ Í ÁMEÙÉSÓYÓGÁG G ÉÉÉGF

LEdHN[11] [11] Minnesota Mining further contends that even though § 5 (b) tolls Commission proceedings, the suit here, insofar as it asserts Sherman Act claims, is not based in part on any matter complained of in the Commission's proceeding. We cannot agree.

New Jersey Wood's Sherman Act claims rest on an alleged conspiracy to restrain and attempt to monopolize trade and commerce in the manufacture, sale and distribution of electrical insulation products. The purposes of the conspiracy were alleged to be: (1) to control Insulation Wires; (2) to prevent it from distributing New Jersey Wood products; (3) to insure that Insulation Wires' supplies [****22] were purchased from a Minnesota Mining subsidiary; (4) to effect tie-in sales of electrical insulation products with other Minnesota Mining products; and (5) to have Essex deal only with Insulation Wires in purchasing electrical insulation products to the exclusion of competitive distributors handling New Jersey Wood products. The effect of the conspiracy was alleged to be the complete disruption of the pattern of manufacture, sale and distribution that New Jersey Wood had enjoyed with Insulation Wires and denial to it of access to substantial national markets for electrical insulation products.

LEdHN[12] [12] Certainly the allegations are based "in part" on the Commission action. It charged that the Insulation Wires acquisition, along with that of another distributor, placed [*323] in the hands of Minnesota Mining, a manufacturer, two of the three largest distributors in the business; that following the acquisitions these distributors discontinued distribution of the products of a number of manufacturers who had used them prior to their acquisition by Minnesota Mining; and that the effect of such action by [****23] Minnesota Mining was "the actual or potential lessening of competition" in the manufacture, sale and distribution of insulation products and the foreclosure of other manufacturers from a substantial share of the markets for said products. It appears to us that both suits set up substantially the same claims. It is true that the Commission's Clayton Act proceeding required proof only of a potential anticompetitive effect while the Sherman Act carries the more onerous burden of proof of an actual restraint. The Commission complaint, however, did allege an "actual" as well as a "potential" lessening of competition, i. e., manufacturers "have been foreclosed from a substantial share of the markets." Moreover, [**1480] the monopolization count was phrased in terms of HN6 [1] an "attempt to monopolize," which may be illegal though not successful. See United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 525, 531-532 (1948).

[***414] Minnesota Mining's claim seems to be that the crucial difference between the Commission and the New Jersey Wood proceedings is that the former [****24] alleges conduct that may substantially lessen competition while the latter asserts activity that has actually done so. We think that this is a distinction without a difference and does not deprive New Jersey Wood of the tolling effect of § 5 (b). That clause provides for tolling as long as the private claim is based "in part on any matter complained of" in the government proceedings. The fact that New Jersey Wood claims that the same conduct has a greater anticompetitive effect does not make the conduct challenged any less a matter complained of in the government action. [*324] It merely requires it to meet a greater burden of proof as to the effect of the conspiracy before a Sherman Act claim can be sustained.

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN and MR. JUSTICE STEWART did not participate in the decision of this case.

Dissent by: BLACK; GOLDBERG

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE BLACK, dissenting.

Section 4B of the Clayton Act bars a private antitrust damage suit unless brought within four years after the cause of action arises.<sup>1</sup> Section 5 (b) of the Act, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 16 (b) (1964 ed.), however, suspends the running of this limitation period "whenever [***25] any civil or criminal proceeding is instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain, or punish violations of any of the antitrust laws. . . ." I am unable to agree with the Court's holding that a purely administrative proceeding initiated by the Federal Trade Commission and decided by that same regulatory agency is the kind of "civil or criminal proceeding . . . instituted by the United States . . ." which tolls the statute of limitations under § 5 (b). The Court itself concedes that even as amended "the precise language of § 5 (b) does not clearly encompass Commission proceedings" and that "there is little in the legislative history to suggest that Congress consciously intended to include Commission actions within the sweep of the tolling provision." And the Solicitor General, while urging as amicus curiae the result the Court reaches today, candidly admits that this "result is difficult and perhaps impossible to justify in terms of conventional analysis of the text and legislative history . . . ." It is [*325] because I think both the language of the statute and the legislative history persuasively, if not conclusively, show that Congress did not intend the construction [***26] the Court gives § 5 (b) today, that I am unable to agree with its decision.

---

<sup>1</sup> Section 4B of the Clayton Act, 69 Stat. 283, 15 U. S. C. § 15b (1964 ed.), provides that:

HÌ FÁMEÙÍ ÁUÉÓÉFI Í HÆFFI Í CLÁFI ÁSEÓaÉCAÁ ÉÍ ÁUÉÓÉFI LÁFJÍ Í ÁUÉESÓYÓGÁG G ÆFFEG

The whole of § 5, now divided into subdivisions (a) and (b), was passed in response to President Wilson's 1914 plea to Congress to enact a law designed to make it easier for antitrust victims to collect damages through private lawsuits since preparing an antitrust case against a major corporate defendant was a larger task than most injured persons could undertake. To accomplish [***415] that single purpose he recommended to Congress, as the Court notes, two things -- that these victims be permitted to seek "redress upon the facts and judgments proved and entered in suits by the Government" and [**1481] also that "the statute of limitations [***27] . . . be suffered to run against such litigants only from the date of the conclusion of the Government's action." 51 Cong. Rec. 1964. Congress accepted the President's recommendation and passed § 5, a single section in two paragraphs, making "a final judgment or decree . . . rendered in any criminal prosecution or in any suit or proceeding in equity brought by or on behalf of the United States . . . prima facie evidence" against a civil antitrust defendant and tolling the statute of limitations during the pendency of "any suit or proceeding in equity or criminal prosecution . . . instituted by the United States . . ." This language of § 5 as it passed the Congress in 1914 clearly did not refer to administrative proceedings but to antitrust suits or criminal prosecutions instituted by the Government in civil or criminal courts. Moreover, the purpose and effect of the two parts of this provision were obviously complementary, permitting the injured party to utilize a final judgment obtained by the Government and also providing a means whereby the injured party could await the result of the government action [*326] confident that his suit would not be barred by the statute [***28] of limitations. In the words of one of the committee reports, the "entire provision is intended to help persons of small means who are injured in their property or business by combinations or corporations violating the antitrust laws." H. R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 14. (Emphasis supplied.) See S. Rep. No. 698, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 45. Therefore, both the language and the complementary nature of the two paragraphs of § 5 ought to show beyond any doubt that the whole section as passed was intended to apply to the same kind of proceeding in the same kind of tribunal -- that is a proceeding brought in a civil or criminal court, the only tribunal which in common understanding has power to render the kind of "final judgment or decree" mentioned in § 5 (a).<sup>2</sup> Furthermore, since the two paragraphs of § 5 when offered and when passed were regarded as an entity because of their identical language and purpose, it is not surprising that the Senators and Congressmen addressing themselves to § 5 did not specifically direct their remarks to the tolling provision as distinct from the effect to be given a court judgment or decree. Those discussing the measure naturally treated [***29] the "suit or proceeding in equity" or "criminal prosecution" set out in both paragraphs in identical terms as referring to the same kind of proceeding in the same kind of tribunal, namely a court. It is true that the language was changed in 1955 from "suit or proceeding in equity" and "criminal [*327] prosecution" to "civil [***416] or criminal proceeding," the present language, but the legislative history of the 1955 amendment affirmatively shows that there was no intention to affect

"Any action to enforce any cause of action under sections 15 or 15a of this title shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued."

<sup>2</sup> And of course, it is not at all clear that this is a suit "instituted by the United States." The Department of Justice brings suits and criminal prosecutions in the name of the United States, while an independent regulatory agency sues and is sued in its own name. And the United States does not initiate the proceedings before an administrative agency. Here for example the Federal Trade Commission filed the proceeding against petitioner. However, because of the view I take of the other language in the section, I find it unnecessary to decide this question.

HÌ FÁMEÙÍ ÁUÉÓÉFI Í HÉÉFI Í FLÁI ÁSEÓaÉCAÁ ÉÍ FÍ LÁFJÍ Í ÁMEÙÉSÓYÓGÁG G ËHEEGJ

in any way the kind of court proceedings necessary to suspend the statute of limitations. Thus, I am unable to go along with the Court in construing the tolling provision of § 5 (b) as though it applies to both court and Trade Commission proceedings while treating § 5 (a) as though it may apply to court proceedings only. Such a holding would, in my judgment, run counter to the whole legislative history of the 1914 Act.

[****30] I am setting out as an Appendix some of the legislative history of the original Act and of the 1955 amendment, which [**1482] points out specifically something which does not surprise me at all: that while Congress was ready to make the final judgment of a court prima facie evidence against a defendant, it was at the same time entirely unwilling to give such effect to administrative hearings and orders and was also unwilling to toll the statute of limitations during the pendency of such proceedings. It is true that many administrative agencies now conduct hearings, make findings, and issue orders in a way more or less comparable to courts. I doubt, however, that the time has even yet come when Congress would be willing to compel judges and juries to treat administrative orders as prima facie proof of a violation of law, either civil or criminal, or to treat those proceedings as though they were conducted in a court of law with all the protections there afforded litigants.

I would reverse this judgment.

APPENDIX TO OPINION OF MR. JUSTICE BLACK, DISSENTING.

THE 1914 ACT.

Herewith for illustration are statements made about § 5 of the 1914 Clayton Act by Senators and [****31] Congressmen [*328] particularly interested in § 5, all of whom took part in the preparation and sponsorship of the 1914 bill or the discussions that took place as it went through the House and Senate.

Senator Walsh, the spokesman for the Judiciary Committee, led the fight for the House version of § 5 and defended it on the ground that the defendant "has had an opportunity to try out before a court, with all the forms of the law, every question involved in the lawsuit. . . ." 51 Cong. Rec. 13851. (Emphasis added.) And Senator Walsh later added that "Here the party has had his day in court. He has tried every issue, and it is simply a question, now that he has had it tried, whether he may insist upon a second trial." 51 Cong. Rec. 13857. (Emphasis added.) Opponents of the "conclusive evidence" proposal of the House bill never challenged the premise, implicit in the remarks of Senator Walsh and others, that only judgments rendered in judicial proceedings were contemplated by § 5. Not once did any member of Congress suggest that under the House version, administrative findings based upon evidence which would not be admissible in a court should be conclusive of [****32] the defendant's liability in a later treble-damage action.

Senator Walsh, in arguing that his proposal would not violate the Constitution, again emphasized that § 5 did not apply to administrative orders, but only to judgments or decrees of the courts:

[***417] "I want to say just a word with reference to the authorities to which the attention of the Senate has been invited . . . . Nobody questions them. They all lay down the rule that in an action brought against an individual who has never theretofore had his day in court you can not make a certificate or a recital or an order of an administrative board or anything of that kind conclusive evidence against him." 51 Cong. Rec. 13856-13857. (Emphasis added.)

[*329] On the other hand, there were Senators who thought a judgment or decree for a defendant should be equally binding on a treble-damage plaintiff. In opposing this idea, Senator White argued:

"Then, Mr. President, as has been said, it is burdensome enough to require parties to the litigation themselves to be bound by the findings of a court or jury in a particular case. So many things that we can not at the time possibly foresee influence such [****33] decisions. The way in which the evidence is produced may have its effect upon a jury or a court.

"The manner in which the case is handled by the lawyers employed may determine in the mind of a jury or a court what the verdict or the judgment shall be, and yet, Mr. President, those things should probably [**1483] not have been controlling influences in the conclusions reached." 51 Cong. Rec. 13900. (Emphasis added.)

HÌ FÁVÉJÁNFFÉHGLÁ Í ÁUÉÓÉFI Í HÉFFÍ Í HÁFI ÁSEÓaÉGÁ ÉÍ ÉÉÉÉ FÍ LÁFJÍ Í ÁWÉJÉSÓYÓGÍG G ÉÉÉÉH

And Senator Cummins said: "But when the suit is brought, then the judgment or decree of the court in the suit that has been brought by the Government would be prima facie evidence of violation of the antitrust law . . ." 51 Cong. Rec. 13850. (Emphasis added.)

When the bill left the conference committee and went back to the House, the managers were called on to defend the changes against charges that elimination of the criminal penalties had emasculated the bill. Chairman Webb of the House Judiciary Committee attempted to describe the proposed enforcement procedures in the strongest possible light. After reading the provision vesting enforcement responsibility in the Trade Commission, he stated:

"Now, the value of these two [****34] sections is this: That they not only give the individual the right to sue for treble damages where he pleases, and we not only [*330] suspend the statute of limitations against an individual if a Government suit is brought against a trust, but we also require the Federal Trade Commission to stop these practices and take those guilty of such practices into court.

"But that is not all. Some argue that after the Trade Commission takes jurisdiction that excludes individuals from pursuing these other remedies. The bill further provides:

"No order of the commission or board or the judgment of the court to enforce the same shall in any wise relieve or absolve any person from any liability under the antitrust acts.'

"So you have three or four distinct remedies, all of which may be invoked at the same time." 51 Cong. Rec. 16274. (Emphasis added.)

It is clear therefore that Chairman Webb distinguished between [***418] suits by the "Government" -- the suits to which the tolling provision applied -- and proceedings of the Federal Trade Commission. He believed that the statute was suspended only when actions were brought under the direction of the Attorney General. [****35] This was confirmed a few moments later by the following exchange:

"Mr. HARDY. Under the bill does the Government have the authority to bring suit for injunction as well as private parties?

"Mr. WEBB. Yes. Section 15 gives the district attorneys under the direction of the Attorney General the right to apply for an injunction." 51 Cong. Rec. 16276.

The day following Chairman Webb's remarks Representative Floyd, another of the House managers, again attempted to persuade the House that the enforcement scheme contemplated by the bill was strong:

"That is not all. Under section 5 of the bill any private litigant injured by the unlawful acts of any [*331] corporation where the Government of the United States has proceeded against such corporation and obtained a judgment, either in a court of law or equity, is allowed the use of that judgment or decree to show the unlawful acts of the combination to the full extent that it would be an estoppel between the Government and the original offender. . . . That is a new remedy and a most efficient remedy. The Government of the United States, acting in behalf of all of its citizens, prosecutes a trust, convicts it either [****36] in a criminal court or a civil court, and the private litigant, injured by the unlawful acts of such trust, has nothing to do in [**1484] order to recover the three-fold damages except to prove the amount of damages and that the injury was done by this trust or corporation. . . .

....

"But that is not all. There are several other remedies provided in this bill. Under section 11 the violation of sections 2, 3, 7, and 8 may be enforced, respectively, by the Trade Commission, by the Interstate Commerce Commission, or by the Federal Reserve Board." 51 Cong. Rec. 16319. (Emphasis added.)

Another relevant discussion in the House is the following:

"Mr. MCKENZIE: If this section is left in the bill, do you not feel and believe that this decree that is mentioned in this section should be the decree of the court of last resort -- the Supreme Court of the land?"

HÌ FÁMEJÉ Í ÁUÉÓÉFI Í HÀÉÉFI Í LÁFI ÁSEÓaÉCA Á É ÁÉÉÉ FÌ LÁFJ Í ÁWÉÉSÓYÓG G ÉÉÉH

"Mr. VOLSTEAD. No.

....

"Mr. McKENZIE. You think it would be good policy to leave a matter of such great importance in the hands of an inferior court?

"Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes." 51 Cong. Rec. 9079.

[*332] As originally presented to the House, § 5 also made a "judgment or decree" rendered in a "suit or [****37] proceeding in equity brought by or on behalf of the United States" conclusive against any prospective treble-damage plaintiff. Opponents of this clause vigorously challenged the constitutionality of binding a party who had never had his "day in court." The debates made it clear time and again that the proceeding contemplated was an action brought for the United States by [***419] the Attorney General, not an administrative proceeding:

"Mr. SISSON. . . . Does the gentleman believe that his rights in the court should be determined upon the questions raised by the Attorney General of the United States?

"Mr. PROUTY. Why, certainly not; the Constitution expressly prohibits it. In other words, the Attorney General could go in and prevent my having a trial before a jury.

"Mr. SISSON. That is the point I had in mind.

"Mr. PROUTY. By instituting a proceeding in equity and having the case tried.

"Mr. SISSON. That is the point I had in mind, that the Attorney General, if he was disposed to do so -- we would not charge that of any particular Attorney General -- might cook up a case which would directly defeat the rights of every individual if he had been injured." 51 Cong. Rec. [****38] 9492.

Defenders of the proposition, on the other hand, stated:

"Mr. CULLOP. My question is this: Supposing a collusive suit was brought and the defendant won on the issue, then is every outsider barred from any further suit? According to this language he is.

"Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas . . . .

". . . My answer to that proposition is that if the time ever comes in this Government when any Attorney [*333] General will enter into collusive suits with corporations and combinations engaged in unlawful acts, it will be an evil day for our Republic, a day when every statute will become useless and justice will become a mockery." 51 Cong. Rec. 9489.

Furthermore, an amendment was in fact offered to the Senate which arguably would have resulted in bringing administrative proceedings within the scope of the phrase "suit or proceeding." The [**1485] amendment met with opposition and was withdrawn. The House bill originally dealt only with a "suit or proceeding in equity," and did not apply to criminal proceedings. After the bill reached the Senate, Senator Bryan moved to strike out the words "in equity," so the provision would read simply "any suit or proceeding." As observed [****39] by Senator Reed, "That would cover any kind of proceeding." Senator Culberson proposed a substitute adding the phrase "criminal prosecution or," and retaining the phrase "in equity." Senator Bryan withdrew his broader proposal and accepted Senator Culberson's limited substitute. 51 Cong. Rec. 13897-13898.

The House initially passed the Act with four substantive sections, each having a criminal penalty attached. All of the criminal penalties were removed in the Senate or in conference. Senator Reed of Missouri, leading the opposition to the bill, charged repeatedly that the Clayton Act had been stripped of all force and effectiveness:

"We end by providing a smooth and easy road which may be traveled through the years, until finally a commission shall issue an innocuous, nonenforceable decree, a decree that can be vitalized only by being affirmed by a court. At the conclusion of all the litigation we propose to impose no penalty, levy no fine, send no one to jail, and we permit the culprit to preserve his swag!" 51 Cong. Rec. 15867. (Emphasis added.)

HÌ FÁMEJÉ ÁFFÉH HÀ Í ÁUÉÓÉFI Í HÉÉFI Í LÁI ÁSEÓaÉCA Á É ÁÉÉÉ FJLÁFJÍ Í ÁWÉÉSÓYÓGÁG G ÉÉÉH

[*334] [***420] Had the proponents of the measure contemplated the use of administrative findings as evidence [****40] it appears that the obvious answer to Senator Reed would have been that the bill does have teeth for the Commission's order would be admissible as prima facie evidence against the "culprit," and private claimants would be able to reclaim "his swag," three times over. Neither this, nor any other answer challenging the accuracy of Senator Reed's statement, was heard on the Senate floor, although his complaint was repeatedly made. And in the House, Representative Nelson charged:

"Finally, the penalty is cut out; they can do all these things, and the Trade Commission can only say, 'You must not do it any more.' Then there is the long delay in an appeal to the courts; and they go through the courts. And then what? There may be an injunction issued, but they have got away with the loot with impunity." 51 Cong. Rec. 16325.

For further examples see 51 Cong. Rec. 9079, 9169, 9488-9490, 9492, 9494-9495, 12789-12790, 13850-13851, 13856-13857, 13897-13898, 13900, 14262, 14328, 15867, 15948, 15950, 16003, 16044, 16046, 16149, 16154, 16274, 16281, 16319, 16325.

THE 1955 AMENDMENT.

The committee reports on the amendment detailed carefully every change the bill would make, but there [****41] is absolutely no evidence that there was any intent to amend § 5 (b) for the purpose of suspending the statute of limitations during the pendency of Federal Trade Commission hearings. See H. R. Rep. No. 422, 84th Cong., 1st Sess.; S. Rep. No. 619, 84th Cong., 1st Sess. And the debates and the hearings affirmatively show that no change was intended. For example, in the 1951 hearings Representative Patman appeared before the House subcommittee considering the bill and questioned whether § 5 had been changed to deny the right of a private [*335] litigant to use a judgment obtained by the Government. Representative Wilson assured him that: "This doesn't change the present law." Representative Keating, the author of the bill, then commented: "I think there [**1486] is a slight change in existing law where it refers to the subsequent numbers. There has to be a change in phraseology in that because of what we have done in section 4. I believe that is the only change." Hearings on H. R. 3408 before the Subcommittee on Study of Monopoly Power of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 82d Cong., 1st Sess., Part 3, 98-100. And on the floor of the House in the discussion of the [***42] bill which became the present law, Representative Quigley stated:

"It was the specific purpose of the committee in reporting this bill to in no way affect the substantive rights of individual litigants. It is simply a procedural change and suggested with the thought of setting up a uniform statute of limitations. That is the sole purpose." 101 Cong. Rec. 5131.

MR. JUSTICE GOLDBERG, dissenting.

With all deference, I dissent. I agree with the Court, ante, at 321, that, as we recently stated in Burnett v. New York Central R. Co., 380 U.S. 424, 427, the pivotal question for determination is "whether congressional purpose is effectuated by tolling the statute of limitations in given circumstances." I cannot agree, however, that the Court has [***421] correctly applied that test in this case. As my Brother BLACK has so well demonstrated in his dissenting opinion, both the language and legislative history of the statutes before us clearly show that Congress did not intend that the statute of limitations applicable to private antitrust actions be tolled by the institution of a Federal Trade Commission administrative proceeding. Cf. United States v. Welden, 377 U.S. 95. [****43] It frustrates rather than effectuates congressional purpose to fail to honor the express intent of Congress in this given circumstance.

References

---

Annotation References:

Actions for threefold damages under Federal anti-trust act. 53 L ed 826.

HÌ FÁMEÙÉHFFÉH HÍ LÀ I ÁUÉOÉFI Í HÉEFI Ì Í LÁFI ÁSEÓaÉCAÁ ÉI ÉÉÉÉ CFLAFJÍ Í ÁMEÉÉSÓYÓGÁG G ÉÉÉÉ H

Who may be regarded as injured in his business or property within provisions of anti-trust acts as to person who may recover damages resulting from violation of the acts. 139 ALR 1017.

---

End of Document

FTC v. Borden Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

January 19, 1966, Argued ; March 23, 1966, Decided

No. 106

Reporter

383 U.S. 637 *; 86 S. Ct. 1092 **; 16 L. Ed. 2d 153 ***; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2909 ****; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,716

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. BORDEN CO.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 339 F.2d 133, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

brand, label, grade, premium, products, milk, customers, consumer, Robinson-Patman Act, differential, seller, chemical, advertised, retail, cases, competitor, purchasers, prices, price discrimination, tires, high prices, discriminatory, marketplace, preferences, selling

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

See Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Robinson-Patman Act

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

Labels do not differentiate products for the purpose of determining grade or quality, even though the one label may have more customer appeal and command a higher price in the marketplace from a substantial segment of the public.

HÍ HÁNEÚDEA HÍ ÉÁÍ HÍ LÁ Í ÁUÉÓDÉFÉ GÁÍFÉ GLÁFÍ ÁSÉÓDA ÉÁGÁ ÁFÍ HÁÉFÍ HÁFJÍ Í ÁNÉUÉSÓYÓQÁGUÉ JÉÉKÉF

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Robinson-Patman Act Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

HN3 [] Clayton Act, Defenses

Subject to specified exceptions and defenses, § 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), proscribes unequal treatment of different customers in comparable transactions, but only if there is the requisite effect upon competition, actual or potential. But if the transactions are deemed to involve goods of disparate grade or quality, the section has no application at all and the Federal Trade Commission never reaches either the issue of discrimination or that of anticompetitive impact. The court doubts that Congress intended to foreclose these inquiries in situations where a single seller markets the identical product under several different brands, whether his own, his customers' or both. Such transactions are too laden with potential discrimination and adverse competitive effect to be excluded from the reach of § 2 (a) by permitting a difference in grade to be established by the label alone or by the label and its consumer appeal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN4 [ ] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

If two products, physically identical but differently branded, are to be deemed of different grade because the seller regularly and successfully markets some quantity of both at different prices, the seller could, as far as § 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), is concerned, make either product available to some customers and deny it to others, however discriminatory this might be and however damaging to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

 Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

The economic factors inherent in brand names and national advertising should not be considered in the jurisdictional inquiry under the statutory "like grade and quality' test."

Lawyers' Edition Display

HÌ HÀMÈÙÀ HÌ ÈÈ HÌ LÀ Í ÀÙÈÓDÀFÈU GÀFÈU GLÁFÌ ÁÙÈOÀÈGÀFÍ HÀFÍ HÀJÌ Í ÁÙÈSÓYÒÁGÈU ÈÈÈÈ

Summary

The respondent, a producer of evaporated milk sold under its name as a nationally advertised brand, also marketed evaporated milk under various private brands owned by its customers. Although this milk was physically and chemically identical with the milk distributed under respondent's own brand, it was sold at prices regularly below those obtained for the brand milk. The Federal Trade Commission found that the milk sold as respondent's own brand and that sold under private brands was of "like grade and quality" as required for the applicability of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, held the price differential to be discriminatory, and issued a cease and desist order. The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit set aside the order on the sole ground that, as a matter of law, the customer label milk was not of the same grade and quality as the milk sold under respondent's brand. (339 F2d 133.)

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the decision of the Court of Appeals and remanded the case to that court for determination of the remaining issues. In an opinion by White, J., expressing the view of seven members of the Court, it was held that labels do not differentiate products for the purpose of determining grade or quality, even though the one label may have more customer appeal and command a higher price in the marketplace from a substantial segment of the public.

Stewart, J., joined by Harlan, J., dissented on the ground that mere physical or chemical identity between premium and private label brands is, without more, not a sufficient basis for a finding of "like grade and quality" within the meaning of the statute.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- premium and private label brands -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

A producer's commodities are of "like grade and quality" within the meaning of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act ( 15 USC 13\(a\)), prohibiting price discrimination between different purchasers of commodities "of like grade and quality," where the physical and chemical properties of the products are the same, even though some of them are marketed under the producer's name as a nationally advertised brand and the others under various private brands owned by its customers.

MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- labels -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Under 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act ( 15 USC 13\(a\)), prohibiting price discrimination between different purchasers of commodities "of like grade and quality," labels do not differentiate products for the purpose of determining grade or quality, even though the one label may have more customer appeal and command a higher price in the marketplace from a substantial segment of the public.

STATUTES §158.8 > administrative construction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

HÌ HÀMÈJÀ HÌ ÈÈ HÌ LÀ I ÀUÈDÒAF EU GÀIF EU GLÁF ÆSEÒaÈGÀÁI HÀÈFÍ HÀJÌ I ÀUÈSÓYQÁG EU ÈÈ

Views of the Federal Trade Commission as to construction of the provisions against price discrimination of 2 of the Clayton Act both before and after its amendment by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USC 13\(a\)) are entitled to respect.

MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- advertising expenses -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

That a producer spends more advertising money upon commodities marketed as a nationally advertised brand than upon commodities of like grade and quality marketed at a lower price under private brands is relevant only as to the defenses against price discrimination which is based on cost justification or otherwise permitted under the proviso of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USC 13\(a\)).

MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- advertising as factor -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The economic factors inherent in brand names and national advertising should not be considered in an inquiry under the "like grade and quality" test of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USC 13\(a\)), which prohibits price discrimination between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality.

MONOPOLIES §86 > price discrimination -- functions of Federal Trade Commission -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Transactions in which a producer charges higher prices for commodities sold as a nationally advertised brand than for commodities of like grade and quality sold as private brands may be examined by the Federal Trade Commission under 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson- Patman Act (15 USC 13\(a\)); the Commission will determine, subject to judicial review, whether the differential under attack is discriminatory within the meaning of the Act, whether competition may be injured, and whether the differential is cost justified or is defensible as a good-faith effort to meet the price of a competitor.

MONOPOLIES §36 > price discrimination -- branded and unbranded commodities -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Tangible consumer preferences as between branded and unbranded commodities should receive due legal recognition in the "injury" and "cost justification" provisions of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson- Patman Act (15 USC 13 \(a\)), prohibiting price discrimination between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality.

HÌ HÀMÈÙÀ HÌ ÈÈ HÌ LÀ Ì ÀÙÈÒÖÄFÈJGÄFÈJGLÄFÌ ÁÙÈÖÄGÄFÌ HÀMÈÙÍ HÀJÌ Ì ÁÙÈÖÙØÄGÈJÈÄFÈ

COURTS §141 > relation to Congress -- price discrimination -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Arguments for exempting private brand selling from 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USC 13\(a\)), prohibiting price discrimination between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, are more appropriately addressed to the Congress than to the United States Supreme Court.

Syllabus

---

Respondent produces and sells evaporated milk under its nationally advertised Borden name, and markets physically and chemically identical milk under various private brands owned by its customers. The FTC found the milk to be of like grade and quality as required for the applicability of § 2 (a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, held the price differential to be discriminatory, ascertained the requisite adverse effect on competition, rejected respondent's claim of cost justification and issued a cease-and-desist order. The Court of Appeals set aside the FTC order on the ground that as a matter of law private label milk was not of the same grade and quality as Borden brand milk. Held: Labels do not differentiate products for the purpose of determining grade or quality under § 2 (a) of the Act, even though one label may have more customer appeal and command a higher price in the marketplace. Pp. 639-647.

- (a) This has been the long-standing [***2] view of the FTC, and its construction of the Act is entitled to respect. Federal Trade Commission v. Mandel Brothers, Inc., 359 U.S. 385, 391. P. 640.
- (b) This construction of the statute is supported by the legislative history and furthers the purpose and policy of the Act. Pp. 641-645.
- (c) Economic realities are not ignored, but economic factors inherent in brand names and national advertising are not to be considered in the jurisdictional inquiry under the statutory "like grade and quality" test. Pp. 645-646.
- (d) Transactions like those involved here may be examined by the FTC under § 2 (a) to determine, subject to judicial review, whether the price differential is discriminatory, whether competition may be injured, and whether the differential is cost-justified or is defensible as a good-faith effort to meet a competitor's price. P. 646.
- (e) The question of whether the FTC's rulings under § 2 (b) of the Act are inconsistent with its construction of § 2 (a) is not before this Court and is not passed upon. Pp. 646-647.

Counsel: Robert B. Hummel argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Marshall, Assistant Attorney [***3] General Turner, Daniel M. Friedman, Gerald Kadish and James McL. Henderson. John E. F. Wood argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Kent V. Lukingbeal, Robert C. Johnston, Philip S. Campbell and C. Brien Dillon.

Judges: Warren, Fortas, Harlan, Brennan, Black, Stewart, Clark, White, Douglas

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[*638] [***155] [**1094] MR. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Borden Company, respondent here, produces and sells evaporated milk under the Borden name, a nationally advertised brand. At the same time Borden packs and markets evaporated milk under various private brands owned by its customers. This milk is physically and chemically identical with the milk it distributes under its own brand but is sold at both the wholesale and retail level at prices regularly below those obtained for the Borden brand milk. The Federal Trade Commission found the milk sold under the Borden and the private labels to be of like grade and quality as required for the applicability of § 2 (a) of the Robinson-Patman Act,<sup>1</sup> held the price differential to be discriminatory [*639] within the meaning of the section, ascertained the requisite [****4] adverse effect on commerce, rejected Borden's claim of cost justification and consequently issued a cease-and-desist order. The Court of Appeals set aside the Commission's order on the sole ground that as a matter of law, the customer label milk was not of the same grade and quality as the milk sold under the Borden brand. 339 F.2d 133. Because of the importance of this issue, which bears on the reach and coverage of the Robinson-Patman Act, we granted certiorari. 382 U.S. 807. We now reverse the decision of the Court of Appeals and remand the case to that court for the determination of the remaining issues raised by respondent [**1095] Borden in that court. Cf. Federal Trade Comm'n v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 542. [***156]

HÌ HÀMÈÙÀ HÌ ÈÙÙ HÌ LÀ Í ÀÙÈÒØÄFÈÙGÄFÈÙI LÀFÌ ÀÙÈØÀÈGÀFÌ HÀÙÙFÌ I LÀFJÌ Í ÀÙÈÙÙØYØÙGJÈÙÙH

[****5] The position of Borden and of the Court of Appeals is that the determination of like grade and quality, which is a threshold finding essential to the applicability of § 2 (a), may not be based solely on the physical properties of the products without regard to the brand names they bear and the relative public acceptance these brands enjoy -- "consideration should be given to all commercially significant distinctions which affect market value, whether they be physical or promotional." 339 F.2d, at 137. Here, because the milk bearing the Borden brand regularly sold at a higher price than did the milk with a buyer's label, the court considered the products to be "commercially" different and hence of different "grade" for the purposes of § 2 (a), even though they were physically identical and of equal quality. Although a mere [*640] difference in brand would not in itself demonstrate a difference in grade, decided consumer preference for one brand over another, reflected in the willingness to pay a higher price for the well-known brand, was, in the view of the Court of Appeals, sufficient to differentiate chemically identical products and to place the price differential [****6] beyond the reach of § 2 (a).

[LEdHN\[1\]↑](#) [1][LEdHN\[2\]↑](#) [2][LEdHN\[3\]↑](#) [3]We reject this construction of § 2 (a), as did both the examiner and the Commission in this case. The Commission's view is that HN2↑ labels do not differentiate products for the purpose of determining grade or quality, even though the one label may have more customer appeal and command a higher price in the marketplace from a substantial segment of the public. That this is the Commission's long-standing interpretation of the present Act, as well as of § 2 of the Clayton Act before its amendment by the Robinson-Patman Act,<sup>2</sup> may be gathered from the Commission's decisions dating back to 1936. Whitaker Cable Corp., 51 F. T. C. 958 \(1955\); Page Dairy Co., 50 F. T. C. 395 \(1953\); United States Rubber Co., 46 F. T. C. 998 \(1950\); United States Rubber Co., 28 F. T. C. 1489 \(1939\); [****7] Hansen Inoculator Co., 26 F. T. C. 303 \(1938\); Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 22 F. T. C. 232 \(1936\). These views of the agency are entitled to respect, Federal

<sup>1</sup> Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730 (1914), as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13 \(a\) \(1964 ed.\), provides in pertinent part:

"HN1↑ It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered . . . ."

<sup>2</sup> A proviso to § 2 of the original Clayton Act excepted price discrimination "on account of differences in the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodity sold . . . ." 38 Stat. 730 (1914).

HÌ HÀMÈÙÀ HÌ ÈÙÙ I ÈÙÀ Ì ÁÙÈÓDÀFÈU GÀÙÈUÍ LÀFÌ ÁÙÈÓDÀFÈUÁI HÀÙÙFÌ I LÀJÌ Ì ÁÙÈÙSÓYÓÙ/GÈU ÈÙÙ

Trade Comm'n v. Mandel Brothers, Inc., 359 U.S. 385, 391, and represent a more reasonable construction of the statute than that offered by the Court of Appeals.<sup>3</sup>

[****8] [*641] Obviously there is nothing in the language of the statute indicating that grade, as distinguished from quality, is not to be determined by the characteristics of the product itself, but by consumer preferences, brand acceptability or what customers think of it and are willing to [**157] pay for it. Moreover, what legislative history there is concerning this question supports the Commission's construction [**1096] of the statute rather than that of the Court of Appeals.

During the 1936 hearings on the proposed amendments to § 2 of the Clayton Act, the attention of the Congress was specifically called to the question of the applicability of § 2 to the practice of a manufacturer selling his product under his nationally advertised brand at a different price than he charged when the product was sold under a private label. Because it was feared that the Act would require the elimination of such price differentials, Hearings on H. R. 4995 before the House Committee on the Judiciary, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 355, and because private brands "would [thus] be put out of business by the nationally advertised brands," it was suggested that the proposed § 2 (a) be amended [***9] so as to apply only to sales of commodities of "like grade, quality and brand." (Emphasis added.) Id., at 421. There was strong objection to the amendment and it was not adopted by the Committee.<sup>4</sup> The rejection of this [*642] amendment assumes particular significance since it was pointed out in the hearings that the legality of price differentials between proprietary and private brands was then pending before the Federal Trade Commission in Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 22 F. T. C. 232. By the time the Committee Report was written, the Commission had decided Goodyear. The report quoted from the decision and interpreted it as holding that Goodyear had violated the Act because "at no time did it offer to its own dealers prices on Goodyear brands of tires which were comparable to prices at which respondent was selling tires of equal or comparable quality to Sears, Roebuck & Co." H. R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 4.

[****10] [*643] During the debates on the bill, Representative Patman, one of the bill's sponsors, was asked about the private label issue. His brief response is wholly consistent with the Commission's interpretation of § 2 (a), 80 Cong. Rec. 8115:

---

<sup>3</sup>The commentators are somewhat divided on the dispute involved in this case. Supporting the Commission's view are the Report of The Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 158 (1955); Austin, Price Discrimination and Related Problems under the Robinson-Patman Act 39 (2d ed. 1959); Patman, The Robinson-Patman Act 27 (1938); Edwards, The Price Discrimination Law 31, 463-464 (1959); Seidman, Price Discrimination Cases, reprinted in 2 Hoffmann's Antitrust Law and Techniques 409, 424-428 (1963). Contrary views are expressed by a minority of the Attorney General's Committee; in Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act 75 (1962); and in Cassady & Grether, The Proper Interpretation of "Like Grade and Quality" within the Meaning of Section 2 (a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 30 So. Cal. L. Rev. 241 (1957).

<sup>4</sup>Mr. H. B. Teegarden, who was then counsel to the United States Wholesale Grocers Association, and who apparently played a large part in drafting the bill, Hearings on H. R. 4995 before the House Committee on the Judiciary, 74th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 9, supplemented his oral testimony with a letter addressed in part to the proposed amendment:

"To amend the bill by inserting 'and brands,' after the words 'commodities of like grade and quality,' as suggested by Judge Watkins, although it may seem harmless at first sight, is a specious suggestion that would destroy entirely the efficacy of the bill against larger buyers. So amended, the bill would impose no limitation whatever upon price differentials, except as between different purchasers of the same brand. But where goods are put up under a private brand, there can only be one purchaser, namely the one for whom the brand is designed. Neither Kroger nor any independent could use an A. & P. private brand of canned fruit, for example; and to so amend the bill would leave every manufacturer free to put up his standard goods under a private brand for a particular purchaser and give him any price discount or discriminations that he might demand.

"Under the Patman bill as it stands, manufacturers are still free to put up their products under private brands; but if they do so for one purchaser under his private brand, then they must be ready to do so on the same terms, relative to their comparative costs, for a competing purchaser under his private brand; and unless that equality of treatment is required and assured, the discriminations at which the bill is aimed cannot be suppressed." Id., 2d Sess., at 469.

HÌ HÁWEJÀ HÌ ÈÈ I HÀ I ÁUÈOÈFÈGÀFÈJÌ LÀI ÁSEÒaÈCAÁI HÈÈFÌ I LÀFJÌ I ÁUÈSÓYÓGJÈJÀÈFÈ

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. There has grown up a practice on the part of manufacturers of [***158] making certain brands of goods for particular chain stores. Is there anything in this bill calculated to remedy that situation?

"Mr. PATMAN. . . . I have not time to discuss that feature, but the bill will protect the independents in that way, because they will have to sell to the independents at the same price for the same product [**1097] where they put the same quality of merchandise in a package, and this will remedy the situation to which the gentleman refers.

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Irrespective of the brand.

"Mr. PATMAN. Yes; so long as it is the same quality. . . ."

The Commission's construction of the statute also appears to us to further the purpose and policy of the Robinson-Patman Act. HN3[<sup>5</sup>] Subject to specified exceptions [***11] and defenses, § 2 (a) proscribes unequal treatment of different customers in comparable transactions, but only if there is the requisite effect upon competition, actual or potential. But if the transactions are deemed to involve goods of disparate grade or quality, the section has no application at all and the Commission never reaches either the issue of discrimination or that of anticompetitive impact. We doubt that Congress intended to foreclose these inquiries in situations where a single seller markets the identical product under several different brands, whether his own, his customers' or both. Such [*644] transactions are too laden with potential discrimination and adverse competitive effect to be excluded from the reach of § 2 (a) by permitting a difference in grade to be established by the label alone or by the label and its consumer appeal.<sup>5</sup>

[***12] HN4[<sup>6</sup>]

If two products, physically identical but differently branded, are to be deemed of different grade because the seller regularly and successfully markets some quantity of both at different prices, the seller could, as far as § 2 (a) is concerned, make either product available to some customers and deny it to others, however discriminatory this might be and however damaging to competition. Those who were offered only one of the two products would be barred from competing for those customers who want or might buy the other. The retailer who was permitted to buy and sell only the more expensive brand would have no chance to sell to those who always buy the cheaper product or to convince others, by experience or otherwise, of the fact which he and all other dealers already know -- that the cheaper product is actually identical with that carrying the more expensive label.

LEdHN4[<sup>7</sup>] [4]The seller, to escape the Act, would have only to succeed in selling some unspecified amount of each product to some unspecified portion of his [***13] customers, however large or small the price differential might be. The seller's pricing and branding policy, by being successful, would apparently validate itself by creating a difference [*645] in "grade" and thus [***159] taking itself beyond the purview of the Act.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Borden argues that it spends large sums to ensure the high quality of its Borden brand milk on customers' shelves, inferring that there really is a difference between its own milk and the milk sold under private labels, at least by the time it reaches the consumer. Of course, if Borden could prove this difference, it is unlikely that the case would be here. The findings are to the contrary in this case and we write on the premise that the two products are physically the same at the time of consumer purchase. Borden's extra expenses in connection with its own milk are more relevant to the cost justification issue than to the question we have before us.

<sup>6</sup> The market acceptability test would hardly stop with insulating from inquiry the price differential between proprietary and private label sales. That test would also immunize from the Act sales at different prices of the same product under two different producer-owned labels, the one being less advertised and having less market acceptability than the other. And if it is "consumer preferences," dissenting opinion, p. 648, which create the difference in grade or quality, why should not Borden be able to discriminate between two purchasers of private label milk, as long as one label commands a higher price from consumers than the other and hence is of a different grade and quality? In this context perhaps the market acceptability test would be refined to preclude this differential on the grounds that Borden's customer, as distinguished from the consumer, will not pay more than his competitor for private label milk and therefore the milk sold by Borden under one private brand is really of the same grade and quality as the milk sold under the other brand even though ultimate consumers will pay more for one than the other. Taking this approach, if Borden packed for one wholesale customer under two private labels, one having more consumer appeal than the

HÌ HÁWEJÀ HÌ ÈÈ I Í LÀ Í ÁUÈOÈFÉGÀFÉJÍ LÀ Í ÁSEÒaÈCA ÁI HÈÈFFÍ JLAFJÍ Í ÁWÈJÈSÓYÓGJÉÈÈFH

[****14] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6] [LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7] [LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8] Our \*\*1098 holding neither ignores the economic realities of the marketplace nor denies that some labels will command a higher price than others, at least from some portion of the public. But it does mean that "HN5" the economic [\[\*646\]](#) factors inherent in brand names and national advertising should not be considered in the jurisdictional inquiry under the statutory 'like grade and quality' test." Report of The Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 158 (1955). And it does mean that transactions like those involved in this case may be examined by the Commission under § 2 (a). The Commission will determine, subject to judicial review, whether the differential under attack is discriminatory within the meaning of the Act, whether competition may be injured, [\[\*\*\*\*15\]](#) and whether the differential is cost-justified or is defensible as a good-faith effort to meet the price of a competitor. "Tangible consumer preferences as between branded and unbranded commodities should receive due legal recognition in the more flexible 'injury' and 'cost justification' provisions of the statute." Id., at 159. This, we think, is precisely what Congress intended. The arguments for exempting private brand selling from § 2 (a) are, therefore, more appropriately addressed to the Congress than to this Court.<sup>7</sup>

The Court of Appeals suggested that the Commission's views of like grade and quality for the purposes of § 2 (a) cannot be squared with its rulings in cases where a seller presents [\[\*\*\*160\]](#) the defense under § 2 (b)<sup>8</sup> [\[\*\*\*\*17\]](#) that he [\[\*\*\*\*16\]](#) is in good [\[\*647\]](#) faith meeting the [\[\*\*1099\]](#) equally low price of a competitor.<sup>9</sup> In those cases, it is said, the Commission has given full recognition to the significance of the higher prices commanded by the nationally advertised brand "in holding that a seller who reduces the price of his premium product to the level of his non-premium competitors is not merely meeting competition, but undercutting it." 339 F.2d, at 138.

The Commission, on the other hand, sees no inconsistency between its present decision and its § 2 (b) cases. In its view, the issue under § 2 (b) of whether a seller's lower price is a good-faith meeting of competition involves considerations different from those presented by the jurisdictional question of "like grade and quality" under § 2 (a).

other because of the customer's own advertising program, Borden must sell both brands at the same price it charges other private label customers because all such milk is of the same grade and quality. At the same time, the customer buying from Borden under two labels could himself sell one label at a reduced price without inquiry under § 2 (a) because the milk in one container is no longer of the same grade and quality as that in the other, although both the milk and the containers came from Borden. Such an approach would obviously focus not on consumer preference as determinative of grade and quality but on who spent the advertising money that created the preference -- Borden's customer, not Borden, created the preference and hence the milk is of the same grade and quality in Borden's hands but not in its customer's. The dissent would exempt the effective advertiser from the Act. We think Congress intended to remit him to his defenses under the Act, including that of cost justification.

<sup>7</sup> This is not, of course, a helpful suggestion to those who think the congressional remedy would be "very difficult if not impossible" and who thus prefer the more "reasonable approach" through the courts. See Cassady & Grether, supra, n. 3, at 277.

<sup>8</sup> Section 2 (b), 15 U. S. C. § 13 \(b\) \(1964 ed.\), provides as follows:

"Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

<sup>9</sup> The Court of Appeals relied upon Callaway Mills Co., sub nom. Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co., CCH Trade Reg. Rep. Transfer Binder, 1963-1965, para. 16,800; Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 54 F. T. C. 277 \(1957\); Standard Oil Co., 49 F. T. C. 923 \(1953\); and Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co., 44 F. T. C. 351 (1948). Borden adds Gerber Products Co. v. Beech-Nut Life Savers Co., 160 F.Supp. 916 \(D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1958\).

HÌ HÀMÈÙÀ HÌ ÈÙ I Ì LÀ Ì ÁÙÈÖFÉGÄFÉJLÁÌ ÁÙDÀÅCÁÌ HÄÙFÌ ÈLÁJÌ Ì ÁÙÈSÓYÓGÜÈÄÙFÌ

We need not resolve these contrary positions. The issue we have here relates to § 2 (a), not to § 2 (b), and we think the Commission has resolved it correctly. The § 2 (b) cases are not now before us and we do not venture to decide them. The judgment of the [****18] Court of Appeals is reversed and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: STEWART

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE STEWART, with whom MR. JUSTICE HARLAN joins, dissenting.

I cannot agree that mere physical or chemical identity between premium and private label brands is, without [*648] more, a sufficient basis for a finding of "like grade and quality" within the meaning of § 2 (a) of the Robinson-Patman Act. The conclusion that a product that travels at a premium in the marketplace is of "like grade and quality" with products of inferior commercial value is not required by the language of the Robinson-Patman Act, by its logic, or by its legislative history.

It is undisputed that the physical attributes and chemical constituents of Borden's premium and private label brands of evaporated milk are identical. It is also undisputed that the premium and private label brands are not competitive at the same price, and that if the private label milk is to be sold at all, it must be sold at prices substantially below the price commanded by Borden's premium brand.<sup>1</sup> This simple market [***161] fact no more than reflects the obvious [****19] economic reality that consumer preferences can and do create significant commercial distinctions between otherwise similar products. By pursuing product comparison only so far as the result of laboratory analysis, the Court ignores a most relevant aspect of the inquiry into the question of "like grade and quality" under § 2 (a): Whether the products are different in the eyes of the consumer.<sup>2</sup>

[****20] [*649] There [**1100] is nothing intrinsic to the concepts of grade and quality that requires exclusion of the commercial attributes of a product from their definition. The product purchased by a consumer includes not only the chemical components that any competent laboratory can itemize, but also a host of commercial intangibles that distinguish the product in the marketplace.<sup>3</sup> [****22] The premium paid [*650] for Borden brand milk reflects the

---

<sup>1</sup> For example, one wholesaler, a witness for the Commission, stated:

"Private label merchandise is no good for nobody unless there is a price on it. . . . In the retail trade as a whole they haven't been too much interested in [private label evaporated milk] . . . frankly if it was the same price as advertised or 15 cents or 25 cents a case under, it wouldn't sell, they couldn't give it away. . . . It has got to have $ 1.50 or $ 2 a case spread to make it interesting."

<sup>2</sup> No suggestion is made that any of the private label brands involved in this case show significant commercial differentiation from one another. It is possible, of course, that by extensive promotion private label brands could achieve consumer acceptance equivalent to that of a premium brand. In that situation, the products would still be economically different under the market test of § 2 (a) elucidated in this opinion, since the relevant comparison would exclude promotional efforts by persons other than the producer of the premium brand. Thus, promotional activities by customers of Borden in the present case could not affect the determination of "like grade and quality" with regard to sales by Borden. Cf. Jordan, Robinson-Patman Act Aspects of Dual Distribution by Brand of Consumer Goods, 50 Cornell L. Q. 394, 406-407 (1965).

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Chamberlin, The Theory of Monopolistic Competition 56 (8th ed. 1962):

"A general class of product is differentiated if any significant basis exists for distinguishing the goods (or services) of one seller from those of another. Such a basis may be real or fancied, so long as it is of any importance whatever to buyers, and leads to a preference for one variety of the product over another. Where such differentiation exists, even though it be slight, buyers will be paired with sellers, not by chance and at random (as under pure competition), but according to their preferences.

HÌ HÀMÈÙÀ HÌ ÈÈ Í ÈLÀ Í ÀUÈÖÈFÈGÈFÈCÈLÀ ÌSEÒaÈCÀ ÁÍ HÈÈFÈ FLÀFJÌ Í ÁMÈÈSÓYÓGÈJÈÈHÈGG

consumer's awareness, promoted through advertising, that these commercial attributes are part and parcel [***162] of the premium product he is purchasing.<sup>4</sup> The record in the present case indicates that wholesale purchasers of Borden's private label brands continued to purchase the premium brand in undiminished quantities. The record also indicates that retail purchasers who bought the premium brand did so with the specific expectation of acquiring a product [**1101] of premium quality.<sup>5</sup> [****23] Contrary to the Court's suggestion, [*651] ante, p. 644, this consumer expectation cannot accurately be characterized as a misapprehension. Borden took extensive precautions to insure that a flawed product did not reach the consumer. [****21]<sup>6</sup> None of these precautions was taken for the private brand milk packed by Borden.<sup>7</sup> An important ingredient of the premium brand inheres in the consumer's belief, measured by past satisfaction and the market reputation established by Borden for its products, that tomorrow's can will contain the same premium product as that purchased today. To say, as the Court does, that these and other intangibles, which comprise an important part of the commercial value of a product, are not sufficient to confer on Borden's premium brand a "grade" or "quality" different from that of private label brands is to

"Differentiation may be based upon certain characteristics of the product itself, such as exclusive patented features; trade-marks; trade names; peculiarities of the package or container, if any; or singularity in quality, design, color, or style. . . . In so far as these and other intangible factors vary from seller to seller, the 'product' in each case is different, for buyers take them into account, more or less, and may be regarded as purchasing them along with the commodity itself."

See also Brown, Advertising and the Public Interest: Legal Protection of Trade Symbols, 57 Yale L. J. 1165, 1181 (1948):

". . . The buyer of an advertised good buys more than a parcel of food or fabric; he buys the pause that refreshes, the hand that has never lost its skill, the priceless ingredient that is the reputation of its maker. All these may be illusions, but they cost money to create, and if the creators can recoup their outlay, who is the poorer? Among the many illusions which advertising can fashion are those of lavishness, refinement, security, and romance. Suppose the monetary cost of compounding a perfume is trivial; of what moment is this if the ads promise, and the buyer believes, that romance, even seduction, will follow its use? The economist, whose dour lexicon defines as irrational any market behavior not dictated by a logical pecuniary calculus, may think it irrational to buy illusions; but there is a degree of that kind of irrationality even in economic man; and consuming man is full of it."

<sup>4</sup> For example, a grocer testified in the proceedings before the Commission that:

"People are going into a grocery store to pick up groceries, the majority of the people buy something that is advertised that they have known for years or heard of for years or see highly advertised. They know it is a good product, they know it is fancy merchandise or best quality."

Another grocer testified that:

"A. Some people say they want [Borden's] Silver Cow milk. In other words, for maybe a coupon on the side of the can or because they have been educated to want that brand. Some of them won't have anything but that. Some of them won't have anything except Carnation, and some of them don't want anything except Pet."

"Q. They don't care what price --

"A. If the doctor tells the woman to put the baby on Pet milk, that is all she wants, you couldn't interest her in something else."

"Q. You couldn't give her something else, could you?

"A. I doubt if I could."

<sup>5</sup> The results of a house-to-house survey conducted for Borden by National Analysts, Inc., indicated that consumers selected Borden's premium brand because of its superior quality. Comparable studies have reached a similar conclusion. Cf. "Mom Feels Quality, not Ad Cost, Makes Brand Item Costlier, 'Good House' Reports," Advertising Age, Dec. 7, 1964, p. 30.

<sup>6</sup> Borden's Food Products Division maintained a staff of field representatives who inspected code-datings on cans of Borden brand milk in retail stores, in order to insure that older milk was sold first off the retailer's shelves. A witness for Borden testified that the principal dangers of long storage were discoloration of the milk, precipitation of calcium and other minerals, and separation and hardening of fat from the milk. As a further precaution against sales of defective milk, Borden dispatched its milk to wholesalers and retailers under a first-packed, first-shipped rotation plan that occasionally involved high-cost shipments from distant plants or warehouses. In addition, before shipment from a cold storage warehouse, Borden "tempered" its premium brand milk in order to prevent condensation on the cans, which might have resulted in rust to the cans and damage to the labels.

<sup>7</sup> As counsel for the respondent candidly stated on oral argument to the Court, "The difference as to the private label brand packed by Borden is that, as to that product, the Borden Company washes its hands of it at the factory door."

HÌ HÀMÈÙÀ HÌ ÈÙ Í FLÀ Í ÁÙÈÖÉÈ GÄFFÈFLÀ Ì ÆÓaÈcÁÍ HÄFFÈ GÄFJ Ì ÁÙÈSÓYÓGÜÈÄFFÈ

ignore the obvious market acceptance of that difference. "Commercially the 'advertised' brands had come in the minds of the public to mean a different grade of milk. The public may have [*652] been wrong; . . . it may have been right . . . . But right or wrong, that is what it believed, and its belief [***163] was the important thing." Borden's Farm Products Co. v. Ten Eyck, 11 F.Supp. 599, 601 (D. C. S. D. N. Y.) (opinion of L. Hand, J.).<sup>8</sup>

[***24] The [**1102] spare legislative history of the Robinson-Patman Act is in no way inconsistent with a construction of § 2 (a) that includes market acceptance in the test of "like grade and quality." That history establishes no more than that mere differences in brand or design, unaccompanied by any genuine physical, chemical, or market [*653] distinction, are insufficient to negate a finding of "like grade and quality" under § 2 (a).<sup>9</sup> [***25] Nothing that I have found in the legislative history speaks with precision to the sole issue before us here, the application of § 2 (a) to physically or chemically identical products that are in fact differentiated by substantial market factors.<sup>10</sup>

[***164] Neither the remarks of Representative Patman, ante, p. 643, nor the letter of Mr. Teegarden, ante, p. 641, n. 4, supports the Court's conclusion that Congress intended physical and chemical identity to be the sole touchstone of "like grade and quality." Aside from the obviously casual nature of Mr. Patman's reply to the question concerning [*654] the effect of the Act on private [***26] label brands,<sup>11</sup> his remarks go embarrassingly further than the circumspect reading sought to be given them by the Court. On its face, Mr. Patman's statement makes the

<sup>8</sup>The Court's suggestion that the commentators are about equally divided upon the issue before us is somewhat misleading. It is true that the members of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws, Report, pp. 156-159 (1955), were sharply divided as to whether significant consumer preferences should be taken into account under the "like grade and quality" test of § 2 (a). However, the very brief discussions of "like grade and quality" in Austin, Price Discrimination and Related Problems under the Robinson-Patman Act 39 (2d ed. 1959); Patman, Complete Guide to the Robinson-Patman Act 34-35 (1963); and Edwards, The Price Discrimination Law 31, 463-464 (1959), are not addressed to the relevance of significant consumer preferences, and the minimal discussion in Seidman is at best ambiguous, Price Discrimination Cases, reprinted in 2 Hoffmann's Antitrust Law and Techniques 409, 427-428 (1963). Those cursory treatments go no further than the view, with which I wholly agree, that no blanket exemption from § 2 (a) is available for private label brands. But that view in no sense disposes of the concrete issue presented in this case. Commentators who have in fact focussed on the significance of consumer preferences uniformly favor inclusion of commercial acceptance in the test of "like grade and quality." Rowe, Price Differentials and Product Differentiation: The Issues under the Robinson-Patman Act, 66 Yale L. J. 1 (1956); Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act 62-76 (1962); Cassady & Grether, The Proper Interpretation of "Like Grade and Quality" within the Meaning of Section 2 (a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 30 So. Cal. L. Rev. 241 (1957); Jordan, Robinson-Patman Act Aspects of Dual Distribution by Brand of Consumer Goods, 50 Cornell L. Q. 394 (1965).

<sup>9</sup>The Court's suggestion, ante, p. 644, that a difference in label alone would exclude the reach of § 2 (a) if a market test were accepted for "like grade and quality" is no part of the present case and has never been offered as a serious interpretation of § 2 (a). Nor is there any issue raised here as to whether, under a market test of § 2 (a), a dubious pricing and branding policy adopted by a seller could "validate itself" and escape the Act by creating precarious distinctions in grade or quality. The price differential between Borden's premium and private label brands is concededly grounded upon a legitimate and stable market preference for the premium product. Moreover, the Commission's willingness to engage in the exhaustive analysis of injury to competition and cost justification under its "physical identity" test of § 2 (a) demonstrates that the Commission's resources would be more than adequate to determine the level of commercial preference sufficient to negate a finding of "like grade and quality" under a market test of § 2 (a).

<sup>10</sup>Certain general language in the congressional reports may be taken, however, as supporting the interpretation that market factors are relevant in the construction of § 2 (a). The Report of the House Committee on the Judiciary stated that the general object of the bill was "to amend section 2 of the Clayton Act so as to suppress more effectually discriminations between customers of the same seller not supported by sound economic differences in their business positions . . ." H. R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 7. (Emphasis added.) The Report of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary is phrased in substantially the same language. S. R. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3.

<sup>11</sup>The remarks of Representative Patman were even more offhand than the opinion of the Court indicates. Prefacing the portion of his remarks quoted by the Court, Mr. Patman said, "I only have a very short time, and I must finish my statement. I have not time to discuss that feature . . . ."

HÌ HÁMÈÙÀ HÌ ÈÈ Í LÀ Í ÁUÈÖDÉF GÄFFEGLÀÍ ÁSEØaÈCAÁÍ HÄFFÍ I LAFJÍ Í ÁMÈÈSÓYÓGÅEJÄFFEG

blanket assertion that all products of the same quality must be sold at the same price. As thus stated, premium brands would have to be sold at the same price as private label brands, regardless of injury to competition, cost justification, or other available defenses under the Act. These undifferentiated remarks are therefore of little assistance in the determination of congressional intent. Far from supporting the Court's interpretation of § 2 (a), the final paragraph of the Teegarden letter suggests that Mr. Teegarden considered the bill to have no effect on a premium brand producer's decision to furnish private label brands to purchasers, so long as the private label brands were made available on the same terms to all purchasers. Mr. Teegarden's [**1103] concern was with the prevention of discrimination between purchasers on the basis of artificial differences in brand.<sup>12</sup> That same concern, and no more, [*655] is all that may legitimately be read into the rejection by Congress of the proposal to [***27] add "and brands" to the "like grade and quality" provision in the bill. By rejecting that proposal, it can be inferred only that Congress contemplated "no blanket exemption . . . for 'like' products which differed only in brand . . . , leaving open the application of the Act to differentiated products reflecting more than a nominal or superficial variation." Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act 65 (1962).

[***28] The references in the legislative hearings and the House Committee Report to the Commission's decision in Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 22 F. T. C. 232, are equally inconclusive on the relevance of commercial acceptance to the determination of "like grade and quality." The striking aspect of that case is that Goodyear conceded that the differently branded tires involved in the proceeding were of like grade and quality, 22 F. T. C., at 290. Moreover, the tires purchased by Sears, Roebuck & Co. from Goodyear and sold under Sears' "All State" label were advertised by Sears as obtained from "the leading tire manufacturer" and "[***165] the world's foremost tire manufacturer," so that the market independence of Sears' private brand was compromised. Id. at 295, 297.

The other administrative precedents relied on by the Court also fail to establish any consistently settled interpretation by the Federal Trade Commission that physical identity is the sole touchstone of "like grade and quality." Those decisions singularly fail to focus on the significance of consumer preference as a relevant factor in the test of grade and quality.<sup>13</sup> [***30] [***29] Moreover, the [*656] Commission has itself explicitly resorted to consumer preference or marketability to resolve the issue of "like grade and quality" in cases where minor physical variations accompany a difference in product brand.<sup>14</sup> [**1104] The [*657] caprice of the Commission's present <sup>12</sup> The predominant concern of Congress in enacting the Robinson-Patman amendments to the Clayton Act was to abolish the notorious price discriminations that infected the post-Depression economy, especially the blanket immunity then available for quantity discounts under § 2 of the Clayton Act. An obvious commercial evil at the time was the widespread practice of offering private label brands to favored customers at rates substantially lower than the rates offered to competing purchasers. The abortive attempt, vigorously opposed by Mr. Teegarden, to introduce "and brands" into the "like grade and quality" provision would have left that evil completely unremedied. Cf. 80 Cong. Rec. 8234-8236 (rejection of amendments proposing the addition of "and design" and "purchased under like conditions" to the "like grade and quality" clause).

<sup>13</sup> In Hansen Inoculator Co., 26 F. T. C. 303, and the two United States Rubber Co. cases, 28 F. T. C. 1489; 46 F. T. C. 998, the finding of "like grade and quality" was either conceded by the respondent or not challenged. In addition, in Hansen Inoculator, there was significant evidence that the private label product was in fact trading on the reputation of the premium product. Further, in Hansen Inoculator, as in Page Dairy Co., 50 F. T. C. 395, it is doubtful that even the labels on the two products were distinguishable. In Whitaker Cable Corp., 51 F. T. C. 958, the resale prices of both products were identical, so that no commercial preference could have been proved in any event. Finally, in the first United States Rubber case and in Whitaker Cable Corp., there was substantial discrimination by the seller between various purchasers of the private label brands. In setting aside the order of the Commission in the present case, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit emphasized that in none of these cases was there any showing that the brand names affected the market price of the products sold.

<sup>14</sup> Universal-Rundle Corp., CCH Trade Reg. Rep. Transfer Binder, 1963-1965, para. 16948, at pp. 22003-22005 (F. T. C. Dkt. 8070, June 12, 1964) (differences in plumbing fixtures); Quaker Oats Co., CCH Trade Reg. Rep. Transfer Binder, 1963-1965, para. 17134, at p. 22215 (F. T. C. Dkt. 8112, Nov. 18, 1964) (differences in flour blends). Compare E. Edelmann & Co., 51 F. T. C. 978 (differences in automobile replacement parts); Bruce's Juices, Inc. v. American Can Co., 87 F.Supp. 985, aff'd 187 F.2d 919 (C. A. 5th Cir.) (differences in size of juice cans); Champion Spark Plug Co., 50 F. T. C. 30 (differences in insulator and "ribs" of spark plugs). Cf. Comment, Like Grade and Quality: Emergence of the Commercial Standard, 26 Ohio State L. J. 294, 296-302 (1965). The Commission appears at one time to have held that brand identity may create a presumption of "like grade distinction thus invites Borden to incorporate slight tangible variations in its private label products, in order to bring itself within the Commission's current practice of considering market preferences in such cases.

HÌ HÁWEJÀA HÌ ÁÍ LÀ Í ÁUÉOÖFÉGÄFFÉ LÁÍ ÁSEÓaÉCAÁÍ HÄEFFÍ I LÁFJÍ Í ÁWÈJESÓYÓGÜÉJÄFFGJ

[****31] The Commission's determination of "like grade and quality" under § 2 (a) in this case is seriously inconsistent with the position it has taken under § 2 (b) in cases where a seller has presented the defense that he is in good faith meeting the equally low price of a competitor. The Commission decisions are clear that the "meeting competition" defense is not available to a seller who reduces the price of his premium product to the level of nonpremium products sold by his competitors. The Commission decisions under § 2 [***166] (b) emphasize that market preference must be considered in determining whether a competitor is "meeting" rather than "beating" competition. In Standard Oil Co., 49 F. T. C. 923, 952, the Commission put it baldly:

"In the retail distribution of gasoline public acceptance rather than chemical analysis of the product is the important competitive factor." <sup>15</sup>

[****32] [*658] Could [*1105] the Commission under § 2 (b) now prevent Borden from reducing the price of its premium milk to the level of private label milk? I can see no way that it could, short of maintaining a manifestly unstable equilibrium between § 2 (a) and § 2 (b). By adopting a keyhole approach to § 2 (a), the Court manages to escape resolution of the question, but it does so at the cost of casting grave doubt on what I had regarded as an important bulwark of § 2 (b) against a recognized competitive evil.

The Court gives no substantial economic justification for its construction of § 2 (a). <sup>16</sup> The principal rationale of the restriction of that section to commodities of "like" [*659] grade and quality" is simply that it is not feasible to measure discrimination and injury to competition where different products are involved. That rationale is as valid for economic as for physical variation between products. Once a substantial economic difference between products is and quality," regardless of the existence of physical differences between the products. General Foods Corp., 52 F. T. C. 798, 817; Atalanta Trading Corp., 53 F. T. C. 565, 571. In setting aside the Commission's order in Atalanta, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit stated that "The test of products of like grade and quality was evolved to prevent emasculation of the section by a supplier's making artificial distinctions in his product but this does not mean that all distinctions are to be disregarded." Atalanta Trading Corp. v. FTC, 258 F.2d 365, 371. In a footnote to that opinion, the Court of Appeals indicated that price differences were among the distinctions to be considered. Id. at 371, n. 5. Cf. Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act 71-72 (1962).

<sup>15</sup> See also Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co., 44 F. T. C. 351, 396-397: "To accept [the contrary] proposition would mean that any seller of a commodity which generally sells at a premium price may freely discriminate among its customers so long as it does not undercut the prices of competitors"; Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 54 F. T. C. 277, 302: "It is evident that Budweiser could and did successfully command a premium price in the St. Louis market . . . . The test in such a case is not necessarily a difference in quality but the fact that the public is willing to buy the product at a higher price in a normal market"; Callaway Mills Co., sub nom. Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co., CCH Trade Reg. Rep. Transfer Binder, 1963-1965, para. 16,800, at p. 21755 (F. T. C. Dkt. 7634, Feb. 10, 1964): "Both the courts and the Commission have consistently denied the shelter of the [meeting competition] defense to sellers whose product, because of . . . intense public demand, normally commands a price higher than that usually received by sellers of competitive goods"; Standard Brands, Inc., 46 F. T. C. 1485, 1495; Gerber Products Co. v. Beech-Nut Life Savers, Inc., 160 F.Supp. 916, 920, 921-922 (D. C. S. D. N. Y.). Cf. Porto Rican American Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., 30 F.2d 234, 237 (C. A. 2d Cir.). In the present case, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit specifically refused to "approve of the Commission's construing the Act inconsistently from one case to the next, as appears most advantageous to its position in a particular case." 339 F.2d 133, at 139. See the comment of Commissioner Mason: "First the Commission finds you guilty of price discrimination by disregarding popularity of goods, and finds the grade and quality of the commodities in question are the same; then they knock out your meeting of competition defense because your goods are more popular than others, even if the commodities in question are of like grade and quality." Discriminate in Price between Different Purchasers of Commodities of Like Grade, Quality and Popularity, Proc. Am. Bar Assn. Section of Antitrust Law 82, 91-92 (Aug. 1953). Cf. Eine Kleine Juristische Schlummergegeschichte, 79 Harv. L. Rev. 921, 928-929 (1966).

<sup>16</sup> The Court's brief discussion of the adverse economic effect of the Fifth Circuit's ruling is concerned primarily with the supposed injury to secondary line competition. The present proceeding arose as the direct result of the primary line injury caused to midwestern packers of private label evaporated milk when Borden expanded its plants in Tennessee and South Carolina to include private label operation, but the opinion of the Court nowhere discusses such competition.

HÌ HÀMÈÙÀ HÌ ÈÙ Í JLÀ Í ÁÙÈÖÈFÉGÄFFÍ LÁÌ ÁÙÈÖÈCAÁÌ HÄFFÍ Í LÄFJ Í ÁÙÈÖÙYÓGJÉÄFHG found, therefore, the inquiry of the Commission should be ended, just as it is ended when a [***167] substantial physical difference is found.

[****33] In spite of the assertion of the Attorney General's Report quoted by the Court, it is unlikely that economic differences between premium and private label brands can realistically be taken into account by the Commission under the "injury to competition" and "cost justification" provisions of § 2 (a).<sup>17</sup> Even if relevant cost data can be agreed upon, the cost ratio between Borden's premium and private label products is hardly the most significant factor in Borden's pricing decision and market return on those products. Moreover, even if price discrimination is found here, its effect on competition may prove even more difficult to determine than in more conventional [*660] cases of price discrimination under § 2 (a). Cf. FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37; United Biscuit Co. v. FTC, 350 F.2d 615 (C. A. 7th Cir.).

[****34] The threat presented to primary line competition by Borden's distribution of premium and private label brands is unclear. No allegation was made that Borden has used its dominant position in the premium brand market to subsidize predatory price-cutting campaigns in the private label market. Borden packs its private label brands for national distribution, so that this case is essentially [**1106] different from those in which geographical price discriminations are involved. Further, Borden's private label brands are aimed in part at a different, more price-conscious class of consumer. Because relevant economic factors differ in the premium and private label markets, conventional notions of price discrimination under the Robinson-Patman Act may not be applicable.<sup>18</sup> More important, Borden's extensive distribution of its private label brands has introduced significant low-cost competition for Borden's own premium product. Thus, the large retail chains and cooperative buyer organizations that are Borden's chief private label customers represent a significant source of countervailing power to the oligopoly pattern of evaporated milk production. The rise of this sort of competition [****35] is well known in other parts of the food industry.<sup>19</sup> In these circumstances, the anticompetitive leverage against primary line competition available to Borden through its private label production is sharply curtailed. There is, therefore, no real resemblance in [***168] this case to the serious discriminatory [*661] practices that the Robinson-Patman Act was enacted to prevent.

The potential economic impact of Borden's distribution of private label brands on secondary line competition is equally ambiguous. It is true that a market test of "like grade and quality" would enable Borden, so far as § 2 (a) is concerned, to make private label brands selectively available to [****36] customers of its premium brand. Not all wholesale and retail dealers who carry Borden's premium brand would be able, as of right, to take advantage of Borden's private label production. But the Commission could still apply § 2 (a) with full force against discriminations between private label customers. And the Government could still invoke § 2 of the Sherman Act or § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act to deal with other forms of price discrimination by Borden against its customers or competitors.

<sup>17</sup> It is not clear that the "injury to competition" and "cost justification" issues will be reached on the remand. As the opinion of the Court suggests, ante, p. 646, the existence of price discrimination is an issue that remains open in the Court of Appeals. If Borden is able to demonstrate that the price differential between its premium and private label brands is not a price discrimination, the inquiry by the Commission is at an end, and no issue of injury to competition or cost justification under § 2 (a) is reached. Nothing in FTC v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, a case concerned only with territorial price discrimination, requires an equation in all circumstances between a price differential and price discrimination. So long as Borden makes private label brands available to all customers of its premium milk, it is unlikely that price discrimination within the meaning of § 2 (a) can be made out. Boss Mfg. Co. v. Payne Glove Co., 71 F.2d 768, 770-771 (C. A. 8th Cir.); Austin, Price Discrimination and Related Problems under the Robinson-Patman Act 21 (2d ed. 1959); Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act, supra, at 97-99.

<sup>18</sup> Cf. Adelman, Price Discrimination as Treated in the Attorney General's Report, 104 U. Pa. L. Rev. 222, 228-230 (1955).

<sup>19</sup> See Staff Report to the Federal Trade Commission, Economic Inquiry into Food Marketing, Part II, The Frozen Fruit, Juice and Vegetable Industry (1962); Jordan, supra, n. 8, at 413-417.

HÌ HÀMÈÙÀ HÌ ÈÈ Ì FLÀ Ì ÁUÈO ĐÈF GÄFFÈ LÀ Ì ÁSEØaÈCA ÁÍ HÄEFFÌ Ì LAFJ Ì ÁUÈSØYØAGJÈ JÄHHÌ

Under the Court's view of § 2 (a), Borden must now make private label milk available to all customers of its premium brand.<sup>20</sup> But that interpretation of § 2 (a) is [**662] hardly calculated to speed private label brands to the shelves of retailers. To avoid supplying a private label brand to a premium brand customer, Borden need only forgo further sales of its premium brand to that customer. It is, therefore, not unlikely that the Court's decision will foster a discrimination greater than that which it purports to eliminate, since retailers previously able to obtain the premium Borden brand but not a private label brand, may now find their access to the premium brand foreclosed [***37] as well.

[***38] In [**1107] Automatic Canteen Co. v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61, 63, this Court cautioned against construction of the Robinson-Patman Act in a manner that might "give rise to a price uniformity and rigidity in open conflict with the purposes of other antitrust legislation." Today that warning goes unheeded. In the guise of protecting producers and purchasers from discriminatory price competition, the Court ignores legitimate market preferences and endows the Federal Trade Commission with authority to disrupt price relationships between products whose identity has been measured in the laboratory but rejected in the marketplace. I do not believe that any such power was conferred upon the Commission by Congress, and I would, therefore, affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

References

---

What are "commodities" and "commodities of like grade and quality," within provision of Robinson-Patman Act prohibiting price discrimination between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality--federal cases

Annotation References:

Robinson-Patman Act as construed by Supreme Court. [***39] 2 L ed 2d 1737, 8 L ed 2d 1033.

Construction of the cost-justification proviso of the Robinson- Patman Act. 9 L ed 2d 1138.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>20</sup> The Commission concedes that there is no evidence in the record that Borden refused to sell private label milk to any customer who specifically requested it. Borden's private label business in the period covered by these proceedings was substantial. In 1957, Borden sold 4,300,000 cases of its premium brand evaporated milk and 1,100,000 cases of private label milk (government and export business excluded); net sales of these products were $ 27,600,000 and $ 5,700,000, respectively. A major source of Borden's private label business was provided by cooperative associations of wholesalers and retailers, so that, in fact, there was an opportunity for large numbers of small retailers to compete in the sale of private label brands of evaporated milk obtained from Borden. One such group, whose purchases accounted for 11% of Borden's private label volume in 1957, had more than 1,000 retailer members. Not all retailers, however, availed themselves of the opportunity to market private label milk. One wholesaler testified that, a year after his private label brand had been offered to the 600 retail grocers in his service area, only 50 of the grocers had become regular customers.

United States v. General Motors Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

December 9, 1965, Argued ; April 28, 1966, Decided

No. 46

Reporter

384 U.S. 127 *; 86 S. Ct. 1321 **; 16 L. Ed. 2d 415 ***; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2960 ****; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,750; 10 Fed. R. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 1245

UNITED STATES v. GENERAL MOTORS CORP. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

Disposition: 234 F.Supp. 85, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

dealers, discounters, associations, conspiracy, sales, franchised, Sherman Act, customer, collaborative, unilateral, promise, prices, manufacturer, price competition, establishments, repurchase, antitrust, retailing, referral, concert, outlets

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN1** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

**HN2** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a Sherman Act conspiracy, and certainly not where joint and collaborative action was pervasive in the initiation, execution, and fulfillment of the plan.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

384 U.S. 127, *127; 86 S. Ct. 1321, **1321; 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, ***415; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2960, ****1

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

There are statutory inhibitions on the right of an automobile manufacturer to terminate dealer franchises. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1222.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

Elimination, by joint collaborative action, of a group of automobile discounters from access to the market is a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Where businessmen concert their actions in order to deprive others of access to merchandise which the latter wish to sell to the public, the court need not inquire into the economic motivation underlying their conduct to find a violation of the Sherman Act.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

Upon complaint by its dealers in the Los Angeles area about sales by some of the dealers through discount houses, the defendant automobile manufacturer elicited from each dealer a promise not to do business with the discounters; three dealer associations, which were also defendants, undertook jointly to police the agreements so obtained; the associations, as requested by the manufacturer, supplied information to the manufacturer for use by it in bringing wayward dealers into line; and as a result of this collaborative effort, a number of dealers were induced to repurchase cars they had sold through discounters and to promise to abjure such sales in the future.

In the present civil action brought by the United States in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California to enjoin the defendants from participating in an alleged conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act, the court concluded that the proof failed to establish the alleged violation, and entered judgment for the defendants. (234 F Supp 85.)

Upon direct appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed. In an opinion by Fortas, J., expressing the view of eight members of the Court, it was held that the joint activities of the defendants constituted "a classic conspiracy in restraint of trade," and that the evidence was sufficient to prove such a conspiracy.

Harlan, J., concurred in the result, feeling bound by a precedent even though he had dissented from its holding.

Headnotes

---

MONOPOLIES §30 > collaboration between manufacturer and dealers -- elimination of discounters -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

Joint collaborative action by an automobile manufacturer, its franchise dealers, and associations of these dealers to eliminate discount houses as competitors by terminating business dealings between them and a minority of the dealers and to deprive the dealers of their freedom to deal through discounters if they so choose, is a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 USC 1), it being immaterial whether the clause in the franchise agreement which prohibits a dealer from moving to or establishing a new or different location without the manufacturer's prior written approval may be construed to prohibit the dealers from selling through discounters.

EVIDENCE §991.5 > sufficiency -- violation of antitrust laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

A conspiracy to restrain trade by eliminating discount houses is proved where the evidence shows that an automobile manufacturer to which its dealers had complained about sales through discounters elicited from every dealer in the area a promise not to do business with the discounters; that three associations of the dealers undertook jointly to police these agreements obtained and, as requested, supplied information to the manufacturer for use by it in bringing wayward dealers into line; and that as a result of this collaborative effort, a number of dealers were induced to re-purchase cars they had sold through discounters and to promise to abjure such sales in the future.

ERROR §1477 > review of findings -- antitrust action -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B]

Federal Civil Procedure Rule 52 \(a\), under which findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, has no application to a finding by the District Court that defendants' conduct did not constitute a combination in violation of the Sherman Act, where the District Court premised its finding on an erroneous interpretation of the standard to be applied.

MONOPOLIES §14 > test of combination -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

384 U.S. 127, *127; 86 S. Ct. 1321, **1321; 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, ***415; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2960, ****1

For purposes of determining whether there has been a combination or conspiracy in violation of 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 USC 1) it is of no consequence that each party acted in its own lawful interest; nor is it of consequence, where an automobile manufacturer and its dealers are charged with collaborative action to eliminate discounters from access to the market, whether their franchise system and a clause contained in the franchise agreement prohibiting a dealer from moving to or establishing a new or different location without the manufacturer's prior consent are lawful or economically desirable.

MONOPOLIES §10 > conspiracy -- explicit agreement -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

An explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a conspiracy in violation of 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 USC 1), and certainly not where joint and collaborative action was pervasive in the initiation, execution, and fulfilment of the plan.

MONOPOLIES §29 > elimination of competition -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Elimination, by joint collaborative action, of discounters from access to the market is a per se violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > MONOPOLIES §30 > group boycotts -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Group boycotts are a class of restraint of trade which, from their nature or character, are unduly restrictive and, because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue, are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.

MONOPOLIES §14 > economic motivation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Where businessmen concert their actions in order to deprive others of access to merchandise which the latter wish to sell to the public, the courts need not inquire into the economic motivation underlying the conduct.

MONOPOLIES §29 > exclusion of traders from market -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

Exclusion of traders from the market by means of combination or conspiracy is so inconsistent with the free-market principles embodied in the Sherman Anti-Trust Act that it is not to be saved by reference to the need for preserving the collaborators' profit margins or their system for distributing goods, any more than by reference to the allegedly tortious conduct against which a combination or conspiracy may be directed.

MONOPOLIES §36 > price control -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

A substantial restraint upon price competition is a goal unlawful per se under the antitrust laws when sought to be effected by combination or conspiracy; the per se rule applies even when the effect upon prices is indirect.

MONOPOLIES §6 > purpose of antitrust laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

The protection of price competition from conspiratorial restraint is an object of special solicitude under the antitrust laws.

MONOPOLIES §29 > elimination of competitors -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

The Sherman Anti-Trust Act prohibits conspiracies or combinations to put competitors out of business entirely, as well as conspiracies to fix prices at which competitors may sell.

