<sup>2</sup>The 1972 charter provision permitted individual adjustments of the across-the-board rent ceiling only on a unit-by-unit basis, and only after a hearing on the particular unit whose rent was to be raised. The California Supreme Court found that this limitation "put the [rent control board] in a procedural strait jacket," and "unnecessarily [precluded] reasonably prompt action" on meritorious petitions by landlords. Birkenfeld, supra, at 171, 172, 550 P. 2d, at 1031, 1032.

JUSTICE BRENNAN, dissenting.

Since Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943), the Court has wrestled with the question of the degree to which federal antitrust laws prohibit state and local governments from imposing anticompetitive restraints on trade. Laws which impose such restraints have been held to be exempt from antitrust scrutiny if they constitute action of the State itself in its sovereign capacity, or state-authorized municipal action in furtherance or implementation of clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy. See Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 52 (1982). Today, the Court holds that a municipality's price-fixing scheme is not pre-empted by the federal antitrust laws whether or not the scheme is state-authorized, or furthers or implements a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy. Because today's decision discards over 40 years of carefully considered precedent, I respectfully dissent.

I

A

Berkeley's Rent Stabilization [****28] Ordinance [**218] (hereafter Ordinance) effectively fixes prices for rental units in the city of Berkeley. In Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 661 (1982), we held that a state statute

"may be condemned under the antitrust laws only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute. Such condemnation will follow under § 1 of the Sherman Act when the conduct contemplated by the statute is in all cases a per se violation."

[*275] In this case, by declaring maximum prices landlords may charge, Berkeley's Ordinance irresistibly pressures landlords to fix prices for their rental units. Thus, the Ordinance "facially [conflicts] with the Sherman Act because it [mandates] [price fixing], an activity that has long been regarded as a per se violation of the Sherman Act." Id., at 659-660 (emphasis in original).

The Court recognizes that the Ordinance imposes anticompetitive restraints on trade, and that it has the same effect on the [****29] housing market as would a conspiracy by landlords to fix rental prices. Ante, at 266. Despite this, the Court holds that the Ordinance is not pre-empted by the Sherman Act because prices are fixed "unilaterally" [*1054] by the city, rather than by "contract, combination, or conspiracy." I do not read our decisions necessarily to require proof of such concerted action as a prerequisite to a finding of pre-emption. Certainly, nothing we said in Rice supports such a narrow view of pre-emption.<sup>1</sup> Our other decisions have found statutes in conflict with the Sherman Act because they eliminated price competition in the relevant market.

[****30] In California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97 (1980), a wine wholesaler sought to enjoin enforcement of a California statute which effectively [*276] required it to sell wines at prices set by producers. The Court focused on the fact that the statute eliminated price competition, and held that the wine-pricing system constituted resale price maintenance in violation of the Sherman Act. The Midcal decision squarely controls the result here. Just as the statute challenged in Midcal compelled wine wholesalers to charge prices set by wine producers, Berkeley's Ordinance compels [**219] landlords to charge prices set by the city. The city "holds the power to prevent price competition by dictating the prices charged" by landlords. Id., at 103. "[Such] vertical control destroys horizontal competition as effectively as if [landlords] 'formed a combination and endeavored to establish the same restrictions . . . by agreement with each other.'" Ibid. (quoting Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 408 (1911)).

<sup>1</sup> Rice held that a "state statute is not pre-empted by the federal antitrust laws simply because the state scheme might have an anticompetitive effect." 458 U.S., at 659. Rice involved a challenge to a California statute which effectively allowed liquor distillers to control distribution of their products in the State. The Court concluded that because such vertical nonprice restraints are not per se illegal under the Sherman Act, see Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977), the statute was not pre-empted. 458 U.S., at 661; see also Exxon Corp. v. Governor of Maryland, 437 U.S. 117 (1978); Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc. v. Hostetter, 384 U.S. 35 (1966). In contrast, Berkeley's Rent Stabilization Board fixes prices for rental units in the city. Unlike nonprice restraints, price fixing has traditionally been held to be per se illegal under the Sherman Act. See Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373 (1911).

Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384 (1951), [****31] is also directly on point. In Schwegmann, a Louisiana statute authorized liquor distributors to enforce agreements fixing minimum retail prices on their products against retailers who had not agreed to the price restrictions. The Court held that the statutory scheme amounted to resale price maintenance, in violation of the Sherman Act. To paraphrase the Court in Schwegmann, "when [the city] compels [landlords] to follow a parallel price policy, it demands private conduct which the Sherman Act forbids." Id., at 389. "[When] [landlords] are forced to abandon price competition, they are driven into a compact in violation of the spirit of the proviso which forbids 'horizontal' price fixing." Ibid. (emphasis in original).

B

Even if I accepted the Court's analysis of the antitrust pre-emption issue, I would find a functional "combination" in this case between the city of Berkeley and its officials, on the one hand, and the landlords on the other -- a combination that operates to fix prices for rental units in Berkeley. To reach a contrary result, the Court simply states a conclusion -- that [*277] "[a] restraint imposed unilaterally by government [****32] does not become concerted action within the meaning of the statute simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law." Ante, at 267. The Court doesn't explain why this is so -- it simply baldly asserts that "[the] ordinary relationship between the government and those who must obey its regulatory commands whether they wish to or not is not enough to establish a conspiracy." Ibid. The best I can make of this is that the [**1055] Court apparently would interpret the Sherman Act to forbid only privately arranged price-fixing schemes. See ante, at 267-269. That interpretation would be plainly misguided.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act declares illegal restraints of trade resulting from any "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy." 15 U. S. C. § 1. Understandably, that wording has led the Court to draw a "basic distinction" between concerted and independent action, and to hold that "[independent] action is not proscribed" by § 1. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761 (1984). However, until today we have not held, or indeed even suggested, that government-imposed restraints on economic actions [****33] cannot constitute concerted action. Rather, both Schwegmann and Midcal held that state statutes which "had a [***220] coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law" violated § 1.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> The Court would distinguish Schwegmann and Midcal based on the role of private parties in setting prices. Ante, at 268-269. The Court characterizes the statutory restraints imposed in those cases as "hybrid, in that nonmarket mechanisms merely enforce private marketing decisions." Ante, at 267. In this case, the Court argues, Berkeley's landlords have no control over the prices they charge. Ibid.

True, in both cases private parties, rather than the State, were largely responsible for setting the prices that retailers had to adhere to. However, the lack of state supervision over price-fixing activities was only relevant to whether the challenged statutes were immune from antitrust liability under Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943), see Midcal, 445 U.S., at 105; neither decision drew the distinction the Court today creates between "unilateral" and "hybrid" governmental restraints. In both cases the challenged statute was found invalid simply because it compelled private parties to charge fixed prices for their products, conduct which the Sherman Act forbids. See Schwegmann, 341 U.S., at 389; Midcal, supra, at 103. The Court's "distinction" ignores the fact that price fixing has the same deleterious effect upon the competitive market whether prices are set by an administrative body or by private parties. Thus, regardless of whether Berkeley's landlords have some role in setting the prices they must charge, the coercive effect of the city's Ordinance results in concerted action violative of the Sherman Act.

[****34] [*278] If the Ordinance allowed the individual landlords ultimately to set their own rental prices, I might understand the Court's conclusion that any resulting price restraints did not necessarily result from collective action. Cf. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., supra, at 761. However, because the Ordinance has the force of law, the city can compel landlords to do what the Sherman Act plainly forbids -- to fix prices for rental units in Berkeley. Regardless of whether the landlords "agree" to the prices charged, the circumstances here clearly "exclude the possibility that the [city and the landlords] were acting independently." 465 U.S., at 764. The Ordinance eliminates price competition more effectively than any private "agreement" ever could, and is therefore pre-empted by the Sherman Act. The Court's contrary conclusion does not further, as it argues, but rather distorts "traditional antitrust analysis." Ante, at 264.

II

Ultimately, the Court is holding that a municipality's authority to protect the public welfare should not be constrained by the Sherman Act. That holding excludes a broad range of local government [****35] anticompetitive activities from the reach of the antitrust laws. This flies in the face of the fact that Congress has not enacted such a broad antitrust exemption for municipalities. See Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40 (1982); Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389 (1978); cf. 15 U. S. C. § 35(a) (1982 ed., Supp. II) (immunizing local governments [*279] only from liability for damages for violations of the antitrust laws). "In light of the serious economic dislocation which could result if cities were free to place their own parochial interests above the Nation's economic goals reflected in the antitrust laws, . . . we [have been] especially unwilling to presume that [**1056] Congress intended to exclude anticompetitive municipal action [***221] from their reach." Lafayette, supra, at 412-413 (plurality opinion). "The Parker state-action exemption reflects Congress' intention to embody in the Sherman Act the federalism principle that the States possess a significant measure of sovereignty under our Constitution. But this principle contains its own limitation: Ours [****36] is a 'dual system of government,' Parker, 317 U.S., at 351 (emphasis added), which has no place for sovereign cities." Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, supra, at 53. Of course, our decisions do not foreclose municipalities from enacting anticompetitive measures in the public interest, but only require that such actions be state-authorized and be implemented pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly service. See 455 U.S., at 52. Berkeley's Ordinance plainly is not exempt from antitrust scrutiny under this standard.

Appellees suggest that three considerations support their argument that the Ordinance implements a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy authorizing municipalities to enact rent control measures: (1) the state legislature's 1972 ratification of a city rent control charter amendment; (2) the California Supreme Court's decision in Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 17 Cal. 3d 129, 550 P. 2d 1001 (1976), which ultimately invalidated that amendment; and (3) the [****37] city's state-law obligation to provide affordable housing. None of these considerations support appellees' position.

First, in 1972, Berkeley adopted a rent control charter amendment, which was approved by concurrent resolution of [*280] both houses of the state legislature.<sup>3</sup> There are serious doubts that this purely pro forma approval would qualify the amendment for the Parker exemption. See Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579 (1976). In any event, that amendment was subsequently invalidated by the California Supreme Court, and the legislature's actions respecting its passage afford no support for the claimed exemption of the current Ordinance from antitrust scrutiny.

[****38] Second, the Birkenfeld decision, while invalidating Berkeley's rent control amendment, found state authority for such measures in constitutional provisions conferring upon cities the power to "make and enforce . . . all local, police, sanitary, and other ordinances and regulations not in conflict with general laws." 17 Cal. 3d, at 140, 550 P. 2d, at 1009-1010. But we have made clear that such general grants of authority do not constitute the required mandate to engage in conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws. See Community

<sup>3</sup> At that time, the State Constitution required the legislature to approve city charter amendments. See Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 17 Cal. 3d, 129, 137, n. 2, 550 P. 2d, 1001, 1007, n. 2 (1976). In 1974, the State Constitution was amended to eliminate this requirement.

Communications Co., 455 U.S., at 55. "Acceptance of such a proposition . . . would wholly eviscerate the concepts of 'clear articulation and affirmative expression' that our precedents require." [***222] Id., at 56.

Third, state law requires cities to "make adequate provision for the housing needs of all economic segments of the community." Cal. Govt. Code Ann. § 65580(d) (West 1983). But, although appellees argue that rent control measures are a "foreseeable result" of these statutory obligations, see Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34 (1985), [****39] those laws are expressly neutral with respect to a city's authority to impose rent controls. California Govt. Code Ann. § 65589(b) (West 1983) expressly provides that "nothing in this article shall be construed to be a grant of authority or a repeal of any authority which may exist of a local government to impose rent controls." [*281] See also Cal. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 50202 (West Supp. 1986) ("[Nothing] in this division shall authorize the imposition of rent regulations [**1057] or controls"). The requirement of "clear articulation and affirmative expression" is not satisfied when the State's position is one of mere neutrality respecting the municipal actions challenged as anticompetitive." Community Communications Co., supra, at 55 (emphasis in original). Plainly, by that standard the Ordinance does not qualify for the Parker exemption from antitrust liability.

III

Finally, appellees suggest that a finding of pre-emption in this case will severely restrict a municipality's authority to enact a variety of measures in the public interest. "But this argument is simply an attack upon the wisdom of the longstanding congressional commitment [****40] to the policy of free markets and open competition embodied in the antitrust laws." Community Communications Co., supra, at 56. Congress may ultimately agree with appellees' argument, and may choose to amend the antitrust laws to grant municipalities broad discretion to enact anticompetitive measures in the public interest. Pending such amendment, however, only a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy will exempt ordinances like this from the reach of the Sherman Act.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 15, 18, 20, 45

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 46:65, 48:66, 48:101

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, Forms 12, 21

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1

US L Ed Digest, Municipal Corporations 36; Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 10, 37

Index to Annotations, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References:

What constitutes "state action" [****41] under rule exempting state and local governmental action from antitrust laws. 70 L Ed 2d 973.

Supreme Court's views as to what constitutes per se illegal "price fixing" under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 64 L Ed 2d 997.

Valid governmental action as conferring immunity or exemption from private liability under the federal antitrust laws. 12 ALR Fed 329.

Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

November 12, 1985, Argued ; March 26, 1986, Decided

No. 83-2004

Reporter

475 U.S. 574 *; 106 S. Ct. 1348 **; 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 ***; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 38 ****; 54 U.S.L.W. 4319; 1986-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,004; 4 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 368

MATSUSHITA ELECTRIC INDUSTRIAL CO., LTD, ET AL. v. ZENITH RADIO CORP. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 723 F.2d 238, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

prices, conspiracy, predatory, petitioners', losses, conspirators, summary judgment, profits, respondents', antitrust, motive, factfinder, monopoly, alleged conspiracy, district court, competitors, direct evidence, genuine issue, Sherman Act, anti trust law, company rule, predator, market price, below-cost, television, products, schemes, cases, drive, summary judgment motion

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

When a moving party has carried its burden under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. In the language of the Rule, the nonmoving party must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

[**HN3** \[↓\] Remedies, Damages](#)

Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in an antitrust case under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

[**HN4** \[↓\] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act](#)

In an antitrust case, courts should not permit fact-finders to infer conspiracies when such inferences are implausible, because the effect of such practices is often to deter pro-competitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

[**HN5** \[↓\] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act](#)

Conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, without more, support even an inference of conspiracy.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Evidence of alleged predatory pricing conspiracy by Japanese television manufacturers held insufficient to preclude summary judgment dismissing antitrust action.

Summary

American manufacturers of consumer electronic products, principally television sets, brought suit against a group of their Japanese competitors in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, alleging that these competitors had violated 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 2), 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), and other federal statutes. This lawsuit claimed that the Japanese companies had conspired since the 1950's to drive domestic firms from the American market, by maintaining artificially high prices for these products in Japan while selling them at a loss in the United States. In a series of decisions, the District Court excluded the bulk of the evidence on which the American companies had relied. Finally, the District Court granted the Japanese companies' motion for summary judgment dismissing the Sherman Act and Robinson-Patman Act claims, stating that it found no significant probative evidence that the Japanese companies had entered into an agreement or acted in concert with respect to exports in any way that could have injured the American firms (513 F Supp 1100). The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit reversed and remanded for further proceedings, overturning the District Court's evidentiary rulings and determining that a reasonable factfinder could find a conspiracy to depress prices in the American market in order to drive out domestic competitors, funded by excess profits obtained in the Japanese market. Pointing in part to evidence of an agreement among the Japanese companies and their government to set minimum export prices, of the companies' common practice of undercutting the minimum prices through rebate schemes which they concealed from the governments of both countries, and of a further agreement among the companies to limit the number of their American distributors, the Court of Appeals concluded that there was direct evidence of at least some kinds of concerted action by the companies, and that precedents restricting the inference of conspiracy from purely circumstantial evidence of conscious parallel conduct were therefore not dispositive in this case (723 F2d 238).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for further proceedings. In an opinion by Powell, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., and Marshall, Rehnquist, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held that the Court of Appeals had applied improper standards in evaluating the summary judgment, in that (1) the "direct evidence of concert of action" on which the Court of Appeals relied, consisting of evidence of other combinations among the Japanese companies, had little if any relevance to the alleged predatory pricing conspiracy, since a conspiracy to raise profits in one market did not tend to show a conspiracy to sustain losses in another and the remaining combinations showed a tendency to raise prices; and (2) the Court of Appeals had failed to consider the absence of a plausible motive for the Japanese companies to engage in such a conspiracy, which involved substantial profit losses and showed little likelihood of success.

White, J., joined by Brennan, Blackmun, and Stevens, JJ., dissented, expressing the view (1) that the Court of Appeals had relied on the evidence of combinations other than the alleged predatory pricing conspiracy not to support a finding of antitrust injury to the American companies, but simply and correctly as direct evidence of concert of action among the Japanese companies distinguishing this case from traditional "conscious parallelism" cases, and (2) that the Court of Appeals was not required to engage in academic discussions about the likelihood of predatory pricing, but properly determined that expert testimony presented by the American companies was sufficient to create a genuine factual issue regarding long-term, below-cost sales by the Japanese companies.

Headnotes

---

APPEAL §1267 > APPEAL §1750 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §10 > SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §6 > predatory pricing conspiracy -- irrelevant evidence and absence of motive -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

475 U.S. 574, *574; 106 S. Ct. 1348, **1348; 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, ***538; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 38, ****1

In an action by American manufacturers of consumer electronic products which accuse their Japanese competitors of a conspiracy to monopolize the American market through predatory pricing, in violation of 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 2) and 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), a federal Court of Appeals applies improper standards in overturning a summary judgment entered by a federal District Court in favor of the Japanese companies on these claims, where (1) the "direct evidence of concert of action" on which the Court of Appeals relies, consisting of evidence of other combinations among the Japanese companies to raise prices in Japan, fix minimum export prices, and limit the number of distributors of their products in the American market, has little if any relevance to the alleged predatory pricing conspiracy, since a conspiracy to raise profits in one market does not tend to show a conspiracy to sustain losses in another and the remaining combinations show a tendency to raise prices; and (2) the Court of Appeals fails to consider the absence of a plausible motive for the Japanese companies to engage in such a conspiracy, which involves substantial profit losses and shows little likelihood of success; on remand, the Court of Appeals is free to consider whether there is other evidence that is sufficiently unambiguous to permit a trier of fact to find the existence of such a conspiracy. (White, Brennan, Blackmun, and Stevens, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

APPEAL §1087.5 > certiorari -- point not raised in petition > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [blue arrow] [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [blue arrow] [2B]

The United States Supreme Court will not review a Court of Appeals decision, which reversed a summary judgment dismissing claims under a federal statute, where these claims are not mentioned in the questions presented in the petition for certiorari and have not been independently argued by the parties.

INTERNATIONAL LAW §6 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §21 > acts in foreign countries -- application of antitrust laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [blue arrow] [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [blue arrow] [3B]

American manufacturers cannot recover antitrust damages from Japanese competitors based solely on an alleged cartelization of the Japanese market, because American antitrust laws do not regulate the competitive conditions of other nations' economies; the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) reaches conduct outside the borders of the United States, but only when the conduct has an effect on American commerce.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > parties entitled to damages -- lack of injury from antitrust violation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [blue arrow] [4]

American manufacturers cannot recover antitrust damages from Japanese competitors for any conspiracy by the latter to charge higher than competitive prices in the American market, as by setting minimum export prices in cooperation with the Japanese government, since, although such conduct would violate the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1-7), it could not injure the American companies; similarly, the American companies cannot recover for a conspiracy to impose nonprice restraints that have the effect of either raising market price or limiting output, such as the agreement among the Japanese companies limiting the number of their American distributors, since such restrictions, though harmful to competition, actually benefit competitors by making supracompetitive pricing more attractive.

475 U.S. 574, *574; 106 S. Ct. 1348, **1348; 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, ***538; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 38, ****1

EVIDENCE §979 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §10 > antitrust conspiracy -- direct evidence -- actions not creating claim for damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Since neither the alleged supracompetitive pricing by Japanese manufacturers in Japan, as conduct not affecting American commerce, nor the agreements among these manufacturers to limit the number of their distributors in the United States and to set minimum export prices, as conduct not injurious to their American competitors, can by themselves give competing American manufacturers a cognizable claim against the Japanese companies for antitrust damages, it is improper to treat evidence of these alleged conspiracies as direct evidence of a further conspiracy that injured the American companies.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > parties entitled to damages -- cognizable injury -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

However one decides to describe the contours of an alleged conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws, parties suing for damages therefrom must show that the conspiracy caused them an injury for which the antitrust laws provide relief.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > predatory pricing -- requisites for antitrust injury -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

In an action under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) by American manufacturers who allege a predatory pricing conspiracy by their Japanese competitors, the American companies have not suffered an antitrust injury unless the Japanese companies have conspired to drive them out of the relevant markets by (1) pricing below the level necessary to sell their products, or (2) pricing below some appropriate measure of cost; they may not complain of conspiracies that set maximum prices above market levels, or that set minimum prices at any level. (White, Brennan, Blackmun, and Stevens, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §10 > SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §4 > antitrust conspiracy claim -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

In order for an action by American manufacturers, charging their Japanese competitors with a conspiracy to violate 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 2) and 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), to survive the Japanese companies' motion for summary judgment, the American companies must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the Japanese companies entered into an illegal conspiracy that caused the American companies to suffer a cognizable injury.

475 U.S. 574, *574; 106 S. Ct. 1348, **1348; 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, ***538; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 38, ****1

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §10 > SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §4 > antitrust conspiracy claim -- showing of injury -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

In order for an action by American manufacturers, charging their Japanese competitors with various conspiracies in restraint of trade, to survive the Japanese companies' motion for summary judgment, the American companies must not only show a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws, but must also show an injury to them resulting from the illegal conduct; since, except for an alleged conspiracy to monopolize the American market through predatory pricing, the alleged conspiracies could not have caused the American companies to suffer an antitrust injury because they actually tended to benefit them, evidence of these "other" conspiracies cannot defeat the motion for summary judgment unless, in context, it raises a genuine issue concerning the existence of a predatory pricing conspiracy.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §4 > genuine issue of material fact -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

When a party moving for summary judgment has carried its burden under *Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure* of demonstrating the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts; the nonmoving party must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial; where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no genuine issue for trial.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §10 > RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §4 > antitrust conspiracy claim -- implausibility -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [11B]

In an action by American manufacturers charging their Japanese competitors with a conspiracy to monopolize the American market through predatory pricing, if the factual context renders the claim implausible--if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense--then the American companies must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary in order to defeat the Japanese companies' motion for summary judgment; the absence of any plausible motive to engage in the conduct charged is highly relevant to whether a "genuine issue for trial" exists within the meaning of *Rule 56\(e\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure*, since, if the Japanese companies had no rational economic motive to conspire, and their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations such as competitive behavior or an attempt to raise prices, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy. (White, Brennan, Blackmun, and Stevens, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §5 > inferences in favor of nonmoving party -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

475 U.S. 574, *574; 106 S. Ct. 1348, **1348; 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, ***538; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 38, ****1

On summary judgment, the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion.

EVIDENCE §394 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §10 > inferences as to conspiracy -- antitrust case -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a case under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1); thus, conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §10 > SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §4 > TRIAL §197 > antitrust conspiracy -- possibility of independent action -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

In order to survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §10 > SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §4 > antitrust conspiracy claim -- competing inferences -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

In an action by American manufacturers charging their Japanese competitors with a conspiracy to monopolize the American market through predatory pricing, the American companies, in order to defeat a motion for summary judgment, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed them.

Syllabus

---

Petitioners are 21 Japanese corporations or Japanese-controlled American corporations that manufacture and/or sell "consumer electronic products" (CEPs) (primarily television sets). Respondents are American corporations that manufacture and sell television sets. In 1974, respondents brought an action in Federal District Court, alleging that petitioners, over a 20-year period, had illegally conspired to drive American firms from the American CEP market by engaging in a scheme to fix and maintain artificially high prices for television sets sold by petitioners in Japan and, at the same time, to fix and maintain low prices for the sets exported to and sold in the United States. Respondents claim that various portions of this scheme violated, inter alia, §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, § 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, and § 73 of the Wilson Tariff Act. After several years of discovery, petitioners moved for summary judgment on all claims. The District Court then directed the parties to file statements listing all the documentary evidence that would be [****2] offered if the case went to trial. After the statements were filed, the court found the bulk of the evidence on which respondents relied was inadmissible, that the admissible evidence did not raise a genuine issue of material fact as to the existence of the alleged conspiracy, and that any inference of conspiracy was unreasonable. Summary judgment therefore was granted in petitioners' favor. The Court of Appeals reversed. After determining that much of the evidence excluded by the District Court was admissible, the Court of Appeals held that the District Court erred in granting a summary judgment and that there was both direct and circumstantial evidence of a conspiracy. Based on inferences drawn from the evidence, the Court of Appeals concluded that a reasonable factfinder could find a conspiracy to depress prices in the American market in order to drive out American competitors, which conspiracy was funded by excess profits obtained in the Japanese market.

Held: The Court of Appeals did not apply proper standards in evaluating the District Court's decision to grant petitioners' motion for summary judgment. Pp. 582-598.

(a) The "direct evidence" on which the Court of Appeals [***3] relied -- petitioners' alleged supracompetitive pricing in Japan, the "five company rule" by which each Japanese producer was permitted to sell only to five American distributors, and the "check prices" (minimum prices fixed by agreement with the Japanese Government for CEPs exported to the United States) insofar as they established minimum prices in the United States -- cannot by itself give respondents a cognizable claim against petitioners for antitrust damages. Pp. 582-583.

(b) To survive petitioners' motion for a summary judgment, respondents must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether petitioners entered into an illegal conspiracy that caused respondents to suffer a cognizable injury. If the factual context renders respondents' claims implausible, i. e., claims that make no economic sense, respondents must offer more persuasive evidence to support their claims than would otherwise be necessary. To survive a motion for a summary judgment, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently. Thus, respondents [***4] here must show that the inference of a conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed respondents. Pp. 585-588.

(c) Predatory pricing conspiracies are by nature speculative. They require the conspirators to sustain substantial losses in order to recover uncertain gains. The alleged conspiracy is therefore implausible. Moreover, the record discloses that the alleged conspiracy has not succeeded in over two decades of operation. This is strong evidence that the conspiracy does not in fact exist. The possibility that petitioners have obtained supracompetitive profits in the Japanese market does not alter this assessment. Pp. 588-593.

(d) Mistaken inferences in cases such as this one are especially costly, because they chill the very conduct that the antitrust laws are designed to protect. There is little reason to be concerned that by granting summary judgment in cases where the evidence of conspiracy is speculative or ambiguous, courts will encourage conspiracies. Pp. 593-595.

(e) The Court of Appeals erred in two respects: the "direct evidence" on which it relied had little, if any, relevance [***5] to the alleged predatory pricing conspiracy, and the court failed to consider the absence of a plausible motive to engage in predatory pricing. In the absence of any rational motive to conspire, neither petitioners' pricing practices, their conduct in the Japanese market, nor their agreements respecting prices and distributions in the American market sufficed to create a "genuine issue for trial" under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56\(e\). On remand, the Court of Appeals may consider whether there is other, unambiguous evidence of the alleged conspiracy. Pp. 595-598.

Counsel: Donald J. Zoeller argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were John L. Altieri, Jr., Harold G. Levison, Peter J. Gartland, James S. Morris, Kevin R. Keating, Charles F. Schirmeister, Ira M. Millstein, A. Paul Victor, Jeffrey L. Kessler, Carl W. Schwarz, Michael E. Friedlander, William H. Barrett, Donald F. Turner, and Henry T. Reath.

Charles F. Rule argued the cause pro hac vice for the United States as amicus curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were Acting Solicitor General Wallace, Charles S. Stark, Robert B. Nicholson, Edward T. Hand, Richard P. Larm, Abraham D. Sofaer, and Elizabeth [***6] M. Teel.

Edwin P. Rome argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were William H. Roberts, Arnold I. Kalman, Philip J. Curtis, and John Borst, Jr.*

Judges: POWELL, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and MARSHALL, REHNQUIST, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. WHITE, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which BRENNAN, BLACKMUN, and STEVENS, JJ., joined, post, p. 598.

Opinion by: POWELL

Opinion

---

[*576] [***546] [**1350] JUSTICE POWELL delivered the opinion of the Court.

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A]This case requires that we again consider the standard district courts must apply [**1351] when deciding whether to grant summary judgment in an antitrust conspiracy case.

I

Stating the facts of this case is a daunting task. The opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit runs to 69 pages; the primary [****7] opinion of the District Court is more than three times as long. In re Japanese Electronic Products [*577] Antitrust Litigation, 723 F.2d 238 (CA3 1983); 513 F.Supp. 1100 (ED Pa. 1981). Two respected District Judges each have authored a number of opinions in this case; the published ones alone would fill an entire volume of the Federal Supplement. In addition, the parties have filed a 40-volume appendix in this Court that is said to contain the essence of the evidence on which the District Court and the Court of Appeals based their respective decisions.

We will not repeat what these many opinions have stated and restated, or summarize the mass of documents that constitute the record on appeal. Since we review only the standard applied by the Court of Appeals in deciding this case, and not the weight assigned to particular pieces of evidence, we find it unnecessary to state the facts in great detail. What follows is a summary of this case's long history.

A

Petitioners, defendants below, are 21 corporations that manufacture or sell "consumer electronic products" (CEPs) - - for the most part, television sets. Petitioners include both Japanese [****8] manufacturers of CEPs and American firms, controlled by Japanese parents, that sell the Japanese-manufactured products. Respondents, plaintiffs below, are Zenith Radio Corporation (Zenith) and National Union Electric Corporation (NUE). Zenith is an American firm that manufactures and sells television sets. NUE is the corporate successor to Emerson Radio Company, an American firm that manufactured and sold television sets until 1970, when it withdrew from the market after sustaining substantial losses. Zenith and NUE began this lawsuit in 1974,<sup>1</sup> claiming that petitioners had illegally conspired to drive [*578] American firms from the American CEP market. According to respondents, the gist of this conspiracy [***547] was a "scheme to raise, fix and maintain artificially high prices for television receivers sold by [petitioners] in Japan and, at the same time, to fix and maintain low prices for television receivers exported to

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the Government of Japan by Stephen M. Shapiro; and for the American Association of Exporters and Importers et al. by Robert Herzstein and Hadrian R. Katz.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed for the Government of Australia et al. by Mark R. Joelson and Joseph P. Griffin; and for the Semiconductor Industry Association by Joseph R. Creighton.

<sup>1</sup> NUE had filed its complaint four years earlier, in the District Court for the District of New Jersey. Zenith's complaint was filed separately in 1974, in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. The two cases were consolidated in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania in 1974.

475 U.S. 574, *578; 106 S. Ct. 1348, **1351; 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, ***547; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 38, ****8

and sold in the United States."<sup>2</sup> 723 F.2d, at 251 (quoting respondents' preliminary pretrial memorandum). These "low prices" were allegedly at levels that produced substantial losses for petitioners. 513 F.Supp., at 1125. [****9] The conspiracy allegedly began as early as 1953, and according to respondents was in full operation by sometime in the late 1960's. Respondents claimed that various portions of this scheme violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, § 2\(a\) of the Robinson-Patman Act, § 73 of the Wilson Tariff Act, and the Antidumping Act of 1916.

After several years of detailed discovery, petitioners filed motions for summary judgment on all claims against them. The District Court directed the parties to file, with preclusive effect, "Final Pretrial Statements" listing all the documentary evidence that would be offered if the case proceeded to trial. Respondents filed such a statement, and petitioners responded with a series of motions challenging the admissibility [****10] of respondents' evidence. In three detailed opinions, the District Court found the bulk of the evidence on which Zenith and NUE relied inadmissible.<sup>2</sup>

[**1352] [LEdHN\[2A\]\[↑\]](#) [2A]The District Court then turned to petitioners' motions for summary judgment. In an opinion spanning 217 pages, the court found that the admissible evidence did not raise a genuine issue of material fact as to the existence of the alleged [*579] conspiracy. At bottom, the court found, respondents' [****11] claims rested on the inferences that could be drawn from petitioners' parallel conduct in the Japanese and American markets, and from the effects of that conduct on petitioners' American competitors. 513 F.Supp., at 1125-1127. After reviewing the evidence both by category and in toto, the court found that any inference of conspiracy was unreasonable, because (i) some portions of the evidence suggested that petitioners conspired in ways that did not injure respondents, and (ii) the evidence that bore directly on the alleged price-cutting conspiracy did not rebut the more plausible inference that petitioners were cutting prices to compete in the American market and not to monopolize it. Summary judgment therefore was granted on respondents' claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act and the Wilson Tariff Act. Because the Sherman Act § 2 claims, which alleged that petitioners had combined to monopolize the American CEP market, were functionally indistinguishable from the § 1 claims, the court dismissed them also. Finally, the court found that the Robinson-Patman Act claims depended on the same supposed conspiracy as the Sherman Act claims. Since the court had found [****12] no genuine issue of fact as to the conspiracy, [***548] it entered judgment in petitioners' favor on those claims as well.<sup>3</sup>

[****13] [*580] B

The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit reversed.<sup>4</sup> The court began by examining the District Court's evidentiary rulings, and determined that much of the evidence excluded by the District Court was in fact admissible. 723 F.2d, at 260-303. These evidentiary rulings are not before us. See 471 U.S. 1002 (1985) (limiting grant of certiorari).

<sup>2</sup>The inadmissible evidence included various government records and reports, Zenith Radio Corp. v. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., 505 F.Supp. 1125 (ED Pa. 1980), business documents offered pursuant to various hearsay exceptions, Zenith Radio Corp. v. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., 505 F.Supp. 1190 (ED Pa. 1980), and a large portion of the expert testimony that respondents proposed to introduce. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., 505 F.Supp. 1313 (ED Pa. 1981).

<sup>3</sup>The District Court ruled separately that petitioners were entitled to summary judgment on respondents' claims under the Antidumping Act of 1916. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., 494 F.Supp. 1190 (ED Pa. 1980). Respondents appealed this ruling, and the Court of Appeals reversed in a separate opinion issued the same day as the opinion concerning respondents' other claims. In re Japanese Electronic Products Antitrust Litigation, 723 F.2d 319 (CA3 1983).

[LEdHN\[2B\]\[↑\]](#) [2B]Petitioners ask us to review the Court of Appeals' Antidumping Act decision along with its decision on the rest of this mammoth case. The Antidumping Act claims were not, however, mentioned in the questions presented in the petition for certiorari, and they have not been independently argued by the parties. See this Court's Rule 21.1(a). We therefore decline the invitation to review the Court of Appeals' decision on those claims.

On the merits, and based on the newly enlarged record, the court found that the District Court's summary judgment decision was improper. The court acknowledged that "there are legal limitations upon the inferences which may be drawn from circumstantial evidence," 723 F.2d, at 304, but it found that "the legal problem . . . is different" when "there is direct evidence of concert of action." Ibid. Here, the court concluded, "there is both direct evidence of certain [****14] kinds of concert of action and circumstantial evidence having some tendency to suggest that other kinds of concert of action may have occurred." Id., at 304-305. Thus, the court reasoned, cases concerning the limitations on inferring conspiracy from ambiguous evidence were not dispositive. Id., at 305. Turning to the evidence, the court determined that a factfinder reasonably could draw the following conclusions:

1. The Japanese market for CEPs was characterized by oligopolistic behavior, [**1353] with a small number of producers meeting regularly and exchanging information on price and other matters. Id., at 307. This created the opportunity for a stable combination to raise both prices and profits in Japan. American firms could not attack such a combination because the Japanese Government imposed significant barriers to entry. Ibid.
2. Petitioners had relatively higher fixed costs than their American counterparts, and therefore needed to [*581] operate at something approaching full capacity in order to make a profit. Ibid.
3. Petitioners' plant capacity exceeded the needs of the Japanese market. [****15] Ibid.
4. By formal agreements arranged in cooperation with Japan's Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI), petitioners fixed minimum prices for CEPs exported to the American market. Id., at 310. The parties refer to these prices as the "check [***549] prices," and to the agreements that require them as the "check price agreements."
5. Petitioners agreed to distribute their products in the United States according to a "five company rule": each Japanese producer was permitted to sell only to five American distributors. Ibid.
6. Petitioners undercut their own check prices by a variety of rebate schemes. Id., at 311. Petitioners sought to conceal these rebate schemes both from the United States Customs Service and from MITI, the former to avoid various customs regulations as well as action under the antidumping laws, and the latter to cover up petitioners' violations of the check-price agreements.

Based on inferences from the foregoing conclusions,<sup>5</sup> the Court of Appeals concluded that a reasonable factfinder could find a conspiracy to depress prices in the American market in order to drive out American competitors, [****16] which conspiracy was funded by excess profits obtained in the Japanese market. The court apparently did not consider whether it was as plausible to conclude that petitioners' price-cutting behavior was independent and not conspiratorial.

[*582] The court found it unnecessary to address petitioners' claim that they could not be held liable under the antitrust laws for conduct that was compelled by a foreign sovereign. The claim, in essence, was that because MITI required petitioners to enter into the check-price agreements, liability could not be premised on those agreements. The court concluded [****17] that this case did not present any issue of sovereign compulsion, because the check-price agreements were being used as "evidence of a low export price conspiracy" and not as an independent basis for finding antitrust liability. The court also believed it was unclear that the check prices in fact were mandated by the Japanese Government, notwithstanding a statement to that effect by MITI itself. Id., at 315.

<sup>4</sup> As to 3 of the 24 defendants, the Court of Appeals affirmed the entry of summary judgment. Petitioners are the 21 defendants who remain in the case.

<sup>5</sup> In addition to these inferences, the court noted that there was expert opinion evidence that petitioners' export sales "generally were at prices which produced losses, often as high as twenty-five percent on sales." 723 F.2d, at 311. The court did not identify any direct evidence of below-cost pricing; nor did it place particularly heavy reliance on this aspect of the expert evidence. See n. 19, infra.

LEdHN[1B] [1B] We granted certiorari to determine (i) whether the Court of Appeals applied the proper standards in evaluating the District Court's decision to grant petitioners' motion for summary judgment, and (ii) whether petitioners could be held liable under the antitrust laws for a conspiracy in part compelled by a foreign sovereign. 471 U.S. 1002 (1985). We reverse on the first issue, but do not reach the second.

II

LEdHN[3A] [3A] LEdHN[4] [4] LEdHN[5] [5] We begin by emphasizing what respondents' claim is not. Respondents cannot recover antitrust damages based solely on an alleged cartelization of the Japanese market, because American antitrust laws do not regulate the competitive conditions of other nations' economies. [**1354] United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 443 (CA2 1945) [****18] (L. Hand, J.); 1 P. [***550] Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 236d (1978).<sup>6</sup> Nor can respondents recover damages for [*583] any conspiracy by petitioners to charge higher than competitive prices in the American market. Such conduct would indeed violate the Sherman Act, United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392 (1927); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223 (1940), but it could not injure respondents: as petitioners' competitors, respondents stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market price in CEPs. Cf. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488-489 (1977). Finally, for the same reason, respondents cannot recover for a conspiracy to impose nonprice restraints that have the effect of either raising market price or limiting output. Such restrictions, though harmful to competition, actually benefit competitors by making supra-competitive pricing more attractive. Thus, neither petitioners' alleged supracompetitive pricing in Japan, nor the five company rule that limited distribution in this country, nor the check prices insofar as they [****19] established minimum prices in this country, can by themselves give respondents a cognizable claim against petitioners for antitrust damages. The Court of Appeals therefore erred to the extent that it found evidence of these alleged conspiracies to be "direct evidence" of a conspiracy that injured respondents. See 723 F.2d, at 304-305.

LEdHN[3B] [3B]

[****20]

[*584] LEdHN[6A] [6A] Respondents nevertheless argue that these supposed conspiracies, if not themselves grounds for recovery of antitrust damages, are circumstantial evidence of another conspiracy that is cognizable: a conspiracy to monopolize the American market by means of pricing below the market level.<sup>7</sup> The thrust of

<sup>6</sup> The Sherman Act does reach conduct outside our borders, but only when the conduct has an effect on American commerce. Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 704 (1962) ("A conspiracy to monopolize or restrain the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States is not outside the reach of the Sherman Act just because part of the conduct complained of occurs in foreign countries"). The effect on which respondents rely is the artificially depressed level of prices for CEPs in the United States.

Petitioners' alleged cartelization of the Japanese market could not have caused that effect over a period of some two decades. Once petitioners decided, as respondents allege, to reduce output and raise prices in the Japanese market, they had the option of either producing fewer goods or selling more goods in other markets. The most plausible conclusion is that petitioners chose the latter option because it would be more profitable than the former. That choice does not flow from the cartelization of the Japanese market. On the contrary, were the Japanese market perfectly competitive petitioners would still have to choose whether to sell goods overseas, and would still presumably make that choice based on their profit expectations. For this reason, respondents' theory of recovery depends on proof of the asserted price-cutting conspiracy in this country.

<sup>7</sup> Respondents also argue that the check prices, the five company rule, and the price fixing in Japan are all part of one large conspiracy that includes monopolization of the American market through predatory pricing. The argument is mistaken. However one decides to describe the contours of the asserted conspiracy -- whether there is one conspiracy or several -- respondents must show that the conspiracy caused them an injury for which the antitrust laws provide relief. Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 538-540 (1983); Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488-

respondents' [***551] argument is that petitioners used their monopoly profits from the Japanese market to fund a concerted campaign to price predatorily and thereby drive respondents and other American manufacturers of CEPs out of business. Once successful, according to respondents, petitioners would cartelize the American CEP market, restricting output and raising prices above the level that fair competition would produce. The resulting [**1355] monopoly profits, respondents contend, would more than compensate petitioners for the losses they incurred through years of pricing below market level.

LEdHN[6B] [↑] [6B]

[****21] LEdHN[7A] [↑] [7A] The Court of Appeals found that respondents' allegation of a horizontal conspiracy to engage in predatory pricing,<sup>8</sup> [****22] [*585] if proved,<sup>9</sup> would be a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. 723 F.2d, at 306. Petitioners did not appeal from that conclusion. The issue in this case thus becomes whether respondents adduced sufficient evidence in support of their theory to survive summary judgment. We therefore examine the principles that govern the summary judgment determination.

III

LEdHN[8] [↑] [8] LEdHN[9] [↑] [9] To survive petitioners' motion for summary judgment,<sup>10</sup> [****24] respondents must establish that there [***552] is a genuine issue of material [*586] fact as to whether petitioners entered into an illegal conspiracy that caused respondents to suffer a cognizable injury. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 56(e);<sup>11</sup> First 489 (1977); see also Note, Antitrust Standing, Antitrust Injury, and the Per Se Standard, 93 Yale L.J. 1309 (1984). That showing depends in turn on proof that petitioners conspired to price predatorily in the American market, since the other conduct involved in the alleged conspiracy cannot have caused such an injury.

---

<sup>8</sup> Throughout this opinion, we refer to the asserted conspiracy as one to price "predatorily." This term has been used chiefly in cases in which a single firm, having a dominant share of the relevant market, cuts its prices in order to force competitors out of the market, or perhaps to deter potential entrants from coming in. E. g., Southern Pacific Communications Co. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 238 U. S. App. D. C. 309, 331-336, 740 F.2d 980, 1002-1007 (1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1005 (1985). In such cases, "predatory pricing" means pricing below some appropriate measure of cost. E. g., Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 232-235 (CA1 1983); see Utah Pipe Co. v. Continental Baking Co., 386 U.S. 685, 698, 701, 702, n. 14 (1967).

LEdHN[7B] [↑] [7B] There is a good deal of debate, both in the cases and in the law reviews, about what "cost" is relevant in such cases. We need not resolve this debate here, because unlike the cases cited above, this is a Sherman Act § 1 case. For purposes of this case, it is enough to note that respondents have not suffered an antitrust injury unless petitioners conspired to drive respondents out of the relevant markets by (i) pricing below the level necessary to sell their products, or (ii) pricing below some appropriate measure of cost. An agreement without these features would either leave respondents in the same position as would market forces or would actually benefit respondents by raising market prices. Respondents therefore may not complain of conspiracies that, for example, set maximum prices above market levels, or that set minimum prices at any level.

<sup>9</sup> We do not consider whether recovery should ever be available on a theory such as respondents' when the pricing in question is above some measure of incremental cost. See generally Areeda & Turner, Predatory Pricing and Related Practices Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 88 Harv. L. Rev. 697, 709-718 (1975) (discussing cost-based test for use in § 2 cases). As a practical matter, it may be that only direct evidence of below-cost pricing is sufficient to overcome the strong inference that rational businesses would not enter into conspiracies such as this one. See Part IV-A, infra.

<sup>10</sup> Respondents argued before the District Court that petitioners had failed to carry their initial burden under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) of demonstrating the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. See Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 157 (1970). Cf. Catrett v. Johns-Manville Sales Corp., 244 U. S. App. D. C. 160, 756 F.2d 181, cert. granted, 474 U.S. 944 (1985). That issue was resolved in petitioners' favor, and is not before us.

<sup>11</sup> Rule 56(e) provides, in relevant part:

HN1 [↑] "When a motion for summary judgment is made and supported as provided in this rule, an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of his pleading, but his response, by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule, must

National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 288-289 (1968). This showing has two components. First, respondents must show more than a conspiracy [****23] in violation of the antitrust laws; they must show an injury to them resulting from the illegal conduct. Respondents charge petitioners with a whole host of conspiracies in restraint of trade. Supra, at 582-583. Except for the alleged conspiracy to monopolize the American market through predatory pricing, these alleged conspiracies could not have caused respondents to suffer an "antitrust injury," [**1356] Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S., at 489, because they actually tended to benefit respondents. Supra, at 582-583. Therefore, unless, in context, evidence of these "other" conspiracies raises a genuine issue concerning the existence of a predatory pricing conspiracy, that evidence cannot defeat petitioners' summary judgment motion.

LEdHN[10] [10]Second, the issue of fact must be "genuine." Fed. Rules Civ. Proc. 56(c), (e). HN2 When the moving party has carried its burden under Rule 56(c),<sup>12</sup> its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. See DeLuca v. Atlantic Refining Co., 176 F.2d 421, 423 (CA2 1949) (L. Hand, J.), cert. denied, 338 U.S. 943 (1950); 10A C. Wright, A. Miller, & M. Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2727 (1983); Clark, Special Problems [*587] in Drafting and Interpreting Procedural Codes and Rules, 3 Vand. L. Rev. 493, 504-505 (1950). Cf. Sartor v. Arkansas Natural Gas Corp., 321 U.S. 620, 627 (1944). [***25] In the language of the Rule, the nonmoving party must come forward with "specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 56(e) (emphasis added). See also Advisory Committee Note to 1963 Amendment of Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 56(e), 28 U. S. C. App., p. 626 (purpose of summary judgment is to "pierce the pleadings and to assess the proof in order to see whether there is a genuine need for trial"). Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no "genuine issue for trial." Cities Service, supra, at 289.

LEdHN[11A] [11A]It follows from these settled principles that if the factual context renders respondents' claim implausible -- if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense -- respondents must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary. Cities Service is instructive. [***553] The issue in that case was whether [***26] proof of the defendant's refusal to deal with the plaintiff supported an inference that the defendant willingly had joined an illegal boycott. Economic factors strongly suggested that the defendant had no motive to join the alleged conspiracy. 391 U.S., at 278-279. The Court acknowledged that, in isolation, the defendant's refusal to deal might well have sufficed to create a triable issue. Id., at 277. But the refusal to deal had to be evaluated in its factual context. Since the defendant lacked any rational motive to join the alleged boycott, and since its refusal to deal was consistent with the defendant's independent interest, the refusal to deal could not by itself support a finding of antitrust liability. Id., at 280.

LEdHN[12] [12]LEdHN[13] [13]LEdHN[14] [14]LEdHN[15] [15]Respondents correctly note that "[on] summary judgment the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts . . . must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion." United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 [*588] U.S. 654, 655 (1962). But HN3 limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case. Thus, in Monsanto [***27] Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752 (1984), we held that conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. Id., at 764. See also Cities Service, supra, at 280. To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently. 465 U.S., at 764. Respondents in this case, in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that [**1357] could not have harmed respondents. See Cities Service, supra, at 280.

---

set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. If he does not so respond, summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against him."

<sup>12</sup> See n. 10, supra.

Petitioners argue that these principles apply fully to this case. According to petitioners, the alleged conspiracy is one that is economically irrational and practically infeasible. Consequently, petitioners contend, they had no motive to engage in the alleged predatory pricing conspiracy; indeed, they had a strong motive [****28] not to conspire in the manner respondents allege. Petitioners argue that, in light of the absence of any apparent motive and the ambiguous nature of the evidence of conspiracy, no trier of fact reasonably could find that the conspiracy with which petitioners are charged actually existed. This argument requires us to consider the nature of the alleged conspiracy and the practical obstacles to its implementation.

IV

A

A predatory pricing conspiracy is by nature speculative. Any agreement to price below the competitive level requires the conspirators to forgo profits that free competition would offer them. The forgone profits may be considered an investment in the future. For the investment [***554] to be rational, [*589] the conspirators must have a reasonable expectation of recovering, in the form of later monopoly profits, more than the losses suffered. As then-Professor Bork, discussing predatory pricing by a single firm, explained:

"Any realistic theory of predation recognizes that the predator as well as his victims will incur losses during the fighting, but such a theory supposes it may be a rational calculation for the predator to view the losses as an investment [****29] in future monopoly profits (where rivals are to be killed) or in future undisturbed profits (where rivals are to be disciplined). The future flow of profits, appropriately discounted, must then exceed the present size of the losses." R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 145 (1978).

See also McGee, Predatory Pricing Revisited, 23 J. Law & Econ. 289, 295-297 (1980). As this explanation shows, the success of such schemes is inherently uncertain: the short-run loss is definite, but the long-run gain depends on successfully neutralizing the competition. Moreover, it is not enough simply to achieve monopoly power, as monopoly pricing may breed quick entry by new competitors eager to share in the excess profits. The success of any predatory scheme depends on maintaining monopoly power for long enough both to recoup the predator's losses and to harvest some additional gain. Absent some assurance that the hoped-for monopoly will materialize, and that it can be sustained for a significant period of time, "[the] predator must make a substantial investment with no assurance that it will pay off." Easterbrook, Predatory Strategies and Counterstrategies, 48 U. Chi. L. Rev. 263, 268 (1981). [****30] For this reason, there is a consensus among commentators that predatory pricing schemes are rarely tried, and even more rarely successful. See, e. g., Bork, supra, at 149-155; Areeda & Turner, Predatory Pricing and Related Practices Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 88 Harv. L. Rev. 697, 699 (1975); Easterbrook, supra; Koller, The Myth of Predatory Pricing -- An Empirical Study, [*590] 4 Antitrust Law & Econ. Rev. 105 (1971); McGee, Predatory Price Cutting: The Standard Oil (N. J.) Case, 1 J. Law & Econ. 137 (1958); McGee, Predatory Pricing Revisited, 23 J. Law & Econ., at 292-294. See also Northeastern Telephone Co. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 651 F.2d 76, 88 (CA2 1981) ("[Nowhere] in the recent outpouring of literature on the subject do commentators suggest that [predatory] pricing is either common or likely to increase"), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 943 (1982).

These observations apply even to predatory pricing by a single firm seeking monopoly power. In this case, respondents allege that a large number of firms have conspired over a period of many years to [****31] [**1358] charge below-market prices in order to stifle competition. Such a conspiracy is incalculably more difficult to execute than an analogous plan undertaken by a single predator. The conspirators must allocate the losses to be sustained during the conspiracy's operation, and must also allocate any gains to be realized from its success. Precisely because success is speculative and depends on a willingness to endure losses for an indefinite period, each conspirator has a strong incentive to cheat, letting its partners suffer the losses necessary to [***555] destroy the competition while sharing in any gains if the conspiracy succeeds. The necessary allocation is therefore difficult to accomplish. Yet if conspirators cheat to any substantial extent, the conspiracy must fail, because its success depends on depressing the market price for all buyers of CEPs. If there are too few goods at the artificially low price to satisfy demand, the would-be victims of the conspiracy can continue to sell at the "real" market price, and the conspirators suffer losses to little purpose.

Finally, if predatory pricing conspiracies are generally unlikely to occur, they are especially [****32] so where, as here, the prospects of attaining monopoly power seem slight. In order to recoup their losses, petitioners must obtain enough market power to set higher than competitive prices, and then must sustain those prices long enough to earn in excess profits [*591] what they earlier gave up in below-cost prices. See Northeastern Telephone Co. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., supra, at 89; Areeda & Turner, 88 Harv. L. Rev., at 698. Two decades after their conspiracy is alleged to have commenced,<sup>13</sup> petitioners appear to be far from achieving this goal: the two largest shares of the retail market in television sets are held by RCA and respondent Zenith, not by any of petitioners. 6 App. to Brief for Appellant in No. 81-2331 (CA3), pp. 2575a-2576a. Moreover, those shares, which together approximate 40% of sales, did not decline appreciably during the 1970's. Ibid. Petitioners' collective share rose rapidly during this period, from one-fifth or less of the relevant markets to close to 50%. 723 F.2d. at 316.<sup>14</sup> Neither the District Court nor the Court of Appeals found, however, that petitioners' share presently [****33] allows them to charge monopoly prices; to the contrary, respondents contend that the conspiracy is ongoing -- that petitioners are still artificially depressing the market price in order to drive Zenith out of the market. The data in the record strongly suggest that that goal is yet far distant.<sup>15</sup>

[****34] [*592] [**1359] The [***556] alleged conspiracy's failure to achieve its ends in the two decades of its asserted operation is strong evidence that the conspiracy does not in fact exist. Since the losses in such a conspiracy accrue before the gains, they must be "repaid" with interest. And because the alleged losses have accrued over the course of two decades, the conspirators could well require a correspondingly long time to recoup. Maintaining supracompetitive prices in turn depends on the continued cooperation of the conspirators, on the inability of other would-be competitors to enter the market, and (not incidentally) on the conspirators' ability to escape antitrust liability for their minimum price-fixing cartel.<sup>16</sup> [***35] Each of these factors weighs more heavily as the time needed to recoup losses grows. If the losses have been substantial -- as would likely be necessary

<sup>13</sup> NUE's complaint alleges that petitioners' conspiracy began as early as 1960; the starting date used in Zenith's complaint is 1953. NUE Complaint para. 52; Zenith Complaint para. 39.

<sup>14</sup> During the same period, the number of American firms manufacturing television sets declined from 19 to 13. 5 App. to Brief for Appellant in No. 81-2331 (CA3), p. 1961a. This decline continued a trend that began at least by 1960, when petitioners' sales in the United States market were negligible. Ibid. See Zenith Complaint paras. 35, 37.

<sup>15</sup> Respondents offer no reason to suppose that entry into the relevant market is especially difficult, yet without barriers to entry it would presumably be impossible to maintain supracompetitive prices for an extended time. Judge Easterbrook, commenting on this case in a law review article, offers the following sensible assessment:

"The plaintiffs [in this case] maintain that for the last fifteen years or more at least ten Japanese manufacturers have sold TV sets at less than cost in order to drive United States firms out of business. Such conduct cannot possibly produce profits by harming competition, however. If the Japanese firms drive some United States firms out of business, they could not recoup. Fifteen years of losses could be made up only by very high prices for the indefinite future. (The losses are like investments, which must be recovered with compound interest.) If the defendants should try to raise prices to such a level, they would attract new competition. There are no barriers to entry into electronics, as the proliferation of computer and audio firms shows. The competition would come from resurgent United States firms, from other foreign firms (Korea and many other nations make TV sets), and from defendants themselves. In order to recoup, the Japanese firms would need to suppress competition among themselves. On plaintiffs' theory, the cartel would need to last at least thirty years, far longer than any in history, even when cartels were not illegal. None should be sanguine about the prospects of such a cartel, given each firm's incentive to shave price and expand its share of sales. The predation recoupment story therefore does not make sense, and we are left with the more plausible inference that the Japanese firms did not sell below cost in the first place. They were just engaged in hard competition." Easterbrook, The Limits of Antitrust, 63 Texas L. Rev. 1, 26-27 (1984) (footnotes omitted).

<sup>16</sup> The alleged predatory scheme makes sense only if petitioners can recoup their losses. In light of the large number of firms involved here, petitioners can achieve this only by engaging in some form of price fixing after they have succeeded in driving competitors from the market. Such price fixing would, of course, be an independent violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150 (1940).

[*593] in order to drive out the competition <sup>17</sup> -- petitioners would most likely have to sustain their cartel for years simply to break even.

Nor does the possibility that petitioners have obtained supracompetitive profits in the Japanese market change this calculation. Whether or not petitioners have the means to sustain substantial losses in this country over a long period of time, they have no motive to sustain such losses absent some strong likelihood that the alleged conspiracy in this country will eventually pay off. The courts below found no evidence of any such success, and -- as indicated above -- the facts actually are to the contrary: RCA and Zenith, not any of the petitioners, continue to hold the largest share of the American retail market in color television sets. More important, there is nothing to suggest any relationship between petitioners' profits in Japan and the amount petitioners could expect to gain from a conspiracy to [****36] monopolize the American market. In the absence of any such evidence, the possible existence of supracompetitive profits in Japan simply cannot overcome the economic obstacles to the ultimate success of this alleged predatory conspiracy.<sup>18</sup>

B

[***557] In Monsanto, we emphasized that HN4<sup>19</sup> courts should not permit factfinders to infer conspiracies when such inferences are implausible, because the effect of such practices is often to deter procompetitive conduct. Monsanto, 465 U.S., at 762-764. [*594] Respondents, petitioners' [****37] competitors, seek to hold petitioners liable for [**1360] damages caused by the alleged conspiracy to cut prices. Moreover, they seek to establish this conspiracy indirectly, through evidence of other combinations (such as the check-price agreements and the five company rule) whose natural tendency is to raise prices, and through evidence of rebates and other price-cutting activities that respondents argue tend to prove a combination to suppress prices.<sup>19</sup> But cutting prices in order to increase business often is the very essence of competition. Thus, mistaken inferences in cases such as this one are especially costly, because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect. See Monsanto, supra, at 763-764. "[We] must be concerned lest a rule or precedent that authorizes a search for a particular type of undesirable pricing behavior end up by discouraging legitimate price competition." Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 234 (CA1 1983).

[****38] In most cases, this concern must be balanced against the desire that illegal conspiracies be identified and punished. That balance is, however, unusually one-sided in cases such as this one. As we earlier explained, supra, at 588-593, predatory pricing schemes require conspirators to suffer losses in order eventually to realize their illegal gains; moreover, the [*595] gains depend on a host of uncertainties, making such schemes more likely to fail than to succeed. These economic realities tend to make predatory pricing conspiracies self-deterring: unlike most other conduct that violates the antitrust laws, failed predatory pricing schemes are costly to the conspirators.

<sup>17</sup> The predators' losses must actually increase as the conspiracy nears its objective: the greater the predators' market share, the more products the predators sell; but since every sale brings with it a loss, an increase in market share also means an increase in predatory losses.

<sup>18</sup> The same is true of any supposed excess production capacity that petitioners may have possessed. The existence of plant capacity that exceeds domestic demand does tend to establish the ability to sell products abroad. It does not, however, provide a motive for selling at prices lower than necessary to obtain sales; nor does it explain why petitioners would be willing to lose money in the United States market without some reasonable prospect of recouping their investment.

<sup>19</sup> Respondents also rely on an expert study suggesting that petitioners have sold their products in the American market at substantial losses. The relevant study is not based on actual cost data; rather, it consists of expert opinion based on a mathematical construction that in turn rests on assumptions about petitioners' costs. The District Court analyzed those assumptions in some detail and found them both implausible and inconsistent with record evidence. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., 505 F.Supp., at 1356-1363. Although the Court of Appeals reversed the District Court's finding that the expert report was inadmissible, the court did not disturb the District Court's analysis of the factors that substantially undermine the probative value of that evidence. See 723 F.2d, at 277-282. We find the District Court's analysis persuasive. Accordingly, in our view the expert opinion evidence of below-cost pricing has little probative value in comparison with the economic factors, discussed in Part IV-A, supra, that suggest that such conduct is irrational.

See Easterbrook, The Limits of Antitrust, 63 Texas L. Rev. 1, 26 \(1984\). Finally, unlike predatory pricing by a single firm, successful predatory pricing conspiracies involving a large number of firms can be identified and punished once they succeed, since some form of minimum price-fixing agreement would be necessary in order to reap the benefits of predation. Thus, there is little reason to be concerned that by granting summary judgment in cases where the [***558] evidence of conspiracy [****39] is speculative or ambiguous, courts will encourage such conspiracies.

V

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [↑] [1C]As our discussion in Part IV-A shows, petitioners had no motive to enter into the alleged conspiracy. To the contrary, as presumably rational businesses, petitioners had every incentive not to engage in the conduct with which they are charged, for its likely effect would be to generate losses for petitioners with no corresponding gains. Cf. Cities Service, 391 U.S., at 279. The Court of Appeals did not take account of the absence of a plausible motive to enter into the alleged predatory pricing conspiracy. It focused instead on whether there was "direct evidence of concert of action." 723 F.2d, at 304. The Court of Appeals erred in two respects: (i) the "direct evidence" on which the court relied had little, if any, relevance to the alleged predatory pricing conspiracy; and (ii) the court failed to consider the absence of a plausible motive to engage in predatory pricing.

[**1361] The "direct evidence" on which the court relied was evidence of other combinations, not of a predatory pricing conspiracy. Evidence that petitioners conspired to raise prices in Japan [****40] provides little, if any, support for respondents' [*596] claims: a conspiracy to increase profits in one market does not tend to show a conspiracy to sustain losses in another. Evidence that petitioners agreed to fix minimum prices (through the check-price agreements) for the American market actually works in petitioners' favor, because it suggests that petitioners were seeking to place a floor under prices rather than to lower them. The same is true of evidence that petitioners agreed to limit the number of distributors of their products in the American market -- the so-called five company rule. That practice may have facilitated a horizontal territorial allocation, see United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596 \(1972\), but its natural effect would be to raise market prices rather than reduce them.<sup>20</sup> Evidence that tends to support any of these collateral conspiracies thus says little, if anything, about the existence of a conspiracy to charge below-market prices in the American market over a period of two decades.

[****41] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [↑] [11B]That being the case, the absence of any plausible motive to engage in the conduct charged is highly relevant to whether a "genuine issue for trial" exists within the meaning of Rule 56\(e\). Lack of motive bears on the range of permissible conclusions that might be drawn [***559] from ambiguous evidence: if petitioners had no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations, [*597] the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy. See Cities Service, supra, at 278-280. Here, the conduct in question consists largely of (i) pricing at levels that succeeded in taking business away from respondents, and (ii) arrangements that may have limited petitioners' ability to compete with each other (and thus kept prices from going even lower). This conduct suggests either that petitioners behaved competitively, or that petitioners conspired to raise prices. Neither possibility is consistent with an agreement among 21 companies to price below market levels. Moreover, the predatory pricing scheme that this conduct is said to prove is one that makes no practical sense: it calls for petitioners [****42] to destroy companies larger and better established than themselves, a goal that remains far distant more than two decades after the conspiracy's birth. Even had they succeeded in obtaining their monopoly, there is nothing in the record to suggest that they could recover the losses they would need to sustain along the way. In sum, in light of the absence of any rational motive to conspire, neither petitioners' pricing practices, nor their conduct in the Japanese market, nor their agreements respecting prices and distribution in the American market, suffice to create a "genuine issue for trial." Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 56(e).<sup>21</sup>

---

<sup>20</sup> The Court of Appeals correctly reasoned that the five company rule might tend to insulate petitioners from competition with each other. 723 F.2d, at 306. But this effect is irrelevant to a conspiracy to price predatorily. Petitioners have no incentive to underprice each other if they already are pricing below the level at which they could sell their goods. The far more plausible inference from a customer allocation agreement such as the five company rule is that petitioners were conspiring to raise prices, by limiting their ability to take sales away from each other. Respondents -- petitioners' competitors -- suffer no harm from a conspiracy to raise prices. Supra, at 582-583. Moreover, it seems very unlikely that the five company rule had any significant effect of any kind, since the "rule" permitted petitioners to sell to their American subsidiaries, and did not limit the number of distributors to which the subsidiaries could resell. 513 F.Supp., at 1190.

[****43] [**1362] On remand, the Court of Appeals is free to consider whether there is other evidence that is sufficiently unambiguous to permit a trier of fact to find that petitioners conspired to price predatorily for two decades despite the absence of any apparent motive to do so. The evidence must "[tend] to exclude the possibility" that petitioners underpriced respondents to compete for business rather than to implement an economically [*598] senseless conspiracy. Monsanto, 465 U.S., at 764. In the absence of such evidence, there is no "genuine issue for trial" under Rule 56(e), and petitioners are entitled to have summary judgment reinstated.

VI

Our decision makes it unnecessary to reach the sovereign compulsion issue. The heart of petitioners' argument on that issue is that MITI, an agency of the Government of Japan, required petitioners to fix minimum prices for export to the United States, and that petitioners are therefore immune from antitrust liability for any scheme of which those minimum prices were an integral part. As we discussed in Part II, supra, respondents could not have suffered a cognizable injury from any action that raised prices [****44] in the American CEP market. If liable at all, petitioners are liable for conduct that is distinct from the check-price agreements. The sovereign compulsion [***560] question that both petitioners and the Solicitor General urge us to decide thus is not presented here.

The decision of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: WHITE

Dissent

---

JUSTICE WHITE, with whom JUSTICE BRENNAN, JUSTICE BLACKMUN, and JUSTICE STEVENS join, dissenting.

It is indeed remarkable that the Court, in the face of the long and careful opinion of the Court of Appeals, reaches the result it does. The Court of Appeals faithfully followed the relevant precedents, including First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253 (1968), and Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752 (1984), and it kept firmly in mind the principle that proof of a conspiracy should not be fragmented, see Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699 (1962). After surveying the massive record, including very [*599] significant [****45] evidence that the District Court erroneously had excluded, the Court of Appeals concluded that the evidence taken as a whole creates a genuine issue of fact whether petitioners engaged in a conspiracy in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and § 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act. In my view, the Court of Appeals' opinion more than adequately supports this judgment.

---

<sup>21</sup> We do not imply that, if petitioners had had a plausible reason to conspire, ambiguous conduct could suffice to create a triable issue of conspiracy. Our decision in Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752 (1984), establishes that HNS↑ conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, without more, support even an inference of conspiracy. Id., at 763-764. See supra, at 588.

The Court's opinion today, far from identifying reversible error, only muddies the waters. In the first place, the Court makes confusing and inconsistent statements about the appropriate standard for granting summary judgment. Second, the Court makes a number of assumptions that invade the factfinder's province. Third, the Court faults the Third Circuit for nonexistent errors and remands the case although it is plain that respondents' evidence raises genuine issues of material fact.

I

The Court's initial discussion of summary judgment standards appears consistent with settled doctrine. I agree that [**1363] "[where] the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no 'genuine issue for trial.'" Ante, at 587 (quoting Cities Service, supra, at 289). [***46] I also agree that "[on] summary judgment the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts . . . must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion." Ante, at 587 (quoting United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, 655 (1962)). But other language in the Court's opinion suggests a departure from traditional summary judgment doctrine. Thus, the Court gives the following critique of the Third Circuit's opinion:

"[The] Court of Appeals concluded that a reasonable factfinder could find a conspiracy to depress prices in the American market in order to drive out American competitors, [**561] which conspiracy was funded by excess profits obtained in the Japanese market. The court apparently did not consider whether it was as plausible to conclude [*600] that petitioners' price-cutting behavior was independent and not conspiratorial." Ante, at 581.

In a similar vein, the Court summarizes Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., supra, as holding that "courts should not permit factfinders to infer conspiracies when such inferences are implausible . . ." Ante, at 593. Such language [***47] suggests that a judge hearing a defendant's motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case should go beyond the traditional summary judgment inquiry and decide for himself whether the weight of the evidence favors the plaintiff. Cities Service and Monsanto do not stand for any such proposition. Each of those cases simply held that a particular piece of evidence standing alone was insufficiently probative to justify sending a case to the jury.<sup>1</sup> These holdings in no way undermine [*601] the doctrine that all evidence must be construed in the light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment.

[***48] If the Court intends to give every judge hearing a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case the job of determining if the evidence makes the inference of conspiracy more probable than not, it is overturning settled

---

<sup>1</sup> The Court adequately summarizes the quite fact-specific holding in Cities Service. Ante, at 587.

In Monsanto, the Court held that a manufacturer's termination of a price-cutting distributor after receiving a complaint from another distributor is not, standing alone, sufficient to create a jury question. 465 U.S., at 763-764. To understand this holding, it is important to realize that under United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300 (1919), it is permissible for a manufacturer to announce retail prices in advance and terminate those who fail to comply, but that under Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373 (1911), it is impermissible for the manufacturer and its distributors to agree on the price at which the distributors will sell the goods. Thus, a manufacturer's termination of a price-cutting distributor after receiving a complaint from another distributor is lawful under Colgate, unless the termination is pursuant to a shared understanding between the manufacturer and its distributors respecting enforcement of a resale price maintenance scheme. Monsanto holds that to establish liability under Dr. Miles, more is needed than evidence of behavior that is consistent with a distributor's exercise of its prerogatives under Colgate. Thus, "[there] must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." 465 U.S., at 764. Monsanto does not hold that if a terminated dealer produces some further evidence of conspiracy beyond the bare fact of postcomplaint termination, the judge hearing a motion for summary judgment should balance all the evidence pointing toward conspiracy against all the evidence pointing toward independent action.

law. If the Court does not intend such a pronouncement, it should refrain from using unnecessarily broad and confusing language.

II

In defining what respondents must show in order to recover, the Court makes assumptions [**1364] that invade the factfinder's province. The Court states with very little discussion that respondents can recover under § 1 of the Sherman Act only if they prove that "petitioners conspired to drive respondents out of the relevant markets by (i) pricing below the level necessary to sell their products, or [***562] (ii) pricing below some appropriate measure of cost." Ante, at 585, n. 8. This statement is premised on the assumption that "[an] agreement without these features would either leave respondents in the same position as would market forces or would actually benefit respondents by raising market prices." Ibid. In making this assumption, the Court ignores the contrary conclusions of respondents' expert DePodwin, whose [****49] report in very relevant part was erroneously excluded by the District Court.

The DePodwin Report, on which the Court of Appeals relied along with other material, indicates that respondents were harmed in two ways that are independent of whether petitioners priced their products below "the level necessary to sell their products or . . . some appropriate measure of cost." Ibid. First, the Report explains that the price-raising scheme in Japan resulted in lower consumption of petitioners' goods in that country and the exporting of more of petitioners' goods to this country than would have occurred had prices in Japan been at the competitive level. Increasing [*602] exports to this country resulted in depressed prices here, which harmed respondents.<sup>2</sup> [****50] Second, the DePodwin Report indicates that petitioners exchanged confidential proprietary information and entered into agreements such as the five company rule with the goal of avoiding intragroup competition in the United States market. The Report explains that petitioners' restrictions on intragroup competition caused respondents to lose business that they would not have lost had petitioners competed with one another.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> Dr. DePodwin summarizes his view of the harm caused by Japanese cartelization as follows:

"When we consider the injuries inflicted on United States producers, we must again look at the Japanese television manufacturers' export agreement as part of a generally collusive scheme embracing the Japanese domestic market as well. This scheme increased the supply of television receivers to the United States market while restricting supply in the Japanese market. If Japanese manufacturers had competed in both domestic and export markets, they would have sold more in the domestic market and less in the United States. A greater proportion of Japanese production capacity would have been devoted to domestic sales. Domestic prices would have been lower and export prices would have been higher. The size of the price differential between domestic and export markets would have diminished practically to the vanishing point. Consequently, competition among Japanese producers in both markets would have resulted in reducing exports to the United States and United States prices would have risen. In addition, investment by the United States industry would have increased. As it was, however, the influx of sets at depressed prices cut the rates of return on television receiver production facilities in the United States to so low a level as to make such investment uneconomic."

"We can therefore conclude that the American manufacturers of television receivers would have made larger sales at higher prices in the absence of the Japanese cartel agreements. Thus, the collusive behavior of Japanese television manufacturers resulted in a very severe injury to those American television manufacturers, particularly to National Union Electric Corporation, which produced a preponderance of television sets with screen sizes of nineteen inches and lower, especially those in the lower range of prices." 5 App. to Brief for Appellants in No. 81-2331 (CA3), pp. 1629a-1630a.

<sup>3</sup> The DePodwin Report has this, among other things, to say in summarizing the harm to respondents caused by the five company rule, exchange of production data, price coordination, and other allegedly anti-competitive practices of petitioners:

"The impact of Japanese anti-competitive practices on United States manufacturers is evident when one considers the nature of competition. When a market is fully competitive, firms pit their resources against one another in an attempt to secure the business of individual customers. However, when firms collude, they violate a basic tenet of competitive behavior, i. e., that they act independently. United States firms were confronted with Japanese competitors who collusively were seeking to destroy their established customer relationships. Each Japanese company had targeted customers which it could service with reasonable assurance that its fellow Japanese cartel members would not become involved. But just as importantly, each Japanese firm would be assured that what was already a low price level for Japanese television receivers in the United States market would not be further depressed by the actions of its Japanese associates."

[****51] [*603] [**1365] The [***563] DePodwin Report alone creates a genuine factual issue regarding the harm to respondents caused by Japanese cartelization and by agreements restricting competition among petitioners in this country. No doubt the Court prefers its own economic theorizing to Dr. DePodwin's, but that is not a reason to deny the factfinder an opportunity to consider Dr. DePodwin's views on how petitioners' alleged collusion harmed respondents.<sup>4</sup>

[****52] [*604] The Court, in discussing the unlikelihood of a predatory conspiracy, also consistently assumes that petitioners valued profit-maximization over growth. See, e. g., ante, at 595. In light of the evidence that petitioners sold their goods in this country at substantial losses over a long period of time, see Part III-B, infra, I believe that this is an assumption that should be argued to the factfinder, not decided by the Court.

III

In reversing the Third Circuit's judgment, the Court identifies two alleged errors: "(i) [The] 'direct evidence' on which the [Court of Appeals] relied had little, if any, relevance to the alleged predatory pricing conspiracy; and (ii) the court failed to consider the absence of a plausible motive to engage in predatory [***564] pricing." Ante, at 595. The Court's position is without substance.

A

The first claim of error is that the Third Circuit treated evidence regarding price fixing in Japan and the so-called five company rule and check prices as "direct evidence" of a conspiracy that injured respondents." Ante, at 583 (citing In re Japanese Electronics Products Antitrust Litigation, 723 F.2d 238, 304-305 (1983)). [****53] The passage from the Third [*605] Circuit's opinion in which the Court locates this alleged error makes what I consider to be a quite simple and correct observation, namely, that this case is distinguishable from traditional "conscious parallelism" cases, in that there is direct evidence of concert of action among petitioners. Ibid. The Third Circuit did not, as the Court implies, jump unthinkingly from this observation to the conclusion that evidence regarding the five company rule could support a finding of antitrust injury to respondents.<sup>5</sup> The Third [**1366] Circuit twice specifically noted

"The result was a phenomenal growth in exports, particularly to the United States. Concurrently, Japanese manufacturers, and the defendants in particular, made large investments in new plant and equipment and expanded production capacity. It is obvious, therefore, that the effect of the Japanese cartel's concerted actions was to generate a larger volume of investment in the Japanese television industry than would otherwise have been the case. This added capacity both enabled and encouraged the Japanese to penetrate the United States market more deeply than they would have had they competed lawfully." Id., at 1628a-1629a.

For a more complete statement of DePodwin's explanation of how the alleged cartel operated, and the harms it caused respondents, see id., at 1609a-1642a. This material is summarized in a chart found id., at 1633a.

<sup>4</sup> In holding that Parts IV and V of the Report had been improperly excluded, the Court of Appeals said:

"The trial court found that DePodwin did not use economic expertise in reaching the opinion that the defendants participated in a Japanese television cartel. 505 F.Supp. at 1342-46. We have examined the excluded portions of Parts IV and V in light of the admitted portions, and we conclude that this finding is clearly erroneous. As a result, the court also held the opinions to be unhelpful to the factfinder. What the court in effect did was to eliminate all parts of the report in which the expert economist, after describing the conditions in the respective markets, the opportunities for collusion, the evidence pointing to collusion, the terms of certain undisputed agreements, and the market behavior, expressed the opinion that there was concert of action consistent with plaintiffs' conspiracy theory. Considering the complexity of the economic issues involved, it simply cannot be said that such an opinion would not help the trier of fact to understand the evidence or determine that fact in issue." In re Japanese Electronics Products Antitrust Litigation, 723 F.2d 238, 280 (1983).

The Court of Appeals had similar views about Parts VI and VII.

<sup>5</sup> I use the Third Circuit's analysis of the five company rule by way of example; the court did an equally careful analysis of the parts the cartel activity in Japan and the check prices could have played in an actionable conspiracy. See generally id., at 303-311.

that horizontal agreements allocating customers, though illegal, do not ordinarily injure competitors of the agreeing parties. Id., at 306, 310-311. However, after reviewing evidence of cartel activity in Japan, collusive establishment of dumping prices in this country, and long-term, below-cost sales, the Third Circuit held that a factfinder could reasonably conclude that the five company rule was not a simple price-raising device:

"[A] factfinder might reasonably infer that the allocation of customers in the United States, combined with price-fixing [****54] in Japan, was intended to permit concentration of the effects of dumping upon American competitors while eliminating competition among the Japanese manufacturers in either market." Id., at 311.

I see nothing erroneous in this reasoning.

B

The Court's second charge of error is that the Third Circuit was not sufficiently skeptical of respondents' allegation that petitioners engaged in predatory pricing conspiracy. But [*606] the Third Circuit is not required to engage in academic discussions about predation; [****55] it is required to decide whether respondents' evidence creates a genuine issue of material fact. The Third Circuit did its job, and remanding the case so that it can do the same job again is simply pointless.

The Third Circuit indicated that it considers respondents' evidence sufficient to create a genuine factual issue regarding long-term, below-cost sales by petitioners. Ibid. The Court tries to whittle away at this conclusion by suggesting that the "expert opinion evidence of below-cost pricing has little probative value in comparison with the economic factors . . . that suggest that such conduct [***565] is irrational." Ante, at 594, n. 19. But the question is not whether the Court finds respondents' experts persuasive, or prefers the District Court's analysis; it is whether, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to respondents, a jury or other factfinder could reasonably conclude that petitioners engaged in long-term, below-cost sales. I agree with the Third Circuit that the answer to this question is "yes."

It is misleading for the Court to state that the Court of Appeals "did not disturb the District Court's analysis of the factors that substantially [****56] undermine the probative value of [evidence in the DePodwin Report respecting below-cost sales]." Ibid. The Third Circuit held that the exclusion of the portion of the DePodwin Report regarding below-cost pricing was erroneous because "the trial court ignored DePodwin's uncontradicted affidavit that all data relied on in his report were of the type on which experts in his field would reasonably rely." 723 F.2d, at 282. In short, the Third Circuit found DePodwin's affidavit sufficient to create a genuine factual issue regarding the correctness of his conclusion that petitioners sold below cost over a long period of time. Having made this determination, the court saw no need -- nor do I -- to address the District Court's analysis point by point. The District Court's criticisms of DePodwin's [*607] methods are arguments that a factfinder should consider.

IV

Because I believe that the Third Circuit was correct in holding that respondents have demonstrated the existence of genuine issues of material fact, I would affirm [**1367] the judgment below and remand this case for trial.

References

---

Go [****57] To Supreme Court Brief(s) 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade and Unfair Trade Practices
44, 105, 186-189, 284

---

In discussing the five-company rule, I do not mean to imply any conclusion on the validity of petitioners' sovereign compulsion defense. Since the Court does not reach this issue, I see no need of my addressing it.

475 U.S. 574, *607; 106 S. Ct. 1348, **1367; 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, ***565; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 38, ****57

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:254, 54:255

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1, 2, 13\(a\); USCS, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 56

US L Ed Digest, Appeal 1087.5(1), 1267, 1750; Evidence 394, 979; International Law 6; Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 10, 21, 36, 67; Summary Judgment and Judgment on Pleadings 4-6; Trial 197

Index to Annotations, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; Summary Judgment

Annotation References:

Reviewability of federal court's denial of motion for summary judgment. 17 L Ed 2d 886.

Extraterritorial application of federal antitrust [****58] laws to acts occurring in foreign commerce. 40 ALR Fed 343.

---

End of Document

FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists

Supreme Court of the United States

March 25, 1986, Argued ; June 2, 1986, Decided

No. 84-1809

Reporter

476 U.S. 447 *; 106 S. Ct. 2009 **; 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 ***; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 79 ****; 54 U.S.L.W. 4531; 1986-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,117

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. INDIANA FEDERATION OF DENTISTS

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 745 F.2d 1124, reversed.

Core Terms

---

x ray, dentists, insurers, patients, dental, requests, withhold, insurance company, cooperation, customers, benefits, claim form, Sherman Act, determinations, consumers, costly, unfair, conjunction, antitrust, practices, compete, restraint of trade, dental services, conspiracy, costs, dental treatment, refuse to submit, anticompetitive, diagnostic, boycotts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Factual Determinations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Judicial Review

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence

HN1 Reviewability, Factual Determinations

15 U.S.C.S. § 45\(c\) forbids a court to make its own appraisal of the testimony, picking and choosing for itself among uncertain and conflicting inferences. Rather, as under the essentially identical substantial evidence standard for review of agency factfinding, the court must accept the Federal Trade Commission's findings of fact if they are supported by such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > Federal Trade Commission Act

476 U.S. 447, *447; 106 S. Ct. 2009, **2009; 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, ***445; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 79, ****1

Environmental Law > Administrative Proceedings & Litigation > Judicial Review

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

HN2 Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, Federal Trade Commission Act

The standard of unfairness under the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 45, is by necessity, an elusive one, encompassing not only practices that violate the Sherman Act and the other antitrust laws, but also practices that the Commission determines are against public policy for other reasons. Once the Commission has chosen a particular legal rationale for holding a practice to be unfair, however, familiar principles of administrative law dictate that its decision must stand or fall on that basis, and a reviewing court may not consider other reasons why the practice might be deemed unfair.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under U.S. Supreme Court precedents, a restraint may be adjudged unreasonable either because it fits within a class of restraints that has been held to be "per se" unreasonable, or because it violates what has come to be known as the "Rule of Reason," under which the test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Professional Associations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4 Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Courts have been slow to condemn rules adopted by professional associations as unreasonable per se and, in general, to extend per se analysis to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

As a matter of law, the absence of proof of market power does not justify a naked restriction on price or output, and such a restriction requires some competitive justification even in the absence of a detailed market analysis.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Federal Trade Commission ruling that dentists' refusal to submit X-rays to insurers violates 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) held supported by evidence and law.

Summary

A group of Indiana dentists, comprising a substantial majority of their profession in two cities, formed a supposed union for the purpose of promulgating a "work rule" which required members to withhold X-rays requested by dental insurers for use in evaluating claims; the state dental association had dropped a similar policy pursuant to a consent decree with the Federal Trade Commission (FTC). The FTC, after a full evidentiary hearing, issued a cease and desist order (101 FTC 57) against further union organizing efforts, (1) finding that union members had conspired to withhold such X-rays, and that this had the effect of suppressing competition in this matter in areas where union members predominated, and (2) ruling that these findings showed an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) and thus an unfair method of competition in violation of 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USCS 45). The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit vacated the FTC's order on the ground that it was not supported by substantial evidence, finding no proof that dentists would compete in this matter in the absence of restraint or that the rule had prevented such competition, and noting the FTC's failure to define the relevant market, to determine the union's power therein, or to find that the work rule had increased dental costs (745 F2d 1124).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by White, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that the findings of the FTC were substantially supported by the record, and were sufficient as a matter of law to establish a violation of 1 of the Sherman Act and, hence, of 5 of the FTC Act, without extensive market analysis or a specific finding that the rule increased costs.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §42 > conspiracy -- dental services -- review of FTC findings -- cease and desist order -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

Findings by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) that certain dentists, in forming a supposed union which promulgated a "work rule" requiring members to withhold X-rays requested by dental insurers for use in evaluating claims, have conspired to withhold such X-rays, and that this conspiracy has the tendency and effect of suppressing competition among dentists in this matter, are supported by substantial evidence, and are sufficient as a matter of law to establish an unreasonable restraint of trade violating 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) and, hence, an unfair method of competition violating 5 of the FTC Act (15 USCS 45); the finding of conspiracy is incontestably supported by evidence that promulgation of the work rule was a principal reason for the formation of the union, the finding that individual dentists would provide X-rays but for the work rule is adequately supported by common sense and economic theory as well as by evidence of practices in other states, and the finding of actual diminished competition is adequately supported by evidence that insurers have been unable to obtain X-rays in cities where union members comprise a substantial majority of the profession; thus, the FTC's order requiring the union to cease and desist from further efforts to organize dentists in support of such a practice, on the ground that this practice violates the aforementioned statutes, must be sustained.

476 U.S. 447, *447; 106 S. Ct. 2009, **2009; 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, ***445; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 79, ****1

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §115 > review of FTC findings -- substantial evidence -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

In reviewing factual findings by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) with regard to an alleged violation of 5 of the FTC Act (15 USCS 45), a court is prohibited under the "substantial evidence" rule of 45(c) from making its own appraisal of the testimony, and picking and choosing for itself among uncertain and conflicting inferences; rather, the court must accept the FTC's findings of fact if they are supported by such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §114 > review of FTC decisions -- legal issues -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

On judicial review of a Federal Trade Commission (FTC) decision regarding an alleged violation of 5 of the FTC Act (15 USCS 45), the legal issues presented--that is, the identification of governing legal standards and their application to the facts found--are for the courts to resolve, although the courts are to give some deference to the FTC's informed judgment that a particular commercial practice is to be condemned as unfair.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §102 > unfair practices -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The standard of "unfairness" under 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USCS 45) encompasses not only practices that violate the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1-7) and the other antitrust laws, but also practices which the Commission determines are against public policy for other reasons.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §114 > review of agency decisions -- unfair practices -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Once the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) has chosen a particular legal rationale for holding a practice to be unfair, and thus subject to condemnation under 5 of the FTC Act (15 USCS 45), its decision must stand or fall on that basis, and a reviewing court may not consider other reasons why the practice might be deemed unfair.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > unreasonable restraint of trade -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

A restraint of trade may be adjudged unreasonable, and thus a violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), either because it fits within a class of restraints that has been held to be "per se" unreasonable, or because it violates what has come to be known as the "Rule of Reason," under which the test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition.

476 U.S. 447, *447; 106 S. Ct. 2009, **2009; 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, ***445; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 79, ****1

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > group boycotts -- per se rule --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

The category of restraints of trade classified as group boycotts, which are regarded as per se violations of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), is not to be expanded indiscriminately; the per se approach is generally limited to cases in which firms with market power boycott suppliers or customers in order to discourage them from doing business with a competitor.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §42 > services -- refusal to compete --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

A refusal to compete with respect to the package of services offered to customers, no less than a refusal to compete with respect to the price term of an agreement, impairs the ability of the market to advance social welfare by insuring the provision of desired goods and services to consumers at a price approximating the marginal cost of providing them, and absent some competing procompetitive virtue--such as the creation of efficiencies in the operation of the market or the provision of goods and service--such an agreement cannot be sustained under the Rule of Reason.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §19 > market power -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

The absence of proof of market power does not justify a naked restriction on price or output; such a restriction requires some competitive justification even in the absence of a detailed market analysis.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §19 > dental services -- market power --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

In the case of dentists who are alleged to have violated 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) by forming a supposed union and promulgating a "work rule" which requires members to withhold X-rays requested by dental insurers for use in evaluating claims, a finding of actual, sustained adverse effects on competition in this regard in two cities where union dentists predominate, viewed in light of the reality that markets for dental services tend to be relatively localized, is legally sufficient to support a finding that the challenged restraint is unreasonable even in the absence of elaborate market analysis.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > withholding information -- dental services -
- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

A concerted and effective effort to withhold, or make more costly, information desired by consumers for the purpose of determining whether a particular purchase is cost-justified, is likely enough to disrupt the price-setting mechanism of the market that it may be condemned without proof that it caused higher prices, or the purchase of higher-priced services, than would otherwise have occurred; thus, a holding that a supposed dentist union's policy of withholding X-rays requested by dental insurers for use in evaluating claims constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade is not precluded by the lack of any finding that the policy resulted in dental services that were more costly than those that patients and their insurers would otherwise have chosen; even if X-rays would in fact be completely useless to the insurers and patients in making an informed choice as to the least costly adequate treatment, the union would not be justified in deciding for them that they did not need that information.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > state action exemption -- dental services -
- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

That a particular practice may be unlawful is not, in itself, a sufficient justification for collusion among competitors to prevent it; anticompetitive collusion among private actors, even when its goal is consistent with state policy, acquires antitrust immunity only when it is actively supervised by the state; thus, a supposed dentist union's policy of withholding X-rays requested by dental insurers for use in evaluating claims is subject to condemnation under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1-5) regardless of whether that policy is consistent with state policy.

Syllabus

---

Respondent organization of dentists in Indiana promulgated a policy requiring its members to withhold x rays from dental insurers in connection with evaluating patients' claims for benefits. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) issued a cease-and-desist order, ruling that the policy constituted an unfair method of competition in violation of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, since it amounted to a conspiratorial restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The Court of Appeals vacated the FTC's order on the ground that it was not supported by substantial evidence, holding that the FTC's findings that respondent's x-ray policy was anticompetitive were erroneous; that the findings were inadequate because of the FTC's failure to define the market in which respondent allegedly restrained competition and to establish that respondent had the power to restrain competition in that market; and that the FTC erred in not determining whether the alleged restraint on competition among dentists had actually resulted in higher dental costs to patients and insurers.

****2] Held:

1. The FTC's factual findings regarding respondent's x-ray policy are supported by substantial evidence. There is no dispute that respondent's members conspired among themselves to withhold x rays, and the FTC's finding that competition among dentists with respect to cooperation with insurers' requests for x rays was diminished where respondent held sway also finds adequate support in the record. Pp. 455-457.
2. Evaluated under the Rule of Reason, the FTC's factual findings are sufficient as a matter of law to establish a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, i. e., an unreasonable restraint of trade, and hence a violation of § 5 of the FTC

Act. Respondent's x-ray policy takes the form of a horizontal agreement among its members to withhold from their customers a particular service that they desire. Absent some countervailing procompetitive virtue, such an agreement cannot be sustained under the Rule of Reason. This conclusion is not precluded by the absence of specific findings as to the market in which respondent allegedly restrained competition or as to the power of respondent's members in that market or by the FTC's failure to find that respondent's x-ray policy [****3] resulted in more costly dental services than the patients and insurers would have chosen if they were able to evaluate x rays in conjunction with claim forms. Nor do alleged noncompetitive "quality of care" considerations justify respondent's x-ray policy. And whether or not respondent's policy is consistent with Indiana's supposed policy against submission of x rays to insurers, it is not immunized from antitrust scrutiny. Anticompetitive collusion among private actors, even when consistent with state policy, acquires antitrust immunity only when it is actually supervised by the State, and there is no suggestion of such supervision here. Pp. 457-465.

Counsel: Marcy J. K. Tiffany argued the cause for petitioner. With her on the briefs were Solicitor General Fried, Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg, Ernest J. Isenstadt, David C. Shonka, and L. Barry Costilo.

Bruce W. Graham argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief was Ronald K. Fowler.*

[****4]

Judges: WHITE, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[*448] [***450] [**2013] JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A] This case concerns commercial relations among certain Indiana dentists, their patients, and the patients' dental health care insurers. The question presented is whether the Federal Trade Commission correctly concluded that a conspiracy among dentists to refuse to submit x rays to dental insurers for use in benefits determinations constituted an [*449] "unfair method of competition" in violation of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 719, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 45 (1982 ed. and Supp. II).

I

Since the 1970's, dental health insurers, responding to the demands of their policyholders, have attempted to contain the cost of dental treatment by, among other devices, limiting payment of benefits to the cost of the "least expensive yet adequate treatment" suitable to the needs of individual patients. Implementation of such cost-containment measures, known as "alternative benefits" [***451] plans, requires evaluation by the insurer of the diagnosis and recommendation of the treating dentist, either in advance of or following the [****5] provision of care. In order to carry out such evaluation, insurers frequently request dentists to submit, along with insurance claim forms requesting payment of benefits, any dental x rays that have been used by the dentist in examining the patient as well as other information concerning their diagnoses and treatment recommendations. Typically, claim forms and

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the American Association of Retired Persons by Alfred Miller and Steven S. Honigman; for the Health Insurance Association of America by Joe Sims and Edwin R. Soeffing; and for the Washington Business Group on Health by Stephan E. Lawton.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the American College of Radiology by Reuben L. Hedlund and James A. Cherney; for the American Dental Association by Peter M. Sfikas; for the American Medical Association by Benjamin W. Heineman, Jr., Carter G. Phillips, Newton N. Minow, and Jack R. Bierig; and for the Physicians and Surgeons Association of Massachusetts, Inc., by Robert D. Paul and Donald B. Gould.

accompanying x rays are reviewed by lay claims examiners, who either approve payment of claims or, if the materials submitted raise a question whether the recommended course of treatment is in fact necessary, refer claims to dental consultants, who are licensed dentists, for further review. On the basis of the materials available, supplemented where appropriate by further diagnostic aids, the dental consultant may recommend that the insurer approve a claim, deny it, or pay only for a less expensive course of treatment.

Such review of diagnostic and treatment decisions has been viewed by some dentists as a threat to their professional independence and economic well-being. In the early 1970's, the Indiana Dental Association, a professional organization comprising some 85% of practicing dentists in the State of Indiana, initiated [****6] an aggressive effort to hinder insurers' [*450] efforts to implement alternative benefits plans by enlisting member dentists to pledge not to submit x rays in conjunction with claim forms.<sup>1</sup> The Association's efforts met considerable success: [**2014] large numbers of dentists signed the pledge, and insurers operating in Indiana found it difficult to obtain compliance with their requests for x rays and accordingly had to choose either to employ more expensive means of making alternative benefits determinations (for example, visiting the office of the treating dentist or conducting an independent oral examination) or to abandon such efforts altogether.

[****7] By the mid-1970's, fears of possible antitrust liability had dampened the Association's enthusiasm for opposing the submission of x rays to insurers. In 1979, the Association and a number of its constituent societies [***452] consented to a Federal Trade Commission order requiring them to cease and desist from further efforts to prevent member dentists from submitting [*451] x rays. In re Indiana Dental Assn., 93 F. T. C. 392. Not all Indiana dentists were content to leave the matter of submitting x rays to the individual dentist. In 1976, a group of such dentists formed the Indiana Federation of Dentists, respondent in this case, in order to continue to pursue the Association's policy of resisting insurers' requests for x rays. The Federation, which styled itself a "union" in the belief that this label would stave off antitrust liability,<sup>2</sup> immediately promulgated a "work rule" forbidding its members to submit x rays to dental insurers in conjunction with claim forms. Although the Federation's membership was small, numbering less than 100, its members were highly concentrated in and around three Indiana communities: Anderson, Lafayette, and Fort Wayne. [****8] The Federation succeeded in enlisting nearly 100% of the dental specialists in the Anderson area, and approximately 67% of the dentists in and around Lafayette. In the areas of its strength, the Federation was successful in continuing to enforce the Association's prior policy of refusal to submit x rays to dental insurers.

In 1978, the Federal Trade Commission issued a complaint against the Federation, alleging in substance that its efforts to prevent its members from complying with insurers' requests for x rays constituted an unfair method of competition in violation of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Following lengthy proceedings including a full

<sup>1</sup> A presentation made in 1974 by Dr. David McClure, an Association official and later one of the founders of respondent Indiana Federation of Dentists, is revealing as to the motives underlying the dentists' resistance to the provision of x rays for use by insurers in making alternative benefits determinations:

"The problems associated with third party programs are many, but I believe the 'Indiana Plan' [i. e., the policy of refusing to submit x rays] to be sound and if we work together, we can win this battle. We are fighting an economic war where the very survival of our profession is at stake."

"How long can some of the leaders of dentistry in other states be so complacent and willing to fall into the trap that is being set for us. If only they would take the time, to see from whence come the arrows that are heading in our direction. The Delta Dental Plans have bedded down with the unions and have been a party to setting up the greatest controls that any profession has ever known in a free society. . . .

"The name of the game is money. The government and labor are determined to reduce the cost of the dental health dollar at the expense of the dentist. There is no way a dental service can be rendered cheaper when the third party has to have its share of the dollar."

"Already we are locked into a fee freeze that could completely control the quality of dental care, if left on long enough." FTC Complaint Counsel's Trial Exhibit CX 372A, F, App. 104.

<sup>2</sup> Respondent no longer makes any pretense of arguing that it is immune from antitrust liability as a labor organization.

evidentiary hearing before an Administrative Law Judge, the Commission ruled that the Federation's policy constituted a violation of § 5 and issued an order requiring the Federation to cease and desist from further efforts to organize dentists [****9] to refuse to submit x rays to insurers. In re Indiana Federation of Dentists, 101 F. T. C. 57 (1983). The Commission based its ruling on the conclusion that the Federation's policy of requiring its members to withhold x rays amounted to a conspiracy in restraint of trade that was unreasonable and hence [*452] unlawful under the standards for judging such restraints developed in this Court's precedents interpreting § 1 of the Sherman Act. E. g., Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231 (1918); National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679 (1978). The Commission found that the Federation had conspired both with the Indiana Dental Association and with its own members to withhold cooperation with dental insurers' requests for x rays; that absent such a restraint, competition among dentists for patients would have tended to lead dentists to compete with respect to their policies in dealing with patients' insurers; and that in those areas where the Federation's membership was strong, the Federation's policy had had the actual effect of eliminating such competition among dentists [****10] and preventing insurers from obtaining access to x rays in the desired manner. These findings of anticompetitive effect, the Commission concluded, were sufficient to [***453] establish that the restraint was unreasonable even absent [**2015] proof that the Federation's policy had resulted in higher costs to the insurers and patients than would have occurred had the x rays been provided. Further, the Commission rejected the Federation's argument that its policy of withholding x rays was reasonable because the provision of x rays might lead the insurers to make inaccurate determinations of the proper level of care and thus injure the health of the insured patients: the Commission found no evidence that use of x rays by insurance companies in evaluating claims would result in inadequate dental care. Finally, the Commission rejected the Federation's contention that its actions were exempt from antitrust scrutiny because the withholding of x rays was consistent with the law and policy of the State of Indiana against the use of x rays in benefit determination by insurance companies. The Commission concluded that no such policy existed, and that in any event the existence of such [****11] a policy would not have justified the dentists' private and unsupervised conspiracy in restraint of trade.

[*453] The Federation sought judicial review of the Commission's order in the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, which vacated the order on the ground that it was not supported by substantial evidence. 745 F.2d 1124 (1984). Accepting the Federation's characterization of its rule against submission of x rays as merely an ethical and moral policy designed to enhance the welfare of dental patients, the majority concluded that the Commission's findings that the policy was anticompetitive were erroneous. According to the majority, the evidence did not support the finding that in the absence of restraint dentists would compete for patients by offering cooperation with the requests of the patients' insurers, nor, even accepting that finding, was there evidence that the Federation's efforts had prevented such competition. Further, the court held that the Commission's findings were inadequate because of its failure both to offer a precise definition of the market in which the Federation was alleged to have restrained competition and to establish [****12] that the Federation had the power to restrain competition in that market. Finally, the majority faulted the Commission for not finding that the alleged restraint on competition among dentists had actually resulted in higher dental costs to patients and insurers. The third member of the Court of Appeals panel concurred in the judgment solely on the ground that there was insufficient proof that cooperation with insurers was an element of dental services as to which dentists would tend to compete.

We granted certiorari, 474 U.S. 900 (1985), in order to consider the Commission's claim that in vacating the Commission's order the Court of Appeals misconstrued applicable principles of antitrust law and "'misapprehended or grossly misapplied' the substantial evidence test," American Textile Manufacturers Institute, Inc. v. Donovan, 452 U.S. 490, 523 (1981) (citation omitted). We now reverse.

[*454] II

LEdHN/21 [2]The issue is whether the Commission erred in holding that the Federation's policy of refusal to submit [***454] x rays to dental insurers for use in benefits determinations constituted an "unfair method of competition," unlawful under § 5 of the [****13] Federal Trade Commission Act. The question involves review of both factual and legal determinations. As to the former, our review is governed by 15 U. S. C. § 45(c), which provides that "[the] findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive." HN1

↑] The statute forbids a court to "make its own appraisal of the testimony, picking and choosing for itself among uncertain and conflicting inferences." FTC v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U.S. 67, 73 \(1934\). Rather, as under the essentially identical "substantial evidence" standard for review of agency factfinding, the court must accept the Commission's findings of fact if they are supported by "such relevant [**2016] evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion." Universal Camera Corp. v. NLRB, 340 U.S. 474, 477 \(1951\); see also Beneficial Corp. v. FTC, 542 F.2d 611, 616 \(CA3 1976\), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 983 (1977).

[LEdHN\[3\]](#)↑ [3][LEdHN\[4\]](#)↑ [4][LEdHN\[5\]](#)↑ [5]The legal issues presented -- that is, the identification of governing legal standards and their application to the facts found -- are, by contrast, for the courts to resolve, [****14] although even in considering such issues the courts are to give some deference to the Commission's informed judgment that a particular commercial practice is to be condemned as "unfair." See FTC v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 405 U.S. 233 \(1972\); Atlantic Refining Co. v. FTC, 381 U.S. 357, 367-368 \(1965\); FTC v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 720 \(1948\).HN2↑ The standard of "unfairness" under the FTC Act is, by necessity, an elusive one, encompassing not only practices that violate the Sherman Act and the other antitrust laws, see FTC v. Cement Institute, supra, at 689-695, but also practices that the Commission determines are against public policy for other reasons, see FTC v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 405 U.S., at 244. [*455] Once the Commission has chosen a particular legal rationale for holding a practice to be unfair, however, familiar principles of administrative law dictate that its decision must stand or fall on that basis, and a reviewing court may not consider other reasons why the practice might be deemed unfair. See id., at 245-250; [****15] cf. SEC v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80 \(1943\). In the case now before us, the sole basis of the FTC's finding of an unfair method of competition was the Commission's conclusion that the Federation's collective decision to withhold x rays from insurers was an unreasonable and conspiratorial restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1. Accordingly, the legal question before us is whether the Commission's factual findings, if supported by evidence, make out a violation of Sherman Act § 1.

III

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#)↑ [1B]The relevant factual findings are that the members of the Federation conspired among themselves to withhold x rays requested by dental insurers for use in evaluating claims [***455] for benefits, and that this conspiracy had the effect of suppressing competition among dentists with respect to cooperation with the requests of the insurance companies. As to the first of these findings there can be no serious dispute: abundant evidence in the record reveals that one of the primary reasons -- if not the primary reason -- for the Federation's existence was the promulgation and enforcement of the so-called "work rule" [****16] against submission of x rays in conjunction with insurance claim forms.

As for the second crucial finding -- that competition was actually suppressed -- the Seventh Circuit held it to be unsupported by the evidence, on two theories. First, the court stated that the evidence did not establish that cooperation with requests for information by patients' insurance companies was an aspect of the provision of dental services with respect to which dentists would, in the absence of some [*456] restraint, compete. Second, the court found that even assuming that dentists would otherwise compete with respect to policies of cooperating or not cooperating with insurance companies, the Federation's policy did not impair that competition, for the member dentists continued to allow insurance companies to use other means of evaluating their diagnoses when reviewing claims for benefits: specifically, "the IFD member dentists allowed insurers to visit the dental office to review and examine the patient's x rays along with all of the other diagnostic and clinical aids [**2017] used in formulating a proper course of dental treatment." 745 F.2d, at 1143.

Neither of these criticisms [****17] of the Commission's findings is well founded. The Commission's finding that "[in] the absence of . . . concerted behavior, individual dentists would have been subject to market forces of competition, creating incentives for them to . . . comply with the requests of patients' third-party insurers," 101 F. T. C., at 173, finds support not only in common sense and economic theory, upon both of which the FTC may reasonably rely, but also in record documents, including newsletters circulated among Indiana dentists, revealing that Indiana dentists themselves perceived that unrestrained competition tended to lead their colleagues to comply with insurers' requests for x rays. See App. to Pet. for Cert. 289a, 306a-308a. Moreover, there was evidence that outside of Indiana, in States where dentists had not collectively refused to submit x rays, insurance companies found little difficulty in obtaining compliance by dentists with their requests. 101 F. T. C., at 172. A "reasonable mind" could conclude on the basis of this evidence that competition for patients, who have obvious incentives for seeking dentists who will cooperate with their insurers, would [****18] tend to lead dentists in Indiana (and elsewhere) to cooperate with requests for information by their patients' insurers.

[*457] The Commission's finding that such competition was actually diminished where the Federation held sway also finds adequate support in the record. The Commission found that in the areas where Federation membership among dentists was most significant (that is, in the vicinity of Anderson and Lafayette) insurance companies were unable to obtain compliance with their requests for submission of x rays in [***456] conjunction with claim forms and were forced to resort to other, more costly, means of reviewing diagnoses for the purpose of benefit determination. Neither the opinion of the Court of Appeals nor the brief of respondent identifies any evidence suggesting that the Commission's finding that the Federation's policy had an actual impact on the ability of insurers to obtain the x rays they requested was incorrect. The lower court's conclusion that this evidence is to be discounted because Federation members continued to cooperate with insurers by allowing them to use more costly -- indeed, prohibitively costly -- methods of reviewing treatment decisions [****19] is unpersuasive. The fact remains that the dentists' customers (that is, the patients and their insurers) sought a particular service: cooperation with the insurers' pretreatment review through the forwarding of x rays in conjunction with claim forms. The Federation's collective activities resulted in the denial of the information the customers requested in the form that they requested it, and forced them to choose between acquiring that information in a more costly manner or forgoing it altogether. To this extent, at least, competition among dentists with respect to cooperation with the requests of insurers was restrained.

IV

LEdHN[6] [6]The question remains whether these findings are legally sufficient to establish a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act -- that is, whether the Federation's collective refusal to cooperate with insurers' requests for x rays constitutes an "unreasonable" restraint of trade. HN3 [7] Under our precedents, a [*458] restraint may be adjudged unreasonable either because it fits within a class of restraints that has been held to be "per se" unreasonable, or because it violates what has come to be known as the "Rule of Reason," under which the "test of legality is [****20] whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition." Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S., at 238.

LEdHN[7] [7]The policy of the Federation with respect to its members' dealings with third-party insurers resembles practices [**2018] that have been labeled "group boycotts": the policy constitutes a concerted refusal to deal on particular terms with patients covered by group dental insurance. Cf. St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531 (1978); Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U.S. 30 (1930). Although this Court has in the past stated that group boycotts are unlawful per se, see United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 (1966); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc. 359 U.S. 207 (1959), we decline to resolve this case by forcing the Federation's policy into the "boycott" pigeonhole and invoking the per se rule. As we observed last Term in Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284 (1985), [****21] the category of restraints classed as group boycotts is not to be expanded indiscriminately, and the per se approach has generally been limited to cases in which firms with [***457] market power boycott suppliers or customers in order to discourage them from doing business with a competitor -- a situation obviously not present here. Moreover, HN4 [7] we have been slow to condemn rules adopted by professional associations as unreasonable per se, see National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679 (1978), and, in general, to extend per se analysis to restraints imposed in the context [*459] of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious, see Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441

U.S. 1 (1979). Thus, as did the FTC, we evaluate the restraint at issue in this case under the Rule of Reason rather than a rule of per se illegality.

LEdHN[8] [8]Application of the Rule of Reason to these facts is not a matter of any great difficulty. The Federation's policy takes the form of a horizontal agreement among the participating dentists to withhold [****22] from their customers a particular service that they desire -- the forwarding of x rays to insurance companies along with claim forms. "While this is not price fixing as such, no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of such an agreement." National Society of Professional Engineers, supra, at 692. A refusal to compete with respect to the package of services offered to customers, no less than a refusal to compete with respect to the price term of an agreement, impairs the ability of the market to advance social welfare by ensuring the provision of desired goods and services to consumers at a price approximating the marginal cost of providing them. Absent some countervailing procompetitive virtue -- such as, for example, the creation of efficiencies in the operation of a market or the provision of goods and services, see Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., supra; Chicago Board of Trade, supra; cf. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85 (1984) -- such an agreement limiting consumer [****23] choice by impeding the "ordinary give and take of the market place," National Society of Professional Engineers, supra, at 692, cannot be sustained under the Rule of Reason. No credible argument has been advanced for the proposition that making it more costly for the insurers and patients who are the dentists' customers to obtain information needed for evaluating the dentists' diagnoses has any such procompetitive effect.

[*460] LEdHN[9] [9]LEdHN[10] [10]The Federation advances three principal arguments for the proposition that, notwithstanding its lack of competitive virtue, the Federation's policy of withholding x rays should not be deemed an unreasonable restraint of trade. First, as did the Court of Appeals, the Federation suggests that in the absence of specific findings by the Commission concerning the [**2019] definition of the market in which the Federation allegedly restrained trade and the power of the Federation's members in that market, the conclusion that the Federation unreasonably restrained trade is erroneous as a matter of law, regardless of whether the challenged practices might be impermissibly anticompetitive if engaged in by persons who together possessed power [****24] in a specifically defined market. This contention, however, runs counter to the Court's holding in *National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. [***458] Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla., supra*, that HN5 [as] a matter of law, the absence of proof of market power does not justify a naked restriction on price or output," and that such a restriction "requires some competitive justification even in the absence of a detailed market analysis." Id., at 109-110. Moreover, even if the restriction imposed by the Federation is not sufficiently "naked" to call this principle into play, the Commission's failure to engage in detailed market analysis is not fatal to its finding of a violation of the Rule of Reason. The Commission found that in two localities in the State of Indiana (the Anderson and Lafayette areas), Federation dentists constituted heavy majorities of the practicing dentists and that as a result of the efforts of the Federation, insurers in those areas were, over a period of years, actually unable to obtain compliance with their requests for submission of x rays. Since the purpose of the inquiries into market definition and market power is [****25] to determine whether an arrangement has the potential for genuine adverse effects on competition, "proof of actual detrimental effects, such as a reduction of output," can [*461] obviate the need for an inquiry into market power, which is but a "surrogate for detrimental effects." 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law para. 1511, p. 429 (1986). In this case, we conclude that the finding of actual, sustained adverse effects on competition in those areas where IFD dentists predominated, viewed in light of the reality that markets for dental services tend to be relatively localized, is legally sufficient to support a finding that the challenged restraint was unreasonable even in the absence of elaborate market analysis.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup>Because we find that the Commission's findings can be sustained on this basis, we do not address the Commission's contention that the Federation's activities can be condemned regardless of market power or actual effect merely because they constitute a continuation of the restraints formerly imposed by the Indiana Dental Association, which allegedly had market power throughout the State of Indiana.

[****26] [LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]Second, the Federation, again following the lead of the Court of Appeals, argues that a holding that its policy of withholding x rays constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade is precluded by the Commission's failure to make any finding that the policy resulted in the provision of dental services that were more costly than those that the patients and their insurers would have chosen were they able to evaluate x rays in conjunction with claim forms. This argument, too, is unpersuasive. Although it is true that the goal of the insurers in seeking submission of x rays for use in their review of benefits claims was to minimize costs by choosing the least expensive adequate course of dental treatment, a showing that this goal was actually achieved through the means chosen is not an essential step in establishing that the dentists' attempt to thwart its achievement by collectively refusing to supply the requested information was an unreasonable restraint of trade. A concerted and effective effort to withhold (or make more costly) information desired by consumers for the purpose of determining whether a particular purchase is cost justified is likely enough to disrupt the proper [****27] functioning of the price-setting mechanism of the [*462] market that it may be condemned even absent proof that it resulted in higher prices or, as here, the purchase of [****459] higher priced services, than would occur in its absence. National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679 \(1978\). [**2020] Moreover, even if the desired information were in fact completely useless to the insurers and their patients in making an informed choice regarding the least costly adequate course of treatment -- or, to put it another way, if the costs of evaluating the information were far greater than the cost savings resulting from its use -- the Federation would still not be justified in deciding on behalf of its members' customers that they did not need the information: presumably, if that were the case, the discipline of the market would itself soon result in the insurers' abandoning their requests for x rays. The Federation is not entitled to pre-empt the working of the market by deciding for itself that its customers do not need that which they demand.

Third, the Federation complains that the Commission erred in failing to consider, as [****28] relevant to its Rule of Reason analysis, noncompetitive "quality of care" justifications for the prohibition on provision of x rays to insurers in conjunction with claim forms. This claim reflects the Court of Appeals' repeated characterization of the Federation's policy as a "legal, moral, and ethical policy of quality dental care, requiring that insurers examine and review all diagnostic and clinical aids before formulating a proper course of dental treatment." 745 F.2d, at 1144. The gist of the claim is that x rays, standing alone, are not adequate bases for diagnosis of dental problems or for the formulation of an acceptable course of treatment. Accordingly, if insurance companies are permitted to determine whether they will pay a claim for dental treatment on the basis of x rays as opposed to a full examination of all the diagnostic aids available to the examining dentist, there is a danger that they will erroneously decline to pay for treatment that is in fact in the interest of [*463] the patient, and that the patient will as a result be deprived of fully adequate care.

The Federation's argument is flawed both legally and factually. The premise of the [****29] argument is that, far from having no effect on the cost of dental services chosen by patients and their insurers, the provision of x rays will have too great an impact: it will lead to the reduction of costs through the selection of inadequate treatment. Precisely such a justification for withholding information from customers was rejected as illegitimate in the National Society of Professional Engineers case. The argument is, in essence, that an unrestrained market in which consumers are given access to the information they believe to be relevant to their choices will lead them to make unwise and even dangerous choices. Such an argument amounts to "nothing less than a frontal assault on the basic policy of the Sherman Act." National Society of Professional Engineers, supra, at 695. Moreover, there is no particular reason to believe that the provision of information will be more harmful to consumers in the market for dental services than in other markets. Insurers deciding what level of care to pay for are not themselves the recipients of those services, but it is by no means clear that they lack incentives to consider the welfare of the patient as well [****30] as the minimization of costs. They are themselves in competition [***460] for the patronage of the patients -- or, in most cases, the unions or businesses that contract on their behalf for group insurance coverage -- and must satisfy their potential customers not only that they will provide coverage at a reasonable cost, but also that that coverage will be adequate to meet their customers' dental needs. There is thus no more reason to expect dental insurance companies to sacrifice quality in return for cost savings than to believe this of consumers in, say, the market for engineering services. Accordingly, if noncompetitive quality-of-service justifications are inadmissible to justify the denial of information to consumers [*464] in the latter market, there is little reason to credit such justifications here.