Syllabus

---

This is a civil action to enjoin General Motors Corporation (GM) and three associations of Chevrolet dealers in the Los Angeles area from participating in an alleged conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act by eliminating sales of new Chevrolets through "discount houses" and "referral services." The District Court found, among other things, that the Losor Chevrolet Dealers Association in the summer of 1960 complained to GM personnel about sales to discounters; that at a Losor meeting in November 1960 member dealers agreed to embark on a letter-writing campaign to enlist GM's aid; that in December and January GM personnel talked to every dealer in the area and obtained promises not to deal with discounters; that representatives of the three dealer associations met on December 15, 1960, and created a joint investigating committee; that the associations then undertook to police the agreements so obtained [****2] by GM; that the associations supplied information to GM for use in bringing wayward dealers into line, and that the Chevrolet zone manager asked them to do so; that as a result a number of dealers were induced to repurchase cars they had sold to discounters and agreed to refrain from making such sales in the future; and that by spring 1961 sales through discounters seem to have ended. However, the District Court found no conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act, holding that each alleged conspirator acted to promote its own self-interest and that in seeking to vindicate these interests the alleged conspirators entered into no "agreements" among themselves, although they may have engaged in "parallel action." Held: This is a classic conspiracy in restraint of trade: joint, collaborative action by dealers, associations, and GM to eliminate a class of competitors by terminating dealings between them and a minority of Chevrolet dealers and to deprive franchised dealers of their freedom to deal through discounters if they so choose. Pp. 138-148.

(a) The District Court's conclusion that appellees' conduct did not amount to a conspiracy within the meaning of the Act was not the kind [***3] of fact-finding shielded from review by the "clearly erroneous" test embodied in Rule 52 \(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, since the question involved the application of a legal standard to undisputed facts and since the bulk of the case was presented to the trial judge in the form of documents, depositions, and written statements. P. 141, n. 16.

(b) In determining whether there has been a conspiracy or combination under § 1 of the Sherman Act it is of no consequence that each party acted in its own lawful interest or whether the franchise system is lawful or economically desirable. P. 142.

(c) Even if it were assumed that there had been no explicit agreement among the appellees and their alleged co-conspirators, such an agreement is not a necessary part of a Sherman Act conspiracy -- certainly not where, as here, joint and collaborative action was pervasive in the initiation, execution and fulfillment of the plan. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 43. Pp. 142-143.

(d) The joint and interrelated activities of GM and the co-conspirators in obtaining the agreements not to deal with discounters and in policing such agreements cannot [***4] be described as "unilateral" or merely "parallel." Pp. 144-145.

(e) The elimination, by joint collaborative action, of businessmen from access to the market is a per se violation of the Act. Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207. Pp. 145-146.

(f) The economic motivation of those who by concerted action seek to keep others from trading in the market is irrelevant. Pp. 146-147.

(g) Inherent in the success of the combination in this case was a substantial restraint upon price competition, a goal unlawful per se when sought to be effected by combination or conspiracy. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra. P. 147.

Counsel: Daniel M. Friedman argued the cause for the United States. On the brief were Solicitor General Marshall, Assistant Attorney General Turner, Lionel Kestenbaum, Richard A. Posner and Robert C. Weinbaum.

Homer I. Mitchell argued the cause for appellee General Motors Corp. With him on the brief were Warren M. Christopher, Marcus Mattson, Aloysius F. Power, Robert A. Nitschke, Nicholas J. Rosiello, Henry C. Thumann, Donald M. Wessling and Robert W. Culver. Victor R. Hansen argued the cause [***5] for appellees Losor Chevrolet Dealers Association et al. With him on the brief were Glenn S. Roberts and Henry F. Walker.

Thomas A. Rothwell and William C. Hillman filed a brief for O. M. Scott & Sons Co. et al., as amici curiae.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Fortas

Opinion by: FORTAS

Opinion

---

[*129] [***417] [**1322] MR. JUSTICE FORTAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a civil action brought by the United States to enjoin the appellees from participating in an alleged conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.<sup>1</sup> The United States District Court for the Southern District of California concluded that the proof failed to establish the alleged violation, and entered judgment for the defendants. The case is here on direct appeal under § 2 of the Expediting Act, 32 Stat. 823, 15 U. S. C. § 29 (1964 ed.). We reverse.

[****6] I.

The appellees are the General Motors Corporation, which manufactures, among other things, the Chevrolet line of cars and trucks, and three associations of Chevrolet dealers in and around Los Angeles, California.<sup>2</sup> All of the Chevrolet dealers in the area belong to one or more of the appellee associations.

[*130] Chevrolets are ordinarily distributed by dealers operating under a franchise from General Motors. The dealers purchase the cars from the manufacturer, and then retail them [***418] to the public. The relationship between manufacturer and dealer is incorporated in a comprehensive uniform Dealer Selling Agreement. This agreement does not restrict or define those to whom [****7] the dealer may sell. Nor are there limitations as to the territory within which the dealer may sell. Compare White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253. The franchise agreement does, however, contain a clause (hereinafter referred to as the "location clause") which prohibits a dealer from moving to or establishing "a new or different location, branch sales office, branch service station, or place [**1323] of business including any used car lot or location without the prior written approval of Chevrolet."

Beginning in the late 1950's, "discount houses" engaged in retailing consumer goods in the Los Angeles area and "referral services"<sup>3</sup> began offering to sell new cars to the public at allegedly bargain prices. Their sources of supply were the franchised dealers. By 1960 a number of individual Chevrolet dealers, without authorization from General Motors, had developed working relationships with these establishments. A customer would enter one of these establishments and examine the literature and price lists for automobiles produced by several manufacturers. In some instances, floor models were available for inspection. Some of the establishments negotiated [****8] [*131] with the customer for a trade-in of his old car, and provided financing for his new-car purchase.

The relationship with the franchised dealer took various forms. One arrangement was for the discounter to refer the customer to the dealer. The car would then be offered to him by the dealer at a price previously agreed upon between the dealer and the discounter. In 1960, a typical referral agreement concerning Chevrolets provided that the price to the customer was not to exceed $ 250 over the dealer's invoiced cost. For its part in supplying the customer, the discounter received $ 50 per sale.

Another common arrangement was for the discounter [****9] itself to negotiate the sale, the dealer's role being to furnish the car and to transfer title to the customer at the direction of the discounter. One dealer furnished Chevrolets under such an arrangement, charging the discounter $ 85 over its invoiced cost, with the discounter getting the best price it could from its customer.

<sup>1</sup> The statute reads in relevant part: HN1 [↑] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. . ." 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 1 (1964 ed.).

<sup>2</sup> Named as co-conspirators but not as defendants are "the officers, directors, and members of [the three associations], certain officers and employees of such members, certain officers and employees of General Motors, other Chevrolet dealers in the Southern California area, and others to the plaintiff unknown . . .".

<sup>3</sup> Since the evidence does not consistently distinguish between "discount houses" and "referral services," based either on the variety of goods offered to the public or on the nature of the arrangement between the establishment and the franchised dealer which supplied it with cars, we shall hereinafter use the term "discounter" to embrace all such establishments.

These were the principal forms of trading involved in this case, although within each there were variations,<sup>4</sup> [****10] and there were schemes which fit neither pattern.<sup>5</sup> [*132] By 1960 these methods for retailing new cars [***419] had reached considerable dimensions. Of the 100,000 new Chevrolets sold in the Los Angeles area in that year, some 2,000 represented discount house or referral sales. One Chevrolet dealer attributed as much as 25% of its annual sales to participation in these arrangements, while another accounted for between 400 and 525 referral sales in a single year.

Approximately a dozen of the 85 Chevrolet dealers in the Los Angeles area were furnishing cars to discounters in [*1324] 1960. As the volume of these [****11] sales grew, the nonparticipating Chevrolet dealers located near one or more of the discount outlets<sup>6</sup> [****12] began to feel the pinch. Dealers lost sales because potential customers received, or thought they would receive,<sup>7</sup> a more attractive deal from a discounter [*133] who obtained its Chevrolets from a distant dealer. The discounters vigorously advertised Chevrolets for sale, with alluring statements as to price savings. The discounters also advertised that all Chevrolet dealers were obligated to honor the new-car warranty and to provide the free services contemplated therein; and General Motors does indeed require Chevrolet dealers to service Chevrolet cars, wherever purchased, pursuant to the new-car warranty and service agreement. Accordingly, nonparticipating dealers were increasingly called upon to service, without compensation, Chevrolets purchased through discounters. Perhaps what grated most was the demand that they "precondition" cars so purchased -- make the hopefully minor adjustments and do the body and paint work necessary to render a factory-fresh car both customer- and road-worthy.

[****13] On June 28, 1960, at a regular meeting of the appellee Losor Chevrolet Dealers Association, member dealers discussed the problem and resolved to bring it to the attention of the Chevrolet Division's Los Angeles zone manager, Robert O'Connor. Shortly thereafter, a delegation from the association called [***420] upon O'Connor, presented evidence that some dealers were doing business with the discounters, and asked for his assistance. O'Connor promised he would speak to the offending dealers. When no help was forthcoming, Owen Keown, a director of Losor, took matters into his own hands. First, he spoke to Warren Biggs and Wilbur Newman, Chevrolet dealers who were then doing a substantial business with discounters. According to Keown's testimony, Newman

<sup>4</sup> One dealer, for example, paid its referral service one-third of the gross profit on each sale, up to $ 75, there being no fixed price at which the sale was to take place. The same dealer earlier had paid a flat fee of $ 17.50 for every referral, whether or not the sale was consummated.

<sup>5</sup> At least one discount house actually purchased its cars from cooperative dealers, then resold them to its customers. In this situation, which in the trade is referred to as "bootlegging," the customer does not receive a new-car warranty. General Motors, while disapproving of the practice, does not assert that it violates the "location clause." In those arrangements against which General Motors and the associations did direct their efforts, title to the new car passed directly from dealer to retail customer, who thus obtained a new-car warranty and service agreement.

There must also be distinguished the ubiquitous practice of using "bird dogs" -- informal sources who steer occasional customers toward a particular dealer, in return for relatively small fees -- often a bottle of liquor. This practice is not only deemed by General Motors not to violate the "location clause," but has the corporation's endorsement as a desirable sales device.

<sup>6</sup> As the District Court found, 70% of the local Chevrolet dealers were located within five miles of one or more of the 23 discount house or referral outlets.

<sup>7</sup> There is evidence in the record that discount sales undercut the prices at which franchised dealers were able to, or chose to, compete. Two purchasers of Chevrolets, one on referral and the other in a discount house "sale," testified that they had "shopped" other dealers but found the discount and referral prices lower. Dealers and their salesmen complained to General Motors about sales lost through inability to meet the discounters' price. Moreover, the discounters advertised and actually provided auto loans at interest rates substantially lower than those offered by G. M. A. C., General Motors' financing subsidiary.

There is also evidence that it was not just price itself which induced customers to purchase Chevrolets through the discounters. One customer testified that he preferred the discount house because he thereby avoided the haggling over price which seems an inevitable facet of purchasing a car in the orthodox way. Others apparently assumed, without bothering to confirm by comparison shopping, that "discount" stores would offer lower prices. This assumption was fed by discount house advertising which promised "the lowest price anywhere" and "savings of hundreds of dollars."

told him that he would continue the practice "until . . . told not to by" Chevrolet, and that "when the Chevrolet Motor Division told him not to do it, he [*134] knew that they wouldn't let some other dealer carry on with it."<sup>8</sup>

[****14] Keown then reported the foregoing events at the association's annual meeting in Honolulu on November 10, 1960. The member dealers present agreed immediately [**1325] to flood General Motors and the Chevrolet Division with letters and telegrams asking for help. Salesmen, too, were to write.<sup>9</sup>

Hundreds of letters and wires descended upon Detroit -- with telling effect. Within a week Chevrolet's O'Connor was directed to furnish his superiors in Detroit with "a detailed report of the discount house operations . . . as well as what action we in the Zone are taking to curb such sales."<sup>10</sup>

[****15] By mid-December General Motors had formulated its response. On December 15, James M. Roche, then an executive vice president of General Motors, wrote to some of the complaining dealers. He noted that the [*135] practices to which they were objecting "in some instances represent the establishment of a second and unauthorized sales outlet or location contrary to the provisions of the General Motors Dealers Selling Agreements." (Emphasis supplied.) Recipients of the letter were advised that General Motors personnel proposed to discuss that matter with each of the dealers.<sup>11</sup> O'Connor in Los Angeles was apprised of the letter's content and instructed to carry on the personal discussions referred to therein. With respect to the offending dealers, he was to work with Roy Cash, regional manager for the Chevrolet Division. Cash had been briefed on the subject in Detroit on December 14.

[****16] General [***421] Motors personnel proceeded to telephone all area dealers, both to identify those associated with the discounters and to advise nonparticipants that General Motors had entered the lists. The principal offenders were treated to unprecedeted individual confrontations with Cash, the regional manager. These brief meetings were wholly successful in obtaining from each dealer his agreement to abandon the practices in question. Some capitulated during the course of the four- or five-minute meeting, or immediately thereafter.<sup>12</sup> [****17] One dealer, who met not with Cash but with the city sales manager for [*136] Chevrolet, put off

<sup>8</sup> Dealer Biggs put the same sentiments into a letter to both Keown and Chevrolet's zone manager O'Connor, written on November 5, 1960. The day before, in O'Connor's presence, Keown had challenged Biggs to justify his dealings with the discounters. Biggs wrote: "We would be most reluctant to discard an account as good as this one without rather concrete assurance that it would not immediately be picked up by another Chevrolet dealer." Two weeks later, O'Connor forwarded Biggs' letter to General Motors officials in Detroit.

<sup>9</sup> In Keown's words, "We were seeking the assistance of the higher echelon officials of Chevrolet and General Motors in bringing about an end to the discount house sale of Chevrolets."

<sup>10</sup> O'Connor's report, dated November 22, recounted that "zone management" had talked with the offending dealers "in an attempt to have them desist," and that "our Dealer Associations have formed a committee to call on the supplying dealers and have asked them and have attempted to persuade them to discontinue this practice." Supported by a copy of dealer Biggs' letter, see n. 8, supra, O'Connor predicted that "many dealers will cease this type of business if they had any assurance that the account would not be picked up by some other dealer, immediately upon relinquishment."

<sup>11</sup> Roche wrote to those dealers who had complained directly to John Gordon, then president of General Motors. On December 29, 1960, a virtually identical letter went out to all General Motors dealers throughout the Nation, under the signature of the general sales managers for the respective divisions.

<sup>12</sup> One dealer testified that he abruptly terminated arrangements long maintained with two discount houses, despite the fact that one of these connections owed him $ 20,000 and the other $ 28,000. In the preceding four weeks the latter had reduced its indebtedness by $ 52,000 and could reasonably have been expected to erase it completely within a few weeks. The dealer anticipated that upon cancellation of the accounts these debts would become uncollectible. His fears were justified. The accounts were terminated. The debts remained unpaid.

decision for a week "to make sure that the other dealers, or most of them, had stopped their business dealings with discount houses."<sup>13</sup>

There [**1326] is evidence that unanimity was not obtained without reference to the ultimate power of General Motors. The testimony of dealer Wilbur Newman was [****18] that regional manager Cash related a story, the relevance of which was not lost upon him, that in handling children, "I can tell them to stop something. If they don't do it . . . I can knock their teeth down their throats."

By mid-January General Motors had elicited from each dealer a promise not to do business with the discounters. But such agreements would require policing -- a fact which had been anticipated. General Motors earlier had initiated contacts with firms capable of performing such a function. This plan, unilaterally to police the agreements, was displaced, however, in favor of a joint effort between General Motors, the three appellee associations, and a number of individual dealers.

On December 15, 1960, representatives of the three appellee associations had met and appointed a joint committee to study the situation and to keep in touch with [*137] Chevrolet's O'Connor.<sup>14</sup> Early in 1961, the three associations agreed [***422] jointly to finance the "shopping" of the discounters to assure that no Chevrolet dealer continued to supply them with cars. Each of the associations contributed $ 5,000, and a professional investigator was hired. He was instructed [****19] to try to purchase new Chevrolets from the proscribed outlets, to tape-record the transactions, if any, and to gather all the necessary documentary evidence -- which the associations would then lay "at the doorstep of Chevrolet." These joint associational activities were both preceded and supplemented by similar "shopping" activities by individual dealers and by appellee Losor Chevrolet Dealers Association.

[****20] General Motors collaborated with these policing activities. There is evidence that zone manager O'Connor and a subordinate, Jere Faust, actively solicited the help of individual dealers in uncovering violations. Armed with information of such violations obtained from the dealers or their associations, O'Connor or members of his staff would ask the offending dealer to come in and talk. The dealer then was confronted with the car purchased by the "shopper," the documents of sale, and in most cases a tape recording of the transaction. In every instance, the embarrassed dealer repurchased the car, sometimes at a substantial loss, and promised to stop such sales. At the direction of O'Connor or a subordinate, the checks with which the cars were repurchased were [*138] made payable to an attorney acting jointly for the three defendant associations.

O'Connor testified that on no occasion did he "force" a dealer to repurchase; he merely made the opportunity available. But one dealer testified that when an assistant zone manager for the Chevrolet [**1327] Division asked him to come in and talk about discount sales, "he specified a sum of money which I was to bring with me [****21] when I came down and saw him. . . . I kept the appointment and brought a cashier's check. I knew when I came down to Los Angeles that I was going to repurchase an automobile . . ." Another dealer testified that upon being confronted with evidence that one of his cars had been purchased through a referral service, he not only bought it

---

<sup>13</sup> According to Francis Bruder, a dealer who had been doing business with the discounters since 1957, "Cash told me that he felt certain that the other dealers would discontinue dealing with discount houses and referral services as well. I left this meeting with the impression that every dealer who had been doing business with a discount house or referral service would soon quit."

This was precisely the impression General Motors had intended to implant. As was explained in an inter-office memorandum to the general sales manager of General Motors' Chevrolet Division, "[All dealers were talked to] in order that every dealer with whom the subject was discussed would know that a similar discussion was being held with all other dealers so that, if certain dealers should elect to discontinue their cooperation with a discount house, we might be able to discourage some other dealer who might be solicited from starting the practice."

<sup>14</sup> The District Court characterized this December 15 meeting as the first between representatives of the three associations, pertaining to the problem of discount house and referral sales. However, as we have previously noted, n. 10, supra, O'Connor reported to General Motors three weeks earlier, on November 22, that the three associations had formed a committee which already had called upon nonconforming dealers. The record does not enable us to resolve this factual conflict, nor is its resolution important. On either version, the appellee associations entered into an explicit agreement to act together to eliminate the new mode of intrabrand competition.

384 U.S. 127, *138; 86 S. Ct. 1321, **1327; 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, ***422; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2960, ****21

back (without questioning the correctness of the price exacted) but also fired the employee responsible for the transaction -- although the employee had been commended by the Chevrolet Division a few weeks earlier as the "number one fleet salesman" in the 11-state Pacific region.

By the spring of 1961, the campaign to eliminate the discounters from commerce in new Chevrolet cars was a success. Sales through the discount outlets seem to have come to a halt. Not until a federal grand jury commenced an inquiry into the matters which we have sketched does it appear that any Chevrolet dealer resumed its business association with the discounters.

II.

On these basic facts, the Government first proceeded criminally. A federal grand jury in the Southern District of California returned an indictment. After trial, the defendants were found not guilty. [****22] The present civil action, filed shortly after return of the indictment, was then brought to trial.

[*139] Both the Government and the appellees urge the importance, for purposes of decision, of the "location clause" in the Dealer Selling Agreement which prohibits a franchised dealer from moving to or establishing [***423] "a new or different location, branch sales office, branch service station, or place of business . . . without the prior written approval of Chevrolet." The appellees contend that this contractual provision is lawful, and that it justifies their actions. They argue that General Motors acted lawfully to prevent its dealers from violating the "location clause," that the described arrangements with discounters constitute the establishment of additional sales outlets in violation of the clause, and that the individual dealers -- and their associations -- have an interest in uniform compliance with the franchise agreement, which interest they lawfully sought to vindicate.

The Government invites us to join in the assumption, only for purposes of this case, that the "location clause" encompasses sales by dealers through the medium of discounters. But it urges [****23] us to hold that, so construed, the provision is unlawful as an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act.<sup>15</sup>

LEdHN[1] [1]We need not reach these questions concerning the meaning, effect, or validity of the "location clause" or of any other provision in the Dealer Selling Agreement, and we do not. We do [****24] not decide whether the "location [*140] clause" may be construed to prohibit a dealer, party to it, from selling through discounters, or whether General Motors could by unilateral action enforce the clause, so construed. We have here a classic conspiracy in restraint of trade: joint, collaborative action by dealers, the appellee associations, and General Motors to eliminate a class of competitors by terminating [**1328] business dealings between them and a minority of Chevrolet dealers and to deprive franchised dealers of their freedom to deal through discounters if they so choose. Against this fact of unlawful combination, the "location clause" is of no avail. Whatever General Motors might or might not lawfully have done to enforce individual Dealer Selling Agreements by action within the borders of those agreements and the relationship which each defines, is beside the point. And, because the action taken constitutes a combination or conspiracy, it is not necessary to consider what might be the legitimate interest of a dealer in securing compliance by others with the "location clause," or the lawfulness of action a dealer might individually take to vindicate this interest.

[****25] The District Court decided otherwise. It concluded that the described events did not add up to a combination or conspiracy violative of the antitrust laws. But its conclusion cannot be squared with its own specific findings of fact. These findings include the essentials of a conspiracy within S.1 of the Sherman Act: That in the summer of 1960 the Losor Chevrolet Dealers Association, "through some of its dealer-members," complained to General Motors personnel about sales through discounters (Finding 34); that at a Losor meeting in November 1960 the dealers there present agreed to embark on a letter-writing campaign directed at enlisting [***424] the aid of <sup>15</sup> The Government's complaint contains no reference to the "location clause," and the Government concedes that its case was tried on a conspiracy theory, the defendants injecting the contractual issue by way of defense. Trial counsel for the Government did advert to the clause in the District Court, but it does not appear that he challenged its validity, as construed, in the same sense that the Government does here. See Trial Transcript, pp. 9, 17-18. In light of our disposition of the case, we have no occasion to consider whether the Government's argument directed to the clause, as construed, is properly before us.

384 U.S. 127, *140; 86 S. Ct. 1321, **1328; 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, ***424; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2960, ****25

General Motors (Finding 35); that in December and January General Motors personnel discussed the matter with every Chevrolet dealer in the Los Angeles area and elicited from [*141] each a promise not to do business with the discounters (Finding 39); that representatives of the three associations of Chevrolet dealers met on December 15, 1960, and created a joint investigating committee (Finding 40); that the three associations then undertook jointly to police the agreements obtained from each of the dealers by General [****26] Motors; that the associations supplied information to General Motors for use by it in bringing wayward dealers into line, and that Chevrolet's O'Connor asked the associations to do so (Findings 41 and 42); that as a result of this collaborative effort, a number of Chevrolet dealers were induced to repurchase cars they had sold through discounters and to promise to abjure such sales in future (Finding 42).

LEdHN[2][↑] [2]LEdHN[3A][↑] [3A]These findings by the trial judge compel the conclusion that a conspiracy to restrain trade was proved.<sup>16</sup> [*1329] The [*142] error of the trial court lies in its failure to apply the correct and established standard for ascertaining the existence of a combination or conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act. See United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 44-45. The trial court attempted to justify its conclusion on the following reasoning: That each defendant and alleged co-conspirator acted to promote its own self-interest; that General Motors, as well as the defendant associations and [****27] their members, has a lawful interest in securing compliance with the "location clause" and in thus protecting the franchise system of distributing automobiles -- business arrangements which the court deemed lawful and proper; and that in seeking to vindicate these interests the defendants and their alleged co-conspirators entered into no "agreements" among themselves, although they may have engaged in "parallel action."

LEdHN[3B][↑] [3B]

[****28] LEdHN[4][↑] [4] LEdHN[5][↑] [5]These factors do not justify [***425] the result reached. It is of no consequence, for purposes of determining whether there has been a combination or conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act, that each party acted in its own lawful interest. Nor is it of consequence for this purpose whether the "location clause" and franchise system are lawful or economically desirable. And although we regard as clearly erroneous and irreconcilable with its other findings the trial court's conclusory "finding" that there had been no "agreement" among the defendants and their alleged co-conspirators, it has long been settled that HN2[↑] explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a Sherman [*143] Act conspiracy -- certainly not where, as here, joint and collaborative action was pervasive in the initiation, execution, and fulfillment of the plan. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra, at 43; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 722-723; [****29] Federal Trade Comm'n v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 455.

<sup>16</sup> We note that, as in United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 44-45, the ultimate conclusion by the trial judge, that the defendants' conduct did not constitute a combination or conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act, is not to be shielded by the "clearly erroneous" test embodied in Rule 52 (a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. That Rule in part provides: "Findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the trial court to judge of the credibility of the witnesses." As in Parke Davis, supra, the question here is not one of "fact," but consists rather of the legal standard required to be applied to the undisputed facts of the case. See United States v. Singer Mfg. Co., 374 U.S. 174, 194, n. 9; United States v. Mississippi Valley Co., 364 U.S. 520, 526, and cases there cited.

Moreover, the trial court's customary opportunity to evaluate the demeanor and thus the credibility of the witnesses, which is the rationale behind Rule 52 (a) (see United States v. Oregon State Med. Soc., 343 U.S. 326, 331-332), plays only a restricted role here. This was essentially a "paper case." It did not unfold by the testimony of "live" witnesses. Of the 38 witnesses who gave testimony, only three appeared in person. The testimony of the other 35 witnesses was submitted either by affidavit, by deposition, or in the form of an agreed-upon narrative of testimony given in the earlier criminal proceeding before another judge. A vast number of documents were also introduced, and bear on the question for decision.

In any event, we resort to the record not to contradict the trial court's findings of fact, as distinguished from its conclusory "findings," but to supplement the court's factual findings and to assist us in determining whether they support the court's ultimate legal conclusion that there was no conspiracy.

384 U.S. 127, *143; 86 S. Ct. 1321, **1329; 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, ***425; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2960, ****29

Neither individual dealers nor the associations acted independently or separately. The dealers collaborated, through the associations and otherwise, among themselves and with General Motors, both to enlist the aid of General Motors and to enforce dealers' promises to forsake the discounters. The associations explicitly entered into a joint venture to assist General Motors in policing the dealers' promises, and their joint proffer of aid was accepted and utilized by General Motors.

Nor did General Motors confine its activities to the contractual boundaries of its relationships with individual dealers. As the trial court found (Finding 39), General Motors at no time announced that it would terminate the franchise of any dealer which furnished cars to the discounters.<sup>17</sup> The evidence indicates that it had no intention of acting in this unilateral fashion.<sup>18</sup> On the contrary, overriding [**1330] corporate policy with respect to [*144] proper dealer relations<sup>19</sup> dissuaded General Motors from engaging in this sort of wholly unilateral conduct, the validity of which under the antitrust [***30] laws was [***426] assumed, without being decided, in Parke Davis, supra.

[***31] As Parke Davis had done, General Motors sought to elicit from all the dealers agreements, substantially interrelated and interdependent, that none of them would do business with the discounters. These agreements were hammered out in meetings between nonconforming dealers and officials of General Motors' Chevrolet Division, and in telephone conversations with other dealers. It was acknowledged from the beginning that substantial unanimity would be essential if the agreements were to be forthcoming. And once the agreements were secured, General Motors both solicited and employed the assistance of its alleged co-conspirators in helping to police them. What resulted was a fabric interwoven by many strands of joint action to eliminate the discounters from participation in the market, to inhibit the free choice of franchised dealers to select their own methods of trade and to provide multilateral surveillance and enforcement. This process for achieving and enforcing the desired objective [*145] can by no stretch of the imagination be described as "unilateral" or merely "parallel." See Parke Davis, supra, at 46; Federal Trade Comm'n v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 453; [***32] United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 722-723; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 226; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265, 275; Turner, The Definition of Agreement Under the Sherman Act: Conscious Parallelism and Refusals to Deal, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 655 (1962).<sup>20</sup>

<sup>17</sup> The December letters to all dealers said only that "in effect, in some instances" the arrangements in question might violate the unauthorized location clause of the Dealer Selling Agreement. No dealer was told, either by letter or in person, that its conduct violated the franchise agreement, and no dealer was warned that continuance of discount house or referral sales would result in termination of its franchise. Zone manager O'Connor did not regard his instructions from Detroit as authorizing him to go that far, and he was of the view that "the general letter [to all dealers] didn't suggest any such thing."

<sup>18</sup> We refer to this without considering whether General Motors could lawfully have taken such action.

<sup>19</sup> James Roche testified, "It is not [General Motors'] practice to threaten dealers with termination of their franchise." Good dealers and dealer locations, he said, are hard to come by. In many dealerships, General Motors itself has invested substantial funds. Therefore, said Roche, "we would not want our people to go in and wave the franchise agreement, selling agreement, and threaten the dealer with termination in the event he didn't agree, after following -- after reading a letter he was violating our agreement and should change his practice. Instead we expected that this would be handled on a sound, calm, sensible business-like approach."

HN3 [↑] There are also statutory inhibitions on the right of an automobile manufacturer to terminate dealer franchises. See Act of Aug. 8, 1956, c. 1038, § 2, 70 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 1222 (1964 ed.); Kessler & Stern, Competition, Contract, and Vertical Integration, 69 Yale L. J. 1, 103-114 (1959).

<sup>20</sup> Compare Klein v. American Luggage Works, Inc., 323 F.2d 787 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1963), and Graham v. Triangle Publications, Inc., 233 F. Supp. 825 (D. C. E. D. Pa. 1964), aff'd per curiam, 344 F.2d 775 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1965), discussed in Fulda, Individual Refusals to Deal: When Does Single-Firm Conduct Become Vertical Restraint? 30 Law & Contemp. Prob. 590, 592-597 (1965).

384 U.S. 127, *145; 86 S. Ct. 1321, **1330; 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, ***426; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2960, ****32

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6] HN4 There [****33] can be no doubt that the effect of the combination or conspiracy here was to restrain trade and commerce within the meaning of the Sherman Act. Elimination, by joint collaborative action, of discounters from access to the market is a per se violation of the Act.

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7] In Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, the Court was confronted with the question whether "a group of powerful businessmen may act in concert to deprive a single merchant, like Klor, of the goods he needs to compete effectively." 359 U.S., at 210. The allegation was that manufacturers and distributors of electrical appliances had conspired among themselves and with a major retailer, Broadway-Hale, "either not to sell to Klor's [Broadway-Hale's next-door neighbor and competitor] or to sell to it only at discriminatory prices" [**1331] and highly unfavorable terms." 359 U.S., at 209. The Court concluded that the alleged group boycott of even a single trader violated the statute<sup>21</sup> without regard to the [*146] reasonableness [***427] of the conduct in the circumstances. [****34] Group boycotts of a trader, said the Court, are among those "classes of restraints which from their 'nature or character' were unduly restrictive . . ." 359 U.S., at 211. This was not new doctrine, for it had long been recognized that "there are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use," and that group boycotts are of this character. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5. See also Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 312 U.S. 457, and Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 613-614, neither of which involved price-fixing.

[****35] [LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8] [LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9] The principle of these cases is that HN5 where businessmen concert their actions in order to deprive others of access to merchandise which the latter wish to sell to the public, we need not inquire into the economic motivation underlying their conduct. See Barber, Refusals To Deal Under the Federal Antitrust Laws, 103 U. Pa. L. Rev. 847, 872-885 (1955). Exclusion of traders from the market by means of combination or conspiracy is so inconsistent with the free-market principles embodied in the Sherman Act that it is not to be saved by reference to the need for preserving the collaborators' profit margins or their system for distributing automobiles, any more than by reference to the allegedly tortious conduct against which a combination or conspiracy may be directed -- as [*147] in Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra, at 468.

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10] [****36] We note, moreover, that inherent in the success of the combination in this case was a substantial restraint upon price competition -- a goal unlawful per se when sought to be effected by combination or conspiracy. E. g., United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 47; United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223. And the per se rule applies even when the effect upon prices is indirect. Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 16-22; Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., supra.

There is in the record ample evidence that one of the purposes behind the concerted effort to eliminate sales of new Chevrolet cars by discounters was to protect franchised dealers from real or apparent price competition. The discounters advertised price savings. See n. 7, supra. Some purchasers found and others believed that discount prices were lower than those available through the franchised dealers. Ibid. Certainly, complaints about price competition were prominent in the letters and telegrams with which the individual dealers and salesmen bombarded General Motors in [**1332] November 1960.<sup>22</sup> [****37] (Finding 38.) And although the District Court found to the contrary, there is evidence in the record that General Motors itself was not unconcerned about the effect [***428] of discount sales upon general price levels.<sup>23</sup>

<sup>21</sup> The complaint in Klor's charged a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, as well as of § 1. In the present case, the Government did not charge the appellees under § 2, which provides that "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 2 \(1964 ed.\).

<sup>22</sup> Evidence on this subject was admitted solely for the purpose of showing the dealers' state of mind, rather than to prove the existence of actual price-cutting by the discounters. But the collaborators' state of mind is of significance here.

[****38]

[*148] [LEdHN\[11\]](#)↑ [11] [LEdHN\[12\]](#)↑ [12] The protection of price competition from conspiratorial restraint is an object of special solicitude under the antitrust laws. We cannot respect that solicitude by closing our eyes to the effect upon price competition of the removal from the market, by combination or conspiracy, of a class of traders. Nor do we propose to construe the Sherman Act to prohibit conspiracies to fix prices at which competitors may sell, but to allow conspiracies or combinations to put competitors out of business entirely.

Accordingly, we reverse and remand to the United States District Court for the Southern District of California in order that it may fashion appropriate equitable relief. See *United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra, at 47-48.*

It is so ordered.

Concur by: HARLAN

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, concurring in the result.

Although I consider that *United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29,* decided in 1960, represents basically unsound antitrust doctrine, see my dissenting [****39] opinion, *362 U.S., at 49,* I see no escape from the conclusion that it controls this case. Parke Davis held that a manufacturer cannot maintain resale prices by refusing to sell to those who do not follow his suggested prices if the refusal is attended by concerted action with his customers, even though he may unilaterally so conduct himself. See *United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300,* Although Parke Davis related to alleged price-fixing, I have been unable to discern any tenable reason for differentiating it from a case involving, as here, alleged boycotting. [*149] The conclusion that Parke Davis governs the present case is therefore unavoidable, given the undisputed evidence that General Motors acted in concert with its dealers in enforcing the location clause. In my opinion, however, General Motors is not precluded from enforcing the location clause by unilateral action, and I find nothing in the Court's opinion to the contrary.

On this basis I concur in the judgment of the Court.

References

---

Annotation References:

Extent of trader's [****40] right to exercise his own discretion as to persons with whom he will or will not deal. 68 L ed 448.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>23</sup> In an inter-office memorandum, circulated among General Motors officials immediately prior to formulation of corporate policy vis-a-vis the discounters, it was stated that "It would appear that one of the real hazards of condoning this type of operation is that discounted prices are freely quoted to a large portion of the public." Moreover, we note that some discounters advertised that they would finance new-car purchases at an interest rate of 5 1/2%, a rate substantially lower than that available at franchised Chevrolet dealers through G. M. A. C., a subsidiary of General Motors Corporation. See n. 7, supra. Finally, it is conceded that General Motors is intensely concerned that each of its dealers has an adequate "profit opportunity" (see Finding 17), a concern which necessarily involves consideration of the price realized by dealers.

United States v. Von's Grocery Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

March 22, 1966, Argued ; May 31, 1966, Decided

No. 303

Reporter

384 U.S. 270 *; 86 S. Ct. 1478 **; 16 L. Ed. 2d 555 ***; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2823 ****; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,780

UNITED STATES v. VON'S GROCERY CO. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

Disposition: 233 F.Supp. 976, reversed.

Core Terms

---

merger, chains, Markets, concentration, Food, competitors, acquisitions, grocery, firms, Shopping, retail, largest, sales, single-store, top, market share, horizontal, Giant, lessen competition, grocery store, Clayton Act, combined, market-extension, monopoly, chain store, incipency, arresting, smaller, legislative history, large number

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, as amended in 1950 by the Celler-Kefauver Anti-Merger Act, requires not merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future; this is what is meant when it is said that the amended § 7 was intended to arrest anticompetitive tendencies in their "incipiency."

HÌ I ÁMÈJÄG CÉÄG CLÀ I ÁMÈDÄF I Ì FÄFI I Ì LÄF I ÅSEÖaÅGÄÁ I Ì ÅÅI I Ì LÄJ I Ì ÁMÈÅSÖYQÄ GÅ ÇÅÅÅÅ

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The United States brought an action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California charging that the acquisition by a corporation of its direct competitor, both large retail grocery companies in Los Angeles, California, violated 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended in 1950, which proscribes the acquisition by one corporation of the assets of another corporation where the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly. After the District Court refused to grant the government's motion for a temporary restraining order, one of the corporations took over all of the other's capital stock and assets, including 36 grocery stores in the Los Angeles area. After hearing evidence, the District Court entered judgment for the defendants, concluding as a matter of law that there was not a reasonable probability that the merger would tend substantially to lessen competition or create a monopoly in violation of 7. (233 F Supp 976.)

On the government's direct appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed. In an opinion by Black, J., expressing the view of six members of the Court, it was held that the merger violated 7, in view of the merging companies' share of the market, the substantial decrease of the number of single-store grocery firms in the market, both before and after the merger, and the concentration of the grocery business into the hands of fewer and fewer owners. The District Court was directed to order divestiture without delay.

White, J., joined the Court's opinion in a separate concurring opinion, pointing out that the merger not only disposed of a substantial competitor but increased the concentration in the leading firms.

Stewart, J., joined by Harlan, J., dissented on the ground that it was not shown that the effect of the merger may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly, as required by 7.

Fortas, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > merger of grocery chain stores --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

The prohibition in 7 of the amended Clayton Act (15 USC 18) of the acquisition by one corporation of the assets of another corporation where the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly is violated by a merger of two large retail grocery companies in Los Angeles, where the record showed that in the year of the merger (1960) the sales of the combined companies were 7.5 percent of the total $ 2,500,000,000 of retail groceries sold in the Los Angeles market each year; the merger created the second largest grocery chain in Los Angeles, with sales of almost $ 172,488,000 annually; the number of single-store grocery firms decreased from 5,365 in 1950 to 3,818 in 1961, and by 1963 had dropped still further to 3,590, while from 1953 to 1962 the number of chains with two or more grocery stores increased from 96 to 150; the small companies were continually being absorbed by the larger firms through mergers, 9 of the top 20 chains acquiring 126 stores from their smaller competitors in the period from 1949 to 1958.

HÌ I ÁMÈJÈG ÊFG ËLÀ I ÁMÈDÖÄFÌ IÌ ËFIFI IÌ LAFÌ ÁSEÖAËGÀÁÍ IÌ LAFJÌ IÌ ÁMÈÈSÖYQÀGÀ GÄHFFF

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §6 > purpose of antitrust acts -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

The purpose of the Sherman Antitrust Act and of the Clayton Act is to prevent economic concentration in the American economy by keeping a large number of small competitors in business.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > prohibition of mergers -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The 1960 Amendment (64 Stat 1125) of 7 of the Clayton Act ( 15 USC 18) broadens its scope so as to prohibit not only mergers between competitors the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly" but to prohibit all mergers having that effect; these terms look not merely to the actual present effect of a merger but instead to its effect upon future competition.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > mergers -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Where concentration is gaining momentum in a market, the Supreme Court of the United States must be alert to carry out Congress' intent to protect competition against ever increasing concentration through mergers.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > mergers -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

If ever a merger of two already powerful companies in a way which makes them even more powerful than they were before would not violate 7 of the Clayton Act ( 15 USC 18), it does when it takes place in a market characterized by a long and continuous trend toward fewer and fewer owner- competitors.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > merger -- impact on competition -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Determination of the question whether the effect of a merger "may be substantially to lessen competition" in the relevant market, so as to bring the merger within the prohibition of 7 of the Clayton Act ( 15 USC 18), requires not merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future.

HÌ ÁMÈJÀG ÇÉG CLÀ Í ÁUÈDÖÄFI Í Í ÄEFI Í LAFÍ ÅSEÖAÈGÀÁ Í ÄEJÍ ÁMÈJÀSÖYQÀG ÇÉHFFF

APPEAL §1701 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §78 > reversal of dismissal of complaint -- divestiture order -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

In a civil action charging a violation of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) by one grocery company merging with another, wherein the defendants had knowledge of the antitrust charge prior to the effectuation of the merger, but the Federal District Court dismissed the complaint after a trial, the Supreme Court of the United States, determining that the merger violates 7, will not only reverse the District Court's judgment, but also direct it to order divestiture without delay.

Syllabus

---

The United States charged that the acquisition in 1960 by Von's Grocery Company of Shopping Bag Food Stores, a competitor in the retail grocery market in the Los Angeles area, violated § 7 of the Clayton Act. After a hearing the District Court concluded that there was "not a reasonable probability" that the merger would tend "substantially to lessen competition" or "create a monopoly" in violation of § 7 and entered judgment for the appellees. Held: The merger of two of the largest and most successful retail grocery companies in a market area characterized by a steady decline, before and after the merger, in the number of small grocery companies, combined with significant absorption of small firms by larger ones, is a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. Pp. 274-279.

- (a) By the enactment of the Celler-Kefauver amendment to § 7 in 1950 Congress sought to preserve competition among small businesses by halting a trend toward concentration [****2] in its incipiency and thus the courts must be alert to protect competition against increasing concentration through mergers especially where concentration is gaining momentum in the market. Pp. 276-277.
- (b) This case presents the precise situation which Congress intended to proscribe, where two powerful companies merge to become more powerful in a market exhibiting a marked trend toward concentration. Pp. 277-278.
- (c) Section 7 requires not only an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger on competition but a prediction of the merger's effect on competitive conditions in the future, to prevent the destruction of competition. United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362. P. 278.
- (d) Since the appellees were on notice of the antitrust charge, the judgment is reversed and the District Court is directed to order divestiture without delay. P. 279.

Counsel: Richard A. Posner argued the cause for the United States. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Marshall, Assistant Attorney General Turner, Robert B. Hummel, James J. Coyle and John F. Hughes.

William W. Alsup argued the cause for appellees. With him on the brief were Warren M. [****3] Christopher and William W. Vaughn.

Henry J. Bison, Jr., argued the cause and filed a brief for the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States, as amicus curiae, urging affirmance.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White; Fortas took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Opinion by: BLACK

Opinion

---

[*271] [***557] [**1479] MR. JUSTICE BLACK delivered the opinion of the Court.

HÌ I ÁMÈJEG ĔFÄG FLÀ I ÁMÈDÄFI I I ÄEIFI JLÄFI ÅSEÖAÄGÅÄI I I ÄEÅI I I LÄJI I ÁMÈÄSÖYQÄ GÄHÅÅH

On March 25, 1960, the United States brought this action charging that the acquisition by Von's Grocery Company of its direct competitor Shopping Bag Food Stores, both large retail grocery companies in Los Angeles, California, violated § 7 of the Clayton Act which, as amended in 1950 by the Celler-Kefauver Anti-Merger Act, provides in relevant part:

HN1[] "That no corporation engaged in commerce . . . shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."<sup>1</sup>

On March 28, 1960, three days later, the District Court refused to [****4] grant the Government's motion for a temporary restraining order and immediately Von's took over all of Shopping Bag's capital stock and assets including 36 grocery stores in the Los Angeles area. After [*272] hearing evidence on both sides, the District Court made findings of fact and concluded as a matter of law that there was "not a reasonable probability" that the merger would tend "substantially to lessen competition" or "create a monopoly" in violation of § 7. For this reason the District Court entered judgment for the defendants. 233 F.Supp. 976, 985. The Government appealed directly to this Court as authorized by § 2 of the Expediting Act.<sup>2</sup> The sole question here is whether the District Court properly concluded on the facts before it that the Government had failed to prove a violation of § 7.

[****5] LEdHN1[] [1]The record shows the following facts relevant to our decision. The market involved here is the retail grocery market in the Los Angeles area. In 1958 Von's retail sales ranked third in the area and Shopping Bag's ranked sixth. In 1960 their sales together were 7.5% of the total two and one-half billion dollars of retail groceries sold in the Los Angeles market each year. For many years before the merger both [***558] companies had enjoyed great success as rapidly growing companies. From 1948 to 1958 the number of Von's stores in the Los Angeles area practically doubled from 14 to 27, while at the same time the number of Shopping Bag's stores jumped from 15 to 34. During that same decade, Von's sales increased fourfold and its share of the market almost doubled while Shopping Bag's sales multiplied seven times and its share of the market tripled. The merger of these two highly successful, expanding and aggressive competitors created the second largest grocery chain in Los Angeles with sales of almost $ 172,488,000 annually. In addition the findings of the District Court show that [*273] [****6] the number of owners operating single stores in the Los Angeles retail grocery market decreased from 5,365 in 1950 to 3,818 in 1961. By 1963, three years after the merger, the number of single-store owners had dropped still further to 3,590.<sup>3</sup> During roughly the same period, [**1480] from 1953 to 1962, the number of chains with two or more grocery stores increased from 96 to 150. While the grocery business was being concentrated into the hands of fewer and fewer owners, the small companies were continually being absorbed by the larger firms through mergers. According to an exhibit prepared by one of the Government's expert witnesses, in the period from 1949 to 1958 nine of the top 20 chains acquired 126 stores from their smaller competitors.<sup>4</sup> Figures

<sup>1</sup> 38 Stat. 731, as amended by 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 18 \(1964 ed.\).

<sup>2</sup> 32 Stat. 823, as amended by 62 Stat. 989, 15 U. S. C. § 29 \(1964 ed.\).

<sup>3</sup> Despite this steadfast concentration of the Los Angeles grocery business into fewer and fewer hands, the District Court, in Finding of Fact No. 80, concluded as follows:

"There has been no increase in concentration in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area either in the last decade or since the merger. On the contrary, economic concentration has decreased . . . ."

This conclusion is completely contradicted by Finding No. 23 which makes plain the steady decline in the number of individual grocery store owners referred to above. It is thus apparent that the District Court, in finding No. 80, used the term "concentration" in some sense other than a total decrease in the number of separate competitors which is the crucial point here.

<sup>4</sup> Appellees, in their brief, claim that 120 and not 126 stores changed hands in these acquisitions:

HÌ I ÁMÈJEG ËFG HÀ I ÁMÈDÄF I Ì ÄEF I CLÄF I ÅSEÖaËGÅÁ I Ì ÄEÅ I Ì LÄJ I ÁMÈSÖYQÄ GÅ ÇÄÅÅ

of a principal defense witness, set out below, illustrate the many acquisitions and mergers in the Los Angeles grocery industry from 1954 through 1961 including acquisitions made by Food Giant, Alpha Beta, Fox, and [*274] Mayfair, all among the 10 leading chains in the area.<sup>5</sup> Moreover, a table prepared by the Federal Trade Commission appearing in the Government's reply brief, but not a part of the record here, shows that [****7] acquisitions and mergers in the Los Angeles retail grocery market have continued at a rapid rate since the merger.<sup>6</sup> These facts alone are enough to cause us to conclude contrary to the District Court that the Von's-Shopping Bag merger did violate § 7. Accordingly, we reverse.

From this country's beginning there has been an abiding and widespread fear of the evils which flow from monopoly -- that is the concentration of economic power in the hands of a few. On the basis of this fear, Congress in 1890, when many of the Nation's industries [**559] were already concentrated into what it deemed too few hands, passed the Sherman Act in an attempt to prevent further concentration and to preserve competition among a large number of sellers. Several years later, in 1897, this Court emphasized this policy of the Sherman Act by calling attention to the tendency of powerful business combinations to restrain competition "by driving out of business the small dealers and worthy men whose lives have been spent therein, and who might be unable to readjust themselves in their altered surroundings." United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 323. [***9] <sup>7</sup> The Sherman Act failed to protect the smaller businessmen [*275] from elimination through the monopolistic pressures of large combinations which used mergers to grow ever more powerful. As a result in 1914 [**1481] Congress, viewing mergers as a continuous, pervasive threat to small business, passed § 7 of the Clayton Act which prohibited corporations under most circumstances from merging by purchasing the stock of their competitors. Ingenious businessmen, however, soon found a way to avoid § 7 and corporations began to merge simply by purchasing their rivals' assets. This Court in 1926, over the dissent of Justice Brandeis, joined by Chief Justice Taft and Justices Holmes and Stone approved this device for avoiding § 7<sup>8</sup> and mergers continued to concentrate economic power into fewer and fewer hands until 1950 when Congress passed the Celler-Kefauver Anti-Merger Act now before us.

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [↑] [2][LEdHN\[3\]](#) [↑] [3][LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4]Like the Sherman Act in 1890 and the Clayton Act in 1914, the basic purpose of the 1950 Celler-Kefauver Act was to prevent economic concentration in the American economy by keeping a large number of small competitors in business.<sup>9</sup> In stating the purposes of their bill, both of its sponsors, Representative Celler and Senator Kefauver, emphasized their fear, widely shared by other members of Congress, that this concentration was rapidly driving the small businessman out of the market.<sup>10</sup> The period from 1940 to

"It should also be noted here that the exhibit is in error in showing an acquisition by Food Giant from itself of six stores doing an annual volume of $ 31,700,000. Actually this was simply a change of name by Food Giant . . . ."

<sup>5</sup> [****8] These figures as they appear in a table in the Brief for the United States show acquisitions of retail grocery stores in the Los Angeles area from 1954 to 1961: See Appendix, Table 1, substantially reproducing the above-mentioned table.

<sup>6</sup> See Appendix, Table 2.

<sup>7</sup> Later, in 1945, Judge Learned Hand, reviewing the policy of the antitrust laws and other laws designed to foster small business, said, "Throughout the history of these statutes it has been constantly assumed that one of their purposes was to perpetuate and preserve, for its own sake and in spite of possible cost, an organization of industry in small units which can effectively compete with each other." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 429.

<sup>8</sup> [****10] Thatcher Manufacturing Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 272 U.S. 554, 560.

<sup>9</sup> See, e. g., U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362-363; United States v. Alcoa, 377 U.S. 271, 280.

<sup>10</sup> Representative Celler, in introducing the bill on the House floor, remarked:

HÌ ÁÑEJÈG ËÄG Í LÀ Í ÁÑEÖÉFI Ì ÄEFI Í FLÁ Í ÁÑEOÄCAÁ Í Í ÄEÍ Í JLÄFJ Í ÁÑEÅSÓYÓÄG GÄEËEE

1947, which was at [*276] the center of attention throughout the hearings and debates on the Celler-Kefauver bill, had been characterized [***560] by a series of mergers between large corporations and their smaller competitors resulting in the steady [***11] erosion of the small independent business in our economy.<sup>11</sup> As we said in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 315, "The dominant theme pervading congressional consideration of the 1950 amendments was a fear of what was considered to be a rising tide of economic concentration in the American economy." To arrest this "rising tide" toward concentration into too few hands and to halt the gradual demise of the small businessman, Congress [**1482] decided to clamp down with vigor on mergers. It both revitalized § 7 of the Clayton Act by "plugging its loophole" and broadened its scope so [*277] as not only to prohibit mergers between competitors, the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly" but to prohibit all mergers having that effect. By using these terms in § 7 which look not merely to the actual present effect of a merger but instead to its effect upon future competition, Congress sought to preserve competition among many small businesses by arresting a trend toward concentration in its incipiency before that trend developed to the point that a market was left in the grip of a few big [***12] companies. Thus, where concentration is gaining momentum in a market, we must be alert to carry out Congress' intent to protect competition against ever-increasing concentration through mergers.<sup>12</sup>

LEdHN[5] [5] [***14] The facts of this case present exactly the threatening trend toward concentration which Congress wanted to halt. The number of small grocery companies in the Los Angeles retail grocery market had been declining rapidly before the merger and continued to decline rapidly afterwards. This rapid decline in the number of grocery store owners moved hand in hand with a large number of significant absorptions of the small companies by the larger ones. In the midst of this steadfast trend toward concentration, Von's and Shopping Bag, two of the most successful and largest companies in the area, jointly owning 66 grocery stores merged to become the second largest chain in Los Angeles. This merger cannot be defended on the ground that one of the companies was about to fail or that the two had to merge to save themselves from destruction by some larger and more powerful competitor.<sup>13</sup> What we have on the contrary [*278] is simply the case of two already powerful companies merging in a way which makes them even more powerful than they were before. [***561] If ever such a merger would not [***15] violate § 7, certainly it does when it takes place in a market characterized by a long and continuous trend toward fewer and fewer owner-competitors which is exactly the sort of trend which Congress, with power to do so, declared must be arrested.

"Small, independent, decentralized business of the kind that built up our country, of the kind that made our country great, first, is fast disappearing, and second, is being made dependent upon monster concentration." 95 Cong. Rec. 11486.

Senator Kefauver expressed the same fear on the Senate floor:

"I think that we are approaching a point where a fundamental decision must be made in regard to this problem of economic concentration. Shall we permit the economy of the country to gravitate into the hands of a few corporations . . . ? Or on the other hand are we going to preserve small business, local operations, and free enterprise?" 96 Cong. Rec. 16450.

References to a number of other similar remarks by other Congressmen are collected in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 316, n. 28.

<sup>11</sup> [***13] H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 3, described this characteristic of the merger movement as follows:

". . . the outstanding characteristic of the merger movement has been that of large corporations buying out small companies, rather than smaller companies combining together in order to compete more effectively with their larger rivals. More than 70 percent of the total number of firms acquired during 1940-47 have been absorbed by larger corporations with assets of over $ 5,000,000. In contrast, fully 93 percent of all the firms bought out held assets of less than $ 1,000,000. Some 33 of the Nation's 200 largest industrial corporations have bought out an average of 5 companies each, and 13 have purchased more than 10 concerns each."

<sup>12</sup> See, e. g., Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 346; U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S., at 362. See also United States v. du Pont & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 597, interpreting § 7 before the Celler-Kefauver Anti-Merger amendment.

<sup>13</sup> See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 319.

LEdHN[6] [6]Appellees' primary argument is that the merger between Von's and Shopping Bag is not prohibited by § 7 because the Los Angeles grocery market was competitive before the merger, has been since, and may continue to be in the future. Even so, § 7 HN2 "requires not merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future; this is what is meant when it is said that the amended § 7 was intended to arrest anticompetitive tendencies in their 'incipiency.'" U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362, [****16] It is enough for us that Congress feared that a market marked at the same time by both a continuous decline in the number of small businesses and a large number of mergers would slowly but inevitably gravitate from a market of many small competitors to one dominated by one or a few giants, and competition would thereby be destroyed. Congress passed the Celler-Kefauver Act to prevent such a destruction of competition. Our cases since the passage of that Act have faithfully endeavored to enforce [**1483] this congressional command.<sup>14</sup> We adhere to them now.

[*279] LEdHN[7] [7] [****17] Here again as in United States v. El Paso Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651, 662, since appellees "have been on notice of the antitrust charge from almost the beginning . . . we not only reverse the judgment below but direct the District Court to order divestiture without delay." See also United States v. du Pont & Co., 366 U.S. 316; United States v. Alcoa, 377 U.S. 271, 281.

Reversed and remanded.

[***562] MR. JUSTICE FORTAS took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

APPENDIX TO OPINION OF THE COURT.

TABLE 1.

Food store acquisitions in the Los Angeles metropolitan area 1954-61

Year	Acquiring firm	Acquired firm	Number of stores acquired
1957	Piper Mart	Bi-Right & Big Bear	3
1958	Mayfair	Bob's Supermarket	7
1961	Better Foods	Border's Markets	3
1954	Kory's Markets	Carty Brothers	8
1958	Food Giant	Clark Markets	10
1956	Fox	Desert Fair	4
1959	Lucky	Hiram's	6
1958	Fox	Iowa Pork Shops	11
1961	Food Giant (and others)	McDaniel's Markets	16
1957	Food Giant	Panorama Markets	3
1958	Pix	Patton's Mkts	3
1958	Alpha Beta	Raisin Markets	13
1960	Piggly Wiggly	Rankins Markets	4
1959	Pix	S & K Markets	2
1960	Von's	Shopping Bag	37

<sup>14</sup> See, e. g., Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294; U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321; United States v. El Paso Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651; United States v. Alcoa, 377 U.S. 271; United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441; FTC v. Consolidated Foods, 380 U.S. 592.

HÌ ÁMÈJÈG ÈÈG JIÀ Í ÁMÈDÉFÍ Ì ÈEFÍ Ì HÀFÍ ÁSEÒâÈCAÁ Í ÈÈFÍ Ì GLAFJ Ì ÁMÈSÓYÓG GÀHÈFÍ

TABLE 1.

Food store acquisitions in the Los Angeles metropolitan area 1954-61

Year	Acquiring firm	Acquired firm	Number of stores acquired
1959	Pix	Shop Right Markets	3
1958	Yor-Way	C. S. Smith	5
1957	Food Giant	Toluca Marts	2
1957	Mayfair	U-Tell-Em Markets	10
	Total		150

[****18] [*280]

TABLE 2.

¹ Food store acquisitions in the Los Angeles metropolitan area 1961-64

Year	Acquiring company	Acquired company (or stores)	Type of acquisition
			Name	Number of stores	Sales (thousands) <sup>2</sup>	Horizontal Other
1961	Acme Markets	Alpha Beta Food Markets		45	$ 79,042	X
1961	Boys Markets	Korys Markets		5	10,000	X
	Food Giant Markets	McDaniels Markets		9	21,500	X <sup>3</sup>
	Mayfair Markets	Yorway Markets		1	1,500	X
		Alpha Beta Food Markets		1	1,700	X
1962	Mayfair Markets	Schaubs Market		1	1,800	X
		Fox Markets		1	2,200	X
	Ralph's Grocery Co	Imperial Supreme Markets		1	916	X
1963	Food Fair Stores	Fox Markets		22	44,419	X
	Kroger	Market Basket		53	110,860	X
	Mayfair Markets	Bi Rite Markets		1	2,569	X

<sup>1</sup> Consists of Los Angeles and Orange Counties. (1963 census defined the Los Angeles metropolitan area as Los Angeles County only.)

<sup>2</sup> In most cases, sales are for the 12-month period prior to acquisition.

<sup>3</sup> According to a statement made by Von's counsel at oral argument, this acquisition did not take place in 1961, but instead Food Giant bought seven of McDaniel's stores in 1964. The acquisition in 1964 is listed in this table.

HÌ ÁMÈJÈG ËÈG ÈLÀ Ì ÁMÈDÉFÌ Ì ÈFÌ Ì HÀFÌ ÁSEÒAÈCAÁ Ì ÈHÌ Ì GLAFJÌ Ì ÁMÈSÓYÓG GÀHÈFÌ

TABLE 2.

<sup>1</sup> Food store acquisitions in the Los Angeles metropolitan area 1961-64

Year	Acquiring company	Acquired company (or stores)	Type of acquisition
			Name	Number of stores	Sales (thousands) <sup>2</sup>	Horizontal
1964	Albertson's, Inc	Dales Food Market		1	2,200	X
		Food Giant Markets		1	1,700	X
		Greater All American		14	30,308	X
		Mayfair Markets	Gateway Market	4	8,000	X
			Pattons Markets	4	10,400	X
		Ralph's Grocery Co	Cracker Barrel Super-	1	1,000	X market.
		Food Giant Markets	McDaniels Markets	7	18,350	X
		Total horizontal		38	83,835
		mergers.
		Total market		134	264,629
		extension mergers.

[****19]

Concur by: WHITE

Concur

---

[**563] [**1484] MR. JUSTICE WHITE, concurring.

As I read the Court's opinion, which I join, it does not hold that in any industry exhibiting a decided trend towards concentration, any merger between competing firms violates § 7 unless saved by the failing company doctrine; nor does it declare illegal each and every merger in such an industry where the resulting firm has as much [*281] as a 7.5% share of the relevant market. But here, in 1958 before the merger, the largest firm had 8% of the sales, Von's was third with 4.7% and Shopping [****20] Bag was sixth with 4.2%. The four largest firms had 24.4% of the market, the top eight had 40.9% [***564] and the top 12 had 48.8% as compared with 25.9%, 33.7% and 38.8% in 1948. All but two of the top 10 firms in 1958 were very probably also among the top 10 in 1948 or had acquired a firm that was among the top 10. Further, all but three of the top 10 had increased their market share between 1948 and 1958 and those which gained gained more than the three lost. Also, although three companies declined in market share their total sales increased in substantial amounts.

HÌ ÁMÈJÈG ËÈG FLÀ Ì ÁMÈDÈF Ì ËÈFÌ Ì LÀ Ì ÁMÈOÀÈGÀ Á Ì ËÈGÌ Ì LÀFJÌ Ì ÁMÈSÓYÓGÀ GÌÈFÈGÈ

Given a trend towards fewer and fewer sellers which promises to continue, it [**1485] is clear to me that where the eight leading firms have over 40% of the market, any merger between the leaders or between one of them and a lesser company is vulnerable under § 7, absent some special proof to the contrary. Here Von's acquired Shopping Bag. Both were among the eight largest companies, both had grown substantially since 1948 and they were substantial competitors. After the merger the four largest firms had 28.8%, the eight largest had 44% and the 12 largest had 50%. The merger not only disposed of a substantial [****21] competitor but increased the concentration in the leading firms. In my view the Government sufficiently proved that the effect of this merger may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly.

Dissent by: STEWART

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE STEWART, with whom MR. JUSTICE HARLAN joins, dissenting.

We first gave consideration to the 1950 amendment of § 7 of the Clayton Act in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294. The thorough opinion THE CHIEF JUSTICE wrote for the Court in that case made two [*282] things plain: First, the standards of § 7 require that every corporate acquisition be judged in the light of the contemporary economic context of its industry.<sup>1</sup> [****22] Second, the purpose of § 7 is to protect competition, not to protect competitors, and every § 7 case must be decided in the light of that clear statutory purpose.<sup>2</sup> Today the Court turns its back on these two basic principles and on all the decisions that have followed them.

The Court makes no effort to appraise the competitive effects of this acquisition in terms of the contemporary economy of the retail food industry in the Los Angeles area.<sup>3</sup> Instead, through a simple exercise [***565] in sums, it finds that the number of individual competitors in the market has decreased over the years, and, apparently on the theory that the degree of competition is invariably proportional to the number of competitors, it holds that [*283] this historic reduction in the number of competing units is enough under § 7 to invalidate a merger within the market, with no need to examine the economic concentration of the market, the level of competition in the market, or the potential adverse effect of the merger on that competition. This startling per se rule [****23] is contrary not only to our previous decisions, but contrary to the language of § 7, contrary to the legislative history of the 1950 amendment, and contrary to economic reality.

Under § 7, as amended, a merger can be invalidated if, and only if, "the effect [**1486] of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, [****24] or to tend to create a monopoly." No question is raised here as to the tendency of the present merger to create a monopoly. Our sole concern is with the question whether the effect of the merger may be substantially to lessen competition.

---

<sup>1</sup> "[A] merger had to be functionally viewed, in the context of its particular industry." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. at 321-322. "Both the Federal Trade Commission and the courts have, in the light of Congress' expressed intent, recognized the relevance and importance of economic data that places any given merger under consideration within an industry framework almost inevitably unique in every case." Id. at 322, n. 38.

<sup>2</sup> "Taken as a whole, the legislative history illuminates congressional concern with protection of competition, not competitors, and its desire to restrain mergers only to the extent that such combinations may tend to lessen competition." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, at 320.

<sup>3</sup> This is the first case to reach the Court under the 1950 amendment to § 7 that involves a merger between firms engaged solely in retail food distribution. Kaysen & Turner, Antitrust Policy 40 (1959), have discussed this industry in the following terms:

"As a guess, we can say that the most important distributive trades, especially the food trades, are structurally unconcentrated in the metropolitan areas . . . . The significance of structural oligopoly in terms of policy is far different in [these trades] than in manufacturing and mining. . . . The traditional view that the local market industries are essentially competitive in character is probably correct . . . ."

HÌ ÁMÈÙÈGÌ ËÀGÌ HÀ Ì ÁUÈÖËFI Ì ËÀFI Ì LÀ Ì ÁSEÒAËCAÁ Ì ËÀI Ì LÀFJÌ Ì ÁMÈÙÈSÓYÓGÌ GÌÄHEEG

The principal danger against which the 1950 amendment was addressed was the erosion of competition through the cumulative centripetal effect of acquisitions by large corporations, none of which by itself might be sufficient to constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. Congress' immediate fear was that of large corporations buying out small companies.<sup>4</sup> A major aspect of that fear was the perceived trend toward absentee ownership of local business.<sup>5</sup> Another, more generalized, congressional [*284] purpose revealed by the legislative history was to protect small businessmen and to stem the rising tide of concentration in the economy.<sup>6</sup> These goals, Congress thought, could be achieved by "arresting mergers at a time when the trend to a lessening of competition in a line of commerce was still in its incipiency." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, at 317.

The concept of arresting restraints of trade in their "incipiency" was not [***26] an innovation of the 1950 amendment. The notion of incipiency was part of the report on the original Clayton Act by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary in 1914, and it was reiterated in the [***566] Senate report in 1950.<sup>7</sup> That notion was not left [**1487] undefined. [*285] The legislative history leaves no doubt that the applicable standard for measuring the substantiality of the effect of a merger on competition was that of a "reasonable probability" of lessening competition.<sup>8</sup> The standard was thus more stringent than that of a "mere possibility" on the one hand and more

<sup>4</sup> See, e. g., H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 3, quoted in footnote 11 of the Court's opinion. Mention of the retail food industry is notably absent in the legislative history. Although it is clear that, in addition to the already highly oligopolized industries, Congress was also concerned with trends toward concentration in industries that were still highly fragmented, this case involves not even a remote approach to the "monster concentration" of which Representative Celler spoke in introducing the 1950 amendment in the House of Representatives. 95 Cong. Rec. 11486.

<sup>5</sup> [***25] See, e. g., Hearing before Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary on H. R. 2734, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 12 (remarks of Senator Kefauver).

<sup>6</sup> Much of the fuel for the congressional debates on concentration in the American economy was derived from a contemporary study by the Federal Trade Commission on corporate acquisitions between 1940 and 1947. See Report of the Federal Trade Commission on the Merger Movement: A Summary Report (1948). A critical study of the FTC report, published while the 1950 amendment was pending in Congress, concluded that the effect of the recent merger movement on concentration had been slight. Lintner & Butters, Effect of Mergers on Industrial Concentration, 1940-1947, 32 Rev. of Econ. & Statistics 30 (1950). Two economists for the Federal Trade Commission later acquiesced in that conclusion. Blair & Houghton, The Lintner-Butters Analysis of the Effect of Mergers on Industrial Concentration, 1940-1947, 33 Rev. of Econ. & Statistics 63, 67, n. 12 (1951).

<sup>7</sup> See S. Rep. No. 698, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 1:

"Broadly stated, the bill, in its treatment of unlawful restraints and monopolies, seeks to prohibit and make unlawful certain trade practices which, as a rule, singly and in themselves, are not covered by the act of July 2, 1890 [the Sherman Act], or other existing antitrust acts, and thus, by making these practices illegal, to arrest the creation of trusts, conspiracies, and monopolies in their incipiency and before consummation."

See also S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 4-5: "The intent here, as in other parts of the Clayton Act, is to cope with monopolistic tendencies in their incipiency and well before they have attained such effects as would justify a Sherman Act proceeding;" id., p. 6: "The concept of reasonable probability conveyed by these words ['may be'] is a necessary element in any statute which seeks to arrest restraints of trade in their incipiency and before they develop into full-fledged restraints violative of the Sherman Act."

Thus, the Senate Reports on both the original Clayton Act and the 1950 amendment carefully delineate the "incipiency" with which the provisions are concerned as that of monopolization or classical restraints of trade under the Sherman Act. The notion that "incipiency" might be expanded to refer also to a lessening of competition first appeared in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 317.

<sup>8</sup> [***27] The Senate Report is clear on this point:

"The use of these words ['may be substantially to lessen competition'] means that the bill, if enacted, would not apply to the mere possibility but only to the reasonable probability of the prescribed [sic] effect . . . . The words 'may be' have been in section 7 of the Clayton Act since 1914. The concept of reasonable probability conveyed by these words is a necessary element in any lenient than that of a "certainty" on the other.<sup>9</sup> I cannot agree that the retail grocery [*286] business in Los Angeles is in an incipient or any other stage of a trend toward a lessening of competition, or that the effective level of concentration in the industry has increased. Moreover, there is no indication that the present merger, or the trend in this industry as a whole, augurs any danger whatsoever for the small businessman. The Court has substituted bare conjecture for the statutory standard of a reasonable probability that competition may be lessened.

HÌ ÁMÈJÈG ËAG Ì LÀ Ì ÁMÈDÉF Ì ËAFI Ì LÀ Ì ÁSEÒAËCAÁ Ì ÉBÉ Ì LÀFJ Ì ÁMÈSÓYÓG G ËAG

10

The [***567] Court rests its conclusion on the "crucial point" that, in the 11-year period between 1950 and 1961, the number of single-store grocery firms in Los Angeles decreased 29% from 5,365 to 3,818.<sup>11</sup> Such a decline [*287] should, of course, [**1488] be no more [***29] than a fact calling for further investigation of the competitive trend in the industry. For the Court, however, that decline is made the end, not the beginning, of the analysis. In the counting-of-heads game played today by the Court, the reduction in the number of single-store operators becomes a yardstick for automatic disposition of cases under § 7.

[***30] I believe that even the most superficial analysis of the record makes plain the fallacy of the Court's syllogism that competition is necessarily reduced when the bare number of competitors has declined.<sup>12</sup> In any statute which seeks to arrest restraints of trade in their incipiency and before they develop into full-fledged restraints violative of the Sherman Act." S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., p. 6.

---

See also 96 Cong. Rec. 16453 (remarks of Senator Kefauver). Cf. 51 Cong. Rec. 14463-14464 (amendment of Senator Reed).

<sup>9</sup> Although Congress eschewed exclusively mathematical tests for assessing the impact of a merger, it offered several generalizations indicative of the sort of merger that might be proscribed, e. g.: Whether the merger eliminated an enterprise that had been a substantial factor in competition; whether the increased size of the acquiring corporation threatened to give it a decisive advantage over competitors; whether an undue number of competing enterprises had been eliminated. H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 8. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 321, n. 36. Only the first of these generalizations is arguably applicable to the present merger; the market-extension aspects of the merger, as well as the evidence of Shopping Bag's declining profit margin and weak price competition, suggest that any conclusion under this test would be equivocal. See infra, pp. 295-296; 298, n. 30. Senator Kefauver stated explicitly on the Senate floor that the mere elimination of competition between the merged firms would not make the acquisition illegal; rather, "the merger would have to have the effect of lessening competition generally." 96 Cong. Rec. 16456.

<sup>10</sup> [***28] Eighteen years ago, a dictum in Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 46, adverted to a "reasonable possibility" as the appropriate standard for the corresponding language ("may be to substantially lessen competition") under § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 14. The dictum provoked a sharp dissent in that case, id. at 55, 57-58, and the Court subsequently withdrew it, Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, only to reinstate it again today. This issue, which appeared settled at the time of the 1950 amendment, provoked an acrimonious exchange during the Senate hearings. Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on H. R. 2734, 81st Cong., 1st & 2d Sess., pp. 160-168.

<sup>11</sup> The decline continued at approximately the same rate to 1963, the last year for which data are available, when there were 3,590 single-store grocery firms in the area. The record contains no breakdown of the figures on single-store concerns. In an extensive study of the retail grocery industry on a national scale, the Federal Trade Commission found that between 1939 and 1954 the total number of grocery stores in the United States declined by 109,000, or 28%. The entire decrease was suffered by stores with annual gross sales of less than $ 50,000. During the same period, the number of stores in all higher sales brackets increased. The Commission noted that the census figures, from which its data were taken, included an undetermined number of grocery firms liquidating after 1948 that merely closed their grocery operations and continued their remaining lines of business, such as nongrocery retailing, food wholesaling, food manufacturing, etc. Staff Report to the Federal Trade Commission, Economic Inquiry Into Food Marketing, Part I, Concentration and Integration in Retailing 48, 54 (1960).

<sup>12</sup> The generalized case against the Court's numerical approach is stated in Bok, Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the Merging of Law and Economics, 74 Harv. L. Rev. 226, 312, n. 261:

"There are serious problems connected with the use of this yardstick. First, not every firm contributes equally to competition. In particular, there may be a fringe of firms too small to be able to affect price and production policies in the market as a whole. Alternatively, certain firms may be marginal in the sense that their costs and financial situations preclude them from having much, if any, impact on market conditions; indeed they may be able to remain in operation only because excessive profits are meaningful sense, the structure of the Los Angeles grocery market remains unthreatened by concentration. Local competition is vigorous to a fault, not only among chain stores [*288] themselves but also between chain stores and single-store operators. The continuing population explosion of the Los Angeles area, which has outrun the expansion plans of even the largest chains, offers a surfeit of business opportunity for stores of all sizes.<sup>13</sup> Affiliated [***568] with cooperatives that give the smallest store the buying strength of its largest competitor, new stores have taken full advantage of the remarkable ease of entry into the market. And, most important of all, the record simply cries out that the numerical decline in the number of single-store owners is the result of transcending social and technological changes that positively preclude the inference that competition has suffered because of the attrition of competitors.

HÌ ÁMÈJÈG ËAG I LÀ I ÁMÈDÉF I I ËEF I I LÀ I ÁMÈOÀÉCAÁ I I ÉI I I LAFJ I I ÁMÈSÓYÓG G HÀEFG

Section 7 was never intended by Congress for use by the Court as a charter to roll back the supermarket revolution. Yet the Court's opinion is hardly more than a requiem for the so-called "Mom and Pop" grocery stores -- the bakery and butcher shops, the vegetable and fish markets -- that are now economically and technologically obsolete in many parts of the country. No action by this Court can resurrect the old single-line Los Angeles food stores that have been run over by the automobile or obliterated by the freeway. The transformation of American society since the Second World War has not completely shelved these specialty stores, but it has relegated them to a much less central role in our food economy. Today's [****32] dominant enterprise in food [**1489] retailing is the supermarket. Accessible to the housewife's automobile from a wide radius, it houses under a single roof [*289] the entire food requirements of the family. Only through the sort of reactionary philosophy that this Court long ago rejected in the Due Process Clause area can the Court read into the legislative history of § 7 its attempt to make the automobile stand still, to mold the food economy of today into the market pattern of another era.<sup>14</sup> being earned by the stronger firms. An [exit] of companies of this sort would have much less significance than a counting of corporate heads would imply."

<sup>13</sup> [***31] Between 1953 and 1961, the population of the Los Angeles metropolitan area increased from 4,300,000 to 6,800,000 and the average population per grocery store increased from 695 to 1,439. Additional opportunity for new stores in the area results from the geographical division of the city into numerous suburbs, as well as from the lack of specific store loyalty among new residents.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726. In criticizing a recent decision of the Federal Trade Commission, one commentator has stated, in terms applicable mutatis mutandis to the Court's decision in the present case:

"... Any child alive in the 1950's could see that a restructuring of food retailing was then going on. The business was adjusting itself, through market mechanisms that included merger, to vast and profound changes in the American way of life. There is not a word in the FTC majority opinion that relates changes in the number of stores and chains to the proliferation of suburbs, the construction of shopping centers, and the final triumph of the supermarket -- an innovation in retailing that has since spread across the Western world. The most important single cause of these changes was the automobile revolution . . . which not even the FTC can stop.

...

"... Plenty of living American men and women remember an era when virtually all groceries were sold through very small stores none of which had 'any significant market share.' Was this era the high point of competition in food retailing? Many little towns had, in fact, only one place where a given kind of food could be bought. In a typical city neighborhood, defined by the range of a housewife's willingness to lug groceries home on foot, there might be three or four relaxed 'competitors.' If she did not like the price or quality offered by them, she could take her black-string market bag, board a trolley car, and try her luck among the relaxed 'competitors' of some other neighborhood." Ways, A New "Worst" in Antitrust, Fortune, April 1966, pp. 111-112.

In the present case, the District Court found that in the era preceding the rise of the supermarkets, "the area from which the typical store drew most of its customers was limited to a block or two in any direction and if a particular grocery store happened to be the only one in its immediate neighborhood, it had a virtual monopoly of local trade." Thus, the Court's aphorism in U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 363 -- that "competition is likely to be greatest when there are many sellers, none of which has any significant market share" -- is peculiarly maladroit in the historic context of the retail food industry. See also Hampe & Wittenberg, The Lifeline of America: Development of the Food Industry 313-372 (1964); Lebhar, Chain Stores in America 1859-1962, pp. 348-390 (1963).

HÌ ÁÑEÜÄG ÈÄG JÀ ÄUÉÖÄFÌ Ì ÄFÌ Ì JLAÍ ÅSEÖåÄCAÁ Í ÄÅÍ Ì LAFJÌ ÁÑEÜÄSÓYÓÄG GÄÅH

[***33] [*290] This [***569] is not a case in which the record is equivocal with regard to the status of competition in the industry in question. To the contrary, the record offers abundant evidence of the dramatic history of growth and prosperity of the retail food business in Los Angeles.

The District Court's finding of fact that there was no increase in market concentration before or after the merger is amply supported by the evidence if concentration is gauged by any measure other than that of a census of the number of competing units. Between 1948 and 1958, the market share of Safeway, the leading grocery chain in Los Angeles, declined from 14% to 8%. The combined market shares of the top two chains declined from 21% to 14% over the same period; for the period 1952-1958, the combined shares of the three, four, and five largest firms also declined. It is true that between 1948 and 1958, the combined shares of the top 20 firms in the market increased from 44% to 57%. The crucial fact here, however, is that seven of these top 20 firms in 1958 were not even in existence as chains in 1948. Because of the substantial turnover in the membership of the top 20 firms, the increase [***34] in market share of the top 20 as a group is hardly a reliable indicator [**1490] of any tendency toward market concentration.<sup>15</sup>

[*291] In addition, statistics in the record for the period 1953-1962 strongly suggest that the retail grocery industry in Los Angeles is less concentrated today than it was a decade ago. During this [***35] period, the number of chain store firms in the area rose from 96 to 150, or 56%. That increase occurred overwhelmingly among chains of the very smallest size, those composed of two or three grocery stores. Between 1953 and 1962, the number of such "chains" increased from 56 to 104, or 86%. Although chains of 10 or more stores increased from 10 to 24 during the period, seven of these 24 chains were not even in existence as chains in Los Angeles in 1953.<sup>16</sup>

Yet even these dramatic statistics do not fully reveal the dynamism and vitality of competition in the retail grocery business in Los Angeles during the period. The record shows that at various times during [***36] the period 1953-1962, no less than 269 separate chains were doing business in Los Angeles, of which 208 were two- or three-store chains. During that period, therefore, 173 new chains made their appearance in the market area, and 119 chains went out of existence as [***570] chain stores.<sup>17</sup> The vast majority of this market turbulence represented turnover in chains of two or three stores; 143 of the 173 new chains born during the period were chains of this [*292] size. Testimony in the record shows that, almost without exception, these new chains were the outgrowth of successful one-store operations.<sup>18</sup> There is no indication that comparable turmoil did not equally permeate single-store

<sup>15</sup> See Joskow, Structural Indicia: Rank-Shift Analysis as a Supplement to Concentration Ratios, VI Antitrust Bulletin 9 (1961). In addition, the overall market share of the top 20 firms in fact showed a slight decline between 1958 and 1960. The statement in the concurring opinion in the present case, that "All but two of the top 10 firms in 1958 were very probably also among the top 10 in 1948 or had acquired a firm that was among the top 10," is based on conjecture. The record demonstrates only that the top four firms in 1948 were among the top 10 firms in 1958; the record neither identifies the remaining six of the top 10 firms in 1948 nor charts their subsequent history.

<sup>16</sup> For a similar study of the retail food industry at the national level, see Lebhar, Small Chain Virility a Bar to Monopoly, Chain Store Age, Jan. 1962, p. E20. See also Gould, The Relation of Sales Growth to the Size of Multi-Store Food Retailers 6 (1966) (inverse correlation found between sales growth and size of chains with four or more stores).

<sup>17</sup> Of these latter 119 chains, 66 went out of business altogether, 28 reduced their operations to a single store, and 25 were eliminated as separate competitors as a result of acquisitions by other chains.

<sup>18</sup> [***37] On the basis of these facts, one witness concluded:

"The apparent willingness and ability of grocers to expand and create new chain entities at the staggering rate of more than 17 a year, and the growth potential of new chains, precludes in my opinion the possibility that the retail grocery business in Los Angeles will become either monopolistic or oligopolistic in the foreseeable future. It must be remembered that in 1953, only 10 chains with as many as 10 stores each were operating in the area. These chains are recognized as being among the best managed, most successful and most aggressive supermarket operators in the country. They themselves have engaged in expansion programs of significant proportions since 1953. Yet, 10 years later, instead of having swept aside all competition and being left alone to compete among themselves, these same 10 chains are now faced with the necessity of competing against no less than 14 new chains of 10 or more stores each, a significantly greater number of smaller chains and a host of successful single store operators, of whom many are affiliated with powerful voluntary chains or other cooperative groups. . . . The growth operations in the [**1491] area.<sup>19</sup> In fashioning its per se rule, based on the net arithmetical decline in the number of single-store operators, the Court completely disregards the obvious procreative vigor of competition in the market as reflected in the turbulent history of entry and exit of competing small chains.

HÌ ÁNÈJÈG ËFGJGLÀ ÆUÒDÉFÌ Ì ÆFI JEÁFÌ ÁSEÓaÉCA ÁÍ ÍÉFÌ Ì ÆFJÌ Ì ÁNÈJÈSÓYÓG GÆFHÌ

To support its conclusion the Court invokes three sets of data regarding absorption of smaller firms by merger with larger firms. In each of the acquisitions detailed [*293] in the Appendix, Tables 1 and 2 of the Court's opinion, the acquired units were grocery chains. Not one of these acquisitions was of a firm operating only a single store.<sup>20</sup> The Court cannot have it both ways. It is only among single-store operators that the decline in the unit number of competitors, so heavily relied upon by the Court, has taken place. Yet the tables reproduced in the Appendix show not a trace of merger activity involving the acquisition of single-store operators. And the number of chains in the area has in fact shown a substantial net increase during the period, in spite of the fact that some of the chains [****39] have been absorbed by larger firms. How then can the Court rely on these acquisitions as evidence of a tendency toward market concentration in the area?

The Court's use of market-acquisition data for the period 1954-1961,<sup>21</sup> prepared by the Government from [***571] the work sheets of a defense witness, is also questionable for another reason. During that period, Food Giant, Alpha Beta, Fox, and Mayfair were ranked 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th, respectively, on the basis of the percentage of their sales in Los Angeles in 1958, so that the impact of their acquisitions, made in the face of competition by the top six chains, is considerably blunted. The remarkable feature disclosed by [****40] these data is that none of the top six firms in the area expanded by acquisition during the period.<sup>22</sup>

[*294] The Court's reliance on the fact that nine of the top 20 chains acquired 120 stores in the Los Angeles area between 1949 and 1958 does not withstand analysis in light of the complete record. Forty percent of these acquisitions, representing 48 stores with gross sales of more than $ 71,000,000, were made by Fox, Yor-Way, and McDaniels, which ranked 9th, 11th, and 20th, respectively, according to 1958 sales in the market. Each [****41] of these firms subsequently went into bankruptcy as a result of overexpansion, undercapitalization, or inadequate managerial experience. This substantial postacquisition demise of relatively large chains hardly comports with the Court's tacit portrayal of the inexorable march of the market toward oligopoly.

Further, the table relied on by the Court to sustain its view that acquisitions have continued in the Los Angeles area at a rapid rate in the three-year period following this merger indiscriminately lumps together horizontal and [**1492] market-extension mergers.<sup>23</sup> Only 29 stores, representing 13 acquisitions, were acquired in horizontal mergers, and the record reveals that nine of these 29 stores were acquired in the course of dispositions in bankruptcy. Such acquisitions of failing companies, of course, are immune from the Clayton Act. International Shoe Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U.S. 291, 301-303. Thus, at a time when the number of single-store concerns was well over 3,500, horizontal mergers over a three-year period between going concerns achieved at of independents into chains and of small chains into larger ones . . . demonstrates convincingly that small concerns don't have to remain small in Los Angeles."

---

<sup>19</sup> [***38] Data for 1960, the only year for which such figures are available in the record, reveal a comparable agitation of entry and exit among operators of single stores. Although there was a net loss of 132 single-outlet stores in 1960, 128 new single-outlet stores opened during the year.

<sup>20</sup> As to Table 1 in the Appendix of the Court's opinion, this fact is obvious on the face of the table. As to Table 2 in the Appendix, examination of the record discloses that each of the nine acquisitions listed as involving a single store represented purchases of single stores from chains ranging in size from two to 49 stores.

<sup>21</sup> See Table 1 in the Appendix of the Court's opinion.

<sup>22</sup> Table 1 in the Appendix of the Court's opinion is somewhat misleading in that it weights the data from which it is drawn in favor of the acquisition by grocery chains of other chains consisting of relatively larger numbers of store units. The complete data of the witness included several acquisitions of one- and two-store concerns, together with the disposition of one ten-store chain to various individuals.

<sup>23</sup> See Table 2 in the Appendix of the Court's opinion. This table, not a part of the record, was submitted by the Government in its reply brief, filed on the eve of oral argument.

HÌ ÁÑEÜÄG ÈÄGJI LÀ ÆUÖÄFI Ì ÆFI JGLÄI ÄSEÖaÄCAÁ IÍ ÈÄI Ì FLÄFJ Ì ÁÑEÜÄSÖYÖÄG GÄÄEHI

most only the de minimis level of 10 acquisitions involving 20 stores. It cannot [***42] seriously be maintained that [*295] the effect of the negligible market share foreclosed by these horizontal mergers may be substantially to lessen competition within the meaning of § 7. Cf. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 329.

The great majority of the post-merger acquisitions detailed in Table 2 in the Appendix of the Court's opinion, ante, were of the market-extension type, involving neither the elimination of direct competitors in the Los Angeles market nor increased concentration of the market. There are substantial economic distinctions between such market-extension mergers and classical horizontal mergers.<sup>24</sup> Whatever the wisdom or logic of the Court's assumed [***572] arithmetic proportion between the number of single-store concerns and the level of competition within the [***43] meaning of § 7 as applied to horizontal mergers, it is simply not possible to make the further assumption that the mere occurrence of market-extension mergers is adequate to prove a tendency of the local market toward decreased competition.

Moreover, contrary to the assumption on which the Court proceeds, the record establishes that the present merger itself has substantial, even predominant, market-extension overtones. The District Court found that the Von's stores were located in the southern and western portions of [***44] the Los Angeles metropolitan area, and that the Shopping Bag stores were located in the northern and eastern portions. In each of the areas in which Von's and Shopping Bag stores competed directly, there were also at least six other chain stores and several [*296] smaller stores competing for the patronage of customers. On the basis of a "housewife's 10-minute driving time" test conducted for the Justice Department by a government witness, it was shown that slightly more than half of the Von's and Shopping Bag stores were not in a position to compete at all with one another in the market.<sup>25</sup> Even among those stores which competed at least partially with one another, the overlap in sales represented only approximately 25% of the combined sales of the two chains in the overall Los Angeles area. The present merger was thus three parts market-extension and only one part horizontal, but the Court nowhere recognizes this market-extension aspect that exists within the local market itself. The actual market share foreclosed by the elimination of Shopping Bag as an independent competitor was thus slightly less than 1% of the total grocery store sales in the [**1493] area. The [***45] share of the market preempted by the present merger was therefore practically identical with the 0.77% market foreclosure accepted as "quite insubstantial" by the Court in Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 331-333.

The irony of this case is that the Court invokes its sweeping new construction of § 7 to the detriment of a merger between two relatively successful, local, largely family-owned concerns, each of which had less than 5% of the local market and neither of which had any prior history of growth by acquisition.<sup>26</sup> In [***573] a sense, the defendants [*297] are being punished for the sin of aggressive competition.<sup>27</sup> The Court is inaccurate in its suggestions, ante, <sup>24</sup> See Foremost Dairies, Inc., 60 F. T. C. 944; Beatrice Foods Co., F. T. C. Docket No. 6653 (April 26, 1965); National Tea Co., F. T. C. Docket No. 7453 (March 4, 1966). Cf. United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158; Procter & Gamble Co., F. T. C. Docket No. 6901 (Nov. 26, 1963), rev'd 358 F.2d 74 (C. A. 6th Cir.); Turner, Conglomerate Mergers and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 78 Harv. L. Rev. 1313.

<sup>25</sup> Evidence introduced by the defendants indicated that the overlap between the Von's and Shopping Bag stores was significantly smaller than that proposed by the government witness.

<sup>26</sup> At the time of the merger in 1960, Von's operated 28 retail grocery stores in the Los Angeles area. It commenced operation as a partnership of the Von der Ahe family in 1932, during the depression, with a food concession in a small grocery store. Shopping Bag operated 36 stores in Los Angeles at the time of the merger; it commenced operation as a partnership in a small grocery store in 1930. So far as the record reveals, the competitive behavior of these firms was impeccable throughout their expansion, which took place solely by internal growth. In discussing the success of comparable firms vis-a-vis the Sherman Act, Judge Learned Hand stated, "The Act does not mean to condemn the resultant of those very forces which it is its prime object to foster: finis opus coronat. The successful competitor, having been urged to compete, must not be turned upon when he wins." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 430.

<sup>27</sup> [***47] Nor is it altogether easy to escape the feeling that it is not so much this merger, but Los Angeles itself, that is being invalidated here. Cf. Adelman, Antitrust Problems: The Antimerger Act, 1950-60, 51 Am. Econ. Rev. 236, 243 (May 1961): "In pp. 277-278, that the merger makes these firms more "powerful" than they were before, and that Shopping [***46] Bag was itself a "powerful" competitor at the time of the merger. There is simply no evidence in the record, and the Court makes no attempt to demonstrate, that the increment in market share obtained by the combined stores can be equated with an increase in the market power of the combined firm. And, although Shopping Bag was not a "failing company" within the meaning of our decision in International Shoe Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U.S. 291, 301-303, the record at [*298] least casts strong doubt on the contention that it was a powerful competitor.<sup>28</sup> The District Court found that Shopping Bag suffered from a lack of qualified executive personnel<sup>29</sup> [**1494] and that, although overall sales of the chain had been increasing, its earnings and profits were declining.<sup>30</sup> Further, the merger clearly comported with "the desirability of retaining 'local control' over industry" that the Court noted in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 315-316.

HÌ ÁÑEÜÄG ËÄGJÌ LÀ Í ÁÑEÖÄFÌ Ì ÄFÌ JHLÁÍ ÅSEÖåÄCAÁÍ ÈÅÍ Ì HLÄFJÌ Í ÁÑEÅSÖYÖÄG GÄÅÅÍ Ì

With regard to the "plight" of the small businessman, the record is unequivocal that his competitive position is strong and secure in the Los Angeles retail grocery industry. The most aggressive competitors against the larger retail chains are frequently the operators of single stores.<sup>31</sup> The vitality of these independents is directly [*299] attributable to [***574] the recent and spectacular growth in California of three large cooperative buying organizations. Membership in these groups is unrestricted; [***49] through them, single-store operators are able to purchase their goods at prices competitive with those offered by suppliers even to the largest chains.<sup>32</sup> The rise the antitrust dictionary, 'powerful' has no necessary connection with monopoly power or market control or even market share. It means . . . one four-letter word: size." Los Angeles is, to be sure, a big place. Although Shopping Bag's share of the Los Angeles market was only 4.2%, its sales in 1958 totaled $ 84,000,000. Compare the Court's statement in Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 333-334:

"It is urged that the present contract pre-empts competition to the extent of purchases worth perhaps $ 128,000,000, and that this 'is, of course, not insignificant or insubstantial.' While $ 128,000,000 is a considerable sum of money, even in these days, the dollar volume, by itself, is not the test . . . ."

<sup>28</sup>This is not a "merger between two small companies to enable the combination to compete more effectively with larger corporations dominating the relevant market," Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 319; cf. House Hearing, supra, n. 5, pp. 40-41; Senate Hearings, supra, n. 10, pp. 6, 51; 95 Cong. Rec. 11486, 11488, 11506; 96 Cong. Rec. 16436; H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., pp. 6-8; S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., p. 4. However, the Court today in a gratuitous dictum, ante, p. 277, undercuts even that principle by confining it to cases in which competitors are obliged to merge to save themselves from destruction by a larger and more powerful competitor.

<sup>29</sup> [***48] Mr. Hayden, the president and principal stockholder of Shopping Bag, was advanced in years and was concerned over the absence of a strong management staff that could take over his responsibilities.

<sup>30</sup>Von's was a considerably more successful competitor than Shopping Bag. Shopping Bag's net income as a percentage of total sales declined from 1.6% in 1957 to 0.9% in 1959, and its net profit as a percentage of total assets declined from 6.6% to 3.2%. During the same period, the net income of Von's increased from 2.1% to 2.3%, and its net profits declined from 12.7% to 10.8%.

<sup>31</sup>One single-store operator, located adjacent to one supermarket and within a mile of two others, testified, "I have often been asked if I could compete successfully against this sort of competition. My answer is and always has been that the question is not whether I can compete against them, but whether they can compete against me."

Another single-store operator testified, "Competition in the grocery business is on a store-by-store basis and any aggressive and able operator like myself can out-compete the store of any of the chains because of personalized service, better labor relations, and being in personal charge of the store and seeing that it is run properly."

A third single-store operator testified, "The chains in this area are good operators, but when they grow too large, they are actually easier to compete with from an independent's viewpoint. If I had a choice, I would rather operate a store near a chain unit than near another independent."

<sup>32</sup> [***50] See generally Staff Report to the Federal Trade Commission, Economic Inquiry Into Food Marketing, Part I, Concentration and Integration in Retailing, c. VI, "Retailer-owned Cooperative Food Wholesalers"; c. VII, "Wholesaler-sponsored Voluntary Retail Groups" (1960). The annual sales of Certified Grocers of California, Ltd., a retailer-owned cooperative whose members do business principally in the Los Angeles area, rose fourfold from $ 87,000,000 in 1948 to $ 345,000,000 in 1962, of these cooperative organizations has introduced a significant new source of countervailing power against the market power of the chain stores, without in any way sacrificing the advantages of independent operation. In the face of [*300] the substantial assistance available to independents through membership in such cooperatives, the Court's implicit equation between the market power and the market share resulting from the present merger seems completely invalid.

HÌ ÁWÈJÈG €EAGJLÀ Ì ÁUÈOÉFI Ì ÉAFI JI LÀ Ì ÁSEÒAÉCAÁ Ì ÉAFI Ì LAFJÌ Ì ÁWÈJÈSÓYÓG GÀÉÉÍ €

Moreover, it is clear that there are no substantial barriers [****51] to market entry. The record contains references to numerous highly successful instances of entry with modest initial investments. Many of the stores opened by new entrants were obtained through the disposition of unwanted outlets by chains; frequently the new competitors were themselves chain-store executives who had resigned to enter the market on their own. Enhancing [**1495] free access to the market is the absence of any such restrictive factors as patented technology, trade secrets, or substantial product differentiation.

Numerous other factors attest to the pugnacious level of grocery competition in Los Angeles, all of them silently ignored by the Court in its emphasis solely on the declining number of single-store competitors in the market. Three thousand five hundred and ninety single-store firms is a lot of grocery stores. The large number of separate competitors and the frequent price battles between them belie any suggestion that price competition in the area is even remotely threatened by a descent to the sort of consciously interdependent pricing that is characteristic of a market turning the corner toward oligopoly. The birth [***575] of dynamic new competitive [****52] forces -- discount food houses and food departments in department stores, bantams and superettes, deli-liquor stores and drive-in dairies -- promises unremitting competition in the future. In the more than four years following the merger, the District Court found not a shred of evidence that competition had been in any way impaired by the merger. Industry witnesses testified overwhelmingly [*301] to the same effect. By any realistic criterion, retail food competition in Los Angeles is today more intense than ever.

The harsh standard now applied by the Court to horizontal mergers may prejudice irrevocably the already difficult choice faced by numerous successful small and medium-sized businessmen in the myriad smaller markets where the effect of today's decision will be felt, whether to expand by buying or by building additional facilities.<sup>33</sup> And by foreclosing future sale as one attractive avenue of eventual market exit, the Court's decision may over the long run deter new market entry and tend to stifle the very competition it seeks to foster.

[***53] In a single sentence and an omnibus footnote at the close of its opinion, the Court pronounces its work consistent with the line of our decisions under § 7 since the passage of the 1950 amendment. The sole consistency that I can find is that in litigation under § 7, the Government always wins. The only precedent that is even within sight of today's holding is U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321. In that case, in the interest of practical judicial administration, the Court proposed a simplified test of merger illegality: "We think that a merger which produces a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market, is so inherently likely to lessen competition substantially that it must be enjoined in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anticompetitive effects." U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, supra, at 363.<sup>34</sup> The merger [*302] between Von's and Shopping and the volume of its purchases exceeded that of all but the largest national chains doing business in Los Angeles. Most of the leading chains in the area began development in association with Certified Grocers, called the "mother" of the industry. In some cases the cooperatives were able to offer even lower prices to their members than competing chains could obtain. The District Court found that the cooperatives also provided their members with assistance in merchandising, advertising, promotions, inventory control, and even the financing of new entry.

<sup>33</sup> See Bok, Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the Merging of Law and Economics, 74 Harv. L. Rev. 226, 302-303 (1960).

<sup>34</sup> In a footnote, the Court emphasized the corollary principle that, "if concentration is already great, the importance of preventing even slight increases in concentration and so preserving the possibility of eventual deconcentration is correspondingly great." U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 365, n. 42. That corollary, of course, has no application here, since the Los Angeles retail grocery market can in no sense be characterized as one in which "concentration is already great." Compare United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271; United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441. The importance of a trend toward concentration in the particular industry in question was recognized in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370

HÌ ÁMÈJÈG ËÁHÈGLÀ Ì ÁMÈDÉFÌ Ì ÁMÈFÌ JÌ LÀ Ì ÁMÈOÀÈCA ÁÌ Ì ÁMÈFÌ Ì LÀFJÌ Ì ÁMÈJÈSÓYÓGÌ GÌÁHÈLÌ H

[**1496] Bag produced a firm with 1.4% of the grocery stores and 7.5% of grocery sales in Los Angeles, and resulted in an [****54] increase of 1.1% in the market share enjoyed by the two largest firms in the market and 3.3% in the market share of the six largest firms. The former two figures are hardly the "undue percentage" of the market, nor are the latter [***576] two figures the "significant increase" in concentration, that would make this merger inherently suspect under the standard of Philadelphia Nat. Bank. Instead, the circumstances of the present merger fall far outside the simplified test established by that case for precisely the sort of merger here involved.<sup>35</sup>

[****56] [*303] The tests of illegality under § 7 were "intended to be similar to those which the courts have applied in interpreting the same language as used in other sections of the Clayton Act." H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 8. In Philadelphia Nat. Bank, the Court was at pains to demonstrate that its conclusion was consistent with cases under § 3 of the Clayton Act. See U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 365-366. The Court disdains any such effort today. Untroubled by the language of § 7, its legislative history, and the cases construing either that section or any other provision of the antitrust laws, the Court grounds its conclusion solely on the impressionistic assertion that the Los Angeles retail food industry is becoming "concentrated" because the number of single-store concerns has declined.

[*304] The emotional impact of a merger between the third and sixth largest competitors in a given market, however fragmented, is understandable, but that impact cannot substitute for the analysis of the effect of the merger on competition that Congress required by the 1950 amendment. Nothing in the present record indicates [****57] that there is more than an ephemeral possibility that the effect of this merger may be substantially to lessen competition. Section 7 clearly takes "reasonable probability" as its standard. That standard has not been met here, and I would therefore affirm the judgment of the District Court.

References

---

Annotation References:

Construction, by Supreme Court of the United States, of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), dealing with acquisition by one corporation of stock of another. 14 L ed 2d 784.

Right of one corporation to acquire stock in another as affected by the anti-trust acts. 74 L ed 431.

---

U.S. 294, 332. See also Pillsbury Mills, Inc., 50 F. T. C. 555, 572-573; United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F.Supp. 576, 604-607 (D. C. S. D. N. Y.); U.S. Atty. Gen. Nat. Comm. to Study the Antitrust Laws, Report 124 (1955).

<sup>35</sup> [****55] As a result of the merger, the market share of the two largest firms increased from 14.4% to 15.5%, and the share of the six largest firms increased from 32.1% to 35.4%. The merger involved in Philadelphia Nat. Bank produced a single firm controlling 30% of the market, and resulted in an increase from 44% to 59% in the market share of the two largest firms in the market. The Court's opinion is remarkable for its failure to support its conclusion by reference to even a single piece of economic theory. I shall not dwell here on the barometers of competition that have been suggested by the commentators. But it seems important to note that the present merger falls either outside, or at the very fringe, of the various mechanical tests that have been proposed. See, e. g., Kayser & Turner, Antitrust Policy 133-136 (1959) (horizontal merger with direct competitor is prima facie unlawful where acquiring company accounts for 20% or more of the market, or where merging companies together constitute 20% or more of the market; acquisitions producing less than 20% market control unlawful only where special circumstances are present, such as serious barriers to entry or substantial influence on prices by the acquired company); Stigler, Mergers and Preventive Antitrust Policy, 104 U. Pa. L. Rev. 176, 179-182 (1955) (acquisition unlawful if it produces a combined market share of 20% or more; acquisition permitted if the combined share is less than 5-10%); Bok, Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the Merging of Law and Economics, 74 Harv. L. Rev. 226, 308-329 (1960) (no merger by the dominant firm in an industry if its market share is increased by more than 2-3%; no merger by other large firms in the industry where the combined market shares of the two-to-eight largest firms after the merger are increased by 7-8% or more over the shares that existed at any time during the preceding 5-10 years; no merger where acquired firm has 5% market share or more). See also Markham, Merger Policy Under the New Section 7: A Six-Year Appraisal, 43 Va. L. Rev. 489, 521-522 (1957). The 40% rule promoted by the concurring opinion in the present case seems no more than an ad hoc endeavor to rationalize the holding of the Court.

HÌ ÁMỀUËG CEEHE LÀ Í ÁMỀOËFI Ì ËIFI JÌ LÁFÍ ÁSEØAËCAÁ Í Í Í LÁFJ Ì ÁMỀEÅØYØAG GÅÆÍ

---

End of Document

FTC v. Brown Shoe Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

April 25, 1966, Argued ; June 6, 1966, Decided

No. 118

Reporter

384 U.S. 316 *; 86 S. Ct. 1501 **; 16 L. Ed. 2d 587 ***; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2948 ****; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,785

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. BROWN SHOE CO., INC.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 339 F.2d 45, reversed.

Core Terms

---

shoes, unfair, franchise, dealers, retail, customers, franchise agreement, practices, declare, Federal Trade Commission Act, competitors, lines

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > Unfair Competition & Practices

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

HN1[] Public Enforcement, US Federal Trade Commission Actions

Section 5(a)(6) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 45 \(a\)\(6\), empowers and directs the Federal Trade Commission to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 45\(a\)\(6\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > Federal Trade Commission Act

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > Unfair Competition & Practices

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

HÌ I ÁMÈJÈAFÌ ÙHÌ LÀ I ÁMÈDÒAFÌ EFLAFÌ ÆSEÒAÈGÀÁ I Ì ÙHÌ I Ì LAFJÌ I ÁMÈÈSÓYÒAGJÌ ÙHÌ

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN2 [] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, Federal Trade Commission Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 45\(a\)\(1\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

HN3 [] US Federal Trade Commission Actions, Remedial Powers

The Federal Trade Commission (Commission) has broad powers to declare trade practices unfair. This broad power of the Commission is particularly well established with regard to trade practices which conflict with the basic policies of the Sherman and Clayton Acts even though such practices may not actually violate these laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > Federal Trade Commission Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

HN4 [] Remedial Powers, Federal Trade Commission Act

The Federal Trade Commission has power under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15. U.S.C.S. § 45, to arrest trade restraints in their incipiency without proof that they amount to an outright violation of § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, or other provisions of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN5 [] US Federal Trade Commission Actions, Remedial Powers

The Federal Trade Commission acted well within its authority in declaring a franchise program unfair whether it was completely full blown or not.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The Federal Trade Commission enjoined a large manufacturer of shoes from entering into franchise contracts with retail shoestore operators which obligated the manufacturer to give to the dealer, but not to the manufacturer's

HÌ I ÁMÈJÈAFÌ ÙHÌ LÀ I ÁMÈDÒAFÌ EFLAFÌ ÆSEÒaÈGÀÁ I Ì ÙHÌ I Ì LAFJÌ I ÁMÈÈSÓYÓAGJÌ ÙHÌ

other customers, valuable services, and in return required the dealers not to purchase conflicting lines of shoes from the manufacturer's competitors. On review, the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit set aside the Commission's order on the ground that the manufacturer's practice was not an unfair method of competition in violation of 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. \(339 F2d 45.\)

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed. In an opinion by Black, J., expressing the unanimous view of the Court, it was held that the Commission acted well within its authority in declaring the manufacturer's franchise program unfair.

Headnotes

---

PRACTICES §56 > order of FTC -- review of findings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

A general conclusionary statement--made by a Court of Appeals in setting aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission which enjoined, as an unfair method of competition, a shoe manufacturer's entering into franchise contracts with retail shoestores requiring them not to purchase conflicting lines of shoes from competitors--that there was a complete failure to prove an exclusive dealing agreement which might be held violative of 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45) cannot be treated by the Supreme Court of the United States as intended to be a rejection of the Commission's findings of fact, where neither this statement nor any other statement in the opinion of the Court of Appeals indicates a purpose to hold that the evidence failed to show an exclusive dealing agreement as alleged in the complaint of the Commission, and moreover the crucial facts were admitted in the manufacturer's formal answer to the complaint.

PRACTICES §48 > unfair methods of competition -- powers of FTC -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Subject to judicial review, the Federal Trade Commission has power to find a shoe manufacturer guilty of an unfair method of competition in violation of 5(a)(6) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45 \(a\)\(6\)) upon a record showing that the manufacturer admitted to have entered into exclusive franchise agreements with a substantial number of retail shoestore operators and that the trial examiner found that the manufacturer's franchise program effectively foreclosed its competitors from selling to a substantial number of retail shoe dealers.

PRACTICES §44 > powers of FTC -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The Federal Trade Commission has broad powers to declare trade practices unfair, including trade practices which conflict with the basic policies of the Sherman (15 USC 1 et seq.) and Clayton (15 USC 14) Acts, even though such practices may not actually violate these laws.

HÌ I ÁMÈJÈNÌ ÙHÌ LÀ I ÁMÈDÒJÌ ËFLAFÌ ÆSEÒAÈGÀÁ I Ì ÙHÌ I Ì LÀJÌ I ÁMÈÈSÓYÓÁGÌI I ÙHÌ

MONOPOLIES §54 > PRACTICES §48 > exclusive franchise agreements -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

A shoe manufacturer's program of making exclusive franchise agreements with retail shoestore operators requiring them not to purchase conflicting lines of shoes from the manufacturer's competitors, while conflicting with the central policy of both 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1) and 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 14) against contracts which take away freedom of purchasers to buy in an open market, can be enjoined under 3 of the Clayton Act only upon proof by the government that the effect of the program may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly; however, no such proof is necessary where the government proceeds to enjoin this program as an unfair method of competition under 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45).

PRACTICES §44 > powers of FTC -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Under 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45), dealing with unfair methods of competition and unfair trade practices, the Federal Trade Commission has power to arrest trade restraints in their incipiency without proof that they amount to an outright violation of 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 14) or other provisions of the antitrust laws.

PRACTICES §43 > Trade Commission Act -- function -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The Federal Trade Commission Act is designed to supplement and bolster the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act by stopping incipient acts and practices which when full blown would violate those acts, as well as to condemn as "unfair methods of competition" existing violations of them.

PRACTICES §48 > unfair methods of competition -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

The Federal Trade Commission acts well within its authority in declaring that a shoe manufacturer's franchise program is an unfair method of competition violating 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45), where under that program the manufacturer entered into franchise contracts with retail shoestore operators which obligated the manufacturer to give to the dealer, but not to the manufacturer's other customers, valuable services, and in return require the dealers not to purchase conflicting lines of shoes from the manufacturer's competitors.

Syllabus

---

The FTC filed a complaint against respondent, the country's second largest shoe manufacturer, under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, charging unfair trade practices by the use of a "Franchise Stores Program" through which respondent sells its shoes to more than 650 retail stores. In return for special benefits from Brown Shoe Company, the franchise stores agree to buy Brown shoe lines and to refrain from buying competitive lines. After hearings the FTC concluded that the restrictive contract program was an unfair method of competition and ordered

HÌ I ÁMÈJÀNÌ ÊHÌ LÀ I ÁMÈDÒJÌ EFLAFÌ ÁSEÒAÈGÀÁ I Ì ÊHÌ I Ì LÀJÌ I ÁMÈÈSÓYÓGJÌ I ÊHÌ

respondent to cease and desist from its use. The Court of Appeals set aside the FTC's order, holding that there was "complete failure to prove an exclusive dealing agreement" violative of § 5 of the Act. Held: The FTC acted well within its authority under the Act in declaring respondent's franchise program an unfair trade practice. Pp. 319-322.

(a) On this record the FTC has power to find [***2] such anticompetitive practice unfair. Federal Trade Comm'n v. Gratz, 253 U.S. 421, relied on by the Court of Appeals, has been rejected by this Court. Pp. 320-321.

(b) The franchise program conflicts with the policy of § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act against contracts which remove freedom of purchasers to buy in an open market. P. 321.

(c) Under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act the FTC has power to arrest restraints of trade in their incipiency without proof that they are outright violations of § 3 of the Clayton Act or other antitrust provisions. F. T. C. v. Motion Picture Adv. Co., 344 U.S. 392, 394-395. Pp. 321-322.

Counsel: Ralph S. Spritzer argued the cause for petitioner. On the brief were Solicitor General Marshall, Assistant Attorney General Turner, Robert S. Rifkind, Howard E. Shapiro, Milton J. Grossman, James McL. Henderson, Thomas F. Howder and Gerald J. Thain.

Robert H. McRoberts argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Gaylord C. Burke and Edwin S. Taylor.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Fortas

Opinion by: BLACK

Opinion

---

[*317] [*589] [***3] [**1502] MR. JUSTICE BLACK delivered the opinion of the Court.

Section 5 (a)(6) of the Federal Trade Commission Act HN1 [↑] empowers and directs the Commission "to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations . . . from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce." <sup>1</sup> [***6] Proceeding under the authority of § 5, the Federal Trade Commission filed a complaint against the Brown Shoe Co., Inc., one of the world's largest manufacturers of shoes with total sales of $ 236,946,078 for the year ending October 31, 1957. The unfair practices charged against Brown revolve around the "Brown Franchise Stores' Program" through which Brown sells its shoes to some 650 retail stores. The complaint alleged that under this plan Brown, a corporation engaged in interstate commerce, had "entered into contracts or franchises with a substantial number of its independent retail shoe store operator customers which require said customers to restrict their purchases of shoes for resale to the Brown lines and which prohibit them from purchasing, stocking or reselling shoes manufactured by competitors of Brown." Brown's customers who entered into these restrictive [***4] franchise agreements, so the complaint charged, were given in return special treatment and valuable benefits which were not granted to Brown's customers who [*318] did not enter into the agreements. In its answer to the Commission's complaint Brown admitted that approximately 259 of its retail customers had executed written franchise agreements and that over 400 others had entered into its franchise program without execution of the franchise agreement. Also in its answer Brown attached as an exhibit an unexecuted copy of the "Franchise Agreement" which, when executed by Brown's representative and a retail shoe dealer, obligates Brown to give to the dealer but not to other customers certain valuable services, including among

---

<sup>1</sup> 38 Stat. 719, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 45 \(a\)\(6\) \(1964 ed.\).

Section 5 (a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act provides that HN2 [↑] "Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are declared unlawful."

HÌ I ÁMÈJÈNÌ ÙHÌ LÀ I ÁMÈDÒAFÍ CFÁAFÍ EGLAFÍ ÁSEÒAÈGÀÁ I Ì ÙHÌ I JLAJÌ I ÁMÈSÓYÓAGJ I ÙHÌ

others architectural plans, costly merchandising records, services of a Brown field representative, and a right to participate in group insurance at lower rates than the dealer could obtain individually. In return, according to the franchise agreement set out in Brown's answer, the retailer must make this promise:

"In return I will:

"1. Concentrate my business within the grades and price lines of shoes [**1503] representing Brown Shoe Company Franchises [****5] of the Brown [***590] Division and will have no lines conflicting with Brown Division Brands of the Brown Shoe Company."

Brown's answer further admitted that the operators of "such Brown Franchise Stores in individually varying degrees accept the benefits and perform the obligations contained in such franchise agreements or implicit in such Program," and that Brown refuses to grant these benefits "to dealers who are dropped or voluntarily withdraw from the Brown Franchise Program . . . ." The foregoing admissions of Brown as to the existence and operation of the franchise program were buttressed by many separate detailed fact findings of a trial examiner, one of which findings was that the franchise program [*319] effectively foreclosed Brown's competitors from selling to a substantial number of retail shoe dealers.<sup>2</sup> Based on these findings and on Brown's admissions the Commission concluded that the restrictive contract program was an unfair method of competition within the meaning of § 5 and ordered Brown to cease and desist from its use.

On review the Court of Appeals set aside the Commission's order. In doing so the court said:

"By passage of the Federal Trade Commission Act, particularly § 5 thereof, we do not believe that Congress meant to prohibit or limit sales programs such as Brown Shoe [****7] engaged in in this case. . . . The custom of giving free service to those who will buy their shoes is widespread, and we cannot agree with the Commission that it is an unfair method of competition in commerce." 339 F.2d 45, 56.

LEdHN[1]↑ [1]LEdHN[2]↑ [2]In addition the Court of Appeals held that there was a "complete failure to prove an exclusive dealing agreement which might be held violative of § 5 of the Act." We are asked to treat this general conclusion as though the court intended it to be a rejection of the Commission's findings of fact. We cannot do this. Neither this statement of the court nor any other statement in the [*320] opinion indicates a purpose to hold that the evidence failed to show an agreement between Brown and more than 650 franchised dealers which restrained the dealers from buying competing lines of shoes from Brown's competitors. Indeed, in view of the crucial admissions in Brown's formal answer to the complaint we cannot attribute to the Court of Appeals a purpose to set aside the Commission's findings [****8] that these restrictive agreements existed and that Brown and most of the franchised dealers in varying degrees lived up to their obligations. Thus the question we have for decision is whether the Federal Trade Commission can declare it to be an unfair practice for Brown, the second largest manufacturer of shoes in the Nation, to pay a valuable consideration to hundreds of retail [***591] shoe purchasers in order to secure a contractual promise from them that they will deal primarily with Brown and will not purchase conflicting lines of shoes from Brown's competitors. We hold that the Commission has power to find, on the record here, such an anticompetitive [**1504] practice unfair, subject of course to judicial review. See Atlantic Rfg. Co. v. FTC, 381 U.S. 357, 367.

---

<sup>2</sup> In its opinion the Commission found that the services provided by Brown in its franchise program were the "prime motivation" for dealers to join and remain in the program; that the program resulted in franchised stores purchasing 75% of their total shoe requirements from Brown -- the remainder being for the most part shoes which were not "conflicting" lines, as provided by the agreement; that the effect of the plan was to foreclose retail outlets to Brown's competitors, particularly small manufacturers; and that enforcement of the plan was effected by teams of field men who called upon the shoe stores, urged the elimination of other manufacturers' conflicting lines and reported deviations to Brown who then cancelled under a provision of the agreement. Compare Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294.

HÌ I ÁMÈJÈHÌ ÙHGELÀ I ÁMÈDÒJÌ ËFÀEFÌ ËLAFÌ ÁSEÒAÈGÀÁ I Ì ÙHE JFLÁJÌ Í ÁMÈÈSÓYÓ/GJÌ I ÙHE

[\[1\]](#) [3][\[2\]](#) [3][\[4\]](#) [4][\[5\]](#) [5][\[6\]](#) [6][\[7\]](#) [7]In holding [***9] that the Federal Trade Commission lacked the power to declare Brown's program to be unfair the Court of Appeals was much influenced by and quoted at length from this Court's opinion in Federal Trade Comm'n v. Gratz, 253 U.S. 421. That case, decided shortly after the Federal Trade Commission Act was passed, construed the Act over a strong dissent by Mr. Justice Brandeis as giving the Commission very little power to declare any trade practice unfair. Later cases of this Court, however, have rejected the Gratz view and it is now recognized in line with the dissent of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Gratz that HN3 the Commission has [*321] broad powers to declare trade practices unfair.<sup>3</sup> This broad power of the Commission is particularly well established with regard to trade practices which conflict with the basic policies of the Sherman and Clayton Acts even though such practices may not actually violate these laws.<sup>4</sup> The record in this case shows beyond doubt that Brown, the country's second largest manufacturer of shoes, has a program, which requires shoe retailers, unless faithless to their contractual obligations with Brown, substantially to limit their trade [***10] with Brown's competitors. This program obviously conflicts with the central policy of both § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act against contracts which take away freedom of purchasers to buy in an open market.<sup>5</sup> [***12] Brown nevertheless contends that the Commission had no power to declare the franchise program unfair without proof that its effect "may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly" [*322] which of course would have to be proved if the Government were proceeding against Brown under § 3 of the Clayton Act rather than § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. We reject the argument that proof of this § 3 element must be made for as we [***592] pointed out above our cases<sup>6</sup> hold that HN4 the Commission has power under § 5 to arrest trade restraints in their incipiency without proof that they amount to an outright violation of § 3 of the Clayton Act or other provisions of the antitrust laws. This power of the Commission was emphatically stated in F. T. C. v. Motion Picture Adv. Co., 344 U.S. 392, at pp. 394-395:

"It is . . . clear that the Federal Trade Commission Act was designed to supplement and bolster [***11] the Sherman [**1505] Act and the Clayton Act . . . to stop in their incipiency acts and practices which, when full blown, would violate those Acts . . . as well as to condemn as 'unfair methods of competition' existing violations of them."

We hold that the HN5 Commission acted well within its authority in declaring the Brown franchise program unfair whether it was completely full blown or not.

Reversed.

References

---

Annotation References:

---

<sup>3</sup> See, e. g., Federal Trade Comm'n v. R. F. Keppel & Bro., Inc., 291 U.S. 304, 310; Trade Comm'n v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 693; Atlantic Rfg. Co. v. FTC, 381 U.S. 357, 367.

<sup>4</sup> See, e. g., Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n, 312 U.S. 457, 463; Atlantic Rfg. Co. v. FTC, 381 U.S. 357, 369.

<sup>5</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 1 \(1964 ed.\), declares illegal "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations . . .".

Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 14 \(1964 ed.\), provides in relevant part:

"It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce . . . to . . . make a . . . contract for sale of goods . . . for . . . resale within the United States . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the . . . purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods . . . of a competitor or competitors of the . . . seller, where the effect of such . . . condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

<sup>6</sup> See cases cited in note 4, supra.

HÌ I ÁWÈJÀNÌ ËHGLÀ I ÁWÈOĐÍ EFÄFFÍ ËI LÀI ÁSEØAËCAÁ I Ì ËHJÍ JGLÄFJÌ I ÁWÈESØYØAGJÌ I ËHFFF

Validity and construction of statute creating Federal Trade Commission. 6 ALR 366, 11 ALR 797, 18 ALR 549, 30 ALR 1129, 32 ALR 792, 51 ALR 331, 68 ALR 847, 79 ALR 1200.

What constitutes false, misleading, or deceptive advertising or promotional practices subject to action by Federal Trade Commission. 65 ALR2d 225.

Validity, under 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 14), of contract by purchaser of goods to take his entire requirements from the seller. 5 L ed 2d 1105.

Contract by one party to sell his entire output to or to take his entire requirements of a commodity from the other party as contrary to public policy or anti-monopoly statute . 83 ALR 1173.

Right to enjoin business competitor from illegal acts or practices. 90 ALR2d 7.

---

End of Document

FTC v. Dean Foods Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

March 28, 1966, Argued ; June 13, 1966, Decided

No. 970

Reporter

384 U.S. 597 *; 86 S. Ct. 1738 **; 16 L. Ed. 2d 802 ***; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2985 ****; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,788

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. DEAN FOODS CO. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 356 F.2d 481, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

court of appeals, merger, Writs, district court, injunction, proceedings, cases, preliminary injunction, enjoin, Clayton Act, appellate jurisdiction, preliminary relief, courts, acquisition, temporary, merits, orders, consummation, restraining, appeals, parties, administrative agency, appellate court, antitrust, decisions, vested, staff, authorization, vertical, milk

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > All Writs Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN1[] Writs, All Writs Act

The All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C.S. § 1651\(a\), empowers the federal courts to issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law. The exercise of this power is in the nature of appellate jurisdiction where directed to an inferior court, and extends to the potential jurisdiction of the appellate court where an appeal is not then pending but may be later perfected.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > General Overview

HÌ I ÁMÈJÀ JÌ ÈÈ JÌ LÀ I ÁMÈDÀFÌ HÌ ÈÈFÌ HÌ LÀFÌ ÁMÈOÀÈGÀÀ €GÀFÌ €GÀFÌ I ÁMÈÈSÓYÒÁGÌ I ÈÈFÌ

**HN2** Remedies, Writs

Where a case is within the appellate jurisdiction of the higher court a writ may issue in aid of the appellate jurisdiction which might otherwise be defeated.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > General Overview

**HN3** Remedies, Writs

The authority of the appellate court is not confined to the issuance of writs in aid of a jurisdiction already acquired by appeal but extends to those cases which are within its appellate jurisdiction although no appeal has been perfected.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Reviewable Agency Action

**HN4** Reviewability, Jurisdiction & Venue

There is a limited judicial power to preserve the court's jurisdiction or maintain the status quo by injunction pending review of an agency's action through the prescribed statutory channels. Such power has been deemed merely incidental to the courts' jurisdiction to review final agency action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > National Banks > Affiliates & Subsidiaries

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

**HN5** Jurisdiction, Exclusive Jurisdiction

HÌ I ÁMÈJÀ JÌ ÈÈ JÌ LÀ I ÀUÈDÒÁFÌ HÌ ÈÈFÌ HÌ LÀFÌ ÁSEÒAÈGÀ ÈGÀÈ ÈGÀJÌ I ÁMÈJÀSÓYÓÁGÌ I ÈÈFÌ

Section 11(c) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 21\(c\), gives exclusive jurisdiction to review final orders by the Federal Trade Commission against illegal mergers, on application of any person required by such order to cease and desist from any such violation, to the courts of appeals for any circuit within which such violation occurred or within which such person resides or carries on business. This grant includes the traditional power to issue injunctions to preserve the status quo while administrative proceedings are in progress and prevent impairment of the effective exercise of appellate jurisdiction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

**HN6** US Federal Trade Commission Actions, Remedial Powers

The ancillary power to bring contempt actions in the appropriate court of appeals when the court's enforcement orders were violated have always been treated as essential to the effective discharge of the Federal Trade Commission's responsibilities.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Legislative Controls > General Overview

**HN7** Separation of Powers, Legislative Controls

Courts do not draw the inference that an agency admits that it is acting upon a wrong construction by seeking ratification from Congress. Public policy requires that agencies feel free to ask legislation which will terminate or avoid adverse contentions and litigation. Courts do not construe such requests by government agencies and the resulting nonaction of the Congress as affirmative evidence of no authority.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The Federal Trade Commission, which had commenced administrative action to determine whether a merger of two companies violated 7 of the Clayton Act, applied to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction to maintain the status quo until it determined the legality of the merger, alleging that if the merger was allowed to be completed, an effective remedial order would be virtually impossible, and the Court of Appeals would be deprived of its appellate jurisdiction over final Commission orders. The Court of Appeals entered a temporary restraining order, but after a hearing for a preliminary injunction, dissolved the restraining order and dismissed the petition, on the ground that the Commission had no authority to institute the proceedings. (356 F2d 481.)

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed and remanded. In an opinion by Clark, J., expressing the views of five members of the Court, it was held that (1) the Court of Appeals had the power under the All Writs Act to issue a preliminary injunction upon a showing of the allegations in the Commission's petition, and (2) notwithstanding the absence of express statutory authority to request preliminary relief from a Court of Appeals under the All Writs Act, the Commission had standing to seek such relief under the circumstances alleged in the case at bar.

Fortas, J., joined by Harlan, Stewart, and White, JJ., dissented, expressing the view that the Commission had no power to seek a temporary injunction in any court, and that the Court of Appeals had no jurisdiction under the All Writs Act, or otherwise, with regard to such relief.

Headnotes

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §68 > injunction against merger -- power of Court of Appeals -- All Writs Act -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

A Court of Appeals has the power under the All Writs Act (28 USC 1651\(a\)), which authorizes the federal courts to issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law, to temporarily enjoin the consummation of a merger of two companies upon the Federal Trade Commission's application for an injunction to maintain the status quo until the Commission determined the legality of the merger in proceedings before the Commission attacking the merger as violative of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), upon a showing that an effective remedial order would be virtually impossible if the merger was allowed to be completed, thus rendering the enforcement of any final decree of divestiture futile and depriving the court of its appellate jurisdiction over final Commission orders.

APPEAL §1293 > dismissal of application for injunction -- considering allegations as true -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

The Supreme Court of the United States must take as true the allegations of the Federal Trade Commission's application to a Court of Appeals for a preliminary injunction against the consummation of a merger, where the case comes to the Supreme Court from the lower court's dismissal on jurisdictional grounds.

COURTS §505 > All Writs Act -- appellate jurisdiction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The exercise of the power under the All Writs Act, which authorizes the federal courts to issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law (28 USC 1651\(a\)), is in the nature of appellate jurisdiction where directed to an inferior court, and extends to the potential jurisdiction of the appellate court where an appeal is not then pending but may be later perfected.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §68 > injunction against merger -- power of Courts of Appeals -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The grant of exclusive jurisdiction to the Courts of Appeals, under 11(c) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 21\(c\)), to review final orders by the Federal Trade Commission against illegal mergers on application of any person required by such an order to cease and desist from any such violation, includes the traditional power to issue injunctions to preserve the status quo while administrative proceedings are in progress and prevent impairment of the effective exercise of appellate jurisdiction.

HÌ I ÁMÈJÀ JÌ ÉÉ JÌ LÀ I ÁMÈDÀFÌ HÌ ÉÉFÌ HÌ LÀFÌ ÁMÈOÀÉGÀ ÁMÈGÀHÌ ÉGÀFJÌ I ÁMÈSÓYÓQ/GJÌ I ÉÉFÌ

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §70 > temporary injunction against merger -- Federal Trade Commission's power to seek -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B] [5B]

Notwithstanding the absence of an express statutory grant of authority to the Federal Trade Commission to request preliminary relief under the All Writs Act (28 USC 1651\(a\)), the Commission, which has been entrusted with the enforcement of the Clayton Act, has the incidental power to seek such preliminary relief from a Court of Appeals, which has jurisdiction to review final Commission action, where the Commission alleges that a temporary injunction against the merger of companies to maintain the status quo until the Commission determines the legality of the merger under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) is necessary to allow entry of an effective divestiture order and to insure effective judicial review; the fact that Congress had not acted on requests of the Commission for statutory authority to issue preliminary relief itself, or to proceed in the District Courts for such purpose, has no relevance, since Congress gave no attention to the exercise of judicial power by the Courts of Appeals under the All Writs Act, leaving that power intact and the standing of the Commission to invoke it undiminished.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §109 > PARTIES §3.5 > temporary injunction -- agency's power to seek -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Absent explicit direction from Congress, a federal agency charged with protecting the public interest can request that a Court of Appeals having jurisdiction to review administrative orders, exercise its express authority under the All Writs Act (28 USC 1651\(a\)) to issue such temporary injunctions as may be necessary to protect its own jurisdiction.

EVIDENCE §167 > inference -- Congressional intent -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

It cannot be inferred from the fact that Congress took no action on the Federal Trade Commission's request to grant the Commission or a District Court the power to issue a preliminary injunction against the merger of companies as violative of the Clayton Act that Congress thereby expressed an intent to circumscribe traditional judicial remedies.

Syllabus

---

Respondents, two substantial competitors in the sale of packaged milk in the Chicago area, signed a merger agreement following meetings with representatives of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) who indicated that the merger would raise serious questions under the antitrust laws. At the time of the merger one of the respondents was the third or fourth largest packaged milk distributor in the area, the other at least the second largest, and together they accounted for 23% of area sales of packaged milk. The FTC filed a complaint charging that the agreement violated § 7 of the Clayton Act and § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Thereafter the FTC, under the All Writs Act, 28 U. S. C. § 1651 \(a\), petitioned the Court of Appeals for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction to maintain the status quo until the FTC determined the merger's legality. The FTC alleged the probability of its [***2] finding an antitrust violation and that the need for injunctive relief was "compelling" since under the merger one of the respondents would no longer exist, its milk routes and certain of its plants and equipment would be sold and its remaining assets would be consolidated, precluding its restoration as a viable independent company if the merger were subsequently ruled illegal. The petition alleged that the Court of Appeals would consequently be deprived of its appellate jurisdiction over final FTC orders and the opportunity to enter a meaningful order of its own. The Court of Appeals on the hearing for a preliminary injunction dismissed the petition on the ground that the FTC had not entered a cease-and-desist order and had no authority to institute the proceeding, Congress having failed to enact bills introduced for such a purpose. The contract was then closed. MR. JUSTICE CLARK on application issued a preliminary injunction against material corporate changes in the acquired company and subsequently this Court granted certiorari. Held:

HÌ I ÁMÈJÀ JÌ ÉÉ JÌ LÀ I ÁMÈDÀFÌ HÌ ÉÉFÌ HÌ LÀFÌ ÁMÈOÀÉGÀ ÁMÈGÀHÌ ÉGÀJÌ I ÁMÈSÓYÓQ/GÌ I ÉÉHG

1. The Court of Appeals has jurisdiction to issue a preliminary injunction to prevent consummation of the merger agreement upon a showing [***3] that an effective remedial order would otherwise be virtually impossible once the merger had been implemented, thus rendering a final divestiture decree futile. Pp. 603-605.

(a) The All Writs Act extends to the potential jurisdiction of an appellate court where an appeal is not then pending but may later be perfected. Pp. 603-604.

(b) The grant in § 11 (c) of the Clayton Act to courts of appeals of jurisdiction to review final orders of the FTC against illegal mergers on application of any person required thereby to cease and desist such violations includes the traditional power to preserve the status quo while administrative proceedings are in progress to prevent impairment of the effective exercise of appellate jurisdiction. Cf. Whitney Nat. Bank v. New Orleans Bank, 379 U.S. 411. Pp. 604-605.

2. The FTC, under the circumstances alleged in this case, has standing to seek preliminary relief under the All Writs Act. Pp. 605-612.

(a) It would stultify Congress' purpose in entrusting the FTC with enforcement of the Clayton Act and granting it the power to order divestiture if the FTC did not have the incidental power to ask the courts of appeals to [***4] exercise their authority under the All Writs Act. Pp. 606-612.

(b) The power of the courts of appeals to grant preliminary relief here derives from the All Writs Act, not the Clayton Act. P. 608.

(c) Congress' failure to enact proposals that the FTC be empowered itself to issue preliminary relief or to proceed in district courts for that purpose reflects no intent to circumscribe traditional judicial remedies. Pp. 608-611.

Counsel: Solicitor General Marshall argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the brief were Assistant Attorney General Turner, Richard A. Posner, Howard E. Shapiro and James McL. Henderson.

Hammond E. Chaffetz argued the cause for respondents and filed a brief for respondent Dean Foods Co.

L. Edward Hart, John Paul Stevens and Edward I. Rothschild filed a brief for respondent Bowfund Corp.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Fortas

Opinion by: CLARK

Opinion

---

[*599] [***804] [**1740] MR. JUSTICE CLARK delivered the opinion of the Court.

At issue here is the power of the Court of Appeals under the All Writs Act, 28 U. S. C. § 1651 (a) (1964 ed.), to temporarily enjoin the consummation of a [***5] merger that is under attack before the Federal Trade Commission as violative of § 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 18 (1964 ed.). This case arose on the application of the Commission for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction against respondents Dean Foods Company and Bowman Dairy Company to maintain the status quo until the Commission determined the legality of their merger. The Commission alleged that it had issued a complaint against respondents under § 7 of the Clayton Act and § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 719, as amended, 52 Stat. 111,

HÌ I ÁMÈJÀ JÌ ÈÉ JJLÀ I ÀUÈDÖÄFI HÌ ÈÉTFI I CLÄFI ÅSEÖAÈGÅÀ €GÄFI ÈI LÄJÌ I ÁMÈJÄSÖYÖÄGÌ I ÈÉTFI

15 U. S. C. § 45 (1964 ed.), and that from the facts underlying the complaint "it is probable that the Federal Trade Commission will enter an order finding a violation of these laws." The petition stated that there was a "compelling" need for preliminary relief since the "acquisition itself" will split Bowman in two -- Dean will acquire fixed assets, receivables and good will; Bowman will retain all cash, government and other marketable securities, and some real estate investments" for distribution to its stockholders.<sup>1</sup> In [***6] addition, it was alleged that Dean planned to dispose of most of Bowman's retail milk routes, certain of its plants and equipment, and to consolidate the remaining assets. The Commission thus argued that if the merger were [**805] allowed to be completed, "Bowman as an entity will no longer exist," and that it "will be 'extremely difficult and very probably impossible' [**600] to restore Bowman as "a viable independent" company if the merger were subsequently ruled illegal. In other words, consummation of the agreement would "prevent the Commission from devising, or render it extremely difficult for the Commission to devise, any effective remedy after its decision on the merits." As grounds for issuance of an extraordinary writ, the Commission asserted that the Court of Appeals "will, in effect, be deprived of its appellate jurisdiction [over final Commission orders] and of the opportunity to enter a meaningful final order of its own in respect to this acquisition, since the res in custodia legis -- Bowman -- will have vanished."

[***7] The Court of Appeals entered a temporary restraining order against respondents, as prayed. On the hearing for a preliminary injunction, however, it dissolved the temporary restraining order and dismissed the petition for the reasons that "no cease and desist order has been entered by the Commission relative to the subject matter in the case at bar and . . . we now hold that the Commission did not have authority to institute this proceeding in this court . . ." In its final judgment the Court of Appeals supported [**1741] its refusal to grant relief at the request of the Commission by reference to the fact that:

"in the 84th Congress and in the 89th Congress bills sponsored by the said Commission were introduced, which bills if enacted into law would have conferred upon the Commission such authority as it is attempting to exercise in the case now before this court, but that said measures were not enacted into law and Congress has not provided otherwise for bestowing this authority upon said Commission." 356 F.2d 481, 482.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A]

A few hours after the Court of Appeals entered its [***8] order on January 19, 1966, the contract was closed and Dean acquired legal title to Bowman's operating assets. [*601] Upon application by the Solicitor General on behalf of the Commission, MR. JUSTICE CLARK, after consulting the other members of this Court, entered a preliminary injunction on January 24, 1966, restraining respondents from making any material changes with respect to Bowman's corporate structure or the assets purchased. This order provided that Dean might sell Bowman's retail home delivery routes upon terms and conditions acceptable to the Commission, but that any milk supplied by Dean to the purchasers of the routes must continue to be delivered under the Bowman label and from former Bowman plants. We granted certiorari on February 18, 1966, 383 U.S. 901, and expedited consideration of this case. We conclude that the Court of Appeals erred and reverse its judgment.

I.

LEdHN[2] [↑] [2] Since the case comes to us from a dismissal on jurisdictional grounds we must take the allegations of the Commission's application for a preliminary injunction as true. We need not detail the facts [***9] further than to say that Dean and Bowman were substantial competitors in the sale of packaged milk in the Chicago area, one of the largest markets in the United States for packaged milk. On November 2, 1965, attorneys for Dean and Bowman [**806] met with representatives of the Commission to discuss a proposal by Dean to purchase all <sup>1</sup> Since consummation of the merger all assets of Bowman, with the exception of cash and marketable securities which were exempted from the purchase agreement, have been transferred to Dean. Bowman has ceased dairy operations and now acts as an investment fund, having received and invested the proceeds of the sale.

---

HÌ I ÁMÈJÀ JÌ ÈÈ ËFLÀ I ÁUÈDÀFÌ HÌ ÈÈFÌ I FLÀFÌ ÁSEÒAÈGÀ ÈGÀ ÈI LÀJÌ I ÁMÈJÀSÓYÓGÌ I ÈÈ of Bowman's plants and equipment, the Bowman name, all customer and supplier lists together with the benefit of their relationships, and various other assets, all of which were situated in the Chicago area. Bowman would consequently cease doing a dairy business there. It was emphasized that the inquiry was merely to ascertain the views of the staff of the Commission and not to secure a formal advisory opinion. After investigation, on December 3, 1965, the Commission's staff advised Dean's counsel that it believed the acquisition would raise serious questions under the [*602] antitrust laws, and that on the basis of existing information the staff would recommend that the Commission issue a complaint against the acquisition if consummated. After further meetings, Dean's counsel informed the Commission's staff on December 14, 1965, that the agreement [****10] had been signed. A week later the Commission issued a formal complaint charging that the agreement violated § 7 of the Clayton Act and § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It appears that at the time of the merger Dean was the third or fourth largest distributor of packaged milk in the Chicago area; Bowman was at least the second largest in that market; and together they enjoyed approximately 23% of the sales of packaged milk in the same area, while the four largest dairy companies had a 43% share thereof. Affidavits attached to the Commission's application alleged that between 1954 and 1965 the number of packaged milk sellers in the Chicago market had declined from 107 to 57, and that in the four months prior to the filing of the complaint four more firms had been eliminated by acquisitions. From these statistics it was concluded that the effect of Dean's acquisition of Bowman would be to substantially [**1742] lessen competition. We place in the margin the Commission's summation of its complaint.<sup>2</sup>

[***11] [*603] II.

LEdHN[3] [3]HN1 The All Writs Act, 28 U. S. C. § 1651 (a), empowers the federal courts to "issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law. [***807] " The exercise of this power "is in the nature of appellate jurisdiction" where directed to an inferior court, Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 193 (1832) (Marshall, C. J.), and extends to the potential jurisdiction of the appellate court where an appeal is not then pending but may be later perfected. Cf. Ex parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet. 634 (1833) (Marshall, C. J.). These holdings by Chief Justice Marshall are elaborated in a long line of cases, including McClellan v. Carland, 217 U.S. 268 (1910), where Mr. Justice Day held: "we think it the true rule that HN2 where a case is within the appellate jurisdiction of the higher court a writ . . . may issue in aid of the appellate jurisdiction which might otherwise [***12] be defeated . . ." At 280. And in Roche v. Evaporated Milk Assn., 319 U.S. 21 (1943), Chief Justice Stone stated that HN3 the authority of the appellate court "is not confined to the issuance of writs in aid of a jurisdiction already acquired by appeal but extends to those cases which are within its appellate jurisdiction although no appeal has been perfected." [*604] At 25. Likewise, decisions of this Court

---

<sup>2</sup> The Federal Trade Commission alleged:

- "(a) Actual or potential competition in the sale and distribution of packaged milk in the Chicago Area will be eliminated or prevented;
- "(b) Dean, a major competitive factor in the sale and distribution of packaged milk in the Chicago Area, will eliminate Bowman, another major competitive factor in the sale and distribution of packaged milk in the Chicago Area;
- "(c) Concentration in the sale and distribution of packaged milk in the Chicago Area will be increased and deconcentration will be prevented;
- "(d) The restraining influence on non-competitive behavior in the sale and distribution of packaged milk in the Chicago Area, which existed by reason of the independent operation of Bowman, will be eliminated;
- "(e) The acquisition will contribute to the over-all trend toward concentration in the sale and distribution of packaged milk in the United States . . . thereby tending to bring about the adverse competitive effects described [elsewhere in the complaint];
- "(f) The emergence or growth of smaller packaged milk companies in the Chicago Area will be retarded, discouraged or prevented;
- "(g) The members of the consuming public, in the Chicago Area and throughout the United States, will be denied the benefits of free and open competition in the sale and distribution of packaged milk."

HÍ ÁNÉJÆK JÍ ÆA E LA Í ÁUÆGÖRFI HÍ ÆAIFI I GLAFI ÁSEÐA ÆGA Á EGGRÍT ÆI LAJF Í ÁNÉJÆSÓY ÓLAGÚI I ÆAIFI

"have recognized HN4 a limited judicial power to preserve the court's jurisdiction or maintain the status quo by injunction pending review of an agency's action through the prescribed statutory channels. . . . Such power has been deemed merely incidental to the courts' jurisdiction to review final agency action . . ." Arrow Transp. Co. v. Southern R. Co., 372 U.S. 658, 671, n. 22 (1963). There the Court cited such authority as Scripps-Howard Radio, Inc. v. Federal Communications Comm'n, 316 U.S. 4 \(1942\); *West India Fruit & S. S. Co. v. Seatrain Lines, Inc., 170 F.2d 775 \(C. A. 2d Cir. 1948\); and Board of Governors v. Transamerica Corp., [184 F.2d 311 \(C. A. 9th \[\*\*\*\*13\] Cir.\), cert. denied, 340 U.S. 883 \(1950\)](#).*

LEdHN[4] [4]Section 11 (c) of the Clayton Act, as amended, 73 Stat. 243, 15 U. S. C. § 21 (c), HNS gives exclusive jurisdiction to review final orders by the Commission against illegal mergers, on application of "any person required by such order . . . to cease and desist from any such violation," to the courts of appeals "for any circuit within which such [**1743] violation occurred or within which such person resides or carries on business." This grant includes the traditional power to issue injunctions to preserve the status quo while administrative proceedings are in progress and prevent impairment of the effective exercise of appellate jurisdiction. Cf. Continental III. Nat. Bank v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 294 U.S. 648, 675 (1935). A recent case involving a similar statutory proceeding is dispositive of this issue. Whitney Nat. Bank v. New Orleans Bank, 379 U.S. 411 (1965), raised the [****14] question whether holding companies were "lawfully entitled" to operate subsidiary banks within Louisiana, a question we held should be determined in the first instance by the Federal Reserve Board. We further concluded that the Board should reconsider its initial approval of such a plan in light of [*605] an intervening Louisiana statute, and so gave the parties, who had sought review of the Board's order before the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, an opportunity to move that the case be remanded to the Board. It was noted that the [***808] Court of Appeals had authority "to issue such orders as will protect its jurisdiction pending final determination of the matter," at 415, and that § 1651 (a) empowered it to stay "the order of approval of the Federal Reserve Board pending final disposition of the review proceeding." At 425. In response to the argument that the stay would not be sufficient because the Comptroller of Currency nonetheless intended to issue a certificate to the bank, we stated that if "the Court of Appeals should find it necessary to take direct action to maintain the status quo and prevent the opening of the bank, it has ample power to do so" by [****15] an injunction against the applicants before the Federal Reserve Board themselves. At 426. Such action would be analogous to the relief requested here by the Commission.<sup>3</sup>

LEdHN[1B] [↑] [1B]

These decisions furnish ample precedent to support jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals to issue a preliminary injunction preventing the consummation of this agreement upon a showing that an effective remedial order, once the merger was implemented, would otherwise be virtually impossible, thus rendering the enforcement of any final decree of divestiture futile.

III.

[*****16] LEdHN[5A] [↑] [5A]

Dean and Bowman insist, however, that as a creature of statute the Commission may exercise only those functions delegated to it by Congress, and that Congress has [*606] failed to give the Commission express statutory authority to request preliminary relief under the All Writs Act.<sup>4</sup> [****18] But the Commission is a [**1744]

<sup>3</sup> Of course, the courts of appeals have traditionally framed § 1651 (a) writs in the form of compulsory injunctions aimed at private parties. E. g., Application of President & Directors of Georgetown College, 118 U. S. App. D. C. 80, 331 F.2d 1000, cert. denied, 377 U.S. 978 (1964). See Recent Cases, 77 Harv. L. Rev. 1539, 1542 (1964).

<sup>4</sup> For the proposition that the Commission must have express statutory authority to seek injunctions in the courts of appeals two cases are cited. The first, Humphrey's Executor v. United States, 295 U.S. 602 (1935), has no relevance to our problem. And the other, Federal Trade Comm'n v. Eastman Kodak Co., 274 U.S. 619, 623-625 (1927), even though apposite, has been repudiated. It held that in fashioning a final decree the Commission "exercises only the administrative functions delegated to it governmental agency to which Congress has entrusted, inter alia, the enforcement of the Clayton Act, granting it the power to order divestiture in appropriate cases. At the same time, Congress has given the courts of appeals jurisdiction to review final Commission action. It would stultify congressional purpose to say that the Commission did not have the incidental power to ask the courts of appeals to exercise their authority derived from the All Writs Act.<sup>5</sup> Indeed, [***809] the opinions [*607] in Arrow Transp. Co. and Whitney Nat. Bank necessarily recognized the standing of administrative agencies to seek such preliminary relief to ensure effective judicial review. Both decisions referred to Board of Governors v. Transamerica Corp., supra, [***17] where the Court of Appeals stayed a merger on application by the Federal Reserve Board. See also Public Utilities Comm'n v. Capital Transit Co., 94 U. S. App. D. C. 140, 214 F.2d 242 (1954), and West India Fruit & S. S. Co. v. Seatrain Lines, Inc., 170 F.2d 775, 779 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1948). There is no explicit statutory authority for the Commission to appear in judicial review proceedings, but no one has contended it cannot appear in the courts of appeals to defend its orders. Nor has it ever been asserted that the Commission could not bring contempt actions in the appropriate court of appeals when the court's enforcement orders were violated, though it has no statutory authority in this respect.  Such ancillary powers have always been treated as essential to the effective discharge of the Commission's responsibilities.

HÍ ÁNDEJÁ JÍ ŒÍ ËÍ LÀ Í ÁUÈÓDEÍ HÍ ËAÉFÍ || LAFÍ ÅSEØA ËCAÅ EGÅÆHÍ ËÍ LAFJÍ Í ÁNDEJÅSØY ØAGJÍ Í ÆAÉFÍ

[****19]

[*608] LEdHN[6] [6]It must be remembered that the courts of appeals derive their power to grant preliminary relief here not from the Clayton Act, but from the All Writs Act and its predecessors dating back to the first Judiciary Act of 1789. Congress has never restricted the power which the courts of appeals may exercise under that Act. Nor has it withdrawn from the Commission its inherent standing as a suitor to seek preliminary relief in courts of appropriate jurisdiction.<sup>6</sup> In the absence **1745 of explicit direction from Congress we have no basis to say that an agency charged with protecting the public interest cannot request that a court of appeals, having jurisdiction to review administrative orders, exercise its express authority under the All Writs Act to issue such temporary injunctions as may be necessary to protect its own jurisdiction.

by the Act," and, therefore, could not order divestiture of laboratories acquired through a stock purchase. This view was rejected in Pan American World Airways, Inc. v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 312-313, nn. 17-18 (1963), the Court holding that "the power to order divestiture need not be explicitly included in the powers of an administrative agency to be part of its arsenal of authority," citing Gilbertville Trucking Co. v. United States, 371 U.S. 115 (1962).

<sup>5</sup> Such a holding would especially interfere with the functions Congress has given the Commission in the merger field. As THE CHIEF JUSTICE stated in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294 (1962), the Congress "sought to assure the Federal Trade Commission and the courts the power to brake this force [business concentration] at its outset and before it gathered momentum." At 317-318. But without standing to secure injunctive relief, and thereby safeguard its ability to order an effective divestiture of acquired properties, the Commission's efforts would be frustrated. As MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS said in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 186 (1944):

"The acquisition of a competing theatre terminates at once its competition. . . . And where businesses have been merged or purchased and closed out it is commonly impossible to turn back the clock."

Here the plan of merger itself contemplates the sale of the acquired home delivery milk routes and certain milk plants. In addition, Bowman has retained its cash and securities, with the intention ultimately to distribute them to its stockholders. If consummation of the merger is not restrained, the restoration of Bowman as an effective and viable competitor will obviously be impossible by the time a final order is entered. This is not unusual. Administrative experience shows that the Commission's inability to unscramble merged assets frequently prevents entry of an effective order of divestiture. E. g., Ekco Products Co., Trade Reg. Rep. para. 16,879 (1964) (1963-1965 Transfer Binder), aff'd, 347 F.2d 745 (C. A. 7th Cir. 1965); Foremost Dairies, Inc., 60 F. T. C. 944, order modified per stipulation (C. A. 5th Cir. 1965) (Docket No. 18,815).

<sup>6</sup>Cf. Public Utilities Comm'n v. Capital Transit Co., 94 U. S. App. D. C. 140, 214 F.2d 242, 245 (1954), where the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit gave as one of its reasons for granting an injunction the fact that "the moving party in the litigation was the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, a governmental agency clothed by Congress with special responsibility in the matters involved."

HÍ ÁNÚEJÁ JÍ ÉSÉ Í LÁ Í ÁUÉO ÓAFÍ HÍ ÉAFÍ I Í LAFÍ ÁSEÓ ÓA ÉGÁ Á EGÁ ÉI ÚLAFJÍ ÁNÚEJÁSÓYÓWAGJÍ Í ÉAFÍJ

[****20] Respondents point -- as did the Court of Appeals -- to the fact that the Commission sought authority from the Eighty-fourth through the Eighty-ninth Congresses to grant preliminary injunctions itself or to [***810] proceed in the district court as the Department of Justice can under the Clayton Act.<sup>7</sup> [****21] Both former Chairman Gwynne and Chairman Dixon appeared in support of the measures,<sup>8</sup> and referred to Federal Trade Comm'n v. International [*609] Paper Co., 241 F.2d 372 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1956), which held the Commission had no standing to seek preliminary injunctions from the courts of appeals.<sup>9</sup> [****22] In addition, several Congressmen made statements regarding the need for statutory amendment.<sup>10</sup> However, no proposal was put before the Congress relating to the authority of the Commission to secure preliminary relief before the courts of appeals in accordance with § 1651 (a). The proposals concerned only the power of the Commission itself to issue preliminary relief or to proceed in the district courts for that purpose.

LEdHN7 [↑] [7]Congress neither enacted nor rejected these proposals; it simply did not act on them.<sup>11</sup> Even if it had, the legislation as proposed would have had no effect whatever on the power that Congress granted the courts by the All Writs Act. We cannot infer from the fact that Congress took no action at all on the request of the Commission [*610] to grant it or a district court power to enjoin a merger that Congress thereby expressed an intent to circumscribe traditional judicial remedies. Cf. Scripps-Howard Radio, Inc. v. Federal Communications Comm'n, 316 U.S. 4, 11 (1942). The decision in Wong Yang Sung v. McGrath, 339 U.S. 33 (1950), [****23] is apposite. Following an adverse decision in *Eisler v. ***17461 Clark*, 77 F.Supp. 610 (D. D. C. 1948), the Department of Justice asked Congress for legislation exempting the Immigration Service from the Administrative Procedure Act. 60 Stat. 237, 5 U. S. C. § 1001 (1964 ed.). As was the case here, the appropriate committees of both Houses reported the proposal favorably but Congress adjourned without taking any action. The Department nonetheless insisted in Wong Yang Sung that hearings in deportation cases did not have to conform to the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act. In [***811] his discussion of legislative history, Mr. Justice Jackson wrote for a unanimous Court that HNT [↑] "we will not draw the inference, urged by petitioner, that an agency admits that it is acting upon a wrong construction by seeking ratification from Congress. Public policy requires that agencies feel free to ask legislation which will terminate or avoid adverse contentions and litigations." At p. 47. This Court has consistently refused to construe [****24] such requests by government agencies and the <sup>7</sup> E. g., H. R. 9424 and S. 3341 and 3424, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. (1956); H. R. 49 and 1574, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. (1965).

<sup>8</sup> Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., ser. No. 15, p. 35 (1956); Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on S. 198, S. 721, S. 722 and S. 3479, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 42-45 (1958) (testimony of Chairman Gwynne). Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., ser. No. 5, pp. 85-86 (1961) (testimony of Chairman Dixon).

<sup>9</sup> They also directed attention to the denial of injunctive relief in Federal Trade Comm'n v. Farm Journal, Inc. (C. A. 3d Cir. 1955) (unreported). Both men failed to mention the contrary decision in Board of Governors v. Transamerica Corp., 184 F.2d 311 (C. A. 9th Cir.), cert. denied, 340 U.S. 883 (1950). In Ekco Products Co., Trade Reg. Rep. para. 16,879 (1964) (1963-1965 Transfer Binder), aff'd, 347 F.2d 745 (C. A. 7th Cir. 1965), Commissioner Elman stated that the question of the Commission's ability to obtain a preliminary injunction under the All Writs Act "has not been authoritatively answered." At 21,905, n. 10.

<sup>10</sup> Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on S. 198, S. 721, S. 722 and S. 3479, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 156-157 (1958) (testimony of Congressman Celler). Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., ser. No. 5, pp. 42-45 (1961) (statement of Congressman Patman).

<sup>11</sup> Cf. Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U.S. 106, 120 (1940), where it was said that to give weight to the nonaction of Congress was to "venture into speculative unrealities."

HÌ ÁMEÑA JÌ ÈÈ FELÀ Ì ÁUÈOÈFÌ HÌ ÈÈFÌ I Ì LÀI ÁSEÒAÈCAÀ EGÀÈÈ FFLAFJÌ Ì ÁMEÑASÓYÓAGJÌ Ì ÈÈEG

resulting nonaction of the Congress as affirmative evidence of no authority.<sup>12</sup> Thus, in United States v. du Pont & Co., 353 U.S. 586 (1957), MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN held:

"During the 35 years before this action was brought [in 1949], the Government did not invoke § 7 against vertical acquisitions. The Federal Trade Commission has said that the section did not apply to vertical acquisitions. See F. T. C., Report on [*611] Corporate Mergers and Acquisitions, 168 (1955), H. R. Doc. No. 169, 84th Cong., 1st Sess. Also, the House Committee considering the 1950 revision of § 7 stated that '... it has been thought by some that this legislation [the 1914 Act] applies only to the so-called horizontal mergers. . . .' H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 11. The House Report adds, however, that the 1950 amendment was purposed '... to make it clear that the bill applies to all types of mergers and acquisitions, vertical and conglomerate as well as horizontal . . .' (Emphasis added.)

"This Court has the duty to reconcile administrative interpretations with the broad antitrust policies laid down by [****25] Congress. . . . The failure of the Commission to act is not a binding administrative interpretation that Congress did not intend vertical acquisitions to come within the purview of the [1914] Act." At p. 590.

Despite the representations of the Commission that the 1914 Act did not apply to vertical mergers, its sponsorship of legislation to so enlarge its coverage, and the passage of the 1950 Act by the Congress for this purpose, this Court nonetheless held that the 1914 Act included vertical mergers from its very inception, and thus required du Pont to divest its interest in General Motors stock, which had been acquired in 1915.

LEdHN[5B] [↑] [5B]

[****26] It is therefore clear that the "proceedings" in the Congress with reference to the authority of the Commission itself to issue or apply to the district courts for the issuance of preliminary injunctions in merger cases have no relevance whatever to the question before us. In short, Congress gave no attention to the exercise of judicial power by the courts of appeals under the All Writs Act, leaving that power intact and the standing of the Commission to invoke it undiminished. We thus hold [*612] that the Commission has standing to seek preliminary relief from the Court of Appeals under the circumstances alleged. As stated earlier, we must take the allegations of the Commission as true, and so do not pass upon whether a preliminary injunction should be issued. That is for the Court of Appeals [**1747] to decide on remand, as it would decide any application to it for relief under the All Writs Act.

Reversed and remanded.

Dissent by: FORTAS

Dissent

---

[***812] MR. JUSTICE FORTAS, with whom MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, MR. JUSTICE STEWART and MR. JUSTICE WHITE join, dissenting.

The Court today decides that the courts of appeals must entertain original applications by the Federal [****27] Trade Commission for the issuance of preliminary injunctions to restrain mergers alleged to violate § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 18 \(1964 ed.\), pending proceedings before the Commission to determine whether such mergers violate that section.

In so deciding, the Court determines that the Commission -- an administrative agency with defined and circumscribed powers -- is authorized to seek such relief in the courts of appeals; and that the courts of appeals, under the All Writs Act, 28 U. S. C. § 1651 \(a\) \(1964 ed.\), have power to entertain the Commission's petition and to grant the injunctive relief.

---

<sup>12</sup> Cf. United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 348-349 (1963).

HÌ ÁWÈJÀ JÌ ÈÈ FGLÀ Ì ÁWÈOÈFÌ HÌ ÈÈFÌ I Ì LÀFÌ ÁSEÒaÈCAÀ EGÀÈÈ FGLAFJÌ Ì ÁWÈESÓYÓGJÌ Ì ÈÈHÈG

This decision cannot be supported. Not a single one of the prior decisions of this Court cited as authority sustains it, either specifically or indirectly, or by principle or analogy. No statute of the Congress can be appropriately summoned to the Court's aid. The plain, unmistakable intent of the Congress in defining the Commission's powers and the jurisdiction of the courts of appeals is that no such threshold injunctive power is available at the Commission's behest. The Act plainly and explicitly vests the governmental power [***28] to restrain and enjoin violations of the Act in the district courts, [*613] not in the court of appeals; and it plainly and explicitly empowers the United States attorneys "under the direction of the Attorney General" -- and not the Federal Trade Commission - - to institute such proceedings. 15 U. S. C. § 25 \(1964 ed.\).

Since 1956, the Federal Trade Commission has persistently requested the Congress to enact legislation giving the Commission itself the power to enjoin, or alternatively, to seek a district court order to enjoin mergers pending the outcome of the Commission's proceedings. Congress has just as persistently refused to do so.

Beginning in 1956, at least 37 bills have been introduced in the Congress, directed to providing the Commission with a threshold, temporary remedy. None has been enacted, despite the unequivocal statements of the three chairmen of the Commission who served during those years that the agency presently has no power to seek relief ancillary to its administrative proceedings. This Court now bestows what the Congress has withheld.

The statements in the Court's opinion indicating that its result is necessary unless we are [***29] to "stultify congressional purpose" fly in the teeth of the record, plainly written and repeatedly reiterated. Congress is keenly interested in enforcement of § 7. But it has demonstrated over and over again that it has no interest in arming the Commission with the power today conferred upon it. It created and equipped the Commission with administrative and quasi-judicial powers to serve a function quite distinct from that of a prosecutor or litigant. It has repeatedly declined the urgent request to revise the Commission's role and function. Indeed, Congress has refused to empower the Commission to ask for this relief in an otherwise suitable forum -- the district [***813] courts. But the Court today gives this agency, which Congress obviously regards as unsuitable for the purpose, power to resort to an unsuitable forum -- the courts of appeals -- for the same purpose.

[*614] The Commission, the Executive Branch of the Government, the Congress and all courts which have passed upon the point have until today proceeded on the expressed [**1748] premise that the Federal Trade Commission has no authority to seek such relief.<sup>1</sup> [***31] I have not found a single commentator [***30] in this much-

<sup>1</sup> See Federal Trade Comm'n v. International Paper Co., 241 F.2d 372 \(C. A. 2d Cir. 1956\); Federal Trade Comm'n v. Farm Journal, Inc. (C. A. 3d Cir. 1955). In In the Matter of A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. (F. T. C. Docket No. 6478), the Commission failed to obtain preliminary relief in the First Circuit, but did get respondent's commitment not to alter the status quo save on 30 days' notice. See A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. v. F. T. C., 301 F.2d 585 \(C. A. 3d Cir. 1962\).

The sole instance where injunctive relief was obtained is Board of Governors v. Transamerica Corp., 184 F.2d 311 \(C. A. 9th Cir. 1950\), cert. denied, 340 U.S. 883. In Transamerica the threatened action would have defeated the Board's jurisdiction entirely. The Board (whose role in § 7 enforcement is like the FTC's) argued both in the Court of Appeals and in opposition to the petition for certiorari, that if Transamerica were not restrained from disposing of stock holdings the legality of whose acquisition was in issue in the administrative proceedings, the effect under the pre-1950 version of § 7, as construed by this Court in Arrow-Hart & Hegeman Electric Co. v. F. T. C., 291 U.S. 587, would be to "oust the Board of its jurisdiction under Section 11 of the Clayton Act . . . [and to] defeat the exclusive jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals to enforce or affirm such order as the Board might make . . ." Government's Brief in Opposition in Transamerica Corp. v. Board of Governors (Nos. 322 and 323, October Term, 1950), at pp. 5, 8-9, 15. See also United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 339, n. 17, where Transamerica appears to have been distinguished from International Paper, supra, precisely on the ground that the writ there was necessary to protect the "jurisdiction" both of the agency and of the Court of Appeals -- a conventional use of the All Writs Act.

HÌ ÁÑEJÀ JÌ ÈÈ FI LÀ Í ÁÑEJÀ ÈÈ HÌ ÈÈ JÌ LÀ Í ÁÑEJÀ ÈÈ A ÄGÄÈÈ FHLÄFJÌ Í ÁÑEJÀ SÓYÓAGJÌ Í ÈÈ

discussed field of law who has suggested that the Commission has such authority, and none is cited in the Court's opinion or in the briefs of the parties.<sup>2</sup>

[*615] I can only assume that the majority is motivated by a desire to lend all assistance to the Federal Trade Commission in its administration of § 7. However commendable this motivation may be in general, it is here entirely misdirected. Indulgence in this generous spirit unjustifiably burdens the courts of appeals with a fact-finding duty which they are unable to perform; disrupts the statutory division of functions between the Commission and the Department of Justice; and deprives parties of the opportunity for fair and careful consideration of their proposals which is promised by our law, by the decisions of this Court and the economic needs of the Nation.

The Clayton [***32] Act contains specific and comprehensive enforcement provisions. There is no vacuum to be filled by ingenuity. There is no room for improvisation. The Act is fully armed with a triple arsenal. Enforcement powers with respect to mergers under § 7 are vested in the Department of Justice, the Federal Trade Commission and private persons who claim injury as a result of the merger. Both the Department [***814] of Justice and private litigants are authorized to seek injunctive relief in the district courts. But the role and function of the Federal Trade Commission is differently conceived.

The powers of the Commission and the manner of their exercise and of review and enforcement of Commission orders are set out in meticulous detail. Whenever the Commission "shall have reason to believe that any person is violating or has violated" § 7, it shall issue a complaint. The complaint is to be served upon "such person and the Attorney General." [**1749] The Attorney General may intervene in the Commission's proceeding. He may institute actions in the district court for injunctive relief. [*616] The Commission is to hold a hearing; testimony is to be taken; the Commission is [***33] to "make a report in writing"; and it is empowered to issue an order to cease and desist and to compel the respondent to "divest itself of the stock . . . or assets . . . held . . . contrary to the provisions of [§ 7]." 15 U. S. C. § 21 \(b\) \(1964 ed.\). (Emphasis supplied.) The respondent may obtain review of the order in an appropriate court of appeals in the manner and with the consequences meticulously defined in the Act, as hereinafter discussed.