In any event, the Commission did not, as the Federation suggests, refuse even to consider the quality-of-care justification for the withholding of x rays. Rather, the [**2021] Commission held that the Federation had failed to introduce sufficient evidence to establish such a justification: "IFD has not pointed to any evidence -- or even argued -- that any consumers [****31] have in fact been harmed by alternative benefits determinations, or that actual determinations have been medically erroneous." 101 F. T. C., at 177. The evidence before the Administrative Law Judge on this issue appears to have consisted entirely of expert opinion testimony, with the Federation's experts arguing that x rays generally provide an insufficient basis, standing alone, for dental diagnosis, and the Commission's experts testifying that x rays may be useful in assessing diagnosis of and appropriate treatment for a variety of dental complaints. Id., at 128-132. The Commission was amply justified in concluding on the basis of this conflicting evidence that even if concern for the quality of patient care could under some circumstances serve as a justification for a restraint of the sort imposed here, the evidence did not support a finding that the careful use of x rays as a basis for evaluating insurance claims is in fact destructive of proper standards of dental care.<sup>4</sup>

[****32]

[*465] LEdHN/12 [12] In addition to arguing that its conspiracy did not effect an unreasonable restraint of trade, the Federation appears to renew its argument, pressed before both the Commission and the Court of Appeals, that the conspiracy to withhold x rays is immunized from antitrust scrutiny by virtue of a supposed policy of the State of Indiana against the evaluation of dental x rays by lay employees of insurance companies. See Brief for Respondent 25-26, and n. 10. Allegedly, such use of x rays by insurance companies -- even where no claim was actually denied without examination of an x ray by a [***461] licensed dentist -- would constitute unauthorized practice of dentistry by the insurance company and its employees. The Commission found that this claim had no basis in any authoritative source of Indiana law, see 101 F. T. C., at 181-183, and the Federation has not identified any adequate reason for rejecting the Commission's conclusion. Even if the Commission were incorrect in its reading of the law, however, the Federation's claim of immunity would fail. That a particular practice may be unlawful is not, in itself, a sufficient justification for collusion among [****33] competitors to prevent it. See Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457, 468 (1941). Anticompetitive collusion among private actors, even when its goal is consistent with state policy, acquires antitrust immunity only when it is actively supervised by the State. See Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 57 (1985). There is no suggestion of any such active supervision here; accordingly, whether or not the policy the Federation has taken upon itself to advance is consistent with the policy of the State of Indiana, the Federation's activities are subject to Sherman Act condemnation.

V

LEdHN/1C [1C] [1C] The factual findings of the Commission regarding the effect of the Federation's policy of withholding x rays are supported [*466] by substantial evidence, and those [**2022] findings are sufficient as a matter of law to establish a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and, hence, § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Since there has been no suggestion that the cease-and-desist order entered by the Commission to remedy this violation is itself improper for any reason distinct from [****34] the claimed impropriety of the finding of a violation, the Commission's order must be sustained. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is accordingly

Reversed.

<sup>4</sup> It is undisputed that lay claims examiners employed by insurance companies have no authority to deny claims on the basis of examination of x rays; rather, initial screening of x rays serves only as a means of identifying cases that merit further scrutiny by the licensed dentists serving as consultants to the insurers. Any recommendation that benefits be denied or a less expensive course of treatment be pursued is based on the professional judgment of a licensed dentist that the materials available to him -- x rays, claim forms, and whatever further diagnostic aids he chooses to consult -- are sufficient to indicate that the treating dentist's recommendation is not necessary to the health of the patient. There is little basis for concluding that, where such a divergence of professional judgment exists, the treatment recommendation made by the patient's dentist should be assumed to be the one that in fact represents the best interests of the patient.

References

---

54/55 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 30-33, 340, 392, 396, 414, 738, 739, 745, 850, 863-868

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:336-54:342, 54:345

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1, 45

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 42, 90, 93, 107, 114, 115

Index to Annotations, Administrative Law; Federal Trade Commission; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References:

What constitutes "state action" under rule exempting state and local governmental action from antitrust laws. 70 L Ed 2d 973.

Refusals to deal as violations of the federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1, [****35] 2, 13). 41 ALR Fed 175.

"Learned profession" exemption in federal antitrust laws. 39 ALR Fed 774.

---

End of Document

Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc.

Supreme Court of the United States

December 3, 1985, Argued ; June 25, 1986, Decided

No. 84-1602

Reporter

477 U.S. 242 *; 106 S. Ct. 2505 **; 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 ***; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 115 ****; 54 U.S.L.W. 4755; 4 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 1041; 12 Media L. Rep. 2297

ANDERSON ET AL. v. LIBERTY LOBBY, INC., ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 241 U.S. App. D.C. 246, 746 F.2d 1563, vacated and remanded.

Core Terms

---

summary judgment, summary judgment motion, actual malice, conspiracy, genuine issue, directed verdict, present evidence, trial court, trial judge, convincing, genuine, cases, clear and convincing evidence, weight of the evidence, evidentiary standard, return a verdict, material fact, articles, factual dispute, matter of law, one-sided, court of appeals, reasonably find, fact finder, preponderance of evidence, supported motion, district court, criminal case, credibility, asserting

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Torts > ... > Defamation > Public Figures > Actual Malice

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Defamation > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Defamation > Public Figures

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Libel

Torts > ... > Defamation > Public Figures > Clear & Convincing Evidence

Torts > ... > Defamation > Public Figures > Voluntary Public Figures

HN1[] Public Figures, Actual Malice

In a libel suit brought by a public official, the First Amendment requires the plaintiff to show that in publishing the defamatory statement the defendant acted with actual malice, with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not. Such actual malice must be shown with "convincing clarity." These requirements extend to libel suits brought by public figures as well.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Libel

Torts > ... > Defamation > Public Figures > Limited Purpose Public Figure

Torts > ... > Defamation > Public Figures > Voluntary Public Figures

HN2[ Defamation, Libel

In a libel action, the public figure designation may rest on either of two alternative bases. In some instances an individual may achieve such pervasive fame or notoriety that he becomes a public figure for all purposes and in all contexts. More commonly, an individual voluntarily injects himself or is drawn into a particular public controversy and thereby becomes a public figure for a limited range of issues. In either case, such persons assume special prominence in the resolution of public questions.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN3[ Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

Fed. R. Civ. P 56(c) provides that summary judgment shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. By its very terms, this standard provides that the mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4[ Entitlement as Matter of Law, Materiality of Facts

Only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment. Factual disputes that are irrelevant or unnecessary will not be counted. This materiality inquiry is independent of and separate from the question of the incorporation of the evidentiary standard into the summary judgment determination.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN5 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Summary judgment will not lie if the dispute about a material fact is "genuine," that is, if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN6 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) provides that a party opposing a properly supported motion for summary judgment may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of his pleading, but must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN7 Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

The issue of material fact required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) to be present to entitle a party to proceed to trial is not required to be resolved conclusively in favor of the party asserting its existence; rather, all that is required is that sufficient evidence supporting the claimed factual dispute be shown to require a jury or judge to resolve the parties' differing versions of the truth at trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN8 [blue icon] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

At the summary judgment stage, the judge's function is not himself to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial. There is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. If the evidence is merely colorable or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN9 [blue icon] Judicial Officers, Judges

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) provides that, when a properly supported motion for summary judgment is made, the adverse party must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) provides that the trial judge shall then grant summary judgment if there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and if the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. There is no requirement that the trial judge make findings of fact. The inquiry performed is the threshold inquiry of determining whether there is the need for a trial -- whether, in other words, there are any genuine factual issues that properly can be resolved only by a finder of fact because they may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

HN10 [blue icon] Judgment as Matter of Law, Directed Verdicts

Credibility determinations, the weighing of the evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences from the facts are jury functions, not those of a judge, whether he is ruling on a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict. The evidence of the nonmovant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

HN11[ Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A determination of whether a given factual dispute requires submission to a jury must be guided by the substantive evidentiary standards that apply to the case. This is true at both the directed verdict and summary judgment stages.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Libel

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Procedural Matters

HN12[ Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Where the "clear and convincing" evidence requirement applies in libel case, the trial judge's summary judgment inquiry as to whether a genuine issue exists will be whether the evidence presented is such that a jury applying that evidentiary standard could reasonably find for either the plaintiff or the defendant. Thus, where the factual dispute concerns actual malice, the appropriate summary judgment question will be whether the evidence in the record could support a reasonable jury finding either that the plaintiff has shown actual malice by clear and convincing evidence or that the plaintiff has not.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Court, in ruling on motion for summary judgment in public-figure libel action, held required to consider clear and convincing evidence standard in determining whether there is genuine issue of actual malice.

Summary

Plaintiffs, a lobbying corporation and its founder, filed a diversity libel action in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia against the publishers of a magazine which had allegedly libelled the plaintiffs by printing three articles which portrayed them as neo-Nazi, anti-Semitic, racist, and fascist. The author of two of the articles, on which the third had been based, stated in an affidavit that he had engaged in extensive research and had derived his facts from several sources. Relying on that affidavit, the publishers moved for summary judgment, asserting that the plaintiffs were required under the First Amendment to show that the publishers had acted with "actual malice," that is, with deliberate or reckless disregard for the truth, and that such malice was absent in this case as a matter of law; but the plaintiffs contended that several of the author's sources were patently unreliable, and that this raised an issue as to actual malice. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the publishers, holding (1) that the plaintiffs were limited-purpose public figures; (2) that the actual malice rule was therefore applicable; and (3) that the author's stated conduct precluded a finding of such malice. The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit affirmed as to some of the allegedly libellous statements and reversed and remanded as to others, holding that, in such actions, the constitutional requirements of "clear and convincing" proof and independent judicial determination of the ultimate issue of actual malice are not to be applied on a motion for summary judgment, but only after the plaintiff has had an opportunity to present his evidence (746 F2d 1563).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court vacated the decision of the Court of Appeals and remanded for further proceedings. In an opinion by White, J., joined by Marshall, Blackmun, Powell, Stevens, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held (1) that on a motion for summary judgment under Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, or on a motion for a directed verdict under Rule 50\(a\) of those Rules, the determination whether a given factual dispute requires submission to a jury must be guided by the substantive evidentiary standards that apply to the case; and, in particular, (2) that in ruling on a motion for summary judgment, in a libel action to which the actual malice rule applies, the appropriate question for the trial judge is whether the evidence in the record could support a reasonable jury finding either that the plaintiff has shown actual malice by clear and convincing evidence or that the plaintiff has not.

Brennan, J., dissented, expressing the view that if a plaintiff presents evidence which, either directly or by permissible inference, supports all of the elements he needs to prove in order to prevail on his legal claim, that plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, and a defendant's motion for summary judgment must fail regardless of the burden of proof that the plaintiff must meet.

Rehnquist, J., joined by Burger, Ch. J., dissented, expressing the view that trial courts should not be required to apply the "clear and convincing evidence" standard in deciding motions for summary judgment in libel cases, and that the court's opinion was deficient in that it failed to provide any guidance as to how such a requirement would be applied.

Headnotes

---

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §948 > EVIDENCE §176 > SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

§5 > libel action -- malice -- application of evidentiary standard -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]

In a libel action brought by a "public figure," who is required under the First Amendment to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant acted with "actual malice," that is, with knowing or reckless disregard of the truth, a trial judge ruling on a motion for summary judgment under Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure must be guided by the "clear and convincing evidence" standard in determining whether a genuine issue of actual malice exists; thus, the appropriate summary judgment question for the judge will be whether the evidence in the record would allow a reasonable finder of fact to determine either that the plaintiff has shown actual malice by clear and convincing evidence or that the plaintiff has not. (Brennan and Rehnquist, JJ., and Burger, Ch. J., dissented from this holding.)

477 U.S. 242, *242; 106 S. Ct. 2505, **2505; 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, ***202; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****1

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §948 > free speech and press -- defamation -- public figure -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [2B]

The designation of a "public figure," who, as the plaintiff in a libel action, will be required under the *First Amendment* to prove that the defendant acted with "actual malice," may rest on either of two alternative bases: in some instances, individuals may achieve such pervasive fame or notoriety that they become public figures for all purposes and in all contexts; more commonly, individuals voluntarily inject themselves or are drawn into a particular public controversy and thereby become public figures for a limited range of issues; in either case, such persons assume special prominence in the resolution of public questions.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS §5 > genuine issue of material fact -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Under *Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure*, the mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no "genuine" issue of "material" fact.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS §5 > materiality -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing substantive law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment under *Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure*; it is the substantive law's identification of which facts are critical and which facts are irrelevant that governs the materiality determination, and any proof or evidentiary requirements imposed by the substantive law are not germane to this inquiry, since materiality is only a criterion for categorizing factual disputes in their relation to the legal elements of the claim and not a criterion for evaluating the evidentiary underpinnings of those disputes.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS §5 > genuine issues -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B] [LEdHN\[5C\]](#) [5C] [5C]

Summary judgment will not lie under *Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure* if the dispute about a material fact is "genuine," that is, if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party; if the evidence is merely colorable, or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted; the inquiry performed is the threshold inquiry of determining whether there is the need for a trial--whether, in other words, there are any genuine factual issues that properly can be resolved only by a finder of fact because they may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS §5 > determination -- judge's function -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

477 U.S. 242, *242; 106 S. Ct. 2505, **2505; 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, ***202; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****1

Under Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the judge's function at the summary judgment stage is not himself to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter, but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS §5 > findings of fact -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

There is no requirement that the trial judge make findings of fact in ruling on a motion for summary judgment under Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

TRIAL §194 > directed verdict -- reasonable disagreement -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Under Rule 50\(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a trial judge must direct a verdict if, under the governing law, there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict; if reasonable minds could differ as to the import of the evidence, however, a verdict should not be directed.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS §5 > TRIAL §194 > similarity of summary judgment and directed verdict -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

The inquiries on a motion for summary judgment and on a motion for a directed verdict are essentially the same: whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS §5 > TRIAL §194 > application of evidentiary standards --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

The inquiry involved in a ruling on a motion for summary judgment, or on a motion for a directed verdict, as to whether a given factual dispute requires submission to a jury, must be guided by the substantive evidentiary standards that apply to the case. (Brennan, J., dissented from this holding.)

EVIDENCE §176 > TRIAL §194 > libel action -- malice -- application of evidentiary standard -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

477 U.S. 242, *242; 106 S. Ct. 2505, **2505; 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, ***202; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****1

Where the First Amendment mandates a "clear and convincing" evidence standard, the trial judge, in disposing of a motion for a directed verdict, should consider whether a reasonable factfinder could conclude, for example, that the plaintiff has shown actual malice with convincing clarity.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS §5 > TRIAL §46 > summary judgment and directed verdict - jury determinations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

Credibility determinations, the weighing of the evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences from the facts are jury functions, not those of a judge, whether the judge is ruling on a motion for summary judgment or on a motion for a directed verdict.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS §5 > inferences -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

On a motion for summary judgment, the evidence of the nonmovant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in the nonmovant's favor.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS §5 > judicial caution -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Trial courts should act with caution in granting summary judgment, and may deny summary judgment in a case where there is reason to believe that the better course would be to proceed to a full trial.

EVIDENCE §88 > SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS §5 > burdens of proof -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

A defendant moving for summary judgment has the burden of showing that there is no genuine issue of fact, but the plaintiff is not thereby relieved of his own burden of producing in turn affirmative evidence that would support a jury verdict in his favor.

EVIDENCE §872 > discredited testimony -- opposite conclusion -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

Discredited testimony is not normally considered a sufficient basis for drawing a contrary conclusion.

APPEAL §1692.3 > remand -- improper standard for summary judgment -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [] [17]

Where a Federal Court of Appeals does not apply the correct standard in reviewing a Federal District Court's grant of summary judgment in a libel action, the decision of the Court of Appeals, affirming summary judgment as to some of the allegedly defamatory statements and reversing as to others, will be vacated, and the case will be remanded for further proceedings.

Syllabus

---

In *New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254*, it was held that, in a libel suit brought by a public official (extended by later cases to public figures), the *First Amendment* requires the plaintiff to show that in publishing the alleged defamatory statement the defendant acted with actual malice. It was further held that such actual malice must be shown with "convincing clarity." Respondents, a nonprofit corporation described as a "citizen's lobby" and its founder, filed a libel action in Federal District Court against petitioners, alleging that certain statements in a magazine published by petitioners were false and derogatory. Following discovery, petitioners moved for summary judgment pursuant to *Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56*, asserting that because respondents were public figures they were required to prove their case under the New York Times standards and that summary judgment was proper because actual malice was absent as a matter of law in view of an affidavit [****2] by the author of the articles in question that they had been thoroughly researched and that the facts were obtained from numerous sources. Opposing the motion, respondents claimed that an issue of actual malice was presented because the author had relied on patently unreliable sources in preparing the articles. After holding that New York Times applied because respondents were limited-purpose public figures, the District Court entered summary judgment for petitioners on the ground that the author's investigation and research and his reliance on numerous sources precluded a finding of actual malice. Reversing as to certain of the allegedly defamatory statements, the Court of Appeals held that the requirement that actual malice be proved by clear and convincing evidence need not be considered at the summary judgment stage, and that with respect to those statements summary judgment had been improperly granted because a jury could reasonably have concluded that the allegations were defamatory, false, and made with actual malice.

Held: The Court of Appeals did not apply the correct standard in reviewing the District Court's grant of summary judgment. Pp. 247-257.

(a) Summary [****3] judgment will not lie if the dispute about a material fact is "genuine," that is, if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. At the summary judgment stage, the trial judge's function is not himself to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial. There is no such issue unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. In essence, the inquiry is whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law. Pp. 247-252.

(b) A trial court ruling on a motion for summary judgment in a case such as this must be guided by the New York Times "clear and convincing" evidentiary standard in determining whether a genuine issue of actual malice exists, that is, whether the evidence is such that a reasonable jury might find that actual malice had been shown with convincing clarity. Pp. 252-256.

(c) A plaintiff may not defeat a defendant's properly supported motion for summary judgment in a libel case [****4] such as this one without offering any concrete evidence from which a reasonable jury could return a verdict in his favor and by merely asserting that the jury might disbelieve the defendant's denial of actual malice. The movant has the burden of showing that there is no genuine issue of fact, but the plaintiff is not thereby relieved of his own burden of producing in turn evidence that would support a jury verdict. Pp. 256-257.

Counsel: David J. Branson argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs was David O. Bickart. Mark Lane argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were Linda Huber and Fleming Lee. *

[****5]

Judges: WHITE, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, POWELL, STEVENS, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. BRENNAN, J., filed a dissenting opinion, post, p. 257. REHNQUIST, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which BURGER, C. J., joined, post, p. 268.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[*244] [***209] [**2508] JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

In New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 279-280 (1964), we held that, HN1 in a libel suit brought by a public official, the First Amendment requires the plaintiff to show that in publishing the defamatory statement the defendant acted with actual malice -- "with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not." We held further that such actual malice must be shown with "convincing clarity." Id., at 285-286. See also Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 U.S. 323, 342 (1974). These New York Times requirements we have since extended to libel suits brought by public figures as well. See, e. g., Curtis Publishing Co. v. Butts, 388 U.S. 130 (1967).

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] This case presents the question whether the clear-and-convincing-evidence [****6] requirement must be considered by a court ruling on a motion for summary judgment under Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in a case to which New York Times applies. The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit held that that requirement need not be considered at the summary judgment stage. 241 U. S. App. D. C. 246, 746 F. 2d 1563 \(1984\). We granted certiorari, 471 U.S. 1134 (1985), because that holding was in conflict with decisions of several other Courts of Appeals, which had held that the New York Times requirement of clear and convincing evidence must be considered on a motion for summary judgment.<sup>1</sup> We now reverse.

[****7] I

Respondent Liberty Lobby, Inc., is a not-for-profit corporation and self-described "citizens' lobby." Respondent Willis Carto is its founder and treasurer. In October 1981, [*245] The Investigator magazine published two articles: "The Private World of Willis Carto" and "Yockey: Profile of an American Hitler." These articles were introduced by a third, shorter article entitled "America's Neo-Nazi Underground: Did Mein Kampf Spawn Yockey's Imperium, a Book Revived by Carto's Liberty Lobby?" These articles portrayed respondents as neo-Nazi, anti-Semitic, racist, and Fascist.

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the American Newspaper Publishers Association et al. by Robert D. Sack, Robert S. Warren, W. Terry Maguire, Richard M. Schmidt, Jr., R. Bruce Rich, Lawrence Gunnels, Harvey L. Lipton, Peter C. Gould, and Jane E. Kirtley; and for the Reader's Digest Association, Inc., by Walter R. Allan and Karen J. Wegner.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the American Legal Foundation by Daniel J. Popeo; and for the Synanon Church et al. by Jonathan W. Lubell, Philip C. Bourdette, David R. Benjamin, and Andrew J. Weill.

<sup>1</sup> See, e. g., Rebozo v. Washington Post Co., 637 F.2d 375, 381 (CA5), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 964 (1981); Yiamouyiannis v. Consumers Union of United States, Inc., 619 F.2d 932, 940 (CA2), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 839 (1980); Carson v. Allied News Co., 529 F.2d 206, 210 (CA7 1976).

Respondents filed this diversity libel action in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, alleging that some 28 statements and 2 illustrations in the 3 articles were false and derogatory. Named as defendants in the action were petitioner Jack Anderson, the publisher of The Investigator, petitioner Bill Adkins, president and chief executive officer of the Investigator Publishing Co., and petitioner Investigator Publishing Co. itself.

Following discovery, petitioners [***210] moved for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56. In their motion, petitioners asserted that because respondents [****8] are public figures they were required to prove their case under the standards set forth in New York Times. Petitioners also asserted that summary judgment was proper because actual malice was absent as a matter of law. In support of this latter assertion, petitioners submitted the affidavit of Charles Bermant, an employee of petitioners and the author of the two longer articles.<sup>2</sup> In this affidavit, Bermant stated that he had spent a substantial amount of time researching [**2509] and writing the articles and that his facts were obtained from a wide variety of sources. He also stated that he had at all times believed and still believed that the facts contained in the articles were truthful and accurate. Attached to this affidavit was an appendix in which Bermant detailed the sources for each of the statements alleged by respondents to be libelous.

[*246] Respondents opposed [****9] the motion for summary judgment, asserting that there were numerous inaccuracies in the articles and claiming that an issue of actual malice was presented by virtue of the fact that in preparing the articles Bermant had relied on several sources that respondents asserted were patently unreliable. Generally, respondents charged that petitioners had failed adequately to verify their information before publishing. Respondents also presented evidence that William McGaw, an editor of The Investigator, had told petitioner Adkins before publication that the articles were "terrible" and "ridiculous."

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [↑] [2A] In ruling on the motion for summary judgment, the District Court first held that respondents were limited-purpose public figures and that New York Times therefore applied.<sup>3</sup> The District Court then held that Bermant's thorough investigation and research and his reliance on numerous sources precluded a finding of actual malice. Thus, the District Court granted the motion and entered judgment in favor of petitioners.

[LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [↑] [2B]

[****10] On appeal, the Court of Appeals affirmed as to 21 and reversed as to 9 of the allegedly defamatory statements. Although it noted that respondents did not challenge the District Court's ruling that they were limited-purpose public [*247] figures and that they were thus required to prove their case under New York [***211] Times, the Court of Appeals nevertheless held that for the purposes of summary judgment the requirement that actual malice be proved by clear and convincing evidence, rather than by a preponderance of the evidence, was irrelevant: To defeat summary judgment respondents did not have to show that a jury could find actual malice with "convincing clarity." The court based this conclusion on a perception that to impose the greater evidentiary burden at summary judgment "would change the threshold summary judgment inquiry from a search for a minimum of facts supporting the plaintiff's case to an evaluation of the weight of those facts and (it would seem) of the weight of at least the defendant's uncontested facts as well." 241 U. S. App. D. C., at 253, 746 F.2d, at 1570. The court then

<sup>2</sup>The short, introductory article was written by petitioner Anderson and relied exclusively on the information obtained by Bermant.

<sup>3</sup>In Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 U.S. 323, 351 \(1974\), this Court summarized who will be considered to be a public figure to whom the New York Times standards will apply:

HN2 [↑] "[The public figure] designation may rest on either of two alternative bases. In some instances an individual may achieve such pervasive fame or notoriety that he becomes a public figure for all purposes and in all contexts. More commonly, an individual voluntarily injects himself or is drawn into a particular public controversy and thereby becomes a public figure for a limited range of issues. In either case such persons assume special prominence in the resolution of public questions."

The District Court found that respondents, as political lobbyists, are the second type of political figure described by the Gertz court -- a limited-purpose public figure. See also Waldbaum v. Fairchild Publications, Inc., 201 U. S. App. D. C. 301, 306, 627 F.2d 1287, 1292, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 898 \(1980\).

held, with respect to nine of the statements, [****11] that summary judgment had been improperly granted because "a jury could reasonably conclude that the . . . allegations were defamatory, false, and made with actual malice." Id., at 260, 746 F.2d, at 1577.

II

A

LEdHN[3] [3]Our inquiry is whether the Court of Appeals erred in holding that the heightened evidentiary requirements that apply to proof of actual malice in this New York Times case need not be considered for the purposes of a motion for summary judgment. HN3 Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that summary judgment "shall be rendered forthwith if [**2510] the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." By its very terms, this standard provides that the mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported [*248] motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact.

LEdHN[4] [4]As to materiality, the substantive law will identify [****12] which facts are material. HN4 Only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment. Factual disputes that are irrelevant or unnecessary will not be counted. See generally 10A C. Wright, A. Miller, & M. Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2725, pp. 93-95 (1983). This materiality inquiry is independent of and separate from the question of the incorporation of the evidentiary standard into the summary judgment determination. That is, while the materiality determination rests on the substantive law, it is the substantive law's identification of which facts are critical and which facts are irrelevant that governs. Any proof or evidentiary requirements imposed by the substantive law are not germane to this inquiry, since materiality is only a criterion for categorizing factual disputes in their relation to the legal elements of the claim and not a criterion for evaluating the evidentiary underpinnings of those disputes.

LEdHN[5A] [5A]More important for present purposes, HN5 summary judgment will not lie if the dispute about a material fact is "genuine," that is, if the [***212] evidence is such that a reasonable [****13] jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. In First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253 (1968), we affirmed a grant of summary judgment for an antitrust defendant where the issue was whether there was a genuine factual dispute as to the existence of a conspiracy. We noted Rule 56\(e\)'s HN6 provision that a party opposing a properly supported motion for summary judgment "may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of his pleading, but . . . must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." We observed further that "[it] is true that HN7 the issue of material fact required by Rule 56\(c\) to be present to entitle a party to proceed to [*249] trial is not required to be resolved conclusively in favor of the party asserting its existence; rather, all that is required is that sufficient evidence supporting the claimed factual dispute be shown to require a jury or judge to resolve the parties' differing versions of the truth at trial." 391 U.S., at 288-289.

We went on to hold that, in the face of the defendant's properly supported motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff could [****14] not rest on his allegations of a conspiracy to get to a jury without "any significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint." Id., at 290.

Again, in Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144 (1970), the Court emphasized that the availability of summary judgment turned on whether a proper jury question was presented. There, one of the issues was whether there was a conspiracy between private persons and law enforcement officers. The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants, stating that there was no evidence from which reasonably minded jurors might draw an inference of conspiracy. We reversed, pointing out that the moving parties' submissions had not foreclosed the possibility of the existence of certain facts from which "it would be open to a jury . . . to infer from the circumstances" that there had been a meeting of the minds. Id., at 158-159.

[LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6] Our prior decisions may not have uniformly recited the same language in describing genuine factual issues under Rule 1\*\*2511 56, but it is clear enough from our recent cases that HN8 at the summary judgment stage the judge's function is not \*\*\*\*15 himself to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial. As Adickes, supra, and Cities Service, supra, indicate, there is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. Cities Service, supra, at 288-289. If the evidence is merely colorable, Dombrowski v. Eastland, 387 U.S. 82 \(1967\) (per curiam), or is not significantly probative, [\[\*250\] Cities Service, supra, at 290](#), summary judgment may be granted.

[LEdHN\[5C\]](#) [5C] [LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7] That this is the proper focus of the inquiry is strongly suggested by the Rule itself. Rule 56\(e\) HN9 provides that, when a properly supported motion for summary judgment \*\*\*213 is made,<sup>4</sup> the adverse party "must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial."<sup>5</sup> And, as we noted above, Rule 56\(c\) provides that the trial judge shall then grant summary judgment if there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and if the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. There is no \*\*\*\*16 requirement that the trial judge make findings of fact.<sup>6</sup> The inquiry performed is the threshold inquiry of determining whether there is the need for a trial -- whether, in other words, there are any genuine factual issues that properly can be resolved only by a finder of fact because they may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party.

\*\*\*\*17 [LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8] Petitioners suggest, and we agree, that this standard mirrors the standard for a directed verdict under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 50\(a\), which is that the trial judge must direct a verdict if, under the governing law, there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict. Brady v. Southern R. Co., 320 U.S. 476, 479-480 \(1943\). If reasonable minds could differ as to the import of the evidence, however, [\[\*251\]](#) a verdict should not be directed. Wilkerson v. McCarthy, 336 U.S. 53, 62 \(1949\). As the Court long ago said in Improvement Co. v. Munson, 14 Wall. 442, 448 (1872), and has several times repeated:

"Nor are judges any longer required to submit a question to a jury merely because some evidence has been introduced by the party having the burden of proof, unless the evidence be of such a character that it would warrant the jury in finding a verdict in favor of that party. Formerly it was held that if there was what is called a scintilla of evidence in support of a case the judge was bound to leave it to the jury, but recent decisions of high authority have established a more reasonable \*\*\*\*18 rule, that in every case, before the evidence is left to the jury, there is a preliminary question for the judge, not whether there is literally no evidence, but whether there is any upon which a

<sup>4</sup> Our analysis here does not address the question of the initial burden of production of evidence placed by Rule 56 on the party moving for summary judgment. See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, post, p. 317. Respondents have not raised this issue here, and for the purposes of our discussion we assume that the moving party has met initially the requisite evidentiary burden.

<sup>5</sup> This requirement in turn is qualified by Rule 56\(f\)'s provision that summary judgment be refused where the nonmoving party has not had the opportunity to discover information that is essential to his opposition. In our analysis here, we assume that both parties have had ample opportunity for discovery.

<sup>6</sup> In many cases, however, findings are extremely helpful to a reviewing court.

477 U.S. 242, *251; 106 S. Ct. 2505, **2511; 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, ***213; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****18

jury could properly proceed to find a verdict for the party producing it, upon whom the onus of proof is imposed." (Footnotes omitted.)

See also *Pleasants v. Fant*, 22 Wall. 116, 120-121 \(1875\); *Coughran v. Bigelow*, 164 U.S. 301, 307 \(1896\); *Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Chamberlain*, 288 U.S. 333, 343 \(1933\).

[**2512] LEdHN/9 [9]The Court has said that summary judgment should be granted where the evidence is such that it [***214] "would require a directed verdict for the moving party." *Sartor v. Arkansas Gas Corp.*, 321 U.S. 620, 624 \(1944\). And we have noted that the "genuine issue" summary judgment standard is "very close" to the "reasonable jury" directed verdict standard: "The primary difference between the two motions is procedural; summary judgment motions are usually made before trial and decided on documentary evidence, while directed verdict motions are made at trial and decided on the evidence [****19] that has been admitted." *Bill Johnson's Restaurants, Inc. v. NLRB*, 461 U.S. 731, 745, n. 11 \(1983\). In essence, though, the inquiry under each is the same: whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission [*252] to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law.

B

LEdHN/10A [10A]Progressing to the specific issue in this case, we are convinced that the inquiry involved in a ruling on a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict necessarily implicates the substantive evidentiary standard of proof that would apply at the trial on the merits. If the defendant in a run-of-the-mill civil case moves for summary judgment or for a directed verdict based on the lack of proof of a material fact, the judge must ask himself not whether he thinks the evidence unmistakably favors one side or the other but whether a fair-minded jury could return a verdict for the plaintiff on the evidence presented. The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the plaintiff's position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff. The judge's inquiry, [****20] therefore, unavoidably asks whether reasonable jurors could find by a preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict -- "whether there is [evidence] upon which a jury can properly proceed to find a verdict for the party producing it, upon whom the onus of proof is imposed." *Munson, supra, at 448*.

LEdHN/11 [11]In terms of the nature of the inquiry, this is no different from the consideration of a motion for acquittal in a criminal case, where the beyond-a-reasonable-doubt standard applies and where the trial judge asks whether a reasonable jury could find guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. See *Jackson v. Virginia*, 443 U.S. 307, 318-319 \(1979\). Similarly, where the First Amendment mandates a "clear and convincing" standard, the trial judge in disposing of a directed verdict motion should consider whether a reasonable factfinder could conclude, for example, that the plaintiff had shown actual malice with convincing clarity.

[*253] The case for the proposition that a higher burden of proof should have a corresponding effect on the judge when deciding whether to send the case to the jury was well made by the Court of Appeals [****21] for the Second Circuit in *United States v. Taylor*, 464 F.2d 240 \(1972\), which overruled *United States v. Feinberg*, 140 F.2d 592 \(1944\), a case holding that the standard of evidence necessary for a judge to send a case to the jury is the same in both civil and criminal cases even though the standard that the jury must apply in a criminal case is more demanding than in civil [***215] proceedings. Speaking through Judge Friendly, the Second Circuit said: "It would seem at first blush -- and we think also at second -- that more 'facts in evidence' are needed for the judge to allow [reasonable jurors to pass on a claim] when the proponent is required to establish [the claim] not merely by a preponderance of the evidence but . . . beyond a reasonable doubt." *464 F.2d, at 242*. The court could not find a "satisfying explanation in the Feinberg opinion why the judge should not place this higher burden on the prosecution in criminal proceedings before sending the case to the jury." Ibid. The Taylor court [**2513] also pointed out that almost all the Circuits had adopted something like Judge Prettyman's formulation [****22] in Curley v. United States, 160 F.2d 229, 232-233 \(1947\):

477 U.S. 242, *253; 106 S. Ct. 2505, **2513; 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, ***215; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****21

"The true rule, therefore, is that a trial judge, in passing upon a motion for directed verdict of acquittal, must determine whether upon the evidence, giving full play to the right of the jury to determine credibility, weigh the evidence, and draw justifiable inferences of fact, a reasonable mind might fairly conclude guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. If he concludes that upon the evidence there must be such a doubt in a reasonable mind, he must grant the motion; or, to state it another way, if there is no evidence upon which a reasonable mind might fairly conclude guilt beyond reasonable doubt, the motion must be granted. If he concludes that either of the [*254] two results, a reasonable doubt or no reasonable doubt, is fairly possible, he must let the jury decide the matter."

This view is equally applicable to a civil case to which the "clear and convincing" standard applies. Indeed, the Taylor court thought that it was implicit in this Court's adoption of the clear-and-convincing-evidence standard for certain kinds of cases that there was a "concomitant duty on the judge to consider [****23] the applicable burden when deciding whether to send a case to the jury." 464 F.2d, at 243. Although the court thought that this higher standard would not produce different results in many cases, it could not say that it would never do so.

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B] Just as the "convincing clarity" requirement is relevant in ruling on a motion for directed verdict, it is relevant in ruling on a motion for summary judgment. When determining if a genuine factual issue as to actual malice exists in a libel suit brought by a public figure, a trial judge must bear in mind the actual quantum and quality of proof necessary to support liability under New York Times. For example, there is no genuine issue if the evidence presented in the opposing affidavits is of insufficient caliber or quantity to allow a rational finder of fact to find actual malice by clear and convincing evidence.

Thus, in ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the judge must view the evidence presented through the prism of the substantive evidentiary burden. This conclusion is mandated by the nature of this determination. The question here is whether a jury could reasonably find either that the plaintiff proved his [****24] case by the quality and quantity of evidence required by the governing law or that he did not. Whether a jury could reasonably find for either party, however, cannot be defined [***216] except by the criteria governing what evidence would enable the jury to find for either the plaintiff or the defendant: It makes no sense to say that a jury could reasonably find for either party without some [*255] benchmark as to what standards govern its deliberations and within what boundaries its ultimate decision must fall, and these standards and boundaries are in fact provided by the applicable evidentiary standards.

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [↑] [12] [LEdHN\[13\]](#) [↑] [13] [LEdHN\[14\]](#) [↑] [14] Our holding that the clear-and-convincing standard of proof should be taken into account in ruling on summary judgment motions does not denigrate the role of the jury. It by no means authorizes trial on affidavits. HN10 [↑] Credibility determinations, the weighing of the evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences from the facts are jury functions, not those of a judge, whether he is ruling on a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict. The evidence of the nonmovant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor. Adickes, 398 U.S., at 158-159. [****25] Neither do we suggest that the trial courts should act other than with caution in granting summary judgment or that the trial court may not deny summary judgment in a case where there is reason to believe that the better course would be to proceed to a full trial. Kennedy v. Silas Mason Co., 334 U.S. 249 [*2514] (1948).

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [↑] [1C] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [↑] [10B] In sum, we conclude that HN11 [↑] the determination of whether a given factual dispute requires submission to a jury must be guided by the substantive evidentiary standards that apply to the case. This is true at both the directed verdict and summary judgment stages. Consequently, HN12 [↑] where the New York Times "clear and convincing" evidence requirement applies, the trial judge's summary judgment inquiry as to whether a genuine issue exists will be whether the evidence presented is such that a jury applying that evidentiary standard could reasonably find for either the plaintiff or the defendant. Thus, where the factual dispute concerns actual malice, clearly a material issue in a New York Times case, the appropriate summary judgment question will be whether the evidence in the record could support a reasonable jury finding [*256] either [****26] that the plaintiff has shown actual malice by clear and convincing evidence or that the plaintiff has not.<sup>7</sup>

III

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15] [LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16] Respondents argue, however, that whatever may be true of the applicability of the "clear and convincing" standard at the summary judgment or directed verdict stage, the defendant should seldom if ever be granted summary judgment where his state of mind is at issue and the jury might disbelieve him or his witnesses as to this issue. They rely on *Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting Co., 368 U.S. 464 \(1962\)*, for this proposition. [****27] We do not understand [***217] Poller, however, to hold that a plaintiff may defeat a defendant's properly supported motion for summary judgment in a conspiracy or libel case, for example, without offering any concrete evidence from which a reasonable juror could return a verdict in his favor and by merely asserting that the jury might, and legally could, disbelieve the defendant's denial of a conspiracy or of legal malice. The movant has the burden of showing that there is no genuine issue of fact, but the plaintiff is not thereby relieved of his own burden of producing in turn evidence that would support a jury verdict. *Rule 56\(e\)* itself provides that a party opposing a properly supported motion for summary judgment may not rest upon mere allegation or denials of his pleading, but must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Based on that Rule, *Cities Service, 391 U.S., at 290*, held that the plaintiff could not defeat the properly supported summary judgment motion of a defendant charged with a conspiracy without offering "any significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint." As we have recently said, [****28] "discredited testimony [*257] is not [normally] considered a sufficient basis for drawing a contrary conclusion." *Bose Corp. v. Consumers Union of United States, Inc., 466 U.S. 485, 512 \(1984\)*. Instead, the plaintiff must present affirmative evidence in order to defeat a properly supported motion for summary judgment. This is true even where the evidence is likely to be within the possession of the defendant, as long as the plaintiff has had a full opportunity to conduct discovery. We repeat, however, that the plaintiff, to survive the defendant's motion, need only present evidence from which a jury might return a verdict in his favor. If he does so, there is a genuine issue of fact that requires a trial.

IV

[LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17] In sum, a court ruling on a motion for summary judgment must be guided by the New York Times "clear and convincing" [**2515] evidentiary standard in determining whether a genuine issue of actual malice exists -- that is, whether the evidence presented is such that a reasonable jury might find that actual malice had been shown with convincing clarity. Because the Court of Appeals did not apply the correct standard in reviewing the District [****29] Court's grant of summary judgment, we vacate its decision and remand the case for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: BRENNAN; REHNQUIST

Dissent

---

JUSTICE BRENNAN, dissenting.

---

<sup>7</sup> Our statement in *Hutchinson v. Proxmire, 443 U.S. 111, 120, n. 9 \(1979\)*, that proof of actual malice "does not readily lend itself to summary disposition" was simply an acknowledgment of our general reluctance "to grant special procedural protections to defendants in libel and defamation actions in addition to the constitutional protections embodied in the substantive laws." *Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 790-791 \(1984\)*.

The Court today holds that "whether a given factual dispute requires submission to a jury must be guided by the substantive evidentiary standards that apply to the case," ante, at 255.<sup>1</sup> In my view, the Court's analysis [***218] is deeply flawed, [*258] and rests on a shaky foundation of unconnected and unsupported observations, assertions, and conclusions. Moreover, I am unable to divine from the Court's opinion how these evidentiary standards are to be considered, or what a trial judge is actually supposed to do in ruling on a motion for summary judgment. Accordingly, I respectfully dissent.

[***30] To support its holding that in ruling on a motion for summary judgment a trial court must consider substantive evidentiary burdens, the Court appropriately begins with the language of Rule 56\(c\), which states that summary judgment shall be granted if it appears that there is "no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." The Court then purports to restate this Rule, and asserts that "summary judgment will not lie if the dispute about a material fact is 'genuine,' that is, if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Ante, at 248. No direct authority is cited for the proposition that in order to determine whether a dispute is "genuine" for Rule 56 purposes a judge must ask if a "reasonable" jury could find for the nonmoving party. Instead, the Court quotes from First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 288-289 \(\*2591\) \(1968\), to the effect that a summary judgment motion will be defeated if "sufficient evidence supporting the claimed factual dispute be shown to require a jury or judge to resolve the parties' [***31] differing versions of the truth at trial," ante, at 249, and that a plaintiff may not, in defending against a motion for summary judgment, rest on mere allegations or denials of his pleadings. After citing Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144 \(1970\), for the startling proposition that "the availability of summary judgment [turns] on whether a proper jury question [is] presented," ante, at 249, the Court then reasserts, again with no direct authority, that in determining whether [**2516] a jury question is presented, the inquiry is whether there are factual issues "that properly can be resolved only by a finder of fact because they may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party." Ante, at 250. The Court maintains that this summary judgment inquiry [***219] "mirrors" that which applies in the context of a motion for directed verdict under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 50\(a\): "whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law." Ante, at 251-252.

Having thus decided that a "genuine" dispute is one which is not "one-sided," [***32] and one which could "reasonably" be resolved by a "fair-minded" jury in favor of either party, ibid., the Court then concludes:

"Whether a jury could reasonably find for either party, however, cannot be defined except by the criteria governing what evidence would enable the jury to find for either the plaintiff or the defendant: It makes no sense to say that a jury could reasonably find for either party without some benchmark as to what standards govern its deliberations and within what boundaries its ultimate decision must fall, and these standards and boundaries are in fact provided by the applicable evidentiary standards." Ante, at 254-255.

<sup>1</sup> The Court's holding today is not, of course, confined in its application to First Amendment cases. Although this case arises in the context of litigation involving libel and the press, the Court's holding is that "in ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the judge must view the evidence presented through the prism of the substantive evidentiary burden." Ante, at 254. Accordingly, I simply do not understand why JUSTICE REHNQUIST, dissenting, feels it appropriate to cite Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783 \(1984\), and to remind the Court that we have consistently refused to extend special procedural protections to defendants in libel and defamation suits. The Court today does nothing of the kind. It changes summary judgment procedure for all litigants, regardless of the substantive nature of the underlying litigation.

Moreover, the Court's holding is not limited to those cases in which the evidentiary standard is "heightened," i. e., those in which a plaintiff must prove his case by more than a mere preponderance of the evidence. Presumably, if a district court ruling on a motion for summary judgment in a libel case is to consider the "quantum and quality" of proof necessary to support liability under New York Times, ante, at 254, and then ask whether the evidence presented is of "sufficient caliber or quantity" to support that quantum and quality, the court must ask the same questions in a garden-variety action where the plaintiff need prevail only by a mere preponderance of the evidence. In other words, today's decision by its terms applies to all summary judgment motions, irrespective of the burden of proof required and the subject matter of the suit.

[*260] As far as I can discern, this conclusion, which is at the heart of the case, has been reached without the benefit of any support in the case law. Although, as noted above, the Court cites Adickes and Cities Service, those cases simply do not stand for the proposition that in ruling on a summary judgment motion, the trial court is to inquire into the "one-sidedness" of the evidence presented by the parties. Cities Service involved the propriety of a grant of summary judgment in favor of a defendant alleged [****33] to have conspired to violate the antitrust laws. The issue in the case was whether, on the basis of the facts in the record, a jury could infer that the defendant had entered into a conspiracy to boycott. No direct evidence of the conspiracy was produced. In agreeing with the lower courts that the circumstantial evidence presented by the plaintiff was insufficient to take the case to the jury, we observed that there was "one fact" that petitioner had produced to support the existence of the illegal agreement, and that that single fact could not support petitioner's theory of liability. Critically, we observed that "[the] case at hand presents peculiar difficulties because the issue of fact crucial to petitioner's case is also an issue of law, namely the existence of a conspiracy." 391 U.S., at 289 In other words, Cities Service is at heart about whether certain facts can support inferences that are, as a matter of antitrust law, sufficient to support a particular theory of liability under the Sherman Act. Just this Term, in discussing summary judgment in the context of suits brought under the antitrust laws, we characterized both Cities Service [****34] and Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752 \(1984\), as cases in which "antitrust law [limited] the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence. . . ." Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588 \(1986\) (emphasis added). Cities Service thus provides no authority for the conclusion that Rule 56 requires a trial court to consider whether direct evidence produced by the parties is "one-sided." To the contrary, in Matsushita, the most [*220] recent [*261] case to cite and discuss Cities Service, we stated that the requirement that a dispute be "genuine" means simply that there must be more than "some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." 475 U.S., at 586.<sup>2</sup>

[****35] [*2517] Nor does Adickes, also relied on by the Court, suggest in any way that the appropriate summary judgment inquiry is whether the evidence overwhelmingly supports one party. Adickes, like Cities Service, presented the question of whether a grant of summary judgment in favor of a defendant on a conspiracy count was appropriate. The plaintiff, a [*262] white schoolteacher, maintained that employees of defendant Kress conspired with the police to deny her rights protected by the Fourteenth Amendment by refusing to serve her in one of its lunchrooms simply because she was white and accompanied by a number of black schoolchildren. She maintained, among other things, that Kress arranged with the police to have her arrested for vagrancy when she left the defendant's premises. In support of its motion for summary judgment, Kress submitted statements from a deposition of one of its employees asserting that he had not communicated or agreed with the police to deny

<sup>2</sup> Writing in dissent in Matsushita, JUSTICE WHITE stated that he agreed with the summary judgment test employed by the Court, namely, that "[where] the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no 'genuine issue for trial.'" 475 U.S., at 599. Whether the shift, announced today, from looking to a "reasonable" rather than a "rational" jury is intended to be of any significance, there are other aspects of the Matsushita dissent which I find difficult to square with the Court's holding in the present case. The Matsushita dissenters argued:

". . . [The] Court summarizes Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., supra, as holding that 'courts should not permit factfinders to infer conspiracies when such inferences are implausible. . . .' Ante, at 593. Such language suggests that a judge hearing a defendant's motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case should go beyond the traditional summary judgment inquiry and decide for himself whether the weight of the evidence favors the plaintiff. Cities Service and Monsanto do not stand for any such proposition. Each of those cases simply held that a particular piece of evidence standing alone was insufficiently probative to justify sending a case to the jury. These holdings in no way undermine the doctrine that all evidence must be construed in the light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment.

"If the Court intends to give every judge hearing a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case the job of determining if the evidence makes the inference of conspiracy more probable than not, it is overturning settled law. If the Court does not intend such a pronouncement, it should refrain from using unnecessarily broad and confusing language." Id., at 600-601 (footnote omitted).

In my view, these words are as applicable and relevant to the Court's opinion today as they were to the opinion of the Court in Matsushita.

plaintiff service or to have her arrested, and explaining that the store had taken the challenged action not because of the race of the plaintiff, but because it was fearful of the reaction of some of its [****36] customers if it served a racially mixed group. Kress also submitted affidavits from the Chief of Police and the arresting officers denying that the store manager had requested that petitioner be arrested, and noted that in the plaintiff's own deposition, she conceded that she had no knowledge of any communication between the police and any Kress employee and was relying on circumstantial evidence to support her allegations. In opposing defendant's motion for [***221] summary judgment, plaintiff stated that defendant in its moving papers failed to dispute an allegation in the complaint, a statement at her deposition, and an unsworn statement by a Kress employee all to the effect that there was a policeman in the store at the time of the refusal to serve, and that it was this policeman who subsequently made the arrest. Plaintiff argued that this sequence of events "created a substantial enough possibility of a conspiracy to allow her to proceed to trial. . ." 398 U.S., at 157.

We agreed, and therefore reversed the lower courts, reasoning that Kress "did not carry its burden because of its failure to foreclose the possibility that there was a policeman in the Kress [****37] store while petitioner was awaiting service, and that this policeman reached an understanding with some [*263] Kress employee that petitioner not be served." Ibid. Despite the fact that none of the materials relied on by plaintiff met the requirements of Rule 56\(e\), we stated nonetheless that Kress failed to meet its initial burden of showing that there was no genuine dispute of a material fact. Specifically, we held that because Kress failed to negate plaintiff's materials suggesting that a [**2518] policeman was in fact in the store at the time of the refusal to serve, "it would be open to a jury . . . to infer from the circumstances that the policeman and a Kress employee had a 'meeting of the minds' and thus reached an understanding that petitioner should be refused service." Id., at 158.

In Adickes we held that a jury might permissibly infer a conspiracy from the mere presence of a policeman in a restaurant. We never reached and did not consider whether the evidence was "one-sided," and had we done so, we clearly would have had to affirm, rather than reverse, the lower courts, since in that case there was no admissible evidence submitted [****38] by petitioner, and a significant amount of evidence presented by the defendant tending to rebut the existence of a conspiracy. The question we did reach was simply whether, as a matter of conspiracy law, a jury would be entitled, again, as a matter of law, to infer from the presence of a policeman in a restaurant the making of an agreement between that policeman and an employee. Because we held that a jury was entitled so to infer, and because the defendant had not carried its initial burden of production of demonstrating that there was no evidence that there was not a policeman in the lunchroom, we concluded that summary judgment was inappropriate.

Accordingly, it is surprising to find the case cited by the majority for the proposition that "there is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party." Ante, at 249. There was, of course, no admissible evidence in Adickes favoring the nonmoving plaintiff; there was only an [*264] unrebutted assertion that a Kress employee and a policeman were in the same room at the time of the alleged constitutional violation. Like Cities Service, [****39] Adickes suggests that on a defendant's motion for summary judgment, a trial court must consider whether, as a matter of the substantive law of the plaintiff's cause of action, a jury will be permitted to draw inferences supporting the [***222] plaintiff's legal theory. In Cities Service we found, in effect, that the plaintiff had failed to make out a prima facie case; in Adickes we held that the moving defendant had failed to rebut the plaintiff's prima facie case. In neither case is there any intimation that a trial court should inquire whether plaintiff's evidence is "significantly probative," as opposed to "merely colorable," or, again, "one-sided." Nor is there in either case any suggestion that once a nonmoving plaintiff has made out a prima facie case based on evidence satisfying Rule 56\(e\) that there is any showing that a defendant can make to prevail on a motion for summary judgment. Yet this is what the Court appears to hold, relying, in part, on these two cases.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup>I am also baffled by the other cases cited by the majority to support its holding. For example, the Court asserts that "[if] . . . evidence is merely colorable, Dombrowski v. Eastland, 387 U.S. 82 (1967) (per curiam), . . . summary judgment may be granted." Ante, at 249-250. In Dombrowski, we reversed a judgment granting summary judgment to the counsel to the Internal Security Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate because there was "controversied evidence in the record . . . which affords more than merely colorable substance" to the petitioners' allegations. 387 U.S., at 84. Dombrowski simply cannot be read to mean that summary judgment may be granted if evidence is merely colorable; what the case actually

[****40] As explained above, and as explained also by JUSTICE REHNQUIST in his dissent, see post, at 271, I cannot agree that the authority cited by the Court supports its position. In my view, the Court's result is the product of an exercise [*265] akin to the child's game of "telephone," in which a message is repeated from one person to another and then another; after some time, the message bears little resemblance to what was originally spoken. In the present case, the Court purports to restate the summary judgment test, but with each repetition, the original understanding is increasingly distorted.

[**2519] But my concern is not only that the Court's decision is unsupported; after all, unsupported views may nonetheless be supportable. I am more troubled by the fact that the Court's opinion sends conflicting signals to trial courts and reviewing courts which must deal with summary judgment motions on a day-to-day basis. This case is about a trial court's responsibility when considering a motion for summary judgment, but in my view, the Court, while instructing the trial judge to "consider" heightened evidentiary standards, fails to explain what that means. In other words, [****41] how does a judge assess how one-sided evidence is, or what a "fair-minded" jury could "reasonably" decide? The Court provides conflicting clues to these mysteries, which I fear can lead only to increased confusion in the district and appellate courts.

The Court's opinion is replete with boilerplate language to the effect that trial courts are not to weigh evidence when deciding summary judgment motions:

"[It] is clear enough from our recent cases that at the summary judgment stage the judge's function is not himself to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter . . ." Ante, at 249.

"Our holding . . . does not denigrate [***223] the role of the jury. . . . Credibility determinations, the weighing of the evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences from the facts are jury functions, not those of a judge, whether he is ruling on a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict. The evidence of the nonmovant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor." Ante, at 255.

[*266] But the Court's opinion is also full of language which could surely be understood as an invitation -- if not an instruction -- to trial [****42] courts to assess and weigh evidence much as a juror would:

"When determining if a genuine factual issue . . . exists . . . , a trial judge must bear in mind the actual quantum and quality of proof necessary to support liability . . . . For example, there is no genuine issue if the evidence presented in the opposing affidavits is of insufficient caliber or quantity to allow a rational finder of fact to find actual malice by clear and convincing evidence." Ante, at 254 (emphasis added).

"[The] inquiry . . . [is] whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law." Ante, at 251-252 (emphasis added).

"[The] judge must ask himself . . . whether a fair-minded jury could return a verdict for the plaintiff on the evidence presented. The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the plaintiff's position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff." Ante, at 252.

I simply cannot square the direction that the judge "is not himself to weigh the evidence" with the direction that [****43] the judge also bear in mind the "quantum" of proof required and consider whether the evidence is of sufficient "caliber or quantity" to meet that "quantum." I would have thought that a determination of the "caliber and quantity," i. e., the importance and value, of the evidence in light of the "quantum," i. e., amount "required," could only be performed by weighing the evidence.

If in fact, this is what the Court would, under today's decision, require of district courts, then I am fearful that this new rule -- for this surely would be a brand new procedure -- will transform what is meant to provide an expedited "summary" [*267] procedure into a full-blown paper trial on the merits. It is hard for me to imagine that a responsible counsel, aware that the judge will be assessing the "quantum" of the evidence he is presenting, will risk says is that summary judgment will be denied if evidence is "controverted," because when evidence is controverted, assertions become colorable for purposes of motions for summary judgment law.

---

either moving for or responding to a summary judgment motion without coming forth with all of the evidence he can muster in support of his client's case. Moreover, if the judge on motion for summary judgment really is to weigh the evidence, then [**2520] in my view grave concerns are raised concerning the constitutional right of [****44] civil litigants to a jury trial.

It may well be, as JUSTICE REHNQUIST suggests, see post, at 270-271, that the Court's decision today will be of little practical [***224] effect. I, for one, cannot imagine a case in which a judge might plausibly hold that the evidence on motion for summary judgment was sufficient to enable a plaintiff bearing a mere preponderance burden to get to the jury -- i. e., that a prima facie case had been made out -- but insufficient for a plaintiff bearing a clear-and-convincing burden to withstand a defendant's summary judgment motion. Imagine a suit for breach of contract. If, for example, the defendant moves for summary judgment and produces one purported eyewitness who states that he was present at the time the parties discussed the possibility of an agreement, and unequivocally denies that the parties ever agreed to enter into a contract, while the plaintiff produces one purported eyewitness who asserts that the parties did in fact come to terms, presumably that case would go to the jury. But if the defendant produced not one, but 100 eyewitnesses, while the plaintiff stuck with his single witness, would that case, under the Court's holding, [****45] still go to the jury? After all, although the plaintiff's burden in this hypothetical contract action is to prove his case by a mere preponderance of the evidence, the judge, so the Court tells us, is to "ask himself . . . whether a fair-minded jury could return a verdict for the plaintiff on the evidence presented." Ante, at 252. Is there, in this hypothetical example, "a sufficient disagreement to require submission [*268] to a jury," or is the evidence "so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law"? Ante, at 251-252. Would the result change if the plaintiff's one witness were now shown to be a convicted perjurer? Would the result change if, instead of a garden-variety contract claim, the plaintiff sued on a fraud theory, thus requiring him to prove his case by clear and convincing evidence?

It seems to me that the Court's decision today unpersuasively answers the question presented, and in doing so raises a host of difficult and troubling questions for which there may well be no adequate solutions. What is particularly unfair is that the mess we make is not, at least in the first instance, our own to deal with; it is the district courts and courts [****46] of appeals that must struggle to clean up after us.

In my view, if a plaintiff presents evidence which either directly or by permissible inference (and these inferences are a product of the substantive law of the underlying claim) supports all of the elements he needs to prove in order to prevail on his legal claim, the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case and a defendant's motion for summary judgment must fail regardless of the burden of proof that the plaintiff must meet. In other words, whether evidence is "clear and convincing," or proves a point by a mere preponderance, is for the factfinder to determine. As I read the case law, this is how it has been, and because of my concern that today's decision may erode the constitutionally enshrined role of the jury, and also undermine the usefulness of summary judgment procedure, this is how I believe it should remain.

JUSTICE REHNQUIST, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE joins, dissenting.

The Court, apparently moved by concerns for intellectual tidiness, mistakenly decides that the "clear and convincing evidence" standard governing finders of fact in libel [***225] cases must be applied by trial courts in deciding a motion for summary [****47] judgment in such a case. The Court refers to this as a "substantive standard," but I think it is actually a procedural [*269] requirement engrafted onto Rule 56, contrary to our statement in *Calder v. Jones*, 465 U.S. 783 \(1984\), that "[we] have already declined in other contexts to grant special procedural protections to defendants in libel and defamation actions in addition to the constitutional [**2521] protections embodied in the substantive laws." *Id.* at 790-791.

The Court, I believe, makes an even greater mistake in failing to apply its newly announced rule to the facts of this case. Instead of thus illustrating how the rule works, it contents itself with abstractions and paraphrases of abstractions, so that its opinion sounds much like a treatise about cooking by someone who has never cooked before and has no intention of starting now.

There is a large class of cases in which the higher standard imposed by the Court today would seem to have no effect at all. Suppose, for example, on motion for summary judgment in a hypothetical libel case, the plaintiff concedes that his only proof of malice is the testimony of witness [****48] A. Witness A testifies at his deposition that the reporter who wrote the story in question told him that she, the reporter, had done absolutely no checking on the story and had real doubts about whether or not it was correct as to the plaintiff. The defendant's examination of witness A brings out that he has a prior conviction for perjury.

May the Court grant the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiff has failed to produce sufficient proof of malice? Surely not, if the Court means what it says, when it states: "Credibility determinations . . . are jury functions, not those of a judge, whether he is ruling on a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict. The evidence of the nonmovant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor." Ante, at 255.

The case proceeds to trial, and at the close of the plaintiff's evidence the defendant moves for a directed verdict on the [*270] ground that the plaintiff has failed to produce sufficient evidence of malice. The only evidence of malice produced by the plaintiff is the same testimony of witness A, who is duly impeached by the defendant for the prior perjury [****49] conviction. In addition, the trial judge has now had an opportunity to observe the demeanor of witness A, and has noticed that he fidgets when answering critical questions, his eyes shift from the floor to the ceiling, and he manifests all other indicia traditionally attributed to perjurers.

May the trial court at this stage grant a directed verdict? Again, surely not; we are still dealing with "credibility determinations."

The defendant now puts on its testimony, and produces three witnesses who were present at the time when witness A alleges that the reporter said she had not checked the story and had grave doubts about its accuracy as to plaintiff. Witness A concedes that these three people were present at the meeting, and that the statement of the reporter [***226] took place in the presence of all these witnesses. Each witness categorically denies that the reporter made the claimed statement to witness A.

May the trial court now grant a directed verdict at the close of all the evidence? Certainly the plaintiff's case is appreciably weakened by the testimony of three disinterested witnesses, and one would hope that a properly charged jury would quickly return a verdict [****50] for the defendant. But as long as credibility is exclusively for the jury, it seems the Court's analysis would still require this case to be decided by that body.

Thus, in the case that I have posed, it would seem to make no difference whether the standard of proof which the plaintiff had to meet in order to prevail was the preponderance of the evidence, clear and convincing evidence, or proof beyond a reasonable doubt. But if the application of the standards makes no difference in the case that I hypothesize, one may fairly ask in what sort of case does the difference in standards [*271] make a difference in outcome? Cases may be posed dealing with evidence that is essentially documentary, rather than testimonial; but the Court has held in a related context involving Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 52(a) that inferences from documentary evidence are as much the prerogative [**2522] of the finder of fact as inferences as to the credibility of witnesses. Anderson v. Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 574 (1985). The Court affords the lower courts no guidance whatsoever as to what, if any, difference the abstract standards that it propounds would make [****51] in a particular case.

There may be more merit than the Court is willing to admit to Judge Learned Hand's observation in United States v. Feinberg, 140 F.2d 592, 594 (CA2), cert. denied, 322 U.S. 726 (1944), that "[while] at times it may be practicable" to "distinguish between the evidence which should satisfy reasonable men, and the evidence which should satisfy reasonable men beyond a reasonable doubt[,] . . . in the long run the line between them is too thin for day to day use." The Court apparently approves the overruling of the Feinberg case in the Court of Appeals by Judge Friendly's opinion in United States v. Taylor, 464 F.2d 240 \(1972\). But even if the Court is entirely correct in its judgment on this point, Judge Hand's statement seems applicable to this case because the criminal case differs from the libel case in that the standard in the former is proof "beyond a reasonable doubt," which is presumably easier to distinguish from the normal "preponderance of the evidence" standard than is the intermediate standard of "clear and convincing evidence."

More important for purposes of analyzing the present case, [****52] there is no exact analog in the criminal process to the motion for summary judgment in a civil case. Perhaps the closest comparable device for screening out unmeritorious cases in the criminal area is the grand jury proceeding, though the comparison is obviously not on all fours. The standard for allowing a criminal case to proceed to trial is not whether the government has produced prima facie evidence of guilt beyond [*272] a reasonable doubt for every element of the offense, but only whether it has established probable cause. See United \*\*\*227 States v. Mechanik, 475 U.S. 66, 70 \(1986\). Thus, in a criminal case the standard used prior to trial is much more lenient than the "clear beyond a reasonable doubt" standard which must be employed by the finder of fact.

The three differentiated burdens of proof in civil and criminal cases, vague and impressionistic though they necessarily are, probably do make some difference when considered by the finder of fact, whether it be a jury or a judge in a bench trial. Yet it is not a logical or analytical message that the terms convey, but instead almost a state of mind; we have previously said:

"Candor [****53] suggests that, to a degree, efforts to analyze what lay jurors understand concerning the differences among these three tests . . . may well be largely an academic exercise. . . . Indeed, the ultimate truth as to how the standards of proof affect decisionmaking may well be unknowable, given that factfinding is a process shared by countless thousands of individuals throughout the country. We probably can assume no more than that the difference between a preponderance of the evidence and proof beyond a reasonable doubt probably is better understood than either of them in relation to the intermediate standard of clear and convincing evidence." Addington v. Texas, 441 U.S. 418, 424-425 \(1979\) (emphasis added).

The Court's decision to engraft the standard of proof applicable to a factfinder onto the law governing the procedural motion for a summary judgment (a motion that has always been regarded as raising a question of law rather than a question of fact, see, e. g., La Riviere v. EEOC, 682 F.2d 1275, 1277-1278 \(CA9 1982\) (Wallace, J.)), will do great mischief with little corresponding benefit. The primary effect of the Court's opinion [****54] today will likely be to cause the decisions of trial judges on summary judgment motions in libel cases to be [*273] more erratic and inconsistent than before. This is largely because the Court has [**2523] created a standard that is different from the standard traditionally applied in summary judgment motions without even hinting as to how its new standard will be applied to particular cases.

References

---

50 Am Jur 2d, Libel and Slander 125- 136, 174, 175, 441, 442, 454- 462; 73 Am Jur 2d, Summary Judgment 26- 32

28 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Pleadings and Motions 62:535-62:556, 62:632

1 Federal [****55] Procedural Forms, L Ed, Actions in District Court 1:1731-1:1812

14 Am Jur Proof of Facts 2d 649; Defamation with Actual Malice

7 Am Jur Trials 223, Libel Actions by Public Officials; 19 Am Jur Trials 499, Defamation

USCS Constitution, 1st Amend.; USCS Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 56

477 U.S. 242, *273; 106 S. Ct. 2505, **2523; 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, ***227; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 115, ****55

US L Ed Digest, Constitutional Law 948; Evidence 176; Summary Judgment and Judgment on the Pleadings 5
Index to Annotations, Freedom of Speech and Press; Libel and Slander; Malice; New York Times Rule; Summary Judgment

Annotation References :

Progeny of New York Times v Sullivan in the Supreme Court. 61 L Ed 2d 975.

Reviewability of federal court's denial of motion for summary judgment. 17 L Ed 2d 886.

Defamation: application of New York Times and related standards to nonmedia defendants. 38 ALR4th 1114.

Libel and slander: who is "public figure" in the light of Gertz v Robert Welch, Inc. \(1974\) 418 US 323, 41 L Ed 2d 789, 94 S Ct 2997. 75 ALR3d 616.

Libel and slander: what constitutes actual malice, within federal [****56] constitutional rule requiring public officials to show actual malice. 20 ALR3d 988.

---

End of Document

Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc.

Supreme Court of the United States

October 6, 1986, Argued ; December 9, 1986, Decided

No. 85-473

Reporter

479 U.S. 104 *; 107 S. Ct. 484 **; 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 ***; 1986 U.S. LEXIS 21 ****; 55 U.S.L.W. 4027; 1986-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,366

CARGILL, INC., ET AL. v. MONFORT OF COLORADO, INC.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 761 F.2d 570, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

merger, antitrust, pricing, predatory, anti trust law, competitors, Clayton Act, acquisition, injunctive relief, beef, damages, district court, packer, loss of profits, concentration, squeeze, plants, threatened loss, losses, violation of antitrust laws, market share, probability, injunction, price-cost, compete, markets, profits, cattle, harmed, actual injury

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

**HN1** Remedies, Damages

Under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 737, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26, private parties threatened with loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws may seek injunctive relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN2** Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 26.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN3 [blue square] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits mergers when the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly. 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Traffic Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN4 Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

Under § 4 of the Clayton Act, any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

HN5 [] Clayton Act, Claims

Plaintiffs seeking treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act must show more than simply an injury causally linked to a particular merger; instead, plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

ÍÍ JÁNEJÉFÉ ÉAFÉI LÁFÉI ÁJÉDÉAÍ ÍÍ ÉAFÉI LÁÍ HASEZÓAÉCAÁGÍ ÉAFÉI GÍ LAFJÍ Í ÁNEJÉSÓYÓQÍAGFÉAÍ

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN6 [] Clayton Act, Claims

A showing of antitrust injury is necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish standing under § 4 of the Clayton Act, because a party may have suffered antitrust injury but may not be a proper plaintiff under § 4 for other reasons.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

HN7 Remedies, Damages

Section 16 of the Clayton Act provides in part that any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 26.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN8 [] Clayton Act, Claims

Section 16 and § 4 of the Clayton Act do differ in various ways. For example, § 4 requires a plaintiff to show actual injury, but § 16 requires a showing only of "threatened" loss or damage; similarly, § 4 requires a showing of injury to business or property, while § 16 contains no such limitation. Although these differences do affect the nature of the injury cognizable under each section, under both § 16 and § 4 the plaintiff must still allege an injury of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN9 [] Clayton Act, Claims

Standing analysis under § 16 of the Clayton Act will not always be identical to standing analysis under § 4 of the Clayton Act. For example, the difference in the remedy each section provides means that certain considerations relevant to a determination of standing under § 4 are not relevant under § 16. The treble-damages remedy, if afforded to every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation, or for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation would open the door to duplicative recoveries, and to multiple lawsuits. In order to protect against multiple lawsuits and duplicative recoveries, courts should examine other factors in addition to antitrust injury, such as the potential for duplicative recovery, the complexity of apportioning damages, and the existence of other parties that have been more directly harmed, to determine whether a party is a proper plaintiff under § 4.

I Ì JÁWEÉSE Í ÍFÉ Í LAFÉ Í AYÉODA Í I ÉTÉ Í I LÁHSE Ó Ó ÓGÁ Á GÍ ÉTÉ GÍ LAFJÍ Í ÁNÈÉSÓYÓ Ó ÓGÁ Á GÍ

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

[**HN10** \[💡\] **Clayton Act, Claims**](#)

Under § 16 of the Clayton Act, the only remedy available is equitable in nature, and the fact is that one injunction is as effective as 100, and, concomitantly, that 100 injunctions are no more effective than one. Thus, because standing under § 16 raises no threat of multiple lawsuits or duplicative recoveries, some of the factors other than antitrust injury that are appropriate to a determination of standing under § 4 of the Clayton Act are not relevant under § 16.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

[**HN11** \[💡\] **Remedies, Injunctions**](#)

Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act are best understood as providing complementary remedies for a single set of injuries. In order to seek injunctive relief under § 16, a private plaintiff must allege threatened loss or damage of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

ÍÍ JÁNEJÉFÉ ÉAFÉI LÁFÉI ÁJÉDÉAÍ ÍÍ ÉAFÉI LÁÍ HASEZÓAÉCAÁGÍ ÉAFÉI GÍ LAFJÍ Í ÁNEJÉSÓYÓQÍAGFÉAÍ

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN12 [] Remedies, Injunctions

Section 16 of the Clayton Act gives any individual, company, or corporation or combination the right to go into court and enjoin the doing of these unlawful acts, instead of having to wait until the act is done and the business destroyed and then sue for damages. So that if a man is injured by a discriminatory contract, by a tying contract, by the unlawful acquisition of stock of competing corporations, or by reason of someone acting unlawfully as a director in two banks or other corporations, he can go into court and enjoin and restrain the party from committing such unlawful acts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN13 [  ] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Predatory pricing may be defined as pricing below an appropriate measure of cost for the purpose of eliminating competitors in the short run and reducing competition in the long run. It is a practice that harms both competitors and competition. In contrast to price-cutting aimed simply at increasing market share, predatory pricing has as its aim the elimination of competition. Predatory pricing is thus a practice inimical to the purposes of the antitrust laws, and one capable of inflicting antitrust injury.

Lawyers' Edition Display

Decision

In action for injunction under 16 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 26), (1) plaintiff held required to show threat of antitrust injury, and (2) loss or damage due merely to increased competition held not to constitute such injury.

Summary

The fifth largest beef packing company in the United States, seeking to prevent the planned acquisition of the third largest beef packer by the second largest, brought an action for injunctive relief under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26) in the United States District Court for the District of Colorado. The plaintiff company alleged that this merger (1) would violate 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18) by substantially lessening competition in the relevant market, and (2) would injure the plaintiff company, because the resulting firm could afford to reduce its prices to a level at or just above its costs and force its competitors to follow suit, which would squeeze the plaintiff company's profits but would not put it out of business. The District Court enjoined the merger, holding (1) that a plaintiff must show that it will suffer an "antitrust injury"--that is, an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent--in order to have standing to seek an injunction under 16, but (2) that the alleged price-cost squeeze satisfied that rule (591 F Supp 683). The United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit affirmed, holding that the alleged squeeze was a form of predatory pricing and was sufficient to give the plaintiff company standing to sue under 16 (761 F2d 570).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings. In an opinion by Brennan, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and Marshall, Powell, O'Connor, and Scalia, JJ., it was held (1) that a plaintiff seeking injunctive relief under 16 must show a threat of the type of injury which the antitrust laws were designed to prevent, and (2) that loss or damage due merely to increased competition, such as a threatened loss of profits due to possible price competition following a merger by competitors, does not constitute such an injury.

I I JÁÉÜÉÉÉÉ ÉÉÉÉ LÉÉÉÉ ÁÉÉÉÓÉÉÉÉ I I ÉÉÉÉ I I LÁHSEÓáÉGÁ GÍ ÉÉÉÉ GÍ LÁFJÍ I ÁNÉÉÉSÓYÓIÁGÉÉÉÉ

Stevens, J., joined by White, J., dissented, expressing the view (1) that the concept of "antitrust injury," which is at the heart of a treble damages action, is not an element of a cause of action for injunctive relief that depends on finding a reasonable threat that an incipient disease will poison an entire market; and (2) that 16 provides a remedy for a private party which challenges a horizontal merger between two of its largest competitors, if there is a significant probability that the merger will adversely affect competition in the relevant market.

Blackmun, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §70 > Clayton Act -- injunctive relief -- threat of antitrust injury -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]

Plaintiffs seeking injunctive relief under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26) must show a threat of antitrust injury; that is, they must allege a threatened loss or damage of the type that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent, and which flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. (Stevens and White, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §70 > Clayton Act -- injunctive relief -- threat of antitrust injury -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C]

A showing of loss or damage due merely to increased competition does not constitute an antitrust injury which will give the injured party standing to seek injunctive relief under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26); in particular, a threat of loss of profits due to possible price competition following a merger of one's competitors does not constitute a threat of antitrust injury; thus, a beef-packing plant owner which seeks to enjoin the pending merger of two of its largest competitors does not make the showing required under 16 by raising the possibility that the firm resulting from the merger would lower its prices to a level at or only slightly above its costs, forcing the plant owner to lower its own prices, which would cause it to suffer a loss in profitability but would not drive it out of business.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > Clayton Act -- treble damages -- injunctive relief -- standing -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B] [LEdHN\[3C\]](#) [3C] [LEdHN\[3D\]](#) [3D]

A showing of the type of injury the antitrust laws were designed to prevent is necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish a party's standing to seek treble damages under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15); in order to protect against multiple lawsuits and duplicative recoveries, courts should examine other factors, such as the potential for duplicative recovery, the complexity of apportioning damages, and the existence of other parties that have been more directly harmed, to determine whether a party is a proper plaintiff under 4; however, standing under the injunctive relief provision of 16 of the Act (15 USCS 26) raises no threat of multiple lawsuits or duplicative recoveries, and some of the factors other than antitrust injury that are appropriate to a determination of standing under 4 are thus not relevant under 16.

I Ì JÁMEÉÉÉÉ ÉÉÉÉ LÉÉÉÉ ÁÉÉÉDÁÁ ÁÁÁÁ ÁÁÁÁ ÁÁÁÁ GÍ ÁÁÁÁ GÍ LÁFJÍ ÁÁÁÁSÓYÓGÁFÁÁÁÁ

APPEAL §1119 > issue not raised below -- new theory -- antitrust injury -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

Because there is no indication in the record that a beef-packing plant owner, which sought injunctive relief under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26) against the pending merger of two of its largest competitors and was thus required to show a threat of antitrust injury, had raised in the courts below its claim that it would be injured by the trend toward oligopoly pricing that could conceivably follow the merger, the United States Supreme Court will not address that claim on certiorari.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > predatory pricing -- injunctive relief --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

Predatory pricing, which may be defined as pricing below an appropriate measure of cost for the purpose of eliminating competitors in the short run and reducing competition in the long run, is an anticompetitive practice forbidden by the antitrust laws, and one capable of inflicting an antitrust injury which will give the injured party standing to seek injunctive relief under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26); there is no per se rule denying competitors standing to challenge acquisitions on the basis of theories about postacquisition predatory pricing.

APPEAL §1477 > RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > review of facts -- predatory pricing -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

If the decision of a Federal Court of Appeals, which finds that a beef-packing plant owner seeking to enjoin the merger of two of its largest competitors under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26) has alleged what amounts to a form of predatory pricing and thus satisfied the requirement that it show a threat of antitrust injury, is properly interpreted as referring to the plant owner's allegation that the firm resulting from the merger would lower its prices to a level at or only slightly above its costs and thus force the plant owner to lower its prices and lose profits, then the Court of Appeals' judgment is clearly erroneous, since (1) the plant owner made no allegation that the new firm would act with predatory intent, and (2) price competition is not predatory activity.

APPEAL §1094 > RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > new theory -- antitrust injury -- raising issue in lower court -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

If the decision of a Federal Court of Appeals, which finds that a beef-packing plant owner seeking to enjoin the merger of two of its largest competitors under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26) has alleged what amounts to a form of predatory pricing and thus satisfied the requirement that it show a threat of antitrust injury, is understood to mean that the plant owner has shown a credible threat of injury from below-cost "predatory" pricing by the firm that would result from the merger, then that judgment must be reversed since the plant owner neither raised nor proved any claim of below-cost pricing before the Federal District Court in which the action originated; four passing references, three in deposition testimony, to the possibility that the new firm's prices might dip below costs do not establish an allegation of injury from predatory pricing.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > predatory pricing -- factors considered --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B] [LEdHN\[8C\]](#) [8C] [LEdHN\[8D\]](#) [8D]

Claims of threatened injury from predatory pricing must be evaluated with care; courts should not find allegations of predatory pricing credible when the alleged predator is incapable of successfully pursuing a predatory scheme; in order to succeed in a sustained scheme of predatory pricing, a predator must be able to absorb the market shares of its rivals once prices have been cut; it is also important to examine the barriers to entry into the market, focusing on whether significant entry barriers would exist after the predator firm had eliminated some of its rivals and the remaining firms began to charge supracompetitive prices.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > Clayton Act -- merger -- injunctive relief

-- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

Because a beef-packing plant owner which seeks to enjoin the pending merger of two of its largest competitors has failed to make the showing of a threat of antitrust injury which plaintiffs are required to make in order to obtain injunctive relief under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26), the question whether the proposed merger violates 7 of that Act (15 USCS 18) need not be reached.

Syllabus

---

Section 16 of the Clayton Act entitles a private party to sue for injunctive relief against "threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws." Respondent, the country's fifth-largest beef packer, brought an action in Federal District Court under § 16 to enjoin the proposed merger of petitioner Excel Corporation, the second-largest packer, and Spencer Beef, the third-largest packer. Respondent alleged that it was threatened with a loss of profits by the possibility that Excel, after the merger, would lower its prices to a level at or above its costs in an attempt to increase its market share. During trial, Excel moved for dismissal on the ground that respondent had failed to allege or show that it would suffer antitrust injury, but the District Court denied the motion. After trial, the District Court held that respondent's allegation of a "price-cost squeeze" that would severely narrow its profit margins constituted an allegation of antitrust injury. The Court of Appeals affirmed, holding that respondent's allegation of a "price-cost squeeze" [****2] was not simply one of injury from competition but was a claim of injury by a form of predatory pricing in which Excel would drive other companies out of the market.

Held:

1. A private plaintiff seeking injunctive relief under § 16 must show a threat of injury "of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489. Pp. 109-113.
2. The proposed merger does not constitute a threat of antitrust injury. A showing, as in this case, of loss or damage due merely to increased competition does not constitute such injury. And while predatory pricing is capable of inflicting antitrust injury, here respondent neither raised nor proved any claim of predatory pricing before the District Court, and thus the Court of Appeals erred in interpreting respondent's allegations as equivalent to allegations of injury from predatory conduct. Pp. 113-119.

ÍÍ JÁNEJÆF E ÞÆF E LÆF E ÁUÆDÓA Í ÞÆF E Í LÁHÆSÓA E ÞÆG A Á G ÞÆF E G LÆF J I ÁMÆJÆSÓY Q J ÁG ÞÆF E G

3. This Court, however, will not adopt in effect a per se rule denying competitors standing to challenge acquisitions on the basis of predatory pricing theories. Nothing in the Clayton Act's [****3] language or legislative history suggests that Congress intended this Court to ignore injuries caused by such anticompetitive practices as predatory pricing. Pp. 120-122.

Counsel: Ronald G. Carr argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Robert F. Hanley, Alan K. Palmer, and Phillip Areeda.

Deputy Solicitor General Cohen argued the cause for the United States et al. as amici curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Fried, Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Cannon, Jerrold J. Ganzfried, Catherine G. O'Sullivan, Andrea Limmer, and Marcy J. K. Tiffany.

*William C. McClearn argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were James E. Hartley, Elizabeth A. Phelan, and Marcy G. Glenn.

Judges: BRENNAN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and MARSHALL, POWELL, O'CONNOR, and SCALIA, JJ., joined. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which WHITE, J., joined, post, p. 122. BLACKMUN, J., took [****4] no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

[*105] [***433] [**487] JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [↑] [1A] [LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [↑] [2A] HN1 [↑] Under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 737, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 26, private parties "threatened [with] loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws" may seek injunctive relief. This case presents two questions: whether a plaintiff seeking relief under § 16 must prove a threat of antitrust injury, and, if so, whether loss or damage due to increased competition constitutes such injury.

[*106] |

Respondent Monfort of Colorado, Inc. (Monfort), the plaintiff below, owns and operates three integrated beef-packing plants, that is, plants for both the slaughter of cattle and the fabrication of beef.<sup>1</sup> Monfort operates in both the market for fed cattle (the input market) and the market for fabricated beef (the output market). These markets are highly competitive, and the profit margins of the major beef packers are low. The current markets are a product of two decades of intense competition, during which time packers with modern integrated plants have gradually displaced packers with separate slaughter and fabrication plants.

[***5] Monfort is the country's fifth-largest beef packer. Petitioner Excel Corporation (Excel), one of the two defendants below, is the second-largest packer. Excel operates five integrated plants and one fabrication plant. It is * Thomas B. Leary filed a brief for the Business Roundtable as amicus curiae urging reversal.

David L. Foster and Kim Sperduto filed a brief for Royal Crown Cola Co. as amicus curiae.

<sup>1</sup> As the District Court explained, "[fabrication]" is the process whereby the carcass is broken down into either whole cuts (referred to as 'primals', 'subprimals' and 'portions') or ground beef." 591 F.Supp. 683, 690 (Colo. 1983). Whole cuts that are then vacuum packed before shipment are called "boxed beef"; the District Court found that "80% of all beef received at the retail supermarket level and at the hotel, restaurant, and institutional ('HRI') level" is boxed beef. Ibid.

Í Í JÁVÉÉÉÉ ÉÉÉÉ LÉÉÉÉ ÁÉÉÉ DÁÁÁÁ Í Í LÁHŠÉOÁÉGÁ GÍ ÉÉÉÉ HHLÁFJÍ Í ÁNÈÉÉSÓYÓGÁÉÉÉ

a wholly owned subsidiary of Cargill, Inc., the other defendant below, a large privately owned corporation with more than 150 subsidiaries in at least 35 countries.

On June 17, 1983, Excel signed an agreement to acquire the third-largest packer in the market, Spencer Beef, a division of the Land O'Lakes agricultural cooperative. Spencer Beef owned two integrated plants and one slaughtering plant. After the acquisition, Excel would still be the second-largest packer, but would command a market share almost equal to that of the largest packer, IBP, Inc. (IBP).<sup>2</sup>

[****6] [*107] Monfort brought an action under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 26, to enjoin the prospective [***434] merger.<sup>3</sup> Its complaint [*488] alleged that the acquisition would "[violate] Section 7 of the Clayton Act because the effect of the proposed acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in several different ways. . . ." 1 App. 19. Monfort described the injury that it allegedly would suffer in this way:

"(f) Impairment of plaintiff's ability to compete. The proposed acquisition will result in a concentration of economic power in the relevant markets which threatens Monfort's supply of fed cattle and its ability to compete in the boxed beef market." Id., at 20.

[****7] Upon agreement of the parties, the District Court consolidated the motion for a preliminary injunction with a full trial [*108] on the merits. On the second day of trial, Excel moved for involuntary dismissal on the ground, inter alia, that Monfort had failed to allege or show that it would suffer antitrust injury as defined in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477 \(1977\). The District Court denied the motion. After the trial, the court entered a memorandum opinion and order enjoining the proposed merger. The court held that Monfort's allegation of "price-cost 'squeeze'" that would "severely [narrow]" Monfort's profit margins constituted an allegation of antitrust injury. 591 F.Supp. 683, 691-692 \(Colo. 1983\). It also held that Monfort had shown that the proposed merger would cause this profit squeeze to occur, and that the merger violated § 7 of the Clayton Act.<sup>4</sup> Id., at 709-710.

[****8] On appeal, Excel argued that an allegation of lost profits due to a "price-cost squeeze" was nothing more than an allegation of losses due to vigorous competition, and that losses from competition do not constitute antitrust injury. It also argued that the District Court erred in analyzing the facts relevant to the § 7 inquiry. The Court of Appeals affirmed the judgment in all respects. It held that Monfort's allegation of a "price-cost squeeze" was not simply an allegation of injury from competition; in its view, the alleged "price-cost squeeze" was a claim that Monfort

<sup>2</sup>The District Court relied on the testimony of one of Monfort's witnesses in determining market share. Id., at 706-707. According to this testimony, Monfort's share of the cattle slaughter market was 5.5%, Excel's share was 13.3%, and IBP's was 24.4%. 1 App. 69. Monfort's share of the production market was 5.7%, Excel's share was 14.1%, and IBP's share was 27.3%. Id., at 64. After the merger, Excel's share of each market would increase to 20.4%. Id., at 64, 69; 761 F.2d 570, 577 \(CA10 1985\).

<sup>3</sup>Section 16 states:

[HN2\[↑\]](#) "Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, including sections 13, 14, 18, and 19 of this title, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings, and upon the execution of proper bond against damages for an injunction improvidently granted and a showing that the danger of irreparable loss or damage is immediate, a preliminary injunction may issue: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to entitle any person, firm, corporation, or association, except the United States, to bring suit in equity for injunctive relief against any common carrier subject to the provisions of subtitle IV of title 49, in respect of any matter subject to the regulation, supervision, or other jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. In any action under this section in which the plaintiff substantially prevails, the court shall award the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee, to such plaintiff."
15 U. S. C. § 26.

<sup>4</sup>Section 7 [HN3\[↑\]](#) prohibits mergers when the "the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly," 15 U. S. C. § 18.

I Ì JÁWÉÉSÍ ÉPÉ LÉÉ ÁUÉODAÍ I ÉÉ Ì LÁHSEÓAÉGÁ GI ÉÉ HI LAFJÍ Ì ÁNÈÉSÓYQÁGFÉÉ would be injured by what the Court of Appeals "[considered] to be a form of predatory pricing in which Excel will drive [***435] other companies out of the market by paying more to its cattle suppliers and charging less for boxed beef that it sells to institutional buyers and consumers." 761 F.2d 570, 575 \(CA10 1985\). On the § 7 issue, the Court of Appeals held that the District Court's decision was not clearly erroneous. We granted certiorari, 474 U.S. 1049 \(1985\).

[*109] II

This case requires us to decide, at the outset, a question we have not previously addressed: whether [****9] a private plaintiff seeking an injunction under § 16 of the Clayton Act must show a threat of antitrust injury. To decide the question, we must look first to the source of the antitrust injury requirement, which lies in a related provision of the Clayton Act, § 4, 15 U. S. C. § 15.

Like § 16, § 4 provides a vehicle for private enforcement of the antitrust laws. HN4↑ Under § 4, "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States . . . , and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, [**489] and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U. S. C. § 15. In Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., supra, we held that HN5↑ plaintiffs seeking treble damages under § 4 must show more than simply an "injury causally linked" to a particular merger; instead, "plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Id., at 489 (emphasis in original). The plaintiffs in [****10] Brunswick did not prove such injury. The plaintiffs were 3 of the 10 bowling centers owned by a relatively small bowling chain. The defendant, one of the two largest bowling chains in the country, acquired several bowling centers located in the plaintiffs' market that would have gone out of business but for the acquisition. The plaintiffs sought treble damages under § 4, alleging as injury "the loss of income that would have accrued had the acquired centers gone bankrupt" and had competition in their markets consequently been reduced. Id., at 487. We held that this injury, although causally related to a merger alleged to violate § 7, was not an antitrust injury, since "[it] is inimical to [the antitrust] laws to award damages" for losses stemming [*110] from continued competition. Id., at 488. This reasoning in Brunswick was consistent with the principle that "the antitrust laws . . . were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Ibid., quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320 \(1962\) (emphasis in original).

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#)↑ [3A] Subsequent decisions confirmed the importance [****11] of showing antitrust injury under § 4. In Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465 \(1982\), we found that a health-plan subscriber suffered antitrust injury as a result of the plan's "purposefully anticompetitive scheme" to reduce competition for psychotherapeutic services by reimbursing subscribers for services provided by psychiatrists but not for services provided by psychologists. Id., at 483. [***436] We noted that antitrust injury, "as analyzed in Brunswick, is one factor to be considered in determining the redressability of a particular form of injury under § 4," id., at 483, n. 19, and found it "plain that McCready's injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress in providing a private remedy for violations of the antitrust laws." Id., at 483. Similarly, in Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519 \(1983\), we applied "the Brunswick test," and found that the petitioner had failed to allege antitrust injury. Id., at 539-540.<sup>5</sup>

[LEdHN\[3B\]](#)↑ [3B]

<sup>5</sup> HN6↑ A showing of antitrust injury is necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish standing under § 4, because a party may have suffered antitrust injury but may not be a proper plaintiff under § 4 for other reasons. See generally Page, The Scope of Liability for Antitrust Violations, 37 Stan. L. Rev. 1445, 1483-1485 \(1985\) (distinguishing concepts of antitrust injury and antitrust standing). Thus, in Associated General Contractors we considered other factors in addition to antitrust injury to determine whether the petitioner was a proper plaintiff under § 4. 459 U.S., at 540. As we explain, n. 6, infra, however, many of these other factors are not relevant to the standing inquiry under § 16.

I Í JÁMEÍAFÉ ÆFFELAFÉ ÁUÉODÉA Í ÁEAE Í JLÁHSEAOÆGÁ GÉ ÆAE HÍ LÁJÍ Í ÁUÉESÓYÓQÁGÉÆFFF

[****12] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#)↑ [1B][LEdHN\[3C\]](#)↑ [3C]Section 16 HN7↑ of the Clayton Act provides in part that "[any] person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief . . . against threatened loss [\[\*111\]](#) or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws. . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 26. It is plain that § 16 and § 4 HN8↑ do differ in various ways. For example, § 4 requires a plaintiff to show actual injury, but § 16 requires a showing only of "threatened" loss or damage; similarly, § 4 requires a showing of injury to "business or property," cf. Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251 \(1972\), while § 16 contains no \*\*490 such limitation.<sup>6</sup> [****13] Although these differences do affect the nature of the injury cognizable under each section, the lower courts, including the courts below, have found that under both § 16 and § 4 the plaintiff must still allege an injury of the type the \*\*\*437 antitrust laws were designed to prevent.<sup>7</sup> We agree.

[LEdHN\[3D\]](#)↑ [3D]

[*112] The wording concerning the relationship of the injury to the violation of the antitrust laws in each section is comparable. Section 4 requires proof of injury "by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws"; § 16 requires proof of "threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws." It would be anomalous, we think, to read the Clayton Act to authorize a private plaintiff to secure an injunction against a threatened injury for which he would not be entitled to compensation if the injury actually occurred.

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#)↑ [1C]There is no \*\*\*\*14 indication that Congress intended such a result. Indeed, the legislative history of § 16 is consistent with the view that § 16 affords private plaintiffs injunctive relief only for those injuries cognizable under § 4. According to the House Report:

---

"Under section 7 of the act of July 2, 1890 [revised and incorporated into Clayton Act as § 4], a person injured in his business and property by corporations or combinations acting in violation of the Sherman antitrust law, may recover loss and damage for such wrongful act. There is, however, no provision in the existing law authorizing a person, firm, corporation, or association to enjoin threatened loss or damage to his business or property by the

---

<sup>6</sup> HN9↑ Standing analysis under § 16 will not always be identical to standing analysis under § 4. For example, the difference in the remedy each section provides means that certain considerations relevant to a determination of standing under § 4 are not relevant under § 16. The treble-damages remedy, if afforded to "every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation," Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 476-477 \(1982\), or for "all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation," Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. at 263, n. 14, would "open the door to duplicative recoveries," id. at 264, and to multiple lawsuits. In order to protect against multiple lawsuits and duplicative recoveries, courts should examine other factors in addition to antitrust injury, such as the potential for duplicative recovery, the complexity of apportioning damages, and the existence of other parties that have been more directly harmed, to determine whether a party is a proper plaintiff under § 4. See Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S., at 544-545; Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720 \(1977\). Conversely, HN10↑ under § 16, the only remedy available is equitable in nature, and, as we recognized in Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., "the fact is that one injunction is as effective as 100, and, concomitantly, that 100 injunctions are no more effective than one." 405 U.S., at 261. Thus, because standing under § 16 raises no threat of multiple lawsuits or duplicative recoveries, some of the factors other than antitrust injury that are appropriate to a determination of standing under § 4 are not relevant under § 16.

<sup>7</sup> See Ball Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Mutual Hospital Insurance, Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1334 \(CA7 1986\); Midwest Communications, Inc. v. Minnesota Twins, Inc., 779 F.2d 444, 452-453 \(CA8 1985\), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1163 \(1986\); Christian Schmidt Brewing Co. v. G. Heileman Brewing Co., 753 F.2d 1354, 1358 \(CA6, 1986\), cert. dism'd, 469 U.S. 1200 \(1985\); Schoenkopf v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 637 F.2d 205, 210-211 \(CA3 1980\).

I Í JÁMEÍAFI ÍFFGLÆFI ÁUÉODÆI I ÁEJELAÍHSEÓAEGÁGÍ ÍFFHÍ HÍ LÁFJÍ Í ÁUÉEASÓYÓAEGÍFFHÍ

commission of such unlawful acts, and the purpose of this section is to remedy such defect in the law." H. R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., pt. 1, p. 21 (1914) (emphasis added).<sup>8</sup>

[*113] [***438] [**491] Sections 4 and 16 HN11[] are thus best understood as providing complementary remedies for a single set of injuries. Accordingly, we conclude that in order to seek injunctive relief under § 16, a private plaintiff must allege threatened loss or damage "of the type the antitrust [****15] laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick, 429 U.S., at 489. We therefore turn to the question of whether the proposed merger in this case threatened respondent with antitrust injury.

[****16] III

Initially, we confront the problem of determining what Monfort alleged the source of its injury to be. Monfort's complaint is of little assistance in this regard, since the injury [*114] alleged therein -- "an impairment of plaintiff's ability to compete" -- is alleged to result from "a concentration of economic power." 1 App. 19. The pretrial order largely restates these general allegations. Record 37. At trial, however, Monfort did present testimony and other evidence that helped define the threatened loss. Monfort alleged that after the merger, Excel would attempt to increase its market share at the expense of smaller rivals, such as Monfort. To that end, Monfort claimed, Excel would bid up the price it would pay for cattle, and reduce the price at which it sold boxed beef. Although such a strategy, which Monfort labeled a "price-cost squeeze," would reduce Excel's profits, Excel's parent corporation had the financial reserves to enable Excel to pursue such a strategy. Eventually, according to Monfort, smaller competitors lacking significant reserves and unable to match Excel's prices would be driven from the market; at this point Excel would raise the price of [****17] its boxed beef to supracompetitive levels, and would more than recoup the profits it lost during the initial phase. 591 F.Supp., at 691-692.

<sup>8</sup> See also S. Rep. No. 698, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., pt. 2, pp. 17-18, 50 (1914). Although the references to § 16 in the debates on the passage of the Clayton Act are scarce, those that were made are consistent with the House and Senate Reports. For example, in this excerpt from a provision-by-provision description of the bill, Representative McGillicuddy (a member of the House Judiciary Committee) stated:

"Under the present law any person injured in his business or property by acts in violation of the Sherman antitrust law may recover his damage. In fact, under the provisions of the law he is entitled to recover threefold damage whenever he is able to prove his case. There is no provision under the present law, however, to prevent threatened loss or damage even though it be irreparable. The practical effect of this is that a man would have to sit by and see his business ruined before he could take advantage of his remedy. In what condition is such a man to take up a long and costly lawsuit to defend his rights?

"The proposed bill solves this problem for the person, firm, or corporation threatened with loss or damage to property by providing injunctive relief against the threatened act that will cause such loss or damage. Under this most excellent provision a man does not have to wait until he is ruined in his business before he has his remedy. Thus the bill not only protects the individual from loss or damage, but it relieves him of the tremendous burden of long and expensive litigation, often intolerable." 51 Cong. Rec. 9261 (1914) (emphasis added).

Representative Floyd described the nature of the § 16 remedy in these terms:

"In section 16 . . . is a provision that gives the litigant injured in his business an entirely new remedy.

.....

HN12[] ". . . [Section] 16 gives any individual, company, or corporation . . . or combination the right to go into court and enjoin the doing of these unlawful acts, instead of having to wait until the act is done and the business destroyed and then sue for damages. . . . [So] that if a man is injured by a discriminatory contract, by a tying contract, by the unlawful acquisition of stock of competing corporations, or by reason of someone acting unlawfully as a director in two banks or other corporations, he can go into court and enjoin and restrain the party from committing such unlawful acts." Id., at 16319.

I Í JÁMEÍAFÉI ÁFFÍ LAFÉI ÁJÉODÉA Í ÁFFÍ JFLÁHÁSEÓAÉGÁ GÍ ÁFFÍ HÍ LAFJÍ Í ÁMÉEASÓYÓQÁGÉFFÍ

LEdHN[4A] [4A] From this scenario two theories of injury to Monfort emerge: (1) a threat of a loss of profits stemming from the possibility that Excel, after the merger, would lower its prices to a level at or only slightly above its costs; (2) a threat of being driven out of business by the possibility that Excel, after the merger, would lower its prices to a level below its costs.<sup>9</sup> We discuss each theory in turn.

LEdHN[4B] [4B]

A

Monfort's first claim is that after the merger, Excel would lower its prices to some level at or slightly above its costs in order to compete with other packers for market share. [****18] [*115] Excel would be in a position to do this because of the multiplant [**492] efficiencies its acquisition of Spencer would provide, 1 App. 74-75, 369-370. To remain competitive, Monfort [***439] would have to lower its prices; as a result, Monfort would suffer a loss in profitability, but would not be driven out of business.<sup>10</sup> The question is whether Monfort's loss of profits in such circumstances constitutes antitrust injury.

LEdHN[2B] [2B] To resolve the question, we look again to Brunswick v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, supra. In Brunswick, we evaluated [****19] the antitrust significance of several competitors' loss of profits resulting from the entry of a large firm into its market. We concluded:

"[The] antitrust laws are not merely indifferent to the injury claimed here. At base, respondents complain that by acquiring the failing centers petitioner preserved competition, thereby depriving respondents of the benefits of increased concentration. The damages respondents obtained are designed to provide them with the profits they would have realized had competition been reduced. The antitrust laws, however, were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors,' Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 320. It is inimical to the purposes of these laws to award damages for the type of injury claimed here." Id., at 488.

The loss of profits to the competitors in Brunswick was not of concern under the antitrust laws, since it resulted only from continued competition. Respondent argues that the losses in Brunswick can be distinguished from the losses alleged here, since the latter will result from an increase, rather than from a mere continuation, of competition. The range of [****20] actions [*116] unlawful under § 7 of the Clayton Act is broad enough, respondent claims, to support a finding of antitrust injury whenever a competitor is faced with a threat of losses from increased competition.<sup>11</sup> We find respondent's proposed construction of § 7 too broad, for reasons that Brunswick illustrates.

<sup>9</sup> In its brief, Monfort also argues that it would be injured by "the trend toward oligopoly pricing" that could conceivably follow the merger. Brief for Respondent 18-20. There is no indication in the record that this claim was raised below, however, and so we do not address it here.

<sup>10</sup> In this case, Monfort has conceded that its viability would not be threatened by Excel's decision to lower prices: "Because Monfort's operations were as efficient as those of Excel, only below-cost pricing could remove Monfort as an obstacle." Id., at 11-12; see also id., at 5, and n. 6 ("Monfort proved it was just as efficient as Excel"); id., at 18; 761 F.2d, at 576 ("Monfort would only be harmed by sustained predatory pricing").

<sup>11</sup> Respondent finds support in the legislative history of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 for the view that Congress intends the courts to apply § 7 so as to protect the viability of small competitors. The Senate Report, for example, cites with approval this Court's statement in United States v. Von's Grocery Co., 384 U.S. 270, 275 (1966), that "the basic purpose of the 1950 Celler-Kefauver Act [amending § 7 of the Clayton Act] was to prevent economic concentration in the American economy by keeping a large number of small competitors in business." S. Rep. No. 94-803, p. 63 (1976). Even if respondent is correct that Congress intended the courts to apply § 7 so as to keep small competitors in business at the expense of efficiency, a proposition about which there is considerable disagreement, such congressional intent is of no use to Monfort,

I Í JÁMEÍAFÉI ÁFFÍ LAFÉI ÁUÉODÉA Í ÁFFÍ JGLÁHSEÓAÉGÁ GÍ ÁFFÍ HJLÁFJÍ Í ÁUÉEASÓYÓQÁGÉTTE

Brunswick holds that the antitrust laws do not require the courts to protect small businesses from the loss of profits due to continued competition, but only against the loss of profits from practices forbidden by the antitrust laws. The kind of competition that Monfort alleges here, competition for increased market [***440] share, is not activity forbidden by the antitrust laws. It is simply, as petitioners claim, vigorous competition. To hold that the antitrust laws protect competitors from the loss of profits due to such price competition would, in effect, render illegal any decision by a firm to cut prices in order to increase market share. The antitrust laws require no such perverse result, for "[it] is in the interest of competition to permit dominant firms to engage in vigorous competition, including price competition." Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S. E. Johnson Co., 729 F.2d 1050, 1057 (CA6), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1036 [**493] (1984). The logic of [*117] Brunswick compels the conclusion that the threat of loss of profits due to possible price competition following a merger does not constitute a threat of antitrust injury.

[***22] B

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] The second theory of injury argued here is that after the merger Excel would attempt to drive Monfort out of business by engaging in sustained predatory pricing. HN13 Predatory pricing may be defined as pricing below an appropriate measure of cost for the purpose of eliminating competitors in the short run and reducing competition in the long run.<sup>12</sup> [***23] It is a practice [*118] that harms both competitors and competition. In contrast to price cutting aimed simply at increasing market share, predatory pricing has as its aim the elimination of competition. Predatory pricing is thus a practice "inimical to the purposes of [the antitrust] laws," Brunswick, 429 U.S., at 488, and one capable of inflicting antitrust injury.<sup>13</sup>

The Court of Appeals held that [***441] Monfort had alleged "what we consider to be a form of predatory pricing. . . ." 761 F.2d, at 575. The court also found that Monfort "could only be harmed by sustained predatory pricing," and that "it is impossible to tell in advance of the acquisition" whether Excel would in fact engage in such a course of conduct; because it could not rule out the possibility that Excel would engage in predatory pricing, it found that Monfort was threatened with antitrust injury. Id., at 576.

which has conceded that it will suffer only a loss of profits, and not be driven from the market, should Excel engage in a cost-price squeeze. See n. 10, supra.

<sup>12</sup> Most commentators reserve the term predatory pricing for pricing below some measure of cost, although they differ on the appropriate measure. See, e. g., Areeda & Turner, Predatory Pricing and Related Practices under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 88 Harv. L. Rev. 697 (1975); McGee, Predatory Pricing Revisited, 23 J. Law & Econ. 289 (1980) (reviewing various proposed definitions). No consensus has yet been reached on the proper definition of predatory pricing in the antitrust context, however. For purposes of decision in Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574 (1986), for example, we defined predatory pricing as either "(i) pricing below the level necessary to sell their products, or (ii) pricing below some appropriate measure of cost." Id., at 585, n. 8. Definitions of predatory pricing also vary among the Circuits. Compare Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S. E. Johnson Co., 729 F.2d 1050, 1056-1057 (CA6) (pricing below marginal or average variable cost presumptively illegal, pricing above such cost presumptively legal), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1036 (1984), with Transamerica Computer Co. v. International Business Machines Corp., 698 F.2d 1377 (CA9) (pricing above average total costs may be deemed predatory upon showing of predatory intent), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 955 (1983).

Although neither the District Court nor the Court of Appeals explicitly defined the term predatory pricing, their use of the term is consistent with a definition of pricing below cost. Such a definition is sufficient for purposes of this decision, because only below-cost pricing would threaten to drive Monfort from the market, see n. 9, supra, and because Monfort made no allegation that Excel would act with predatory intent. Thus, in this case, as in Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., supra, we find it unnecessary to "consider whether recovery should ever be available . . . when the pricing in question is above some measure of incremental cost," 475 U.S., at 585, n. 9, or whether above-cost pricing coupled with predatory intent is ever sufficient to state a claim of predation. See n. 11, supra.

<sup>13</sup> See also Brunswick, 429 U.S., at 489, n. 14 ("The short-term effect of certain anticompetitive behavior -- predatory below-cost pricing, for example -- may be to stimulate price competition. But competitors may be able to prove antitrust injury before they actually are driven from the market and competition is thereby lessened").

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]Although the Court of Appeals did not explicitly define what it meant by predatory pricing, two interpretations are plausible. First, the court can be understood to mean that Monfort's allegation [****24] of losses from the above-cost "price-cost squeeze" was equivalent to an allegation of injury from predatory conduct. If this is the proper interpretation, then the court's judgment is clearly erroneous because (a) Monfort made no allegation that Excel would act with predatory intent after the merger, and (b) price competition is not predatory activity, for the reasons discussed in Part III-A, supra.

[**494] [LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7] [LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A]Second, the Court of Appeals can be understood to mean that Monfort had shown a credible threat of injury from below-cost pricing. To the extent the judgment rests on this ground, however, it must also be reversed, because Monfort [*119] did not allege injury from below-cost pricing before the District Court. The District Court twice noted that Monfort had made no assertion that Excel would engage in predatory pricing. See 591 F.Supp., at 691 ("Plaintiff does not contend that predatory practices would be engaged in by Excel or IBP"); id., at 710 ("Monfort does not allege that IBP and Excel will in fact engage in predatory activities as part of the cost-price squeeze").<sup>14</sup> Monfort argues that there is evidence in the record to support [****25] its view that it did raise a claim of predatory pricing below. This evidence, however, consists only of four passing references, three in deposition testimony, to the possibility that Excel's prices might dip below costs. See 1 App. 276; 2 App. 626, 666, 669. Such references fall far short of establishing an allegation of injury from predatory pricing. We conclude that Monfort neither raised nor proved any claim of predatory pricing before the District Court.<sup>15</sup>

---

<sup>14</sup> The Court of Appeals may have relied on the District Court's speculation that the merger raised "a distinct possibility . . . of predatory pricing." 591 F.Supp., at 710. This statement directly followed the District Court's second observation that Monfort did not raise such a claim, however, and thus was clearly dicta.

<sup>15</sup> Even had Monfort actually advanced a claim of predatory pricing, we doubt whether the facts as found by the District Court would have supported it. Although Excel may have had the financial resources to absorb losses over an extended period, other factors, such as Excel's share of market capacity and the barriers to entry after competitors have been driven from the market, must also be considered. In order to succeed in a sustained campaign of predatory pricing, a predator must be able to absorb the market shares of its rivals once prices have been cut. If it cannot do so, its attempt at predation will presumably fail, because there will remain in the market sufficient demand for the competitors' goods at a higher price, and the competitors will not be driven out of business. In this case, Excel's 20.4% market share after the merger suggests it would lack sufficient market power to engage in predatory pricing. See Williamson, Predatory Pricing: A Strategic and Welfare Analysis, 87 Yale L. J. 284, 292 (1977) (60% share necessary); Areeda & Turner, Williamson on Predatory Pricing, 87 Yale L. J. 1337, 1348 (1978) (60% share not enough). It is possible that a firm with a low market share might nevertheless have sufficient excess capacity to enable it rapidly to expand its output and absorb the market shares of its rivals. According to Monfort's expert witness, however, Excel's postmerger share of market capacity would be only 28.4%. 1 App. 66. Moreover, it appears that Excel, like the other large beef packers, operates at over 85% of capacity. Id., at 135-136. Thus Excel acting alone would clearly lack sufficient capacity after the merger to satisfy all or most of the demand for boxed beef. Although it is conceivable that Excel could act collusively with other large packers, such as IBP, in order to make the scheme work, the District Court found that Monfort did not "assert that Excel and IBP would act in collusion with each other in an effort to drive others out of the market," 591 F.Supp., at 692. With only a 28.4% share of market capacity and lacking a plan to collude, Excel would harm only itself by embarking on a sustained campaign of predatory pricing. Courts should not find allegations of predatory pricing credible when the alleged predator is incapable of successfully pursuing a predatory scheme. See n. 17, infra.

It is also important to examine the barriers to entry into the market, because "without barriers to entry it would presumably be impossible to maintain supracompetitive prices for an extended time." Matsushita, 475 U.S., at 591, n. 15. In discussing the potential for oligopoly pricing in the beef-packing business following the merger, the District Court found significant barriers to entry due to the "costs and delays" of building new plants, and "the lack of [available] facilities and the cost [$ 20-40 million] associated with refurbishing old facilities." 591 F.Supp., at 707-708. Although the District Court concluded that these barriers would restrict entry following the merger, the court's analysis was premised on market conditions during the premerger period of competitive pricing. Ibid. In evaluating entry barriers in the context of a predatory pricing claim, however, a court should focus on whether significant entry barriers would exist after the merged firm had eliminated some of its rivals, because at that point the remaining firms would begin to charge supracompetitive prices, and the barriers that existed during competitive conditions might well prove insignificant. In this case, for example, although costs of entry into the current competitive market may be high, if Excel and others in fact succeeded in driving competitors out of the market, the facilities of the bankrupt competitors would then

I Í JÁMEÍÆF ÆFFJLÆF ÆUÆÓðA Ì I ÆA JI LÁHÆSE ÆGÁ G ÆA I FLÁJ Ì ÁMEÍÆSOY ÆA

LEdHN[8B] [↑] [8B]

[***26] [*120] [**495] IV

[***442] In its amicus brief, the United States argues that the "danger of allowing a competitor to challenge an acquisition [*121] on the basis of necessarily speculative claims of post-acquisition predatory pricing far outweighs the danger that any anticompetitive merger will go unchallenged." Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 25. On this basis, the United States invites the Court to adopt in effect a per se rule "denying competitors standing to challenge acquisitions on the basis of predatory pricing theories." Id., at 10.

LEdHN[5B] [↑] [5B] LEdHN[8C] [↑] [8C] We decline the invitation. As the foregoing discussion makes plain, supra, at 117-118, predatory pricing is an anticompetitive practice forbidden by the antitrust laws. While firms may engage in the practice only infrequently, [***443] there is ample evidence suggesting that the practice does occur.<sup>16</sup> It would be novel indeed for a court to deny standing to a party seeking an injunction against threatened injury merely because such injuries rarely occur.<sup>17</sup> In any case, nothing in [*122] the language or legislative history of the Clayton Act suggests that Congress intended this Court to ignore injuries [***27] caused by such anticompetitive practices as predatory pricing.

LEdHN[8D] [↑] [8D]

[***28] V

LEdHN[1D] [↑] [1D] LEdHN[2C] [↑] [2C] LEdHN[9] [↑] [9] We hold that a plaintiff seeking injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act must show a threat of antitrust injury, and that a showing of loss or damage due merely to increased competition does not constitute such injury. The record below does not support a finding of antitrust injury, but only of threatened loss from increased competition. Because respondent has therefore failed to make the showing § 16 requires, we need not reach the question whether the proposed merger violates § 7. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

be available, and the record shows, without apparent contradiction, that shut-down plants could be producing efficiently in a matter of months and that equipment and a labor force could readily be obtained, 1 App. 95-96. Similarly, although the District Court determined that the high costs of building new plants and refurbishing old plants created a "formidable" barrier to entry given "the low profit margins in the beef industry," 591 F.Supp., at 707, this finding speaks neither to the likelihood of entry during a period of supracompetitive profitability nor to the potential return on investment in such a period.

<sup>16</sup> See Koller, The Myth of Predatory Pricing: An Empirical Study, 4 Antitrust Law & Econ. Rev. 105 (1971); Miller, Comments on Baumol and Ordover, 28 J. Law & Econ. 267 (1985).

<sup>17</sup> Claims of threatened injury from predatory pricing must, of course, be evaluated with care. As we discussed in Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., the likelihood that predatory pricing will benefit the predator is "inherently uncertain: the short-run loss [from pricing below cost] is definite, but the long-run gain depends on successfully neutralizing the competition. . . . [and] on maintaining monopoly power for long enough both to recoup the predator's losses and to harvest some additional gain." 475 U.S., at 589. Although the commentators disagree as to whether it is ever rational for a firm to engage in such conduct, it is plain that the obstacles to the successful execution of a strategy of predation are manifold, and that the disincentives to engage in such a strategy are accordingly numerous. See, e. g., id., at 588-593 (discussing obstacles to successful predatory pricing conspiracy); R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 144-159 (1978); McGee, Predatory Pricing Revisited, 23 J. Law & Econ., at 291-300; Posner, The Chicago School of Antitrust Analysis, 127 U. Pa. L. Rev. 925, 939-940 (1979). As we stated in Matsushita, "predatory pricing schemes are rarely tried, and even more rarely successful." 475 U.S., at 589. Moreover, the mechanism by which a firm engages in predatory pricing -- lowering prices -- is the same mechanism by which a firm stimulates competition; because "cutting prices in order to increase business often is the very essence of competition . . . [;] mistaken inferences . . . are especially costly, because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." Id., at 594.

I Í JÁMEÍAFÉI ÆFOGLAFÉI ÁUÉODÉA Í ÆA JÍ LÁHSEÓAÉGÁ GÍ ÆA I HÁJÍ Í ÁUÉESÓYÓQÁGÉA

JUSTICE BLACKMUN took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

---

JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE WHITE joins, dissenting.

This case presents the question whether the antitrust laws provide a remedy for a [**496] private party that challenges a horizontal merger between two of its largest competitors. The issue may be approached along two fundamentally different paths. First, the Court might focus its attention entirely on the postmerger conduct of the merging firms and deny relief [*123] unless the plaintiff can [***29] prove a violation of the Sherman Act. Second, the Court might concentrate on the [***444] merger itself and grant relief if there is a significant probability that the merger will adversely affect competition in the market in which the plaintiff must compete. Today the Court takes a step down the former path;<sup>1</sup> I believe that Congress has directed us to follow the latter path.

[***30] In this case, one of the major firms in the beef-packing market has proved to the satisfaction of the District Court, 591 F.Supp. 683, 709-710 \(Colo. 1983\), and the Court of Appeals, 761 F.2d 570, 578-582 \(CA10 1985\), that the merger between Excel and Spencer Beef is illegal. This Court holds, however, that the merger should not be set aside because the adverse impact of the merger on respondent's profit margins does not constitute the kind of "antitrust injury" that the Court described in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477 (1977). As I shall demonstrate, Brunswick merely rejected a "novel damages theory," id. at 490; the Court's implicit determination that Brunswick forecloses the appropriate line of inquiry in this quite different case is therefore misguided. In my view, a [*124] competitor in Monfort's position has standing to seek an injunction against the merger. Because Monfort must compete in the relevant market, proof establishing that the merger will have a sufficient probability of an adverse effect on competition to violate § 7 is also sufficient to authorize [***31] equitable relief.

I

Section 7 of the Clayton Act was enacted in 1914, 38 Stat. 731, and expanded in 1950, 64 Stat. 1125, because Congress concluded that the Sherman Act's prohibition against mergers was not adequate.<sup>2</sup> The Clayton Act, unlike the Sherman Act, proscribes certain combinations of competitors that do not produce any actual injury, either to competitors or to competition. An acquisition is prohibited by § 7 if "the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." 15 U. S. C. § 18. The legislative history teaches us that this delphic language was designed "to cope with [***445] monopolistic tendencies in their incipiency and well before they have attained such effects as would justify a Sherman Act proceeding." S. Rep. No.