There is no question -- I submit that there can be no question -- that Congress from the outset intended that the Federal Trade Commission should not have other or different or supplementary or additional power to enforce § 7.<sup>3</sup> [***35] The Commission was created in the same [*617] year that the Clayton Act was adopted. It was

<sup>2</sup> On the contrary, the common view is that such authority is entirely lacking. See, e. g., Kayser & Turner, Antitrust Policy 258 (1959); Duke, Scope of Relief Under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 63 Col. L. Rev. 1192, 1206, n. 85 (1963); Note, 79 Harv. L. Rev. 391, 404 (1965); Note, 40 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 771 (1965); Comment, 32 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 1297 (1957).

<sup>3</sup> The Court's opinion asserts, in alleged demonstration of the "ancillary powers" which have been inferred on the Commission's behalf, that it may bring "contempt actions in the appropriate court of appeals when the court's enforcement orders were violated, though it has no statutory authority in this respect." The Court errs. The Commission's powers in this respect are not "implied." The machinery by which the Commission procures compliance with its orders is, and always has been, spelled out by statute. Until 1959, one could with impunity violate an FTC Clayton Act order. Such an order was not final until the respondent sought judicial review and a Court of Appeals granted enforcement. Disobedience thereafter was a contempt of court. In the event the respondent did not seek review, the Commission was required to ascertain that he was violating its order and then proceed, pursuant to express statutory provision (15 U. S. C. § 21), to seek enforcement in the courts of appeals. See 28 U. S. C. § 2112 \(1964 ed.\), authorizing the courts of appeals to promulgate rules for enforcement proceedings; and see, e. g., 1st Cir. R. 16. Cf. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 70. A violation thereafter constituted contempt of court. The courts declined to infer any more convenient substitute for this three-step process. See Federal Trade Comm'n v. Henry Broch & Co., 368 U.S. 360, 365; Federal Trade Comm'n v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U.S. 470, 477-479.

The statute was amended in 1959. An FTC order under the Clayton Act is now final upon expiration of the time allowed respondent to seek judicial review. If he does not appeal the order and violates its terms after it becomes final, the Government may proceed, pursuant to statute (15 U. S. C. §§ 21 \(g\) and (l)), to seek civil penalties of up to $ 5,000 per violation.

In short, and contrary to the suggestion in the Court's opinion, the Commission's power to enforce compliance with its orders is and has been wholly statutory. Nothing has been left to implication.

HÌ I ÁÑEÜÄ JÍ ÈÈ FÌ LÀ I ÁÑEÖÄFÌ HÌ ÈÈFÌ I JLÁFÌ ÁÑEOåÅCAÀ EGÄÈÈ FI LAFJÌ I ÁÑEÜÅÓYÓAGJÌ I ÈÈHÌ supposed to be an expert, administrative agency. It was not intended to be a litigation arm of the United States except as its own final orders might be involved.<sup>4</sup> It was not intended to have power to seek or deliver the quick result, even in emergencies. This power, so far as the Government is concerned, was explicitly, carefully confined to the district courts on application [***34] of the [***815] United States attorney "under the direction of the Attorney General."

Section 15 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 25, expressly authorizes the Department of Justice to proceed in the district courts of the United States to obtain preliminary relief against allegedly unlawful mergers. Section 16 makes the same remedy available on application of private litigants. 15 U. S. C. § 26 \(1964 ed.\). Nowhere is such power given to the Commission. It would be incredible to suggest that this omission was an oversight -- or even an error. It was by design -- and, I suggest, by rational design.

The Commission was not intended to -- it has no power to -- it should not -- [**1750] make a judgment on the merits prior to notice and hearing. To sanction its doing so is to strike a devastating blow at the fundamental theory upon which the exercise of both prosecutorial and adjudicatory functions by an administrative agency is based. Cf. [*618] § 5 (c) of the [***36] Administrative Procedure Act of 1946, 5 U. S. C. § 1004 \(c\) \(1964 ed.\).

The Commission, prior to taking evidence and writing a report, is supposed to make only a very limited judgment: that there is "reason to believe" the law is being violated. But to obtain a preliminary injunction, it must -- without hearing the other side, and ordinarily merely on its staff's recommendation, necessarily based upon a quick exposure of the facts -- file affidavits or produce evidence with the calculated purpose of demonstrating to the court of appeals that consummation of the merger will have such adverse effects that it must be halted in limine. In fact, and in all realism, it must take positions and establish, with sufficient positiveness to overcome strenuous opposition, that the merger will tend substantially to lessen competition or create danger of monopoly, that it is harmful to the economy, immediately threatening in its consequences, and that it is unlawful. There must be Commission conclusions, not merely the views of the staff. Their assertion and necessarily stout advocacy make a mockery of a subsequent quasi-judicial proceeding in which the Commission [***37] is supposed objectively to consider the same issues on the basis solely of the record.

The clear design of the statute is that the authority to decide, on behalf of the Government, to seek the powerful remedy of preliminary injunction, and the power to do so, are vested in the Attorney General. That is his business -- his type of function. It is deliberately withheld from the Commission. That is not its business. The Commission is supposed to be an expert agency, acting deliberately, bringing to bear upon the complex economic problems of a merger, that judgment and experience which can emerge only from careful factual inquiry, the taking of evidence and the formulation of a report. The Federal Trade Commission was not intended [*619] to be a gun,<sup>5</sup> [***38] a carbon copy of the Department of Justice.<sup>6</sup>

[***816] It has steadily been acknowledged by spokesmen for the Commission, by leading members of the Congress, and by officials of the Executive Branch that the FTC has no basis in statute to seek the relief the Court today makes available to it. In the Appendix to this opinion, I refer to these acknowledgments and I describe the

<sup>4</sup> See 51 Cong. Rec. 1963, 13047, 8977 (1914); Rublee, The Original Plan and Early History of the Federal Trade Commission, 11 Acad. Pol. Sci. Proc. 666 (1925).

<sup>5</sup> Where Congress has determined that it is appropriate for the Commission to seek threshold relief in order to protect the public, it has expressly so provided -- directing that the Commission proceed in an appropriate tribunal, the United States District Courts. See § 13 (a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (Wheeler-Lea amendments), 15 U. S. C. § 53 \(a\) \(1964 ed.\); § 302 of the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, 21 U. S. C. § 332 \(1964 ed.\); § 7 (b) of the Wool Products Labeling Act, 15 U. S. C. § 68e \(b\) \(1964 ed.\); § 9 (b) of the Fur Products Labeling Act, 15 U. S. C. § 69g \(b\) \(1964 ed.\); § 6 (a) of the Flammable Fabrics Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1195 \(a\) \(1964 ed.\); and § 8 of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act, 15 U. S. C. § 70f \(1964 ed.\).

<sup>6</sup> See Elman, Rulemaking Procedures in the FTC's Enforcement of the Merger Law, 78 Harv. L. Rev. 385, 387-388 (1964).

HÌ ÁMEÉÁ JÌ ÈÈ FJLÀ Ì ÁUÉOÉFÌ HÌ ÈÈFÌ Í CLÁÍ ÁSEÓaÉCAÀ EGÁÈÈ FÌ LAFJÌ Ì ÁMEÉSÓYÓGJÌ Í ÈÈHÌ

unsuccessful, oft-repeated efforts of the Commission to obtain legislation to give it the power it has now successfully obtained from this Court.<sup>7</sup>

[****39] [*620] In [**1751] short, the Commission has no power to decide that a proposed merger should be enjoined pendente lite; it has no authority to seek such relief, temporary or permanent, in any court -- trial or appellate; and Congress has repeatedly turned a deaf ear to its requests for such power.

It should not be given such jurisdiction by fiat of this Court. It should do what Congress intended it to do -- upon determining that it has "reasonable cause to believe" that § 7 is being or has been violated, it should issue a complaint, hold a hearing, make a report, and issue an order. If exigencies require, it may refer the matter to the Attorney General for consideration as to whether the Department of Justice should seek a preliminary injunction in the appropriate district court.<sup>8</sup> If [*621] the merger is consummated, [***817] the Commission should, if warranted, exercise the enormous power that the statute expressly gives it: to require the offender to "divest itself of the stock, or other share capital, or assets, held . . . contrary to the provisions" of § 7. It is a cliche of doubtful truth in this situation that an omelette cannot be unscrambled. [****40] This Court, as well as the Commission, has entered such orders of divestiture after -- and sometimes long after -- the merger has been consummated. See, e. g., United States v. Von's Grocery Co., ante, p. 270 (decree six years after merger); United States v. El Paso Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651 (decree seven years after merger). Unscrambling may be difficult; but Congress may well have been justified in the view that the extra effort is warranted in the interests of securing what it hoped would be careful administrative consideration of the merits of proposed mergers. Not every merger deserves sudden death. In many situations, mergers serve no purpose except the pursuit of bigness. But some are distinctly beneficial to the achievement of a competitive economy.<sup>9</sup> [****42] [**1752] I respectfully submit that this Court should not encourage the machinegun approach to the vastly important and difficult merger problem. It should indulge the <sup>7</sup> The Court declares that these materials are irrelevant because Congress had before it proposals to authorize the Commission itself to issue restraining orders pendente lite or to apply to the district courts for such relief. But the fact that no one proposed and Congress did not consider providing that the Commission might have recourse to the courts of appeals merely emphasizes the extreme and extraordinary nature of the device which the Court today creates. The plain fact, and the short answer, is that Congress refused to authorize preliminary restraints at the command of the Commission. Its refusal to authorize such relief in the district courts demonstrates, a fortiori, that it would not create such a remedy in the courts of appeals.

The Court also suggests that it would be improper to draw conclusions from congressional inaction. The inference that I draw from congressional refusal to make preliminary injunctive relief available to the FTC is that such inaction confirms (a) that Congress in devising the statutory plan did not intend the Commission to have such power, and (b) that the relief sought is not consonant with the congressional plan for administering § 7. In fact, this is not a situation where the agency went to Congress in the belief that its authority was unclear, or to remove doubts concerning it. Compare United States v. Speers, 382 U.S. 266, 274-275; United States v. du Pont & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 590; Wong Yang Sung v. McGrath, 339 U.S. 33, 47-48. Here, there is no doubt that the agency sought additional powers, not clarification. It admitted -- it asserted -- that it had no present authority to obtain preliminary relief (see Appendix to this opinion). It sought what it confessedly did not have. It sought this not once, but repeatedly, over a period of 10 years. Congress did not grant its request. Nor should we. See Fribourg Navig. Co. v. Commissioner, 383 U.S. 272, 279-286; Blau v. Lehman, 368 U.S. 403, 412-413.

<sup>8</sup> Spokesmen for the FTC have frequently acknowledged the availability of such a course. See, e. g., Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., ser. No. 5, pp. 101-102 (testimony of Paul Rand Dixon) (1961); Kintner, The Federal Trade Commission in 1960 -- Apologia Pro Vita Nostra, 1961 Antitrust Law Symposium 21, 41.

The Commission also has on occasion successfully employed the technique of obtaining an agreement of the parties to segregate assets so as to facilitate divestiture should it be decreed. See, e. g., A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. v. F. T. C., 301 F.2d 585, 588 \(C. A. 3d Cir. 1962\).

<sup>9</sup> For example, in some situations the merger of relatively small competitors may result in creation of an enterprise capable of meaningful competition with a company otherwise in unchallenged domination of an industry. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 319, and legislative materials therein cited.

HÌ ÁWÈJÀ JÌ ÈÈ GFLÀ Ì ÁUÈOÈFÌ HÌ ÈÈFÌ Í GLÀ ÁSEÒaÈCAÀ EGÀÈÈ FÌ LAFJÌ Ì ÁWÈJÀSÓYÓGJÌ Í ÈÈÈÈ G

Congress in its desire that at least the Federal Trade Commission should be required to move with caution and deliberation. A "preliminary" injunction, in effect during the years required to complete the Commission's proceedings, [***41] often -- probably usually -- means that [*622] the plans to merge will be abandoned.<sup>10</sup> We should not beguile ourselves by ignoring this point. "Preliminary" here usually means final. And I respectfully suggest that it is permissible for Congress to insist that the merits of mergers should be carefully considered.

I come now to the second phase of the Court's opinion. Having satisfied itself that the Commission may apply to the courts of appeals for preliminary injunctions, the Court turns to the question of the jurisdiction of the appellate courts to entertain such applications. It finds jurisdiction in the courts of appeals by reason of the All Writs Act: "The Supreme Court and all courts established by Act of Congress may issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law." 28 U. S. C. § 1651 \(a\).

This is, in my opinion, a totally unjustified employment of the All Writs Act. That Act is an implementing statute, designed to authorize the courts to supply deficiencies in procedure so as to enable them effectively to exercise their jurisdiction. The Act is abused where, as here, it is contorted to confer jurisdiction where Congress has plainly withheld it. [***43] The reason why this Court may not command or vindicate the exercise of [***818] jurisdiction by the courts of appeals to issue, as an original matter, injunctions against claimed violations of § 7 are overwhelming. In summary, they are:

1. The courts of appeals have no jurisdiction with respect to § 7 except to review an order entered by the Commission after statutory proceedings. Until such an order is entered, they have no jurisdiction, either existing or potential, which an injunctive order may implement.
  - [*623] 2. By express statutory provision, even after a Commission order has been entered, the courts of appeals have no jurisdiction as to the merits of the merger, on application of the Commission. Only a party affected by the Commission's order may file a petition to review. If one does not, the Commission's sole remedy is to seek penalties in the district courts under 15 U. S. C. § 21 \(l\).<sup>11</sup>
  3. The statute contains its own "all writs" [***44] provision which is clearly and specifically limited to instances in which the court of appeals' jurisdiction has already attached upon petition to review a Commission order filed by a person who is the target of that order.
  4. There is not a single precedent of this Court which supports the Court's conclusion. None of the cases of this Court cited in the majority opinion lends it the slightest support.
  5. Exclusive jurisdiction to issue preliminary injunctions against mergers is vested in the district courts, upon application of the Department of Justice or a private person. The courts of appeals have no jurisdiction to enter such orders.
  6. The courts of appeals are not equipped to make the original, complex factual determinations necessary to decide whether a prospective merger should [**1753] be enjoined. To burden them with this task is to distort their function; to saddle them with a function which they cannot perform; to load upon them the necessity of twice passing upon a challenged merger; and to deprive the parties of an opportunity for a hearing in a forum equipped to make original factual determinations.
- .....

The jurisdiction and powers of the courts of [***45] appeals with respect to Commission proceedings under § 7 are defined by the statute in specific and exhaustive detail. [*624] A petition to review may be filed with an appropriate court of appeals by "any person required by [an] order of the commission" to cease or desist or to divest itself of

---

<sup>10</sup> See Kaysen & Turner, Antitrust Policy 248 (1959); Note, 40 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 771, 772, n. 7 (1965), and cases cited therein.

<sup>11</sup> See note 3, supra.

HÌ ÁMEÉJÍ ËÈ GÌ LÀ Í ÁUÉOËÈ HÌ ËÈFÌ Í HÀFÌ ÁSEÓâECAÀ EGÁÈÈ FÌ LAFJÌ Í ÁMEÉSÓYÓGJÌ Í ËÈÈÈ Í

stock or assets. 15 U. S. C. § 21 \(c\). The Court's jurisdiction attaches upon the filing of the petition, ibid., and becomes exclusive upon filing of the record with it. 15 U. S. C. § 21 \(d\). The Commission's findings as to the facts are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence. 15 U. S. C. § 21 \(c\). If additional evidence is to be taken, the Court must remand to the Commission; it cannot itself take evidence. Ibid. The Court may affirm, modify or set aside the Commission's order. It may enforce the Commission's order as affirmed and may "issue such writs as are ancillary to its jurisdiction or are necessary in its judgment to prevent injury to the public or to competitors pendente lite." Ibid.

The Court does not -- it could not -- contend that these provisions lend the slightest support [****46] to its conclusion. [***819] They clearly, emphatically, and pointedly contradict it. The courts of appeals have jurisdiction when and if, and only if and when, a Commission order has been entered and a petition for review is filed -- not by the Commission but by the aggrieved person.<sup>12</sup> When a petition for review [*625] is filed, the court of appeals has "plenary" jurisdiction, implemented by the self-contained all-writs provision; and when the record is filed, that jurisdiction is exclusive. Prior to the entry of the Commission's order, the courts of appeals simply have no jurisdiction, existing or potential. The general All Writs Act is limited to writs "in aid of their respective jurisdictions." It is not a charter to be used at the behest of an administrative agency in order to supply it with a weapon which Congress has withheld. This is clear enough; and nothing in our prior decisions expands the meaning of the All Writs Act to cover the present situation.

[****47] The Court cites a number of cases to prove that an appeal need not have been perfected to call into play the power of the appellate courts to issue protective writs. This is clear and obvious as applied in those cases. Each of them involved issuance of a writ to prevent action or inaction by a trial court which would otherwise mean that the case would not be adjudicated on its merits and therefore could not be reviewed on appeal. The typical case involves the issuance of mandamus to the trial court to compel it to proceed with the adjudication of a pending [**1754] case. In this category are the first three cases cited on the point by the Court.<sup>13</sup>

[****48] The fourth case cited by the Court clearly demonstrates the correct principle and the error of the Court's decision in the present case. In Roche v. Evaporated Milk Assn., 319 U.S. 21 \(1943\), the respondent was [*626] indicted for price fixing. It filed a plea in abatement based upon an alleged fault in the authorization of the indictment. The District Court dismissed the plea. On application for a writ of mandamus, the Court of Appeals reversed, but this Court reversed the Court of Appeals because whatever might have been the merits of the District Court's dismissal of the plea in abatement, that dismissal did not defeat appellate jurisdiction. The District Court would proceed to adjudicate the [****820] merits of the case, and appellate jurisdiction would thereafter be available. The Court (per Chief Justice Stone) stated that "while a function of mandamus in aid of appellate jurisdiction is to remove obstacles to appeal, it may not appropriately be used merely as a substitute for the appeal procedure prescribed by the statute." *Id. at 26*. The Court said that "The traditional use of the writ in aid of appellate jurisdiction [****49] . . . has been to confine an inferior court to a lawful exercise of its prescribed jurisdiction or to compel it to exercise its authority when it is its duty to do so." Ibid. Since the District Court was proceeding to adjudicate the case, and any error it might have committed would come to the appellate courts upon appeal, the Court held that the Court of Appeals erred in issuing the writ.

<sup>12</sup> Indeed, there is no certainty that the particular court of appeals selected by the FTC on its application for preliminary relief will ever undertake to review an ultimate cease-and-desist order. Section 11 (c) of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 21 \(c\), provides that a person against whom such an order is entered may appeal "in the court of appeals . . . for any circuit within which such violation occurred or within which such person resides or carries on business." In the present case, review of any final FTC order might lie not in the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, but in the Sixth or Eighth Circuit where both Dean and Bowman carry on business. See Transamerica Corp. v. Board of Governors, 206 F.2d 163 \(C. A. 3d Cir. 1953\), cert. denied, 346 U.S. 901, setting aside an injunction issued by the Ninth Circuit; A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. v. F. T. C., 301 F.2d 585 \(C. A. 3d Cir. 1962\), enforcing an FTC order as to which an injunction unsuccessfully had been sought in the First Circuit seven years earlier.

<sup>13</sup> Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 193; Ex parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet. 634; McClellan v. Carland, 217 U.S. 268. From its excerpt from McClellan, the Court omits the italicized portion: "[A] writ of mandamus may issue in aid of the appellate jurisdiction which might otherwise be defeated by the unauthorized action of the court below." *217 U.S., at 280*.

HÌ I ÁMÈJÀ JÌ ÈÈ GÌ LÀ I ÁMÈOÈJÌ HÌ ÈÈFÌ I I LÀI ÁMÈOÀÈGÀÀ ÈGÀÈÈ GELÁJÌ I ÁMÈSÓYÓGÁJÌ I ÈÈHÌ J

These decisions, therefore, are far from supporting the Court's decision in the present case. They are to the precise contrary. They demonstrate the obvious meaning of the language of the All Writs Act: that it is to be employed "in aid of" appellate jurisdiction -- not to vest general restraining power in the courts of appeals, but to authorize them to overcome action or inaction which would prevent the case from proceeding to judgment and then to appellate review in the ordinary course. Nothing of the sort -- nothing resembling it -- appears in the present situation. The Commission may proceed with its hearings, as provided by statute. As provided by [*627] statute, it may enter an order requiring respondents to divest themselves of the acquired assets. It may even -- although [****50] I express no opinion on the issue -- require action by the respondents, if they have irretrievably disposed of some or all of the assets, to take additional action to make available assets, customers, etc., for purchase by others so as to re-create a competitor, perhaps even if such action involves disposition of nonacquired assets.<sup>14</sup> And the appropriate court of appeals and this Court will have full, complete appellate jurisdiction with respect to its order.

The Court cites four of its prior decisions involving the availability of the All Writs Act in connection with administrative proceedings. These provide no assistance to it. First, it refers to Arrow Transp. Co. v. Southern R. Co., 372 U.S. 658. [****51] This case is precisely contra to the Court's conclusion here. After a "brief and informal" hearing which led to a tentative conclusion that the increase was "unreasonable," [**1755] the ICC suspended respondent's proposed rate increase and instituted a formal proceeding to adjudicate the reasonableness of the increase. The proceeding was still in progress when the maximum time provided by statute for suspension of the increase expired. Petitioner sued in the District Court, seeking an injunction pending the Commission's decision. This Court sustained denial of the injunction. It held that the Commission's jurisdiction was exclusive of any power in the courts to grant the relief, and that Congress' action in vesting power in the Commission left no latitude for court action even though it might mean that the small shipper could not continue in business under the higher rate. MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, speaking for [*628] the Court, observed, in words that are [***821] applicable here, that if the courts were to entertain petitioner's application for an injunction against the effectiveness of the rates pending Commission decision, they would in effect be prejudging the [****52] case and prejudicing administrative action. "Such consideration," he said, "would create the hazard of forbidden judicial intrusion into the administrative domain." Id., at 670. Correspondingly, I suggest that it is unlikely in the real world that if the Federal Trade Commission made representations to a court of appeals that a merger should be enjoined pending Commission proceedings, and if the court issued such an injunction, the Commission's ultimate determination would be uninfluenced by these powerful factors. I respectfully suggest that this is not a tolerable result.<sup>15</sup>

[****53] I come now to the case which the Court's opinion characterizes as "dispositive" of "this issue." Whitney Bank v. New Orleans Bank, 379 U.S. 411.<sup>16</sup> It is indeed a [*629] square holding on an issue that is not anywhere near the problem of this case. Whitney holds that a court of appeals may enter such orders as will protect its

<sup>14</sup> Compare United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 247 F.Supp. 308, 316 (D. C. E. D. Mo. 1965), aff'd, 382 U.S. 12, with Reynolds Metals Co. v. F. T. C., 114 U. S. App. D. C. 2, 309 F.2d 223 (1962). See Duke, op. cit. supra, note 2.

<sup>15</sup> The Court's opinion today eschews the result in Arrow Transportation and fastens instead on footnote 22, 372 U.S., at 671, which merely reserves judgment as to "decisions which have recognized a limited judicial power to preserve the court's jurisdiction or maintain the status quo by injunction pending review of an agency's action through the prescribed statutory channels. . . ." The footnote adds that "such power has been deemed merely incidental to the courts' jurisdiction to review final agency action, and has never been recognized in derogation of such a clear congressional purpose to oust judicial power as that manifested in the Interstate Commerce Act." (Emphasis supplied.) The cases cited demonstrate the conventional use of the extraordinary writs referred to in the footnote. In Scripps-Howard Radio, Inc. v. F. C. C., 316 U.S. 4, a stay was issued ancillary to an appeal already taken pursuant to statute. Its purpose was to suspend, pending action by the court in which the appeal was lodged, changes authorized by completed agency action. For the thoroughly conventional nature of Transamerica, also cited in the footnote, see note 1, supra.

<sup>16</sup> Continental Ill. Nat. Bank v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 294 U.S. 648, 675, cited by the Court in connection with its assertion that courts have power to preserve the status quo while administrative proceedings are in progress, relates instead to the power of a bankruptcy court to enjoin the sale of collateral pledged by a debtor.

HÌ I ÁMÈJÀ JÌ ÈÈ GÌ LÀ I ÀUÈOÈFÌ HÌ ÈÈFÌ I I LÀI ÁSEÒAÈCAÀ EGÀÈÈ CFLÁFJÌ I ÁMÈJÀSÓYÓGJÌ I ÈÈH jurisdiction -- its jurisdiction having fully attached by a prior appeal from a final order of the Federal Reserve Board, in accordance with statute. Briefly stated, the Federal Reserve Board had entered an order permitting a New Orleans bank to operate a subsidiary in Louisiana through a holding company. A petition to review that order was duly filed, pursuant to statute, in the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. While this was pending, Louisiana enacted a statute bearing on the problem. Meanwhile, the Comptroller of the Currency indicated that he would issue a certificate to the new bank. Competing banks filed in the District Court for the District of Columbia an action for injunction [**1756] against the Comptroller. The injunction was granted and the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit [***54] affirmed. It was the latter action that was before this Court, on certiorari. This Court held that the District Court had no jurisdiction to pass on the merits of the controversy by enjoining the Comptroller; that exclusive jurisdiction as to the authorization of the new bank was vested in the Federal Reserve Board. But it stayed its mandate for 60 days to [***822] give the parties time to move in the Fifth Circuit for a remand to the Federal Reserve Board for reconsideration of its order in light of the subsequent Louisiana statute. On remand, the Court stated, "the Fifth Circuit's power to protect its jurisdiction is beyond question," id., at 426 -- this in a case which had been in the Court of Appeals for three years following final agency action.

[***55] [*630] This is entirely in accord with the traditional and established construction of the All Writs Act, and with the statute governing proceedings of the Federal Reserve Board. Jurisdiction had properly been acquired by the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. Of course, it had power to issue whatever orders were necessary to preserve its jurisdiction, pending remand or otherwise. The Court's statement that it is "analogous" to the relief requested by the Commission is simply in error. It is analogous only if we disregard the facts that in Whitney, a final order had been entered by the administrative agency, appeal taken and the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals had attached. Whereas in the present case none of these has occurred and we are bluntly asked to vest the courts of appeals with authority to consider issuing an injunction as a matter of original jurisdiction -- without an agency order, without an appeal, and without statutory jurisdiction.

The net of the matter is simply, plainly and clearly that the decision of the Court in this case is novel -- totally novel. It is in direct contravention of the careful, specific plan and directions of the Congress [***56] with respect to the administration of § 7 of the Clayton Act. It is in direct conflict with the purpose and office of the All Writs Act. It is totally unsupported by prior decisions of this Court and contrary to both Roche, supra, and Arrow Transportation, supra. It is unwise in terms of the administration of § 7. It places an unwise, unjustified and disruptive burden on the courts of appeals and saddles them with original jurisdiction which they cannot properly exercise and a fact-finding function in elaborate, complex situations, which they should not be asked to undertake.

The courts of appeals are not courts of original jurisdiction. They have neither the facilities nor the institutional aptitude for determining in the first instance [*631] whether a particular merger should be halted. This is always intensely a question of fact -- hotly controverted -- turning upon factual-economic problems such as the ascertainment of facts as to the "line of commerce," the "section of the country" and the probable effect upon competition. And these are questions committed in the first instance to the FTC and not to the courts. See Whitney Bank v. New Orleans Bank, supra, at 421. [***57]

Without any findings of the Commission or a court, the courts of appeals are now burdened with the task of deciding these questions. The fact of the matter is that the Court's decision commands the courts of appeals to be trial courts for purposes of those § 7 cases which the Commission chooses to bring before them. I share the view expressed by my Brother BLACK and joined by my Brother DOUGLAS that:

"The business of trial courts is to try cases. That of appellate courts is to review the records of cases coming from trial courts below. In my judgment it is bad for appellate courts to be compelled to interrupt [***823] and delay [**1757] their pressing appellate duties in order to hear and adjudicate cases which trial courts have been specially created to handle as a part of their daily work." United States v. Barnett, 376 U.S. 681, 724 (dissenting opinion).

HÌ ÁÑEÜÄ JÌ ÈÈ HFLÀ Ì ÁÑEÜÄ JÌ ÈÈ HÌ ÈÈ JÌ ÈÈ LÀ ÁÑEÜÄ JÌ ÈÈ GHLÄFJÌ ÁÑEÜÄ SÓYÓAGJÌ ÈÈ

Yet the responsibility today imposed upon appellate courts requires them to try cases. This is precisely what is required in determining whether a merger should be restrained during the years required to complete an FTC hearing on the merits.<sup>17</sup> [****59] Frequently, perhaps generally, [*632] [****58] to enjoin a merger "temporarily" is equivalent to entering a final order. The financial and commercial commitments involved in an agreement to acquire or to merge are apt to be so restrictive of the managerial flexibility of the parties, and so dependent upon transient circumstances, that they cannot be maintained in limbo while an FTC proceeding wends its leisurely way toward a wearying conclusion. Because the result of the application for temporary relief may be conclusive for all time, there is a discernible and understandable tendency on the part of the parties to put in a full case.<sup>18</sup>

Few § 7 cases are so simple that summary treatment is appropriate. See, e. g., United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 157 F.Supp. 877, 879 (summary judgment denied), 168 F.Supp. 576 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1958) (merger enjoined after full factual hearing). The risk involved in deciding an application for "preliminary" injunction on affidavits is so great that to invite it, as the Court here does, is to invite the administration of justice which is rough and ready, to say the least. On the other hand, to impel the courts of appeals to take testimony in these cases is an anomaly [****60] that should not be tolerated.

[*633] This Court has recognized that there is no quick and easy, short and simple way to resolve the complexities of most antitrust litigation. In White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, the Court reversed summary judgment for the Government. It held that summary judgment was inappropriate and a trial should be had with respect to the Government's charge of illegal vertical territorial limitations. It specifically relied upon the "analogy from the merger field that leads us to conclude that a trial should be had." Id., at 263. The Court said (per DOUGLAS, J.) that in cases "involving the question whether a particular merger will tend 'substantially to lessen competition'" or whether "the acquired [***824] company was a failing one," "a trial rather than the use of the summary judgment is normally necessary." Id., at 264. See also United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, where factual issues paralleling those in the present case were held unsuitable for summary judgment.

[**1758] Similarly, in La Buy v. Howes Leather Co., 352 U.S. 249, [****61] this Court refused to permit reference of antitrust cases to a master. It held (per CLARK, J.) that "most litigation in the antitrust field is complex," and that this is "an impelling reason for trial before a regular, experienced trial judge" rather than a master. Id., at 259.

By its decision today, however, this Court commands that these admittedly difficult, complex cases be heard and adjudicated by the courts of appeals on original applications for "temporary" injunctions. I cannot reconcile this result with the facts, with this Court's awareness of the complexity of the task, or with proper regard for the courts of appeals. Apart from the judicial problem which this invention creates, we must recognize that the interposition of the courts, without congressional direction, at the threshold of the administrative process [*634] is contrary to the congressional plan and the reiterated holdings of this Court. As the Court said in Arrow Transportation, supra, judicial "consideration," prior to final administrative adjudication, "would create the hazard of forbidden judicial intrusion into the administrative domain." 372 U.S., at 670. [****62] This Court's insistence upon the "primary jurisdiction" of administrative agencies illustrates its sensitivity to the point. The Court has even insisted that "Dismissal of antitrust suits, where an administrative remedy has superseded the judicial one, is the usual course."

<sup>17</sup> The Commission's estimate in the present case that its proceedings would endure for at least one year seems unprecedently optimistic. In A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. v. F. T. C., 301 F.2d 585 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1962), where the FTC unsuccessfully sought an injunction pendente lite, more than seven years elapsed between complaint and enforcement. Pillsbury Mills, Inc. (FTC Docket No. 6000) was in the Commission for eight and one-half years; Crown Zellerbach Corp. v. F. T. C., 296 F.2d 800 (C. A. 9th Cir. 1961), for nearly four years, and it was another four years before the Commission's order was affirmed. These delays were not unknown to Congress. See Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., ser. No. 5, p. 86 (1961).

<sup>18</sup> See United States v. Ingersoll-Rand Co., 218 F.Supp. 530 (D. C. W. D. Pa.), aff'd, 320 F.2d 509 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1963), where the hearing on an application for preliminary relief took five days. See also United States v. FMC Corp., 218 F.Supp. 817 (D. C. N. D. Cal.), appeal dismissed, 321 F.2d 534 (C. A. 9th Cir.), application for preliminary injunction denied, 84 Sup. Ct. 4 (1963) (Goldberg, J., in chambers).

HÌ ÁMEÑA JÌ ÈÈ HÌ LÀ Í ÁMEÑO ÈÈ HÌ ÈÈ Í Í LÀ Í ÁSEÑA ÈÈ A ÄGÄÈÈ G LÄFJ Í ÁMEÑSÖYÖAGJ Í ÈÈ ÈÈ G

Pan American World Airways v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 313, n. 19; see also United States v. Western Pac. R. Co., 352 U.S. 59; Far East Conference v. United States, 342 U.S. 570; United States Nav. Co. v. Cunard S. S. Co., 284 U.S. 474.

The present case illustrates the profound difficulties that the Court of Appeals will face in reaching a decision, within the practical limits of its available time and procedures, as to whether it should issue a "preliminary" injunction. There are here sharp factual disputes concerning the financial status of Bowman and the availability to it of the so-called "failing company" defense. There is a claim that Dean Foods is about to lose its largest customer and that as a result the merged company will be smaller than Bowman was before the merger. And the bona fides of the "interested" prospective [****63] purchaser uncovered by the Commission's staff is in dispute.

The Court of Appeals will have to make a judgment concerning these issues, as well as the other, complex factors that are determinative. It will get little comfort from the label of the relief sought as "preliminary" because it will know that the patient may die while the "temporary" anesthesia is in effect. And it will know that, realistically, it has no control over the length of the proceedings -- whether the Commission's hearings will [*635] last a year or eight years, or something in between. [***825] By contrast, when the Department of Justice or a private person seeks a "preliminary" injunction in a district court, as provided by statute, the proceedings on the merits are in the same court. That court controls the proceedings, and it is admonished by the statute to proceed "as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case." 15 U. S. C. § 25. This is an essential admonition, insisted upon by the Congress to mitigate the consequences of preliminary restraints imposed by the district courts upon effectuation of mergers. The courts of appeals will be in the unhappy position [****64] of either attempting to supervise Commission proceedings in the predictably vain effort to secure expedition, or accepting the fact that the "preliminariness" of their order is totally subject to the destructive delays characteristic of Commission procedures. See Kaysen & Turner, Antitrust Policy 248-249 (1959).

In effect, today's decision represents radical surgery upon the administration [**1759] of § 7 of the Clayton Act. This is done contrary to statute, without basis in law or precedent, and is motivated by reasons, which while they may have superficial appeal, are unwise and disruptive. In effect, the Court condones and encourages the Commission to turn aside from its designated function as an expert, administrative agency to become a prosecutor and litigant.

When the Commission was established in 1914, it was not intended to duplicate the functions of existing agencies, but rather to bring to bear on the problems of antitrust and unfair competition the "specialized knowledge and expert judgment, continuity of experience and political independence, flexible procedures and efficient fact-finding methods -- [hopefully] characteristic of the administrative process." Elman, [****65] Rulemaking Procedures [*636] in the FTC's Enforcement of the Merger Law, 78 Harv. L. Rev. 385, 387 (1964).

Every conceivable merger case involves the danger that the merger, unless enjoined, will be effectuated, and the incentive to the Commission to shop among the statutorily available courts of appeals and to seek "preliminary" injunctions will be great. This, I repeat, is a radical change from the pattern that Congress has ordered, and one which is profoundly undesirable in its effects upon the parties, the courts of appeals, and upon the national interest in a careful assessment of mergers for the purpose of tolerating those which are permissible and liquidating those which violate the national policy expressed in § 7.

I would affirm the decision below.

APPENDIX TO OPINION OF MR. JUSTICE FORTAS, DISSENTING.

The FTC first solicited the assistance of Congress in 1956. In January of that year it submitted to the appropriate committees of the Eighty-fourth Congress a staff study containing various legislative proposals. The study observed that "A very serious loophole in the Antimerger Act [§ 7] is the lack of a provision which enables the Federal Trade [****66] Commission either to take action to prevent mergers prior to consummation or, after consummation, to take action to preserve the status quo until completion of administrative proceedings before the Commission."<sup>1</sup>

HÌ ÁMEÉJÍ ÈÈ HÌ LÀ Í ÁUÉOÉÉI HÌ ÈÈI Í JLÁI ÁSEÓaÉCAÀ EGÁÈÈI G LAFJÍ Í ÁMEÉSÓYÓAGJÍ Í ÈÈI

[***826] The study informed the committees that in 1955 the FTC had twice sought to secure preliminary injunctions from courts of appeals, but that the courts had found [*637] no basis in existing law to authorize such applications.<sup>2</sup> In hearings conducted upon proposals of the FTC and others, the Commission through its then chairman, John W. Gwynne, urged Congress to enact legislation which would empower it in § 7 cases to apply to United States District Courts for preliminary relief.<sup>3</sup> [***68] Chairman Gwynne was pessimistic [**1760] about the prospects for success under the all-writs statute, noting that it "is a very general statute and is designed to protect [***67] not the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission but the jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals to which the case might finally get."<sup>4</sup>

Both Senate and House Judiciary Committees accepted the view, repeatedly stated by spokesmen for the FTC, [*638] that it lacked any authority to enjoin or seek a court order to enjoin mergers prior to an FTC adjudication of their illegality, and that this gap in the Commission's arsenal was crippling its efforts to enforce § 7. Both Committees reported out H. R. 9424, which contained an amendment to § 15 of the Clayton Act authorizing the FTC to seek preliminary relief in the United States District Courts. S. Rep. No. 2817, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. (1956); H. R. Rep. No. 1889, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. (1956).<sup>5</sup> The bill passed the House, but failed of passage in the Senate.

Similar legislative proposals have been introduced in subsequent sessions, but always with less success than in 1956. In all of these legislative [***69] proceedings, the position of the FTC has been steadfast: consistently, it has insisted that without new legislation it lacks authority to enjoin mergers pending completion of agency action. In March of 1957, FTC Chairman Gwynne informed the appropriate Committees of the decision in Federal Trade Comm'n v. International Paper Co., 241 F.2d 372 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1956), that the all-writs statute would not support an FTC application for preliminary relief. To the House Committee he forwarded a copy of the opinion, describing it as "even more conclusive" than the earlier unreported decisions of the Courts of Appeals for the First and Third Circuits.<sup>6</sup> [***70] In [***827] the Senate, Chairman Gwynne characterized his Commission's application in International Paper as "something of a forlorn hope."<sup>7</sup> When Senator Kefauver, the Committee Chairman, asked

<sup>1</sup> Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., ser. No. 15, p. 29 (1956).

<sup>2</sup> The cases referred to were Federal Trade Comm'n v. Farm Journal, Inc. (C. A. 3d Cir. 1955) (unreported); and In the Matter of A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. (C. A. 1st Cir. 1955) (unreported). They are discussed in H. R. Rep. No. 486, 85th Cong., 1st Sess., 8-9 (1957); Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on S. 198, S. 721, S. 722 and S. 3479, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 42-45 (testimony of FTC Chairman Gwynne), 156-157 (testimony of Congressman Celler) (1958).

<sup>3</sup> The FTC proposed that § 11 of the Clayton Act be amended to read: "Whenever the Federal Trade Commission has reason to believe --

"(1) That any corporation is acquiring, has acquired or is about to acquire the stock or assets of another corporation in violation of the provisions of section 7 of this Act, and

"(2) That the enjoining thereof pending the issuance of a complaint by the Commission under this section and until such complaint is dismissed by the Commission or set aside by the court on review, would be to the interest of the public,

"the Commission . . . may bring suit in a district court of the United States . . . to prevent and restrain violation of section 7 of this Act. Upon proper showing a temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond. . ." Hearings, supra, note 1, at 29-30.

<sup>4</sup> Id., at 35.

<sup>5</sup> H. R. 9424, although worded in greater detail, was in substance like the FTC proposal.

<sup>6</sup> Letter to Chairman Celler, in Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 85th Cong., 1st Sess., ser. No. 2, p. 103 (1957).

HÌ I ÁMEÑÁ JÍ ÈÈ HÌ LÀ I ÁUÈOÈFÌ HÌ ÈÈFÌ I ÈLÁFÌ ÁSEÒaÈCAÀ EGÁÈÈ GÌ LAFJÌ I ÁMEÑÁSÓYÓGÁGÌ I ÈÈFÌ € him whether the FTC had sought [*639] review of the decision in this Court, Chairman Gwynne answered: "No, we did not. We talked that over. I could not help but agree with the court, frankly. I think the remedy is to amend the law. . . ." The Senator replied, "I think you are right about it." <sup>8</sup>

Nor was Gwynne the only FTC spokesman to represent to Congress that legislation was essential if the Commission, like the Department of Justice and private parties, was to be able to maintain the status quo pending determination of a merger's legality. The present chairman, Paul Rand Dixon, who as committee counsel had participated in Senate proceedings on this matter since 1956, informed the Eighty-seventh Congress that "It is clear that the Commission has no such authority," citing International Paper.<sup>9</sup> [****71] Leading Members of Congress<sup>10</sup> [**1761] and key representatives of the Executive Branch<sup>11</sup> expressed the same view.

A third FTC Chairman, Earl Kintner, explained to the bar rather than directly to Congress, that in 1960 the FTC had intervened as amicus curiae in a private suit to enjoin a merger,<sup>12</sup> which suit paralleled a pending [*640] Commission inquiry. This was done, he said, because the FTC was "lacking any statutory authority to seek a temporary injunction." Kintner, The Federal Trade Commission in 1960 -- Apologia Pro Vita Nostra, 1961 Antitrust Law Symposium 21, 38. He noted that the FTC was pressing for legislative authorization, and that until the effort succeeded the FTC would be confined to intervention in occasional private suits and to reliance upon the Justice Department "where a temporary [****72] restraining order is peculiarly appropriate." Id., at 41.<sup>13</sup>

References

---

Annotation References:

Construction, by Supreme Court of the United States, of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), dealing with acquisition by one corporation of stock of another. 14 L ed 2d 784.

Right of one corporation to acquire stock in another, as affected by the antitrust acts. 74 L ed 431.

Administrative or practical construction of statute as precedent for judicial construction. 73 L ed 322, 84 L ed 28.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>7</sup> Hearings, supra, note 2, at 45.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid.

<sup>9</sup> Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., ser. No. 5, pp. 87, 107 (1961). It was in this session that the FTC abandoned its prior advocacy of proposals that it seek relief in the district courts, urging instead that it be given power to issue its own injunctions and restraining orders. Id., at 88, 91. Compare testimony of FTC Chairman Gwynne, Hearings, supra, note 2, at 49-59.

<sup>10</sup> See, e. g., statement of Congressman Celler, Hearings, supra, note 2, at 156-160; statement of Congressman Patman, Hearings, supra, note 9, at 45; statement of Senator Kefauver, id., at 46.

<sup>11</sup> E. g., The President's Economic Report, submitted to Congress on January 23, 1957, p. 51; Letter from Attorney General Kennedy, May 2, 1961, in Hearings, supra, note 9, at 58.

<sup>12</sup> Briggs Mfg. Co. v. Crane Co., 185 F.Supp. 177 (D. C. E. D. Mich.), aff'd, 280 F.2d 747 \(C. A. 6th Cir. 1960\).

<sup>13</sup> FTC Chairman Dixon utilized the same forum the following year to plead for legislation which would authorize the Commission to issue its own temporary relief. See Dixon, The Federal Trade Commission in 1961, 1962 Antitrust Law Symposium 16, 19-21.

Denver & R. G. W. R. Co. v. United States

Supreme Court of the United States

March 16, 1967, Argued ; June 5, 1967, Decided

No. 305

Reporter

387 U.S. 485 *; 87 S. Ct. 1754 **; 18 L. Ed. 2d 905 ***; 1967 U.S. LEXIS 2783 ****; 1967 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,116

DENVER & RIO GRANDE WESTERN RAILROAD CO. ET AL. v. UNITED STATES ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLORADO.

Disposition: 255 F.Supp. 704, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

stock, public interest, railroads, carrier, Clayton Act, anticompetitive, shares, acquisition, issuance, antitrust, transport, consolidations, approving, district court, defer, stockholders, acquire, circumstances, deferral, controlling issue, additional share, questions, immunity, effects, merger, lawful object, authorize, ownership, proposed transaction, anti trust law

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Securities Law > ... > Registration of Securities > Exemptions > Exempt Classes of Securities

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

HN1 [down arrow] Exemptions, Exempt Classes of Securities

49 U.S.C.S. § 20a.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

HN2 [down arrow] Regulated Industries, Transportation

49 U.S.C.S. § 5(2)(a)(i) authorizes any carrier, with the approval and authorization of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to acquire control of another through ownership of its stock or otherwise.

HÌ Í ÁMÈJÀ ÌÍ ÈÈ ÌÍ LÀ Í ÁMÈDÀFÌ Í ÈÈFÌ Í LÀFÌ ÁMÈOÀÈGÀÁÍ ÈÈJÌ Í LÀJÌ Í ÁMÈÈSÓYÓGÀÍ HÈÈHÈ

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN3 [PDF] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 18, provides in pertinent part that no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

HN4 [PDF] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act, § 5(11), 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(11), provides that any carriers or other corporations, and their officers and employees and any other persons, participating in a transaction approved or authorized shall be and they are relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

HN5 [PDF] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act § 11, 15 U.S.C.S. § 21, provides in pertinent part that: (a) authority to enforce compliance with the Clayton Act § 7 by the persons respectively subject thereto is vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission where applicable to common carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended; and (b) whenever the Commission shall have reason to believe that any person is violating § 7, the Commission shall issue a complaint containing a notice of a hearing. The person so complained of shall have the right to show cause why an order should not be entered by the Commission requiring such person to cease and desist from the violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

**HN6** Regulated Industries, Transportation

The Interstate Commerce Commission is required, as a general rule, under its duty to determine that the proposed transaction is in the "public interest" and for a "lawful object," to consider the control and anticompetitive consequences before approving stock issuances.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN7** Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

A company need not acquire control of another company in order to violate the Clayton Act.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

An express company and a motor carrier entered into an agreement, subject to Interstate Commerce Commission approval, whereby the express company agreed to issue 500,000 shares of its stock to the motor carrier at $ 20 per share and the motor carrier offered, for 60 days following its acquisition of the 500,000 shares, to purchase an additional 1,000,000 shares of the express company's outstanding stock at the same price. The Interstate Commerce Commission approved the issuance without hearing, ruling that investigation of the "control" and "anticompetitive" issues would be deferred. A three-judge United States District Court for the District of Colorado sustained the Commission's order. (255 F Supp 704.)

On direct appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed. In an opinion by Brennan, J., expressing the views of six members of the court, it was held that while the possibility that the motor carrier might not increase its holdings within the 60-day period might justify deferring resolution of the control issue, it did not justify delay in considering the anticompetitive effects of the acquisition of the 500,000 shares.

White, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, stated his agreement that a hearing as to competitive factors should have been held before approval of the stock issuance, but also stated that the Commission may approve a carrier's stock issuance even if there would be a probable lessening of competition.

Harlan, J., joined by Stewart, J., dissented on the grounds that antitrust matters are inapposite in a proceeding for approval of a stock issuance, and that in any event consideration of the antitrust issues was properly postponed.

Headnotes

---

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > issuance of securities -- investigation -- > Headnote:

[**LEdHN\[1A\]**](#) [1A] [**LEdHN\[1B\]**](#) [1B] [**LEdHN\[1C\]**](#) [1C]

Under 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 20a), which forbids any carrier to issue capital stock until investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the purposes and uses of the proposed issue and the proceeds thereof and issuance of a Commission order authorizing the issue after findings that the issue is for some "lawful object" and is compatible with the "public interest," the Commission's consideration is not limited to an inquiry into fiscal manipulation; the Commission is not required to close its eyes to facts indicating that the transaction may exceed limitations imposed by other relevant laws, and must give at least some degree of consideration to control and anticompetitive consequences when suggested by the circumstances surrounding the particular transaction.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > merger -- authorization -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[2A] [2A] LEdHN[2B] [2B]

The Interstate Commerce Commission is required to weigh anticompetitive effects in approving applications for merger or control under § 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Commission to grant such applications only if "consistent with the public interest."

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock issues -- duties -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[3] [ ] [3]

The foundations of the Interstate Commerce Commission's obligation under 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Commission to grant applications for merger or control only if "consistent with the public interest," are largely applicable as well to 20a of the statute (49 USC 20a), which empowers the Commission to permit stock issues only for some "lawful object" compatible with the "public interest."

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > mergers -- stock issues -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[4] [  ] [4]

Both 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant applications for merger or control only if "consistent with the public interest," and 20a of the statute (49 USC 20a), which empowers the Commission to permit stock issues only for some "lawful object" compatible with the "public interest," must be read in the context of overall Commission responsibilities, including the responsibility under 11 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 21) to enforce that statute's provisions and the responsibility to advance the National Transportation Policy.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock issue -- principles -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[5] [ ] [5]

In a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission under 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 20a) for approval of an issuance of stock, the same broad principles apply as in a proceeding under 20a(12) for authority for an interlocking directorate and under 5 (2) for authority for a merger.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §13 > stock issuances -- hearing -- review -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[6] [  ] [6]

HÌ Í ÁMÈJÀ ÌÍ ÈÈ ÌÍ LÀ Í ÁMÈDÀFÌ Í ÈÈFÌ ÌÍ LÀFÌ ÁMÈOÀÈGÀÁÍ ÈÈJÌ Í LÀJÌ Í ÁMÈÈSÓYÓGÌ HÈÈÈÈ

Under the general rule that the Interstate Commerce Commission must, before approving stock issuances pursuant to 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 20a), consider the control and anticompetitive consequences of the issuance, the Commission need not grant a hearing in every case and may defer consideration of issues which arise when special circumstances are present, but when the Commission exercises its discretion to approve issuances without first considering important control and competition issues, the reviewing court must closely scrutinize its action in light of the Commission's statutory obligations to protect the public interest and to enforce the antitrust laws.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §179 > discretion -- stock issuance -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

In a proceeding under 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 20a) for Interstate Commerce Commission approval of a stock issuance, the question whether the Commission has abused its discretion in approving an issuance without first considering important control and competition issues depends upon the transaction approved, its possible consequences, and any justifications for the deferral.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > control -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Under 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve applications for merger or control only if consistent with the public interest, control must be judged realistically, and is a matter of degree.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > control -- deferral -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

When a carrier's application for Interstate Commerce Commission approval of its issuance of 500,000 shares of its stock to a second carrier, which agrees that within 60 days of its acquisition of the 500,000 shares it will offer to purchase an additional 1,000,000 shares of the first carrier's outstanding stock at the same price, the Interstate Commerce Commission does not exceed its discretion in deferring consideration, for the 60-day period, of the question whether control of the first carrier's operations might pass to the second carrier.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > control -- public interest -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

Under 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve applications for merger or control only if "consistent with the public interest," resolution of the "public interest" issue, requiring consideration of anticompetitive and other consequences, is required when the threshold fact of control or merger is established.

HÌ Í ÁMÈJÀ ÌÍ ÈB ÌÍ LÀ Í ÁMÈDÀF ÌÍ ÈB ÌÍ LÀF ÌÍ ÁMÈOàÈGÀ ÁÍ ÈB ÌÍ LÀJ ÌÍ ÁMÈÈSÓYÒG ÌÍ HÈB

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > control -- tentative stock acquisition -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

The Interstate Commerce Commission reasonably concludes that allowing a motor carrier tentatively to acquire a 20 percent stock interest in a railroad express service and motor common carrier whose other stock is entirely owned by railroads will not prejudice protestors to the transaction as to the issue of the acquiring carrier's acquisition of control of the other carrier, where the railroad stockholders refuse to sell any stock to the acquiring carrier and the acquiring carrier is unable to control the board of directors of the other carrier.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock issuance -- anticompetitive effects -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

On a carrier's application for Interstate Commerce Commission approval of an issue of stock for sale to another carrier, the Commission's action in deferring consideration of the anticompetitive issues under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which forbids stock acquisitions substantially lessening competition, stands on a different footing from the control issue under 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which requires Commission authorization before one carrier may acquire control of another; the Commission's responsibility under 5 and under the Clayton Act differ markedly, the reasons which support an exercise of discretion as to the control issue are wholly inapplicable to the anticompetitive questions, and there is no reasonable justification for deferring the Clayton Act questions.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock acquisitions -- anticompetitive effect -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

No preliminary finding of control need be made to trigger the Interstate Commerce Commission's duty under the Clayton Act to prevent stock acquisitions which may have the effect substantially to lessen competition.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34 > control -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

A company need not acquire control of another company in order to violate the Clayton Act.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > control -- antitrust immunity -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

Section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve a carrier's application for merger or control, is designed to enable carriers to seek and obtain approval of consolidations with other carriers, with immunity from the antitrust laws.

HÌ Í ÁMÈJÀ ÌÍ ÈÈ ÌÍ LÀ Í ÁMÈDÀFÌ Í I ÈÈFÌ Í LÀFÌ ÁMÈOÀÈGÀÁ Í ÈÈJÌ Í ÁMÈÈSÓYÓGÌ HÈÈÈÈ

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > consolidations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

The carrier must initiate consolidations under 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve a carrier's application for merger or control.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §35 > stock acquisitions -- carriers --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), forbidding stock acquisitions the effect of which may be substantially to lessen competition, requires that a carrier's acquisition of 20 percent of the stock of another carrier be stopped in its incipency if the result is likely to be immediate and continuing co-operation between the carriers which would be detrimental to competitors and against the public interest.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock issuance -- factors -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18]

On an application under 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 20a) for approval of an express company's issuance of stock to be purchased by a motor common carrier, where it is shown that the domination of the express company by railroads has led to operation of the express company and the railroads' own interests without regard to the express company's best interests or the public interest, the Interstate Commerce Commission must at least consider whether the special action to be approved may operate to the detriment of the express company or the public interest before using the express company's need for funds and for independence from the railroads to justify a diversification of ownership.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock issuance -- anticompetitive issues -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[19\]](#) [19]

Considerations of administrative convenience do not support the Interstate Commerce Commission's deferral of anticompetitive issues in a proceeding for Commission approval of a carrier's issuance of 500,000 shares of its stock to be acquired by another carrier under an agreement whereby the purchasing carrier agrees to offer within 60 days following the acquisition to purchase an additional 1,000,000 shares of the first carrier's outstanding stock at the same price.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock issuance -- anticompetitive impact -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[20\]](#) [20]

HÌ Í ÁMÈJÀ ÌÍ ÈÈ ÌÍ LÀ Í ÁMÈDÀFÌ ÌÍ ÈÈFÌ ÌÍ LÀFÌ ÁMÈOÀÈGÀÁÍ ÈÈEJÍ ÁMÈÈSÓYÓGÀ ÌÍ HÈÈÈÈ

In a proceeding for Interstate Commerce Commission approval of a carrier's issuance to another carrier of 500,000 shares of the first carrier's stock at $ 20 per share under an agreement whereby the second carrier offers to buy an additional 1,000,000 shares of the first carrier's stock at the same price, the offer to be open for 60 days following the acquisition of the 500,000 shares, the possibility that the second carrier may not increase its holdings within the 60-day period may justify deferral of resolution of the control issue but it does not justify delay in consideration of the anticompetitive effects of the acquisition of the 500,000 shares.

Syllabus

---

Railway Express Agency (REA) applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) for authorization under § 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act to sell 500,000 authorized but unissued shares of its stock to Greyhound Corporation. Greyhound agreed, upon acquisition of these shares, to offer for 60 days to purchase up to 1 million shares of outstanding REA stock, all of which is owned by railroads which have the right of first refusal. REA and Greyhound had entered into a "Memorandum of Understanding" which contemplated efficiencies and savings through consolidation of terminal facilities, garages, communications, advertising, and sales forces. Section 20a (2) of the Act provides for ICC authorization of a carrier's stock issuance if "for some lawful object within [the applicant's] corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest." Finding the issuance of the 500,000 shares for sale to Greyhound to be urgently needed, the [***2] ICC authorized the issuance under § 20a without a hearing, and declined to decide, pending the outcome of Greyhound's 60-day offer, the questions of control under § 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act or anticompetitive effect under § 7 of the Clayton Act. A three-judge District Court sustained the ICC order. Held:

1. The ICC is required, as a general rule, under its duty to determine that the proposed transaction is in the "public interest" and for a "lawful object," to consider control and anticompetitive consequences before approving a stock issuance under § 20a (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act. Pp. 492-498.
2. The ICC did not exceed its discretion in deferring consideration of the issue of REA's control by Greyhound, as radical changes in the relevant facts might take place in the 60-day period, and it is highly unlikely that any harm could flow to appellants or to the public interest from a deferral limited to that issue. Pp. 499-501.
3. The ICC exceeded its discretion in deferring consideration of the anticompetitive issues. Pp. 501-507.
  - (a) While the ICC's duty to consider anticompetitive issues under the public interest standard of § 5 of the Interstate Commerce [***3] Act arises only after a threshold finding of control, no such preliminary finding need be made to trigger the ICC's duty under the Clayton Act. P. 501.
  - (b) With respect to at least some of the anticompetitive issues presented by REA's application the relevant facts will not change significantly during the 60-day period. Pp. 502-503.
  - (c) With Greyhound's holding of 500,000 shares (20%) of REA's stock there is likely to be immediate and continuing cooperation between the companies, which appellants claim will be to their detriment and which the Government concedes may be against the public interest. If such an alliance would in fact be against the public interest, § 7 of the Clayton Act requires that it be stopped in its incipiency. P. 504.
  - (d) Before the ICC can justify a diversification of ownership on the grounds that REA has an urgent need for funds and would be better off more independent of the railroads, it must consider whether the action approved would operate to the detriment of REA or the public interest. Pp. 505-506.
  - (e) There is little merit to the Government's contention that deferral of the anticompetitive issues is strongly supported by considerations of administrative [***4] convenience. Pp. 506-507.

HÌ Í ÁMÈJÀ ÌÍ ÈB ÌÍ LÀ Í ÁUÈDÀFÍ Í I ÈBÉFÍ Í LAFÍ ÁSEÒAÈGÀÁÍ ÈBÉJÍ ÁMÈJÀSÓYÓGÀÍ HÈBÉB

Counsel: William H. Dempsey, Jr., argued the cause for appellants. With him on the briefs were Jeremiah C. Waterman, Royce D. Sickler, C. W. Fiddes, David Axelrod, Eugene T. Liipfert, Benjamin W. Boley, Martin J. Flynn, Giles Morrow, Peter T. Beardsley, Harry Jordan and R. Edwin Brady.

Robert S. Rifkind argued the cause for the United States et al. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Marshall, Assistant Attorney General Turner, Howard E. Shapiro, Robert W. Ginnane and Betty Jo Christian. Thomas D. Barr argued the cause for appellees Railway Express Agency, Inc., et al. Mr. Barr filed a brief for Railway Express Agency, Inc. Owen Jameson filed a brief for appellee Greyhound Corp.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Fortas

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

---

[*487] [***909] [**1756] MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question in this case is whether the Interstate Commerce Commission complied with its statutory responsibilities under § 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act<sup>1</sup> when it approved without consideration of control or anticompetitive consequences the issuance to appellee Greyhound [****5] Corporation of 500,000 shares of the common stock of appellee Railway Express Agency, Inc. (REA).

[***6] REA provides railroad express service and is also a motor common carrier. The approximately 2,000,000 shares of REA common stock outstanding are entirely owned by railroads and no railroad stockholder may dispose of its shares without first offering them to the other railroad stockholders. REA also is authorized, however, to issue 500,000 additional shares of common stock without first offering them to its stockholders. [**1757] Greyhound, which operates an express carrier service through its wholly owned subsidiary Greyhound Lines, Inc., a motor carrier of passengers and express subject to the Interstate [*488] Commerce Act, agreed to purchase these 500,000 [***910] shares. REA thereupon applied to the ICC for an order under § 20a approving the transaction. Minority railroad REA stockholders, motor bus competitors of Greyhound, motor carriers, and freight forwarders intervened in the proceeding to protest against approval of the transaction. They alleged, among other things, the necessity of a hearing on the questions whether Greyhound's acquisition of the stock was in the "public interest" and for a "lawful object" as those terms are used in § 20a. The ICC approved [***7] the acquisition without a hearing. A three-judge District Court for the District of Colorado sustained the ICC order. 255 F.Supp. 704. We noted probable jurisdiction. 385 U.S. 897. We reverse with direction to the District Court to enter a new judgment remanding the case to the ICC for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

I.

REA was organized in 1929 and until 1961 operated on a nonprofit basis under a pooling agreement with the railroads. See Securities and Acquisition of Control of Railway Express Agency, Inc., 150 I. C. C. 423. Financial

---

<sup>1</sup> Section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, 41 Stat. 494, 49 U. S. C. § 20a, provides in pertinent part:

"(2) HN1 It shall be unlawful for any carrier to issue any share of capital stock . . . even though permitted by the authority creating the carrier corporation, unless and until, and then only to the extent that, upon application by the carrier, and after investigation by the Commission of the purposes and uses of the proposed issue and the proceeds thereof, . . . the Commission by order authorizes such issue . . . . The Commission shall make such order only if it finds that such issue . . . (a) is for some lawful object within its corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest, which is necessary or appropriate for or consistent with the proper performance by the carrier of service to the public as a common carrier, and which will not impair its ability to perform that service, and (b) is reasonably necessary and appropriate for such purpose."

Common carriers by motor vehicle are made subject to the provisions of § 20a (2) by § 214 of the Act, as amended, 49 Stat. 557, 49 U. S. C. § 314.

HÍ TÍ ÁNEÚ É A ||| É BÁ ||| LÁ TÍ ÁUÉO É A FÍ ||| É A FÍ ||| LAFÍ ÁSE ÓdA É GÁ ÁI É ÁNÉUÉ FÉLAJÍ TÍ ÁNEÚÉSÓY OGÁGÍ ||| HÁÉ

difficulties forced abandonment of the nonprofit operation and REA was converted to a profit and loss basis in order to effect more efficient and economic operation. See Express Contract, 1959, 308 I. C. C. 545, 549-550. In addition, REA was released from restrictions against use of carriers other than railroads. In 1963 REA's bylaws were amended to eliminate a limitation against stock ownership except by railroads; the disposition of shares by a railroad, however, was made subject to the right of first refusal of the other railroad stockholders. The issuance of 500,000 [****8] additional shares not subject to the right of first refusal was also authorized, but only upon the consent of two-thirds of the railroad stockholders.

[*489] Greyhound, principally a passenger carrier, became interested in expanding its growing express business. In January 1964 Greyhound offered to purchase, subject to ICC approval, at least 67% of REA's stock, of which Greyhound intended to offer 16% to major airlines. Greyhound also agreed to finance part of REA's capital requirements as part of a plan to coordinate the express services of both companies. This proposal was defeated by railroad stockholders.

REA and Greyhound persisted in their efforts to coordinate their operations. Greyhound proposed to acquire a 20% interest in REA through acquisition of REA's 500,000 authorized but unissued shares, stating that its "interest in REA . . . stems primarily from our views as to the improvements . . . which could be realized through combination and correlation of certain of our facilities and services." Greyhound offered to pay $ 16 per share if permitted to name one-fifth of the REA Board of Directors and if the REA Board would declare its intention "to consider seriously [***9] and work toward a long-term agreement between REA and Greyhound to consolidate operating functions and facilities . . . , and if, further, the REA Board would agree "to consider seriously at a later time . . ." the sale of REA stock to airlines and the general public. Finally, Greyhound offered, if permitted to acquire the 500,000 shares, to purchase enough additional shares at $ 25 each to give it 50% of the stock of REA, the offer to remain open for 60 days following Greyhound's [**911] acquisition of the 500,000 shares. It expressed willingness, however, to purchase the 500,000 shares and leave "to the future the question of the acquisition of additional shares by Greyhound and [**1758] giving the railroads an opportunity to reconcile their views on this question."

REA countered with an offer to sell the 500,000 shares at $ 20 per share provided Greyhound would agree to [~~490~~] offer within the 60-day period to purchase an additional 1,000,000 shares of the outstanding stock at the same price. The agreement was consummated on this basis subject to ICC approval.

REA's application to the ICC sought approval only of the issuance to Greyhound of the 500,000 shares. [****10] The application was supplemented with detailed data reviewing the negotiations, a statement of REA's financial condition and a statement of the purposes to which the $ 10,000,000 realized from the sale of the 500,000 shares would be applied. The burden of the protests of numerous intervenors was that the transaction was not in the "public interest" and for a "lawful object," but rather was the first step toward establishing a virtual monopoly of express transportation, and would result in "control" by Greyhound of REA, necessitating a hearing under § 5 of the Act.<sup>2</sup> [****11] The Department of Justice also intervened. It urged the ICC to conduct a hearing to determine whether the transaction would violate § 7 of the Clayton Act,<sup>3</sup> suggesting that, while a § 5 proceeding might be <sup>2</sup> Section 5 (2) (a) (i) of the Act, as amended, 41 Stat. 480, 482, 49 U. S. C. § 5 (2) (a) (i), HN2↑ authorizes any carrier, with the approval and authorization of the Commission, "to acquire control of another through ownership of its stock or otherwise . . . ." Upon application of a carrier seeking such authority, the Commission "shall afford reasonable opportunity for interested parties to be heard," and if "the Commission finds that, subject to such terms and conditions and such modifications as it shall find to be just and reasonable, the proposed transaction is within the scope of subdivision (a) . . . and will be consistent with the public interest, it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such transaction, upon the terms and conditions, and with the modifications, so found to be just and reasonable . . ." § 5 (2) (b).

<sup>3</sup> Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 18, HN3 provides in pertinent part:

"No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock . . . of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

HÌ Í ÁMEÑAÍ Í ÈJELÀÍ ÁUÉOÄFI Í ÈFFI Í LÀÍ ÁSEØAÈCAÁÍ ÈFFI JFLAFJ Í ÁMEÑSÓYÓGJ Í HÀFFF

[*491] unnecessary, one might be instituted and consolidated with the recommended Clayton Act § 7 proceeding, since the anticompetitive issues involved would be virtually identical.

Division Three of the ICC approved the application without hearing, ruling that investigation into the "control" and "anticompetitive" issues "would not be appropriate at this time . . . ." After the ICC denial of petitions for reconsideration this action to enjoin and set aside the ICC order was filed. The full Commission meanwhile reconsidered and affirmed the action of Division Three but postponed the effective date of the order pending the conclusion of judicial proceedings.

In the District Court the parties adhered basically to the positions [****12] maintained before the ICC, except that the Department of Justice abandoned its position urging a hearing on the § 7 question and declined either to support or to oppose [*912] the ICC order. In sustaining the order the District Court reasoned that, while the ICC might be required in some circumstances to consider "control" and "anticompetitive" issues before approving a stock issuance under § 20a, the ICC properly exercised discretion to defer consideration of such questions in this case until after it was determined whether and to what extent Greyhound would succeed in purchasing additional shares from railroad stockholders; only then would the "chain of events started by the stock issuance . . . [be] ascertainable [**1759] rather than conjectural." 255 F.Supp. 704, 709.

In this Court the Government concedes, and the other appellees assume arguendo, that important issues of "control" and "anticompetitive" effects were involved in the application before the ICC. The Government has completely reversed its position from what it was before [*492] the ICC, arguing here that § 20a was designed to accomplish only the limited objective of protecting [***13] stockholders and the public from fiscal manipulation, and that, in any event, postponement of consideration of "control" and "anticompetitive" issues was justified in this case because the facts relevant to both issues might be wholly different at the end of the 60-day period, and because no prejudice to any party's interests could result from the delay.

II.

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] We do not agree that Congress limited ICC consideration under § 20a to an inquiry into fiscal manipulation.<sup>4</sup> Even if Congress' primary concern was to prevent such manipulation, the broad terms "public interest" and "lawful object" negate the existence of a mandate to the ICC to close its eyes to facts indicating that the transaction may exceed limitations imposed by other relevant laws. Common sense and sound administrative policy point to the conclusion that such broad statutory standards require at least some degree of consideration of control and anticompetitive consequences when suggested by the circumstances surrounding a particular transaction. Both the ICC [****14] and this Court have read terms such as "public interest" broadly, to require consideration of all important consequences including anticompetitive effects. Thus the ICC is required to weigh anticompetitive effects in approving applications for merger or control under § 5 of the Act, authorizing the ICC to grant such applications [*493] only if "consistent with the public interest." McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67. And similarly broad responsibilities are encompassed within like broad directives addressed to other agencies. E. g., National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 190, 224; FCC v. RCA Communications, Inc., 346 U.S. 86, 94; California v. FPC, 369 U.S. 482, 484-485.

[****15] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3] [LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4] It is true that the requirement [***913] that the ICC consider anticompetitive effects is more readily found under § 5, since § 5 (11) enables the ICC to confer immunity from the antitrust laws for transactions approved under § 5 (2).<sup>5</sup> But the foundations of the ICC's obligation under § 5 are largely applicable to § 20a as well. Section 20a, like § 5, must after all be read in the context of overall ICC responsibilities. The responsibility under § 11 of the Clayton Act<sup>6</sup> to enforce [**1760] that Act's provisions is one of them. The responsibility to advance the National Transportation Policy, read into the "public interest" standard of § 5, is another persistent and overriding duty, equally applicable to § 20a. In sum, as we said in McLean Trucking, supra, while transportation "legislation constitutes the immediate frame of reference within [*494] which the Commission operates . . . and the policies expressed in it must be the basic determinants of its action . . . , in executing those policies the [****16] Commission may be faced with overlapping and at times inconsistent policies embodied in other legislation enacted at different times and with different problems in view. When this is true, it cannot, without more, ignore the latter." 321 U.S., at 80.

---

<sup>4</sup> Section 20a was originally § 437 (1) of H. R. 10453, 66th Cong., which was almost identical to earlier legislation passed by the House in 1910 and 1914. See 58 Cong. Rec. 8317-8318 (1919). The 1910 version led to a study which condemned as a "public evil" intercorporate holdings of railroad stock. Report of the Railroad Securities Commission, H. R. Doc. No. 256, 62d Cong., 2d Sess., 21 (1911). These findings were part of the background against which Congress eventually passed § 20a, along with the Federal Trade Commission and Clayton Acts.

HÌ Í ÁMÈJÀÍ Í ÉÉ JHLÀÍ ÁUÉOÉFÍ Í ÉÉFÍ Í JLÁÍ ÁSEÓaÉCAÁÍ ÉÉÉFHLFÁJÍ Í ÁMÈJÀSÓYÓGÍ Í HÀÉÉFÍ

[****17] In proceedings under § 20a (2), the ICC itself has not acted as though it lacks the power or responsibility to weigh anticompetitive consequences. In Columbia Terminals Co. -- Issuance of Notes, 40 M. C. C. 288, 293, an application to issue notes under § 20a (2) was granted in part only on the condition that the notes be made the subject of competitive bidding. The ICC explicitly rejected the argument that § 10 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 20, requiring competitive bidding in certain situations, was superseded by § 20a. In Stock of New Jersey, I. & I. R. Co., 94 I. C. C. 727, 729, the Commission said, in considering an application to issue stock: "It can not be said that in the performance of the broad duty imposed upon us by the statute we must confine our investigation and consideration to the effect of proposed issues upon the carrier immediately involved. In any application to us for authority to issue securities we are bound to measure the proposal by the test of public interest in whatever phase that interest may appear to be affected."

LEdHN[5]↑ [5] [****18] This "broad duty" was significantly adhered to in Chesapeake & O. R. Co. Purchase, 271 I. C. C. 5. There, the C & O sought modification of an earlier order so as to enable it to acquire and exercise 400,000 shares of New York Central, and two of C & O's directors sought authority under § 20a (12) to hold seats simultaneously on the Central [**914] Board. C & O and its directors alleged, in terms strikingly similar to the claims in this case, that Central [*495] needed funds and new management, and that the two companies were contemplating plans of mutual advantage and ultimately a merger under § 5 (2). The ICC took a broad view of its power and responsibility. It found, as to the § 20a (12) issue, that an insufficient showing had been made that "neither public nor private interests . . ." would be adversely affected by the proposed interlocking directorate, citing its own cases to the effect that authority would be granted under § 20a (12) only where no lessening of competition or independence occurred, 271 I. C. C., at 18, and pointing out that, even if the Central were strengthened, an interlocking directorate might injure other railroads [****19] in which the "public has just as great an interest . . .," 271 I. C. C., at 40. In treating the request that it approve the stock acquisition, the ICC referred in great detail to the facts that (1) the acquisition, when considered along with long-range plans, would result in C & O control of Central; (2) extensive competition between C & O and Central would be eliminated; and (3) cooperation between C & O and Central would [**1761] pose a substantial threat to another railroad, 271 I. C. C., at 24-29. It refused to authorize the acquisition, concluding that it was in effect being asked "to sanction a violation of the provisions of section 5 (4) [requiring carriers to request authority under § 5 (2) before acquiring control of another carrier] and also a violation of section 7 of the Clayton Antitrust Act." 271 I. C. C., at 39, 43. It stated that, if the applicants were so confident that their long-run aims would be in the public interest, they should seek authority for control under § 5 (2). These principles and arguments relied upon by the ICC in rejecting C & O's application are equally applicable here. The economic consequences [****20] do not differ because we are concerned here with the issuance of stock rather than an acquisition on the open market.

<sup>5</sup> Section 5 (11), 49 U. S. C. § 5 (11), HN4↑ provides that "any carriers or other corporations, and their officers and employees and any other persons, participating in a transaction approved or authorized . . . shall be and they are relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws . . . ."

<sup>6</sup> Section 11 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 21, HN5↑ provides in pertinent part: "(a) Authority to enforce compliance with . . . [§ 7] by the persons respectively subject thereto is vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission where applicable to common carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended . . . . (b) Whenever the Commission . . . shall have reason to believe that any person is violating . . . [§ 7] it shall issue . . . a complaint . . . containing a notice of a hearing . . . . The person so complained of shall have the right to . . . show cause why an order should not be entered by the Commission . . . requiring such person to cease and desist from the violation . . . ."

HÌ Ī ÁMEÑAÍ Í HÀ JÍ LÀ Í ÁUÑOÄFI Í HÀFI Í FLÁI ÁSEØAÑCAÁÍ HÀFI LÀFJ Í ÁMEÑSÓYÓGJ Í HÀFFJ

[*496] Appellees argue, with some ambivalence, that it would be anomalous to require the ICC to consider anticompetitive issues under § 20a (2). The ICC is authorized under § 5 to grant antitrust immunity for consolidations. No such power exists under § 20a,<sup>7</sup> and the Government contends therefore that to require consideration of § 7 issues under § 20a would lead to the "anomalous conclusion that a securities issue may have to be disallowed even though it might be the first step in an acquisition of control that the Commission could, on proper findings, authorize under section 5 notwithstanding antitrust considerations." REA advances a variant of this argument pointing out that the Sixty-sixth Congress, which passed both § 5 and § 20a, would not have "adopted the erratic policy of relaxing enforcement of the antitrust [***915] laws when competition was eliminated but requiring strict enforcement when lesser competitive harm might occur."

[****21] First, it is by no means true that greater competitive harm necessarily results from consolidations than from stock issuances under § 20a. A particular consolidation may be in the public interest because it increases competition in some respects, while a stock issuance, even though not involving control, may have no similar redeeming feature. Second, any anomaly which may be created by the juxtaposition of §§ 5 and 20a stems, not [*497] from the fact that no immunity may be granted under § 20a, but from the ICC's special power under § 5. The obligation to enforce the Clayton Act is the rule, and § 5 is the exception. Finally, there are good reasons upon which Congress may have relied in providing that immunity might be conferred under § 5 but not under § 20a. Congress recognized in the Transportation Act of 1940, 54 Stat. 898, as it had in the Act of 1920, that railroad consolidations often result in benefits for the national transportation system as well as for the railroads involved. Consequently, it authorized the ICC to approve consolidations and to immunize them from the antitrust laws when they were found to be in the public interest. The special benefits sometimes [****22] realized from carrier consolidations are less likely to come about through the mere issuance of stock, unless the issuance results in control or merger; and when control or merger does result, the party acquiring control may invoke the Commission's [**1762] power under § 5 to immunize the consolidation from the antitrust laws.

Appellees' reliance upon Alleghany Corp. v. Breswick & Co., 353 U.S. 151, 355 U.S. 415, is misplaced. That litigation stands at most for the proposition that the ICC has discretion in some circumstances to consider § 20a issues without coming to grips with the question whether control of one carrier by another may be unlawful. Alleghany had acquired control of the New York Central without ICC approval. It applied to the ICC rather than to the Securities and Exchange Commission for approval of an issue of preferred stock. The ICC took jurisdiction on the ground that, while Alleghany was an investment company normally under the jurisdiction of the SEC, its control of Central made it a carrier subject to ICC regulation. The District Court set aside the order approving the issuance on the ground [*498] that ICC jurisdiction to [****23] act under § 20a could not rest upon a control it had not approved. This Court reversed, pointing out that it would be contrary to the policy of the statute to oust the ICC of regulatory jurisdiction because a noncarrier had failed to abide by the law. On remand the District Court considered the illegality of Alleghany's control as relevant to the merits of the issuance under § 20a, and we reversed again, stating simply that the only issue left open on remand was whether the stock issue "as approved" was unlawful. 355 U.S. 415, 416. However this litigation may be interpreted, it wholly fails to support the proposition that, because § 20a was designed primarily to protect against fiscal manipulation, the ICC is relieved of the necessity of considering other issues germane to the transaction.

LEdHN[1B][↑] [1B] LEdHN[6][↑] [6] LEdHN[7][↑] [7] We conclude, therefore, that HN6[↑] the ICC is required, [****24] as a general [***916] rule, under its duty to determine that the proposed transaction is in the "public interest" and for a "lawful object," to consider the control and anticompetitive consequences before approving stock issuances under § 20a (2). This does not mean the ICC must grant a hearing in every case, or that it may never defer consideration of issues which arise when special circumstances are present. But it does mean that, when the ICC exercises its discretion to approve issuances without first considering important control and competition issues, the reviewing court must closely scrutinize its action in light of the ICC's statutory obligations to protect the public interest and to enforce the antitrust laws. Whether or not an abuse of discretion is present must ultimately depend upon the transaction approved, its possible consequences, and any justifications for the deferral. We turn now to this question, first with respect to the deferral of the control issue, and second with respect to the deferral of the anticompetitive issues.

<sup>7</sup> In Pan American World Airways v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, we held that Congress had entrusted the narrow questions there presented to the CAB; but the violations alleged were of the Sherman Act, which unlike the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 21, supra, n. 6, contains no provision imposing an affirmative duty upon the agency to enforce the Act's provisions. The industry there was one "regulated under a regime designed to change the prior competitive system," id., at 301, and the CAB could have retained power and granted antitrust immunity for the actions involved had they occurred after passage of § 411 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, 52 Stat. 1003, id., at 312.

HÌ Ī ÁMÈJÀI Í HÀ JÌ LÀ Ì ÁMÈOÀJÌ I HÀFÌ Ì GLÀ Ì SEÒaÉCAÁ Í HÀEJÌ LÀFJÌ Ì ÁMÈSÓYÓGÌ HÀEFG

[*499] III.

LEdHN[8] [8]REA's proposed issuance of a 20% stock [****25] interest to Greyhound undoubtedly raised a serious question whether control of its operations might pass to Greyhound. Control under § 5 must be judged realistically, and is a matter of degree. See Rochester Tel. Corp. v. United States, 307 U.S. 125. Even the 20% acquisition standing alone might raise an issue of control necessitating greater consideration than given it by the ICC, but it is clear from REA's own evidence that the purpose of its negotiations with Greyhound was to bring the two companies into a joint alignment. The 20% stock issuance was treated by both as the first step of a more ambitious project, and as evidence of the seriousness of each other's intentions to that end.

LEdHN[9] [9]What the ICC has done must, however, be placed in perspective. It has [**1763] not denied that a substantial issue of control is present, and it has not refused to consider the issue. It has held only that consideration should be deferred for the 60-day period during which Greyhound has agreed to extend to REA stockholders an offer to purchase up to 1,000,000 shares. We have stressed the [****26] unsatisfactory consequences which often occur when agencies defer action and leave parties uncertain as to their rights and obligations. United States v. Chicago, M., St. P. & P. R. Co., 294 U.S. 499, 510. We might also observe that the ICC apparently could have avoided the deferral by requiring REA and Greyhound to reform their contract so that all the facts relevant to the control issue could be ascertained before approval was given under § 20a (2).<sup>8</sup> Nevertheless, we cannot say that the [*500] ICC exceeded its discretion when it deferred consideration of the control issue; radical changes in the relevant facts may take place during the 60-day period, and it is highly unlikely that any harm can flow to appellants or to the public interest from a deferral limited to that issue.

[****27] LEdHN[10A] [10A]Resolution of the "public interest" issue under § 5, requiring [***917] consideration of anticompetitive and other consequences, is required when the threshold fact of control or merger is established. But in this case, even assuming that the 20% purchase may amount to "control" under the existing stock distribution, events may occur during the 60-day period which might negate this possibility. Some railroads have indicated their intention to sell their REA holdings, but whether Greyhound or the dissident railroads wind up in a controlling position may depend on the extent to which the latter exercise their right of first refusal. The dissident railroads have made clear their intention to prevent Greyhound from acquiring any additional shares, but even if they obtain one-third of REA's stock they will be able to determine the composition of REA's Board of Directors. In either case, the added power in the hands of the dissident roads may, depending on the circumstances, lead the ICC to find that Greyhound had not acquired control.<sup>9</sup> Thus the control question can more realistically be resolved [****28] with finality after the 60-day period.

LEdHN[11] [11]Moreover, the ICC reasonably concluded that allowing Greyhound tentatively to acquire the 20% stock interest would not prejudice appellants as to the control issue [*501] in light of the dissident railroads'

<sup>8</sup> A change in the agreement providing that Greyhound should offer to purchase the stock held by the railroads before the issuance of the 500,000 shares would have developed the relevant facts, and made unnecessary postponement of the determination of either the control or competition issue.

<sup>9</sup> If the dissident REA railroad stockholders exercised their right of first refusal to buy the 1,000,000 shares the other railroad stockholders might sell, their combined stockholdings would be increased to over 50% of the REA shares. See Brief for the United States and ICC, p. 18, n. 9.

HÌ Í ÁMÈJÀÍ Í ÉFLÀÍ ÁUÉOÄFÍ Í ÉFFÍ Í HÀFÍ ÁSEÓaÉCAÁÍ ÉÉEJFÍ LAFJÍ Í ÁMÈJÀSÓYÓGÍ HÀFÉEG position that Greyhound would not acquire "one additional share under the offer to purchase up to one million shares . . . , and because Greyhound would be unable under REA's bylaws to control the board, since its five directors would be faced by 18 railroad directors, any 13 of whom would have the power to prevent any action proposed by Greyhound.

IV.

LEdHN[12]<sup>[12]</sup> [****29] The action of the Commission in deferring consideration of the anticompetitive issues stands on a different footing. The Commission's responsibility under § 5 and under the Clayton Act differs markedly, and the reasons which support an exercise of discretion as to the control issue are wholly inapplicable [**1764] to the anticompetitive questions. There is, in short, no reasonable justification for deferring the Clayton Act questions.

LEdHN[1C]<sup>[1]</sup> [1C] LEdHN[2B]<sup>[1]</sup> [2B] LEdHN[10B]<sup>[1]</sup> [10B] LEdHN[13]<sup>[1]</sup> [13] LEdHN[14]<sup>[1]</sup> [14] LEdHN[15]<sup>[1]</sup> [15] LEdHN[16]<sup>[1]</sup> [16] The Commission is, of course, required to consider anticompetitive issues under the public interest standard of § 5, just as it must under the public interest standard of § 20a. But the duty [****30] under § 5, as we point out above, arises only after the threshold fact of control is established. No such preliminary finding need be made to trigger the ICC's duty under the Clayton Act. HNT<sup>[1]</sup> A company need not acquire control of another company in order to violate the Clayton Act. See, e. g., United States v. du Pont & Co., 353 U.S. 586; American Crystal Sugar Co. v. Cuban-American Sugar Co., 152 F.Supp. 387 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1957), aff'd, 259 F.2d 524 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1958). Section 7 proscribes acquisition of "any part" of a company's stock where the effect "may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." Moreover, the purpose of § 5 is significantly different from that of the Clayton Act. Section 5 is designed [***918] to enable carriers to seek and obtain approval of consolidations with other carriers, with immunity from the antitrust [*502] laws. When a carrier effects a consolidation without ICC authority, the Commission can of course act under § 5 (4). But, as the Commission has often held, [****31] the carrier must initiate consolidations under § 5, and it is reasonable to expect that carriers will seek the benefits of that provision. In contrast, the Clayton Act is prohibitive, and imposes a positive obligation upon the ICC to act. The Commission is directed, whenever it has reason to believe any carrier within its jurisdiction is violating § 7, to "issue and serve upon such person and the Attorney General a complaint stating its charges in that respect, and containing a notice of a hearing . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 21 (b). Section 16, 15 U. S. C. § 26, excepts from the power of private persons to bring § 7 suits for injunctive relief all cases involving matters subject to ICC jurisdiction. By thus limiting the authority of private persons to institute court proceedings to enjoin § 7 violations, this provision underscores the ICC's responsibility to act when such violations are brought to its attention.

One of the principal justifications advanced for the ICC's deferral of the control issue is that the facts relevant to that issue may change so significantly during the 60-day period that the control question could be settled [****32] either way. No such possibility exists with respect to at least some of the anticompetitive issues presented by REA's application. We need not accept the argument of appellants, based upon the distinction between "express" and other forms of transport, see, e. g., Railway Express Agency, Inc., Extension -- Nashua, N. H., 91 M. C. C. 311, 322, sustained sub nom. Auclair Transportation, Inc. v. United States, 221 F.Supp. 328 (D. Mass.), aff'd, 376 U.S. 514, that the 20% stock acquisition would itself violate § 7 because REA controls 88% and Greyhound 7% of the "express" market. For if appellees REA and Greyhound are correct that, because of the increasing cross-competition among groups carrying [*503] transport, it is impossible to categorize REA as a carrier of "express," then the claims of appellant truck lines, freight forwarders and trucking associations take on added significance. It is precisely the increasing diversification of REA's transport activity, together with Greyhound's considerable capacity and the economies and efficiencies the two companies intend to effectuate jointly, that concerns these appellants.

[****33] It is clear that REA and Greyhound contemplate major changes in their operation which could have a significant impact upon competition for express and other types of transport which they seek to carry. The "Memorandum of Understanding" into which the companies entered about three weeks before REA [**1765] agreed to Greyhound's 20% stock acquisition contemplates efficiencies and savings through consolidation of facilities for terminal service, of garages, and of communications, advertising and sales forces. These changes might therefore realize large savings for both REA and Greyhound, and in this way and other ways significantly strengthen their competitive position. And the Memorandum expresses a determination to engage in aggressive action to capture larger shares of express and transport business, especially by utilizing Greyhound's bus operations as a complement to [***919] REA's air and rail service. "The consolidation of effort by the two companies," the Memorandum states, "would create a new market with revenue opportunity arising from a complete package express service to the public." The "new ability" of the air express service to reach off-airline points would [***34] add significantly to REA and Greyhound revenues, and the new market would have an estimated growth potential of 10% per year. Similarly, rail-bus service was expected to generate millions in "new business," and to "create a new capability for the two carriers to compete in the ltl [less-than-load] market. The only foreseeable limitation to the [*504] growth of this service would be the physical space limitations of Greyhound's fleet."

HÌ Í ÁMÈJÀÍ Í ÉHÀÍ ÁUÉOÀFÍ Í ÉFÍ Í LÀÍ ÁSEÒAÉCÁÍ ÉÉEJFÍ LÀFJÍ Í ÁMÈJÀSÓYÓGÍ HÀÉÉH

There is nothing in the record to rebut the allegations of many of the appellants that cooperation between Greyhound and REA of the sort contemplated by the Memorandum aided by the 20% stock acquisition will result in serious harm to appellants individually and to the public interest which they serve. The freight forwarders fear a great reduction in their business, as do the bus companies. Some of the bus companies, which engage in commuter transport, claim that Greyhound-REA cooperation would deprive them of their express business, and that, since that business makes economically feasible their commuter operations, would compel the termination of services essential to the public interest.

LEdHN[17] [17] [***35] It cannot be said with assurance that deferral of consideration of the anticompetitive issues will in no way prejudice appellants or the public interest. The fact that the railroads presently control the REA Board of Directors is hardly relevant to that question. It is not the possibility of control that may prejudice appellants and the public interest, but simply the fact that with Greyhound holding 20% of REA's stock there is likely to be immediate and continuing cooperation between the companies, cooperation which appellants claim will be to their detriment and which the Government concedes may be against the public interest. If appellants are correct, and if such an alliance would in fact be against the public interest, then § 7 of the Clayton Act requires that it be stopped in its incipency. Cf. FTC v. Dean Foods Co., 384 U.S. 597, 606, n. 5.

We are told that REA is in need of funds, and that ICC approval of the 20% stock acquisition assures that REA will obtain capital and gain a measure of independence from the railroads. There is certainly support for the position that REA needs to free "itself from the [*505] control and domination previously [***36] exercised by its railroad shareholders over its operations." 80 ICC Ann. Rep., p. 22 (1966). The strong ties between REA and the railroads led to the operation of REA in the railroads' own interests, without regard to their coincidence with REA's best interests or the public interest. Prior to a 1959 agreement, generated in large part by REA losses, see Express Contract, 1959, supra, 308 I. C. C., at 546, REA was required to distribute traffic among carriers on the basis of existing traffic patterns, and the consent of rail carriers operating between given points was required before REA could utilize carriers other than railroads between those points. Changes in these limitations have enabled REA to finance [**1766] some improvements and steadily to increase its corporate surplus. Study of REA Express, [*920] Staff Liaison Group V-C, CAB, FMC & ICC 24-26 (1965). But it does not follow that REA will be any better off in the long run, or that the public interest will be advanced, if its ownership shifts in part or entirely to Greyhound.

LEdHN[18] [18] While the history of [***37] REA does not in itself provide a blueprint for its future, it does "afford a basis for considering the lawfulness of REA's status and activities, and the economic desirability of its apparent direction of growth." Study, op. cit. supra, at 3. That history indicates that there may be some relationship between REA's depressed state and its close ties with railroads. Before acting on this premise, however, the ICC must at least consider the question whether a given course of action will in fact alleviate the problem. If railroad ownership operated in the past to deprive REA of an opportunity to prosper and serve the public interest, it is not inconceivable that partial ownership by Greyhound will have the same result. Greyhound, presumably, is no less likely to act in its own interest. If the railroads operated REA, as appellees contend, to minimize competition for [*506] transport generally between REA and the railroads, and for express between the railroads themselves and between railroads and other modes of transport, how will partial or complete ownership by Greyhound change things? Even if only partial ownership results, may Greyhound and the railroad owners operate [***38] REA so as to minimize competition between REA and themselves for transport generally? What effect, for example, would partial ownership by Greyhound have upon the recent efforts of REA to add to its express operations the hauling of larger and more varied volumes of freight, efforts which bring it into competition with Greyhound and other bus lines as well as with truck lines and freight forwarders? Moreover, what assurance is there that REA will not tend to route shipments via Greyhound in preference to more efficient or economical carriers or modes, just as the railroads bound REA to use their lines as opposed to other modes, absent their approval? We assume that REA needs funds and would be better off more independent from the railroads, but before the ICC can use these reasons to justify a diversification of ownership it must at least consider whether the specific action approved may operate to the detriment of REA or the public interest.

HÌ Ī ÁMEÑAÍ Í ÆB Ë LÀ Í ÁUÉOÄFÍ Í ÆFÍ Í LÀ Í ÁSEØaÉCAÁ Í ÆJGELFJÍ Í ÁUÉASÓYÓGÍ HÆRÍ

LEdHN[19] [19] There is, finally, little merit to the Government's argument that deferral of the anticompetitive issues is strongly supported by considerations of administrative [***39] convenience. The only circumstance in which the anticompetitive issues may be eliminated from the case is if Greyhound, thwarted at the end of the 60 days in its plans to control REA, were to dispose of its 20% interest. But the ICC can hardly justify deferral of consideration of the consequences of a transaction on the possibility that the problems its approval creates may shortly vanish by a reversal of the transaction itself. Of course, if, as appellees claim, it is most likely that Greyhound will [*507] acquire no further stock, then consideration of those consequences now would not be wasted effort. And the argument of wasted effort is still less persuasive if appellees are proved wrong and Greyhound does acquire more stock. For the most significant question which the ICC must face is whether it is in the public interest that REA continue to be owned by other transport companies, [***921] and specifically by Greyhound. Once this question is resolved as to the 20% stock acquisition, and the consequences of that acquisition are fully weighed, the ICC's task in any subsequent proceeding if Greyhound enlarges its stock interest will be far more manageable.

LEdHN[20] [20] We therefore conclude that, although the possibility that Greyhound may not increase its holdings within the 60-day [*1767] period may justify deferral of resolution of the control issue, it does not justify delay in consideration of the anticompetitive effects of the 20% transaction. The Government was correct in its position before the ICC that this record placed "before the Commission serious questions under section 7 of the Clayton Act," requiring a hearing.

The judgment of the District Court is reversed with direction to enter a new judgment remanding the case to the Interstate Commerce Commission for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: WHITE (In Part)

Dissent by: WHITE (In Part); HARLAN

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE WHITE, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I agree with most of the Court's opinion, with its holding that competitive factors must be considered in a § 20a proceeding and with its ruling that a hearing should have been held by the Commission in this case before approving the issuance of the securities by Railway Express Agency, Inc., to Greyhound Corporation. [***41]

[*508] But I am doubtful about those parts of the Court's opinion which indicate that although the public interest requires the consideration of competitive factors in connection with the issuance of stock under § 20a, the public interest also demands that if a lessening of competition is found or threatened within the meaning of § 7 of the Clayton Act, the issuance must be disapproved. Under § 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act, competitive factors must also be considered in determining the public interest, but there a balanced view of the public interest permits the approval of a merger or consolidation despite any actual or probable competitive impact. Mergers which would violate § 7 are thus permissible under § 5 if found in the public interest but only those acquisitions of stock which are not suspect under § 7 of the Clayton Act are permissible under § 20a.

HÌ Í ÁMEÑAÍ I ÉI ÈI LÀ Í ÁUÉOÄFÍ I ÉFÍ I LÀ Í ÁSEÓaÉCAÁI ÉI JGLAFJÍ I ÁUÉSÓYÓGÍ I HARLÁN F

In the last analysis the Court rests this rather odd distinction on the Act itself -- that is, Congress is said to have intended this very result because it provided in § 5 (11) that the approval of a transaction under § 5 relieves the parties from antitrust liability and did not so provide in connection with [****42] § 20a transactions. I do not think, however, that this ends the matter, and I find unconvincing the speculative reasons the Court gives for suggesting that Congress intended any such result.

Much more persuasive to me is the approach of Pan American World Airways v. United States, 371 U.S. 296. That case involved the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, 52 Stat. 973, re-enacted as the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, 72 Stat. 731, 49 U. S. C. § 1301 et seq., which provided antitrust immunity for transactions approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board under §§ 408, 409, and 412. The course of conduct attacked by the United States under § 1 of the Sherman Act in Pan American was not, however, within any of these sections. [***922] The Court, nevertheless, held that the conduct was clearly of the kind [*509] specifically committed to regulation by the Board under other sections of the Act and was unassailable in an independent civil action brought by the United States under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

In the case before us, § 20a (2) provides that it shall be unlawful for any carrier to issue securities unless approved by the Commission [****43] after finding that the issuance:

"(a) is for some lawful object within its corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest, which is necessary or appropriate for or consistent with the proper performance by the carrier of service to the public as a common carrier, and which will not impair its ability to perform that service, and (b) is reasonably necessary and appropriate for such purpose."

[**1768] The Commission may grant an application under § 20a in whole or in part with such modifications and on such terms and conditions as the Commission may deem appropriate, and it may from time to time make such supplemental orders with respect to the transaction as it may deem necessary. § 20a (3). Moreover, it is expressly provided that "the jurisdiction conferred upon the Commission by this section shall be exclusive and plenary, and a carrier may issue securities and assume obligations or liabilities in accordance with the provisions of this section without securing approval other than as specified herein." § 20a (7).

Having these powers conferred upon it in the name of the public interest, the Commission may, in my view, approve the issuance of stock [****44] by a carrier if it deems the public interest requires it even though there may be a probable lessening of competition which otherwise would violate § 7 of the Clayton Act. This seems to be precisely what Congress intended by expressly providing in § 7 of the Clayton Act itself that "Nothing contained in this [*510] section shall apply to transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority given by the . . . Interstate Commerce Commission . . . under any statutory provision vesting such power in such Commission . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 18.

It makes very little sense to me to hold that a stock acquisition involving control may be approved if the public interest requires it, despite any actual anticompetitive impact, and yet to forbid the approval of an acquisition which falls short of control but which "may" injure competition within the meaning of the Clayton Act.

Thus while I agree that a hearing should be required before the Commission approves the issuance of the securities in this case, I would make it clear that competitive considerations are only some of the factors to be weighed in reaching a decision concerning the public interest, much as the Court [****45] has viewed the proceedings under § 5. McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67. At the very least I would not now decide that the Commission is powerless to approve the issuance of securities under § 20a if it determines that the impact on competition would otherwise be barred by the Clayton Act.

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, whom MR. JUSTICE STEWART joins, dissenting.

HÌ Í ÁMÈJÁÍ Í ÉÉ FELÀ Í ÁUÉDÉFÍ Í ÉÉFÍ Í LÀ Í ÁSEÓaÉCAÁÍ ÉÉÉGGJÁFJÍ Í ÁMÈJÁSÓYÓGJÍ HÀÉÉÍ

This case involves a proposed stock issue by appellee Railway Express Agency, Inc. (REA), of 500,000 [***923] shares of previously authorized but unissued shares of its common stock. Under § 20a (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U. S. C. § 20a (2), this type of stock transaction must be authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which must determine whether the issue is "for some lawful object within . . . [the applicant's] corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest . . . ."

[*511] Under the proposed transactions REA contracted to sell this block of shares for $ 10,000,000 to the Greyhound Corporation, which would then offer to purchase within a 60-day period an additional 1,000,000 shares from existing stockholders, all of whom [***46] are railroads and all of whom hold rights of first refusal as to the sale of existing REA shares. Some of these railroad-stockholders have been opposed to Greyhound's entry into REA and have expressed their intention to exercise their pre-emptive rights. It is undisputed that if Greyhound nevertheless succeeds in purchasing these additional shares it would be in a position to exercise a substantial degree of control over REA, cf. Rochester Tel. Corp. v. United States, 307 U.S. 125, 145, and that such control would require the approval of the ICC under § 5 (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U. S. C. § 5 (2). It was also alleged by the United States as an intervenor before the ICC that the possible exercise of control by Greyhound over REA and an anticipated [**1769] co-ordination of certain services by the two carriers<sup>1</sup> raised serious antitrust questions under § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 18, which the ICC is bound to enforce as to regulated carriers, Clayton Act § 11, 15 U. S. C. § 21.

[***47] The Interstate Commerce Commission did not deal with the substance of these "control" and "antitrust" issues. It found that REA "urgently needs the proceeds of $ 10,000,000 . . .,"<sup>2</sup> and that it was not necessary, given [*512] the uncertainty as to the future relationship of Greyhound and REA, to deal with the control issue at that time. The Commission noted specifically that "if in the future the acquisition of control or power to control, or other matter or transaction to which section 5 of the act applies, becomes imminent or apparent, the opportunity will be available for all interested persons to interpose their opposition . . . ."

[***48] On review, a three-judge District Court for the District of Colorado sustained the Commission's order, 255 F.Supp. 704. It read the ICC's decision, as does this Court, as saying only "that in the circumstances presented the public interest requires the issuance of the stock and [***924] that determination of the competitive effects will be appropriate for consideration after the chain of events started by the stock issuance is ascertainable rather than conjectural." Id., at 709. The District Court then held that "in the circumstances it is not our prerogative to interfere with what we deem to be a reasonable exercise by the Commission of its discretionary powers." Id., at 710.

I would affirm this judgment of the District Court, and therefore must dissent from today's decision. The Court holds that "the ICC is required, as a general rule, under its duty to determine that the proposed transaction is in the 'public interest' and for a 'lawful object,' to consider the control and anticompetitive consequences before approving stock issuances under § 20a (2)." Ante, p. 498. The Court notes, however, that "this does not [*513] [***49] mean the ICC must grant a hearing in every case, or that it may never defer consideration of issues which arise when special circumstances are present," ibid., but concludes that while it was not an abuse of discretion to defer consideration of the "control" question raised by the intervenors, it was improper to refuse to deal with the "anticompetitive" issues at this stage. I believe that this decision misapplies the relevant statutes and seriously impedes sound administrative practice.

<sup>1</sup>The Commission found that REA had agreed "to consider seriously and work toward a long-term agreement between applicant [REA] and Greyhound to consolidate operating functions and facilities, and to cooperate in all lawful, feasible and jointly advantageous ways to effect economies, improve service and increase public receptivity and patronage . . . ." A "Memorandum of Understanding" between an official of each of the two companies contained some suggested methods for achieving these goals.

<sup>2</sup>The ICC's order dealing with the legitimacy of this transaction said: ". . . applicant urgently needs the proceeds of $ 10,000,000 in its program of acquiring and modernizing terminals and equipment in order to keep operating costs at a reasonable level; that it is handicapped in borrowing to finance capital improvements because of its unfavorable debt-equity ratio; that the proposed issue will improve its ratio as well as reduce to some extent the amount of future borrowing required; that the price of $ 20 per share is fair and reasonable; and that the expenses of the issue are estimated at $ 15,000 . . . ."

I.

Section 20a (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act is concerned with new stock issues. Congress' dominant concern was "to maintain a sound structure for the . . . support of railroad credit," [\[\*\*1770\]](#) 1 Sharfman, The Interstate Commerce Commission 190 (1931),<sup>3</sup> and nothing in the legislative background of the section indicates that the words "for some lawful object within its corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest" were intended to encompass issues of antitrust law. Of course the phrase "the public interest" is broad, and in the context of other legislation comparable terms [\[\*514\]](#) have been held to embrace antitrust matters. E. g., Federal Communications Act, [\[\*\*\*\*50\] § 307](#), 48 Stat. 1083, 47 U. S. C. § 307, as construed in FCC v. RCA Communications, Inc., 346 U.S. 86. But the mere inclusion of such language in this instance is not the end of our inquiry, for § 20a must be read in its entirety and interpreted in conjunction with other sections of the Act.

[\[\*\*\*\*51\]](#) In contrast to § 20a, which by its detailed and explicit terms deals only with the problem of fiscal responsibility,<sup>4</sup> [\[\*\*\*\*52\]](#) § 5 of the Act, enacted [\[\*\*\*925\]](#) at the same time,<sup>5</sup> deals specifically with problems of "control." Indeed, the standards laid out in § 5 are directly relevant to the various factual issues hypothesized by the Court in Part IV of its opinion. Section 5 does not deal solely with transfers of shares, but with any lease or contract between two carriers for the operation of their properties, §§ 5 (2) (a)(i), 5 (4); see [\[\*515\] Gilbertville Trucking Co. v. United States, 371 U.S. 115, 125](#). It would thus appear that any type of agreement between Greyhound and REA for the integration of their operations would -- with or without the sale of shares -- fall within the purview of § 5.

Section 5 not only deals explicitly with problems of control, but it establishes the public interest criteria which the ICC is bound to use in making that type [\[\*\*1771\]](#) of inquiry. For example, the Commission must consider "(1) The effect of the proposed transaction upon adequate transportation service to the public; . . . (3) the total fixed charges resulting from the proposed transaction; and (4) the interest of the carrier employees affected." § 5 (2) (c). This Court has recognized that standards of market control in the transportation industry are different from those governing other business transactions: the ICC must take account of antitrust policy in judging the control questions under § 5, McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67, but this interest is simply one of the relevant criteria, and if on balance the Commission finds a proposed undertaking to be in the public interest the statute authorizes a grant of antitrust immunity to the transaction. § 5 (11); [\[\*\*\*\*53\] Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. United States, 382 U.S. 154; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. United States, 361 U.S. 173; McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, supra.](#) Section 5 thus covers fully the problems of control; likewise, the antitrust issues are dealt with <sup>3</sup>The "public interest" of concern to Congress was the problem of watered stock. See, e. g., statement of Congressman Rayburn: ". . . if we write into the law of the land a statute to the effect that before a railroad can issue new securities, before it can put them on the market, it must come before the properly constituted governmental agency, lay the full facts of its financial situation before that body, tell that body what it intends to do with the money derived from the sale of the issue of securities, and after it has received the approval of that regulating body and it goes out and puts those securities on the market, then the Interstate Commerce Commission by this law is empowered at any time to call it to account and have it tell to that regulating body that it expended the money, the proceeds of the sale of securities, for the purposes for which it had made the application." 58 Cong. Rec. 8376 (1919). See also statement of Congressman Esch, id., at 8317-8318. See generally MacVeagh, The Transportation Act of 1920, at 486-492 (1923).

<sup>4</sup>Section 20a (2) reads in its entirety: "It shall be unlawful for any carrier to issue any share of capital stock or any bond or other evidence of interest in or indebtedness of the carrier (hereinafter in this section collectively termed 'securities') or to assume any obligation or liability as lessor, lessee, guarantor, indorser, surety, or otherwise, in respect of the securities of any other person, natural or artificial, even though permitted by the authority creating the carrier corporation, unless and until, and then only to the extent that, upon application by the carrier, and after investigation by the Commission of the purposes and uses of the proposed issue and the proceeds thereof, or of the proposed assumption of obligation or liability in respect of the securities of any other person, natural or artificial, the Commission by order authorizes such issue or assumption. The Commission shall make such order only if it finds that such issue or assumption: (a) is for some lawful object within its corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest, which is necessary or appropriate for or consistent with the proper performance by the carrier of service to the public as a common carrier, and which will not impair its ability to perform that service, and (b) is reasonably necessary and appropriate for such purpose."

<sup>5</sup>Both sections were parts of the Transportation Act of 1920, 41 Stat. 480, 494.

HÌ Í ÁMÈJÀÍ Í HÀ FÍ LÀ Í ÁMÈDÀÍ Í HÀFÍ Í FLÀÍ ÁMÈOÀÉCAÁÍ HÀEJG LÀFJÍ Í ÁMÈSÓYÓGÍ HÀHÀÍ H

specifically in § 11 of the Clayton Act, which authorizes the ICC to enforce § 7 of that Act, forbidding the acquisition of stock the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." Hence these sections, and not § 20a, are the substantive provisions governing the Commission's jurisdiction in respect to the anticompetitive aspects of this case.

[*516] For procedural reasons, too, § 20a seems inappropriate as a vehicle to [***926] replace or augment § 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act and §§ 7 and 11 of the Clayton Act. When a carrier applies for authorization to issue stock, the Commission must give notice to the various States in which the carrier operates so that relevant state regulatory agencies, which also supervise the finances and corporate structure of these companies, may raise objections to the proposed [****54] transaction. The Commission need not, however, hold a hearing before approving the transaction. § 20a (6). In contrast, when the ICC deals with problems of control under § 5, it is bound not only to notify the various state authorities but also to "afford reasonable opportunity for interested parties to be heard." § 5 (2)(b). And § 11 of the Clayton Act requires the Commission to notify the Attorney General if it believes that any carrier is violating § 7, and the Attorney General has the statutory right to intervene in the mandatory hearing on the question.

Given the complexities of control and antitrust problems in the transportation field, and given the specific and detailed provisions of the statute in § 5, and in § 11 of the Clayton Act, devoted particularly to them, it seems to me quite evident that the sounder view of the statutory scheme is to regard § 20a as being limited to matters of corporate financing and § 5 and § 7 as being the source of the Commission's authority and duty to deal with these other matters.

None of the Commission cases cited by the Court in support of its position that § 20a was envisioned as also encompassing control and antitrust considerations [***55] is apposite. Columbia Terminals Co. -- Issuance of Notes, 40 M. C. C. 288, dealt, as the Court notes, with § 10 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 20, which specifically requires common carriers in certain situations to sell securities "by competitive bidding under regulations to be prescribed by [*517] rule or otherwise by the Interstate Commerce Commission." The ICC merely held that this statute had not been repealed by § 20a. The general language cited by the Court from Stock of New Jersey, I. & I. R. Co., 94 I. C. C. 727, was written in a case in which the issue was whether the applicant railroad could pay an indebtedness to its sole stockholder, another railroad, through a distribution of stock as a dividend. The ICC held this method of financing acceptable; antitrust considerations were in no way involved.

[**1772] The third ICC decision cited by the Court, Chesapeake & O. R. Co. Purchase, 271 I. C. C. 5, would seem, if anything, inconsistent with its view of § 20a. There the Commission was requested to approve an interlocking directorate, which is forbidden unless authorized by the Commission [***56] pursuant to § 20a (12) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U. S. C. § 20a (12). In making its decision the Commission did not incorporate § 5 control standards into § 20a (12). Quite the contrary, it noted that "the policy of the Congress as to consolidations, mergers, and other forms of corporate unification and association is now to be found in the provisions of section 5," id., at 12; that no application under § 5 (2) had been filed; and that "it follows that the evidence pertaining to control of the New York Central or ultimate unification of the two carriers is irrelevant to the principal issues before us, and may not be considered in disposing of those issues." Ibid. The Commission then determined, under its established standards for judging the acceptability of an interlocking [***927] directorate, id., at 18, that such an authorization would be improper, but observed that "if the applicants are firmly of the opinion that the proposed association will result in the benefits to the carriers and to the public which they contend we should find on the showing that they have made in this proceeding, there is [***57] no reason why they should not [*518] file an application for some form of association under section 5 (2) of the act." Id., at 41-42.

The lack of authority for the Court's view of § 20a is not limited to administrative decisions. In the complex Alleghany Corp. litigation, summarized by the Court, ante, pp. 497-498, this Court sustained the ICC's determination that it could act upon a § 20a application without involving itself in difficult issues of intercorporate control as the District Court had ordered. The protracted and tangled character of that litigation, until resolved in the interests of simplicity by this Court's affirmance of the ICC's approach, should be a warning of the unfortunate consequences that may follow judicial requirements complicating and proliferating administrative hearings in unfamiliar fields; this is especially so where there are, as here, numerous parties some of whom have a strong interest in achieving delay.

HÌ ĀNEJĀN I ĀE FÌ LÀ I ĀUĒOĀFÌ I ĀE FÌ GĀI ĀSEOāECAĀ ĀE JGÌ LAFJÌ ĀNEJĀSÓYÓGÌ HĀEĀI

II.

Although not accepting the reading of the Act which I have urged, the Court nonetheless appears to recognize that the issue of "control" is a separate one from that of financial regularity, and one that [****58] can appropriately be dealt with in a separate and subsequent proceeding. Since the Court also acknowledges, as it must, that at this later hearing REA and Greyhound may request a § 5 (11) exemption, and thus bring into play all the standards of § 5, I find the Court's insistence that this issue falls within the purview of § 20a rather than § 5 essentially an academic one. The ICC will still be able to conduct its hearings just as it wished to do here, except that its subsequent "§ 5 proceeding" will henceforth be labeled a "§ 20a and § 5 proceeding."

Given the Court's recognition that the ICC has discretion to postpone the "control" determination, I find [*519] it difficult to accept its argument that "antitrust" factors may not similarly be postponed.

It should be recalled that the only matter raised in this application is REA's desire to issue 500,000 shares of its stock to "a non-railroad purchaser," which concededly would bring to the issuer capital funds required for investment purposes. Under the proposed transaction, after Greyhound purchases these shares it will extend an offer to purchase within 60 days an additional 1,000,000 shares, as to which other shareholders [****59] hold rights of first refusal. All parties are in agreement that control and antitrust problems will be raised if Greyhound is ultimately successful in effecting these [**1773] additional purchases. The only question is whether the Commission can leave these questions for a later determination. Because of the uncertainty as to the outcome of the further stock purchase offer, the Court agrees that postponement of the control issue was proper. But this uncertainty is equally crucial to the Clayton Act issues. The likelihood of a Clayton Act violation will of course be increased if Greyhound obtains these additional shares and is in a position to control, and to consolidate operations with, REA. On [***928] the other hand, if the shares are bought by some of the appellants whose interests appear to be adverse to Greyhound, the possibility of substantial harm to competition will be minimal. The core of the Clayton Act question, then, is inexorably tied to the control question, and the Court does not deny that these problems overlap. In these circumstances I find it impossible to follow the Court in holding, on the one hand, that the control hearing was permissibly postponed, [****60] but, on the other, that the ICC abused its discretion in similarly deferring any Clayton Act hearing.

To require such a proliferation of hearings as to a single transaction -- one involving a straightforward business [*520] transaction negotiated in terms of existing market conditions and the existing needs of the parties -- is bound to obstruct the smooth workings of the administrative process. The penetrating observations of Professor Jaffe seem to me especially pertinent in this situation:

"I gather the impression that some judges who quite insistently display a 'correct' attitude of deference on substantive issues apply a different standard to procedural decisions: they do not hesitate to protract and to complicate the administrative process. Their premise may be that the considerations that dictate deference to substantive decisions are inapplicable to procedural ones. This is only partly true. . . . Since procedural decisions should be made to serve the substantive task, it follows that expertness in matters of substance are relevant to the exercise of procedural discretion.

". . . [An agency] must ration its limited resources of time, energy and money. It [****61] must devote them to those exigent and soluble problems which are most nearly related to its core responsibility. What problems are most exigent, how they can best be solved . . . are questions the solution to which peculiarly demands a feeling for the whole situation. . . . If a court is not as well fitted to solve substantive problems as the agency, if on this level intermittent, disjunct criticism disperses accountability, how much more is this true where the deployment of forces is involved." Jaffe, Judicial Control of Administrative Action 566-567 (1965).

The courts have traditionally permitted busy agencies substantial flexibility in formulating their internal procedures, and encouraged their efforts to eliminate duplicative action and repetitive hearings. See, e. g., Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., ante, pp. 341-343; [*521] *Federal Power Comm'n v. Tennessee Gas Co., 371*

HÌ Í ÁMEÑAÍ Í Í GFLÀÍ ÁUÑOÄFI Í Í Í HÀÍ ÁSEØAÑCAÁÍ Í Í Í LAFJÍ Í ÁMEÑSÓYÓGÍ Í HÀÍ F

U.S. 145, 153-155, where the Court approved a "two-step procedure" as "not only entirely appropriate but in the best tradition of effective administrative practice"; United States v. Pierce Auto Lines, 327 U.S. 515, 534-536; [***62] Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. United States, 386 U.S. 372, 459 (dissenting opinion); cf. Fahey v. Mallonee, 332 U.S. 245; Opp Cotton Mills v. Administrator, 312 U.S. 126, 152-154; United States v. Illinois Central R. Co., 291 U.S. 457.

[**1774] The allowance of such flexibility, and the exercise of prudence by the courts, is especially appropriate where, as here, the issue is not [***929] whether to hold a hearing but when to do so, and where there has been no showing that harm would come from deferring consideration of the antitrust issues. This is not a case in which a merger is about to be consummated, and in which it might be feared that the integration of two businesses will be impossible to "unscramble" at some future time. Compare FTC v. Dean Foods Co., 384 U.S. 597. These issues concern, as the Court's parade of speculative examples indicates, ante, pp. 505-506, the implications of a possible future co-ordination of some carrier services between REA and Greyhound. But these matters will only crystallize for purposes of legal analysis when it is ascertained [****63] (1) what type of control, if any, Greyhound will have over REA; and (2) what type of co-ordinated activities are planned. None of these issues has been prejudged, and provisional relief can be granted by the Commission, if necessary, §§ 5 (2), (7), (9); cf. Gilbertville Trucking Co. v. United States, 371 U.S. 115, 129-131. The district courts likewise have authority to grant injunctive relief on application of the Commission. § 5 (8).

In these circumstances I do not believe it was an abuse of discretion for the ICC to authorize the issuance [*522] of stock, postponing consideration of the control and antitrust issues until the transaction was completed some 60 days later. It is regrettable that the Court's preoccupation with the future antitrust possibilities of this situation, fully acknowledged by all but still entirely speculative, should have led it to interfere, so unnecessarily, with the obviously sensible course of procedure adopted by the Commission.

I would affirm the judgment of the District Court.

References

---

13 Am Jur 2d, Carriers 36

US Digest Anno, Interstate Commerce Commission 39, 41

ALR [***64] Digests, Interstate Commerce Commission 2, 5-8

L ed Index to Anno, Interstate Commerce Commission

ALR Quick Index, Carriers

Annotation References:

Construction, by Supreme Court of the United States, of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), dealing with acquisition by one corporation of stock of another. 14 L ed 2d 784.

Kaplan v. Lehman Bros.

Supreme Court of the United States

November 13, 1967, Decided

No. 197

Reporter

389 U.S. 954 *; 88 S. Ct. 320 **; 19 L. Ed. 2d 365 ***; 1967 U.S. LEXIS 2997 ****; 1967 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,272

KAPLAN ET AL. v. LEHMAN BROTHERS ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] C. A. 7th Cir. Reported below: 371 F.2d 409.

Core Terms

---

rates, anti trust law, Stock, Securities Exchange Act, shares

Counsel: Anthony Bradley Eben and Peyton Ford for petitioners. Hammond E. Chaffetz for respondents Lehman Brothers et al., and John T. Chadwell and Richard M. Keck for respondent New York Stock Exchange.

Opinion

---

[*954] [***365] Certiorari denied. MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL took no part in the consideration or decision of this petition.

Dissent by: WARREN

Dissent

---

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN, dissenting.

This is no ordinary case. It is of utmost importance to millions of investors, and concerns practices which have an impact on the entire economy of the Nation. It presents for consideration basic principles of antitrust law not previously decided by this Court, and, consequently, is not controlled by precedent. It comes here without representation of the public interest by an agency charged with enforcement of the antitrust laws.

This case draws into question the legality under the Sherman Act of the practice of the New York Stock Exchange in adopting rules fixing minimum rates for the commissions charged by Exchange members for the purchase and sale of securities on the Exchange. Petitioners brought this action pursuant [****2] to § 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15, derivatively on behalf of five mutual fund investment companies of which they are shareholders and representatively on behalf of other shareholders against the New York Stock Exchange and five of its member firms. Their complaint charges that the practice of the Exchange in fixing minimum commission rates for transactions in securities listed on the Exchange constitutes a price-fixing conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1. They sought treble damages, a declaratory judgment, and an injunction, the effect of which would be to restrain the Exchange from interfering with the rights of individual Exchange members to set their [*955] own competitive rates of commission. The District Court granted summary judgment for the Exchange and member firms. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed.

HÌ JÁMEJENÍ I ÁEJÍ LÀ I ÁUÉDÄNGÄEÄHÄGÄLÄJÄSEÖAÄGÄMÍ ÁEJÍ I LÄFJÍ I ÁMEJESÖYQÄGJÍ ÁEJÍ

Members of the New York Stock Exchange transact over 90% of all brokerage business in stocks in the United States. Based on the current trading volume, the investing public is now paying over $ 1,200,000,000 annually, at the uniform [***3] minimum rate, for the privilege of trading on the Exchange. More than 12,000,000 persons own shares listed on the Exchange. Mutual investment funds pay about $ 100,000,000 annually in commissions to trade on the Exchange, and over 3,000,000 persons own shares in mutual funds.

Only members can trade on the New York Stock Exchange, and its constitution severely limits membership. Exchange rules set uniform minimum commission rates to be charged by members for transactions on the Exchange. The same commission rate is charged, based [**322] on the value of the round lot (100 shares), for each transaction regardless of size; the commission on an order for 10,000 shares is 100 times that on an order for 100 shares. Exchange rules prohibit any "member, [***366] allied member, member firm or member corporation" from making "a proposition for the transaction of business at less than the minimum rates of commission." Before a member is allowed trading privileges he must sign a pledge to abide by the constitution and rules of the Exchange, and any member or allied member adjudged guilty of violating the constitution or a rule may be suspended or expelled by the Board of Governors.

[***4] This Court has long held that rates fixed by agreement are unreasonable per se. United States v. National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, 339 U.S. 485, 489 (1950); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 218 (1940); United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 396-398 [*9561] (1927). Therefore, the Exchange practice here attacked, just as that in Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341 (1963), would, "had it occurred in a context free from other federal regulation, constitute a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act." Id., at 347. Here, as in Silver, the other federal regulatory scheme is the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and the clear question presented is whether there is anything "built into the regulatory scheme which performs the antitrust function . . ." Id., at 358.

Section 19 (b) of the Securities Exchange Act, 48 Stat. 898, 15 U. S. C. § 78s (b), authorizes the SEC by certain procedures "to alter or supplement the rules" of the Exchange "in respect of such matters as . [***5] . . (9) the fixing of reasonable rates of commission . . ." Respondents contend that this provision sufficiently demonstrates the SEC performs a supervisory function in respect of the Exchange's rate-fixing to exempt the practice from review under the antitrust laws. Petitioners claim that for many reasons the possibility of SEC review is an insufficient substitute for application of the antitrust laws. For example, the SEC's review of rates is discretionary. Further, the regulatory scheme fails specifically to enjoin the SEC, in determining what rates are reasonable, to "enforce the competitive standard," United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 351 (1963), and furthermore neither the SEC nor the Exchange has ever articulated any standard of reasonableness. Petitioners also claim that the underlying data used by the SEC in reviewing each of the five rate increases since 1934 have been essentially those supplied by the Exchange, and have been very limited in scope and content. Finally, they claim that if and when the SEC exercises its discretion to review rates, it is not required to hold a hearing, and because the matter is committed to [***6] the [*957] SEC's discretion, there is no effective [***367] judicial remedy to require it to initiate a rate proceeding.

If, as petitioners claim, the regulatory scheme provides no assurance that antitrust policy will be implemented, perhaps a repeal of the antitrust law may be implied "if necessary to make the Securities Exchange Act work, and even then only to the minimum extent necessary." Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, supra, at 357. However, "repeals of the antitrust laws by implication from a regulatory statute are strongly disfavored." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, supra, at 350. Moreover, petitioners claim that nothing about the Securities Exchange Act or the workings of the Exchange requires that the Exchange set minimum rates.

The court below, in a two-page opinion, held that a repeal of the antitrust laws was required to make the Securities Exchange Act work, and that "the self-regulatory function of the exchange has been exercised by virtue of § 19 (b)," 371 F.2d, at 411. In my view, this blunderbuss approach falls far short of the close analysis and delicate weighing process mandated [***7] by this Court's opinion in Silver.

The importance of the New York Stock Exchange in the functioning and livelihood of this Nation cannot be gainsaid. Ever-increasing millions of persons and billions of dollars are affected by the Exchange's practices. Without expressing any final view on the merits of the controversy, I am concerned that the law on this subject is to be permitted to lie where it has aimlessly fallen by virtue of the scanty opinion below. In my judgment, the claims advanced by petitioners raise important questions not only as to the compatibility of the Exchange's rate-fixing practice with this Nation's commitment, embodied in the antitrust laws, to competitive pricing, [*958] but also as to the fulfillment of the goal of investor protection embodied in the securities laws.

HÍ JÁVEÐAÐI Í ÆJÍ Í LÀ Í ÁUÐOÐAÐGEEÐHCLAFJ ÁSEÐA ÐEÐA ÁHÍ Í ÆÐA Í LÆJÍ Í ÁNEÐESÓY QUÁGUJÍ ÆÐA

I would grant certiorari and invite the Solicitor General to participate in argument so that the public interest may be fully explored.

End of Document

United States v. Third Nat'l Bank

Supreme Court of the United States

December 11, 1967, Argued ; March 4, 1968, Decided

No. 86

Reporter

390 U.S. 171 *; 88 S. Ct. 882 **; 19 L. Ed. 2d 1015 ***; 1968 U.S. LEXIS 2904 ****; 1968 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,372

UNITED STATES v. THIRD NATIONAL BANK IN NASHVILLE ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE.

Disposition: 260 F.Supp. 869, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

merger, district court, banks, convenience, public interest, bank merger, antitrust, Clayton Act, merging, anticompetitive, factors, largest, lessen competition, outweighed, benefits, consummated, managerial, weighing, courts, loans, Sherman Act, recruiting, appraised, deposits, effects, judging, lending

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

HN1  Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

See 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Commercial Banks > Mergers & Consolidations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN2 Financial Institutions, Bank Mergers

The Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828\(c\), provides for continued scrutiny of bank mergers under the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, but creates a new defense, with the merging banks having the burden of proving that defense.

Banking Law > Regulators > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Commercial Banks > Mergers & Consolidations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

HN3 Banking Law, Regulators

The task of the district courts, in scrutinizing a bank merger under the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828\(c\), is to inquire de novo into the validity of a bank merger approved by the relevant bank regulatory agency to determine, first, whether the merger offended the antitrust laws and, second, if it did, whether the banks had established that the merger was nonetheless justified by the convenience and needs of the community to be served.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Commercial Banks > Mergers & Consolidations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN4 Financial Institutions, Bank Mergers

Congress intended bank mergers under the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828\(c\), first to be subject to the usual antitrust analysis; if a merger fails that scrutiny, it is to be permissible only if the merging banks can establish that the merger's benefits to the community would outweigh its anticompetitive disadvantages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Commercial Banks > Mergers & Consolidations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

**HN5** Financial Institutions, Bank Mergers

The purpose of the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828, is to permit certain bank mergers even though they tend to lessen competition in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

**HN6** Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

If a merger poses a choice between preserving competition and satisfying the requirements of convenience and need, the injury and benefit are to be weighed and decision is to rest on which alternative better serves the public interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

**HN7** Financial Institutions, Bank Mergers

Under the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828, a much smaller risk of failure than that required by the failing company doctrine is sufficient to justify the rather radical preventive step of an anticompetitive merger.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

HN8 [down] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

Securing better banking service for the community is a proper element for consideration in weighing convenience and need against the loss of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

HN9 [down] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

The Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828, directs the agencies and the courts to consider managerial as well as financial resources in weighing a proposed merger.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

HN10 [down] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

The Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828, requires that the "future prospects of the existing and proposed institutions" be appraised. Part of such appraisal, where managerial deficiencies exist, is determining whether the merging bank is capable of obtaining its own improved management.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

HN11 [down] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

Before a merger injurious to the public interest is approved, a showing must be made that the gain expected from the merger cannot reasonably be expected through other means.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

Under the Bank Merger Act of 1966, which authorizes approval of a merger having anticompetitive effects if it is determined that such effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served, the Comptroller of the Currency approved a merger between the second and fourth largest banks of Nashville, Tennessee. Thereafter, the United States instituted an action in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee, challenging the merger under 7 of the Clayton Act. The District Court upheld the merger on the basis that the merger would not tend substantially to lessen competition and also that any anticompetitive effect would be outweighed by the convenience and needs of the community, finding, inter alia, that the smaller bank had a high percentage of unsound loans, that its rating had been changed from "satisfactory" to "fair," and that its problems resulting from unsatisfactory and backward management would be solved by the merger. (260 F Supp 869.)

On direct appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed and remanded the case for further proceedings. In an opinion by White, J., expressing the view of five members of the court, it was held that (1) the lower court erred in concluding that the merger did not offend antitrust standards, since it was established that the merged bank had 40 percent of the city's banking business and that the smaller bank, which had been operating profitably and was not shown to be a failing company, had previously been an important competitive element in certain facets of city banking, (2) the District Court had misunderstood the weight to be given the relevant factors under the convenience-and-need provision of the Bank Merger Act of 1966, and had erred in holding that the anti-competitive effects of the merger were outweighed by the benefits to the community, since there were no findings of the unavailability of alternative solutions other than merger for solving the problems of the smaller bank, and (3) the case should be remanded for reconsideration of the application of the Bank Merger Act to the facts, particularly since the District Court had erroneously concluded that the merger would not tend to lessen competition and a proper conclusion as to the merger's anticompetitive effect was necessary to weigh adequately such effect against the asserted benefits to the community.

Harlan, J., joined by Stewart, J., concurred in part and dissented in part, agreeing that a violation of the Clayton Act by the merger was established, and that the case should be remanded for a new application of the balancing process under the Bank Merger Act, but concluding that the District Court had made adequate findings that the benefits to the community from the merger could not reasonably have been achieved in other ways, and that the only question for the District Court on remand should be whether the antitrust violation should yield to other factors bearing on public convenience and needs.

Fortas and Marshall, JJ., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Headnotes

---

BANKS §3.5 > mergers -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

The Bank Merger Act of 1966 (12 USC 1828\(c\)) was passed to make substantial changes in the law applicable to bank mergers, the statute being more clear, however, in prescribing new procedures for testing mergers than in expounding the new standard by which they should be judged.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §93 > bank merger -- scope of review --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

In an action by the government challenging under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) a merger of two banks that had been approved by the Comptroller of the Currency under the Bank Merger Act of 1966 (12 USC 1828\(c\)), which provides that a bank merger having anticompetitive effects shall not be approved unless it is determined that such effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served, the District Court must review the issues in the case de novo, rather than by a determination of whether the Comptroller's findings are supported by substantial evidence.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §20 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > bank mergers -- antitrust standard -- relevant market --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B]

Under the Bank Merger Act of 1966 (12 USC 1828\(c\)), which provides that a bank merger having anticompetitive effects shall not be approved unless it is determined that such effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served, there is no intention to adopt a different "antitrust standard" for bank cases than that used generally in the law, and no intention to alter the traditional methods of defining relevant markets in which to appraise the anticompetitive effect of a merger; Congress intended bank mergers first to be subject to the usual antitrust analysis, and if a merger fails that scrutiny, it is permissible only if the merging banks can establish that the merger's benefits to the community will outweigh its anticompetitive disadvantages.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > bank merger -- relevant market --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

In an action by the government challenging under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) a merger of two banks that had been approved by the Comptroller of the Currency under the Bank Merger Act of 1966 (12 USC 1828\(c\)), which provides that a bank merger having anticompetitive effects shall not be approved unless it is determined that such effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served, commercial banking in the county where the banks are located is the relevant market for appraising the anticompetitive effect of the merger.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > bank merger -- anticompetitive effect -

- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

In an action by the government challenging under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) a merger of two banks that had been approved by the Comptroller of the Currency under the Bank Merger Act of 1966 (12 USC 1828\(c\)), which provides that a bank merger having anticompetitive effects shall not be approved unless it is determined that such effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served, the District Court errs in concluding that the merger does not offend antitrust standards, and the tendency of the merger substantially to lessen competition is established, where (1) the city's only middle-sized bank was absorbed by the second largest of the city's three big banks, giving the merged bank 40 percent of the city's banking business and increasing the market share of the three largest banks from 93 to 98 percent, (2) the middle-sized bank had been an important competitive element in certain, though not in all, facets of city banking, having offered somewhat different services at somewhat different rates, and (3) during a period of approximately 8 years before the merger, the middle-sized bank had been operated profitably, the absolute size of its business increasing steadily, and there being nothing to permit a conclusion that it was in any way a "failing" company.

APPEAL §1692.2 > APPEAL §1699 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR, TRADE PRACTICES §34.5
 > bank merger -- benefit to community -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

In an action by the government challenging under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) a merger of two banks that had been approved by the Comptroller of the Currency under the Bank Merger Act of 1966 (12 USC 1828\(c\)), which provides that a bank merger having anticompetitive effects shall not be approved unless it is determined that such effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served, the District Court misapplies the convenience-and-need provision of the Act, misunderstands the weight to be given the relevant factors, and errs in holding that any anticompetitive effects of the merger were sufficiently outweighed by the benefits to the community from the merger, where (1) the finding that the combined bank would have a greater lending capacity is entitled to very little weight, absent findings showing the beneficial consequences for the community, (2) although the District Court found that the smaller bank involved in the merger had a high percentage of unsound loans and that its rating had been changed from "satisfactory" to "fair," there were no findings as to the feasibility of curative measures short of merger or as to whether there was any danger of failure of the bank in the foreseeable future, the court's general finding that the merger was "a business necessity" not establishing the possibility of eventual failure, and (3) although the smaller bank had significant problems resulting from unsatisfactory and backward management, which problems would probably be ended by the merger, it was incumbent upon those seeking to merge to demonstrate that they had made reasonable efforts to solve the management problems by steps short of merger or that such efforts would have been unlikely to succeed, and the findings did not establish the unavailability of alternative solutions; the case must be remanded so that the District Court may consider again the application of the Bank Merger Act to the facts of the merger, particularly where the court had erroneously concluded that the merger would not tend to lessen competition, a proper conclusion as to the merger's anticompetitive effect being necessary to weigh adequately such effect against the asserted benefits to the community from the merger.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > Bank Merger Act of 1966 -- purpose --> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

The purpose of the Bank Merger Act of 1966 (12 USC 1828\(c\)), which provides that a bank merger having anticompetitive effects shall not be approved unless it is determined that such effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served, is to permit certain bank mergers even though they tend to lessen competition in the relevant market, the public interest being the ultimate test imposed.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > bank merger -- better service for community -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

In an action challenging the validity of a merger of banks under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), securing better banking service for the community is a proper element for consideration in weighing convenience and need against the loss of competition under the Bank Merger Act of 1966 (12 USC 1828\(c\)), which provides that a bank merger having anticompetitive effects shall not be approved unless it is determined that such effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served; if the gains in better service outweigh the anticompetitive detriment and the merger is essential to secure such net gain to the public interest, the merger should be approved, but if the injury to the public interest flowing from the loss of competition can be avoided and the convenience and needs of the community benefited in ways short of merger but within the competence of reasonably able businessmen, the merger should not be approved.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > bank merger -- managerial deficiencies -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

In an action by the government challenging under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) a merger of two banks that had been approved by the Comptroller of the Currency under the Bank Merger Act of 1966 (12 USC 1828\(c\)), which provides that a bank merger having anticompetitive effects shall not be approved unless it is determined that such effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served, taking into consideration the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the existing and proposed institutions, appraisal of the factor that managerial deficiencies of the merging bank will be cured by the merger includes determining whether the merging bank is capable of obtaining its own improved management, and before a merger is approved, a showing must be made that the gain expected from the merger cannot reasonably be expected through other means.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > EVIDENCE §979 > antitrust action -- bank merger -- burden and sufficiency of proof -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

In an action by the government challenging under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) a merger of two banks that had been approved by the Comptroller of the Currency under the Bank Merger Act of 1966 (12 USC 1828\(c\)), which provides that a bank merger having anticompetitive effects shall not be approved unless it is determined that such effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served, the burden of showing that the anticompetitive merger would be in the public interest because of the benefits it would bring to the convenience and needs of the community to be served rests on the merging banks, and a showing that one bank needed more efficient management, absent a showing that the alternative means for securing such management without a merger would present unusually severe difficulties, does not satisfy such burden.

Syllabus

---

Third National Bank in Nashville and Nashville Bank and Trust Co., the second and fourth largest banks in Davidson County, Tennessee, merged on August 18, 1964. After the merger the three largest banks had 97.9% of the total bank assets in the county, and the two largest banks had 76.7%. The Government's suit challenging the merger had not come to trial when the Bank Merger Act of 1966 took effect, on February 21, 1966. The Act did not provide antitrust immunity for the merger but did state that courts "shall apply the substantive rule of law set forth" in the Act to pending cases. Section 5 of the Act prohibits approval of a merger whose effect "may be substantially to lessen competition" unless the anticompetitive effects "are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served." The District Court asserted that the Act altered [****2] the standards used in determining whether a merger violated § 7 of the Clayton Act and § 1 of the Sherman Act and mandated a return to United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495 \(1948\). The court found that Nashville Bank and Trust was a "stagnant and floundering bank," suffering from lack of young and aggressive officers. It held that the merger would not tend substantially to lessen competition and also that any anticompetitive effect would be outweighed by benefits to the "convenience and needs of the community." Held:

1. The Bank Merger Act of 1966 requires de novo inquiry by the district courts into the validity of bank mergers to determine whether the merger offends the antitrust laws, and, if it does, whether the banks have established that the merger is justified by benefits to the "convenience and needs of the community." United States v. First City National Bank of Houston, 386 U.S. 361 (1967). P. 178.
2. The Act, which adopted the language of § 7 of the Clayton Act, "substantially to lessen competition," did not provide a different antitrust standard for bank cases, and therefore the District Court applied [****3] an erroneous Clayton Act standard to the merger. Pp. 181-182.
3. On the facts of this case, the merger did tend substantially to lessen competition in the Nashville commercial banking market. P. 183.
4. The lower court misapprehended the meaning of the phrase "convenience and needs of the community," and misunderstood the weight to be given the relevant factors in determining whether the anticompetitive effects are "clearly outweighed in the public interest" by the effects on the convenience and needs of the community. Pp. 184-192.
  - (a) While the District Court noted the increased loan capacity of the merged bank, it was not specific in describing the beneficial consequences thereof to the Nashville community, or in defining the value of such increase, especially as compared with less desirable results of the merger. P. 186.
  - (b) The District Court's analysis did not explore possible ways of satisfying the community's convenience and needs without merger. It was incumbent on the banks to demonstrate that they made reasonable efforts to solve Nashville Bank and Trust's management dilemma short of merger with a major competitor. P. 189.
  - (c) The findings of the District Court do [****4] not sufficiently establish the unavailability of alternative solutions to Nashville Bank and Trust's problems. Pp. 190-192.
5. The case is remanded so that the lower court can consider again the Act's application to the facts of this merger; and since the District Court heard this case before Houston Bank, supra, was decided, it may wish to consider reopening the record to permit the presentation of new evidence in light of the intervening interpretations of the Act. P. 192.

Counsel: Daniel M. Friedman argued the cause for the United States. On the brief were Solicitor General Griswold, Assistant Attorney General Turner, Richard A. Posner and Barry Grossman.

E. William Henry argued the cause for appellees Third National Bank in Nashville et al. With him on the brief were Paul A. Porter, Dennis G. Lyons, Frank M. Farris, Jr., Edwin F. Hunt and John J. Hooker, Jr. Joseph J. O'Malley argued the cause for appellee Camp, Comptroller of the Currency. With him on the brief were Robert Bloom and Charles H. McEnerney, Jr.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White; Fortas and Marshall took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[****5] [*173] [***1019] [**885] MR. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

In this case the United States appeals from a District Court decision <sup>1</sup> upholding the merger of Third National Bank in Nashville and Nashville Bank and Trust Company against challenge under § 7 of the Clayton Act. The court below concluded that the merger, which joined the second largest and the [***1020] fourth largest banks in Davidson County, Tennessee, into a bank which immediately after the merger was the county's largest bank but since has become the second largest, would not tend substantially to lessen competition and also that any anticompetitive effect would be outweighed by the "convenience and needs of the community to be served." We disagree with the District Court on both issues. We hold that the United States established that this merger would tend to lessen competition, and also that the District Court did not point to community benefits in terms of "convenience and needs" sufficient to outweigh the anticompetitive impact.

[***6] I.

Like other urban centers in the Southeast, Nashville has grown steadily since World War II in both population and economic activity. Commercial banks, as "the intermediaries in most financial transactions," <sup>2</sup> grew [*174] along with their city. From 1955 to 1964, for example, total assets of all banks located in Davidson County increased from $ 548,300,000 to $ 1,053,700,000, an increase of 92.2%. The number of banks hardly changed. Indeed, since 1927 there has been only one new bank in the county, Capital City Bank, and at the time of this merger it had achieved only .9% of the county's bank assets. The other banks at the time of the merger, and their percentage of total bank assets in Davidson County, were First American National, 38.3%; Third National, 33.6%; Commerce Union, 21.2%; Nashville Bank, 4.8%; and three small banks, two of them located in Davidson County towns outside Nashville, .6%, .3%, and .3%. <sup>3</sup> The merger before us thus joined one of the three very large banks in Nashville and the one middle-sized bank. Its result was to increase from 93.1% to 97.9% the percentage of total assets held by the three largest banks and from 71.9% to 76.7% the percentage [***7] held by the two largest institutions.

The two merging banks played significantly different roles in Nashville banking. Third National was characterized by the Comptroller of the Currency as one of the strongest and best managed banks in the Nation and by the District Court as "strong, dynamic and aggressive." <sup>4</sup> [**886] It had "a history of innovating services or promptly providing new services," <sup>5</sup> a recruitment program at local universities, a continuous audit program, and a legal lending limit of $ 2,000,000. It had 14 branches at the [*175] time of the merger and served [***8] as correspondent for smaller banks located throughout the central south.

Nashville Bank and Trust approached the merger with a more checkered history and a less dynamic present. Until 1956 it was largely a trust institution. In that year, under the direction of W. S. Hackworth, it changed its name from Nashville Trust Company and embarked on a drive to become a full-service commercial bank. This program enjoyed considerable success. [***1021] Between 1955 and 1964, Nashville Bank's deposits grew from $ 20,800,000 to $ 45,500,000, and its loans and discounts from $ 8,100,000 to $ 22,800,000. In both categories it grew faster than the county average and faster than Third National. This growth, however, occurred at a substantially faster rate before 1960 than after that year. Before 1960 it was growing more rapidly than the other banks in the county, and after that year more slowly. Its share of total Nashville banking business thus [***9] declined from a high of 5.72% on June 30, 1960, to 4.83% on June 30, 1964.

<sup>1</sup> The opinion of the District Court is reported at 260 F.Supp. 869 \(D. C. M. D. Tenn. 1966\). Its findings of fact and conclusions of law are unreported. Probable jurisdiction was noted at 388 U.S. 905 \(1967\).

<sup>2</sup> United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 326 \(1963\).

<sup>3</sup> We cite percentages of total assets for convenience, not because they are alone a valid indication of a bank's market share. The percentages of total deposits and of total loans held by the eight Davidson County banks varied insignificantly from the percentages of total assets. See the District Court's Finding of Fact No. 66.

<sup>4</sup> 260 F.Supp., at 881.

<sup>5</sup> Finding of Fact No. 91.

The District Court made elaborate findings as to why Nashville Bank and Trust "reached a plateau on which it remained until the date of the merger" and why in this period "it was a stagnant and floundering bank."<sup>6</sup> From those findings, and from the broad picture of Nashville Bank's history and operations which emerges from the testimony and exhibits in this case, it appears that the principal reason was that key members of its management, the men who had been responsible for the bank's progress in the late 1950's, had advanced in age and either retired or slowed their activities. The bank's officials nonetheless made but scant efforts to recruit and advance young talent. Nashville Bank paid substantially [*176] lower salaries than the other Nashville banks, had no funded pension plan, and conducted no systematic recruiting program. On January 1, 1964, the bank's board of directors had 13 members, of whom four were 75 or over, nine were 65 or older, and 11 were 63 or older. Of the six department heads four were 65 or older and the other two were 59. The average age of the 15 officers working outside [****10] the trust department was over 60. The District Court painted in somber hues the banking policies and the economic results which seemed to flow from the failure to hire young talent. Essentially, Nashville Bank was not aggressive or efficient, and it had stopped growing, so that it could not open branches (it had only one) or embark on a correspondent banking program. It was nevertheless an institution of substantial size, with assets of $ 50,900,000 and deposits of $ 45,500,000. It was profitable, and it offered somewhat different services, occasionally at somewhat lower rates, than its competitors.

In January 1964, the individuals who had owned controlling shares of Nashville Bank and Trust decided to sell 10,845 shares, a controlling interest, to a group of prominent Nashville citizens headed by William Weaver. The price was $ 350 per share. In February 1964, the Weaver group opened negotiations looking to a merger with Commerce Union Bank, Nashville's third largest. The negotiations [****11] were unsuccessful, however, because Weaver demanded $ 460 per share while Commerce Union offered only $ 360. Weaver then negotiated the sale to Third [*887] National, at a price of about $ 420 per share. The merger was approved by the boards of directors of both banks on March 12, 1964, and, after approval by the Comptroller of the Currency, was consummated on August 18, 1964.

[*177] II.

LEdHN[1] [1]The legislative history of the Bank Merger Act of 1966<sup>7</sup> [****13] leaves no [***1022] doubt that the Act was passed to make substantial changes in the law applicable to bank mergers. Congress was evidently dissatisfied with the 1960 Bank Merger Act as that Act was interpreted in United States v. Philadelphia National

---

<sup>6</sup> Finding of Fact No. 134.

<sup>7</sup> 80 Stat. 7, 12 U. S. C. § 1828 (c) (1964 ed., Supp. II). The Act provides, in relevant part:

HN1 [1] "(5) The responsible agency shall not approve --

"(A) any proposed merger transaction which would result in a monopoly, or which would be in furtherance of any combination or conspiracy to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize the business of banking in any part of the United States, or

"(B) any other proposed merger transaction whose effect in any section of the country may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly, or which in any other manner would be in restraint of trade, unless it finds that the anticompetitive effects of the proposed transaction are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served.

"In every case, the responsible agency shall take into consideration the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the existing and proposed institutions, and the convenience and needs of the community to be served.

....

"(7) ....

"(B) In any judicial proceeding attacking a merger transaction approved under paragraph (5) on the ground that the merger transaction alone and of itself constituted a violation of any antitrust laws other than [§ 2 of the Sherman Act], the standards applied by the court shall be identical with those that the banking agencies are directed to apply under paragraph (5)."

Bank, 374 U.S. 321 (1963), and in United States v. First National Bank & Trust Co. of Lexington, 376 U.S. 665 (1964), and wished to alter both the procedures by which the Justice Department challenges bank mergers and the legal standard which courts apply in judging [****12] those mergers. The resulting [*178] statute, however, as some members of Congress recognized,<sup>8</sup> was more clear and more specific in prescribing new procedures for testing mergers than in expounding the new standard by which they should be judged.

Last Term, in United States v. First City National Bank of Houston, 386 U.S. 361 (1967), this Court interpreted the procedural provisions of the 1966 Act, holding that HN2[↑] the Bank Merger Act provided for continued scrutiny of bank mergers under the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, but had created a new defense, with the merging banks having the burden of proving that defense. HN3[↑] The task of the district courts was to inquire de novo into the validity of a bank merger approved by the relevant bank regulatory agency to determine, first, whether the merger offended the antitrust laws and, second, if it did, whether the banks had established that the merger was nonetheless justified by "the convenience and needs of the community to be served." Houston Bank reserved "all questions" concerning the substantive meaning of the [****14] "convenience and needs" defense. See 386 U.S. at 369, n. 1.

III.

The proceedings that have occurred until now regarding validity of the merger here before us have been scrambled and confused, largely because the relevant statute, the 1966 Bank Merger Act, became law just prior to the trial and did not receive its first interpretation [**888] by this Court, in Houston Bank, until the decision below had been rendered.

The two banks agreed to merge on March 12, 1964. On April 27, 1964, they applied to the Comptroller [***1023] of the Currency for approval, as the 1960 Bank Merger Act required. Pursuant to that Act, the Federal Reserve [*179] Board, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Department of Justice reported to the Comptroller of the Currency on "the competitive factors involved." The Federal Reserve Board reported that the merger "would have clearly adverse effects on competition" by "eliminat[ing] direct competition which exists between participants and . . . increas[ing] significantly . . . already heavy concentration . . ." The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation reported that "the effect of the proposed merger on competition [***15] would be unfavorable." The Department of Justice reported that the merger "would have severe anticompetitive effects upon banking competition in Metropolitan Nashville." The Comptroller of the Currency, however, concluded that the merger would not lessen competition and would "improve the charter bank's ability to serve the convenience and needs of the Nashville public." On August 4, 1964, he approved the merger.

On August 10, 1964, the United States, as this Court's decision in Philadelphia Bank authorized, sued in federal district court charging that the proposed merger was in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act<sup>9</sup> and § 1 of the Sherman Act.<sup>10</sup> On August 18, 1964, the District Court refused the Government's request for a preliminary injunction staying consummation, and on that day the two banks merged.

[****16] The antitrust suit against the merger had not come to trial when, on February 21, 1966, the Bank Merger Act of 1966 took effect. Congress had devoted much attention to the impact of that Act on bank mergers still in the process of litigation. In § 2 of the Act, 80 [*180] Stat. 10, Congress excluded from all antitrust liability<sup>11</sup> [****17] mergers which had been consummated before June 17, 1963, the date of this Court's Philadelphia Bank decision, and those consummated between June 17, 1963, and February 21, 1966, as to which the Attorney General had not

<sup>8</sup> See, e. g., 112 Cong. Rec. 2447 (remarks of Congressman Fino).

<sup>9</sup> 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 18.

<sup>10</sup> 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 1. The United States appealed to this Court only from the dismissal of the § 7 Clayton Act charge. The § 1 Sherman Act count is therefore not before us.

<sup>11</sup> Liability for monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act was not excluded.

begun litigation on February 21, 1966. However, although Congress considered amendments which would have provided antitrust immunity also for those bank mergers<sup>12</sup> consummated after June 17, 1963, and already the subject of litigation, a decision was made to leave those mergers subject to liability, apparently<sup>13</sup> because the merging parties had known, from Philadelphia Bank, that their consummation was with the risk of an eventual order to dissolve. Congress did provide, in § 2 (c) of the Act, that courts hearing such cases "shall apply the substantive rule of law set forth" in the Act.

LEdHN[2A][] [2A] Since the trial had been held after the 1966 Act took effect, and since the Comptroller of the Currency and other witnesses, directed by counsel, had addressed themselves to the statutory language [***1024] contained in that Act, the District Court saw no need to remand to the Comptroller for a new opinion in [**889] light of the Act, as was ordered in United States v. Crocker-Anglo National Bank, 263 F.Supp. 125 (D. C. N. D. Cal. 1966). Proceeding to decide the case, the District Judge held that under the new Act, violation of antitrust standards was "primarily [*181] a legal issue . . . [on which courts should make] an [****18] independent determination," while "convenience and needs of the community is, in the language of the Crocker-Anglo opinion, 'plainly and unquestionably a legislative or administrative determination' . . . [on which] the Comptroller's findings should not be disturbed unless they are unsupported by substantial evidence."<sup>14</sup> The court concluded that the merger did not offend antitrust standards and that the Comptroller's conclusion that it would benefit the community was supported by substantial evidence. The relief sought by the Justice Department was denied.

LEdHN[2B][] [2B]

[****19] IV.

LEdHN[3A][] [3A]LEdHN[4A][] [4A] The District Court asserted that one effect of the Bank Merger Act of 1966 was to alter the standards used in determining whether a merger is in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act and § 1 of the Sherman Act. Essentially, the District Court mandated a return to United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495 (1948), which this Court has held to be "confined to its special facts." Lexington Bank, 376 U.S., at 672. In later cases, especially Philadelphia Bank, supra; Lexington Bank, supra; United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271 (1964); and United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441 (1964), this Court has rejected the Columbia Steel approach to determining whether a merger will tend "substantially to lessen competition." We find in the 1966 Act, which adopted precisely that § 7 Clayton Act phrase, as well as the "restraint of trade" [*182] language of Sherman Act § 1, no [****20] intention to adopt an "antitrust standard" for bank cases different from that used generally in the law.<sup>15</sup> Only one conclusion can be drawn from the exhaustive legislative deliberations that preceded passage of the Act: HN4[] Congress intended bank mergers first to be subject to the usual antitrust analysis; if a merger failed that scrutiny, it was to be permissible only if the merging banks could

<sup>12</sup> Three mergers are in this category: the Nashville merger at issue here; a California merger, see United States v. Crocker-Anglo National Bank, 263 F.Supp. 125 (D. C. N. D. Cal. 1966); and a St. Louis merger. See H. R. Rep. No. 1221, 89th Cong., 2d Sess., 4.

<sup>13</sup> See, e. g., 112 Cong. Rec. 2465 (remarks of Congressman Ashley).

<sup>14</sup> 260 F.Supp., at 874. If the District Court failed to review the issues in the case de novo, as this quotation suggests, it committed error. Houston Bank, supra. Other statements in the opinion and findings below suggest that a de novo judgment may also have been reached by the District Court. Our disposition of the case makes it unnecessary to decide whether undue deference was paid to the Comptroller's judgment.

<sup>15</sup> We also find in the Act an intention to alter the traditional methods of defining relevant markets in which to appraise the anticompetitive effect of a merger, and so agree with the District Court that commercial banking in Davidson County was the relevant market for appraising this merger.

establish that the merger's benefits to the community would outweigh its anticompetitive disadvantages. See Houston Bank, supra. Congressman Minish spoke in tune with the language of the Act and the statements of his colleagues when he said:

"It should also be clear from the language of paragraph (5)(b) of this bill, which establishes this single [***1025] standard, that the competitive factor to be used is drawn directly from Clayton Act section 7 and Sherman Act section 1. Thus, all of the principles developed over the last 75 years in regard to these statutes, such as the definition of relevant market and the failing company doctrine are [**890] carried forward unchanged by this proposed [****21] legislation."<sup>16</sup>

LEdHN[3B][] [3B] LEdHN[4B][] [4B]

LEdHN[5][] [5] We therefore hold that the District Court employed an erroneous standard in applying § 7 of the Clayton Act to the merger. In addition we hold that, appraised by the test enunciated in recent Clayton Act [****22] cases, the [*183] tendency of the merger substantially to lessen competition is apparent. Nashville had three large banks and one of middle size. In this merger the bank of middle size was absorbed by the second largest of the big banks. By the merger the market share of the three largest banks rose from 93% to 98%; the merged bank alone had almost 40% of the Nashville banking business. In addition, the record is replete with evidence that Nashville Bank and Trust was in fact an important competitive element in certain, though not in all, facets of Nashville banking. It offered somewhat different services, at somewhat different rates, from those offered by other banks, and some customers found those services desirable. Although Nashville Bank failed to increase its percentage share of the Nashville banking market after 1960, the absolute size of its business increased steadily from 1956, when it entered seriously into the commercial banking market, to the date of the merger. Throughout this period it was profitable. The record permits no conclusion that Nashville Bank was in any way a "failing" company. See International Shoe Co. v. FTC, 280 U.S. 291 (1930). [****23] On these facts, the conclusion is inescapable that the merger of Third National Bank in Nashville with Nashville Bank and Trust Co. tended to lessen competition in the Nashville commercial banking market. Philadelphia Bank, supra.

V.

LEdHN[6A][] [6A] Because the District Court erroneously concluded that the merger would not tend to lessen competition, its conclusion upon weighing the competitive effect against the asserted benefits to the community is suspect. To weigh adequately one of these factors against the other requires a proper conclusion as to each. Having decided that the court below erred in assessing competitive impact, we should remand, so that the District Court [*184] can perform again the balancing process mandated by the Act.<sup>17</sup>

[****24] There is, however, an additional reason to remand. In our view, the [***1026] District Court misapprehended the meaning of the phrase "convenience and needs of the community"; it misunderstood the weight to be given the relevant factors when seeking to determine whether the anticompetitive effects of a merger are "clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served."

LEdHN[7][] [7]HN5[] The purpose of the Bank Merger Act was to permit certain bank mergers even though they tended to lessen competition in the relevant market. Congress felt that the role of banks in a community's economic life was such that the public interest would sometimes be served by a bank merger even though [**891] the merger lessened competition. The public interest was the ultimate test imposed. This is clear not only from the language of the Act but from the statements of those who supported it while the Act was under consideration:

<sup>16</sup> 112 Cong. Rec. 2451. See also 112 Cong. Rec. 2441-2442 (remarks of Congressman Patman); 112 Cong. Rec. 2455 (remarks of Congressman Annunzio); 112 Cong. Rec. 2452 (remarks of Congressman Reuss); 112 Cong. Rec. 2655 (statement of Senator Robertson).

<sup>17</sup> Although the District Court erroneously determined the antitrust impact of the merger, its judgment that the merger was not unlawful under the Act may nevertheless have resulted from a sufficient weighing of the evidence before it. Some of the findings below suggest the view that the merger would tend to lessen competition but that this anticompetitive effect would be outweighed by benefits to the community. The argument need not be pursued, however, since we hold that the District Court also misapplied the Act's convenience-and-needs provision.

"Mr. ASHLEY. [****25] . . . In other words, the merger must be shown to be sufficiently beneficial in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served that, on balance, it may properly be regarded as in the public interest.

....

[*185] "Mr. MULTER. . . . I believe it was the intention of the Congress originally in 1960 when we enacted the Bank Merger Act that the public interest should be paramount in making any determination with reference to a merger. The words 'in the public interest' are again written into this bill now and will remain in the law so that there will be no question but that the courts and the agencies must take the public interest into account.

....

"Mr. ASHLEY. Is the gentleman saying, as I believe he is, that it is the consensus of the committee, in drafting this bill, that the public interest is to be considered as combining the consideration both of the anticompetitive factors of a particular merger on the one hand, and, on the other, the needs and convenience of the community that may derive from that merger, which, as I say, may result in a diminution of competition; in other words, that the public interest has got to involve a consideration of both [****26] of these rather considerable factors?

"Mr. STEPHENS. That is correct . . ." 112 Cong. Rec. 2446, 2449, 2450.

It is plain that Congress considered both competition in commercial banking and satisfaction of "the convenience and needs of the community" to be in the public interest. It concluded that a merger should be judged in terms of its overall effect upon the public interest. HN6 If a merger posed a choice between preserving competition and satisfying the requirements of convenience and need, the injury and benefit were to be weighed and decision was to rest on which alternative better served the public interest.

The necessity of choosing is most clearly posed where the proposed merger would create an institution with [*186] capabilities for serving the public interest not possessed by either of the two merging institutions alone and where the potential could be realized only through merger. Thus, it might be claimed, as it is in this case, that a combined bank would have a greater [***1027] lending capacity and hence be better equipped to serve the financial needs of the community. [****27] In Philadelphia Bank, 374 U.S., at 370-371, this Court, acting under the 1960 Bank Merger Act, rejected the relevance of the combined bank's ability to serve Philadelphia by making large loans that could otherwise only be obtained in New York. The Court found no statutory authorization for considering such a benefit in appraising the legality of a merger. Expressions in Congress during consideration of the 1966 Act suggest that one purpose of that Act was to give this factor, not previously relevant in appraising bank mergers, suitable weight in judging their validity.<sup>18</sup> In the case before us the District Court's findings of fact suggest that the new bank, with a 20% greater lending limit than Third National Bank previously had, was able to make larger loans, for which Nashville area companies had previously gone to Chicago or New York. The District Court also stated that because Third National Bank operated with a higher loans-to-deposits ratio than Nashville Bank and Trust, combining their deposits [**892] and applying the Third National Bank ratio to the total increased available lending capacity in Nashville by about $ 2,800,000. But the District Court [****28] was not specific in describing the beneficial consequences of such results for the Nashville community, or in defining the value of these additions, especially as compared with the other, and less desirable, results of the merger. Absent such findings, the increased lending capacity of the new bank weighs very little in the balance.

[*187] Congress was also concerned about banks in danger of collapse -- banks not so deeply in trouble as to call forth the traditional "failing company" defense, but nonetheless in danger of becoming before long financially unsound institutions.<sup>19</sup> [****30] Congress seems to have felt that a bank failure is a much greater community catastrophe than the failure of an industrial or retail enterprise, and that HN7<sup>19</sup> a much smaller risk of failure than that required by the failing company doctrine should be sufficient to justify the [****29] rather radical preventive step of an anticompetitive merger. The Findings of Fact of the District Court included the information that Nashville Bank and Trust Company had a higher than usual percentage of unsound loans, the result of unsatisfactory procedures for investigating and judging credit risks, and that its "rating" had been changed in 1962 from "satisfactory" to "fair." The District Court drew no conclusion about the extent of the danger these conditions posed for Nashville Bank and Trust's future, about the feasibility of curative measures short of merger, or about whether other healthy aspects of the bank's condition -- for instance its steady profitability, including after-tax earnings of $ 368,000 in 1963<sup>20</sup> -- removed [***1028] any danger of failure in the foreseeable future. Absent findings and conclusions of this nature,<sup>21</sup> [*188] the District Court seemed to be holding that the merger should be approved simply because Nashville Bank and Trust Company could be a better bank and could render better banking services.

---

<sup>18</sup> See, e. g., 112 Cong. Rec. 2663 (remarks of Senator Robertson).

The District Court, it appears, considered the merger beneficial to the community because Nashville Bank and Trust had only one branch, because it had no program of correspondent banking, because its operations were not computerized, because it emphasized real estate loans rather than commercial loans, because its management was old and unable [***31] to render sound business advice to borrowers, because it was not recruiting new talent, and because its salary scale was low. Hence a merger was justified because it would solve these problems and produce an institution which, in the words of the House Report, would be capable of "furnishing better overall service to the community, even though the reduction in the number of competing units, or the concentration in the share of the market in one or more lines of commerce, might result under general antitrust law criteria in a substantial lessening of competition." H. R. Rep. No. 1221, 89th Cong., 2d Sess., 3. (Emphasis in original.)

[**893] LEdHN8<sup>22</sup> [8]Undeniably, Nashville Bank and Trust had significant problems of the kind outlined in the findings of the District Court, problems which were primarily rooted in unsatisfactory and backward management. Just as surely, HN8<sup>23</sup> securing better banking service for the community is a proper element for consideration in weighing convenience and need against the loss [***32] of competition. Nor is there any doubt on this record that merger with Third National would very probably end the managerial problems of Nashville Bank and Trust and secure the better [*189] use of its assets in the public interest. Thus if the gains in better service outweighed the anticompetitive detriment and the merger was essential to secure this net gain to the public interest, the merger should be approved.

But this analysis puts aside possible ways of satisfying the requirement of convenience and need without resort to merger. If the injury to the public interest flowing from the loss of competition could be avoided and the convenience and needs of the community benefited in ways short of merger but within the competence of reasonably able businessmen, the situation is radically different. In such circumstances, we seriously doubt that Congress intended a merger to be authorized by either the banking agencies or the courts. If, for example, just prior to this merger, an experienced banker with competent associates had offered to take over the active management of the bank or another competent businessman with a willingness to tackle the management problems of the bank [***33] had offered to buy out the Weaver interests at an acceptable price, it seems obvious that the Weaver group, which seeks to justify the merger in terms of producing an institution rendering better banking service, should not be permitted to merge and to ignore an available alternative. Otherwise, the benefits of [***1029] competition, acknowledged by Congress, would be sacrificed needlessly. For the same reasons, we think it was incumbent upon those seeking to merge in this case to demonstrate that they made reasonable efforts to solve the management dilemma of Nashville Bank short of merger with a major competitor but failed in these attempts, or that any such efforts would have been unlikely to succeed.