---

<sup>1</sup> Whether or not it so intends, the Court in practical effect concludes that a private party may not obtain injunctive relief against a horizontal merger unless the actual or probable conduct of the merged firms would establish a violation of the Sherman Act. The Court suggests that, to support a claim of predatory pricing, a competitor must demonstrate that the merged entity is "able to absorb the market shares of its rivals once prices have been cut," either because it has a high market share or because it has "sufficient excess capacity to enable it rapidly to expand its output and absorb the market shares of its rivals." Ante, at 119-120, n. 15. The Court would also require a competitor to demonstrate that significant barriers to entry would exist after "the merged firm had eliminated some of its rivals. . ." Ante, at 120, n. 15. Indeed, the Court expressly states that the antitrust laws "require the courts to protect small businesses . . . only against the loss of profits from practices forbidden by the antitrust laws." Ante, at 116 (emphasis added). By emphasizing postmerger conduct, the Court reduces to virtual irrelevance the related but distinct issue of the legality of the merger itself.

<sup>2</sup> "Broadly stated, the bill, in its treatment of unlawful restraints and monopolies, seeks to prohibit and make unlawful certain trade practices which, as a rule, singly and in themselves, are not covered by the act of July 2, 1890 [the Sherman Act], or other existing antitrust acts, and thus, by making these practices illegal, to arrest the creation of trusts, conspiracies, and monopolies in their incipiency and before consummation." S. Rep. No. 698, 63d Cong., 2d Sess. 1 (1914).

I Í JÁMEÜÄFÉI ÁFG LAFÉI ÁUÉÖDÉI I ÁEJÉI JÍ LÁHSEÖAÅEGÅÁGÉ ÁEJÉI I LAFJÍ I ÁUÉÜÄSOYÓQÁGÉ ÁEJÉI

1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., 4-5 (1950).<sup>3</sup> In Brunswick, [*125] [*497] supra, this Court recognized that § 7 is "a prophylactic measure, intended 'primarily to arrest apprehended consequences of intercorporate relationships before those relationships could work their evil. . . .'" 429 U.S., at 485 (quoting United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 597 (1957)). [***32]

[***33] The 1950 amendment to § 7 was particularly concerned with the problem created by a merger which, when viewed by itself, would appear completely harmless, but when considered in its historical setting might be dangerous to competition. As Justice Stewart explained:

"The principal danger against which the 1950 amendment was addressed was the erosion of competition through the cumulative centripetal effect of acquisitions by large corporations, none of which by itself might be sufficient to constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. Congress' immediate fear was that of large corporations buying out small companies. A major aspect of that fear was the perceived trend toward absentee ownership of local business. Another, more generalized, congressional purpose revealed by the legislative history was to protect small businessmen and to stem the rising tide of concentration in the economy. These goals, Congress thought, could be achieved by 'arresting mergers at a time when the trend to a lessening of competition in a line of commerce was still in its incipiency.' Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, [370 U.S.,] at 317." United States v. Von's Grocery Co., 384 U.S. 270, 283-284 (1966) [***34] (dissenting).

Thus, a merger may violate § 7 of the Clayton Act merely because it poses a serious threat to competition and even though the evidence falls short of proving the kind of actual restraint that violates the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1. The language of § 16 of the Clayton Act also reflects Congress' emphasis on probable harm rather than actual harm. Section 16 authorizes private parties to obtain injunctive relief [*126] "against threatened loss or damage" by a violation of § 7.<sup>4</sup> The broad [***446] scope of the language in both § 7 and § 16 identifies the appropriate standing requirements for injunctive relief. As the Court has squarely held, it is the threat of harm, not actual injury, that justifies equitable relief:

"The evident premise for striking [the injunction at issue] was that Zenith's failure to prove the fact of injury barred injunctive relief as well as treble damages. This was unsound, for § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 26, which was enacted by the Congress to make available equitable remedies previously denied private parties, invokes traditional principles of equity and authorizes injunctive relief upon the demonstration of 'threatened' [***35] injury. That remedy is characteristically available even though the plaintiff has not yet suffered actual injury; . . . he need only demonstrate a significant threat of injury from an impending [**498] violation of the antitrust laws or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 130 (1969) (citations omitted).

<sup>3</sup> This Court has described the legislative purpose of § 7 as follows:

"[It] is apparent that a keystone in the erection of a barrier to what Congress saw was the rising tide of economic concentration, was its provision of authority for arresting mergers at a time when the trend to a lessening of competition in a line of commerce was still in its incipiency. Congress saw the process of concentration in American business as a dynamic force; it sought to assure the Federal Trade Commission and the courts the power to brake this force at its outset and before it gathered momentum." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 317-318 (1962) (footnote omitted).

<sup>4</sup> Section § 16 states, in relevant part:

"Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, including sections 13, 14, 18, and 19 of this title, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings, and upon the execution of proper bond against damages for an injunction improvidently granted and a showing that the danger of irreparable loss or damage is immediate, a preliminary injunction may issue . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 26.

I Ì JÁMEJÆF ÆFG Í LÆ ÆUÆDÆ Ì I ÆJ Ì LÁHÆSE ÆGÁ G ÆJ Ì LÆJ Ì ÁMEJÆSOY ÆGÆJÆHÍ

[***36] Judged by these standards, respondent's showing that it faced the threat of loss from an impending antitrust violation clearly conferred standing to obtain injunctive relief. Respondent [*127] alleged, and in the opinion of the courts below proved, the injuries it would suffer from a violation of § 7:

"Competition in the markets for the procurement of fed cattle and the sale of boxed beef will be substantially lessened and a monopoly may tend to be created in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act;

"Concentration in those lines of commerce will be increased and the tendency towards concentration will be accelerated." 1 App. 21.

More generally, given the statutory purposes to protect small businesses and to stem the rising tide of concentration in particular markets, a competitor trying to stay in business in a changing market must have standing to ask a court to set aside a merger that has changed the character of the market in an illegal way. Certainly the businesses -- small or large -- that must face competition in a market altered by an illegal merger are directly affected by that transaction. Their inability to prove exactly how or why they may be harmed does [***37] not place them outside the circle of interested parties whom the statute was enacted to protect.

II

Virtually ignoring the language and history of § 7 of the Clayton Act and the broad scope of the Act's provision for injunctive relief, the Court bases its decision entirely on a case construing the "private damages action provisions" of the Act. Brunswick, 429 U.S., at 478. In Brunswick, we began our analysis by acknowledging the difficulty of meshing § 7, "[**447] a statutory prohibition against acts that have a potential to cause certain harms," with § 4, a "damages action intended to remedy those harms." Id., at 486. We concluded that a plaintiff must prove more than a violation of § 7 to recover damages, "since such proof establishes only that injury may result." Ibid. Beyond the special nature of an action for treble damages, § 16 differs from § 4 because by its terms it requires only that the antitrust violation threaten [*128] the plaintiff with loss or damage, not that the violation cause the plaintiff actual "[injury] in his business or property." 15 U. S. C. § 15.

In the Brunswick case, the Court set aside a damages [***38] award that was based on the estimated additional profits that the plaintiff would have earned if competing bowling alleys had gone out of business instead of being acquired by the defendant. We concluded "that the loss of windfall profits that would have accrued had the acquired centers failed" was not the kind of actual injury for which damages could be recovered under § 4. 429 U.S., at 488. That injury "did not occur 'by reason of' that which made the acquisitions unlawful." Ibid.

In contrast, in this case it is the threatened harm -- to both competition and to the competitors in the relevant market -- that makes the acquisition unlawful under § 7. The Court's construction of the language of § 4 in Brunswick is plainly not controlling in this case.<sup>5</sup> The concept of "antitrust injury," which is at the heart of the [**499] treble-damages action, is simply not an element of a cause of action for injunctive relief that depends on finding a reasonable threat that an incipient disease will poison an entire market.

[***39] A competitor plaintiff who has proved a violation of § 7, as the Brunswick Court recognized, has established that injury may result. This showing satisfies the language of § 16 provided that the plaintiff can show that injury may result to him. When the proof discloses a reasonable probability that competition will be harmed as a result of a merger, I would also conclude that there is a reasonable probability that [*129] a competitor of the merging firms will suffer some corresponding harm in due course. In my opinion, that reasonable probability gives the competitor an interest in the proceeding adequate to confer standing to challenge the merger. To hold otherwise is to frustrate § 7 and to read § 16 far too restrictively.

---

<sup>5</sup> In Brunswick, we reserved this question, stating: "The issue for decision is a narrow one. . . . Petitioner questions only whether antitrust damages are available where the sole injury alleged is that competitors were continued in business, thereby denying respondents an anticipated increase in market shares." 429 U.S., at 484 (footnote omitted). Nor did we reach the issue of a competitor's standing to seek relief from a merger under § 16 in Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519 (1983). Id., at 524, n. 5.

Í Í JÁMEÚÆFÉ ÆAFGU LÁFÉI ÁUEÓÆAÍ Í ÉAÍ JJ LÁI HÆSÓA ÆGA Á GÉ ÆAÍ Í LÆFJÍ Í ÁMEÚÆSÓYÓU ÁGFÉ U

It would be a strange antitrust statute indeed which defined a violation enforceable by no private party. Effective enforcement of the antitrust laws has always depended largely on the work of private attorney generals, for whom Congress made special provision in the Clayton [***448] Act itself.<sup>6</sup> As recently as 1976, Congress specifically indicated its intent to encourage private enforcement of § 16 by authorizing recovery of a reasonable attorney's [***40] fee by a plaintiff in an action for injunctive relief. The Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976, 90 Stat. 1396 (amending 15 U. S. C. § 26).

The Court misunderstands the message that Congress conveyed in [****41] 1914 and emphasized in 1950. If, as the District Court and the Court of Appeals held, the merger is illegal, it should be set aside. I respectfully dissent.

References

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 285, 367

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:167, 54:168, 54:175

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:69, 48:84, 48:147

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, Form 17

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 26

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 70

Index to Annotations, Competition; Consolidation and Merger; Injunctions; Parties; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References:

Propriety and scope of [****42] injunctive relief in federal antitrust case- Supreme Court cases. 55 L Ed 2d 892.

What issues will the Supreme Court consider, though not, or not properly, raised by the parties. 42 L Ed 2d 946.

Standing of private party under 16 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 26) to seek injunction to prevent merger or acquisition allegedly prohibited under 7 of the Act (15 USCS 18). 78 ALR Fed 159.

End of Document

<sup>6</sup> 15 U. S. C. § 15. This Court has emphasized the importance of the statutory award of fees to private antitrust plaintiffs as part of the effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. In Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 130-131 (1969), the Court observed:

"[The] purpose of giving private parties treble-damage and injunctive remedies was not merely to provide private relief, but was to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws."

See also Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139 (1968); Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 502 (1969); Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 262 (1972).

324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy

Supreme Court of the United States

November 3, 1986, Argued ; January 13, 1987, Decided

No. 84-2022

Reporter

479 U.S. 335 *; 107 S. Ct. 720 **; 93 L. Ed. 2d 667 ***; 1987 U.S. LEXIS 281 ****; 55 U.S.L.W. 4094; 1986-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,391

324 LIQUOR CORP., DBA YORKSHIRE WINE & SPIRITS v. DUFFY ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEALS OF NEW YORK.

Disposition: 64 N. Y. 2d 504, 479 N. E. 2d 779, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

liquor, retailers, wholesalers, bottle, posted, prices, regulation, resale price, Sherman Act, powers, intoxicating liquor, retail price, ABC Law, commerce, conferred, liquor store, manufacturer, markup, anti trust law, importation, schedules, percent, repeal, enact, propose an amendment, pricing system, fair trade, price-fixing, consumption, supervised

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN1[] State & Territorial Governments, Licenses

See N.Y. Alco. Bev. Cont. Law § 101-b(3)(b).

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN2[] State & Territorial Governments, Licenses

See N.Y. Comp. Codes R. and Regs. tit. 9, § 65.4(e) (1980).

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN3[] State & Territorial Governments, Licenses

Retailers of liquor may not sell below "cost." N.Y. Alco. Bev. Cont. Law § 101-bb\(2\). The statute defines "cost" as the price of such item of liquor to the retailer plus twelve percentum of such price. "Price," in turn, is defined as the posted bottle price in effect at the time the retailer sells or offers to sell the item.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN4 State & Territorial Governments, Licenses

See N.Y. Alco. Bev. Cont. Law § 101-bb\(2\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Resale price maintenance has been a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act since the early years of national antitrust enforcement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A vertical restraint imposed by a single manufacturer or wholesaler may stimulate interbrand competition even as it reduces intrabrand competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

The United States Supreme Court held that N.Y. Alco. Bev. Cont. Law § 101-bb is inconsistent with § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN8 Sherman Act, Claims

A state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action is lawful. The U.S. Supreme Court decisions have established a two-part test for determining immunity. First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the state itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN9 [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The national policy in favor of competition cannot be thwarted by casting such a gauzy cloak of state involvement over what is essentially a private price-fixing arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Where private actors are granted a degree of private regulatory power the regulatory scheme may be attacked under § 1 of the Sherman Act as a "hybrid" restraint. The federal antitrust laws pre-empt state laws authorizing or compelling private parties to engage in anticompetitive behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Prohibition

HN11 [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The court must ask whether the interests implicated by a state regulation are so closely related to the powers reserved by the U.S. Const. Amend. XXI, that the regulation may prevail, notwithstanding that its requirements directly conflict with express federal policies.

Constitutional Law > Prohibition

HN12 [blue download icon] Constitutional Law, Prohibition

See U.S. Const. amend. XXI, § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13 [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A state's unsubstantiated interest in protecting small retailers simply is not of the same stature as the goals of the Sherman Act.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

New York law requiring liquor retailers to charge at least 112 percent of wholesaler's posted bottle price held violative of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) and not valid under 21st Amendment.

Summary

A New York statute and implementing regulations required liquor retailers to charge at least 112 percent of the wholesaler's posted bottle price in effect at the time the retailer sells or offers to sell the item. Wholesalers are required to file monthly "posted" bottle prices and case prices for an item with the state liquor authority, and may reduce the posted case price for an item without reducing its bottle price. Thus, wholesalers can compel retailers to charge more than 112 percent of the actual wholesale cost. A liquor retailer sold two bottles of liquor to state liquor authority investigators for less than 112 percent of the posted bottle price, and as a result, its liquor license was suspended for 10 days and it forfeited a $ 1,000 bond. The retailer sought relief from the penalties on the ground that the statute violated 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1). The New York Supreme Court, New York County, denied the petition (119 Misc 2d 746, 464 NYS2d 355). The Appellate Division, First Department, reversed (102 AD2d 607, 478 NYS2d 615). The New York Court of Appeals upheld the validity of the statute and reinstated the penalties, holding that while the statute was not immune under the state action exemption to the Sherman Act because New York did not actively supervise the resale price maintenance system, the statute was a proper exercise of the powers reserved to New York by the Twenty-first Amendment to the Federal Constitution because the state interest in protecting retailers which underlies the statute was of sufficient magnitude to override the federal policy expressed in the antitrust laws (64 NY2d 504, 479 NE2d 779).

On appeal, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for further proceedings. In an opinion by Powell, J., joined by Brennan, White, Marshall, Blackmun, Stevens, and Scalia, JJ., it was held that (1) the New York statute (a) imposed a regime of resale price maintenance on all New York retailers, which was a per se violation of 1 of the Sherman Act and with respect to which the qualifications to the per se rule were not applicable, and (b) was not valid under the state action exemption to the Sherman Act; and (2) the statute was not valid under the Twenty-first Amendment, since the state's asserted interest in protecting small retailers did not suffice to afford immunity from the Sherman Act, in the absence of legislative or other findings that either the minimum markup requirement or the "bottle price" definition of cost has been effective in preserving small retailers.

O'Connor, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., dissented, expressing the view that the Twenty-first Amendment clearly authorized New York to regulate the liquor trade within its borders free of federal interference, since the legislative history of the Amendment (1) revealed the intent of the Senate to prevent any federal interference with state attempts to regulate the liquor trade and to return absolute control of the liquor trade to the states, and (2) showed that the Federal Government could not use its commerce clause powers to interfere in any manner with the states' exercise of the power conferred by the Twenty-first Amendment.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §41 > liquor retail sale prices -- state control -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

A state statute and implementing regulations requiring liquor retailers to charge not less than 112 percent of the wholesaler's posted bottle price in effect at the time retailers sell or offer to sell the items is not valid under the state action exemption to the Sherman Act, because, while the state's liquor pricing system meets the first requirement for the application of the exemption--that the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy--in that the state legislature clearly has adopted a policy of resale price maintenance, it does not satisfy the second requirement--that the policy must be actively supervised by the state itself--in that the state (1) simply authorizes price setting and enforces the prices established by private parties, (2) neither establishes prices nor reviews the reasonableness of the price schedules, and (3) does not monitor market conditions or engage in any pointed reexamination of the program; neither the monitoring by the state liquor authority, consisting of permitting wholesalers to depart from their posted prices and permitting individual retailers to sell below the statutory definition of cost for good cause shown, nor periodic reexamination by the state legislature exerts any significant control over retail liquor prices or markups, and thus the requirement of state involvement is not satisfied.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS §13 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §41

> liquor retail sale prices -- state control -- Twenty-first Amendment -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C] [LEdHN\[2D\]](#) [2D] [LEdHN\[2E\]](#) [2E]

A state statute and implementing regulations requiring liquor retailers to charge not less than 112 percent of the wholesaler's posted bottle price in effect at the time retailers sell or offer to sell the items is not valid under the Twenty-first Amendment to the Federal Constitution, because, while the purpose of the minimum markup is to protect small retailers, the markup is imposed on the "posted bottle price," which may differ from the actual wholesale price, and there are no legislative or other findings that either the minimum markup requirement or the "bottle price" definition of cost has been effective in preserving small retail establishments; hence, the state's asserted interest in protecting small retailers does not suffice to afford immunity from the provisions of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §41 > liquor retail sale prices -- state control --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B] [LEdHN\[3C\]](#) [3C]

A state statute and implementing regulations requiring liquor retailers to charge not less than 112 percent of the wholesaler's posted bottle price in effect at the time retailers sell or offer to sell the items imposes a regime of resale price maintenance on all retailers in the state and is a per se violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1); the qualifications to the per se rule--that concerted nonprice restrictions imposed by a single manufacturer are to be judged under the rule of reason, and that a single manufacturer may announce resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply--do not apply, because (1) the statute directly restricts retail prices, (2) retailers are specifically forbidden by the statute from reducing the minimum prices set by wholesalers and are subject to penalties for failure to adhere to the resale price schedules, and (3) the statute applies to all wholesalers and retailers of liquor; in the pricing system established by the statute, there is a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade within the terms of 1 of the Sherman Act, because where private actors are granted a degree of private regulatory power, the regulatory scheme may be attacked under 1 as a hybrid restraint.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > state action exemption -- Sherman Act --

test -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

479 U.S. 335, *335; 107 S. Ct. 720, **720; 93 L. Ed. 2d 667, ***667; 1987 U.S. LEXIS 281, ****1

In order for the anticompetitive conduct of a state acting through its legislature to be exempt from the provisions of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), under the state action doctrine of Parker v Brown \(1943\) 317 US 341, 87 L Ed 315, 63 S Ct 307, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy, and the policy must be actively supervised by the state itself.

APPEAL §709 > Supreme Court -- construction of state statute -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

On appeal from a decision of the highest court of a state, the United States Supreme Court may not construe a state statute contrary to the construction given it by the highest court of the state.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > state action exemption -- state control of liquor distribution -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

The complete control by some states of the distribution of liquor within their boundaries is immune from the federal antitrust laws under the state action doctrine of Parker v Brown \(1943\) 317 US 341, 87 L Ed 315, 63 S Ct 307, because the state substitutes its own power for unfettered business freedom.

COMMERCE §113 > pre-emption -- federal antitrust laws -- state laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

The federal antitrust laws pre-empt state laws authorizing or compelling private parties to engage in anticompetitive behavior.

LIQUORS §7.2 > LIQUORS §9.4 > Twenty-first Amendment -- commerce clause -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Although the Twenty-first Amendment to the Federal Constitution grants the states virtually complete control over whether to permit importation or sale of liquor and how to structure the liquor distribution system, the states' powers under the Amendment are circumscribed by other provisions of the Constitution, such as the commerce clause; in harmonizing state and federal powers, the question in each case is whether the interests implicated by a state regulation are so closely related to the powers reserved by the Amendment that the regulation may prevail, notwithstanding that its requirements directly conflict with express federal policies.

APPEAL §709 > APPEAL §745 > COURTS §802 > Supreme Court review -- state court decision findings and conclusions -- binding effect -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

Although the Supreme Court, in reviewing the decision of a state court, is not bound by the findings of the state court that undercut powers reserved to the states by the Federal Constitution, nevertheless, the Supreme Court accords great weight to the views of the state's highest court on state law matters and customarily accepts the factual findings of state courts in the absence of exceptional circumstances.

Syllabus

---

Under § 101-bb of New York's Alcoholic Beverage Control Law and implementing regulations of the State Liquor Authority (SLA), liquor retailers must charge at least 112 percent of the wholesaler's "posted" bottle price in effect at the time the retailer sells or offers to sell the item. Wholesalers must file monthly "posted" bottle prices and case prices for an item with the SLA, and may reduce the posted case price for an item without reducing its bottle price. Since retailers generally purchase liquor by the case, wholesalers thus can compel retailers to charge more than 112 percent of the actual wholesale cost to the retailer. As a result of appellant retailer's selling certain bottles [****2] of liquor for less than 112 percent of the posted bottle price, its license was suspended for 10 days and it forfeited a bond. Appellant sought relief from the penalties on the ground that § 101-bb violated § 1 of the Sherman Act. A New York Supreme Court denied relief, but the Appellate Division reversed. The New York Court of Appeals upheld the validity of § 101-bb and reinstated the penalties. It held that § 101-bb was not immune under the state-action exemption from the antitrust laws set forth in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341. The Court of Appeals nevertheless concluded that the statute was a proper exercise of powers reserved to the State by the Twenty-first Amendment.

Held:

1. Section 101-bb is inconsistent with § 1 of the Sherman Act. Resale price maintenance has long been regarded as a per se antitrust violation. The New York statute, which applies to all liquor wholesalers and retailers, allows "vertical control" by wholesalers of retail prices. Such industrywide resale price fixing is virtually certain to reduce both interbrand and intrabrand competition, because it prevents wholesalers from allowing or requiring retail price competition. [****3] Cf. California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97. Pp. 341-343.
2. New York's pricing system is not valid under the state-action exemption from the antitrust laws. The State's system does meet the first requirement of the two-part test for determining immunity under Parker v. Brown, supra, that the challenged restraint be "one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy." However, New York's liquor pricing system does not meet the second requirement that the State's policy be "actively supervised" by the State itself. New York simply authorizes price setting and enforces the prices established by private parties. The State has displaced competition among liquor retailers without substituting an adequate system of regulation. Cf. California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., supra. Pp. 343-345.
3. New York's pricing system is not valid under the Twenty-first Amendment. Although § 2 of the Amendment qualifies the federal commerce power, the Amendment does not operate to "repeal" the Commerce Clause wherever state regulation of intoxicating liquors [****4] is concerned. The question in each case is whether the interests implicated by a state regulation are so closely related to the powers preserved by the Twenty-first Amendment that the regulation may prevail, notwithstanding that its requirements directly conflict with express federal policies. Pp. 346-352.
  - (a) The State's asserted interest in protecting small retailers does not suffice to afford immunity from the Sherman Act. Although the New York Court of Appeals correctly concluded that the purpose of the 12 percent minimum markup was to protect those retailers, the court made no findings that the purpose of the "bottle price" definition of cost was to protect small retailers, and cited no legislative or other findings that either the markup or the "bottle price" definition of cost has been effective in preserving the retailers. The State's resale price maintenance system directly conflicts with the "familiar and substantial" federal interest in enforcing the antitrust laws. Pp. 348-351.

(b) It is not necessary to consider whether New York's pricing system can be upheld as an exercise of the State's power to promote temperance. The Court of Appeals did not find that the statute [****5] was intended to promote temperance, or that it does so. This Court accords great weight to the views of the State's highest court on state-law matters, and customarily accepts the factual findings of state courts in the absence of exceptional circumstances. No such exceptional circumstances appear in this case. Pp. 351-352.

Counsel: Bertram M. Kantor argued the cause for appellant. With him on the briefs were Michael H. Byowitz and Seymour Howard.

Deputy Assistant Attorney General Cannon argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Fried, Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg, Deputy Solicitor General Cohen, Harriet S. Shapiro, Catherine G. O'Sullivan, and Andrea Limmer.

Christopher Keith Hall, Assistant Attorney General of New York, argued the cause for appellees. With him on the brief were Robert Abrams, Attorney General, O. Peter Sherwood, Solicitor General, and Richard G. Liskov, Lloyd Constantine, and August L. Fietkau, Assistant Attorneys General.*

[****6]

Judges: POWELL, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BRENNAN, WHITE, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, STEVENS, and SCALIA, JJ., joined. O'CONNOR, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., joined, post, p. 352.

Opinion by: POWELL

Opinion

---

[*337] [***673] [**722] JUSTICE POWELL delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A] LEdHN[2A] [↑] [2A] The State of New York requires retailers to charge at least 112 percent of the "posted" wholesale price for liquor, but permits wholesalers to sell to retailers at less than the "posted" price. The question presented is whether this pricing system is valid under either the state-action exemption from the antitrust laws or the Twenty-first Amendment.

I

A

Wholesalers of liquor in the State of New York must file, or "post," monthly price schedules with the State Liquor Authority (SLA). N. Y. Alco. Bev. Cont. Law (ABC Law) [*338] § 101-b (McKinney 1970 and Supp. 1986).<sup>1</sup> [****8] The schedules must report, "with [***674] respect to each item," "the bottle and case price to

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for Peerless Importers, Inc., et al. by Lawrence Kill, Steven M. Pesner, Anthony A. Dean, Ralph S. Spritzer, Michael Whiteman, and Jonathan P. Nye; and for Wine, Liquor & Distillery Workers Union Local 1, AFL-CIO, et al. by Victor Feingold.

Martin P. Mehler filed a brief for Metropolitan Package Store Association, Inc., et al. as amici curiae.

<sup>1</sup> Section 101-b(3)(b) provides, in part:

HN1 [↑] "No brand of liquor or wine shall be sold to or purchased by a retailer unless a schedule, as provided by this section, is filed with the liquor authority, and is then in effect. Such schedule shall be in writing duly verified, and filed in the number of copies and form as required by the authority, and shall contain, with respect to each item, the exact brand or trade name, retailers. [****7] " § 101-b(3)(b). The ABC Law itself does not require that the posted case price of an item bear any relation to its posted bottle price. The SLA, however, has promulgated a rule stating that for cases containing 48 or fewer bottles, the posted bottle price multiplied by the number of bottles in a case must exceed the posted case price by a "breakage" surcharge of $ 1.92. SLA Rule 16.4(e), 9 NYCRR § 65.4(e) (1980).<sup>2</sup>

HN3[] Retailers of liquor may not sell below "cost." ABC Law, § 101-bb\(2\).<sup>3</sup> [****11] The statute [**723] defines "cost" as "the price of such [*339] item of liquor to [****9] the retailer plus twelve percentum of such price." § 101-bb\(2\)\(b\). "Price," in turn, is defined as the posted bottle price in effect at the time the retailer sells or offers to sell the item. Ibid. Although the statute defines retail cost in terms of the wholesaler's posted bottle price, retailers generally purchase liquor by the case. The SLA expressly has authorized wholesalers to reduce, or "post off," the case price of an item without reducing the posted bottle price of the item. SLA Bulletin 471 (June 29, 1973).<sup>4</sup> By reducing the [***675] case price without reducing the bottle price, [*340] wholesalers can compel retailers to capacity of package, nature of contents, age and proof where stated on the label, the number of bottles contained in each case, the bottle and case price to retailers, the net bottle and case price paid by the seller, which prices, in each instance, shall be individual for each item and not in 'combination' with any other item, the discounts for quantity, if any, and the discounts for time of payment, if any. Such brand of liquor or wine shall not be sold to retailers except at the price and discounts then in effect unless prior written permission of the authority is granted for good cause shown and for reasons not inconsistent with the purpose of this chapter. Such schedule shall be filed by each manufacturer selling such brand to retailers and by each wholesaler selling such brand to retailers."

<sup>2</sup> Rule 16.4(e), 9 NYCRR § 65.4(e) (1980), provides:

HN2[] "For each item of liquor listed in the schedule of liquor prices to retailers there shall be posted a bottle and a case price. The bottle price multiplied by number of containers in the case must exceed the case price by approximately $ 1.92 for any case of 48 or fewer containers. The figure is to be reached by adding $ 1.92 to the case price, dividing by the number of containers in the case, and rounding to the nearest cent. Where more than 48 containers are packed in a case, bottle price shall be computed by dividing the case price by the number of containers in the case, rounding to the nearest cent, and adding one cent. Variations will not be permitted without approval of the authority."

<sup>3</sup> Section 101-bb\(2\) provides, in part:

HN4[] "No licensee authorized to sell liquor at retail for off-premises consumption shall sell, offer to sell, solicit an order for or advertise any item of liquor at a price which is less than cost. As used in this section, the term:

....

"(b) 'cost' shall mean the price of such item of liquor to the retailer plus twelve percentum of such price, which is declared as a matter of legislative determination to represent the average minimum overhead necessarily incurred in connection with the sale by the retailer of such item of liquor. As used in this paragraph (b) the term "price" shall mean the bottle price to retailers, before any discounts, contained in the applicable schedule filed with the liquor authority pursuant to section one hundred one-b of this chapter by a manufacturer or wholesaler from whom the retailer purchases liquor and which is in effect at the time the retailer sells or offers to sell such item of liquor; except, that where no applicable schedule is in effect the bottle price of the item of liquor shall be computed as the appropriate fraction of the case price of such item, before any discounts, most recently invoiced to the retailer."

<sup>4</sup> Bulletin 471 provides, in part:

"Case prices may be posted off for any given month, or months, without an accompanying reduction in bottle prices. The wholesaler is given these choices during the period of a post-off:

"1. May elect not to reduce the bottle price, in which case the legal bottle price will be the base for the 12% retail mark-up.

"2. May reduce the bottle price to conform with the post-off case price, consistent with Rule 16.4(e), in which case the reduced bottle price will be the base for the 12% mark-up.

"3. May adopt a bottle price anywhere between the extremes authorized under '1' and '2' above, in which case the reduced bottle price will be the base for the 12% mark-up.

"Wholesalers of liquor will note that pursuant to these changes no control is placed on the number of consecutive months during which post-offs may be scheduled."

charge more than 112 percent of the actual wholesale cost. Similarly, because § 101-bb\(2\)\(b\) defines "cost" in terms of the posted bottle price in effect when the retailer sells or offers to sell the item, wholesalers can sell retailers large quantities in a month when prices are low and then require the retailers to sell at an abnormally high markup by raising the bottle price in succeeding months. The New York retail pricing system thus permits wholesalers to set retail prices, and retail markups, without regard to actual retail costs. [****10] New York wholesalers advertise in trade publications that their "post offs" will guarantee retailers large markups, sometimes in excess of 30 percent. App. 32-35. Wholesalers also advertise that buying large quantities while wholesale prices are low will result in extra retail profits after wholesale prices are raised. App. to Juris. Statement 101A. The effect of this complex of statutory provisions and regulations is to permit wholesalers to maintain retail prices at artificially high levels.

B

Appellant 324 Liquor Corporation sold two bottles of liquor to SLA investigators in June 1981 for less than 112 percent of the posted bottle price. Because the wholesalers had "posted off" their June 1981 case prices [****12] without reducing the posted bottle prices, appellant's retail prices represented an 18 percent markup over its actual wholesale cost. As a result of this violation, appellant's license was suspended for 10 days and it forfeited a $1,000 bond. Appellant sought relief from the penalties on the ground that § 101-bb violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1. A New York Supreme Court denied the petition. 324 Liquor Corp. v. McLaughlin, 119 Misc. 2d 746, 464 N. Y. S. 2d 355 \(1983\). The Appellate Division reversed. 324 Liquor Corp. v. McLaughlin, [102 \[\*341\] App. Div. 2d 607, 478 N. Y. S. 2d 615 \(1984\)](#). The New York Court of Appeals upheld the validity of § 101-bb and reinstated the penalties. J. A. J. Liquor Store, Inc. v. New York State Liquor Authority, 64 N. Y. 2d 504, 479 N. E. 2d 779 \(1985\). The Court of Appeals held that § 101-bb is not immune under the state-action doctrine of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 \(1943\), because the State does not actively supervise the resale price maintenance [**724] system. The court nevertheless concluded that the statute [****13] is a proper exercise of powers reserved to the State by the Twenty-first Amendment, because "the State interest in protecting retailers which underlies [the statute] is of sufficient magnitude to override the Federal policy expressed in the antitrust laws." J. A. J. Liquor Store, Inc. v. New York State Liquor Authority, supra, at 522, 479 N. E. 2d, at 789. We noted probable jurisdiction, 475 U.S. 1080 \(1986\), and we now reverse.

[***676] II

In California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97 \(1980\), we invalidated a California statute requiring all producers, wholesalers, and rectifiers of wine to file fair trade contracts or price schedules with the State. Midcal establishes the framework for our analysis of New York's liquor pricing system.

A

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] The "threshold question," in this case as in Midcal, is whether the State's pricing system is inconsistent with the antitrust laws. Id. at 102. Section 101-bb imposes a regime of resale price maintenance on all New York liquor retailers. [****14] HN5 Resale price maintenance has been a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act "since the early years of national antitrust enforcement." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761 \(1984\). See Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 404-409 \(1911\). Our recent decisions recognize the possibility that HN6 a vertical restraint imposed by a single manufacturer or wholesaler [*342] may stimulate interbrand competition even as it reduces intrabrand competition. Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 51-52 \(1977\). Accordingly, we have held that concerted nonprice restrictions imposed by a single manufacturer are to be judged under the rule of reason. Id. at 59. We also have held that a single manufacturer may announce resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., supra, at 761; United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307 \(1919\). [****15] Neither of these qualifications to the per se rule applies in this case. Section 101-bb directly restricts retail prices, and retailers are subject to penalties for failure to adhere to the resale price schedules. The New York statute, moreover, applies to all wholesalers and retailers of liquor. We have noted that industrywide resale price maintenance also may facilitate cartelization. Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., supra, at 51, n. 18. Mandatory industrywide resale price fixing is virtually certain to reduce interbrand competition as well as intrabrand competition, because it prevents manufacturers and wholesalers from allowing or requiring retail price competition. The New York statute specifically forbids retailers from reducing the minimum prices set by wholesalers.

The antitrust violation in this case is essentially similar to the violation in Midcal. It is true that the wholesalers in Midcal were required to adhere to a single fair trade contract or price schedule for each geographical area. 445 U.S., at 99-100. Midcal therefore involved horizontal as well as vertical price fixing. Although the horizontal [****16] restraint in Midcal may have provided an additional reason for invalidating the statute, our decision in Midcal rested on the "vertical control" of wine producers, who held "the power to prevent price competition by dictating the prices charged by wholesalers." Id., at 103. [***677] As we explained in Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654 \(1982\), the California statute [*343] was invalidated because "it mandated [**725] resale price maintenance, an activity that has long been regarded as a per se violation of the Sherman Act." Id., at 659-660 (emphasis in original; footnote omitted). HN7<sup>5</sup> We hold that ABC Law § 101-bb is inconsistent with § 1 of the Sherman Act.<sup>5</sup>

[****17] B

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#)<sup>5</sup> [1B] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#)<sup>5</sup> [3B] [LEdHN\[4\]](#)<sup>5</sup> [4] [LEdHN\[5A\]](#)<sup>5</sup> [5A] [LEdHN\[6A\]](#)<sup>5</sup> [6A] [LEdHN\[7A\]](#)<sup>5</sup> [7A] In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 \(1943\), the Court held that the Sherman Act does not apply "to the anticompetitive conduct of a State acting through its legislature." Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 38 \(1985\). Parker v. Brown rests on principles of federalism and state sovereignty. Under those principles, "an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress." Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S., at 351. At the same time, HN8<sup>5</sup> "a state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by [****18] authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action is lawful." Ibid. Our decisions have established a two-part test for determining immunity under Parker v. Brown. "First, the challenged restraint must be 'one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy'; second, the policy must be 'actively supervised' by the State itself." California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., supra, at 105 (quoting [Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., \[\*344\] 435 U.S. 389, 410 \(1978\)](#) (plurality opinion)). New York's liquor-pricing system meets the first requirement. The state legislature clearly has adopted a policy of resale price maintenance. Just as clearly, however, New York's liquor-pricing system is not actively supervised by the State. As in Midcal, the State "simply authorizes price setting" [***678] and enforces the prices established by private parties.<sup>6</sup> [\[\*\*726\]](#)

<sup>5</sup> The Court of Appeals suggested that the liquor-pricing system prevents "temporary price reductions . . . threatening to drive small retailers out of business and consolidating control of the market in the hands of a relatively few mass distributors who could then dictate prices to the ultimate injury of consumers. . . ." J. A. J. Liquor Store, Inc. v. New York State Liquor Authority, 64 N. Y. 2d 504, 520, 479 N. E. 2d 779, 788 \(1985\). In Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574 \(1986\), we recognized that predatory pricing schemes are "rarely tried, and even more rarely successful." Id., at 589. In this case, the possibility of success is practically nonexistent, because liquor retailers are limited to a single outlet. ABC Law § 63.5 (McKinney 1970). In any event, § 101-bb forbids not only predatory pricing, but all price competition among retailers.

<sup>6</sup> A simple "minimum markup" statute requiring retailers to charge 112 percent of their actual wholesale cost may satisfy the "active supervision" requirement, and so be exempt from the antitrust laws under Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 \(1943\). See Morgan v. Division of Liquor Control, Conn. Dept. of Business Regulation, 664 F.2d 353 \(CA2 1981\) (upholding a simple markup statute). Section 101-bb, however, is not a simple minimum markup statute because it imposes a markup on the "posted bottle price," a price that may greatly exceed what the retailer actually paid for the liquor. As we have explained, supra, at 339-340, Bulletin 471 permits wholesalers to reduce the case price -- the price actually paid by most retailers -- without reducing the bottle price. The New York Court of Appeals expressly held that Bulletin 471 "is consistent with Alcoholic Beverage Control Law § 101-b(3) which does not mandate any price ratio between scheduled case and bottle prices." J. A. J. Liquor Store, Inc. v. New York State Liquor Authority, supra, at 523, 479 N. E. 2d, at 790. We may not "construe a state statute contrary to the construction given it by the highest court of a State." O'Brien v. Skinner, 414 U.S. 524, 531 \(1974\). Appellees nevertheless argue that invalidation of Bulletin 471 does not require invalidation of § 101-bb. Appellees contend that § 101-bb does not prevent the SLA from establishing a relationship between case price and bottle price; indeed, Rule 16.4(e) establishes such a relationship. Brief for Appellees 24-25, n. 37. Invalidation of Bulletin 471 alone, however, would not prevent wholesalers from selling large quantities at low prices in one month, and then requiring retailers to charge abnormally high markups by raising bottle prices in subsequent months. See supra, at 340. We cannot accept appellees' suggestion that such unsupervised price fixing should be

479 U.S. 335, *344; 107 S. Ct. 720, **726; 93 L. Ed. 2d 667, ***678; 1987 U.S. LEXIS 281, ****18

445 [<sup>*345</sup> U.S., at 105]. New York "neither establishes prices nor reviews the reasonableness of the price schedules." Ibid. New York "does not monitor market conditions or engage [****19] in any 'pointed reexamination' of the program." Id., at 106 (quoting Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350, 362 (1977)).<sup>7</sup> Each wholesaler sets its own "posted" prices; the State does not control month-to-month variations in posted prices. Nor does the State supervise the wholesaler's decision to "post off," the amount of the "post off," the corresponding decrease, if any, in the bottle price, or the frequency with which a wholesaler posts off. The State has displaced competition among liquor retailers without substituting an adequate system of regulation. HN9[↑] "The national policy in favor of competition cannot be thwarted by casting such a gauzy cloak of state involvement over what is essentially a private price-fixing arrangement." 445 U.S., at 106.<sup>8</sup>

LEdHN[5B][↑] [5B]

[****20] LEdHN[1C][↑] [1C]

LEdHN[3C][↑] [3C] LEdHN[7B][↑] [7B] [****21]

[****22] [*346] III

---

[***679] LEdHN[8][↑] [8]Section 2 of the Twenty-first Amendment reserves to the States the power to regulate, or prohibit entirely, the transportation or importation of intoxicating liquor within their borders.<sup>9</sup> [****24] Section 2 "grants the States virtually complete control over whether to permit importation or sale of liquor and how to structure the liquor distribution system." Midcal, 445 U.S., at 110. The States' Twenty-first Amendment powers, though broad, are circumscribed by other provisions of the Constitution. See Larkin v. Grendel's Den, Inc., 459 U.S. 116, 122, n.

---

tolerated as a reasonable accounting method or as a hedge against inflation. See App. to Juris. Statement 101A (advertising a guaranteed 31.3 percent markup on liquor purchased in August 1984 and sold in September 1984). We thus have no occasion to consider whether a simple minimum markup statute would be entitled to antitrust immunity under Parker v. Brown.

LEdHN[6B][↑] [6B]Some States completely control the distribution of liquor within their boundaries. E. g., Va. Code §§ 4-15, 4-28 (1983). Such comprehensive regulation is immune under Parker v. Brown because the State substitutes its own power for "unfettered business freedom." See New Motor Vehicle Bd. of Cal. v. Orin W. Fox Co., 439 U.S. 96, 109 (1978).

<sup>7</sup> In a concurring opinion, Judge Jasen argued that the State actively supervises the liquor-pricing system. J. A. J. Liquor Store, Inc. v. New York State Liquor Authority, supra, at 526-529, 479 N. E. 2d, at 792-794. Judge Jasen noted that the SLA can respond to market conditions by permitting individual wholesalers to depart from their posted prices, ABC Law § 101-b(3)(b), and by permitting individual retailers to sell below the statutory definition of "cost," § 101-bb(3), "for good cause shown." Bulletin 471 itself was issued by the SLA in response to market conditions. Moreover, the state legislature frequently considers proposals to alter the liquor-pricing system. Neither the "monitoring" by the SLA, nor the periodic reexaminations by the state legislature, exerts any significant control over retail liquor prices or markups. Thus, the State's involvement does not satisfy the second requirement of Midcal.

<sup>8</sup> The same considerations lead us to reject appellees' contention that there is no "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade." 15 U. S. C. § 1. HN10[↑] Where "private actors are . . . granted 'a degree of private regulatory power' . . . the regulatory scheme may be attacked under § 1" as a "hybrid" restraint. Fisher v. Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 268 (1986) (quoting Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 666, n. 1 (1982) (STEVENS, J., concurring in judgment)). See Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384 (1951). Our decisions reflect the principle that the federal antitrust laws pre-empt state laws authorizing or compelling private parties to engage in anticompetitive behavior. See also Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 345-346 (1904) (plurality opinion); 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 209, pp. 60-62 (1978). That principle squarely governs this case.

<sup>9</sup> Section 2 of the Twenty-first Amendment provides: HN12[↑] "The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited."

[5 \(1982\) \(Establishment Clause\); Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 204-209 \(1976\) \(Equal Protection Clause\); Wisconsin v. Constantineau, 400 U.S. 433, 436 \[\*\*727\] \(1971\) \(procedural due process\); Department of Revenue v. James Beam Co., 377 U.S. 341, 345-346 \(1964\) \(Export-Import Clause\).](#) Although § 2 directly qualifies the federal commerce power, the Court has rejected the view "that the Twenty-first Amendment has somehow [****23] operated to 'repeal' the Commerce Clause wherever regulation of intoxicating liquors is concerned." Hostetter v. Idlewild Liquor Corp., 377 U.S. 324, 331-332 \(1964\).<sup>10</sup> Instead, the Court has [***680] engaged [*347] in a "pragmatic effort to harmonize state and federal powers." Midcal, supra, at 109. HN11 [↑] The question in each case is "whether the interests implicated by a state regulation are so closely related to the powers reserved by the Twenty-first Amendment that the regulation may prevail, notwithstanding that its requirements directly conflict with express federal policies." Capital Cities Cable, Inc. v. Crisp, 467 U.S. 691, 714 \(1984\).

[****25] [*348] A

The New York Court of Appeals concluded that § 101-bb "was expressly designed to preserve competition in New York's retail liquor industry by stabilizing the retail market and protecting the economic position of small liquor retailers." J. A. J. Liquor Store, Inc. v. New York State Liquor Authority, 64 N. Y. 2d, at 520, 479 N. E. 2d, at 788. The Court of Appeals traced the recent history of the State's regulation of retail liquor prices. In early 1964, the Moreland Commission completed an extensive study of the state laws governing the sale and distribution of alcoholic beverages. New York State Moreland Comm'n on the Alcoholic Beverage Control Law, Report and Recommendations Nos. 1-3 (1964). "The Commission's major findings were that New York consumers suffered from serious price discrimination when compared to liquor consumers in other States and that a severe lack of competition existed in the New York retail market." J. A. J. Liquor Store, Inc. v. New York State Liquor Authority, supra, at 519, 479 N. E. 2d, at 787. The New York Legislature responded in 1964 by enacting sweeping changes in the ABC [****26] Law primarily intended to promote price competition among liquor retailers. Ibid. The 1964 version of § 101-bb prohibited retail sales below cost and defined cost as the bottle price in effect when the retailer sells or offers to sell the item. ABC Law § 101-bb (McKinney 1970). During the years between 1964 and 1971, the number of liquor stores in New York declined. The State Senate Excise Committee investigated the decline and concluded that "the mass of small retailers are unable to compete with the large volume outlets that have emerged." New York State Legislature, Senate Excise Committee, Final Report 29-30 (Mar. 5, 1971). In 1971

<sup>10</sup> The dissenting opinion concedes that "neither the House of Representatives nor the state ratifying conventions deliberated long on the powers conferred on the States by § 2." Post, at 353. It nevertheless maintains that the Senate debates "clearly demonstrate an intent to confer on States complete and exclusive control over the commerce of liquor." Post, at 354. We find no such clear demonstration of congressional intent. It is true that Senator Blaine, the Senate sponsor of the Amendment, at one point stated that the purpose of § 2 was "to restore to the States . . . absolute control in effect over interstate commerce affecting intoxicating liquors. . . ." 76 Cong. Rec. 4143 (1933). At another point, however, Senator Blaine appeared to advance a narrower interpretation: "So, to assure the so-called dry States against the importation of intoxicating liquor into those States, it is proposed to write permanently into the Constitution a prohibition along that line." Id., at 4141.

The dissent also maintains that the behavior of the States following ratification supports the view that States have power to enact laws governing the pricing of liquor free of the strictures of federal antitrust policy. One commentator is quoted as saying that the States adopted "bold and drastic experiments" in price control. Post, at 357, quoting De Ganahl, Trade Practice and Price Control in the Alcoholic Beverage Industry, 7 Law & Contemp. Prob. 665, 680 (1940). In the next paragraph, however, this writer states that "[because] the experiments came at a time when neither the fair-trade law nor the constitutional law on liquor was settled . . . there is uncertainty as to the validity of much of this legislation." Ibid. When the Twenty-first Amendment was adopted, it was far from clear that the federal commerce power extended to intrastate retail sales of liquor. See A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 295 U.S. 495, 542-548 \(1935\) (holding that the commerce power does not extend to intrastate sales of poultry, even when the poultry has been shipped across state lines). The Miller-Tydings Fair Trade Act of 1937, 50 Stat. 693, moreover, permitted States to authorize agreements prescribing prices for the resale of specified commodities, including liquor. Even after the passage of the Miller-Tydings Act, price control laws were not as universally popular as the dissent implies. In 1940, for example, only 18 of the 45 "wet" States had price stabilization provisions written into their alcoholic beverage statutes, De Ganahl, supra, at 680, while in 17 States the State itself monopolized sales of liquor, Shipman, State Administrative Machinery for Liquor Control, 7 Law & Contemp. Prob. 600, 601, n. 5 (1940).

the legislature enacted the current version of ABC Law § 101-bb to "[protect] the economic position of small liquor retailers." J. A. J. Liquor Store, Inc. v. New York State Liquor Authority, supra, at 520, 479 N. E. 2d, at 788.

[*349] LEdHN[2B] [2B] We agree with the New York Court of Appeals that the purpose of the 12-percent minimum markup is to protect small retailers. We have noted that the 12-percent markup is imposed on the "posted bottle" [***27] price," a price that may differ from the actual wholesale price paid by the [***681] retailer. See supra, at 339-340. There is no indication in the statute or its legislative history, however, that the purpose of defining cost as "posted bottle price" was to protect small retailers. The New York Legislature first defined cost in terms of posted bottle price in the 1964 amendments to the ABC Law. The purpose of those amendments, as the New York Court of Appeals found, was to increase price competition among liquor retailers. The 1971 amendments simply retained bottle price as the basis of the statutory definition of cost and added 12 percent to reflect the retailer's overhead and operating expenses. Indeed, the legislative Committee that considered the 1971 amendments concluded that the bottle price definition of cost put small retailers at a slight disadvantage. The Committee noted that "[the] present definition of 'cost' [as] scheduled bottle cost to the retailer does afford some margin of profit to large retailers in particular, and, to a lesser extent, to all retailers who can afford to buy by the case." New York State Senate Excise Committee, Final Report, supra [***28] , at 8-9. The Committee suggested that "consideration be accorded to . . . [revision] or elimination of . . . 'post offs' practices that appear to afford discriminatory advantages to possession of great purchasing power." Id., at 41. The Committee did not recommend an amendment to this effect because it considered the matter "outside the scope of the directive given to this Committee." Ibid.<sup>11</sup>

[***29]

[*350] LEdHN[2C] [2C] In Midcal, we found nothing in the record to suggest that California's wine-pricing system actually helped sustain small retailers. 445 U.S., at 113. Similarly, in this case the New York Court of Appeals cited no legislative or other findings that either the minimum markup requirement or the "bottle price" definition of cost has been effective in preserving small retail establishments, and made no findings of its own. Our Midcal opinion cites evidence that States with "fair trade laws" not unlike ABC Law § 101-bb actually had higher rates of firm failure, and slower rates of growth of small retail stores, than free trade States in the years between 1956 and 1972. 445 U.S., at 113 (citing S. Rep. No. 94-466, [*729] p. 3 (1975)). The only relevant evidence in the record indicates that the number of retail liquor outlets in New York continued to decline between 1970 and 1979. App. to Juris Statement 99A. We are unwilling to assume on the basis of this record that § 101-bb has the effect of protecting small retailers.

LEdHN[2D] [2D] [***30] In this case, as in Midcal, HN13 [2D] the State's unsubstantiated interest in protecting small retailers "simply [is] not of the same stature as the goals of the Sherman Act." 445 U.S., at 114. [***682] New York's resale price maintenance system directly conflicts with the "familiar and substantial" federal interest in enforcement of the antitrust laws. Id., at 110. "Antitrust laws in general, and the Sherman Act in particular . . . are as important to the preservation of economic freedom and our free-enterprise system as the Bill of Rights is to the protection of our fundamental personal freedoms." United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 610

---

<sup>11</sup> There is no indication that the purpose of Bulletin 471 is to protect small retailers. The Bulletin states that its purpose is to prevent "a situation during post-off periods which resulted in what became known as a 'two bottle' price." App. to Juris. Statement 71A. Although there is no precise explanation of "two bottle pricing" in the record, the caption of Bulletin 471 is "Unlawful Discrimination and Price Scheduling -- Bottle Price During Post-Down." Ibid. This suggests that the SLA was concerned with ensuring that wholesalers charge the same price to all retailers, and not with the relationship between the retailer's actual cost and the required markup.

(1972). We therefore conclude that the State's asserted interest in [*351] protecting small retailers does not suffice to afford immunity from the Sherman Act.<sup>12</sup>

[****31] B

LEdHN[9] [9]Appellees finally argue that § 101-bb furthers the State's interest in promoting temperance. Brief for Appellees 39-44. One would hardly suggest that the New York Legislature set out to promote temperance by increasing the number of retail outlets for liquor. Rather, appellees argue that New York's pricing system has the effect of raising retail prices, and that higher prices decrease consumption of liquor. The New York Court of Appeals did not find that the statute was intended to promote temperance, or that it does so. On the contrary, that court cited the conclusion of the Moreland Commission that higher prices do not decrease consumption of liquor. J. A. J. Liquor Store, Inc. v. New York State Liquor Authority, 64 N. Y. 2d, at 521, n. 2, 479 N. E. 2d, at 788, n. 2 (citing Moreland Comm'n Report No. 1, at 3, 17). Of course, we are not bound by findings of the Court of Appeals that undercut powers reserved by the Twenty-first Amendment. Midcal, supra, at 111; Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, 324 U.S. 652, 659 (1945). We nevertheless accord [****32] "great weight to the views of the State's highest court" on state-law matters, Indiana ex rel. Anderson v. Brand, 303 U.S. 95, 100 (1938), and customarily accept the factual findings of state courts in the absence of exceptional circumstances. Midcal, supra, at 111-112. Our review of the record discloses no such exceptional circumstances in this case.<sup>13</sup> We therefore do [***683] not reach the question whether New [*352] [*730] York's liquor-pricing system could be upheld as an exercise of the State's power to promote temperance.

[****33] IV

LEdHN[2E] [2E]We conclude that the Twenty-first Amendment provides no immunity for New York's authorization of private, unsupervised price fixing by liquor wholesalers. We therefore reverse the judgment of the New York Court of Appeals and remand the case for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: O'CONNOR

Dissent

---

JUSTICE O'CONNOR, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE joins, dissenting.

Immediately after the ratification of the Twenty-first Amendment, this Court recognized that the broad language of § 2 of the Amendment conferred plenary power on the States to regulate the liquor trade within their boundaries.

---

<sup>12</sup> We have no occasion in this case to consider whether the State's interest in protecting small retailers ever could prevail against the federal interest in enforcement of the antitrust laws.

<sup>13</sup> It is far from certain that the New York Legislature intended to promote temperance, or that the retail price maintenance system actually decreases consumption. Section 101-bb, like other sections of the ABC Law, recites that it is enacted "for the purpose of fostering and promoting temperance." ABC Law § 101-bb(1) (McKinney 1970). This statement is not supported by specific findings, or by evidence in the record. In Midcal, we accepted the California Supreme Court's rejection of a similar declaration of legislative purpose. 445 U.S. at 112-114 (discussing Rice v. Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Bd., 21 Cal. 3d 431, 457-459, 579 P. 2d 476, 493-494 (1978)). The legislative Report accompanying § 101-bb does not suggest that the amendment was aimed at decreasing consumption. Rather, the Report focuses on the need to protect small retailers. New York State Legislature, Senate Excise Committee, Final Report 30, 37 (Mar. 1971). The Report does express concern over the increase in liquor consumption during the years between 1964 and 1971. Id., at 16. But the Report recognizes the Moreland Commission's finding that higher prices do not reduce consumption, and states that "because of the multiplicity of factors involved and lack of data on specifics, the Committee is unable to determine what portion of such increase is attributable to any particular factors." Id., at 14.

Ziffrin, Inc. v. Reeves, 308 U.S. 132 (1939); Finch & Co. v. McKittrick, 305 U.S. 395 (1939); Indianapolis Brewing Co. v. Liquor Control Comm'n, 305 U.S. 391 (1939); State Board of Equalization v. Young's Market Co., 299 U.S. 59 (1936). As JUSTICE STEVENS recently observed, however, the Court has, over the years, so "completely distorted the Twenty-first [*353] [****34] Amendment" that "[it] now has a barely discernible effect in Commerce Clause cases." Newport v. Iacobucci, ante, at 98 (dissenting). Because I believe that the Twenty-first Amendment clearly authorized the State of New York to regulate the liquor trade within its borders free of federal interference, I dissent from Part III of the Court's opinion, and would affirm the judgment of the New York Court of Appeals.

I

In Hostetter v. Idlewild Liquor Corp., 377 U.S. 324 (1964), this Court took a first step toward eviscerating the authority of States to regulate the commerce of liquor. The Court held that the State of New York could not regulate the importation of liquor into that State when the liquor was sold in duty-free shops at the Kennedy Airport. The basis for this decision was the fact that the United States Customs Service already supervised the liquor sold at the airport. Justice Black, who as a Senator was present at the creation of the Twenty-first Amendment, wrote a thoughtful and powerful dissent. After reviewing the legislative history of the Twenty-first Amendment, Justice Black concluded that the Senators who approved the Twenty-first [*351] Amendment thought they were returning absolute control over the liquor industry to the States, and "were seeing to it that the Federal Government could not interfere with or restrict the State's exercise of the power conferred by the Amendment." Id. at 338 (dissenting). Because the [***684] Court has seen fit in recent years to dismiss this legislative history without analysis as "obscure," Bacchus Imports, Ltd. v. Dias, 468 U.S. 263, 274 (1984); ante, at 346-347, n. 10, a fresh examination of the origins of the Twenty-first Amendment is in order and long overdue.

Although neither the House of Representatives nor the state ratifying conventions deliberated long on the powers conferred on the States by § 2, but see 76 Cong. Rec. 2776 (1933) (statement of Rep. Lea of California that the section was "the [*354] extreme of State rights" because it obligated the Federal Government to assist the enforcement of state laws "however unwise or improvident"), the Senate considered the section in great detail. Those Senate discussions clearly demonstrate an intent to confer on States complete and exclusive control over the commerce of liquor.

[****36] When the Senate began its deliberations on the Twenty-first Amendment, the proposed Amendment included a § 3 not present in the adopted Amendment. This section granted the Federal Government [*731] concurrent authority over some limited aspects of the commerce of liquor. It provided that "Congress shall have concurrent power to regulate or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to be drunk on the premises where sold." Id., at 4138. As Justice Black observed, the proposal "to leave even this remnant of federal control over liquor traffic gave rise to the only real controversy over the language of the proposed Amendment." 377 U.S., at 337. Even Senator Blaine, the Chairman of the Senate Subcommittee that had held hearings on the proposed Amendment, opposed the limited grant of authority to the Federal Government in § 3. According to Senator Blaine, when the Federal Government was organized by the Constitution the States had "surrendered control over and regulation of interstate commerce." 76 Cong. Rec. 4141 (1933). He viewed § 2 of the Amendment as a restoration of the power surrendered by the States when they joined the Union. Section 2 "[restored] [****37] to the States, in effect, the right to regulate commerce respecting a single commodity -- namely, intoxicating liquor." Ibid. In his view, the grant of authority to Congress in § 3 undercut the import of § 2:

"Mr. President, my own personal viewpoint upon section 3 is that it is contrary to section 2 of the resolution. I am now endeavoring to give my personal views. The purpose of section 2 is to restore to the States by constitutional amendment absolute control in effect over interstate commerce affecting intoxicating liquors which [*355] enter the confines of the States. The State under section 2 may enact certain laws on intoxicating liquors, and section 2 at once gives such laws effect. Thus the States are granted larger power in effect and are given greater protection, while under section 3 the proposal is to take away from the States the powers that the States would have in the absence of the eighteenth amendment." Id., at 4143.

Senator Wagner was an especially vigorous opponent of the proposed § 3. In his view, it failed to "correct the central error of national prohibition. It does not restore to the States responsibility for their local liquor [****38] problems. It does not withdraw the [***685] Federal Government from the field of local police regulation into which it has trespassed." Id., at 4144. In Senator Wagner's view, the danger of § 3 was that even this limited grant of authority to the Federal Government would result in federal control of the liquor trade:

"If Congress may regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors where they are to be drunk on premises where sold, then we shall probably see Congress attempt to declare during what hours such premises may be open, where they shall be located, how they shall be operated, the sex and age of the purchasers, the price at which the beverages are to be sold. . . .

....

"It is entirely conceivable that in order to protect such a prohibition the courts might sustain the prohibition or regulation of all sales of beverages whether intended to be drunk on the premises or not. And if sales may be regulated, so may transportation and manufacture. . . . If that is to be the history of the proposed amendment -- and there is every reason to expect it -- then obviously we have expelled the system of national control through the front door of section 1 and readmitted [****39] it forthwith through the back door of section 3." Id., at 4147.

[*356] Other Senators also expressed the fear that "any grant of power to the Federal Government, even a seemingly narrow one, could be used to whittle away the exclusive control over liquor traffic given the States by Section 2." Hostetter, 377 U.S., at 337 (Black, J., dissenting); see 76 Cong. Rec. 4143 (1933) (Sen. Blaine); id., at 4177-4178 (Sen. Black). Still others emphasized the plenary power granted the States by § 2. Senator Walsh, a member of the Subcommittee that had held hearings on the Amendment, said: "The purpose of the provision in the resolution reported by the committee was to [**732] make the intoxicating liquor subject to the laws of the State once it passed the State line and before it gets into the hands of the consignee as well as thereafter." Id., at 4219. In response to a question from Senator Swanson, Senator Robinson of Arkansas affirmed that "it is left entirely to the States to determine in what manner intoxicating liquors shall be sold or used and to what places such liquors may be transported." Id., at 4225. Thus, upon the motion of Senator [****40] Robinson, the Senate voted to strike § 3 from the proposed Amendment. Id., at 4179.

By emphasizing the importance of the plenary powers granted the States in § 2, and more importantly by removing even the limited grant of authority to Congress contained in § 3, the Senate made manifest its intent to prevent any federal interference with state attempts to regulate the liquor trade. It is difficult to believe that the Senators would have anticipated that a federal statute enacted under the commerce power could ever override the State's power to regulate the liquor trade.

II

The history of the Amendment strongly supports Justice Black's view that the Twenty-first Amendment was intended to return absolute control of the liquor trade to the States, and that the Federal [***686] Government could not use its Commerce Clause powers to interfere in any manner with the States' exercise of the power conferred by the Amendment. [*357] Given its desire to confer broad freedom on the States to regulate commerce in intoxicating liquors without federal interference, Congress certainly intended that the States have the power to enact economic regulations governing the pricing of [***41] liquor free of federal antitrust policy.

The behavior of the States upon the ratification of the Twenty-first Amendment also supports this view. Contemporaneously with the enactment of the Twenty-first Amendment, a report sponsored by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., recommended that those States that could not muster the political support for state monopolies in the liquor industry should adopt the equivalent solution of price-control laws designed to keep the price of liquor at high levels. R. Fosdick & A. Scott, Toward Liquor Control 52 (1933). According to this report, the "profit motive is the core of the problem." Id. at 61. This profit motive encouraged low prices that stimulated liquor consumption. Id. at 149. Retail prices had a "direct bearing on the amount of consumption," id. at 81, and thus a State could use price-fixing powers "as one of its most effective instruments of control." Id. at 82. The ideas expressed by the Rockefeller Report "were the dominant ideas which took flesh in the post-repeal legislation of the states." Dunsford, State Monopoly and Price-Fixing in Retail Liquor Distribution, 1962 Wis. L. Rev. 454, 464. It is not surprising, [****42] therefore, that even before the enactment of the Miller-Tydings Fair Trade Act of 1937, 50 Stat. 693, States exercised their Twenty-first Amendment powers to adopt "bold and drastic experiments in price control," including price posting, regulation by private associations, and mandatory resale price maintenance contracts. De Ganahl, Trade Practice and Price Control in the Alcoholic Beverage Industry, 7 Law & Contemp. Prob. 665, 680 (1940). Thus, the States that ratified the Twenty-first Amendment immediately exercised the authority granted them by § 2 of that Amendment to enact the very type of statute that this Court strikes down today.

[*358] With the clear legislative intent to free state regulation of liquor from federal interference, and the immediate enactment of price-control laws by the ratifying States, the better view of the proper resolution of any apparent conflict between the Sherman Act and a state regulation of the liquor trade was expressed by Justice Frankfurter in United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U.S. 293, 300-302 \(1945\) (concurring). In Justice Frankfurter's view, the Twenty-first Amendment accorded States [****43] the power to control the liquor traffic [**733] "according to their notions of policy freed from the restrictions upon state power which the Commerce Clause implies as to ordinary articles of commerce." Id., at 300. Because Congress enacted the Sherman Act pursuant to its authority in the Commerce Clause, the Sherman Act must yield to state power drawn from the Twenty-first Amendment. Id., at 301. Thus, Justice Frankfurter concluded:

"If a State for its own sufficient reasons deems it a desirable policy [***687] to standardize the price of liquor within its borders either by a direct price-fixing statute or by permissive sanction of such price-fixing in order to discourage the temptations of cheap liquor due to cutthroat competition, the Twenty-first Amendment gives it that power and the Commerce Clause does not gainsay it. Such state policy can not offend the Sherman Law even though distillers or middlemen agree with local dealers to respect this policy." Ibid.

Justice Frankfurter believed that in the absence of a conflict between the state regulatory scheme and the federal antitrust laws, federal antitrust policy was fully applicable [****44] even to the intrastate liquor trade. In Frankfort Distilleries itself, the State had not authorized the anticompetitive conduct of the respondents. Once a State has exercised its § 2 power, however, "the Sherman Law could not override such exercise of state power." Id., at 302.

[*359] Justice Frankfurter was not alone in this view. In repealing the Miller-Tydings Act -- which had authorized States to enact fair trade laws -- the Senate believed that the States could continue to impose retail price maintenance on liquor retailers. The Report from the Senate Judiciary Committee on the proposal to repeal the Miller-Tydings Act explicitly assured the Senate that the repeal would not change the power of States to impose retail price maintenance on liquor retailers pursuant to the authority granted the States by the Twenty-first Amendment.

"Liquor will not be affected by the repeal of the fair trade laws in the same manner as other products because the Twenty-First Amendment to the Constitution gives the States broad powers over the sale of alcoholic beverages. Thus, while repeal of the fair trade laws generally will prohibit manufacturers from enforcing [****45] resale prices, alcohol manufacturers may do such in States which pass price fixing statutes pursuant to the Twenty-First Amendment." S. Rep. No. 94-466, p. 2 (1975).

The history and purpose of the Twenty-first Amendment are a compelling indication of an intent to confer on States the power to regulate trade in liquor. Despite this clear intent, the Court in recent years has used a balancing test to resolve conflicts between federal statutes and state laws enacted pursuant to § 2. In California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97 (1980), and once again today, the Court ventured still further from the intent of the Twenty-first Amendment by adopting an unprecedented test that focuses on the wisdom of the State's exercise of its § 2 powers. For the Court today does not invalidate the ABC Law because it involves an exercise of power outside the scope of the Twenty-first Amendment -- indeed, the Court could not do so given the long history of the use of price controls by state liquor authorities. Instead, in a manner reminiscent of the long-repudiated Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 \(1905\), the Court strikes [****46] down the ABC Law because [*360] it concludes that the law was not "effective" in preserving small retail establishments or in decreasing alcohol consumption. The proper inquiry, however, is not whether the State of [***688] New York chose wisely in enacting a retail price maintenance law, nor whether the State of New York's motivation in doing so was linked to a "central [purpose]" of the [Twenty-first \[**\*\*734**\] Amendment](#). The sole "question is whether the provision in this case is an exercise of a power expressly conferred upon the States by the Constitution." Bacchus Imports, Ltd. v. Dias, 468 U.S., at 287 (STEVENS, J., dissenting).

Because the State of New York was plainly exercising its § 2 power to regulate liquor trade, I respectfully dissent.

References

---

45 Am Jur 2d, Intoxicating Liquors 28, 42, 43; 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies,

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

USCS, Constitution, 21st Amendment, 15 USCS 1

US L Ed Digest, Intoxicating Liquors 7(2), 9.4; Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 9, 41

Index to Annotations, Intoxicating [****47] Liquors; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; State Action

Annotation References:

What constitutes "state action" under rule exempting state and local governmental action from antitrust law-- federal cases. 70 L Ed 2d 973.

Extent of state regulatory power under Twenty-first Amendment. 34 L Ed 2d 805.

Commerce clause of Federal Constitution as violated by state or local regulation or prohibition affecting business of selling, distributing, packaging, labeling ,or processing food intended for human consumption-- Supreme Court cases. 25 L Ed 2d 846.

Federal regulation of competitive practices in liquor industry under 5 of Federal Alcohol Administration Act (27 USCS 205). 58 ALR Fed 797.

Validity of state statute or regulation fixing minimum prices at which alcoholic beverages may be sold at retail. 96 ALR3d 639.

State power to regulate price of intoxicating liquors. 14 ALR2d 699.

---

End of Document

Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

January 19, 1988, Argued ; May 2, 1988, Decided

No. 85-1910

Reporter

485 U.S. 717 *; 108 S. Ct. 1515 **; 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 ***; 1988 U.S. LEXIS 2033 ****; 56 U.S.L.W. 4387; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,982

BUSINESS ELECTRONICS CORP. v. SHARP ELECTRONICS CORP.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 780 F.2d 1212, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

dealer, manufacturer, vertical, terminate, retailers, nonprice, prices, restraint of trade, price cutting, price competition, illegality, Sherman Act, antitrust, horizontal, cases, Electronics, common law, ancillary, naked, cartel, retail price, price level, anticompetitive, per se rule, ultimatum, exclusive territory, resale price, intrabrand, products, franchise agreement

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal . 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

485 U.S. 717, *717; 108 S. Ct. 1515, **1515; 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, ***808; 1988 U.S. LEXIS 2033, ****1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN2 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Whether particular concerted action violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is determined through case-by-case application of the so-called rule of reason -- that is, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Certain categories of agreements have been held to be per se illegal, dispensing with the need for case-by-case evaluation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Per se rules are appropriate only for conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive, that is, conduct that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Per se rules are invoked when surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct so great as to render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Agreements are per se illegal only if their nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The premises of GTE Sylvania and Monsanto are: that there is a presumption in favor of a rule-of-reason standard; that departure from that standard must be justified by demonstrable economic effect, such as the facilitation of cartelizing, rather than formalistic distinctions; that interbrand competition is the primary concern of the antitrust laws; and that rules in this area should be formulated with a view towards protecting the doctrine of GTE Sylvania.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The notion of equivalence between the scope of horizontal per se illegality and that of vertical per se illegality was explicitly rejected in GTE Sylvania, as it had to be, since a horizontal agreement to divide territories is per se illegal, while GTE Sylvania held that a vertical agreement to do so is not.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN9 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A vertical restraint is not illegal per se unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Agreement between manufacturer and dealer to terminate another dealer for price cutting held not per se illegal under 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) absent agreement on price or price levels.

Summary

A manufacturer of electronic calculators appointed a retailer as its sole dealer in a metropolitan area, but subsequently became dissatisfied with that dealer's performance and appointed a second dealer. Neither dealer was obligated to adhere to the manufacturer's suggested retail price list, but the second dealer usually did so, while the first dealer commonly sold the calculators for below list price. The second dealer, allegedly concerned about the first dealer's "free riding" on the second dealer's investment in product promotion and educational services as well as about the price cutting, demanded that the manufacturer terminate the first dealer and threatened to terminate its own dealership if this were not done. The manufacturer terminated the first dealer, who then brought suit against the manufacturer in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, in which action it was alleged (1) that the manufacturer and the second dealer had conspired to terminate the first dealer, and (2) that such conspiracy was illegal per se under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1). The District Court instructed the jury that an agreement to terminate a dealer because of its price cutting unreasonably restrains trade and cannot be justified for any reason, and the jury, having found that there was such an agreement in this case, rendered judgment in favor of the first dealer. In reversing that judgment and remanding the case for further proceedings, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit held that the District Court's jury instructions were erroneous, because in order for a vertical agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer terminating another dealer to be illegal per se under

1, the agreeing dealer must expressly or impliedly agree to set its prices at some level, though not a specific one (780 F2d 1212).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Scalia, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and Brennan, Marshall, Blackmun, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held (1) that a vertical restraint of trade is not illegal per se under 1 unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels, and specifically (2) that an agreement between a manufacturer and one of its dealers to terminate another dealer because of that dealer's price cutting, as in the present case, is not per se illegal unless the first dealer expressly or impliedly agrees to set its prices at some level.

Stevens, J., joined by White, J., dissented, expressing the view that the agreement between the manufacturer and the second dealer was a naked agreement to restrain the trade of a third party, with the goal of eliminating price competition at the dealer level, and as such was illegal per se under 1.

Kennedy, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

PRACTICES §9 > per se rule -- vertical nonprice restraints -- termination of dealership -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F] [LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [1G]

A vertical restraint of trade--that is, a restraint imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution--is not illegal per se under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) unless it includes some agreement on price and price levels; thus, an agreement between a manufacturer and one of its dealers to terminate another dealer because of the latter's price cutting is not per se illegal unless the first dealer expressly or impliedly agrees to set its prices at some level, and a Federal District Court errs in instructing the jury in such a case that such an agreement is necessarily illegal if the manufacturer's purpose is to eliminate the price cutting, where there has been no showing that an agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate a price cutter, without a further agreement on the price or price levels to be charged by the remaining dealer, almost always tends to restrict competition and reduce output; fear of the remaining dealer's possible assertion of dominant retail power cannot justify adopting a rule of per se illegality, given that such power is rare and was not found to exist in this case; nor can such a rule be justified as a prophylactic measure on the theory that vertical price agreements generally underlie agreements to terminate a price cutter, as this proposition has not been supported in the present case and is incompatible with the recognition, in previous decisions, that manufacturers are often motivated by a desire to have dealers provide services and that price cutting is frequently made possible by "free riding" on the services provided by other dealers. (Stevens and White, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

PRACTICES §16 > rule of reason -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

Ordinarily, whether particular concerted action violates 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) is determined through case-by-case application of the so-called rule of reason--that is, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition; there is a presumption in favor of this rule-of-reason standard, and any departure from this standard must be justified by demonstrable economic effect, such as the facilitation of cartelizing, rather than by formalistic distinctions.

485 U.S. 717, *717; 108 S. Ct. 1515, **1515; 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, ***808; 1988 U.S. LEXIS 2033, ****1

PRACTICES §36 > vertical price restraints -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Vertical agreements on retail prices are illegal per se under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

PRACTICES §6 > purpose of antitrust laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Interbrand competition is the primary concern of the antitrust laws.

EVIDENCE §383 > presumption -- retail market power -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

For purposes of applying the federal antitrust laws, retail market power should not be assumed but rather must be proved.

PRACTICES §9 > ancillary agreement -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

An agreement may be "ancillary," for purposes of determining whether it violates the federal antitrust laws, even though it is not designed to enforce a contractual obligation of one of the parties to the contract.

PRACTICES §9 > horizontal restraints -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

For purposes of determining whether a restraint of trade violates the federal antitrust laws, a restraint is horizontal if it is imposed by agreement among competitors; a restraint is horizontal not because it has horizontal effects, but because it is the product of a horizontal agreement.

PRACTICES §4 > statutory phrases -- "restraint of trade" -- relation to common law -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

The term "restraint of trade" in 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), like the term at common law, refers not to a particular list of agreements but to a particular economic consequence, which may be produced by quite different sorts of agreements in varying times and circumstances; thus, common-law precedent as to what constituted

"restraint of trade" at the time the Sherman Act was adopted is not dispositive of the present-day application of the Act; however, in determining whether an agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer whereby the former terminates another dealer for price cutting is illegal per se under 1 of the Sherman Act, it is relevant (1) whether the common law of restraint of trade ever prohibited such an agreement as illegal per se and (2) whether the United States Supreme Court's decisions under 1 have ever expressed or necessarily implied such a prohibition, since the common law--both in general and as embodied in the Sherman Act--does not lightly assume that the economic realities underlying earlier decisions have changed or that earlier judicial perceptions of those realities were in error.

PRACTICES §31 > resale price control rule -- application to dealer termination -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

The rule that a resale price maintenance agreement is per se illegal under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), which is based on the common-law judgment that such a resale restriction is an unlawful restraint on alienation, is not applicable to a case considering whether an agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer whereby the manufacturer terminates another dealer for price cutting is illegal per se under 1 where no agreement on resale price or price level, and hence no restraint on alienation, was found by the jury and the common-law rationale thus does not apply.

PRACTICES §9 > per se rule -- vertical and horizontal restraints -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

Under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), the scope of per se illegality of horizontal restraints of trade is not equivalent to the scope of per se illegality of vertical restraints of trade.

PRACTICES §53 > agreements not to compete -- market territories -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11]

A horizontal agreement to divide territories is per se illegal under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

Syllabus

---

Petitioner and another retailer (Hartwell) were authorized by respondent manufacturer to sell its electronic calculators in the Houston area. In response to Hartwell's complaints about petitioner's prices, respondent terminated petitioner's dealership. Petitioner brought suit in Federal District Court, alleging that respondent and Hartwell had conspired to terminate petitioner and that such conspiracy was illegal per se under § 1 of the Sherman Act. The court submitted a liability interrogatory to the jury asking whether there was an agreement or understanding between respondent and Hartwell to terminate petitioner's dealership because of its price cutting, and instructed the jury that the Sherman Act is violated [****2] when a seller enters into such an agreement or understanding with one of its dealers. The jury answered the interrogatory affirmatively, awarding damages, and the court entered judgment for petitioner for treble damages. The Court of Appeals reversed and remanded for a new trial, holding that, to render illegal per se a vertical agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate a second dealer, the first dealer must expressly or impliedly agree to set its prices at some level.

Held: A vertical restraint of trade is not per se illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels. Pp. 723-736.

(a) Ordinarily, whether particular concerted action violates § 1 is determined through case-by-case application of the rule of reason. Per se rules are appropriate only for conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive. Although vertical agreements on resale prices are illegal per se, extension of that treatment to other vertical restraints must be based on demonstrable economic effect rather than upon formalistic line drawing. Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, which held that [****3] vertical nonprice restraints are not per se illegal, recognized that such restraints have real potential to stimulate interbrand competition; that a rule of per se illegality for such restraints is not needed or effective to protect intrabrand competition; and that such restraints do not significantly facilitate cartelizing. There has been no showing here that different characteristics attend an agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate a "price cutter," without a further agreement on the price or price levels to be charged by the remaining dealer. A quite plausible purpose of the vertical restriction here was to enable Hartwell to provide better services under its sales franchise agreement with respondent. There is also no merit to petitioner's contention that an agreement on the remaining dealer's price or price levels will so often follow from terminating another dealer because of its price cutting that prophylaxis against resale price maintenance warrants the District Court's per se rule. Pp. 723-731.

(b) The term "restraint of trade" in the Sherman Act, like the term at common law before the statute was adopted, refers not to a particular list [****4] of agreements, but to a particular economic consequence, which may be produced by quite different sorts of agreements in varying times and circumstances. Moreover, this Court's precedents do not indicate that the pre-Sherman Act common law prohibited as illegal per se an agreement of the sort made here. Nor is the District Court's rule of per se illegality compelled by precedents under the Sherman Act holding certain horizontal agreements to constitute price fixing and thus to be per se illegal even though they did not set prices or price levels. The notion of equivalence between the scope of horizontal per se illegality and that of vertical per se illegality was explicitly rejected in GTE Sylvania. Finally, earlier vertical price-fixing cases are consistent with the proposition that vertical per se illegality requires an agreement setting a price or a price level. Pp. 731-735.

Counsel: Gary V. McGowan argued the cause and filed briefs for petitioner.

Harold R. Tyler, Jr. argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief was Lance Gotthoffer. *

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for Forty-two States by J. Joseph Curran, Jr., Attorney General of Maryland, and Michael F. Brockmeyer and Craig J. Hornig, Assistant Attorneys General, by Anthony J. Celebrezze, Jr., Attorney General of Ohio, and Gregory E. Young and Matthew C. Lawry, Assistant Attorneys General, by Don Siegelman, Attorney General of Alabama, and James Prude, Assistant Attorney General, by Grace Berg Schaible, Attorney General of Alaska, and Richard D. Monkman, Assistant Attorney General, by Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona, and Alison B. Swan, Assistant Attorney General, by John Steven Clark, Attorney General of Arkansas, and Jeffrey A. Bell, Deputy Attorney General, by Duane Woodard, Attorney General of Colorado, Thomas P. McMahon, First Assistant Attorney General, and David S. Harmon and James R. Lewis, Assistant Attorneys General, by Joseph Lieberman, Attorney General of Connecticut, and Robert M. Langer, Assistant Attorney General, by Robert A. Butterworth, Attorney General of Florida, by James T. Jones, Attorney General of Idaho, by Neil F. Hartigan, Attorney General of Illinois, and Robert E. Davy, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, by Linley E. Pearson, Attorney General of Indiana, and Frank A. Baldwin, Deputy Attorney General, by Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, and John R. Perkins, Deputy Attorney General, by Robert T. Stephan, Attorney General of Kansas, and Carl M. Anderson, Assistant Attorney General, by DAvid L. Armstrong, Attorney General of Kentucky, by William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General of Louisiana, by James M. Shannon, Attorney General of Massachusetts, and Barbara Anthony, Assistant Attorney General, by Frank J. Kelley, Attorney General of Michigan, Louis J. Caruso, Solicitor General, and Frederick H. Hoffecker and Robert C. Ward, Assistant Attorneys General, by Hubert H. Humphrey III, Attorney General of Minnesota, by Edwin L. Pittman, Attorney General of Mississippi, and Robert E. Sanders, Special Assistant Attorney General, by William L. Webster, Attorney General of Missouri, by Mike Greely, Attorney General of Montana, and Joe Roberts, Assistant Attorney General, by Robert M. Spire, Attorney General of Nebraska, and Dale A. Comer, Assistant Attorney General, by Brian McKay, Attorney General of Nevada, and P. Gregory Giordano, Deputy Attorney General, by Stephen E. Merrill, Attorney General of New Hampshire, and Amy L. Ignatius, Senior Assistant Attorney General, by W. Cary Edwards, Attorney General of New Jersey, and Laurel A. Price, Deputy Attorney General, by Robert Abrams, Attorney General of New York, O. Peter Sherwood, Solicitor General, and Lloyd E.

[****5]

Judges: SCALIA, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and BRENNAN, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which WHITE, J., joined, post, p. 736. KENNEDY, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: SCALIA

Opinion

---

[***814] [*719] [**1517] JUSTICE SCALIA delivered the opinion of the Court.

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] Petitioner Business Electronics Corporation seeks review of a decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the [*720] Fifth Circuit holding that a vertical restraint is per se illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1, only if there is an express or implied agreement to set resale prices at some level. 780 F.2d 1212, 1215-1218 \(1986\). We granted certiorari, 482 U.S. 912 (1987), to resolve a conflict in the Courts of Appeals regarding the proper dividing line between the rule that vertical price restraints are illegal per se and the rule that vertical nonprice restraints are to be judged under the [****6] rule of reason.<sup>1</sup>

[*721] I

In 1968, petitioner became the exclusive retailer in the Houston, Texas, area of electronic calculators manufactured by respondent Sharp Electronics Corporation. In 1972, respondent appointed Gilbert Hartwell as a second retailer in the Houston [**1518] area. During the relevant period, [****7] electronic calculators were primarily sold to business customers for prices up to $ 1,000. While much of the evidence in this case was conflicting -- in particular, concerning whether petitioner was "free riding" on Hartwell's provision of presale educational and promotional services by providing inadequate services itself -- a few facts are undisputed. Respondent published a list of suggested minimum retail prices, but its written dealership agreements with petitioner and Hartwell did not obligate either to observe them, or to charge any other specific price. Petitioner's [***815] retail prices were often below

---

Constantine, Assistant Attorney General, by Leroy S. Zimmerman, Attorney General of Pennsylvania, and Eugene F. Waye, Deputy Attorney General, by James E. O'Neil, Attorney General of Rhode Island, by Roger A. Tellinghuisen, Attorney General of South Dakota, and Jeffrey P. Hallem, Assistant Attorney General, by W. J. Michael Cody, Attorney General of Tennessee, and Perry A. Craft, Deputy Attorney General, by Jim Mattox, Attorney General of Texas, Mary F. Keller, Executive Assistant Attorney General, and J. L. Covington and Allene D. Evans, Assistant Attorneys General, by David L. Wilkinson, Attorney General of Utah, and Rihard M. Hagstrom, Assistant Attorney General, by Jeffrey L. Amestoy, Attorney General of Vermont, and Glenn A. Jarrett, Assistant Attorney General, by Mary Sue Terry, Attorney General of Virginia, and Allen L. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General, by Kenneth O. Eikenberry, Attorney General of Washington, and John R. Ellis, Deputy Attorney General, by Charles G. Brown, Attorney General of West Virginia, C. William Ullrich, First Deputy Attorney General, and Mark D. Kindt, Deputy Attorney General, by Donald J. Hanaway, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Kevin J. O'Connor, Assistant Attorney General, and by Joseph B. Meyer, Attorney General of Wyoming; for K mart Corporation by Robert W. Steele, Robert E. Hebda, and James C. Tuttle; and for the National Mass Retailing Institute by William D. Coston and Robert J. Verdisco.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the Consumer Electronics Group of the Electronic Industries Association by Gary J. Shapiro; for the National Association of Manufacturers by Jan S. Amundson, Quentin Riegel, and Donald I. Baker; and for the National Office Machine Dealers Association by Samuel Schoenberg.

<sup>1</sup> The Seventh, Eighth, and Tenth Circuits have agreed with the analysis of the Fifth. See Morrison v. Murray Biscuit Co., 797 F.2d 1430, 1440 \(CA7 1986\); McCabe's Furniture, Inc. v. La-Z-Boy Chair Co., 798 F.2d 323, 329 \(CA8 1986\), cert. pending, No. 86-1101; Westman Comm'n Co. v. Hobart Int'l, Inc., 796 F.2d 1216, 1223-1224 \(CA10 1986\), cert. pending, No. 86-484. Decisions of the Third and Ninth Circuits have disagreed. See Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164, 168-170 \(CA3 1979\); Zidell Explorations, Inc. v. Conval Int'l, Ltd., 719 F.2d 1465, 1469-1470 \(CA9 1983\).

485 U.S. 717, *721; 108 S. Ct. 1515, **1518; 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, ***815; 1988 U.S. LEXIS 2033, ****7

respondent's suggested retail prices and generally below Hartwell's retail prices, even though Hartwell too sometimes priced below respondent's suggested retail prices. Hartwell complained to respondent on a number of occasions about petitioner's prices. In June 1973, Hartwell gave respondent the ultimatum that Hartwell would terminate his dealership unless respondent ended its relationship with petitioner within 30 days. Respondent terminated petitioner's dealership in July 1973.

Petitioner brought suit in the United States District Court for the Southern District [****8] of Texas, alleging that respondent and Hartwell had conspired to terminate petitioner and that such conspiracy was illegal per se under § 1 of the Sherman Act. The case was tried to a jury. The District Court submitted a liability interrogatory to the jury that asked whether "there was an agreement or understanding between Sharp Electronics Corporation and Hartwell to terminate Business Electronics as a Sharp dealer because of Business Electronics' price cutting." Record, Doc. No. 241. The District Court instructed the jury at length about this question:

[*722] "The Sherman Act is violated when a seller enters into an agreement or understanding with one of its dealers to terminate another dealer because of the other dealer's price cutting. Plaintiff contends that Sharp terminated Business Electronics in furtherance of Hartwell's desire to eliminate Business Electronics as a price-cutting rival.

"If you find that there was an agreement between Sharp and Hartwell to terminate Business Electronics because of Business Electronics' price cutting, you should answer yes to Question Number 1.

....

"A combination, agreement or understanding to terminate a dealer because [****9] of his price cutting unreasonably restrains trade and cannot be justified for any reason. Therefore, even though the combination, agreement or understanding may have been formed or engaged in . . . to eliminate any alleged evils of price cutting, it is still unlawful. . . .

"If a dealer demands that a manufacturer terminate a price cutting dealer, and the manufacturer agrees to do so, the agreement is illegal if the manufacturer's purpose is to eliminate the price cutting." App. 18-19.

The jury answered Question 1 affirmatively and awarded $ 600,000 in damages. The District Court rejected respondent's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or a new trial, holding that the jury interrogatory and instructions had properly stated the law. It entered judgment for petitioner for treble damages plus attorney's fees.

The Fifth Circuit reversed, holding that the jury interrogatory and instructions were erroneous, and remanded for a new trial. It held that, to render illegal per se a vertical agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate a second dealer, the first dealer "must expressly or impliedly agree to set its prices at some level, though not a [***816] [***10] specific one. [*723] The distributor cannot retain complete freedom to set whatever price it chooses." 780 F.2d, at 1218.

[**1519] //

A

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [2A]Section 1 of the Sherman Act HN1 provides that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U. S. C. § 1. Since the earliest decisions of this Court interpreting this provision, we have recognized that it was intended to prohibit only unreasonable restraints of trade. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 98 \(1984\); see, e. g., Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 60 \(1911\). HN2 Ordinarily, whether particular concerted action violates § 1 of the Sherman Act is determined through case-by-case [****11] application of the so-called rule of reason -- that is, "the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49 \(1977\). HN3 Certain categories of agreements, however, have been held to be per se illegal, dispensing with the need for case-by-case evaluation. We have said HN4 that per se rules are appropriate only for "conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive," id., at 50, that is, conduct "that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output," Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289-290 (1985), quoting Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20 (1979). See also FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 458-459 (1986) [****12] ("We have been slow . . . to extend per se analysis to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious"); National Collegiate I\*724J Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, supra, at 103-104 ("HN5 per se rules are invoked when surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct so great as to render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct"); National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692 (1978) (HN6) agreements are per se illegal only if their "nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality").

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]Although vertical agreements on resale prices have been illegal per se since [Dr. Miles Medical Co. \[\*\*\*\*13\] . v. John D. Park & Sons Co.](#), 220 U.S. 373 (1911), we have recognized that the scope of per se illegality should be narrow in the context of vertical restraints. In Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., supra, we refused to extend per se illegality to vertical nonprice restraints, specifically to a manufacturer's termination of one dealer pursuant to an exclusive territory agreement with [***817] another. We noted that especially in the vertical restraint context "departure from the rule-of-reason standard must be based on demonstrable economic effect rather than . . . upon formalistic line drawing." Id., at 58-59. We concluded that vertical nonprice restraints had not been shown to have such a "pernicious effect on competition" and to be so "lacking [in] . . . redeeming value" as to justify per se illegality. Id., at 58, quoting Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 (1958). Rather, we found, they had real potential to stimulate interbrand competition, "the primary concern of antitrust law," 433 U.S., at 52, n. 19:

[**1520] [****14] "New manufacturers and manufacturers entering new markets can use the restrictions in order to induce competent and aggressive retailers to make the kind of investment of capital and labor that is often required in the distribution of products unknown to the consumer. Established manufacturers can use them to induce retailers [*725] to engage in promotional activities or to provide service and repair facilities necessary to the efficient marketing of their products. Service and repair are vital for many products. . . . The availability and quality of such services affect a manufacturer's goodwill and the competitiveness of his product. Because of market imperfections such as the so-called 'free-rider' effect, these services might not be provided by retailers in a purely competitive situation, despite the fact that each retailer's benefit would be greater if all provided the services than if none did." Id., at 55.

Moreover, we observed that a rule of per se illegality for vertical nonprice restraints was not needed or effective to protect intrabrand competition. First, so long as interbrand competition existed, that would provide a "significant check" [****15] on any attempt to exploit intrabrand market power. Id., at 52, n. 19; see also id., at 54. In fact, in order to meet that interbrand competition, a manufacturer's dominant incentive is to lower resale prices. Id., at 56, and n. 24. Second, the per se illegality of vertical restraints would create a perverse incentive for manufacturers to integrate vertically into distribution, an outcome hardly conducive to fostering the creation and maintenance of small businesses. Id., at 57, n. 26.

Finally, our opinion in GTE Sylvania noted a significant distinction between vertical nonprice and vertical price restraints. That is, there was support for the proposition that vertical price restraints reduce interbrand price competition because they "facilitate cartelizing." Id., at 51, n. 18, quoting Posner, Antitrust Policy and the Supreme Court: An Analysis of the Restricted Distribution, Horizontal Merger and Potential Competition Decisions, 75 Colum. L. Rev. 282, 294 (1975). The authorities cited by the Court suggested how vertical price agreements might assist horizontal [****16] price fixing at the manufacturer level (by reducing the manufacturer's incentive to cheat on a cartel, since its retailers could not [***818] pass on lower prices to consumers) or might be used to [*726] organize cartels at the retailer level. See R. Posner, Antitrust: Cases, Economic Notes and Other Materials 134 (1974); E. Gellhorn, Antitrust Law and Economics 252, 256 (1976); Note, Vertical Territorial and Customer Restrictions in the Franchising Industry, 10 Colum. J. L. & Soc. Prob. 497, 498, n. 12 (1974). Similar support for the cartel-facilitating effect of vertical nonprice restraints was and remains lacking.

We have been solicitous to assure that the market-freeing effect of our decision in GTE Sylvania is not frustrated by related legal rules. In *Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763 \(1984\)*, which addressed the evidentiary showing necessary to establish vertical concerted action, we expressed concern that "if an inference of such an agreement may be drawn from highly ambiguous evidence, there is considerable danger that the doctrine enunciated in Sylvania . . . will be seriously eroded." See also id., at 761, n. 6. [****17] We eschewed adoption of an evidentiary standard that "could deter or penalize perfectly legitimate conduct" or "would create an irrational dislocation in the market" by preventing legitimate communication between a manufacturer and its distributors. Id., at 763, 764.

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [↑] [2B] [LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4] Our approach to the question presented in the present case is guided by HN7 [↑] the premises of GTE Sylvania and Monsanto: that there is a presumption in favor of a rule-of-reason standard; that departure [**1521] from that standard must be justified by demonstrable economic effect, such as the facilitation of cartelizing, rather than formalistic distinctions; that interbrand competition is the primary concern of the antitrust laws; and that rules in this area should be formulated with a view towards protecting the doctrine of GTE Sylvania. These premises lead us to conclude [****18] that the line drawn by the Fifth Circuit is the most appropriate one.

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [↑] [1C] [LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [↑] [5A] There has been no showing here that an agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate a "price cutter," without a further agreement on the price or price levels to be charged by the remaining dealer, almost always tends [*727] to restrict competition and reduce output. Any assistance to cartelizing that such an agreement might provide cannot be distinguished from the sort of minimal assistance that might be provided by vertical nonprice agreements like the exclusive territory agreement in GTE Sylvania, and is insufficient to justify a per se rule. Cartels are neither easy to form nor easy to maintain. Uncertainty over the terms of the cartel, particularly the prices to be charged in the future, obstructs both formation and adherence by making cheating easier. Cf. *Maple Flooring Mfrs. Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 563 \(1925\)*; *Cement Mfrs. Protective Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 588 \(1925\)*; [****19] see generally *Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 590 \(1986\)*. Without an agreement with the remaining dealer on price, the manufacturer both retains its incentive to cheat on any manufacturer-level cartel (since lower prices can still be passed on to consumers) [***819] and cannot as easily be used to organize and hold together a retailer-level cartel.<sup>2</sup>

[****20] The District Court's rule on the scope of per se illegality for vertical restraints would threaten to dismantle the doctrine of GTE Sylvania. Any agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate another dealer who happens to have charged lower prices can be alleged to have been directed against the terminated dealer's "price cutting." In the vast majority of cases, it will be extremely difficult for the manufacturer to convince a jury that its motivation was to ensure adequate services, since price cutting and [*728] some measure of service cutting usually go hand in hand. Accordingly, a manufacturer that agrees to give one dealer an exclusive territory and terminates another dealer pursuant to that agreement, or even a manufacturer that agrees with one dealer to terminate another for failure to provide contractually obligated services, exposes itself to the highly plausible claim that its real motivation was to terminate a price cutter. Moreover, even vertical restraints that do not result in dealer termination, such as the initial granting of an exclusive territory or the requirement that certain services be provided,

---

<sup>2</sup> [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [↑] [1D] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [↑] [5B]

The dissent's principal fear appears to be not cartelization at either level, but Hartwell's assertion of dominant retail power. This fear does not possibly justify adopting a rule of per se illegality. Retail market power is rare, because of the usual presence of interbrand competition and other dealers, see *Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 54 \(1977\)*, and it should therefore not be assumed but rather must be proved. Cf. Baxter, The Viability of Vertical Restraints Doctrine, *75 Calif. L. Rev. 933, 948-949 \(1987\)*. Of course this case was not prosecuted on the theory, and therefore the jury was not asked to find, that Hartwell possessed such market power.

can be attacked as designed to allow [****21] existing dealers to charge higher prices. Manufacturers would be likely to forgo legitimate and competitively useful conduct rather than risk treble damages and perhaps even criminal penalties.

We cannot avoid this difficulty by invalidating as illegal per se only those agreements imposing vertical restraints that contain the word "price," or that affect the "prices" charged by dealers. Such formalism was explicitly rejected in GTE Sylvania. As the above discussion indicates, all vertical restraints, including the exclusive [**1522] territory agreement held not to be per se illegal in GTE Sylvania, have the potential to allow dealers to increase "prices" and can be characterized as intended to achieve just that. In fact, vertical nonprice restraints only accomplish the benefits identified in GTE Sylvania because they reduce intrabrand price competition to the point where the dealer's profit margin permits provision of the desired services. As we described it in Monsanto: "The manufacturer often will want to ensure that its distributors earn sufficient profit to pay for programs such as hiring and training additional salesmen or demonstrating the technical [***22] features of the product, and will want to see that 'free-riders' do not interfere." 465 U.S., at 762-763. See also GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S., at 55.

[LEdHN\[1E\]↑](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[6A\]↑](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[7A\]↑](#) [7A] The dissent erects a much more complex analytic structure, which ultimately rests, however, upon the same discredited [*729] premise that the only function this [***820] nonprice vertical restriction can serve is restraint of dealer-level competition. Specifically, the dissent's reasoning hinges upon its perception that the agreement between Sharp and Hartwell was a "naked" restraint -- that is, it was not "ancillary" to any other agreement between Sharp and Hartwell. Post, at 736-742, 744-745. But that is not true, unless one assumes, contrary to GTE Sylvania and Monsanto, and contrary to our earlier discussion, that it is not a quite plausible purpose of the restriction to enable Hartwell to provide better services under the sales franchise agreement. [****23] <sup>3</sup> From its [*730] faulty conclusion that what we have before us is a "naked" restraint, the dissent proceeds, by reasoning we do not entirely follow, to the further conclusion that it is therefore a horizontal rather than a vertical restraint. We pause over this only to note that in addition to producing what we think the wrong result in the present case, it introduces needless confusion into antitrust terminology. Restraints imposed by agreement between [**1523] competitors have traditionally been denominated as

<sup>3</sup> [LEdHN\[6B\]↑](#) [6B]

The conclusion of "naked" restraint could also be sustained on another assumption, namely, that an agreement is not "ancillary" unless it is designed to enforce a contractual obligation of one of the parties to the contract. The dissent appears to accept this assumption. See post, at 739-741, and n. 3, 744-746. It is plainly wrong. The classic "ancillary" restraint is an agreement by the seller of a business not to compete within the market. See Mitchel v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181, 24 Eng. Rep. 347 (1711); Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 188(2)(a) (1981). That is not ancillary to any other contractual obligation, but, like the restraint here, merely enhances the value of the contract, or permits the "enjoyment of [its] fruits." United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271, 282 \(CA6 1898\), aff'd, 175 U.S. 211 \(1899\); cf. Restatement (Second) of Contracts §§ 187, 188 (1981) (restraint may be ancillary to a "transaction or relationship") (emphasis added); R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 29 (1978) (hereinafter Bork) (vertical arrangements are ancillary to the "transaction of supplying and purchasing").

More important than the erroneousness of the dissent's common-law analysis of "naked" and "ancillary" restraints are the perverse economic consequences of permitting nonprice vertical restraints to avoid per se invalidity only through attachment to an express contractual obligation. Such an approach is contrary to the express views of the principal scholar on whom the dissent relies. See 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1457c, p. 170 (1986) (hereinafter Areeda) (legality of terminating price cutter should not depend upon formal adoption of service obligations that termination is assertedly designed to protect). In the precise case of a vertical agreement to terminate other dealers, for example, there is no conceivable reason why the existence of an exclusivity commitment by the manufacturer to the one remaining dealer would render anticompetitive effects less likely, or the procompetitive effects on services more likely -- so that the dissent's line for per se illegality fails to meet the requirement of Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., supra, at 59, that it be based on "demonstrable economic effect." If anything, the economic effect of the dissent's approach is perverse, encouraging manufacturers to agree to otherwise inefficient contractual provisions for the sole purpose of attaching to them efficient nonprice vertical restraints which, only by reason of such attachment, can avoid per se invalidity as "naked" restraints. The dissent's approach would therefore create precisely the kind of "irrational dislocation in the market" that legal rules in this area should be designed to avoid. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764 \(1984\).

horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints.<sup>4</sup>

[****25] [*731] [***821] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F]Finally, we do not agree with petitioner's contention that an agreement on the remaining dealer's price or price levels will so often follow from terminating another dealer "because of [its] price cutting" that prophylaxis against resale price maintenance warrants the District Court's per se rule. Petitioner has provided no support for the proposition that vertical price agreements generally underlie agreements to terminate a price cutter. That proposition is simply incompatible with the conclusion of GTE Sylvania and Monsanto that manufacturers are often motivated by a legitimate desire to have dealers provide services, combined with the reality that price cutting is frequently made possible by "free riding" on the services provided by other dealers. The District Court's per se rule would therefore discourage conduct recognized by GTE Sylvania and Monsanto as beneficial to consumers.

B

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]In resting our decision upon the foregoing economic analysis, we do not ignore common-law [****26] precedent concerning what constituted "restraint of trade" at the time the Sherman Act was adopted. But neither do we give that pre-1890 precedent the dispositive effect some would. The term "restraint of trade" in the statute, like the term at common law, refers not to a particular list of agreements, but to a particular economic consequence, which may be produced by quite different sorts of agreements in varying times and circumstances. The changing content of the term "restraint of trade" was well recognized at the time the Sherman Act was enacted. See Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co., 130 U.S. 396, 409 (1889) (noting that English case laying down the common-law rule [*732] that contracts in restraint of trade are invalid "was made under a condition of things, and a state of society, different from those which now prevail, [and therefore] the rule laid down is not regarded as inflexible, and has been considerably modified"); see also Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S., at 406 ("With respect to contracts in restraint of trade, the earlier doctrine of the common law has been substantially modified in adaptation [****27] to modern conditions"); B. Cardozo, The Nature of the Judicial Process 94-96 (1921).

[***822] The Sherman Act adopted the term "restraint of trade" along with its dynamic potential. It invokes the common law itself, and not merely the static content that the common law had assigned to the term in 1890. See GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S., at 53, n. 21; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S., at 51-60; see also *McNally v. [**1524] United States, 483 U.S. 350, 372-373 (1987)* (STEVENS, J., joined by O'CONNOR, J., dissenting); Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 533, n. 28, 539-540, and n. 43 (1983); Bork 37. If it were otherwise, not only would the line of per se illegality have to be drawn today precisely where it was in 1890, but also case-by-case evaluation of legality (conducted where per se rules do not apply) would have to be governed by 19th-century notions of reasonableness. It would make no sense to create out of the

<sup>4</sup> [****24] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

The dissent apparently believes that whether a restraint is horizontal depends upon whether its anticompetitive effects are horizontal, and not upon whether it is the product of a horizontal agreement. Post, at 745-747, and n. 10. That is of course a conceivable way of talking, but if it were the language of antitrust analysis there would be no such thing as an unlawful vertical restraint, since all anticompetitive effects are by definition horizontal effects. The dissent quotes a statement of Professor Areeda as supposed adoption of its definition of horizontal restraint. Post, at 745-746, n. 10, quoting Areeda § 1457d, p. 174. That statement seems to us to be, to the contrary, Professor Areeda's attempt to explain a peculiar usage of the term "horizontal" in Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164, 168 (CA3 1979), noting that (even though Cernuto did not involve a horizontal restraint) the use of the term "horizontal" was "appropriate to capture the fact that dealer interests opposed to those of the manufacturer were being served." Areeda § 1457d, p. 174. The dissent also seeks to associate Judge Bork with its terminological confusion. See post, at 746, n. 10, quoting Bork 288. What the quoted passage says, however, is that a facially vertical restraint imposed by a manufacturer only because it has been coerced by a "horizontal cartel" agreement among his distributors is in reality a horizontal restraint. That says precisely what we say: that a restraint is horizontal not because it has horizontal effects, but because it is the product of a horizontal agreement.

single term "restraint of trade" a chronologically schizoid statute, in which a "rule of reason" evolves with new circumstances [****28] and new wisdom, but a line of per se illegality remains forever fixed where it was.

Of course the common law, both in general and as embodied in the Sherman Act, does not lightly assume that the economic realities underlying earlier decisions have changed, or that earlier judicial perceptions of those realities were in error. It is relevant, therefore, whether the common law of [*733] restraint of trade ever prohibited as illegal per se an agreement of the sort made here, and whether our decisions under § 1 of the Sherman Act have ever expressed or necessarily implied such a prohibition.

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [↑] [9]With respect to this Court's understanding of pre-Sherman Act common law, petitioner refers to our decision in Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., supra. Though that was an early Sherman Act case, its holding that a resale price maintenance agreement was per se illegal was based largely on the perception that such an agreement was categorically impermissible at common law. Id., at 404-408. As the opinion made plain, however, the basis for that common-law [****29] judgment was that the resale restriction was an unlawful restraint on alienation. See ibid. As we explained in Boston Store of Chicago v. American Graphophone Co., 246 U.S. 8, 21-22 \(1918\), "Dr. Miles . . . decided that under the general law the owner of movables . . . could not sell the movables and lawfully by contract fix a price at which the product should afterwards be sold, because to do so would be at one and the same time to sell and retain, to part with and yet to hold, to project the will of the seller so as to cause it to control the movable parted with when it was not subject to his will because owned by another." In the present case, of course, no agreement on resale price or price level, and hence no restraint on alienation, was found by the jury, so the common-law rationale of Dr. Miles does not apply. Cf. United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U.S. 476, 486-488 \(1926\) (Dr. Miles does not apply to restrictions on price to be charged by one who is in reality an agent of, not a buyer from, the manufacturer).

[****30] [LEdHN\[10\]](#) [↑] [10] [LEdHN\[11\]](#) [↑] [11] Petitioner's principal contention has been that the District [***823] Court's rule on per se illegality is compelled not by the old common law, but by our more recent Sherman Act precedents. First, petitioner contends that since certain horizontal agreements have been held to constitute price fixing (and [*734] thus to be per se illegal) though they did not set prices or price levels, see, e. g., Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 647-650 \(1980\) (per curiam), HN8 [↑] it is improper to require that a vertical agreement set prices or price levels before it can suffer the same fate. This notion of equivalence between the scope of horizontal per se illegality and that of vertical per se illegality was explicitly rejected in GTE Sylvania, see 433 U.S., at 57, n. 27 -- as it had to be, since a horizontal agreement to divide territories is per se illegal, see United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608 \(1972\), while [****31] GTE Sylvania held that a vertical agreement to do so is not. See also United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 390-391 \(1967\) (Stewart, J., joined by Harlan, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263 \(1963\).

Second, petitioner contends that per se illegality here follows from our two cases holding per se illegal a group boycott of a dealer because of its price cutting. See United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 \(1966\); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207 \(1959\). This second contention is merely a restatement of the first, since both cases involved horizontal combinations -- General Motors, supra, at 140, 143-145, at the dealer level,<sup>5</sup> and Klor's, supra, at 213, at the manufacturer and wholesaler levels. Accord, GTE Sylvania, supra, at 58, n. 28, United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S., at 373, 378; id., at 390 (Stewart, J., joined by Harlan, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); [****32] White Motor Co. v. United States, supra, at 263.

[*735] Third, petitioner contends, relying on Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145 \(1968\), and United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29 \(1960\), that our vertical price-fixing cases have already rejected the proposition that per se illegality requires setting a price or a price level. We disagree. In Albrecht, the maker of the product formed a combination to force a retailer to charge the maker's advertised retail price. See 390 U.S., at 149. This combination had two aspects. Initially, the maker [***33] hired a third party to solicit customers away from the noncomplying retailer. This solicitor "was aware that the aim of the solicitation campaign was to force [the ***824] noncomplying retailer] to lower his price" to the suggested retail price. Id., at 150. Next, the maker engaged another retailer who "undertook to deliver [products] at the suggested price" to the noncomplying retailer's customers obtained by the solicitor. Ibid. This combination of maker, solicitor, and new retailer was held to be per se illegal. Id., at 150, 153. It is plain that the combination involved both an explicit agreement on resale price and an agreement to force another to adhere to the specified price.

<sup>5</sup>Contrary to the dissent, post, at 742-743, 747, General Motors does not differ from the present case merely in that it involved a three-party rather than a two-party agreement. The agreement was among competitors in General Motors; it was between noncompetitors here. Cf. Bork 330 (defining "boycotts" as "agreements among competitors to refuse to deal").

In Parke, Davis, a manufacturer combined first with wholesalers and then with retailers in order to gain the "retailers' adherence to its suggested minimum retail prices." 362 U.S., at 45-46, and n. 6. The manufacturer also brokered an agreement among its retailers not to advertise prices below its suggested retail prices, which agreement was held to be part of the per se illegal combination. This holding also does not support [***34] a rule that an agreement on price or price level is not required for a vertical restraint to be per se illegal -- first, because the agreement not to advertise prices was part and parcel of the combination that contained the price agreement, id., at 35-36, and second because the agreement among retailers that the manufacturer organized was a horizontal conspiracy among competitors. Id., at 46-47.

LEdHN[1G] [1G]In sum, economic analysis supports the view, and no precedent opposes it, that HN9 a vertical restraint is not illegal per se [*736] unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels. Accordingly, the judgment of the Fifth Circuit is Affirmed.

JUSTICE KENNEDY took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

---

[**1526] JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE WHITE joins, dissenting.

In its opinion the majority assumes, without analysis, that the question presented by this case concerns the legality of a "vertical nonprice [***35] restraint." As I shall demonstrate, the restraint that results when one or more dealers threaten to boycott a manufacturer unless it terminates its relationship with a price-cutting retailer is more properly viewed as a "horizontal restraint." Moreover, an agreement to terminate a dealer because of its price cutting is most certainly not a "nonprice restraint." The distinction between "vertical nonprice restraints" and "vertical price restraints," on which the majority focuses its attention, is therefore quite irrelevant to the outcome of this case. Of much greater importance is the distinction between "naked restraints" and "ancillary restraints" that has been a part of our law since the landmark opinion written by Judge (later Chief Justice) Taft in United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271 \(CA6 1898\), aff'd, 175 U.S. 211 \(1899\).

|

The plain language of § 1 of the [***825] Sherman Act prohibits "every" contract that restrains trade.<sup>1</sup> Because such a literal reading of the statute would outlaw the entire body of private contract law, and because Congress

---

<sup>1</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Act, as set forth in 15 U. S. C. § 1, provides:

"Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal."

plainly intended [*737] the Act to be interpreted in the light of [****36] its common-law background, the Court has long held that certain "ancillary" restraints of trade may be defended as reasonable. As we recently explained without dissent:

"The Rule of Reason suggested by Mitchel v. Reynolds [1 P. Wms. 181, 24 Eng. Rep. 347 (1711)] has been regarded as a standard for testing the enforceability of covenants in restraint of trade which are ancillary to a legitimate transaction, such as an employment contract or the sale of a going business. Judge (later Mr. Chief Justice) Taft so interpreted the Rule in his classic rejection of the argument that competitors may lawfully agree to sell their goods at the same price as long as the agreed-upon price is reasonable. United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. . . . ." *National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 689 \(1978\)*.

[****37] Judge Taft's rejection of an argument that a price-fixing agreement could be defended as reasonable was based on a detailed examination of common-law precedents. He explained that in England there had been two types of objection to voluntary restraints on one's ability to transact business. "One was that by such contracts a man disabled himself from earning a livelihood with the risk of becoming a public charge, and deprived the community of the benefit of his labor. The other was that such restraints tended to give to the covenantee, the beneficiary of such restraints, a monopoly of the trade, from which he had thus excluded one competitor, and by the same means might exclude others." *85 F., at 279*. Certain contracts, however, such as covenants not to compete in a particular business, for a certain period of time, within a defined geographical area, had always been considered reasonable when necessary to carry out otherwise procompetitive contracts, such as the sale of a business. *Id., at 280-282*. The difference between ancillary covenants that [*738] may be justified as reasonable and those that are "void" because there is "nothing to justify [****38] or excuse the restraint," *id., at 282-283*, was described in the opinion's seminal discussion:

"The contract must be one in which there is a main purpose, to which the [**1527] covenant in restraint of trade is merely ancillary. The covenant is inserted only to protect one of the parties from the injury which, in the execution of the contract or enjoyment of its fruits, he may suffer from the unrestrained competition of the other. The main purpose of the contract suggests the measure of protection needed, and furnishes a sufficiently uniform standard by which the validity of such restraints may be judicially determined. In such a case, if the restraint exceeds the [***826] necessity presented by the main purpose of the contract, it is void for two reasons: First, because it oppresses the covenantor, without any corresponding benefit to the covenantee; and, second, because it tends to a monopoly. But where the sole object of both parties in making the contract as expressed therein is merely to restrain competition, and enhance or maintain prices, it would seem that there was nothing to justify or excuse the restraint, that it would necessarily have [****39] a tendency to monopoly, and therefore would be void. In such a case there is no measure of what is necessary to the protection of either party, except the vague and varying opinion of judges as to how much, on principles of political economy, men ought to be allowed to restrain competition. There is in such contracts no main lawful purpose, to subserve which partial restraint is permitted, and by which its reasonableness is measured, but the sole object is to restrain trade in order to avoid the competition which it has always been the policy of the common law to foster." Ibid.

Although Judge Taft was writing as a Circuit Judge, his opinion is universally accepted as authoritative. We affirmed [*739] his decision without dissent, we have repeatedly cited it with approval,<sup>2</sup> and it is praised by a respected scholar as "one of the greatest, if not the greatest, antitrust opinions in the history of the law." R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 26 (1978). In accordance with the teaching in that opinion, it is therefore appropriate to look more closely at the character of the restraint of trade found by the jury in this case.