<sup>19</sup> See, e. g., 112 Cong. Rec. 2459-2460 (remarks of Congressman Multer).

<sup>20</sup> In Finding of Fact No. 181 the District Court concluded that the bank's "apparently good earnings record" would have been diminished, absent a merger, by "the expenditures which needed to be made for the proper maintenance of the bank." Among these expenditures were increased salaries, automation, and establishment of additional branch offices. There is no reason to think that such investment of accrued profits would not have been rewarded with a fair return in the form of increased future profits.

<sup>21</sup> The District Court did conclude, in Finding of Fact No. 184, that the merger was "a business necessity" for Nashville Bank and Trust Co. This general conclusion, without supporting findings, hardly establishes the possibility of eventual failure.

LEdHN[9]<sup>1</sup> [9] This seems to us the most rational reading of the Act, which was a compromise and satisfied none of the protagonists [*190] in this extended controversy. HN9<sup>1</sup> The Act directs the agencies and the courts to consider managerial as well as financial resources in weighing a proposed merger. However, [****34] HN10<sup>1</sup> the Act requires as well that the "future prospects of the existing and proposed institutions" be appraised. Part of such appraisal, where managerial deficiencies exist as they do in this case, is determining whether the merging bank is capable of obtaining its own improved management. This test does not demand the impossible or the unreasonable. It merely insists that HN11<sup>1</sup> before a merger injurious to the public interest is approved, a showing be made that the gain expected from the merger cannot reasonably be expected through other means.

The question we therefore face is whether the findings of the District Court sufficiently or reliably establish the unavailability of alternative solutions to the woes of Nashville Bank and Trust Company. In our view, they do not. The District Court described the nature and extent of the bank's managerial shortcomings. It noted that the Weaver group had discussed these matters extensively with a number of persons, including bankers, and had learned that recruiting new management would be "extremely [****35] difficult" at the salaries paid by Nashville Bank. And it concluded that management procurement was difficult for banks in general and an "almost insoluble" problem for Nashville Bank and Trust.

Just how insoluble was not made clear. The District Court did not ask [**894] whether the Weaver group had made concrete efforts to recruit new management, especially a chief executive officer, who was needed most. The record seems clear that they made no proposals to any individual prospects in or outside of Nashville, save one rather casual letter to a banking acquaintance in New York, and that they neither sought nor cared to seek the help of firms specializing in finding or [*191] furnishing new management.<sup>22</sup> The court made no reference to the possibility that the new owners themselves might have taken active charge of the bank. None of them was a banker, but their successful predecessor Hackworth had not been one before becoming president of Nashville Bank.<sup>23</sup> [****37] Nor did the [***1030] court assess the possibility of a sale to others who might have been willing to face up to the management difficulties over a more extended period. We find nothing in the findings indicating [****36] that a bank with assets of $ 50,000,000 was simply too small to attract competent management<sup>24</sup> [*192] or that the Weaver group, the new owners, were intransigently insisting on unreasonably conservative managerial policies. Indeed, the Weaver group included competent and experienced men who realized the <sup>22</sup> An official of a company specializing in recruitment of executives did testify for the banks at the trial. In his opinion, recruiting executives for Nashville Bank and Trust would have been extremely difficult.

<sup>23</sup> The record contains the revealing statement by William C. Weaver, Jr., the leading member of the group which owned the bank at the time of the merger:

"We finally concluded before we agreed to the merger agreement with the Third National Bank that, if one of us, one of our group, was unable to go down there to the Trust Company and devote full time to its affairs -- I would like to say right here that none of us in the group had any commercial banking experience, and that was a serious problem."

"But we concluded that if we were unable to devote our full time to the affairs of the bank, it would be in the best interests of the customers of the bank, the employees of the bank, the stockholders of the bank, and the Nashville community, for us to merge with the Third National Bank."

Mr. Weaver seems to have felt that one or more members of the new ownership group would have been able to furnish satisfactory executive leadership for the bank.

<sup>24</sup> Capital City Bank, founded in 1960 and but one-fourth the size of Nashville Bank and Trust Co., was apparently flourishing.

In this regard, a recent study concluded that "the small bank can compete successfully with the large bank -- if it has the will to do so." Kohn, Competitive Capabilities of Small Banks, 60 Banking, January 1968, at 64, reporting on the New York State Banking Department's research study, The Future of Small Banks.

desirability of improving an unsatisfactory situation. Rather than making serious efforts to do so themselves or to sell to others who would, they preferred to merge with a competing bank -- a step which produced a profit of $ 750,000 on a two-month investment of $ 3,800,000.

LEdHN[10] [10]The burden of showing that an anticompetitive bank merger would be in the public interest because of the benefits it would bring to the convenience and needs of the community to be served rests on the merging banks. Houston Bank, supra. A showing that one bank needed more lively and efficient management, absent a showing that the alternative means for securing such management without a merger would present unusually severe difficulties, cannot be considered to satisfy that burden.

We therefore conclude that the District Court was in error in holding that the factors [***38] it cited as ways in which this merger benefited the Nashville community were sufficient

LEdHN[6B] [6B] to outweigh the anticompetitive effects of the merger. The case must be remanded so that the District Court can consider again the application of the Bank Merger Act to the facts of this merger. Because the [**895] District Court heard this case before Houston Bank was decided, it may wish to consider reopening the record, so that the parties will have an opportunity to present new evidence in light of the intervening interpretations of the Act. The judgment below is reversed and the case is remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

MR. JUSTICE FORTAS and MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Concur by: HARLAN (In Part)

Dissent by: HARLAN (In Part)

Dissent

---

[*193] MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, whom MR. JUSTICE STEWART joins, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

My understanding of the procedural structure of the Bank Merger Act of 1966,<sup>1</sup> based on our decision last Term in *United States v. First ***10311 City National Bank of Houston*, 386 U.S. 361, 364, [***39] is that the Act requires the District Court to engage in a two-step process. First, the District Court must decide whether the merger, considered solely from an antitrust viewpoint, would violate the Clayton Act standard embodied in the Bank Merger Act. If it would not, the inquiry is over. If there would be a violation, then the District Court must go on to decide whether "the anticompetitive effects of the proposed transaction are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served."<sup>2</sup> In making the latter decision, the District Court must again evaluate the antitrust factor, this time in a less polar way. For a comparatively minor violation of the Clayton Act, like that in this case, obviously may be more readily outweighed by factors relating to "convenience and needs" than may a relatively serious infraction.

[***40] Turning to the application of the Act to this case, the first question is whether the merger, as an antitrust matter, would violate the Clayton Act. I continue to disagree, particularly in the banking field, with the "numbers game" test for determining Clayton Act violations which was adopted by this Court in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321. However, I consider myself bound by that decision, and under its dictates I concur in the Court's finding that this merger would violate the Act.

---

<sup>1</sup> 80 Stat. 7, 12 U. S. C. § 1828 (c) (1964 ed., Supp. II).

<sup>2</sup> Bank Merger Act of 1966, amending § 18 (c)(5)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, 12 U. S. C. § 1828 (c)(5)(B) (1964 ed., Supp. II).

[*194] I also concur in the Court's decision that this case must be remanded so that there may be a new application of the second-step balancing process. In this case, which was decided before our decision in Houston Bank, supra, the District Court either omitted the first of the two indicated procedural steps or concluded, incorrectly, that the merger would not violate the Clayton Act.<sup>3</sup> In either event, the error may have caused the District Court to misconceive the antitrust "threshold" at which the second-step balancing process was intended to come into play. This, in turn, may have led the court to give the "anticompetitive effect" of [****41] the merger a different weight in the balance than was intended by the framers of the Bank Merger Act. Hence, the case must be remanded to the District Court so that it may reweigh the competing factors in light of the correct antitrust threshold.

With regard to the "convenience and needs" side of the balance, I am in accord with the Court's ruling that a merger should not be approved under the 1966 Act unless the District Court finds that [**896] the benefits conferred upon the community by the merger could not reasonably have been achieved in other ways. Unlike the Court, however, I conclude from the record that the District Court did make adequate findings on this issue. The record reveals that many witnesses testified that Nashville Bank had problems of real magnitude, the greatest being to find replacements for key executives. Mr. Weaver, the leader of the [****42] group which purchased control of the bank not long before the merger, testified that initially his group had intended to operate the [****1032] bank themselves, but that talks with many bankers had convinced him that his group could not solve the bank's problems. The head of an executive-placement firm [*195] testified that he did not believe that he could have found new executives for Nashville Bank, in light of its overall situation.<sup>4</sup> Although there was testimony in rebuttal, including that of another recruiter of executives, to the effect that the problems were not unsolvable, I cannot conclude that the District Court committed error when it held that "While there is some conflict, the preponderance of the evidence is that it would have been practically impossible within any reasonable period of time to obtain adequate managerial replacements either from within the bank or from the outside, a product of the bank's failure . . . to provide itself with the facilities, procedures and equipment required to maintain a competitive posture." 260 F.Supp. 869, 881.

[****43] In sum, what I would consider to be the scope of the proceedings on remand is this. In light of our holding that a Clayton Act violation has been made out, further consideration of the first-step antitrust issue by the District Court is foreclosed. Believing, as I do but contrary to the Court, that the findings already made by the District Court as to the alternatives to merger are adequate, in my view the only question for the District Court to consider respecting the second step is whether, because of its character in light of the antitrust standard now set forth, the antitrust violation should yield to other factors bearing on public "convenience and needs."

References

---

Am Jur, Monopolies, Combinations, and Restraints of Trade (1st ed 95, 147-154)

US Digest Anno, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 34.5

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 17.5

L ed Index to Anno, Banks; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Banks and Banking; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References:

---

<sup>3</sup>The District Court's opinion is unclear as to whether the court considered it necessary to make a discrete finding under the Clayton Act.

<sup>4</sup>An account of Nashville Bank's overall situation appears in the Court's opinion, ante, at 175-176.

Construction, by Supreme Court of the United States, of 7 of [****44] the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), dealing with acquisition by one corporation of stock of another. 14 L ed 2d 784.

Application to banks and banking institutions of antimonopoly or antitrust laws. 83 ALR2d 374.

---

End of Document

Perma Life Mufflers v. International Parts Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

April 22-23, 1968, Argued ; June 10, 1968, Decided

No. 733

Reporter

392 U.S. 134 *; 88 S. Ct. 1981 **; 20 L. Ed. 2d 982 ***; 1968 U.S. LEXIS 3168 ****; 1968 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,486

PERMA LIFE MUFFLERS, INC., ET AL. v. INTERNATIONAL PARTS CORP. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 376 F.2d 692, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

pari delicto, antitrust, damages, provisions, dealers, anti trust law, mufflers, franchise, terms, manufacturer, participated, cases, illegal scheme, treble damages, resale price, conspiracy, violations, parties, fault, franchise agreement, Sherman Act, restrictions, franchisees, territorial, selling, prices, deter, source of a supply, public interest, anticompetitive

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Private Actions, Remedies

There is nothing in the language of the antitrust acts which indicates that Congress wanted to make the common-law in pari delicto doctrine a defense to treble-damage actions. Although in pari delicto literally means "of equal fault," the doctrine has been applied, correctly or incorrectly, in a wide variety of situations in which a plaintiff seeking damages or equitable relief is himself involved in some of the same sort of wrongdoing. The United States Supreme Court has often indicated the inappropriateness of invoking broad common-law barriers to relief where a private suit serves important public purposes. A plaintiff in an antitrust suit can not be barred from recovery by proof that he had engaged in an unrelated conspiracy to commit some other antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN2 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

The purposes of the antitrust laws are best served by insuring that the private action will be an ever-present threat to deter anyone contemplating business behavior in violation of the antitrust laws. The plaintiff who reaps the reward of treble damages may be no less morally reprehensible than the defendant, but the law encourages his suit to further the overriding public policy in favor of competition. A more fastidious regard for the relative moral worth of the parties would only result in seriously undermining the usefulness of the private action as a bulwark of anti-trust enforcement. And permitting the plaintiff to recover a windfall gain does not encourage continued violations by those in his position since they remain fully subject to civil and criminal penalties for their own illegal conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN3 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The fact that a retailer can refuse to deal does not give the supplier immunity if the arrangement is one of those schemes condemned by the anti-trust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

HN4 [down] Price Discrimination, Defenses

The doctrine of in pari delicto, with its complex scope, contents, and effects, is not to be recognized as a defense to an antitrust action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN5 [down] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Pleadings must be construed as to do substantial justice. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(f\).

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

In a private antitrust action instituted in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, to recover treble damages from the defendants, who manufactured automobile mufflers and exhaust system parts, the plaintiffs, who had entered into dealership sales contracts, alleged that the defendants had violated the Robinson-Patman Act by granting discriminations in prices and services to some of their other customers, and that the defendants had conspired to restrain competition in violation of the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act under certain provisions of the dealership agreements obligating the dealers to purchase all mufflers and parts from the defendants, requiring that the dealers sell at fixed resale prices, tying the sale of mufflers to the sale of other products in the defendants' line, and prohibiting the dealers from selling outside their designated exclusive sales territories. The District Court entered summary judgment for the defendants on the ground that the plaintiffs' claims were barred by the doctrine of in pari delicto. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit reversed the judgment with regard to the claim under the Robinson-Patman Act, but affirmed the ruling that the other claims were barred under the doctrine of in pari delicto (376 F2d 692).

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeals, with directions to reverse the District Court's judgment and to remand the case for trial. In an opinion by Black, J., expressing the view of five members of the court, it was held that (1) the doctrine of in pari delicto was not to be recognized as a defense to a private antitrust action, (2) the plaintiffs therefore were not barred from recovery on the ground that they had sought their franchises with knowledge of the terms and had enjoyed profits as dealers and sought to acquire additional franchises, since their participation was not voluntary in any meaningful sense in view of the agreement clauses, which were clearly detrimental to their interests and to which they allegedly had continually objected, (3) the possible beneficial byproducts of a restriction in the agreements from a plaintiff's point of view could be taken into consideration in computing damages, and (4) there was no merit in the defendants' contention that the plaintiffs were barred from recovery, wholly apart from the idea of pari delicto, on the ground that the plaintiffs actively supported the entire restrictive program as such, since the record refuted such contention and showed, to the contrary, that the illegal scheme had been thrust upon the plaintiffs by the defendants.

White, J., concurring, joined the opinion of the court with the observation that the in pari delicto defense in its historic formulation was not a useful concept for determining whether a plaintiff should be barred because of his own conduct, that the determination of whether a party to an illegal venture was entitled to damages from the other participants should be made by hewing closer to the aims and purposes of the Clayton Act, which gives treble damage recovery to a private plaintiff injured by conduct violating the antitrust laws, and that in general, recovery should be denied where the plaintiff and the defendant were substantially equally responsible for the injury resulting to one of them, whereas recovery should be permitted in favor of the one least responsible where one was more responsible than the other.

Fortas, J., concurred in the result, stating that the doctrine of in pari delicto had a significant yet limited role in private antitrust law, barring recovery if the fault of the parties was reasonably within the same scale, but that the plaintiffs in the case at bar were not barred under the doctrine, although they should not be allowed to recover damages based upon any clause in the franchise agreements if they were chargeable with responsibility for the particular clause, because it was in substance their own act.

Marshall, J., concurred in the result, expressing the view that a limited application of the basic principle behind the in pari delicto doctrine was both proper and desirable in the antitrust field, barring recovery where the plaintiff was substantially equally at fault, that summary judgment for the defendants in the instant case was not proper, since the record indicated that the plaintiffs had not sought out or supported all the anticompetitive restrictions in the franchises, that if the defendants showed that certain provisions were inserted in the franchise agreements at the behest and for the benefit of the plaintiffs and their fellow franchisees, the plaintiffs should be barred from contending that they were damaged by the existence and enforcement of such provisions, and that if it was established that the plaintiffs actually participated in the formulation of the entire agreement, trading off anticompetitive restraints on their own freedom of action for anticompetitive restraints intended for their benefit, the plaintiffs should be barred from seeking damages as to the agreement as a whole.

Harlan, J., joined by Stewart, J., concurred in part and dissented in part, stating that the defense of in pari delicto, properly applied, should be permitted in antitrust cases, that plaintiffs who were truly in pari delicto were those who had themselves violated the law in co-operation with the defendant, that the lower courts had erred in holding that the plaintiffs were in pari delicto merely because they had voluntarily entered into the franchise agreements and accepted benefits therefrom, and that the case should be remanded for consideration of the motion for summary judgment upon proper standards, requiring the determination of whether any agreement allegedly in restraint of trade was one for which the plaintiffs were substantially as much responsible, and as much legally liable, as the defendants.

Headnotes

---

HUGÁÈJÉFH Í ÁFHÍ LÀ Í ÁUÈÓDÄFJÌ FÄEEFJÌ FLÄGÄSEÖAÄGÅÁÌ GÄEEJÌ GLÄJÌ Í ÁWÈÈSÖYÖÄFÌ Í ÄEEF

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §41 > RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §42 > RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §50 > exclusive dealership agreements -- defense -- doctrine of in pari delicto -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B]

In a private antitrust action to recover treble damages from the defendants, who manufactured automobile mufflers and exhaust system parts, wherein the plaintiffs, who had entered into dealership sales contracts, alleged that the defendants had violated the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USC 13) by granting discriminations in prices and services to some of their other customers, and that the defendants had conspired to restrain and lessen competition in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1) and 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 14) under provisions of the dealership agreements obligating the dealers to purchase all mufflers and parts from the defendants, requiring that they sell at fixed resale prices, tying the sale of mufflers to the sale of other products in the defendants' line, and prohibiting dealers from selling outside their designated exclusive sales territories, the doctrine of in pari delicto is not available as a defense, and recovery is not barred on the ground that the plaintiffs had sought their franchises with knowledge of the terms of the agreements and had enjoyed profits as dealers and sought to acquire additional franchises, where their participation was not voluntary in any meaningful sense, since the plaintiffs had not sought each and every clause of the agreements, many of which were clearly detrimental to their interests and to which they allegedly had continually objected, and since the plaintiffs' acquiescence was necessary to obtain an otherwise attractive business opportunity.

PLEADING §48.5 > summary judgment -- private antitrust action -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

In a private antitrust action to recover treble damages from the defendants, who manufactured automobile mufflers and exhaust system parts, wherein the plaintiffs, who had entered into dealership sales contracts, alleged that the defendants had violated the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USC 13) by granting discriminations in prices and services, and that the defendants had conspired to restrain and lessen competition in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1) and 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 14) under provisions of the dealership agreements obligating the dealers to purchase all mufflers and parts from the defendants, requiring that they sell at fixed resale prices, tying the sale of mufflers to the sale of other goods in the defendants' line, and prohibiting the dealers from selling outside their designated exclusive sales territories, the defense that the restraints were permissible as reasonable means to protect the defendants' registered trade and service marks cannot be decided as a summary judgment question, but must be resolved along with all the other issues by a trial on the merits.

APPEAL §910.6 > grant of certiorari -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The Supreme Court of the United States will grant certiorari where the rulings by the Court of Appeals in a private antitrust action to recover treble damages seem to threaten the effectiveness of the private action as a vital means for enforcing the antitrust policy of the United States.

HUGÁNÈJÁHÌ ËFHÌ LÀÌ ÁUÈDÒJÌ FÄEEJÌ FLÄGÄSEÖAËGÀÁÌ GÄEEJÌ GLÄJÌ Ì ÁWÈËSÖYÓÁFÌ Ì ÈEEF

ACTIONS §18 > defenses -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Broad common-law barriers to relief should not be invoked where a private suit serves important public purposes.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §6 > private action -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The purposes of the antitrust laws are best served by insuring that a private action will be an ever-present threat to deter anyone contemplating business behavior in violation of the antitrust laws.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > private antitrust action -- effect of violation by plaintiff -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Although the plaintiff who reaps the reward of treble damages in a private antitrust action may be no less morally reprehensible than the defendant, nevertheless the law encourages his suit to further the overriding public policy in favor of competition; permitting the plaintiff to recover a windfall gain does not encourage continued violations by those in his position, since they remain fully subject to civil and criminal penalties for their own illegal conduct.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > private antitrust action -- plaintiffs' participation in illegal arrangement -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

In private antitrust actions, the courts do not have power to undermine the antitrust acts by denying recovery to injured parties merely because they have participated to the extent of utilizing illegal arrangements formulated and carried out by others.

DAMAGES §159 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §41 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §42 > private antitrust action -- plaintiffs' participation in violation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

In a private antitrust action to recover treble damages from the defendants, who manufactured automobile mufflers and exhaust system parts, wherein the plaintiffs, who had entered into dealership sales contracts, alleged that the defendants had violated the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USC 13) by granting discriminations in prices and services to some of their other customers, and that the defendants had conspired to restrain and lessen competition in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1) and 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 14) under provisions of the dealership agreements obligating the dealers to purchase all mufflers and parts from the defendants, requiring that the dealers sell at fixed resale prices, tying the sale of mufflers to the sale of other products in the defendants' line, and prohibiting the dealers from selling outside their designated exclusive sales territories, the possible beneficial

HUGÁÈJÉFH Í ÁFH LÀ Í ÁUÉDÄFJÌ FÄEJÌ FLÄGÄSEÖAÈGÄÁÌ GÄEJÌ GÄFJÌ Í ÁUÈÄSÖYÖÁFÌ Í ÄEKF

byproducts of a restriction in the agreement from a plaintiff's point of view can be taken into consideration in computing damages, but once it is shown that the plaintiff did not aggressively support and further the monopolistic scheme as a necessary part and parcel of it, his understandable attempts to make the best of a bad situation by operating under the agreement are not a ground for completely denying him the right to recover which the antitrust acts give him.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > private antitrust action -- defense -- doctrine of in pari delicto -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

The doctrine of in pari delicto, with its complex scope, contents, and effect, is not to be recognized as a defense to a private antitrust action.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §41 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §42 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §50 > private antitrust action -- plaintiffs' participation in violation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

In a private antitrust action to recover treble damages from the defendants, who manufactured automobile mufflers and exhaust system parts, wherein the plaintiffs, who had entered into dealership sales contracts, alleged that the defendants had violated the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USC 13) by granting discriminations in prices and services to some of their other customers, and that the defendants had conspired to restrain and lessen competition in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1) and 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 14) under provisions of the dealership agreements obligating the dealers to purchase all mufflers and parts from the defendants, requiring that the dealers sell at fixed resale prices, tying the sale of mufflers to the sale of other products in the defendants' line, and prohibiting the dealers from selling outside their designated exclusive sales territories, there is no merit in the defendants' contention that the plaintiffs are barred from recovery, wholly apart from the idea of pari delicto, on the ground that the plaintiffs actively supported the entire restrictive program as such, participating in its formulation and encouraging its continuation, where the record refuted such contention and showed, to the contrary, that the illegal scheme had been thrust upon the dealers by the defendants, neither of the most strenuously challenged provisions, requiring the dealers to purchase their supplies exclusively from the defendants and to carry the defendants' full line of parts, being in a dealer's self-interest, since they obligated the dealer to buy from the defendants regardless of whether more favorable prices could be obtained from other sources and regardless of whether the dealer needed certain parts at all, and it being shown that the defendants had repeatedly refused, with warnings and threats, numerous requests by the plaintiffs for permission to purchase from other sources of supply.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND TRADE PRACTICES §34 > private antitrust action -- common ownership of corporate defendants -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

In a private antitrust action to recover treble damages from the defendants, who manufactured automobile mufflers and exhaust system parts, wherein the plaintiffs, who had entered into dealership sales contracts with one of the defendant corporations, alleged that the defendants had conspired to restrain competition in violation of the

HUGÁNÈJÉFHÍ ÍAFHÍ LÀ Í ÁUÈDÓAFJÍ FÁEEFJÍ FLÁGÉSE ÓaÉGáÁI GÁEEJÍ GÁFJÍ Í ÁUÈÉSÓYÓÁFÍ Í ÉEEF

Sherman Act under provisions of the dealership agreements which imposed restrictions upon the dealers, the fact of common ownership of the defendants, who were a parent corporation, three of its subsidiaries, and some of the officers and agents of the corporations, does not save the defendants from any of the obligations that the law imposes on separate entities, under the asserted theory that because the defendants were all part of a single business entity they were entitled to co-operate without creating an illegal conspiracy.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §31 > private antitrust action -- dealership franchise agreements -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [down] [12]

In a private antitrust action to recover treble damages from the defendants, who were commonly owned corporations and some of their officers and agents, and who manufactured automobile mufflers and exhaust system parts, wherein the plaintiffs, who had entered into dealership franchise agreements with one of the defendant corporations, asserted a violation of the Sherman Act under provisions of the franchise agreements which imposed restrictions upon the dealers, each plaintiff can charge a combination between himself and the corporation with which the agreements were made, as of the day the plaintiff unwillingly complied with the restrictive franchise agreements, or between such corporation and other franchise dealers, whose acquiescence in the corporation's firmly enforced restraints was induced by the communicated danger of termination of the franchise.

PLEADING §176 > private antitrust action -- sufficiency of complaint -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [down] [13]

In a private antitrust action to recover treble damages from the defendants, who were commonly owned corporations and some of their officers and agents, and who manufactured automobile mufflers and exhaust system parts, wherein the plaintiff, who had entered into dealership sales contracts with one of the defendant corporations, alleged that the defendants had conspired to restrain competition in violation of the Sherman Act under certain provisions of the dealership agreements which imposed restrictions upon the dealers and which the defendants had refused to eliminate, there is no merit in the defendants' contention that the complaint failed to allege with sufficient specificity certain alternative theories of conspiracy which were asserted by the plaintiffs and which were based on charges of combinations between each plaintiff and the corporation with which the agreements were made, and between such corporation and other franchise dealers, in view of the rules providing for trying cases to serve the ends of justice and particularly the requirement of Rule 8 \(f\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure that pleadings be construed as to do substantial justice, the gist of the plaintiffs' cause of action having been clear from the outset, and the defendants not being prejudiced if the plaintiffs were permitted to rely on the alternative theories of conspiracy.

Syllabus

---

Petitioners, dealers who had operated "Midas Muffler Shops," brought this antitrust action for treble damages against respondent Midas, Inc., its parent corporation (International), two other subsidiaries, and corporate officers and agents, charging an illegal conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and violations of § 3 of the Clayton Act and § 2 as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. Petitioners attacked provisions of the sales agreements which they had made with Midas including those which barred petitioners from purchasing from other sources, prevented them from selling outside designated territories, tied muffler sales to other Midas-line products, and required petitioners to sell at fixed retail prices. The District Court entered summary judgment for respondents. The

HUGÁÈJÉFH ÍAFH LÀ Ì ÁUÈDÖÄFJÌ FÄEEFJÌ FLÄGÄSEÖAÄGÅÁÌ GÄEEJÌ GLÄFJÌ Ì ÁUÈÄSÖYÖÄFÌ Ì ÄEEF

Court of Appeals reversed the judgment on the Robinson-Patman claim but affirmed the District Court's ruling that petitioners' other claims were barred [****2] by the doctrine of in pari delicto, noting that petitioners, with full knowledge of the restrictions, had enthusiastically sought and enormously profited from the Midas franchises and had sought additional franchises. The court also held that petitioners' Sherman Act claim was barred because Midas and International were part of a single business entity and therefore entitled to cooperate without creating an illegal conspiracy. Held:

1. There is nothing in the language of the antitrust laws indicating a congressional intent that the doctrine of in pari delicto should constitute a defense to a private antitrust action, and such application of the doctrine would undermine the important function performed by the private antitrust action in enforcing the antitrust laws. Pp. 138-140.
2. The record refutes respondents' argument that petitioners actively participated in formulating the restrictive plan and encouraged its continuation. Pp. 140-141.
3. Common ownership does not relieve separate corporate entities of the obligations which the antitrust laws impose; and in any event each petitioner can charge a combination between Midas and himself or other acquiescing franchisees. [****3] Pp. 141-142.

Counsel: Robert F. Rolnick argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Raymond R. Dickey and Bernard Gordon.

Glenn W. McGee argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were John T. Chadwell, David J. Gibbons, John C. Berghoff, Jr., David Silbert, and Jay Erens.

Opinion by: BLACK

Opinion

---

[*135] [***988] [**1982] MR. JUSTICE BLACK delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A] LEdHN[2] [2] LEdHN[3] [3]The principal question presented is whether the plaintiffs in this private antitrust action were barred from recovery by a doctrine known by the Latin phrase in pari delicto, which literally means "of equal fault." The plaintiffs, petitioners here, were all dealers who had operated "Midas Muffler Shops" under sales agreements granted by respondent [**1983] Midas, Inc. Their complaint charged that Midas had entered into a conspiracy with the other named defendants -- its parent corporation International Parts Corp., two other subsidiaries, [****4] and six individual defendants who were officers or agents of the corporations -- to restrain and substantially lessen competition in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act <sup>1</sup> and § 3 of the Clayton Act.<sup>2</sup> They also charged that the defendants had violated § 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act,<sup>3</sup> by granting discriminations in prices and services to some of their customers without offering the same advantages to the plaintiffs. The District Court entered summary judgment for respondents with respect to all of petitioners' [*136] claims. On appeal the Court of Appeals reversed the judgment for respondents on the Robinson-Patman claim but, over Judge Cummings' dissent, affirmed the District Court's ruling that the other claims were barred by the doctrine of in pari delicto. The court also held that petitioners' Sherman Act claim was barred because Midas and International, while functioning as separate corporations, had a common ownership and therefore could cooperate without creating an illegal conspiracy.<sup>4</sup> 376 F.2d 692 (1967). Because these rulings by

---

<sup>1</sup> 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 1.

<sup>2</sup> 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 14.

<sup>3</sup> 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. § 13.

HUGÁÈJÉFH Í ÁFHÍ LÀ Í ÁUÈDÖÄFJÌ FÄÄFJÌ HÄGÄSEÖAÄGÄÁÌ GÄÄEJÌ LÄFJÌ ÁMÈJÄSÖYÖÄFÌ Í ÄÄÄÄ

the Court of Appeals seemed to threaten the effectiveness of the private action [***5] as a vital means for enforcing the antitrust policy of the United States, we granted certiorari. 389 U.S. 1034 (1968). For reasons to be stated, we reverse.

[***6] The economic arrangements that led to this lawsuit have a long history. Respondent International Parts has been in the business of [**989] manufacturing automobile mufflers and other exhaust system parts since 1938. In 1955 the owners of International initiated a detailed plan for promoting the sale of mufflers by extensively advertising the "Midas" trade name and establishing a nation-wide chain of dealers who would specialize in selling exhaust system equipment. Each prospective dealer was offered a sales agreement prepared by Midas, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of International. The agreement [*137] obligated the dealer to purchase all his mufflers from Midas, to honor the Midas guarantee on mufflers sold by any dealer, and to sell the mufflers at resale prices fixed by Midas and at locations specified in the agreement. The dealers were also obligated to purchase all their exhaust system parts from Midas, to carry the complete line of Midas products, and in general to refrain from dealing with any of Midas' competitors. In return Midas promised to underwrite the cost of the muffler guarantee and gave the dealer permission to use the registered trademark "Midas" [***7] and the service mark "Midas Muffler Shops." The dealer was also granted the exclusive right to sell "Midas" products within his defined territory. He was not required to pay a franchise fee or to purchase or lease substantial capital equipment from Midas, and the agreement was cancelable by either party on 30 days' notice.

Petitioners' complaint challenged as illegal restraints of trade numerous provisions of the agreements, such as the terms barring them from purchasing [**1984] from other sources of supply, preventing them from selling outside the designated territory, tying the sale of mufflers to the sale of other products in the Midas line, and requiring them to sell at fixed retail prices. Petitioners alleged that they had often requested Midas to eliminate these restrictions but that Midas had refused and had threatened to terminate their agreements if they failed to comply. Finally they alleged that one of the plaintiffs had had his agreement canceled by Midas for purchasing exhaust parts from a Midas competitor, and that the other plaintiff dealers had themselves canceled their agreements. All the plaintiffs claimed treble damages for the monetary loss they had suffered [***8] from having to abide by the restrictive provisions.

The Court of Appeals, agreeing with the District Court, held the suit barred because petitioners were in pari [*138] delicto. The court noted that each of the petitioners had enthusiastically sought to acquire a Midas franchise with full knowledge of these provisions and had "solemnly subscribed" to the agreement containing the restrictive terms. Petitioners had all made enormous profits as Midas dealers, had eagerly sought to acquire additional franchises, and had voluntarily entered into additional franchise agreements, all while fully aware of the restrictions they now challenge. Under these circumstances, the Court of Appeals concluded, "it would be difficult to visualize a case more appropriate for the application of the pari delicto doctrine." 376 F.2d, at 699.

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6] We find ourselves in complete disagreement with the Court of Appeals. HN1 There is nothing in the language of [***9] the antitrust acts which indicates that Congress wanted to make the common-law in pari delicto doctrine a defense to treble-damage actions, and the facts of this case suggest no basis for applying such a doctrine even if it did exist. Although [***990] in pari delicto literally means "of equal fault," the doctrine has been applied, correctly or incorrectly, in a wide variety of situations in which a plaintiff seeking damages or equitable relief is himself involved in some of the same sort of wrongdoing. We have often indicated the inappropriateness of invoking broad common-law barriers to relief where a private suit serves important public purposes. It was for this reason that we held in Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons, 340 U.S.

<sup>4</sup> In their motion for summary judgment respondents also argued that the restraints were permissible as reasonable means to protect their registered trade and service marks, but because they had failed to answer interrogatories pertinent to this defense, the district judge ordered it stricken, without prejudice to renewal if respondents promptly answered the relevant interrogatories. Because of its disposition of the case, the Court of Appeals reached neither the merits of this defense nor the question whether respondents had ever properly renewed it. In the circumstances of this case, we think the merits of this defense cannot be decided as a summary judgment question but must be resolved, along with all the other issues, by a trial on the merits.

HUGÁÈJÉFH Í ÁFHÌ LÀ Ì ÁUÈÓDÄFJÌ FÄEEFJÌ I LÄGÄSEÖAÄFGÅÁÌ GÄEEJÄFJÌ Ì ÁMÈÈSÖYÖÄFÌ I ÄEEJ

211 \(1951\), that a plaintiff in an antitrust suit could not be barred from recovery by proof that he had engaged in an unrelated conspiracy to commit some other antitrust violation. Similarly, in Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13 \(1964\), we held that a dealer whose consignment agreement was canceled for failure to adhere to a fixed resale price could bring suit under the antitrust laws [****10] even though by signing the agreement he had to that extent [*139] become a participant in the illegal, competition-destroying scheme. Both Simpson and Kiefer-Stewart were premised on a recognition that HN2 the purposes of the antitrust laws are best served by insuring that the private action will be an ever-present threat to deter anyone contemplating business behavior in violation of the antitrust laws. The plaintiff who reaps the reward of treble damages may be no less morally reprehensible than the defendant, but the law encourages his suit to further the overriding public policy in favor of competition. A more fastidious regard for the relative moral worth of the parties would only result in seriously undermining the usefulness of the private action as a bulwark of anti-trust enforcement. And permitting the plaintiff to recover a windfall gain does not encourage continued violations by those in his position since they remain fully subject to civil and criminal penalties for their own illegal conduct. Kiefer-Stewart, supra.

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7] [****11] [LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8] [LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9] In light of these considerations, we cannot accept the Court of Appeals' idea that courts have power to undermine [**1985] the antitrust acts by denying recovery to injured parties merely because they have participated to the extent of utilizing illegal arrangements formulated and carried out by others. Although petitioners may be subject to some criticism for having taken any part in respondents' allegedly illegal scheme and for eagerly seeking more franchises and more profits, their participation was not voluntary in any meaningful sense. They sought the franchises enthusiastically but they did not actively seek each and every clause of the agreement. Rather, many of the clauses were quite clearly detrimental to their interests, and they alleged that they had continually objected to them. Petitioners apparently accepted many of these restraints solely because their acquiescence was necessary to obtain an otherwise attractive business opportunity. The argument that such [*140] conduct by petitioners defeats their right [****12] to sue is completely refuted by the following statement from Simpson: "HN3 The fact that a retailer can refuse to deal does not give the supplier immunity if the arrangement is one of those schemes condemned by the anti-trust laws." 377 U.S., at 16. Moreover, even if petitioners actually favored and supported some of the other restrictions, they cannot be blamed for seeking to minimize the disadvantages of the agreement [***991] once they had been forced to accept its more onerous terms as a condition of doing business. The possible beneficial byproducts of a restriction from a plaintiff's point of view can of course be taken into consideration in computing damages, but once it is shown that the plaintiff did not aggressively support and further the monopolistic scheme as a necessary part and parcel of it, his understandable attempts to make the best of a bad situation should not be a ground for completely denying him the right to recover which the antitrust acts give him. We therefore hold that [****13] HN4 the doctrine of in pari delicto, with its complex scope, contents, and effects, is not to be recognized as a defense to an antitrust action.

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10] Respondents, however, seek to support the judgment below on a considerably narrower ground. They picture petitioners as actively supporting the entire restrictive program as such, participating in its formulation and encouraging its continuation. We need not decide, however, whether such truly complete involvement and participation in a monopolistic scheme could ever be a basis, wholly apart from the idea of in pari delicto, for barring a plaintiff's cause of action, for in the present case the factual picture respondents attempt to paint is utterly refuted by the record. One of the restrictions which petitioners most strenuously challenge is the requirement that dealers purchase their supplies exclusively from Midas. Another is the requirement that dealers carry Midas' full line of parts. Neither of these provisions could be in a dealer's self-interest since they obligate [*141] him to buy from Midas regardless of whether more favorable prices [****14] can be obtained from other sources of supply and regardless of whether he needs certain parts at all.<sup>5</sup> In addition, the depositions refer to

---

<sup>5</sup> Respondents suggest that these requirements were beneficial to a dealer because they helped him win customers who had confidence in the "Midas" brand, and some dealers evidently did try to reap some benefit from these requirements by advertising, "You get only nationally-advertised Midas products." It seems highly unlikely, however, that benefits of this kind could do more than mitigate very slightly the losses that a dealer would suffer when forced to buy higher-priced Midas products, particularly since dealers would have bought the higher-priced Midas products voluntarily if they thought customer preferences for the brand would be sufficiently strong to offset the higher price.

HUGÁEJÉFI ËFI FLÀ Ì ÁUÉDÉJÌ FÄEEJÌ Í LÄESEÓAÉCA ÁÌ GÄEEJFLÄFJÌ Í ÁWÆSØYÓÁHFÎ Ì ËEEIFI

numerous instances in which petitioners asked Midas for permission to purchase from some other source of supply. The record shows that these requests were repeatedly refused by Midas representatives, [**1986] who underscored the refusals by describing the very requests as "heresy" and by commenting that dealers who bought from outside sources of supply were "asking for trouble" or "were going to be punished." A Midas official warned petitioner Pierce, who had been buying some exhaust parts from other manufacturers, "Joe, this is just like cheating on your wife; it is grounds for divorce."

[****15] These statements completely refute respondents' argument that petitioners were active participants and show, to the contrary, that the illegal scheme was thrust upon them by Midas.

LEdHN[11] [11]LEdHN[12] [12]LEdHN[13] [13]There remains for consideration only the Court of Appeals' alternative holding that the Sherman Act claim should be dismissed because respondents were all part of a single business entity and [***992] were therefore entitled to cooperate without creating an illegal conspiracy. But since respondents Midas and International availed themselves of the privilege of doing business through separate corporations, the fact of common ownership could not [*142] save them from any of the obligations that the law imposes on separate entities. See Timken Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 598 (1951); United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 227 (1947). In any event each petitioner can clearly charge a combination between [****16] Midas and himself, as of the day he unwillingly complied with the restrictive franchise agreements, Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 150, n. 6 (1968); Simpson v. Union Oil Co., supra, or between Midas and other franchise dealers, whose acquiescence in Midas' firmly enforced restraints was induced by "the communicated danger of termination," United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 372 (1967); United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29 (1960). Although respondents object that these particular theories of conspiracy now pressed by petitioners were not alleged with sufficient specificity in their complaint, this suggestion is completely without merit. Our modern rules provide for trying cases to serve the ends of justice and require that HN5 pleadings "be so construed as to do substantial justice." Rule 8 (f), Fed. Rules Civ. Proc. The gist of petitioners' cause of action has been clear from the outset, and respondents will in no way be prejudiced if petitioners are permitted to rely [****17] on these alternative theories of conspiracy.

It follows that the judgment of the Court of Appeals must be reversed. The case is remanded to that court with directions to reverse in full the judgment of the District Court and to remand the case for trial.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: WHITE; FORTAS; MARSHALL; HARLAN (In Part)

Concur

---

MR. JUSTICE WHITE, concurring.

I join the opinion and judgment of the Court with the following observations.

As long ago as 1927, in Eastman Kodak Co. of N. Y. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U.S. 359, the Court [*143] recognized that participation in an unlawful course of conduct would not bar recovery where the defendant's superior bargaining power led to plaintiff's participation in the unlawful arrangement. In Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211 (1951), where plaintiff was said to have participated in an illegal scheme other than the one charged in his complaint, the Court made it clear that a plaintiff's own delinquency under the antitrust laws would not always bar his treble-damage suit. See also Bales v. Kansas City Star Co., 336 F.2d 439, 444 (C. A. 8th Cir. 1964); [****18] Jewel Tea Co. [**1987] v. Local Unions, 274 F.2d 217, 223 (C. A. 7th Cir.), cert. denied, 362 U.S. 936 (1960). These cases are enough to warrant reversal in this case, once it is concluded that the illegal arrangement in which petitioners participated [***993] was thrust on them by respondents. This is the conclusion reached by the Court and I agree with it.

HUGÁEÜÉFI ÉAFI HÀ Ì ÁUÉOÉFJÌ FÄÉFJÌ Ì LÄÉSEÓaÉcaÁÌ GÄÉEJHLÄFJÌ Ì ÁWÉEÅSÓYÓAÉFÌ Ì ÉÉÉÉFÌ

I also agree that the in pari delicto defense in its historic formulation is not a useful concept for sorting out those situations in which the plaintiff might be barred because of his own conduct from those in which he may have been a party to an illegal venture but is still entitled to damages from other participants. Judgments like these would be better made by hewing closer to the aims and purposes of § 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15, which gives treble-damage recovery to the private plaintiff injured by conduct which violates the antitrust laws.

Under § 4, plaintiff must show not only that the defendant violated the antitrust laws but that his conduct caused the damages alleged in the complaint. Normally, it would be enough [****19] with respect to causation if the defendant "materially contributed" to plaintiff's injury, Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 702 \(1962\); or "substantially" [*144] contributed, notwithstanding other factors contributed also," Moman v. Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., 172 F.2d 37, 43 \(C. A. 1st Cir. 1948\), cert. denied, 336 U.S. 967 \(1949\). The plaintiff need not show that the illegality was a more substantial cause than any other. Haverhill Gazette Co. v. Union Leader Corp., 333 F.2d 798, 805-806 (C. A. 1st Cir.), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 931 \(1964\).

Under this rule, a third party proving an illegal undertaking between two defendants may recover for all damages caused by the combination. Those damages normally may be had from either or both defendants without regard to their relative responsibility for originating the combination or their different roles in effectuating its ends. This is because neither defendant, if he acted alone, could be charged with the violation; some degree of participation by both is essential to create a combination within the [****20] reach of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Either defendant is therefore deemed to have been a material cause of the damages, sufficient to permit a third party to recover.

This may be the result required under § 4 when conspirators are sued by an injured outsider. But what is the situation when one party to the combination sues the other? Assume three situations: first, A, a manufacturer, sells to B, a retailer. A, over B's objection, insists on B's adhering to specified resale prices. B agrees since A's product is an important part of his business and he can get it nowhere else. B suffers a decline in business because of an inability to match or better the price for competing products. B sues A. He is obviously in a position to prove that A was a substantial cause of his injury.

Second, suppose that when B maintains the suggested prices on A's product, he simply sells more of C's competing product, which he also handles. B is not hurt, but A is. A sues B.

[*145] Third, suppose that D and E, competitors, combine to fix higher prices. D's best customer sets up his own source of supply to D's great damage. D sues E, claiming that E was a substantial cause of his injury.

[****21] It is arguable that in each supposed situation recovery should be [***994] denied because the plaintiff was a party to the illegality and wrongdoers should be left where they are found. In terms of the deterrent aims of the statute permitting injured plaintiffs to recover treble damages, however, this undiscriminating approach [**1988] makes little sense. When those with market power and leverage persuade, coerce, or influence others to cooperate in an illegal combination to their damage, allowing recovery to the latter is wholly consistent with the purpose of § 4, since it will deter those most likely to be responsible for organizing forbidden schemes. The principles of Eastman Kodak Co. of N. Y. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., supra, clearly permit recovery by the less responsible, but injured, party. In the first hypothetical case, therefore, B should recover from A in order to deter A and others like him from imposing resale price maintenance schemes on their customers.

In the second case, where manufacturer A, contrary to his expectations, was injured and retailer B was not, there is no reason, based on the deterrent purposes of § 4, to permit [***22] recovery from B, even though his cooperation was essential to the combination and even though had a third party been injured he could have recovered from either A or B, or from both. A, the moving force, should not be rewarded for his efforts to further an unlawful price arrangement and in effect to take from B the profits, trebled, that B made by selling the products of A's competitor. B was unwilling to enter the illegal scheme, was motivated principally by what he thought was economic necessity -- the need to avoid losing business by being unable to offer a major [*146] product line -- and would have been only marginally deterred by the prospect of antitrust liability.

HUGÁEÜÉTHI ÉIFI Ì LÀÌ ÁUÉÓÉFJÌ FÄÉFJÌ Ì LÄÉSEÓAÉCAÁÌ GÄÉEJJI LÄFJÌ Ì ÁUÉÉSÓYÓÁHFI Ì ÉÄÉGG

In the third case, where D and E are competitors, if D simply proves the agreement and the resulting loss, should he recover from E, absent some believable showing that E was the more responsible for the illegal scheme? No doubt E was a substantial factor in the combination and hence in the injury; a judgment for damages might deter him and others from violating the law. But D is equally responsible for his own damages. To permit him a recovery may be a counterdeterrent. By assuring him illegal profits [****23] if the agreement in restraint of trade succeeds, and treble damages if it fails, it may encourage what the Act was designed to prevent. In this situation, it is doubtful that the ends of § 4 would be measurably served by permitting D's recovery. If judge or jury finds the parties equally responsible for the conduct which caused injury, D's recovery under § 4 should be denied for failure of proof that E was the more substantial cause of the injury.

No simple formula can encompass the infinite variety of possible situations. Generally speaking, however, I would deny recovery where plaintiff and defendant bear substantially equal responsibility for injury resulting to one of them but permit recovery in favor of the one less responsible where one is more responsible than the other. This rule would simply pose the issue of causation in particularized form. There will be little mystery as to what evidence would be relevant proof: facts as to the relative responsibility for originating, negotiating, and implementing the scheme; evidence as to who might reasonably have been expected to benefit from the [***995] provision or conduct making the scheme illegal under § 1; proof of [****24] whether one party attempted to terminate the arrangement and encountered resistance or counter-measures from the other; facts showing [*147] who ultimately profited or suffered from the arrangement.

As I view the record in the case before us, the evidence is insufficient to show that petitioners were as responsible as respondents, or more so, for the admittedly illegal scheme. The evidence before us does not suggest that petitioners were equal partners with respondents with respect to the origin and implementation of this scheme for distributing respondents' mufflers, or in terms of benefits from the scheme. In such circumstances summary judgment for respondents was improper.

[**1989] MR. JUSTICE FORTAS, concurring in the result.

I agree with the result in this case. Petitioners' right to recover in their own interest and as "private attorneys general" to enforce the antitrust laws cannot be denied on the basis of the doctrine of in pari delicto. Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13 \(1964\).

The doctrine has, however, a significant if limited role in private antitrust law. If the fault of the parties is reasonably within the same scale -- if the [****25] "delictum" is approximately "par" -- then the doctrine should bar recovery. This might be the case, for example, if a manufacturer of mufflers and a manufacturer of other parts had combined to formulate and operate a collusive scheme. One co-adventurer could not sue the other for discriminatory or restrictive practices which allegedly diminished its take from the enterprise.

But equality of position of this general nature is necessary before in pari delicto may apply to bar an antitrust remedy. Unless the doctrine is so limited, the private remedy provided by the antitrust laws is nullified to a significant extent. The owner of a gas station may enter into an arrangement with the distributor and may benefit from its restrictive provisions. But this less-than-equal participation in the crime must not bar him [*148] from recovering in his own and the public interest if he can show that he has suffered compensable harm. Our decision in Simpson indicates this quite clearly. The antitrust laws are intended to protect individuals "from combinations fashioned by others and offered to [them] . . . as the only feasible method by which [they] may do business. [****26] " Ring v. Spina, 148 F.2d 647, 653 \(1945\).

As the Court points out, it is possible that the franchisee may be proved to be a collaborator, or coadventurer, or a true particeps criminis with respect to a particular aspect of the plan -- for example, if he originated and insisted upon the inclusion of a territorial exclusivity clause which was not in the franchise as drafted by the franchisor. He could not recover damages based upon this, if, essentially, it is his own act.

Clearly, petitioners here are not co-adventurers or partners in the franchise arrangement as a whole, and they are not barred by in pari delicto. On remand, as the Court orders, if petitioners are chargeable with responsibility for a particular clause of the agreement or restrictive covenant because it is, in substance, their own act, they should not be allowed to recover for injury [***996] they may have suffered because of it.

HUGÁEÜÉFI Ì LÀÌ ÁUÉDÉJÌ FÄÉFJÌ JIÁGÉSEÓAÉCAÁÌ GÄÉEJÌ LAFJÌ Ì ÁUÉSÓYÓÁHFÌ Ì ÉÉÉG

MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, concurring in the result.

While I agree with the result and much of the reasoning in the opinion of the Court in this case, I find myself unable to accept what I take to be the holding that the doctrine of in pari delicto [***27] has no place in a treble-damage antitrust action. Not only is it unnecessary to pass on such a broad proposition on the facts of this case, as the Court's opinion reveals, but the holding itself is, in my opinion, incorrect.

I agree that the "complex scope, contents, and effects" of the doctrine as it has grown up in the common law should not be applied mechanically to private antitrust [*149] actions under the relevant federal statutes. On the other hand, I believe that a limited application of the basic principle behind the doctrine of in pari delicto is both proper and desirable in the antitrust field. As the Court notes, ante, at 138, the literal meaning of in pari delicto is of equal fault. I would hold that where a defendant in a private antitrust suit can show that the plaintiff actively participated in the formation and implementation of an illegal scheme, and is substantially equally at fault, the plaintiff should [**1990] be barred from imposing liability on the defendant.

Such an approach would still require reversal of the decision of the Court of Appeals in this case. As this Court's opinion makes perfectly clear, the mere fact that a party enters [***28] into an agreement containing provisions that are violative of the antitrust laws with the intent to make money by operating under the agreement is not in itself sufficient to show that he is equally responsible for the existence of the illegal provisions. Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13 (1964). Furthermore, the Court is certainly correct in concluding that the record is replete with evidence, relating to the tying and exclusive-dealing provisions of the franchise agreement, which indicates, with sufficient probative force to withstand respondents' motion for summary judgment, that the petitioners did not actively seek out or support all the anticompetitive restraints embodied in the franchise.

However, the inquiry should not stop here. The franchise agreement also contains provisions requiring both resale price maintenance and the observance of territorial restrictions on sales by franchisees. Both of these sets of restrictions are ones which, at least on their face, would ordinarily be expected to benefit the franchisees more than Midas. Both restrict competition between franchisees, not between Midas and other suppliers competing to sell parts to [***29] Midas franchisees. If Midas can [*150] make an adequate showing that those provisions were inserted into the franchise agreement at the behest and for the benefit of petitioners and their fellow franchisees, petitioners should, in my opinion, be barred from contending that they were damaged by the existence and enforcement of the provisions.

I agree with the Court that petitioners should not be barred from recovering damages attributable to the enforcement of the tying and exclusive dealing provisions against them on the sole ground that they participated in the formulation of other anticompetitive provisions in the agreement. Cf. Moore v. Mead Service Co., 340 U.S. 944 [***997] (1951), vacating 184 F.2d 338 (C. A. 10th Cir. 1950). However, if Midas could show, which it has quite clearly not done at this stage of the litigation, that petitioners actually participated in the formulation of the entire agreement, trading off anticompetitive restraints on their own freedom of action (such as the tying and exclusive dealing provisions) for anticompetitive restraints intended for their benefit (such as resale price maintenance or exclusive territories), [***30] petitioners should be barred from seeking damages as to the agreement as a whole.

It may be argued that the course I propose unduly complicates private antitrust litigation. A holding that a party who voluntarily enters into an agreement containing provisions that violate the antitrust laws is barred from any recovery on that agreement altogether (as the Court of Appeals has held here) or, at the other extreme, is absolutely free to recover any damages that he can show to stem from his operations under the agreement (as this Court's opinion seems to hold) would presumably be considerably easier to apply in most cases. It seems to me, however, that neither holding would represent a satisfactory resolution of the difficult problems concerning the administration of the antitrust laws raised by [*151] agreements such as the one involved in the present case.

HUGÁEÜÉFHÍ ÉAFÍ FLÀ Ì ÁUÉOÉFHÍ FÄEEJJ ELÄSEÓAÉCAÁÌ GÄEEJJÍ LAFJÍ Ì ÁWÉESÓYÓAHFÍ Ì ÉEEHÉ

The reasons for rejecting the approach taken by the Court of Appeals are, as I have said, persuasively set forth in the opinion of the Court. The reasons I see for rejecting the approach taken by this Court are, perhaps, less related to the public interest in eliminating all forms of anticompetitive business conduct and more [****31] related to the equities as between the parties. The principle that [**1991] a wrongdoer shall not be permitted to profit through his own wrongdoing is fundamental in our juris-prudence. The traditional doctrine of in pari delicto is itself firmly based on this principle. I nevertheless agree, because of the strong public interest in eliminating restraints on competition, that many of the refinements of moral worth demanded of plaintiffs by such traditional legal and equitable doctrines as volenti non fit injuria, unclean hands, and many of the variations of in pari delicto should not be applicable in the antitrust field. However, I cannot agree that the public interest requires that a plaintiff who has actively sought to bring about illegal restraints on competition for his own benefit be permitted to demand redress -- in the form of treble damages -- from a partner who is no more responsible for the existence of the illegality than the plaintiff.

The possible added deterrence to violations of the antitrust laws that would be produced by the Court's holding may well be equaled, if not surpassed, by the new incentive it will create to commit such violations, for [****32] a potential violator will have less to lose if he can attempt to recover his losses from his partner should the scheme not work out to his benefit.

The Court's opinion appears to seek to minimize the consequences of doing away with the in pari delicto defense by suggesting that a defendant will be able to have the "beneficial byproducts of a restriction" (ante, at 140) to the plaintiff taken into account in the computation [*152] of damages. This, of course, is to some extent already true in any antitrust case. Illegal conduct does not per [***998] se result in a money judgment for a plaintiff; injury must always be shown. However, a defendant might also be permitted to show that the plaintiff's financial rewards from some of the illegal provisions of an agreement outweighed the harm suffered from other illegal provisions, and accordingly on some sort of offset theory the plaintiff would recover nothing.

If such an offset approach on the issue of damages is envisioned by the Court, it hardly seems an adequate means of preventing unjust enrichment. First, that approach clearly permits damages to be awarded when injury is shown to outweigh benefit regardless [***33] of the nature of the plaintiff's participation in the scheme. Second, it adds an unnecessarily speculative element to the factual inquiry required in an antitrust case. While a trier of fact may have some difficulty in allocating responsibility between the parties to an agreement, the allocation can be made for the most part on the basis of hard evidence as to the facts surrounding the making of the agreement. The determination of damages in an antitrust suit, however, almost invariably requires a certain amount of speculation, no matter how informed. Cf. Bigelow v. RKO Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264-266 \(1946\). Such speculation is ordinarily unavoidable if damages are to be provable. Here there is no necessity for permitting additional speculation as to offsetting benefits in order to prevent unjust enrichment because the same goal can be achieved by a factual evaluation of the parties' respective fault.

For example, it is obviously much easier to determine in this case whether petitioners actively participated in the formulation and implementation of the various illegal provisions of the franchise agreement than it is to decide whether the monetary [****34] benefits that petitioners obtained [*153] through the resale price maintenance and exclusive territorial provisions surpassed the losses they suffered from the exclusive dealing and tying arrangements. Since I regard a respective-fault approach as superior to a damage-offset approach on principle, the complications inherent in the latter inquiry merely reinforce my conviction that the Court is being unwise in broadly rejecting the doctrine of in pari delicto.

Dissent by: HARLAN (In Part)

Dissent

---

[**1992] MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, with whom MR. JUSTICE STEWART joins, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

HUGÁÉJÉFHÍ ÉFÍ HÀ Í ÁUÉÓÉFJÌ FÄÉFJJGLÁÉSÉOÀÉCAÁÌ GÄÉEJJÌ LAFJÌ Í ÁUÉÉSÓYÓÁFÍ Í ÈÉÉHÍ

The variety of views this case has engendered seems to me to stem from lack of agreement on a definition of the term "in pari delicto," as well as a disagreement, perhaps, on the standards that should govern the use of the defense to which that term is properly applied. I believe that the courts below misused the term, but that properly used it refers to a defense that should be permitted in antitrust cases. Consequently, I would remand this case not for immediate trial but for fresh consideration of the motion for summary judgment upon proper standards.

Plaintiffs who [***35] are truly in pari delicto are those who have themselves violated the law in cooperation with the defendant.<sup>1</sup> If the law is the [***999] Sherman Act, both are, in principle, liable equally to criminal prosecution. For example, two manufacturers who agree on a price at which they will sell are "of equal fault," as are a manufacturer and a dealer who strike a bargain whereby each accepts an illegal restriction that benefits the other.

[*154] When a person suffers losses as a result [***36] of activities the law forbade him to engage in, I see no reason why the law should award him treble damages from his fellow offenders. It seems to me a bizarre way to "further the overriding public policy in favor of competition," ante, at 139, to pay violators three times their losses in doing what public policy seeks to deter them from doing. Even if the threat of intra-conspiracy treble damages had some deterrent effect, however, I should not think it a too "fastidious regard for the relative moral worth of the parties," ibid., to decline to sanction a kind of antitrust enforcement that rests upon a principle of well-compensated dishonor among thieves.

There are, however, three situations quite distinct from that to which I think the term in pari delicto is properly applied. The first is the "consent" situation in which the Latin maxim "volenti non fit injuria" is sometimes invoked. Where X and Y conspire to fix prices at which they will sell, they are in pari delicto. If Z, knowing of the conspiracy, nevertheless purchases from X, he is not in pari delicto. He has committed no offense: the most that can be said is that he knowingly allowed [***37] an offense to be committed against him. I would agree, for many of the reasons stated in the opinions of MR. JUSTICE BLACK, MR. JUSTICE FORTAS, and MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, that there should be no defense in such a situation, where the plaintiff has done nothing the law told him not to do.

A second situation distinguishable from true in pari delicto is illustrated by Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons, 340 U.S. 211, relied on by the Court. It was there alleged in defense to a treble-damage action that the defendants' illegal actions were taken in reprisal against altogether independent illegal actions by the plaintiff. Here again, I accept the decision that this is no defense. Our law frowns on vigilante justice. Since the plaintiff is in part enforcing the public interest against the defendants' violations, I would permit him to do so, and [*155] leave punishment for any independent violation by him to proper means of enforcement.

The third distinguishable situation may or may not be illustrated by Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, [**1993] and Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, two cases [***38] that I find it quite difficult to understand.<sup>2</sup> In each of them, the plaintiff had been offered a dealership, on terms that he did not participate in formulating, and in each case he at first "accepted" such a dealership. Since neither case stated satisfactorily where the alleged combination in restraint of trade was to be found, it is not clear whether the plaintiff's acceptance of a dealership was itself a forbidden act. If it was [***1000] not, then these cases fall under the heading of "consent" cases. A person who engaged in a lawful business on the terms offered should not be prevented from suing merely by his knowledge that others violated the law in contriving those terms. If, however, those plaintiffs were doing something the law told them not to do, I suggest that recovery in those cases can best be understood on the theory of a "coercion" exception to the in pari delicto doctrine. That is, although a large business with the power to dictate terms and a small business that can only accept them or cease doing business may both, in principle, be liable to legal sanctions for the contract that results from the offer and acceptance, it is considered that the liability [***39] is not "par," and that the business accepting dictation is only minimally blameworthy.

<sup>1</sup>This is at least the traditional use of the term. See, e. g., Williams v. Hedley, 8 East 378, 381-382, 103 Eng. Rep. 388, 389. See generally Note, In Pari Delicto and Consent as Defenses in Private Antitrust Suits, 78 Harv. L. Rev. 1241, distinguishing the two defenses. The present case is as good an illustration as any of the usefulness of maintaining distinct terms for the distinct situations properly characterized by "in pari delicto," "consent," "unclean hands," and so forth.

<sup>2</sup>See my dissenting opinion in Albrecht, 390 U.S., at 156.

HUGÁNÈÉSHI ÁAFÍ I LÀ I ÁUÉÔDÁFJÌ FÁAFJJHLAGÉSÓAÉGÁI GÁFFEECAFJÌ ÁMÈÉSÓYÓÁAFÍ I ÁAFÍ

In my view, the District Court and the Court of Appeals did not apply the true in pari delicto standard to this case. The District Court said that "each plaintiff voluntarily entered into the franchise agreement . . . and accepted the benefits therefrom. They are . . . [therefore?] in pari delicto with defendants . . ." <sup>3</sup> [***40] At another [*156] point the court said, "We have repeatedly held that a person who freely assents to an act suffers 'no legal injury' if harm results therefrom." <sup>4</sup> Although the District Court made a passing distinction of the "coercion" and "unclean hands" doctrines, it is not clear that it meant to hold that the violation of the Sherman Act, if any, was one for which plaintiffs were subject to public-law sanctions along with the defendants.

The Court of Appeals decision was similar. That court relied on the District Court's language quoted above, adding that each of the plaintiffs had made a substantial profit from selling auto parts, a fact that might bear on the measure of any damages but which, apart from illegal action on the part of the plaintiffs, should not afford an absolute defense. <sup>5</sup>

It is by no means clear on this record, however, that the plaintiffs may not be said to have been in pari delicto in the proper sense of that term. This question is rendered more difficult by the complexity of the record history of plaintiffs' activities, and by the formidable obscurity of the law of dealer liability for vertical restraints, an obscurity fostered by Simpson, supra, Albrecht, supra, and above all by United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29. [***41] Although I make no attempt to drain the bog at this point, I am of the view that before this case goes to trial the lower courts should be given another opportunity to consider the in pari delicto defense. I would remand this case to determine whether any agreement alleged to be in restraint of trade was one for which the plaintiffs were substantially as much responsible, and as much legally liable, as the defendants. I would permit the lower courts to consider this question upon the existing affidavits and such additional material as either side may wish to adduce.

References

---

Am Jur, Monopolies, Combinations, and Restraints of Trade (1st ed 28, 29, 32-36, 181-189)

14 Am Jur Pl & Pr Forms, Monopolies, Combinations, and Restraints of Trade, Forms 14:311, 14:312

11 Am Jur Legal Forms, Sales, Forms 11:1207 et seq.

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 14, 36, 41, 42, 50

ALR Digests, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 10, 14, 15, 20, 24, 31, 32

L Ed Index to Anno, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

[***42] Annotation References:

Validity under federal antitrust laws of agreement conferring exclusive sales agency for designated territory. 9 L Ed 2d 1235.

Validity, under 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 14), of contract by purchaser of goods to take his entire requirements from the seller. 5 L Ed 2d 1105.

---

<sup>3</sup> 1966 Trade Cases para. 71,801, at 82,705.

<sup>4</sup> Id., at 82,706.

<sup>5</sup> See 376 F.2d 692, at 693, 695.

HUGANÉÉFHÍ ÁAFÍ Í LÀ Ì ÁUÉODÁJÍ FÁEFJJHLAGÉSÉOÀÉGÁJÍ GÁEEFCAJÍ Í ÁUÉASÓYÓÁAFÍ Í ÁAFÍ G

Robinson-Patman Act as construed by Supreme Court. 2 L Ed 2d 1737.

Validity, construction, and application of provisions of Robinson- Patman Act regarding furnishing of services or facilities. 89 L Ed 1336; 13 ALR 2d 362.

Actions for threefold damages under Federal Antitrust Act. 53 L Ed 826.

Right of manufacturer, producer, or wholesaler to control resale price. 7 ALR 449, 19 ALR 925, 32 ALR 1087, 103 ALR 1331, 125 ALR 1335.

Participation in illegal combination as defense to action under Anti-trust Act. 160 ALR 381.

Contract by one party to sell his entire output to, or to take his entire requirements of a commodity from, the other as contrary to public policy or antimonopoly statutes. 83 ALR 1173 .

---

End of Document

Hanover Shoe v. United Shoe Mach. Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

March 5, 1968, Argued ; June 17, 1968, Decided *

No. 335

Reporter

392 U.S. 481 *; 88 S. Ct. 2224 **; 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 ***; 1968 U.S. LEXIS 3147 ****; 1968 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,490

HANOVER SHOE, INC. v. UNITED SHOE MACHINERY CORP.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 377 F.2d 776, affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

Core Terms

---

leasing, machines, manufacturer, shoe, damages, monopolization, decree, overcharge, buyer, cases, competitors, shoe machinery, monopoly power, Sherman Act, profits, antitrust, customers, machinery, practices, anti trust law, violations, factories, bought, taxes, prima facie evidence, Clayton Act, treble-damage, predatory, charges, effects

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1 [] Clayton Act, Penalties

Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 69 Stat. 283, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(a\), makes a final judgment or decree in any civil or criminal suit brought by the United States under the antitrust laws prima facie evidence as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

---

* Together with No. 463, United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. Hanover Shoe, Inc., also on certiorari to the same court.

HN2 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, provides that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained. The court thinks it sound to hold that when a buyer shows that the price paid by him for materials purchased for use in his business is illegally high and also shows the amount of the overcharge, he has made out a prima facie case of injury and damage within the meaning of § 4.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > False Charges & Rebates

HN3 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

A person whose property is diminished by a payment of money wrongfully induced is injured in his property.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

The plaintiff, a manufacturer of shoes and customer of the defendant manufacturer of shoe machinery, brought, in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, the present treble damage antitrust action based on defendant's monopolization of the shoe machinery market by offering its machines only for leasing but not for sale. In support of its action, plaintiff relied solely on a decree in favor of the United States in a former action against defendant as prima facie evidence under 15 USC 16\(a\). The District Court awarded damages, in the amount of $ 4,239,609. (245 F Supp 258.) On appeal, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit affirmed the finding of liability but disagreed with the District Court on certain questions relating to the damage award. (377 F2d 776.)

On writs of certiorari, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeals on questions relating to the damage award. In an opinion by White, J., expressing the views of seven members of the court, it was held that (1) the decree in the government's suit determined the illegality of defendant's "lease only" policy and hence was prima facie evidence on that issue, (2) the plaintiff made out a prima facie case by showing the illegality of defendant's "lease only" practice and the amount of defendant's overcharge, (3) defendant was not entitled to assert a "passing on" defense, (4) plaintiff was entitled to damages for the entire period of the applicable Pennsylvania statute of limitations, and (5) the District Court, in computing damages, properly refused to reduce the amount of recovery by the amount of alleged tax advantages to plaintiff, and properly deducted a loan credit interest component of 2.5 percent from the profits that it thought plaintiff would have earned by purchasing machines.

Stewart, J., dissented, expressing the view that the decree in the government's suit was not prima facie evidence of the illegality of defendant's "lease only" practice, and that, in the absence of other evidence, defendant's liability to plaintiff was not established.

Marshall, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

HUGÁNÉJÁ Í FÉL Í FLÁ Í ÁUÉDÁGGI ÉÉEGG LÁÉSÉOÁÉGÁÁGHFLÁJÍ Í ÁUÉSÓYÓÁFI Í ÉÉÉÉ

CASES AND QUESTIONS CERTIFIED §9 > time for certification -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

A Federal District Court acts within its discretion in denying as untimely certification to another District Court of a question of the construction of the latter court's opinion and decree in a former case, where the District Court, in the instant case, had already ruled upon the question.

EVIDENCE §486 > JUDGMENT §141 > in government's antitrust action -- estoppel -- prima facie evidence -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

In determining the extent of estoppel resulting from a decree in favor of the government in its civil antitrust action, the court is not limited to the decree; if by reference to the findings, opinion, and decree it is determined that an issue was actually adjudicated in the government's antitrust suit, the private plaintiff in a subsequent action against the same defendant for treble damages can treat the outcome of the government's case as prima facie evidence on that issue.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §75 > scope of relief -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

A provision in a decree rendered in favor of the government in its civil antitrust action which requires that defendant no longer offer for lease its machine type unless it also offers such type for sale, is a justifiable remedy even if the practice that it bans was not instrumental in the monopolization of the market.

EVIDENCE §486 > JUDGMENT §141 > antitrust action -- estoppel -- prima facie evidence -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The portions of the court's opinion in favor of the government in its civil antitrust action which, supported by the court's findings of fact, condemn defendant's practice of making its machines available by lease only, estop defendant as against the government, and therefore constitute prima facie evidence in a private plaintiff's subsequent antitrust action against the same defendant for treble damages.

JUDGMENT §65 > antitrust action -- construction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Under the applicable standard for determining monopolization under 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 2), it is not error for the courts below to conclude--in a private party's antitrust action for treble damages--that defendant's practice of only leasing and refusing to sell its major machines was determined to be illegal monopolization in a judgment rendered in favor of the government in its former civil antitrust action against defendant, where the court, in the government's case, both in its opinion with respect to violation and in its opinion with respect to remedy, not only dealt with the objectionable clauses in defendant's standard lease but also addressed itself to the consequences of only leasing machines and to the manner in which that practice related to the maintenance of defendant's monopoly power, and where the court's relevant findings in the government's case were sufficient to show that the "lease only" system played a significant role in defendant's monopolization of the shoe machinery market, and those findings were not limited to the particular provisions of defendant's leases, but dealt as well with defendant's policy of leasing but not selling its important machines, with the advantages of that practice to defendant, and with its impact on potential and actual competition.

HUGÁNÉJÁ Í FÉL Í FLÁ Í ÁUÉÓDÁGGG FÉLEGGG LÁÉSÉOÁÉGA ÁGHFÁÉFGHFLÁJÍ Í ÁMÉÉSÓYÓÁFI Í ÉAÉFF

APPEAL §1512.5 > concurrent findings of courts below -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The United States Supreme Court will not disturb--in a treble damage antitrust action based on defendant's monopolization of the shoe machinery market by offering its machinery only for lease but not for sale--the findings of the District Court, affirmed by the Court of Appeals, that plaintiff would have bought rather than leased from defendant had it been given the opportunity to do so.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > damages -- refusal to sell -- necessity of demand -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

The plaintiff, in an action based on defendant's monopolization of the shoe machinery market by offering its machinery only for lease but not for sale, is not required to prove an explicit demand for the purchase of machines during the damage period, where, as stated by the Court of Appeals, plaintiff had been a customer of defendant in the leasing of machinery for many years, and was well aware of defendant's power as a supplier of machinery and of its policy against sales, and where in such circumstances it would be ironic as well as idle to require the victim of the monopoly to meet an explicit demand the denial of which was implicit in the continuance of the monopoly.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > antitrust suit -- treble damages -- prima facie case -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 15), providing for the recovery of treble damages by any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws, the plaintiff buyer has made out a prima facie case of injury and damage, where he shows that the price paid by him for materials purchased for use in his business was illegally high and where he also shows the amount of the overcharge.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > treble damages -- seller's overcharges -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

A buyer who was overcharged by the seller in violation of the federal antitrust laws is entitled to treble damages not only where, in the face of the overcharge, he does nothing and absorbs the loss, or maintains his own price and takes steps to increase his volume or to decrease other costs, but also where he raises the price for his own product.

HUGÁNÉJÁ Í FÉL Í FLÁ Í ÁUÉDÁGGI ÉÉEGG LÁÉSÉOáÉGáÁGHFÁÉFGHFLÁJÍ Í ÁUÉSÓYQÁFI Í ÉÉÉÉ

EVIDENCE §395 > inferences -- damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

The mere fact that a price rise followed an unlawful cost increase does not show that the sufferer of the cost increase was undamaged.

SALE §78 > unlawful price -- damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

If a cost rise is merely the occasion for a price increase that a businessman could have imposed absent the rise in his costs, the fact that he was earlier not enjoying the benefits of the higher price should not permit the supplier who charges an unlawful price to take those benefits from the businessman without being liable for damages.

ACTION OR SUIT §2 > right of action -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

The possessor of a right can recover for its unlawful deprivation whether or not he was previously exercising it.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > damages -- "passing on" defense -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

In a treble damage action based on defendant's monopolization of the shoe machinery market by offering its machines only for lease but not for sale, in which action plaintiff proved injury and the amount of its damages by proving that defendant had overcharged plaintiff during the damage period and by showing the amount of the overcharge, the defendant is not entitled to assert a "passing on" defense by contending that plaintiff suffered no legally cognizable injury because the illegal overcharge during the damage period was reflected in the price charged for shoes sold by plaintiff to its customers and that plaintiff, if it had bought machines at lower prices, would have charged less and made no more profit than it made by leasing.

COURTS §777.5 > retrospective operation of decision -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Cursory and conclusory statements in a decision do not provide sufficiently strong proof of a prevailing opinion as to the law to permit the sort of justifiable reliance thereon which alone could generate an argument that the decision should be given only prospective effect.

HUGÁNÉJÁ Í FÉJ Í FLÁ Í ÁUÉDÁGGI ÉÉÉÉGG LÁÉSÉÓa ÉGá ÁGHFÁÉÉGHFLÁJÍ Í ÁMÉÉSÓYQÁFI Í ÉÉÉÉ

COURTS §777.5 > retrospective or prospective operation of decision -- in antitrust suit -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

The decision in *American Tobacco Co. v United States \(1946\) 328 US 781, 90 L Ed 1575, 66 S Ct 1125*, holding that proof of predatory practices is not essential to a finding of monopolization in violation of 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USC 2), does not fundamentally change the law of monopolization in a way which should be given only prospective effect.

DAMAGES §170 > time for which recoverable -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

The plaintiff in a treble damage antitrust action who has proved defendant's monopolization of the shoe machinery market by offering its machine only for leasing but not for sale, is entitled to damages for the entire period of the applicable statute of limitations.

LIMITATION OF ACTION §201.5 > antitrust suit -- damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

Even though plaintiff's cause of action--defendant's monopolization of the above machinery market, in violation of 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USC 2)--arose outside the applicable state statute of limitations, plaintiff is not barred from claiming treble damages for injury occurring within the statutory period, since defendant's conduct is not the kind of violation which, if it occurs at all, must occur within some specific and limited timespan, and since defendant's conduct constitutes a continuing violation of the Act, inflicting continuing and accumulating harm on plaintiff.

DAMAGES §7 > deduction of tax benefits -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18]

In computing plaintiff's damages resulting from defendant's monopolization of the shoe machinery market by offering its machines only for leasing but not for sale, the fact that plaintiff would have had to pay additional taxes, had he purchased machines instead of renting them during the years in question, cannot be considered in reducing the amount of plaintiff's recovery.

DAMAGES §159 > loss of profits -- cost of capital -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[19\]](#) [19]

In computing damages resulting from defendant's monopolization of the shoe machinery market by offering its machines only for leasing but not for sale, the District Court properly deducts an interest component of 2.5 percent from the profits that it thought plaintiff would have earned by purchasing machines, and the court's determination is not subject to attack on the ground that it did not properly take account of the cost of capital to plaintiff, where the court found that in the years in question plaintiff was able to borrow money for between 2 percent and 2.5 percent per annum, and that had plaintiff bought machines it would have obtained the necessary capital by borrowing it at about this rate.

Syllabus

---

Following this Court's affirmance of a district court judgment in a civil action against United Shoe Machinery Corp. (United), a manufacturer and distributor of shoe machinery, which the Government had brought under § 4 of the Sherman Act, Hanover Shoe, Inc. (Hanover), a shoe manufacturer and customer of United's, brought this private treble-damage suit against United for its alleged monopolization of the shoe machinery industry in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, by means of its practice of leasing and refusing to sell its shoe machinery. Hanover, relying on § 5 (a) of the Clayton Act (making a final judgment or decree in a Government antitrust suit prima facie evidence as to all matters respecting which the judgment or decree would be an estoppel between the parties thereto), submitted the court's findings, opinion, and decree in the Government's case as its evidence that United had monopolized the shoe [****2] machinery industry and that its refusal to sell the machines was an instrument of the monopolization. In 1965 the District Court rendered judgment for Hanover, holding that it was entitled to damages for the period from July 1, 1939 (the earliest date permitted by the statute of limitations), to September 21, 1955, when this suit was filed, in an amount equal to three times the difference between what Hanover had paid in rentals and what it would have paid had United been willing to sell the machines, plus interest. The Court of Appeals affirmed as to liability, but disagreed with the District Court on certain aspects of the damage award, including the relevant damage period. It fixed that period's end date somewhat earlier and ruled that its start was June 10, 1946, when this Court decided American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, and endorsed the views in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416 (C. A. 2d Cir.), prior to which the Court of Appeals concluded it had been necessary in an action for violation of § 2 to prove the existence of predatory practices as well as monopoly power. Both parties were granted [****3] review of the Court of Appeals decision. United contends that the decision in the Government's suit against it did not determine that United's leasing practice was an instrument of monopolization; that Hanover sustained no injury since any excess cost of leasing over cost of ownership was not absorbed by Hanover but passed on to its customers; and that the District Court's damage calculations which the Court of Appeals upheld were erroneous because they did not properly allow for the cost of capital to Hanover as an element of the cost of acquiring the shoe machinery, the District Court having made an adjustment only to the extent of deducting a 2.5% interest component from the profits it thought Hanover would have earned by buying the machines. Hanover contends that the Court of Appeals erred in changing the start of the damage period and in ordering the District Court on remand to reduce its damage calculations by whatever tax advantages Hanover might have obtained by leasing as compared with buying the shoe machinery. Held:

1. The courts below did not err in holding that United's practice of leasing and refusing to sell its major machines was determined to be illegal monopolization [****4] in the Government's case, as reference to the court's findings and opinion, as well as decree, in that case makes clear. Pp. 483-487.
2. Hanover proved injury and the amount of its damages within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act when it proved that United had overcharged it during the damage period and showed the amount of the overcharge; and the possibility that it might have recouped the overcharge by "passing it on" to its customers was not relevant in the assessment of its damages. Pp. 487-494.
3. Hanover is entitled to damages for the entire period of the applicable statute of limitations, since the Alcoa-American Tobacco decisions did not fundamentally alter the law of monopolization in a way which should be given only prospective effect. Pp. 495-502.
4. The District Court did not otherwise err in its computation of damages. Pp. 502-504.

HUGÁNÉJÁ Í FÉL Í FLÁ Í ÁUÉÓDÁGGG FÉLEGGG LÁÉSÉOÁÉGA ÁGHFLÁFÍ ÁHFLÁJÍ Í ÁHÉSÓYÓÁFI Í ÁHÉ

Counsel: James V. Hayes argued the cause for petitioner in No. 335 and respondent in No. 463. With him on the briefs were Breck P. McAllister and Robert F. Morten.

Ralph M. Carson argued the cause for respondent in No. 335 and petitioner in No. 463. With him on the briefs were Robert D. Salinger, Philip C. Potter, Jr., and [****5] Roland W. Donnem.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[*483] [***1235] [**2226] MR. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

Hanover Shoe, Inc. (hereafter Hanover) is a manufacturer of shoes and a customer of United Shoe Machinery Corporation (hereafter United), a manufacturer and distributor of shoe machinery. In 1954 this Court affirmed the judgment of the District Court for the District of Massachusetts, 110 F.Supp. 295 (1953), in favor of the United States in a civil action against United under § 4 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 4. United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States, 347 U.S. 521. In 1955, Hanover brought the present treble-damage action against United in the District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania. In 1965 the District Court rendered judgment for Hanover and awarded trebled damages, including interest, of $ 4,239,609, as well as $ 650,000 in counsel fees. 245 F.Supp. 258. On appeal, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit affirmed the finding of liability but disagreed with the District Court on [***1236] certain questions relating to the damage award. [***6] 377 F.2d 776 (1967). Both Hanover and United sought review of the Court of Appeals' decision, and we granted both petitions. 389 U.S. 818 (1967).

I.

Hanover's action against United alleged that United had monopolized the shoe machinery industry in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act; that United's practice of leasing and refusing to sell its more complicated and important shoe machinery had been an instrument of the unlawful monopolization; and that therefore Hanover [*484] should recover from United the difference between what it paid United in shoe machine rentals and what it would have paid had United been willing during the relevant period to sell those machines.