[****40] II

It may be helpful to begin by explaining why the agreement in this case does not fit into certain categories of agreement that are frequently found in antitrust litigation. First, despite the contrary implications in the majority opinion, this is not a case in which the manufacturer is alleged to have imposed any vertical nonprice restraints on any of its dealers. The term "vertical nonprice restraint," as used in Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977), and similar cases, refers to a contractual term that a dealer must accept in order to qualify for a franchise. Typically, the dealer must agree to meet certain standards in its advertising, promotion, product display, and provision of repair and maintenance services in order to protect the goodwill of the manufacturer's product. Sometimes a dealer must agree to sell only to certain classes of customers -- for example, wholesalers generally may only sell to retailers and may be required not to sell directly to consumers. In Sylvania, to take another example, we examined agreements between a manufacturer and its dealers that included "provisions barring the retailers from selling [****41] franchised products from locations other than those specified in agreements." Id. at 37. [***827] Restrictions of that kind, which are a part of, or ancillary to, [*740] the basic franchise agreement, are perfectly lawful unless the "rule of reason" is violated. Although vertical nonprice restraints may have some adverse effect on competition, as long as they serve the main purpose of a [**1528] procompetitive distribution agreement, the ancillary restraints may be defended under the rule of reason. And, of course, a dealer who violates such a restraint may properly be terminated by the manufacturer.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> See, e. g., *Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 350, n. 22 \(1982\); United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608 \(1972\); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 \(1958\).*

[***42] In this case, it does not appear that respondent imposed any vertical nonprice restraints upon either petitioner or Hartwell. Specifically, respondent did not enter into any "exclusive" agreement, as did the defendant in Sylvania. It is true that before Hartwell was appointed and after petitioner was terminated, the manufacturer was represented by only one retailer in the Houston market, but there is no evidence that respondent ever made any contractual commitment to give either of them any exclusive rights. This therefore is not a case in which a manufacturer's right to grant exclusive territories, or to change the identity of the dealer in an established exclusive territory, is implicated. The case is one in which one of two competing dealers entered into an agreement with the manufacturer to terminate a particular competitor without making any promise to provide better or more efficient services and without receiving any guarantee of exclusivity in the future. The contractual relationship between respondent and Hartwell was exactly [*741] the same after petitioner's termination as it had been before that termination.

Second, this case does not involve a typical [***43] vertical price restraint. As the Court of Appeals noted, there is some evidence in the record that may support the conclusion that respondent and Hartwell implicitly agreed that Hartwell's prices would be maintained at a level somewhat higher than petitioner had been charging before petitioner was terminated. 780 F.2d 1212, 1219 (CA5 1986). The illegality of the agreement found by the jury does not, however, depend on such evidence. For purposes of analysis, we should assume that no such agreement existed and that respondent was perfectly willing to allow its dealers to set prices at levels that would maximize their profits. That seems to have been the situation during the period when petitioner was the only dealer in Houston. Moreover, after respondent appointed Hartwell as its second dealer, it was Hartwell, rather than respondent, who objected to petitioner's pricing policies.

Third, this is not a case in which the manufacturer acted independently. Indeed, given the jury's verdict, it is not even a case in which the [***828] termination can be explained as having been based on the violation of any distribution policy adopted by respondent. The termination [***44] was motivated by the ultimatum that respondent received from Hartwell and that ultimatum, in turn, was the culmination of Hartwell's complaints about <sup>3</sup>Thus, in Morrison v. Murray Biscuit Co., 797 F.2d 1430 (CA7 1986), cited ante, at 720, n. 1, the plaintiff had been terminated because he violated a lawful restriction on the customers to whom he could sell. As the court correctly explained:

"As long as the supplier's motive is not to keep his established dealers' prices up but only to maintain his system of lawful nonprice restrictions, he can terminate noncomplying dealers without fear of antitrust liability even if he learns about the violation from dealers whose principal or perhaps only concern is with protecting their prices." 797 F.2d, at 1440.

There was no such justification for the termination in this case.

petitioner's competitive price cutting. The termination was plainly the product of coercion by the stronger of two dealers rather than an attempt to maintain an orderly and efficient system of distribution.<sup>4</sup>

[****45] [*742] [**1529] In sum, this case does not involve the reasonableness of any vertical restraint imposed on one or more dealers by a manufacturer in its basic franchise agreement. What the jury found was a simple and naked "agreement between Sharp and Hartwell to terminate Business Electronics because of Business Electronics' price cutting." Ante, at 722.

III

Because naked agreements to restrain the trade of third parties are seldom identified with such stark clarity as in this case, there appears to be no exact precedent that determines the outcome here. There are, however, perfectly clear rules that would be decisive if the facts were changed only slightly.

Thus, on the one hand, if it were clear that respondent had acted independently and decided to terminate petitioner because respondent, for reasons of its own, objected to petitioner's pricing policies, the termination would be lawful. See United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 43-45 (1960). On the other hand, it is equally clear that if respondent had been represented by three dealers in the Houston market instead of only two, and if two of them had threatened to terminate [****46] their dealerships "unless respondent ended its relationship with petitioner within 30 days," ante, at 721, an agreement to comply with the ultimatum would be an obvious violation of the Sherman Act. See, e. g., United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 (1966); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207 (1959).<sup>5</sup> The [*743] question then is whether [***829] the two-party agreement involved in this case is more like an illegal three-party agreement or a legal independent decision. For me, the answer is plain.

<sup>4</sup> "When a manufacturer acts on its own, in pursuing its own market strategy, it is seeking to compete with other manufacturers by imposing what may be defended as reasonable vertical restraints. This would appear to be the rationale of the GTE Sylvania decision. However, if the action of a manufacturer or other supplier is taken at the direction of its customer, the restraint becomes primarily horizontal in nature in that one customer is seeking to suppress its competition by utilizing the power of a common supplier. Therefore, although the termination in such a situation is, itself, a vertical restraint, the desired impact is horizontal and on the dealer, not the manufacturer, level." Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164, 168 (CA3 1979).

<sup>5</sup> Thus, a boycott "is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that his destruction makes little difference to the economy. Monopoly can as surely thrive by the elimination of such small businessmen, one at a time, as it can by driving them out in large groups." Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S., at 213, (footnote omitted). Again, Judge Adams' analysis in the Cernuto opinion, n. 4, supra, is relevant:

"The importance of the horizontal nature of this arrangement is illustrated by United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 . . . (1966). Although General Motors, the manufacturer, was seemingly imposing vertical restraints when it pressured recalcitrant automobile dealers not to deal with discounters, the Supreme Court noted that in fact these restraints were induced by the dealers seeking to choke off aggressive competitors at their level, and found a per se violation, rejecting the suggestion that only unilateral restraints were at issue. So here, if [the manufacturer and the sales representative acted at the nonterminated dealer's] direction, both the purpose and effect of the termination was to eliminate competition at the retail level, and not, as in GTE Sylvania, to promote competition at the manufacturer level. Accordingly, the pro-competitive redeeming virtues so critical in GTE Sylvania may not be present here." 595 F.2d, at 168 (footnote omitted).

As we said in General Motors:

"The protection of price competition from conspiratorial restraint is an object of special solicitude under the antitrust laws. We cannot respect that solicitude by closing our eyes to the effect upon price competition of the removal from the market, by combination or conspiracy, of a class of traders. Nor do we propose to construe the Sherman Act to prohibit conspiracies to fix prices at which competitors may sell, but to allow conspiracies or combinations to put competitors out of business entirely." 384 U.S., at 148.

[****47] The distinction between independent action and joint action is fundamental in antitrust jurisprudence.<sup>6</sup> Any attempt [*744] to define [**1530] the boundaries of per se illegality by the number of parties to different agreements with the same anticompetitive consequences can only breed uncertainty in the law and confusion for the businessman.

[****48] More importantly, if instead of speculating about irrelevant vertical nonprice restraints, we focus on the precise character of the agreement before us, we can readily identify its anticompetitive nature. Before the agreement was made, there was price competition in the Houston retail market for respondent's products. The stronger of the two competitors was unhappy about that competition; it wanted to have the power to set the price level in the market and therefore it "complained to respondent on a number of occasions about petitioner's prices." Ante, at 721. Quite obviously, if petitioner had agreed with either Hartwell or respondent to discontinue its competitive pricing, there would have been no ultimatum from Hartwell and no termination by respondent. It is equally obvious that either of those agreements would have been illegal per se.<sup>7</sup> Moreover, it is also reasonable to [***830] assume that if respondent were to replace petitioner with another price-cutting dealer, there would soon be more complaints and another ultimatum from Hartwell. Although respondent has not granted Hartwell an exclusive dealership -- it retains the right to appoint multiple dealers [****49] -- its [*745] agreement has protected Hartwell from price competition. Indeed, given the jury's finding and the evidence in the record, that is the sole function of the agreement found by the jury in this case. It therefore fits squarely within the category of "naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition." White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263 \(1963\).

[****50] This is the sort of agreement that scholars readily characterize as "inherently suspect."<sup>8</sup> [****51] When a manufacturer responds to coercion from a dealer, instead of making an independent decision to enforce a predetermined distribution policy, the anticompetitive character of the response is evident.<sup>9</sup> As Professor Areeda has correctly noted, the fact that the agreement is between only one complaining dealer and the manufacturer does not prevent it from imposing a "horizontal" restraint.<sup>10</sup> [****52] If two critical facts are present -- a [*746] naked

<sup>6</sup> See United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307-308 \(1919\). In Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761 \(1984\), we noted that "the basic distinction between concerted and independent action" was "not always clearly drawn by parties and courts." In its opinion today the majority virtually ignores that basic distinction. Thus, ante, at 728, the majority discusses the manufacturer's risks arising out of its agreement "with one dealer to terminate another for failure to provide contractually obligated services." But if such a breach of contract has occurred, the manufacturer should have an independent motivation for acting and need not enter into any agreement with a dealer to do so. As we held in Monsanto, the mere fact that the breach of contract may have been called to the manufacturer's attention by another dealer does not make the manufacturer's independent decision to terminate a price-cutting dealer unlawful.

<sup>7</sup> "We have not wavered in our enforcement of the per se rule against price fixing." Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 347 \(1982\). Thus, in Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373 \(1911\), the Court determined that vertical price fixing is per se invalid because resale price maintenance plans serve the profit motives of the dealers, not the manufacturers, and are thereby similar to plans pursuant to which the dealers themselves conspire to fix prices. Id., at 407-408. There is no doubt that horizontal intrabrand price fixing is per se illegal, even if the conspirators lack the market power to affect interbrand competition in a manner that would violate the rule of reason.

<sup>8</sup> "Scenarios that involve a firm or firms at one level of activity using vertical restraints deliberately to confer market power on firms at an adjacent level are inherently suspect. To do so is, typically, to inflict self-injury, just as it would be for consumers to confer market power on the retailers from whom they buy." Baxter, The Viability of Vertical Restraints Doctrine, 75 Calif. L. Rev. 933, 938 \(1987\).

<sup>9</sup> "Termination responses reflecting the manufacturer's own distribution policy differ greatly from those imposed upon him by a complaining dealer. In the latter case, the manufacturer's compliance with the complainer's demand is more likely to be anticompetitive. There is a superficial resemblance to Parke Davis in that three parties are involved, but my earlier analysis suggested that the key to that case was 'complex enforcement,' which is absent where a complaining dealer simply threatens to abandon the manufacturer who continues selling to discounting dealers." 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1457, p. 166 (1986).

purpose [**1531] to eliminate price competition as such and [***831] coercion of the manufacturer<sup>11</sup> [****53] -- the conflict with antitrust policy is manifest.<sup>12</sup>

[****54] [*747] Indeed, since the economic consequences of Hartwell's ultimatum to respondent are identical to those that would result from a comparable ultimatum by two of three dealers in a market -- and since a two-party

---

<sup>10</sup> Commenting on Judge Adams' opinion in Cernuto, see nn. 4 and 5, supra, Professor Areeda wrote:

"That the complainer was a single firm did not weaken the 'horizontal' characterization. Because the elimination of price competition was the purpose of the complaint and the termination, the court declared that per se illegality would be appropriate. However, the court made clear that no illegal agreement would be found if United was implementing its own unilaterally chosen distribution policy. Thus, the court's implicit theory was that an agreement arose when the manufacturer bowed to the complainer's will. In that situation, the 'horizontal' characterization is appropriate to capture the fact that dealer interests opposed to those of the manufacturer were being served." Areeda, supra, at 174 (footnotes omitted).

See also R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 288 (1978):

"A restraint -- whether on price, territory, or any other term -- is vertical, according to the usage employed here, when a firm operating at one level of an industry places restraints upon rivalry at another level for its own benefit. (This definition excludes restraints, vertical in form only, that are actually imposed by horizontal cartels at any level of the industry, e. g., resale price maintenance that is compelled not by the manufacturer but by the pressure of organized retailers.)"

<sup>11</sup> The two critical facts that had not yet been determined by a jury in the Cernuto case are perfectly plain in this case. As Professor Areeda explained:

"The Cernuto case was decided on summary judgment which accepted the plaintiff's view of the facts. But two facts critical for the court will often be obscure. First, was it the manufacturer's purpose to eliminate price competition as such? Let us assume that termination was not based on such completely independent grounds as non-payment of bills. Even so, the existence of an inevitable price effect does not establish a purpose to control prices in a forbidden way. A purpose to facilitate point-of-sale services or to protect minimum economies of scale could induce a manufacturer to limit intrabrand competition. Notwithstanding price effects, such limitations are lawful when reasonable and not subject to automatic condemnation. Indeed, termination of one dealer in order to grant another exclusive distribution rights in an area is generally lawful. Nevertheless, so long as the manufacturer is not implementing his own interest but that of the complainer, the vice of eliminating 'horizontal' competition with the complainer's rivals seems equally present when the complainer thereby succeeds in eliminating horizontal competition with respect to customers or territories. Second, was the manufacturer coerced or was he indulging his own preferences? As we have seen, this question cannot be answered in the abstract. The court correctly acknowledged that the manufacturer might also be implementing his own unilateral vision of optimal distribution without regard to the complainer's desires and held that no illegal agreement would arise if that were the case." Areeda, supra, at 174-175 (footnotes omitted).

<sup>12</sup> "Let us defer for the moment problems of proof and assume that a manufacturer does not wish to terminate the plaintiff dealer but does so to placate the complaining dealer, who would otherwise cease handling the product. This manufacturer would rather keep both dealers but, when forced to choose between them, concludes that terminating the plaintiff hurts him less (considering sales lost, transaction costs in finding and perhaps training a replacement, and any spillover effects upon his relations with other dealers) than losing the complainer's patronage.

"The present situation is Colgate in reverse. In Colgate, it was the supplier who was controlling the dealer's behavior. Here a dealer is conditioning his patronage in a way that controls the manufacturer's behavior. The agreement concept seems parallel. But the economic effects can be very different. From the policy viewpoint, it can matter greatly whether manufacturer or dealer interests are being served. The former is more likely to seek efficient distribution, which stimulates interbrand competition; the latter is more likely to seek excess profits, which dampen interbrand competition. Accordingly, antitrust policy can be more hospitable toward manufacturer efforts to control dealer prices, customers, or territories than toward the efforts of dealers to control their competitors through the manufacturer.

"Of course, manufacturer and dealer interests are not necessarily antagonistic. Like the manufacturer, dealers might also believe that restricted distribution increases dealer services and sales and thus strengthens interbrand competition. However, this objective seems unlikely when the manufacturer is forced to violate the distribution policy he thinks best. Although he might be mistaken about what his optimal distribution policy ought to be, he should be presumed a better judge of that than coercing dealers who always desire excess profits unnecessary for efficient distribution." Areeda, supra, at 167-168 (footnotes omitted).

price-fixing agreement is just as unlawful as a three-party price-fixing agreement -- [**1532] it is appropriate to employ the term "boycott" to characterize this agreement. In my judgment the case is therefore controlled by our decision in United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 (1966).

The majority disposes quickly of both General Motors and Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207 ***831 (1959), by concluding that "both cases involved horizontal combinations." Ante, at 734. But this distinction plainly will [*748] not suffice. In General Motors, a group of Chevrolet dealers conspired with General Motors to eliminate sales from the manufacturer to discounting dealers. We held that "elimination, by joint collaborative action, of discounters from access to the market is a per se violation of the Act," 384 U.S., at 145, and explained that "inherent [****55] in the success of the combination in this case was a substantial restraint upon price competition -- a goal unlawful per se when sought to be effected by combination or conspiracy." Id., at 147. Precisely the same goal was sought and effected in this case -- the elimination of price competition at the dealer level. Moreover, the method of achieving that goal was precisely the same in both cases -- the manufacturer's refusal to sell to discounting dealers. The difference between the two cases is not a difference between horizontal and vertical agreements -- in both cases the critical agreement was between market actors at the retail level on the one hand and the manufacturer level on the other. Rather, the difference is simply a difference in the number of conspirators. Hartwell's coercion of respondent in order to eliminate petitioner because of its same-level price competition is not different in kind from the Chevrolet dealers' coercion of General Motors in order to eliminate other, price-cutting dealers; the only difference between the two cases -- one dealer seeking a naked price-based restraint in today's case, many dealers seeking the same end in [****56] General Motors -- is merely a difference in degree. Both boycotts lack any efficiency justification -- they are simply naked restraints on price competition, rather than integral, or ancillary, parts of the manufacturers' predetermined distribution policies.

IV

What is most troubling about the majority's opinion is its failure to attach any weight to the value of intrabrand competition. In Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., [*749] 433 U.S. 36 (1977), we correctly held that a demonstrable benefit to interbrand competition will outweigh the harm to intrabrand competition that is caused by the imposition of vertical nonprice restrictions on dealers. But we also expressly reaffirmed earlier cases in which the illegal conspiracy affected only intrabrand competition.<sup>13</sup> Not a word in the Sylvania opinion implied that the elimination of intrabrand competition could be justified as reasonable without any evidence of a purpose to improve interbrand competition.

[****57] In the case before us today, the relevant economic market was the sale at retail in the Houston area of calculators manufactured by respondent.<sup>14</sup> There is no dispute [**1533] that an [***833] agreement [*750] to fix

<sup>13</sup> See 433 U.S., at 58, n. 28 (citing United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 (1966), and United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596 (1972)).

<sup>14</sup> "It might be helpful to note at this point that although the majority mentions only the reduction of interbrand competition as a justification for a per se rule against vertical price restraints, see ante, at 725-726, our opinion in Sylvania was quite different. As we stated then:

"The market impact of vertical restrictions is complex because of their potential for a simultaneous reduction of intrabrand competition and stimulation of interbrand competition. Significantly, the Court in Schwinn did not distinguish among the challenged restrictions on the basis of their individual potential for intrabrand harm or interbrand benefit. Restrictions that completely eliminated intrabrand competition among Schwinn distributors were analyzed no differently from those that merely moderated intrabrand competition among retailers." 433 U.S., at 51-52 (footnotes omitted).

In the following pages, we pointed out that because vertical nonprice restrictions imposed by manufacturers may serve to advance interbrand competition, the restriction on intrabrand competition should be subject only to a rule of reason analysis. Along these same lines, we explained that "economists also have argued that manufacturers have an economic interest in maintaining as much intrabrand competition as is consistent with the efficient distribution of their products." Id., at 56. Thus, although the majority neglects to mention it, fostering intrabrand competition has been recognized as an important goal of prices in that market, either horizontally between petitioner and Hartwell or vertically between respondent and either or both of the two dealers, would violate the Sherman Act. The "quite plausible" assumption, see ante, at 729, that such an agreement might enable the retailers to provide better services to their customers would not have avoided the strict rule against price fixing that this Court has consistently enforced in the past.

[****58] [*751] Under petitioner's theory of the case, an agreement between respondent and Hartwell to terminate petitioner because of its price cutting was just as indefensible as any of those price-fixing agreements. At trial the jury found the existence of such an agreement to eliminate petitioner's price competition. Respondent had denied that any agreement [***834] had been made and asked the jury to find that it had independently decided to terminate petitioner because of its poor sales performance,<sup>15</sup> but after hearing several days of testimony, the jury concluded that this defense was pretextual.

[****59] Neither the Court of Appeals nor the majority questions the accuracy of the jury's resolution of the factual issues in this case. Nevertheless, the rule the majority fashions today is based largely on its concern that in other cases juries will be unable to tell the difference between truthful [**1534] and pretextual defenses. Thus, it opines that "even a manufacturer that agrees with one dealer to terminate another for failure to provide contractually obligated services, exposes itself to the highly plausible claim that its real motivation was to terminate a price cutter." Ante, at 728. But such a "plausible" concern in a hypothetical case that is so different from this one should not be given greater weight than facts that can be established by hard evidence. If a dealer has, in fact, failed to provide contractually obligated services, and if the manufacturer has, in fact, terminated the dealer for that reason, both of those objective facts should be provable by admissible [*752] evidence.<sup>16</sup> [****61] Both in its disposition antitrust law, and although a manufacturer's efficiency-enhancing vertical nonprice restraints may subject a reduction of intrabrand competition only to a rule of reason analysis, a similar reduction without the procompetitive "redeeming virtues" of manufacturer-imposed vertical nonprice restraints, id., at 54, causes nothing but economic harm. As one commentator has recently stated:

"Intrabrand competition can benefit the consumer, and it is therefore important to insure that a manufacturer's motive for a vertical restriction is not simply to acquiesce in his distributors' desires to limit competition among themselves. The Supreme Court has recognized that restrictions on intrabrand competition can only be tolerated because of the countervailing positive impact on interbrand competition." Piraino, The Case for Presuming the Legality of Quality Motivated Restrictions on Distribution, 63 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1, 17 (1988) (footnotes omitted).

See also H. R. Rep. No. 100-421, pp. 23, 38 (1987) (accompanying bill H. R. 585, the Freedom from Vertical Price Fixing Act of 1987, passed by the House and currently pending before the Senate; criticizing the Fifth Circuit's decision in this case, and restating "plainly and unequivocally that all forms of resale price maintenance are illegal per se under the antitrust laws," including "where a conspiracy exists between a supplier and distributor to terminate or cut off supply to a second distributor because of the second distributor's pricing policies") (emphasis in original); Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1986, Pub. L. 99-180, 99 Stat. 1169-1170 (congressional resolution that Department of Justice Vertical Restraints Guidelines "are inconsistent with established antitrust law, . . . in maintaining that such policy guidelines do not treat vertical price fixing when, in fact, some provisions of such policy guidelines suggest that certain price fixing conspiracies are legal if such conspiracies are 'limited' to restricting intrabrand competition; . . . in stating that vertical restraints that have an impact upon prices are subject to the per se rule of illegality only if there is an 'explicit agreement as to the specific prices'"); Report of Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 149-155 (1955) (criticizing laws that permit resale price maintenance as a "throttling of price competition in the process of distribution").

<sup>15</sup> The court instructed the jury:

"Sharp, on the other hand, contends that it terminated Business Electronics unilaterally, not as a result of any agreement or understanding with Hartwell, but because of Business Electronics' sales performance. If you find that Sharp did not terminate Business Electronics pursuant to an agreement or understanding with Hartwell to eliminate price cutting by Business Electronics, then you should answer 'no' to question number 1."

22 Record 1587.

See also nn. 18-19, infra.

of this case and in its attempt to justify a new approach to agreements to eliminate price competition, the majority exhibits little confidence in [****60] the judicial process as a means of ascertaining the truth.<sup>17</sup>

[*753] [***835] The majority fails to consider that manufacturers such as respondent will only be held liable in the rare case in which the following can be proved: First, the terminated dealer must overcome the high hurdle of Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752 (1984). A terminated dealer [***62] must introduce "evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Id., at 764. Requiring judges to adhere to the strict test for agreement laid down in Monsanto, in their jury instructions or own findings of fact, goes a long way toward ensuring that many legitimate dealer termination decisions do not succumb improperly to antitrust liability.<sup>18</sup>

[***63] [**1535] Second, the terminated dealer must prove that the agreement was based on a purpose to terminate it because of its price cutting. Proof of motivation is another commonplace in antitrust litigation of which the majority appears apprehensive, but as we have explained or demonstrated many times, see, e. g., Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 610-611 (1985); McLain v. Real Estate Board of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. 232, 243 (1980); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 224-226, n. 59

---

<sup>16</sup> In Morrison v. Murray Biscuit Co., 797 F.2d 1430 (CA7 1986), cited ante, at 720, n. 1, Morrison, a wholesale distributor, sued Murray Biscuit, a producer of cookies and crackers, charging a conspiracy between Murray Biscuit and Feldman, a food broker, to suppress price competition between Feldman and Morrison. Id., at 1431. But it was quite clear that Murray Biscuit "had assigned particular customers to particular middlemen, whether brokers [like Feldman] or warehouse distributors [like Morrison]." Id., at 1435. Judge Posner's opinion explained:

"Suppose that after Sylvania was decided, a seller that had a price-fixing agreement (illegal per se) with its dealers adopted a lawful customer allocation agreement pursuant to which it terminated a dealer. That dealer could not sue for price fixing, even if the price-fixing agreement had never been rescinded, unless he could show that his breach of the customer allocation agreement was not the real reason for his termination; maybe the agreement was a mask behind which the illegal price fixing continued. The reason for Morrison's termination was that he tried to take away a customer who had been assigned to Feldman; there is no indication that the assignment was a mask for resale price maintenance. Since Feldman had the exclusive right to sell Murray Biscuit's products to the Certified account, Morrison had no business selling to Certified at any price." Id., at 1439 (emphasis added).

Judge Posner thus made it clear that although Morrison had been terminated pursuant to a valid vertical nonprice restraint, a terminated dealer might prevail if it could prove that the nonprice agreement was "a mask behind which the illegal price fixing continued." Ibid.

<sup>17</sup> "When faced with conflicting evidence, the jury must determine whether the nonprice justifications for the termination advanced by the defendant are legitimate, or are mere pretext to disguise a per se illegal agreement with the nonterminated dealer to maintain resale prices. It is the Court's duty under Monsanto to decide whether sufficient evidence was presented for a jury to make that determination." McCabe's Furniture, Inc. v. La-Z-Boy Chair Co., 798 F.2d 323, 329 (CA8 1986), cited ante, at 720, n. 1.

See also L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 202 (1977) ("A shorthand method which may help to identify a restraint affecting price as naked is to examine the arguments which are being pressed in justification of the practice").

<sup>18</sup> Although at trial respondent had asked the jury to find that it had acted independently, see n. 15, supra, and accompanying text, respondent has not disputed, either in the Court of Appeals or here, the jury's finding of an agreement. (Respondent has, of course, contended that no agreement was reached requiring some level of resale price maintenance. As I have argued, though, such an agreement is not needed to invoke the per se rule in a case such as this.) Respondent did argue before the District Court for an instruction explaining that "it must be shown that the manufacturer agreed with the complaining dealer to terminate the existing dealer and that, in so agreeing, the manufacturer shared with the complaining dealer the same desire of eliminating price competition for the complaining dealer." 1 Record 151. Respondent later objected to the court's decision not to give this instruction, 1 Record 54, 22 Record 1599, but the court in fact had quite carefully explained to the jury that "what a preponderance . . . of the evidence in the case must show in order to establish the existence of the required combination, agreement, or understanding is that Sharp and Hartwell knowingly came to a common and mutual understanding to accomplish or to attempt to accomplish an unlawful purpose." Id., at 1584-1585.

(1940); Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238 (1918); see also Piraino, The Case for Presuming the Legality of Quality Motivated Restrictions on Distribution, 63 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1, 4, 16-19 (1988), in antitrust, as in many other areas of the law, motivation matters and factfinders are able to distinguish bad from good intent.

Third, the manufacturer may rebut the evidence tending to prove that the sole purpose of the agreement was to eliminate a price cutter by offering evidence that it entered the agreement [****64] for legitimate, nonprice-related reasons.

Although in this case the jury found a naked agreement to terminate a dealer because of its price [***836] cutting, ante, at 721-722, the majority boldly characterizes the same agreement as "this nonprice vertical restriction." Ante, at 729. That characterization is surely an oxymoron when applied to the agreement the jury actually found. Nevertheless, the majority proceeds to justify it as "ancillary" to a "quite plausible purpose . . . to enable Hartwell to provide better services under the sales franchise agreement." Ante, at 729. There are two significant reasons why that justification is unacceptable.

First, it is not supported by the jury's verdict. Although it did not do so with precision, the District Court did instruct the jury that in order to hold respondent liable it had to find that the agreement's purpose was to eliminate petitioner because of its price cutting and that no valid vertical nonprice restriction existed to which the motivation to eliminate price competition at the dealership level was merely ancillary.<sup>19</sup>

[****65] [*755] [**1536] Second, the "quite plausible purpose" the majority hypothesizes as salvation for the otherwise anticompetitive elimination of price competition -- "to enable Hartwell to provide better services under the sales franchise agreement," ante, at 729 -- is simply not the type of concern we sought to protect in Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977). I have emphasized in this dissent the difference between restrictions imposed in pursuit of a manufacturer's structuring of its product distribution, and those imposed at the behest of retailers who care less about the general efficiency of a product's promotion than their own profit margins. Sylvania stressed the importance of the former, not the latter; we referred to the use that manufacturers can [*756] make of vertical nonprice restraints, see id., at 54-57, and nowhere did we discuss the benefits of permitting dealers to structure intrabrand competition at the retail level by coercing [***837] manufacturers into essentially anticompetitive agreements. Thus, while Hartwell may indeed be able to provide better services under [****66] the sales franchise agreement with petitioner out of the way, one would not have thought, until today, that the mere possibility of such a result -- at the expense of the elimination of price competition and absent the salutary overlay

<sup>19</sup> The Court instructed the jury:

"The Sherman Act is violated when a seller enters into an agreement or understanding with one of its dealers to terminate another dealer because of the other dealer's price cutting. Plaintiff contends that Sharp terminated Business Electronics in furtherance of Hartwell's desire to eliminate Business Electronics as a price-cutting rival."

"If you find that there was an agreement between Sharp and Hartwell to terminate Business Electronics because of Business Electronics' price cutting, you should answer 'yes' to question number 1."

"Sharp, on the other hand, contends that it terminated Business Electronics unilaterally, not as a result of any agreement or understanding with Hartwell, but because of Business Electronics' sales performance. If you find that Sharp did not terminate Business Electronics pursuant to an agreement or understanding with Hartwell to eliminate price cutting by Business Electronics, then you should answer 'no' to question number 1." 22 Record 1587.

Respondent had asked for an instruction requiring the jury to consider circumstantial evidence as proof of a motivation to eliminate price competition only if such evidence could not "equally be interpreted to show that Sharp terminated Business Electronics Corporation for other business reasons and not pursuant to any agreement with Mr. Hartwell to fix resale prices of calculators." 1 Record 148. Respondent objected to the failure to give this instruction, id., at 54, and also objected, more specifically, to the instruction that was given on the ground that "it allows the jury to find against the defendant even if they do not believe that Sharp cared about [Business Electronics] price cutting or if they believe that Sharp had a dual motive in making the termination." 22 Record 1599. The instruction quoted above, though, makes it highly unlikely that the jury would have found for petitioner although finding respondent's motives to be mixed ones.

of a manufacturer's distribution decision with the entire product line in mind -- would be sufficient to legitimate an otherwise purely anticompetitive restraint. See n. 14, supra. In fact, given the majority's total reliance on "economic analysis," see ante, at 735, it is hard to understand why, if such a purpose were sufficient to avoid the application of a per se rule in this context, the same purpose should not also be sufficient to trump the per se rule in all other price-fixing cases that arguably permit cartel members to "provide better services."

If, however, we continue to accept the premise that competition in the relevant market is worthy of legal protection -- that we should not rely on competitive pressures exerted by sellers in other areas and purveyors of similar but not identical products -- and if we are faithful to the competitive philosophy that has animated our antitrust jurisprudence since Judge Taft's opinion [****67] in Addyston Pipe, we can agree that the elimination of price competition will produce wider gross profit margins for retailers, but we may not assume that the retailer's self interest will result in a better marketplace for consumers.

"The Sherman Act reflects a legislative judgment that ultimately competition will produce not only lower prices, but also better goods and services. 'The heart of our national economic policy long has been faith in the value of competition.' Standard Oil Co. v. FTC, 340 U.S. 231, 248. The assumption that competition is the best [*757] method of allocating resources in a free market recognizes that all elements of a bargain -- quality, service, safety, and durability -- and not just the immediate cost, are favorably affected by the free opportunity to select among alternative offers. Even assuming occasional exceptions to the presumed consequences of competition, the statutory policy precludes inquiry into the question whether competition is good or bad." National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S., at 695.

The "plausible purpose" posited by the majority as its sole [****68] justification for this mischaracterized "nonprice vertical restriction" is inconsistent with the legislative judgment that underlies the Sherman Act itself. Under the facts as found by the jury in this case, the agreement before us is one whose "sole object is to restrain trade in order to avoid the competition" [**1537] which it has always been the policy of the common law to foster." United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F., at 283, aff'd, 175 U.S. 211 \(1899\).

V

In sum, this simply is not a case in which procompetitive vertical nonprice restraints have been imposed; in fact, it is not a case in which any procompetitive agreement [***838] is at issue.<sup>20</sup> The sole purpose of the agreement between respondent [*758] and Hartwell was to eliminate price competition at Hartwell's level. As Judge Bork has aptly explained:

"Since the naked boycott is a form of predatory behavior, there is little doubt that it should be a per se violation of the Sherman Act." Bork, The Antitrust Paradox, at 334.

[****69] I respectfully dissent.

References

---

<sup>20</sup> Thus, the Courts of Appeals decisions cited by the majority as supporting its view, see ante, at 720, n. 1, are, in fact, consistent with the rule that a naked intent to eliminate price competition is per se invalid. Each of the opinions contains a discussion that distinguishes between, on the one hand, an agreement between manufacturer and dealer to eliminate a price-cutting competitor based solely on an intent to eliminate price competition, and, on the other hand, an agreement between manufacturer and dealer to eliminate a price-cutting competitor that is grounded not only in an antipathy to price competition, but also in a purpose to implement a procompetitive system of vertical nonprice restraints. See McCabe's Furniture, Inc. v. La-Z-Boy Chair Co., 798 F.2d, at 329-330; Morrison v. Murray Biscuit Co., 797 F.2d, at 1439-1440; Westman Commission Co. v. Hobart Int'l, Inc., 796 F.2d 1216, 1223 \(CA10 1986\). Moreover, none of these opinions proposes the rule that the majority sanctions today: that an agreement as to some level of resale price maintenance is necessary for invocation of the per se rule in these situations.

485 U.S. 717, *758; 108 S. Ct. 1515, **1537; 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, ***838; 1988 U.S. LEXIS 2033, ****69

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 30-32, 50, 74

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:81, 48:83, 48:101

12 Am Jur Legal Forms 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 178:64

43 Am Jur Proof of Facts 2d 577, Wrongful Termination of Dealership

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 9, 31

Index to Annotations, Dealers and Distributors; Price Fixing; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

[****70] Annotation References:

Supreme Court's views as to what constitutes per se illegal "price fixing" under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 64 L Ed 2d 997.

Propriety of preliminary injunctive relief in private antitrust actions involving dealership terminations. 79 ALR Fed 44.

Refusals to deal as violations of the federal antitrust laws. 41 ALR Fed 175.

---

End of Document

Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head

Supreme Court of the United States

February 24, 1988, Argued ; June 13, 1988, Decided

No. 87-157

Reporter

486 U.S. 492 *; 108 S. Ct. 1931 **; 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 ***; 1988 U.S. LEXIS 2629 ****; 56 U.S.L.W. 4539; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,062

ALLIED TUBE & CONDUIT CORP. v. INDIAN HEAD, INC.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 817 F.2d 938, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

immunity, conduit, standard-setting, electrical, government action, antitrust liability, products, steel, anti trust law, anticompetitive, polyvinyl chloride, antitrust, state and local government, publicity campaign, organizations, codes, marketplace, private association, decisionmaking, associations, benefits, Sherman Act, railroads, boycott, genuine, private organization, legislative action, political activity, restraint of trade, economic interest

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

**HN1** Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Concerted efforts to restrain or monopolize trade by petitioning government officials are protected from antitrust liability under the doctrine established by Noerr. The scope of this protection depends, however, on the source, context, and nature of the anticompetitive restraint at issue. Where a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, those urging the governmental action enjoy absolute immunity from antitrust liability for the anticompetitive restraint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

**HN2** Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Where, independent of any government action, an anticompetitive restraint results directly from private action, the restraint cannot form the basis for antitrust liability if it is "incidental" to a valid effort to influence governmental action. The validity of such efforts, and thus the applicability of Noerr immunity, varies with the context and nature of the activity. A publicity campaign directed at the general public, seeking legislation or executive action, enjoys antitrust immunity even when the campaign employs unethical and deceptive methods. But in less political arenas, unethical and deceptive practices can constitute abuses of administrative or judicial processes that may result in antitrust violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN3 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

In whatever forum, private action that is not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action is a mere sham that cannot be deemed a valid effort to influence government action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Typically, private standard-setting associations include members having horizontal and vertical business relations. Undoubtedly members of such associations often have economic incentives to restrain competition and that the product standards set by such associations have a serious potential for anticompetitive harm. Agreement on a product standard is, after all, implicitly an agreement not to manufacture, distribute, or purchase certain types of products. Accordingly, private standard-setting associations have traditionally been objects of antitrust scrutiny. When, however, private associations promulgate safety standards based on the merits of objective expert judgments and through procedures that prevent the standard-setting process from being biased by members with economic interests in stifling product competition, those private standards can have significant procompetitive advantages. It is this potential for procompetitive benefits that has led most lower courts to apply rule-of-reason analysis to private associations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Absent a showing to the contrary, a government acts in the public interest. A private party, on the other hand, may be presumed to be acting primarily on his or its own behalf. The dividing line between restraints resulting from governmental action and those resulting from private action may not always be obvious. But where persons unaccountable to the public impose the restraint and without official authority, many of whom have personal financial interests in restraining competition, the U.S. Supreme Court has no difficulty concluding that the restraint has resulted from private action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr doctrine does not immunize every concerted effort that is genuinely intended to influence governmental action. If all such conduct were immunized, competitors would be free to enter into horizontal price agreements as long as they wished to propose that price as an appropriate level for governmental ratemaking or price supports. Horizontal conspiracies or boycotts designed to exact higher prices or other economic advantages from the government would be immunized on the ground that they are genuinely intended to influence the government to agree to the conspirators' terms. Firms could claim immunity for boycotts or horizontal output restrictions on the ground that they are intended to dramatize the plight of their industry and spur legislative action.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Antitrust exemption for efforts to influence government action held not applicable to attempt to influence fire protection association's promulgation of private electrical code routinely incorporated into law.

Summary

A manufacturer of plastic electrical conduit sought to have the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA)--a private, voluntary association representing industry, labor, firefighters, and others--list such conduit as an acceptable alternative to steel conduit in the NFPA's triennially revised National Electrical Code (NEC), which code is routinely adopted into law by many state and local governments and is widely accepted by insurers, contractors, and others as identifying acceptable electrical products. Manufacturers of steel conduit and other interested parties agreed among themselves to recruit numerous individuals to join the NFPA, pay those individuals' expenses, and organize those individuals at the NFPA annual meeting as a bloc vote against the proposal to include plastic conduit in the 1981 NEC; and they were successful in defeating that proposal. The plastic conduit manufacturer then filed an action against the steel conduit interests in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, which action alleged that those interests had unreasonably restrained trade in the electrical conduit market in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1). The jury, determining that the interests had subverted the NFPA's consensus standard-making process even though they had not actually broken any NFPA rules, found the interests liable and awarded to the plaintiff manufacturer damages for profits which that manufacturer had lost as a result of the effect which the exclusion of plastic conduit from the 1981 NEC had in the marketplace of its own force, though not for any damages resulting from the adoption of the NEC by government entities. The District Court, however, set aside the jury's verdict on the ground that the interests' actions were subject to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine--which protects petitioning of the government from scrutiny under the Sherman Act--because (1) the NFPA was akin to a legislature, and (2) the interests had genuinely sought, through acceptable political methods, to influence the NFPA and thereby influence the government entities which adopt the NEC. The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, vacating the District Court's judgment and remanding with instructions to reinstate the jury's award, declined to extend the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to (1) the lobbying of private "quasi-legislative" bodies or (2) efforts to indirectly influence government action through such bodies (817 F2d 938).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Brennan, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and Marshall, Blackmun, Stevens, Scalia, and Kennedy, JJ., it was held that the conduct of the steel conduit interests, despite its political impact, was not immune from federal antitrust liability under the Noerr doctrine, since (1) as to the immunity accorded those who merely urge the government to restrain trade, the NFPA--being (a) without official authority, (b) unaccountable to the public, and (c) composed in part of persons having economic incentives to restrain trade--could not be treated as a "quasi-legislative" body simply because legislatures routinely adopt the NEC; and (2) as to the immunity accorded to private restraints which are incidental to a valid effort to influence governmental action, an economically interested party, exercising decisionmaking authority in formulating a product standard for a private association that comprises market participants, enjoys no Noerr immunity from any antitrust liability flowing from the effect the standard has of its own force in the marketplace.

White, J., joined by O'Connor, J., dissented, expressing the view that the Noerr doctrine protects participants in private organizations such as the NFPA that regularly propound and publish health and safety standards for a variety of products and industries and then present these standards to state and local governments for the purpose of having them enacted into law.

Headnotes

---

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §29 > combination to influence government action -- formulation of private electrical code -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F]

The conduct of manufacturers of steel electrical conduit, and other interested parties, in attempting to influence a private fire protection association's promulgation of electrical systems product standards so as to prevent the recognition of plastic conduit as an acceptable alternative to steel conduit--by agreeing among themselves to recruit numerous individuals to join the association and vote as a bloc against a proposal to include plastic conduit in the standards--is not immune from federal antitrust liability under the doctrine of *Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v Noerr Motor Freight, Inc. \(1961\) 365 US 127, 5 L Ed 2d 464, 81 S Ct 523*, which protects concerted efforts to restrain or monopolize trade by petitioning government officials, even though the association's standards are widely adopted into law by state and local governments; such conduct does not enjoy the immunity accorded under the Noerr doctrine to those who merely urge the government to restrain trade, since the association--being (1) without official authority, (2) unaccountable to the public, and (3) composed in part of persons having economic incentives to restrain trade--cannot be treated as a "quasi-legislative" body simply because legislatures routinely adopt its standards; nor does Noerr immunity apply on the theory that the exclusion of plastic conduit from the standards is incidental to a valid effort to influence government action by influencing a source from which many governments derive their laws, since the context and nature of the conduct at issue make it the type of commercial activity that has traditionally had its validity determined by the antitrust laws, rather than the kind of political activity which the Noerr doctrine is designed to protect; where, as here, an economically interested party exercises decisionmaking authority in formulating a product standard for a private association that comprises market participants, that party enjoys no Noerr immunity from any antitrust liability flowing from the effect the standard has of its own force in the marketplace. (White and O'Connor, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > petitioning government officials --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Concerted efforts to restrain or monopolize trade by petitioning government officials are protected from federal antitrust liability, but the scope of this protection depends on the source, context, and nature of the anticompetitive restraint at issue.

486 U.S. 492, *492; 108 S. Ct. 1931, **1931; 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, ***497; 1988 U.S. LEXIS 2629, ****1

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > petitioning government -- public restraint --
> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Where a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, those urging the governmental action enjoy absolute immunity from antitrust liability for the anticompetitive restraint.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > petitioning government -- private restraint
-- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B] [LEdHN\[4C\]](#) [4C] [LEdHN\[4D\]](#) [4D] [LEdHN\[4E\]](#) [4E]

Where an anticompetitive restraint results directly from private action, independent of any government action, that restraint cannot form the basis for federal antitrust liability if it is incidental to a valid effort to influence governmental action, but the mere fact that an anticompetitive activity is also genuinely intended to influence governmental action is not alone sufficient to render that activity immune from antitrust liability; the validity of efforts to influence government action, and thus the applicability of this immunity, varies with the context and nature of the activity, so that a publicity campaign directed at the general public, seeking legislation or executive action, enjoys antitrust immunity even when the campaign employs unethical and deceptive methods, whereas in less political arenas, unethical and deceptive practices can constitute abuses of administrative or judicial processes that may result in antitrust violations; private action that is not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action is a mere sham that cannot be deemed a valid effort to influence government action.

EVIDENCE §173 > presumption as to motive -- private parties -- government -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

It may be presumed, absent a showing to the contrary, that a government acts in the public interest; private parties, on the other hand, may be presumed to be acting primarily on their own behalf.

APPEAL §1662 > effect of decision on other grounds -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

Given the United States Supreme Court's conclusion--in an action by a manufacturer of plastic electrical conduit who (1) alleges that parties interested in the marketing of steel electrical conduit violated 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) by conspiring to improperly influence a private fire protection association to exclude plastic conduit from its electrical systems product standards, which standards are routinely adopted into law by many state and local governments, and (2) has obtained a jury verdict for damages based on the effect the exclusion had in the marketplace of its own force, as opposed to the effect of the standards' adoption into law--that the conduct of the steel conduit interests is not immune from federal antitrust liability under the rule relating to concerted efforts to restrain or monopolize trade by petitioning government officials, the Supreme Court need not decide whether, or to what extent, the efforts of the steel conduit interests to publicize the stigma which plastic conduit suffered by being excluded from the standards--which efforts may have exacerbated the independent market effect of the exclusion--alter the incidental status of the resulting anticompetitive harm.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > immunity for petitioning government -- sham exception -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

With regard to the doctrine that concerted efforts to restrain or monopolize trade by petitioning government officials are immune from federal antitrust liability, the "sham" exception to that doctrine does not cover the activity of an antitrust defendant who genuinely seeks to achieve a governmental result but does so through improper means.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §29 > influencing industry standards -- compliance with rules -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

The validity, under the federal antitrust laws, of efforts by manufacturers of steel electrical conduit and other interested parties to influence a private fire protection association's promulgation of electrical systems product standards so as to prevent the recognition of plastic conduit as an acceptable alternative to steel conduit, is not established solely by the literal compliance of those parties with the rules of the association, since the hope of procompetitive benefits from the promulgation of such private standards depends upon the existence of safeguards sufficient to prevent the standard-setting process from being biased by members which have economic interests in restraining competition; an association cannot validate the anticompetitive activities of its members simply by adopting rules that fail to provide such safeguards.

Syllabus

---

The National Fire Protection Association -- a private organization that includes members representing industry, labor, academia, insurers, organized medicine, firefighters, and government -- sets and publishes product standards and codes related to fire protection. Its National Electrical Code (Code), which establishes requirements for the design and installation of electrical wiring systems, is routinely adopted into law by a substantial number of state and local governments, and is widely adopted as setting acceptable standards by private product-certification laboratories, insurance underwriters, and electrical inspectors, contractors, and distributors. Throughout the relevant period, the Code permitted the use of electrical conduit made of [****2] steel. Respondent, a manufacturer of plastic conduit, initiated a proposal before the Association to extend Code approval to plastic conduit as well. The proposal was approved by one of the Association's professional panels, and thus could be adopted into the Code by a simple majority of the members attending the Association's 1980 annual meeting. Before the meeting was held, petitioner, the Nation's largest producer of steel conduit, members of the steel industry, other steel conduit manufacturers, and independent sales agents collectively agreed to exclude respondent's product from the 1981 Code by packing the annual meeting with new Association members whose only function was to vote against respondent's proposal. After the proposal was defeated at the meeting and an appeal to the Association's Board of Directors was denied, respondent brought suit in Federal District Court, alleging that petitioner and others had unreasonably restrained trade in the electrical conduit market in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The jury found petitioner liable, but the court granted a judgment n.o.v. for petitioner, reasoning that it was entitled to antitrust immunity under the doctrine of [****3] Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523. The Court of Appeals reversed.

Held: Noerr antitrust immunity does not apply to petitioner. Pp. 499-510.

(a) The scope of Noerr protection depends on the source, context, and nature of the anticompetitive restraint at issue. Where a restraint is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, those urging the governmental action enjoy absolute immunity from antitrust liability for the anticompetitive restraint. In this case, the relevant context is the standard-setting process of a private association without official authority that includes members having horizontal and vertical business relations and economic incentives to restrain competition. Such an association cannot be treated as a "quasi-legislative" body simply because legislatures routinely adopt its Code, and thus petitioner does not enjoy the immunity afforded those who merely urge the government to restrain trade. Pp. 499-502.

(b) Nor does Noerr immunity apply to petitioner on the theory that the exclusion of plastic conduit from [****4] the Code, and the effect that exclusion had of its own force in the marketplace, were incidental to a valid effort to influence governmental action. Although, because a large number of governments routinely adopt the Code into law, efforts to influence the Association's standard-setting process are arguably the most effective means of influencing legislation regulating electrical conduit, and although Noerr immunity is not limited to "direct" petitioning of government officials, the Noerr doctrine does not immunize every concerted activity that is genuinely intended to influence governmental action. There is no merit to the argument that, regardless of the Association's nonlegislative status, petitioner's efforts to influence the Association must be given the same wide berth accorded legislative lobbying or efforts to influence legislative action in the political arena. Pp. 502-504.

(c) Unlike the publicity campaign to influence legislation in Noerr, petitioner's activity did not take place in the open political arena, where partisanship is the hallmark of decisionmaking, but took place within the confines of a private standard-setting process. The validity of petitioner's [****5] efforts to influence the Code is not established, without more, by petitioner's literal compliance with the Association's rules, for the hope of the Code's procompetitive benefits depends upon the existence of safeguards sufficient to prevent the standard-setting process from being biased by members with economic interests in restraining competition. An association cannot validate the anticompetitive activities of its members simply by adopting rules that fail to provide such safeguards. At least where, as here, an economically interested party exercises decisionmaking authority in formulating a product standard for a private association that comprises market participants, that party enjoys no Noerr immunity from any antitrust liability flowing from the effect the standard has of its own force in the marketplace. Pp. 505-510.

Counsel: Marvin E. Frankel argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Robert M. Heller, Arthur B. Kramer, and Debora K. Grobman.

Fredric W. Yerman argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Michael Malina, Randolph S. Sherman, and Richard A. De Sevo. *

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the State of Illinois by Neil F. Hartigan, Attorney General, and Robert E. Davy, Jr., Assistant Attorney General; and for the Western Fire Chiefs Association et al. by William J. Meeske and Alexander D. Thomson.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the United States et al. by Solicitor General Fried, Assistant Attorney General Rule, Deputy Solicitor General Cohen, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Starling, Paul J. Larkin, Jr., Robert B. Nicholson, John J. Powers III, Marion L. Jetton, Robert D. Paul, and Ernest J. Isenstadt; and for the State of Alaska et al. by Robert Abrams, Attorney General of New York, O. Peter Sherwood, Solicitor General, and Lloyd E. Constantine, Susan Beth Farmer, Elizabeth M. O'Neill, and George W. Sampson, Assistant Attorneys General, Grace Berg Schable, Attorney General of Alaska, Richard D. Monkmon, Assistant Attorney General, Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona, John Steven Clark, Attorney General of Arkansas, Jeffrey A. Bell, Deputy Attorney General, John Van de Kamp, Attorney General of California, Andrea Ordin, Chief Assistant Attorney General, Thomas P. Dove, Deputy Attorney General, Duane Woodard, Attorney General of Colorado, Thomas P. McMahon, First Assistant Attorney General, Joseph I. Lieberman, Attorney General of Connecticut, Robert M. Langer, Assistant Attorney General, Warren Price III, Attorney General of Hawaii, Robert A. Marks, Supervising Deputy Attorney General, Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, John Perkins, Deputy Attorney General, James E. Tierney, Attorney General of Maine, Stephen L. Wessler, Assistant Attorney General, J. Joseph Curran, Jr., Attorney General of Maryland, Michael F. Brockmeyer, Assistant Attorney General, Frank J. Kelley, Attorney General of Michigan, Louis J. Caruso, Solicitor General, Robert C. Ard, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, Hubert H. Humphrey III, Attorney General of Minnesota, Cary Edwards, Attorney General of New Jersey, Laurel A. Price, Deputy Attorney General, Lacy H. Thornburg, Attorney General of

[****6]

Judges: BRENNAN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, STEVENS, SCALIA, and KENNEDY, JJ., joined. WHITE, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which O'CONNOR, J., joined, post, p. 511.

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

---

[*495] [*502] [**1934] JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A]Petitioner contends that its efforts to affect the product standard-setting process of a private association are immune from antitrust liability under the Noerr doctrine primarily because the association's standards are widely adopted into law by state and local governments. Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\) (Noerr). The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held that Noerr immunity did not apply. We affirm.

I

The National Fire Protection Association (Association) is a private, voluntary organization with more than 31,500 individual and group members representing industry, labor, academia, insurers, organized medicine, firefighters, [****7] and government. The Association, among other things, publishes product standards and codes related to fire protection through a process known as "consensus standard making." One of the codes it publishes is the National Electrical Code (Code), which establishes product and performance requirements for the design and installation of electrical wiring systems. Revised every three years, the Code is the most influential electrical code in the nation. A substantial number of state and local governments routinely adopt the Code into law with little or no change; private certification laboratories, such as Underwriters Laboratories, normally will not list and label [*496] an electrical product that does not meet Code standards; many underwriters will refuse to insure structures that are not built in conformity with the Code; and many electrical inspectors, contractors, and distributors will not use a product that falls outside the Code.

[**1935] Among the electrical products covered by the Code is electrical conduit, the hollow tubing used as a raceway to carry electrical wires through the walls and floors of buildings. Throughout the relevant period, the Code permitted using [****8] electrical conduit made of steel, and almost all conduit sold was in fact steel conduit. Starting in 1980, respondent began to offer plastic conduit made of polyvinyl chloride. Respondent claims its plastic conduit offers significant competitive advantages over steel conduit, including pliability, lower installed cost, and lower susceptibility to short circuiting. In 1980, however, there was also a scientific basis for concern that, during fires in high-rise buildings, polyvinyl chloride conduit might burn and emit toxic fumes.

Respondent initiated a proposal to include polyvinyl chloride conduit as an approved type of electrical conduit in the 1981 edition of the Code. Following approval by one of the Association's professional panels, this proposal was scheduled for consideration at the 1980 annual meeting, where it could be adopted or [***503] rejected by a simple majority of the members present. Alarmed that, if approved, respondent's product might pose a competitive threat to steel conduit, petitioner, the Nation's largest producer of steel conduit, met to plan strategy with, among others, members of the steel industry, other steel conduit manufacturers, and its independent [****9] sales agents. They collectively agreed to exclude respondent's product from the 1981 Code by packing the up-coming annual meeting with new Association members whose only function would be to vote against the polyvinyl chloride proposal.

---

North Carolina, Richard H. Carlton, Assistant Attorney General, Anthony J. Celebrezze, Jr., Attorney General of Ohio, Dave Frohnmayer, Attorney General of Oregon, LeRoy S. Zimmerman, Attorney General of Pennsylvania, Eugene F. Wayne, Chief Deputy Attorney General, James E. O'Neil, Attorney General of Rhode Island, Roger A. Tellinghuisen, Attorney General of South Dakota, Jim Mattox, Attorney General of Texas, Mary F. Keller, Executive Assistant Attorney General, John J. White, Assistant Attorney General, David L. Wilkinson, Attorney General of Utah, Kenneth O. Eikenberry, Attorney General of Washington, John R. Ellis, Deputy Attorney General, Tina Kondo, Assistant Attorney General, Charles G. Brown, Attorney General of West Virginia, Mark D. Kindt, Deputy Attorney General, Donald J. Hanaway, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Kevin J. O'Connor, Assistant Attorney General.

Combined, the steel interests recruited 230 persons to join the Association and to attend the annual meeting to [*497] vote against the proposal. Petitioner alone recruited 155 persons -- including employees, executives, sales agents, the agents' employees, employees from two divisions that did not sell electrical products, and the wife of a national sales director. Petitioner and the other steel interests also paid over $ 100,000 for the membership, registration, and attendance expenses of these voters. At the annual meeting, the steel group voters were instructed where to sit and how and when to vote by group leaders who used walkie-talkies and hand signals to facilitate communication. Few of the steel group voters had any of the technical documentation necessary to follow the meeting. None of them spoke at the meeting to give their reasons for opposing the proposal to approve polyvinyl chloride conduit. Nonetheless, with their solid vote in [****10] opposition, the proposal was rejected and returned to committee by a vote of 394 to 390. Respondent appealed the membership's vote to the Association's Board of Directors, but the Board denied the appeal on the ground that, although the Association's rules had been circumvented, they had not been violated.<sup>1</sup>

In October 1981, respondent brought this suit in Federal District Court, alleging that petitioner and others had unreasonably restrained trade in the electrical conduit market in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. 26 Stat. 209, 15 U.S. C. § 1. A bifurcated jury trial began in March 1985. Petitioner conceded that it had conspired with the other [****11] steel interests to exclude respondent's product from the Code and that it had a pecuniary interest to do so. The jury, instructed under the rule of reason that respondent carried the burden of showing that the anticompetitive effects of petitioner's actions outweighed any procompetitive benefits of standard [*498] setting, found petitioner liable. In answers to special interrogatories, the jury found that petitioner did not violate any rules of the Association and acted, at least in part, based on a genuine belief that plastic conduit was unsafe, but that petitioner nonetheless [**1936] did "subvert" the consensus standardmaking process of the Association. App. 23-24. The jury also made special findings that petitioner's actions had an adverse impact on competition, were not the least restrictive means of expressing petitioner's opposition to the use of polyvinyl [***504] chloride conduit in the marketplace, and unreasonably restrained trade in violation of the antitrust laws. The jury then awarded respondent damages, to be trebled, of $ 3.8 million for lost profits resulting from the effect that excluding polyvinyl chloride conduit from the 1981 Code had of its own force [****12] in the marketplace. No damages were awarded for injuries stemming from the adoption of the 1981 Code by governmental entities.<sup>2</sup>

[****13] The District Court then granted a judgment n.o.v. for petitioner, reasoning that Noerr immunity applied because the Association was "akin to a legislature" and because petitioner, "by the use of methods consistent with acceptable standards of political action, genuinely intended to influence the [Association] with respect to the National Electrical Code, and to thereby influence the various state and local legislative bodies which adopt the [Code]." App. to Pet. for [*499] Cert. 28a, 30a. The Court of Appeals reversed, rejecting both the argument that the Association should be treated as a "quasi-legislative" body because legislatures routinely adopt the Code and the argument that efforts to influence the Code were immune under Noerr as indirect attempts to influence state and local governments. 817 F.2d 938 \(1987\). We granted certiorari to address important issues regarding the application of Noerr immunity to private standard-setting associations.<sup>3</sup> 484 U.S. 814 \(1987\).

<sup>1</sup> Respondent also sought a tentative interim amendment to the Code, but that was denied on the ground that there was not sufficient exigency to merit an interim amendment. The Association subsequently approved use of polyvinyl chloride conduit for buildings of less than three stories in the 1984 Code, and for all buildings in the 1987 Code.

<sup>2</sup> Although the District Court was of the view that at trial respondent relied solely on the theory that its injury "flowed from legislative action," App. to Pet. for Cert. 31a, the Court of Appeals determined that respondent was awarded damages only on the theory "that the stigma of not obtaining [Code] approval of its products and [petitioner's] 'marketing' of that stigma caused independent marketplace harm to [respondent] in those jurisdictions permitting use of [polyvinyl chloride] conduit, as well as those which later adopted the 1984 [Code], which permitted use of [polyvinyl chloride] conduit in buildings less than three stories high. [Respondent] did not seek redress for any injury arising from the adoption of the [Code] by the various governments." 817 F.2d 938, 941, n. 3 (1987) (emphasis added). We decide the case as it was framed by the Court of Appeals.

[****14] ||

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [↑] [2][LEdHN\[3\]](#) [↑] [3][LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [↑] [4A]HN1 [↑] Concerted efforts to restrain or monopolize trade by petitioning government officials are protected from antitrust liability under the doctrine established by Noerr; Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669-672, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\); and California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 \(1972\). The scope of this protection depends, however, on the source, context, and nature of the anticompetitive restraint at issue. "Where a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action," those urging the governmental action enjoy absolute immunity from antitrust liability for the anticompetitive restraint. Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136; see also Pennington, supra, at 671. In addition, HN2 [↑] where, independent of any government action, the anticompetitive restraint [****15] results directly from [***505] private action, the restraint cannot form the basis for antitrust liability if it is "incidental" to a valid effort to influence governmental action. Noerr, supra, at 143. The validity of such efforts, and thus the applicability of Noerr immunity, varies with the context and nature of the activity. A publicity campaign directed at the general public, seeking legislation or executive action, enjoys antitrust immunity even [**1937] when the campaign employs unethical [*500] and deceptive methods. Noerr, supra, at 140-141. But in less political arenas, unethical and deceptive practices can constitute abuses of administrative or judicial processes that may result in antitrust violations.<sup>4</sup> California Motor Transport, supra, at 512-513.

[****16] In this case, the restraint of trade on which liability was predicated was the Association's exclusion of respondent's product from the Code, and no damages were imposed for the incorporation of that Code by any government. The relevant context is thus the standard-setting process of a private association. HN4 [↑] Typically, private standard-setting associations, like the Association in this case, include members having horizontal and vertical business relations. See generally 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law P1477, p. 343 (1986) (trade and standard-setting associations routinely treated as continuing conspiracies of their members). There is no doubt that the members of such associations often have economic incentives to restrain competition and that the product standards set by such associations have a serious potential for anticompetitive harm.<sup>5</sup> [****18] See American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 571, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, 102 S. Ct. 1935 \(1982\). Agreement on a product standard is, after all, implicitly an agreement not to manufacture, distribute, or purchase certain types of products. Accordingly, private standard-setting associations have [****17] traditionally been objects of antitrust scrutiny. See, e. g., ibid.; Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656, 5 L. Ed. 2d 358, 81 S. Ct. 365 \(1961\) (per curiam). See also FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, I\*501 476 U.S. 447 \(1986\). When, however, private associations promulgate safety standards based on the merits of objective expert judgments and through procedures that prevent the standard-setting process from being biased by

<sup>3</sup> We also granted certiorari on the issue whether, if not immune under Noerr, petitioner's conduct violated the Sherman Act, but we now vacate our grant of that issue as improvident.

<sup>4</sup> [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [↑] [4B]

Of course, HN3 [↑] in whatever forum, private action that is not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action is a mere sham that cannot be deemed a valid effort to influence government action. Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144; California Motor Transport, 404 U.S. at 511.

<sup>5</sup> "Product standardization might impair competition in several ways. . . . [It] might deprive some consumers of a desired product, eliminate quality competition, exclude rival producers, or facilitate oligopolistic pricing by easing rivals' ability to monitor each other's prices." 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law P1503, p. 373 (1986).

486 U.S. 492, *501; 108 S. Ct. 1931, **1937; 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, ***505; 1988 U.S. LEXIS 2629, ****17

members with economic interests in stifling product competition, cf. Hydrolevel, supra, at 570-573 (noting absence of "meaningful safeguards"), those private standards can have significant procompetitive advantages. It is this potential for procompetitive benefits that has led most lower courts to apply rule-of-reason [***506] analysis to product standard-setting by private associations.<sup>6</sup>

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#)[] [1B][LEdHN\[5\]](#)[] [5]Given this context, petitioner does not enjoy the immunity accorded those who merely urge the government to restrain trade. We agree with the Court of Appeals that the Association cannot be treated as a "quasi-legislative" body simply because legislatures routinely adopt the Code the Association publishes. 817 F.2d, at 943-944. Whatever de facto authority [***19] the Association enjoys, no official authority has been conferred on it by any government, and the decisionmaking body of the Association is composed, at least in part, of persons with economic incentives to restrain trade. See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 707-708, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962). See also id., at 706-707; Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 791-792, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572, 95 S. Ct. 2004 (1975). "We may presume, HN5[] absent a showing to the contrary, that [a government] acts in the public interest. A private party, on the other hand, may be presumed to be acting primarily on his or its own behalf." Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 45, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1985). The dividing line between restraints resulting from governmental action and those resulting from private action [*502] may not always be obvious.<sup>7</sup> But where, as here, the restraint is imposed by persons unaccountable to the public and without official authority, many of whom have personal financial interests in restraining competition, we have no difficulty [***20] concluding that the restraint has resulted from private action.

[***21] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#)[] [1C][LEdHN\[6A\]](#)[] [6A]Noerr immunity might still apply, however, if, as petitioner argues, the exclusion of polyvinyl chloride conduit from the Code, and the effect that exclusion had of its own force in the marketplace, were incidental to a valid effort to influence governmental action. Petitioner notes that the lion's share of the anticompetitive effect in this case came from the predictable adoption of the Code into law by a large number of state and local governments. See 817 F.2d at 939, n. 1.Indeed, petitioner argues that, because state and local governments rely so heavily on the Code and lack the resources or technical expertise to second-guess it, efforts to influence the Association's standard-setting process are the most effective means [***507] of influencing legislation regulating electrical conduit. This claim to Noerr immunity has some force. The effort to influence governmental action in this case certainly cannot be characterized as a sham given the actual adoption of the 1981 Code into a number of statutes [***22] and local ordinances. Nor can we quarrel with petitioner's contention that, given the widespread adoption of the Code into [*503] law, any effect the 1981 Code had in the marketplace of its own force was, in the main, incidental to petitioner's genuine effort to influence governmental action.<sup>8</sup> And, as petitioner persuasively argues, the claim of Noerr immunity cannot be dismissed on the ground that the conduct at issue involved no "direct" petitioning of government officials, for Noerr itself immunized a form of "indirect" petitioning. See Noerr (immunizing a publicity campaign directed at the general public on the ground that it was part of an effort to influence legislative and executive action).

<sup>6</sup>See 2 J. von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulation §§ 6I.01[3], 6I.03, 6I.04, pp. 6I-6 to 6I-7, 6I-18 to 6I-29 (1981) (collecting cases). Concerted efforts to enforce (rather than just agree upon) private product standards face more rigorous antitrust scrutiny. See Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656, 659-660, 5 L. Ed. 2d 358, 81 S. Ct. 365 (1961) (per curiam). See also Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457, 85 L. Ed. 949, 61 S. Ct. 703 (1941).

<sup>7</sup>See, e. g., California Motor Transport, supra, at 513 (stating in dicta that "conspiracy with a licensing authority to eliminate a competitor" or "bribery of a public purchasing agent" may violate the antitrust laws); Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 671, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585, and n. 4 (1965) (holding that immunity applied but noting that the trade restraint at issue "was the act of a public official who is not claimed to be a co-conspirator" and contrasting Continental Ore); Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 707-708, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962); 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law P206 (1978) (discussing the extent to which Noerr immunity should apply to commercial transactions involving the government). See also Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 791-792, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572, 95 S. Ct. 2004 (1975); Continental Ore, supra, at 706-707.

[****23] [LEdHN\[4C\]](#)<sup>8</sup> [4C]Nonetheless, the validity of petitioner's actions remains an issue. HN6<sup>8</sup> We cannot agree with petitioner's absolutist position that the Noerr doctrine immunizes every concerted effort that is genuinely intended to influence governmental action. [**1939] If all such conduct were immunized then, for example, competitors would be free to enter into horizontal price agreements as long as they wished to propose that price as an appropriate level for governmental ratemaking or price supports. But see Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 456-463, 89 L. Ed. 1051, 65 S. Ct. 716 \(1945\). Horizontal conspiracies or boycotts designed to exact higher prices or other economic advantages from the government would be immunized on the ground that they are genuinely intended to influence the government to agree to the conspirators' terms. But see Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159, 86 L. Ed. 1346, 62 S. Ct. 972 \(1942\). Firms could claim immunity for boycotts or horizontal output restrictions on the ground that they are intended to dramatize the plight of their industry [****24] and spur legislative action. Immunity might even be [*504] claimed for anticompetitive mergers on the theory that they give the merging corporations added political clout. Nor is it necessarily dispositive that packing the Association's meeting may have been the most effective means of securing government action, for one could imagine situations where the most effective means of influencing government officials is bribery, and we have never suggested that that kind of attempt to influence the government merits protection. We thus conclude that the Noerr immunity of anticompetitive activity intended to influence the government depends not only on its impact, but also on the context and nature of the activity.

Here petitioner's actions took [***508] place within the context of the standard-setting process of a private association. Having concluded that the Association is not a "quasi-legislative" body, we reject petitioner's argument that any efforts to influence the Association must be treated as efforts to influence a "quasi-legislature" and given the same wide berth accorded legislative lobbying. That rounding up supporters is an acceptable and constitutionally protected [****25] method of influencing elections does not mean that rounding up economically interested persons to set private standards must also be protected. Nor do we agree with petitioner's contention that, regardless of the Association's nonlegislative status, the effort to influence the Code should receive the same wide latitude given ethically dubious efforts to influence legislative action in the political arena, see Noerr, 365 U.S. at 140-141, simply because the ultimate aim of the effort to influence the private standard-setting process was (principally) legislative action. The ultimate aim is not dispositive. A misrepresentation to a court would not necessarily be entitled to the same antitrust immunity allowed deceptive practices in the political arena simply because the odds were very good that the court's decision would be codified -- nor for that matter would misrepresentations made under oath at a legislative committee hearing in the hopes of spurring legislative action.

[*505] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#)<sup>8</sup> [1D]What distinguishes this case from Noerr and its progeny is that the context and nature of petitioner's [****26] activity make it the type of commercial activity that has traditionally had its validity determined by the antitrust laws themselves. True, in Noerr we immunized conduct that could be characterized as a conspiracy among railroads to destroy business relations between truckers and their customers. Noerr, supra, at 142. But we noted there:

---

<sup>8</sup> [LEdHN\[6B\]](#)<sup>8</sup> [6B]

The effect, independent of government action, that the 1981 Code had in the marketplace may to some extent have been exacerbated by petitioner's efforts to "market" the stigma respondent's product suffered by being excluded from the Code. See 17 F.2d at 941, n. 3. Given our disposition infra, we need not decide whether, or to what extent, these "marketing" efforts alter the incidental status of the resulting anticompetitive harm. See generally Noerr, 365 U.S. at 142 (noting that in that case there were. "no specific findings that the railroads attempted directly to persuade anyone not to deal with the truckers").

"There are no specific findings that the railroads attempted directly to persuade anyone not to deal with the truckers. Moreover, all the evidence in the record, both oral and documentary, deals with the railroads' efforts to influence the passage and enforcement of laws. Circulars, speeches, newspaper articles, editorials, magazine articles, memoranda and all other documents discuss in one way or another the railroads' charges that heavy trucks injure the roads, violate the laws and create traffic hazards, and urge that truckers should be forced [**1940] to pay a fair share of the costs of rebuilding the roads, that they should be compelled to obey the laws, and that limits should be placed upon the weight of the loads they are permitted to carry." 365 U.S. at 142-143.

In light of those findings, [***27] we characterized the railroads' activity as a classic "attempt . . . to influence legislation by a campaign of publicity," an "inevitable" and "incidental" effect of which was "the infliction of some direct injury upon the interests of the party against whom the campaign is directed." Id., at 143. The essential character of such a publicity campaign was, we concluded, political, and could not be segregated from the activity's impact on business. Rather, the plaintiff's cause of action simply embraced the inherent possibility in such political fights "that [***509] one group or the other will get hurt by the arguments that are made." Id., at 144. As a political activity, special factors counseled against regulating the publicity campaign under the antitrust laws:

[*506] "Insofar as [the Sherman] Act sets up a code of ethics at all, it is a code that condemns trade restraints, not political activity, and, as we have already pointed out, a publicity campaign to influence governmental action falls clearly into the category of political activity. The proscriptions of the Act, tailored as they are for the business world, are not at all appropriate [***28] for application in the political arena. Congress has traditionally exercised extreme caution in legislating with respect to problems relating to the conduct of political activities, a caution which has been reflected in the decisions of this Court interpreting such legislation. All of this caution would go for naught if we permitted an extension of the Sherman Act to regulate activities of that nature simply because those activities have a commercial impact and involve conduct that can be termed unethical." Id., at 140-141 (footnote omitted).

In Noerr, then, the political context and nature of the activity precluded inquiry into its antitrust validity.<sup>9</sup>

[***29] [LEdHN\[7A\]\[↑\]](#) [7A] Here the context and nature of the activity do not counsel against inquiry into its validity. Unlike the publicity campaign in Noerr, the activity at issue here did not take place in the open political arena, where partisanship is the hallmark of decisionmaking, but within the confines of a private standard-setting process. The validity of conduct within that process has long been defined and circumscribed by the antitrust laws without regard to whether the private standards are likely to be adopted into law. See supra, at 500. Indeed, because private standard-setting by associations comprising firms with horizontal and vertical business relations is permitted at all under the antitrust laws only on the [*507] understanding that it will be conducted in a nonpartisan manner offering procompetitive benefits, see ibid., the standards of conduct in this context are, at least in some respects, more rigorous than the standards of conduct prevailing in the partisan political arena or in the adversarial process of adjudication. The activity at issue here thus cannot, as in Noerr, be characterized [***30] as an activity that has traditionally been regulated with extreme caution, see Noerr, 365 U.S. at 141, or as an activity that "bear[s] little if any resemblance to the combinations normally held violative of the Sherman Act," id., at 136. And petitioner did not confine itself to efforts to persuade an independent decisionmaker, cf. id., at 138, 139 (describing the immunized [***510] conduct as "mere solicitation"); rather, it organized and orchestrated the actual exercise of the Association's decisionmaking authority in setting a standard. [**1941] Nor can the setting of the Association's Code be characterized as merely an exercise of the power of persuasion, for it in part involves the exercise of market power. The Association's members, after all, include consumers, distributors, and manufacturers of electrical conduit, and any agreement to exclude polyvinyl chloride conduit from the Code is in part an implicit agreement not to trade in that type of electrical conduit. Cf. id., at 136. Although one could reason backwards from the legislative impact of the Code to the conclusion that the conduct at [****31] issue here is "political," we think that, given the context and nature of the conduct, it can more aptly be characterized as commercial activity with a political impact. Just as the antitrust laws should not regulate political activities "simply because those activities have a commercial impact," id., at 141, so the antitrust laws should not necessarily immunize what are in essence commercial activities simply because they have a political impact.<sup>10</sup>

---

<sup>9</sup> Similarly in California Motor Transport any antitrust review of the validity of the activity at issue was limited and structured by the fact that there the antitrust defendants were "us[ing] the channels and procedures of state and federal agencies and courts." 404 U.S. at 511; see also id., at 512-513.

[****32]

[*508] [LEdHN\[4D\]](#) [4D] NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1215, 102 S. Ct. 3409 (1982), is not to the contrary. In that case we held that the First Amendment protected the nonviolent elements of a boycott of white merchants organized by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and designed to make white government and business leaders comply with a list of demands for equality and racial justice. Although the boycotters intended to inflict economic injury on the merchants, the boycott was not motivated by any desire to lessen competition or to reap economic benefits but by the aim of vindicating rights of equality and freedom lying at the heart of the [***511] Constitution, and the boycotters were consumers who did not stand to profit financially from a lessening of competition in the boycotted market. Id., at 914-915. Here, in contrast, [*509] petitioner was at least partially motivated by the desire to lessen competition, and, because of petitioner's line of business, stood to reap substantial economic benefits [***33] from making it difficult for respondent to compete.<sup>11</sup>

[LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8] [****34] Thus in this case the context and nature of petitioner's efforts to influence the Code [**1942] persuade us that the validity of those efforts must, despite their political impact, be evaluated under the standards of conduct set forth by the antitrust laws that govern the private standard-setting process. The antitrust validity of these efforts is not established, without more, by petitioner's literal compliance with the rules of the Association, for the hope of procompetitive benefits depends upon the existence of safeguards sufficient to prevent the standard-setting process from being biased by members with economic interests in restraining competition. An association cannot validate the anticompetitive activities of its members simply by

<sup>10</sup> [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

It is admittedly difficult to draw the precise lines separating anticompetitive political activity that is immunized despite its commercial impact from anticompetitive commercial activity that is unprotected despite its political impact, and this is itself a case close to the line. For that reason we caution that our decision today depends on the context and nature of the activity. Although criticizing the uncertainty of such a particularized inquiry, post, at 513, the dissent does not dispute that the types of activity we describe supra, at 503-504, could not be immune under Noerr and fails to offer an intelligible alternative for distinguishing those nonimmune activities from the activity at issue in this case. Rather, the dissent states without elaboration that the sham exception "is enough to guard against flagrant abuse," post, at 516, apparently embracing the conclusion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit that the sham exception covers the activity of a defendant who "genuinely seeks to achieve his governmental result, but does so through improper means." Sessions Tank Liners, Inc. v. Joor Mfg., Inc., 827 F.2d 458, 465, n. 5 (1987) (emphasis in original). Such a use of the word "sham" distorts its meaning and bears little relation to the sham exception Noerr described to cover activity that was not genuinely intended to influence governmental action. 365 U.S. at 144. See also P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P203.1a, pp. 13-14 (Supp. 1987). More importantly, the Ninth Circuit's approach renders "sham" no more than a label courts could apply to activity they deem unworthy of antitrust immunity (probably based on unarticulated consideration of the nature and context of the activity), thus providing a certain superficial certainty but no real "intelligible guidance" to courts or litigants. Post, at 513. Indeed, the Ninth Circuit concluded that the very activity the dissent deems protected was an unprotected "sham." 827 F.2d at 465.

<sup>11</sup> [LEdHN\[4E\]](#) [4E]

Although the absence of such anticompetitive motives and incentives is relevant to determining whether petitioner's restraint of trade is protected under Claiborne Hardware, we do not suggest that the absence of anticompetitive purpose is necessary for Noerr immunity. As the dissent points out, in Noerr itself the major purpose of the activity at issue was anticompetitive. Post, at 512-513. Our statement that the "ultimate aim" of petitioner "is not dispositive," supra, at 504, stands only for the proposition that, at least outside the political context, the mere fact that an anticompetitive activity is also intended to influence governmental action is not alone sufficient to render that activity immune from antitrust liability.

adopting rules that fail to provide such safeguards.<sup>12</sup> The issue of immunity in this case thus collapses into the issue of antitrust liability. Although we do not here set forth the rules of antitrust liability governing the private standard-setting process, we hold that at least where, as here, an economically interested party exercises decisionmaking authority in formulating a product standard for a private association that comprises market [****35] participants, that [*510] party enjoys no Noerr immunity from any antitrust liability flowing from the effect the standard has of its own force in the marketplace.

LEDHN[1F] [1F]This conclusion does not deprive state and local governments of input and information from interested individuals or organizations or leave petitioner without ample means to petition those governments. Cf. Noerr, 365 U.S. at 137-138. See also California Motor Transport, 404 U.S. at 510. Petitioner, and others concerned about the safety or competitive threat of polyvinyl chloride conduit, can, with full antitrust immunity, engage in concerted efforts to influence those governments through direct lobbying, publicity campaigns, [****36] and other traditional avenues of political expression. To the extent state and local governments are more difficult to persuade through these other avenues, that no doubt reflects their preference for and confidence [***512] in the nonpartisan consensus process that petitioner has undermined. Petitioner remains free to take advantage of the forum provided by the standard-setting process by presenting and vigorously arguing accurate scientific evidence before a nonpartisan private standard-setting body.<sup>13</sup> And petitioner can avoid the strictures of the private standard-setting process by attempting to influence legislatures through other forums. [*511] What petitioner may not do (without exposing itself to possible antitrust liability for direct injuries) is bias the process by, as in this case, stacking the private standard-setting body with decisionmakers sharing their economic interest in restraining competition.

[****37] The judgment of the Court of Appeals is

Affirmed.

Dissent by: WHITE

Dissent

---

JUSTICE WHITE, with whom JUSTICE O'CONNOR joins, dissenting.

Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961), held that the Sherman Act should not be construed [**1943] to forbid joint efforts by railway companies seeking legislation that would disadvantage the trucking industry. These efforts for the most part involved a public relations campaign rather than direct lobbying of the lawmakers and were held not subject to antitrust challenge because of the fundamental importance of maintaining the free flow of information to the government and the right of the people to seek legislative relief, directly or indirectly. Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed.

---

<sup>12</sup> Even petitioner's counsel concedes, for example, that Noerr would not apply if the Association had a rule giving the steel conduit manufacturers a veto over changes in the Code. Tr. of Oral Arg. 41-42.

<sup>13</sup> The dissent mistakenly asserts that we today hold that Noerr immunity does not apply to mere efforts to persuade others to exclude a competitor's product from a private code. See post, at 514-516. Our holding is expressly limited to cases where an "economically interested party exercises decisionmaking authority in formulating a product standard for a private association that comprises market participants." Supra, at 509 (emphasis added); see also supra, at 506-507 (relying in part on the distinction between activity involving the exercise of decisionmaking authority and market power and activity involving mere attempts to persuade an independent decisionmaker). Cf. Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136. The dissent also mistakenly asserts that this description encompasses all private standardsetting associations. See post, at 515. In fact, many such associations are composed of members with expertise but no economic interest in suppressing competition. See, e. g., Sessions, supra, at 461, and n. 2.

2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\), and California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 \(1972\), applied the rule to efforts to seek executive action and to administrative and adjudicative proceedings.

The Court now refuses to apply the rule of these cases [****38] to the participants in those private organizations, such as the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA), that regularly propound and publish health and safety standards for a variety of products and industries and then present these codes to state and local authorities for the purpose of having them enacted into law. The NFPA and those participating in the code-writing process will now be subject to antitrust liability if their efforts have anticompetitive effects and do not withstand scrutiny under the rule of reason. Believing that this [***513] result is a misapplication of the Noerr decision and an improvident construction of the Sherman Act, I respectfully dissent.

[*512] This case presents an even stronger argument for immunity than did Noerr itself. That decision turned on whether the design or purpose of the conduct was to obtain or influence the passage or enforcement of laws. The Court concedes that petitioner's actions in this case constituted a "genuine effort to influence governmental action," ante, at 503, and that this was its "ultimate aim," ante, at 504. In Noerr, the publicity campaign was dispersed widely among the public in a broad [****39] but necessary diluted attempt to move public opinion in hopes that government officials would take note and respond accordingly. The campaign apparently had some influence on the passage of tax laws and other legislation favorable to the railroads in New Jersey, New York, and Ohio, and procured the Governor's veto of a bill that had been passed in Pennsylvania. See 365 U.S. at 130; see also 155 F. Supp. 768, 777-801 \(ED Pa. 1957\). Here, the NFPA actually drafted proposed legislation in the form of the National Electrical Code (NEC) and presented it countrywide. Not only were petitioner's efforts in this case designed to influence the passage of state laws, but there was also a much greater likelihood that they would be successful than was the case in Noerr. This is germane because it establishes a much greater likelihood that the "purpose" and "design" of petitioner's actions in this case was the "solicitation of governmental action with respect to the passage and enforcement of laws," 365 U.S. at 138.

Rather than directly confronting the severe damage that today's decision does to the Noerr doctrine, the majority asserts that the [****40] "ultimate aim" of petitioner's efforts "is not dispositive." Ante, at 504. That statement cannot be reconciled with the statements quoted earlier from Noerr, where it was held that even if one of the major purposes, or even the sole purpose, of the publicity campaign was "to destroy the truckers as competitors," 365 U.S. at 138, those actions were immunized from antitrust liability because ultimately they were "directed toward obtaining governmental action," [*513] id., at 140. The majority later doubles back on this statement, and suggests that it is important in this case that "petitioner was at least partially motivated by the desire to lessen competition, and . . . stood to reap substantial economic benefits from making it difficult for respondent to compete." Ante, at 509. It need hardly be said that all of this was also true in Noerr. Nobody condones fraud, bribery, [**1944] or misrepresentation in any form, and other state and federal laws ensure that such conduct is punishable. But the point here is that conduct otherwise punishable under the antitrust laws either becomes immune from the operation of those laws when [****41] it is part of a larger design to influence the passage and enforcement of laws, or it does not. No workable boundaries to the Noerr doctrine are established by declaring, and then repeating at every turn, that everything depends on "the context and nature of" the activity, [***514] ante, at 504, 505, 506, 509, if we are unable to offer any further guidance about what this vague reference is supposed to mean, especially when the result here is so clearly wrong as long as Noerr itself is reputed to remain good law. One unfortunate consequence of today's decision, therefore, is that district courts and courts of appeals will be obliged to puzzle over claims raised under the doctrine without any intelligible guidance about when and why to apply it.

If there were no private code-writing organizations, and state legislatures themselves held the necessary hearing and wrote codes from scratch, then business concerns like Allied, together with their friends, could jointly testify with impunity about the safety of various products, even though they had anticompetitive motives in doing so. This much the majority concedes, as it does that the major purpose of the code-writing organizations [****42] is to influence legislative action. These days it is almost a foregone conclusion that the vast majority of the States will adopt these codes with little or no change. It is untenable to consider the code-writing process by such organizations as the NFPA as too far removed [*514] from the legislative process to warrant application of the doctrine announced in Noerr and faithfully applied in other cases. This was the view of Judge Snead and his colleagues on the Ninth Circuit in Sessions Tank Liners, Inc. v. Joor Mfg., Inc., 827 F.2d 458 (1987), and the reasons they gave for applying Noerr in this context are much more persuasive than anything to the contrary the majority now has to offer.

The Court's decision is unfortunate for another reason. There are now over 400 private organizations preparing and publishing an enormous variety of codes and standards. State and local governments necessarily, and as a matter of course, turn to these proposed codes in the process of legislating to further the health and safety of their citizens. The code that is at issue in this case, for example, was adopted verbatim by 25 States and the District of Columbia; [****43] 19 others adopted it with only minor changes. It is the most widely disseminated and adopted model code in the world today. There is no doubt that the work of these private organizations contributes enormously to the public interest and that participation in their work by those who have the technical competence and experience to do so should not be discouraged.

The Court's decision today will surely do just that. It must inevitably be the case that codes such as the NEC will set standards that some products cannot satisfy and hence in the name of health and safety will reduce or prevent competition, as was the case here. Yet, putative competitors of the producer of such products will now think twice before urging in the course of the code-making process that those products not be approved; for if they are successful (or even if they are not), they may well become antitrust defendants facing treble-damages liability unless they can prove to a court and a jury that they had no evil motives but were merely "presenting and vigorously arguing accurate scientific evidence before a nonpartisan private standard-setting body," ante, at 510 (though with the knowing and inevitable result [****44] of eliminating competition). In [***515] this case, for example, even [*515] if Allied had not resorted to the tactics it employed, but had done no more than successfully argue in good faith the hazards of using respondent's products, it would have inflicted the same damage on respondent and would [**1945] have risked facing the same antitrust suit, with a jury ultimately deciding the health and safety implications of the products at issue.

The Court's suggestion that its decision will not affect the ability of these organizations to assist state and local governments is surely wrong. The Court's holding is "that at least where, as here, an economically interested party exercises decisionmaking authority in formulating a product standard for a private association that comprises market participants, that party enjoys no Noerr immunity from any antitrust liability flowing from the effects the standard has of its own force in the marketplace." Ante, at 509-510. This description encompasses the structure and work of all such organizations as we now know them. The Court is saying, in effect, that where a private organization sets standards, the participants can be sued [****45] under the antitrust laws for any effects those standards have in the marketplace other than those flowing from their adoption into law. But the standards will have some effect in the marketplace even where they are also adopted into law, through publicity and other means, thus exposing the participants to liability. Henceforth, therefore, any private organization offers such standards at its peril, and without any of the breathing room enjoyed by other participants in the political process.

The alternative apparently envisioned by the Court is that an organization can gain the protection of the Noerr doctrine as long as nobody with any economic interest in the product is permitted to "exercis[e] decisionmaking authority" (i. e., vote) on its recommendations as to particular product standards. Insisting that organizations like the NFPA conduct themselves like courts of law will have perverse effects. Legislatures are willing to rely on such organizations precisely because their standards are being set by those who [*516] possess an expert understanding of the products and their uses, which are primarily if not entirely those who design, manufacture, sell, [****46] and distribute them. Sanitizing such bodies by discouraging the active participation of those with economic interests in the subject matter undermines their utility.

I fear that exposing organizations like the NFPA to antitrust liability will impair their usefulness by inhibiting frank and open discussion of the health and safety characteristics of new or old products that will be affected by their codes. The Court focuses on the tactics of petitioner that are thought to have subverted the entire process. But it is not suggested that if there are abuses, they are anything more than occasional happenings. The Court does speculate about the terrible practices that applying Noerr in this context could lead us to condone in future cases, ante, at 503-504, but these are no more than fantasies, since nothing of the sort occurred in the wake of Noerr itself. It seems to me that today's decision is therefore an unfortunate case of overkill.

Of course, the Noerr immunity is not unlimited and by its terms is [***516] unavailable where the alleged efforts to influence legislation are nothing but a sham. As the Ninth Circuit held, this limitation is enough to guard against [****47] flagrant abuse. In any event, occasional abuse is insufficient ground to render the entire process less useful and reliable. I would reverse the judgment below and remand for further proceedings.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 108

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 9, 29

Index to Annotations, Lobbying; Noerr-Pennington Doctrine; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References:

"Sham" exception to application of Noerr-Pennington doctrine, exempting from federal antitrust laws joint efforts to influence governmental action. 71 ALR Fed 723.

Application of doctrine exempting from federal antitrust laws joint efforts to influence legislative or executive action. 17 ALR Fed 645.

---

End of Document

Christianson v. Colt Indus. Operating Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

April 18, 1988, Argued ; June 17, 1988, Decided

No. 87-499

Reporter

486 U.S. 800 *; 108 S. Ct. 2166 **; 100 L. Ed. 2d 811 ***; 1988 U.S. LEXIS 2733 ****; 7 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1109; 56 U.S.L.W. 4625; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,081; 11 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 452

CHRISTIANSON ET AL. v. COLT INDUSTRIES OPERATING CORP.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FEDERAL CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 822 F.2d 1544, vacated and remanded.

Core Terms

---

patents, patent law, district court, petitioners', patent-law, cases, court of appeals, cause of action, well-pleaded, antitrust, courts, law of the case, invalid, trade secret, monopolization, decisions, appellate jurisdiction, jurisdictional issue, federal patent law, federal law, infringement, accessories, manufacture, proprietary, adherence, customers, litigated, lawsuit, lack jurisdiction, summary judgment

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > Statutory Sources

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > State Court Review

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Jurisdiction Over Actions, Exclusive Jurisdiction

28 U.S.C.S. § 1295\(a\)\(1\) grants the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit exclusive jurisdiction over an appeal from a final decision of a district court of the United States if the jurisdiction of that court was based, in whole or in part, on 28 U.S.C.S. § 1338. Section 1338\(a\), in turn, provides that the district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action arising under any Act of Congress relating to patents.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

**HN2** Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Federal Questions

In order to demonstrate that a case is one "arising under" federal patent law, the plaintiff must set up some right, title or interest under the patent laws, or at least make it appear that some right or privilege will be defeated by one construction, or sustained by the opposite construction of these laws.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > Substantial Questions

Constitutional Law > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

**HN3** Federal Questions, Substantial Questions

A district court's federal-question jurisdiction extends over only those cases in which a well-pleaded complaint establishes either that federal law creates the cause of action or that the plaintiff's right to relief necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial question of federal law, in that federal law is a necessary element of one of the well-pleaded claims. Linguistic consistency demands that 28 U.S.C.S. § 1338\(a\) jurisdiction likewise extends only to those cases in which a well-pleaded complaint establishes either that federal patent law creates the cause of action or that the plaintiff's right to relief necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial question of federal patent law, in that patent law is a necessary element of one of the well-pleaded claims.

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

**HN4** Civil Infringement Actions, Jurisdiction

Under the well-pleaded complaint rule, as appropriately adapted to 28 U.S.C.S. § 1338\(a\), whether a claim "arises under" patent law must be determined from what necessarily appears in the plaintiff's statement of his own claim in the bill or declaration, unaided by anything alleged in anticipation or avoidance of defenses which it is thought the defendant may interpose.

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

**HN5** Civil Infringement Actions, Jurisdiction

A case raising a federal patent-law defense does not, for that reason alone, "arise under" patent law, even if the defense is anticipated in the plaintiff's complaint, and even if both parties admit that the defense is the only question truly at issue in the case. Nor is it necessarily sufficient that a well-pleaded claim alleges a single theory under which resolution of a patent-law question is essential. If, on the face of a well-pleaded complaint there are reasons completely unrelated to the provisions and purposes of the patent laws why the plaintiff may or may not be entitled to the relief it seeks, then the claim does not "arise under" those laws. Thus, a claim supported by alternative theories in the complaint may not form the basis for 28 U.S.C.S. § 1338\(a\) jurisdiction unless patent law is essential to each of those theories.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 2 of the Sherman Act condemns every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN8[] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(b).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

HN9[] Preclusion of Judgments, Law of the Case

The doctrine of the law of the case posits that when a court decides upon a rule of law, that decision should continue to govern the same issues in subsequent stages in the same case. This rule of practice promotes the finality and efficiency of the judicial process by protecting against the agitation of settled issues.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

HN10 Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

The law-of-the-case doctrine merely expresses the practice of courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided, not a limit to their power. A court has the power to revisit prior decisions of its own or of a coordinate court in any circumstance, although as a rule courts should be loathe to do so in the absence of extraordinary circumstances such as where the initial decision was clearly erroneous and would work a manifest injustice.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > Statutory Sources

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Creation & Organization

HN11 Jurisdictional Sources, Statutory Sources

Courts created by statute can have no jurisdiction but such as the statute confers.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Court of Appeals for Federal Circuit held not to have jurisdiction over appeal from District Court where complaint asserted antitrust claims for which patent law theory was not necessary to success.

Summary

Three days after the leading manufacturer of the M16 rifle had voluntarily dismissed patent infringement claims which it had brought in the United States District Court for the Central District of Illinois against one of its former employees, who had started a business of selling M16 parts, the former employee brought an action in the District Court against the manufacturer, seeking (1) damages and injunctive and equitable relief for the manufacturer's violations of 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 and 2), and (2) actual and punitive damages under state law for the manufacturer's tortious interference with his business relationships. In the complaint, the former employee alleged that he had been driven out of the business of selling parts for the M16 by the manufacturer's litigation tactics and communications to others, including representations by the manufacturer to several of the former employee's current and potential customers that the former employee was misappropriating the manufacturer's trade secrets. The complaint also included allegations stating that unless the manufacturer's basic and improvement patents relating to the M16--many of which had already expired--were invalid, anyone with ordinary skill in the rifle-making art was able to use the technology of the patents upon their expiration. The manufacturer answered, interposing the defense that its conduct was justified by a need to protect its trade secrets, and asserting counterclaims which arose out of the former employee's alleged misappropriation of such trade secrets. Prior to trial, the former employee moved for summary judgment, expressly raising for the first time the contention that the manufacturer's patents relating to the M16 were invalid from their inception for failure to meet the "enablement" and "best mode" requirements of 35 USCS 112. Because of such invalidity, the former employee argued, the trade secrets which the patents should have disclosed lost any applicable state-law protections, and were invalid with respect to the former employee's claims to which such invalidity was material, including (1) his monopolization claim under 2 of the Sherman Act, based on the manufacturer's lawsuit and letters to his competitors, and (2) his "group-boycott" claim under 1 of the Sherman Act, in that virtually all his suppliers and customers had agreed with the manufacturer to stop doing business with him. The District Court granted the former employee's summary judgment motion (609 F Supp 1174), and subsequently entered an order stating that (1) nine of the manufacturer's already-expired patents relating to the M16 were invalidated from their inception, and (2) all of the manufacturer's trade secrets regarding the M16, whether connected with the patents or not, were void and unenforceable, and technical information relating to such trade secrets was to be made available to the former employee (613 F Supp 330). The manufacturer appealed to the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. The former employee moved to transfer the appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, on the ground that the claims of the complaint in the action did not "arise under" a federal patent statute, and thus that the Federal Circuit did not have jurisdiction of the claim under 28 USCS 1295\(a\)\(1\), which incorporates 28 USCS 1338 by reference. In an unpublished order, the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit granted the transfer motion. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, raising the issue of its jurisdiction over the appeal sua sponte, concluded that the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit had been "clearly wrong," and transferred the appeal back to the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit \(798 F2d 1051\). On retransfer, the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit (1) adhered to its prior conclusion that it lacked jurisdiction over the appeal, and stated that the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit had exhibited a monumental misunderstanding of the patent jurisdiction granted to the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, (2) ruled that it nevertheless would address the merits of the appeal in the "interest of justice," and (3) reversed the summary judgment which the District Court had granted to the former employee (822 F2d 1544).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court vacated the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit and remanded with instructions to transfer the case to the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. In an opinion by Brennan, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that (1) pursuant to the well-pleaded complaint rule, the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit did not have jurisdiction over the manufacturer's appeal, since a patent law issue, while arguably necessary to at least one theory under both the former employee's monopolization and group-boycott antitrust claims, was not necessary to the overall success of either claim, in that there were reasons completely unrelated to the provisions and purposes of patent law why the former employee might or might not be entitled to the relief he sought under both claims; (2) the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit was not obliged to adopt the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit's analysis of the jurisdictional issue as the law of the case; and (3) the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, upon properly concluding that it lacked jurisdiction, should not have decided the merits anyway "in the interest of justice."

Stevens, J., joined by Blackmun, J., concurred, expressing the view that if the question whether a claim arises under the patent laws is asked at the end of a trial in order to decide whether the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has appellate jurisdiction, the answer may be different than if the question had been asked at the outset to decide whether a Federal District Court has jurisdiction to try the case.

Headnotes

---

APPEAL §228 > Federal Circuit jurisdiction -- claims "arising under" patent laws -- antitrust claims -- remand -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E]

The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit does not have appellate jurisdiction, pursuant to its authority under 28 USCS 1295\(a\)\(1\), to review a final decision of a Federal District Court based in whole or in part on 28 USCS 1338--which provides, in 1338(a), that District Courts have original jurisdiction of civil actions "arising under" any Act of Congress relating to patents--where a patent law issue, while arguably necessary to at least one theory under (1) a monopolization claim under 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2) and (2) a group-boycott claim under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), both of which were raised in District Court in the plaintiff's antitrust count, which was the only complaint count arguably involving such issues, is not necessary to the overall success of either claim; accordingly, the United States Supreme Court will (1) vacate, for lack of jurisdiction, a judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit which, while disavowing the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit's appellate jurisdiction in a case retransferred to it by the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit--after the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit had found the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit's initial transfer to it under 28 USCS 1631 to be "clearly wrong"--improperly proceeded to reach the merits anyway "in the interest of justice," and (2) remand the case to the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit with instructions to transfer the case to the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

COURTS §257 > federal question jurisdiction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Under 28 USCS 1331, a Federal District Court's federal question jurisdiction extends over only those cases in which a well-pleaded complaint establishes either that the federal law creates the cause of action or that the plaintiff's right to relief necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial question of federal law, in that federal law is a necessary element of one of the well-pleaded claims.

COURTS §289 > federal question jurisdiction -- patent laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

A Federal District Court's jurisdiction under 28 USCS 1338 extends only to those cases in which a well-pleaded complaint establishes either that the federal patent law creates the cause of action or that the plaintiff's right to relief necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial question of federal patent law, in that patent law is a necessary element of one of the well-pleaded claims.

COURTS §289 > federal question jurisdiction -- patent laws -- anticipation of defenses -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Under the well-pleaded complaint rule, as appropriately adapted to 28 USCS 1338, whether a claim "arises under" patent law must be determined from what necessarily appears in the plaintiff's statement of his own claim in the bill or declaration, unaided by anything alleged in anticipation or avoidance of defenses which it is thought the defendant may interpose; a case raising a patent law defense does not, for that reason alone, "arise under" patent law, even if the defense is anticipated in the plaintiff's complaint, and even if both parties admit that the defense is the only question truly at issue in the case.

COURTS §289 > REMOVAL OF CAUSES §67 > federal question jurisdiction -- patent laws -- omission of necessary patent claims -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

Merely because a claim makes no reference to federal patent law does not necessarily mean that the claim does not "arise under" patent law within the meaning of 28 USCS 1338; just as a plaintiff may not defeat removal, for lack of general federal question jurisdiction, by omitting to plead necessary federal questions in a complaint, so a plaintiff may not defeat 1338 jurisdiction by omitting to plead necessary federal patent law questions.

COURTS §289 > federal question jurisdiction -- patent laws -- alternative theories -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

It is not necessarily sufficient, for purposes of securing jurisdiction under 28 USCS 1338, that a well-pleaded claim alleges a single theory under which resolution of a patent law question is essential; if on the face of a well-pleaded complaint there are reasons completely unrelated to the provisions and purposes of the patent laws why the plaintiff may or may not be entitled to the relief it seeks, then the claim does not "arise under" those laws for purposes of 1338; thus, a claim supported by alternative theories in the complaint may not form the basis for 1338 jurisdiction unless patent law is essential to each of those theories.

COURTS §289 > federal jurisdiction -- patent laws -- monopolization claim -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B] [LEdHN\[7C\]](#) [7C]

A claim in a Federal District Court action that the leading manufacturer, seller, and marketer of M16 rifles engaged in conduct constituting monopolization against a former employee who operated a business of manufacturing and selling M16 parts, in violation of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), does not "arise under" the federal patent laws within the meaning of 28 USCS 1338 where, although one theory of relief advanced by the former employee involves a patent law issue--namely, that the manufacturer made false assertions in its letters and pleadings that the former employee was violating its trade secrets, when such trade secrets were not protected under state law because the manufacturer's M16 patents were invalid under 35 USCS 112--there are other reasons completely unrelated to the provisions and purposes of federal patent law why the former employee may or may not be entitled to the relief he seeks under the monopolization claim, including the facts, as disclosed in the complaint, (1) that the manufacturer authorized the former employee's use of the trade secrets to some extent, and (2) that most of the manufacturer's alleged monopolization conduct--which included the use of inapplicable court orders, misrepresentations that such orders protected its proprietary data, and the filing of a prior lawsuit against the former employee in bad faith so as to urge current and potential customers to refrain from doing business with the former employee--could be deemed wrongful apart from the truth or falsity of the manufacturer's accusations that the former employee had infringed the manufacturer's trade secrets.

COURTS §289 > federal jurisdiction -- patent laws -- group boycott claim -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

A claim in a Federal District Court action that the leading manufacturer, seller, and marketer of M16 rifles, engaged in conduct constituting a group boycott, in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), by agreeing with virtually all suppliers and customers of a former employee who operated a business of manufacturing and selling M16 parts to refrain from transacting further business with the former employee, does not "arise under" the federal patent laws within the meaning of 28 USCS 1338 where, notwithstanding the former employee's attempt to prove the unreasonableness of the alleged agreement--under the theory that its purpose was to protect the manufacturer's trade secrets from infringement by the former employee, but that the manufacturer had no trade secrets to infringe since the patents giving rise to the proprietary information protected were invalid under 35 USCS 112--the complaint contains alternative, nonpatent theories of relief on its face, including the theory that the alleged agreement was unreasonable because the manufacturer had authorized the former employee to use the trade secrets.

COURTS §255 > federal question jurisdiction -- well-pleaded complaint -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

The well-pleaded complaint rule for determining federal question jurisdiction under 28 USCS 1331 focuses on claims, and not theories of entitlement to relief.

APPEAL §228 > COURTS §255 > Federal Circuit jurisdiction -- well-pleaded complaint -- patent laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit cannot assert appellate jurisdiction over an appeal under 28 USCS 1295\(a\)\(1\), notwithstanding the well-pleaded complaint rule, based on a derivation from the congressional policy of creating a Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit with exclusive jurisdiction over certain patent cases, that Congress' goals would be better served if such jurisdiction were instead fixed by reference to the case actually litigated; since a Federal District Court's jurisdiction is determined by reference to the well-pleaded complaint, not the well-tried case, the referent for the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit's jurisdiction under 1295(a)(1) must be the same, and the legislative history of the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit's jurisdictional provisions confirms that focus; the United States Supreme Court has no more authority to read 1295(a)(1) as granting the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit jurisdiction over an appeal where the well-pleaded complaint does not depend on patent law, than to read 28 USCS 1338 as granting a District Court jurisdiction over such a complaint.

APPEAL §228 > Federal Circuit jurisdiction -- patent laws -- implied cause of action -- consent of parties -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [11B]

The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit does not have appellate jurisdiction, notwithstanding the well-pleaded complaint rule, to review a Federal District Court summary judgment on grounds that summary judgment papers gave rise to an implied cause of action under 35 USCS 112, a federal patent statute--in which case the pleadings were amended by the consent of the parties to include such cause of action under Rule 15(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure--where, although the papers focused almost entirely on patent law issues, (1) there was no evidence of any consent among the parties to litigate the new patent law claim, but rather such issues fell squarely within the purview of theories of recovery, defenses, and counterclaims that the pleadings in the case already encompassed, and (2) the District Court never intimated that the patent issues were relevant to any cause of action other than those raised expressly in the complaint.

APPEAL §228 > COURTS §632 > Federal Circuit -- determination of jurisdiction -- law of the case -- effect of transfer --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [12A] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [12B]

The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit cannot assert appellate jurisdiction over an appeal from a Federal District Court judgment, notwithstanding the well-pleaded complaint rule, based on principles of the law of the case--pursuant to a determination by the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, on transfer from the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, that the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit had jurisdiction over the appeal--where (1) the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, to which the appeal had first been taken, was the first to decide the jurisdictional issue by transferring the case to the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, even though the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit did not explicate its rationale for transferring the case--which meant that the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, and not the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, had departed from the law of the case, (2) even if the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit's decision was the law of the case, the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit did not exceed its power in revisiting the jurisdictional issue and concluding that the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit's decision was "clearly wrong," and (3) law of the case did not bind the United States Supreme Court in reviewing the decisions below.

APPEAL §1766 > law of the case -- coordinate courts -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

Under the doctrine of the law of the case, when a court decides upon a rule of law, that decision should continue to govern the same issues in subsequent stages in the same case; such rule of practice, promoting the finality and efficiency of the judicial process by protecting against the agitation of settled issues, applies as much to the decisions of a coordinate court in the same case as to a court's own decisions, since the policies supporting the doctrine apply with even greater force to transfer decisions than to decisions of substantive law--otherwise, transferee courts that feel entirely free to revisit transfer decisions of a coordinate court could threaten to send litigants into a vicious circle of litigation.

APPEAL §1766 > law of the case -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

The law of the case doctrine turns on whether a court previously decided upon a rule of law, not on whether, or how well, it explained its decision; the doctrine expresses the practice of the courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided, and is not a limit to their power; a court has the power to revisit prior decisions of its own or of a coordinate court in any circumstance, although as a rule courts should be loathe to do so in the absence of extraordinary circumstances, such as where the initial decision was clearly erroneous and would work a manifest injustice.

APPEAL §1766 > law of the case -- Supreme Court review -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

The doctrine of the law of the case cannot bind the United States Supreme Court in reviewing decisions below, and a petition to the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari can expose the entire case to review; just as a Federal District Court's adherence to the law of the case cannot insulate an issue from appellate review, a Federal Court of Appeals' adherence to the law of the case cannot insulate an issue from the Supreme Court's review.

APPEAL §228 > Federal Circuit -- authority where jurisdiction is lacking -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

Where the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has correctly concluded that it lacks jurisdiction, the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has no authority to reach the merits anyway "in the interest of justice"; under 28 USCS 1631, the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has authority to make a single decision upon concluding that it lacks jurisdiction--whether to dismiss the case or, "in the interest of justice," to transfer it to a Federal Court of Appeals that has jurisdiction.

COURTS §161 > statutory jurisdiction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

Courts created by statute can have no jurisdiction but such as the statute confers.

APPEAL §1766 > COURTS §632 > law of the case -- transfer -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18]

Under law of the case principles, if a transferee Federal Court of Appeals can find the transfer decision by another Court of Appeals plausible, the transferee court's jurisdictional inquiry is at an end.

Syllabus

---

The principal statutes involved in this case, which arises from a jurisdictional dispute between Courts of Appeals, are 28 U.S. C. § 1295\(a\)\(1\) -- granting the Federal Circuit exclusive jurisdiction over an appeal from a final decision of a federal district court "if the jurisdiction of that court was based, in whole or in part, on" 28 U.S. C. § 1338 -- and § 1338\(a\), which grants the district courts original jurisdiction of any civil action "arising under" any federal statute relating to patents. Respondent (Colt), which is the leading manufacturer, seller, and marketer of M16 rifles and their parts and accessories, held and developed patents relating to the rifle, and has maintained the secrecy [***2] as to specifications essential to the mass production of interchangeable M16 parts. Petitioner Christianson, a former Colt employee, established a corporation (also a petitioner), and began selling M16 parts. Colt joined petitioners with other defendants in a patent-infringement lawsuit, but ultimately voluntarily dismissed its claims against petitioners. In the meantime, Colt notified several of petitioners' current and potential customers that petitioners were illegally misappropriating Colt's trade secrets, and urged them to refrain from doing business with petitioners. Petitioners then brought this antitrust action against Colt in Federal District Court for violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The complaint alleged, inter alia, that Colt's letters, litigation tactics, and other conduct drove petitioners out of business. Petitioners later amended the complaint to assert a second cause of action under state law for tortious interference with their business relationships. Colt asserted a defense that its conduct was justified by a need to protect its trade secrets and countersued on a variety of claims arising out of petitioners' alleged misappropriation of M16 patent [***3] specifications. Petitioners filed a motion for summary judgment raising a patent-law issue -- related to the validity of Colt's patents -- to which the complaint only obliquely hinted. The District Court awarded petitioners summary judgment as to liability on both the antitrust and the tortious-interference claims. On Colt's appeal, the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit held that it lacked jurisdiction and transferred the appeal to the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. The Seventh Circuit, however, raising the jurisdictional issue sua sponte, concluded that the Federal Circuit was "clearly wrong" and transferred the case back. The Federal Circuit, although concluding that the Seventh Circuit's jurisdictional decision was "clearly wrong," addressed the merits in the "interest of justice," and reversed the District Court.

Held:

1. The Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit would not have jurisdiction of the appeal of a final judgment in this case under 28 U.S. C. § 1295\(a\)\(1\), since the action is not one "arising under" the patent statutes for purposes of § 1338\(a\). Pp. 807-813.

(a) In order to demonstrate that a case [****4] is one "arising under" federal patent law the plaintiff must set up some right, title, or interest under the patent laws, or at least make it appear that some right or privilege will be defeated by one construction, or sustained by the opposite construction, of those laws. Section 1338\(a\) jurisdiction extends only to those cases in which a well-pleaded complaint establishes either that federal patent law creates the cause of action or that the plaintiff's right to relief necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial question of federal patent law, in that patent law is a necessary element of one of the well-pleaded claims. A case raising a federal patent-law defense does not, for that reason alone, "arise under" patent law, even if the defense is anticipated in the complaint, and even if both parties admit that the defense is the only question truly at issue in the case. Nor is it necessarily sufficient that a well-pleaded claim alleges a single theory under which resolution of a patent-law question is essential. If on the face of a well-pleaded complaint there are reasons completely unrelated to the provisions and purposes of the patent laws why the plaintiff may or may not [****5] be entitled to the relief it seeks, then the claim does not "arise under" those laws. Pp. 807-810.

(b) Petitioners' antitrust count can readily be understood to encompass both a monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act and a group-boycott claim under § 1. The patent-law issue, while arguably necessary to at least one theory under each claim, is not necessary to the overall success of either claim. Even assuming, without deciding, that the validity of Colt's patents is an essential element of petitioners' monopolization theory rather than merely an argument in anticipation of a defense, the well-pleaded complaint rule focuses on claims, not theories, and just because an element that is essential to a particular theory might be governed by federal patent law does not mean that the entire monopolization claim "arises under" patent law. Examination of the complaint reveals that the monopolization theory (on which petitioners ultimately prevailed in the District Court) is only one of several involved, and the only one for which the patent-law issue is even arguably essential. Since there are reasons completely unrelated to the provisions and purposes of federal patent law [****6] why petitioners may or may not be entitled to the relief sought under their monopolization claim, the claim does not "arise under" federal patent law. The same analysis obtains as to petitioners' group-boycott claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Pp. 810-813.

2. Nor does reference to congressional policy compel a finding of Federal Circuit jurisdiction. One of Congress' objectives in creating the Federal Circuit was to reduce the lack of uniformity and uncertainty of legal doctrine in the administration of patent law. Although arguably Congress' goals might be better served if the Federal Circuit's jurisdiction were to be fixed by reference to the case actually litigated, nevertheless, Congress determined the relevant focus when it granted Federal Circuit jurisdiction on the basis of the district courts' jurisdiction. Since the latter courts' jurisdiction is determined by reference to the well-pleaded complaint, not the well-tried case, the referent for the Federal Circuit's jurisdiction must be the same. The legislative history of the Federal Circuit's jurisdictional provisions confirms that focus. Pp. 813-814.

3. Federal Circuit jurisdiction here cannot be based on *Federal [****7] Rule of Civil Procedure 15(b)* by deeming the complaint amended to encompass a new and independent cause of action -- an implied cause of action under the patent laws. Even assuming that a court of appeals could furnish itself a jurisdictional basis under such theory, there is simply no evidence of any "express or implied consent" among the parties, as required by the Rule, to litigate a new patent-law claim. Although the summary judgment papers focused almost entirely on patent-law issues that petitioners deemed fundamental to the lawsuit, those issues fell squarely within the purview of the theories of recovery, defenses, and counterclaims that the pleadings already encompassed. Pp. 814-815.

4. There is no merit to the contention that the Federal Circuit was obliged to adopt the Seventh Circuit's analysis of the jurisdictional issue as the law of the case. The law-of-the-case doctrine applies as much to the decisions of a coordinate court in the same case as to a court's own decisions, and the policies supporting the doctrine apply with even greater force to transfer decisions than to decisions of substantive law. However, the Federal Circuit, in transferring the case to the [****8] Seventh Circuit, was the first to decide the jurisdictional issue. That the Federal Circuit did not explain its rationale is irrelevant. Thus, the law of the case was that the Seventh Circuit had jurisdiction, and it was the Seventh Circuit that departed from the law of the case. Moreover, the doctrine merely expresses the practice of courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided, not a limit on their power. Thus, even if the Seventh Circuit's decision was law of the case, the Federal Circuit did not exceed its power in revisiting the jurisdictional issue, and once it concluded that the prior decision was "clearly wrong" it was obliged to decline jurisdiction. Most importantly, law of the case cannot bind this Court in reviewing decisions below. Pp. 815-818.

5. The Federal Circuit, after concluding that it lacked jurisdiction, erred in deciding to reach the merits anyway "in the interest of justice." Courts created by statute only have such jurisdiction as the statute confers. Upon concluding that it lacked jurisdiction, the Federal Circuit had authority, under 28 U.S. C. § 1631, to make a single decision -- whether to dismiss the case or, [****9] "in the interest of justice," to transfer it to a court of appeals that has jurisdiction. The rule that a court may not in any case, even in the interest of justice, extend its jurisdiction where none exists has always worked injustice in particular cases -- especially in the situation where, as here, the litigants are bandied back and forth between two courts, each of which insists that the other has jurisdiction. Such situations inhere in the very nature of jurisdictional lines, for few jurisdictional lines can be so finely drawn as to leave no room for disagreement on close cases. However, the courts of appeals should achieve the end of quick settlement of questions of transfer by adhering strictly to principles of law of the case. Under those principles, if the transferee court can find the transfer decision plausible, its jurisdictional inquiry is at an end. Pp. 818-819.

Counsel: Stuart R. Lefstein argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Spiro Berevskos and John C. McNett.

Anthony M. Radice argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Joseph C. Markowitz, Kim J. Landsman, and Robert L. Harmon.

Judges: BRENNAN, J., delivered the opinion for [****10] a unanimous Court. STEVENS, J., filed a concurring opinion, in which BLACKMUN, J., joined, post, p. 819.

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

---

[*803] [*822] [**2171] JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

[1111] LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A]This case requires that we decide a peculiar jurisdictional battle between the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit and the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. Each court has adamantly disavowed jurisdiction over this case. Each has transferred the case to the other. And each insists that the other's jurisdictional decision is "clearly wrong." [*804] 798 F.2d 1051, 1056-1057 (CA7 1986); 822 F.2d 1544, 1551, n. 7 (CA Fed. 1987). The parties therefore have been forced to shuttle their appeal back and forth between Chicago and the District of Columbia in search of a hospitable forum, ultimately to have the merits decided, after two years, by a Court of Appeals that still insists it lacks jurisdiction to do so.

I

Respondent Colt Industries Operating Corp. is the leading manufacturer, seller, and marketer of M16 rifles and their parts and accessories. [****11] Colt's dominant market position dates back to 1959, when it acquired a license for 16 patents to manufacture the M16's precursor. Colt continued to develop the rifle, which the United States Army adopted as its standard assault rifle, and patented additional improvements. Through various devices, Colt has also maintained a shroud of secrecy around certain specifications essential to the mass production of interchangeable M16 parts. For example, Colt's patents conceal many of the manufacturing specifications that might otherwise be revealed by its engineering drawings, and when Colt licenses others to manufacture M16 parts or hires employees with access to proprietary information, it contractually obligates them not to disclose specifications.

Petitioner Christianson is a former Colt employee who acceded to such a nondisclosure agreement. Upon leaving respondent's employ in 1975, Christianson established petitioner International Trade Services, Inc. (ITS), and began selling M16 parts to various customers domestically and abroad. Petitioners' business depended on information that Colt considers proprietary. Colt expressly waived its proprietary rights [**2172] at least as to some [****12] of petitioners' [***823] early transactions. The precise scope of Colt's waiver is a matter of considerable dispute. In 1983, however, Colt joined petitioners as defendants in a patent-infringement lawsuit against two companies that had arranged a sale of M16's to El Salvador. [*805] Evidence suggested that petitioners supplied the companies with certain M16 [1112] specifications, and Colt sought a court order enjoining petitioners from any further disclosures. When the District Court declined the motion, Colt voluntarily dismissed its claims against petitioners. In the meantime, Colt notified several of petitioners' current and potential customers that petitioners were illegally misappropriating Colt's trade secrets, and urged them to refrain from doing business with petitioners.

Three days after their dismissal from the lawsuit, petitioners brought this lawsuit in the District Court against Colt "pursuant to Section 4 . . . (15 U.S. C. § 15) and Section 16 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S. C. § 26) for damages, injunctive and equitable relief by reason of its violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S. C. §§ 1 [****13] & 2) . . . ." App. 7. The complaint alleged that Colt's letters, litigation tactics, and "othe[r] . . . conduct" drove petitioners out of business. In that context, petitioners included the following obscure passage:

"18. The validity of the Colt patents had been assumed throughout the life of the Colt patents through 1980. Unless such patents were invalid through the wrongful retention of proprietary information in contravention of United States Patent Law (35 U.S. C. § 112), in 1980, when such patents expired, anyone 'who has ordinary skill in the rifle-making art' is able to use the technology of such expired patents for which Colt earlier had a monopoly position for 17 years.

"19. ITS and anyone else has the right to manufacture, contract for the manufacture, supply, market and sell the M-16 and M-16 parts and accessories thereof at the present time." Id., at 9.

Petitioners later amended their complaint to assert a second cause of action under state law for tortious interference with their business relationships. Colt interposed a defense that [*806] its conduct was justified by a need to protect its trade secrets and countersued [****14] on a variety of claims arising out of petitioners' alleged misappropriation of M16 specifications.

Petitioners' motion for summary judgment raised only a patent-law issue obliquely hinted at in the above-quoted paragraphs -- that Colt's patents were invalid from their inception for failure to disclose sufficient information to "enable any person skilled in the art . . . to make and use the same" as well as a description of "the best mode contemplated by the inventor of carrying out his invention." 35 U.S. C. § 112. Since Colt benefited from the protection of the invalid patents, the argument continues, the "trade secrets" that the patents should have disclosed lost any state-law protection. Petitioners therefore argued that the District Court should hold that "Colt's trade secrets are invalid and that [their] claim of invalidity shall be taken as established with respect to all claims [***824] and counterclaims to which said issue is material." App. 58.

The District Court awarded petitioners summary judgment as to liability on both the antitrust and the tortious-interference claims, essentially relying on the § 112 theory articulated above. In the process, [****15] the District Court invalidated nine of Colt's patents, declared all trade secrets relating to the M16 unenforceable, enjoined Colt from enforcing "any form of trade secret right in any technical information relating to the M16," and ordered Colt to disgorge to petitioners all such information. 613 F. Supp. 330, 332 \(CD Ill. 1985\).

Respondent appealed to the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, which, after full briefing and argument, concluded that it lacked jurisdiction and issued an unpublished order transferring the appeal to the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. See 28 U.S. C. § 1631. The Seventh Circuit, [**2173] however, raising the jurisdictional issue sua sponte, concluded that the Federal Circuit was "clearly wrong" and transferred the case back. 798 F.2d at 1056-1057, 1062. [*807] The Federal Circuit, for its part, adhered to its prior jurisdictional ruling, concluding that the Seventh Circuit exhibited "a monumental misunderstanding of the patent jurisdiction granted this court," 822 F.2d at 1547, and was "clearly wrong," id., at 1551, n. 7. Nevertheless, the [****16] Federal Circuit proceeded to address the merits in the "interest of justice," id., at 1559-1560, and reversed the District Court. We granted certiorari, 484 U.S. 985 (1987), and now vacate the judgment of the Federal Circuit.

II

LEdHN[1B] [1B] As relevant here, 28 U.S. C. § 1295(a)(1) HN1 grants the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit exclusive jurisdiction over "an appeal from a final decision of a district court of the United States . . . if the jurisdiction of that court was based, in whole or in part, on [28 U.S. C.] section 1338 . . ." <sup>1</sup> Section 1338(a), [1113] in turn, provides in relevant part that "the district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action arising under any Act of Congress relating to patents . . ." Thus, the jurisdictional issue before us turns on whether this is a case "arising under" a federal patent statute, for if it is then the jurisdiction of the District Court was based at least "in part" on § 1338.

[****17] A

LEdHN[2] [2] LEdHN[3] [3] In interpreting § 1338's precursor, we held long ago that HN2 in order to demonstrate that a case is one "arising under" federal patent law "the plaintiff must set up some right, title or interest under the patent laws, or at least make it appear that some right or privilege will be defeated by one construction, [*808] or sustained by the opposite construction of these laws." Pratt v. Paris Gas Light & Coke Co., 168 U.S. 255, 259, 42 L. Ed. 458, 18 S. Ct. 62 (1897). See [***825] Henry v. A. B. Dick Co., 224 U.S. 1, 16, 56 L. Ed. 645, 32 S. Ct. 364 (1912). Our cases interpreting identical language in other jurisdictional provisions, particularly the general federal-question provision, 28 U.S. C. § 1331 ("The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States"), have quite naturally [****18] applied the same test.<sup>2</sup> See Gully v. First National Bank in Meridian, 299 U.S. 109, 112, 81 L. Ed. 70, 57 S. Ct. 96 (1936) (the claim alleged in the complaint "must be such that it will be supported if the Constitution or laws of the United States are given one construction or effect, and defeated if they receive another") (citations omitted). HN3 A district court's federal-question jurisdiction, we recently explained, extends over "only those cases in which a well-pleaded complaint establishes either that federal law creates the cause of action or that the plaintiff's right to relief necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial question" [*2174] of federal law," Franchise Tax Board of California v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1, 27-28, 77 L. Ed. 2d 420, 103 S. Ct. 2841 (1983), in that "federal law is a necessary element of one of the well-pleaded . . . claims," id. at 13. Linguistic consistency, to which we have historically adhered, demands that [****19] § 1338(a) jurisdiction likewise extend [*809] only to those cases in which a well-pleaded complaint establishes either that federal patent law creates the cause of action or that the plaintiff's right to relief necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial question of federal patent law, in that patent law is a necessary element of one of the well-pleaded claims. See 822 F.2d at 1553-1556; 798 F.2d at 1059-1061.

[****20] LEdHN[4] [4] LEdHN[5A] [5A] The most superficial perusal of petitioners' complaint establishes, and no one disputes, that patent law did not in any sense create petitioners' antitrust or intentional-interference claims. Since no one asserts that federal jurisdiction rests on petitioners' state-law claims, the dispute centers around whether patent law "is a necessary element of one of the well-pleaded [antitrust] claims." See Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals Inc. v. Thompson, 478 U.S. 804, 813, 92 L. Ed. 2d 650, 106 S. Ct. 3229 (1986). Our cases, again mostly in the § 1331 context, establish principles for both defining the "well-pleaded . . . claims" and discerning which elements are "necessary" or "essential" to them. HN4 Under the well-pleaded complaint rule, as appropriately adapted to § 1338\(a\), whether a claim "arises under" patent law "must be determined from what necessarily appears in the plaintiff's statement of his own claim in the [****21] bill or declaration, unaided by anything [***826] alleged in anticipation or avoidance of defenses which it is thought the defendant may interpose." Franchise Tax Board, supra, at 10 (quoting Taylor v. Anderson, 234 U.S. 74, 75-76, 58 L. Ed. 1218, 34 S. Ct. 724 \(1914\)). See Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Mottley, 211 U.S. 149, 53 L. Ed. 126, 29 S. Ct. 42 \(1908\). Thus, HN5 a case raising a federal patent-law defense does not, for that reason alone, "arise under" patent law, "even if the defense is anticipated in the plaintiff's complaint, and even if both parties admit that the defense is the only question truly at issue in the case." Franchise Tax Board, supra, at 14.<sup>3</sup> See also Merrell Dow, supra, at 808.

<sup>1</sup> Colt's appeal to the Federal Circuit actually invoked 28 U.S. C. §§ 1292(a)(1) and (c)(1), which together grant the Federal Circuit exclusive jurisdiction over appeals from interlocutory orders "granting, continuing, modifying, refusing or dissolving [an] injunctio[n]," § 1292(a)(1), "in any case over which the court would have jurisdiction over an appeal under section 1295," § 1292(c)(1).

<sup>2</sup> Colt correctly points out that in this case our interpretation of § 1338(a)'s "arising under" language will merely determine which of two federal appellate courts will decide the appeal, and suggests that our "arising under" jurisprudence might therefore be inapposite. Since, however, § 1338(a) delineates the jurisdiction of the federal and state courts over cases involving patent issues, the phrase (like the identical phrase in § 1331) "masks a welter of issues regarding the interrelation of federal and state authority and the proper management of the federal judicial system." See Franchise Tax Board of California v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1, 8, 77 L. Ed. 2d 420, 103 S. Ct. 2841 (1983) (footnote omitted). See also Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals Inc. v. Thompson, 478 U.S. 804, 810, 92 L. Ed. 2d 650, 106 S. Ct. 3229 (1986) ("Determinations about federal jurisdiction require sensitive judgments about congressional intent, judicial power, and the federal system").

[1114] [****22] [*810] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]Nor is it necessarily sufficient that a well-pleaded claim alleges a single theory under which resolution of a patent-law question is essential. If "on the face of a well-pleaded complaint there are . . . reasons completely unrelated to the provisions and purposes of [the patent laws] why the [plaintiff] may or may not be entitled to the relief it seeks," Franchise Tax Board, 463 U.S. at 26 (footnote omitted), then the claim does not "arise under" those laws. See id., at 26, n. 29. Thus, a claim supported by alternative theories in the complaint may not form the basis for § 1338\(a\) jurisdiction unless patent law is essential to each of those theories.

B

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A]Framed in these terms, our resolution of the jurisdictional issue in this case is straightforward. Petitioners' antitrust count can readily be understood to encompass [****23] both a monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act and a group boycott claim under § 1. The patent-law issue, while arguably necessary to at least one [**2175] theory under each claim, is not necessary to the overall success of either claim.

[LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B] [7B]Section 2 of the Sherman Act HN6 condemns " every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize . . ." 15 U.S. C. § 2. The thrust of petitioners' monopolization claim is that Colt has "embarked on a course of conduct to illegally extend its monopoly position with respect to the described patents and to prevent ITS from engaging in any business with respect to parts and accessories of the M-16." App. 10. The complaint specifies several acts, most of which relate either to Colt's prosecution of the lawsuit against petitioners or to letters Colt sent to petitioners' potential and existing customers. To make out a § 2 claim, petitioners would [*811] have to present a theory under which the identified conduct amounted to a "willful [****24] acquisition or maintenance of [monopoly] power as distinguished from growth or development [***827] as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\). Both the Seventh Circuit and Colt focus entirely on what they perceive to be "the only basis Christianson asserted in the complaint for the alleged antitrust violation, "798 F.2d at 1061; see Brief for Respondent 32 -- namely, that Colt made false assertions in its letters and pleadings that petitioners were violating its trade secrets, when those trade secrets were not protected under state law because Colt's patents were invalid under § 112. Thus, Colt concludes, the validity of the patents is an essential element of petitioners' prima facie monopolization theory and the case "arises under" patent law.

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]We can assume without deciding that the invalidity of Colt's patents is an essential element of the foregoing monopolization theory rather than merely an argument in anticipation of a defense. [****25] But see 822 F.2d at 1547. The well-pleaded complaint rule, however, focuses on claims, not theories, see Franchise Tax Board,

<sup>3</sup> [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

On the other hand, merely because a claim makes no reference to federal patent law does not necessarily mean the claim does not "arise under" patent law. Just as "a plaintiff may not defeat removal by omitting to plead necessary federal questions in a complaint," Franchise Tax Board, supra, at 22 (citations omitted); see Federated Department Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 397, n. 2, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103, 101 S. Ct. 2424 \(1981\); id., at 408, n. 3 (BRENNAN, J., dissenting), so a plaintiff may not defeat § 1338\(a\) jurisdiction by omitting to plead necessary federal patent-law questions.

supra, at 26, and n. 29; Gully, 299 U.S. at 117, and just because an element that is essential to a particular theory might be governed by federal patent law does not mean that the entire monopolization claim "arises under" patent law.

LEdHN[7C] [↑] [7C] Examination of the complaint reveals that the monopolization theory that Colt singles out (and on which petitioners ultimately prevailed in the District Court) is only one of several, and the only one for which the patent-law issue is even arguably essential. So far as appears from the complaint, for example, petitioners might have attempted to prove that Colt's accusations of trade-secret infringement were false not because Colt had no trade secrets, but because Colt authorized petitioners to use them. App. 9-10 ("Contrary to the permission extended to ITS to sell Colt parts and accessories [*812] and in violation of the anti-trust laws . . . Colt has embarked upon a course of conduct . . . [****26] . to prevent ITS from engaging in any business with respect to parts and accessories of the M-16"). In fact, most of the conduct alleged in the complaint could be deemed wrongful quite apart from the truth or falsity of Colt's accusations. According to the complaint, Colt's letters also (1) contained "copies of inapplicable court orders" and "suggest[ed] that these court orders prohibited [the recipients] from doing business with" petitioners; and (2) "falsely stat[ed] that 'Colt's right' to proprietary data had been 'consistently upheld in various courts.'" Id., at 10. Similarly, the complaint alleges that Colt's lawsuit against petitioners (1) was designed "to contravene the permission previously given"; (2) was "pursued . . . in bad faith by subjecting [petitioners] to substantial expense in extended discovery procedures"; and (3) was [1115] brought only to enable Colt "to urge customers and potential customers of [petitioners] to refrain from doing business with them." Id., at 10-11. Since there are "reasons completely unrelated to the provisions and purposes" of federal patent law why petitioners "may or may not be entitled to the [**2176] relief [they] see[k]" [****27] under their monopolization claim, Franchise Tax Board, supra, at 26 [***828] (footnote omitted), the claim does not "arise under" federal patent law.

LEdHN[8B] [↑] [8B] The same analysis obtains as to petitioners' group-boycott claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, which provides that HNT [↑] "every contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is declared to be illegal," 15 U.S.C. § 1. This claim is set forth in the allegation that "virtually all suppliers of ITS and customers of ITS have agreed with Colt to refrain from supplying and purchasing M-16 parts and accessories to or from ITS, which has had the effect of requiring ITS to close its doors and no longer transact business." App. 11. As this case unfolded, petitioners attempted to prove that the alleged agreement was unreasonable because its purpose was to protect Colt's trade secrets from petitioners' infringement and, given the patents' [*813] invalidity under § 112, Colt had no trade secrets [****28] to infringe. Whether or not the patent-law issue was an "essential" element of that group-boycott theory, however, petitioners could have supported their group-boycott claim with any of several theories having nothing to do with the validity of Colt's patents. Equally prominent in the complaint, for example, is a theory that the alleged agreement was unreasonable not because Colt had no trade secrets to protect, but because Colt authorized petitioners to use them. Once again, the appearance on the complaint's face of an alternative, nonpatent theory compels the conclusion that the group-boycott claim does not "arise under" patent law.

III

LEdHN[10A] [↑] [10A] LEdHN[11A] [↑] [11A] LEdHN[12A] [↑] [12A] Colt offers three arguments for finding jurisdiction in the Federal Circuit, notwithstanding the well-pleaded complaint rule. The first derives from congressional policy; the second is based on Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(b); and the third is grounded in principles of the law of the case. We [****29] find none of them persuasive.

A

LEdHN[10B] [↑] [10B] Colt correctly observes that one of Congress' objectives in creating a Federal Circuit with exclusive jurisdiction over certain patent cases was "to reduce the widespread lack of uniformity and uncertainty of legal doctrine that exist[ed] in the administration of patent law." H. R. Rep. No. 97-312, p. 23 (1981). Colt might be correct (although not clearly so) that Congress' goals would be better served if the Federal Circuit's jurisdiction were to be fixed "by reference to the case actually litigated," rather than by an ex ante hypothetical assessment of the elements of the complaint that might have been dispositive. Brief for Respondent 31. Congress determined the relevant focus, however, when it granted jurisdiction to the Federal Circuit over "an appeal from . . . a [*814] district court . . . if the jurisdiction of that court was based . . . on section 1338." 28 U.S.C. § 1295\(a\)\(1\) (emphasis added). Since the district court's jurisdiction is determined by reference to the well-pleaded complaint, not the well-tried case, [****30] the referent for the Federal Circuit's jurisdiction must be the same. The legislative history of the Federal Circuit's jurisdictional provisions confirms that focus. See, e. g., H. R. Rep. No. 97-312, supra, at 41 (cases fall within the Federal Circuit's patent jurisdiction "in the [****829] same sense that cases are said to 'arise under' federal law for purposes of federal question jurisdiction"). In view of that clear congressional intent, we have no more authority to read § 1295\(a\)\(1\) as granting the Federal Circuit jurisdiction over an appeal where the well-pleaded complaint does not depend on patent law, than to read § 1338\(a\) as granting a district court jurisdiction over such a complaint. See Pratt, 168 U.S. at 259.

B

[LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [↑] [11B]Colt suggests alternatively that under [**2177] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(b)<sup>4</sup> we should deem the complaint amended to encompass a new and independent cause of action -- "an implied cause of action under section 112 of the patent laws." Brief for Respondent 28. Such a cause of action, which Colt finds in petitioners' summary judgment [****31] papers, would plainly "arise under" [1116] the patent laws, regardless of its merit. See 822 F.2d at 1566 (Nichols, J., concurring and dissenting).

We need not decide under what circumstances, if any, a court of appeals could furnish itself a jurisdictional basis unsupported by the pleadings by deeming the complaint [*815] amended in light of the parties' "express or implied consent" to litigate a claim. *Fed. Rule Civ. [****32] Proc.* 15(b). In this case there is simply no evidence of any consent among the parties to litigate the new patent-law claim that Colt imputes to petitioners. Colt points to nothing in petitioners' summary judgment motion expressly raising such a new cause of action, much less anything in its own motion papers suggesting consent to one. See App. 57-58. True, the summary judgment papers focused almost entirely on the patent-law issues, which petitioners deemed "basic and fundamental to the subject lawsuit." Id. at 57. But those issues fell squarely within the purview of the theories of recovery, defenses, and counterclaims that the pleadings already encompassed. Petitioners recognized as much when they moved the District Court to hold that their "claim of [patent] invalidity shall be taken as established with respect to all claims and counter-claims to which said issue is material." Id. at 58. Thus, the patent-law focus of the summary judgment papers hardly heralded the assertion of a new patent-law claim. See, e. g., Quillen v. International Playtex, Inc., 789 F.2d 1041, 1044 \(CA4 1986\); 6 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1493, [****33] p. 466 (1971). Moreover, the District Court never intimated that the patent issues were relevant to any cause of action other than the antitrust and intentional-interference claims raised expressly in the complaint; the court four times linked its judgment to "liability on Counts I and II," without any reference to the hypothetical Count III that Colt imputes to petitioners. 609 F. Supp. 1174, 1185 \(CD Ill. 1985\) See also 613 F. Supp. at 332.

[***830] C

[LEdHN\[13T\]](#) [↑] [13]Colt's final argument is that the Federal Circuit was obliged not to revisit the Seventh Circuit's thorough analysis of the jurisdictional issue, but merely to adopt it as the law of the case. See also 822 F.2d at 1565 (Nichols, J., concurring and dissenting). "As most commonly defined, HN9 [↑] the doctrine [*816] [of the law of the case] posits that when a court decides upon a rule of law, that decision should continue to govern the same issues in subsequent stages in the same case." Arizona v. California, 460 U.S. 605, 618, 75 L. Ed. 2d 318, 103 S. Ct. 1382 \(1983\) [****34] (dictum). This rule of practice promotes the finality and efficiency of the judicial process by "protecting against the agitation of settled issues." 1B J. Moore, J. Lucas, & T. Currier, Moore's Federal Practice P0.404[1], p. 118 (1984) (hereinafter Moore's).

<sup>4</sup> HN8 [↑] Rule 15(b) provides in relevant part:

"When issues not raised by the pleadings are tried by express or implied consent of the parties, they shall be treated in all respects as if they had been raised in the pleadings. Such amendment of the pleadings as may be necessary to cause them to conform to the evidence and to raise these issues may be made upon motion of any party at any time, even after judgment; but failure to so amend does not affect the result of the trial of these issues."

Colt is correct that the doctrine applies as much to the decisions of a coordinate court in the same case as to a court's own decisions. See, e. g., Kori Corp. v. Wilco Marsh Buggies & Draglines, Inc., 761 F.2d 649, 657 (CA Fed.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 902, 88 L. Ed. 2d 229, 106 S. Ct. 230 (1985); Perkin-Elmer Corp. v. Computervision Corp., 732 F.2d 888, 900-901 [**2178] (CA Fed.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 857, 83 L. Ed. 2d 120, 105 S. Ct. 187 (1984). Federal courts routinely apply law-of-the-case principles to transfer decisions of coordinate courts. See, e. g., Hayman Cash Register Co. v. Sarokin, 669 F.2d 162, 164-170 (CA3 1982) (transfer under 28 U.S.C. § 1406 (a)); Skil Corp. v. Millers Falls Co., 541 F.2d 554, 558-559 (CA6) (alternative holding) (transfer under 28 U.S.C. § 1404 [****35] (a)), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1029, 50 L. Ed. 2d 631, 97 S. Ct. 653 (1976); 1B Moore's PP0.404[4.-5], 0.404[8]. Cf. Hoffman v. Blaski, 363 U.S. 335, 340-341, n. 9, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1254, 80 S. Ct. 1084 (1960) (res judicata principles did not limit power of Court of Appeals to reconsider transfer decision not upset by coordinate court). Indeed, the policies supporting the doctrine apply with even greater force to transfer decisions than to decisions of substantive law; transferee courts that feel entirely free to revisit transfer decisions of a coordinate court threaten to send litigants into a vicious circle of litigation. See Hayman, supra, at 169; Chicago & N. W. Transp. Co. v. United States, 574 F.2d 926, 930 (CA7 1978). Cf. Blaski, supra, at 348-349 (Frankfurter, J., dissenting).<sup>5</sup>

[****36] [*817] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [↑] [12B] [LEdHN\[14\]](#) [↑] [14] [LEdHN\[15\]](#) [↑] [15] Colt's conclusion that jurisdiction therefore lay in the Federal Circuit is flawed, however, for three reasons. First, the Federal Circuit, in transferring the case to the Seventh Circuit, was the first to decide the [1117] jurisdictional issue. That the Federal Circuit did not explicate its rationale is irrelevant, for the law of the case turns on whether a court previously "decide[d] upon a rule of law" -- which the Federal Circuit necessarily did -- not on whether, or how well, it explained the decision. Thus, the law of the case was that the Seventh Circuit had jurisdiction, and it was the Seventh [***831] Circuit, not the Federal Circuit, that departed from the law of the case. Second, HN10 [↑] the law-of-the-case doctrine "merely expresses the practice of courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided, not a limit to their power. [****37] " Messenger v. Anderson, 225 U.S. 436, 444, 56 L. Ed. 1152, 32 S. Ct. 739 (1912) (Holmes, J.) (citations omitted). A court has the power to revisit prior decisions of its own or of a coordinate court in any circumstance, although as a rule courts should be loathe to do so in the absence of extraordinary circumstances such as where the initial decision was "clearly erroneous and would work a manifest injustice." Arizona v. California, supra, at 618, n. 8 (citation omitted). Thus, even if the Seventh Circuit's decision was law of the case, the Federal Circuit did not exceed its power in revisiting the jurisdictional issue, and once it concluded that the prior decision was "clearly wrong" it was obliged to decline jurisdiction. Most importantly, law of the case cannot bind this Court in reviewing decisions below. A petition for writ of certiorari can expose the entire case to review. Panama R. Co. v. Napier Shipping Co., 166 U.S. 280, 283-284, 41 L. Ed. 1004, 17 S. Ct. 572 (1897). Just as a district court's adherence to law of the case cannot insulate an issue from appellate review, a court of appeals' adherence to the [***38] law of the case cannot insulate an issue from this Court's review. See [Messenger, \[\*818\] supra, at 444](#); Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Wolf Brothers & Co., 240 U.S. 251, 257-259, 60 L. Ed. 629, 36 S. Ct. 269 (1916).

IV

[LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [↑] [1D] [LEdHN\[16\]](#) [↑] [16] [LEdHN\[17\]](#) [↑] [17] Our agreement with the Federal Circuit's conclusion that it lacked jurisdiction, compels us to disapprove of its decision to reach the merits anyway "in the interest of justice." 822 F.2d at 1559. HN11 [↑] [**2179] Courts created by statute can have no jurisdiction but such as the statute confers." Sheldon v. Sill, 49 U.S. 441, 8 HOW 441, 449, 12 L. Ed. 1147 (1850). See also Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Risjord, 449 U.S. 368, 379-380, 66 L. Ed. 2d 571, 101 S. Ct. 669 (1981). The statute confers on the Federal Circuit authority to make a single [***39] decision upon concluding that it lacks jurisdiction -- whether to dismiss the case or, "in the interest of justice," to transfer it to a court of appeals that has jurisdiction. 28 U.S.C. § 1631.

---

<sup>5</sup> There is no reason to apply law-of-the-case principles less rigorously to transfer decisions that implicate the transferee's jurisdiction. Perpetual litigation of any issue -- jurisdictional or nonjurisdictional -- delays, and therefore threatens to deny, justice. But cf. Potomac Passengers Assn. v. Chesapeake & Ohio R. Co., 171 U.S. App. D.C. 359, 363, n. 22, 520 F.2d 91, 95, n. 22 (1975).

The age-old rule that a court may not in any case, even in the interest of justice, extend its jurisdiction where none exists has always worked injustice in particular cases. Parties often spend years litigating claims only to learn that their efforts and expense were wasted in a court that lacked jurisdiction. Even more exasperating for the litigants (and wasteful for all concerned) is a situation where, as here, the litigants are bandied back and forth helplessly between two courts, each of which insists the other has jurisdiction. Such situations inhere in the very nature of jurisdictional lines, for as our cases aptly illustrate, few jurisdictional lines can be so finely drawn as to leave no room for disagreement on close cases. See, e. g., K mart Corp. v. Cartier, Inc., 485 U.S. 176, 99 L. Ed. 2d 151, 108 S. Ct. 950 (1988); United States v. Hohri, 482 U.S. 64, 96 L. Ed. 2d 51, 107 S. Ct. 2246 (1987).

[****40] [LEdHN\[18\]](#) [↑] [18]That does not mean, however, [***832] that every borderline case must inevitably culminate in a perpetual game of jurisdictional ping-pong until this Court intervenes to resolve the underlying jurisdictional dispute, or (more likely) until one of the parties surrenders to futility. Such a state of affairs would undermine public confidence in our judiciary, squander [*819] private and public resources, and commit far too much of this Court's calendar to the resolution of fact-specific jurisdictional disputes that lack national importance. "Surely a seemly system of judicial remedies . . . regarding controverted transfer provisions of the United States Code should encourage, not discourage, quick settlement of questions of transfer . . ." Blaski, 363 U.S. at 349 (Frankfurter, J., dissenting). The courts of appeals should achieve this end by adhering strictly to principles of law of the case. See supra, at 816. Situations might arise, of course, in which the transferee court considers the transfer "clearly erroneous." Arizona v. California, 460 U.S. at 618, n. 8. But [****41] as "the doctrine of the law of the case is . . . a heavy deterrent to vacillation on arguable issues," 1B Moore's P0.404[1], at 124, such reversals should necessarily be exceptional; courts will rarely transfer cases over which they have clear jurisdiction, and close questions, by definition, never have clearly correct answers. Under law-of-the-case principles, if the transferee court can find the transfer decision plausible, its jurisdictional inquiry is at an end. See Fogel v. Chestnutt, 668 F.2d 100, 109 (CA2 1981) ("The law of the case will be disregarded only when the court has 'a clear conviction of error'") (citation omitted), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 828 [1118] (1982). While adherence to the law of the case will not shield an incorrect jurisdictional decision should this Court choose to grant review, see supra, at 817-818, it will obviate the necessity for us to resolve every marginal jurisdictional dispute.

[LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [↑] [1E]We vacate the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit and remand with instructions to transfer the case to the Court of Appeals for the [****42] Seventh Circuit. See 28 U.S. C. § 1631.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: STEVENS

Concur

---

JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE BLACKMUN joins, concurring.

In a seminal case construing federal-question jurisdiction, Justice Cardozo wrote that "what is needed is something of [*820] that common-sense accommodation of judgment to kaleidoscopic situations which characterizes the law in its treatment of [**2180] problems of causation . . . a selective process which picks the substantial causes out of the web and lays the other ones aside." Gully v. First National Bank in Meridian, 299 U.S. 109, 117-118, 81 L. Ed. 70, 57 S. Ct. 96 (1936). Although I agree with the Court's conclusion in this case that appellate jurisdiction is in the Seventh Circuit rather than the Federal Circuit, I write separately to emphasize that a common-sense application of Justice Cardozo's dictum requires that the answer to the question whether a claim arises under the patent laws [***833] may depend on the time when the question is asked. More specifically, if the question is asked at the end of a trial in order to decide whether the Federal Circuit has appellate [****43] jurisdiction, the answer may be different than if it had been asked at the outset to decide whether a federal district court has jurisdiction to try the case.

When Congress passed the Federal Courts Improvement Act in 1982 and vested exclusive jurisdiction in the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit to resolve appeals of claims that had arisen under the patent laws in the federal district courts, it was responding to concerns about both the lack of uniformity in federal appellate construction of the patent laws and the forum-shopping that such divergent appellate views had generated. Nonetheless, its definition of the Federal Circuit's jurisdiction did not embrace all cases in which a district court had decided a patent-law question. Instead, it adopted a standard that requires the appellate court to decide whether the jurisdiction of the district court was based, in whole or in part, on a claim "arising under" the patent laws.<sup>1</sup>

[****44] [*821] The question whether a claim arises under the patent laws is similar to the question whether a claim arises under federal law. Although there is no single, precise, all-embracing definition of either body of law, the "vast majority" of cases that come within either "grant of jurisdiction" are covered by Justice Holmes' statement that a 'suit arises under the law that creates the cause of action.' Thus, the vast majority of cases brought under the general federal-question jurisdiction of the federal courts are those in which federal law creates the cause of action." Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals Inc. v. Thompson, 478 U.S. 804, 808, 92 L. Ed. 2d 650, 106 S. Ct. 3229 (1986) (citation omitted). In this case it is clear that the causes of action asserted by petitioners were created by the antitrust laws and not the patent laws. Congress did not create an express cause of action to enforce § 112 of the patent laws, and I find no merit in respondent's suggestion that we should recognize an implied cause of action under § 112. Accordingly, I agree with the Court's conclusion that the issue of wrongful retention of proprietary information that became the focus [****45] of this case under § 112 of the patent laws could not confer appellate jurisdiction in the Federal Circuit, because the issue [***834] arose as a defense rather than as a claim.<sup>2</sup>

[****46] [*822] [**2181] [1119] To the extent that Part III-A of the Court's opinion does nothing more than abjure the notion that the Federal Circuit has jurisdiction over patent-law issues as well as claims, I am thus in complete agreement. However, in rejecting respondent's contention that "Congress' goals would be better served if the Federal Circuit's jurisdiction were to be fixed 'by reference to the case actually litigated,' rather than by an ex ante hypothetical assessment of the elements of the complaint that might have been dispositive," ante, at 813, the Court's opinion might be read as suggesting that whether patent claims are properly before the Federal Circuit on appeal should be determined by examining only the initial complaint and not by ascertaining whether a patent claim in fact was litigated in the case. Such an approach would assume that whether a case "arises under" the patent laws turns on the same considerations whether one is determining the Federal Circuit's appellate jurisdiction or a federal district court's original jurisdiction. But although 28 U.S.C. § 1338\(a\) provides the basis for both types of jurisdictional [****47] assessment, I think it clear that Congress could not have intended precisely the same analysis in both instances. Two simple examples will illustrate the point.

<sup>1</sup> Title 28 U.S. C. § 1295(a)(1) grants the Federal Circuit appellate jurisdiction over final decisions of federal district courts whose jurisdiction "was based, in whole or in part, on section 1338 of this title." Title 28 U.S. C. § 1338(a), in turn, grants the federal district courts "original jurisdiction of any civil action arising under any Act of Congress relating to patents . . ." As the Court correctly states, ante, at 807-810, § 1338 jurisdiction, like § 1331 jurisdiction, is over claims, not issues. See H. R. Rep. No. 97-312, p. 41 (1981) ("Cases will be within the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit in the same sense that cases are said to 'arise under' federal law for purposes of federal question jurisdiction. Contrast, Coastal States Marketing, Inc. v. New England Petroleum Corp., 604 F.2d 179 (2d Cir., 1979) [Temporary Emergency Court of Appeals properly has jurisdiction over issues, not claims, arising under the Economic Stabilization Act]").

In this context, it is important to note that the "well-pleaded complaint" rule helps ferret out claims from issues, and says nothing about whether such separation should be made only on the basis of the original complaint.

<sup>2</sup> Indeed, since it seems plain that no implied cause of action exists under § 112 -- which, after all, merely describes the nature of the specifications that must be included with a patent application -- a plaintiff's attempt at gaining federal-court jurisdiction through a claim arising under § 112 would be properly rejected under the "artful pleading" doctrine. See, e. g., Skelly Oil Co. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 339 U.S. 667, 673-674, 94 L. Ed. 1194, 70 S. Ct. 876 (1950) ("To sanction suits for declaratory relief as within the jurisdiction of the District Courts merely because, as in this case, artful pleading anticipates a defense based on federal law would contravene the whole trend of jurisdictional legislation by Congress, disregard the effective functioning of the federal judicial system and distort the limited procedural purpose of the Declaratory Judgment Act"); Federated Department Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 397, n. 2, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103, 101 S. Ct. 2424 (1981) (District Court properly found that respondents "had attempted to avoid removal jurisdiction by 'artful[ly]' casting their 'essentially federal law claims' as state-law claims"); Caterpillar Inc. v. Williams, 482 U.S. 386, 397, 96 L. Ed. 2d 318, 107 S. Ct. 2425 (1987) ("artful pleading" doctrine cannot be invoked by party attempting to justify removal on the basis of facts not alleged in the complaint); 14A C. Wright, A. Miller, & E. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure § 3722, pp. 266-276 (1985); see also Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals Inc. v. Thompson, 478 U.S. 804, 92 L. Ed. 2d 650, 106 S. Ct. 3229 (1986) (incorporation of federal standard in state-law private action, when no cause of action, either express or implied, exists for violations of that federal standard, does not make the action one "arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States").

If a patentee should file a two-count complaint seeking damages (1) under the antitrust laws and (2) for patent infringement, the district court's jurisdiction would unquestionably be based, at least in part, on § 1338\(a\). If, however, pretrial discovery convinced the plaintiff that no infringement had occurred, and Count 2 was therefore dismissed voluntarily in advance of trial, the case that would actually be litigated would certainly not arise under the patent laws for purposes of appellate jurisdiction. Even though the district court's original jurisdiction when the complaint was filed had been based, in part, on § 1338\(a\), the case would no longer be one arising under the patent laws for purposes of Federal [***835] Circuit review when the district court's judgment was entered. Conversely, if an original complaint alleging only an antitrust violation should be amended after discovery to add a patent-law claim, and if the plaintiff should be successful in proving that its patent was valid and infringed but unsuccessful [****48] in proving any basis for recovery under the antitrust laws, the district court's judgment would sustain a claim arising under the patent laws even though the complaint initially invoking its jurisdiction had not mentioned it, and an appeal would properly lie in the Federal Circuit.

Whether the complaint is actually amended, as in the previous example, or constructively amended to conform to the proof, see Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 15(b),<sup>3</sup> Congress' goal of ensuring [*824] that appeals of patent-law [**2182] claims go to the Federal Circuit would be thwarted by determining that court's appellate jurisdiction only through an examination of the complaint as initially filed. That approach would enable an unscrupulous plaintiff to manipulate appellate court jurisdiction by the timing of the amendments to its complaint. The Court expressly leaves open the question whether a constructive amendment could provide the foundation for Federal Circuit patent-law jurisdiction, see ante, at 814-815,<sup>4</sup> and says nothing on the subject whether actual amendments to the complaint can [1120] so suffice. But since respondent has asked us to rule in its favor on the ground that petitioners' complaint [****49] added a patent-law claim through constructive amendment, I think we should make it perfectly clear that even though respondent's approach to the jurisdictional question is sound, its application of that approach to this case fails because the claim that was actually litigated did not arise under the patent laws. Nevertheless, since what the Court has written is not inconsistent with this view, I join its opinion.

[****50]

References

---

60 Am Jur 2d, Patents 1131-1133

2 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Appeal, Certiorari, and Review 3:301.5; 26 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Patents 60:1062

28 USCS 1295\(a\)\(1\), 1338\(a\)

---

<sup>3</sup> "Rule 15. Amended and Supplemental Pleadings.

"(b) Amendments to Conform to the Evidence. When issues not raised by the pleadings are tried by express or implied consent of the parties, they shall be treated in all respects as if they had been raised in the pleadings. Such amendment of the pleadings as may be necessary to cause them to conform to the evidence and to raise these issues may be made upon motion of any party at any time, even after judgment; but failure so to amend does not affect the result of the trial of these issues. . . ."

<sup>4</sup> "We need not decide under what circumstances, if any, a court of appeals could furnish itself a jurisdictional basis unsupported by the pleadings by deeming the complaint amended in light of the parties' 'express or implied consent' to litigate a claim. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 15(b)."

US L Ed Digest, Appeal 228

Index to Annotations, Court of Appeals; Patents

Annotation References:

Application of doctrine of law of the case to review by one federal Court of Appeals of determination by another federal Court of Appeals. 74 ALR Fed 878.

Erroneous decision as law of the case on subsequent appellate review. 87 ALR2d 271.

---

End of Document

California v. ARC America Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

February 27, 1989, Argued ; April 18, 1989, Decided

No. 87-1862

Reporter

490 U.S. 93 *; 109 S. Ct. 1661 **; 104 L. Ed. 2d 86 ***; 1989 U.S. LEXIS 2024 ****; 57 U.S.L.W. 4425; 1989-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,537

CALIFORNIA ET AL. v. ARC AMERICA CORP. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 817 F. 2d 1435, reversed.

Core Terms

---

purchasers, indirect, state law, federal law, anti trust law, pre-empted, antitrust, Sherman Act, damages, cases, purpose of congress, settlement fund, federal court, Clayton Act, settlement, purposes, distributing, pre-emption, overcharge, concrete

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1[ Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN2[ Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

There are three purposes or objectives of federal antitrust law: avoiding unnecessarily complicated litigation; providing direct purchasers with incentives to bring private antitrust actions; and avoiding multiple liability of defendants.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN3 [] Remedies, Damages

Under federal law, no indirect purchaser is entitled to sue for damages for a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, and there is no claim here that state law could provide a remedy for the federal violation that federal law forbids.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

HN4 [] Constitutional Law, Supremacy Clause

It is accepted that Congress has the authority, in exercising its U.S. Const. art. I powers, to preempt state law.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

HN5 [] Constitutional Law, Supremacy Clause

In the absence of an express statement by Congress that state law is pre-empted, there are two other bases for finding preemption. First, when Congress intends that federal law occupy a given field, state law in that field is pre-empted. Second, even if Congress has not occupied the field, state law is nevertheless pre-empted to the extent it actually conflicts with federal law, that is, when compliance with both state and federal law is impossible, or when the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

HN6 [] Constitutional Law, Supremacy Clause

When Congress legislates in a field traditionally occupied by the states, the court starts with the assumption that the historic police powers of the states were not to be superseded by the Federal Act unless that was the clear and manifest purpose of Congress. Given the long history of state common-law and statutory remedies against monopolies and unfair business practices, it is plain that this is an area traditionally regulated by the states.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

HN7 Constitutional Law, Supremacy Clause

Congress has not preempted the field of antitrust law. Congress intended the federal antitrust laws to supplement, not displace, state antitrust remedies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

HN8 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

State statutes cannot and do not purport to affect remedies available under federal law. Furthermore, state indirect purchaser actions will not necessarily be brought in federal court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN9 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Since many state indirect purchaser actions would be heard in state courts, at least when the federal courts determined that hearing those claims would be overly burdensome, any complication of federal direct purchaser actions in federal court would be minimal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN10 Private Actions, Purchasers

Requiring direct and indirect purchasers to apportion the recovery under a single statute, § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), would result in no one plaintiff having a sufficient incentive to sue under that statute. State indirect purchaser statutes pose no similar risk to the enforcement of the federal law.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

HN11 Constitutional Law, Supremacy Clause

Ordinarily, state causes of action are not preempted solely because they impose liability over and above that authorized by federal law.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Federal rule barring indirect purchasers from recovering damages for violations of federal antitrust laws held not to pre-empt state antitrust statutes permitting recovery by indirect purchasers.

Summary

A number of states brought suits in various Federal District Courts, on the states' own behalf and on behalf of classes of all nonfederal governmental entities within each state, against various cement and concrete manufacturers who had allegedly engaged in a nationwide conspiracy to fix cement prices. In these suits the states, raising claims based in part on their indirect purchases of cement--that is, purchases of cement or of products containing cement from middle level distributors rather than directly from a manufacturer--(1) alleged violations of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) and sought treble damages under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15\(a\)), which the United States Supreme Court had held to be inapplicable to indirect purchaser claims, and also (2) alleged violations of their respective state antitrust laws which expressly or arguably allowed indirect purchasers to sue. These lawsuits, together with others brought by private groups, were consolidated in the United States District Court for the District of Arizona for coordinated pretrial proceedings (437 F Supp 750), and several major defendants subsequently settled, creating a settlement fund in excess of $ 32 million. However, when the states sought payment out of the fund for their indirect purchaser claims, the class members who were direct purchasers objected; and the District Court, holding that the state indirect purchaser statutes were clear attempts to frustrate the purpose of 4 as interpreted by the Supreme Court and were thus pre-empted by federal law, approved a plan for distributing the settlement fund which did not allow claims against the fund pursuant to those statutes. In affirming the District Court's plan, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held that (1) if the state statutes were construed as allowing indirect purchasers to sue for the amount of any overcharge they absorbed, then they directly conflicted with the federal law as construed by the Supreme Court to allow direct purchasers to claim damages for the entire amount of any overcharge; and alternatively (2) if state law permitted indirect purchasers to bring claims for damages in addition to those brought by direct purchasers, then that law impermissibly interfered with the three policy goals underlying the federal ban on indirect purchaser claims, which goals were (a) avoiding unnecessarily complicated litigation, (b) providing direct purchasers with incentives to bring private antitrust actions, and (c) avoiding multiple liability of defendants (817 F2d 1435).

On appeal, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by White, J., expressing the unanimous view of the seven participating members of the court, it was held that the federal rule barring antitrust recovery by indirect purchasers relates solely to the construction of the federal antitrust laws, and does not pre-empt state antitrust laws which permit recovery by indirect purchasers, because (1) the federal antitrust statutes do not expressly pre-empt such state statutes; (2) Congress has not pre-empted the field of antitrust law; and (3) the state statutes do not pose an obstacle to the accomplishment of congressional objectives, since such state laws (a) are consistent with the broad purpose of the federal antitrust laws in deterring anticompetitive conduct and insuring the compensation of victims of such conduct, (b) are not likely to lead to unnecessarily complicated proceedings on federal antitrust claims, given that claims under the state laws may be brought in state court and that federal courts have discretion to decline to exercise pendent jurisdiction over them, (c) do not, with respect to the federal statute with which the rule is concerned, pose a risk of reducing the incentives of direct purchasers to bring antitrust actions, and (d) do not contravene any express federal policy condemning multiple liability, since the federal decisions stating the indirect purchaser rule relate to the construction of federal law and do not identify any federal policy against states imposing additional liability.

Stevens and O'Connor, JJ., did not participate.

Headnotes

---

COURTS §240 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §6 > STATES, TERRITORIES, AND POSSESSIONS §36 > pre-emption by federal law -- state antitrust statutes -- indirect purchaser recovery - - statutory purpose -- pendent jurisdiction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F] [LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [1G]

A federal rule which construes 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15\(a\)) as prohibiting indirect purchasers from recovering damages for a violation of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) relates solely to the construction of the federal antitrust laws, and does not pre-empt state antitrust statutes which permit recovery by indirect purchasers, because the federal antitrust statutes do not expressly pre-empt such state statutes, Congress has not pre-empted the field of antitrust law, and the state statutes do not pose an obstacle to the accomplishment of the purposes and objectives of Congress; with regard to congressional objectives, such state laws (1) are consistent with the broad purpose of the federal antitrust laws in deterring anticompetitive conduct and insuring the compensation of victims, (2) do not interfere with the congressional purpose of avoiding unnecessarily complicated proceedings on federal antitrust claims, given that (a) the state statutes cannot and do not purport to affect remedies available under federal law, (b) state indirect purchaser actions may be brought in state court rather than in federal court, and (c) federal courts have discretion to decline to exercise pendent jurisdiction over such actions even if those actions are brought in the first instance in federal court, (3) do not interfere with the congressional purpose by reducing the incentives of direct purchasers to bring antitrust actions, since the federal rule regarding indirect purchasers is concerned with the effect of apportioning recovery between direct and indirect purchasers under a single federal statute, and since state indirect purchaser statutes pose no similar risk to the enforcement of the federal law, and (4) do not contravene any express federal policy condemning multiple liability, since the federal indirect purchaser decisions relate to the construction of the Clayton Act and do not identify any federal policy against states imposing liability in addition to that imposed by federal law.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > antitrust damages -- indirect purchasers - - > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

No indirect purchaser is entitled to sue for damages for a violation of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.); 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15\(a\)) authorizes only direct purchasers to recover monopoly overcharges under federal law.

STATES, TERRITORIES, AND POSSESSIONS §18 > federal power -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Congress has the authority, in exercising its powers under Article I of the Federal Constitution, to pre-empt state law.

STATES, TERRITORIES, AND POSSESSIONS §22 > pre-emption by federal law -- tests -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

In the absence of an express statement by Congress that state law is pre-empted, there are two other bases for finding pre-emption: (1) when Congress intends that federal law occupy a given field, state law in that field is pre-empted; and (2) even if Congress has not occupied the field, state law is nevertheless pre-empted to the extent that it actually conflicts with federal law--that is, when compliance with both state and federal law is impossible--or when the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress.

EVIDENCE §91 > STATES, TERRITORIES, AND POSSESSIONS §33 > federal law -- pre-emption of police power -- presumption -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

When Congress legislates in a field traditionally occupied by the states, it is assumed that the historic police powers of the states are not to be superseded by the federal statute unless that is the clear and manifest purpose of Congress.

STATES, TERRITORIES, AND POSSESSIONS §36 > pre-emption by federal antitrust law -- state remedies -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

Congress intends the federal antitrust laws to supplement, not displace, state antitrust remedies.

STATES, TERRITORIES, AND POSSESSIONS §46 > pre-emption by federal law -- state causes of action -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

Ordinarily, state causes of action are not pre-empted solely because they impose liability over and above that authorized by federal law.

Syllabus

---

Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, held that, generally, only overcharged direct purchasers, and not subsequent indirect purchasers, are entitled to recover treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act for price fixing violative of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Appellant States -- who are, at least in part, indirect purchasers of cement -- brought class actions against various cement producers in the appropriate federal courts seeking treble damages under the federal antitrust laws for an alleged nationwide conspiracy to fix cement prices and damages for alleged violations of their respective state antitrust laws, which arguably allow indirect purchasers to recover for all overcharges passed on to them by direct purchasers. The [****2] cases were transferred to the District Court in Arizona for coordinated pretrial proceedings, and a settlement was reached with several major defendants. When appellants sought payment out of the settlement fund for their state indirect purchaser claims, appellees, class members who are direct purchasers, objected. The court refused to allow the claims, ruling that the state statutes are preempted by federal law because they are clear attempts to frustrate Congress' purposes and objectives, as interpreted in Illinois Brick. The Court of Appeals affirmed, holding that, depending on how they were construed, the state statutes would either conflict directly with federal law under Illinois Brick or would impermissibly interfere with the three federal antitrust policy goals that the court identified as having been defined by Illinois Brick and Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481: avoiding unnecessarily complicated litigation; providing direct purchasers with incentives to bring private antitrust actions; and avoiding multiple liability of defendants.

Held: The rule limiting federal antitrust recoveries to direct purchasers [****3] does not prevent indirect purchasers from recovering damages flowing from state antitrust law violations. Pp. 100-106.

(a) The state indirect purchaser statutes are not pre-empted by the federal antitrust laws. There is no claim of express pre-emption or of congressional occupation of the field. The claim that the state laws are inconsistent with, and stand as an obstacle to, effectuating the congressional purposes identified in Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick misunderstands these cases, which merely construed the federal antitrust laws and did not consider state-law or pre-emption standards or define the interrelationship between the federal and state law. Nothing in Illinois Brick suggests that it would be contrary to congressional purposes for States to allow indirect purchasers to recover under their own antitrust laws. Pp. 100-103.

(b) In any event, the state indirect purchaser statutes do not interfere with accomplishing the federal-law purposes as identified in Illinois Brick. First, the state statute will not engender unnecessarily complicated federal antitrust proceedings, since they cannot and do not purport to affect available federal-law remedies; [****4] since claims under them could be brought in state court, separately from federal direct purchaser actions; and since federal courts have discretion to decline to exercise pendent jurisdiction over burdensome state claims. Second, claims under the state statutes will not reduce the incentives of direct purchasers to bring private federal antitrust actions by reducing their potential recoveries. Illinois Brick was not concerned with the risk that a federal plaintiff might not be able to recover its entire damages award or might be offered less to settle. Rather, it was concerned that requiring direct and indirect purchasers to apportion the recovery under a single statute -- § 4 of the Clayton Act -- would result in no one plaintiff having a sufficient incentive to sue under that statute. The state statutes at issue pose no similar risk. That direct purchasers' recoveries may be reduced because they will have to share the settlement fund with indirect purchasers is not due to the impermissible operation of the state statutes but is, rather, a function of the fact and form of the settlement, which was intended to dispose of all claimants, whether claiming under federal or state [****5] law and whether direct or indirect purchasers. Third, claims under the state statutes will not contravene any express federal policy condemning multiple liability for antitrust defendants, since Illinois Brick and similar cases simply construed § 4, and did not identify a federal policy against imposing state liability in addition to that imposed by federal law. Pp. 103-106.

Counsel: Thomas Greene, Supervising Deputy Attorney General of California, argued the cause for appellants. With him on the briefs were John K. Van de Kamp, Attorney General, Andrea Sheridan Ordin, Chief Assistant Attorney General, Sanford N. Gruskin, Assistant Attorney General, Owen Lee Kwong, and H. Chester Horne, Jr., Deputy Attorney General, Don Siegelman, Attorney General of Alabama, and James B. Prude, Assistant Attorney General, Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona, Hubert H. Humphrey III, Attorney General of Minnesota, Stephen P. Kilgriff, Deputy Attorney General, and Kathleen M. Mahoney, Special Assistant Attorney General.

Roy T. Englert, Jr., argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging reversal. With him on the briefs were Solicitor General Fried, Assistant Attorney [****6] General Rule, Deputy Solicitor General Merrill, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Starling, Catherine G. O'Sullivan, and Marion L. Jetton.

Theodore B. Olson argued the cause for appellees. With him on the brief for appellee ARC America Corp. were Phillip H. Rudolph, John J. Hanson, and John J. Waller, Jr. David J. Leonard and David H. Nix filed a brief for appellees Class Members Allied Concrete, Inc., et al.*

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for Thirty-five States et al. by J. Joseph Curran, Jr., Attorney General of Maryland, Michael F. Brockmeyer, and Ellen S. Cooper, Alan M. Barr, and Craig J. Hornig, Assistant Attorneys General, Grace Berg Schaible, Attorney General of Alaska, and Richard D. Monkman, John Steven Clark, Attorney General of Arkansas, Duane

[****7]

Judges: White, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which all other Members joined, except Stevens and O'Connor, JJ., who took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[*96] [**91] [**1663] JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

In Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720 (1977), the State of Illinois [***92] brought suit on its own behalf and on behalf [*97] of a number of local governmental entities seeking treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 15\(a\),<sup>1</sup> for an alleged conspiracy to fix the price of concrete block in violation

---

Woodard, Attorney General of Colorado, and Thomas P. McMahon, First Assistant Attorney General, Joseph I. Lieberman, Attorney General of Connecticut, and Robert M. Langer and Steven M. Rutstein, Assistant Attorneys General, Charles M. Oberly III, Attorney General of Delaware, and David G. Culley, Deputy Attorney General, Robert A. Butterworth, Attorney General of Florida, Warren Price III, Attorney General of Hawaii, and Robert A. Marks, Rod Kimura, and Ann Catherine Blank, Deputy Attorneys General, Neil F. Hartigan, Attorney General of Illinois, Linley E. Pearson, Attorney General of Indiana, and Frank A. Baldwin, Deputy Attorney General, Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, and John R. Perkins, Deputy Attorney General, Robert T. Stephan, Attorney General of Kansas, and David M. Cooper, Assistant Attorney General, William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General of Louisiana, James E. Tierney, Attorney General of Maine, and Stephen L. Wessler, Deputy Attorney General, James M. Shannon, Attorney General of Massachusetts, and George Weber, Assistant Attorney General, Frank J. Kelley, Attorney General of Michigan, Michael C. Moore, Attorney General of Mississippi, and Robert E. Sanders, Special Assistant Attorney General, William L. Webster, Attorney General of Missouri, and Tom A. Glassberg, Assistant Attorney General, Mike Greely, Attorney General of Montana, and Joe Roberts, Assistant Attorney General, Robert M. Spire, Attorney General of Nebraska, and Dale A. Comer, Assistant Attorney General, Stephen E. Merrill, Attorney General of New Hampshire, and Terry L. Robertson, Senior Assistant Attorney General, W. Cary Edwards, Attorney General of New Jersey, and Laurel A. Price, Deputy Attorney General, Robert Abrams, Attorney General of New York, Anthony J. Celebrezze, Jr., Attorney General of Ohio, and Doreen C. Johnson, Assistant Attorney General, Robert H. Henry, Attorney General of Oklahoma, and Jane Wheeler, Assistant Attorney General, James E. O'Neil, Attorney General of Rhode Island, and Robyn Y. Davis, Assistant Attorney General, Roger A. Tellinghuisen, Attorney General of South Dakota, W. J. Michael Cody, Attorney General of Tennessee, and Perry A. Craft, Deputy Attorney General, Jim Mattox, Attorney General of Texas, Mary F. Keller, Executive Assistant Attorney General, and Allene D. Evans, Assistant Attorney General, David L. Wilkinson, Attorney General of Utah, and Richard M. Hagstrom, Assistant Attorney General, Mary Sue Terry, Attorney General of Virginia, and Allen L. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General, Kenneth O. Eikenberry, Attorney General of Washington, and Carol A. Smith, Assistant Attorney General, Charles G. Brown, Attorney General of West Virginia, C. William Ullrich, First Deputy Attorney General, and Dan Huck, Deputy Attorney General, Donald J. Hanaway, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Kevin J. O'Connor, Assistant Attorney General, and Joseph B. Meyer, Attorney General of Wyoming; for the Consumers Union of U.S., Inc., by Alan Mark Silbergeld; and for the National Conference of State Legislatures et al. by Benna Ruth Solomon, David J. Burman, and Thomas L. Boeder.

Briefs of amicus curiae urging affirmance were filed for the Business Roundtable by Thomas B. Leary and Janet L. McDavid; for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States by Bert W. Rein, James M. Johnstone, and Stephen A. Bokat; and for the National Association of Manufacturers by Otis Pratt Pearsall, Philip H. Curtis, Ronald C. Redcay, Jan S. Amundson, and Quentin Riegel.

Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General, and Anthony B. Ching, Solicitor General, filed a brief for the State of Arizona as amicus curiae.

<sup>1</sup> Section 4 provides as follows:

HN1 [↑] "[A]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1. The State and the local governments were all indirect purchasers of concrete block -- that is, they did not purchase concrete block directly from the price-fixing defendants but rather purchased products or contracted for construction into which the concrete block was incorporated by a prior purchaser. The Court held that, with limited exceptions,<sup>2</sup> only overcharged direct purchasers, and not subsequent [****8] indirect purchasers, were persons "injured in [their] business or property" within the meaning of § 4, and that therefore the State of Illinois was not entitled to recover under federal law for the portion of the overcharge passed on to it.

[****9] Appellants in the present case, the States of Alabama, Arizona, California, and Minnesota, brought suit in the appropriate federal courts on their own behalf and on behalf of classes of all governmental entities within each State, excluding the Federal Government, seeking treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act for an alleged nationwide conspiracy to fix prices of cement in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Appellants are, at least in part, indirect purchasers of cement, and so under Illinois Brick, like the State of Illinois in that [*98] case, would not be entitled to recover on their indirect purchaser claims under § 4 unless those claims fell within one of the exceptions. In their complaints, however, appellants also alleged violations of their respective state antitrust laws under which, as a matter of state law, indirect purchasers arguably are allowed to recover for all overcharges passed on to them by direct purchasers.<sup>3</sup> The claims under [***93] these [**1664] state indirect purchaser statutes are the focus of this case.

[****10] Numerous similar actions were filed by other plaintiffs in various District Courts, and the actions were transferred to the United States District Court for the District of Arizona for coordinated pretrial proceedings. In re Cement and Concrete Antitrust Litigation, 437 F. Supp. 750 \(JPML 1977\). The District Court certified the actions as class actions and established a number of plaintiff classes. Between July 1979 and October 1981, several major defendants settled [*99] with the various classes, resulting in a settlement fund in excess of $ 32 million. The settlements left distribution of the fund for later resolution, subject to approval of the District Court.

Appellants sought payment out of the settlement fund for their state indirect purchaser claims. Appellees, class members who are direct purchasers, objected. When the District Court approved a plan for distributing the settlement fund, it refused to allow the claims against the fund pursuant to state indirect purchaser statutes. According to the District Court, "[s]uch statutes are clear attempts to frustrate the purposes and objectives of Congress, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in [****11] Illinois Brick, and, accordingly, are preempted by federal law." App. to Juris. Statement A-31 (emphasis omitted).

without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U. S. C. § 15\(a\).

<sup>2</sup> The Court noted two possible exceptions: when the direct purchaser and the indirect purchaser have entered into pre-existing cost-plus contracts, Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S., at 732, n. 12, and when the direct purchaser is owned or controlled by the indirect purchaser, id., at 736, n. 16.

<sup>3</sup> The statutes of Alabama, California, and Minnesota expressly allow indirect purchasers to sue. See Ala. Code § 6-5-60\(a\) (1975) (allowing recovery by any person "injured or damaged . . . , direct or indirect"); Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code Ann. § 16750\(a\) (West Supp. 1989) (allowing recovery "regardless of whether such injured person dealt directly or indirectly with the defendant"); Minn. Stat. § 325D.57 (1988) (allowing recovery by any person "injured directly or indirectly"). A number of other jurisdictions have similar statutes. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-4-106 (Supp. 1988); D. C. Code § 28-4509\(a\) (1981); Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-14\(c\) (1985); Ill. Rev. Stat., ch. 38, para. 60-7(2) (1988); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-801\(b\) (Supp. 1988); Md. Com. Law Code Ann. § 11-209 (1983); Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 445.778 (West Supp. 1988); Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-9 (1972); N. M. Stat. Ann. § 57-1-3\(A\) (1987); R. I. Gen. Laws § 6-36-12\(g\) (1985); S. D. Codified Laws § 37-1-33 (1986); Wis. Stat. § 133.18 (1987-1988).

The Arizona statute, Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 44-1408\(A\) (1987), generally follows the language of the Clayton Act, but it might be interpreted as a matter of state law as authorizing indirect purchasers to recover. This is appellants' position. See Brief for Appellants 19, n. 6; Juris. Statement 9. Appellees dispute this interpretation, Brief for Appellee ARC America Corp. 21, n. 14, and the District Court and the Court of Appeals did not pass on this question given their holdings that even if the statute was so interpreted it was pre-empted by federal law. We express no opinion on this question of Arizona law.

The Ninth Circuit affirmed. In re Cement and Concrete Antitrust Litigation, 817 F. 2d 1435 (1987). The Court of Appeals identified HN2 "three purposes or objectives of federal antitrust law in this context," as defined by Illinois Brick and Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481 (1968): avoiding unnecessarily complicated litigation; providing direct purchasers with incentives to bring private antitrust actions; and avoiding multiple liability of defendants. 817 F. 2d, at 1445. If state laws permitting indirect purchasers to recover were construed to restrict direct purchasers to suing only for the amount of any overcharge they have absorbed, the Court of Appeals was of the view that state law conflicted directly with federal law as construed in Illinois Brick. Alternatively, if state law permitted indirect purchasers to bring claims for damages in addition to the claims brought by direct [****12] purchasers, it would "impermissibly interfere with the three policy goals outlined in Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick." 817 F. 2d, at 1445. The Court of Appeals therefore held that state indirect purchaser claims that did not satisfy any exception to Illinois Brick were pre-empted.

[*100] Appellants appealed to this Court, invoking our jurisdiction under 28 U. S. C. § 1254\(2\). We noted probable jurisdiction, 488 U.S. 814 (1988), and we now reverse.

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A][LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A]We should first make it clear exactly what the issue is before us. These cases alleged violations of both the Sherman Act and state antitrust Acts. The settlements, as [***94] we understand it, covered both the federal and the state-law claims; the settlement fund was intended to be distributed in complete satisfaction of those claims. HN3 Under federal law, no indirect purchaser is entitled to sue for damages for a Sherman [***13] Act violation, and there is no claim here that state law could provide a remedy for the federal violation that federal law forbids. Had these cases gone to trial and a Sherman Act violation been proved, only direct purchasers would have been entitled to damages for that violation, and there is no suggestion by the parties that the same rule should not apply to distributing that part of the fund that was meant to settle the Sherman Act claims. The issue before us is whether this rule limiting recoveries under the Sherman Act also prevents indirect purchasers from recovering damages flowing from violations of state law, despite express state statutory provisions giving [**1665] such purchasers a damages cause of action.

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3] [LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]The path to be followed in pre-emption cases is laid out by our cases. HN4 It is accepted that Congress has the authority, in exercising its Article I powers, to pre-empt state law. [***14] HN5 In the absence of an express statement by Congress that state law is pre-empted, there are two other bases for finding pre-emption. First, when Congress intends that federal law occupy a given field, state law in that field is pre-empted. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. State Energy Resources Conservation and Development Comm'n, 461 U.S. 190, 212-213 (1983). Second, even if Congress has not occupied the field, state law is nevertheless pre-empted to the extent it actually conflicts with federal law, that is, when compliance with both state and federal law is impossible, Florida Lime & Avocado Growers, Inc. v. Paul, 373 U.S. 132, 142-143 (1963), or [*101] when the state law "stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress," Hines v. Davidowitz, 312 U.S. 52, 67 (1941). See, e. g., Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 464 U.S. 238, 248 (1984).

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]In this case, in addition, appellees must overcome the pre-umption against [***15] finding pre-emption of state law in areas traditionally regulated by the States. See Hillsborough County v. Automated Medical Laboratories, Inc., 471 U.S. 707, 716 (1985). HN6 When Congress legislates in a field traditionally occupied by the States, "we start with the assumption that the historic police powers of the States were not to be superseded by the Federal Act unless that was the clear and manifest purpose of Congress." Rice v. Santa Fe Elevator Corp., 331 U.S. 218, 230 (1947). Given the long history of state common-law and statutory remedies against monopolies and unfair business practices,<sup>4</sup> it is plain that this is an area traditionally [***95] regulated by the States. Cf. Florida Lime & Avocado Growers, supra, at 146 (regulation to "prevent the deception of consumers").

---

<sup>4</sup> At the time of the enactment of the Sherman Act, 21 States had already adopted their own antitrust laws. Mosk, State Antitrust Enforcement and Coordination with Federal Enforcement, 21 A. B. A. Antitrust Section 358, 363 (1962). Moreover, the Sherman Act itself, in the words of Senator Sherman, "does not announce a new principle of law, but applies old and well recognized principles of the common law to the complicated jurisdiction of our State and Federal Government." 21 Cong. Rec. 2456 (1890).

[****16] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [↑] [6]In light of these principles, the Court of Appeals erred in holding that the state indirect purchaser statutes are pre-empted. There is no claim that the federal antitrust laws expressly pre-empt state laws permitting indirect purchaser recovery.<sup>5</sup> Moreover, appellees concede that HNT [↑] Congress has not pre-empted the field of antitrust law. Brief for Appellee [*102] ARC America Corp. 10, n. 5; Brief for Appellees Allied Concrete, Inc., et al. 4. Congress intended the federal antitrust laws to supplement, not displace, state antitrust remedies. 21 Cong. Rec. 2457 (1890) (remarks of Sen. Sherman); see Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 632-635 \(1976\) (Stewart, J., dissenting). And on several prior occasions, the Court has recognized that the federal antitrust laws do not pre-empt state law. See Watson v. Buck, 313 U.S. 387, 403 \(1941\); Puerto Rico v. Shell Co., 302 U.S. 253, 259-260 \(1937\); [****17] cf. Exxon Corp. v. Governor of Maryland, 437 U.S. 117, 133-134 \(1978\).

[**1666] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [↑] [1C]Appellees' only contention is that state laws permitting indirect purchaser recoveries pose an obstacle to the accomplishment of the purposes and objectives of Congress. State laws to this effect are consistent with the broad purposes of the federal antitrust laws: deterring anticompetitive conduct and ensuring the compensation of victims of that conduct. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S., at 746; Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 485-486 \(1977\). The Court of Appeals concluded, however, that such laws are inconsistent with and stand as an obstacle to effectuating [****18] the congressional purposes and policies identified in Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick.<sup>6</sup> In this respect, the Court of Appeals has misunderstood both Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick.

Neither of those cases addressed the pre-emptive force of the federal antitrust laws. Neither case contains any discussion of state law or of the relevant standards for pre-emption [****19] of state law. As we made clear in Illinois Brick, the issue [*103] before the Court in both that case and in Hanover Shoe was strictly a question of statutory interpretation -- what was the proper construction of § 4 of the Clayton Act. See, e. g., 431 U.S., at 736.

[LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [↑] [1D][LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [↑] [2B]It is one thing to consider the congressional policies identified in Illinois Brick and Hanover Shoe [***96] in defining what sort of recovery federal antitrust law authorizes; it is something altogether different, and in our view inappropriate, to consider them as defining what federal law allows States to do under their own antitrust law. As construed in Illinois Brick, § 4 of the Clayton Act authorizes only direct purchasers to recover monopoly overcharges under federal law. We construed § 4 as not authorizing indirect purchasers to recover under federal law because that would be contrary to the purposes of Congress. But nothing in Illinois Brick suggests that it would be contrary to congressional purposes [****20] for States to allow indirect purchasers to recover under their own antitrust laws.

[LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [↑] [1E]The Court of Appeals also erred in concluding that state indirect purchaser statutes interfere with accomplishing the purposes of the federal law that were identified in Illinois Brick. First, the Court of Appeals concluded that state indirect purchaser statutes interfere with the congressional purpose of avoiding unnecessarily complicated proceedings on federal antitrust claims. But these HN8 [↑] state statutes cannot and do not purport to affect remedies available under federal law. Furthermore, state indirect purchaser actions will not necessarily be brought in federal court. 817 F. 2d, at 1445. Unlike the federal indirect purchaser claims asserted in Illinois Brick, which would have been exclusively within the jurisdiction of the federal courts, 15 U. S. C. §§ 15\(a\), 26, claims under state indirect purchaser statutes could be brought in state courts, separately from federal actions brought [****21] by direct purchasers. Moreover, federal courts have the discretion to decline to exercise pendent jurisdiction over state indirect purchaser claims, even if those claims are brought in [*104] the first instance in federal court. See Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 725-726 \(1966\). HN9[ Since many state indirect purchaser actions would be heard in state courts, at least when the federal courts determined that hearing those claims would be overly burdensome, any complication of federal direct purchaser actions in federal court would be minimal.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. National Cooperative Research Act of 1984, 15 U. S. C. § 4303\(c\) \(1982 ed., Supp. V\); Export Trading Company Act of 1982, 15 U. S. C. §§ 4016, 4002\(a\)\(7\).

<sup>6</sup> In one respect, the Court of Appeals was overly narrow in its description of the congressional purposes identified in Illinois Brick. In Illinois Brick, the Court was concerned not merely that direct purchasers have sufficient incentive to bring suit under the antitrust laws, as the Court of Appeals asserted, but rather that at least some party have sufficient incentive to bring suit. Indeed, we implicitly recognized as much in noting that indirect purchasers might be allowed to bring suit in cases in which it would be easy to prove the extent to which the overcharge was passed on to them. See 431 U.S., at 732, n. 12.

Second, the Court of Appeals reasoned that allowing state indirect purchaser [**1667] claims could reduce the incentives of direct purchasers to bring antitrust actions by reducing their potential recoveries. The presence of indirect purchaser claims would reduce settlement offers to direct purchasers, the Court of Appeals believed, and if the total liability were to exhaust a defendant's assets, the direct purchasers would have to share the defendant's estate in bankruptcy with indirect purchasers. But the Court in [****22] Illinois Brick was not concerned with the risk that a plaintiff might not be able to recover its entire damages award or might be offered less to settle. Indeed, taken to its extreme, the Court of Appeals' logic would lead to the pre-emption of any state-law claims against antitrust defendants, even if wholly unrelated, because the presence of other litigation could threaten the defendants with bankruptcy and reduce their willingness to settle. Illinois Brick was concerned that HN10[ requiring direct and indirect purchasers to apportion the recovery under a single statute -- § 4 [***97] of the Clayton Act -- would result in no one plaintiff having a sufficient incentive to sue under that statute. State indirect purchaser statutes pose no similar risk to the enforcement of the federal law.

Appellees argue that because the defendants in these antitrust actions have settled and there is a limited settlement fund, the indirect purchasers' claims are pre-empted because those claims will likely reduce the amount that can be paid from the fund to direct purchasers.<sup>7</sup> But as we said earlier, [****23] [*105] the settlement covered both federal and state-law claims, and whatever amount is allocable to federal claims will be distributed only to direct purchasers. Indirect purchasers will participate only in distributing the funds available to claimants under state law. Even if the settlement fund is not to be divided between state and federal-law claimants, the settlement necessarily was intended to dispose of all claimants, whether claiming under federal or state law and whether direct or indirect purchasers. That direct purchasers may have to share with indirect purchasers is a function of the fact and form of settlement rather than the impermissible operation of state indirect purchaser statutes.

[LEdHN\[1F\]](#)[][1F] [****24] [LEdHN\[7\]](#)[][7]Third, the Court of Appeals concluded that state indirect purchaser claims might subject antitrust defendants to multiple liability, in contravention of the "express federal policy" condemning multiple liability. 817 F. 2d, at 1446 (citing Illinois Brick; Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 544 \(1983\); and Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 474-475 \(1982\)). But Illinois Brick, as well as Associated General Contractors and Blue Shield, all were cases construing § 4 of the Clayton Act; in none of those cases did the Court identify a federal policy against States imposing liability in addition to that imposed by federal law. HN11 Ordinarily, state causes of action are not pre-empted solely because they impose liability over and above that authorized by federal law, see [Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 464 U.S., at 257-258; California v. Zook, 336 U.S. 725, 736 \(1949\), [****25] and no clear purpose of Congress indicates that we should decide otherwise in this case.

---

<sup>7</sup> Contrary to the Court of Appeals' suggestion, 817 F. 2d, at 1445, there is no contention here that the state indirect purchaser statutes themselves seek to limit the recovery direct purchasers can obtain under federal law.

LEdHN[1G] [↑] [1G] When viewed properly, Illinois Brick was a decision construing the federal antitrust laws, not a decision defining the interrelationship between the federal and state antitrust laws. The congressional purposes on which Illinois Brick was based provide no support for a finding that state indirect [*106] purchaser statutes are pre-empted by federal law. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is therefore reversed.

So ordered.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 296, 469, 628

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:177, 54:179.5

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:74, 48:84

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 15\(a\)

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 67; States, Territories, and Possessions 36

Index to Annotations, Pre-emption; Restraints [****26] of Trade and Monopolies; States

Annotation References:

Standing to sue, under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) and predecessor statute, to recover treble damages for antitrust violation-- Supreme Court cases. 73 L Ed 2d 1427.

Discretion of federal court to remit relevant state issues to state court in which no action is pending. 94 L Ed 879; 3 L Ed 2d 1827.

Discretionary exercise of pendent jurisdiction of federal court over state claim when joined with claim arising under laws, treaties, or Constitution of United States. 76 ALR Fed 46.

Right of retail buyer of price-fixed product to sue manufacturer on federal antitrust claim. 55 ALR Fed 919.

---

End of Document

Browning-Ferris Indus. v. Kelco Disposal

Supreme Court of the United States

April 18, 1989, Argued ; June 26, 1989, Decided

No. 88-556

Reporter

492 U.S. 257 *; 109 S. Ct. 2909 **; 106 L. Ed. 2d 219 ***; 1989 U.S. LEXIS 3285 ****; 57 U.S.L.W. 4985; 1989-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,630

BROWNING-FERRIS INDUSTRIES OF VERMONT, INC., ET AL. v. KELCO DISPOSAL, INC., ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 845 F. 2d 404, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

fine, amercements, punitive damages, excessive fines, award of punitive damages, damages, cases, limits, courts, monetary penalty, district court, award damages, monetary sanctions, civil case, inflicted, private party, common law, proceedings, Dictionary, forfeiture, pecuniary, wrongdoer, purposes, sentence, juries, cruel and unusual punishment, criminal law, proportionality, court of appeals, suggests

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Cruel & Unusual Punishment

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Cruel & Unusual Punishment

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Measurement of Damages > Constitutional Requirements

HN1 [blue icon] Damages, Punitive Damages

On the basis of the history and purpose of the Eighth Amendment, its Excessive Fines Clause does not apply to awards of punitive damages in cases between private parties.

I JGÁWÈJÉG Í ÉEG Í LAF EU ÁUÉDÉGJ EU ÉEGJ EU LAF EU ÁSEÓAÉGÁGFJ ÉEEFGJ LÁJÍ JÁWÈSÓYQÁG Í ÉEEFG

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Cruel & Unusual Punishment

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Cruel & Unusual Punishment

Criminal Law & Procedure > Preliminary Proceedings > Bail > General Overview

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Measurement of Damages > General Overview

HN2 [DAMAGES] Damages, Punitive Damages

The *Eighth Amendment* reads: Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted. Although the Court has never considered an application of the Excessive Fines Clause, it has interpreted the Amendment in its entirety in a way which suggests that the Clause does not apply to a civil-jury award of punitive damages. Given that the Amendment is addressed to bail, fines, and punishments, the cases long have understood it to apply primarily, and perhaps exclusively, to criminal prosecutions and punishments. The *eighth amendment* is addressed to courts of the United States exercising criminal jurisdiction. The Amendment is inapplicable to deportation because deportation is not punishment for a crime. Bail, fines, and punishment traditionally have been associated with the criminal process, and by subjecting the three to parallel limitations the text of the Amendment suggests an intention to limit the power of those entrusted with the criminal-law function of government.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Cruel & Unusual Punishment

HN3 [DAMAGES] Damages, Monetary Damages

The Excessive Fines Clause applies just to criminal cases. Whatever the outer confines of the Clause's reach may be, it does not constrain an award of money damages in a civil suit when the government neither has prosecuted the action nor has any right to receive a share of the damages awarded.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Cruel & Unusual Punishment

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > General Overview

HN4 [CRUEL & UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT] Fundamental Rights, Cruel & Unusual Punishment

The primary focus of the *Eighth Amendment* is the potential for governmental abuse of its "prosecutorial" power, not concern with the extent or purposes of civil damages. The Excessive Fines Clause is intended to limit only those fines directly imposed by, and payable to, the government.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Cruel & Unusual Punishment

I JGÁWÈJEG Í ÈEG Í LAF EU ÁUÈDÖEGJ EU ÈEGJ EU LAF EU ÁSEØAÈGA ÁGFJ ÈEEGFJ LÁJÌ JÁWÈSØYQÁG Í ÈEEGFJ

**HN5** Damages, Punitive Damages

The *Eighth Amendment* jurisprudence has not been inflexible. The Court, when considering the *Eighth Amendment*, has stated: Time works changes, brings into existence new conditions and purposes. Therefore a principle to be vital must be capable of wider application than the mischief which gave it birth. This is particularly true of constitutions. Constitutions are not ephemeral enactments, designed to meet passing occasions. They are designed to approach immortality as nearly as human institutions can approach it. The future is their care and provision for events of good and bad tendencies of which no prophecy can be made. In the application of a constitution, therefore, the court's contemplation cannot be only of what has been but of what may be. Under any other rule a constitution would indeed be as easy of application as it would be deficient in efficacy and power. Its general principles would have little value and be converted by precedent into impotent and lifeless formulas. Rights declared in words might be lost in reality.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Cruel & Unusual Punishment

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Cruel & Unusual Punishment

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Availability > Governmental Entities

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Measurement of Damages > General Overview

**HN6** Fundamental Rights, Cruel & Unusual Punishment

The *Eighth Amendment* places limits on the steps a government may take against an individual, whether it be keeping him in prison, imposing excessive monetary sanctions, or using cruel and unusual punishments. The court shall not ignore the language of the Excessive Fines Clause, or its history, or the theory on which it is based, in order to apply it to punitive damages.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Measurement of Damages > Constitutional Requirements

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jurors > Misconduct

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > General Overview

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Measurement of Damages > Judicial Review

**HN7** Damages, Punitive Damages

I JGÁWÈJÉG Í ÉEG Í LAF EU ÁUÉDÉGJ EU ÉEGJ EU LAF EU ÁSEÓa ÉGA ÁGFJ ÉEEFGJ LÁJÍ JÁWÈSÓYQÁG Í ÉEEFGJ

Due process imposes some limits on jury awards of punitive damages, and a jury award may not be upheld if it was the product of bias or passion, or if it was reached in proceedings lacking the basic elements of fundamental fairness.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Measurement of Damages > Constitutional Requirements

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

HN8 Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

The court shall not assume that a nonconstitutional argument also includes a constitutional one, and shall not stretch the specific claims made under an Eighth Amendment to cover those that might arise under the Due Process Clause as well.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Measurement of Damages > Determinative Factors

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Torts > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > General Overview

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Measurement of Damages > Judicial Review

HN9 Damages, Punitive Damages

It is not the court's role to review directly an award for excessiveness, or to substitute its judgment for that of the jury. Rather, its only inquiry is whether the court of appeals erred in finding that the district court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant a motion, under Fed. R. Civ. P. 59, for a new trial or remittitur. In a diversity action, or in any other lawsuit where state law provides the basis of decision, the propriety of an award of punitive damages for the conduct in question, and the factors the jury may consider in determining their amount, are questions of state law. Federal law, however, will control on those issues involving the proper review of the jury award by a federal district court and court of appeals. In reviewing an award of punitive damages, the role of the district court is to determine whether the jury's verdict is within the confines set by state law, and to determine, by reference to federal standards developed under Rule 59, whether a new trial or remittitur should be ordered. The court of appeals should then review the district court's determination under an abuse-of-discretion standard.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

I JGÁWÈJÉG Í ÉEG Í LAF EU ÁUÉDÉGJ EU ÉEGJ EU LAF EU ÁSEÓa ÉGÁGFJ ÉEEFGJ LÁFJÍ JÁWÈSÓYQÁG Í ÉEEFGJ

Eighth Amendment's excessive fines clause held inapplicable to punitive damage awards between private parties.

Summary

A local waste-disposal company brought an action in the United States District Court for the District of Vermont, alleging that a nationwide waste-disposal company had violated federal antitrust law by attempting to monopolize a particular segment of the local waste-disposal market, and had interfered with the local company's contractual relations in violation of Vermont tort law. After a jury found the nationwide company liable on both counts and awarded the local company $ 51,146 in compensatory damages on both the federal and state-law claims, and $ 6 million in punitive damages on the state-law claim, the District Court denied the nationwide company's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, a new trial, or remittitur. On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, affirming the judgment both as to liability and as to damages, expressed the view that, even if the Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment, which includes a prohibition against excessive fines, were applicable to the case, the punitive damages were not so disproportionate as to be constitutionally excessive (845 F2d 404).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Blackmun, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and Brennan, White, Marshall, Scalia, and Kennedy, JJ., as to holding 1 below, and expressing the unanimous view of the court as to holding 2 below, it was held that (1) the Eighth Amendment's excessive fines clause does not apply to awards of punitive damages in cases between private parties, where the government neither has prosecuted the action nor has any right to receive a share of the damages awarded, because the primary focus of the Amendment is the potential for governmental abuse of its prosecutorial power, since (a) nothing in English history suggests that the excessive fines clause of the English Bill of Rights of 1689, the direct ancestor of the Eighth Amendment, was intended to apply to damages awarded in disputes between private parties, (b) even if the limits Magna Carta placed on the use of amercements were the forerunners of the 1689 Bill of Rights' prohibition on excessive fines, Magna Carta was aimed at putting limits on the power of the King, and English courts never have understood the amercements clauses of Magna Carta to be relevant to private damages, and (c) although punitive damages are imposed through the aegis of courts and serve to advance the governmental interests of punishment and deterrence, this overlap does not require the application of the excessive fines clause in a case between private parties; and (2) where the District Court properly instructed the jury on state law and applied the proper state-law standard in considering whether the punitive damages were excessive, and where the Court of Appeals' conclusion that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for judgments notwithstanding the verdict, a new trial, or remittitur was consistent with federal standards of review, the Supreme Court would not craft some federal common-law standard of excessiveness that relies on notions of proportionality between punitive and compensatory damages or refers to statutory penalties for similar conduct, since these are matters of state law.

Brennan, J., joined by Marshall, J., concurring, joined the opinion of Blackmun, J., and expressed the view that the court's opinion left the door open for a holding that the Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause constrains the imposition of punitive damages in civil cases brought by private parties, because (1) prior Supreme Court decisions have held that, even where a statute sets a range of possible civil damages that may be awarded to a private litigant, the due process clause forbids awards that are grossly excessive, and (2) the court's scrutiny of awards made without the benefit of a legislature's deliberation and guidance should be less indulgent than its consideration of those that fall within statutory limits.

O'Connor, J., joined by Stevens, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined holding 2 above of the opinion of Blackmun, J., and expressed the view that the $ 6 million award of punitive damages constituted a fine subject to the limitations of the Eighth Amendment, because (1) there is considerable historical support, including the fact that around the time of the framing and enactment of the Eighth Amendment some courts and commentators believed that the word "fine" encompassed civil penalties, for application of the excessive fines clause to punitive damages, (2) the identity of the recipient of a monetary penalty is irrelevant for purposes of determining the constitutional validity of the penalty, (3) the excessive fines clause applies to the states by incorporation through the Fourteenth Amendment, and (4) a corporation is protected from overbearing and oppressive monetary sanctions by the excessive fines clause.

Headnotes

---

APPEAL §1673 > CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §14 > CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §17 > CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §25 > CRIMINAL LAW §75 > DAMAGES §16 > DAMAGES §181 > punitive damages -- private civil case -- excessive fines prohibition of Eighth Amendment -- purpose, history, and language -- verdict, new trial, or remittitur -- affirmation -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F] [LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [1G]

The prohibition of excessive fines, under the Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment, does not apply to awards of punitive damages in cases between private parties, where the government neither has prosecuted the action nor has any right to receive a share of the damages awarded, because the primary focus of the Amendment is the potential for governmental abuse of its prosecutorial power, rather than concern with the extent or purposes of civil damages, since (1) nothing in English history suggests that the excessive fines clause of the English Bill of Rights of 1689, the direct ancestor of the Eighth Amendment, was intended to apply to damages awarded in disputes between private parties, (2) even if the limits Magna Carta placed on the use of amercements were the forerunners of the 1689 Bill of Rights' prohibition on excessive fines, Magna Carta was aimed at putting limits on the power of the King, and English courts never have understood the amercements clauses of Magna Carta to be relevant to private damages of any kind, and (3) although punitive damages are imposed through the aegis of courts and serve to advance the governmental interests of punishment and deterrence, which are also among the interests advanced by the criminal law, this overlap does not require the application of the Eighth Amendment's excessive fines clause in a case between private parties, because (a) from both the language of the excessive fines clause and the nature of the nation's constitutional framework, the Eighth Amendment places limits on the steps a government may take against an individual, and (b) at the time the Eighth Amendment was drafted and ratified, the word "fines" was understood to mean a payment to a sovereign as punishment for some offense, and the practice of awarding punitive civil damages was well recognized; thus, the United States Supreme Court, on certiorari, will affirm a Federal Court of Appeals' judgment upholding a jury award of $ 6 million in punitive damages in a Federal District Court against a nationwide waste-disposal company for interfering with a local waste-disposal company's contractual relations in violation of state tort law, where (1) the jury found the company liable and assessed $ 51,146 in compensatory damages, (2) the District Court properly instructed the jury on state law and applied the proper state-law standard in considering whether the punitive damages were excessive, and (3) the Court of Appeals' conclusion that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the nationwide company's motion for judgments notwithstanding the verdict, a new trial, or remittitur was consistent with federal standards of review. (O'Connor and Stevens, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

COURTS §767 > Eighth Amendment -- excessive fines -- effect of cruel and unusual punishment precedents -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

Although insights into the meaning of the Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment reached by the United States Supreme Court in cases involving the Eighth Amendment's cruel and unusual punishments clause are instructive for purposes of determining whether the Eighth Amendment's prohibition of excessive fines applies to awards of punitive damages in cases between private parties, where the government neither has prosecuted the action nor has any right to receive a share of the damages awarded, the court's holdings in those cases are not directly controlling in a case involving the Eighth Amendment's excessive fines clause.

I JGÁWÈÉG I ÉEG I LAF EU ÁUÉDÉGJ EU ÉEGJ EU LAF EU ÁSEÓa ÉGA ÁGFJ ÉEEFGJ LÁJÍ JÁWÈÉSÓYQÁG I ÉEEFGJ

BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE §6.5 > COURTS §767 > Eighth Amendment -- excessive fines -- effect of excessive bail precedents -- jurisdiction -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B]

Although there is language in a previous United States Supreme Court opinion suggesting that a clause of the Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment that prohibits excessive bail may be implicated in civil deportation proceedings, this case provides little support for the argument that the Eighth Amendment's clause that prohibits excessive fines applies to punitive damages awarded by a jury in a civil case, because (1) the question whether the Eighth Amendment applies in civil cases was not addressed in the previous opinion, (2) bail, by its very nature, is implicated only when there is a direct government restraint on personal liberty, and the potential for governmental abuse against which the bail clause guards is therefore present, and (3) the abuses against which the excessive fines clause protects are not present in such a way when a jury assesses punitive damages.

COURTS §757 > Eighth Amendment -- applicability only to criminal cases -- decision not necessary -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

Because the United States Supreme Court, in deciding that the prohibition of excessive fines under the Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment does not apply to awards of punitive damages in cases between private parties, where the government neither has prosecuted the action nor has any right to receive a share of the damages, need not decide whether the excessive fines clause applies just to criminal cases, the court will not make such a decision.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §14 > CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §17 > Eighth Amendment -- excessive fines -- history and purpose --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

In considering the scope of the Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment's clause prohibiting excessive fines, a court should, as in other Eighth Amendment contexts, look to the origins of the clause, and to the purposes which directed its framers, because the applicability of the Eighth Amendment turns on its original meaning, as demonstrated by its historical derivation; however, because this historical emphasis concerns the question of when the Eighth Amendment is to be applied, the United States Supreme Court will not rely on history to the same extent when considering the scope of the Amendment as when considering its applicability.

APPEAL §1662 > Eighth Amendment -- applicability of excessive fines clause -- effect of decision on other grounds --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

In deciding, on certiorari, that the prohibition of excessive fines under the Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment does not apply to awards of punitive damages in cases between private parties, where the government neither has prosecuted the action nor has any right to receive a share of the damages awarded, the United States Supreme Court will leave open the question whether an action in which a private party brings a suit in the name of the United States and shares with the United States in any award of damages would implicate the Eighth Amendment's excessive fines clause.

I JGÁWÈJEG Í ÈEG Í LAF EU ÁUÈDÖÄGJ EU ÈEGJ EU LAF EU ÁSEÖA ÄGA ÁGFJ ÈEEGFJ LÁFJÌ JÁWÈSÖYÖÄGÌ Í ÈEEGFJ

APPEAL §1662 > effect of decision on other grounds -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

The United States Supreme Court, having decided, on certiorari, that, because the prohibition of excessive fines under the Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment does not apply to awards of punitive damages in cases between private parties, where the government neither has prosecuted the action nor has the right to receive a share of the damages awarded, the clause is inapplicable to punitive damages awarded by a jury in an action brought in a Federal District Court by one corporation against another under state tort law, will not decide whether (1) the Eighth Amendment's excessive fines clause applies to the several states by incorporation through the Federal Constitution's Fourteenth Amendment, or (2) the Eighth Amendment protects corporations as well as individuals.

APPEAL §1087.5 > APPEAL §1123 > APPEAL §1165 > APPEAL §1307 > Fourteenth Amendment -- due process -- argument not raised below or in certiorari petition -- amount of award -- assumptions > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

In determining, on certiorari, that, because the prohibition of excessive fines under the Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment does not apply to awards of punitive damages in cases between private parties, where the government neither has prosecuted the action nor has any right to receive a share of the damages awarded, the Eighth Amendment's excessive fines clause does not apply to punitive damages awarded by a jury in a Federal District Court action brought by one corporation against another corporation under state tort law, the United States Supreme Court will not address whether the due process clause of the Constitution's Fourteenth Amendment acts as a check on undue jury discretion to award punitive damages in the absence of any excess statutory limit, where (1) the corporation against which the punitive damages were awarded (a) failed to raise the due process argument before either the District Court or a Federal Court of Appeals, (b) has made no specific mention of the argument in its petition for certiorari in the Supreme Court, and (c) argued in the lower courts that the punitive damages award violated state law and the Eighth Amendment; and (2) the Supreme Court will not (a) assume that the nonconstitutional argument also includes a constitutional one, (b) stretch the specific claims made under the Eighth Amendment to cover those that might arise under the due process clause, or (c) in the absence of a developed record on the issues relevant to this due process inquiry, stretch the "clear intendments" doctrine to hold that the due process question is within the clear intendments of the objection made by the corporation throughout the proceedings, where the due process question is not "only an enlargement" of the Eighth Amendment inquiry.

APPEAL §1415 > APPEAL §1419 > APPEAL §1460 > excessiveness of punitive damages -- review of jury verdict -- remittitur - - new trial -- Federal District Court's discretion -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

On certiorari to review a Federal Court of Appeals' affirmation of a Federal District Court's denial of a corporation's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, a new trial, or remittitur concerning the $ 6 million in punitive damages awarded against the corporation by a jury for violation of a state tort law for which the jury awarded $ 51,146 in compensatory damages, it is not the role of the United States Supreme Court to review directly the award for excessiveness, or to substitute its judgment for that of the jury, because the Supreme Court's only inquiry is whether the Court of Appeals erred in finding that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant the motion, under Rule 59 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, for a new trial or remittitur.

I JGÁWÈJEG Í ËEG Í LAF EU ÁUÈDÖÄG EU ËEGJ EU LAF EU ÁSEÖA ÄGA ÁGF J ÄEEGFJ LÄFJÌ J ÁWÈSÖYÖÄG Ì ÄFFF

APPEAL §1415 > APPEAL §1419 > APPEAL §1460 > COURTS §591 > COURTS §611 > COURTS §623 > excessiveness of punitive damages -- federal review of jury verdict -- state law -- remittitur -- new trial -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

In a lawsuit that is in a federal court as a result of diversity jurisdiction, or in any other lawsuit where state law provides the basis of decision, the propriety of an award of punitive damages for the conduct in question, and the factors a jury may consider in determining their amount, are questions of state law, but federal law controls those issues involving the proper review of the jury award by a Federal District Court and Court of Appeals; thus, in reviewing an award of punitive damages, the role of a District Court is to determine whether the jury's verdict is within the confines set by state law, and to determine, by reference to federal standards developed under Rule 59 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which authorizes federal courts to grant a new trial or amend a judgment, whether a new trial or remittitur should be ordered, and a Court of Appeals should then review the District Court's determination under an abuse-of-discretion standard.

APPEAL §1415 > APPEAL §1419 > APPEAL §1460 > DAMAGES §16 > DAMAGES §18 > DAMAGES §181 > EVIDENCE §841 > punitive damages -- setting aside jury award -- malice -- excessiveness -- pecuniary ability of defendant -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [11B]

Under Vermont law, (1) a jury may award punitive damages only if the evidence supports a finding that the defendant acted with malice or "malice or wantonness shown by the act," (2) punitive damage awards may be set aside as grossly and manifestly excessive, (3) although there is no rule of proportionality between compensatory and punitive damages, punitive damages are not allowed to stand when an award of compensatory damages has been vacated, and (4) once a plaintiff has presented sufficient evidence of malice, evidence of the defendant's pecuniary ability may be considered in order to determine what would be a just punishment for the defendant.

APPEAL §1662 > excessive damages -- Seventh Amendment -- issue decided on other grounds -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [12A] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [12B]

In deciding, on certiorari, that the prohibition of excessive fines under the Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment does not apply to awards of punitive damages in cases between private parties, where the government neither has prosecuted the action nor has any right to receive a share of the damages, the United States Supreme Court will not decide whether the Federal Constitution's Seventh Amendment, which provides that any fact tried by a jury in a civil case can be reviewed by a federal court according to only common-law rules, allows appellate review of a Federal District Court's denial of a motion to set aside an award as excessive, because it is unnecessary to reach this question when making such a decision.

APPEAL §1415 > APPEAL §1419 > APPEAL §1460 > COURTS §591 > DAMAGES §16 > DAMAGES §181 > excessiveness of punitive damages awarded by jury -- state law -- federal review -- new trial -- remittitur -- Seventh Amendment -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13A\]](#) [13A] [LEdHN\[13B\]](#) [13B] [LEdHN\[13C\]](#) [13C]

I JGÁWÆJEG Í ÆEG Í LÆF ÆUÆDÆGJ ÆUÆEGJ ÆUÆLÆF ÆSEØAÆGA ÁGFJ ÆUÆEGJ LÁFJ Ð JÁUÆSØYQÁG Í ÆUÆF

With respect to a Federal Court of Appeals' judgment upholding a jury award of $ 6 million in punitive damages in a Federal District Court against a nationwide waste-disposal company that the jury found liable for interfering with a local waste-disposal company's contractual relations in violation of state tort law, and assessed $ 51,146 in compensatory damages, the United States Supreme Court will not craft some federal common-law standard of excessiveness that relies on notions of proportionality between punitive and compensatory damages, or that makes reference to statutory penalties for similar conduct, because these are matters of state, not federal law; thus, where the District Court properly instructed the jury on state law and applied the proper state-law standard in considering whether the damages were excessive, the Court of Appeals' conclusion that there was no abuse of discretion by the District Court in denying the nationwide company's motion for a new trial or remittitur is consistent with federal standards developed under Rule 59 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which authorizes federal courts to grant a new trial or amend a judgment, because (1) there is no federal common-law standard or compelling federal policy convincing the Supreme Court that it should not continue, in performing the limited function of a federal appellate court, to accord considerable deference to a District Court's decision not to order a new trial, and (2) particularly since the federal courts operate under the strictures of the Federal Constitution's Seventh Amendment, which provides that a federal court can review only under the rules of the common law a fact tried by a jury, the Supreme Court is reluctant to stray too far from traditional common-law standards or to take steps which ultimately might interfere with the proper role of the jury.

APPEAL §1415 > APPEAL §1419 > APPEAL §1460 > DAMAGES §16 > excessive punitive damages -- denial of new trial or remittitur -- discretion of court -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

On certiorari to review a Federal Court of Appeals' judgment upholding a jury award of $ 6 million in punitive damages in a Federal District Court against a nationwide waste-disposal company that the jury found liable for interfering with a local waste-disposal company's contractual relations in violation of state tort law, and assessed $ 51,146 in compensatory damages, where it is not clear whether the Court of Appeals applied state or federal law in reviewing the District Court's order denying the nationwide company's motion for a new trial or remittitur, the Supreme Court will find that the Court of Appeals' conclusion that there was no abuse of discretion by the District Court is consistent with federal standards of review, where the state law permits juries to consider a broad range of factors in awarding punitive damages.

Syllabus

---

Respondents Joseph Kelley and Kelco Disposal, Inc., filed suit against petitioners (collectively BFI) in Federal District Court, charging BFI with antitrust violations and with interfering with Kelco's contractual relations in violation of Vermont tort law. A jury found BFI liable on both counts, and awarded Kelco, in addition to $ 51,146 in compensatory damages, $ 6 million in punitive damages on the state-law claim. Denying BFI's post-trial motions, the District Court upheld the jury's punitive damages award. The Court of Appeals affirmed as to both liability and damages, holding that even if the Eighth Amendment were applicable, the punitive damages awarded were not so disproportionate as to be constitutionally excessive.

Held:

1. The Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment does not apply to punitive damages awards in cases between private parties; it does not constrain such an award when the government neither has prosecuted the action nor has any right to recover a share of the damages awarded. Pp. 262-276.

I JGÁNÈÉG Í ÉEG Í LAF ÆUÉDÉGJ ÚÉEGJ ÚLAF ÆSEÓaÉGÁGFJ ÆEEGFJLÁFJ Í JÁMÉÉSÓYQÁG Í ÉEEF

(a) The primary concern which drove [***2] the Framers of the Eighth Amendment was the potential for governmental abuse of "prosecutorial" power, not concern with the extent or purposes of civil damages. Nothing in English history suggests that the Excessive Fines Clause of the English Bill of Rights of 1689, the direct ancestor of the Eighth Amendment, was intended to apply to damages awarded in disputes between private parties. Pp. 264-268.

(b) The history of the use and abuse in England of amercements, including the fact that Magna Carta placed limits on the Crown's use of excessive amercements, is no basis for concluding that the Excessive Fines Clause limits a civil jury's ability to award punitive damages. Magna Carta was aimed at putting limits on the excesses of royal power, purposes which are clearly inapposite in a case where a private party receives exemplary damages from another party, and the government has no share in the recovery. Any overlap between civil and criminal procedure at the time of Magna Carta is insignificant when all indications are that English courts never have understood Magna Carta's amercements clauses to be relevant to private damages of any kind. Pp. 268-273.

(c) The language of the Excessive [***3] Fines Clause and the nature of our constitutional framework make it clear that the Eighth Amendment places limits on the steps a government may take against an individual. The fact that punitive damages are imposed through the aegis of courts and serve to advance governmental interests in punishment and deterrence is insufficient to support applying the Excessive Fines Clause in a case between private parties. Here, the government of Vermont has not taken a positive step to punish, as it does in the criminal context, nor used the civil courts to extract large payments or forfeiture for the purpose of raising revenue or disabling some individual. Pp. 273-276.

2. Because BFI failed to raise before either the District Court or the Court of Appeals the question whether the punitive damages award was excessive under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, this Court will not consider the effect of due process on the award. Pp. 276-277.

3. Federal common law does not provide a basis for disturbing the jury's punitive damages award. In performing the limited function of a federal appellate court, this Court perceives no federal common-law standard, or compelling federal policy, [***4] that convinces the Court it should not accord considerable deference to a district court's decision not to order a new trial. The District Court in this case properly instructed the jury on Vermont law and applied the proper state-law standard in considering whether the verdict was excessive, and the Court of Appeals correctly held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion. Pp. 277-280.

Counsel: Andrew L. Frey argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Kenneth S. Geller, Mark I. Levy, James D. Holzhauer, Andrew J. Pincus, and J. Paul McGrath.

H. Bartow Farr III argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were Joel I. Klein, Paul M. Smith, Robert B. Hemley, and Norman Williams.*

* Briefs of amicus curiae urging reversal were filed for the city of New York by Peter L. Zimroth, Leonard J. Koerner, and John Hogrogian; for the American National Red Cross et al. by Rex E. Lee, Carter G. Phillips, Elizabeth H. Esty, Charles A. Rothfeld, Benjamin W. Heineman, Jr., Philip A. Lacovara, and Fred J. Hiestand; for Arthur Andersen & Co. et al. by Leonard P. Novello, Jon N. Ekdahl, Carl D. Liggio, Harris J. Amhowitz, Kenneth H. Lang, and Eldon Olson; for Johnson & Higgins et al. by George Clemon Freeman, Jr., John Calvin Jeffries, Jr., and James W. Morris III; for Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., et al. by Louis R. Cohen, Lloyd N. Cutler, Ronald J. Greene, and Robert C. Dinerstein; for Navistar International Transportation Corp. by David A. Strauss and John A. Rupp; for the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association et al. by John Reese, Geoffrey Richard Wagner Smith, Richard F. Kingham, and Bruce N. Kuhlik; and for the United States Chamber of Commerce et al. by Herbert L. Fenster and Malcolm E. Wheeler.

Sherman L. Cohn and Jeffrey Robert White filed a brief for the Association of Trial Lawyers of America as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

I JGÁWÈJEG Í ËEG Í LAF ÆUÈDÖÄGJ ÆUÈEGJ ÆUÈLAF ÆSEÖAÄGA ÄGFJ ÆUÈEGJ LÄFJ Ì JÄUÈSÖYÖÄG Í ÄÄÄÄ

[****5]

Judges: Blackmun, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court with respect to Parts I, III, and IV, and the opinion of the Court with respect to Part II, in which Rehnquist, C. J., and Brennan, White, Marshall, Scalia, and Kennedy, JJ., joined. Brennan, J., filed a concurring opinion, in which Marshall, J., joined, post, p. 280. O'Connor, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, in which Stevens, J., joined, post, p. 282.

Opinion by: BLACKMUN

Opinion

---

[*259] [***228] [**2912] JUSTICE BLACKMUN delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A]We face here the questions whether the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment applies to a civil-jury award of punitive or exemplary damages, and, if so, whether an award of $ 6 million was excessive in this particular case.<sup>1</sup> This Court has never held, or even intimated, that the [*260] Eighth Amendment serves as a check on the power of a jury to award damages in a civil case. Rather, our concerns in applying the Eighth Amendment have been with criminal process and with direct actions initiated by government to inflict punishment. Awards of punitive damages do not implicate these concerns. We therefore hold, HN1 [1] on the basis of the history [***6] and purpose of the Eighth Amendment, that its Excessive Fines Clause does not apply to awards of punitive damages in cases between private parties.

[***229] I

These weighty questions of constitutional law arise from an unlikely source: the waste-disposal business in Burlington, Vt. Petitioner Browning-Ferris Industries of Vermont, Inc., is a subsidiary of petitioner Browning-Ferris Industries, Inc. (collectively, BFI), which operates a nationwide commercial waste-collection and disposal business. In 1973 BFI entered the Burlington area trash-collection market, and in 1976 began to offer roll-off collection services.<sup>2</sup> Until 1980 BFI was the sole provider of such services in the Burlington area; that year respondent Joseph Kelley, who, since 1973, had been BFI's local district manager, went into business for himself, starting respondent Kelco Disposal, [***7] Inc. Within a year Kelco obtained nearly 40% of the Burlington roll-off market, and by 1982 Kelco's market share had risen to 43%. During 1982 BFI reacted by attempting to drive Kelco out of business, first by offering to buy Kelco and then by cutting prices by 40% or more on new business for

---

Briefs of amici curiae were filed for the Alliance of American Insurers et al. by Jack H. Blaine, Phillip E. Stano, Craig A. Berrington, John B. Crosby, John J. Nangle, Kenneth H. Nails, James H. Bradner, Jr., Joe W. Peel, and Theresa L. Sorota; for Bethlehem Steel Corp. et al. by Martin S. Kaufman; for the California Trial Lawyers Association by Joseph Remcho, Harvey R. Levine, Amy Langerman, and William L. Denton; for CBS, Inc., et al. by P. Cameron DeVore, Marshall J. Nelson, Douglas P. Jacobs, Richard M. Schmidt, R. Bruce Rich, Harvey L. Lipton, and Bruce W. Sanford; for the Consumers Union of the United States et al. by Andrew F. Popper; for Golden Rule Insurance Co. et al. by Darrell S. Richey, N. Douglas Martin, Jr., and Thomas J. Norman; for Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. by Theodore B. Olson and Larry L. Simms; for the Illinois Trial Lawyers Association by Robert J. Cooney; for the Insurance Consumer Action Network by Roger O'Sullivan; for Metromedia, Inc., by Theodore B. Olson and Larry L. Simms; for the National Association of Mutual Insurance Companies by Bert S. Nettles, Forrest S. Latta, and Geoffrey C. Hazard, Jr.; and for Martha Hoffmann Sanders by Bruce J. Ennis, Jr., Donald N. Bersoff, and W. Sidney Fuller.

<sup>1</sup> Petitioners before this Court also challenge the award on due process grounds. For reasons set forth in Part III of this opinion, we decline to reach that issue.

<sup>2</sup> "Roll-off waste collection is usually performed at large industrial locations and construction sites with the use of a large truck, a compactor, and a container that is much larger than the typical 'dumpster.'" 845 F. 2d 404, 406 (CA2 1988).

I JGÁWÆJEG Í ÆG ÆLFEJ ÁUÆDÆGJ EU ÆEGJFGLÁF ÆSEØAÆGA ÁGFJ ÆREGGJLÁFJ Í JÁWÆSÓYQÁG Í ÆA

approximately six months. The orders given to the Burlington BFI office by its regional vice president were clear: "Put [Kelley] out of business. Do whatever it takes. Squish him like a bug." App. 10. BFI's Burlington salesman was also instructed to [*261] put Kelco out of business and told that if "it meant give the stuff away, give it away." Ibid.

During the first four months of BFI's predatory campaign, Kelco's revenues dropped 30%. Kelco's attorney wrote [***8] to BFI's legal department asserting that BFI's pricing strategy was illegal, and threatened to initiate court proceedings if it continued. BFI did not respond, and continued its price-cutting policy for several more months. BFI's market share remained [**2913] stable from 1982 to 1984, but by 1985 Kelco had captured 56% of the market. That same year BFI sold out to a third party and left the Burlington market.

In 1984, Kelco and Kelley brought an action in the United States District Court for the District of Vermont, alleging a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act for attempts to monopolize the Burlington roll-off market. They also claimed that BFI had interfered with Kelco's contractual relations in violation of Vermont tort law. Kelley's claims were severed from Kelco's, and Kelco's antitrust and tort claims were tried to a jury. After a 6-day trial BFI was found liable on both counts. A 1-day trial on damages followed, at which Kelco submitted evidence regarding the revenues and profits it lost as a result of BFI's predatory prices. Kelco's attorney urged the jury to return an award of punitive damages, asking the jurors to "deliver a message to Houston [BFI's headquarters]." [***9] Id., at 53. Kelco also stressed BFI's total revenues of $ 1.3 billion in the previous year, noting that this figure broke down to $ 25 million a week. BFI urged that punitive damages were not appropriate, but made no argument as to amount.

The District Court instructed the jury that it could award punitive damages on the state-law claims if it found by clear and convincing evidence [**230] that BFI's conduct "revealed actual malice, outrageous conduct, or constituted a willful and wanton or reckless disregard of the plaintiff's rights." Id., at 81. It also told the jury that in determining the amount of punitive damages it could take into account "the character of the [*262] defendants, their financial standing, and the nature of their acts." Ibid. BFI raised no relevant objection to the charge on punitive damages. The jury returned a verdict of $ 51,146 in compensatory damages on both the federal-antitrust and state-tort counts, and $ 6 million in punitive damages.

BFI moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, a new trial, or remittitur. The District Court denied these motions and awarded Kelco $ 153,438 in treble damages and $ 212,500 in attorney's fees and [***10] costs on the antitrust claim, or, in the alternative, $ 6,066,082.74 in compensatory and punitive damages on the state-law claim. BFI appealed. The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed the judgment both as to liability and as to damages. 845 F. 2d 404 \(1988\). On the issue of punitive damages, the court noted that the evidence showed that BFI "wilfully and deliberately attempted to drive Kelco out of the market," and found no indication of jury prejudice or bias. Id., at 410. Addressing the Eighth Amendment issue, the court noted that even if the Amendment were applicable "to this nominally civil case," the damages were not "so disproportionate as to be cruel, unusual, or constitutionally excessive," and upheld the award. Ibid. Because of its importance, we granted certiorari on the punitive damages issue. 488 U.S. 980 \(1988\).

II

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [↑] [2A][LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [↑] [3A]HN2 [↑] The Eighth Amendment reads: "Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted." Although this Court has never considered an application of the Excessive Fines Clause, it has interpreted [***11] the Amendment in its entirety in a way which suggests that the Clause does not apply to a civil-jury award of punitive damages. Given that the Amendment is addressed to bail, fines, and punishments, our cases long have understood it to apply primarily, and perhaps exclusively, to criminal prosecutions and punishments. See, e. g., Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 573-574 (1833) ("The eighth [*263] amendment is addressed to courts of the United States exercising criminal jurisdiction"); Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U.S. 698, 730 (1893) (Amendment inapplicable to deportation because deportation is not punishment for a crime); Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 664-668 [**2914] (1977). "Bail, fines, and punishment traditionally have been associated with the criminal process, and by subjecting the three to parallel limitations the text of the Amendment suggests an intention to limit the power of those entrusted with the criminal-law function of government." Id., at 664.<sup>3</sup>

I JGÁEÜÉGÍ Í ÉGGÍ HAFÉJUÉÖÄGJÉÄEGJFÍ LAFÉ ÄSEÖAÅGÁFJÉÄEGHÉLAFJÍ JÁNÈÉSÖYÖÄNGÍ Í ÉÄHFF

[LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [↑] [2B]

[****12]

[***231] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B] [LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4] [LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [↑] [5A] To decide the instant case, however, we need not go so far as to hold that HN3 [↑] the Excessive Fines Clause applies just to criminal cases. Whatever the outer confines of the Clause's [*264] reach may be, we now decide only that it does not constrain an award of money damages in a civil suit when the government neither has prosecuted the action nor has any right to receive a share of the damages awarded. To hold otherwise, we believe, would be to ignore the purposes and concerns of the Amendment, as illuminated by its history.<sup>4</sup>

[LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [↑] [5B]

[****13] A

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [↑] [1C] The Eighth Amendment received little debate in the First Congress, see Weems v. United States, 217 U.S. 349, 368 (1910), and the Excessive Fines Clause received even less attention. This is not surprising; at least eight of the original States which ratified the Constitution had some equivalent of the Excessive Fines Clause in their respective Declarations of Rights or State Constitutions,<sup>5</sup> [****14] so the matter was not a

<sup>3</sup> Ingraham, like most of our Eighth Amendment cases, involved the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause, and it therefore is not directly controlling in this Excessive Fines Clause case. The insights into the meaning of the Eighth Amendment reached in Ingraham and similar cases, however, are highly instructive.

We left open in Ingraham the possibility that the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause might find application in some civil cases. See 430 U.S., at 669, n. 37. The examples we cited as possibilities -- persons confined in mental or juvenile institutions -- do not provide much support for petitioners' argument that the Excessive Fines Clause is applicable to a civil award of punitive damages. In any event, petitioners have not made any argument specifically based on the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause.

[LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [↑] [3B] There is language in Carlson v. Landon, 342 U.S. 524, 546 (1952), suggesting that the Bail Clause may be implicated in civil deportation proceedings. The Court there held that "the Eighth Amendment does not require that bail be allowed" in such cases, but the opinion in that case never addressed the question whether the Eighth Amendment applied in civil cases: the Court held that the Bail Clause does not require Congress to provide for bail in any case, but prohibits only the imposition of excessive bail. Carlson provides petitioners with little support for another reason as well. Bail, by its very nature, is implicated only when there is a direct government restraint on personal liberty, be it in a criminal case or in a civil deportation proceeding. The potential for governmental abuse which the Bail Clause guards against is present in both instances, in a way that the abuses against which the Excessive Fines Clause protects are not present when a jury assesses punitive damages.

<sup>4</sup> The same basic mode of inquiry should be applied in considering the scope of the Excessive Fines Clause as is proper in other Eighth Amendment contexts. We look to the origins of the Clause and the purposes which directed its Framers. "The applicability of the Eighth Amendment always has turned on its original meaning, as demonstrated by its historical derivation." Ingraham, 430 U.S., at 670-671, n. 39. We emphasize, however, that this historical emphasis concerns the question of when the Eighth Amendment is to be applied; as the Court's jurisprudence under the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause indicates, its approach has not relied on history to the same extent when considering the scope of the Amendment. See Trop v. Dulles, 356 U.S. 86, 101 (1958) (plurality opinion) ("The Amendment must draw its meaning from the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society").

<sup>5</sup> Delaware, Georgia, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, and Virginia all had a Declaration of Rights or a Constitution expressly prohibiting excessive fines. See 1 B. Schwartz, The Bill of Rights: A

I JGÁEÜÉGÍ Í ÉGGÍ I LÁFJÍ ÁUÉDÁGJÍ ÉEGJ FI LÁFJÍ ÁSEÓaÉGÁFJÍ ÉEFGHFLÁFJÍ JÁNÉEŠOÝQÁNGÍ Í ÉEEIFI

likely source of controversy or extensive discussion. Although the prohibition of excessive fines was mentioned as part of a complaint that the Amendment was unnecessary and imprecise, see 217 U.S., at 369, [**2915] [***232] Congress did not discuss [*265] what was meant by the term "fines," or whether the prohibition had any application in the civil context. In the absence of direct evidence of Congress' intended meaning, we think it significant that at the time of the drafting and ratification of the Amendment, the word "fine" was understood to mean a payment to a sovereign as punishment for some offense.<sup>6</sup> Then, as now, fines were assessed in criminal, rather than in private civil, actions.<sup>7</sup>

[****15] [*266] But there is more than inferential evidence from language to support our conclusion that the Excessive Fines Clause is inapplicable to an award of punitive damages. The undisputed purpose and history of the Amendment generally, and of the Excessive Fines Clause specifically, confirm our reading. The Eighth Amendment clearly was adopted with the particular intent of placing limits on the powers of the new Government. "At the time of its ratification, the original Constitution was criticized in the Massachusetts and Virginia Conventions for its failure to provide any protection for persons convicted of crimes. This criticism provided the impetus for inclusion of the Eighth Amendment in the Bill of Rights." Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S., at 666 (footnote omitted). See generally Barron v. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, 7 Pet. 243, 250 \(1833\) ("In almost every convention by which the constitution was adopted, amendments to guard against the abuse of power were recommended"); Weems v. United States, 217 U.S., at 372 (the "predominant political impulse" of proponents of [****16] the Bill of Rights "was distrust of power, and they insisted on constitutional limitations against its abuse"). Simply put, HN4 the primary [***233] focus of the Eighth Amendment was the potential for governmental abuse of its "prosecutorial" power, not concern with the extent or purposes of civil damages.