LEdHN1[1] [1]Section 5 (a) of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 69 Stat. 283, 15 U. S. C. § 16 (a), HN1[1] makes a final judgment or decree in any civil or criminal suit brought by the United States under the antitrust laws "prima facie evidence . . . as to all matters respecting which said judgment [***7] or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto . . ." Relying on this provision, Hanover submitted the findings, opinion, and decree rendered by Judge Wyzanski in the Government's case as evidence that United monopolized and that the practice of refusing to sell machines was an instrument of the monopolization. United does not contest that prima facie weight is to be given to the judgment in the Government's case. It does, however, contend that Judge Wyzanski's decision did not determine that the practice of leasing and refusing to sell was an instrument of monopolization. This claim, rejected by the courts below, is the threshold issue in No. 463. If the 1953 judgment is not prima facie evidence of the illegality of [**2227] the practice from which Hanover's asserted injury arose, then Hanover, having offered no other convincing evidence of illegality, should not have recovered at all.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Following the District Court's rejection of United's construction of Judge Wyzanski's opinion and decree, United filed a motion requesting that the District Court certify the question of construction to Judge Wyzanski. United contends that the District Court erred in denying this motion, but we need not pass upon the merits of United's novel request, for the District Court clearly acted within its proper discretion in denying as untimely certification to another court of a question upon which it had already ruled.

HUGÁNÉJÁ Í FÉJ Í LÁ Í ÁUÉÓDÁGGI ÉÉCGGÍ LÁÉSÉDÁÉGÁ ÁGHFÁÉFGHÍ LÁJÍ Í ÁMÉÉSÓYÓÁFI Í ÉÉÉÉ

[****8] [LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2] Both the District Court and the Court of Appeals concluded that the lease only policy had been held illegal in [*485] the Government's suit. We find no error in that determination. It is true that § 4 of the decree<sup>2</sup> on which United relies condemned only certain clauses in the standard lease and that nowhere in the decree was any other aspect of United's leasing system expressly described or characterized as illegal monopolization. It is also arguable that § 5 of the decree, which required that United thenceforward not "offer for lease any machine type, unless it also offers such type" [*1237] for sale," was included merely to insure an effective remedy to dissipate the accumulated consequences of United's monopolization. We are not, however, limited to the decree in determining the extent of estoppel resulting from the judgment in the Government's case. If by reference to the findings, opinion, and decree it is determined that an issue was actually adjudicated in an antitrust suit brought by the Government, the private plaintiff can treat the outcome of the Government's case as prima facie [****9] evidence on that issue. See Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 340 U.S. 558, 566-569 (1951).

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3] [LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5] Section 5 of the decree would have been a justifiable remedy even if the practice it banned had not been instrumental in the monopolization of the market. But in our view the trial court's findings and opinion put on firm ground the proposition [****10] that the Government's case involved condemnation of the lease only system as such. In both its opinion with respect to violation and its opinion with respect to remedy, the court not only dealt with the objectionable clauses in the standard [*486] lease but also addressed itself to the consequences of only leasing machines and to the manner in which that practice related to the maintenance of United's monopoly power.<sup>3</sup> [****12] These [**2228] portions of the court's opinion are well supported by its findings of fact, which also estop United as against the Government and which therefore constitute prima facie evidence in this case. We have set out the relevant findings in an Appendix to this opinion. They are themselves sufficient to show that the lease only system played a significant role in United's monopolization of the shoe machinery market. Those findings were not limited to the particular provisions of United's [*487] leases. They dealt as well with United's policy of leasing but not selling its important machines, with the advantages of that practice to United, and with its impact on potential and actual competition. When the applicable standard for determining monopolization [****11] under § 2 is applied to these facts, it must be concluded that the District [****1238] Court and the Court of Appeals did not err in holding that United's practice of leasing and refusing to sell its major machines was determined to be illegal monopolization in the Government's case.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>2</sup> "4. All leases made by defendant which include either a ten-year term, or a full capacity clause, or deferred payment charges, and all leases under which during the life of the leases defendant has rendered repair and other service without making them subject to separate, segregated charges, are declared to have been means whereby defendant monopolized the shoe machinery market." 110 F.Supp., at 352.

<sup>3</sup> In its opinion on remedy, in answering United's objection to its conclusion that the decree should require United to offer machines for sale as well as for lease, the court plainly said that United "has used its leases to monopolize the shoe machinery market. And if leasing continues without an alternative sales system, United will still be able to monopolize that market." 110 F.Supp., at 350. Clearly, if after purging the leases of objectionable clauses United would still be monopolizing by leasing but not selling its machines, the lease only policy must also have made a substantial contribution to United's monopolization of the market during the period prior to the entry of the judgment. Moreover, in its opinion on violation, where the three principal sources of United's market power were identified, the court pointed to "the magnetic ties inherent in its system of leasing, and not selling, its more important machines" and to the "partnership" aspects of leasing but not selling those machines. 110 F.Supp., at 344. The leases assured "closer and more frequent contacts between United and its customers than would exist if United were a seller and its customers were buyers." Id., at 343. A shoe manufacturer by leasing was "detected more than if he owned that same United machine, or if he held it on a short lease carrying simple rental provisions and a reasonable charge for cancellation before the end of the term." Id., at 340. The lease system had "aided United in maintaining a pricing system which discriminates between machine types," id., at 344, discrimination which the court later said had evidenced "United's monopoly power, a buttress to it, and a cause of its perpetuation . . ." Id., at 349.

<sup>4</sup> In its brief on appeal from the judgment and decree rendered in the Government's case, United recognized that "the principal practices which the [District] Court stressed were that defendant offered important complicated machines only for lease and not for sale and that defendant serviced the leased machines without a separate charge." Brief for Appellant 6, United Shoe

II.

LEdHN6 [↑] [6] LEdHN7 [↑] [7] The District Court found that Hanover would have bought rather than leased from United had it been given the opportunity to do so.<sup>5</sup> [****14] The District Court determined that if United had sold its important machines, the cost to Hanover would have been less than the rental paid for leasing [****13] these same machines. This difference in cost, trebled, is the judgment awarded to Hanover in the District Court. United claims, however, that Hanover suffered no legally cognizable injury, contending [*488] that the illegal overcharge during the damage period was reflected in the price charged for shoes sold by Hanover to its customers and that Hanover, if it had bought machines at lower prices, would have charged less and made no more profit than it made by leasing. At the very least, United urges, the District Court should have determined on the evidence offered whether these contentions were correct. The Court of Appeals, like the District Court, rejected this assertion of the so-called "passing-on" defense, and we affirm that judgment.<sup>6</sup>

[****15] LEdHN8 [↑] [8] Section ***1239 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15, HN2 [↑] provides that any person "who shall be injured [*489] in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and [**2229] shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained . . ." We think it sound to hold that when a buyer shows that the price paid by him for materials purchased for use in his business is illegally high and also shows the amount of the overcharge, he has made out a prima facie case of injury and damage within the meaning of § 4.

LEdHN9 [↑] [9] If in the face of the overcharge the buyer does nothing and absorbs the loss, he is entitled to treble damages. This much seems conceded. The reason is that he has paid more than he should and his property has been illegally diminished, for had the price paid been lower his profits would have been higher. It is also clear that [****16] if the buyer, responding to the illegal price, maintains his own price but takes steps to increase his volume or to decrease other costs, his right to damages is not destroyed. Though he may manage to maintain his profit level, he would have made more if his purchases from the defendant had cost him less. We hold that the buyer is equally entitled to damages if he raises the price for his own product. As long as the seller continues to charge the illegal price, he takes from the buyer more than the law allows. At whatever price the buyer sells, the price he pays the seller remains illegally high, and his profits would be greater were his costs lower.

Fundamentally, this is the view stated by Mr. Justice Holmes in Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. City of Atlanta, 203 U.S. 390 (1906), where Atlanta sued the defendants for treble damages for antitrust violations in

---

Machinery Corp. v. United States, 347 U.S. 521 (1954). United also said that "evidently the Court below regarded the fact that United distributes its more important machines only by lease and not by sale as the basic objection to the system." Id., at 170.

<sup>5</sup> The Court of Appeals affirmed this finding and we do not disturb it. See also n. 16, infra. We also agree with the courts below that in the circumstances of this case it was unnecessary for Hanover to prove an explicit demand during the damage period. See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699 (1962).

<sup>6</sup> The chronology of events with respect to this issue in the lower courts was as follows: After the pretrial conference, a separate issue which was thought might determine the action was set for trial pursuant to Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 42 \(b\). The general question was whether, assuming that Hanover had paid illegally high prices for machinery leased from United, Hanover had passed the cost on to its customers, and if so whether it had suffered legal injury for which it could recover under the antitrust laws. After evidence had been taken on the issue, Judge Goodrich, sitting by designation, ruled that when Hanover had been forced to pay excessive prices for machinery leased from United, it had suffered a legal injury: "This excessive price is the injury." 185 F.Supp. 826, 829 \(D. C. M. D. Pa. 1960\). He also rejected the argument "that the defendant is relieved of liability because the plaintiff passed on its loss to its customers." Ibid. In his view it was unnecessary to determine whether Hanover had passed on the illegal burden because Hanover's injury was complete when it paid the excessive rentals and because "the general tendency of the law, in regard to damages at least, is not to go beyond the first step" and to exonerate a defendant by reason of remote consequences. Id., at 830 (quoting from Southern Pacific Co. v. Darnell-Taenzer Lumber Co., 245 U.S. 531, 533 (1918)). The Court of Appeals heard an interlocutory appeal pursuant to 28 U. S. C. § 1292 \(b\) and affirmed. 281 F.2d 481 \(C. A. 3d Cir. 1960\). Certiorari was denied. 364 U.S. 901 \(1960\). United preserved the issue and presented it again to the Court of Appeals in appealing the treble-damage judgment entered after trial of the main case. The Court of Appeals adhered to the principles of its prior decision. United brought the question here.

HUGÁÈÜÄÌ FÄÄÌ JIÄÌ ÁÜÉÖÄCGI ÈÄGGJLÄÉSÖÄGAÄGHÄÄFGHULÄFJÌ ÁNÈÉSÖYÖÄFI Ì ÈÄEËFÌ connection with the city's purchases of pipe for its waterworks system. The Court affirmed a judgment in favor of the city for an amount measured by the difference between the price paid and what the market or fair price would have been had the sellers not combined, [*490] the Court saying [****17] that the city "was injured in its property, at least, if not in its business of furnishing water, by being led to pay more than the worth of the pipe. HN3↑ A person whose property is diminished by a payment of money wrongfully induced is injured in his property." Id., at 396. The same approach was evident in *Thomsen v. Cayser, 243 U.S. 66 \(1917\)*, another treble-damage antitrust case.<sup>7</sup> [****18] [**2230] With respect to overcharge cases arising under the transportation laws, similar views were expressed by Mr. Justice Holmes in Southern Pacific Co. v. Darnell-Taenzer Lumber Co., 245 U.S. 531, 533 (1918), [***1240] and by Mr. Justice Brandeis in *Adams v. Mills, 286 U.S. 397, 406-408 \(1932\)*. In those cases the possibility that plaintiffs had recouped the overcharges from their customers was held irrelevant in assessing damages.<sup>8</sup>

---

<sup>7</sup> "It is, however, contended that even if it be assumed the facts show an illegal combination, they do not show injury to the plaintiffs by reason thereof. The contention is untenable. Section 7 of the act gives a cause of action to any person injured in his person or property by reason of anything forbidden by the act and the right to recover three-fold the damages by him sustained. The plaintiffs alleged a charge over a reasonable rate and the amount of it. If the charge be true that more than a reasonable rate was secured by the combination, the excess over what was reasonable was an element of injury. Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co., 204 U.S. 426, 436. The unreasonableness of the rate and to what extent unreasonable was submitted to the jury and the verdict represented their conclusion." 243 U.S., at 88.

<sup>8</sup> Southern Pacific Co. v. Darnell-Taenzer Lumber Co., 245 U.S. 531 (1918), involved an action for reparations brought by shippers against a railroad. The shippers alleged exaction of an unreasonably high rate. To the claim that the shippers should not recover because they were able to pass on to their customers the damage they sustained by paying the charge, the Court said that the answer was not difficult:

"The general tendency of the law, in regard to damages at least, is not to go beyond the first step. As it does not attribute remote consequences to a defendant so it holds him liable if proximately the plaintiff has suffered a loss. The plaintiffs suffered losses to the amount of the verdict when they paid. Their claim accrued at once in the theory of the law and it does not inquire into later events. . . . The carrier ought not to be allowed to retain his illegal profit, and the only one who can take it from him is the one that alone was in relation with him, and from whom the carrier took the sum. . . . Probably in the end the public pays the damages in most cases of compensated torts." 245 U.S., at 533-534. *Adams v. Mills, 286 U.S. 397 \(1932\)*, is to the same effect. See also I. C. C. v. United States, 289 U.S. 385 (1933).

*Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 260 U.S. 156 \(1922\)*, is relied upon by United as stating a contrary rule. There the Court affirmed a judgment on the pleadings in a shipper's action under the antitrust laws charging a conspiracy among railroads to set unreasonably high rates. Because the rates had been approved as reasonable after a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission, the shipper was held to have no cause of action under the antitrust laws. After giving this and other reasons for its judgment, the Court ended its opinion by saying that it would have been impossible for the shipper to have proved damages since no court could say that if the rate had been lower the shipper would have enjoyed the difference; the benefit might have gone to his customers. The Court, however, was careful to say earlier in its opinion that the result would have been different had the rate been unreasonably high, an approach confirmed by Mr. Justice Brandeis in *Adams v. Mills, supra*. We ascribe no general significance to the Keogh dictum for cases where the plaintiff is free to prove that he has been charged an illegally high price. It should also be noted that the Court, in speaking of the impossibility of proving damages, indicated no intention to preclude recovery in cases such as Chattanooga Foundry or *Thomsen v. Cayser, supra*.

That is where the matter stood in this Court when the issue came to be pressed with some regularity in the lower federal courts in treble-damage suits brought by customers of vendors who were charged with violating the Sherman Act by price fixing or monopolization. Some courts sustained the defense, both where the plaintiff complained of overcharging for materials or services used by him to produce his own product, e. g., *Wolfe v. National Lead Co., 225 F.2d 427* (C. A. 9th Cir.), cert. denied, *350 U.S. 915 \(1955\)*, and where the price fixing concerned articles purchased for resale, e. g., *Miller Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 252 F.2d 441 \(C. A. 4th Cir. 1958\)*; *Twin Ports Oil Co. v. Pure Oil Co., 119 F.2d 747* (C. A. 8th Cir.), cert. denied, *314 U.S. 644 \(1941\)*. Others, beginning with Judge Goodrich's 1960 decision in the case before us, deemed it irrelevant that the plaintiff may have passed on the burden of the overcharge. Recently, for example, the defense was rejected in the cases brought against manufacturers of electrical equipment by local utilities who purchased equipment at unlawfully inflated prices and used it

HUGÁÈUÉÀ Ì FÉÉ JÉA Ì ÁUÉÓÉCGI ÉEFGHÉLÁÉSÉDÀÉCA ÁFGHÉÉFG ÉLÁJÍ Ì ÁNÈÉSÓYÓÁFI Ì ÉÉÉÉFI

[****19] [*491] United [***1241] seeks to limit the general principle that the victim of an overcharge is damaged within the meaning of S 4 [**2231] to the extent of that overcharge. The rule, United argues, should be subject to the defense that economic [*492] circumstances were such that the overcharged buyer could only charge his customers a higher price because the price to him was higher. It is argued that in such circumstances the buyer suffers no loss from the overcharge. This situation might be present, it is said, where the overcharge is imposed equally on all of a buyer's competitors and where the demand for the buyer's product is so inelastic that the buyer and his competitors could all increase their prices by the amount of the cost increase without suffering a consequent decline in sales.

LEdHN[10] [10] LEdHN[11] [11] LEdHN[12] [12] We are not impressed with the argument that sound laws of economics require recognizing this defense. A wide range of factors influence [****20] a company's pricing policies. Normally the impact of a single change in the relevant conditions cannot be measured after the fact; indeed a businessman may be unable to state whether, [*493] had one fact been different (a single supply less expensive, general economic conditions more buoyant, or the labor market tighter, for example), he would have chosen a different price. Equally difficult to determine, in the real economic world rather than an economist's hypothetical model, is what effect a change in a company's price will have on its total sales. Finally, costs per unit for a different volume of total sales are hard to estimate. Even if it could be shown that the buyer raised his price in response to, and in the amount of, the overcharge and that his margin of profit and total sales had not thereafter declined, there would remain the nearly insuperable difficulty of demonstrating that the particular plaintiff could not or would not have raised his prices absent the overcharge or maintained the higher price had the overcharge been discontinued. Since establishing the applicability of the passing-on defense would require a convincing showing of each of these virtually [****21] unascertainable figures, the task would normally prove insurmountable.<sup>9</sup> On the other hand, it is not unlikely that if the existence of the defense is generally confirmed, antitrust defendants will frequently seek to establish its applicability. Treble-damage actions would often require additional long and complicated proceedings involving massive evidence and complicated theories.

[****22] [*494] In [**2232] addition, if buyers are subjected to the passing-on defense, those who buy from them would also have to meet the challenge that they passed on the higher price to their customers. These ultimate consumers, [***1242] in today's case the buyers of single pairs of shoes, would have only a tiny stake in a lawsuit and little interest in attempting a class action. In consequence, those who violate the antitrust laws by price fixing or monopolizing would retain the fruits of their illegality because no one was available who would bring suit against them. Treble-damage actions, the importance of which the Court has many times emphasized, would be substantially reduced in effectiveness.

LEdHN[13] [13] Our conclusion is that Hanover proved injury and the amount of its damages for the purposes of its treble-damage suit when it proved that United had overcharged it during the damage period and showed the amount of the overcharge; United was not entitled to assert a passing-on defense. We recognize that there might be situations -- for instance, when an overcharged buyer has a pre-existing [****23] "cost-plus" contract, thus making it easy to prove that he has not been damaged -- where the considerations requiring that the passing-on to produce electricity sold to the ultimate consumer. E. g., Atlantic City Electric Co. v. General Electric Co., 226 F.Supp. 59 (D. C. S. D. N. Y.), interlocutory appeal refused, 337 F.2d 844 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1964).

---

Concerning the passing-on defense generally, see Clark, The Treble Damage Bonanza: New Doctrines of Damages in Private Antitrust Suits, 52 Mich. L. Rev. 363 (1954); Pollock, Standing to Sue, Remoteness of Injury, and the Passing-On Doctrine, 32 A. B. A. Antitrust L. J. 5 (1966); Note, Private Treble Damage Antitrust Suits: Measure of Damages for Destruction of All or Part of a Business, 80 Harv. L. Rev. 1566, 1584-1586 (1967).

<sup>9</sup> The mere fact that a price rise followed an unlawful cost increase does not show that the sufferer of the cost increase was undamaged. His customers may have been ripe for his price rise earlier; if a cost rise is merely the occasion for a price increase a businessman could have imposed absent the rise in his costs, the fact that he was earlier not enjoying the benefits of the higher price should not permit the supplier who charges an unlawful price to take those benefits from him without being liable for damages. This statement merely recognizes the usual principle that the possessor of a right can recover for its unlawful deprivation whether or not he was previously exercising it.

HUGÁÈÜÄÌ FÄÄ JI LÄÌ ÁUÈÖÄCGG ÄEFGHGLÄÅSEÅDÄÄGAÄFGHÄÅFG GLÄJÌ ÄNÈÅSÖYQÄFI ÄÅÅFG defense not be permitted in this case would not be present. We also recognize that where no differential can be proved between the price unlawfully charged and some price that the seller was required by law to charge, establishing damages might require a showing of loss of profits to the buyer.<sup>10</sup>

[*495] III.

The District Court held that Hanover was entitled to damages for the period commencing July 1, 1939, and terminating September 21, 1955. [***24] The former date represented the greatest retrospective reach permitted under the applicable statute of limitations, and the latter date was that upon which Hanover filed its suit. In addition to somewhat shortening the forward reach of the damage period,<sup>11</sup> the Court of Appeals ruled that June 10, 1946, rather than July 1, 1939, marked the commencement of the damages period. June 10, 1946, was the date this Court decided American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, which endorsed the views of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416 (1945). In the case before us the Court of Appeals concluded that the decisions in Alcoa-American Tobacco fundamentally altered the law of monopolization -- that prior to them it was necessary to prove the existence of predatory practices as well as monopoly power, whereas afterwards proof of predatory practices was not essential. The Court of Appeals was also of the view that because in prior litigation United's leases had escaped condemnation as predatory practices illegal under § 1, United's conduct should not be held to have violated [***25] [***1243] § 2 at any time prior to June 10, 1946. 377 F.2d, at 790. This holding has been challenged, and we reverse it.

[*496] The [**2233] theory of the Court of Appeals seems to have been that when a party has significantly relied upon a clear and established doctrine, and the retrospective application of a newly declared doctrine would upset that justifiable reliance to his substantial injury, considerations of justice and fairness require that the new rule apply [***26] prospectively only. Pointing to recent decisions of this Court in the area of the criminal law, the Court of Appeals could see no reason why the considerations which had favored only prospective application in those cases should not be applied as well as in the civil area, especially in a treble-damage action. There is, of course, no reason to confront this theory unless we have before us a situation in which there was a clearly declared judicial doctrine upon which United relied and under which its conduct was lawful, a doctrine which was overruled in favor of a new rule according to which conduct performed in reliance upon the old rule would have been unlawful. Because we do not believe that this case presents such a situation, we have no occasion to pass upon the theory of the Court of Appeals.

LEdHN[14] [14] Neither the opinion in Alcoa nor the opinion in American Tobacco indicated that the issue involved was novel, that innovative principles were necessary to resolve it, or that the issue had been settled in prior cases in a manner contrary to the view held by those courts. In ruling that it was [***27] not necessary to exclude competitors to be guilty of monopolization, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit relied upon a long line of cases in this Court stretching back to 1912. 148 F.2d, at 429. The conclusion that actions which will show monopolization are not "limited to manoeuvres not honestly industrial" was also premised on earlier opinions of this Court, particularly United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U.S. 106, 116 (1932). In the American Tobacco case, this Court noted [*497] that the precise question before it had not been previously decided, 328 U.S., at 811, and gave no indication that it thought it was adopting a radically new interpretation of the Sherman Act. Like the Court of Appeals, this Court relied for its conclusion upon existing authorities.<sup>12</sup> [***29] These cases make it clear that <sup>10</sup> Some courts appear to have treated price discrimination cases under the Robinson-Patman Act as in this category. See, e. g., American Can Co. v. Russellville Canning Co., 191 F.2d 38 (C. A. 8th Cir. 1951); American Can Co. v. Bruce's Juices, 187 F.2d 919, opinion modified, 190 F.2d 73 (C. A. 5th Cir.), petition for cert. dismissed, 342 U.S. 875 (1951).

<sup>11</sup> The Court of Appeals held that Hanover was entitled to damages only up to June 1, 1955, the date upon which Judge Wyzanski approved United's plan for terminating all outstanding leases and converting the lessee's rights to ownership. Because Hanover could have legally required United to convert from leasing to selling as of June 1, 1955, the Court of Appeals held it was not entitled to damages for United's failure to offer machines for sale after that date. This determination has not been challenged in this Court.

HUGÁÈUÉÀ Ì FÉÉ JÍ LÀ Ì ÁUÉÓÉCGGÍ ÉÉEGH HÁÉSÉOÀÉCA ÁFGHÉÉFG HÁFJÍ Ì ÁNÈÉSÓYÓÁFI Ì ÉÉÉFGJ

[**2234] there was no accepted [*498] interpretation [***1244] of the Sherman Act which conditioned a finding of monopolization under § 2 upon a showing of predatory practices by the monopolist.<sup>13</sup> In neither case was there such an abrupt and fundamental shift in doctrine as to constitute an entirely new rule which [****28] in effect replaced an older one. Whatever [*499] development in antitrust law was brought about was based to a great extent on existing authorities and was an extension of doctrines which had been growing and developing over the years. These cases did not constitute a sharp break in the line of earlier authority or an avulsive change which caused the current of the law thereafter to flow between new banks. We cannot say that prior to those cases potential antitrust defendants would have been justified in thinking that then current antitrust doctrines permitted

---

<sup>12</sup> Although the defendants in American Tobacco had been found guilty of conspiracy to restrain trade and of attempt and conspiracy to monopolize as well as of monopolization itself, the grant of certiorari was "limited to the question whether actual exclusion of competitors is necessary to the crime of monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act." 324 U.S. 836 (1945). After noting that "§§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act require proof of conspiracies which are reciprocally distinguishable from and independent of each other . . . ," 328 U.S., at 788, the Court determined that the jury could have found that the defendants had combined and conspired to monopolize, id., at 797, and that it would be "only in conjunction with such a combination or conspiracy that these cases will constitute a precedent," id. at 798. The Court stated that "the authorities support the view that the material consideration in determining whether a monopoly exists is not that prices are raised and that competition actually is excluded but that power exists to raise prices or to exclude competition when it is desired to do so," 328 U.S., at 811 (emphasis added), and quoted with approval from United States v. Patten, 187 F. 664, 672 (C. C. S. D. N. Y. (1911)), reversed on other grounds, 226 U.S. 525 \(1913\), that for there to be monopolization "it is not necessary that the power thus obtained should be exercised. Its existence is sufficient." The Court also said:

"A correct interpretation of the statute and of the authorities makes it the crime of monopolizing, under § 2 of the Sherman Act, for parties, as in these cases, to combine or conspire to acquire or maintain the power to exclude competitors from any part of the trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations, provided they also have such a power that they are able, as a group, to exclude actual or potential competition from the field and provided that they have the intent and purpose to exercise that power. See United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 226, n. 59 and authorities cited.

"It is not the form of the combination or the particular means used but the result to be achieved that the statute condemns. It is not of importance whether the means used to accomplish the unlawful objective are in themselves lawful or unlawful." 328 U.S., at 809. (Emphasis added.)

The Court also welcomed the opportunity to endorse, 328 U.S., at 813-814, the following views of Chief Judge Hand in Alcoa, 148 F.2d., at 431-432:

"[Alcoa] insists that it never excluded competitors; but we can think of no more effective exclusion than progressively to embrace each new opportunity as it opened, and to face every newcomer with new capacity already geared into a great organization, having the advantage of experience, trade connections and the elite of personnel. Only in case we interpret 'exclusion' as limited to manoeuvres not honestly industrial, but actuated solely by a desire to prevent competition, can such a course, indefatigably pursued, be deemed not 'exclusionary.' So to limit it would in our judgment emasculate the Act; would permit just such consolidations as it was designed to prevent.

....

"In order to fall within § 2, the monopolist must have both the power to monopolize, and the intent to monopolize. To read the passage as demanding any 'specific,' intent, makes nonsense of it, for no monopolist monopolizes unconscious of what he is doing."

<sup>13</sup> Any view of the earlier law of monopolization which would attempt, erroneously in our opinion, to find a requirement of predatory practices must rely heavily on certain dicta in United States v. United States Steel Corp., 251 U.S. 417, 451 \(1920\) (Mr. Justice McKenna for a four-to-three Court), and United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U.S. 693, 708 \(1927\) (Mr. Justice Sanford reiterating the dicta in U.S. Steel). The commentators cited by United for the proposition that predatory practices were required prior to Alcoa-American Tobacco place major reliance on these dicta. In any event, the cursory and conclusory nature of these writings clearly does not provide sufficiently strong proof of a prevailing opinion as to the law to have permitted the sort of justifiable reliance which alone could generate a prospectivity argument.

HUGÁÈÜÄÌ FÄÄ JJÄÄ Ì ÄÜÈÖÄÄGGI ÄÄEGGI LÄÄSÄÖÄÄGAÄÄGFÄÄFG I LÄFJÄÌ ÄÄÈÄSÖYÖÄÄFI ÄÄFG them to do all acts conducive to the creation or maintenance of a monopoly, so long as they avoided direct exclusion of competitors or other predatory acts.<sup>14</sup>

[***30] United [***1245] relies heavily on three Sherman Act cases brought against it or its predecessors by the United States and decided by this Court. United argues that these cases demonstrate both that before Alcoa-American Tobacco the law was substantially different and that its leasing practices had been deemed by this Court not to be instruments of monopolization. United States v. Winslow, 227 U.S. 202 \(1913\); [United States v. United Shoe \[\*\*2235\] Machinery Co. of New Jersey, 247 U.S. 32 \(1918\)](#); United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States, 258 U.S. 451 \(1922\). In our opinion, however, United overreads and exaggerates the significance of these three cases. In Winslow, the Government charged the three groups of companies which had merged to form United with a violation of § 1. The trial court construed the indictment to pertain only to the merger of the companies and not to business practices which resulted from the merger; most significantly, it excluded United's leasing policies [*500] from consideration. The Court specifically stated that "the validity of the leases or of a combination [***31] contemplating them cannot be passed upon in this case." 227 U.S., at 217.

The third case, decided in 1922, was brought under § 3 of the Clayton Act rather than § 2 of the Sherman Act. This Court affirmed a decree enjoining United from making leases containing certain clauses, terms, and conditions. Nothing in that case indicates that predatory practices had to be shown to prove a § 2 monopoly charge or that the leases, or the clauses in them which were left undisturbed, would not adequately demonstrate monopolization by an enterprise with monopoly power.

Of the three cases, the 1918 case most strongly supports United. It involved a civil action by the United States charging violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The Government contended that United's machinery leases and license agreements had been used to consummate both violations. A three-judge court dismissed the bill and this Court affirmed by a vote of 4 to 3. There is no question but that the leases as they were then constituted were held unassailable under § 1; the reasons for this ruling are not clear. As for the § 2 charge, we cannot read the opinion as specifying what course of conduct would [***32] amount to monopolization under § 2 if engaged in by a concern with monopoly power. At most the holding was that the leases themselves did not prove a § 2 charge -- did not themselves prove monopoly power as well as monopolization. But the issue in the case before us now is not whether United's leasing system proves monopoly power but whether, once monopoly power is shown, leasing the way United leased sufficiently shows an intent to exercise that power. There is little, if anything, in the 1918 opinion which is illuminating on this issue. Indeed, it may fairly be read as holding that United did not have monopoly power over the market at all, for in rejecting the claim that United's practice of [*501] leasing was illegal when used by a corporation [***1246] dominant in the market, the Court said:

"This, however, is assertion and relies for its foundation upon the assumption of an illegal dominance by the United Company that has been found not to exist. This element, therefore, must be put to one side and the leases regarded in and of themselves and by the incentives that induced their execution . . ." 247 U.S., at 60.

Any comfort United might have [***33] received from the 1918 case with respect to the legality of its leasing system when employed by one with monopoly power should have been short-lived. In the third case, which was brought under § 3 of the Clayton Act, and in which all the remaining Justices making up the majority in the 1918 case except Mr. Justice McKenna voted with the Court, the opinion for the Court described the 1918 decision as follows:

<sup>14</sup> United makes the independent argument that Judge Wyzanski's decision in the Government's case so fundamentally altered the law of monopolization that it should not be held liable for damages prior to the date the decision was handed down, February 18, 1953. We reject this contention for the reasons set forth in the textual discussion of Alcoa-American Tobacco and the previous United cases.

HUGÁÈÜÄ Ì FÄÄ ÄFLÄ Ì ÄUÄÖÄÄGGI ÄÄEGHÍ LÄÄSÄDÄÄGAÄFGFÄÄÄFG Ì LÄJÌ Ì ÄNÄÄSÖYQÄFI Ì ÄÄÄÄH

"That the leases were attacked under the former bill as violative of the Sherman Act is true, but they were sustained as valid and binding agreements within the rights of holders of patents." 258 U.S., at 460.

[**2236] This view was supported by other references to the 1918 opinion which described the question at issue there as being whether United's leases went beyond the exercise of a lawful monopoly.

One might possibly disagree with this reading of the 1918 opinion, but it was an authoritative gloss. After 1922 and after the expiration of the patents on its major machines, there was no sound basis to justify reliance by United on the 1918 case as a definitive pronouncement that its leasing system provided legally insufficient evidence of monopolization, [****34] once United's power over the market was satisfactorily shown. The prior cases immunized United's monopoly insofar as it originated [*502] in a merger of allegedly competing companies and perhaps are of some help to United in other respects. But they do not establish either that prior to 1946 there was a well-defined interpretation of the Sherman Act which was abruptly overruled in Alcoa-American Tobacco or that United's leasing system could not be considered an instrument for the exercise and maintenance of monopoly power.

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [↑] [15] [LEdHN\[16\]](#) [↑] [16] [LEdHN\[17\]](#) [↑] [17] In these circumstances, there is no room for argument that Hanover's damages should reach back only to the date of the American Tobacco decision. Having rejected the contention that Alcoa-American Tobacco changed the law of monopolization in a way which should be given only prospective effect, it follows that Hanover is entitled to damages for the entire period permitted by the applicable statute of limitations. [****35] <sup>15</sup>

IV.

[***1247] [LEdHN\[18\]](#) [↑] [18] Two questions are raised here about the [****36] manner in which damages were computed by the courts below. Hanover argues that the Court of Appeals erred in requiring the District Court, on remand, to take account of the additional taxes Hanover would have paid, had it purchased machines instead of renting them during the years in question. The Court of Appeals evidently [*503] felt that since only after-tax profits can be reinvested or distributed to shareholders, Hanover was damaged only to the extent of the after-tax profits that it failed to receive. The view of the Court of Appeals is sound in theory, but it overlooks the fact that in practice the Internal Revenue Service has taxed recoveries for tortious deprivation of profits at the time the recoveries are made, not by reopening the earlier years. See Commissioner v. Glenshaw Glass Co., 348 U.S. 426 \(1955\). As Hanover points out, since it will be taxed when it recovers damages from United for both the actual and the trebled damages, to diminish the actual damages by the amount of the taxes that it would have paid had it received greater profits in the years it was damaged would be to apply a double deduction for taxation, leaving Hanover with [****37] less income than it would have had if United had not injured it. It is true that accounting for taxes in the year when damages are received rather than the year when profits were lost can change the amount of taxes the Revenue Service collects; as United [**2237] shows, actual rates of taxation were much higher in some of the years when Hanover was injured than they are today. But because the statute of limitations frequently will bar the Commissioner from recomputing for earlier years, and because of the policy underlying the statute of limitations -- the fact that such recomputations are immensely difficult or impossible when a long period has <sup>15</sup> United has also advanced the argument that because the earliest impact on Hanover of United's lease only policy occurred in 1912, Hanover's cause of action arose during that year and is now barred by the applicable Pennsylvania statute of limitations. The Court of Appeals correctly rejected United's argument in its supplemental opinion. We are not dealing with a violation which, if it occurs at all, must occur within some specific and limited time span. Cf. Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 229 F.2d 714 \(C. A. 7th Cir. 1956\), upon which United relies. Rather, we are dealing with conduct which constituted a continuing violation of the Sherman Act and which inflicted continuing and accumulating harm on Hanover. Although Hanover could have sued in 1912 for the injury then being inflicted, it was equally entitled to sue in 1955.

HU GÁMEÉ Í FÉÍ EHÁÍ ÁÚEÓDÁGGG FÁNGHÍ LÁGÉSEÓAÉGÁ ÁFGHÉÁFGÍ LÁJÍÍ ÁNÉUÉSÓYÓÁFIÍ FÁNGHÍ

intervened -- the rough result of not taking account of taxes for the year of injury but then taxing recovery when received seems the most satisfactory outcome. The District Court therefore did not err on this question, and the Court of Appeals should not have required a recomputation.

L*E*dHNJ19 [19]United contends that if Hanover had bought machines instead of leasing them, it would have had to invest its own capital in the machines. United argues that the District [****38] Court erred in computing damages because it did not properly take account of the cost of capital to [*504] Hanover. The District Court found that in the years in question Hanover was able to borrow money for between 2% and 2.5% per annum, and that had Hanover bought machines it would have obtained the necessary capital by borrowing at about this rate. It therefore deducted an interest component of 2.5% from the profits it thought Hanover would have earned by purchasing machines. Our review of the record convinces us that the courts below did not err in these determinations; on the basis of the determinations of fact, Hanover's damages were properly computed.<sup>16</sup>

[***39] The [***1248] judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the cases are remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL took no part in the consideration or decision of these cases.

APPENDIX TO OPINION OF THE COURT.

Excerpts From Judge Wyzanski's Opinion in United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 110 F.Supp. 295, 323-325 (D. Mass. 1953).

Effects of the Leasing System.

The effect of United's leasing system as it works in practice may be examined from the viewpoints of United, of the shoe manufacturers, and of competitors potential or actual.

[*505] For United these are the advantages. (a) United has enjoyed a greater stability of annual revenues than is customary among manufacturers of other capital goods. But this is not due exclusively to the practice of leasing as distinguished from selling. It is attributable to the effects of leasing when, as is the case with United, the lessor already has a predominant share of the market. (b) United has been able to conduct research activities more favorably than if it sold its machines outright. [****40] The leasing system, especially the service aspect of that system, has given United constant access to shoe manufacturers and their problems. This has promoted United's knowledge of their problems and has stimulated United's shoe machinery development. This research knowledge would not be diminished substantially if United's service activities covered fewer factories. But if all access to shoe factories were denied the diminution would [**2238] be of great consequence to research. (c) The steadiness of revenues, attributable, as stated above, not to the leases alone, but to leases in a market dominated by the lessor, has tended to promote fairly steady appropriations to research. But these appropriations declined in the 1929 depression. Research expenditures might or might not be increased if competition were increased. The experience of United when faced with Compo's cement process suggests that declining revenues, no less than steady revenues, may promote research expenditures. (d) United has kept its leased machines in the best possible condition. (e) Under the leasing system United has enjoyed a wide distribution of machinery in a relatively narrow market. But this [****41] is merely another way of saying that United's market position, market power, lease provisions, and lease practices give it an advantage over competitors.

<sup>16</sup> United also says that because Hanover's managers would have computed their capital costs differently, they would not in fact have decided to stop leasing machines and to begin purchasing them. The District Court found, however, that Hanover, had it been given the opportunity, would have bought rather than leased the machines offered by United. This finding, affirmed by the Court of Appeals, is supported by the evidence, and we do not disturb it.

HUGÀWÈJÀ Ì FÉÉ É LÀ Ì ÁUÈÓÉÉGGI ÉÉÉGGHÌ LÀÉSÉDÀÉCA ÁFGHÉÉÉFG Ì LAFJÌ Ì ÁNÈÉSÓYÓÁFI Ì ÉÉÉÉF

Upon shoe manufacturers, United's leasing system has had these effects. It has been easy for a person with modest capital and of something less than superior efficiency [*506] to become a shoe manufacturer. He can get machines without buying them; his machines are serviced without separate charges; he can conveniently exchange an older United model for a new United model; he can change from one process to another; and his costs of machinery per pair of shoes produced closely approximate the machinery costs of every other manufacturer using the same machinery to produce shoes by the same process. [***1249] Largely as a consequence of these factors, there were in 1950, 1,300 factories each having a daily production capacity of 3,000 pairs a day or less; 100 factories each having a capacity of 3,000 to 8,000 pairs; and 40 larger manufacturers. Many of these larger manufacturers, who collectively account for 40% of the shoe production of the United States, started in a small way and flourished under United's leasing system. [****42] Moreover the testimony in this case indicates virtually no shoe manufacturers who are dissatisfied with the present system. It cannot be said whether this absence of expressed dissatisfaction is due to lack of actual dissatisfaction, to practical men's preference for what they regard as a fair system, even if it should be monopolistic, or to fear, inertia, or reluctance to testify.

However, while United's system has made it easier to enter the shoe manufacturing industry than to enter many, perhaps most, other manufacturing industries, it has not necessarily promoted in the shoe manufacturing field the goals of a competitive economy and an open society. Without attempting to make findings that are more precise than the evidence warrants, this much can be definitely stated. If United shoe machinery were available upon a sale basis, then --

(a) Some shoe manufacturers would be able to secure credit whether by conditional sales, chattel mortgages, or other devices.

[*507] (b) Under such a system, there is no reason to suppose that a purchaser's first installment on a machine would significantly exceed the deposit now often required of a new shoe manufacturer by United.

[****43] (c) A few shoe manufacturers would be able to borrow at rates of interest comparable to the interest rates at which United borrows, or raises capital.

(d) Some shoe manufacturers would be able to provide for themselves service at a cost less than the average cost to United of supplying service to all lessees of its machines.

(e) Those manufacturers who bought United machines would not be subject, as are those manufacturers who lease United machines, to the unilateral decision of United whether or not to continue or modify those informal policies which are not written in the leases and to which United is not expressly committed [**2239] for any specific future period. While there is no evidence that United plans any change in its informal policies, and while United has not heretofore proceeded to alter its informal policies on the basis of its approval or disapproval of individual manufacturers, United has not expressly committed itself to continue, for example, its 1935 plan for return of machines, its right of deduction fund, its waiver for 4 months of unit charges, or its present high standard of service. United's reserved power with respect to these matters gives it some [****44] greater degree of psychological, and some greater degree of economic control, than a seller of machinery would have.

(f) Some manufacturers who had bought machinery would find that financial and psychological considerations made them more willing than lessees would be, to dispose of already acquired United machines and to take on competitors' machines in their place.

In looking at United's leasing system from the viewpoint of potential and actual competition, it must be [*508] confessed at the outset, that any [***1250] system of selling or leasing one company's machines will, of course, impede to some extent the distribution of another company's machines. If a shoe manufacturer has already acquired one company's machinery either by outright purchase, by conditional purchase, or on lease on any terms whatsoever, the existence of that machine in the factory is a possible impediment to the marketing of a competitive machine.

Yet as already noted, a shoe manufacturer may psychologically or economically be more impeded by a leasing than by a selling system. And this general observation is buttressed by a study of features in the United leasing system which have a special deterrent [***45] effect. Though these features are stated separately, and some of them alone are important impediments, they must be appraised collectively to appreciate the full deterrent effect.

HUGÁEÜÄÌ FÄÄ È LÄÌ ÁUÉÖÄCGI ÄEGHULÄEŠÖAÄCAÄFGHÄÄFGI ÄLÄJÌ Ì ÁNÈÄSÖYQÄFI Ì ÄÄÄÄI

(a) The 10 year term is a long commitment.

(b) A shoe manufacturer who already has a United leased machine which can perform all the available work of a particular type may be reluctant to experiment with a competitive machine to the extent he would wish. He may hesitate to ask for permission to avoid the full capacity clause. If permission is given for an experimental period he may find the experimental period too short. Thus a competitor may not get a chance to have his machine adequately tried out by a shoe manufacturer. If a shoe manufacturer prefers a competitive machine to a United machine on hand, he may not know the exact rate at which future payments may be commuted. If he knows, he may find that a fresh outlay to make those commuted payments (which admittedly are not solely for revenue but also are for protection against competition, and which admittedly discriminate in favor of a lessee who takes a new United machine and not a competitor's machine) plus the rentals he has already [*509] [***46] paid cost him more than if he had bought a similar machine in the first place and were now to dispose of it in trade or in a second-hand market. Thus for a maker of competitive machines he may be a less likely customer than if United had initially allowed him to buy the machine.

(c) United's lease system makes impossible a second-hand market in its own machines. This has two effects. It prevents United from suffering that kind of competition which a second-hand market offers. Also it prevents competitors from acquiring United machines with a view to copying such parts of the machines as are not patented, and with a view to experimenting with improvements without disclosing them to United.

(d) United's practice of rendering repair service only on its own machines and without separate charge has brought about a situation in which there are almost no large scale independent repair [**2240] companies. Hence when a typical small shoe manufacturer is considering whether to acquire a complicated shoe machine, he must look to the manufacturer of that machine for repair service. And a competitor of United could not readily market such a complicated machine unless in addition to offering [***47] the machine he was prepared to supply service. As the experience of foreign manufacturers indicates, this has proved to be a serious stumbling block to those who have sought to compete with United.

(e) If a shoe manufacturer is deciding [***1251] whether to introduce competitive machines, (either for new operations or as replacements for United machines on which the lease has not expired), he faces the effect of those decisions upon his credit under the Right of Deduction Fund. If he already has virtually all United machines, and if he replaces few of them by competitive machines, the Fund will take care of substantially all his so-called deferred charges, and may cover some of his minimum payments. This is because credit to the Fund earned [*510] by a particular machine enures to the benefit of all leased machines in the factory, and the maximum advantage to the shoe manufacturer is to have a large number of United machines to which the credit can be applied. This advantage to the shoe manufacturer of acquiring and keeping a full line of United machines deters, though probably only mildly, the opportunities of a competing shoe manufacturer.

Dissent by: STEWART

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE [***48] STEWART, dissenting.

Hanover sued United under the Clayton Act for damages allegedly flowing from United's practice of offering its machines for lease but not for sale. Hanover did not attempt to prove as an original matter that this practice violated the antitrust laws. Instead, it relied exclusively upon § 5 (a) of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, which provides:

HUGÁÈÜÄ Ì FÄÄ FELÄ Ì ÁUÈÖÄCGG ÄÄEGG ELÄSÄÅDÄÄGAÄFGHÄÄÄFGI FLÄFJÌ Ì ÁNÈÄSÖYQÄFI Ì ÄÄÄÄ Ì

"A final judgment or decree heretofore or hereafter rendered in any civil or criminal proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws to the effect that a defendant has violated said laws shall be prima facie evidence against such defendant in any action or proceeding brought by any other party against such defendant under said laws . . . as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 16 \(a\).

Hanover recovered an award of treble damages solely upon the theory that the 1953 judgment and decree in United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 110 F.Supp. 295, aff'd per curiam, 347 U.S. 521, had established the unlawfulness [***49] of United's practice of making its machines available by lease only. So it follows, as the Court says, "if the 1953 judgment is not prima facie evidence of the illegality of the practice from which [*511] Hanover's asserted injury arose, then Hanover, having offered no other convincing evidence of illegality, should not have recovered at all." Ante, at 484.

I think that the 1953 judgment did not have the broad effect the Court attributes to it today. On the contrary, that judgment, it seems evident to me, held unlawful only particular kinds of leases with particular provisions, not United's general practice of leasing only.<sup>1</sup>

The only precedent cited by the Court for its expansive application of § 5 (a) is Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 340 U.S. 558. That case [***50] dealt with the estoppel effect of a general jury verdict in a criminal case. [**2241] We deal here with a civil case which was [***1252] tried to a federal judge, who rendered a thoroughly considered opinion and carefully precise decree.

One section of the decree, § 2, broadly set out what the court found United's antitrust violations to be:

"Defendant violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 2, by monopolizing the shoe machinery trade and commerce among the several States. Defendant violated the same section of the law by monopolizing that part of the interstate trade and commerce in tacks, nails, eyelets, grommets, and hooks, which is concerned with supplying the demand for those products by shoe factories within the United States. . . ." 110 F.Supp., at 352.

Another section of the decree, § 4, clearly specified the unlawful means by which these antitrust violations had been accomplished, and United's general leasing practice was not one of those means:

"All leases made by defendant which include either a ten-year term, or a full capacity clause, or deferred [*512] payment charges, and all leases under [***51] which during the life of the leases defendant has rendered repair and other service without making them subject to separate, segregated charges, are declared to have been means whereby defendant monopolized the shoe machinery market." Ibid.

In addition to these two sections setting forth the violations found, the decree contained some 20 remedial sections. Section 3 enjoined the violations found in § 2. Section 6 prohibited the particular types of leases found to be unlawful in § 4. Another section of the decree, § 5, went further and provided that in the future United's machines must be offered for sale as well as for lease. But it is a commonplace that "relief, to be effective, must go beyond the narrow limits of the proven violation," United States v. Gypsum Co., 340 U.S. 76, 90. United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 53; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U.S. 707, 724.

---

<sup>1</sup> I am not alone in this view. See Cole v. Hughes Tool Co., 215 F.2d 924, 932-933; Laitram Corp. v. King Crab, Inc., 244 F.Supp. 9, 18. See also n. 2, infra.

HUGÁÈÜÄÀ Ì FÄÄÍ FGÄÌ ÁÜÉÖÄCGG ÄÄEGG FLÄÄŠÉÖÄAÄCAÄFGHÄÄFGI GLÄJÌ Ì ÁÜÈÅSÖYÖÄFI Ì ÄÄÄF

I can find nothing in Judge Wyzanski's written opinion in the 1953 case to suggest that he found United's lease-only practice, as such, to be a violation of the antitrust laws or illegal in any way.<sup>2</sup> [****53] To the contrary, that opinion [****52] repeatedly emphasized the anticompetitive effects of the particular types of leases held illegal, and carefully explained that the purpose of requiring that customers [*513] in the future be given an option to purchase was to create an eventual second-hand market in United's machines and to make the machines available to United's competitors, so that they might study and copy them. 110 F.Supp., at 349-350. The opinion specifically stated that the reason for ordering United to offer its machines for sale was not to [***1253] widen the choices available to customers.<sup>3</sup>

The Court today adds as an Appendix to its opinion -- like a deus ex machina -- [**2242] Judge Wyzanski's findings of fact. But it is irrelevant with respect to § 5 (a) that the 1953 findings describe United's lease-only practice, when neither the decree nor the opinion held that practice to be unlawful.

The real key to why the Court has gone astray in this case is to be found, I think, in the concluding sentence of Part I of the Court's opinion. For there the Court reveals that it is really not trying to determine what Judge Wyzanski decided in 1953, but is determining instead how this Court would decide the issues if the 1953 case were before it as an original matter today.<sup>4</sup> [****54] In my view the 1953 United Shoe decision does not establish United's liability to Hanover. I do not reach, therefore, the other questions dealt with in the Court's opinion.

I would reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

References

---

Am Jur, Judgments (Rev ed 69, 70); Monopolies, Combinations, and Restraints of Trade (1st ed 156, 181-183, 185, 188)

14 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms, Monopolies, Combinations, and Restraints of Trade, Forms 14:311-14:314, 14:327, 14:328

US L Ed Digest, Damages 7, 159, 170; Evidence 343.5, 486; Judgment 65, 141; Limitation of Actions 201.5; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 67

ALR Digests, Damages 14, 252, 365; Evidence 631; Judgment 68, 69, 102.5; Limitation of Actions 213; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 13, 15

L Ed Index to Anno, Damages; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Damages; Punitive Damages; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

---

<sup>2</sup> Neither, apparently, could Judge Wyzanski. After the trial court in this action filed its opinion holding that the 1953 decree had condemned United's lease-only practice, United applied to Judge Wyzanski for a construction of his decree. While denying the application upon grounds of comity, Judge Wyzanski indicated a willingness to construe his decree if officially requested by the trial judge in the present case, Judge Sheridan. During the course of the hearing before Judge Wyzanski, he made his own views clear to government counsel:

"Now that you are here, are you not aware from being here on previous occasions that the government never contended, and I never ruled, as Judge Sheridan supposes the matter was decided?"

<sup>3</sup> 110 F.Supp., at 349-350. The language quoted by the Court, ante, at 486, n. 3, is not a statement of why the District Court in 1953 ordered United to offer its machines for sale, but rather part of the court's answer to United's argument that it would be unfair to make United sell while its competitors continued only to lease. 110 F.Supp., at 350.

<sup>4</sup> "When the applicable standard for determining monopolization under § 2 is applied to these facts, it must be concluded that the District Court and the Court of Appeals did not err in holding that United's practice of leasing and refusing to sell its major machines was determined to be illegal monopolization in the Government's case." (Emphasis added.)

HUGÁWEJÄÌ FÄÄÍ FHÄÌ Ì ÁUÉÓÉCGI ÈÄEGGI GLÄÉSÈOÄÄGAÄFGHÄÉÉFGI HÄFJÌ Ì ÁNÈÉSÖYÖÄFI Ì ÈÄÄÍ |

Annotation References:

Punitive damages for business tort as subject to federal income tax. 99 L Ed 491 at page 495.

Actions for threefold damages under Anti-trust Act. 53 L Ed 826. [****55]

---

End of Document

Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research

Supreme Court of the United States

January 22, 1969, Argued ; May 19, 1969, Decided

No. 49

Reporter

395 U.S. 100 *; 89 S. Ct. 1562 **; 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 ***; 1969 U.S. LEXIS 3305 ****; 161 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 577; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,800

ZENITH RADIO CORP. v. HAZELTINE RESEARCH, INC., ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 388 F.2d 25, affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

Core Terms

---

patent, pool, license, royalty, licensee, patentee, Radio, district court, injunction, products, manufacture, Automatic, patent misuse, monopoly, infringement, merchandise, parties, damages, anti trust law, injunctive relief, trial court, conditioning, invention, percentage-of-sales, distributors, conspiracy, royalty payment, importation, provisions, insisted

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Nonparties Affected by Judgment

**HN1** [ Entry of Judgments, Nonparties Affected by Judgment

One is not bound by a judgment in personam resulting from litigation in which he is not designated as a party or to which he has not been made a party by service of process. The consistent constitutional rule has been that a court has no power to adjudicate a personal claim or obligation unless it has jurisdiction over the person of the defendant.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Contempt

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Nonparties Affected by Judgment

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

**HN2** [ Injunctions, Contempt

Although injunctions issued by federal courts bind not only the parties defendant in a suit, but also those persons in active concert or participation with them who receive actual notice of the order by personal service or otherwise, Fed. R. Civ. P. 65\(d\), a nonparty with notice cannot be held in contempt until shown to be in concert or participation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN3 Remedies, Damages

It is enough that the illegality is shown to be a material cause of the injury; a plaintiff need not exhaust all possible alternative sources of injury in fulfilling his burden of proving compensable injury under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Juries & Jurors > Province of Court & Jury > Factual Issues

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > De Novo Review > General Overview

HN4 Province of Court & Jury, Factual Issues

In applying the clearly erroneous standard to the findings of a district court sitting without a jury, appellate courts must constantly have in mind that their function is not to decide factual issues de novo. The authority of an appellate court, when reviewing the findings of a judge as well as those of a jury, is circumscribed by the deference it must give to decisions of the trier of the fact, who is usually in a superior position to appraise and weigh the evidence. The question for the appellate court under Fed. R. Civ. P. 52 \(a\) is not whether it would have made the findings the trial court did, but whether on the entire evidence it is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN5 Private Actions, Remedies

Trial and appellate courts alike must also observe the practical limits of the burden of proof which may be demanded of a treble-damage plaintiff who seeks recovery for injuries from a partial or total exclusion from a market; damage issues in these cases are rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

HN6 [down arrow] Private Actions, Remedies

In the absence of more precise proof, the factfinder may conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN7 [down arrow] Private Actions, Remedies

Although the factfinder is not entitled to base a judgment on speculation or guesswork, the jury may make a just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data and render its verdict accordingly. In such circumstances, juries are allowed to act upon probable and inferential, as well as direct and positive proof.

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN8 [down arrow] Equitable Relief, Injunctions

See 15 U. S. C. § 26.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN9 [down arrow] Clayton Act, Remedies

The purpose of giving private parties treble-damage and injunctive remedies was not merely to provide private relief, but was to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws. Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26, should be construed and applied with this purpose in mind, and with the knowledge that the remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims. Its availability should be conditioned by the necessities of the public interest which Congress has sought to protect.

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > Remedies > Reinstatement

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN10[ Remedies, Reinstatement

In exercising its equitable jurisdiction, a federal court has broad power to restrain acts which are of the same type or class as unlawful acts which the court has found to have been committed or whose commission in the future, unless enjoined, may fairly be anticipated from the defendant's conduct in the past.

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN11[ Equitable Relief, Injunctions

When one has been found to have committed acts in violation of a law he may be restrained from committing other related unlawful acts.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Assignments

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN12[ Conveyances, Assignments

A patentee has the exclusive right to manufacture, use, and sell his invention. The heart of his legal monopoly is the right to invoke the state's power to prevent others from utilizing his discovery without his consent. The law also recognizes that he may assign to another his patent, in whole or in part, and may license others to practice his invention.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Royalties

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN13 [] Conveyances, Licenses

There are established limits which the patentee must not exceed in employing the leverage of his patent to control or limit the operations of the licensee. Among other restrictions upon him, he may not condition the right to use his patent on the licensee's agreement to purchase, use, or sell, or not to purchase, use, or sell, another article of commerce not within the scope of his patent monopoly. His right to set the price for a license does not extend so far, whatever privilege he has to exact royalties as high as he can negotiate. And just as the patent's leverage may not be used to extract from the licensee a commitment to purchase, use, or sell other products according to the desires of the patentee, neither can that leverage be used to garner as royalties a percentage share of the licensee's receipts from sales of other products; in either case, the patentee seeks to extend the monopoly of his patent to derive a benefit not attributable to use of the patent's teachings.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Royalties

HN14 [] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

It is not per se a misuse of patents to measure the consideration by a percentage of the licensee's sales.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Royalties

HN15 [Defenses, Misuse]

If convenience of the parties rather than patent power dictates the total-sales royalty provision, there is no misuse of the patents and no forbidden conditions attached to the license.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Royalties

HN16 [Conveyances, Licenses]

Patent misuse inheres in a patentee's insistence on a percentage-of-sales royalty, regardless of use, and his rejection of licensee proposals to pay only for actual use. Unquestionably, a licensee must pay if he uses the patent. Equally, however, he may insist upon paying only for use, and not on the basis of total sales, including products in which he may use a competing patent or in which no patented ideas are used at all. There is nothing in the right granted the patentee to keep others from using, selling, or manufacturing his invention which empowers him to insist on payment not only for use but also for producing products which do not employ his discoveries at all.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

In a patent infringement suit by a research company in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, the defendant, a radio and television set manufacturer, counterclaimed for treble damages and injunctive relief, alleging antitrust violations consisting of both misuse of the research company's patents and a conspiracy in restraint of trade by the research company, its parent corporation, and Canadian, English, and Australian patent pools. Holding that the research company had misused its patents, the District Court awarded the manufacturer treble damages and injunctive relief against the research company; and further holding that the research company and its parent corporation had conspired in restraint of trade, the District Court, relying upon a pretrial stipulation that the research company and its parent corporation were to be considered as an entity for purposes of the litigation, awarded the manufacturer treble damages and injunctive relief against both the research company and its parent corporation (239 F Supp 51). On appeal, the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, affirming the treble damage award for patent misuse, but otherwise reversing the judgment of the District Court, (1) held that the District Court lacked jurisdiction over the research company's parent corporation, and that the stipulation relied upon by the District Court was an insufficient basis for entering judgment against the parent corporation, (2) modified in certain respects the District Court's injunction against patent misuse, (3) held that the manufacturer had failed to prove that it had sustained damage as a result of the conspiracy in restraint of trade, and (4) struck the injunction against the research company's participation in conspiracies restricting the manufacturer's trade in foreign markets (388 F2d 25).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded the case to the Court of Appeals. In an opinion by White, J., it was held, expressing the view of seven members of the court, that the question of injunctive relief against misuse of the research company's patents should be remanded for further proceedings, and it was held, expressing the unanimous view of the court, that (1) the District Court lacked jurisdiction over the research company's parent corporation, (2) the manufacturer had failed to prove that it sustained damage as a result of the conspiracy affecting the English and Australian markets, but had proved that it sustained damage as a result of the conspiracy affecting the Canadian market, and (3) the District Court had properly granted injunctive relief against the research company's participation in conspiracies restricting the manufacturer's trade in foreign markets.

Harlan, J., although concurring in the other parts of the court's opinion, dissented from the court's holding, with respect to the issue of injunctive relief against misuse of patents, that a patent license provision which measures royalties by a percentage of the licensee's total sales is lawful if included for the convenience of both parties but unlawful if insisted upon by the patentee.

Headnotes

---

JUDGMENT §244 > affiliated corporations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

Despite a pretrial stipulation by the parties that one of the parties and its parent corporation would be considered as an entity for purposes of the litigation, a judgment for damages and injunctive relief cannot properly be entered against the parent corporation where it did not execute the stipulation, was not named as a party, was never served, and did not formally appear at the trial; and the fact that the subsidiary may have executed the stipulation to avoid litigating the alter ego issue cannot foreclose the parent corporation, which never had its day in court on the question whether it and its subsidiary should be considered the same entity for purposes of the litigation.

JUDGMENT §208 > nonparties -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

A person is not bound by a judgment in personam in a litigation in which he is not designated as a party or to which he has not been made a party by service of process.

COURTS §26 > jurisdiction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

A court has no power to adjudicate a personal claim or obligation unless it has jurisdiction over the person of the defendant.

JUDGMENT §244 > affiliated corporations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

If it is shown that a parent corporation, through its officers, in fact controlled litigation on behalf of a subsidiary, and if the claim is made that a judgment against the subsidiary is res judicata against the parent because of this control, such claim can be finally adjudicated against the parent only in a court with jurisdiction over the parent.

ESTOPPEL AND WAIVER §55 > failure to repudiate stipulation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

Even if some attorneys of a parent corporation were present during part of the trial of antitrust claims against a subsidiary, and failed to repudiate a pretrial stipulation made by the subsidiary to the effect that the subsidiary and the parent would be treated as an entity for purposes of the litigation, the parent corporation is not estopped to deny that it is bound by such stipulation.

INJUNCTION §139 > persons bound -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Although injunctions issued by federal courts bind not only the parties- defendant in a suit, but also those persons in active concert or participation with them who receive actual notice of the order by personal service or otherwise, a nonparty with notice cannot be held in contempt until shown to be in concert or participation, and it is error to enter an injunction against the parent corporation of a company which is a party without making such determination in a proceeding to which the parent corporation itself is a party.

APPEARANCE §7 > effect of special appearance -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

The fact that a parent corporation enters a special appearance to contest jurisdiction, in an antitrust case involving a patent pool conspiracy in restraint of trade, does not indicate that it was found to be in active concert and participation with its subsidiary, which was a party, nor does the entry of such a special appearance indicate that the parent corporation has consented to be bound by such a finding.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §61 > conspiracy -- patent pool -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

The provision of the Sherman Antitrust Act proscribing conspiracies in restraint of trade (15 USC 1) is violated where a research company and its parent corporation conspire with a Canadian patent pool to deny patent licenses to companies seeking to export American-made goods to Canada.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §67 > treble damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9A\]](#) [9A] [LEdHN\[9B\]](#) [9B]

Although patent rights are involved, once a manufacturer demonstrates that its exports from the United States have been restrained by the activities of a Canadian patent pool, an American research company participating in the patent pool conspiracy is subject to treble damage liability.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §67 > treble damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

With respect to a claim for treble damages for conspiracy in restraint of trade, the claimant's burden of proving the fact of damage is satisfied by its proof of some damage flowing from the unlawful conspiracy; inquiry beyond this minimum point goes only to the amount, and not the fact of damage; it is enough that the illegality is shown to be a material cause of the injury; and a claimant need not exhaust all possible alternative sources of injury in fulfilling his burden of proving compensable injury.

EVIDENCE §958 > sufficiency -- damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

With respect to a claim for treble damages for conspiracy in restraint of trade, the evidence is sufficient to sustain the inference that a manufacturer of radio and television sets has in fact been injured to some extent by a Canadian patent pool's restraints upon imports of radio and television sets, where there is evidence that (1) the pool's efforts to prevent importation of radio and television sets from the United States were highly organized and effective, agents, investigators, and manufacturer and distributor trade associations having systematically policed the market, warning notices and advertisements having advised distributors, dealers, and even consumers against selling or using unlicensed equipment, and infringement suits or threats thereof having been regularly and effectively employed to dissuade dealers from handling American-made sets; (2) the pool's past conduct interfered with and made more difficult the distribution of the manufacturer's products during subsequent years for which damages were sought, and the manufacturer suffered damage during the damage period from having a smaller share of the market than it would have had if the pool had never existed; (3) the pool continued after the beginning of the damage period, and the manufacturer was deprived of a license on pool patents permitting it to sell American-made merchandise in Canada; (4) a formal request by the manufacturer for a pool license would have been futile; (5) the manufacturer continued to operate without a patent license unburdened by conspiratorial conduct and granted on terms which would satisfy the antitrust laws, and such deprivation in itself had an impact on the manufacturer and constituted an injury to its business; (6) although the manufacturer was able to obtain independent distributors in certain parts of Canada, it was unable to do so in other parts of Canada, and its poorer performance in Canada than in the United States was attributed to the discouraging and repressive effects of the Canadian patent pool; (7) without a pool license, the manufacturer encountered distribution difficulties which prevented its securing a share of the market comparable to that which it enjoyed in the United States and which its demonstrated business proficiency dictated that it should have obtained in Canada; and (8) the pool was an established organization with a long history of successfully excluding imported merchandise, and in view of its continued existence during the damage period, the injury alleged by the manufacturer was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations of the antitrust laws would be likely to cause.

EVIDENCE §209 > presumption -- continuance of conspiracy -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

A court is entitled to assume the continuance of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, in the absence of clear evidence of its termination.

APPEAL AND ERROR §1464 > review -- findings of fact -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

In applying the standard of *Rule 52\(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure*, which provides that the findings of fact of a Federal District Court sitting without a jury shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, appellate courts must constantly have in mind that their function is not to decide factual issues de novo; the authority of an appellate court, when reviewing the findings of a judge, as well as those of jury, is circumscribed by the deference it must give to decisions of the trier of the fact, who is usually in a superior position to appraise and weigh the evidence; and the question for the appellate court under *Rule 52\(a\)* is not whether it would have made the findings the trial court did, but whether, on the entire evidence, it is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > burden of proof -- damages for antitrust violation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Trial and appellate courts alike must observe the practical limits of the burden of proof which may be demanded of a plaintiff, in an antitrust action for treble damages, who seeks recovery for injuries from partial or total exclusion from a market, damage issues in such cases being rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts.

EVIDENCE §958 > sufficiency -- damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

In the absence of more precise proof in an antitrust action for treble damages, a finder of fact may conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of a defendant's wrongful acts and their tendency to injure the plaintiff's business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits, or values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that the defendant's wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiff, and although not entitled to base a judgment on speculation or guesswork, the finder of fact may make a just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data, acting upon probable and inferential, as well as direct and positive, proof.

EVIDENCE §958 > sufficiency -- damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

With respect to a claim for treble damages for conspiracy in restraint of trade, the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the inference that a manufacturer of radio and television sets has sustained any damage as a result of an English patent pool's restraints upon imports of radio and television sets, where there is evidence that (1) obstacles for which the patent pool was not responsible discouraged the manufacturer's entry into the English market, (2) the manufacturer was waiting for a change in the type of scanning signals used for English television and did not intend to promote the sale of its television sets in England until such a signal change occurred, and if such a change had occurred, neither the absence of a patent pool license nor patent pool threats against it or its customers would have deterred it from a major effort to penetrate the English market, and (3) the manufacturer's own business calculus, rather than restraints by the patent pool, led it to await more favorable conditions before attempting to enter the English market.

EVIDENCE §958 > sufficiency -- damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

With respect to a claim for treble damages for conspiracy in restraint of trade, the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the inference that a manufacturer of radio and television sets has sustained any damage as a result of an Australian patent pool's restraints upon imports of radio and television sets, where there is evidence that (1) the manufacturer had exported no products to Australia and had not requested a patent pool license, (2) a government embargo had foreclosed importation into Australia of the manufacturer's American-made merchandise, and high tariffs and shipping costs, as well as the prospect of vigorous competition, were additional barriers, and (3) the manufacturer neither intended nor was prepared to enter the Australian market during the period for which damages were sought.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §61 > conspiracy -- patent pool -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18]

If a conspiracy by a research company and its parent corporation with an Australian patent pool had effectively kept an American manufacturer of radio and television sets from the Australian market, a compensable violation of the antitrust laws would have occurred.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §68 > injunctive relief -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[19\]](#) [19]

The remedy of injunctive relief, available under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 26) upon demonstration of threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, is available even though the plaintiff has not yet suffered actual injuries; he need only demonstrate a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §67 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §68 > remedies for antitrust violation -- injunctive relief -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[20\]](#) [20]

The purpose of giving private parties treble damage and injunctive remedies for violations of the antitrust laws is not merely to provide private relief, but is to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws; 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 26), authorizing injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, should be construed and applied with this purpose in mind, and with the knowledge that the remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs, as well as between competing private claims, and its availability should be conditioned by the necessities of the public interest which Congress has sought to protect.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §77 > injunctive relief -- patent pool -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[21A\]](#) [21A] [LEdHN\[21B\]](#) [21B]

Injunctive relief against a conspiracy in restraint of trade is proper where (1) the defendant research company and its parent corporation conspired with a Canadian patent pool to exclude the plaintiff, a manufacturer of radio and television sets, and others from the Canadian market, (2) there is nothing indicating that the conspiracy has terminated or that the threat to the plaintiff inherent in the conduct will cease in the foreseeable future, (3) neither the relative quiescence of the pool during the litigation nor claims that objectionable conduct will cease with the judgment negates the threat to the plaintiff's foreign trade, and (4) the parent corporation's abandonment of its participation in the Canadian patent pool has occurred after, and apparently in response to, the court's judgment and decree.

APPEAL AND ERROR §1672 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §81 > modification of injunction --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[22A\]](#) [22A] [LEdHN\[22B\]](#) [22B]

Although a defendant who has been enjoined from conspiring with a Canadian patent pool in violation of the antitrust laws is free to attempt to demonstrate in the future that the need for injunctive relief with respect to Canada has been eliminated, or that a change of circumstances elsewhere justifies additional modifications of the injunction, the United States Supreme Court will not, on direct review of the decree granting injunctive relief, undertake a reappraisal of the injunction in light of posttrial developments.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §77 > injunctive relief -- patent pools -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[23A\]](#) [23A] [LEdHN\[23B\]](#) [23B]

A radio and television set manufacturer which is interested in expanding its foreign commerce and which has suffered restraints of trade at the hands of a research company and its coconspirators in a Canadian patent pool is entitled to injunctive relief broadly barring the research company from conspiring with others to restrict or prevent the manufacturer from entering any other foreign market, and findings that the research company and its parent corporation were conspiring with English and Australian patent pools which refused to license imports, and that the manufacturer intended to expand its export business, are sufficient foundation for the conclusion that continued participation by the research company and its parent corporation in the English and Australian pools poses a significant threat of loss or damage to the manufacturer's business, even if such business has not previously been damaged as a result of the activities of the English and Australian pools.

INJUNCTION §138 > extent of relief -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[24\]](#) [24]

In exercising its equitable jurisdiction, a federal court has broad power to restrain acts which are of the same type or class as unlawful acts which the court has found to have been committed or whose commission in the future, unless enjoined, may fairly be anticipated from the defendant's conduct in the past.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §75 > injunction -- extent of relief -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[25\]](#) [25]

The federal courts, in exercising the traditional equitable powers extended to them by 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 26), authorizing injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, should respond to the salutary principle that when one has been found to have committed acts in violation of a law, he may be restrained from committing other related unlawful acts.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §75 > injunction -- extent of relief -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[26\]](#) [26]

Although a Federal District Court may not enjoin all future illegal conduct of a defendant, or even all future violations of the antitrust laws, however unrelated to the antitrust violation found by the court, when the defendant's purpose to restrain trade appears from a clear violation of law, it is not necessary that all of the untraveled roads to that end be left open and that only the worn one be closed, and this is particularly true in treble-damage cases, which are brought for private ends, but which also serve the public interest in that they effectively pry open to competition a market which has been closed by the defendant's illegal restraints.

PATENTS §232 > misuse -- royalties -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[27\]](#) [27]

Conditioning the grant of a patent license upon payment of royalties on products which do not use the teaching of the patent amounts to patent misuse.

PATENTS §5 > rights of patentee -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[28\]](#) [28]

A patentee has the exclusive right to manufacture, use, and sell his invention; the heart of his legal monopoly is the right to invoke the state's power to prevent others from utilizing his discovery without his consent; and the law recognizes that he may assign to another his patent, in whole or in part, and may license others to practice his invention.

PATENTS §225 > PATENTS §232 > licenses -- conditions -- royalties -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[29\]](#) [29]

There are established limits which a patentee must not exceed in employing the leverage of his patent to control or limit the operations of a licensee; among other restrictions upon him, he may not condition the right to use his patent on the licensee's agreement to purchase, use, or sell, or not to purchase, use, or sell, another article of commerce not within the scope of the patent monopoly, and his right to set the price for a license does not extend so far, whatever privilege he has to exact royalties as high as he can negotiate; and just as the patent's leverage may not be used to extract from the licensee a commitment to purchase, use, or sell other products according to the desires of the patentee, neither can that leverage be used to garner as royalties a percentage share of the licensee's receipts from sales of other products, since, in either case, the patentee seeks to extend the monopoly of his patent to derive a benefit not attributable to use of the patent's teachings.

PATENTS §5 > rights of patentee -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[30\]](#) [30]

A patentee may not use the power of his patent to levy a charge for making, using, or selling products not within the reach of the monopoly granted by the government.

PATENTS §232 > misuse -- royalties -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[31\]](#) [31]

If the provision of a license agreement basing royalty payments on the licensee's total sales is dictated by the convenience of the parties rather than by the patent power of the patentee, such a royalty arrangement involves neither misuse of the patents nor forbidden conditions attached to the license.

PATENTS §232 > royalties -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[32\]](#) [32]

If a licensee negotiates for the privilege to use any or all of the patents and developments as he desires to use them, he cannot complain that he must pay royalties if he chooses to use none of them, and he cannot then charge that the patentee has refused to license except on the basis of a total-sales royalty.

PATENTS §232 > royalties -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[33\]](#) [33]

A patentee is not authorized to use the power of his patent to insist on a total-sales royalty from a licensee and to override protestations of the licensee that some of his products are unsuited to the patent or that for some lines of his merchandise he has no need or desire to purchase the privileges of the patent, since, in such event, not only would royalties be collected on unpatented merchandise, but the obligation to pay for nonuse would have its source in the leverage of the patent.

PATENTS §232 > misuse -- royalties -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[34\]](#) [34]

Patent misuse inheres in a patentee's insistence on a licensee's payment of a percentage-of-sales royalty, regardless of use, where the patentee rejects the licensee's proposals to pay only for actual use; a licensee must pay if he uses a patent, but he may insist upon paying only for use, and not on the basis of total sales, including products in which he may use a competing patent or in which no patented ideas are used at all; and there is nothing in the right granted the patentee to keep others from using, selling, or manufacturing his invention which empowers him to insist on payment not only for use, but also for producing products which do not employ his discoveries at all.

PATENTS §232 > royalties -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[35\]](#) [35]

A licensee cannot expect to obtain a license, giving him the privilege of use and insurance against infringement suits, without at least footing the patentee's expenses in dealing with him; he cannot insist upon paying on use alone and perhaps, as things turn out, pay absolutely nothing because he finds he can produce without using the patent; if the risks of infringement are real and he would avoid them, he must anticipate some minimum charge for the license--enough to insure the patentee against loss in negotiating and administering his monopoly, even if in fact the patent is not used at all; but there is no basis in the statutory monopoly granted the patentee for his using that monopoly to coerce an agreement to pay a percentage royalty on merchandise not employing the discovery which the claims of the patent define.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §58 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §77 > misuse of patent -- license -- conditions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[36\]](#) [36]

If there is a patent misuse consisting of a patentee's conditioning the grant of patent licenses upon the payment of royalties on unpatented products, it does not necessarily follow that such misuse embodies the ingredients of an antitrust law violation under either 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1, 2), or that the licensee has been threatened by an antitrust law violation so as to entitle it to an injunction under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 26).

APPEAL AND ERROR §1692.1 > remand -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[37\]](#) [37]

The United States Supreme Court will remand an antitrust case to a Federal Court of Appeals for a determination in the first instance whether findings and evidence of a Federal District Court, sitting without a jury, are sufficient to make out an actual or threatened violation of the antitrust laws so as to justify an injunction issued by the District Court, where such matter has not been considered by the Court of Appeals.

Syllabus

---

[579] Upon the expiration in 1959 of petitioner, Zenith's, license agreement with Hazeltine Research, Inc. (HRI), which permitted Zenith to use all of HRI's domestic radio and television patents under HRI's so-called standard package license, Zenith refused to renew, asserting that it no longer required a license. HRI brought a patent infringement suit in November 1959. Zenith's answer alleged invalidity of the patent, noninfringement, patent misuse by HRI, and HRI's unclean hands through conspiracy with foreign patent pools. In May 1963 Zenith counterclaimed against HRI for treble damages and injunctive relief, alleging Sherman Act violations by misuse of HRI patents, including the one in suit, as well as by conspiracy among HRI, its parent Hazeltine Corp. (Hazeltine), and patent pools in Canada, England, and Australia. Zenith contended that the patent pools refused to license the foreign patents, including Hazeltine's, [****2] placed within their exclusive licensing authority, to Zenith and others seeking to export American-made radios and television sets into those foreign markets. HRI and Zenith had stipulated before trial that HRI and Hazeltine were to be considered as one entity for purposes of the litigation. Hazeltine was not served with the counterclaim or named as a party, and made no appearance until Zenith proposed that judgment be entered against it, at which time Hazeltine filed a "special appearance." The District Court, sitting without a jury, ruled for Zenith on the infringement action, and on the counterclaim held that (1) HRI had misused its domestic patents by attempting to coerce Zenith's acceptance of a five-year package license and by insisting on extracting royalties from unpatented products, and (2) HRI and Hazeltine conspired with foreign patent pools to exclude Zenith from the Canadian, English, and Australian markets. With respect to patent misuse, judgment was entered for Zenith for treble the actual damages of approximately $ 50,000, and injunctive relief given against further misuse. Treble damages for almost $ 35,000,000 were awarded Zenith on the conspiracy claim, together [****3] with injunctive relief against further participation [*101] in any arrangement to prevent Zenith from exporting electronic equipment into any foreign market. Relying on the "one entity" stipulation, the court entered the judgments for treble damages and injunctive relief against Hazeltine as well as HRI. The Court of Appeals set aside the judgments against Hazeltine, ruling that the lower court lacked jurisdiction over that company and that the stipulation was an insufficient basis for entering judgment against Hazeltine. On the patent misuse claim, the treble-damage award against HRI was affirmed, but the injunction against further misuse was modified. The conspiracy treble-damage award was reversed, the Court of Appeals holding that Zenith had failed to prove it had in fact been injured during the relevant four-year period preceding the filing of its counter-claim. That court also struck down the injunction against HRI's participation in conspiracies restricting Zenith's foreign trade. Held:

1. One is not bound by a judgment in personam resulting from litigation in which he is not designated as a party or to which he has not been made a party by service of process. [****4] Pp. 108-112.

(a) The judgments against Hazeltine were properly vacated as Hazeltine was not named as a party or served, and did not formally appear at the trial; and the stipulation executed by HRI was not an adequate substitute for the normal means of obtaining jurisdiction over Hazeltine. P. 110.

(b) It was error to enter an injunction against Hazeltine without determining that it was "in active concert or participation" with HRI in a proceeding in which Hazeltine was a party. P. 112.

2. The Court of Appeals erred in setting aside the District Court's decision with respect to the fact of damage in Canada. Pp. 114-125.

(a) The evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding that the Canadian patent pool refused to license imported goods, thus excluding foreign manufacturers like Zenith from the Canadian market for radio and television products. P. 118.

(b) The evidence clearly warrants the inference that the Canadian patent pool's past conduct interfered with and made more difficult the distribution of Zenith products in the relevant 1959-1963 period; and it could rationally be found that Zenith suffered damage during the pertinent period from having a smaller share of the [****5] market than it would have had if the pool had never existed. Pp. 118-119.

[*102] (c) The evidence is sufficient to support a finding of damage resulting from events occurring after the damage period began. Pp. 119-123.

(d) In applying the clearly erroneous standard of Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 52 \(a\) to the findings of a district court sitting without a jury, the appellate court must determine whether "on the entire evidence [it] is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed," and not whether it would have made the same findings the trial court did. P. 123.

(e) Where a treble-damage plaintiff seeks recovery for injuries from a total or partial market exclusion, a court may "conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs." Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264. Pp. 123-124.

(f) The trial court was entitled to infer from the [****6] circumstantial evidence that the necessary causal relation between the Canadian patent pool's conduct and the claimed damage existed. Pp. 124-125.

3. The Court of Appeals properly set aside the District Court's judgment with respect to injury to Zenith by the English patent pool, as the only permissible inference from the record is that Zenith did not enter the English television market because it was awaiting a change in the English line-scanning signal and not because of the activities of the patent pool. Pp. 125-128.

4. The Court of Appeals correctly reversed the lower court's damages award with respect to the Australian market as nothing in the record permits the inference that Zenith either intended or was prepared to enter the Australian market during the relevant period. Pp. 128-129.

5. Injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act is available even though the plaintiff has not suffered actual injury as long as he demonstrates a significant threat of injury from an impending antitrust violation or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur. Pp. 129-133.

(a) Injunctive relief against HRI with respect to the Canadian market was wholly proper, as the trial [****7] court found that HRI and the Canadian patent pool were conspiring to exclude Zenith [*103] and others from the Canadian market, and there was nothing to indicate that this clear violation of the antitrust laws had terminated or that the threat to Zenith would cease in the foreseeable future. Pp. 131-132.

(b) The injunction which barred HRI from conspiring with others to restrict or prevent Zenith from entering any other foreign markets is also reinstated, in light of HRI's antitrust violation by its conspiring with the Canadian pool, its participation in similar pools in England and Australia, and Zenith's interest in expanding its foreign markets. Pp. 132-133.

6. Conditioning the grant of a patent license upon payment of royalties on products which do not use the teaching of the patent amounts to patent misuse. Pp. 133-140.