Moreover, specific and persuasive support for our reading of the Excessive Fines Clause comes from the pedigree of the Clause itself. As we have noted in other cases, it is clear that the Eighth Amendment was "based directly on Art I, § 9, of the Virginia Declaration of Rights," which "adopted verbatim the language of the English Bill of Rights."Solem v. Helm, 463 U.S. 277, 285, n. 10 \(1983\). Section 10 of the English Bill of Rights of 1689, like our [**2916]

Documentary History 235 (Virginia), 272 (Pennsylvania), 278 (Delaware), 282 (Maryland), 287 (North Carolina), 300 (Georgia), 343 (Massachusetts), and 379 (New Hampshire) (1971).

<sup>6</sup> A "fine signifieth a percuniarie punishment for an offence, or a contempt committed against the king." 1 E. Coke, Institutes *126b. The second edition of Cunningham's Law-Dictionary, published in 1771, defined "fines for offences" as "amends, pecuniary punishment, or recompence for an offence committed against the King and his laws, or against the Lord of a manor." 2 T. Cunningham, A New and Complete Law-Dictionary (unpaginated). See also 1 T. Tomlins, Law-Dictionary 796-799 (1836) (same); 1 J. Bouvier, Law Dictionary 525 (4th ed. 1852) (same).

<sup>7</sup> Petitioners have come forward with no evidence, or argument, which convinces us that the word "fine," as used in the late 18th century, would have encompassed private civil damages of any kind. Indeed, the term "damages" was also in use at the time the Eighth Amendment was drafted and ratified, and had a precise meaning limited to the civil context. Cunningham defined damages as follows: "in the Common law it is a part of what the jurors are to inquire of, and bring in, when an action passeth for the plaintiff: . . . [Damages] comprehend a recompence for what the plaintiff or defendant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done to him by the defendant or tenant." 1 Cunningham, supra; see also 1 Tomlins, at 498 (same); 1 Bouvier, at 360 (same). The dichotomy between fines and damages was clear.

There have been cases which have used the word "fine" to refer to civil damages assessed by statute. As the partial dissent notes, two cases decided 70 years after the Excessive Fines Clause was adopted considered the term "fines" to include money, recovered in a civil suit, which was paid to government. See Hanscomb v. Russell, 77 Mass. 373, 375 \(1858\); Gosselink v. Campbell, 4 Iowa 296 \(1856\). These cases, however, provide no support for petitioners' argument that the Eighth Amendment is applicable in cases between private parties. As to the partial dissent's reliance on the Bard, post, at 290, we can only observe:

Though Shakespeare, of course,

Knew the Law of his time,

He was foremost a poet,

In search of a rhyme.

I JGÀWÈJÀGÀ Ì ÈÈGÌ LÀFÈJÀWÈDÀGÀ ÈÈGÌ FÌ LÀFÈJÌ ÀSÈOÀÈGÀ ÁFJÌ ÈÈGÌ HÀFJÌ JÀNÈJÈSÓYÒÁGÌ Ì ÈÈHÈFÌ

Eighth Amendment, states that "excessive Bail ought not to be required, nor excessive Fines imposed; nor cruel and unusual Punishments inflicted." 1 Wm. & Mary, 2d Sess., ch. 2, 3 Stat. at Large [*267] 440, 441 (1689). We recounted in Ingraham, 430 U.S., at 664: "The English version, adopted after the accession of William and Mary, was intended to curb the [****17] excesses of English judges under the reign of James II." During the reigns of the Stuarts the King's judges had imposed heavy fines on the King's enemies, much as the Star Chamber had done before its abolition in 1641. L. Schwoerer, The Declaration of Rights, 1689, p. 91 (1981). In the 1680's the use of fines "became even more excessive and partisan," and some opponents of the King were forced to remain in prison because they could not pay the huge monetary penalties that had been assessed. Ibid.<sup>8</sup> The group which drew up the 1689 Bill of Rights had firsthand experience; several had been subjected to heavy fines by the King's bench. Id., at 91-92, and n. 198.

The Framers of our Bill of Rights were aware and took account of the abuses that led to the 1689 Bill of Rights.<sup>9</sup> [****19] This [****18] history, when coupled with the fact that the accepted English definition of "fine" in 1689 appears to be identical to that in use in colonial America at the time of our Bill of Rights,<sup>10</sup> seems to us clear support for reading our Excessive Fines Clause as limiting the ability of the sovereign to use its prosecutorial power, including the power to collect fines, for improper ends. Providing even clearer support for this view is the English case law, immediately prior to the enactment of [*268] the English Bill of Rights, which stressed the difference between civil damages and criminal fines. See Lord Townsend v. Hughes, 2 Mod. 150, 86 Eng. Rep. 994 (C. P. 1677). In short, nothing in English history suggests that the Excessive Fines Clause of the 1689 Bill of Rights, the direct ancestor of our Eighth Amendment, was intended to apply [***234] to damages awarded in disputes between private parties. Instead, the history of the Eighth Amendment convinces us that the Excessive Fines Clause was intended to limit only those fines directly imposed by, and payable to, the government.

B

LEdHN[1D][↑] [1D]Petitioners, however, argue that the Excessive Fines Clause "derives from limitations in English law on monetary penalties exacted in private civil cases to punish and deter misconduct." Brief for Petitioners 17. They recognize that nothing in the history we have recounted thus far espouses that view. To find support, they turn the clock hundreds of years further back to English history prior to Magna Carta, and in particular to the use and abuse of "amercedments." According to petitioners, amercedments were essentially civil damages, and the limits Magna Carta placed on the use of amercedments were the forerunners of the 1689 Bill of Rights' prohibition on excessive fines. In their view, the English Bill of Rights and our Eighth Amendment must be understood as reaching beyond the criminal context, because Magna Carta did. Punitive damages, they suggest, must be within the scope of the Excessive Fines [****20] Clause because they are a modern-day analog of 13th-century amercedments.

[**2917] The argument is somewhat intriguing, but we hesitate to place great emphasis on the particulars of 13th-century English practice, particularly when the interpretation we are urged to adopt appears to conflict with the lessons of more recent history. Even so, our understanding of the use of amercedments, and the development of actions for damages at [*269] common law, convince us that petitioners' view of the relevant history does not support the result they seek.

---

<sup>8</sup> For particular examples, see the 1683 Trial of Thomas Pilkington, and others, for a Riot, 9 State Tr. 187, and the 1684 Trial of Sir Samuel Barnardiston, 9 State Tr. 1333.

<sup>9</sup> Justice Story was of the view that the Eighth Amendment was "adopted as an admonition to all departments of the national government, to warn them against such violent proceedings as had taken place in England in the arbitrary reigns of some of the Stuarts." 2 J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States 624 (T. Cooley 4th ed. 1873).

<sup>10</sup> By 1689, the definition of "fines" and "damages" discussed in nn. 6 and 7, supra, already had taken hold. For a definition of "damages," see T. Blount, A Law-Dictionary (1670) (unpaginated).

Amercements were payments to the Crown, and were required of individuals who were "in the King's mercy," because of some act offensive to the Crown. Those acts ranged from what we today would consider minor criminal offenses, such as breach of the King's peace with force and arms, to "civil" wrongs against the King, such as infringing "a final concord" made in the King's court. See 2 F. Pollock & F. Maitland, History of English Law 519 (2d ed. 1905) (Pollock & Maitland); see also Solem v. Helm, 463 U.S., at 284, n. 8 (an amercement "was the most common criminal sanction in 13th-century England"); W. McKechnie, [****21] Magna Carta 285-286 (2d ed. 1958) (McKechnie) (discussing amercements as a step in the development of criminal law). Amercements were an "all-purpose" royal penalty; they were used not only against plaintiffs who failed to follow the complex rules of pleading<sup>11</sup> [****22] and against defendants who today would be liable in tort, but also against an entire township [****235] which failed to live up to its obligations, or against a sheriff who neglected his duties.<sup>12</sup> The use of amercements was widespread; one commentary has said that most men in England could expect [*270] to be amerced at least once a year. See 2 Pollock & Maitland 513.<sup>13</sup>

[****23] In response to the frequent, and occasionally abusive, use of amercements by the King, Magna Carta included several provisions placing limits on the circumstances under which a person could be amerced, and the amount of the amercement.<sup>14</sup> [****24] The barons who forced John to [**2918] agree to Magna Carta sought to reduce arbitrary royal power, and in particular [*271] to limit the King's use of amercements as a source of royal revenue, and as a weapon against enemies of the Crown.<sup>15</sup> The Amercements Clause of Magna Carta limited

<sup>11</sup> See Treatise on the Laws and Customs of the Realm of England Commonly called Glanvill 127-128 (G. Hall ed. 1965) (written between 1187-1189); Introduction to the Curia Regis Rolls, 1199-1230 A. D., in 62 Publications of the Selden Society 465 (C. Flower ed. 1944). Defendants could be amerced as well. "The justices did not hesitate to extract amercements from both parties when the occasion arose." Id., at 466. For a wide variety of conduct for which amercements were assessed on parties, see Beecher's Case, 8 Co. Rep. 58a, 59b-60a, 77 Eng. Rep. 559, 564-565 (Ex. 1609); 1 Select Pleas of the Crown (A. D. 1200-1225), in 1 Publications of the Selden Society 2, 4, 5-6, 7-8, 9-10, 13, 43-44, 90 (F. Maitland ed. 1888); 62 Selden Society, at 464-467.

<sup>12</sup> See id., at 467; Pleas of the Crown for the County of Gloucester: A. D. 1221, p. xxxiii (F. Maitland ed. 1884) (Pleas for Gloucester); see generally 1 Selden Society.

<sup>13</sup> Without discussing the complex origins of civil damages in detail, see 2 Pollock & Maitland 522-525; 62 Selden Society, at 473-479, we can say confidently that damages and amercements were not the same. In the time before Magna Carta, damages awards were rare, 2 Pollock & Maitland 523, the more usual relief being a fixed monetary payment or specific relief. But "[t]he distinction between amercements and damages is well known. The former were payable to the crown after legal action or for an error or ineptitude which took place in its course; the latter represented the loss incurred by a litigant through an unlawful act. They were payable to [the private litigant]." 62 Selden Society, at 463.

The only overlap between the two might occur in the Assize of Novel Disseisin, in which the court could grant the recovery of land and chattels, and might amerce the defendant as well. Id., at 156; see generally 2 Pollock & Maitland 44-56, 523-524. But even in this action, the amerciable offense is one to the Crown, for every disseisin was a breach of the peace, as well as an improper possession of another's property. Id., at 44. Along these lines, see 62 Selden Society, at 478-479 ("In comparison with amercements, damages were seldom remitted, for the good reason that the king could do as he liked with his own but had to be careful not to show mercy at the expense of a wronged subject").

<sup>14</sup> "A Free-man shall not be amerced for a small fault, but after the manner of the fault; and for a great fault after the greatness thereof, saving to him his contenement; (2) and a Merchant likewise, saving to him his Merchandise; (3) and any other's villain than ours shall be likewise amerced, saving his wainage, if he falls into our mercy. (4) And none of the said amerciaments shall be assessed, but by the oath of honest and lawful men of the vicinage. (5) Earls and Barons shall not be amerced but by their Peers, and after the manner of their offence. (6) No man of the Church shall be amerced after the quantity of his spiritual Benefice, but after his Lay-tenement, and after the quantity of his offence." Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III, ch. 14 (1225), 1 Stat. at Large 5 (1769), confirmed, 25 Edw. I, ch. 1 (1297), id., at 131-132.

<sup>15</sup> See generally McKechnie 278; G. Smith, A Constitutional and Legal History of England 129, 131 (1955). Although most amercements were not large, see McKechnie 287; 2 Pollock & Maitland 513, being placed in the King's mercy meant, at least theoretically, that a man's estate was in the King's hands, and it was within the King's power to require its forfeit. See 62 Selden Society, at 463; McKechnie 71-72 (one called to the King's service who did not go was in mercy, and his estate was subject to

these abuses in four ways: by requiring that one be amerced only for some genuine harm to the Crown; by requiring that the amount of the amercement be proportioned to the wrong; by requiring that the amercement not be so large as to deprive him of his livelihood; and by requiring that the amount of [***236] the amercement be fixed by one's peers, sworn to amerce only in a proportionate amount.<sup>16</sup>

[****25] Petitioners, and some commentators,<sup>17</sup> find in this history a basis for concluding that the Excessive Fines Clause operates to limit the ability of a civil jury to award punitive damages. We do not agree. Whatever uncertainties surround the use of amercements prior to Magna Carta, the compact signed at Runnymede was aimed at putting limits on the [*272] power of the King, on the "tyrannical extortions, under the name of amercements, with which John had oppressed his people," T. Taswell-Langmead, English Constitutional History 83 (T. Plucknett 10th ed. 1946), whether that power be exercised for purposes of oppressing political opponents, for raising revenue in unfair ways, or for any other improper use. See 2 W. Holdsworth, A History of English Law 214 (4th ed. 1936). These concerns are clearly inapposite in a case where a private party receives exemplary damages from another party, and the government has no share in the recovery. Cf. United States v. Halper, 490 U.S. 435 \(1989\) \(Double Jeopardy Clause\).

[****26] Petitioners ultimately rely on little more than the fact that the distinction between civil and criminal law was cloudy (and perhaps nonexistent) at the time of Magna Carta. But any overlap between civil and criminal procedure at that time does nothing to support petitioners' case, when all the indications are that English courts never have understood the amercements clauses to be relevant to private damages of any kind, either then or at any later time. See Lord Townsend v. Hughes, 2 Mod., at 151, 86 Eng. Rep., at 994-995 (Magna Carta's amercements provisions apply in criminal, but not civil, cases). Even after the common [**2919] law had developed to the point where courts occasionally did decrease a damages award or eliminate it altogether, such action was never predicated on the theory that the government somehow had overstepped its bounds. Rather, the perceived error was one made by the jury, as determined by reference to common-law, rather than constitutional, standards. Whether based on reasoning that the jury's award was so excessive that it must have been based on bias or prejudice, see Wood v. Gunston, Sty. 466, 82 Eng. Rep. 867 (K. B. 1655); [****27] Leith v. Pope, 2 Bl. W. 1327, 96 Eng. Rep. 777 (C. P. 1780), or that the jury must have misconstrued the evidence, see Ash v. Ash, Comb. 357, 90 Eng. Rep. 526 (1696), the proper focus was, and still is, on the behavior of the jury. It is difficult [*273] to understand how Magna Carta, or the English Bill of Rights as [***237] viewed through the lens of Magna Carta, compels us to read our Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause as applying to punitive damages when those documents themselves were never so applied.<sup>18</sup> forfeiture). Amercements also resembled a form of taxation, particularly when used against entire townships. See Pleas for Gloucester xxxiv.

<sup>16</sup> According to Pollock and Maitland, after the court found a person to be in the King's mercy, and that person obtained a pledge for the payment of whatever sum was to be amerced, the court would go on to other cases. At this point the person had not yet been amerced. "At the end of the session some good and lawful men, the peers of the offender (two seem to be enough) were sworn to 'affeer' the amercements. They set upon each offender some fixed sum of money that he was to pay; this sum is his amercement." 2 Pollock & Maitland 513; see also Pleas for Gloucester xxxiv. This procedure indicates that amercements were assessed by a "jury" different from that which considered the case.

<sup>17</sup> See, e. g., Massey, The Excessive Fines Clause and Punitive Damages: Some Lessons from History, 40 Vand. L. Rev. 1233 \(1987\); Note, The Constitutionality of Punitive Damages Under the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment, 85 Mich. L. Rev. 1699 \(1987\).

<sup>18</sup> So, for example, when the House of Lords placed certain limits on the types of cases in which exemplary damages could be awarded, Lord Devlin's extensive discussion mentioned neither Magna Carta or the Excessive Fines Clause of the 1689 Bill of Rights, nor did it suggest that English constitutional or common law placed any restrictions on the award of exemplary damages other than those discussed above. Rookes v. Barnard, [1964] A. C. 1129, 1221-1231. In fact, Lord Devlin recognized that his suggested alterations were a departure from the traditional common-law view. Id., at 1226. We find it significant that other countries that share an English common-law heritage have not followed the decision in Rookes, and continue to allow punitive or exemplary damages to be awarded without substantial interference. See, e. g., Uren v. John Fairfax & Sons, [1967] A. L. R. 25,

[****28] C

LEdHN[1E] [1E] Our conclusion that the Framers of the Eighth Amendment did not expressly intend it to apply to damages awards made by civil juries does not necessarily complete our inquiry. HN5 [1E] Our Eighth Amendment jurisprudence has not been inflexible. The Court, when considering the Eighth Amendment, has stated: "Time works changes, brings into existence new conditions and purposes. Therefore a principle to be vital must be capable of wider application than the mischief which gave it birth. This is particularly true of constitutions." Weems v. United States, 217 U.S., at 373.<sup>19</sup> [****30] This aspect [*274] of our Eighth Amendment jurisprudence might have some force here were punitive damages a strictly modern creation, without solid grounding in pre-Revolutionary days. But the practice of awarding damages far in excess of actual compensation for quantifiable injuries was well recognized at the time the Framers produced the Eighth Amendment. Awards of double or treble damages authorized by statute date back to the 13th century, see Statute of Gloucester, 1278, 6 Edw. I, ch. 5, 1 Stat. at Large 66 (treble damages for waste); see also 2 Pollock & Maitland 522, and the [****29] doctrine was expressly recognized in cases as early as 1763.<sup>20</sup> Despite this recognition [***238] [**2920] of civil exemplary damages as punitive [*275] in nature, the Eighth Amendment did not expressly include it within its scope. Rather, as we earlier have noted, the text of the Amendment points to an intent to deal only with the prosecutorial powers of government.

[****31] LEdHN[1F] [1F] LEdHN[6A] [1F] LEdHN[7A] [1F] [7A] Furthermore, even if we were prepared to extend the scope of the Excessive Fines Clause beyond the context where the Framers clearly intended it to apply, we would not be persuaded to do so with respect to cases of punitive damages awards in private civil cases, because they are too far afield from the concerns that animate the Eighth Amendment. We think it clear, from both the language of the Excessive Fines Clause and the nature of our constitutional framework, that HN6 [1F] the Eighth Amendment places limits on the steps a government may take against an individual, whether it be keeping him in prison, imposing excessive monetary sanctions, or using cruel and unusual punishments. The fact that punitive damages are imposed through the aegis of courts and serve to advance governmental interests is insufficient to support the step petitioners ask us to take. While we agree with petitioners that punitive damages advance the interests of punishment and deterrence, which are also among the interests advanced by the criminal law, we fail to see how this overlap requires us to apply the Excessive Fines Clause in a case between private parties. Here the government of Vermont has not taken a positive [****32] step to punish, as it most obviously does in the criminal context, nor has it used the civil courts to extract large payments or forfeitures for the purpose of raising revenue or

---

27 (Australia) (declining to follow Rookes); Bahner v. Marwest Hotel Co., 6 D. L. R. 3d 322, 329 (1969) (Canada) (same); Fogg v. McKnight, [1968] N. Z. L. R. 330, 333 (New Zealand) (same).

<sup>19</sup> In Weems, Justice McKenna continued his writing for the Court: "[Constitutions] are not ephemeral enactments, designed to meet passing occasions. They are, to use the words of Chief Justice Marshall, 'designed to approach immortality as nearly as human institutions can approach it.' The future is their care and provision for events of good and bad tendencies of which no prophecy can be made. In the application of a constitution, therefore, our contemplation cannot be only of what has been but of what may be. Under any other rule a constitution would indeed be as easy of application as it would be deficient in efficacy and power. Its general principles would have little value and be converted by precedent into impotent and lifeless formulas. Rights declared in words might be lost in reality." 217 U.S., at 373.

<sup>20</sup> Among the first cases to make explicit reference to exemplary damages was Huckle v. Money, 2 Wils. 205, 95 Eng. Rep. 768 (K. B. 1763), where the court refused to set aside a jury award of # 300 where the plaintiff's injury would have been compensated by # 20. Upholding what it referred to as an award of "exemplary damages," the court noted that "the law has not laid down what shall be the measure of damages in actions of tort; the measure is vague and uncertain, depending on a vast variety of causes, facts, and circumstances," and declined to "intermeddle" in the damages determination. "[I]t must be a glaring case indeed of outrageous damages in a tort, and which all mankind at first blush must think so, to induce a Court to grant a new trial for excessive damages." Id., at 206-207, 95 Eng. Rep., at 768-769. Another case decided that year stated the applicable principle with particular clarity: "Damages are designed not only as a satisfaction to the injured person, but likewise as punishment to the guilty, to deter from any such proceeding for the future and as a proof of the detestation of the jury to the action itself." Wilkes v. Wood, Loftt 1, 18-19, 98 Eng. Rep. 489, 498-499 (K. B.). Other English cases followed a similar approach. See, e. g., Roe v. Hawkes, 1 Lev. 97, 83 Eng. Rep. 316 (K. B. 1663); Grey v. Grant, 2 Wils. 252, 253, 95 Eng. Rep. 794, 795 (K. B. 1764); Benson v. Frederick, 3 Burr. 1846, 97 Eng. Rep. 1130 (K. B. 1766).

I JGÁEÜÉGÍ Í ÉGGÍ LÁFJÍ ÁUÉOÉGJÉ EÉGGJ GELÁFÍ ÅSEØAÅGÁFJÉTTCHÌ LÁFJÍ JÁNÆSØYQÁNGÍ ÉTTCHÍG

disabling some individual.<sup>21</sup> We shall not ignore the language of the Excessive [**276] Fines Clause, or its history, or the theory [***239] on which it is based, in order to apply it to punitive damages.<sup>22</sup>

[LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [↑] [6B]

[****33] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [↑] [7B]

[**2921] III

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [↑] [8A] Petitioners also ask us to review the punitive damages award to determine whether it is excessive under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The parties agree that HN7 [↑] due process imposes some limits on jury awards of punitive damages, and it is not disputed that a jury award may not be upheld if it was the product of bias or passion, or if it was reached in proceedings lacking the basic elements of fundamental fairness. But petitioners make no claim that the proceedings themselves were unfair, or that the jury was biased or blinded by emotion or prejudice. Instead, [****34] they seek further due process protections, addressed directly to the size of the damages award. There is some authority in our opinions for the view that the Due Process Clause places outer limits on the size of a civil damages award made pursuant to a statutory scheme, see, e. g., St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Williams, 251 U.S. 63, 66-67 (1919), but we have never addressed the precise question presented here: [*277] whether due process acts as a check on undue jury discretion to award punitive damages in the absence of any express statutory limit. See Bankers Life & Casualty Co. v. Crenshaw, 486 U.S. 71, 87 (1988) (O'Connor, J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment). That inquiry must await another day. Because petitioners failed to raise their due process argument before either the District Court or the Court of Appeals, and made no specific mention of it in their petition for certiorari in this Court, we shall not consider its effect on this award.<sup>23</sup>

<sup>21</sup> In United States v. Halper, 490 U.S. 435 (1989), we held that the Double Jeopardy Clause of the Fifth Amendment places limits on the amounts the Federal Government may recover in a civil action, after the defendant already has been punished through the criminal process. While our opinion in Halper implies that punitive damages awarded to the Government in a civil action may raise Eighth Amendment concerns, that case is materially different from this one, because there the Government was exacting punishment in a civil action, whereas here the damages were awarded to a private party. We noted in Halper that nothing in our opinion "precludes a private party from filing a civil suit seeking damages for conduct that previously was the subject of criminal prosecution and punishment. The protections of the Double Jeopardy Clause are not triggered by litigation between private parties." Id., at 451 (emphasis added). We left open the question whether a qui tam action, in which a private party brings suit in the name of the United States and shares in any award of damages, would implicate the Double Jeopardy Clause. Id., at 451, n. 11. We leave the same question open for purposes of the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause.

<sup>22</sup> Because of the result we reach today, we need not answer several questions that otherwise might be necessarily antecedent to finding the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause applicable to an award of punitive damages, and that have not been briefed by the parties. We shall not decide whether the Eighth Amendment's prohibition on excessive fines applies to the several States through the Fourteenth Amendment, nor shall we decide whether the Eighth Amendment protects corporations as well as individuals.

<sup>23</sup> Petitioners claim that the due process question is within the "clear intendment" of the objection it has made throughout these proceedings. Our review of the proceedings in the District Court and the Court of Appeals shows that petitioners' primary claim in both of those courts was that the punitive damages award violated Vermont state law. Petitioners also argued that the award violated the Eighth Amendment. We fail to see how the claim that the award violates due process is necessarily a part of these arguments. HN8 [↑] We shall not assume that a nonconstitutional argument also includes a constitutional one, and shall not stretch the specific claims made under the Eighth Amendment to cover those that might arise under the Due Process Clause as well. Although in particular cases we have applied the doctrine petitioners advance, see Braniff Airways, Inc. v. Nebraska Bd. of Equalization and Assessment, 347 U.S. 590, 598-599 (1954), this is not a case where a respondent is making arguments in support of a judgment. See Revere v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 463 U.S. 239, 244, n. 6 (1983); Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. 471, 475-476, n. 6 (1970). In the absence of a developed record on the issues relevant to this due process inquiry, we shall not stretch the "clear intendment" doctrine to include this case, as we do not think that the due process question is "only an enlargement" of the Eighth Amendment inquiry. Although the due process analysis of an award of punitive damages may track

I JGÀÈÜÉGÀ I ÉGG Í LÀFÀ JÀÉDÀGÀ JÀÉGG GLÀFÀ Í ÅSEØÀÉGÀ ÁFJÀÉGGULÁFJÌ JÀÉJÈSØYØÁNG Í ÉÉÉÉHÌ

LEdHN[8B] [↑] [8B]

[***35] [***240] IV

LEdHN[9] [↑] [9]Petitioners also ask us to hold that this award of punitive damages is excessive as a matter of federal common law. Rather than directing us to a developed body of federal law, [*278] however, they merely repeat the standards they urged us to adopt under the Eighth Amendment. HN9 [↑] It is not our role to review directly the award for excessiveness, or to substitute our judgment for that of the jury. Rather, our only inquiry is whether the Court of Appeals erred in finding that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant petitioners' motion, under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59, for a new trial or remittitur. Applying proper deference to the District Court, the award of punitive damages should stand.

LEdHN[10A] [↑] [10A]LEdHN[11A] [↑] [11A]Review of the District Court's order involves questions of both state and federal law. In a diversity action, or in any other lawsuit where state law provides the [**2922] basis of decision, the propriety of an award of punitive damages for the conduct in question, and the factors the jury may consider in determining their amount, are questions of state law.<sup>24</sup> Federal [*279] law, however, will control on those issues involving the proper review [***36] of the jury award by a federal district court and court of appeals. See Donovan v. Penn Shipping Co., 429 U.S. 648, 649-650 (1977); see also 6A J. Moore, J. Lucas, & G. Grotheer, Moore's Federal Practice, para. 59.04[1] (2d ed. 1987).

LEdHN[11B] [↑] [11B]

[***37] LEdHN[10B] [↑] [10B]LEdHN[12A] [↑] [12A]LEdHN[13A] [↑] [13A]In reviewing an award of punitive damages, the role of the district court is to determine whether the jury's verdict is within the confines set by state law, and to determine, by reference to federal standards developed under Rule 59, whether a new trial or remittitur should be ordered. The court of appeals should then review the district court's determination under an abuse-of-discretion standard.<sup>25</sup> Although [***241] petitioners and their amici would like us to craft some common-law closely the Eighth Amendment analysis suggested by petitioners, we shall not assume that to be the case and shall not attempt to decide the question in the absence of a record on the due process point developed in the District Court and the Court of Appeals.

<sup>24</sup> The law of punitive damages in Vermont is typical of the law in most American jurisdictions. The doctrine has long standing. As far back as 1862, the Supreme Court of Vermont noted that the law on exemplary damages was "long settled in this state." Nye v. Merriam, 35 Vt. 438, 446. A Vermont jury may award punitive damages only if the evidence supports a finding that the defendant acted with malice, see, e. g., Appropriate Technology Corp. v. Palma, 146 Vt. 643, 647, 508 A. 2d 724, 726 (1986), or "malice or wantonness shown by the act," Rogers v. Bigelow, 90 Vt. 41, 49, 96 A. 417, 420 (1916). Punitive damages awards may be set aside if grossly and manifestly excessive. See Glidden v. Skinner, 142 Vt. 644, 648, 458 A. 2d 1142, 1145 (1983). The Vermont Supreme Court has declined to adopt a rule of proportionality between compensatory and punitive damages, Pezzano v. Bonneau, 133 Vt. 88, 92, 329 A. 2d 659, 661 (1974), but does not allow punitive damages to stand when an award of compensatory damages has been vacated, Allard v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 139 Vt. 162, 164, 422 A. 2d 940, 942 (1980). Once a plaintiff has presented sufficient evidence of malice, evidence of "the defendant's pecuniary ability may be considered in order to determine what would be a just punishment for him." Lent v. Huntoon, 143 Vt. 539, 550, 470 A. 2d 1162, 1170 (1983), quoting Kidder v. Bacon, 74 Vt. 263, 274, 52 A. 322, 324 (1902).

The $ 6 million in punitive damages in this case apparently is the largest such judgment in the history of Vermont; there have been other substantial jury awards, however, in the State. See, e. g., Coty v. Ramsey Associates, Inc., 149 Vt. 451, 546 A. 2d 196 ($ 380,000 in punitive damages), cert. denied, 487 U.S. 1236 (1988).

I JGÁEÜÉGÍ Í ÉEG JIÁFÉJUÉÖÉGJÉ ÉEGGGÁÉFÉ ÁSEÓaÉGÁFÉ JÉEG FLÁFJÍ JÁNÉÉSÓYÓÁNGÍ Í ÉEEHÍ

standard of excessiveness that relies on notions of proportionality between punitive and compensatory damages, or makes reference to statutory penalties for similar conduct, these are matters of state, and not federal, common law. Adopting a rule along the lines petitioners suggest would require us to ignore the distinction between the state-law and federal-law issues. For obvious reasons we decline that invitation.

LEdHN[12B] [↑] [12B]

[****38] LEdHN[13B] [↑] [13B] LEdHN[14] [↑] [14] In performing the limited function of a federal appellate court, we perceive no federal common-law standard, or compelling [*280] federal policy, which convinces us that we should not continue to accord considerable deference to a district court's decision not to order a new trial.<sup>26</sup> In this case the District Court properly instructed the jury on Vermont law, see n. 24, supra, and applied the proper state-law standard in considering whether the verdict returned was excessive. Although the opinion of [**2923] the Court of Appeals is not clear to us as to whether it applied state or federal law in reviewing the District Court's order denying the new trial or remittitur, we are convinced that its conclusion that there was no abuse of discretion by the District Court is consistent with federal standards, in light of the broad range of factors Vermont law permits juries to consider in awarding punitive damages.

[****39] V

LEdHN[1G] [↑] [1G] LEdHN[13C] [↑] [13C] In sum, we conclude that neither federal common law nor the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment provides a basis for disturbing the jury's punitive damages award in this case. Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: BRENNAN; O'CONNOR (In Part)

Concur

---

JUSTICE BRENNAN, with whom JUSTICE MARSHALL joins, concurring.

I join the Court's opinion on the understanding that it leaves the door open for a holding that the Due Process Clause constrains the imposition of punitive damages in civil cases brought by private parties. See ante, at 276-277.

Several of our decisions indicate that even where a statute sets a range of possible civil damages that may be awarded to a private litigant, the Due Process Clause forbids damages awards that are "grossly excessive," *Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. [*281] Texas*, 212 U.S. 86, 111 (1909), or "so severe and oppressive as to be wholly disproportionate to the offense and obviously unreasonable," St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Williams, 251 U.S. 63, 66-67 [***242] (1919). See also Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Danaher, 238 U.S. 482, 491 (1915); [****40] Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U.S. 512, 522-523 (1885). I should think that, if anything, our <sup>25</sup> We have never held expressly that the Seventh Amendment allows appellate review of a district court's denial of a motion to set aside an award as excessive. Although we granted certiorari in two cases in order to consider the issue, in both instances we found it unnecessary to reach the question when we decided the case. See Neese v. Southern R. Co., 350 U.S. 77 (1955) (even assuming appellate review power under the Seventh Amendment, Court of Appeals was not justified in reversing denial of new trial on the particular facts of the case); Grunenthal v. Long Island R. Co., 393 U.S. 156, 158 (1968) (same). In light of the result we reach today, we follow the same course here.

---

<sup>26</sup> This is particularly true because the federal courts operate under the strictures of the Seventh Amendment. As a result, we are reluctant to stray too far from traditional common-law standards, or to take steps which ultimately might interfere with the proper role of the jury.

scrutiny of awards made without the benefit of a legislature's deliberation and guidance would be less indulgent than our consideration of those that fall within statutory limits.

Without statutory (or at least common-law) standards for the determination of how large an award of punitive damages is appropriate in a given case, juries are left largely to themselves in making this important, and potentially devastating, decision. Indeed, the jury in this case was sent to the jury room with nothing more than the following terse instruction: "In determining the amount of punitive damages, . . . you may take into account the character of the defendants, their financial standing, and the nature of their acts." App. 81. Guidance like this is scarcely better than no guidance at all. I do not suggest that the instruction itself was in error; indeed, it appears to have been a correct statement of Vermont law. The point is, rather, that the instruction reveals a deeper flaw: the fact that punitive damages are imposed by juries guided by little more than an [***41] admonition to do what they think is best. Because "[t]he touchstone of due process is protection of the individual against arbitrary action of government," Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 331 (1986), quoting Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 558 (1974), I for one would look longer and harder at an award of punitive damages based on such skeletal guidance than I would at one situated within a range of penalties as to which responsible officials had deliberated and then agreed.

Since the Court correctly concludes that Browning-Ferris' challenge based on the Due Process Clause is not properly [*282] before us, however, I leave fuller discussion of these matters for another day.

Dissent by: O'CONNOR (In Part)

Dissent

---

JUSTICE O'CONNOR, with whom JUSTICE STEVENS joins, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

Awards of punitive damages are skyrocketing. As recently as a decade ago, [**2924] the largest award of punitive damages affirmed by an appellate court in a products liability case was $ 250,000. See Owen, Punitive Damages in Products Liability Litigation, 74 Mich. L. Rev. 1257, 1329-1332 (1976). [***42] Since then, awards more than 30 times as high have been sustained on appeal. See Ford Motor Co. v. Durrill, 714 S. W. 2d 329 (Tex. App. 1986) ($ 10 million); Ford Motor Co. v. Stubblefield, 171 Ga. App. 331, 319 S. E. 2d 470 (1984) ($ 8 million); Palmer v. A. H. Robins Co., 684 P. 2d 187 (Colo. 1984) ($ 6.2 million). The threat of such enormous awards has a detrimental effect on the research and development of new products. Some manufacturers of prescription drugs, for example, have decided that it is better to avoid uncertain liability than to introduce a new pill or vaccine into the market. See, e. g., Brief for Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association et. al. as Amici Curiae 5-23. Similarly, designers of airplanes and motor vehicles have been forced to abandon new projects for fear of lawsuits that can often lead to awards of punitive damages. See generally P. Huber, *Liability: [***243] The Legal Revolution and Its Consequences* 152-171 (1988).

The trend toward multimillion dollar awards of punitive damages is exemplified by this case. A Vermont jury found [***43] that Browning-Ferris Industries, Inc. (BFI), tried to monopolize the Burlington roll-off waste disposal market and interfered with the contractual relations of Kelco Disposal, Inc. (Kelco). The jury awarded Kelco $ 51,000 in compensatory damages (later trebled) on the antitrust claim, and over $ 6 million in punitive damages. The award of punitive damages was 117 times the actual damages suffered by Kelco and far exceeds the highest reported award of punitive damages affirmed by a Vermont court. Cf. Coty v. Ramsey Associates, [*283] Inc., 149 Vt. 451, 546 A. 2d 196 (punitive damages of $ 380,000 based on compensatory damages of $ 187,500), cert. denied, 487 U.S. 1236 (1988).

The Court holds today that the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment places no limits on the amount of punitive damages that can be awarded in a suit between private parties. That result is neither compelled by history nor supported by precedent, and I therefore respectfully dissent from Part II of the Court's opinion. I do, however, agree with the Court that no due process claims -- either procedural or substantive -- are [***44] properly presented in this case, and that the award of punitive damages here should not be overturned as a matter of federal common law. I therefore join Parts I, III, and IV of the Court's opinion. Moreover, I share Justice Brennan's view, ante, at 280-282, that nothing in the Court's opinion forecloses a due process challenge to awards of punitive damages or the method by which they are imposed, and I adhere to my comments in Bankers Life & Casualty Co. v. Crenshaw, 486 U.S. 71, 86-89 (1988) (opinion concurring in part and concurring in judgment), regarding the vagueness and procedural due process problems presented by juries given unbridled discretion to impose punitive damages.

I JGÁEÜÉGÍ Í ÉGG HÁFJÍ JÁEÜÉGÍ JÁEÜÉGÍ LÍFÉ ÁSEÓaÉGA ÁFJÉTTG HÁFJÍ JÁEÜÉGÍ SÓYQÁNGÍ Í ÉGG I

I

Before considering the merits of BFI's Eighth Amendment claim, two preliminary questions must be addressed. First, does the Excessive Fines Clause apply to the States through the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment? Second, is a corporation such as BFI protected by the Excessive Fines Clause?

A

The award of punitive damages against BFI was based on Vermont law. See 845 F. 2d 404, 409 (CA2 1988). Almost 100 years ago, the Court [****45] held that the Eighth Amendment did not apply to the States. See O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U.S. 323, 332 (1892). See also Pervair v. Commonwealth, [*284] 5 Wall. 475 (1867). But 13 years [**2925] before O'Neil, the Court had applied the Eighth Amendment's ban on cruel and unusual punishments to a Territory. See Wilkerson v. Utah, 99 U.S. 130 (1879) (holding that execution by firing squad was not prohibited by the Eighth Amendment). In Louisiana ex rel. Francis v. Resweber, 329 U.S. 459, 462 (1947), the Court assumed, without deciding, that the Eighth Amendment [**244] applied to the States. Any confusion created by O'Neil, Wilkerson, and Francis was eliminated in Robinson v. California, 370 U.S. 660, 666-667 (1962), in which the Court, albeit without discussion, reversed a state conviction for the offense of narcotics addiction as constituting cruel and unusual punishment and being repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment. Since Robinson, the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause has been regularly [****46] applied to the States, most notably in the capital sentencing context. In addition, the Court has assumed that the Excessive Bail Clause of the Eighth Amendment applies to the States. See Schilb v. Kuebel, 404 U.S. 357, 365 (1971). I see no reason to distinguish one Clause of the Eighth Amendment from another for purposes of incorporation, and would hold that the Excessive Fines Clause also applies to the States.

B

In the words of Chief Justice Marshall, a corporation is "an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law." Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 636 (1819). As such, it is not entitled to "purely personal" guarantees whose "'historic function' . . . has been limited to the protection of individuals." First National Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765, 779, n. 14 (1978). Thus, a corporation has no Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, Wilson v. United States, 221 U.S. 361 (1911), or right to privacy, United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632 (1950). [****47] On the other hand, a corporation has a First Amendment right to freedom [*285] of speech, Virginia Pharmacy Bd. v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Inc., 425 U.S. 748 (1976), and cannot have its property taken without just compensation, Penn Central Transportation Co. v. New York City, 438 U.S. 104 (1978). A corporation is also protected from unreasonable searches and seizures, Marshall v. Barlow's, Inc., 436 U.S. 307 (1978), and can plead former jeopardy as a bar to a prosecution, United States v. Martin Linen Supply Co., 430 U.S. 564 (1977). Furthermore, a corporation is entitled to due process, Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408 (1984), and equal protection, Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Ward, 470 U.S. 869 (1985), of law.

Whether a particular constitutional guarantee applies to corporations "depends on the nature, history, and purpose" of the guarantee. First National Bank of Boston, supra, at 779, n. 14. The payment [****48] of monetary penalties, unlike the ability to remain silent, is something that a corporation can do as an entity, and the Court has reviewed fines and monetary penalties imposed on corporations under the Fourteenth Amendment at a time when the Eighth Amendment did not apply to the States. See Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U.S. 86, 111-112 (1909). See also St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Williams, 251 U.S. 63, 66-67 (1919). If a corporation is protected [***245] by the Due Process Clause from overbearing and oppressive monetary sanctions, it is also protected from such penalties by the Excessive Fines Clause. See Whitney Stores, Inc. v. Summerford, 280 F. Supp. 406, 411 (SC) (three-judge court) [**2926] (entertaining Eighth Amendment challenge by corporation to fine for violation of Sunday closing laws), summarily aff'd, 393 U.S. 9 (1968).

I JGÁNEÙÍAG I ÆAG I LAFÉU ÁUEAO ÆAG I ÆAG GÍ LAFÉI ÁSEØDÅ ÆGA ÆFJ ÆAG I LAFJÍ J JÁNEÙESÓY ØJÁHG I ÆA

11

Language in Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651 (1977), and Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568 (1833), suggests that the entire Eighth Amendment [****49] is confined to criminal prosecutions and punishments. But as the Court correctly acknowledges, [*286] ante, at 262-263, and n. 3, that language is not dispositive here.

In Ingraham, the Court held that the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause of the Eighth Amendment does not apply to disciplinary corporal punishment at a public school. Because the Excessive Fines Clause was not at issue in Ingraham, the Court's statement that the "text of the [Eighth] Amendment suggests an intention to limit the power of those entrusted with the criminal-law function of government," 430 U.S., at 664, is not controlling. The similar statement in Ex parte Watkins, that the Eighth Amendment "is addressed to courts of the United States exercising criminal jurisdiction," 7 Pet., at 573-574, is dictum, for the Court there held only that it did not have appellate jurisdiction to entertain a challenge, by way of a writ for habeas corpus, to criminal fines imposed upon a defendant: "[T]his Court has no appellate jurisdiction to revise the sentences of inferior courts in criminal cases; and cannot, even if the excess of the fine were apparent [****50] on the record, reverse the sentence." Id., at 574. There is another reason not to rely on or be guided by the sweeping statements in Ingraham and Ex parte Watkins. Those statements are inconsistent with the Court's application of the Excessive Bail Clause of the Eighth Amendment to civil proceedings in Carlson v. Landon, 342 U.S. 544-546 \(1952\) (immigration and deportation). See United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 754 \(1987\) (recognizing that Carlson "was a civil case"). In sum, none of the Court's precedents foreclose application of the Excessive Fines Clause to punitive damages.

三

The history of the Excessive Fines Clause has been thoroughly canvassed in several recent articles, all of which conclude that the Clause is applicable to punitive damages. See Boston, Punitive Damages and the Eighth Amendment: Application of the Excessive Fines Clause, 5 Cooley L. Rev. [*287] 667 (1988) (Boston); Massey, The Excessive Fines Clause and Punitive Damages: Some Lessons from History, 40 Vand. L. Rev. 1233 (1987) [****51] (Massey); Jeffries, A Comment on the Constitutionality of Punitive Damages, 72 Va. L. Rev. 139 (1986) (Jeffries); Note, The Constitutionality of Punitive Damages Under the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment, 85 Mich. L. Rev. 1699 (1987) (Note). In my view, a chronological account of the Clause and its [***246] antecedents demonstrates that the Clause derives from limitations in English law on monetary penalties exacted in civil and criminal cases to punish and deter misconduct. History aside, this Court's cases leave no doubt that punitive damages serve the same purposes -- punishment and deterrence -- as the criminal law, and that excessive punitive damages present precisely the evil of exorbitant monetary penalties that the Clause was designed to prevent.

A

The story of the Excessive Fines Clause begins in the "early days of English justice, before crime and tort were clearly distinct." Jeffries 154. Under the Saxon legal system in pre-Norman England, the victim of a wrong would, rather than seek vengeance through retaliation or "bloodfeud," accept financial compensation for the injury from the wrongdoer. The [****52] [**2927] wrongdoer could also be made to pay an additional sum "on the ground that every evil deed inflicts a wrong on society in general." W. McKechnie, Magna Carta 284-285 (1958) (McKechnie).

At some point after the Norman Conquest in 1066, this method of settling disputes gave way to a system in which individuals who had engaged in conduct offensive to the Crown placed themselves "in the King's mercy" so as not to have to satisfy all the monetary claims against them. Id. at 285. See generally 2 F. Pollock & F. Maitland, The History of English Law 512-516 (2d ed. 1899) (Pollock & Maitland). In order to receive clemency, these individuals were required to pay an "amercement" to the Crown, its representative, or [*288] a feudal lord. Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U.S. 510, 525 (1927); Massey 1252-1253, and n. 111. But cf. R. Stringham, Magna Carta: Fountainhead of Freedom 40 (1966) (a share of the amercement went to the victim or the victim's family). Because the amercement originated at a time when there was little distinction between criminal law and tort law, it was "neither strictly a civil nor a criminal sanction." Note, at 1716. Blackstone, [****53] however, clearly thought that amercements were civil punishments. See 4 W. Blackstone, Commentaries *372 ("amercements for misbehaviour in matters of civil right"). As one commentator has noted, the "amercement was assessed most commonly as a civil sanction for wrongfully bringing or defending a civil lawsuit." Massey 1251. The list of conduct meriting amercement was voluminous: trespass, improper or false pleading, default, failure to appear, economic wrongs, torts, and crimes. See generally Beecher's Case, 8 Co. Rep. 58a, 59b-61b, 77 Eng. Rep. 559, 564-567 (Ex. 1609).

The amount of an amercement was set arbitrarily, according to the extent to which the King or his officers "chose to relax the forfeiture of all the offender's goods." Jeffries 154-155. See also Boston 725. Because of the frequency and sometimes abusive nature of amercements, Chapter 20 of Magna Carta, 9 Hen. III, ch. 14 (1225), prohibited amercements that were disproportionate to the offense or that would deprive the wrongdoer of his means of livelihood:

"A Free-man shall not be amerced for a small fault, but after the manner of the fault; and for a great fault after the greatness [****54] [***247] thereof, saving to him his contenement; and a Merchant likewise, saving to him his Merchandise; and any other's villain than ours shall be likewise amerced, saving his wainage, if he fall into our mercy. And none of the said amerciaments shall be assessed, but by the oath of honest and lawful men of the vicinage. Earls and Barons shall not be amerced but by their Peers, and after the manner of their offence. No man of [*289] the Church shall be amerced after the quantity of his spiritual Benefice, but after his Lay-tenement, and after the quantity of his offence" (numbers omitted).

After Magna Carta, the amount of an amercement was initially set by the court. A group of the amerced party's peers would then be assembled to reduce the amercement in accordance with the party's ability to pay. McKechnie 288-289. For example, in Le Gras v. Bailiff of Bishop of Winchester, Y. B. Mich. 10 Edw. II, pl. 4 (C. P. 1316), reprinted in 52 Publications of the Selden Society 3, 5 (1934), an amercement for improper civil pleading was vacated, and the bailiff who had imposed the amercement was ordered to "take a moderate amercement proper to the magnitude and manner of that [****55] offence." See also Granucci, "Nor Cruel and Unusual Punishments Inflicted: The Original Meaning," 57 Calif. L. Rev. 839, 845-846 (1969) (Granucci) (listing other examples of amercements that were reduced or set aside).

Fines and amercements had very similar functions. Fines originated in the 13th century as voluntary sums paid to the Crown to avoid an indefinite prison sentence for a common-law crime or to avoid [**2928] royal displeasure. 2 Pollock & Maitland 517; Massey 1261. The fine operated as a substitute for imprisonment. Having no actual power to impose a fine, the court would sentence the wrongdoer to prison. "To avoid imprisonment, the wrongdoer would then 'make fine' by 'voluntarily' contracting with the Crown to pay money, thereby ending the matter. The Crown gradually eliminated the voluntary nature of the fine by imposing indefinite sentences upon wrongdoers who effectively would be forced to pay the fine. Once the fine was no longer voluntary, it became the equivalent of an amercement." Note, at 1715. See also Boston 719-720. Although in theory fines were voluntary while amercements were not, the purpose of the two penalties was equivalent, [****56] and it is not surprising that in practice it became difficult to distinguish the two.

[*290] B

By the 17th century, fines had lost their original character of bargain and had replaced amercements as the preferred penal sanction. The word "fine" took on its modern meaning, while the word "amercement" dropped out of ordinary usage. McKechnie 293. But the nomenclature still caused some confusion. See Griesley's Case, 8 Co. Rep. 38a, 77 Eng. Rep. 530 (C. P. 1609) ("fine" for refusing to serve as a constable analyzed as an "amercement"). William Shakespeare, an astute observer of English law and politics, did not distinguish between fines and amercements in the plays he wrote in the late 16th century. In Romeo and Juliet, published in 1597, Prince Escalus uses the words "amerce" and "fine" interchangeably [***248] in warning the Montagues and the Capulets not to shed any more blood on the streets of Verona:

"I have an interest in your hate's proceeding,

I JGÀÈÜÄG I ÆGJELÆJUÖÄGJÉEGJGÌ LÆFÍ ÆSGAÖGAÖFJÉEGI LÆFJÌ JÁNÈÜÄSÖYÖÄNGI Í ÆGJÉEGI

My blood for your rude brawls doth lie a-bleeding;
 But I'll amerce you with so strong a fine,
 That you shall all repent the loss of mine."
 Act III, scene 1, lines 186-189.

The preeminence of fines [****57] gave courts much more power, for only they could impose fines. Massey 1253. Once it was clear that Magna Carta did not apply to fines for offenses against the Crown, see John Hampden's Case, 9 State Tr. 1054, 1126 (K. B. 1684), English courts during the reigns of Charles II and James II took advantage of their newly acquired power and imposed ruinous fines on wrongdoers and critics of the Crown. After James II fled England during the Glorious Revolution of 1688-1689, the House of Commons, in an attempt to end the crisis precipitated by the vacation of the throne, appointed a committee to draft articles concerning essential laws and liberties that would be presented to William of Orange. As the Court correctly notes, some of the men who made up the committee had been subjected to heavy fines by the courts of James II. See generally [*291] L. Schwoerer, The Declaration of Rights, 1689, pp. 30-33, 91-92 (1981) (Schwoerer). The committee ultimately reported 13 Articles to the House of Commons. The final draft of Article 10 provided that "excessive Baile ought not to be required, nor excessive Fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual Punishments inflicted." [****58] 1 Wm. & Mary, 2d Sess., ch. 2, 3 Stat. at Large 440, 441 (1689).

According to Blackstone, the English Bill of Rights was "only declaratory . . . of the old constitutional law." 4 W. Blackstone, Commentaries *372. See also Schwoerer 92 (excessive fines provision of Article 10 "reaffirmed ancient law"). Of course, the only prohibition on excessive monetary penalties predating Article 10 was contained in Magna Carta. "Since it incorporated the earlier prohibition against excessive amercements -- which could arise in civil settings -- as well as other forms of punishment, [Article 10's limitation on excessive fines] cannot be limited to strictly criminal cases but extends to monetary sanctions imposed in both criminal and civil contexts." Note, at 1717. Because the word "amercement" had dropped out of ordinary [**2929] usage by the late 17th century, it appears that the word "fine" in Article 10 was simply shorthand for all monetary penalties, "whether imposed by judge or jury, in both civil and criminal proceedings." Massey 1256. Indeed, three months after the adoption of the English Bill of Rights, the House of Lords reversed a fine by referring to Magna Carta, and not to Article [****59] 10. See Earl of Devonshire's Case, 11 State Tr. 1367, 1372 (H. L. 1689) (ruling that "fine" of # 30,000 for striking another was "excessive and exorbitant, against Magna Charta, the common right of the subject, and the law of the land").

The Court argues that Chapter 20 of Magna Carta and Article 10 of the English Bill of Rights were concerned only with limiting governmental abuses of power. Because amercements and fines were paid to the Crown, the Court assumes that governmental abuses can only take place when the sovereign itself exacts [***249] a penalty. That assumption, however, [*292] simply recalls the historical accident that, prior to the mid-18th century, monetary sanctions filled the coffers of the King and his barons.

As early as 1275, with the First Statute of Westminster, double and treble damages were allowed by statute. See ante, at 274. However, "[i]t was only after the prevalence of the amercement had diminished that the cases began to report the award of punitive damages as a common law entitlement." Massey 1266. One of the first reported cases allowing punitive damages is Wilkes v. Wood, Lofft. 1, 18-19, 98 Eng. Rep. 489, 498-499 (K. B. 1763): [****60] "[A] jury have it in their power to give damages for more than the injury received. Damages are designed not only as satisfaction to the injured person, but likewise as a punishment to the guilty, to deter from any such proceeding for the future, and as a proof of the detestation of the jury to the action itself." The link between the gradual disappearance of the amercement and the emergence of punitive damages provides strong historical support for applying the Excessive Fines Clause to awards of punitive damages. See Boston 728-732.

The case of Lord Townsend v. Hughes, 2 Mod. 150, 151, 86 Eng. Rep. 994, 994-995 (C. P. 1677), cited by the Court, ante, at 268, 272, is not inconsistent with this understanding of history. At the time Hughes was decided, damages were understood only as compensation for injury. See T. Blount, Law-Dictionary (1670) (Blount) (unpaginated) (defining "damages" as "a recompense for what the Plaintiff or Demandant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the Defendant or Tenant") (emphasis added). Hughes involved an action for slander, and the jury was told to award damages for the harm [****61] the plaintiff had sustained. The damages awarded were entirely compensatory and did not contain any punitive element whatsoever. Thus, Hughes does not stand for the proposition that Magna Carta is inapplicable to punitive damages awarded in civil cases. For the same reasons, neither do the commentaries cited by the Court differentiating between [*293] damages and amercements. See ante, at 265, n. 7, 270, n. 13. The damages referred to in those commentaries are compensatory, and not punitive, in nature. See, e. g., Introduction to the Curia Regis Rolls, 1199-1230 A. D., in 62 Publications of the Selden Society 463 (C. Flower ed. 1944) (damages "represented the loss incurred by a litigant through an unlawful act") (emphasis added). Amercements and fines were not meant to compensate the injured plaintiff, but rather to punish the wrongdoer and express society's displeasure at the improper act. Compensatory damages, even in Saxon England, had not been limited by Magna Carta, which was meant to ensure that monetary penalties, assessed in addition to compensatory sums, have some measure of proportionality.

The Court also points out that in Rookes v. Barnard [***62] , [1964] A. C. 1129, 1221-1231, Lord Devlin, in his extensive discussion of exemplary damages and decision to limit them to certain cases, did not mention either [**2930] Magna Carta or the Excessive Fines Clause of the English Bill of Rights. [***250] Ante, at 273, n. 18. Although this is a small point, I think the Court is mistaken to place any reliance on the lack of citation to Magna Carta or the English Bill of Rights in Rookes. English courts today need not cite those two documents, for the principles set forth in them are now ingrained as part of the common law. See J. Holt, Magna Carta 2 (1965) ("[I]t is now possible and indeed justifiable for a lawyer to compose a general survey of the freedom of the individual in England without once referring to Magna Carta"). Indeed, English courts have not cited Magna Carta or the English Bill of Rights in cases involving the excessiveness of criminal fines. See Queen v. Asif, 82 Cr. App. R. 123 (1985) (upholding fine of # 25,000 for fraudulent evasion of taxes); Queen v. Farenden, 6 Cr. App. R. (S) 42 (1984) (finding that fine of # 250 for first offense [***63] of careless driving was "too heavy" and reducing it to # 100). Moreover, Lord Devlin noted in Rookes that punitive damages could be "used against liberty. Some of the awards that juries have made in the past seem to me to [*294] amount to a greater punishment than would be likely to be incurred if the conduct were criminal . . . . I should not allow the respect which is traditionally paid to an assessment of damages by a jury to prevent me from seeing that the weapon is used without restraint." [1964] A. C., at 1227. Thus, he suggested that some limits might have to be placed on punitive damages: "It may even be that the House [of Lords] may find it necessary to . . . place some arbitrary limit on awards of damages that are made by way of punishment. Exhortations to be moderate may not be enough." Id., at 1227-1228.

C

There was little debate over the Eighth Amendment in the First Congress, and no discussion of the Excessive Fines Clause. Consideration of the Eighth Amendment immediately followed consideration of the Fifth Amendment. After deciding to confine the benefits of the Self-Incrimination Clause of the Fifth Amendment to criminal proceedings, the Framers turned their [***64] attention to the Eighth Amendment. There were no proposals to limit that Amendment to criminal proceedings, and the only discussion was by Mr. Smith of South Carolina and Mr. Livermore of New Hampshire, both of whom thought that the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause was too indefinite. See Granucci 842; Weems v. United States, 217 U.S. 349, 368-369 (1910). Exactly what significance the silence of the Framers has in constitutional interpretation is open to debate, compare, e. g., L. Tribe, Constitutional Choices 42-44 (1985), with, e. g., Powell, Rules for Originalists, 73 Va. L. Rev. 659, 671-672 (1987), but it is not necessary to address that issue here. The Eighth Amendment was based directly on Article I, § 9, of the Virginia Declaration of Rights of 1776, which had in turn adopted verbatim the language of § 10 of the English Bill of Rights. "There can be no doubt that the Declaration of Rights guaranteed at least the liberties and privileges of Englishmen." [*295] Solem v. Helm, 463 U.S. 277, 285-286, n. 10 (1983). See also A. Howard, The Road from Runnymede: Magna [***65] Carta and Constitutionalism [***251] in America 205-207 (1968) (Howard). If anything is apparent from the history set forth above, it is that a monetary penalty in England could be excessive, and that there is a strong link between amercements, which were assessed in civil cases, and fines. Cf. Solem, supra, at 284, n. 8 (an "amercement was similar to a modern-day fine"). There is, in short, considerable historical support for application of the Excessive Fines Clause to punitive damages.

The Court, however, thinks otherwise, and emphasizes that at the time the Eighth Amendment was enacted, "the word 'fine' was understood to mean a payment to a sovereign as punishment for some offense." [**2931] Ante, at 265, and n. 6. In my view, the meaning of that word was much more ambiguous than the Court is willing to concede. In defining the word "fine," some 18th-century dictionaries did not mention to whom the money was paid. See, e. g., T. Sheridan, A Dictionary of the English Language (6th ed. 1796) (unpaginated) ("a mulct [or] a pecuniary punishment"); S. Johnson, A Dictionary of the English Language (7th ed. 1785) (unpaginated) ("a mulct [or] pecuniary [****66] punishment," a "penalty," or "money paid for any exemption or liberty"). To the same effect are some 19th-century dictionaries. See, e. g., 1 C. Richardson, A New Dictionary of the English Language 796 (1839) ("any thing (as a sum of money) paid at the end, to make an end, termination or conclusion of a suit, of a prosecution"). That the word "fine" had a broader meaning in the 18th century is also illustrated by the language of § 37 of the Massachusetts Body of Liberties of 1641. That provision granted courts the authority to impose on a civil plaintiff who had instituted an improper suit "a proportionable fine to the use of the defendant, or accused person." 1 B. Schwartz, The Bill of Rights: A Documentary History 76 (1971) (emphasis added). It is noteworthy that the "fine" was payable to a [*296] private party, and not a governmental entity. Boston 714. In 1646, the Massachusetts General Court ruled that § 37 of the Body of Liberties was based directly on Chapter 20 of Magna Carta. Howard 401, 404.

The Court also finds it significant that, in the 18th and 19th centuries, "fines were assessed in criminal, rather than in private civil, actions." Ante, at 265, [****67] and n. 7. Again, in my view the Court's recitation of history is not complete. As noted above, § 37 of the Massachusetts Body of Liberties required that "fines" payable to private litigants in civil cases be proportional. Furthermore, not all 17th-century sources unequivocally linked fines with criminal proceedings. See Blount ("fine" is "sometimes an amends, pecuniary punishment, or recompence upon an offence committed against the King, and his laws, or a Lord of a Mannor") (emphasis added). Nor did all American courts in the 19th century view "fines" as exclusively criminal. The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court held that the word "fine" in a statute meant "forfeitures and penalties recoverable in civil actions, as well as pecuniary punishments inflicted by sentence." Hanscomb v. Russell, 77 Mass. 373, 375 (1858). It explained that "the word 'fine' has other meanings" besides pecuniary penalties "inflicted by sentence of a court in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction . . . as [***252] appears by most of the dictionaries of our language, where it is defined not only as a pecuniary punishment, but also as a forfeiture, a penalty, [etc.]" [****68] Id., at 374-375. The Iowa Supreme Court had the following to say about fines: "The terms, fine, forfeiture, and penalty, are often used loosely, and even confusedly . . . . A fine is a pecuniary penalty, and is commonly (perhaps always) to be collected by suit in some form. A 'forfeiture' is a penalty by which one loses his rights and interest in his property." Gosselink v. Campbell, 4 Iowa 296, 300 (1856) (emphasis added). Hence, around the time of the framing and enactment of the Eighth Amendment some courts and [*297] commentators believed that the word "fine" encompassed civil penalties.

D

In my view, the $ 6 million award of punitive damages imposed on BFI constitutes a fine subject to the limitations of the Eighth Amendment. In current usage, the word "fine" comprehends a forfeiture or penalty recoverable in a civil action. See Black's Law Dictionary 569 (5th ed. 1979); Webster's Third New International Dictionary 852 (1971). Not only is that understanding supported by the history set forth above, it is buttressed by this Court's precedents. Punitive damages are "private fines levied by civil juries." [****69] Electrical Workers v. Foust, 442 U.S. 42, 48 [*2932] (1979) (emphasis added). They are not awarded to compensate for injury, but rather to further the aims of the criminal law: "to punish reprehensible conduct and to deter its future occurrence." Bankers Life & Casualty Co., 486 U.S., at 87 (O'Connor, J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment). See also Restatement (Second) of Torts § 908(1) (1979). Their role therefore "runs counter to the normal reparative function of tort and contract remedies." K. Redden, Punitive Damages § 2.1, p. 24 (1980). The Court's cases abound with the recognition of the penal nature of punitive damages. See Tull v. United States, 481 U.S. 412, 422, and n. 7 (1987); Memphis Community School District v. Stachura, 477 U.S. 299, 306, n. 9 (1986); Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 464 U.S. 238, 260-261 (1984) (Blackmun, J., dissenting); Smith v. Wade, 461 U.S. 30, 59 (1983) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting); Newport v. Fact Concerts, Inc., 453 U.S. 247, 266-267 (1981); [****70] Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 U.S. 323, 350 (1974); Rosenbloom v. Metromedia, Inc., 403 U.S. 29, 82 (1971) (Marshall, J., dissenting); Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U.S. 101, 107 (1893).

This plethora of case law on the nature of punitive damages, it seems to me, is sufficient to find the Excessive Fines Clause applicable to the award in this case. There is, however, [*298] even more support for the applicability of the Clause. In determining whether a sanction is penal, the Court has generally looked to several factors: (1) whether it involves an affirmative disability; (2) whether it has historically been regarded as punishment; (3) whether it comes into play on a finding of scienter; (4) whether its operation will [***253] promote retribution and deterrence; (5) whether the behavior to which it applies is already a crime; (6) whether there is an alternative purpose for it; and (7) whether it is excessive in relation to the alternative purpose assigned. Kennedy v. Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. 144, 168-169 (1963). I agree with [***71] those commentators who have found it easy to conclude that punitive damages are penal under the Mendoza-Martinez factors. See, e. g., Grass, The Penal Dimensions of Punitive Damages, 12 Hastings L. Q. 241 (1985).

I JGÁEÜÉGÍ Í ÉEGJÌ LFEJÀÉDÉGJ€ JÉEGJHGÁFÉ ÆSDAÉGÁFJÉEGJ GLÁFJÌ JÁNÉÉSÓYÓUÁGÍ Í ÉEEÉGÍ €

The character of a sanction imposed as punishment "is not changed by the mode in which it is inflicted, whether by a civil action or a criminal prosecution." United States v. Chouteau, 102 U.S. 603, 611 (1881). As the Court wrote only recently, "a civil sanction that cannot fairly be said solely to serve a remedial purpose, but rather can be explained only as also serving either retributive or deterrent purposes, is punishment." United States v. Halper, 490 U.S. 435, 448 (1989) (emphasis added). In order to evade the teachings of cases like Chouteau and Halper, the Court determines that the Excessive Fines Clause becomes relevant only when some governmental entity is seeking to reap the benefits of a monetary sanction. Ante, at 275-276. I disagree with the Court's formalistic analysis. A governmental entity can abuse its power by allowing civil juries to impose ruinous punitive damages [***72] as a way of furthering the purposes of its criminal law. Cf. Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922, 937 (1982). I also note that by relying so heavily on the distinction between governmental involvement and purely private suits, the Court suggests (despite its claim, ante, at 275-276, n. 21, that it leaves the question open) that [*299] the Excessive Fines Clause will place some limits on awards of punitive damages that are recovered by a governmental entity. See, [**2933] e. g., Fla. Stat. § 768.73(2)(b) (1987) (60% of any award of punitive damages is payable to the State).

As far as I know, the applicability of a provision of the Constitution has never depended on the vagaries of state or federal law, and in Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U.S. 512 (1885), the Court stressed the constitutional insignificance of how a monetary sanction is administered or by whom it is recovered. Humes involved a state statute providing for double damages to any individual who suffered harm due to a railroad's failure to maintain fences and cattle guards. In holding that the double damages provision did [***73] not violate the Fourteenth Amendment, id., at 522-523, the Court said:

"The additional damages being by way of punishment, . . . it is not a valid objection that the sufferer instead of the State receives them. . . . The power of the State to impose fines and penalties for a violation of its statutory requirements is coeval with government; and the mode in which they shall be enforced, whether at the suit of a private party, or at the suit of the public, and what disposition shall be made of the amounts collected, are merely matters of legislative discretion."

Humes teaches that the identity of [***254] the recipient of a monetary penalty is irrelevant for purposes of determining the constitutional validity of the penalty. From the standpoint of the defendant who has been forced to pay an excessive monetary sanction, it hardly matters what disposition is made of the award.

IV

The only remaining question is whether the award of over $ 6 million in this case is "excessive" within the meaning of the Eighth Amendment.

[*300] A

Using economic analysis, some of the amici in support of BFI argue that the wealth of a defendant should not, [***74] as a constitutional matter, be taken into account in setting the amount of an award of punitive damages. See, e. g., Brief for Navistar International Transportation Corp. as Amicus Curiae 9-25. It seems to me that this argument fails because the Excessive Fines Clause is only a substantive ceiling on the amount of a monetary sanction, and not an economic primer on what factors best further the goals of punishment and deterrence. Just as the Fourteenth Amendment does not enact Herbert Spencer's Social Statics, see Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45, 75 (1905) (Holmes, J., dissenting), the Eighth Amendment does not incorporate the views of the Law and Economics School. The "Constitution does not require the States to subscribe to any particular economic theory." CTS Corp. v. Dynamics Corp. of America, 481 U.S. 69, 92 (1987). Moreover, as a historical matter, the argument is weak indeed. First, Magna Carta only required that an amercement be proportionate and not destroy a person's livelihood. Second, Blackstone remarked that the "quantum, in particular, of pecuniary fines neither can, nor ought to be, [****75] ascertained by any invariable law. The value of money itself changes from a thousand causes; and at all events, what is ruin to one man's fortune, may be a matter of indifference to another's." 4 W. Blackstone, Commentaries *371.

B

Determining whether a particular award of punitive damages is excessive is not an easy task. The proportionality framework that the Court has adopted under the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause, however, offers some broad guidelines. See Solem, 463 U.S., at 290-292. Cf. United States v. Busher, 817 F. 2d 1409, 1415 (CA9 1987) (applying Solem factors to civil forfeiture under RICO). I would adapt the Solem framework [**2934] to punitive damages in the following [*301] manner. First, the reviewing court must accord "substantial deference" to legislative judgments concerning appropriate sanctions for the conduct at issue. Second, the court should examine the gravity of the defendant's conduct and the harshness of the award of punitive damages. Third, because punitive damages are penal in nature, the court should compare the civil and criminal penalties imposed in the same [****76] jurisdiction for different types of conduct, and the civil and criminal penalties imposed by different jurisdictions for the same or similar conduct. In identifying the relevant civil penalties, the court should consider [***255] not only the amount of awards of punitive damages but also statutory civil sanctions. In identifying the relevant criminal penalties, the court should consider not only the possible monetary sanctions, but also any possible prison term.

The Court of Appeals did not think that the Excessive Fines Clause applied to awards of punitive damages, 845 F. 2d, at 410, and therefore did not conduct any sort of proportionality analysis. I would remand the case to the Court of Appeals so that it could, in the first instance, apply the Solem framework set forth above and determine whether the award of over $ 6 million imposed on BFI violates the Excessive Fines Clause.

References

---

Supreme Court's construction and application of excessive fines clause of Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment

16A Am Jur 2d, Constitutional Law 447, 448, 450, 599; 21 Am Jur 2d, Criminal Law 615; 22 Am Jur 2d, Damages 736, 805-812; [****77] 32 Am Jur 2d, Federal Practice and Procedure 365, 405, 421; 45 Am Jur 2d, Interference 61

2 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Appeal, Certiorari, and Review 3:651, 3:691, 3:707

18 Am Jur Trials 57, Actions for Interference With Contract Rights

USCS, Constitution, Amendment 8

US L Ed Digest, Damages 16, 181

Index to Annotations, Additur and Remittitur; Eighth Amendment; Excessive or Inadequate Damages; Fines, Penalties, and Forfeitures; Interference and Obstruction; Punitive Damages

Annotation References:

What issues will the Supreme Court consider, though not, or not properly, raised by the parties. 42 L Ed 2d 946.

Supreme Court's construction of Seventh Amendment's guaranty of right to trial by jury. 40 L Ed 2d 846.

I JGÁEÜÉGÁ Í ÉHEFLÁEJUÉÖDGJUÉÉEGJH LÁFÍ ÁSEÓaÉGAÁGFJÉÉGÍ LÁFJÍ JÁNÈÜÉSÓYÓÁHGÍ ÉÉÉÉÉI

The Supreme Court and the post-Erie federal common law. 31 L Ed 2d 1006.

Punitive damages for interference with contract or business relationship. 44 ALR4th 1078.

Sufficiency of showing of actual damages to support award of punitive damages. 40 ALR4th 11.

Excessiveness or inadequacy of punitive damages in cases not involving personal [****78] injury or death. 35 ALR4th 538.

Constitutional or statutory provision forbidding re-examination of facts tried by a jury as affecting power to reduce or set aside verdict because of excessiveness or inadequacy. 11 ALR2d 1217.

---

End of Document

California v. American Stores Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

August 22, 1989

Nos. A-151, 89-258

Reporter

492 U.S. 1301 *; 110 S. Ct. 1 **; 106 L. Ed. 2d 616 ***; 1989 U.S. LEXIS 3552 ****; 1989-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,728

CALIFORNIA v. AMERICAN STORES COMPANY ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] ON APPLICATION FOR STAY

Core Terms

---

merger, Divestiture, district court, Clayton Act, irreparable, enjoined, injunctive relief, anti trust law, writ petition, lessen

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

HN1[ Remedies, Damages

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 26.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN2[] Private Actions, Remedies

The weight of academic commentary favors a reading of § 16 of the Clayton Act that would permit divestiture as a remedy in private actions.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

The cost of enjoining a merger before consummation is staggering, and the cost of enjoining an already completed transaction even greater.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Application for stay of Federal Court of Appeals' mandate removing injunction against grocery chains' merger, pending Supreme Court's disposition of certiorari petition, granted by O'Connor, J.

Summary

The state of California, through its attorney general acting as a private plaintiff, sought, under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26), to enjoin the merger of two retail grocery chains, contending that the merger would violate federal and state antitrust laws. The United States District Court for the Central District of California granted a preliminary injunction and ordered the chains to operate independently and to refrain from merging or integrating their assets and businesses during the pendency of the action (697 F Supp 1125). Affirming the District Court's finding that the state had shown a likelihood of success on the merits and the possibility of irreparable harm, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed and remanded in part, holding that, because the District Court's remedy amounted to indirect divestiture, it was not available to private plaintiffs under 16, and that, accordingly, the District Court's order enjoining the chains from integrating their operations was overly broad and was thus an abuse of discretion (872 F2d 837). After the state declined to post a $ 16,288,898 initial bond to protect the grocery store chains against potential financial losses resulting from the Court of Appeals' 30-day stay of its mandate removing the injunction, the Court of Appeals vacated its stay and ordered issuance of the mandate. The state then requested that the United States Supreme Court stay the mandate, pending the Supreme Court's disposition of the state's petition for a writ of certiorari.

O'Connor, J., as Circuit Justice, granted the application for a stay, conditioned upon the state's posting a good and sufficient bond with the Clerk of the District Court, for the reasons stated in the headnote below.

Headnotes

---

APPEAL §913.4 > stay application to individual Justice -- likelihood of review and reversal -- irreparable injury -- balance of equities -- posting of bond -- > Headnote:

An individual Justice of the United States Supreme Court, as Circuit Justice, will grant a state's application for a stay--pending disposition of a petition for a writ of certiorari to review a Federal Court of Appeals' mandate removing a Federal District Court's injunction against the merger or integration of the assets and businesses of two retail grocery chains--of the Court of Appeals' mandate, where (1) the state, through its attorney general acting as a private plaintiff, seeks, under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26), to enjoin the merger of two retail grocery chains, and the Court of Appeals has held that the District Court's remedy amounted to indirect divestiture and was thus not available to private plaintiffs under 16; (2) the state's citizens will likely suffer irreparable harm from a substantial lessening of competition if integration of the grocery chains is not enjoined; (3) given the conflict among the lower courts concerning the important and recurring question whether divestiture is a remedy available to private plaintiffs under 16, and given the need for uniform enforcement of federal antitrust laws, there is a reasonable probability that at least four justices will vote to grant certiorari; (4) the fact that the weight of academic commentary favors a reading of 16 that would permit divestiture as a remedy in private actions suggests that there is a fair prospect that the state may prevail on the merits and a majority of the Supreme Court may vote to reverse the decision below; and (5) the balance of the equities favors a stay, under the circumstances and in light of the public interests involved, since the state alleges that the merger would cost the state's consumers $ 400 million a year in higher prices, while the grocery chains contend that the District Court's injunction and the state's decision to file suit after the merger was consummated is costing the chains more than $ 1 million dollars a week; the order granting the stay will be conditioned upon the state's posting of a good and sufficient bond with the Clerk of the District Court, the adequacy of such bond to be determined by the District Court. [Per O'Connor, J., as Circuit Justice.]

Syllabus

---

The request of applicant, the State of California, for a stay of the Court of Appeals' mandate is granted, pending disposition of its petition for a writ of certiorari and conditioned upon the posting of a bond with the Clerk of the District Court. The State, through its attorney general on behalf of himself and as parens patriae, filed in the District Court an action as a private plaintiff to enjoin the merger of respondents, the largest and fourth largest retail grocery chains in the State, contending that the merger would lessen competition in the relevant market in violation of the Clayton and Sherman Acts and state law. The court granted the motion for a preliminary injunction and ordered respondents to operate independently and to refrain from merging or integrating their assets and businesses during the pendency of the action. The Court of Appeals remanded, finding, [****2] inter alia, that the order enjoining respondents from integrating their operations amounted to indirect divestiture, a remedy not available to private plaintiffs under the Clayton Act. However, it granted a stay of its mandate to allow the State to file a petition for a writ of certiorari. The District Court conditioned the stay on the posting of a bond. The State declined to post the bond, and the Court of Appeals vacated its stay and ordered issuance of the mandate. The State has set forth sufficient reasons for granting a stay. It has made an adequate showing of irreparable injury, since other appropriate injunctive relief may be inadequate to remedy the injury. There is also a reasonable probability that the petition will be granted, given the conflict among the lower courts on the important and recurring issue whether divestiture constitutes injunctive relief within the meaning of the Clayton Act and the need for uniform enforcement of federal antitrust laws. Moreover, the fact that the weight of academic authority favors a reading of the Act that would permit divestiture as a remedy in private actions suggests that there is at least a fair prospect that a majority of [****3] the Court will vote to reverse the decision below. Finally, the equities favor the State, since the harm of a substantial lessening of competition in the relevant market outweighs the harm that respondents may suffer as the result of the stay.

Judges: O'Connor, Circuit Justice

Opinion by: O'CONNOR

Opinion

---

[***618] [*1302] [**1] JUSTICE O'CONNOR, Circuit Justice.

Applicant, the State of California, requests a stay of the mandate of the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, pending disposition of its petition for a writ of certiorari.

Applicant, through its attorney general on behalf of himself and as parens patriae, brought the underlying action as a private plaintiff to enjoin the merger of respondent Lucky Stores, Inc., the largest retail grocery chain in California, and respondent American Stores Company, operator of Alpha Beta, the fourth largest retail grocery chain in California. * Applicant contends that the merger would substantially lessen competition in the relevant markets, in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 18, § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, [****4] 15 U. S. C. § 1, and California's Cartwright Antitrust [*1303] and Unfair Competition Acts, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700-16761 and 17200-17208 (West 1987 and Supp. 1989).

[****5] The District Court granted applicant's motion for a preliminary injunction and ordered respondents to operate the two companies independently and refrain from merging or integrating their assets and businesses during [**2] the pendency of the action. 697 F. Supp. 1125 \(CD Cal. 1988\). The court concluded:

"The overwhelming statistical evidence has demonstrated a strong probability that the proposed merger will substantially lessen competition in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. This showing has not been rebutted by clear evidence that the proposed merger will not, in fact, substantially lessen competition. . . . Unless defendants are enjoined, the citizens of California will be substantially and irreparably harmed. While the Court in no way belittles the harm defendants may suffer as a result of this preliminary injunction, the Court concludes that it is substantially less than the harm plaintiff would suffer if the merger is not enjoined." Id., at 1135.

The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed in part and reversed and remanded in part. 872 F. 2d 837 \(1989\). The Court of Appeals affirmed the District Court's [***6] finding that applicant had shown a likelihood [***619] of success on the merits and the possibility of irreparable harm. Id., at 844. The Court of Appeals found, however, that the remedy ordered by the District Court amounted to indirect divestiture, which, the Court of Appeals held, was not a remedy available to private plaintiffs under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 737, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 26. 872 F. 2d, at 844-846. Accordingly, the Court of Appeals remanded the case, concluding that the District Court's order enjoining respondents from integrating their operations was overly broad and thus an abuse of discretion. Id. at 845-846.

[*1304] The Court of Appeals denied applicant's petition for rehearing and rehearing en banc, but granted a stay of its mandate for 30 days to enable applicant to file a petition for a writ of certiorari with this Court. The Court of Appeals also partially remanded the case to the District Court to determine whether, pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 41(b), a bond or other security or condition should be required of applicant as a condition of the [***7] stay. The District Court ordered applicant to post an initial bond of $ 16,288,898 to protect respondents against potential financial losses as a result of the stay of mandate. Applicant, claiming budgetary and administrative impossibility, declined to post the bond and appealed the bond order. The Court of Appeals consequently vacated its stay and ordered issuance of the mandate.

* American Stores initiated a hostile takeover bid for the Lucky chain on March 21, 1988. Pursuant to the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act, 90 Stat. 1390, 15 U. S. C. § 18a, American Stores notified the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) of its intentions. On May 23, American Stores increased its tender offer, and Lucky's board of directors approved the merger. On May 31, the FTC filed an administrative complaint alleging violations of § 7 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 18, and § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 719, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 45. The FTC simultaneously proposed a consent order under which it would settle its antitrust complaint in exchange for American Stores' compliance with certain demands, including divestiture of certain supermarkets in northern California and an agreement to "hold separate" the two firms until American Stores satisfied all of the consent order's conditions. American Stores agreed to the consent order, and by June 9 completed its $ 2.5 billion acquisition of the outstanding Lucky stock. On August 31, the FTC gave final approval to the proposed consent order without modification. On September 1, applicant initiated the underlying action.

In its application for a stay of the mandate pending this Court's disposition of its petition for certiorari, applicant contends that the Court of Appeals' bond requirement amounts to a denial of a stay and will result in irreparable harm to the State's consumers because of the merger's anticompetitive effects. Applicant also maintains that there is both a reasonable probability that its petition for a writ of certiorari will be granted, because the case presents an issue of great importance on which there is a conflict among the circuits, and a fair prospect that applicant will prevail on the merits. Finally, applicant asserts that the equities justify a stay of the Court of Appeals' mandate.

I am persuaded that applicant has set forth sufficient reasons for granting a stay in this case. I agree with [****8] both the District Court and the Court of Appeals that applicant has made an adequate showing of irreparable injury. See 872 F. 2d, at 844 (lessening of competition "is precisely the kind of irreparable injury that injunctive relief under section 16 of the Clayton Act was intended to prevent") (citations omitted); 697 F. Supp., at 1134. Even if applicant is free to seek [*1305] other appropriate injunctive relief on remand, the possibility of irreparable injury, it seems to me, remains to the extent that such other relief would be inadequate to remedy the injury. Cf. 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law § 328b, p. 137 (1978) ("Divestiture is the normal and usual remedy against an unlawful merger, whether sued by the government or by a private plaintiff").

[**3] Moreover, the issue presented appears to be an important question of federal law over which the Circuits are in conflict. Section 16 of the Clayton Act provides in relevant part that HN1 "any person . . . shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive . . . relief . . . against threatened loss [****9] or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws . . . when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity." 15 U. S. C. § 26. The Court of Appeals, relying on Circuit precedent, held that divestiture, whether direct or indirect, did not constitute "injunctive relief" within the meaning of § 16. See 872 F. 2d, at 844-846 (citing International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. v. General Telephone & Electronics Corp., 518 F. 2d 913, 920 (CA9 1975)); accord Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S. E. Johnson Co., 729 F. 2d 1050, 1060 (CA6), cert. denied, 469 U. S. 1036 (1984). As applicant notes, however, the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit has ruled that divestiture is a remedy available to private plaintiffs under § 16 in appropriate circumstances. Compania Petrolera Caribe, Inc. v. Arco Caribbean, Inc., 754 F. 2d 404, 413-430 (1985); see also NBO Industries Treadway Cos. v. Brunswick Corp., 523 F. 2d 262, 278-279 (CA3 1975) (dictum), vacated [****10] on other grounds, 429 U. S. 477 (1977). A number of District Courts have also reached the same conclusion. See, e. g., Tasty Baking Co. v. Ralston Purina, Inc., 653 F. Supp. 1250, 1255-1256 (ED Pa. 1987); Julius Nasso Concrete Corp. v. Dic Concrete Corp., 467 F. Supp. 1016, 1024-1025 (SDNY 1979); Credit Bureau Reports, Inc. v. Retail Credit Co., 358 F. Supp. 780, 797 (SD Tex. 1971), aff'd, 476 F. 2d 989 (CA5 1973); Bay Guardian Co. v. Chronicle Publishing Co., 340 F. Supp. 76, 81-82 (ND Cal. 1972). Given the conflict among the lower courts on this important and recurring issue and the need for uniform enforcement of federal antitrust laws, I think it fair to say that there is a reasonable probability that the petition for a writ of certiorari will be granted in this case.

Indeed, HN2 the weight of academic commentary favors a reading of § 16 that would permit divestiture as a remedy in private actions. See, e. g., 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law § 328b, [****11] p. 137 (1978) ("divestiture is available in a private suit challenging unlawful mergers"); P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law § 328'b, pp. 290-291 (Supp. 1988) (approving Petrolera, supra); E. Kintner, Primer on the Law of Mergers 361-364 (1973) (divestiture is available in private actions under § 16); L. Sullivan, Antitrust § 216, p. 672, n. 3 (1977) (same); Kintner & Wilberding, Enforcement of the Merger Laws by Private Party Litigation, 47 Ind. L. J. 293 (1972); Peacock, Private Divestiture Under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 48 Tex. L. Rev. 54 (1969); Comment, Private Divestiture: Antitrust's Latest Problem Child, 41 Ford. L. Rev. 569 (1973); Note, The Use of Divestiture in Private Antitrust Suits, 43 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 261 (1974); Note, Availability of Divestiture in Private Litigation as a Remedy for Violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 49 Minn. L. Rev. 267 (1964); Comment, Section 16 of the Clayton Act: Divestiture an Intended Type of Injunctive Relief, 19 Pac. L. J. 143 (1987). Although I cannot, of course, predict with mathematical certainty my colleagues' [****12] views on the subject, see New Motor Vehicle Board v. Orrin W. Fox Co., 434 U. S. 1345, 1347 (1977) (REHNQUIST, J., in chambers), this commentary suggests to me that plausible [****621] arguments exist for reversing the decision below and that there is at least a fair prospect that a majority of the Court may vote to do so. Cf. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., [*1307] 395 U. S. 100, 130-131 (1969) ("Section 16 should be construed and applied . . . with the knowledge that the remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice 'adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims.' . . . Its availability should be 'conditioned by the necessities [**4] of the public interest which Congress has sought to protect'"') (citation omitted).

Finally, balancing the stay equities persuades me that the harm to applicant if the stay is denied, in the form of a substantial lessening of competition in the relevant market, outweighs the harm respondents may suffer as a result of a stay of the mandate. Applicant alleges, for example, [****13] that permitting the merger would cost the State's consumers $ 400 million a year in higher prices. Respondents contend that they are incurring costs of over $ 1 million a week by reason of the District Court's injunction and applicant's decision to file suit after the merger had been consummated. To be sure, HN3[] the cost of enjoining a merger before consummation is staggering, see Western Airlines, Inc. v. Teamsters, 480 U. S. 1301, 1309 (1987) (O'CONNOR, J., in chambers), and the cost of enjoining an already completed transaction even greater. But, as the District Court found, "the State conducted [its] investigation as swiftly as was responsibly possible." 697 F. Supp., at 1135. Under the circumstances, and in light of the public interests involved, it appears that the equities favor the applicant.

Because the citizens of California will likely suffer irreparable harm if integration of respondents' companies is not enjoined, and because there is both a reasonable probability that at least four Justices would vote to grant the petition for a writ of certiorari [****14] and a fair prospect that applicant may prevail on the merits, I grant the requested stay of the mandate of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in this case, pending the disposition by this Court of the petition for a writ of certiorari or further order of this Court.

This order is conditioned upon the posting of a good and sufficient bond with the Clerk of the United States District Court for the Central District of California, the adequacy of such bond to be determined by that Court.

This order is conditioned upon the posting of a good and sufficient bond with the Clerk of the United States district Court for the Central District of California, the adequacy of such bond to be determined by that court.

References

---

Annotation References:

Considerations affecting grant or vacation of stay or injunction by individual Justice of Supreme Court. 78 L Ed 2d 780.

Check or money as meeting requirement of appeal bond. 65 ALR2d 1134.

Necessity that person acting in fiduciary or representative capacity give bond to maintain appellate review proceedings. 41 ALR2d 1324.

FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n

Supreme Court of the United States

October 30, 1989, Argued ; January 22, 1990, * Decided

No. 88-1198

Reporter

493 U.S. 411 *; 110 S. Ct. 768 **; 107 L. Ed. 2d 851 ***; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 638 ****; 58 U.S.L.W. 3468; 58 U.S.L.W. 4145; 1990-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,895

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. SUPERIOR COURT TRIAL LAWYERS ASSOCIATION ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 272 U.S. App. D. C. 272, 856 F.2d 226, reversed in part and remanded.

Core Terms

---

boycott, lawyers, per se rule, respondents', market power, anti trust law, antitrust, rates, Sherman Act, per hour, cases, appointments, condemnation, price-fixing, communicate, governmental interest, indigent defendant, criminal justice, competitors, concerted, campaign, prices, anticompetitive, regulation, immunized, regulars, effects, rights, restraint of trade, rule of reason

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN1[

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 45\(a\)\(1\).

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

HN2[

See U.S. Const. amend. I.

---

* Together with No. 88-1393, Superior Court Trial Lawyers Association et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, also on certiorari to the same court.

493 U.S. 411, *411; 110 S. Ct. 768, **768; 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, ***851; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 638, ****1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN4 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The constriction of supply is the essence of "price-fixing," whether it be accomplished by agreeing upon a price, which will decrease the quantity demanded, or by agreeing upon an output, which will increase the price offered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

HN5 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

It is no excuse that the prices fixed are themselves reasonable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN6 [] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

No violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, can be predicated upon mere attempts to influence the passage or enforcement of laws, even if the defendants' sole purpose is to impose a restraint upon the trade of their competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN7 [] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr doctrine does not extend to every concerted effort that is genuinely intended to influence governmental action.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

HN8 [] Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom of Speech

493 U.S. 411, *411; 110 S. Ct. 768, **768; 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, ***851; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 638, ****1

The right of the states to regulate economic activity can not justify a complete prohibition against a nonviolent, politically motivated boycott designed to force governmental and economic change and to effectuate rights guaranteed by the Constitution itself. The nonviolent elements of such petitioners' activities are entitled to the protection of the U.S. Const. amend. I.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Expressive Conduct

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

**HN9** [blue icon] Freedom of Speech, Expressive Conduct

When "speech" and "nonspeech" elements are combined in the same course of conduct, a sufficiently important governmental interest in regulating the nonspeech element can justify incidental limitations on U.S. Const. amend. I freedoms. A government regulation is sufficiently justified if it is within the constitutional power of the government; if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; if the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and if the incidental restriction on alleged U.S. Const. amend. I freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN10** [blue icon] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

The per se rules are the product of judicial interpretations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, but the rules nevertheless have the same force and effect as any other statutory commands.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

**HN11** [blue icon] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

The rule of reason in antitrust law generates two complementary categories of antitrust analysis. In the first category are agreements whose nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality -- they are "illegal per se." In the second category are agreements whose competitive effect can only be evaluated by analyzing the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN12 [ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Price-fixing cartels are condemned per se because the conduct is tempting to businessmen but very dangerous to society. The conceivable social benefits are few in principle, small in magnitude, speculative in occurrence, and always premised on the existence of price-fixing power which is likely to be exercised adversely to the public. Moreover, toleration implies a burden of continuous supervision for which the courts consider themselves ill-suited. And even if power is usually established while any defenses are not, litigation will be complicated, condemnation delayed, would be price-fixers encouraged to hope for escape, and criminal punishment less justified. Deterrence of a generally pernicious practice would be weakened. The key points are the first two. Without them, there is no justification for categorical condemnation.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Attorneys' concerted refusal to represent indigent criminal defendants without increase in compensation held (1) violative of federal antitrust laws, and (2) not protected by First Amendment.

Summary

Attorneys who regularly accepted court appointments to represent indigent defendants in minor felony and misdemeanor cases before the District of Columbia Superior Court sought an increase in the statutorily fixed fees they were paid for such work. When lobbying efforts failed, a group consisting of virtually all such attorneys agreed among themselves that they would not accept any new cases after a certain date if the District of Columbia had not passed legislation providing for an increase in their fees; and a trial lawyers' association to which the attorneys belonged supported and publicized their agreement. After the agreement went into effect, other available defense counsel were quickly overloaded, severely affecting the District's criminal justice system, and 2 weeks later the city council voted to increase the fees. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) subsequently filed a complaint against the trial lawyers' association, which complaint alleged that the association and its officers had entered into a conspiracy to fix prices and conduct a boycott and had thereby engaged in unfair methods of competition in violation of 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USCS 45). An administrative law judge rejected various defenses, but recommended that the complaint be dismissed because District of Columbia officials regarded the net effect of the boycott as beneficial in providing better representation for indigent defendants; however, the FTC did not regard the boycott as harmless and issued a cease and desist order prohibiting the association from initiating any similar future boycotts (107 FTC 510). The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit vacated the FTC order and remanded for a determination whether the association possessed significant market power, as it held that (1) the attorneys' boycott contained an element of expression warranting protection under the Federal Constitution's First Amendment, (2) a restriction on this form of expression cannot be justified unless it is no greater than is essential to an important governmental interest, and (3) this test could not be satisfied by the application of a per se rule against price-fixing boycotts, but rather the FTC was required to prove that such conduct presented the evil against which the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1-7) was directed (272 App DC 272, 856 F2d 226).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed in part and remanded for further proceedings. In an opinion by Stevens, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court in part (as to points 1, 2, and 3 below), and joined in part (as to point 4 below) by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and White, O'Connor, Scalia, and Kennedy, JJ., it was held that the attorneys' boycott (1) constituted a restraint of trade within the meaning of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), and as such also violated the prohibition against unfair methods of competition in 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USCS 45); (2) was not outside the coverage of the Sherman Act simply because the objective was the enactment of favorable legislation, given that the attorneys' alleged restraint of trade was not the intended consequence of public action, but rather was the means by which the attorneys sought to obtain favorable legislation; (3) was not excepted from condemnation under the antitrust laws as expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment, given that the undenied purpose of the attorneys' boycott was an economic advantage for those who agreed to participate; and (4) was not excepted, as expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment, from the application of per se rules permitting the condemnation of such a boycott and price-fixing arrangement under the federal antitrust laws in the absence of proof of the attorneys' market power.

Brennan, J., joined by Marshall, J., concurred in part and dissented in part, (1) joining in the court's holding that the attorneys' conduct was neither (a) clearly outside the scope of the Sherman Act, nor (b) automatically immunized from antitrust regulation by the First Amendment; but (2) expressing the view that (a) the government may not subject expressive political boycotts to a presumption of illegality without inquiring as to whether they actually cause any of the harms that the antitrust laws are designed to prevent, and (b) the Court of Appeals therefore properly remanded the case to the FTC for a showing that the attorneys had wielded market power.

Blackmun, J., concurred in part and dissented in part, (1) joining in the court's opinion as to points 1, 2, and 3 above, and (2) agreeing with the reasoning of the dissent of Brennan, J., but (3) expressing the view that a remand for findings of fact concerning the attorneys' market power would not be warranted because the attorneys, as officers of the court, had a legal duty to represent indigent defendants which the District of Columbia could have enforced had it wished to do so.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > attorneys' boycott and price-fixing arrangement -- unfair competition -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F] [LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [1G] [LEdHN\[1H\]](#) [1H] [LEdHN\[1I\]](#) [1I]

The actions of a group of attorneys, in agreeing among themselves that they would not accept further appointments to represent indigent criminal defendants in the District of Columbia Superior Court until the District of Columbia government substantially increased their compensation for such representation--which actions involved both a boycott and a horizontal price-fixing arrangement--constitute a restraint of trade within the meaning of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), and as such also violate the prohibition against unfair methods of competition in 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USCS 45); the attorneys' agreement is not outside the coverage of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1-7) simply because the agreement's objective was the enactment of favorable legislation, given that in this situation the alleged restraint of trade--the boycott--was not the intended consequence of public action, but rather was the means by which the attorneys sought to obtain favorable legislation.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §953 > free speech -- attorneys' compensation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C] [LEdHN\[2D\]](#) [2D] [LEdHN\[2E\]](#) [2E]

The actions of a group of attorneys, in agreeing among themselves that they would not accept further appointments to represent indigent criminal defendants in the District of Columbia Superior Court until the District of Columbia government substantially increased their compensation for such representation, are not excepted from condemnation as a restraint of trade violating 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), and as an unfair method of competition violating 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USCS 45), on the theory that such actions constitute expressive conduct protected by the *Federal Constitution's First Amendment*, the rule that the right of government to regulate economic activity cannot justify a complete prohibition against a nonviolent, politically motivated boycott designed to force governmental and economic change, and to effectuate rights guaranteed by the Federal Constitution itself, does not apply to a boycott such as that engaged in by the attorneys where the undenied purpose of the attorneys' boycott was an economic advantage for those who agreed to participate.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §953 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > free speech -- attorneys' compensation -- application of per se rule -- market power -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [ ] [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [ ] [3B] [LEdHN\[3C\]](#) [ ] [3C] [LEdHN\[3D\]](#) [ ] [3D] [LEdHN\[3E\]](#) [ ] [3E] [LEdHN\[3F\]](#) [ ] [3F]

Although the actions of a group of attorneys, in agreeing among themselves that they would not accept further appointments to represent indigent criminal defendants in the District of Columbia Superior Court until the District of Columbia government substantially increased their compensation for such representation--a demand to which the District government acceded after the boycott seriously affected the functioning of the District's criminal justice system--had an expressive content, the *Federal Constitution's First Amendment* does not require that those actions therefore be excepted from analysis as per se violations of the federal antitrust laws, so as to require proof that the attorneys had market power beyond that already disclosed by the record before they could be held to have violated those laws, because (1) the expressive component of the attorneys' boycott is not unique, but is present in every concerted refusal to deal with a potential customer or supplier, as the participants in such boycotts must exchange views about their objectives and the means of obtaining them and must communicate the terms of their demands to the target; (2) to the extent that boycotters may communicate with third parties to enlist public support for their objectives, as the attorneys did, this type of expression is not an element of the boycott, and such boycotts may attract publicity precisely because the harms they produce are matters of public concern, which is no reason for removing the per se prohibition; (3) the per se rules against price fixing and boycotts, which rules have been established by judicial interpretations of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1-7), are not merely rules of administrative convenience, but also reflect a longstanding judgment that the prohibited practices by their nature have a substantial potential for impact on competition; and (4) even if the attorneys' boycott had been uniquely expressive, and even if the purpose of the per se rules were purely that of administrative efficiency, the *First Amendment* would not protect the attorneys from the application of the per se rules, as the administrative efficiency interests in antitrust regulation--which the per se rules serve by avoiding the necessity for a complicated and prolonged economic investigation into the entire history of the industry involved, as well as related industries, in an effort to determine at large whether a particular restraint has been unreasonable--are unusually compelling. (Brennan, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

APPEAL §1662 > effect of decision on other grounds -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [ ] [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [ ] [4B]

In reviewing a cease and desist order issued by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) against attorneys who obtained an increase in the fees paid to them for representing indigent criminal defendants in the District of Columbia by agreeing among themselves that they would not accept any new cases until the District agreed to raise the fees, which agreement the FTC found to be a violation of federal antitrust laws, the United States Supreme Court need not decide whether the FTC rejected a trial examiner's finding that there was no credible evidence that the District had agreed to the attorneys' demands as a result of public pressure, where the Supreme Court does not rely upon this finding in reaching its decision.

CRIMINAL LAW §46.5 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §17 > benefit to public -- government duty to provide defense counsel -- judicial review -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

It is not the task of the United States Supreme Court, in reviewing Federal Trade Commission enforcement proceedings, to pass upon the social utility or political wisdom of price-fixing agreements; thus, a case considering whether the actions of a group of lawyers, in agreeing not to accept further appointments to represent indigent criminal defendants in the District of Columbia Superior Court until the District of Columbia government substantially increased their compensation for such representation, constituted a restraint of trade violating 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) and 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USCS 45), is not controlled by assumptions that (1) the preboycott compensation rates were unreasonably low, (2) the increase in compensation obtained by the attorneys has produced better legal representation for indigent defendants, and (3) there would have been no increase in compensation without the boycott; neither the fact that the District of Columbia purchases the attorneys' services because it has a constitutional duty to provide representation to criminal defendants, nor the fact that the quality of representation may improve when attorney compensation rates are increased, is an acceptable justification for an otherwise unlawful restraint of trade. (Brennan, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §5 > rationale of Sherman Act -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The Sherman Act (15 USCS 1-7) reflects a legislative judgment that ultimately competition will produce not only lower prices, but also better goods and services.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > factors affecting applicability of law --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

The statutory policy underlying the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1-7) precludes inquiry into the question whether competition is good or bad.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > influencing legislation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

No violation of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1-7) can be predicated upon mere attempts to influence the passage or enforcement of laws, even if the defendants' sole purpose is to impose a restraint upon the trade of their competitors.

493 U.S. 411, *411; 110 S. Ct. 768, **768; 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, ***851; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 638, ****1

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §938 > freedom of speech and petition -- lobbying -- publicizing cause -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

A District of Columbia trial lawyers' association engages in activities that are fully protected by the *Federal Constitution's First Amendment* where it makes efforts (1) to publicize an agreement among certain members of the association that they would not accept any further appointments as counsel for indigent criminal defendants unless the fees paid for such representation were increased, (2) to explain the merits of the cause, and (3) to lobby District officials to enact favorable legislation.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §15 > parties' constitutional concerns --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

Boycotts based upon sincere constitutional concerns--such as the alleged goal of vindicating the *Sixth Amendment* rights of indigent defendants, which goal was asserted by attorneys who refused to accept appointments to represent such defendants unless the fees paid for such representation were increased--are not thereby immunized from prosecution under the federal antitrust laws.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §4 > regulation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [11B]

The right of business entities to associate to suppress competition may properly be curtailed by government regulation.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §95 > unfair trade practices -- regulation --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [12A] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [12B]

Unfair trade practices may properly be restricted by government regulation.

LABOR §122 > restriction of picketing and boycotts -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13A\]](#) [13A] [LEdHN\[13B\]](#) [13B]

Secondary boycotts and picketing by labor unions may properly be prohibited, as part of Congress' striking of the delicate balance between union freedom of expression and the ability of neutral employers, employees, and consumers to remain free from coerced participation.

493 U.S. 411, *411; 110 S. Ct. 768, **768; 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, ***851; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 638, ****1

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > STATUTES §80 > price fixing -- boycotts -- per se rules -- statutory effect -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Although per se rules against price fixing and boycotts are the product of judicial interpretations of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1-7), these rules nevertheless have the same force and effect as any other statutory commands.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > rule of reason -- per se violations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

The rule of reason in antitrust law generates two complementary categories of antitrust analysis, the first consisting of agreements whose nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality and they are "illegal per se," and the second consisting of agreements whose competitive effect can be evaluated only by analyzing the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it is imposed.

AERONAUTICS AND SPACE §2 > MOTOR VEHICLES AND CARRIERS §2 > public regulation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

Laws prohibiting stuntflying in congested areas or setting speed limits for automobiles are justified by the state's interest in protecting human life and property; although, if especially skilled drivers and pilots were to paint messages on their cars or attach streamers to their planes, their conduct would have an expressive conduct, and high speeds and unusual maneuvers would help to draw attention to their messages, the laws may nonetheless be enforced against these skilled persons without proof that their conduct was actually harmful or dangerous.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > price fixing -- per se prohibition -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

Whatever economic justification particular price-fixing agreements may be thought to have, the federal antitrust law does not permit an inquiry into their reasonableness; they are all banned because of their actual or potential threat to the central nervous system of the economy.

Syllabus

---

A group of lawyers in private practice who regularly acted as court-appointed counsel for indigent defendants in District of Columbia criminal cases agreed at a meeting of the Superior Court Trial Lawyers Association (SCTLA) to stop providing such representation until the District increased group members' compensation. The boycott had a severe impact on the District's criminal justice system, and the District government capitulated to the lawyers' demands. After the lawyers returned to work, petitioner Federal Trade Commission (FTC) filed a complaint against SCTLA and four of its officers (respondents), alleging that they had entered into a conspiracy to fix prices and to [****2] conduct a boycott that constituted unfair methods of competition in violation of § 5 of the FTC Act. Declining to accept the conclusion of the Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) that the complaint should be dismissed, the FTC ruled that the boycott was illegal per se and entered an order prohibiting respondents from initiating future such boycotts. The Court of Appeals, although acknowledging that the boycott was a "classic restraint of trade" in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, vacated the FTC order. Noting that the boycott was meant to convey a political message to the public, the court concluded that it contained an element of expression warranting First Amendment protection and that, under United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, an incidental restriction on such expression could not be justified unless it was no greater than was essential to an important governmental interest. Reasoning that this test could not be satisfied by the application of an otherwise appropriate per se rule, but instead requires the enforcement agency to prove rather than presume that the evil against which the antitrust laws are directed looms in the conduct it condemns, [****3] the court remanded for a determination whether respondents possessed "significant market power."

Held:

1. Respondent's boycott constituted a horizontal arrangement among competitors that was unquestionably a naked restraint of price and output in violation of the antitrust laws. Respondents' proffered social justifications for the restraint of trade do not make the restraint any less unlawful. Nor is respondents' agreement outside the coverage of the antitrust laws under Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, simply because its objective was the enactment of favorable legislation. The Noerr doctrine does not extend to horizontal boycotts designed to exact higher prices from the government simply because they are genuinely intended to influence the government to agree to the conspirators' terms. Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 503. Pp. 421-425.
2. Respondents' boycott is not immunized from antitrust regulation by NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886, which held that the First Amendment prevented a State from prohibiting [****4] a politically motivated civil rights boycott. Unlike the boycott upheld in Claiborne Hardware, the undenied objective of this boycott was to gain an economic advantage for those who agreed to participate. 458 U.S., at 914-915. Pp. 425-428.
3. The Court of Appeals erred in creating a new exception, based on O'Brien, supra, to the antitrust per se liability rules for boycotts having an expressive component. The court's analysis is critically flawed in at least two respects. First, it exaggerates the significance of the "expressive component" in respondents' boycott, since every concerted refusal to do business with a potential customer or supplier has such a component. Thus, a rule requiring courts to apply the antitrust laws "prudently and with sensitivity," in the Court of Appeals' words, whenever an economic boycott has an "expressive component" would create a gaping hole in the fabric of those laws. Second, the Court of Appeals' analysis denigrates the importance of the rule of law that respondents violated. The court's implicit assumption that the antitrust laws permit, but do not require, the condemnation of price fixing and boycotts [****5] without proof of market power is in error, since, although the per se rules are the product of judicial interpretation of the Sherman Act, they nevertheless have the same force and effect as any other statutory commands. The court also erred in assuming that the categorical antitrust prohibitions are "only" rules of "administrative convenience" that do not serve any substantial governmental interest unless the price-fixing competitors actually possess market power. The per se rules reflect a long-standing judgment that every horizontal price-fixing arrangement among competitors poses some threat to the free market even if the participants do not themselves have the power to control market prices. Pp. 428-436.

Counsel: Ernest J. Eisenstadt, argued the cause for petitioner in No. 88-1198 and respondent in No. 88-1393. On the briefs for the Federal Trade Commission were Acting Solicitor General Bryson, Acting Assistant Attorney General Boudin, Kevin J. Arguit, Jay C. Shaffer, and Karen G. Bokat.

Willard K. Tom, argued the cause for respondents in No. 88-1198 and petitioners in No. 88-1393. With him on the brief for respondent Superior Court Trial Lawyers Association were [****6] Donald I. Baker, David T. Shelledy, and Michael L. Denger. Douglas E. Rosenthal filed a brief for Ralph J. Perrotta et al. +

[****7]

Judges: STEVENS, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court with respect to Parts I, II, III, and IV, and the opinion of the Court with respect to Parts V and VI, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and WHITE, O'CONNOR, SCALIA, and KENNEDY, JJ., joined. BRENNAN, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, in which MARSHALL, J., joined, post, p.436. BLACKMUN, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, post, p. 453.

Opinion by: STEVENS

Opinion

---

[*414] [*860] [**770] JUSTICE STEVENS delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A][↑] [1A] LEdHN[2A][↑] [2A] LEdHN[3A][↑] [3A]Pursuant to a well-publicized plan, a group of lawyers agreed not to represent indigent criminal defendants in the District of Columbia Superior Court until the District of Columbia government increased the lawyers' compensation. The questions presented are whether the lawyers' concerted conduct violated § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and, if so, whether it was nevertheless [****8] protected by the First Amendment to the Constitution.<sup>1</sup>

[**771] |

---

+ Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the State of South Dakota et al. by Roger A. Tellinghuisen, Attorney General of South Dakota, and Jeffrey P. Hallem, Assistant Attorney General, Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona, and Alison J. Butterfield, Douglas B. Baily, Attorney General of Alaska, and Richard D. Monkman, Assistant Attorney General, Duane Woodard, Attorney General of Colorado, and Thomas P. McMahon, First Assistant Attorney General, Charles M. Oberly III, Attorney General of Delaware, and David G. Culley, Deputy Attorney General, Warren Price III, Attorney General of Hawaii, Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, and John R. Perkins, Deputy Attorney General, Robert T. Stephan, Attorney General of Kansas, John W. Campbell, Deputy Attorney General, and Mark S. Braun, Assistant Attorney General, Frederic J. Cowan, Attorney General of Kentucky, and James M. Ringo, Assistant Attorney General, William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General of Louisiana, and Anne F. Benoit, Assistant Attorney General, J. Joseph Curran, Jr., Attorney General of Maryland, and Michael F. Brockmeyer and Ellen S. Cooper, Assistant Attorneys General, Robert M. Spire, Attorney General of Nebraska, and Dale A. Comer, Assistant Attorney General, Jim Mattox, Attorney General of Texas, Mary F. Keller, First Assistant Attorney General, Lou McCreary, Executive Assistant Attorney General, and Allene D. Evans, Assistant Attorney General, Donald J. Hanaway, Attorney General of Wisconsin, Mark E. Musolf, Deputy Attorney General, and Kevin J. O'Connor and Matthew J. Frank, Assistant Attorneys General; for the American Civil Liberties Union et al. by Wm. Warfield Ross, Gerald P. Norton, John A. Powell, Arthur B. Spitzer, and Elizabeth Symonds; and for the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers by Rick Harris.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the American Medical Association by Jack R. Bierig and Carter G. Phillips; and for the Washington Council of Lawyers et al. by Andrew J. Pincus.

<sup>1</sup> Section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 719, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1), provides:

HN1[↑] "Unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce, are declared unlawful." The First Amendment to the Constitution provides:

HN2[↑] "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

493 U.S. 411, *414; 110 S. Ct. 768, **771; 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, ***860; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 638, ****8

The burden of providing competent [***861] counsel to indigent defendants in the District of Columbia is substantial. During 1982, court-appointed [****9] counsel represented the defendant in approximately 25,000 cases. In the most serious felony cases, representation was generally provided by full-time employees of the District's Public Defender System (PDS). Less serious felony and misdemeanor cases constituted about [*415] 85 percent of the total caseload. In these cases, lawyers in private practice were appointed and compensated pursuant to the District of Columbia Criminal Justice Act (CJA).<sup>2</sup>

Although over 1,200 lawyers have registered for CJA appointments, relatively few actually apply for such work on a regular basis. In 1982, most appointments went to approximately 100 lawyers who are described as "CJA regulars." These lawyers derived almost all of their income from representing indigents.<sup>3</sup> In 1982, the total fees paid to CJA lawyers amounted to $ 4,579,572. [****10]

In 1974, the District created a Joint Committee on Judicial Administration with authority to establish rates of compensation for CJA lawyers not exceeding the rates established by the federal Criminal Justice Act of 1964. After 1970, the federal Act provided for fees of $ 30 per hour for court time and $ 20 per hour for out-of-court time. See 84 Stat. 916, codified at 18 U.S.C. § 3006A \(1970 ed.\). These rates accordingly capped the rates payable to the District's CJA lawyers, and could not be exceeded absent amendment [****11] to either the federal statute or the District Code.

Bar organizations began as early as 1975 to express concern about the low fees paid to CJA lawyers. Beginning in 1982, respondents, the Superior Court Trial Lawyers Association (SCTLA) and its officers, and other bar groups sought to persuade the District to increase CJA rates to at least $ 35 per hour. Despite what appeared to be uniform support for the bill, it did not pass. It is also true, however, that nothing [*416] in the record indicates that the low fees caused any actual shortage of CJA lawyers or denied effective representation to defendants.

In early August 1983, in a meeting with officers of SCTLA, the Mayor expressed his sympathy but firmly indicated that no money was available to fund an increase. The events giving rise to this litigation then ensued.

At an SCTLA meeting, the CJA lawyers voted to form a "strike committee." The eight members of that committee promptly met and informally agreed "that the only viable way of getting an increase in fees was to stop signing up to take new CJA appointments, and that the boycott should aim for a $ 45 out-of-court and $ 55 in-court rate schedule." In re Superior Court Trial Lawyers Assn., 107 F. T. C. 510, 538 \(1986\). [****12]

[***862] On August 11, 1983, about 100 CJA lawyers met and resolved not to accept any new cases after September 6 if legislation providing for an increase in their fees had not passed by that date. Immediately following the meeting, they prepared (and most of them signed) a petition stating:

---

"We, the undersigned private criminal lawyers practicing in the Superior Court of the District of Columbia, agree that unless we are granted a substantial increase in our hourly rate we will cease accepting new appointments under the Criminal Justice [**772] Act." 272 U.S. App. D. C. 272, 276, 856 F.2d 226, 230 \(1988\).

<sup>2</sup> D. C. Code §§ 11-2601--11-2609 (1981). In a small number of cases, the indigent defendants were represented by third-year law students or private counsel serving without compensation.

<sup>3</sup> As the Administrative Law Judge (ALJ), noted:

"Because of the nature of CJA practice -- its long hours away from the office (assuming the CJA lawyer has an office), the deadlines of Superior Court, and the problem of meeting deadlines in other courts -- CJA regulars ordinarily do not take civil cases, nor do they usually appear on the criminal side of U.S. District court." In re Superior Court Trial Lawyers Assn., 107 F. T. C. 510, 522, n. 54 \(1986\).

LEdHN[4A] [4A]On September 6, 1983, about 90 percent <sup>4</sup> of the CJA regulars refused to accept any new assignments. Thereafter, SCTLA arranged a series of events to attract the attention of the news media and to obtain additional support. These events were well publicized and did engender favorable editorial comment, but the Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) found that "there is no credible evidence that the District's [*417] eventual capitulation to the demands of the CJA lawyers [****13] was made in response to public pressure, or, for that matter, that this publicity campaign actually engendered any significant measure of public pressure." 107 F. T. C., at 543.<sup>5</sup>

[****14] As the participating CJA lawyers had anticipated, their refusal to take new assignments had a severe impact on the District's criminal justice system. The massive flow of new cases did not abate,<sup>6</sup> and the need for prompt investigation and preparation did not ease. As the ALJ found, "there was no one to replace the CJA regulars, and makeshift measures were totally inadequate. A few days after the September 6 deadline, PDS was swamped with cases. The handful of CJA regulars who continued to take cases were soon overloaded. The overall response of the uptown lawyers to the PDS call for help was feeble, reflecting their universal distaste for criminal law, their special aversion for compelled indigency representation, the near epidemic siege of self-doubt about their ability to handle cases in this field, and their underlying support for the demands of the CJA lawyers. Most of the law student volunteers initially observed the boycott, and later all law student volunteers were limited (as they usually are) to a relatively few minor misdemeanors." 107 F. T. C., at 544 (footnotes omitted).

[****15] [*418] Within 10 days, the key figures in the District's criminal justice system "became convinced that the system was on the brink of collapse because of the refusal of CJA lawyers to take [***863] on new cases." Ibid. On September 15, they hand-delivered a letter to the Mayor describing why the situation was expected to "reach a crisis point" by early the next week and urging the immediate enactment of a bill increasing all CJA rates to $ 35 per hour. The Mayor promptly met with members of the strike committee and offered to support an immediate temporary increase to the $ 35 level as well as a subsequent permanent increase to $ 45 an hour for out-of-court time and $ 55 for in-court time.

At noon on September 19, 1983, over 100 CJA lawyers attended a SCTLA meeting and voted to accept the $ 35 offer and end the boycott. The city council's Judiciary Committee convened at 2 p.m. that afternoon. The committee recommended legislation increasing CJA fees to $ 35, and the council unanimously passed the bill on September 20. On September 21, the CJA regulars began to accept new assignments and the crisis subsided.

II

The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) filed a complaint [****16] against SCTLA and four of its officers (respondents) alleging that they had "entered into an agreement among themselves and with other lawyers to restrain [*773] trade by refusing to compete for or accept new appointments under the CJA program beginning on September 6, 1983, unless and until the District of Columbia increased the fees offered under the CJA program." Id., at 511. The complaint alleged that virtually all of the attorneys who regularly compete for or accept new appointments under the CJA program had joined the agreement. The FTC characterized respondents' conduct as

<sup>4</sup> The ALJ found that "at most" 13 of the CJA regulars continued to take assignments. 107 F. T. C., at 542, n. 173.

<sup>5</sup> LEdHN[4B] [4B]

It is not clear how much of this finding by the ALJ was accepted by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC or Commission). The Court of Appeals suggested that the finding was implicitly rejected by the Commission because not expressly accepted. See 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 297, 856 F. 2d, at 251. We do not rely upon the finding, and need not decide whether the Commission did indeed reject it. We note, however, that the Commission endorsed findings attributing the District's eventual change of position to a crisis resulting from the lawyers' exercise of power. 107 F. T. C., at 572, and n. 69. Those findings seem to embody the conclusion that the reversal is not attributable to public pressure or publicity.

<sup>6</sup> "During the period from September 6 to September 20, there was a daily average of 63 defendants on the weekday lock-up list and 43 on the Saturday list." Id., at 543, n. 183.

"a conspiracy to fix prices and to conduct a boycott" and concluded that they were engaged in "unfair methods of competition" [*419] in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.<sup>7</sup>

[****17] After a 3-week hearing, the ALJ found that the facts alleged in the complaint had been proved, and rejected each of respondents' three legal defenses -- that the boycott was adequately justified by the public interest in obtaining better legal representation for indigent defendants; that as a method of petitioning for legislative change it was exempt from the antitrust laws under our decision in Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127 (1961); and that it was a form of political action protected by the First Amendment under our decision in NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886 (1982). The ALJ nevertheless concluded that the complaint should be dismissed because the District officials, who presumably represented the victim of the boycott, recognized that its net effect was beneficial. The increase in fees would attract more CJA lawyers, enabling them to reduce their caseloads and provide better representation for their clients. "I see no point," he concluded, "in [***864] striving resolutely for an antitrust triumph in this sensitive area when the particular case can be disposed of on [****18] a more pragmatic basis -- there was no harm done." 107 F. T. C., at 561.

The ALJ's pragmatic moderation found no favor with the FTC. Like the ALJ, the FTC rejected each of respondents' defenses. It held that their "coercive, concerted refusal to deal" had the "purpose and effect of raising prices" and was illegal per se. Id., at 573. Unlike the ALJ, the FTC refused to conclude that the boycott was harmless, noting that the "boycott forced the city government to increase the CJA fees from a level that had been sufficient to obtain an adequate supply of CJA lawyers to a level satisfactory to the respondents." [*420] The city must, as a result of the boycott, spend an additional $ 4 million to $ 5 million a year to obtain legal services for indigents. We find that these are substantial anticompetitive effects resulting from the respondents' conduct." Id., at 577. Finally, the FTC determined that the record did not support the ALJ's conclusion that the District supported the boycott. The FTC also held that such support would not in any event excuse respondents' antitrust violations. Accordingly, it entered a cease-and-desist order [*419] "to prohibit the respondents from initiating another boycott . . . whenever they become dissatisfied with the results or pace of the city's legislative process." Id., at 602.

The Court of Appeals vacated the FTC order and remanded for a determination whether respondents possessed "significant market power." The court began its analysis by recognizing that absent any special First Amendment protection, the boycott "constituted a classic restraint of trade within the meaning of Section 1 of the Sherman Act."<sup>8</sup> 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 280, 856 F.2d at 234. [*774] The Court of Appeals was not persuaded by respondents' reliance on Claiborne Hardware or Noerr, or by their argument that the boycott was justified because it was designed to improve the quality of representation for indigent defendants. It concluded, however, that "the SCTLA boycott did contain an element of expression warranting First Amendment protection." 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 294, 856 F.2d, at 248. It [*421] noted that boycotts have historically been used as a dramatic means of expression and that respondents intended to convey a political message to the [***20] public at large. It therefore concluded that under United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367 (1968), a restriction on this form of expression could not be justified unless it is no greater than is essential to an important governmental interest. This test, the court reasoned, could not be satisfied by the application of an otherwise appropriate per se rule, but instead required the enforcement agency to "prove rather than presume that the evil against which [***865] the Sherman Act is directed looms in the conduct it condemns." 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 296, 856 F.2d, at 250.

<sup>7</sup> Commissioner Pertschuk dissented from the decision to issue a complaint on the ground that it represented an unwise use of the FTC's scarce resources. He did not, however, disagree with the conclusion that a violation of law had been alleged. 107 F. T. C., at 512-513.

<sup>8</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 1, provides:

HN3 [↑] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding one million dollars if a corporation, or, if any other person, one hundred thousands dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

[****21] Because of our concern about the implications of the Court of Appeals' unique holding, we granted the FTC's petition for certiorari as well as respondents' cross-petition. 490 U.S. 1019 (1989).

We consider first the cross-petition, which contends that respondents' boycott is outside the scope of the Sherman Act or is immunized from antitrust regulation by the First Amendment. We then turn to the FTC's petition.

III

LEdHN[1B] [↑] [1B] LEdHN[5A] [↑] [5A] Reasonable lawyers may differ about the wisdom of this enforcement proceeding. The dissent from the decision to file the complaint so demonstrates. So, too, do the creative conclusions of the ALJ and the Court of Appeals. Respondents' boycott may well have served a cause that was worthwhile and unpopular. We may assume that the preboycott rates were unreasonably low, and that the increase has produced better legal representation for indigent defendants. Moreover, given that neither indigent criminal defendants nor the lawyers who represent them command any special appeal with the electorate, [****22] we may also assume that without the boycott there would have been no increase in District CJA fees at least until the Congress amended the federal statute. These assumptions do not control the case, for it is [*422] not our task to pass upon the social utility or political wisdom of price-fixing agreements.

LEdHN[1C] [↑] [1C] As the ALJ, the FTC, and the Court of Appeals all agreed, respondents' boycott "constituted a classic restraint of trade within the meaning of Section 1 of the Sherman Act." 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 280, 856 F.2d, at 234. As such, it also violated the prohibition against unfair methods of competition in § 5 of the FTC Act. See FTC v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 694 (1948). Prior to the boycott CJA lawyers were in competition with one another, each deciding independently whether and how often to offer to provide services to the District at CJA rates.<sup>9</sup> The agreement [***866] among the [*423] CJA lawyers was designed to [**775] obtain higher prices for their services and was implemented by a concerted refusal to serve an important customer [****23] in the market for legal services and, indeed, the only customer in the market for the particular services that CJA regulars offered. HN4 [↑] "This constriction of supply is the essence of 'price-fixing,' whether it be accomplished by agreeing upon a price, which will decrease the quantity demanded, or by agreeing upon an output, which will increase the price

<sup>9</sup> The FTC found:

"The city's purchase of CJA legal services for indigents is based on competition. The price offered by the city is based on competition, because the city must attract a sufficient number of individual lawyers to meet its needs at that price. The city competes with other purchasers of legal services to obtain an adequate supply of lawyers, and the city's offering price is an element of that competition. Indeed, an acknowledgement of this element of competition is implicit in the respondents' argument that an increase in the CJA fee was 'necessary to attract, and retain, competent lawyers.' If the offering price had not attracted a sufficient supply of qualified lawyers willing to accept CJA assignments for the city to fulfill its constitutional obligation, then presumably the city would have increased its offering price or otherwise sought to make its offer more attractive. In fact, however, the city's offering price before the boycott apparently was sufficient to obtain the amount and quality of legal services that it needed." 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 278, 856 F.2d, at 232.

The Court of Appeals agreed with this analysis:

"The Commission correctly determined that the CJA regulars act as 'competitors' in the only sense that matters for antitrust analysis: They are individual business people supplying the same service to a customer, and as such may be capable, through a concerted restriction on output, of forcing that customer to pay a higher price for their service. That the D. C. government, like the buyers of many other services and commodities, prefers to offer a uniform price to all potential suppliers does not alter in any way the anti-competitive potential of the petitioners' boycott. The antitrust laws do not protect only purchasers who negotiate each transaction individually, instead of posting a price at which they will trade with all who come forward. Nor should any significance be assigned to the origin of the demand for CJA services; here the District may be compelled by the Sixth Amendment to purchase legal services, there it may be compelled by the voters to purchase street paving services. The reason for the government's demand for a service is simply irrelevant to the issue of whether the suppliers of it have restrained trade by collectively refusing to satisfy it except upon their own terms. We therefore conclude, as did the Commission, that the petitioners engaged in a 'restraint of trade' within the meaning of Section 1." Id., at 281, 856 F.2d, at 235 (footnote omitted).

offered." 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 280, 856 F.2d, at 234. The horizontal arrangement among these competitors was unquestionably a "naked restraint" on price and output. See National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 110 \(1984\).

[****24] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#)↑ [1D] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#)↑ [5B] [LEdHN\[6\]](#)↑ [6]It is of course true that the city purchases respondents' services because it has a constitutional duty to provide representation to indigent defendants. It is likewise true that the quality of representation may improve when rates are increased. Yet neither of these facts is an acceptable justification for an otherwise unlawful restraint of trade. As we have remarked before, the "Sherman Act reflects a legislative judgment that ultimately competition will produce not only lower prices, but also better goods and services." National Soc. of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 695 \(1978\). This judgment "recognizes that all elements of a bargain -- quality, service, safety, and durability -- and not just the immediate cost, are favorably affected by the free opportunity to select among alternative offers." [*424] Ibid. That is equally so when the quality of legal advocacy, rather than engineering design, [****25] is at issue.

[LEdHN\[1E\]](#)↑ [1E] [LEdHN\[7\]](#)↑ [7]The social justifications proffered for respondents' restraint of trade thus do not make it any less unlawful. The statutory policy underlying the Sherman Act "precludes inquiry into the question whether competition is good or bad." Ibid. Respondents' argument, like that made by the petitioners in Professional Engineers, ultimately asks us to find that their boycott is permissible because the price it seeks to set is reasonable. But it was settled shortly after the Sherman Act was passed that HN5↑ it "is no excuse that the prices fixed are themselves reasonable. See, e. g., United v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 397-398 \(1927\); United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 340-341 \(1897\)." Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 647 [**776] (1980). [***867] Respondents' agreement is not outside the coverage of the [****26] Sherman Act simply because its objective was the enactment of favorable legislation.

Our decision in Noerr in no way detracts from this conclusion. In Noerr, we "considered whether the Sherman Act prohibited a publicity campaign waged by railroads" and "designed to foster the adoption of laws destructive of the trucking business, to create an atmosphere of distaste for truckers among the general public, and to impair the relationships existing between truckers and their customers." Claiborne Hardware, 458 U.S., at 913. Interpreting the Sherman Act in the light of the First Amendment's Petition Clause, the Court noted that "at least insofar as the railroads' campaign was directed toward obtaining governmental action, its legality was not at all affected by any anticompetitive purpose it may have had." 365 U.S., at 139-140.

[LEdHN\[1F\]](#)↑ [1F][LEdHN\[8\]](#)↑ [8]It of course remains true that HN6↑ "no violation of the Act can be predicated [****27] upon mere attempts to influence the passage or enforcement of laws," id., at 135, even if the defendants' sole purpose is to impose a restraint upon the trade of their competitors, id., at 138-140. But in the Noerr case the alleged [*425] restraint of trade was the intended consequence of public action; in this case the boycott was the means by which respondents sought to obtain favorable legislation. The restraint of trade that was implemented while the boycott lasted would have had precisely the same anticompetitive consequences during that period even if no legislation had been enacted. In Noerr, the desired legislation would have created the restraint on the truckers' competition; in this case the emergency legislative response to the boycott put an end to the restraint.

Indeed, respondents' theory of Noerr was largely disposed of by our opinion in Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492 \(1988\). We held that HN7↑ the Noerr doctrine does not extend to "every concerted effort that [****28] is genuinely intended to influence governmental action." 486 U.S., at 503. We explained:

"If all such conduct were immunized then, for example, competitors would be free to enter into horizontal price agreements as long as they wished to propose that price as an appropriate level for governmental ratemaking or price supports. But see Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 324 U.S. 439, 456-463 \(1945\). Horizontal conspiracies or boycotts designed to exact higher prices or other economic advantages from the government would be immunized on the ground that they are genuinely intended to influence the government to agree to the conspirators' terms. But see *Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159 \(1942\)*. Firms could claim immunity for boycotts or horizontal output restrictions on the ground that they are intended to dramatize the plight of their industry and spur legislative action." Ibid.

IV

[LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]SCTLA argues that if its [***868] conduct would otherwise be prohibited by the Sherman Act and the Federal Trade Commission Act, it is nonetheless protected by [****29] the *First Amendment* rights recognized in [*NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., \[\*426\] 458 U.S. 886 \(1982\)*](#). That case arose after black citizens boycotted white merchants in Claiborne County, Mississippi. The white merchants sued under state law to recover losses from the boycott. We found that HN8 the "right of the States to regulate economic activity could not justify a complete prohibition against a nonviolent, politically motivated boycott designed to force governmental and economic change and to effectuate rights guaranteed by the Constitution [**777] itself." *Id., at 914*. We accordingly held that "the nonviolent elements of petitioners' activities are entitled to the protection of the *First Amendment*." *Id., at 915.*

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]SCTLA contends that because it, like the boycotters in Claiborne Hardware, sought to vindicate constitutional rights, it should enjoy a similar *First Amendment* protection. It is, of course, clear that the association's efforts to publicize [***30] the boycott, to explain the merits of its cause, and to lobby District officials to enact favorable legislation -- like similar activities in Claiborne Hardware -- were activities that were fully protected by the *First Amendment*. But nothing in the FTC's order would curtail such activities, and nothing in the FTC's reasoning condemned any of those activities.

[LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C]The activity that the FTC order prohibits is a concerted refusal by CJA lawyers to accept any further assignments until they receive an increase in their compensation; the undenied objective of their boycott was an economic advantage for those who agreed to participate. It is true that the Claiborne Hardware case also involved a boycott. That boycott, however, differs in a decisive respect. Those who joined the Claiborne Hardware boycott sought no special advantage for themselves. They were black citizens in Port Gibson, Mississippi, who had been the victims of political, social, and economic discrimination for many years. They sought only the equal respect and equal treatment to which they were constitutionally entitled. They struggled [***31] "to change a social order that had consistently treated them as second class citizens." *Id., at 912*. As we observed, the campaign was not [*427] intended "to destroy legitimate competition." *Id., at 914*. Equality and freedom are preconditions of the free market, and not commodities to be haggled over within it.

[LEdHN\[2D\]](#) [2D][LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A]The same cannot be said of attorney's fees. As we recently pointed out, our reasoning in Claiborne Hardware is not applicable to a boycott conducted by business competitors who "stand to profit financially from a lessening of competition in the boycotted market." *Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., supra, at 508.*<sup>10</sup> [****33] No matter how altruistic the motives of respondents may have [***869] been, it is undisputed that their immediate objective was to increase the price that they would be paid for their services. Such an economic boycott is well within the category that was expressly distinguished in the Claiborne Hardware opinion itself. [****32] 458 U.S., at 914-915.<sup>11</sup>

<sup>10</sup> In [Claiborne Hardware] we held that the *First Amendment* protected the nonviolent elements of a boycott of white merchants organized by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and designed to make white government and business leaders comply with a list of demands for equality and racial justice. Although the boycotters intended to inflict economic injury on the merchants, the boycott was not motivated by any desire to lessen competition or to reap economic benefits but by the aim of vindicating rights of equality and freedom lying at the heart of the Constitution, and the boycotters were consumers who did not stand to profit financially from a lessening of competition in the boycotted market. *Id., at 914-915*. Here, in contrast, petitioner was at least partially motivated by the desire to lessen competition, and, because of petitioner's line of business, stood to reap substantial economic benefits from making it difficult for respondent to compete." *Allied Tube & Conduit Corp., 486 U.S., at 508-509.*

[*428] [**778] [LEdHN\[11A\]](#)↑ [11A] [****34] [LEdHN\[12A\]](#)↑ [12A] [LEdHN\[13A\]](#)↑ [13A] Only after recognizing the well-settled validity of prohibitions against various economic boycotts did we conclude in Claiborne Hardware that "peaceful, political activity such as that found in the [Mississippi] boycott" are entitled to constitutional protection.<sup>12</sup> We reaffirmed the government's "power to regulate [such] economic activity." Id., at 912-913. This conclusion applies with special force when a clear objective of the boycott is to economically advantage the participants.

[****35] V

[LEdHN\[1G\]](#)↑ [1G][LEdHN\[2E\]](#)↑ [2E] Respondents' concerted action in refusing to accept further CJA assignments until their fees were increased was thus a plain violation of the antitrust laws. The exceptions derived from Noerr and Claiborne Hardware have no application to respondents' boycott. For these reasons we reject the arguments [***870] made by respondents in the cross-petition.

[LEdHN\[3B\]](#)↑ [3B] The Court of Appeals, however, crafted a new exception to the per se rules, and it is this exception which provoked the [*429] FTC's petition to this Court. The Court of Appeals derived its exception from United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367 \(1968\). In that case O'Brien had burned his Selective Service registration certificate on the steps of the South Boston Courthouse. He did so before a sizable crowd and with the purpose of advocating his antiwar beliefs. We affirmed his conviction. We held that the governmental interest in regulating the "nonspeech" [****36] element" of his conduct adequately justified the incidental restriction on First Amendment freedoms.<sup>13</sup> Specifically, we concluded that the statute's incidental restriction on O'Brien's freedom of expression

<sup>11</sup> [LEdHN\[10B\]](#)↑ [10B]

Respondents contend that, just as the Claiborne Hardware boycott sought to secure constitutional rights to equality and freedom, the lawyers' boycott sought to vindicate the Sixth Amendment rights of indigent defendants. Claiborne Hardware, however, does not protect every boycott having a constitutional dimension. Indeed, insofar as respondents seek immunity from prosecution on the basis of their good intent, their theory of defense "is merely another variety of an age-old argument." See United States v. Cullen, 454 F.2d 386, 392 \(CA7 1971\). Claiborne Hardware does not, and could not, establish a rule immunizing from prosecution any boycott based upon sincere constitutional concerns. Such an exemption would authorize the government's contractors in nearly all areas to circumvent antitrust law on the basis of their own theory of the government's obligations.

<sup>12</sup> [LEdHN\[11B\]](#)↑ [11B] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#)↑ [12B] [LEdHN\[13B\]](#)↑ [13B]

A nonviolent and totally voluntary boycott may have a disruptive effect on local economic conditions. This Court has recognized the strong governmental interest in certain forms of economic regulation, even though such regulation may have an incidental effect on rights of speech and association. See Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U.S. 490 [(1949)]; NLRB v. Retail Store Employees, 447 U.S. 607 [(1980)]. The right of business entities to 'associate' to suppress competition may be curtailed. National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679 [(1978)]. Unfair trade practices may be restricted. Secondary boycotts and picketing by labor unions may be prohibited, as part of 'Congress' striking of the delicate balance between union freedom of expression and the ability of neutral employers, employees, and consumers to remain free from coerced participation in industrial strife.' NLRB v. Retail Store Employees, supra, at 617-618 (Blackmun, J., concurring in part). See Longshoremen v. Allied International, Inc., 456 U.S. 212, 222-223, and n. 20 [(1982)]."458 U.S., at 912.

<sup>13</sup> "This Court has held that HNG↑ when 'speech' and 'nonspeech' elements are combined in the same course of conduct, a sufficiently important governmental interest in regulating the nonspeech element can justify incidental limitations on First Amendment freedoms. . . . We think it clear that a government regulation is sufficiently justified if it is within the constitutional power of the Government; if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; if the governmental interest is unrelated was no greater than necessary to further the Government's interest in requiring registrants to have valid certificates continually available.

[****37] However, the Court of Appeals held that, in light of O'Brien, the expressive component of respondents' boycott compelled courts to apply the antitrust laws "prudently and with sensitivity," 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 279-280, 856 F. 2d, at 233-234, with a "special solicitude for the First Amendment rights" of respondents. The Court of Appeals concluded that the governmental interest in prohibiting boycotts is not sufficient to justify a restriction on the communicative element of the boycott unless the FTC can prove, and not merely presume, that the boycotters have market power. Because the Court of Appeals imposed this special requirement upon [**779] the Government, it ruled that per se antitrust [*430] analysis was inapplicable to boycotts having an expressive component.

There are at least two critical flaws in the Court of Appeals' antitrust analysis: it exaggerates the significance of the expressive component in respondents' boycott and it denigrates the importance of the rule of law that respondents violated. Implicit in the conclusion of the Court of Appeals are unstated assumptions that most economic boycotts do not have an expressive component, [****38] and that the categorical prohibitions against price fixing and boycotts are merely rules of "administrative convenience" that do not serve any substantial governmental interest unless the price-fixing competitors actually possess market power.

It would not much matter to the outcome of this case if these flawed assumptions were sound. O'Brien would offer respondents no protection even if their boycott were uniquely expressive and even if the purpose of the per se rules were purely that of administrative efficiency. [***871] We have recognized that the Government's interest in adhering to a uniform rule may sometimes satisfy the O'Brien test even if making an exception to the rule in a particular case might cause no serious damage. United States v. Albertini, 472 U.S. 675, 688 \(1985\) ("The First Amendment does not bar application of a neutral regulation that incidentally burdens speech merely because a party contends that allowing an exception in the particular case will not threaten important government interests"). The administrative efficiency interests in antitrust regulation are unusually compelling. The per se rules avoid "the necessity [****39] for an incredibly complicated and prolonged economic investigation into the entire history of the industry involved, as well as related industries, in an effort to determine at large whether a particular restraint has been unreasonable." Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 \(1958\). If small parties "were allowed to prove lack of market power, all parties would have that right, thus introducing the enormous complexities of market definition [*431] into every price-fixing case." R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 269 (1978). For these reasons, it is at least possible that the Claiborne Hardware doctrine, which itself rests in part upon O'Brien,<sup>14</sup> exhausts O'Brien's application to the antitrust statutes.

In any event, however, we cannot accept the Court of Appeals' characterization of this boycott or the antitrust laws. Every concerted refusal to do business with a potential customer or supplier has an expressive component. [****40] At one level, the competitors must exchange their views about their objectives and the means of obtaining them. The most blatant, naked price-fixing agreement is a product of communication, but that is surely not a reason for viewing it with special solicitude. At another level, after the terms of the boycotters' demands have been agreed upon, they must be communicated to its target: "We will not do business until you do what we ask." That expressive component of the boycott conducted by these respondents is surely not unique. On the contrary, it is the hallmark of every effective boycott.

At a third level, the boycotters may communicate with third parties to enlist public support for their objectives; to the extent that the boycott is newsworthy, it will facilitate the expression of the boycotters' ideas. But this level of expression is not an element of the boycott. Publicity may be generated by any other activity that is sufficiently newsworthy. Some activities, including the boycott here, may be newsworthy precisely for the reasons that they are to the suppression of free expression; and if the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest." 391 U.S., at 376-377.

---

<sup>14</sup> See 458 U.S., at 912.

prohibited: the harms they produce are matters of public concern. Certainly that is no reason for removing the prohibition.

[****41] In sum, there is thus nothing unique about the "expressive component" of respondents' [**780] boycott. A rule that requires courts to apply the antitrust laws "prudently and with sensitivity" whenever an economic boycott has an "expressive component" would create a gaping hole in the fabric of those [*432] laws. Respondents' boycott thus has no special characteristics meriting an exemption [***872] from the per se rules of antitrust law.

LEdHN[3C] [↑] [3C]LEdHN[14] [↑] [14]Equally important is the second error implicit in respondents' claim to immunity from the per se rules. In its opinion, the Court of Appeals assumed that the antitrust laws permit, but do not require, the condemnation of price fixing and boycotts without proof of market power.<sup>15</sup> The opinion further assumed that the per se rule prohibiting such activity "is only a rule of 'administrative convenience and efficiency,' not a statutory command." 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 295, 856 F. 2d, at 249. This statement contains two errors. HN10 [↑] [****42] The per se [*433] rules are, of course, the product of judicial interpretations of the Sherman Act, but the rules nevertheless have the same force and effect as any other statutory commands. Moreover, while the per se rule against price fixing and boycotts is indeed justified in part by "administrative convenience," the Court of Appeals erred in describing the prohibition as justified only by such concerns. The per se rules also reflect a long-standing judgment that the prohibited practices by their nature have "a substantial potential for impact on competition." Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 16 \(1984\).

[****43] LEdHN[15] [↑] [15]As we explained in Professional Engineers, HN11 [↑] the rule of reason in antitrust law generates

"two complementary categories of antitrust analysis. In the first category are agreements whose nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality -- they are 'illegal per se.' In the second category are agreements whose competitive effect can only be evaluated by analyzing the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed." 435 U.S., at 692.

[***873] "Once experience with a particular kind of restraint enables the Court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it, it has applied a conclusive presumption that the restraint is unreasonable." Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 344 \(1982\).

<sup>15</sup> In our opinion in Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2 \(1984\), we noted that "the rationale for per se rules in part is to avoid a burdensome inquiry into actual market conditions in situations where the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct is so great as to render unjustified the costs of determining whether the particular case at bar involves anticompetitive conduct. See, e.g., Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 350-351 \(1982\)." Id., at 15-16, n. 25. The Court of Appeals overlooked the words "in part" in that footnote, and also overlooked the statement in text that "there must be a substantial potential for impact on competition in order to justify per se condemnation." Id., at 16. As the following paragraph from its opinion demonstrates, the Court of Appeals incorrectly assumed that the per se rule against price fixing is "only" a rule of administrative convenience:

"The antitrust laws permit, but do not require, the condemnation of price fixing without proof of market power; even the per se rule, as the Commission acknowledges in its brief, is only a rule of 'administrative convenience and efficiency,' not a statutory command. FTC Brief at 39; see Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 15 n. 25 \(1984\). While the rule may occasionally be overinclusive, condemning the ineffectual with the harmful, there is no known danger that socially beneficial arrangements will be prohibited, for price-fixing agreements rarely, if ever, have redeeming virtues. As for the hapless but harmless, as Professor Areeda has noted, defendants charged with conspiring to fix prices 'have little moral standing to demand proof of power or effect when the most they can say for themselves is that they tried to harm the public but were mistaken in their ability to do so.' VII P. Areeda, Antitrust Law para. 1509 at 411 (1986)." 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 295, 856 F.2d, at 249.

[**781] [LEdHN\[16\]](#)<sup>16</sup> [16] [****44] The per se rules in antitrust law serve purposes analogous to per se restrictions upon, for example, stunt flying in congested areas or speeding. Laws prohibiting stunt flying or setting speed limits are justified by the State's interest in protecting human life and property. Perhaps most violations of such rules actually cause no harm. No doubt many experienced drivers and pilots can operate much more safely, even at prohibited speeds, than the average citizen.

[*434] If the especially skilled drivers and pilots were to paint messages on their cars, or attach streamers to their planes, their conduct would have an expressive component. High speeds and unusual maneuvers would help to draw attention to their messages. Yet the laws may nonetheless be enforced against these skilled persons without proof that their conduct was actually harmful or dangerous.

In part, the justification for these per se rules is rooted in administrative convenience. They are also supported, however, by the observation that every speeder and every stunt pilot poses some threat to the community. An unpredictable event may overwhelm the skills of the best driver or pilot, even if the [****45] proposed course of action was entirely prudent when initiated. A bad driver going slowly may be more dangerous than a good driver going quickly, but a good driver who obeys the law is safer still.

So it is with boycotts and price fixing.<sup>16</sup> [****46] Every such horizontal arrangement among competitors poses some threat to the free market. A small participant in the market is, obviously, less likely to cause persistent damage than a large participant. Other participants in the market may act quickly and effectively to take the small participant's place. For reasons including market inertia and information failures, however, a small conspirator may be able to impede competition [*435] over some period of time.<sup>17</sup> Given an appropriate set of circumstances and some luck, the period can be long enough to inflict real injury upon particular consumers or competitors.<sup>18</sup>

[***874] [LEdHN\[17\]](#)<sup>17</sup> [17] As Justice Douglas observed in an oft-quoted footnote to his United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150 (1940), opinion:

"Price-fixing agreements may or may not be aimed at complete elimination of price competition. The group making those agreements may or may not have power to control the market. But the fact that the group cannot control the market prices does not necessarily mean that the agreement as to prices has no utility to the members of the combination. The effectiveness [****47] of price-fixing agreements is dependent on many factors, such as competitive tactics, position in the industry, the formula underlying pricing policies. Whatever economic justification particular price-fixing agreements may be thought to have, the law does not permit an inquiry [**782] into their reasonableness. They are all banned because of their actual or potential threat to the central nervous system of the economy." Id., at 225-226, n. 59.

<sup>16</sup> "In sum, HN12<sup>18</sup> price-fixing cartels are condemned per se because the conduct is tempting to businessmen but very dangerous to society. The conceivable social benefits are few in principle, small in magnitude, speculative in occurrence, and always premised on the existence of price-fixing power which is likely to be exercised adversely to the public. Moreover, toleration implies a burden of continuous supervision for which the courts consider themselves ill-suited. And even if power is usually established while any defenses are not, litigation will be complicated, condemnation delayed, would be price-fixers encouraged to hope for escape, and criminal punishment less justified. Deterrence of a generally pernicious practice would be weakened. The key points are the first two. Without them, there is no justification for categorical condemnation." 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law para. 1509, pp. 412-413 (1986).

<sup>17</sup> Cf. Markovits, The Limits to Simplifying Antitrust: A Reply to Professor Easterbrook, 63 Tex. L. Rev. 41, 80 (1984) (suggesting circumstances in which a firm that lacks market power may nonetheless benefit from anticompetitive tactics).

<sup>18</sup> "Very few firms that lack power to affect market prices will be sufficiently foolish to enter into conspiracies to fix prices. Thus, the fact of agreement defines the market." R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 269 (1978).

See also Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S., at 351, and n. 23.

[LEdHN\[3D\]](#) [3D]Of course, some boycotts and some price-fixing agreements are more pernicious than others; some are only partly successful, and some may only succeed when they are buttressed by other causative factors, such as political influence. But [*436] an assumption that, absent proof of market power, the boycott disclosed by this record was totally harmless -- when overwhelming testimony demonstrated that it almost produced a crisis in the administration of criminal justice in the District and when it achieved its economic goal -- is flatly inconsistent [****48] with the clear course of our antitrust jurisprudence. Conspirators need not achieve the dimensions of a monopoly, or even a degree of market power any greater than that already disclosed by this record, to warrant condemnation under the antitrust laws.

VI

[LEdHN\[1H\]](#) [1H] [LEdHN\[3E\]](#) [3E]The judgment of the Court of Appeals is accordingly reversed insofar as that court held the per se rules inapplicable to the lawyers' boycott.<sup>19</sup> [****49] The case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.<sup>20</sup>

It is so ordered.

Concur by: BRENNAN (In Part); BLACKMUN (In Part)

Dissent by: BRENNAN (In Part); BLACKMUN (In Part)

Dissent

---

[***875] JUSTICE BRENNAN, with whom Justice Marshall joins, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

The Court holds today that a boycott by the Superior Court Trial Lawyers Association (SCTLA or Trial Lawyers), whose members collectively refused to represent indigent [*437] criminal defendants without greater compensation, constituted conduct that was neither clearly outside the scope of the Sherman Act nor automatically immunized from antitrust regulation by the First Amendment. With this much I agree.<sup>1</sup> In Part V of its opinion, however, the Court maintains that under the per se rule the Federal Trade Commission (FTC or Commission) could find the boycott illegal because it might have implicated some of the concerns underlying the antitrust laws. I cannot countenance [****50] this reasoning, which upon examination reduces to the Court's assertion that since the

---

<sup>19</sup> [LEdHN\[1I\]](#) [1I] [LEdHN\[3F\]](#) [3F]

In response to JUSTICE BRENNAN's opinion, and particularly to its observation that some concerted arrangements that might be characterized as "group boycotts" may not merit per se condemnation, see post, at 452, n. 9, we emphasize that this case involves not only a boycott but also a horizontal price-fixing arrangement -- a type of conspiracy that has been consistently analyzed as a per se violation for many decades. All of the "group boycott" cases cited in JUSTICE BRENNAN's footnote involved nonprice restraints. There was likewise no price-fixing component in any of the boycotts listed on pages 446-448 of JUSTICE BRENNAN's opinion. Indeed, the text of the opinion virtually ignores the price-fixing component of respondent's concerted action.

<sup>20</sup> On remand, the Court of Appeals should review respondents' objections to the form of the order entered by the Commission. See 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 299, 856 F.2d, at 253.

<sup>1</sup> I join Parts I, II, III, and IV of the Court's opinion, although, as discussed further infra, I do not agree that the unreasonableness of the pre-boycott rates of compensation and the fact that the Trial Lawyers enjoyed no other effective means of making themselves heard are irrelevant to the proper analysis. Compare ante, at 421-422.

government may prohibit airplane stunt flying and reckless automobile driving as categorically harmful, see ante, at 433-434, it may also subject expressive political boycotts to a presumption of illegality without even inquiring as to whether they actually cause any of the harms that the antitrust laws are designed to prevent. This non sequitur cannot justify the significant restriction on First Amendment freedoms that the majority's rule entails. Because I believe that the majority's decision is insensitive to the venerable [**783] tradition of expressive boycotts as an important means of political communication, I respectfully dissent from Part V of the Court's opinion.

[****51] |

The Petition and Free Speech Clauses of the First Amendment guarantee citizens the right to communicate with the government, and when a group persuades the government to adopt a particular policy through the force of its ideas and the power of its message, no antitrust liability can attach. "There are, of course, some activities, legal if engaged in by one, yet illegal if performed in concert with others, but political expression is not one of them." *Citizens Against Rent [*4381] Control/Coalition for Fair Housing v. Berkeley*, 454 U.S. 290, 296 (1981). But a group's effort to use market power to coerce the government through economic means may subject the participants to antitrust liability.

In any particular case, it may be difficult to untangle these two effects by determining whether political or economic power was brought to bear on the government. The Court of Appeals thoughtfully analyzed this problem and concluded, I believe correctly, that there could be no antitrust violation absent a showing that the boycotters possessed some degree of market power -- that is, the ability to raise prices profitably through economic means or, more generally, [****52] the capacity to act other than as would an actor in a perfectly competitive market. The court reasoned that [***876] "when the government seeks to regulate an economic boycott with an expressive component . . . its condemnation without proof that the boycott could in fact be anticompetitive ignores the command of [United States v.] O'Brien that restrictions on activity protected by the First Amendment be 'no greater than is essential' to preserve competition from the sclerotic effects of combination." 272 U.S. App. D. C. 272, 295, 856 F.2d 226, 249 (1988) (quoting United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 377 (1968)) (emphasis in original). The concurring judge added that if the participants wielded no market power, "the boycott must have succeeded out of persuasion and been a political activity." 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 300, 856 F.2d, at 254 (opinion of Silberman, J.). This approach is quite sensible, and I would affirm the Court of Appeals' decision to remand the case to the FTC for a showing of market power.

A

The issue in this case is not whether boycotts may ever be punished under § 5 of the Federal Trade [****53] Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1), consistent with the First Amendment; rather, the issue is how the government may determine which boycotts are illegal. Two well-established premises [*439] lead to the ineluctable conclusion that when applying the antitrust laws to a particular expressive boycott, the government may not presume an antitrust violation under the per se rule, but must instead apply the more searching, case-specific rule of reason.

First, the per se rule is a presumption of illegality.<sup>2</sup> As Justice Stevens has written:

---

<sup>2</sup> I disagree with the Court that the government's interest in employing the per se rule here is a substantial one. The per se rule's conceded service of the goals of administrative efficiency and judicial economy cannot justify its application to activity protected by the First Amendment. "The First Amendment does not permit the State to sacrifice speech for efficiency." Riley v. National Federation of Blind of N. C., Inc., 487 U.S. 781, 795 (1988). See also Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147, 161, 164 (1939). Insofar as the per se rule is thought warranted by a speculation that even relatively small boycotts or those without market power might nonetheless inflict some measure of economic harm, see ante, at 434-436, the rule can be applied in ordinary antitrust cases where First Amendment freedoms are not implicated. In such cases, "the conceivable social benefits [of the conduct under scrutiny] are few in principle, small in magnitude, [and] speculative in occurrence." Ante, at 434, n. 16 (quoting 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law para. 1509, pp. 412-413 (1986)). But where an expressive boycott is at issue, the same cannot be said; the First Amendment establishes that the social benefits involved are not "small in magnitude" or "speculative in occurrence." Hence, even if it were possible that a boycott without market power might cause anticompetitive effects -- a dubious proposition, since [**784] "The costs of judging business practices under the rule of reason, however, have been reduced by the recognition of per se rules. Once experience with a particular kind of restraint enables the Court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it, it has applied a conclusive presumption that the restraint is unreasonable. As in every rule of general application, the match between the presumed and the actual is [***877] imperfect. For the sake of business certainty and litigation efficiency, [*440] we have tolerated the invalidation of some [****54] agreements that a fullblown inquiry might have proved to be reasonable." *Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 343-344 \(1982\)* (emphasis added; footnotes omitted).

We have freely admitted that conduct condemned under the per se rule sometimes would be permissible if subjected merely to rule-of-reason analysis. See *Maricopa, supra, at 344, n. 16*; *Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 50, n. 16 \(1977\)*; *United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 609 \(1972\)*.

[****55] Second, the government may not in a *First Amendment* case apply a broad presumption that certain categories of speech are harmful without engaging in a more particularized examination.<sup>3</sup> As the Court of Appeals perceptively reasoned, "the evidentiary shortcut to antitrust condemnation without proof of market power is inappropriate as applied to a boycott that served, in part, to make a statement on a matter of public debate." *272 U.S. App. D. C., at 296, 856 F. 2d, at 250*. "Government may not regulate expression in such a manner that a substantial portion of the burden on speech does not serve to advance its goals"; rather, government must ensure that, even when its regulation is not content based, the restriction narrowly "focuses on the source of the evils the [State] seeks to eliminate." *Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 799, and n. 7 \(1989\)*. This is [*441] what it means for a law to be "narrowly tailored" to the State's interest. See *Board of Trustees of State University of New York v. Fox, 492 U.S. 469, 478 \(1989\); Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 485 \(1988\)*. "Broad prophylactic [****56] rules in the area of free expression are suspect." *NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 438 \(1963\)*.

In *Speiser v. Randall, 357 U.S. 513 \(1958\)*, for example, we invalidated a state program under which taxpayers [****57] applying for a certain tax exemption bore the burden of proving that they did not advocate the overthrow of the United States Government. We held that [*785] the presumption against the taxpayer was unconstitutional because the State had "no such compelling interest at stake as to justify a short-cut procedure which must inevitably result in suppressing protected speech." *Id., at 529*. More recently, we determined that the *First Amendment* prohibits a State from [***878] imposing liability on a newspaper for the publication of embarrassing but truthful information based on a "negligence per se" theory. See *The Florida Star v. B. J. F., 491 U.S. 524 \(1989\)*. In language applicable to the instant case, we rejected "the broad sweep" of a standard where "liability follows automatically from publication," and we instead required "case-by-case findings" of harm. *Id., at 539*. Similarly, I would hold in this case that the FTC cannot ignore the particular factual circumstances before it by employing a presumption of illegality in the guise of the per se rule.

B

The Court's approach today is all the more inappropriate [****58] because the success of the Trial Lawyers' boycott could have been attributable to the persuasiveness of its message rather than any coercive economic force. When a boycott seeks to generate public support for the passage of legislation, it may operate on a political rather than economic level, especially when the government is the target. Here, the demand for lawyers' services under the Criminal Justice Act (CJA) is [*442] created by the command of the *Sixth Amendment*. How that demand is by definition market power is the ability to alter prices -- the government still should be required to proceed under the rule of reason and demonstrate that such effects are actually present in the case sub judice.

---

<sup>3</sup> In *United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367 \(1968\)*, the Court held: "When 'speech' and 'nonspeech' elements are combined in the same course of conduct, a sufficiently important governmental interest in regulating the nonspeech element can justify incidental restrictions on *First Amendment* freedoms. . . . We think it clear that a government regulation is sufficiently justified if it is within the constitutional power of the Government; if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; if the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and if the incidental restriction on alleged *First Amendment* freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest." *Id., at 376-377*.

satisfied is determined by the political decisions of the Mayor, city council, and, because of the unique status of the District of Columbia, the Federal Government as well. As the FTC recognized, see In re Superior Court Trial Lawyers Assn., 107 F. T. C. 510, 572-574 \(1986\), a typical boycott functions by transforming its participants into a single monopolistic entity that restricts supply and increases price. See, e.g., FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 459 \(1986\); National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 109-110 \(1984\).

The boycott in this case [****59] was completely different: it may have persuaded the consumer of the Trial Lawyers' services -- the District government -- to raise the price it paid by altering the political preferences of District officials. Prior to the boycott, these officials perceived that at a time of fiscal austerity, a pay raise for lawyers who represented criminal defendants was not likely to be well received by the voters, whatever the merits of the issue. The SCTLA campaign drew public attention to the lawyers' plight and generated enough sympathy among city residents to convince District officials, many of whom were already favorably inclined toward the Trial Lawyers' cause, that they could augment CJA compensation rates without risking their political futures. Applying the per se rule to such a complex situation ignores the possibility that the boycott achieved its goal through a politically driven increase in demand for improved quality of representation, rather than by a cartel-like restriction in supply. The Court of Appeals concluded that "it [was] . . . possible that, lacking any market power, [the Trial Lawyers] procured a rate increase by changing public attitudes through the publicity [****60] attending the boycott," 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 297, 856 F.2d, at 251, or that "the publicity surrounding the boycott may have served . . . to dissipate any public opposition that a substantial raise for lawyers [***879] who represent indigent [*443] defendants had previously encountered." Ibid.<sup>4</sup> The majority is able to reach the contrary conclusion only by disregarding [**786] the long history of attempts to raise defense lawyers' compensation levels in the District and the virtually unanimous support the Trial Lawyers enjoyed among members of the bar, the judiciary, and, indeed, officials of the city government.

[****61] As the Court appears to recognize, see ante, at 421, pre-boycott rates were unreasonably low. City officials hardly could have reached a different conclusion. After 1970, the CJA set fees at $ 30 per hour for court time and $ 20 per hour for out-of-court time, and, despite a 147 percent increase in the Consumer Price Index, compensation remained at those levels until the boycott in 1983. Calculated in terms of 1970 dollars, at the time of the boycott CJA lawyers earned approximately $ 7.80 per hour for out-of-court time and $ 11.70 for in-court time. In contrast, in 1983 the typical billing rate for private attorneys in major metropolitan areas with 11 to 20 years of experience was $ 123 per hour, and the rate for those with less than two years of experience was $ 64 per hour. See App. in No. 86-1465 (CADC), pp. 678-679, 807. Even attorneys receiving compensation under the Equal Access to Justice Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2412\(d\)\(2\)\(A\)\(ii\) \(1982 ed.\), obtained fees of $ 75 per hour, with the possibility of upward adjustments to still larger sums. The Chairperson of the Judicial Conference Committee to Implement the Criminal Justice Act testified before [****62] Congress that "generally, the present Criminal Justice Act compensation rates do not even [*444] cover the appointed attorney's office overhead expenses related to time devoted to representation of defendants under the Act." Criminal Justice Act: Hearings on H. R. 3233 before the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties, and the Administration of Justice of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 98th Cong., 1st Sess., 22 (1983) (statement of Hon. Thomas J. MacBride). David B. Isbell, then District of Columbia Bar president, warned that "unrealistic and unreasonable compensation rates have hampered the D. C. CJA program in attracting and retaining significant numbers of qualified criminal defense counsel." Id. at 306.

The legal community became concerned about the low level of CJA fees as early as 1975. The Report on the Criminal Defense Services in the District of Columbia by the Joint Committee of the Judicial Conference of the District of Columbia Circuit and the District of Columbia Bar (Austern-Rezneck Report) concluded that the prevailing rates "drove talented attorneys out of CJA practice, and encouraged those who remained to do a less than adequate [****63] job on their cases." 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 275, \*\*\*8801 856 F.2d, at 229. The Austern-Rezneck Report recommended that CJA lawyers be paid $ 40 per hour for time spent in or out of court, subject to a ceiling of $ 800 for a misdemeanor case and $ 1,000 for a felony case. The Report characterized this increase as "the absolute minimum necessary to attract and hold good criminal lawyers and assure their ability to render effective representation to their clients." Ibid. (quoting Austern-Rezneck Report 84).

---

<sup>4</sup>The Court quotes the finding of the FTC Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) that there was no evidence that the District government's decision to raise CJA compensation rates responded to the Trial Lawyers' campaign or to public pressure generally. See ante, at 416-417. The majority, however, conveniently omits the Court of Appeals' answer to this finding by the ALJ: "The Commission did not reach the question and rejected the ALJ's findings except insofar as it expressly adopted them." 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 297, 856 F.2d, at 251. By implication, therefore, the Commission rejected the trial examiner's finding on this point.

In March 1982, the District of Columbia Court System Study Committee of the District of Columbia Bar issued the Horsky Report, which recommended the identical pay increase. See Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, Senate Print No. 98-34, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 69 (1983). Legislation increasing the hourly rate to $ 50 was then introduced in the District of Columbia Council, but the bill died in committee in 1982 without a hearing.

[*445] In September 1982, SCTLA officials began a lobbying effort to increase CJA compensation levels. They met with Chief Judge Moultrie of the District of Columbia Superior Court, Herbert Reid, who was counsel to [****64] the Mayor, and Willy Branton, then Dean of Howard University Law School. Chief [*787] Judge Moultrie told SCTLA representatives that he thought they deserved more money, but he declined to provide them any public support on the ground that if an increase were implemented, his court might be called upon to decide its legality. See 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 275, 856 F.2d, at 229. Reid informed them that the Mayor was sympathetic to their cause but would not support legislation without the urging of Chief Judge Moultrie. Dean Branton advised that the SCTLA should do "something dramatic to attract attention in order to get any relief." Ibid.

In March 1983, District of Columbia Council Chairman David Clarke introduced a new, less ambitious bill increasing CJA lawyers' pay to $ 35 per hour. A wide variety of groups testified in favor of the bill at a hearing held by the city council's Judiciary Committee, reflecting an overwhelming consensus on the need to increase CJA rates.<sup>5</sup> No one testified against the bill, though the Executive Office of the District of Columbia Courts worried about how to fund it. The Court of Appeals concluded that "Mayor Barry and other [****65] important city officials were sympathetic to the boycotters' goals and may even have been supportive of the boycott itself," id., at 297, n. 35, 856 F.2d, at 251, n. 35, and that certain statements by the Mayor could be interpreted "as encouraging the [Trial Lawyers] to stage a demonstration of their political [*446] muscle so that a rate increase could more easily be justified to the public." Id., at 298, n. 35, 856 F.2d, at 252, n. 35.

Taken together, these facts strongly suggest that the Trial Lawyers' campaign persuaded the city to increase CJA compensation levels by creating [****66] a favorable climate in which supportive District officials [***881] could vote for a raise without public opposition, even though the lawyers lacked the ability to exert economic pressure. As the court below expressly found, the facts at the very do not exclude the possibility that the SCTLA succeeded due to political rather than economic power. See id., at 297, 856 F.2d, at 251. The majority today permits the FTC to find an expressive boycott to violate the antitrust laws, without even requiring a showing that the participants possessed market power or that their conduct triggered any anticompetitive effects. I believe that the First Amendment forecloses such an approach.

II

A

The majority concludes that the Trial Lawyers' boycott may be enjoined without any showing of market power because "the government's interest in adhering to a uniform rule may sometimes satisfy the O'Brien test even if making an exception to the rule in a particular case might cause no serious damage." Ante, at 430 (citing United States v. Albertini, 472 U.S. 675 \(1985\)) (emphasis added). The Court draws an analogy between the per se rule in antitrust [****67] law and categorical proscriptions against airplane stunt flying and reckless automobile driving. See ante, at 433-434. This analogy is flawed.

---

<sup>5</sup> Groups testifying in favor of the bill included the SCTLA, District of Columbia Bar, D. C. Chapter of the National Lawyers Guild, Public Defender Service, D. C. Chapter of the Washington Psychiatric Society, Family Law Association, National Capitol Area Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, and National Center of Institutional Alternatives. See App. in No. 86-1465 (CADC), pp. 800-801.

It is beyond peradventure that sometimes no exception need be made to a neutral rule of general applicability not aimed at the content of speech; "the arrest of a newscaster for a traffic violation," for example, does not offend the First Amendment. Arcara v. Cloud Books, Inc., 478 U.S. 697, 708 (1986) (O'Connor, J., concurring). Neither do restrictions [*447] on stunt flying and reckless driving usually raise First Amendment concerns.<sup>6</sup> [**788] But ever since Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147 (1939), we have held that even when the government seeks to address harms entirely unconnected with the content of speech, it must leave open ample alternative channels for effective communication. See Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S., at 802-803; Frisby, 487 U.S., at 483-484; Clark v. Community for Creative Non-Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 293 (1984); Metromedia, Inc. v. San Diego, 453 U.S. 490, 552 (1981) (Stevens, [****68] J., dissenting in part); Heffron v. International Society for Krishna Consciousness, Inc., 452 U.S. 640, 648 (1981). Although sometimes such content-neutral regulations with incidental effects on speech leave open sufficient room for effective communication, application of the per se rule to expressive boycotts does not. The role of boycotts in political speech is too central, and the effective alternative [***882] avenues open to the Trial Lawyers were too few, to permit the FTC to invoke the per se rule in this case.

[****69] Expressive boycotts have been a principal means of political communication since the birth of the Republic. As the Court of Appeals recognized, "boycotts have historically been used as a dramatic means of communicating anger or disapproval and of mobilizing sympathy for the boycotters' cause." 272 U.S. App. D. C., at 294, 856 F.2d, at 248. From the colonists' protest of the Stamp and Townsend Acts to the Montgomery bus boycott and the National Organization for Women's campaign to encourage ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment, boycotts have played a central role in our Nation's political discourse. In recent years there have [*448] been boycotts of supermarkets, meat, grapes, iced tea in cans, soft drinks, lettuce, chocolate, tuna, plastic wrap, textiles, slacks, animal skins and furs, and products of Mexico, Japan, South Africa, and the Soviet Union. See Missouri v. National Organization for Women, Inc., 620 F.2d 1301, 1304, n. 5 (CA8), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 842 (1980); Note, 80 Colum. L. Rev. 1317, 1318, 1334 (1980). Like soapbox oratory in the streets and parks, political boycotts are a traditional [****70] means of "communicating thoughts between citizens" and "discussing public questions." Hague v. Committee for Industrial Organization, 307 U.S. 496, 515 (1939) (opinion of Roberts, J.). Any restrictions on such boycotts must be scrutinized with special care in light of their historic importance as a mode of expression. Cf. Perry Education Assn. v. Perry Local Educators' Assn., 460 U.S. 37, 45 (1983).

The Court observes that all boycotts have "an expressive component" in the sense that participants must communicate their plans among themselves and to their target. Ante, at 431. The Court reasons that this expressive feature alone does not render boycotts immune from scrutiny under the per se rule. Otherwise, the rule could never be applied to any boycotts or to most price-fixing schemes. On this point I concur with the majority. But while some boycotts may not present First Amendment concerns, when a particular boycott appears to operate on a political rather than economic level, I believe that it cannot be condemned under the per se rule.<sup>7</sup> The Court disagrees and maintains that communication [*449] [**789] [****71] of ideas to the public is a function not of a boycott itself but rather of media coverage, interviews, and other activities ancillary to the boycott and not prohibited by the antitrust laws. See ante, at 426. The Court also notes that other avenues of speech are open, because <sup>7</sup> If a boycott uses economic power in an unlawful way to send a message, it cannot claim First Amendment protection from the antitrust laws, any more than a terrorist could use an act of violence to express his political views and then assert immunity from criminal prosecution. Thus, if a cartel in a regulated industry inflicts economic injury on consumers by raising prices in order to communicate with the government, it still would be subject to the per se rule. The instant case is different: there is a genuine question whether the SCTLA boycott involved any economic coercion at all. That is why a showing of market power is necessary before the boycott can be condemned as an unfair method of competition.

<sup>6</sup> Even the criminal law, however, provides procedural safeguards to ensure that laws are not applied in an overbroad fashion to punish activity protected by the First Amendment. The defendant in a criminal trial is always able to raise the defense that the law is unconstitutional as applied to him. See, e. g., Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397 (1989). Application of the per se rule in the instant case denies the Trial Lawyers even this opportunity.

"publicity may be generated by any other activity that is sufficiently newsworthy." Ante, at [***883] 431. These views are flawed.

[****72] First, we have already recognized that an expressive boycott necessarily involves "constitutionally protected activity." NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886, 911 (1982). That case, in which we held that a civil rights boycott was political expression, forecloses the Court's approach today. In Claiborne Hardware, Justice Stevens observed that "the established elements of speech, assembly, association, and petition, 'though not identical, are inseparable'" when combined in an expressive boycott. Ibid. (citation omitted). I am surprised that he now finds that the Trial Lawyers' boycott was not protected speech. In this case, as in Claiborne Hardware, "through the exercise of their First Amendment rights, petitioners sought to bring about political, social, and economic change." Ibid. The Court contends that the SCTLA's motivation differed from that of the boycotters in Claiborne Hardware, see ante, at 426-427, because the former sought to supplement its members' own salaries rather than to remedy racial injustice. Even if true, the different purposes of the speech can hardly render the Trial Lawyers' boycott any less [****73] expressive.

Next, although the Court is correct that the media coverage of the boycott was substantial,<sup>8</sup> see ante, at 414, this [*450] does not support the majority's argument that the boycott itself was not expressive. Indeed, that the SCTLA strove so mightily to communicate with the public and the government is an indication that it relied more on its ability to win public sympathy and persuade government officials politically than on its power to coerce the city economically. But media coverage is not the only, or even the principal, reason why the boycott was entitled to First Amendment protection. The refusal of the Trial Lawyers to accept appointments by itself communicated a powerful idea: CJA compensation rates had deteriorated so much, relatively speaking, that the lawyers were willing to forgo their livelihoods rather than return to work.

[****74] By sacrificing income that they actually desired, and thus inflicting hardship on themselves as well as on the city, the lawyers demonstrated the intensity of their feelings and the depth of their commitment. The passive nonviolence of King and Gandhi are proof that the resolute [***884] acceptance of pain [*790] may communicate dedication and righteousness more eloquently than mere words ever could. A boycott, like a hunger strike, conveys an emotional message that is absent in a letter to the editor, a conversation with the mayor, or even a protest march. Cf. Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 26 (1971) (First Amendment protects "not only ideas capable of relatively precise, detached explication, but otherwise inexpressible emotions as well"). In this respect, an expressive [*451] boycott is a special form of political communication. Dean Branton's advice to the Trial Lawyers -- that they should do "something dramatic to attract attention" -- was sage indeed.

Another reason why expressive boycotts are irreplaceable as a means of communication is that they are essential to the "poorly financed causes of little people." Martin v. Struthers, 319 U.S. 141, 146 (1943). [****75] It is no accident that boycotts have been used by the American colonists to throw off the British yoke and by the oppressed to assert their civil rights. See Claiborne Hardware, supra. Such groups cannot use established organizational techniques to advance their political interests, and boycotts are often the only effective route available to them.

B

---

<sup>8</sup>The lawyers actively courted press coverage of their strike. They set up "picket lines," distributed press kits, and granted interviews; the media, both local and national, responded. No fewer than 19 newspaper articles regarding the boycott appeared in the Washington Post, Washington Times, USA Today, and New York Times. The Washington Post's editorial page endorsed the boycott, opining that "it is simply unfair that these fees have remained unchanged during a period when median income in the area has risen over 180 percent." Washington Post, Sept. 8, 1983, p. A20, col. 1. The New York Times reported that "the unusual thing about the lawyer's . . . job action is that almost no one disagrees with their argument." N. Y. Times, Sept. 1, 1983, p. B10, col. 3. United States District Judge Harold H. Greene wrote that the Trial Lawyers "should receive the modest increase they have requested." Washington Post, Sept. 12, 1983, p. A13, col. 2. Even the Economist of London carried a story on the boycott. Sept. 17, 1983, p. 25. Nor was coverage limited to the print media. Local television and radio stations aired numerous reports of the boycott, and an account of the Trial Lawyers' plight appeared on the CBS Morning News. See App. in No. 86-1465 (CADC), pp. 921, 923, 925, 937, 949.

Underlying the majority opinion are apprehensions that the Trial Lawyers' boycott was really no different from any other, and that requiring the FTC to apply a rule-of-reason analysis in this case will lead to the demise of the per se rule in the boycott area. I do not share the majority's fears. The boycott before us today is readily distinguishable from those with which the antitrust laws are concerned, on the very ground suggested by the majority: the Trial Lawyers intended to and in fact did "communicate with third parties to enlist public support for their objectives." Ante, at 431. As we have seen, in all likelihood the boycott succeeded not due to any market power wielded by the lawyers but rather because they were able to persuade the District government through political means. Other boycotts [****76] may involve no expressive features and instead operate solely on an economic level. Very few economically coercive boycotts seek notoriety both because they seek to escape detection and because they have no wider audience beyond the participants and the target.

Furthermore, as the Court of Appeals noted, there may be significant differences between boycotts aimed at the government and those aimed at private parties. See [272 U.S. App. D. C., at 296, \[\*452\] 856 F.2d, at 250](#). The government has options open to it that private parties do not; in this suit, for example, the boycott was aimed at a legislative body with the power to terminate it at any time by requiring all members of the District Bar to represent defendants pro bono. If a boycott against the government achieves its goal, it likely owes its success to political rather than market power.

The Court's concern for the vitality of the per se rule, moreover, is misplaced, in light of the fact that we have been willing to apply rule-of-reason analysis in a growing number of group-boycott cases. See, e. g., Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S., at 458-459; [***885] Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 293-298 \(1985\); [***77] National Collegiate Athletic Assn., 468 U.S., at 101; Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 9-10 \(1979\) (criticizing application of per se rule because "literalness is overly simplistic and often overbroad").<sup>9</sup> We have recognized that "there is [*453] often no bright [**791] line separating per se from Rule of Reason analysis. Per se rules may require considerable inquiry into market conditions before the evidence justifies a presumption of anticompetitive conduct." National Collegiate Athletic Assn., supra, at 104, n. 26.

[****78] In short, the conclusion that per se analysis is inappropriate in this boycott case would not preclude its application in many others, nor would it create insurmountable difficulties for antitrust enforcement. The plainly expressive nature of the Trial Lawyers' campaign distinguishes it from boycotts that are the intended subjects of the antitrust laws.

I respectfully dissent.

Justice Blackmun, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

Like Justice Brennan, I, too, join Parts I, II, III, and IV of the Court's opinion. But, while I agree with the reasoning of Justice Brennan's dissent, I write separately to express my doubt whether a remand for findings of fact concerning the market power of the Superior Court Trial Lawyers Association (SCTLA or Trial Lawyers) would be warranted in the unique circumstances of this litigation. As Justice Brennan notes, the Trial Lawyers' boycott was aimed at the <sup>9</sup> Although "group boycotts" often are listed among the types of activity meriting per se condemnation, see, e. g., Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 348 \(1963\); White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 259-260 \(1963\); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212 \(1959\); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 \(1958\); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 12 \(1945\); Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457, 465-468 \(1941\), we have recognized that boycotts "are not a unitary phenomenon." St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 543 \(1978\). In fact, "there is more confusion about the scope and operation of the per se rule against group boycotts than in reference to any other aspect of the per se doctrine." Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 294 \(1985\) (quoting L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 229-230 (1977)). We have observed that "the category of restraints classed as group boycotts is not to be expanded indiscriminately, and the per se approach has generally been limited to cases in which firms with market power boycott suppliers or customers in order to discourage them from doing business with a competitor." FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 458 \(1986\). These considerations provide additional reason to analyze the instant case with great care, because the Trial Lawyers' boycott is certainly sui generis.

District's courts and legislature, governmental bodies that had the power to terminate the boycott at any time by requiring any or all members of the District Bar -- including the members of SCTLA -- to represent indigent defendants pro bono. Attorneys are not merely participants [****79] in a competitive market for legal services; they are officers of the court. Their duty to serve the public by representing indigent defendants is not only a matter [***886] of conscience, but is also enforceable by the government's power to order such representation, either as a condition of practicing law in the District or on pain of contempt. See Powell v. Alabama, 287 U.S. 45, 73 \(1932\) ("Attorneys are officers of the court, and are bound to render service when required" by court appointment); see also [United States v. Accetturo, 842 F.2d 1408, 1412-1413 \[\*454\] \(CA3 1988\)](#); Waters v. Kemp, 845 F.2d 260, 263 \(CA11 1988\).*

[****80] The Trial Lawyers' boycott thus was a dramatic gesture not fortified by any real economic power. They could not have coerced the District to meet their demands by brute economic force, i. e., by constricting [**792] the supply of legal services to drive up the price. Instead, the Trial Lawyers' boycott put the government in a position where it had to make a political choice between exercising its power to break the boycott or agreeing to a rate increase. The factors relevant to this choice were political, not economic: that forcing the lawyers to stop the boycott would have been unpopular, because, as it turned out, public opinion supported the boycott; and that the District officials themselves may not have genuinely opposed the rate increase, and may have welcomed the appearance of a politically expedient "emergency."

I believe that, in this unique market where the government buys services that it could readily compel the sellers to provide, the Trial Lawyers lacked any market power and their boycott could have succeeded only through political persuasion. I therefore would affirm the judgment below insofar as it invokes the United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367 \(1968\), [****81] analysis to preclude application of the per se rule to the Trial Lawyers' boycott, but reverse as to the remand to the FTC for a determination of market power.

References

---

7 Am Jur 2d, Attorneys at Law 243, 244; 16A Am Jur 2d, Constitutional Law 510; 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 30-32, 45, 46, 49, 80, 82, 108; 55 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 778

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

USCS, Constitution, Amendment 1; 15 USCS 1, 45

US L Ed Digest, Constitutional Law 953; Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 36, 49

Index to Annotations, Attorney or Assistance of Attorney; Attorneys' Fees; Boycotts; Freedom of Speech and Press; Noerr-Pennington Doctrine; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References:

Licensing and regulation of attorneys as restricted by rights of free speech, expression ,and association under First Amendment. 56 L Ed 2d 841.

Minimum fee schedules for attorneys as constituting violation of Sherman [****82] Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 44 L Ed 2d 818.

---

* This Court's recent decision in Mallard v. United States District Court for Southern Dist. of Iowa, 490 U.S. 296 \(1989\), is not to the contrary. In that case, the Court held that a particular federal statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1915\(d\), authorizing the District Court to "request" that an attorney represent an indigent litigant, does not give the court power to require an unwilling attorney to serve. The Court expressed no opinion on "whether the federal courts possess inherent authority to require lawyers to serve." 490 U.S., at 310. Indeed, by way of background, the Court discussed numerous state and federal statutes that do empower the courts to compel attorneys to serve. Id., at 302-308.

493 U.S. 411, *454; 110 S. Ct. 768, **792; 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, ***886; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 638, ****82

"Sham" exception to application of Noerr-Pennington doctrine, exempting from federal antitrust laws joint efforts to influence governmental action. 71 ALR Fed 723.

"Learned profession" exemption in federal antitrust laws. 39 ALR Fed 774.

Application of doctrine exempting from federal antitrust laws joint efforts to influence legislative or executive action. 17 ALR Fed 645.

---

End of Document

Tafflin v. Levitt

Supreme Court of the United States

November 27, 1989, Argued ; January 22, 1990, Decided

No. 88-1650

Reporter

493 U.S. 455 *; 110 S. Ct. 792 **; 107 L. Ed. 2d 887 ***; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 568 ****; 58 U.S.L.W. 3468; 58 U.S.L.W. 4157; Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P94,880

TAFFLIN et al. v. LEVITT et al.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 865 F.2d 595, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

state court, concurrent jurisdiction, federal court, incompatibility, legislative history, federal interest, state-court, cases, Clayton Act, criminal statute, unmistakable, cause of action, state law, interpretations, offenses, exclusive federal jurisdiction, exclusive jurisdiction, federal criminal law, concurrent, borrow, dictum, district court, courts, suits, racketeering activity, adjudicate, savings

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

HN1 Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

Under the federal system, the states possess sovereignty concurrent with that of the federal government, subject only to limitations imposed by the Supremacy Clause. Under this system of dual sovereignty, state courts have inherent authority, and are thus presumptively competent, to adjudicate claims arising under the laws of the United States.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Concurrent Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

493 U.S. 455, *455; 110 S. Ct. 792, **792; 107 L. Ed. 2d 887, ***887; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 568, ****1

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN2 [down] Jurisdiction Over Actions, Concurrent Jurisdiction

In considering the propriety of state-court jurisdiction over any particular federal claim, the court begins with the presumption that state courts enjoy concurrent jurisdiction. Congress, however, may confine jurisdiction to the federal courts either explicitly or implicitly. Thus, the presumption of concurrent jurisdiction can be rebutted by an explicit statutory directive, by unmistakable implication from legislative history, or by a clear incompatibility between state-court jurisdiction and federal interests.

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN3 [down] Securities Law, RICO Actions

18 U.S.C.S. § 1964(c) provides that any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of § 1962 of this chapter may sue therefor in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Concurrent Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN4 [down] Jurisdiction Over Actions, Concurrent Jurisdiction

The mere grant of jurisdiction to a federal court does not operate to oust a state court from concurrent jurisdiction over the cause of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN5 [down] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

The factors indicating clear incompatibility with federal interests include the desirability of uniform interpretation, the expertise of federal judges in federal law, and the assumed greater hospitality of federal courts to peculiarly federal claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Remedies

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

493 U.S. 455, *455; 110 S. Ct. 792, **792; 107 L. Ed. 2d 887, ***887; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 568, ****1

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN6 [blue icon] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

There is no "clear incompatibility" between state court jurisdiction over civil Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) actions and federal interests. As a preliminary matter, concurrent jurisdiction over 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\) suits is clearly not incompatible with 18 U.S.C.S. § 3231 itself, for civil RICO claims are not "offenses against the laws of the United States," 18 U.S.C.S. § 3231, and do not result in the imposition of criminal sanctions -- uniform or otherwise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Concurrent Jurisdiction

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN7 [blue icon] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

State courts have concurrent jurisdiction to consider civil claims arising under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. Nothing in the language, structure, legislative history, or underlying policies of RICO suggests that Congress intended otherwise.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

State courts held to have concurrent jurisdiction to hear civil claims under Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) (18 USCS 1961-1968).

Summary

After the failure of a Maryland savings and loan association, a deposit insurance fund corporation was appointed as receiver of the association and brought suit in the Circuit Court for Baltimore City against various parties, including the former officers and directors of the association. Also, class actions by depositors were brought against the association and its principals in the Circuit Court. In addition, holders of unpaid certificates of deposit issued by the association brought suit against the association in United States District Court and alleged various state-law causes of action, as well as civil claims under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) (18 USCS 1961-1968) and under federal securities legislation. The District Court, granting the defendants' motion to dismiss, held that (1) the plaintiffs had failed to state a claim under federal securities legislation, and (2) because state courts have concurrent jurisdiction over civil RICO claims, federal abstention was appropriate for the other causes of action, since they had been raised in the pending litigation in the Circuit Court. After this decision by the District Court, the plaintiffs filed a class action against the defendants in the Circuit Court and alleged RICO and common-law causes of action. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, affirming the District Court's decision, expressed approval of the District Court's abstention from deciding the plaintiffs' RICO claims (865 F2d 595).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by O'Connor, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that state courts have concurrent jurisdiction to hear civil RICO claims, because (1) the language of RICO did not divest state courts of such jurisdiction, (2) a review of RICO's legislative history revealed no evidence that Congress even considered the question of concurrent state court jurisdiction over RICO claims, much less any suggestion that Congress affirmatively intended to confer exclusive jurisdiction over such claims on the federal courts, (3) the fact that Congress modeled RICO's remedial provision (18 USCS 1964\(c\)) after 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15\(a\)), which has been interpreted to confer exclusive jurisdiction on the federal courts, does not mean that Congress intended, by implication, to grant exclusive federal jurisdiction over claims arising under 1964(c), and (4) there is no clear incompatibility between state court jurisdiction over civil RICO actions and federal interests.

White, J., concurring, expressed the view that, although there was a possibility that state courts would disrupt the uniform construction of RICO's criminal provisions by launching new interpretations of certain elements of RICO when hearing civil RICO suits, this possibility was not enough to require exclusive federal jurisdiction of civil RICO claims.

Scalia, J., joined by Kennedy, J., concurring, expressed the view that (1) assuming that state jurisdiction can be excluded by implication, what is required is implication in the text of a statute, and not merely an "unmistakable" implication from legislative history, and (2) preclusion of state jurisdiction can perhaps be established where (a) a statute expressly mentions only federal courts, and (b) state court jurisdiction would plainly disrupt the statutory scheme, but (3) there is no foundation for the broader assertion that state court jurisdiction may be excluded when systemic federal interests make such jurisdiction undesirable.

Headnotes

---

COURTS §711 > concurrent state and federal jurisdiction -- civil RICO claims -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F] [LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [1G] [LEdHN\[1H\]](#) [1H]

State courts have concurrent jurisdiction to hear civil claims under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) (18 USCS 1961-1968); state courts have not been divested of jurisdiction to hear such claims, because (1) the grant of federal jurisdiction in 18 USCS 1964\(c\), which provides that any person asserting a civil RICO claim "may" sue therefor in any appropriate United States District Court, is permissive and not mandatory, (2) a review of the legislative history reveals no evidence that Congress even considered the question of concurrent state court jurisdiction over RICO claims, much less any suggestion that Congress affirmatively intended to confer exclusive jurisdiction over such claims on the federal courts, (3) the fact that Congress modeled 1964(c) after 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15\(a\)), which has been interpreted to confer exclusive jurisdiction on the federal courts, does not mean that Congress intended, by implication, to grant exclusive federal jurisdiction over claims arising under 1964(c), and (4) there is no clear incompatibility between state court jurisdiction over civil RICO actions and federal interests, given that (a) such jurisdiction is not incompatible with 18 USCS 3231, which provides for exclusive federal court jurisdiction of "offenses against the laws of the United States," (b) state court adjudication of civil RICO actions will, in practice, have at most a negligible effect on the uniform interpretation and application of federal criminal law, and state courts are able to handle the complexities of such civil actions, (c) the fact that certain of RICO's procedural provisions are applicable only in federal courts does not by itself suffice to create a clear incompatibility with federal interests, and (d) state court jurisdiction will advance rather than jeopardize federal policies underlying RICO, since permitting state courts to entertain federal causes of action facilitates the enforcement of federal rights.

493 U.S. 455, *455; 110 S. Ct. 792, **792; 107 L. Ed. 2d 887, ***887; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 568, ****1

STATES, TERRITORIES, AND POSSESSIONS §5 > sovereignty -- supremacy clause -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Under the federal system, the states possess sovereignty concurrent with that of the Federal Government, subject only to limitations imposed by the *Federal Constitution's supremacy clause* (Art VI, cl 2).

COURTS §711 > concurrent state and federal jurisdiction -- federal questions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B] [LEdHN\[3C\]](#) [3C] [LEdHN\[3D\]](#) [3D]

If exclusive federal court jurisdiction over cases arising under federal law is neither express nor implied, the state courts have concurrent jurisdiction whenever, by their own constitution, they are competent to take it; in considering the propriety of state court jurisdiction over any particular federal claim, the United States Supreme Court begins with a presumption that state courts enjoy concurrent jurisdiction; however, the presumption can be rebutted by (1) an explicit statutory directive, (2) unmistakable implication from legislative history, or (3) a clear incompatibility between state court jurisdiction and federal interests; the mere grant of jurisdiction to a federal court does not operate to oust a state court from concurrent jurisdiction over the cause of action; for purposes of rebutting the presumption of concurrent jurisdiction, the question is not whether any intent at all may be divined from legislative silence on the issue, but whether Congress in its deliberations may be said to have affirmatively or unmistakably intended jurisdiction to be exclusively federal.

STATUTES §152 > construction -- Congress' failure to consider issue -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The United States Supreme Court is not at liberty to speculate as to whether Congress would have granted federal courts exclusive jurisdiction over civil claims under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) (18 USCS 1961-1968), even if the court could reliably discern what Congress' intent might have been had it considered the question of jurisdiction, where Congress has not considered the question.

STATUTES §134 > construction -- consideration of similiar worded provisions -- RICO -- Clayton Act -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B] [LEdHN\[5C\]](#) [5C]

To whatever extent an analogy between the remedial provision of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) (18 USCS 1964\(c\)) and the provision of the Clayton Act after which it was modeled (15 USCS 15\(a\)) may be relevant to the Supreme Court's interpretation of RICO generally, such an analogy has no place in an inquiry into the jurisdiction of state courts over civil RICO claims, given the lack of any indication in RICO's legislative history that Congress either considered or assumed that the importing of remedial language from the Clayton Act into RICO had any jurisdictional implications.

STATUTES §134 > construction of borrowed language -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

The mere borrowing by Congress of statutory language does not imply that Congress also intended to incorporate all of the baggage that may be attached to the borrowed language.

STATUTES §129 > construction -- consideration of other laws -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

In determining whether federal court jurisdiction over claims under a federal statute is exclusive or concurrent, the United States Supreme Court is not free to add content to the statute via analogies to other statutes unless the legislature has specifically endorsed such action.

EXTORTION AND BLACKMAIL §1 > RICO -- civil claims -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Civil claims under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) (18 USCS 1961-1968) are not offenses against the laws of the United States within the meaning of 18 USCS 3231--which provides for exclusive federal court jurisdiction of such offenses--and do not result in the imposition of criminal sanctions.

Syllabus

---

Petitioners, nonresidents of Maryland who are holders of unpaid certificates of deposit issued by a failed Maryland savings and loan association, filed a civil action in the Federal District Court against respondents, former association officers and directors and others, alleging claims under, inter alia, the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968. The court dismissed the action, concluding, among other things, that federal abstention was appropriate as to the civil RICO claims, which had been raised in pending litigation in state court, since state courts have concurrent jurisdiction over such claims. The Court of Appeals affirmed.

Held: State courts have concurrent \*\*\*\*2 jurisdiction over civil RICO claims. The presumption in favor of such jurisdiction has not been rebutted by any of the factors identified in Gulf Offshore Co. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 453 U.S. 473, 478. Pp. 458-467.

(a) As petitioners concede, there is nothing in RICO's explicit language to suggest that Congress has, by affirmative enactment, divested state courts of civil RICO jurisdiction. To the contrary, § 1964\(c\)'s grant of federal jurisdiction over civil RICO claims is plainly permissive and thus does not operate to oust state courts from concurrent jurisdiction. Pp. 460-461.

(b) RICO's legislative history reveals no evidence that Congress even considered the question of concurrent jurisdiction, much less any suggestion that Congress affirmatively intended to confer exclusive jurisdiction over civil RICO claims on the federal courts. Petitioners' argument that, because Congress modeled § 1964\(c\) after § 4 of the Clayton Act -- which confers exclusive jurisdiction on the federal courts -- it intended, by implication, to grant exclusive federal jurisdiction over § 1964(c) claims is rejected. *Sedima, S. P. R. L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, ****3* and Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Assocs., 483 U.S. 143, are distinguished, since those cases looked to the Clayton Act in interpreting RICO without the benefit of a background juridical presumption of the type presented here. Pp. 461-463.

493 U.S. 455, *455; 110 S. Ct. 792, **792; 107 L. Ed. 2d 887, ***887; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 568, ****2

(c) No "clear incompatibility" exists between state court jurisdiction and federal interests. The interest in uniform interpretation of federal criminal laws, see 18 U.S.C. § 3231, is not inconsistent with such jurisdiction merely because state courts would be required to construe the federal crimes that constitute RICO predicate acts. Section 1964(c) claims are not "offenses against the laws of the United States," § 3231, and do not result in the imposition of criminal sanctions. There is also no significant danger of inconsistent application of federal criminal law, since federal courts would not be bound by state court interpretations of predicate acts, since state courts would be guided by federal court interpretations of federal criminal law, and since any state court judgments misinterpreting federal criminal law would be subject to direct review by this Court. Moreover, state courts [****4] have the ability to handle the complexities of civil RICO actions. Many cases involve asserted violations of state law, over which state courts presumably have greater expertise, and it would seem anomalous to rule that they are incompetent to adjudicate civil RICO claims when such claims are subject to adjudication by arbitration, see Shearson/American Express Inc. v. McMahon, 482 U.S. 220, 239. Further, although the fact that RICO's procedural mechanisms are applicable only in federal court may tend to suggest that Congress intended exclusive federal jurisdiction, it does not by itself suffice to create a "clear incompatibility" with federal interests. And, to the extent that Congress intended RICO to serve broad remedial purposes, concurrent jurisdiction will advance rather than jeopardize federal policies underlying the statute. Pp. 464-467.

Counsel: M. Norman Goldberger, argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Brian P. Flaherty, Gary L. Leshko, and Lawrence I. Weisman.

Andrew H. Marks, argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were J. Joseph Curran, Jr., Attorney General of Maryland, Ralph S. Tyler III, Assistant [****5] Attorney General, Clifton S. Elgarten, Luther Zeigler, David B. Isbell, William H. Allen, Charles F. C. Ruff, and Mark H. Lynch.

Judges: O'CONNOR, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court. WHITE, J., filed a concurring opinion, post, p. 467. SCALIA, J., filed a concurring opinion, in which KENNEDY, J., joined, post, p. 469.

Opinion by: O'CONNOR

Opinion

---

[*456] [*892] [**794] JUSTICE O'CONNOR delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A]This case requires us to decide whether state courts have concurrent jurisdiction over civil actions brought under the [*457] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), Pub. L. 91-452, Title IX, [***893] 84 Stat. 941, as amended, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968.

I

The underlying litigation arises from the failure of Old Court Savings & Loan, Inc. (Old Court), a Maryland savings and loan association, and the attendant collapse of the Maryland Savings-Share Insurance Corp. (MSSIC), a state-chartered nonprofit corporation created to insure accounts in Maryland savings and loan associations that were not federally insured. [****6] See Brandenburg v. Seidel, 859 F.2d 1179, 1181-1183 (CA4 1988) (reviewing history of Maryland's savings and loan crisis). Petitioners are nonresidents of Maryland who hold unpaid certificates of deposit issued by Old Court. Respondents are the former officers and directors of Old Court, the former officers and directors of MSSIC, the law firm of Old Court and MSSIC, the accounting firm of Old Court, and the State of

493 U.S. 455, *457; 110 S. Ct. 792, **794; 107 L. Ed. 2d 887, ***893; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 568, ****6

Maryland Deposit Insurance Fund Corp., the state-created successor to MSSIC. Petitioners allege various state law causes of action as well as claims under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (Exchange Act), 48 Stat. 881, 15 U.S.C. § 78a et seq., and RICO.

The District Court granted respondents' motions to dismiss, concluding that petitioners had failed to state a claim under the Exchange Act and that, because state courts have concurrent jurisdiction over civil RICO claims, federal abstention was appropriate for the other causes of action because they had been raised in pending litigation in state court. The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit affirmed. 865 F.2d 595 \(1989\). The Court of Appeals agreed [****7] with the District Court that the Old Court certificates of deposit were not "securities" within the meaning of the Exchange Act, see 15 U.S.C. § 78c\(a\)\(10\), and that petitioners' Exchange Act claims were therefore properly dismissed. 865 F.2d, at 598-599. The Court of Appeals further held, in reliance on its prior decision in Brandenburg v. Seidel, [\*4581 supra], that "a RICO action could be instituted in a state court and that Maryland's 'comprehensive scheme for the rehabilitation and liquidation of insolvent state-chartered savings and loan associations,' 859 F.2d at 1191, provided a proper basis for the district court to abstain under the authority of Burford v. Sun Oil Co., 319 U.S. 315 (1943)." 865 F.2d, at 600 (citations omitted).

To resolve a conflict among the federal appellate courts and state supreme courts,<sup>1</sup> we granted certiorari [***894] limited to the question whether state courts have concurrent jurisdiction over civil RICO claims. 490 U.S. 1089 (1989). [**795] We hold that they do and accordingly affirm the judgment of the Court [****8] of Appeals.

[****9] II

[LEdHN\[2\]\[↑\]](#) [2][LEdHN\[3A\]\[↑\]](#) [3A]We begin with the axiom that, [HN1\[↑\]](#) under our federal system, the States possess sovereignty concurrent with that of the Federal Government, subject only to limitations imposed by the Supremacy Clause. Under this system of dual sovereignty, we have consistently held that state courts have inherent authority, and are thus presumptively competent, to adjudicate claims arising under the laws of the United States. See, e.g., Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat. 1, 25-26 [\*4591 \(1820\)]; Claflin v. Houseman, 93 U.S. 130, 136-137 (1876); Plaquemines Tropical Fruit Co. v. Henderson, 170 U.S. 511, 517 (1898); Charles Dowd Box Co. v. Courtney, 368 U.S. 502, 507-508 (1962); Gulf Offshore Co. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 453 U.S. 473, 477-478 (1981). As we noted in Claflin, "if exclusive jurisdiction be neither express nor implied, the State courts [****10] have concurrent jurisdiction whenever, by their own constitution, they are competent to take it." 93 U.S. at 136; see also Dowd Box, supra, at 507-508 ("We start with the premise that nothing in the concept of our federal system prevents state courts from enforcing rights created by federal law. Concurrent jurisdiction has been a common phenomenon in our judicial history, and exclusive federal court jurisdiction over cases arising under federal law has been the exception rather than the rule"). See generally 1 J. Kent, Commentaries on American Law *400; The Federalist No. 82 (A. Hamilton); F. Frankfurter & J. Landis, The Business of the Supreme Court 5-12 (1927); H. Friendly, Federal Jurisdiction: A General View 8-11 (1973).

[LEdHN\[3B\]\[↑\]](#) [3B]This deeply rooted presumption in favor of concurrent state court jurisdiction is, of course, rebutted if Congress affirmatively ousts the state courts of jurisdiction over a particular federal claim. See, e. g.,

<sup>1</sup> Compare McCarter v. Mitcham, 883 F.2d 196, 201 (CA3 1989) (concurrent jurisdiction); Brandenburg v. Seidel, 859 F.2d 1179, 1193-1195 (CA4 1988) (same); Lou v. Belzberg, 834 F.2d 730, 738-739 (CA9 1987) (same), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 993 (1988); Simpson Elec. Corp. v. Leucadia, Inc., 72 N. Y. 2d 450, 530 N. E. 2d 860 (1988) (same); Rice v. Janovich, 109 Wash. 2d 48, 742 P. 2d 1230 (1987) (same); Cianci v. Superior Court, 40 Cal. 3d 903, 710 P. 2d 375 (1985) (same); County of Cook v. MidCon Corp., 773 F.2d 892, 905, n. 4 (CA7 1985) (dictum); Dubroff v. Dubroff, 833 F.2d 557, 562 (CA5 1987) (civil RICO claims can "probably" be brought in state court), with Chivas Products, Ltd. v. Owen, 864 F.2d 1280, 1286 (CA6 1988) (exclusive jurisdiction); Vander Weyst v. First State Bank of Benson, 425 N. W. 2d 803, 812 (Minn.) (expressing "serious reservations" about assuming concurrent RICO jurisdiction), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 943 (1988). See generally Note, 57 Ford. L. Rev. 271, 271, n. 9 \(1988\) (listing federal and state courts in conflict); Note, 73 Cornell L. Rev. 1047, 1047, n. 5 \(1988\) (same); Note, 62 St. John's L. Rev. 301, 303, n. 7 (1988) (same).

Claflin, supra, at 137 ("Congress may, if it see[s] fit, give to the Federal courts exclusive jurisdiction") (citations [****11] omitted); see also Houston, supra at 25-26. As we stated in Gulf Offshore:

HN2 [↑] "In considering the propriety of state-court jurisdiction over any particular federal claim, the Court begins with the presumption that state courts enjoy concurrent jurisdiction. Congress, however, may confine jurisdiction to the federal courts either explicitly or implicitly. Thus, the presumption of concurrent jurisdiction can be rebutted by an explicit statutory directive, by unmistakable implication from legislative history, or by a clear incompatibility [*460] between state-court jurisdiction and federal interests." 453 U.S., at 478 (citations omitted).

See also Claflin, supra, at 136 [***895] (state courts have concurrent jurisdiction "where it is not excluded by express provision, or by incompatibility in its exercise arising from the nature of the particular case"). The parties agree that these principles, which have "remained unmodified through the years," Dowd Box, supra, at 508, provide the analytical framework for [****12] resolving this case.

III

LEdHN[1B] [↑] [1B]The precise question presented, therefore, is whether state courts have been divested of jurisdiction to hear civil RICO claims "by an explicit statutory directive, by unmistakable implication from legislative history, or by a clear incompatibility between state-court jurisdiction and federal interests." Gulf Offshore, supra, at 478. Because we find none of these factors present with respect to civil claims arising under RICO, we hold that state courts retain their presumptive authority to adjudicate such claims.

LEdHN[1C] [↑] [1C]LEdHN[3C] [↑] [3C]At the outset, petitioners concede that there is nothing in the language of RICO -- [**796] much less an "explicit statutory directive" -- to suggest that Congress has, by affirmative enactment, divested the state courts of jurisdiction to hear civil RICO claims. The statutory provision authorizing civil RICO claims provides in full:

[****13] HN3 [↑] "Any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter may sue therefor in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (emphasis added).

This grant of federal jurisdiction is plainly permissive, not mandatory, for "the statute does not state nor even suggest that such jurisdiction shall be exclusive. It provides that suits of the kind described 'may' be brought in the federal district [*461] courts, not that they must be." Dowd Box, supra, at 506. Indeed, "it is black letter law . . . that HN4 [↑] the mere grant of jurisdiction to a federal court does not operate to oust a state court from concurrent jurisdiction over the cause of action." Gulf Offshore, supra, at 479 (citing United States v. Bank of New York & Trust Co., 296 U.S. 463, 479 (1936)).

Petitioners thus rely solely on the second and third factors suggested [****14] in Gulf Offshore, arguing that exclusive federal jurisdiction over civil RICO actions is established "by unmistakable implication from legislative history, or by a clear incompatibility between state-court jurisdiction and federal interests," 453 U.S., at 478.

LEdHN[1D] [↑] [1D]LEdHN[4] [↑] [4]Our review of the legislative history, however, reveals no evidence that Congress even considered the question of concurrent state court jurisdiction over RICO claims, much less any suggestion that Congress affirmatively intended to confer exclusive jurisdiction over such claims on the federal courts. As the Courts of Appeals that have considered the question have concluded, "the legislative history contains no indication that Congress ever expressly considered the question of concurrent jurisdiction; indeed, as [***896] the principal draftsman of RICO has remarked, 'no one even thought of the issue.'" Brandenburg, 859 F.2d, at 1193 (quoting Flaherty, Two States Lay Claim to RICO, Nat. L. J., May 7, 1984, p. 10, col. 2); see also [****15] Lou v. Belzberg, 834 F.2d 730, 736 (CA9 1987) ("The legislative history provides 'no evidence that Congress ever expressly considered the question of jurisdiction; indeed, the evidence establishes that its attention was focused solely on whether to provide a private right of action") (citation omitted), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 993 (1988); Chivas Products Ltd. v. Owen, 864 F.2d 1280, 1283 (CA6 1988) ("There is no 'smoking gun' legislative history in which RICO sponsors indicated an express intention to commit civil RICO to the federal courts"). Petitioners nonetheless insist that if Congress had considered the issue, it would have granted federal courts exclusive jurisdiction over civil [*462] RICO claims. This argument, however, is misplaced, for even if we could reliably discern what Congress' intent might have been had it considered the question, we are not at liberty to so speculate; the fact that Congress did not even consider the issue readily disposes of any argument that Congress unmistakably intended to divest state courts of concurrent jurisdiction.

493 U.S. 455, *461; 110 S. Ct. 792, **796; 107 L. Ed. 2d 887, ***896; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 568, ****15

[LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [****16] [LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A]Sensing this void in the legislative history, petitioners rely, in the alternative, on our decisions in Sedima, S. P. R. L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479 (1985), and Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Assocs., 483 U.S. 143 (1987), in which we noted that Congress modeled § 1964(c) after § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\). See Sedima, supra, at 489; Agency Holding, supra, at 151-152. Petitioners assert that, because we have interpreted § 4 of the Clayton Act to confer exclusive jurisdiction on the federal courts, see, e. g., General [**797] Investment Co. v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 260 U.S. 261, 286-288 (1922), and because Congress may be presumed to have been aware of and incorporated those interpretations when it used similar language in RICO, cf. Cannon v. University of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 694-699 (1979), Congress intended, by implication, to grant exclusive federal jurisdiction over claims arising under § 1964(c).

[LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F] [****17] [LEdHN\[3D\]](#) [3D] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]This argument is also flawed. To rebut the presumption of concurrent jurisdiction, the question is not whether any intent at all may be divined from legislative silence on the issue, but whether Congress in its deliberations may be said to have affirmatively or unmistakably intended jurisdiction to be exclusively federal. In the instant case, the lack of any indication in RICO's legislative history that Congress either considered or assumed that the importing of remedial language from the Clayton Act into RICO had any jurisdictional implications is dispositive. The "mere borrowing of statutory language does not imply that Congress also intended to incorporate all of the baggage that may be attached to the borrowed language." Lou, supra, at 737. Indeed, to the [*463] extent we impute to Congress knowledge of our Clayton Act precedents, it makes no less sense to impute to Congress knowledge of Claflin and [***897] Dowd Box [****18], under which Congress, had it sought to confer exclusive jurisdiction over civil RICO claims, would have had every incentive to do so expressly.

[LEdHN\[5C\]](#) [5C] [LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7] Sedima and Agency Holding are not to the contrary. Although we observed in Sedima that "the clearest current in [the legislative] history [of § 1964(c)] is the reliance on the Clayton Act model," 473 U.S., at 489, that statement was made in the context of noting the distinction between "private and governmental actions" under the Clayton Act. Ibid. We intimated nothing as to whether Congress' reliance on the Clayton Act implied any intention to establish exclusive federal jurisdiction for civil RICO claims, and in Sedima itself we rejected any requirement of proving "racketeering injury," noting that to borrow the "antitrust injury" requirement from antitrust law would "creat[e] exactly the problems Congress sought to avoid." Id., at 498-499. Likewise, in Agency Holding we were concerned with "borrowing," in light of [****19] legislative silence on the issue, an appropriate statute of limitations period from an "analogous" statute. 483 U.S., at 146. Under such circumstances, we found it appropriate to borrow the statute of limitations from the Clayton Act. Id., at 152. In this case, by contrast, where the issue is whether jurisdiction is exclusive or concurrent, we are not free to add content to a statute via analogies to other statutes unless the legislature has specifically endorsed such action. Under Gulf Offshore, legislative silence counsels, if not compels, us to enforce the presumption of concurrent jurisdiction. In short, in both Sedima and Agency Holding we looked to the Clayton Act in interpreting RICO without the benefit of a background juridical presumption of the type present in this case. Thus, to whatever extent the Clayton Act analogy may be relevant to our interpretation of RICO generally, it has no place in our inquiry into the jurisdiction of state courts.

[*464] Petitioners finally urge that state court jurisdiction over civil RICO claims would be clearly incompatible with federal interests. We noted in Gulf Offshore [****20] HN5 that factors indicating clear incompatibility "include the desirability of uniform interpretation, the expertise of federal judges in federal law, and the assumed greater hospitality of federal courts to peculiarly federal claims." 453 U.S., at 483-484 (citation and footnote omitted). Petitioners' primary contention is that concurrent jurisdiction is clearly incompatible with the federal interest in uniform interpretation of federal [\[\*\*798\]](#) criminal laws, see 18 U.S.C. § 3231,<sup>2</sup> because state courts would be required to construe the federal crimes that constitute predicate acts defined as "racketeering activity," see 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961\(1\)\(B\), \(C\), and \(D\). Petitioners predict that if state courts [\[\*\*\*898\]](#) are permitted to interpret federal criminal statutes, they will create a body of precedent relating to those statutes and that the federal courts will consequently lose control over the orderly and uniform development of federal criminal law.

[\[\*\*\*\*21\] LEdHN\[1G\]\[↑\]](#) [1G][LEdHN\[8\]\[↑\]](#) [8][HN6\[↑\]](#) We perceive no "clear incompatibility" between state court jurisdiction over civil RICO actions and federal interests. As a preliminary matter, concurrent jurisdiction over § 1964\(c\) suits is clearly not incompatible with § 3231 itself, for civil RICO claims are not "offenses against the laws of the United States," § 3231, and do not result in the imposition of criminal sanctions -- uniform or otherwise. See Shearson/American Express Inc. v. McMahon, 482 U.S. 220, 240-241 \(1987\) (civil RICO intended to be primarily remedial rather than punitive).

[LEdHN\[1H\]\[↑\]](#) [1H]More to the point, however, our decision today creates no significant danger of inconsistent application of federal criminal [\[\*465\]](#) law. Although petitioners' concern with the need for uniformity and consistency of federal criminal law is well taken, see Ableman v. Booth, 21 How. 506, 517-518 \(1859\); cf. Messer v. Utah, 333 U.S. 95, 97 \(1948\) [\[\*\*\*\*22\]](#) (vague criminal statutes may violate the Due Process Clause), federal courts, pursuant to § 3231, would retain full authority and responsibility for the interpretation and application of federal criminal laws, for they would not be bound by state court interpretations of the federal offenses constituting RICO's predicate acts. State courts adjudicating civil RICO claims will, in addition, be guided by federal court interpretations of the relevant federal criminal statutes, just as federal courts sitting in diversity are guided by state court interpretations of state law, see, e. g., Commissioner v. Estate of Bosch, 387 U.S. 456, 465 \(1967\). State court judgments misinterpreting federal criminal law would, of course, also be subject to direct review by this Court. Thus, we think that state court adjudication of civil RICO actions will, in practice, have at most a negligible effect on the uniform interpretation and application of federal criminal law, cf. Pan-American Petroleum Corp. v. Superior Court of Delaware, Newcastle County, 366 U.S. 656, 665-666 \(1961\) (rejecting claim that uniform interpretation of the Natural Gas Act will be jeopardized [\[\*\*\*\*23\]](#) by concurrent jurisdiction), and will not, in any event, result in any more inconsistency than that which a multimembered, multitiered federal judicial system already creates, cf. H. J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 235, n. 2 \(1989\) (surveying conflict among federal appellate courts over RICO's "pattern of racketeering activity" requirement).

Moreover, contrary to petitioners' fears, we have full faith in the ability of state courts to handle the complexities of civil RICO actions, particularly since many RICO cases involve asserted violations of state law, such as state fraud claims, over which state courts presumably have greater expertise. See 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(1\)\(A\) (listing state law offenses constituting predicate acts); Gulf Offshore, supra at 484 [\[\*466\]](#) ("State judges have greater expertise in applying" laws "whose governing rules are borrowed [\[\*\*\*899\]](#) from state law"); see also Sedima, 473 U.S., at 499 (RICO "has become a tool for everyday fraud [\[\*\*799\]](#) cases"); BNA, Civil RICO Report, Vol. 2, No. 44, p. 7 (Apr. 14, 1987) (54.9% of all RICO cases after [\[\*\*\*\*24\]](#) Sedima involved "common law fraud" and another 18% involved either "nonsecurities fraud" or "theft or conversion"). To hold otherwise would not only denigrate the respect accorded coequal sovereigns, but would also ignore our "consistent history of hospitable acceptance of concurrent jurisdiction," Dowd Box, 368 U.S., at 508. Indeed, it would seem anomalous to rule that state courts are incompetent to adjudicate civil RICO suits when we have recently found no inconsistency in subjecting civil RICO claims to adjudication by arbitration. See Shearson/American Express, 482 U.S., at 239 (rejecting argument that "RICO claims are too complex to be subject to arbitration" and that "there is an irreconcilable conflict between arbitration and RICO's underlying purposes").

<sup>2</sup>Title 18 U.S.C. § 3231 provides in full:

"The district courts of the United States shall have original jurisdiction, exclusive of the courts of the States, of all offenses against the laws of the United States.

"Nothing in this title shall be held to take away or impair the jurisdiction of the courts of the several States under the laws thereof."

Petitioners further note, as evidence of incompatibility, that RICO's procedural mechanisms include extended venue and service-of-process provisions that are applicable only in federal court, see 18 U.S.C. § 1965. We think it sufficient, however, to observe that we have previously found concurrent state court jurisdiction even where federal law provided for [****25] special procedural mechanisms similar to those found in RICO. See, e. g., Dowd Box, supra (finding concurrent jurisdiction over Labor Management Relations Act § 301(a) suits, despite federal enforcement and venue provisions); Maine v. Thiboutot, 448 U.S. 1, 3, n. 1 (1980) (finding concurrent jurisdiction over 42 U.S.C. § 1983 suits, despite federal procedural provisions in § 1988); cf. Hathorn v. Lovorn, 457 U.S. 255, 269 (1982) (finding concurrent jurisdiction over disputes regarding the applicability of § 5 of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, 42 U.S.C. § 1973c, despite provision for a three-judge panel). Although congressional specification [*467] of procedural mechanisms applicable only in federal court may tend to suggest that Congress intended exclusive federal jurisdiction, it does not by itself suffice to create a "clear incompatibility" with federal interests.

Finally, we note that, far from disabling or frustrating federal interests, "permitting state courts to entertain federal causes of action facilitates the enforcement of federal rights." Gulf Offshore, supra, at 478, n. 4; [****26] see also Dowd Box, supra, at 514 (conflicts deriving from concurrent jurisdiction are "not necessarily unhealthy"). Thus, to the extent that Congress intended RICO to serve broad remedial purposes, see, e. g., Pub. L. 91-452, § 904(a), 84 Stat. 947 (RICO must "be liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes"); Sedima, 473 U.S., at 492, n. 10 ("If Congress' liberal-construction mandate is to be applied anywhere, it is in § 1964, where RICO's remedial purposes are most evident"), concurrent state court jurisdiction over civil RICO claims will advance rather than jeopardize federal policies underlying the statute.

[***900] For all of the above reasons, we hold that HNT↑ state courts have concurrent jurisdiction to consider civil claims arising under RICO. Nothing in the language, structure, legislative history, or underlying policies of RICO suggests that Congress intended otherwise. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is accordingly.

Affirmed.

Concur by: WHITE; SCALIA

Concur

---

JUSTICE WHITE, concurring.

I agree that state courts have concurrent jurisdiction over civil RICO actions and join the opinion and judgment of the Court. [****27] I add a few words only because this Court has rarely considered contentions that civil actions based on federal criminal statutes must be heard by the federal courts. As the Court observes, ante, at 465, the uniform construction of federal criminal statutes is no insignificant matter, particularly because Congress has recognized potential dangers in nonuniform [**800] construction and has confined jurisdiction over [*468] federal criminal cases to the federal courts. There is, therefore, reason for caution before concluding that state courts have jurisdiction over civil claims related to federal criminal statutes and for assessing in each case the danger to federal interests presented by potential inconsistent constructions of federal criminal statutes.

RICO is an unusual federal criminal statute. It borrows heavily from state law; racketeering activity is defined in terms of numerous offenses chargeable under state law, 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(A), as well as various federal offenses. To the extent that there is any danger under RICO of nonuniform construction of criminal statutes, it is quite likely that the damage will result from federal [****28] misunderstanding of the content of state law -- a problem, to be sure, but not one to be solved by exclusive federal jurisdiction. Many of the federal offenses named as racketeering activity under RICO have close, though perhaps not exact, state-law analogues, cf. Durland v. United States, 161 U.S. 306, 312 (1896), which construed the federal mail fraud statute, and it is unlikely that the state courts will be incompetent to construe those federal statutes. Nor does incorrect state-court construction of those statutes present as significant a threat to federal interests as that posed by improper interpretation of the federal antitrust laws, which could have a disastrous effect on interstate commerce, a particular concern of the Federal Government. Racketeering activity as defined by RICO includes other federal offenses without state-law analogues, but given the history as written until now of civil RICO litigation, I doubt that state-court construction of these offenses will be greatly disruptive of important federal interests.

There is also the possibility that the state courts will disrupt the uniform construction of criminal RICO by launching new interpretations [****29] of the "pattern" and "enterprise" elements of that offense when hearing civil RICO suits. This possibility, though not insubstantial, cf. H. J. Inc. v. Northwestern [*469] Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229 (1989), is not enough to require exclusive federal jurisdiction of civil RICO claims. Even [***901] though varying interpretations of the "pattern" and "enterprise" elements of RICO may drastically change the consequences that flow from particular acts, these variations cannot make an act criminal in one court system but blameless in another and therefore do not implicate the core due process concerns identified by the Court, ante, at 464, as underlying the need for uniform construction of criminal statutes. Moreover, we have the authority to reduce the risk of, and to set aside, incorrect interpretations of these elements of RICO liability.

JUSTICE SACLIA, with whom JUSTICE KENNEDY joins, concurring.

I join the opinion of the Court, addressing the issues before us on the basis argued by the parties, which has included acceptance of the dictum in Gulf Offshore Co. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 453 U.S. 473, 478 (1981), that "the [****30] presumption of concurrent jurisdiction can be rebutted by an explicit statutory directive, by unmistakable implication from legislative history, or by a clear incompatibility between state-court jurisdiction and federal interests." Ante, at 459-460. Such dicta, when repeatedly used as the point of departure for analysis, have a regrettable tendency to acquire the practical status of legal rules. I write separately, before this one has become too entrenched, to note my view that in one respect it is not a correct statement of the law, and in another respect it may not be.

State courts have jurisdiction over federal causes of action not because it is "conferred" upon them by the Congress; nor even because their inherent powers permit them to entertain transitory causes of action arising under the laws of foreign sovereigns, see, e. g., McKenna v. Fisk, 1 How. 241, 247-249 [***801] (1843); but because "the laws of the United States are laws in the several States, and just as much binding on the citizens and courts thereof as the State laws are. . . . The two [*470] together form one system of jurisprudence, which constitutes the law of the [****31] land for the State; and the courts of the two jurisdictions are not foreign to each other . . ." Claflin v. Houseman, 93 U.S. 130, 136-137 (1876); see also Minneapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. Bombolis, 241 U.S. 211, 221-223 (1916).

It therefore takes an affirmative act of power under the Supremacy Clause to oust the States of jurisdiction -- an exercise of what one of our earliest cases referred to as "the power of congress to withdraw" federal claims from state-court jurisdiction. Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat. 1, 26 (1820) (emphasis added). See also Bombolis, supra, at 221 (concurrent jurisdiction exists "unless excepted by express constitutional limitation or by valid legislation"); Missouri ex rel. St. Louis, B. & M. R. Co. v. Taylor, 266 U.S. 200, 208 (1924) ("As [Congress] made no provision concerning the remedy, the federal and the state courts have concurrent jurisdiction").

As an original proposition, it would be eminently arguable that depriving state courts of their sovereign authority to adjudicate the law of the land must be done, if not with the utmost clarity, [****32] cf. Atascadero State Hospital v. Scanlon, 473 U.S. 234, 243 [***902] (1985) (state sovereign immunity can be eliminated only by "clear statement"), at least expressly. That was the view of Alexander Hamilton:

"When . . . we consider the State governments and the national governments, as they truly are, in the light of kindred systems, and as parts of ONE WHOLE, the inference seems to be conclusive that the State courts would have a concurrent jurisdiction in all cases arising under the laws of the Union, where it was not expressly prohibited." The Federalist No. 82, p. 132 (E. Bourne ed. 1947).

See also Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Wallace, 223 U.S. 481, 490 \(1912\) ("Jurisdiction is not defeated by implication"). Although as early as Claflin, see 93 U.S., at 137, [*471] and as late as Gulf Offshore, we have said that the exclusion of concurrent state jurisdiction could be achieved by implication, the only cases in which to my knowledge we have acted upon such a principle are those relating to the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act -- where the full extent of our analysis was the less than [****33] compelling statement that provisions giving the right to sue in United States District Court "show that [the right] is to be exercised only in a 'court of the United States.'" General Investment Co. v. Lake Shore & Michigan Southern R. Co., 260 U.S. 261, 287 \(1922\) (emphasis added). See also Blumenstock Bros. Advertising Agency v. Curtis Publishing Co., 252 U.S. 436, 440 \(1920\) (dictum); Freeman v. Bee Machine Co., 319 U.S. 448, 451, n. 6 \(1943\) (dictum); Hathorn v. Lovorn, 457 U.S. 255, 267, n. 18 \(1982\) (dictum). In the standard fields of exclusive federal jurisdiction, the governing statutes specifically recite that suit may be brought "only" in federal court, Investment Company Act of 1940, as amended, 84 Stat. 1429, 15 U.S.C. § 80a-35\(b\)\(5\); that the jurisdiction of the federal courts shall be "exclusive," Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, 48 Stat. 902, 15 U.S.C. § 78aa; Natural Gas Act of 1938, 52 Stat. 833, 15 U.S.C. § 717u; Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, 88 Stat. 892, 29 U.S.C. § 1132 [*472] (****34) (e)(1); or indeed even that the jurisdiction of the federal courts shall be "exclusive of the courts of the States," 18 U.S.C. § 3231 (criminal cases); 28 U.S.C. §§ 1333 (admiralty, maritime, and prize cases), 1334 (bankruptcy cases), 1338 (patent, plant variety protection, and copyright cases), 1351 (actions against consuls or vice consuls of foreign states), 1355 (actions [*802] for recovery or enforcement of fine, penalty, or forfeiture incurred under Act of Congress), 1356 (seizures on land or water not within admiralty and maritime jurisdiction).

Assuming, however, that exclusion by implication is possible, surely what is required is implication in the text of the statute, and not merely, as the second part of the Gulf Offshore dictum would permit, through "unmistakable implication" [*472] from legislative history." 453 U.S., at 478. Although Charles Dowd Box Co. v. Courtney, 368 U.S. 502 \(1962\), after concluding [****903] that the statute "does not state nor even suggest that [federal] jurisdiction shall be exclusive," id., at 506, proceeded quite unnecessarily [****35] to examine the legislative history, it did so to reinforce rather than contradict the conclusion it had already reached. We have never found state jurisdiction excluded by "unmistakable implication" from legislative history. It is perhaps harmless enough to say that it can be, since one can hardly imagine an "implication from legislative history" that is "unmistakable" -- i. e., that demonstrates agreement to a proposition by a majority of both Houses and the President -- unless the proposition is embodied in statutory text to which those parties have given assent. But harmless or not, it is simply wrong in principle to assert that Congress can effect this affirmative legislative act by simply talking about it with unmistakable clarity. What is needed to oust the States of jurisdiction is congressional action (i. e., a provision of law), not merely congressional discussion.

It is perhaps also true that implied preclusion can be established by the fact that a statute expressly mentions only federal courts, plus the fact that state-court jurisdiction would plainly disrupt the statutory scheme. That is conceivably what was meant by the third part of the Gulf Offshore [****36] dictum, "clear incompatibility between state-court jurisdiction and federal interests." 453 U.S., at 478. If the phrase is interpreted more broadly than that, however -- if it is taken to assert some power on the part of this Court to exclude state-court jurisdiction when systemic federal interests make it undesirable -- it has absolutely no foundation in our precedent.

Gulf Offshore cited three cases to support its "incompatibility" formulation. The first was Dowd Box, supra, at 507-508, which contains nothing to support any "incompatibility" principle, except a quotation from the second case Gulf Offshore [*473] cited, Claflin. Indeed, in response to the argument that "only the federal judiciary . . . possesses both the familiarity with federal labor legislation and the monolithic judicial system necessary" to elaborate a coherent system of national labor laws, the Dowd Box opinion said: "Whatever the merits of this argument as a matter of policy, we find nothing to indicate that Congress adopted such a policy in enacting § 301." 368 U.S., at 507. The second case cited was Claflin, which said that concurrent [****37] jurisdiction exists "where it is not excluded by express provision or by incompatibility in its exercise arising from the nature of the particular case." 93 U.S., at 136. The subsequent discussion makes it entirely clear, however, that what the Court meant by "incompatibility in its exercise arising from the nature of the particular case" was that the particular statute at issue impliedly excluded state-court jurisdiction. "Congress," the Court said, "may, if it sees fit, give to the Federal courts exclusive jurisdiction," which it does "sometimes . . . by express enactment and sometimes by implication." Id., at 137. The third case cited, Garner v. Teamsters, 346 U.S. 485 \(1953\), had nothing to do with state-court jurisdiction over a federal cause of action. It held that the National Labor [***904] Relations Act, whose express provision that the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board shall be exclusive had already been held to prevent federal courts from assuming primary jurisdiction over labor [**803] disputes, see Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 303 U.S. 41, 48 \(1938\), prevented [****38] state courts as well.

In sum: As the Court holds, the RICO cause of action meets none of the three tests for exclusion of state-court jurisdiction recited in Gulf Offshore. Since that is so, the proposition that meeting any one of the tests would have sufficed is dictum here, as it was there. In my view meeting the second test is assuredly not enough, and meeting the third may not be.

References

---

Supreme Court's views as to state court's concurrent jurisdiction over federal cause of action in absence of federal legislation expressly granting such jurisdiction

20 Am Jur 2d, Courts 13; 31A Am Jur 2d, Extortion, Blackmail, and Threats 218

1 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Access to District Courts 1:399

18 USCS 1961-1968

US L Ed Digest, Courts 711

Index to Annotations, Jurisdiction; Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act

Annotation References:

Civil action for damages under 18 USCS 1964\(c\) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO, 18 USCS 1961 et seq.) for injuries sustained [****39] by reason of racketeering activity. 70 ALR Fed 538.

Cal. v. Am. Stores Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

January 16, 1990, Argued ; April 30, 1990, Decided

No. 89-258

Reporter

495 U.S. 271 *; 110 S. Ct. 1853 **; 109 L. Ed. 2d 240 ***; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 2214 ****; 58 U.S.L.W. 4529; 1990-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,003

CALIFORNIA v. AMERICAN STORES CO. ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 872 F. 2d 837, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

divestiture, dissolution, merger, injunctive relief, Clayton Act, injunction, district court, violations, antitrust, equitable, Sherman Act, authorize, encompass, stock, threatened loss, anti trust law, decrees, legislative history, mandatory, remedies, cases, preliminary injunction, subcommittee, acquisition, conditions, principles, provisions, settlement, divest, merged

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN1** Legislation, Interpretation

When Congress uses broad generalized language in a remedial statute, and that language is not contravened by authoritative legislative history, a court should interpret a provision generously so as to effectuate important congressional goals.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN2** Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 25.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN3** [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 26.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Divestiture

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Injunctions

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

**HN4** [down] Civil Actions, Divestiture

The general language of 15 U.S.C.S. § 25 is broad enough to authorize divestiture. Indeed, in government actions divestiture is the preferred remedy for an illegal merger or acquisition. Divestiture or dissolution has traditionally been the remedy for Sherman Act violations whose heart is intercorporate combination and control, and it is reasonable to think immediately of the same remedy when 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, which particularizes the Sherman Act standard of illegality, is involved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN5** [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 26 states no restrictions or exceptions to the forms of injunctive relief a private plaintiff may seek, or that a court may order. Rather, the statutory language indicates Congress' intention that traditional principles of equity govern the grant of injunctive relief. The plain text of § 26 authorizes divestiture decrees to remedy 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

Securities Law > ... > Self-Regulating Entities > National Securities Exchanges > New York Stock Exchange

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

Securities Law > ... > Self-Regulating Entities > National Securities Exchanges > General Overview

**HN6** [down] Private Actions, Remedies

Injunctions issued pursuant to 15 U.S.C.S. § 26 have been upheld regardless of whether they are mandatory or prohibitory in character. Section 26 has been enacted not merely to provide private relief, but to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing antitrust laws. The remedy that § 26 affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Divestiture

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

**HN7** [down] Legislation, Statute of Limitations

The Clayton Act's provisions manifest a clear intent to encourage vigorous private litigation against anticompetitive mergers. 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 itself creates a relatively expansive definition of antitrust liability: To show that a merger is unlawful, a plaintiff need only prove that its effect may be substantially to lessen competition. 11 U.S.C.S. § 26, construed to authorize a private divestiture remedy when appropriate in light of equitable principles, fits well in a statutory scheme that favors private enforcement, subjects mergers to searching scrutiny, and regards divestiture as the remedy best suited to redress the ills of an anticompetitive merger.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

**HN8** [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Distinction between divestiture and injunctions that prohibit future conduct for purposes of 15 U.S.C.S. § 26 is illusory.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > General Overview

**HN9** [down] Preliminary Considerations, Equity

The essence of equity jurisdiction has been the power of a court to do equity and to mould decrees to the necessities of a particular case. Flexibility rather than rigidity distinguishes it.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > General Overview

**HN10** [ ↗ ] Preliminary Considerations, Equity

When Congress endows federal courts with equitable jurisdiction, Congress acts aware of a longstanding tradition of flexibility. Unless a statute in so many words, or by a necessary and inescapable inference, restricts a court's jurisdiction in equity, the full scope of that jurisdiction is to be recognized and applied.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Divestiture

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

**HN11** [ ↗ ] Civil Actions, Divestiture

In a government case under 15 U.S.C.S. § 25, a proof of a violation of law may itself establish sufficient public injury to warrant relief. A private litigant, however, must have standing under 15 U.S.C.S. § 26 and must prove threatened loss or damage to his own interests in order to obtain relief.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Divestiture held to be form of injunctive relief authorized by 16 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 26), where antitrust suit by state of California claimed that supermarket merger violated 7 of Act (15 USCS 18).

Summary

Section 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26) provides that any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to have injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity. After a company which operated supermarkets in many states, including California, notified the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), under 15 USCS 18a, that the company intended to acquire all of a major competitor's outstanding stock, the FTC negotiated a settlement which included a condition that the acquirer comply with a "Hold Separate Agreement" preventing the acquirer from integrating the two companies' assets and operations until after the acquirer had divested itself of several designated supermarkets. The state of California then filed an action in the United States District Court for the Central District of California.