(a) If convenience of the parties rather than patent power dictates a percentage-of-total-sales royalty provision there is no misuse of the patents. Automatic Radio Mfg. Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 339 U.S. 827. Pp. 137-138.

(b) A licensee, who obtains the privilege of using the patent and insurance against infringement suits, [****8] must anticipate some minimum charge for the license, enough to insure the patentee against loss in negotiating and administering his monopoly, even if in fact the patent is not used at all, but the patentee's statutory monopoly cannot be used to coerce an agreement to pay a percentage royalty on goods not using the patent. Pp. 139-140.

7. The matter is remanded to the Court of Appeals for it to consider whether the trial court correctly determined that HRI conditioned the grant of licenses upon the payment of royalties on unpatented products, and, if so, whether such misuse embodies the ingredients of a violation of either § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act, or whether Zenith was threatened by a violation so as to entitle it to an injunction under § 16 of the Clayton Act. Pp. 140-141.

Counsel: Thomas C. McConnell argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Philip J. Curtis and Francis J. McConnell.

John T. Chadwell and Victor P. Kayser argued the cause for respondents. With them on the briefs for respondent Hazeltine Research, Inc., were C. Lee Cook, Jr., [*104] Joseph V. Giffin, M. Hudson Rathburn, and Laurence B. Dodds. With Messrs. Chadwell and Kayser on [****9] the brief for Hazeltine Corp. were Messrs. Cook and Giffin.

Solicitor General Griswold, Assistant Attorney General Zimmerman, and Harris Weinstein filed a brief for the United States as amicus curiae.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Marshall

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[***137] [**1566] MR. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

Petitioner Zenith Radio Corporation (Zenith) is a Delaware Corporation which for many years has been successfully engaged in the business of manufacturing radio and television sets for sale in the United States and foreign countries. A necessary incident of Zenith's operations has been the acquisition of licenses to use patented devices in the radios and televisions it manufactures, and its transactions have included licensing agreements with respondent Hazeltine Research, Inc. (HRI), an Illinois corporation which owns and licenses domestic patents, principally in the radio and television fields. HRI is the wholly owned subsidiary of respondent Hazeltine Corporation (Hazeltine), a substantially larger and more diversified company that has among its assets numerous foreign patents -- including the foreign counterparts [***10] of HRI's domestic patents -- which it licenses for use in foreign countries.

Until 1959, Zenith had obtained the right to use all HRI domestic patents under HRI's so-called standard package license. In that year, however, with the expiration of Zenith's license imminent, Zenith declined to accept HRI's offer to renew, asserting that it no longer required a license from HRI. Negotiations proceeded to a stalemate, and in November 1959, HRI brought suit in the Northern District of Illinois, claiming that [**1567] Zenith television sets infringed HRI's patents on a particular automatic control system. Zenith's answer alleged invalidity of the patent asserted and noninfringement, [*105] and further alleged that HRI's claim was unenforceable because of patent misuse as well as unclean hands through conspiracy with foreign patent pools. On May 22, 1963, more than three years after its answer had been filed, Zenith filed a counterclaim against HRI for treble damages and injunctive relief, alleging violations of the Sherman Act by misuse of HRI patents, including the one in suit, as well as by conspiracy among HRI, Hazeltine, and patent pools in Canada, England, and Australia. Zenith [***11] contended that these three patent pools had refused to license the patents placed within their exclusive licensing authority, including Hazeltine patents, to Zenith and others seeking to export American-made radios and televisions into those foreign markets.

[***138] The District Court, sitting without a jury, ruled for Zenith in the infringement action, 239 F.Supp. 51, 68-69, and its judgment in that respect, which was affirmed by the Court of Appeals, 388 F.2d 25, 30-33, is not in issue here. On the counterclaim, the District Court ruled, first, that HRI had misused its domestic patents by attempting to coerce Zenith's acceptance of a five-year package license, and by insisting on extracting royalties from unpatented products. 239 F.Supp., at 69-72, 76-77. Judgment was entered in Zenith's favor for treble the amount of its actual damages of approximately $ 50,000, and injunctive relief against further patent misuse was awarded. Second, HRI and Hazeltine were found to have conspired with the foreign patent pools to exclude Zenith from the Canadian, English, and Australian markets. Hazeltine had granted the pools the exclusive right [***12] to license Hazeltine patents in their respective countries and had shared in the pools' profits, knowing that each pool refused to license its patents for importation and that each enforced its ban on imports with threats of infringement suits. HRI, along with its coconspirator, Hazeltine, was therefore held to have conspired [*106] with the pools to restrain the trade or commerce of the United States, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1, and was liable for injury caused Zenith's foreign business by the operation of the pools.

239 F.Supp., at 77-78. Total damages with respect to the three markets, when trebled, amounted to nearly $ 35,000,000.<sup>1</sup> [**1568] Judgment in this [*107] [580] amount was awarded Zenith, along with injunctive relief

---

<sup>1</sup> In its initial findings, handed down on January 25, 1965, 239 F.Supp., at 76, the District Court concluded that Zenith had suffered actual damages of $ 16,238,872 as a result of the restraints imposed by the three pools upon Zenith's export business during the four-year damage period:

Canada:

Television

$ 5,826,896

Radio

470,495

England:

Television

8,079,859

Radio

1,169,067

Australia:

Television

625,786

Radio

66,769

Total

16,238,872

On April 5, 1965, the District Court entered partial judgment, awarding Zenith treble damages for patent misuse and treble damages with respect to Canada, but reserving jurisdiction for further hearings on damages in the English and Australian markets. The further proceedings were held in October and November 1965, after which the District Court amended its findings on damages for England and Australia:

England:

Television

$ 4,312,924

Radio

against further participation in any arrangement to prevent Zenith from exporting electronic equipment into any foreign market.

[***13] Relying [***139] upon its finding that HRI and Zenith had stipulated before trial that HRI and Hazeltine were to be considered as one entity for purposes of the litigation, see 239 F.Supp., at 69, the court entered judgments for treble damages and injunctive relief, both with respect to patent misuse and conspiracy, against Hazeltine as well as against the named counter-defendant, HRI.

On appeal by HRI and Hazeltine, the Court of Appeals set aside entirely the judgments for damages and injunctive relief entered against Hazeltine, ruling that the District Court lacked jurisdiction over that company and that the stipulation relied upon by the District Court was an insufficient basis for entering judgment against Hazeltine. 388 F.2d, at 28-30. With respect to Zenith's patent misuse claim, the Court of Appeals affirmed the treble-damage award against HRI, but modified in certain respects the District Court's injunction against further misuse. 388 F.2d, at 33-35, 39.

The Court of Appeals also reversed the treble-damage award for conspiracy to restrain Zenith's export trade. Without reaching any of the other issues presented by the appeal [***14] on this phase of the case, the court held that Zenith had failed to sustain its burden under § 4 of the [*108] Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15, to prove the fact of damage -- injury to its business -- within the relevant four-year period preceding May 22, 1963, the date Zenith's counterclaim was filed.<sup>2</sup> Finally, the Court of Appeals struck the injunction against HRI's participation in conspiracies restricting Zenith's trade in foreign markets.

---

745,102

Australia:

Television

223,508

Radio

24,952

Total

5,306,486

These revisions reflect the proof submitted at the further proceedings, showing that government embargoes in England and Australia, in effect until 1959 and 1960 respectively, precluded entry by Zenith into the English and Australian markets. The District Court found, with respect to England, that because of the embargoes, Zenith's damages were zero for the first year of the damage period, 50% of the figure initially accepted by the court for the second year, 75% for the third, and 100% for the fourth. With respect to Australia, the District Court adopted a similar 0-50-75-100% revision of the original figures used by the court in computing the damage findings of January 25, 1965.

<sup>2</sup> The record discloses that Zenith, HRI, and the courts below all considered the damage period to be the four years prior to the date on which Zenith filed its counterclaim. No argument was made that the counterclaim, in whole or in part, related back to an earlier pleading, thereby expanding the damage period to include years prior to 1959. Cf. Bull v. United States, 295 U.S. 247, 262 and n. 10 \(1935\); Cold Metal Process Co. v. E. W. Bliss Co., 285 F.2d 231 \(C. A. 6th Cir. 1960\), cert. denied, 366 U.S. 911 \(1961\). Cf. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 15 (c) (amended pleading relates back to date of original pleading if the "claim or defense

[****15] We granted certiorari, 391 U.S. 933, to consider among other things the question whether the Court of Appeals properly discharged its appellate function under Rule 52 \(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which specifies that the findings of fact made by a District Court sitting without a jury are not to be set aside unless "clearly erroneous."

I. THE JUDGMENTS AGAINST HAZELTINE.

The named plaintiff in the patent infringement complaint which began this litigation was HRI, not its parent, Hazeltine; Zenith's counterclaim named only HRI as the "counter-defendant," identifying HRI and Hazeltine as "counter-defendant and its parent." After Zenith had filed its answer and had delivered a draft of its counter-claim to HRI's attorneys -- both the answer and [581] the counterclaim alleging that HRI had unlawfully [**1569] conspired with Hazeltine and foreign patent pools -- HRI and Zenith [*109] stipulated that "for purposes of this litigation Plaintiff and its parent Hazeltine Corporation will be considered to be one and the same company."

[***140] On May 22, 1963, two weeks after the stipulation had been signed, Zenith filed its counterclaim, seeking money [***16] damages from HRI and an injunction against HRI and those "in privity" with it. Hazeltine was not served with the counterclaim and was not named as a party, although it was alleged to be a coconspirator with HRI and the foreign patent pools. Hazeltine made no appearance in the litigation until Zenith proposed that judgment be entered against it, at which time Hazeltine filed a "special appearance." Insofar as the record reveals, Hazeltine did not formally participate in the proceedings until after the District Court had entered its initial findings of fact and conclusions of law. On April 5, 1965, after Hazeltine's special appearance, the trial judge entered judgment against Hazeltine as well as HRI, thereby rejecting Hazeltine's objection that the court was without jurisdiction over it. Apparently, the trial court based its decision on the pretrial stipulation<sup>3</sup> and its earlier finding that:

"The parties stipulated that for the purposes of this litigation Hazeltine Research, Inc. and its parent, [*110] Hazeltine Corporation, would be considered as one entity operating as a patent holding and licensing company, engaged in the exploitation of patent rights in the electronics [***17] industry in the United States and in foreign countries." 239 F.Supp., at 69.

[***18] [LEdHN\[1\]](#) [↑] [1] [LEdHN\[2\]](#) [↑] [2] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [↑] [3] The Court of Appeals was quite right in vacating the judgments against Hazeltine. It is elementary that HN1 [↑] one is not bound by a judgment in personam resulting from litigation in which he is not designated as a party or to which he has not been made a party by service of process. Hansberry v. Lee, 311 U.S. 32, 40-41 \(1940\). The consistent constitutional rule has been that a court has no power to adjudicate a personal claim or obligation unless it has jurisdiction over the person of the defendant. E.g., Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714 \(1878\); Vanderbilt v. Vanderbilt, 354 U.S. 416, 418 \(1957\).

Here, Hazeltine was not named as a party, was never served and did not formally appear at the trial. Nor was the stipulation an adequate substitute for the normal methods of obtaining jurisdiction over [***19] a person or a corporation. The stipulation represented HRI's agreement to be bound by and to be liable for the acts of its parent, asserted in the amended pleading arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set forth or attempted to be set forth in the original pleading").

<sup>3</sup> During the proceedings before the District Court on April 2, 1965, the trial judge noted: "Well, of course, Hazeltine Corporation wasn't a party to the lawsuit." The court's reliance upon the stipulation as a basis for its decision to enter judgment against Hazeltine as well as HRI is reflected by the interchanges between the court and counsel for Hazeltine during those proceedings. An example is the following:

"Mr. Kayser [counsel for Hazeltine]: . . . Could anyone really believe for a minute that if he had any thought of bringing the parent into this lawsuit that he would not have named them and that he would be relying on this stipulation which was intended to simplify and expedite the trial? Would any lawyer who has been practicing for two years expect to hold somebody liable on a judgment when he didn't even name them? He relied on some pretrial stipulation.

"The Court: You mean that pretrial stipulations are worthless?"

but it was signed only by HRI, through its attorney, Dodds. Hazeltine did not execute the stipulation, and Dodds, [***141] although an officer of Hazeltine, did not purport to be signing on its behalf. The trial court apparently viewed the stipulation as binding Hazeltine, as equivalent to an entry of appearance, or as consent to entry of judgment against it. The stipulation [**1570] on its face, however, hardly warrants this construction, and if there were other circumstances which justified the trial court's conclusion, the findings do not reveal them.

[*111] Perhaps Zenith could have proved and the trial court might have found that HRI and Hazeltine were alter egos; but absent jurisdiction over Hazeltine, that determination would bind only HRI. If the alter ego issue had been litigated, and if the trial court had decided that HRI and Hazeltine were one and the same entity and that jurisdiction over HRI gave the court jurisdiction over Hazeltine, perhaps Hazeltine's appearance before judgment with full opportunity to contest [***20] jurisdiction would warrant entry of judgment against it. But that is not what occurred here. The trial court's judgment against Hazeltine was based wholly on HRI's stipulation. HRI may have executed the stipulation to avoid litigating the alter ego issue,<sup>4</sup> [582] but this fact cannot foreclose Hazeltine, which has never had its day in court on the question of whether it and its subsidiary should be considered the same entity for purposes of this litigation.

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4] [LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [↑] [5A] [***21] Likewise, were it shown that Hazeltine through its officer, Dodds, in fact controlled the litigation on behalf of HRI, and if the claim were made that the judgment against HRI would be res judicata against Hazeltine because of this control, that claim itself could be finally adjudicated against Hazeltine only in a court with jurisdiction over that company.<sup>5</sup> See [G. & C. Merriam Co. \[\*1121\] v. Saalfeld, 241 U.S. 22 \(1916\)](#); Schnell v. Peter Eckrich & Sons, Inc., 365 U.S. 260 \(1961\).

[LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [↑] [5B]

[***22] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [↑] [6] [LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [↑] [7A] Neither the judgment for damages nor the injunction against Hazeltine was proper. HN2 [↑] Although injunctions issued by federal courts bind not only the parties defendant [***142] in a suit, but also those persons "in active concert or participation with them who receive actual notice of the order by personal service or otherwise," Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 65 \(d\), a nonparty with notice cannot be held in contempt until shown to be in concert or participation. It was error to enter the injunction against Hazeltine, without having made this determination in a proceeding to which Hazeltine was a party.<sup>6</sup>

---

<sup>4</sup> There is some indication that the genesis of the stipulation was a pretrial conference, when a question was raised as to whether or not a subpoena served upon HRI could reach certain records of Hazeltine relating to the latter's foreign patents. Hazeltine, of course, argues that the stipulation's only purpose and effect were to facilitate discovery and trial by obviating the necessity of litigating whether or not Zenith could "pierce the corporate veil" between HRI and its parent.

<sup>5</sup> In its brief in this Court, Zenith seems to argue that Hazeltine is estopped to deny that it is bound by the stipulation. Not only was HRI's counsel, Dodds, an officer of Hazeltine, but also Ruestow and Westermann, Hazeltine's general patent counsel and general counsel, were present during trial and failed to "repudiate" the construction allegedly given the stipulation by the parties at trial to the effect that it bound Hazeltine to any adjudication on the counterclaim. We find this theory untenable on the record of this case, for the references during trial to the stipulation are equally consistent with the interpretation advanced by Hazeltine that the stipulation merely eliminated the necessity for Zenith to perform the time-consuming task of piercing the corporate veil in proving its counterclaim against HRI. Also, Ruestow and Westermann were called as witnesses during trial, and assuming they were present throughout the trial -- a fact which is neither proved nor disproved by the record -- their failure to repudiate Zenith's proposed construction of the stipulation is entirely consistent with the proposition that they were present only as witnesses, and not as authorized representatives for a person who might be bound by the litigation.

<sup>6</sup> Just as the alter ego issue was not litigated after Hazeltine had made its special appearance and while it had an opportunity to be heard, see supra, at 111, so the District Court evidently did not rely upon anything more than the stipulation as a basis for entering the injunction against Hazeltine as well as HRI. The record does not support the contention, implicit in Zenith's brief, that when Hazeltine appeared to contest jurisdiction it was found by the District Court to be "in active concert or participation"

LEdHN[7B] [↑] [7B]

[****23] [*113] II. [**1571] THE FOREIGN PATENT POOLS.

A. The Treble-Damage Award.

LEdHN[8A] [↑] [8A] LEdHN[9A] [↑] [9A] HRI's major points in the Court of Appeals were that no injury to Zenith's business during the damage period had been proved; that if Zenith had suffered injury, it resulted wholly or partly from conduct prior to May 22, 1959, and to this extent was barred by the statute of limitations and by Zenith's 1957 settlement of certain antitrust litigation against RCA, General Electric, and Western Electric, which had the effect of releasing HRI from all liability for pre-settlement acts of the foreign patent pools;<sup>7</sup> that the Hazeltine companies had not illegally conspired with foreign pools; and that the damage award was excessive. Passing the other issues pressed by HRI, including the limitations defense, the Court of Appeals held that Zenith had failed to prove any injury to its export business during the damage period which resulted from pool activities either before or after the beginning of the damage period, and that the District Court's [****24] finding to the contrary was clearly erroneous.<sup>8</sup>

LEdHN[8B] [↑] [8B] LEdHN[9B] [↑] [9B]

[583] [****25]

[*114] LEdHN[10A] [↑] [10A] We [***143] have concluded that the Court of Appeals erred in setting aside the District Court's decision with respect to the fact of damage in Canada. Zenith's evidence, although by no means conclusive, was sufficient to sustain the inference that Zenith had in fact been injured to some extent<sup>9</sup> by the Canadian pool's [**1572] restraints upon imports of radio and television sets. On the other hand, we agree with the Court of Appeals that the District Court erred as to the English and Australian markets.

LEdHN[10B] [↑] [10B]

[****26] 1. The Canadian Pool.

with HRI and that, by entering its special appearance, Hazeltine consented to be bound by such a finding. See generally Dobbs, The Validation of Void Judgments: The Bootstrap Principle (pts. 1 and 2), 53 Va. L. Rev. 1003, 1241 (1967).

<sup>7</sup> Although HRI and Hazeltine were not parties to this prior litigation and did not enter the settlement agreement, HRI urged that all joint tortfeasors, including HRI and Hazeltine, were released from liability for injuries flowing from the pre-settlement acts of the pools. The 1957 release appears to be relevant only to Zenith's claim for injury to its Canadian trade; the embargoes in England and Australia were thought by the District Court to preclude any injury from acts of the English and Australian pools, and the embargoes were not lifted until well after the settlement was executed.

<sup>8</sup> The Court of Appeals did not disturb, nor do we, the findings of the District Court that HRI and Hazeltine conspired with the Canadian pool to deny patent licenses to companies seeking to export American-made goods to Canada. Accepting these findings, we have no doubt that the Sherman Act was violated. See, e. g., Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 599 (1951); Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 704 (1962). Once Zenith demonstrated that its exports from the United States had been restrained by pool activities, the treble-damage liability of the domestic company participating in the conspiracy was beyond question. Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., supra. Cf. American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U.S. 347 (1909); United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 443 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1945). Although patent rights are here involved, the same conclusions follow. See, for example, United States v. Line Material Co., 333 U.S. 287, 305-315 (1948); United States v. Singer Mfg. Co., 374 U.S. 174, 196-197 (1963).

<sup>9</sup> Zenith's burden of proving the fact of damage under § 4 of the Clayton Act is satisfied by its proof of some damage flowing from the unlawful conspiracy; inquiry beyond this minimum point goes only to the amount and not the fact of damage. HN3 [↑] It is enough that the illegality is shown to be a material cause of the injury; a plaintiff need not exhaust all possible alternative sources of injury in fulfilling his burden of proving compensable injury under § 4. Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., supra, at 702 (1962); Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 143-144 (1968) (concurring opinion).

LEdHN[11] [11] The findings of the District Court with respect to the operations of the Canadian pool may be briefly summarized. The Canadian patent pool, Canadian Radio Patents, Ltd. (CRPL), was formed in 1926 by the General Electric Company of the United States through its subsidiary, Canadian General Electric Company, and [*115] by Westinghouse through its Canadian subsidiary. The pool was made up largely of Canadian manufacturers, most of which were subsidiaries of American companies. The pool for many years had the exclusive right to sublicense the patents of its member companies and also those of Hazeltine and a number of other foreign concerns. About 5,000 patents were available to the pool for licensing, and only package licenses were granted, covering all patents in the pool and strictly limited to manufacture in Canada. No license to importers was available. The chief purpose of the pool was to protect the manufacturing members and licensees from competition by American and other foreign companies seeking to export their products into Canada.

CRPL's efforts to prevent [***27] importation of radio and television sets from the United States were highly organized and effective. Agents, investigators, and manufacturer and distributor trade associations systematically policed the market; warning notices and advertisements advised distributors, dealers, and even consumers against selling or using unlicensed equipment. Infringement suits or threats thereof were regularly and effectively employed to dissuade dealers from handling American-made sets.

For many years Zenith attempted to establish distribution in Canada, but distributors were warned off by the pool, and Zenith's efforts to secure a license for American-made goods were unsuccessful. Zenith then brought an antitrust suit against RCA, General Electric, and Western Electric.<sup>10</sup> This litigation was favorably settled, Zenith receiving, among other things, worldwide [***144] licenses on patents owned by the named defendants. [*116] Armed with these and other licenses, Zenith in 1958 began exporting radio and television products to Canada. It was promptly informed by CRPL that to continue business in Canada, Zenith would be required to sign CRPL's standard license, which did not permit importation, [***28] and that to sell in Canada it must manufacture there. Zenith was notified at the time that it was infringing at least one of Hazeltine's patents which had been placed with CRPL for licensing in Canada. Soon after this demand by CRPL, HRI began its infringement suit against Zenith.

Some of the trial court's findings describing the operations of the Canadian pool and its "drastic" impact upon Zenith's foreign commerce did not date the events or state whether they had occurred before or after May 22, 1959. The damage award was confined to injuries sustained during the statutory period, [584] but the trial court apparently deemed it immaterial whether the damage-causing acts occurred before or after the start of the damage period. Damages [**1573] were awarded on the assumption that Zenith, absent the conspiracy, would have had 16% of the Canadian television [***29] market on May 22, 1959, and throughout the damage period rather than its actual 3% share.<sup>11</sup> Since the failure to have 16% of the market on the first day of the damage period was ascribed to pool operations, those operations must have occurred prior to May 22, 1959. Some part of the damages [*117] awarded, therefore, necessarily resulted from pre-damage period conduct.<sup>12</sup>

[***30] The Court of Appeals reversed the District Court because it considered the evidence insufficient to prove the fact of any damage to Zenith after May 22, 1959. Having put aside HRI's statute of limitations defense, belatedly raised in the District Court and pressed in the Court of Appeals,<sup>13</sup> the import of the court's [***145]

<sup>10</sup> Zenith's antitrust claim was asserted as a counterclaim in a patent infringement suit brought by RCA against Zenith and its subsidiary, the Rauland Corporation.

<sup>11</sup> The computation of damages, prepared by Zenith's experts and accepted by the District Court, see 239 F.Supp., at 76, reflects a comparison between Zenith's percentage share of the United States television market, ranging from 15.6% in 1959 to 21.7% in 1963, and Zenith's actual share of the Canadian market during the same period, ranging from 3.1% in 1959 to 5.2% in 1961 and down to 3.2% in 1963. Although we discuss only the measure of damages utilized for computing Zenith's injury in the Canadian television market, a comparable method was employed to determine Zenith's lost radio sales.

<sup>12</sup> On November 22, 1965, during the further proceedings held to consider damages for England and Australia, Zenith's executive vice-president and treasurer, Kaplan, testified:

"In Canada, our assumption was that we commenced the period starting June 1, 1959 as if we had a full blown organization, and had enjoyed the benefits of doing business there for years prior to that date."

decision [*118] was that Zenith had not been damaged after May 22, 1959, by any act of the pool, whether occurring before or after that date. The Court of Appeals' overriding judgment -- as it had to be if its no-injury rationale were to meet claims of damage period injury from pre-damage period conduct -- was that Zenith would have done no more business in Canada after May 22, 1959, had the patent pool never operated in that country.

[****31] The Court of Appeals was clearly in error. The evidence was quite sufficient to sustain a finding that competing business concerns and patentees joined together to pool their Canadian patents, granting only package licenses and refusing to license imported goods. Their [*1574] clear purpose was to exclude concerns like Zenith from the Canadian market unless willing to manufacture there. Zenith, consequently, was never able to obtain a license. This fact and the pool's vigorous campaign to discourage importers, distributors, dealers, and consumers from selling, handling, or using unlicensed foreign merchandise effectively prevented Zenith from making any headway in the Canadian market until after the 1957 settlement with RCA and its codefendants. And even in 1958, when Zenith undertook in earnest to establish its distribution system in Canada and to market its merchandise, Zenith was met with further pool advertisements threatening action against imported goods and further notifications, continuing past May 22, 1959, that its products were infringing pool patents and that no license was available [585] unless Zenith manufactured in Canada.

This evidence clearly warrants the inference [****32] that CRPL's past conduct interfered with and made more difficult the distribution of Zenith products in 1959 and later years. The District Court could reasonably conclude that the cumulative effects of the pool's campaign against imported goods had consequences lasting well into the damage period. It could also rationally [*119] be found from the evidence that Zenith, beginning in 1958, could not have reached its maximum potential by May 22, 1959, that the pool had effectively prevented an earlier beginning, and that Zenith therefore suffered damage during the damage period from having a smaller share of the market than it would have had if the pool had never existed.

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]We also conclude that the record evidence is sufficient to support a finding of damage resulting from events occurring after the beginning of the damage period. We need not merely assume that the Canadian pool continued throughout the period of this suit, as we are entitled to do in the absence of clear evidence of its termination. See, e. g., Local 167 v. United States, 291 U.S. 293, 297-298 [****146] (1934); [****33] United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 333 (1952). HRI frankly conceded the continuation of the pool before the District Court,<sup>14</sup> and it appears sufficiently clear that throughout this time Zenith was deprived of <sup>13</sup> HRI's answer to Zenith's counterclaim did not plead a statute of limitations defense. However, in the course of proceedings after entry of the District Court's initial findings of fact and conclusions of law, but before judgment, the trial court granted the oral motion of HRI's new counsel for "leave to file" defenses based on the statute of limitations and on the release given by Zenith pursuant to the 1957 settlement agreement. The thrust of the former was primarily that the findings as to Canada had erroneously included damages resulting from conduct occurring prior to May 22, 1959. The trial court, without further mention of these defenses, forthwith refused to set aside or amend the damage award as to Canada, thus either rejecting the statute of limitations defense or considering it to have been waived under Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 12 \(h\), as urged by Zenith in both the District Court and the Court of Appeals.

Zenith itself had requested damages only for the four-year period prior to the filing of its counterclaim, and the findings of the District Court expressly limited the damages awarded to those occurring "during the 4-year statutory damage period." 239 F.Supp., at 76. The Court of Appeals, although not purporting to pass on the statute of limitations defense, referred to the "four year damage period" and identified it as "four years prior to the May 22, 1963, filing date of Zenith's counterclaim. 15 U. S. C. Sec. 15b. 388 F.2d, at 35 and n. 4. The parties have not argued the matter here, and we make no further effort to penetrate the confusion surrounding this issue or to deal with the question of whether damage period injury from pre-damage period conduct is recoverable where an unwaived statute of limitations defense is properly asserted.

<sup>14</sup> On April 1, 1965, during the further proceedings held by the District Court before judgment, counsel for HRI stated:

"Now, what [counsel for Zenith] is really trying to sell this court is the idea that if he can show that these pools continued after 1957 and, as he defines the pools, yes, yes, they did. There is no question about it, that these arrangements in relation to patents -- that characterized necessarily as he characterizes them, but that these arrangements have continued and, so far as I know, are in existence today. There is no question about that."

what had always been refused it -- a license on pool patents permitting it to sell American-made merchandise in Canada.

[****34] On May 12, 1959, the pool manager conferred with Zenith's vice president, informing him that Zenith was infringing pool patents and would require a license, [*120] but that licenses were granted only for local manufacture. This was followed on June 5, 1959, by a letter stating without reservation that Zenith receivers were infringing, and enclosing the pool's standard license form. This was nothing more nor less than a demand during the damage period that Zenith either manufacture in Canada and take the standard package license or cease its [**1575] activities in that country.<sup>15</sup> There is no evidence that the pool ever retreated from that position during the next four years.

[****35] Zenith thus continued to operate without a patent license unburdened by conspiratorial conduct and granted on terms which would satisfy the antitrust laws. This deprivation in itself necessarily had an impact on Zenith and constituted an injury to its business. We find singularly unpersuasive the argument that Zenith was as well off without a license as with one. This is little more than an assertion that pool licenses, from which CRPL and its participants enjoyed substantial income, were without value. Without the license, doing business in Canada obviously involved weighty risks for Zenith itself, besides requiring it to convince the trade that it could legally and effectively do business without clearance from CRPL.<sup>16</sup>

[586] [****36] [*121] Of [***147] course, Zenith determined to take these risks, serious as they were. Although HRI brought the instant litigation claiming infringement of an HRI domestic patent, the foreign counterpart of which had been made available to the Canadian pool by Hazeltine, Zenith persevered in its Canadian efforts. The claim is now pressed, and the Court of Appeals held, that the pool bothered neither Zenith nor its distributors after mid-1959 and that Zenith ran the gantlet so successfully that not having a license made no difference whatsoever.

It is true that the record discloses no specific instance of subsequent infringement suits or threats against Zenith's existing or potential distributors or dealers. But there is evidence that the pool was not dormant after May 1959. The record contains a letter from the pool to a distributor of Motorola products containing clear warnings against handling unlicensed, imported merchandise.<sup>17</sup> [****38] More significant, the fair import of the testimony [*122] by HRI does contend, however, that the ties between the Canadian pool and the Hazeltine companies were broken in December 1965, when Hazeltine secured an early termination of its licensing agreement with CRPL. See n. 25, infra.

<sup>15</sup> That Zenith failed to make a formal request for a CRPL license during the damage period can properly be attributed to Zenith's recognition that such a request would have been futile. The pool had made its position entirely clear, and under these circumstances the absence of a formal request is not fatal to Zenith's case. See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699-702 (1962); Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 487, n. 5 (1968).

<sup>16</sup> In 1960, the Report of the Royal Commission on Patents, Copyright and Industrial Designs was published. This Report described the magnitude of the risk taken by Zenith and its distributors in selling imported products in Canada:

"The portfolio in respect of which CRPL had the right to grant licences consisted of 5,000 patents, and in the absence of a licence from CRPL it is doubtful if anyone could sell in Canada a radio or television receiver."

"CRPL indicated that it does not grant a licence to any importer of radio or television receivers . . . . It is particularly in respect of the policy of CRPL in precluding importers from bringing into Canada radio and television receivers that the complaint was made to this Commission."

"It was stated to be the policy of CRPL to enforce its patent rights against any person who sells in Canada an imported radio or television receiver which infringes any one or more of the patents in its portfolio . . . ."

<sup>17</sup> This letter, brought to Zenith's attention by an ex-Zenith dealer, warned the Motorola dealer that his importation of American-made television sets and FM radios probably infringed pool patents. The dealer not only was cautioned that CRPL remained willing to litigate infringements, describing two recent and successful suits, but also was reminded of CRPL's policy against licensing imports:

Zenith officers was that the pool remained active during the damage period and prevented Zenith from establishing [**1576] an effective distribution system throughout [****37] Canada. Zenith was able to obtain independent distributors in the Western Provinces, but it was unable to do so in the Central and the Maritime Provinces, where it necessarily relied on its own subsidiaries for distribution. These officers, experienced businessmen, also testified to the similarities between the Canadian and American markets, attributing Zenith's much poorer Canadian performance to the discouraging and repressive effects of the pool. The Court of Appeals did not refuse to credit this testimony, as HRI insists we should do,<sup>18</sup> [***148] but accepting it as some evidence of damage, considered it of insufficient weight to prove injury to Zenith's business. In this respect the Court of Appeals both gave insufficient deference to the findings of the trial judge [*123] and failed to adhere to the teachings of Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251 (1946), and other cases dealing with the standard of proof in treble-damage actions.

[****39] [LEdHN\[13\]](#) [↑] [13] HN4 [↑] In applying the clearly erroneous standard to the findings of a district court sitting without a jury, appellate courts must constantly have in mind that their function is not to decide factual issues de novo. The authority of an appellate court, when reviewing the findings of a judge as well as those of a jury, is circumscribed by the deference it must give to decisions of the trier of the fact, who is usually in a superior position to appraise and weigh the evidence. The question for the appellate court under Rule 52 \(a\) is not whether it would have made the findings the trial court did, but whether "on the entire evidence [it] is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395 (1948). See also United States v. National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, 339 U.S. 485, 495-496 (1950); Commissioner v. Duberstein, 363 U.S. 278, 289-291 (1960).

[****40] [LEdHN\[14\]](#) [↑] [14] [LEdHN\[15\]](#) [↑] [15] HN5 [↑] Trial and appellate courts alike must also observe the practical limits of the burden of proof which may be demanded of a treble-damage plaintiff who seeks recovery for injuries from a partial or total exclusion from a market; damage issues in these cases are [587] rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts. The Court has repeatedly held that HN6 [↑] in the absence of more precise proof, the factfinder may "conclude [**1577] as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage [*124] to the plaintiffs." Bigelow v. RKO Pictures, Inc., supra, at 264. [****41] See also Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U.S. 359, 377-379 (1927); Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 561-566 (1931).

In Bigelow, a treble-damage plaintiff claimed injury from a conspiracy among film distributors to deny him first-run pictures. He offered evidence comparing his profits with those of a competing theater granted first-run showings and also measuring his current profits against those earned when first-run films had been available to him. This

"In closing, I wish to inform you that we would be most happy to issue a license to you to make or have made in Canada any equipment coming within the ambit of our patents."

<sup>18</sup> HRI urges that the trial testimony as to Canada of each of two Zenith officers, Wright and Kaplan, was inconsistent with his own testimony on recall, inconsistent with the testimony of the other, and inconsistent with documentary evidence, and that we should therefore disregard their testimony. It is true that the trial judge's views as to credibility are not completely impervious, but Rule 52 \(a\) admonishes due regard for the trial court's opportunity to assess the credibility of witnesses. The Court of Appeals clearly took into account this evidence, and we see no adequate basis in the record for refusing to accept the testimony of the two Zenith officers as probative evidence. See United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co., 247 U.S. 32, 37-38 (1918); Walling v. General Industries Co., 330 U.S. 545, 550 (1947); Graver Tank & Mfg. Co. v. Linde Air Products Co., 339 U.S. 605, 609-612 (1950); United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 332 (1952); Orvis v. Higgins, 180 F.2d 537, 539-540 (C. A. 2d Cir.), cert. denied, 340 U.S. 810 (1950); Ruth v. Utah Construction & Mining Co., 344 F.2d 952 (C. A. 10th Cir. 1965). HRI relies heavily in this respect on Zenith's annual reports for the years 1957-1962, but aside from the fact that these reports, except for 1962, were never admitted into evidence, we find them quite insufficient to undermine the credibility of Wright and Kaplan.

Court, reversing the Court of Appeals, found the evidence sufficient to sustain an award of damages. HNT↑
Although the factfinder is not entitled to base a judgment on speculation or guesswork,

"the jury may make a just and reasonable estimate [***149] of the damage based on relevant data, and render its verdict accordingly. In such circumstances, 'juries are allowed to act upon probable and inferential, as well as direct and positive proof.' [*Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., supra, 561-4; Eastman Kodak \[\*\*\*421\] Co. v. Southern Photo Co., supra, 377-9.*](#) Any other rule would enable the wrongdoer to profit by his wrongdoing at the expense of his victim. It would be an inducement to make wrongdoing so effective and complete in every case as to preclude any recovery, by rendering the measure of damages uncertain. Failure to apply it would mean that the more grievous the wrong done, the less likelihood there would be of a recovery." *327 U.S. at 264-265.*

Here, Zenith was denied a valuable license and submitted testimony that without the license it had encountered distribution difficulties which prevented its securing a share of the market comparable to that which [*125] it enjoyed in the United States, and which its business proficiency, demonstrated in the United States, dictated it should have obtained in Canada. CRPL was an established organization with a long history of successfully excluding imported merchandise; and in view of its continued existence during the damage period, the injury alleged by Zenith was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations of the antitrust laws would be likely to cause. The trial court was entitled to infer [***43] from this circumstantial evidence that the necessary causal relation between the pool's conduct and the claimed damage existed. See *Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 696-701 \(1962\).*

2. The English Pool.

[LEdHN\[16\]↑](#) [16]Hazeltine patents were made available to the English pool in 1930. The pool issued only package licenses, restricted to local manufacture. Although pool radio patents had expired prior to the beginning of the damage period, the trial court found, and we assume, that the pool held television patents which would not be licensed for television sets made in the United States.<sup>19</sup> Zenith was interested [**1578] in the English market and made exclusive arrangements with one distributor desiring to handle its merchandise. At no time during or before the damage period, however, did Zenith make available or offer for sale a substantial number of television sets suitable for the English market or make any other serious efforts to [*126] enter that market. It attained no appreciable position in the English television market.

[***44] Having initially found the patent pool responsible over the years for Zenith's failure to participate in the English market, the trial court, after further proceedings, held that a government embargo, not the patent pool, was the sole reason for Zenith's not entering the English market prior to the beginning of the damage period in 1959; until then, the [***150] District Court found, the pool "[was] not called upon to exercise the type of conduct that [it] exercised in Canada." It did not, however, retreat from its conclusion that restraints imposed by the pool had foreclosed Zenith [588] during the damage period.<sup>20</sup> In this respect we agree with the Court of Appeals that the trial court clearly erred. Based on our own examination of the record, we are convinced that even with the ending of the embargo in mid-1959, Zenith faced other obstacles which effectively discouraged its entry into the English market and for which the pool was not responsible.

<sup>19</sup> Wright testified that in mid-1955 a representative of the English pool had confirmed his understanding that "the policy of the Pool . . . required that [radio and television] sets be made in England, and that nothing would be licensed if it was imported from abroad." Wright further testified that the pool representative "saw no possibility" that this restrictive policy would be changed in the future. Subsequently, during its dealings with its English radio distributor, Zenith was "given to understand that television was just out of the question."

<sup>20</sup> Because the embargo precluded any recovery by Zenith for the first year of the damage period, the trial court modified its initial measure of damages to reflect the time it would have taken Zenith, starting with the removal of the embargo, to build up its market share. See n. 1, supra.

[****45] Positing that Zenith could not get a license from the English pool and that it did not enter the British market before or during the damage period, the issue is whether, once the embargo was lifted, Zenith wanted and intended to enter, had the capacity to do so, and was prevented from entering by its inability to secure a patent license and by other operations of the English patent pool. Section 4 of the Clayton Act required that Zenith show an injury to its "business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." If Zenith's failure to enter the English market was attributable to its lack of desire, its limited production capabilities, or to other [*127] factors independent of HRI's unlawful conduct, Zenith would not have met its burden under § 4.<sup>21</sup>

[****46] Zenith was interested in the English market; this much is clear. But its standard domestic television set was manufactured to operate on 525- and 625-line-per-second scanning signals, whereas the 405-line signal was standard in England until after the damage period. Similarly, while FM transmission was utilized in the United States for the audio portion, AM signals were used in England. Zenith's regular product thus was not salable in the English market. To succeed at all, Zenith had either to produce a differently equipped set or to provide for the mass conversion of its standard receivers. Unquestionably, the company had the facilities and the ability to follow either course. But it is equally clear that it pursued neither.<sup>22</sup> A change in the standard [***151] British broadcast to include [**1579] a 625-line signal was under [*128] consideration, even imminent, during the damage period. Zenith's merchandise would in any event have sold at prices substantially higher than those prevailing in the English market; tariffs and freight costs tended to widen the differential. Producing a new set for the English market, or modifying existent models on a large-scale [****47] basis, would have involved substantial costs.

Based on the evidence before us, [****48] including the correspondence between Zenith and its British representative, we think the Court of Appeals correctly rejected the inference that "Zenith intended to and was prepared to enter the English television market during the damage period," and correctly concluded that Zenith was in fact "waiting for a change in English standards to a 625-line system." 388 F.2d, at 37. It clearly emerges from the evidence that Zenith had every intention to promote the sale of its television sets if and when the signal change occurred. Given that event, neither the absence of a pool license nor pool threats against it or its customers would have deterred Zenith from a major effort to penetrate the British market. Why the existence of the pool, which as far as the record shows was quiescent during the damage period, should be credited with the power to discourage Zenith's entry before the signal change but not after is difficult to grasp. But the question at hand is not whether, if Zenith had decided to enter the market, the pool would have been a deterrent and inflicted damage. Rather, it is [589] whether Zenith was in fact constrained by the pool to stay out of England during the [****49] damage period or whether Zenith's own business calculus led it to await more favorable conditions. As we have said, the latter is the only permissible inference from this record.

3. The Australian Pool.

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17] [LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18] The Australian patent pool, which had exclusive rights to license Hazeltine patents, also granted licenses only [*129] for local manufacture. Had HRI and Hazeltine's conspiracy with the Australian pool effectively kept Zenith from that market, a compensable violation of the antitrust laws unquestionably would have occurred. But the findings of the District Court are wholly silent as to how the Australian <sup>21</sup> See American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co. 166 F. 261, 264 \(C. A. 2d Cir. 1908\), affirmed without specific reference to this issue, 213 U.S. 347 \(1909\); Stearns v. Tinker & Raso, 252 F.2d 589, 606 \(C. A. 9th Cir. 1958\); Volasco Products Co. v. Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Co., 308 F.2d 383, 395-396 \(C. A. 6th Cir. 1962\), cert. denied, 372 U.S. 907 \(1963\). Cf. Pennsylvania Sugar Rfg. Co. v. American Sugar Rfg. Co., 166 F. 254, 260 \(C. A. 2d Cir. 1908\).

<sup>22</sup> During trial, Wright and Kaplan testified that adjustments could be made by Zenith's English distributor in his shop to adapt Zenith television sets to the English transmission system. However, the fair import of their testimony, both during trial and in November 1965 on recall, was that conversion of Zenith sets to the English system, whether done before shipment to England or in the distributor's shop, had in fact been carried out only occasionally in the past and was of questionable utility on a commercial basis. Wright and Kaplan stated that Zenith could have manufactured a television set suitable for English use without appreciably more difficulty than Zenith faced in producing a new model for the American market, but the record does not indicate that Zenith took any steps in this direction before the end of the damage period, except in anticipation of the British changeover to the 625-line-per-second transmission system.

pool had any impact on Zenith's business. An officer of Zenith revealed that Zenith had exported no products to Australia since the 1920's or early 1930's. Zenith had not requested a pool license during the 20-year period preceding the trial. A government embargo was found by the District Court to have foreclosed Zenith's American-made merchandise until well into the damage period. High tariffs and shipping [***50] costs were additional barriers, as well as the prospect of vigorous competition. Nothing in the record before us would permit the inference that Zenith either intended or was prepared to enter the Australian market during the damage period. The Court of Appeals was correct in reversing the District Court's award of damages with respect to the Australian market.

[**1580] B. The Injunction.

In setting aside the District Court's grant of injunctive relief [***152] against continued participation by HRI and Hazeltine in any patent pool or similar association restricting Zenith's export trade,<sup>23</sup> the Court of Appeals stated, without more:

"It follows from our conclusion with respect to the foreign patent pools that injunctive relief against [*130] 'threatened loss or damage' directed at those pools, alleged by Zenith to be unlawful conspiracies, cannot be justified under 15 U. S. C. Sec. 26. Paragraph C of the injunction granted must be stricken." 388 F.2d, at 39.

[***51] [LEdHN\[19\]](#)↑ [19]The evident premise for striking Paragraph C was that Zenith's failure to prove the fact of injury barred injunctive relief as well as treble damages. This was unsound, for § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 26, which was enacted by the Congress to make available equitable remedies previously denied private parties, invokes traditional principles of equity and authorizes injunctive relief upon the demonstration of "threatened" injury.<sup>24</sup> That remedy is characteristically available even though the plaintiff has not yet suffered actual injury, see Bedford Cut Stone Co. v. Journeymen Stone Cutters' Assn., 274 U.S. 37, 54-55 \(1927\); he need only demonstrate a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur. See Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 396 \(1905\); Bedford Cut Stone Co. v. Journeymen Stone Cutters' Assn., supra, at 54; United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 333 \(1952\); [***52] United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 633 \(1953\).

[LEdHN\[20\]](#)↑ [20]Moreover, HN9↑ the purpose of giving private parties treble-damage and injunctive remedies was not merely to provide [*131] [***53] private relief, but was to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws. E. g., United States v. Borden Co., 347 U.S. 514, 518 \(1954\). Section 16 should be construed and applied with this purpose in mind, and with the knowledge that the remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice "adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims." Hecht Co. v. Bowles, 321 U.S. 321, 329-330 \(1944\). Its availability should be "conditioned by the necessities of the [590] public interest which Congress has sought to protect." Id., at 330.

---

<sup>23</sup> Paragraph C of the District Court's injunction prohibits HRI from

"Entering into, adhering to, enforcing or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program, with any other person, company, patent pool, organization, association, corporation or entity which directly or indirectly restricts or prevents defendant-counterclaimant, Zenith Radio Corporation, or any of its subsidiaries, from exporting any electronic apparatus from the United States into any foreign market."

<sup>24</sup> Section 16 provides:

HN8↑ "Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, . . . when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings . . ." (Emphasis added.) 15 U. S. C. § 26.

[***153] [LEdHN\[21A\]](#)↑ [21A] [LEdHN\[22A\]](#)↑ [22A] Judged by the proper standard, the record before us warranted the injunction with respect to Canada. The findings of the District Court were that HRI and CRPL were conspiring to exclude Zenith and others from the Canadian [**1581] market; there was nothing indicating that this clear violation of the antitrust laws [****54] had terminated or that the threat to Zenith inherent in the conduct would cease in the foreseeable future. Neither the relative quiescence of the pool during the litigation nor claims that objectionable conduct would cease with the judgment negated the threat to Zenith's foreign trade.<sup>25</sup> [*132] That threat was too clear for argument, and injunctive relief against HRI with respect to the Canadian market was wholly proper.

[LEdHN\[21B\]](#)↑ [21B] [LEdHN\[22B\]](#)↑ [22B]

[****55] [LEdHN\[23A\]](#)↑ [23A] [LEdHN\[24\]](#)↑ [24] [LEdHN\[25\]](#)↑ [25] [LEdHN\[26\]](#)↑ [26] We also reinstate the injunction entered by the District Court insofar as it more broadly barred HRI from conspiring with others to restrict or prevent Zenith from entering any other foreign market. HN10↑ In exercising its equitable jurisdiction, "[a] federal court has broad power to restrain acts which are of the same type or class as unlawful acts which the court has found to have been committed or whose commission in the future, unless enjoined, may fairly be anticipated from the defendant's conduct in the past." *NLRB v. Express Publishing Co., 312 U.S. 426, 435 \(1941\)*. See also *United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U.S. 319, 328-335 and n. 4 \(1947\)*. Given the findings that HRI was conspiring with the Canadian pool, its purpose [****56] to exclude Zenith from Canada and its violation of the Sherman Act were clearly established. Its propensity for arrangements of this sort was also indicated by the findings revealing its participation in similar pools operating in England and Australia.<sup>26</sup> Zenith, a company interested in expanding its foreign commerce and having suffered at the hands of HRI and its coconspirators in the Canadian market, was entitled to injunctive relief against like conduct by HRI in other [*133] world markets. [***154] We see no reason that the federal courts, in exercising the traditional equitable powers extended to them by § 16, should not respond to the "salutary principle that HN11↑ when one has been found to have committed acts in violation of a law he may be restrained from committing other related unlawful acts." *NLRB v. Express Publishing Co., supra, at 436*. Although a district court may not enjoin all future illegal conduct of the defendant, or even all future violations of the antitrust laws, [**1582] however unrelated to the violation found by the court, e. [****57] g., *New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. ICC, 200 U.S. 361, 401 \(1906\)*, "when the purpose to restrain trade appears from a clear violation of law, it is not necessary that all of the untraveled roads to that end be left open and that only the worn one be closed." *International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 400 \(1947\)*. This is particularly true in treble-damages cases, which are brought for private ends, but which also serve the public interest in that "they effectively pry open to competition a market that has been closed by defendants' illegal restraints." *Id. at 401*.

[LEdHN\[23B\]](#)↑ [23B]

<sup>25</sup> HRI informs us that Hazeltine, having obtained an early termination of its licensing agreement with CRPL, is now prepared to license any one or more of its Canadian patents "with no restrictions on imports." Since Hazeltine's abandonment of its participation in the Canadian pool occurred only after -- and, apparently, in response to -- the District Court's judgment and decree, we cannot agree with the suggestion that injunctive relief as to Canada has been rendered unnecessary and inappropriate. See *United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 333 \(1952\)*; *United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Export Assn., 393 U.S. 199, 202-203 \(1968\)*. Although HRI is free to attempt to demonstrate in the future that the need for injunctive relief with respect to Canada has been eliminated, or that a change of circumstances elsewhere justifies additional modifications of the injunction, see, e. g., *United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 633-636 \(1953\)*, we are not willing at this time to undertake a reappraisal of the injunction in light of post-trial developments.

<sup>26</sup> Having not disturbed the District Court's findings that HRI and Hazeltine were conspiring with English and Australian patent pools which refused to license imports, the Court of Appeals in any event should have sustained the injunction with respect to the English and Australian markets. These findings, together with Zenith's demonstrated intent to expand its export business, were sufficient foundation for the conclusion that continued participation by HRI and Hazeltine in the English and Australian pools posed a significant threat of loss or damage to Zenith's business.

[****58] III. THE PATENT-MISUSE ISSUE.

Since the District Court's treble damage award for patent misuse was affirmed by the Court of Appeals, and HRI has not challenged that award in this Court, the only misuse issue we need consider at length is whether the Court of Appeals was correct in striking the last clause from Paragraph A of the injunction,<sup>27</sup> [****59] which enjoined HRI from

[591] "A. Conditioning directly or indirectly the grant of a license to defendant-counterclaimant, Zenith Radio Corporation, or any of its subsidiaries, under any [*134] domestic patent upon the taking of a license under any other patent or upon the paying of royalties on the manufacture, use or sale of apparatus not covered by such patent." (Emphasis added.)

This paragraph of the injunction was directed at HRI's policy of insisting upon acceptance of its standard five-year package license agreement, covering the 500-odd patents within its domestic licensing portfolio and reserving royalties on the licensee's total radio and television sales, irrespective of whether the licensed patents were actually used in the products manufactured.<sup>28</sup>

LEdHN[27] [27] In [***155] striking the last clause of Paragraph A the Court of Appeals, in effect, made two determinations. First, under its view of Automatic Radio Mfg. Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 339 U.S. 827 (1950), conditioning the grant of a patent license upon payment of royalties on unpatented products was not misuse of the patent. Second, since such conduct did not constitute [*135] patent misuse, neither could it be violative of the antitrust laws [***60] within the meaning of § 16 of the Clayton Act, under which Zenith had sought and the District Court had granted the injunction. With respect to the first determination, we reverse the Court of Appeals. We hold that conditioning the grant of a patent license upon [**1583] payment of royalties on products which do not use the teaching of the patent does amount to patent misuse.

The trial court's injunction does not purport to prevent the parties from serving their mutual convenience by basing royalties on the sale of all radios and television sets, irrespective of the use of HRI's inventions. The injunction reaches only situations where the patentee directly or indirectly "conditions" his license upon the payment of royalties on unpatented products -- that is, where the patentee refuses to license on any other basis and leaves the licensee with the choice between a license so providing and no license at all. Also, the injunction takes effect only if the license is conditioned upon the payment of royalties "on" merchandise not covered by the patent -- where the express provisions of the license or their necessary effect is to employ the patent monopoly to collect royalties, not [***61] for the use of the licensed invention, but for using, making, or selling an article not within the reach of the patent.

<sup>27</sup> The District Court's injunction also included a paragraph barring HRI from continuing to coerce acceptance of its package license through the mechanism of offering a much lower royalty rate for those licensees who take a license on the entire package of patents rather than a license on merely a few of them. Paragraph B enjoined HRI from

"Conditioning directly or indirectly the grant of any license to defendant-counterclaimant, Zenith Radio Corporation, or any of its subsidiaries, under any domestic patent upon the payment of the same or greater royalty rate than the rate at which licenses have been granted or offered to others under a group of domestic patents which includes said patent."

The Court of Appeals modified this paragraph in certain respects, 388 F.2d, at 39, but we do not disturb these modifications.

<sup>28</sup> The District Court concluded:

"Plaintiff's demands that royalties be paid on admittedly unpatented apparatus constitute misuse of its patent rights and plaintiff cannot justify such use of the monopolies of its patents, by arguing the necessities and convenience to it of such a policy. While parties in an arms-length transaction are free to select any royalty base that may suit their mutual convenience, a patentee has no right to demand or force the payment of royalties on unpatented products." 239 F.Supp., at 77.

[LEdHN\[28\]](#) [28] [LEdHN\[29\]](#) [29] HN12 A patentee has the exclusive right to manufacture, use, and sell his invention. See, e. g., Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 88-89 (1902). The heart of his legal monopoly is the right to invoke the State's power to prevent others from utilizing his discovery without his consent. See, e. g., Continental Paper Bag Co. v. Eastern Paper Bag Co., 210 U.S. 405 (1908); Crown Die & Tool Co. v. Nye Tool & Machine Works, 261 U.S. 24 (1923). The law also recognizes that he may assign to another his patent, in whole or in part, and may license others to practice his invention. See, [*136] e. g., Waterman v. Mackenzie, 138 U.S. 252, 255 (1891). But [****62] HN13 there are established limits which the patentee must not exceed in employing the leverage of his patent to control or limit the operations of the licensee. Among other restrictions upon him, he may not condition the right to use his patent on the licensee's agreement to purchase, use, or sell, or not to purchase, use, or sell, another article of commerce not within the scope of his patent monopoly. E. g., Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436, 455-459 (1940); International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 395-396 (1947). His right [592] to set the price for a license does not extend so far, whatever privilege he has "to exact royalties as high as he can negotiate." Brulotte v. Thys Co., 379 U.S. 29, 33 (1964). [***156] And just as the patent's leverage may not be used to extract from the licensee a commitment to purchase, use, or sell other products according to the desires of the patentee, neither can that leverage be used to garner as royalties a percentage share of the licensee's receipts from sales of other products; in either case, the patentee seeks to extend the monopoly of his patent to [****63] derive a benefit not attributable to use of the patent's teachings.

[LEdHN\[30\]](#) [30] In Brulotte v. Thys Co., supra, the patentee licensed the use of a patented machine, the license providing for the payment of a royalty for using the invention after, as well as before, the expiration date of the patent. Recognizing that the patentee could lawfully charge a royalty for practicing a patented invention prior to its expiration date and that the payment of this royalty could be postponed beyond that time, we noted that the post-expiration royalties were not for prior use but for current use, and were nothing less than an effort by the patentee to extend the term of his monopoly beyond that granted by law. Brulotte thus articulated in a particularized context the principle that a patentee may [*137] not use the power of his patent to levy a charge for making, using, [**1584] or selling products not within the reach of the monopoly granted by the Government.

Automatic Radio is not to the contrary; it is not authority for the proposition that patentees have carte blanche authority [****64] to condition the grant of patent licenses upon the payment of royalties on unpatented articles. In that case, Automatic Radio acquired the privilege of using all present and future HRI patents by promising to pay a percentage royalty based on the selling price of its radio receivers, with a minimum royalty of $ 10,000 per year. HRI sued for the minimum royalty and other sums. Automatic Radio asserted patent misuse in that the agreement extracted royalties whether or not any of the patents were in any way used in Automatic Radio receivers. The District Court and the Court of Appeals approved the agreement as a convenient method designed by the parties to avoid determining whether each radio receiver embodied an HRI patent. The percentage royalty was deemed an acceptable alternative to a lump-sum payment for the privilege to use the patents. This Court affirmed.

Finding the tie-in cases such as International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392 (1947), inapposite, and distinguishing United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364 (1948), as involving a conspiracy between patentee and licensees to eliminate competition, the Court [****65] considered reasonable the "payment of royalties according to an agreed percentage of the licensee's sales," since "sound business judgment could indicate that such payment represents the most convenient method of fixing the business value of the privileges granted by the licensing agreement." 339 U.S., at 834. It found nothing "inherent" in such a royalty provision which would extend the patent monopoly. Finally, the holding by the Court was stated to be that in licensing the use [*138] of patents HN14 "it is not per se a misuse of patents to measure the consideration by a percentage of the licensee's sales." Ibid.

[LEdHN\[31\]](#) [31] Nothing in the foregoing is inconsistent with the District [***157] Court's injunction against conditioning a license upon the payment of royalties on unpatented products or with the principle that patent leverage may not be employed to collect royalties for producing merchandise not employing the patented invention. The Court's opinion in Automatic Radio did not deal [****66] with the license negotiations which spawned the royalty formula at issue and did not indicate that HRI used its patent leverage to coerce a promise to pay royalties on radios not practicing the learning of the patent. No such inference follows from a mere license provision measuring royalties by the licensee's total sales even if, as things work out, only some or none of the merchandise employs the patented idea or process, or even if it was foreseeable that some undetermined portion would not contain the invention. It could easily be, as the Court indicated in Automatic Radio, that the licensee as well as the patentee would find it more convenient and efficient from several standpoints to base royalties on total sales than to face the burden of figuring royalties based on actual use.<sup>29</sup> HN15 If convenience of the parties rather than patent power dictates the total-sales royalty provision, there are no misuse of the patents and no forbidden conditions attached to the license.

[****67] [LEdHN\[32\]](#) [32]The Court also said in Automatic Radio that if the licensee bargains for the privilege of using the patent in all of [593] his products and agrees [**1585] to a lump sum or a percentage-of-total-sales royalty, he cannot escape payment [*139] on this basis by demonstrating that he is no longer using the invention disclosed by the patent. We neither disagree nor think such transactions are barred by the trial court's injunction. If the licensee negotiates for "the privilege to use any or all of the patents and developments as [he] desire[s] to use them," 339 U.S., at 834, he cannot complain that he must pay royalties if he chooses to use none of them. He could not then charge that the patentee had refused to license except on the basis of a total-sales royalty.

[LEdHN\[33\]](#) [33]But we do not read Automatic Radio to authorize the patentee to use the power of his patent to insist on a total-sales royalty and to override protestations of the licensee that some of his products are unsuited to the patent or that [****68] for some lines of his merchandise he has no need or desire to purchase the privileges of the patent. In such event, not only would royalties be collected on unpatented merchandise, but the obligation to pay for nonuse would clearly have its source in the leverage of the patent.

[LEdHN\[34\]](#) [34]We also think HN16 patent misuse inheres in a patentee's insistence on a percentage-of-sales royalty, regardless of use, and his rejection of licensee proposals to pay only for actual use. Unquestionably, a licensee must pay if he uses the patent. Equally, however, he may insist upon paying only for use, and not on the basis of total sales, including products in which he may use a competing patent or in which no patented ideas are used at all. There is nothing in the right granted the patentee to keep others [***158] from using, selling, or manufacturing his invention which empowers him to insist on payment not only for use but also for producing products which do not employ his discoveries at all.

[LEdHN\[35\]](#) [35] [****69] Of course, a licensee cannot expect to obtain a license, giving him the privilege of use and insurance against infringement suits, without at least footing the patentee's [*140] expenses in dealing with him. He cannot insist upon paying on use alone and perhaps, as things turn out, pay absolutely nothing because he finds he can produce without using the patent. If the risks of infringement are real and he would avoid them, he must anticipate some minimum charge for the license -- enough to insure the patentee against loss in negotiating and administering his monopoly, even if in fact the patent is not used at all. But we discern no basis in the statutory monopoly granted the patentee for his using that monopoly to coerce an agreement to pay a percentage royalty on merchandise not employing the discovery which the claims of the patent define.

[LEdHN\[36\]](#) [36] [LEdHN\[37\]](#) [37]Although we have concluded that Automatic Radio does not foreclose the injunction entered by the District Court, it does not follow that the injunction was otherwise proper. [****70] Whether the trial court correctly determined that HRI was conditioning the grant of patent licenses upon the payment of royalties on unpatented products has not yet been determined by the Court of Appeals. And if there was such patent misuse, it does not necessarily follow that the misuse embodies the ingredients of a violation of either § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act, or that Zenith was threatened by a violation so as to entitle it to an injunction under § 16 of the Clayton Act. See, e. g., Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co., 314 U.S. 488, 490 \(1942\); Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp. v. Stokes & Smith Co., 329 U.S. 637, 641 \(1947\); Laitram Corp. v. King Crab, Inc., 245 F.Supp. 1019 \(D. C. Alaska 1965\). See also Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 254 (1955); R. Nordhaus & E. Jurow, Patent-Antitrust Law 122-123 (1961); Frost, Patent Misuse As A Per Se Antitrust Violation, in Conference on the Antitrust Laws and the [**1586] Attorney General's Committee Report 113-123 (J. Rahl & E. Zaidins ed., 1955). [*141] Cf. Staff of Antitrust Subcommittee of House Committee [****71] on the Judiciary, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., Antitrust Problems in the Exploitation of Patents 23 (Comm. Print. 1956); Schueler, The New Antitrust Illegality Per Se: Forestalling and Patent Misuse, 50 Col. L. Rev. 170, 184-200 (1950). Whether the findings and the evidence are sufficient to make out an actual or threatened violation of the antitrust laws so as to justify the injunction issued by the District Court has not been considered by the Court of Appeals, and we leave the matter to be dealt with by that court in the first instance.

---

<sup>29</sup> The record and oral argument in Automatic Radio disclose no basis for the conclusion that Automatic Radio was forced into accepting the total-sales royalty rate by HRI's use of its patent leverage.

Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the case is remanded to that court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: HARLAN (In Part)

Dissent by: HARLAN (In Part)

Dissent

---

[***159] MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I concur in Parts I and II of the Court's opinion. However, I do not join Part III, in which the Court holds that a patent license provision which measures royalties by a percentage of the [594] licensee's total sales is lawful if included for the "convenience" of both parties but unlawful if "insisted upon" [****72] by the patentee.

My first difficulty with this part of the opinion is that its test for validity of such royalty provisions is likely to prove exceedingly difficult to apply and consequently is apt to engender uncertainty in this area of business dealing, where certainty in the law is particularly desirable. In practice, it often will be very hard to tell whether a license provision was included at the instance of both parties or only at the will of the licensor. District courts will have the unenviable task of deciding whether the course of negotiations establishes "insistence" upon the suspect provision. Because of the uncertainty inherent [*142] in such determinations, parties to existing and future licenses will have little assurance that their agreements will be enforced. And it may be predicted that after today's decision the licensor will be careful to embellish the negotiations with an alternative proposal, making the court's unravelling of the situation that much more difficult.

Such considerations lead me to the view that any rule which causes the validity of percentage-of-sales royalty provisions to depend upon subsequent judicial examination of the parties' [****73] negotiations will disserve rather than further the interests of all concerned. Hence, I think that the Court has fallen short in failing to address itself to the question whether employment of such royalty provisions should invariably amount to patent misuse.<sup>1</sup>

My second difficulty with this part of the Court's opinion is that in reality it overrules an aspect of a prior decision of this Court, Automatic Radio Mfg. Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 339 U.S. 827 (1950), without offering more than a shadow of a reason in law or economics for departing from that earlier ruling. Despite the Court's efforts to distinguish Automatic Radio, it cannot be denied that the Court there sustained a Hazeltine patent license of precisely the same tenor as the one involved here, on the ground that "this royalty provision does not create another monopoly; it [****74] creates no restraint of competition beyond the legitimate grant of the patent." 339 U.S., at 833.

---

<sup>1</sup> I find it unnecessary to consider the further question whether inclusion of such a provision should be held to violate the antitrust laws.

In finding significance for present purposes in some of the qualifying language [**1587] in Automatic Radio, I believe that the Court today has misconstrued that opinion. A reading of the opinion as a whole satisfies me that the [*143] Automatic Radio Court did not consider it relevant whether Hazeltine Research had "insisted" upon inclusion of the disputed provision, and that in emphasizing that the royalty terms had no "inherent" tendency to extend the patent monopoly [***160] and were not a "per se" misuse of patents, the Court was simply endeavoring to distinguish prior decisions in which patent misuse was found when the patent monopoly had been employed to "create another monopoly or restraint of competition." 339 U.S., at 832.<sup>2</sup> [****75] (Emphasis added.) Until now no subsequent decision has in any way impaired this aspect of Automatic Radio.<sup>3</sup>

Since the Court's decision finds little if any support in the prior case law, one would expect from the Court an exposition of economic reasons for doing away with the Automatic Radio doctrine. However, the nearest thing to an economic rationale is the Court's declaration that:

"just as the patent's leverage may not be used to extract from the licensee a commitment to purchase, use, or sell other products according to the desires of the patentee, neither can that leverage be used to garner as royalties a percentage share of the licensee's receipts from sales of other products; in either case, the patentee seeks to extend the monopoly of his patent to derive a benefit not attributable to use of the patent's teachings." Ante, at 136.

The Court then finds in the patentee a heretofore nonexistent right to "insist upon paying only for use, and not on the basis [****76] of total sales . . ." Ante, at 139.

[*144] What the Court does not undertake to explain is how insistence upon a percentage-of-sales royalty enables a patentee to obtain an economic "benefit not attributable to use of the patent's teachings," thereby involving himself in patent misuse. For it must be remembered that all the patentee has to license [595] is the right to use his patent. It is solely for that right that a percentage-of-sales royalty is paid, and it is not apparent from the Court's opinion why this method of determining the amount of the royalty should be any less permissible than the other alternatives, whether or not it is "insisted" upon by the patentee.

One possible explanation for the Court's result, which seems especially likely in view of the Court's exception for cases where the provision was included for the "convenience" of both parties, is a desire to protect licensees against overreaching. But the Court does not cite, and the parties have not presented, any evidence that licensees as a class need such protection.<sup>4</sup> Moreover, the Court does not explain why a royalty based simply upon use could not be equally overreaching.

[****77] Another possible justification for the Court's result might be that a royalty based directly upon use of the patent will tend to spur the licensee to "invent around" the patent or otherwise acquire a substitute which costs less, while a percentage-of-sales royalty can have no [***161] such effect because of the licensee's knowledge that he must pay the royalty regardless of actual patent use. No hint of [**1588] such a rationale appears in the Court's opinion. Moreover, under this theory a percentage-of-sales royalty would be objectionable largely because of resulting damage to the rest of the economy, through less efficient allocation of resources, rather than because of possible harm to the licensee. Hence, the theory might not [*145] admit of the Court's exception for provisions included for the "convenience" of both parties.

Because of its failure to explain the reasons for the result reached in Part III, the Court's opinion is of little assistance in answering the question which I consider to be the crux of this part of the case: whether percentage-of-sales royalty provisions should be held without exception to constitute patent misuse. A recent economic analysis [****78]<sup>5</sup> argues that such provisions may have two undesirable consequences. First, as has already been noted, employment of such provisions may tend to reduce the licensee's incentive to substitute other, cheaper "inputs" for the patented item in producing an unpatented end-product. Failure of the licensee to substitute will, it is said, cause the price of the end-product to be higher and its output lower than would be the case if substitution had occurred.<sup>6</sup> Second, it is suggested that under certain conditions a percentage-of-sales royalty arrangement may enable the patentee to garner for himself elements of profit, above the norm for the industry or economy, which are properly attributable not to the licensee's use of the patent but to other factors which cause the licensee's situation to differ from one of "perfect competition," and that this cannot occur when royalties are based upon use.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The Automatic Radio Court explicitly distinguished a number of cases of that kind, including United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364 \(1948\), and Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U.S. 661 \(1944\). See 339 U.S., at 832-833.

<sup>3</sup> Brulotte v. Thys Co., 379 U.S. 29 \(1964\), involved a different question: whether a royalty based solely upon use of the invention could be collected for use occurring after the patent's expiration.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. American Photocopy Equip. Co. v. Rovico, 359 F.2d 745 \(1966\).

[****79] If accepted, this economic analysis would indicate that percentage-of-sales royalties should be entirely outlawed. However, so far as I have been able to find, there has as yet been little discussion of these matters either by lawyers or by economists. And I find scant illumination on this score in the briefs and arguments of the parties in this case. The Court has pointed out both today and in [*146] Automatic Radio that percentage-of-sales royalties may be administratively advantageous for both patentee and licensee. In these circumstances, confronted, as I believe we are, with the choice of holding such royalty provisions either valid or invalid across the board, I would, as an individual member of the Court, adhere for the present to the rule of Automatic Radio.

References

---

Am Jur, Monopolies, Combinations, and Restraints of Trade (1st ed 102, 174, 181); Patents (1st ed 145, 149)

10 Am Jur Legal Forms, Patents, Forms 10:865, 10:867, 10:1054-10:1102

US L Ed Digest, Evidence 958; Judgment 208, 244; Patents 225, 232; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 55, 58, 61, 67, 68, 77

ALR Digests, Patents 19; Restraints [****80] of Trade and Monopolies 15, 18

L Ed Index to Anno, Patents; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Patents; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References:

Cross licensing or pooling of patents as violation of antitrust laws. 75 L Ed 926.

Validity of agreement to pay royalties for use of patented articles beyond patent expiration date. 3 ALR 3d 770.

Who may be regarded as injured in his business or property within provisions of antitrust acts as to person who may recover damages resulting from violation of the acts. 139 ALR 1017.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>5</sup> Baxter, Legal Restrictions on Exploitation of the Patent Monopoly: An Economic Analysis, 76 Yale L. J. 267 (1966).

<sup>6</sup> See id., at 299-301, 302-306.

<sup>7</sup> See id., at 300-301, 302-306, 331-332.

Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research

Supreme Court of the United States

November 10, 1970, Argued ; February 24, 1971, Decided

No. 80

Reporter

401 U.S. 321 *; 91 S. Ct. 795 **; 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 ***; 1971 U.S. LEXIS 153 ****; 1971 Trade Cas. (CCH) P73,484; 14 Fed. R. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 1169

ZENITH RADIO CORP. v. HAZELTINE RESEARCH, INC.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 418 F.2d 21, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

damages, defenses, limitations, conspiracy, tolling, pool, statute of limitations, parties, reopen, trial judge, merits, waived, markets, counterclaim, patent, cause of action, district court, trial court, four year, conspiratorial, coconspirator, antitrust, accrues, future damage, conspirators, infringement, four-year, settlement, pleadings, rights

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Releases

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Pleadings & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN1[

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(c\) requires that in pleading to a preceding pleading, a party shall set forth affirmatively release, statute of limitations, and any other matter constituting an avoidance or affirmative defense.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Waiver & Preservation of Defenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

HN2[

401 U.S. 321, *321; 91 S. Ct. 795, **795; 28 L. Ed. 2d 77, ***77; 1971 U.S. LEXIS 153, ****1

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(h\) provides that a party waives all defenses and objections that he does not present either by motion or in answer or reply.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN3 Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) provides that leave to amend an answer shall be freely given when justice so requires.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN4 Judges, Discretionary Powers

The grant of leave to amend the pleadings pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 15 (a) is within the discretion of the trial court, but the trial court is required to take into account any prejudice that the opposing party would suffer as a result.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Supplemental Pleadings

HN5 Judges, Discretionary Powers

A motion to reopen a case to submit additional proof is addressed to the trial court's sound discretion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

HN6 Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

Where a plaintiff has no reason to anticipate that a claim of limitations will be raised against him, he need not set forth his claim of tolling until the limitations claim is raised.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The language of 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(b\) expressly provides for tolling of the statute of limitations in respect of every private right of action based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in the proceeding instituted by the government.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN8 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

On the face of 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(b\), a private party who brings suit for a conspiracy against which the government has already brought suit is undeniably basing its claim in whole or in part upon the matter complained of in the government suit, even if the defendant named in the private suit is named neither as a defendant nor as a coconspirator by the government. If the government sues only certain conspirators, but also alleges and proves during trial that others were conspirators, the fact of the tolling of the statute against those so proved but not sued can hardly be denied. Nor could tolling be denied if a defendant is never shown to be a conspirator by the evidence offered in the earlier government suit, but then is proved to be such in the subsequent private suit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN9 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Damages are recoverable under the federal antitrust acts only if suit therefor is commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued, under 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(b\), plus any additional number of years during which the statute of limitations was tolled.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN10 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

An antitrust cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business. In the context of a continuing conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws, this has usually been understood to mean that each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by that act and that, as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act. However, each separate cause of action that so accrues entitles a plaintiff to recover not only those damages which he has suffered at the date of accrual, but also those which he will suffer in the future from the particular invasion, including what he has suffered during and will predictably suffer after trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN11 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

If a plaintiff feels the adverse impact of an antitrust conspiracy on a particular date, a cause of action immediately accrues to him to recover all damages incurred by that date and all provable damages that will flow in the future from the acts of the conspirators on that date. To recover those damages, he must sue within the requisite number of years from the accrual of the action. On the other hand, in antitrust actions as in others, even if injury and a cause of action have accrued as of a certain date, future damages that might arise from the conduct sued on are unrecoverable if the fact of their accrual is speculative or their amount and nature unprovable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Football

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN12 [L] Sports, Football

In antitrust and treble-damage actions, refusal to award future profits as too speculative is equivalent to holding that no cause of action has yet accrued for any but those damages already suffered. In these instances, the cause of action for future damages, if they ever occur, will accrue only on the date they are suffered; thereafter the plaintiff may sue to recover them at any time within four years from the date they were inflicted. Otherwise future damages that could not be proved within four years of the conduct from which they flowed would be forever incapable of recovery, contrary to the congressional purpose that private actions serve as a bulwark of antitrust enforcement, and that the antitrust laws fully protect the victims of the forbidden practices as well as the public.

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding > Discharge, Release & Satisfaction

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Secondary Liability > General Overview

HN13 [L] Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding, Discharge, Release & Satisfaction

A release, which clearly intends to save the releasor's rights against a past contributory infringer, does not automatically surrender those rights.

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding > Discharge, Release & Satisfaction

HN14 [L] Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding, Discharge, Release & Satisfaction

The straightforward rule is that a party releases only those other parties whom he intends to release.

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding > Discharge, Release & Satisfaction

HN15 [blue icon] Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding, Discharge, Release & Satisfaction

Entirely apart from any release, a plaintiff who has recovered any item of damage from one coconspirator may not again recover the same item from another conspirator, as the law does not permit a plaintiff to recover double payment.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Summary

In a patent infringement suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, the defendant filed an antitrust counterclaim in 1963 seeking damages suffered by it in the 1959-1963 period for its exclusion from the Canadian, British, and Australian markets by reason of the plaintiff's participation in patent pools there. The plaintiff claimed that there was no conspiracy and that the defendant had suffered no damage, but the evidence showed the plaintiff's participation in an antitrust conspiracy, including participation in a Canadian patent pool with various other American companies against whom the government had brought a civil antitrust suit in 1958. The government suit was terminated as to all parties on November 1, 1962. The District Court, sitting without a jury, entered preliminary findings of fact and conclusions of law that the defendant had been damaged in stated amounts in all three foreign markets. The plaintiff then moved to amend its reply to the defendant's counterclaim, and to reopen the record for the taking of additional evidence, seeking to assert the defenses that (1) part or all of the damages awarded for the 1959-1963 period were barred by the 4-year statute of limitations governing antitrust claims (4B of Clayton Act), in that they resulted from pre-1959 conspiratorial conduct; and (2) the defendant's release executed in 1957 to certain other American companies, and their parents and subsidiaries, precluded recovery for damages resulting from pre-1957 conduct. The District Court permitted the limitations and release defenses to be filed, and heard further evidence with respect to the British and Australian markets, as a result of which it reduced its damage award for those markets, but it refused to reopen the record for other purposes or to modify its findings or conclusions as to the Canadian market (239 F Supp 51). Putting aside other issues, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit reversed on the ground that the defendant had failed to prove injury to its business in any of the three markets (388 F2d 25). The Supreme Court of the United States affirmed as to the British and Australian markets but reversed as to the Canadian market (395 US 100, 23 L Ed 2d 129, 89 S Ct 1562). On remand, the Court of Appeals ruled that the District Court had not rejected the limitations and release defenses on waiver grounds; that the 4-year statute of limitations on the counterclaim was not tolled during the pendency of the government antitrust suit, because the plaintiff was not a party to that suit; that the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of the release because the defendant had failed to reserve expressly any right against the plaintiff; and that the trial court should take further evidence to determine the extent to which damages should be reduced by virtue of these defenses (418 F2d 21).

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed and remanded with instructions to reinstate the District Court's judgment with respect to the Canadian market. In an opinion by White, J., expressing the views of seven members of the court, it was held that (1) if the District Court ruled that the limitations and release defenses were waived by the untimeliness of their presentation, it did not abuse its discretion, because allowing those defenses to be litigated would have entitled the defendant to perfect its proof as to damages resulting from pool operations during the 1959-1963 period, and thus would have required a virtual retrial of the damage issue; (2) if the District Court rejected the limitations defense on the merits, it did not err, because (a) the statute of limitations was tolled during the 1958-1963 period, by virtue of the tolling provisions of 5(b) of the Clayton Act suspending the statute of limitations on private antitrust actions during the pendency of government antitrust proceedings and for one year thereafter, even though the plaintiff was not named by the government as a defendant or as a coconspirator, and (b) damages suffered during the 1959-1963 period as a result of the pre-1954 conduct of the conspiracy were not barred, since the cause of action for such damages had not accrued before 1954; and (3) if the District Court rejected the release defense on the merits, it did not err, because the release of other companies and their parents and subsidiaries was not intended to benefit the plaintiff.

Harlan, J., joined by Stewart, J., concurred in the result on the grounds that the trial judge properly rejected the limitations and release defenses as too belatedly raised, and that it was unnecessary to reach the other issues.

Headnotes

---

WAIVER §82 > pleading -- damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1\]](#) [1]

A defendant's statement, in his motion for leave to file a counterclaim, that the counterclaim arose out of the plaintiff's conduct "occurring since the filing of the answer," does not preclude the defendant from recovering damages resulting from pre-answer conduct where the counterclaim itself is not so limited and the defendant makes his position on damages absolutely clear by the opening of trial, so that the plaintiff is given both ample notice of the substance of the defendant's claim and ample opportunity to respond, but makes no effort during trial to do so.

PLEADING §87 > reply -- amendment -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

If, after the evidence is closed and the trial court has entered preliminary findings of fact and conclusions of law favoring the defendant on his counterclaim, the court gives the plaintiff 5 days to file amendments to assert certain defenses to the counterclaim "nunc pro tunc as of" the date of the argument on the plaintiff's posttrial motion to amend his reply to the counterclaim, the defenses are technically filed before the entry of judgment and the taking of appeal, while the trial court still retains jurisdiction over the suit.

PLEADING §71 > amendments -- discretion -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

The grant of leave to amend the pleadings pursuant to Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is within the discretion of the trial court.

PLEADING §87 > amendments -- time -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Under Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which deals with amendments of pleadings, the trial court must take into account any resulting prejudice to the defendant in deciding whether to permit a post-trial amendment of the plaintiff's reply to an antitrust counterclaim to include the defenses of limitations and release.

401 U.S. 321, *321; 91 S. Ct. 795, **795; 28 L. Ed. 2d 77, ***77; 1971 U.S. LEXIS 153, ****1

PLEADING §87 > amendment -- terms -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Where a defendant proves damages under its antitrust counterclaim during a 4-year period on the theory that all of its damages suffered during the 4- year period are recoverable whether or not caused by conduct preceding the 4-year period--without the plaintiff's pleading its defenses that limitations and release bar damages caused by conduct preceding the 4-year period, or objecting to the defendant's evidence on that ground, or otherwise hinting until long after the record is closed that damages are barred as to conduct preceding the 4-year period--the court's permitting the plaintiff then to amend his pleadings to add such defenses and sustaining the defenses, so as to deny the defendant an opportunity to prove his recoverable damages, do not comport with the letter or spirit of Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, dealing with amendments of pleadings; if the defenses are to be entertained and deemed to bar damages resulting from conduct preceding the 4-year period, the defendant is entitled, at a minimum, to perfect his proof of damages resulting from conduct during the 4-year period, and also to prove, if he can, what damages he may suffer in the future from those acts.

TRIAL §25.5 > reopening -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

A trial court may permit reopening the record to allow additional evidence as to damages resulting from conduct during a 4-year period if it permits a party to amend his pleadings after trial to include defenses that damages are barred, even though suffered during the 4-year period, because caused by conduct preceding the 4-year period.

TRIAL §25.5 > reopening -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

A motion to reopen to submit additional proof is addressed to the trial court's sound discretion.

TRIAL §25.5 > reopening -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

In a patent infringement suit in which the defendant files an antitrust counterclaim for damages suffered during a 4-year period and proves damages suffered during that period as a result of conduct preceding the period, without the plaintiff's pleading the defenses of limitations or release as to such conduct, or objecting to the defendant's evidence, or otherwise hinting of those defenses until long after the record is closed, while claiming throughout that there was no conspiracy and that the defendant had suffered no damage, the trial court does not abuse its discretion in refusing to reopen the trial to litigate the defenses of limitations and release.

ACTIONS §223 > suspension -- antitrust proceedings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