The complaint alleged that the merger violated federal antitrust statutes, including 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), which generally prohibits acquisitions whose effect may be substantially to lessen competition. Meanwhile, the company consummated the merger as a matter of legal form under Delaware corporation law, but the two companies' business operations were not combined, as a matter of practical fact, due to the "Hold Separate Agreement." The District Court eventually entered a preliminary injunction--which ordered the acquirer, during the pendency of the action, to take all steps necessary to operate the two companies independently in California, and to refrain from taking any action to modify the status quo as to the California operations of the two companies, other than in the ordinary course of business--and expressed the view that (1) the state of California had proved a prima facie violation of 7; (2) the state had made an adequate showing of irreparable harm to Californians; (3) such harm outweighed the harm that the acquirer would suffer as a result of the injunction; and (4) under the circumstances, the injunction was not prohibited by United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit precedent to the effect that divestiture was not an authorized form of injunctive relief under 16 (697 F Supp 1125). On interlocutory appeal, the Court of Appeals, ordering that the preliminary injunction be set aside, expressed the view that (1) the District Court had not abused its discretion in finding that the state had proved (a) a likelihood of success on the merits, and (b) the probability of irreparable harm; but (2) divestiture was not an available remedy in private actions under 16; and (3) 16 did not permit indirect divestiture by means of an injunction which, as in the case at hand, (a) did not on its face order divestiture, but (b) had the same effect (872 F2d 837).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeals and remanded the case for further proceedings. In an opinion by Stevens, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that divestiture is a form of injunctive relief within the meaning of 16, and that the District Court, with respect to the case at hand, had the power under 16 to divest the acquirer of any part of the acquirer's ownership interest in the acquired company--either by forbidding the exercise of the owner's normal right to integrate the operations of two previously separate companies, or by requiring the acquirer to sell certain assets located in California--because (1) if the merger violated antitrust laws, and if it were correctly found that the conduct of the merged enterprise threatened economic harm to California consumers, then the literal text of 16 was sufficient to authorize injunctive relief, including an order of divestiture, that would prohibit that conduct from causing that harm; (2) such a construction harmonizes 16 with its statutory context, which (a) favors private enforcement, (b) subjects mergers to searching scrutiny, and (c) regards divestiture as the remedy best suited to redress the ills of an anticompetitive merger; (3) even though it was alleged that excerpts from subcommittee hearings on the adoption of the Act demonstrated that a conduct-structure distinction had been recognized and that Congress had rejected a private dissolution remedy, and thereby had rejected divestiture as well, such allegations were not confirmed by anything that had been called to the Supreme Court's attention in the committee reports, floor debates, conference report, or contemporaneous judicial interpretations concerning the Act, given the historical importance of the distinction between dissolution and divestiture; (4) the equitable principles that govern 16 support a construction that would enable a chancellor to impose the most effective, usual, and straightforward remedy to rescind an unlawful purchase of assets; and (5) the fact that the term "divestiture" is used to describe what is typically no more than the familiar remedy of rescission does not place the remedy beyond the normal reach of the chancellor.

Kennedy, J., concurring, expressed the view that (1) Congress has not yet enacted a strict rule prohibiting divestiture after a negotiated settlement with the FTC; but (2) 15 USCS 18a, by establishing a time period for review of merger proposals by the FTC, may lend a degree of objectivity to the determination whether divestiture is barred by laches.

Headnotes

---

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §70 > STATUTES §108.5 > Clayton Act -- private injunctive relief -- divestiture -- dissolution -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F]

[1F][LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [1G][LEdHN\[1H\]](#) [1H][LEdHN\[1I\]](#) [1I][LEdHN\[1J\]](#) [1J][LEdHN\[1K\]](#)
[1K][LEdHN\[1L\]](#) [1L][LEdHN\[1M\]](#) [1M]

Divestiture is a form of injunctive relief within the meaning of 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26)--which authorizes any person to have injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity--and a Federal District Court, with respect to a state's claim that one company's acquisition of another company violated 7 of the Act (15 USCS 18), has the power under 16 to divest the acquirer of any part of the acquirer's ownership interest in the acquired company--either by forbidding the exercise of the owner's normal right to integrate the operations of two previously separate companies, or by requiring the acquirer to sell certain assets located in the state--because (1) if the merger violated antitrust laws, and if it is correctly found that the conduct of the merged enterprise threatens economic harm to the state's consumers, then the literal text of 16 is sufficient to authorize injunctive relief, including an order of divestiture, that will prohibit that conduct from causing that harm, where (a) 16's authority, on its face, would seem to encompass divestiture just as plainly as the comparable language in 15 of the Act (15 USCS 25) with respect to actions initiated by the Federal Government, which language, to the effect that antitrust violations shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited, is agreed to be broad enough to authorize divestiture, (b) 16's requirement of threatened loss or damage (i) is satisfied under the assumed circumstances, and (ii) if divestiture is an appropriate means of preventing such harm, does not negate the power to grant such relief, and (c) 16's reference to threatened conduct is not the equivalent of a directive that unlawful conduct may be prohibited, but structural relief may not be mandated, since any distinction between conduct and structure, or between prohibitory and mandatory relief, is illusory in a case of this kind; (2) such a construction harmonizes 16 with its statutory context, which (a) favors private enforcement, (b) subjects mergers to searching scrutiny, and (c) regards divestiture as the remedy best suited to redress the ills of an anticompetitive merger; (3) even though it is alleged that excerpts from subcommittee hearings on the adoption of the Act demonstrate that a conduct-structure distinction was recognized and that Congress rejected a private dissolution remedy, and thereby rejected divestiture as well, such allegations are not confirmed by anything that has been called to the United States Supreme Court's attention in the committee reports, floor debates, conference report, or contemporaneous judicial interpretations concerning the Act, given the historical importance of the distinction between dissolution and divestiture, where dissolution, at the time of the Act's adoption, was an ambiguous term that could (a) include divestiture, or (b) refer to greater penalties ranging up to a "corporate death sentence"; (4) the equitable principles that govern 16 support a construction that would enable a chancellor to impose the most effective, usual, and straightforward remedy to rescind an unlawful purchase of assets; and (5) the fact that the term "divestiture" is used to describe what is typically no more than the familiar remedy of rescission does not place the remedy beyond the normal reach of the chancellor.

APPEAL §1339.5 > STATUTES §145.4 > language -- legislative history -- review of Federal Court of Appeals' decision -- certiorari -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A][LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

On certiorari to review a Federal Court of Appeals' judgment which set aside a Federal District Court's preliminary injunction on the ground of the alleged limits on such injunctive relief under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26), the statutory text is the natural place for the United States Supreme Court to begin its analysis; although the Supreme Court does not believe the statutory language to be ambiguous, the Supreme Court will nonetheless consider the legislative history that persuaded the Court of Appeals to place a narrow construction on 16; in order to understand such history, however, it is necessary to place the statute in its historical perspective.

495 U.S. 271, *271; 110 S. Ct. 1853, **1853; 109 L. Ed. 2d 240, ***240; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 2214, ****1

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §78 > divestiture -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Under 15 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 25)--which provides that, in actions initiated by the Federal Government, antitrust violations shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited--divestiture is the preferred remedy for an illegal merger or acquisition; divestiture, which is simple, relatively easy to administer, and sure, should always be in the forefront of a court's mind when a violation of 7 of the Act (15 USCS 18) has been found.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > merger -- violation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18) particularizes the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) standard of illegality and creates a relatively expansive definition of antitrust liability, as a plaintiff, in order to show that a merger is unlawful under 7, need only prove that the merger's effect "may be" substantially to lessen competition.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §74 > STATUTES §145.4 > injunctive relief -- forms -- equitable principles -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B] [LEdHN\[5C\]](#) [5C] [LEdHN\[5D\]](#) [5D] [LEdHN\[5E\]](#) [5E]

The text of 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26) states no restrictions or exceptions to the forms of injunctive relief that a private plaintiff may seek, or that a federal court may order, as 16 authorizes any person to have injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity; rather, the language of 16 indicates Congress' intention that traditional principles of equity govern the grant of injunctive relief, and a fair reading of the entire legislative history supports the conclusion that 16 means what it says when it endorses the conditions and principles governing injunctive relief in the courts of equity--that 16 should be construed generously and flexibly, pursuant to the principles of equity; the evident import of 16's reference to threatened loss or damage is not to constrict the availability of injunctive remedies against violations that have already begun or occurred, but rather to expand such remedies' availability against harms that are as yet unrealized; the reference in 16 to threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is not a limitation on the power to grant relief, but part of the general reference to the standards that should be applied in fashioning injunctive relief.

APPEAL §1363 > review of preliminary injunction -- satisfaction of conditions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

On certiorari to review a Federal Court of Appeals' setting aside of a Federal District Court's preliminary injunction under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26)--which authorizes such injunctions in certain situations which involve threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws--the United States Supreme Court will conclude that 16's requirement of threatened loss or damage is satisfied, where the allegations of a complaint filed by a state, the findings of the District Court, and the opinion of the Court of Appeals all assume that, even if the merger is a completed violation of law, the threatened harm to the state's consumers will persist.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §78 > STATUTES §180 > divestiture -- dissolution -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

In interpreting 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26)--which authorizes any person to have injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity--the fact that divestiture was encompassed within the concept of dissolution at the time of the Act's framing does not imply that the equitable formulation of 16 cannot permit divestiture while excluding the more severe sanctions, ranging up to a "corporate death sentence," that also traveled at that time under the name "dissolution," for the rejection of a proposed remedy that would terminate the corporate existence of a company and would appoint a receiver to supervise the disposition of the company's assets is not the equivalent of the rejection of a remedy that would merely rescind a purchase of stock or assets.

EQUITY §1 > jurisdiction -- statutory grant -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Unless a statute in so many words, or by a necessary and inescapable inference, restricts the court's jurisdiction in equity, the full scope of that jurisdiction is to be recognized and applied.

EVIDENCE §979 > LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §27 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §70 > divestiture -- government suit -- private suit -- sufficiency of proof -- standing -- laches -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

A conclusion that a Federal District Court has the power to order divestiture in appropriate private antitrust cases brought under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26) does not mean that such power should be exercised in every situation in which the Federal Government would be entitled to such relief under 15 of the Act (15 USCS 25), for (1) in a Federal Government case, the proof of the violation of law may itself establish sufficient public injury to warrant relief; but (2) a private litigant must have standing--that is, such a litigant must prove threatened loss or damage to the litigant's own interest in order to obtain relief under 16; and (3) equitable defenses such as laches, or perhaps "unclean hands," may protect consummated transactions from belated attacks by private parties when it would not be too late for the Federal Government to vindicate the public interest.

APPEAL §1363 > preliminary injunction -- what reviewable -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

On certiorari to review a Federal Court of Appeals' setting aside of a Federal District Court's preliminary injunction, under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 26), against a company which acquired another company--where the Court of Appeals based its decision on the court's view that divestiture is not an available remedy in private actions under 16--the United States Supreme Court (1) is merely confronted with the naked question whether the District Court had the power to divest the acquirer of any part of the acquirer's ownership interest in the acquired company, either

(a) by forbidding the exercise of the owner's normal right to integrate the operation of two previously separate companies, or (b) by requiring the acquirer to sell certain assets located in a particular state; and (2) is not presented with questions as to whether divestiture is appropriate in the particular case, with respect to such issues as the plaintiff's standing or the possible existence of equitable defenses such as laches, or perhaps "unclean hands."

Syllabus

---

Shortly after respondent American Stores Co., the fourth largest supermarket chain in California, acquired all of the outstanding stock of the largest chain, the State filed suit in the District Court alleging, inter alia, that the merger constituted an anticompetitive acquisition violative of § 7 of the Clayton Act and would harm consumers throughout the State. The court granted the State a preliminary injunction requiring American to operate the acquired stores separately pending resolution of the suit. Although agreeing that the State had proved a likelihood of success on the merits and the probability of irreparable harm, the Court [****2] of Appeals set aside the injunction on the ground that the relief granted exceeded the District Court's authority under § 16 of the Act to order "injunctive relief." The court relied on an earlier decision in which it had concluded on the basis of its reading of excerpts from subcommittee hearings that § 16's draftsmen did not intend to authorize the remedies of "dissolution" or "divestiture" in private litigants' actions. Thus, held the court, the "indirect divestiture" effected by the preliminary injunction was impermissible.

Held: Divestiture is a form of "injunctive relief" authorized by § 16. Pp. 278-296.

(a) The plain text of § 16 -- which entitles "[a]ny person . . . to . . . have injunctive relief . . . against threatened loss or damage . . . when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity" -- authorizes divestiture decrees to remedy § 7 violations. On its face, the simple grant of authority to "have injunctive relief" would seem to encompass that remedy just as plainly as the comparable language in § 15 of the Act, which authorizes the district courts [****3] to "prevent and restrain violations" in antitrust actions brought by the United States, and under which divestiture is the preferred remedy for illegal mergers. Moreover, § 16 states no restrictions or exceptions to the forms of injunctive relief a private plaintiff may seek or a court may order, but, rather, evidences Congress' intent that traditional equitable principles govern the grant of such relief. The section's "threatened loss or damage" phrase does not negate the court's power to order divestiture. Assuming, as did the lower courts, that the merger in question violated the antitrust laws, and that the conduct of the merged enterprise threatens economic harm to consumers, such relief would prohibit that conduct from causing that harm. Nor does the section's "threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage" phrase limit the court's power to the granting of relief against anticompetitive "conduct," as opposed to "structural relief," or to the issuance of prohibitory, rather than mandatory, injunctions. That phrase is simply a part of the general reference to the standards that should be applied in fashioning injunctive relief. Section 16, construed to authorize a private [****4] divestiture remedy, fits well in a statutory scheme that favors private enforcement, subjects mergers to searching scrutiny, and regards divestiture as the remedy best suited to redress the ills of an anticompetitive merger. Pp. 278-285.

(b) The legislative history does not require that § 16 be construed narrowly. American's reliance on the subcommittee hearing excerpts cited by the Court of Appeals and on Graves v. Cambria Steel Co., 298 F. 761 -- each of which contains statements indicating that private suits for dissolution do not lie under § 16 -- is misplaced. At the time of the Act's framing, dissolution was a vague and ill-defined concept that encompassed the drastic remedy of corporate termination as well as divestiture. Thus, the fact that Congress may have excluded the more severe sanction does not imply that the equitable formulation of § 16 cannot permit divestiture. Since the inferences that American draws simply are not confirmed by anything else in the legislative history or contemporaneous judicial interpretation, § 16 must be taken at its word when it endorses the "conditions and principles" governing injunctive relief in equity courts. There [****5] being nothing in the section that restricts courts' equitable jurisdiction, the provision should be construed generously and flexibly to enable a chancellor to impose the most effective, usual, and straightforward remedy to rescind an unlawful stock purchase. Pp. 285-295.

(c) Simply because a district court has the power to order divestiture in appropriate § 16 cases does not mean that it should do so in every situation in which the Government would be entitled to such relief under § 15. A private litigant must establish standing by proving "threatened loss or damage" to his own interests, and his suit may be barred by equitable defenses such as laches or "unclean hands." Pp. 295-296.

Counsel: H. Chester Horn, Jr., Deputy Attorney General of California, argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were John K. Van de Kamp, Attorney General, Andrea Sheridan Ordin, Chief Assistant Attorney General, Michael J. Strumwasser, Special Assistant Attorney General, Sanford N. Gruskin, Assistant Attorney General, and Lawrence R. Tapper and Ernest Martinez, Deputy Attorneys General.

Rex E. Lee argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were Carter G. Phillips, [****6] Mark D. Hopson, Donald B. Holbrook, and Kent T. Anderson.*

[****7]

Judges: STEVENS, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court. KENNEDY, J., filed a concurring opinion, post, p. 296.

Opinion by: STEVENS

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the State of Alabama et al. by Jim Mattox, Attorney General of Texas, Mary F. Keller, First Assistant Attorney General, Lou McCreary, Executive Assistant Attorney General, Allene D. Evans, Assistant Attorney General, and Donna L. Nelson, Assistant Attorney General, Don Siegelman, Attorney General of Alabama, and Walter S. Turner, Chief Assistant Attorney General, Douglas B. Baily, Attorney General of Alaska, and Thomas E. Wagner, Assistant Attorney General, John Steven Clark, Attorney General of Arkansas, Duane Woodard, Attorney General of Colorado, Clarine Nardi Riddle, Attorney General of Connecticut, and Robert M. Langer, Assistant Attorney General, Robert A. Butterworth, Attorney General of Florida, and Jerome W. Hoffman, Assistant Attorney General, Warren Price III, Attorney General of Hawaii, and Robert A. Marks and Ted Gamble Clause, Deputy Attorneys General, Jim Jones, Attorney General of Idaho, and Catherine K. Broad, Deputy Attorney General, Neil F. Hartigan, Attorney General of Illinois, Robert Ruiz, Solicitor General, and Christine H. Rosso, Senior Assistant Attorney General, Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, and John R. Perkins, Deputy Attorney General, Robert T. Stephan, Attorney General of Kansas, Frederic J. Cowan, Attorney General of Kentucky, and James M. Ringo, Assistant Attorney General, James E. Tierney, Attorney General of Maine, and Stephen L. Wessler, Deputy Attorney General, J. Joseph Curran, Jr., Attorney General of Maryland, and Michael F. Brockmeyer and R. Hartman Roemer, Assistant Attorneys General, James M. Shannon, Attorney General of Massachusetts, and George K. Weber and Thomas M. Alpert, Assistant Attorneys General, Hubert H. Humphrey III, Attorney General of Minnesota, Stephen P. Kilgriff, Deputy Attorney General, Thomas F. Pursell, Assistant Attorney General, and James P. Spencer, Special Assistant Attorney General, Brian McKay, Attorney General of Nevada, and J. Kenneth Creighton, Deputy Attorney General, Peter N. Perretti, Jr., Attorney General of New Jersey, and Laurel A. Price, Deputy Attorney General, Robert Abrams, Attorney General of New York, O. Peter Sherwood, Solicitor General, and Lloyd E. Constantine, Assistant Attorney General, Lacy H. Thornburg, Attorney General of North Carolina, James C. Gulick, Special Deputy Attorney General, and K. D. Sturgis, Assistant Attorney General, Anthony J. Celebrezze, Jr., Attorney General of Ohio, Dave Frohnmayer, Attorney General of Oregon, Ernest D. Preate, Jr., Attorney General of Pennsylvania, Eugene F. Waye, Chief Deputy Attorney General, and Carl S. Hisiro, Senior Deputy Attorney General, James E. O'Neil, Attorney General of Rhode Island, and Edmund F. Murray, Jr., Special Assistant Attorney General, Roger A. Tellinghuisen, Attorney General of South Dakota, and Jeffrey P. Hallem, Assistant Attorney General, Charles W. Burson, Attorney General of Tennessee, and Perry Craft, Deputy Attorney General, Jeffrey L. Amestoy, Attorney General of Vermont, and Julie Brill, Assistant Attorney General, Mary Sue Terry, Attorney General of Virginia, Kenneth O. Eikenberry, Attorney General of Washington, and Carol A. Smith, Assistant Attorney General, Roger W. Tompkins, Attorney General of West Virginia, Daniel N. Huck, Deputy Attorney General, and Robert William Schulenberg III, Senior Assistant Attorney General, and Joseph B. Meyer, Attorney General of Wyoming; and for the Center for Public Interest Law by Robert C. Fellmeth.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the Business Roundtable by Thomas B. Leary and Janet L. McDavid; for the California Retailers Association et al. by Theodore B. Olson, James R. Martin, Phillip H. Rudolph, and Adrian A. Kragen; and for the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union et al. by George R. Murphy, Nicholas W. Clark, Robert W. Gilbert, Laurence D. Steinsapir, and D. William Heine.

Opinion

---

[*274] [***248] [**1855] JUSTICE STEVENS delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A]By merging with a major competitor, American Stores Co. (American) more than doubled the number of supermarkets that it owns in California. The State sued, claiming that the merger violates the federal antitrust laws and will harm consumers in 62 California cities. The complaint prayed for a preliminary injunction requiring American to operate the acquired stores separately until the case is decided, and then to divest itself of all of the acquired assets located in California. The District Court granted a preliminary injunction preventing American from integrating the operations of the two companies. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit agreed with the District Court's conclusion that California had made [*275] an adequate showing of probable success on the merits, but held that the relief granted by the District Court exceeded its authority under § 16 of [****8] the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 737, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 26. In its view, the "injunctive [**1856] relief . . . against threatened loss or damage" authorized by § 16 does not encompass divestiture, and therefore the "indirect divestiture" effected by the preliminary injunction was impermissible. 872 F. 2d 837 \(1989\). We granted certiorari to resolve a conflict in the Circuits over whether divestiture is a form of injunctive relief within the meaning of § 16. 493 U.S. 916 \(1989\). We conclude that it is.

I

American operates over 1,500 retail grocery stores in 40 States. Prior to the merger, its 252 stores in California made it the fourth largest supermarket chain in that State. Lucky Stores, Inc. (Lucky), which operated in seven Western and Midwestern States, was the largest, with 340 stores. The second and third largest, Von's Companies and Safeway Stores, were merged in December 1987. 697 F. Supp. 1125, 1127 \(CD Cal. 1988\); Pet. for Cert. 3.

On March 21, 1988, American notified the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) that it intended to acquire all of Lucky's outstanding stock for a price of $ 2.5 billion. [***9] <sup>1</sup> The FTC conducted an investigation and negotiated a settlement with American. On May 31, it simultaneously filed both a complaint alleging that the merger violated § 7 of the Clayton [***249] Act and a proposed consent order disposing of the § 7 charges subject to certain conditions. Among those conditions was a requirement that American comply with a "Hold Separate Agreement" preventing it from integrating the two companies' assets and operations until after it had divested itself of [*276] several designated supermarkets.<sup>2</sup> American accepted the terms of the FTC's consent order. In early June, it acquired and paid for Lucky's stock and consummated a Delaware "short form merger." 872 F. 2d, at 840; Brief for Respondent 2. Thus, as a matter of legal form American and Lucky were merged into a single corporate entity on June 9, 1988, but as a matter of practical fact their business operations have not yet been combined.

[***10] On August 31, 1988, the FTC gave its final approval to the merger. The next day California filed this action in the United States District Court for the Central District of California. The complaint alleged that the merger violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and that the acquisition, "if consummated," would cause considerable loss and damage to the State: Competition and potential competition "in many relevant geographic markets will be eliminated," App. 61, and "the prices of food and non-food products might be increased." Id., at 62. In its prayer for relief, California sought, inter alia, (1) a preliminary injunction "requiring American to hold and operate separately from American all of Lucky's California assets and businesses pending final adjudication of the merits"; (2) "such injunctive relief, including rescission . . . as is necessary and appropriate to prevent the effects" alleged in the complaint; and (3) "an injunction requiring American to divest itself of all of Lucky's assets and businesses in the State of California." Id., at 65, 66-67.

---

<sup>1</sup> See 15 U.S.C. § 18a (Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976).

<sup>2</sup> Among other requirements, the Hold Separate Agreement obligated American to maintain separate books and records for the acquisition; to prevent any waste or deterioration of the acquired company's California operation; to refrain from replacing the company's executives; to assure that it is maintained as a viable competitor in California; to refrain from selling or otherwise disposing of the acquired company's warehouse, distribution or manufacturing facilities, or any retail grocery stores in California; and to preserve separate purchasing for its retail grocery sales. 697 F. Supp. 1125, 1134 \(CD Cal. 1988\).

[*277] The District [****11] Court granted California's motion for a temporary restraining order and, after considering extensive statistical evidence, entered a preliminary injunction. Without reaching the Sherman Act claim, the [**1857] court concluded that the State had proved a prima facie violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. On the question of relief, the District Court found that the State had made an adequate showing "that Californians will be irreparably harmed if the proposed merger is completed," 697 F. Supp., at 1134, and that the harm the State would suffer if the merger was not enjoined "far outweighs" the harm that American will suffer as the result of an injunction. Id., at 1135. The court also rejected American's argument that the requested relief was foreclosed by a prior decision of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit holding that divestiture is not a remedy authorized by § 16 of the Clayton Act. American contended that the proposed injunction was "tantamount to divestiture" since the merger of the two companies [***250] had already been completed, but the District Court disagreed. It held that since the FTC's Hold Separate Agreement was still in effect, [****12] the transaction was not a completed merger.<sup>3</sup>

American filed an interlocutory appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1). The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit first held that the District Court had not abused its discretion in finding that California had proved a likelihood of success on the merits and the probability of irreparable harm. Nevertheless, on the authority of its earlier decision in International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. v. General Telephone & Electronics Corp., 518 F. 2d 913 (1975) [****13] (IT&T), [*278] it set aside the injunction. The Court of Appeals reasoned that its own prior decisions established both that "divestiture is not an available remedy in private actions under § 16 of the Clayton Act," and that "section 16 does not permit indirect divestiture, that is, an injunction which on its face does not order divestiture but which has the same effect. IT&T, 518 F. 2d at 924." 872 F. 2d, at 844. The Court of Appeals applied this rule to conclude that the injunction issued by the District Court was legally impermissible. Observing that under the injunction "these stores must operate as if Lucky had never been acquired by American Stores at all," the Court of Appeals held that "such an injunction requires indirect divestiture." Id., at 845. Finally, the Court of Appeals added that the District Court had "compounded its misapprehension of the law of divestiture" by misunderstanding "the legal status of the merger." Specifically, the District Court erred by concluding that the "FTC's consent order" undid "the legal effect of this merger" which "had already taken place" according to Delaware corporation law. Ibid.

[****14] On California's application, JUSTICE O'CONNOR entered a stay continuing the District Court's injunction pending further review by this Court. 492 U.S. 1301 (1989). We then granted certiorari to resolve the conflict between this decision and the earlier holding of the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit in CIA, Petrolera Caribe, Inc. v. Arco Caribbean, Inc., 754 F. 2d 404 (1985). We now reverse.

II

In its IT&T opinion, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reasoned that the term "injunctive relief" as used in § 16 is ambiguous and that it is necessary to review the statute's legislative history to determine whether it includes divestiture. Then, based on its reading of a colloquy during a hearing before a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, it concluded that the draftsmen of the bill did not intend to authorize the remedies of [*279] "dissolution" or "divestiture" in actions [**1858] brought by private litigants. 518 F. 2d, at 921-922. The Court of Appeals [***251] for the First Circuit has rejected that reasoning. It found instead that a fair reading of the statutory text, buttressed [****15] by recognized canons of construction,<sup>4</sup> required a construction of the words "injunctive relief" broad enough to encompass divestiture. Moreover, it doubted whether the references to "dissolution" in the legislative history referred to "divestiture," and did not consider this evidence sufficiently probative, in any event, to justify a restrictive reading of the Act that seemed inconsistent with its basic policy. 754 F. 2d, at 415-428.

---

<sup>3</sup>The District Court observed that because the Hold Separate Agreement was still in effect, "this is not a completed merger. [American] and Lucky, pursuant to the Hold Separate Agreement, are performing numerous functions as separate entities. They retain their separate names and with them their respective corporate identities." The court stated that only by completing a "linguistic triathlon" could one conclude that an injunction stopping such a merger was "tantamount to divestiture." 697 F. Supp., at 1134.

[****16] American endorses the analysis of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, but places greater reliance on two additional arguments. First, it argues that there is a significant difference between the text of § 15 of the Act, which authorizes equitable relief in actions brought by the United States, and the text of § 16, which applies to other parties. Specifically, it argues that the former is broad enough to encourage "structural relief" whereas the latter is limited to relief against anticompetitive "conduct." Second, reading § 16 in its historical context, American argues that it reflects a well-accepted distinction between prohibitory injunctions (which are authorized) and mandatory injunctions (which, American argues, are not).

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B] [LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [↑] [2A] American's argument directs us to two provisions in the statutory text, and that is the natural place to begin our analysis. Section 15 grants the federal district courts jurisdiction "to prevent and restrain violations of this Act" when [\[\*280\]](#) United States attorneys "institute proceedings [****17] in equity to prevent and restrain such violations" through petitions "praying that such violation shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited."<sup>5</sup> [\[\*\*\*\*18\]](#) Section 16 entitles "any person, firm, corporation, or association . . . to sue for and have injunctive relief . . . against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws . . . when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity."<sup>6</sup>

[***252] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [↑] [1C] [LEdHN\[3\]](#) [↑] [3] [LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [↑] [4A] [\[\*\*\*\*19\]](#) HN4 [↑] It is agreed that the general language of § 15, which provides that antitrust violations "shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited," is broad enough to authorize divestiture. Indeed, in Government actions divestiture is the preferred [\[\*281\]](#) remedy for an illegal merger [\[\*\*1859\]](#) or acquisition. As we wrote in the Du Pont case:

"Divestiture or dissolution has traditionally been the remedy for Sherman Act violations whose heart is intercorporate combination and control, and it is reasonable to think immediately of the same remedy when § 7 of

<sup>4</sup> The Court of Appeals observed: HN1 [↑]

"Although we have no way of definitively determining the congressional intent in passing § 16, there remains at least one secure guidepost: when Congress uses broad generalized language in a remedial statute, and that language is not contravened by authoritative legislative history, a court should interpret the provision generously so as to effectuate the important congressional goals." CIA. Petrolera Caribe, Inc. v. Arco Caribbean, Inc., 754 F. 2d 404, 428 \(1985\).

<sup>5</sup> HN2 [↑] The section provides in pertinent part:

"The several district courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this Act, and it shall be the duty of the several United States attorneys, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violation shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition, the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition, and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises. . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 25.

<sup>6</sup> HN3 [↑] The section provides in pertinent part:

"Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, including sections 13, 14, 18, and 19 of this title, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings, and upon the execution of proper bond against damages for an injunction improvidently granted and a showing that the danger of irreparable loss of damage is immediate, a preliminary injunction may issue . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 26.

the Clayton Act, which particularizes the Sherman Act standard of illegality, is involved. Of the very few litigated § 7 cases which have been reported, most decreed divestiture as a matter of course. Divestiture has been called the most important of antitrust remedies. It is simple, relatively easy to administer, and sure. It should always be in the forefront of a court's mind when a violation of § 7 has been found." United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 366 U.S. 316, 329-331 \(1961\) (footnotes omitted).

[LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [↑] [1D] [LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [↑] [5A] [****20] On its face, the simple grant of authority in § 16 to "have injunctive relief" would seem to encompass divestiture just as plainly as the comparable language in § 15. Certainly § 16's reference to "injunctive relief . . . against threatened loss or damage" differs from § 15's grant of jurisdiction to "prevent and restrain violations," but it obviously does no follow that one grant encompasses remedies excluded from the other.<sup>7</sup> Indeed, we think it could plausibly be argued that § 16's terms are the more expansive. HNS [↑] In any event, however, as the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit correctly observed, § 16 "states no restrictions or exceptions to the forms of injunctive relief a private plaintiff may seek, or that a court may order. . . . Rather, the statutory language indicates Congress' intention that traditional principles of equity govern the grant of injunctive relief." 754 F. 2d, at 1\*282 416. We agree that the plain text of § 16 authorizes divestiture decrees to remedy § 7 violations.

[****21] American rests its contrary argument upon two phrases in § 16 that arguably narrow its scope. The entitlement "to sue for and have injunctive relief" affords relief "against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws." Moreover, the right to such relief exists "when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity. . . ."

[LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [↑] [1E] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [↑] [5B] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [↑] [6] In this case, however, the requirement of "threatened loss or damage" is unquestionably satisfied. The allegations of the complaint, [***253] the findings of the District Court, and the opinion of the Court of Appeals all assume that even if the merger is a completed violation of law, the threatened harm to California consumers persists. If divestiture is an appropriate means of preventing that harm, the statutory reference to "threatened loss or damage" surely does not negate the court's power to grant [****22] such relief.<sup>8</sup>

[LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [↑] [1F] [LEdHN\[5D\]](#) [↑] [5D] The second phrase, which refers to "threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage," is not drafted as a limitation on the power to grant relief, but rather is a part of the general reference to the standards that should be applied in fashioning injunctive relief. It is surely not the equivalent of a directive stating that unlawful conduct may be prohibited but structural [****23] relief may not be mandated. Indeed, as the Ninth Circuit's analysis of the issue demonstrates, the distinction between conduct and structure -- or between prohibitory and mandatory relief -- \*\*1860 is illusory in a case of this kind. Thus, in the IT&T case the court recognized that an injunction prohibiting [\[\*283\]](#) the parent company from voting the stock of the subsidiary should not be treated differently from a mandatory order of divestiture.<sup>9</sup> [\[\*\*\*\*24\]](#) And in this case the court treated

<sup>7</sup> That the two provisions do differ is not surprising at all, since § 15 was largely copied from § 4 of the Sherman Act, see 26 Stat. 209, ch. 647, 15 U.S.C. § 4, while § 16, which had to incorporate standing limits appropriate to private actions -- see Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104 \(1986\) -- had no counterpart in the Sherman Act.

<sup>8</sup> [LEdHN\[5C\]](#) [↑] [5C]

Indeed, the evident import of Congress' reference to "threatened loss or damage" is not to constrict the availability of injunctive remedies against violations that have already begun or occurred, but rather to expand their availability against harms that are as yet unrealized. See Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 130, and n. 24 \(1969\).

<sup>9</sup> The District Court in the IT&T case had observed that "[i]f it were necessary to strain terminology in order to accomplish the same result, a court could easily phrase a "negative injunction" in such terms as to enjoin the activities of a corporation to such a degree that divestiture would be the only economical choice available to that corporation." 518 F. 2d, at 924. The Court of Appeals admitted the force of this observation, agreeing with the District Court that the Standard Oil dissolution decree, Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 78 \(1911\), served as an example of an "indirect" divestiture decree[e]." 518 F. 2d, at 924.

the Hold Separate Agreement as a form of "indirect divestiture." In both cases the injunctive relief would unquestionably prohibit "conduct" by the defendants. American's textual arguments -- which rely on a distinction between mandatory and prohibitive relief -- do not explain why such remedies would not be appropriate.<sup>10</sup>

If we assume that the merger violated the antitrust laws, and if we agree with the District Court's finding that the conduct of the merged enterprise threatens economic harm to California consumers, the literal text of § 16 is plainly sufficient to authorize injunctive relief, including an order of divestiture, that will prohibit that conduct from causing that harm. HN6[<sup>11</sup>] This interpretation is consistent with our precedents, which have upheld injunctions issued pursuant to § 16 regardless of whether they were mandatory or prohibitory in character. See Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 129-133 (1969) (reinstating injunction that required defendants to withdraw from patent pools); see also Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 345, 365 (1963) [****25] (reinstating judgment for defendants in suit to compel [*284] installation of wire services). We have recognized when construing § 16 that it was enacted "not merely to provide private relief, but . . . to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws." Zenith Radio Corp., 395 U.S., at 130-131. We have accordingly applied the section "with this purpose in mind, and with the knowledge that the remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice 'adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims.'" Ibid., quoting Hecht Co. v. Bowles, 321 U.S. 321, 329-330 (1944).

[LEdHN\[1G\]](#)[<sup>12</sup>] [1G] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#)[<sup>13</sup>] [4B] Finally, by construing § 16 to encompass divestiture decrees we are better able than is American to harmonize the section with its statutory context. HN7[<sup>14</sup>] The Act's other provisions manifest a clear intent to encourage vigorous private [****26] litigation against anticompetitive mergers. Section 7 itself creates a relatively expansive definition of antitrust liability: To show that a merger is unlawful, a plaintiff need only prove that its effect "may be substantially to lessen competition." Clayton Act § 7, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U.S.C. § 18 (emphasis supplied). See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 323 (1962). In addition, § 5 of the Act provided that during the pendency of a Government action, the statute of limitations for private actions would be tolled. The section also permitted plaintiffs to use the final judgment in a Government antitrust suit as prima facie evidence of liability in a later civil suit. Private enforcement of the Act was in no sense an afterthought; it was an integral part of the congressional plan for protecting competition. See Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co., 381 U.S. 311, 318 (1965). Congress also made express its view that divestiture was the most suitable remedy in a suit for relief from a § 7 violation: In § 11 of the Act, Congress directed the FTC to issue orders requiring that a violator [****27] of § 7 "cease and desist from the violation," and, specifically, that the violator [*285] "divest itself of the stock held" in violation of the Act.<sup>11</sup> Section 16, [****255] construed to authorize a private divestiture remedy when appropriate in light of equitable principles, fits well in a statutory scheme that favors private enforcement, subjects mergers to searching scrutiny, and regards divestiture as the remedy best suited to redress the ills of an anticompetitive merger.

[****28] III

---

<sup>10</sup> Notably, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit did not rely on either of the textual arguments that American has advanced here. Had it done so, it would have been forced to acknowledge a distinction between direct divestiture and indirect divestiture.

<sup>11</sup> In the context of construing the FTC's authority to issue such "cease and desist" orders, this Court -- speaking through Justice McReynolds, who had served as President Wilson's chief antitrust enforcement officer at the time the Clayton Act was framed -- had no difficulty finding that the continuing ownership of stock unlawfully acquired was itself a continuing violation of the Act:

"The order here questioned was entered when respondent actually held and owned the stock contrary to law. The Commission's duty was to prevent the continuance of this unlawful action by an order directing that it cease and desist therefrom and divest itself of what it had no right to hold. Further violations of the Act through continued ownership could be effectively prevented only by requiring the owner wholly to divest itself of the stock and thus render possible once more free play of the competition which had been wrongfully suppressed." FTC v. Western Meat Co., 272 U.S. 554, 559 (1926) (McReynolds, J.).

The suggestion that continuing ownership of stock unlawfully acquired might constitute a "further violatio[n] of the Act" would cast some doubt upon the utility of American's distinction between mandatory and prohibitory injunctions even were we inclined to accept the relevance of that distinction. As we reject the distinction, we have, however, no cause to pursue this line of inquiry further.

[LEdHN\[1H\]](#) [1H] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] Although we do not believe the statutory language is ambiguous, we nonetheless consider the legislative history that persuaded the Ninth Circuit to place a narrow construction on § 16. To understand that history, however, it is necessary to place the statute in its historical perspective.

The Sherman Act became law just a century ago. It matured some 15 years later, when, under the administration of Theodore Roosevelt, the Sherman Act "was finally being used against trusts of the dimension that had called it into [*286] being, and with enough energy to justify the boast that the President was using a Big Stick." W. Letwin, Law and Economic Policy in America 240 (1965). Two of the most famous prosecutions concluded in 1911, with decisions from this Court endorsing the "Rule of Reason" as the principal guide to the construction of the Sherman Act's general language. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U.S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106. In consequence [****29] of the violations found in those two cases, wide-ranging injunctions were entered requiring the separation of the "oil trust" and the "tobacco trust" into a number of independent, but still significant, companies. The relief granted received mixed reviews. In some quarters, the cases were hailed as great triumphs over the forces of monopoly; in others, they were regarded as Pyrrhic victories.

12

[****30] [**1862] Concern about the adequacy of the Sherman Act's prohibition against combinations in restraint of trade prompted President Wilson to make a special address to Congress in 1914 recommending that the antitrust laws be strengthened. 2 The New Democracy, The Public Papers of Woodrow Wilson 81-89 (R. Baker & W. Dodd eds. 1926). Congressman Clayton, the Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, promptly appointed a subcommittee to prepare the legislation. The bill drafted by the subcommittee contained most of the provisions that were eventually enacted into the law now known as the Clayton Act. The statute reenacted certain provisions of the Sherman Act and added new provisions of both a substantive and procedural character. Letwin, [*287] Law and Economic Policy in America, at 272-273; 2 A. Link, Wilson: The New Freedom 426 (1956). Thus, § 4 of the Sherman Act, which authorizes equitable [**256] relief in actions brought by the United States, was reenacted as § 15 of the Clayton Act, while § 16 filled a gap in the Sherman Act by authorizing equitable relief in private actions. Section 7 of the Clayton Act made stock acquisitions of competing companies more [****31] vulnerable, and §§ 4 and 5 gave special procedural advantages to private litigants. The reform project had broad social significance, and it is obvious that the Act as a whole is fairly characterized as important remedial legislation.

Some proponents of reform, however, were critical of the bill for not going further. Thus, for example, proposals that were never enacted would have expressly authorized private individuals to bring suit for the dissolution of corporations adjudged to have violated the law and for appointment of receivers to wind up the corporation's affairs.<sup>12</sup> Samuel Untermyer, a New York lawyer who urged Congress to give private plaintiffs express authority to seek dissolution decrees, stated his views in a colloquy with Congressman John Floyd during a hearing on the bill before a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee. Floyd told Untermyer that "We did not intend by section 13 to give the individual the same power to bring a suit to dissolve the corporation that the Government has," and added that the committee Members [*288] had discussed the matter very thoroughly. Untermyer replied that "the very <sup>12</sup> The Taft Administration received the decisions warmly, but they provoked bitter criticism from the Democratic Party leadership. Antitrust policy was sharply debated during the 1912 Presidential campaign. See W. Letwin, Law and Economic Policy in America 266, 269 (1965). Upon becoming Woodrow Wilson's first Attorney General shortly thereafter, James McReynolds promised to deliver dissolutions "free from the fundamental defect in the plans adopted in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases where the separate parts into which the business was divided were left under the control of the same stockholders." Annual Report of Attorney General, H.R. Doc. No. 460, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 7 (1913).

<sup>13</sup> An amendment passed by the Senate, but rejected by the House, provided:

"That whenever a corporation shall acquire or consolidate the ownership or control of the plants, franchises, or property of other corporations, co-partnerships, or individuals, so that it shall be adjudged to be a monopoly or combination in restraint of trade, the court rendering such judgment shall decree its dissolution and shall to that end appoint receivers to wind up its affairs and shall cause all of its assets to be sold in such manner and to such persons as will, in the opinion of the court, restore competition as fully and completely as it was before said corporation or combination began to be formed. The court shall reserve in its decree jurisdiction over said assets so sold for a sufficient time to satisfy the court that full and free competition is restored and assured." 51 Cong. Rec. 15863 (1914).

relief that the man needs nine times out of ten [****32] is the dissolution of the corporation, because . . . it may not be doing any specific act of illegality, but its very existence, in violation of law, is the thing that is injuring him." Hearings on Trust Legislation before the House Committee on the Judiciary, 63d Cong., 2d Sess. 842-846 (1914) (House Hearings).

[****33] Two weeks later, Louis Brandeis, testifying on behalf of the administration before the same committee, was asked whether he favored a proposal "to give the individual the right to file a bill in equity for the dissolution of one of these combinations, the same right which the Government now has and which it is its duty to perform." Brandeis responded that the proposal was not sound and added:

"It seems to me that the right to change the status [of the combination], which is the right of dissolution, is a right which ought to be exercised only by the Government, although the right for full redress for grievances and protection against future [**1863] wrongs is a right which every individual ought to enjoy.

"Now, all of this procedure ought to be made so as to facilitate, [***257] so far as possible, the enforcement of the law in aid, on the one hand, of the Government, and in aid, on the other hand, of the individual. But that fundamental principle is correct, that the Government ought to have the right, and the sole right, to determine whether the circumstances are such as to call for a dissolution of an alleged trust." Id., at 649-650.

LEdHN[1] [↑] [1] [****34] American relies on these exchanges to support two slightly different arguments. First, it suggests that the committee recognized a distinction between relief directed at conduct and relief that is designed to change a company's status or structure. Second, it suggests that Congressman Floyd's statements permit an inference that the Congress as a whole rejected the possibility of a private dissolution remedy, and [*289] thereby rejected divestiture as well, because divestiture is a species of dissolution. Neither suggestion is persuasive.

HN8 [↑] We have already concluded that the suggested distinction between divestiture and injunctions that prohibit future conduct is illusory. These excerpts, moreover, from the legislative history provide even less support for such a categorical distinction than does the text of § 16 itself.

The flaw in American's second suggestion is its assumption that the dissolution proposals submitted to Congress contemplated nothing more extreme than divestiture. Dissolution could be considerably more awesome. As the New York Court of Appeals ominously declared [****35] before affirming a decree against the North River Sugar Refining Company, dissolution was a "judgment . . . of corporate death," which "represent[ed] the extreme rigor of the law."<sup>14</sup> [****36] This meaning is evident from the text of the Senate amendment proposing private dissolution suits, which provided for a receiver to administer the doomed corporation's assets.<sup>15</sup>

<sup>14</sup> People v. North River Sugar Refining Co., 121 N.Y. 582, 608, 24 N.E. 834 (1890). The New York attorney general had sought dissolution of the company for its participation in the sugar trust, relying upon two theories: that dissolution was appropriate because the company had violated the terms of its charter by entering the trust, and that dissolution was appropriate under the state antitrust laws. The Court of Appeals agreed that dissolution was appropriate on the first ground, and so declined to reach the second. Id., at 626, 24 N.E., at 841.

Judge Finch, writing for a unanimous court, began the opinion by announcing, "The judgment sought against the defendant is one of corporate death." Id., at 608, 24 N.E., at 834. He then said that although the "life of a corporation is indeed less than that of the humblest citizen," "destruction of the corporate life" may not be effected "without clear and abundant reason." Ibid. The ensuing opinion bristles with the rhetoric of moral condemnation; when characterizing the corporation's defense, for example, Judge Finch commented that the court had been asked "to separate in our thought the soul from the body, and admitting the sins of the latter to adjudge that the former remains pure." Id., at 626, 24 N.E., at 837.

<sup>15</sup> See n. 13, supra. Senator Reed, the sponsor of the Senate amendment which would have expressly authorized dissolution proceedings, stated that the statute's dissolution remedy should guarantee that "we shall have a real decree, that there shall be a real burial, and that we shall sod down the grave upon the monster that was created in defiance of law, but that we shall at the same time preserve its parts and restore them to competition and activity . . ." 51 Cong. Rec. 15864 (1914).

[*290] [LEdHN\[1J\]](#) [1J] [LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]The concept of dissolution, of course, also encompassed remedies comparable to divestiture, or to our present-day understanding of [***258] dissolution.<sup>16</sup> [***39] It was one thing to [**1864] dissolve a [*291] pool, trust, combination, or merger, and quite another to atomize, or to revoke the charter of, a large corporation.<sup>17</sup> In the early part of this century, however, new forms of corporate organization were arising at a pace that [***37] outstripped the vocabulary used to describe them.<sup>18</sup> Concern about monopoly and competition dominated domestic politics, but people disagreed about [***259] what these things were, and about why, and to what extent, they were good or bad.<sup>19</sup> [***40] Men like McReynolds, Wilson's Attorney General, and Brandeis, the President's chief adviser on antitrust policy, could concur upon the need for forceful antitrust legislation and prosecution while finding themselves parted -- as their later battles on this Court made clear -- by a vast gulf in their understandings of economic theory and marketplace ethics.<sup>20</sup> Absent [*292] agreement

---

<sup>16</sup> There is a common core to present-day and early 20th-century understandings of the distinction between dissolution and divestiture:

"As applied in both early and more recent antitrust cases, 'dissolution' refers to an antitrust judgment which dissolves or terminates an illegal combination or association -- putting it out of business, so to speak. 'Divestiture' is used to refer to situations where the defendants are required to divest or dispossess themselves of specified property in physical facilities, securities, or other assets." Oppenheim, Divestiture as a Remedy Under the Federal Antitrust Laws, 19 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 119, 120 (1950).

Nevertheless, for at least the past four decades dissolution and divestiture have been treated as interchangeable terms in antitrust law. See United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 366 U.S. 316, 330, n. 11 (1961) (terms are to a "large degree interchangeable"); see also Oppenheim, 19 Geo. Wash. L. Rev., at 121 (recognizing technical distinction between terms, but treating them as interchangeable nonetheless).

During the first decades of this century, however, "dissolution" was the favored term for a remedy that put an end to an unlawful combination and "divestiture" was rarely mentioned in the antitrust context. The early 20th-century treatise writers seem to have spoken exclusively in terms of dissolution. See, e.g., W. Thornton, A Treatise on the Sherman Anti-Trust Act § 372 (1913). Not surprisingly, all of the legislative history cited by the parties to this case refers to dissolution, not to divestiture.

Yet even without using the term "divestiture," Congress could and did recognize the appropriateness of a divestiture remedy in merger cases: § 11 of the Clayton Act expressly authorizes the FTC to order a defendant corporation to "divest itself of the stock held . . . contrary to the provisions of sectio[n] seven . . . of this Act." 38 Stat. 735. Indeed, the term "divestiture" appears to have entered the antitrust vocabulary as a consequence of FTC proceedings against alleged violators of § 7 of the Act. See, e.g., Arrow-Hart & Hegeman Electric Co. v. FTC, 291 U.S. 587 (1934); FTC v. Western Meat Co., 272 U.S. 554 (1926). Use of the term in those cases is unsurprising, for the text of the Act suggested that "divestiture," rather than "dissolution," was the remedy being sought.

By 1944, Justice Douglas was using the two terms in close proximity, see United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 188-189 (1944) (Sherman Act case), although it is at least arguable that his usage preserved the technical distinction that was to be generally elided less than a decade later. Cf. Swift & Co. v. United States, 276 U.S. 311, 319 (1928) (referring to "divestiture of the instrumentalities" in a case raising both Sherman Act and Clayton Act claims). It would appear that, as the moral conception of dissolution lost favor and divestiture decrees became paradigmatic of dissolution remedies, the two concepts were collapsed into one another.

<sup>17</sup> For discussion of the scope of various dissolution decrees entered pursuant to the federal antitrust laws, see Hale, Trust Dissolution: "Atomizing" Business Units of Monopolistic Size, 40 Colum. L. Rev. 615 (1940); Adams, Dissolution, Divorcement, Divestiture: The Pyrrhic Victories of Antitrust, 27 Ind. L.J. 1 (1951). See also 2 A. Link, Wilson: The New Freedom 417-423 (1956).

<sup>18</sup> See, e.g., H. Thorelli, The Federal Antitrust Policy 72-87 (1954). Thorelli observes that "[n]o general incorporation law before 1888 explicitly sanctioned intercorporate stockholdings; some state laws even explicitly forbade them in the absence of special permission by the legislature. Common law rules did not recognize such relationships between corporations." Id., at 83. Perhaps because of the rapid pace of developments in corporate law, the politically charged "trust" concept came to embrace any large corporate combination as well as one specific device for creating such combinations. Id., at 84-85. See also D. Martin, Mergers and the Clayton Act 15, 43 (1959).

<sup>19</sup> See, e.g., Thorelli, The Federal Antitrust Policy 108-163, 309-352.

on the terms of debate, dissolution could mean the corporate death sentence, or the decrees of the Standard Oil and American Tobacco cases, or something else.<sup>21</sup> So long as this ambiguity persisted, dissolution had to be considered a public remedy, one that encompassed a power peculiarly suited to transgressions so "material and serious" as to "harm or menace the public welfare" in a manner transcending the "[**1865] quarrels of private litigants."<sup>22</sup> For those like Brandeis, who viewed dissolution as desirable only if treated not as a moral penalty [****38] but rather as a necessary economic remedy,<sup>23</sup> it would be imprudent to allow private parties to control a weapon potentially so lethal. Although it may now be second nature to conceive of dissolution in economic terms compatible with the policy Brandeis championed,<sup>24</sup> this view was anything but uncontroversial when the Act was drafted.<sup>25</sup>

[****41] Once the historical importance of the distinction between dissolution and divestiture is understood, American's argument from the legislative history becomes singularly unpersuasive. The rejection of a proposed remedy that would terminate the corporate existence of American and appoint a [*293] receiver to supervise the disposition of its assets is surely not the equivalent of the rejection of a remedy that would merely rescind a purchase of stock or assets. Dissolution was too vague and ill defined a remedy to be either incorporated into or excluded from § 16 as such; Congress instead sensibly avoided the problematic word and spoke in terms of equitable relief drawn to redress damage or loss which a private party might suffer by consequence of the Act's violation.<sup>26</sup> That [***260] divestiture was encompassed within the concept of dissolution as understood at the time of the Clayton Act's framing does not imply that the equitable formulation of § 16 cannot permit divestiture while excluding more severe sanctions that also traveled under the name "dissolution."

[****42] For similar reasons, we need not consider how much weight might otherwise be due to Graves v. Cambria Steel Co., 298 F. 761 (NY 1924), a brief District Court decision by Judge Learned Hand upon which American relies heavily.<sup>27</sup> The suit appears to have been brought by dissatisfied shareholders of a target corporation who wished

<sup>20</sup> See 2 Link, Wilson: The New Freedom 117, n. 83.

<sup>21</sup> See CIA. Petrolera Caribe, Inc., 754 F. 2d, at 419-422.

<sup>22</sup> North River Sugar Refining Co., 121 N.Y., at 609, 24 N.E., at 835.

<sup>23</sup> "[Brandeis] believed that anti-trust policy should be constructive rather than destructive: ' . . . we should approach this subject from the point of view of regulation rather than of restriction; because industrial crime is not a cause, it is an effect -- the effect of a bad system.'" A. Mason, Brandeis: A Free Man's Life 402 (1956) (footnote omitted).

<sup>24</sup> Cf. United States v. Du Pont & Co., 366 U.S., at 326 ("divestiture" is the "most drastic, but most effective, of antitrust remedies," yet it should be imposed only to "restore competition" and must not be "punitive"). See also Comment, The Personification of the Business Corporation in American Law, 54 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1441, 1478-1483 (1987) (discussing decline of moral conceptions of the corporation).

<sup>25</sup> The notion that a proper remedy for violating the antitrust laws is complete dissolution of the wrongdoer persists in some state antitrust statutes that allow termination of a foreign corporation's right to do business within the State when the corporation is found guilty of violating the law. See e.g., Wis. Stat. § 133.12 (1987-1988).

<sup>26</sup> Congress could, of course, have referred expressly to the divestiture remedy, as was done in § 11 of the Act, directing that the FTC shall require a violator of § 7 to "divest itself of the stock" unlawfully acquired. There was, however, no reason for Congress to itemize the various remedies which might be available in a § 16 suit. Moreover, while divestiture might be the appropriate remedy in every § 7 case prosecuted by the FTC, there is no reason to believe that the same would be true in private § 7 cases. There is thus nothing remarkable about the absence of any specific reference to divestiture in § 16.

<sup>27</sup> American also seeks to buttress its position by citations to Fleitmann v. Welsbach Co., 240 U.S. 27 (1916); Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443 (1921); General Investment Co. v. Lake Shore & M.S.R. Co., 260 U.S. 261, 287 (1922); Continental Securities Co. v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 16 F. 2d 378 (CA6 1926), cert. denied, 274 U.S. 741 (1927); and Venner v. Pennsylvania Steel Co. of New Jersey, 250 F. 292 (NJ 1918). Several of these cases seem to us to involve issues entirely to dissolve the new merged entity. The plaintiffs sought relief [*294] under § 16 of the Clayton [**1866] Act. Judge Hand remarked that the suit "is really a suit for the dissolution of a monopoly pro tanto. I cannot suppose that any one would argue that a private suit for dissolution would lie under section 16 of the Clayton Act." 298 F. at 762. Not only does Hand, like Floyd, Untermeyer, and Brandeis before him, refer to dissolution rather than divestiture, but, moreover, the state corporation law overtones of the inchoate complaint make it possible that the suit implicated the more drastic forms of dissolution.

[****43] [LEdHN\[1K\]](#) [↑] [1K] [LEdHN\[5E\]](#) [↑] [5E] [LEdHN\[8\]](#) [↑] [8]The inferences that American draws from its excerpts from the subcommittee hearings simply are not confirmed by anything that has been called to our attention in the Committee Reports, the floor debates, the Conference Report, or contemporaneous judicial interpretations.<sup>28</sup> Indeed, a fair reading [***261] of the entire legislative history supports the conclusion that § 16 means exactly what it says when it endorses the "conditions and principles" governing injunctive relief in courts of equity: that the provision should be construed generously and flexibly pursuant to principles of equity. See [*295] CIA. Petrolera Caribe, Inc., 754 F. 2d, at 418-427. As the Court stated in Hecht Co. v. Bowles, 321 U.S., at 329:

HN9 [↑] "The essence of equity jurisdiction has been the power of the Chancellor to do equity and to mould each [****44] decree to the necessities of the particular case. Flexibility rather than rigidity has distinguished it."

HN10 [↑] More recently, in Weinberger v. Romero-Barcelo, 456 U.S. 305, 313 \(1982\), we observed that when Congress endows the federal courts with equitable jurisdiction, Congress acts aware of this longstanding tradition of flexibility. "Unless a statute in so many words, or by a necessary and inescapable inference, restricts the court's jurisdiction in equity, the full scope of that jurisdiction is to be recognized and applied." Ibid., quoting Porter v. Warner Holding Co., 328 U.S. 395, 398 \(1946\). These principles unquestionably support a construction of the statute that will enable a chancellor to impose the most effective, usual and straightforward remedy to rescind an unlawful purchase of stock or assets. The fact that the term "divestiture" is used to describe what is typically nothing more than the familiar remedy of rescission does not place the remedy beyond the normal reach of the chancellor.

[****45] IV

[LEdHN\[1L\]](#) [↑] [1L] [LEdHN\[9\]](#) [↑] [9] [LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [↑] [10A]Our conclusion that a district court has the power to order divestiture in appropriate cases brought under § 16 of the Clayton Act does not, of course, mean that such power should be exercised in every situation in which the Government would be entitled to such relief under § 15. HN11 [↑] In a Government case the proof of the violation of law may itself establish sufficient public injury to warrant relief. See Du Pont, 366 U.S., at 319-321; see also Virginian R. Co. v. Railway Employees, 300 U.S. 515, distinct from those posed here, and, in any event, in none of these precedents do we find anything that casts any doubt upon the rule we announce today.

---

<sup>28</sup> Professors Areeda and Turner have criticized the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit on the ground that it did not correctly evaluate the legislative history of § 16 in IT&T. Areeda and Turner state that the "fragment of legislative history" relied upon by the Court of Appeals "cannot bear the weight the court placed upon it, when the reports of the relevant House and Senate committees were silent on the point, which also did not appear to have been mentioned on the House or Senate floor." They point out that "other courts have indicated, correctly, that divestiture is available in a private suit challenging unlawful mergers," and conclude that "divestiture is the normal and usual remedy against an unlawful merger, whether sued by the government or by a private plaintiff." 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law § 328b (1978) (footnotes omitted). Other commentators have likewise reasoned that § 16 affords private plaintiffs a divestiture remedy. See, e.g., Peacock, Private Divestiture Suits Under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 48 Tex. L. Rev. 54 (1969); Note, Availability of Divestiture in Private Litigation as a Remedy for violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 49 Minn. L. Rev. 267 (1964); Note, Divestiture as a Remedy in Private Actions Brought Under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 84 Mich. L. Rev. 1579 \(1986\).

552 [**1867] (1937) ("Courts of equity may and frequently do, go much farther both to give and withhold relief in furtherance of the public interest than they are accustomed to go when only private interests are involved"); United States v. San Francisco, 310 U.S. 16, 30-31 (1940) [*296] (authorizing issuance [***46] of injunction at Government's request without balancing of the equities). A private litigant, however, must have standing -- in the words of § 16, he must prove "threatened loss or damage" to his own interests in order to obtain relief. See Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104 (1986). Moreover, equitable defenses such as laches, or perhaps "unclean hands," may protect consummated transactions from belated attacks by private parties when it would not be too late for the Government to vindicate the public interest.

LEdHN[1M] [↑] [1M] LEdHN[10B] [↑] [10B] Such questions, however, are not presented in this case. We are merely confronted [***262] with the naked question whether the District Court had the power to divest American of any part of its ownership interests in the acquired Lucky Stores, either by forbidding the exercise of the owner's normal right to integrate the operations of the two previously separate companies, or by requiring it to sell certain assets located in California. We hold that such a remedy is a form [***47] of "injunctive relief" within the meaning of § 16 of the Clayton Act. Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: KENNEDY

Concur

---

JUSTICE KENNEDY, concurring.

In agreement with our holding that § 16 of the Clayton Act does authorize divestiture as a remedy for violations of § 7 of the Clayton Act, I join the Court's opinion. I write further to note that both the respondents and various interested labor unions, the latter as amici curiae, have argued for a different result on the basis of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 (Clayton Act § 7A, as added and amended), 15 U.S.C. § 18a. See Brief for Respondents 47-48; Brief for United Food and Commercial International Union et al. as Amici Curiae 7-15. Although I do not believe that § 7A is controlling as an interpretation of the earlier [*297] enacted § 16, it may be of vital relevance in determining whether to order divestiture in a particular case.

Section 7A enables the Federal Government to review certain transactions that might violate § 7 before [***48] they occur. The provision, in brief, requires those contemplating an acquisition within its coverage to provide the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) with the information necessary for determining "whether such acquisition may, if consummated, violate the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 18a(d)(1). During the mandatory waiting period that follows the submission of this information, see § 18a(b)(1), the agency may decide, as it did in this case, to negotiate a settlement intended to eliminate potential violations. See 16 CFR §§ 2.31-2.34 (1989). The procedure may resolve antitrust disputes in a manner making it easier for businesses and unions to predict the consequences of mergers and to conform their economic strategies in accordance with the probable outcome.

The respondents, and the unions in their brief as amici, argue that a State or private person should not have the power to sue for divestiture under § 16 following a settlement approved by the FTC. They maintain that the possibility of such actions will reduce the Federal Government's negotiating strength and destroy the predictability that Congress sought to provide when it enacted § 7A. It is plausible, [***49] in my view, that allowing suits under § 16 may have these effects in certain instances. But the respondents and unions have identified nothing in § 7A that contradicts the Court's interpretation of § 7 and § 16. Section 7A, indeed, may itself contain [**1868] language contrary to their position. See, e.g., 15 U.S.C. § 18a(i)(1). Although Congress might [***263] desire at some point to enact a strict rule prohibiting divestiture after a negotiated settlement with the FTC, it has not done so yet.

The Court's opinion, however, does not render compliance with the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act irrelevant to divestiture actions under § 16. The Act, for instance, may bear upon the issue of laches. By establishing a [*298] time period for review of merger proposals by the FTC, § 7A may lend a degree of objectivity to the laches determination. Here the State received the respondents' § 7A filings in mid-April 1988, see Brief for Petitioner 3, and so had formal notice of the parties' intentions well before completion of the merger or the settlement with the FTC. It elected not to act at that time, but now seeks a divestiture [****50] which, the facts suggest, would upset labor agreements and other matters influenced in important ways by the FTC proceeding. These considerations should bear upon the ultimate disposition of the case. As the Ninth Circuit stated:

"California could have sued several months earlier and attempted to enjoin the merger before the stock sale was completed. The Attorney General chose not to do so. California must accept the consequences of his choice." 872 F. 2d 837, 846 \(1989\).

With the understanding that these consequences may include the bar of laches, I join the Court's decision.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 370, 378, 385, 387

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:381, 54:383, 54:384, 54:399-54:409

12B Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:269, 48:270, 48:303, 48:311

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, [****51] Form 17

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 26

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 78

Index to Annotations, Dissolution or Liquidation; Divestiture; Injunctions ;Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References:

Propriety and scope of injunctive relief in federal antitrust case. 55 L Ed 2d 892.

Construction, by Supreme Court of the United States, of 7 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), dealing with acquisition by one corporation of stock of another. 14 L Ed 2d 784.

Standing of private party under 16 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 26) to seek injunction to prevent merger or acquisition allegedly prohibited under 7 of the Act (15 USCS 18). 78 ALR Fed 159.

Divestiture as available relief under 16 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 26) in action by private parties. 77 ALR Fed 509.

Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

December 5, 1989, Argued ; May 14, 1990, Decided

No. 88-1668

Reporter

495 U.S. 328 *; 110 S. Ct. 1884 **; 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 ***; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 2543 ****; 58 U.S.L.W. 4547; 1990-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,019

ATLANTIC RICHFIELD CO. v. USA PETROLEUM CO.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 859 F. 2d 687, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

antitrust, prices, competitor, vertical, dealers, conspiracy, predatory, anti trust law, Sherman Act, price-fixing, consumers, retail, gasoline, price competition, maximum price, Clayton Act, maximum-price-fixing, anticompetitive, nonpredatory, distributor, stations, effects, losses, price fixing, sales, per se rule, practices, damages, per se violation, conspirators

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

HN1[ Remedies, Damages

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, is a remedial provision that makes available treble damages to any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN2 [] Remedies, Damages

A private plaintiff may not recover antitrust damages under 15 U.S.C.S. § 15 merely by showing injury causally linked to an illegal presence in a market. Instead, a plaintiff must prove the existence of antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type antitrust laws are intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes a defendant's acts unlawful. Injury, although causally related to an antitrust violation, nevertheless will not qualify as "antitrust injury" unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of a practice under scrutiny, since it is inimical to antitrust laws to award damages' for losses stemming from continued competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN3 [] Vertical Restraints, Nonprice Restraints

A maximum-price vertical agreement is per se illegal and operates by substituting the perhaps erroneous judgment of a seller for the forces of the competitive market and may severely intrude upon the ability of buyers to compete and survive in a market. Maximum prices may be fixed too low for a dealer to furnish services essential to the value which goods have for a consumer or to furnish services and conveniences which consumers desire and for which they are willing to pay. By limiting the ability of small dealers to engage in nonprice competition, a maximum-price-fixing agreement might channel distribution through a few large or specifically advantaged dealers. If the actual price charged under a maximum price scheme is nearly always the fixed maximum price, which is increasingly likely as the maximum price approaches the actual cost of a dealer, a scheme tends to acquire all the attributes of an arrangement fixing minimum prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN4 [] Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

A vertical, maximum price-fixing agreement is per se unlawful because of its potential effects on dealers and consumers, not because of its effect on competitors. If a vertical agreement fixes maximum prices too low for a dealer to furnish services desired by consumers, or in such a way as to channel business to large distributors, then a firm dealing in a competing brand would not be harmed. A competitor may not complain of conspiracies that set minimum prices at any level.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

When a firm, or even a group of firms adhering to a vertical agreement, lowers prices but maintains them above predatory levels, business lost by rivals cannot be viewed as an "anticompetitive" consequence of a claimed violation. A firm complaining about the harm it suffers from nonpredatory price competition is really claiming that it is unable to raise prices. This is not antitrust injury; indeed, cutting prices in order to increase business often is the very essence of competition. The antitrust laws are enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors. To hold that the antitrust laws protect competitors from the loss of profits due to nonpredatory price competition would, in effect, render illegal any decision by a firm to cut prices in order to increase market share.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN6 Sherman Act, Claims

Price fixing violates § 1 of the Sherman Act (Act) even if a single firm's decision to price at the same level would not create § 2 of the Act liability. In a § 1 case, a price agreement itself is illegal. Although a vertical, maximum-price-fixing agreement is unlawful under § 1, it does not cause a competitor antitrust injury unless it results in predatory pricing. Antitrust injury does not arise for purposes of 15 U.S.C.S. § 15 until a private party is adversely affected by an anticompetitive aspect of a defendant's conduct. In the context of pricing practices, only predatory pricing has the requisite anticompetitive effect. Low prices benefit consumers regardless of how those prices are set, and so long as they are above predatory levels, they do not threaten competition. Hence, they cannot give rise to antitrust injury.

495 U.S. 328, *328; 110 S. Ct. 1884, **1884; 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, ***333; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 2543, ****1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN7 [PDF] Clayton Act, Claims

Nonpredatory price competition for increased market share, as reflected by prices that are below "market price" or even below the costs of a firm's rivals, is not activity forbidden by the antitrust laws. When prices are not predatory, any losses flowing from them cannot be said to stem from an anticompetitive aspect of a defendant's conduct. It is in the interest of competition to permit dominant firms to engage in vigorous competition, including price competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Presumptions > Rebuttal of Presumptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN8 [PDF] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

The per se rule is a method of determining whether § 1 of the Sherman Act has been violated, but it does not indicate whether a private plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury and thus whether he may recover damages under 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. Per se and rule-of-reason analysis are but two methods of determining whether a restraint is "unreasonable," that is, whether its anticompetitive effects outweigh its procompetitive effects. The per se rule is a presumption of unreasonableness based on business certainty and litigation efficiency. It represents a longstanding judgment that the prohibited practices by their nature have a substantial potential for impact on competition. Once experience with a particular kind of restraint enables a court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it, it has applied a conclusive presumption that a restraint is unreasonable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN9 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Both per se rules and the rule of reason are employed to form a judgment about the competitive significance of a pricing restraint. Whether an ultimate finding is the product of a presumption or actual market analysis, the essential inquiry remains the same - whether or not a challenged restraint enhances competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN10 Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust injury requirement under 15 U.S.C.S. § 15 ensures that the harm claimed by a plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of antitrust laws in the first place, and it prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs for either damages or equitable relief. Actions per se unlawful under antitrust laws may nonetheless have some procompetitive effects, and private parties might suffer losses therefrom. Conduct in violation of antitrust laws may have three effects, often interwoven: in some respects the conduct may reduce competition, in other respects it may increase competition, and in still other respects effects may be neutral as to competition. The antitrust injury requirement ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior. The need for this showing is at least as great under the per se rule as under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN11 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Proof of a per se violation and of antitrust injury under 15 U.S.C.S. § 15 are distinct matters that must be shown independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN12 Standing, Clayton Act

Even in cases involving per se violations, the right of action under 15 U.S.C. § 15 is available only to those private plaintiffs who have suffered antitrust injury. Plaintiffs are required to show that a conspiracy caused them an injury for which antitrust laws provide relief. A restraint of trade may be illegal per se in the sense that it could be condemned even without proof of its actual market effect, but even if it may have been unlawful, it does not, of course, necessarily follow that still another party .is a person injured by reason of a violation of the antitrust laws within the meaning of § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Private Attorneys General

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN13 Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

The existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party to perform the office of a private attorney general.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN14 Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

A competitor is not injured by anticompetitive effects of vertical, maximum price-fixing, and does not have any incentive to vindicate the legitimate interests of a rival's dealer. A competitor will not bring suit to protect a dealer against a maximum price that is set too low, inasmuch as a competitor would benefit from such a situation. Instead, a competitor will be motivated to bring suit only when a vertical restraint promotes interbrand competition between a competitor and a dealer subject to a restraint. A competitor will be injured and hence motivated to sue only when a vertical, maximum-price-fixing arrangement has a procompetitive impact on a market. Therefore, providing a competitor a cause of action will not protect the rights of dealers and consumers under antitrust laws.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Firm held not to suffer "antitrust injury," and thus held unable to sue under 4 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), for alleged loss of sales to competitor charging nonpredatory prices pursuant to vertical, maximum price-fixing scheme.

Summary

Section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) generally authorizes a treble damages suit by any person injured in the person's business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. The United States Supreme Court has held that, in order for a private plaintiff to bring such a 4 suit, the plaintiff must prove the existence of "antitrust injury"--injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. An independent retail marketer of gasoline competed with the dealers of an integrated oil company. The marketer brought a suit against the oil company in the United States District Court for the Central District of California and included in the suit an antitrust claim of the existence of a vertical, maximum price-fixing agreement prohibited by 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1). The District Court, however, in granting summary judgment for the oil company on the 1 claim, expressed the view that (1) even assuming that the marketer could establish a vertical conspiracy to maintain low prices, the marketer could not satisfy the "antitrust injury" requirement of 4, without showing such prices to be predatory; and (2) the marketer could make no such showing of predatory pricing, because, given the oil company's market share and the ease of entry into the market, the oil company was in no position to exercise market power. On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, reversing, expressed the view that (1) injuries resulting from vertical, nonpredatory, maximum price-fixing agreements could constitute "antitrust injury" for purposes of a private suit under 4; and (2) in the case at hand, the marketer's claimed injuries were the direct result and, if the marketer's allegations were accepted as true, the intended objective of the alleged price-fixing scheme, where, according to the marketer, the purpose of the alleged price fixing was to disrupt the market of retail gasoline sales (859 F2d 687).

On certiorari, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeals and remanded the case for further proceedings. In an opinion by Brennan, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and Marshall, Blackmun, O'Connor, Scalia, and Kennedy, JJ., it was held that--assuming for the purposes of decision that the oil company's pricing was not predatory in nature, and that vertical, maximum price fixing was subject to a per se rule of illegality under 1--(1) a firm does not suffer an antitrust injury, and thus the firm cannot bring a treble damages suit under 4, when the firm allegedly loses sales to a competitor charging nonpredatory prices pursuant to a vertical, maximum price-fixing scheme allegedly prohibited by 1, because (a) the firm's losses do not flow from the aspects of the vertical, maximum price fixing that render it illegal, (b) the business lost by the firm as a rival cannot be viewed as an anticompetitive consequence of the claimed violation, (c) any differences between liability under 1 and liability under 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2) do not affect the result, (d) similarly, no salient difference results from the fact that the source of the nonpredatory price competition is an agreement alleged to be unlawful under 1 of the Sherman Act, rather than a merger alleged to be unlawful under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18), and (e) the fact that a vertical price-fixing scheme may facilitate predatory pricing in some circumstances is no reason to dispense with the antitrust-injury requirement in an action by the firm against the competitor's vertical agreement; (2) the allegation of a per se violation of 1 does not obviate the need to satisfy the antitrust-injury test; and (3) there is no need to encourage private enforcement in such circumstances, and thus to permit the dilution of the antitrust-injury requirement.

Stevens, J., joined by White, J., dissenting, expressed the view that the court's opinion undermined the enforceability of a substantive price-fixing violation with a flawed construction of 4, which erroneously assumed that (1) the level of a price fixed by a 1 conspiracy is relevant to legality, and (2) all vertical arrangements conform to a single model.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > STATUTES §108.5 > damages suit -- vertical, maximum price-fixing scheme by competitor -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F] [LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [1G] [LEdHN\[1H\]](#) [1H] [LEdHN\[1I\]](#) [1I] [LEdHN\[1J\]](#) [1J] [LEdHN\[1K\]](#) [1K] [LEdHN\[1L\]](#) [1L] [LEdHN\[1M\]](#) [1M]

A firm does not suffer an "antitrust injury," and thus the firm cannot bring a treble damages suit under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), when the firm allegedly loses sales to a competitor charging nonpredatory prices pursuant to a vertical, maximum price-fixing scheme allegedly prohibited by 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), because, even assuming for the purposes of decision that vertical, maximum price fixing is subject to a per se rule of illegality under 1, (1) the firm's losses do not flow from the aspects of the vertical, maximum price fixing that render it illegal, for, even if the agreement had ultimately acquired all the attributes of a minimum price-fixing scheme, the competitor's higher prices would work to the firm's advantage; (2) when a competitor, or even a group of competitors adhering to a vertical agreement, lowers prices but maintains them above predatory levels, the business lost by rivals cannot be viewed as an anticompetitive consequence of the claimed violation, for a firm complaining about the harm it suffers from nonpredatory pricing is really claiming that the firm is unable to raise prices; (3) any differences between liability under 1 and liability under 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2) do not affect the result, for although a vertical, maximum price-fixing agreement may be unlawful under 1, such an agreement does not cause a competitor antitrust injury unless the agreement results in predatory pricing, for, in the context of pricing practices, only predatory pricing has requisite anticompetitive effect; (4) for similar reasons, no salient difference, for purposes of the antitrust-injury requirement, results from the fact that the source of the nonpredatory price competition is an agreement alleged to be unlawful under 1 of the Sherman Act, rather than a merger alleged to be unlawful under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 18); and (5) the fact that a vertical price-fixing scheme may facilitate predatory pricing in some circumstances is no reason to dispense with the antitrust-injury requirement in an action by a firm against a competitor's vertical agreement, because a firm always is able to challenge directly a competitor's pricing as predatory. (Stevens and White, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > damages suit -- injury to plaintiff -- per se violation -- equitable relief -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C] [LEdHN\[2D\]](#) [2D] [LEdHN\[2E\]](#) [2E]

The allegation of a per se violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) does not obviate a private plaintiff's need to satisfy the "antitrust injury" test, in order to bring a treble damages suit under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), because the per se rule, which is a method for determining whether 1 has been violated, does not indicate whether a plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury, for (1) the antitrust-injury requirement has the different purpose of (a) insuring that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place, and (b) preventing losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs for either damages or equitable relief; (2) the antitrust-injury requirement insures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from the competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior, rather than any competition-increasing or competition-neutral aspect or effect of such behavior; (3) the need for such a showing is at least as great under the per se rule as under the rule of reason; (4) insofar as the per se rule permits the prohibition of efficient practices in the name of simplicity, the need for the antitrust-injury requirement is underscored; and (5) thus, proof of a per se violation and of antitrust injury are distinct matters that must be shown independently. (Stevens and White, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > damages suit -- encouragement of enforcement -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B] [LEdHN\[3C\]](#) [3C] [LEdHN\[3D\]](#) [3D] [LEdHN\[3E\]](#) [3E] [LEdHN\[3F\]](#) [3F] [LEdHN\[3G\]](#) [3G] [LEdHN\[3H\]](#) [3H]

With respect to the requirement that a private plaintiff show "antitrust injury" in order to bring a treble damages suit under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), even if it is assumed for the purposes of decision that vertical, maximum price fixing is subject to a per se rule of illegality under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), there is no need to encourage a rival firm's private enforcement of such a rule, and thus to permit the dilution of the antitrust-injury requirement when the firm allegedly loses sales to a competitor charging nonpredatory prices pursuant to a vertical, maximum price-fixing scheme, because (1) if such a scheme causes anticompetitive consequences so as to result in a per se violation of 1, consumers and the manufacturer's own dealers may bring suit; and (2) providing the firm, as a rival, with a cause of action will not protect the rights of dealers and consumers under the antitrust laws, for the firm's injury is not inextricably intertwined with the antitrust injury that a dealer would suffer, where the firm (a) is not injured by the anticompetitive effects of vertical, maximum price fixing, and (b) will be injured, and hence motivated to sue, only when the competitor's vertical, maximum price-fixing arrangement has a procompetitive impact on the market. (Stevens and White, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

APPEAL §1289 > summary judgment -- inferences from facts -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

On certiorari, in a case coming to the United States Supreme Court on review of summary judgment, inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion.

APPEAL §1331.5 > what reviewable -- predatory pricing -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B] [LEdHN\[5C\]](#) [5C] [LEdHN\[5D\]](#) [5D]

On certiorari to determine whether a firm suffers an "antitrust injury," for purposes of the firm's ability to bring a treble damages suit, under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), for sales allegedly lost to a competitor charging nonpredatory prices pursuant to a vertical, maximum price-fixing scheme, the United States Supreme Court, upon assuming for the purposes of decision that the competitor's pricing was not predatory in nature, has no occasion (1) to consider the proper definition of "predatory pricing," or (2) to determine whether an accurate statement of the law was made by the Supreme Court's dictum, in a prior case, that predatory pricing might consist of pricing below the level necessary to sell the offender's products.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > suit for damages -- injury -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

A private plaintiff may not recover damages under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) merely by showing injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market; instead, such a plaintiff must prove the existence of "antitrust injury"--injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > minimum prices -- damages suit --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

In a treble damages suit under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) for an alleged violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), a competitor may not complain of conspiracies that set minimum prices at any level.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §6 > purpose -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

Under the antitrust laws, which were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors, the statutory policy precludes inquiry into the question whether competition is good or bad.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > nonpredatory pricing -- damages suit --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9A\]](#) [9A] [LEdHN\[9B\]](#) [9B]

For purposes of the requirement that a private plaintiff show "antitrust injury" in order to bring a treble damages suit under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), such a plaintiff cannot claim antitrust injury from nonpredatory price competition on the asserted ground that it is "ruinous," for to hold that the antitrust laws protect competitors from the loss of profits due to nonpredatory price competition would, in effect, render illegal any decision by a firm to cut prices in order to increase market share. (Stevens and White, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > STATUTES §108.5 > price-fixing violations -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

Price fixing violates 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) as an agreement in restraint of trade, even if a single firm's decision to price at the same level would not create liability under 2 of the Act (15 USCS 2) as an attempt to monopolize, because, in a 1 case, the price agreement itself is illegal; 1 in general and the per se rule in particular are grounded on faith in price competition as a market force, and not on a policy of low selling prices at the price of eliminating competition.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > damages suit -- injury -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [11B]

"Antitrust injury" does not arise, for purposes of a private party's ability to maintain a treble damages suit under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), until the private party is adversely affected by an anticompetitive aspect of the defendant's conduct; for purposes of 4, injury in fact cannot be equated with "antitrust injury," and the antitrust-injury requirement cannot be met by broad allegations of harm to the "market" as an abstract entity; although all antitrust violations, under both per se and rule-of-reason analyses, "distort" the market, not every loss stemming from a violation counts as antitrust injury.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > violations per se - rule of reason -- presumptions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [12A] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [12B]

For purposes of determining whether 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) has been violated, per se and rule-of-reason analyses are but two methods of determining whether a restraint is "unreasonable," that is, whether the restraint's anticompetitive effects outweigh its procompetitive effects; both per se rules and the rule of reason are employed to form a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint; whether the ultimate finding is the product of a presumption or actual market analysis, the essential inquiry remains the same--whether the challenged restraint enhances competition; a per se rule (1) is a presumption of a reasonableness based on business certainty and litigation efficiency, and (2) represents a long-standing judgment that the prohibited practices, by their nature, have a substantial potential for impact on competition; and once experience with a particular type of restraint enables the United States Supreme Court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn the restraint, the Supreme Court applies a conclusive presumption that the restraint is unreasonable.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §16 > rule of reason -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13A\]](#) [13A] [LEdHN\[13B\]](#) [13B]

With respect to whether a manufacturer's vertical arrangements with a dealer violate 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), exclusive territorial arrangements and other nonprice restrictions are subject to only rule-of-reason scrutiny, rather than to a rule of per se illegality.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > suit for damages -- injury -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

For purposes of determining the required "antitrust injury" that a private plaintiff must suffer in order to bring a treble damages suit under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15), the existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party to perform the office of a private attorney general.

Syllabus

---

Petitioner Atlantic Richfield Company (ARCO), an integrated oil company, increased its retail gasoline sales and market share by encouraging its dealers to match the prices of independents such as respondent USA Petroleum Company, which competes directly with the dealers at the retail level. When USA's sales dropped, it sued ARCO in the District Court, charging, inter alia, that the vertical, maximum-price-fixing scheme constituted a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The court granted summary judgment to ARCO, holding that USA could not satisfy the "antitrust injury" requirement for purposes of a private damages suit under [\[\*\*\*\*2\]](#) § 4 of the Clayton Act because it was unable to show that ARCO's prices were predatory. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that injuries resulting from vertical, nonpredatory, maximum-price-fixing agreements could constitute "antitrust injury." Reasoning that any form of price fixing contravenes Congress' intent that market forces alone determine what goods and services are offered, their prices, and whether particular sellers succeed or fail, the court concluded that USA had shown that its losses resulted from a disruption in the market caused by ARCO's price fixing.

Held:

1. Actionable "antitrust injury" is an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. Injury, although casually related to an antitrust violation, will not qualify unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from continued competition. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 109-110. P. 334

2. A vertical, maximum-price-fixing conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the Sherman [****3] Act must result in predatory pricing to cause a competitor antitrust injury. Pp. 335-341.

(a) As a competitor, USA has not suffered "antitrust injury," since its losses do not flow from the harmful effects on dealers and consumers that rendered vertical, maximum price fixing per se illegal in Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145. USA was benefited rather than harmed if ARCO's pricing policies restricted ARCO's sales to a few large dealers or prevented its dealers from offering services desired by consumers. Even if the maximum price agreement acquired all of the attributes of a minimum-price-fixing scheme, USA still would not have suffered antitrust injury, because higher ARCO prices would have worked to USA's advantage. Pp. 335-337.

(b) USA's argument that, even if it was not harmed by any of the Albrecht anticompetitive effects, its lost business caused by ARCO's agreement lowering prices to above predatory levels constitutes antitrust injury is rejected, since cutting prices to increase business is often the essence of competition. Pp. 337-338.

(c) It is not inappropriate to require a showing of predatory pricing before antitrust injury can be established [****4] in a case under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Although under § 1 the price agreement itself is illegal, all losses flowing from the agreement are not by definition antitrust injuries. Low prices benefit consumers regardless of how they are set. So long as they are above predatory levels, they do not threaten competition and, hence, cannot give rise to antitrust injury. Pp. 338-341.

3. A loss flowing from a per se violation of § 1 does not automatically satisfy the antitrust injury requirement, which is a distinct matter that must be shown independently. The purpose of per se analysis is to determine whether a particular restraint is unreasonable. Actions per se unlawful may nonetheless have some procompetitive effects, and private parties might suffer losses therefrom. The antitrust injury requirement, however, ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior. Pp. 341-345.

4. Providing competitors with a private cause of action to enforce the rule against vertical, maximum price fixing would not protect the rights of dealers and consumers -- the class of persons whose self-interest would [****5] normally motivate them to vindicate Albrecht's anticompetitive consequences -- under the antitrust laws. USA's injury is not inextricably intertwined with a dealer's antitrust injury, since a competitor has no incentive to vindicate the legitimate interests of a rival's dealer and will be injured and motivated to sue only when the arrangement has a procompetitive impact on the market. Pp. 345-346.

Counsel: Ronald C. Reday argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Matthew T. Heartney, Otis Pratt Pearsall, Philip H. Curtis, Francis X. McCormack, Donald A. Bright, and Edward E. Clark.

John G. Roberts, Jr., argued the cause for the United States et al. as amici curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were General Boudin, Deputy Solicitor General Shapiro, Michael R. Dreeben, Catherine G. O'Sullivan, and Kevin J. Arquit.

Maxwell M. Blecher argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Alicia G. Rosenberg and Lawrence A. Sullivan. *

* Daniel K. Mayers, David Westin, and W. Terry Maguire filed a brief for the American Newspaper Publishers Association as amicus curiae urging reversal.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the State of California et al. by John K. Van de Kamp, Attorney General of California, Andera S. Ordin, Chief Assistant Attorney General, Sanford N. Gruskin, Assistant Attorney General Thomas P. Dove

[****6]

Judges: BRENNAN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C.J., and MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, O'CONNOR, SCALIA, and KENNEDY, JJ., joined. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which WHITE, J., joined, post, p. 346.

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

---

[*331] [*341] [**1887] JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A] LEdHN[2A] [↑] [2A] LEdHN[3A] [↑] [3A] This case presents the question whether a firm incurs an "injury" within the meaning of the antitrust laws when it loses sales to a competitor charging nonpredatory prices pursuant to a vertical, maximum-price-fixing scheme. We hold that such a firm does not suffer an "antitrust injury" and that it therefore cannot bring suit under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 15.<sup>1</sup>

[****7] I

Respondent USA Petroleum Company (USA) sued petitioner Atlantic Richfield Company (ARCO) in the United States District Court for the Central District of California, alleging the existence of a vertical, maximum-price-fixing agreement prohibited by § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 1, an attempt to monopolize the local retail gasoline sales market in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and other misconduct not relevant here. Petitioner ARCO is an integrated oil company that, inter alia, markets gasoline in the Western United States. It sells gasoline to consumers both directly through its own stations and indirectly through ARCO-brand dealers. Respondent USA is an independent retail marketer of gasoline which, like other independents, buys gasoline from major petroleum [*342] companies for resale under its own brand name. Respondent competes directly with ARCO dealers at the retail level. Respondent's outlets typically are low-overhead, high-volume "discount" stations that charge less than stations selling equivalent quality gasoline under major brand names.

LEdHN[4A] [↑] [4A] [****8] In early 1982, petitioner ARCO adopted a new marketing strategy in order to compete more effectively with discount [*332] independents [*1888] such as respondent.<sup>2</sup> Petitioner encouraged its

---

and Richard N. Light, Deputy Attorneys General, Douglas B. Baily, Attorney General General of Alaska, and Richard D. Monkman, Assistant Attorney General, Warren Price III, Attorney General of Hawaii, Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, and Gordon E. Allen, Deputy Attorney General, William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General of Louisiana, and Anne F. Benoit, Assistant Attorney General, Robert M. Spire, Attorney General of Nebraska, and Dale A. Comer, Assistant Attorney General, Brian McKay, Attorney General of Nevada, and J. Kenneth Creighton, Deputy Attorney General, Dave Frohmayer, Attorney General of Oregon, Ernest D. Prete, Jr., Attorney General of Pennsylvania, Eugene F. Wayne, Chief Deputy Attorney General, and Carl S. Hisiro, Senior Deputy Attorney General, Charles W. Burson, Attorney General of Tennessee, and Gerry Craft, Deputy Attorney General, R. Paul Van Dam, Attorney General of Utah, and Arthur M. Strong, Assistant Attorney General; for the Service Station Dealers of America by Dimitri G. Daskalopoulos; and for the Society of Independent Gasoline Marketers of America by William W. Scott and Christopher J. MacAvoy.

<sup>1</sup> Section 4 of the Clayton Act is HN1 [↑] a remedial provision that makes available treble damages to "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws."

<sup>2</sup> LEdHN[4B] [↑] [4B]

dealers to match the retail gasoline prices offered by independents in various ways; petitioner made available to its dealers and distributors such short-term discounts as "temporary competitive allowances" and "temporary volume allowances," and it reduced its dealers' costs by, for example, eliminating credit card sales. ARCO's strategy increased its sales and market share.

[****9] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [↑] [3B] [LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [↑] [5A] In its amended complaint, respondent USA charged that ARCO engaged in "direct head-to-head competition with discounters" and "drastically lowered its prices and in other ways sought to appeal to price-conscious consumers." First Amended Complaint para. 19, App. 15. Respondent asserted that petitioner conspired with retail service stations selling ARCO brand gasoline to fix prices at below-market levels: "Arco and its co-conspirators have organized a resale price maintenance scheme, as a direct result of which competition that would otherwise exist among Arco-branded dealers has been eliminated by agreement, and the retail price of Arco-branded gasoline has been fixed, stabilized and maintained at artificially low and uncompetitive levels." para. 27, App. 17. Respondent alleged that petitioner "has solicited its dealers and distributors to participate or acquiesce in the conspiracy and has used threats, intimidation and coercion to secure compliance [****10] with its terms." para. 37, App. 19. According to respondent, this conspiracy drove many independent gasoline dealers in California out of business. para. 39, App. 20. Count one of the amended complaint charged that petitioner's vertical, maximum-price-fixing scheme constituted an agreement in restraint of trade and thus violated § 1 of the Sherman Act. Count two, later withdrawn with prejudice by respondent, [*333] asserted that petitioner had engaged in an attempt to monopolize the retail gasoline market through predatory pricing in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act.<sup>3</sup>

[****11] The District Court granted summary judgment for ARCO on the § 1 claim. The court stated that "[e]ven [***343] assuming that [respondent USA] can establish a vertical conspiracy to maintain low prices, [respondent] cannot satisfy the 'antitrust injury' requirement of Clayton Act § 4, without showing such prices to be predatory." App. to Pet. for Cert. 3b. The court then concluded that respondent could make no such showing of predatory pricing because, given petitioner's market share and the ease of entry into the market, petitioner was in no position to exercise market power.

A divided panel of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed. 859 F. 2d 687 \(1988\). Acknowledging that its decision was in conflict with the approach of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in several recent cases,<sup>4</sup> see id., at 697, n. 15, the Ninth Circuit nonetheless held that injuries resulting from vertical, nonpredatory, maximum pricefixing agreements could constitute "antitrust [**1889] injury" for purposes of a private suit under § 4 of the Clayton Act. The court reasoned that any form of price fixing contravenes Congress' intent that [****12] "market forces alone determine what goods and services are offered, at what price these goods and services [*334] are sold, and whether particular sellers succeed or fail." Id., at 693. The court believed that the key inquiry in determining whether respondent suffered an "antitrust injury" was whether its losses "resulted from a disruption . . . in the . . . market caused by the . . . antitrust violation." Ibid. The court concluded that "[i]n the present case, the

Because the case comes to us on review of summary judgment, "inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts . . . must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion." Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587 \(1986\) (quoting United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, 655 \(1962\)).

<sup>3</sup> [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [↑] [1C] [LEdHN\[3C\]](#) [↑] [3C] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [↑] [5B]

The District Court granted petitioner's motion to dismiss the § 2 claim as originally pleaded. 577 F. Supp. 1296, 1304 \(1983\). Respondent subsequently amended its § 2 claim, but shortly after petitioner filed for summary judgment, respondent voluntarily dismissed that claim with prejudice. See App. 76-78. The Court of Appeals framed the issue as "whether a competitor's injuries resulting from vertical, non-predatory, maximum price fixing fall within the category of 'antitrust injury.'" 859 F. 2d 687, 689 \(CA9 1988\) (emphasis added). For purposes of this case we likewise assume that petitioner's pricing was not predatory in nature.

<sup>4</sup> See Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F. 2d 1409, 1418-1420 \(1989\); Local Beauty Supply, Inc. v. Lamac, Inc., 787 F. 2d 1197, 1201-1203 \(1986\); Jack Walters & Sons Corp. v. Morton Bldg., Inc., 737 F. 2d 698, 708-709, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1018 \(1984\).

inquiry seems straightforward: USA's claimed injuries were the direct result, and indeed, under the allegations we accept as true, the intended objective, of ARCO's price-fixing scheme. According to USA, the purpose of ARCO's price-fixing is to disrupt the market of retail gasoline sales, and that disruption is the source of USA's injuries." Ibid.

[****13] We granted certiorari, 490 U.S. 1097 (1989).

II

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [↑] [6]HN2 [↑] A private plaintiff may not recover damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act merely by showing "injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489 \(1977\). Instead, a plaintiff must prove the existence of "antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Ibid. (emphasis in original). In Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104 \(1986\), we reaffirmed that injury, although causally related to an antitrust violation, nevertheless will not qualify as "antitrust injury" unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, "since '[i]t is inimical to [the antitrust] laws to award damages' for losses stemming from continued competition." Id., at 109-110 (quoting Brunswick, supra, at 488). [****14] [***344] See also Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 539-540 \(1983\); Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 483, and n. 19 \(1982\); J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 562 \(1981\).

[*335] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [↑] [1D] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [↑] [2B] [LEdHN\[3D\]](#) [↑] [3D] Respondent argues that, as a competitor, it can show antitrust injury from a vertical conspiracy to fix maximum prices that is unlawful under § 1 of the Sherman Act, even if the prices were set above predatory levels. In addition, respondent maintains that any loss flowing from a per se violation of § 1 automatically satisfies the antitrust injury requirement. We reject both contentions and hold that respondent has failed to meet the antitrust injury test in this case. We therefore reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

A

[LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [↑] [1E] [LEdHN\[3E\]](#) [↑] [3E] [****15] In Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145 \(1968\), we found that a vertical, maximum-price-fixing scheme was unlawful per se under § 1 of the Sherman Act because it threatened to inhibit vigorous competition by the dealers bound by it and because it threatened to become a minimum-price-fixing scheme.<sup>5</sup> That case concerned a newspaper distributor who sought to charge his customers more than the suggested retail price advertised by the publisher. After the publisher attempted to discipline the distributor by hiring another carrier to take away some of the distributor's customers, the distributor brought suit under § 1. The Court found that "the combination [**1890] formed by the [publisher] in this case to force [the distributor] to maintain a specified price for the resale of newspapers which he had purchased from [the publisher] constituted, without more, an illegal restraint of trade under § 1 of the Sherman Act." Id., at 153.

[****16] In holding such a maximum-price vertical agreement illegal, we analyzed the manner in which it might restrain competition by dealers. HN3 [↑] First, we noted that such a scheme, "by substituting the perhaps erroneous judgment of a seller for the forces of the competitive market, may severely intrude upon the ability of buyers to compete and survive in that market." Id., at 152. We further explained that "[m]aximum [*336] prices may be fixed too low for the dealer to furnish services essential to the value which goods have for the consumer or to furnish services and conveniences which consumers desire and for which they are willing to pay." Id., at 152-153. By limiting the ability of small dealers to engage in nonprice competition, a maximum-price-fixing agreement might "channel distribution through a few large or specifically advantaged dealers." Id., at 153. Finally, we observed that "if the actual price charged under a maximum price scheme is nearly always the fixed maximum price, which is increasingly likely as the maximum price approaches the [****17] actual cost of the dealer, the scheme tends to acquire all the attributes of [***345] an arrangement fixing minimum prices." Ibid.

---

<sup>5</sup> [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [↑] [1F] [LEdHN\[3F\]](#) [↑] [3F]

We assume, arguendo, that Albrecht correctly held that vertical, maximum price fixing is subject to the per se rule.

[LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [↑] [1G] [LEdHN\[7\]](#) [↑] [7] Respondent alleges that it has suffered losses as a result of competition with firms following a vertical, maximum-price-fixing agreement. HN4 [↑] But in Albrecht we held such an agreement per se unlawful because of its potential effects on dealers and consumers, not because of its effect on competitors. Respondent's asserted injury as a competitor does not resemble any of the potential dangers described in Albrecht.<sup>6</sup> For example, if a vertical agreement fixes "[m]aximum prices . . . too low for the dealer to furnish services" desired by consumers, or in such a way as to channel business to large distributors, id., at 152-153, then a firm dealing in a competing brand would not be harmed. Respondent was benefited rather than harmed if petitioner's pricing policies restricted ARCO [*337] [****18] sales to a few large dealers or prevented petitioner's dealers from offering services desired by consumers such as credit card sales. Even if the maximum-price agreement ultimately had acquired all of the attributes of a minimum-price-fixing scheme, respondent still would not have suffered antitrust injury because higher ARCO prices would have worked to USA's advantage. A competitor "may not complain of conspiracies that . . . set minimum prices at any level." Matsushita Electric Industrial Corp. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585, n. 8 (1986); see also id., at 582-583 ("R)espondents [cannot] recover damages for any conspiracy by petitioners to charge higher than competitive prices in the . . . market. Such conduct would indeed violate the Sherman Act, but it could not injure respondents: as petitioners' competitors, respondents stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market price . . ."). Indeed, the gravamen of respondent's complaint -- that the price-fixing scheme between petitioner and its dealers enabled those dealers to increase their sales -- amounts to an assertion that the dangers with which we were concerned in Albrecht [**1891] [****19] have not materialized in the instant case. In sum, respondent has not suffered "antitrust injury," since its losses do not flow from the aspects of vertical, maximum price fixing that render it illegal.

[****20] [LEdHN\[1H\]](#) [↑] [1H] [LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [↑] [8A] [LEdHN\[9A\]](#) [↑] [9A] Respondent argues that even if it was not harmed by any of the anticompetitive effects identified in Albrecht, it nonetheless suffered antitrust injury because of the low prices produced by the vertical restraint. We disagree. HN5 [↑] When a firm, or even a group of firms adhering to a vertical agreement, lowers prices but maintains them above predatory levels, the business lost by rivals cannot be viewed as an "anticompetitive" consequence of the claimed [***346] violation.<sup>7</sup> A firm [*338] complaining about the harm it suffers from nonpredatory price competition "is really claiming that it [is] unable to raise prices." Blair & Harrison, Rethinking Antitrust Injury, 42 Vand. L. Rev. 1539, 1554 \(1989\). This is not antitrust injury; indeed, "cutting prices in order to increase business often is the very essence of competition." Matsushita, supra, at 594. The antitrust laws were enacted for "the protection of competition, [****21] not competitors." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320 (1962) (emphasis in original). "To hold that the antitrust laws protect competitors from the loss of profits due to [nonpredatory] price competition would, in effect, render illegal any decision by a firm to cut prices in order to increase market share." Cargill, 479 U.S., at 116.

<sup>6</sup> Albrecht is the only case in which the Court has confronted an unadulterated vertical, maximum-price-fixing arrangement. In Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211, 213 (1951), we also suggested that such an arrangement was illegal because it restricted vigorous competition among dealers. The restraint in Kiefer-Stewart had an additional horizontal component, however, see Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 348, n. 18 (1982), since the agreement was between two suppliers that had agreed to sell liquor only to wholesalers adhering to "maximum prices above which the wholesalers could not resell." Kiefer-Stewart, supra, at 212.

<sup>7</sup> [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [↑] [8B] [LEdHN\[9B\]](#) [↑] [9B]

The Court of Appeals implied that the antitrust injury requirement could be satisfied by a showing that the "long-term" effect of the maximum-price agreements could be to eliminate retailers and ultimately to reduce competition. 859 F. 2d, at 694, 696. We disagree. Rivals cannot be excluded in the long run by a nonpredatory maximum-price scheme unless they are relatively inefficient. Even if that were false, however, a firm cannot claim antitrust injury from nonpredatory price competition on the asserted ground that it is "ruinous." Cf. United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 610-612 (1972); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 220-221 (1940). "[T]he statutory policy precludes inquiry into the question whether competition is good or bad." National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 695 (1978).

[****22] [LEdHN\[1J\]](#)↑ [1I] [LEdHN\[10\]](#)↑ [10] Respondent further argues that it is inappropriate to require a showing of predatory pricing before antitrust injury can be established when the asserted antitrust violation is an agreement in restraint of trade illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act, rather than an attempt to monopolize prohibited by § 2. Respondent notes that the two sections of the Act are quite different. HN6↑ Price fixing violates § 1, for example, even if a single firm's decision to price at the same level would not create § 2 liability. See generally Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767-769 (1984). In a § 1 case, the price agreement itself is illegal, and respondent contends that all losses flowing from such an agreement must by definition constitute "antitrust injuries." Respondent observes that § 1 in general and the per se rule in particular are grounded "on faith in price competition as a market force" [*339] [****23] [and not] on a policy of low selling prices at the price of eliminating competition." Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 348 (1982) (quoting Rahl, Price Competition and the Price Fixing Rule -- Preface and Perspective, 57 Nw. U.L. Rev. 137, 142 (1962)). In sum, respondent maintains that it has suffered antitrust injury even if petitioner's pricing was not predatory under § 2 of the Sherman Act.

[LEdHN\[1J\]](#)↑ [1J] [LEdHN\[11A\]](#)↑ [11A] We reject respondent's argument. Although a vertical, maximum-price-fixing agreement is unlawful under § 1 of the Sherman Act, it does not cause a competitor antitrust injury unless it results in [**1892] predatory pricing.<sup>8</sup> [****25] Antitrust injury [****347] does not arise for purposes of § 4 of the Clayton Act, see n. 1, supra, until a private party is adversely affected by an anticompetitive aspect of the defendant's conduct, see Brunswick, 429 U.S., at 487; in the context of pricing practices, only predatory pricing has the requisite anticompetitive effect. [****24] <sup>9</sup> See Areeda & Turner, Predatory Pricing and Related [*340] Practices Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 88 Harv. L. Rev. 697, 697-699 (1975); McGee, Predatory Pricing Revisited, 23 J. Law & Econ. 289, 292-294 (1980). Low prices benefit consumers regardless of how those prices are set, and so long as they are above predatory levels, they do not threaten competition. Hence, they cannot give rise to antitrust injury.

[LEdHN\[1L\]](#)↑ [1L] [LEdHN\[5C\]](#)↑ [5C] We have adhered to this principle regardless of the type of antitrust claim involved. In Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., supra, for example, we found that a plaintiff competitor had not shown antitrust injury and thus could not challenge a merger that was assumed [****26] to be illegal under § 7 of the Clayton Act, even though the merged company threatened to engage in vigorous price competition that would reduce the plaintiff's profits. HN7↑ We observed that nonpredatory price competition for increased market share, as reflected by prices that are below "market price" or even below the costs of a firm's rivals, "is not activity forbidden by the antitrust laws." 479 U.S., at 116. Because the prices charged were not predatory, we found no antitrust injury. Similarly, we determined that antitrust injury was absent in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., supra, even though the plaintiffs alleged that an illegal acquisition threatened to bring a "deep pocket" parent

<sup>8</sup> [LEdHN\[11B\]](#)↑ [11B]

The Court of Appeals erred by reasoning that respondent satisfied the antitrust injury requirement by alleging that "[t]he removal of some elements of price competition distorts the markets, and harms all the participants." 859 F. 2d, at 694. Every antitrust violation can be assumed to "disrupt" or "distort" competition. "[O]therwise, there would be no violation." P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law para. 340.3b, p. 411 (1989 Supp.). Respondent's theory would equate injury in fact with antitrust injury. We declined to adopt such an approach in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477 (1977), and Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104 (1986), and we reject it again today. The antitrust injury requirement cannot be met by broad allegations of harm to the "market" as an abstract entity. Although all antitrust violations, under both the per se rule and rule-of-reason analysis, "distort" the market, not every loss stemming from a violation counts as antitrust injury.

<sup>9</sup> [LEdHN\[1K\]](#)↑ [1K]

This is not to deny that a vertical price-fixing scheme may facilitate predatory pricing. A supplier, for example, can reduce its prices to its own downstream dealers and share the losses with them, while forcing competing dealers to bear by themselves the full loss imposed by the lower prices. Cf. FTC v. Sun Oil Co., 371 U.S. 505, 522 (1963). But because a firm always is able to challenge directly a rival's pricing as predatory, there is no reason to dispense with the antitrust injury requirement in an action by a competitor against a vertical agreement.

495 U.S. 328, *340; 110 S. Ct. 1884, **1892; 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, ***347; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 2543, ****26

into a market of 'pygmies,'" *Id.*, at 487, a scenario that would cause the plaintiffs economic harm. We opined nevertheless that "if [the plaintiffs] were injured, it was not 'by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws': while [the plaintiffs'] loss occurred 'by reason of' the unlawful acquisitions, it did not occur 'by reason of' that which [****27] made the acquisitions unlawful." *Id.*, at 488. To be sure, the source of the price competition in the instant case was an agreement allegedly unlawful [\[\*\*\*348\]](#) under § 1 of the Sherman Act rather than a merger in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. But that difference is not salient. When prices are not predatory, any losses flowing from them cannot be said to stem from an anticompetitive aspect of the defendant's [\[\*341\]](#) conduct.<sup>10</sup> [\[\*\*\*\*28\]](#) "It is in the interest of competition to permit dominant firms [\[\*\*1893\]](#) to engage in vigorous competition, including price competition." *Cargill, 479 U.S., at 116* (quoting *Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S.E. Johnson Co., 729 F.2d 1050, 1057* (CA6), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1036 (1984)).<sup>11</sup>

B

[**LEdHN\[2C\]**](#) [↑] [2C] [**LEdHN\[12A\]**](#) [↑] [12A] We also reject respondent's suggestion that no antitrust injury need be shown where a per se violation is involved. **HN8** [↑] The [\[\*342\]](#) per se rule is a method of determining whether § 1 of the Sherman Act has been violated, but it does not indicate whether a private plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury and thus whether he may recover damages under § 4 of the Clayton [\[\*\*\*\*29\]](#) Act. Per se and rule-of-reason analysis are but two methods of determining whether a restraint is "unreasonable," i.e., whether its anticompetitive effects outweigh its procompetitive effects.<sup>12</sup> The per se rule is a presumption of [\[\*\*\*349\]](#) unreasonableness based on "business certainty and litigation efficiency." *Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S., at 344*. It represents a "longstanding judgment that the prohibited practices by their nature have 'a substantial potential for impact on competition.'" *FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Assn., 493 U.S. 411, 433* \(1990\) (quoting *Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 16* \(1984\)). "Once experience with a particular kind of restraint

<sup>10</sup> [**LEdHN\[5D\]**](#) [↑] [5D]

We did not reach a contrary conclusion in *Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574* \(1986\), where we declined define precisely the term "predatory pricing" but stated instead that "[f]or purposes of this case it is enough to note that respondents have not suffered an antitrust injury unless petitioners conspired to drive respondents out of the relevant markets by (i) pricing below the level necessary to sell their products, or (ii) pricing below some appropriate measure of cost." *Id., at 585, n. 8*. This statement does not imply that losses from nonpredatory pricing might qualify as antitrust injury; we were quite careful to limit our discussion in that case to predatory pricing. See ibid. (nonpredatory prices would not cause antitrust injury because they would "leave respondents in the same position as would market forces"). We noted that "[e]xcept for the alleged conspiracy to monopolize the . . . market through predatory pricing, these alleged conspiracies could not have caused respondents to suffer an 'antitrust injury.'" *Id., at 586*. We also observed that "respondents must show that the conspiracy caused them an injury for which the antitrust laws provide relief. That showing depends in turn on proof that petitioners conspired to price predatorily in the American market, caused such an injury." *Id., at 584, n. 7* (citations omitted); see also Id., at 594; Cargill, supra, at 117, n. 12 (interpreting our decision in Matsushita). We have no occasion in the instant case to consider the proper definition of predatory pricing, nor to determine whether our dictum in Matsushita that predatory pricing might consist of "pricing below the level necessary to sell [the offender's] products," *475 U.S., at 585, n. 8*, is an accurate statement of the law. See n. 3, supra.

<sup>11</sup> The Court of Appeals purported to distinguish Cargill and Brunswick on the ground that those cases turned on an "attenuated or indirect" relationship between the alleged violation -- the illegal merger -- and the plaintiffs' injury. *859 F.2d, at 695*. We disagree. The Court in both cases described the injury as flowing directly from the alleged antitrust violation. See *Cargill, 479 U.S., at 108; Brunswick, 429 U.S., at 487*.

<sup>12</sup> [**LEdHN\[12B\]**](#) [↑] [12B]

"**HN9** [↑] Both per se rules and the Rule of Reason are employed "to form a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint." *National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 103* \(1984\) (quoting *National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S., at 692*). "[W]hether the ultimate finding is the product of a presumption or actual market analysis, the essential inquiry remains the same -- whether or not the challenged restraint enhances competition." *468 U.S., at 104*.

enables the Court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it, it has applied a conclusive presumption that the restraint is unreasonable." Maricopa County Medical Society, supra, at 344.

[****30] [LEdHN\[2D\]](#) [↑] [2D] [LEdHN\[13A\]](#) [↑] [13A] The purpose of the antitrust injury requirement is different. HN10 [↑] It ensures that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place, and it prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs for either \*\*1894 damages or equitable relief. Actions per se unlawful under the antitrust laws may nonetheless have some procompetitive effects, and private parties might suffer losses [\[\*343\]](#) therefrom.<sup>13</sup> See Maricopa County Medical Society, supra, at 351; Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 50, n. 16 (1977). Conduct in violation of the antitrust [\[\*344\]](#) laws may have three effects, often interwoven: In some respects the conduct may reduce competition, in other respects it may increase competition, and in still other respects effects may be neutral as to competition. [\[\*\*\*\*31\]](#) The antitrust injury requirement ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior. The need for this showing is at least as great under the per se rule as under the rule of reason. Indeed, insofar as the per se rule permits the prohibition of efficient practices in the name of simplicity, the need for the antitrust injury requirement is underscored. "[P]ro-competitive or efficiency-enhancing aspects of practices that nominally violate the antitrust laws may cause serious harm to individuals, but this kind of harm is the essence of competition and should play no role in the definition of antitrust damages." Page, The Scope of Liability for Antitrust Violations, 37 Stan. L. Rev. 1445, 1460 (1985). HN11 [↑] Thus, "proof of a per se violation and of antitrust injury are distinct matters that must be shown independently." P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law para. 334.2c, p. 330 (1989 Sup.).

[****32] HN12 [↑]

For this reason, we have previously recognized that even in cases involving per se violations, the right of action under § 4 of the Clayton Act is available only to those private plaintiffs who have suffered antitrust injury. For example, in a case involving horizontal price fixing, "perhaps the paradigm of an unreasonable restraint of trade,"

<sup>13</sup> [LEdHN\[13B\]](#) [↑] [13B]

When a manufacturer provides a dealer an exclusive area within which to distribute a product, the manufacturer's decision to fix a maximum resale price may actually protect consumers against exploitation by the dealer acting as a local monopolist. The manufacturer acts not out of altruism, of course, but out of a desire to increase its own sales -- whereas the dealer's incentive, like that of any monopolist, is to reduce output and increase price. If an exclusive dealership is the most efficient means of distribution, the public is not served by forcing the manufacturer to abandon this method and resort to self-distribution or competing distributors. Vertical, maximum price fixing thus may have procompetitive interbrand effects even if it is per se illegal because of its potential effects on dealers and consumers. See Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 159 (1968) (Harlan, J., dissenting) (maximum price ceilings "do not lessen horizontal competition" but instead "drive prices toward the level that would be set by intense competition," by "prevent[ing] retailers or wholesalers from reaping monopoly or supercompetitive profits"). Indeed, we acknowledged in Albrecht that "[m]aximum and minimum price fixing may have different consequences in many situations." Id., at 152. The procompetitive potential of a vertical maximum price restraint is more evident now than it was when Albrecht was decided, because exclusive territorial arrangements and other nonprice restrictions were unlawful per se in 1968. See id., at 154; United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 375-376 (1967). These agreements are currently subject only to rule-of-reason scrutiny, making monopolistic behavior by dealers more likely. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761 (1984); Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 47-59 (1977).

Many commentators have identified procompetitive effects of vertical, maximum price fixing. See, e.g., P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law para. 340.3b, p. 378, n. 24 (1988 Sup.); Blair & Harrison, Rethinking Antitrust Injury, 42 Vand. L. Rev. 1539, 1553 (1989); Blair & Schafer, Evolutionary Models of Legal Change and the Albrecht Rule, 32 Antitrust Bull. 989, 995-1000 (1987); Bork, The Rule of Reason and the Per Se Concept: Price Fixing and Market Division, part 2, 75 Yale L.J. 373, 464 (1966); Easterbrook, Maximum Price Fixing, 48 U. Chi. L. Rev. 886, 887-890 (1981); Hovenkamp, Vertical Integration by the Newspaper Monopolist, 69 Iowa L. Rev. 451, 452-456 (1984); Polden, Antitrust Standing and the Rule Against Resale Price Maintenance, 37 Cleveland State L. Rev. 179, 216-217 (1989); Turner, The Durability, Relevance, and Future of American Antitrust Policy, 75 Calif. L. Rev. 797, 803-804 (1987).

[**1895] National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 100 (1984), we observed that the plaintiffs were still required to "show that the conspiracy caused them an injury for which the antitrust laws provide relief." Matsushita, 475 U.S., at 584, n. 7 (citing Brunswick) (emphasis added). Similarly, in Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519 (1983), we noted that a restraint of trade was illegal per se in the sense that it could "be condemned even without proof of its actual market effect," but we maintained that even if it "may have [*345] been unlawful, it does not, of course, necessarily follow that still [***33] another party . . . is a person injured by reason of a violation of the antitrust laws within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act." Id., at 528-529.

C

LEdHN[3G] [↑] [3G] LEdHN[14] [↑] [14] We decline to dilute the antitrust injury requirement here because we find that there is no need to encourage private enforcement by competitors of the rule against vertical, maximum price fixing. If such a scheme causes the anticompetitive consequences detailed in Albrecht, consumers and the manufacturers' own dealers may bring suit. HN13 [↑] The "existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate [***351] them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party . . . to perform the office of a private attorney general." Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S., at 542.

LEdHN[3H] [↑] [3H] [***34] Respondent's injury, moreover, is not "inextricably intertwined" with the antitrust injury that a dealer would suffer, McCready, 457 U.S., at 484, and thus does not militate in favor of permitting respondent to sue on behalf of petitioner's dealers. HN14 [↑] A competitor is not injured by the anticompetitive effects of vertical, maximum price-fixing, see supra, at 336-337, and does not have any incentive to vindicate the legitimate interests of a rival's dealer. See Easterbrook, The Limits of Antitrust, 63 Texas L. Rev. 1, 33-39 (1984). A competitor will not bring suit to protect the dealer against a maximum price that is set too low, inasmuch as the competitor would benefit from such a situation. Instead, a competitor will be motivated to bring suit only when the vertical restraint promotes interbrand competition between the competitor and the dealer subject to the restraint. See n. 13, supra. In short, a competitor will be injured and hence motivated to sue only when a vertical, maximum-price-fixing arrangement has a procompetitive impact on the market. Therefore, [***35] providing [*346] the competitor a cause of action would not protect the rights of dealers and consumers under the antitrust laws.

III

LEdHN[1M] [↑] [1M] LEdHN[2E] [↑] [2E] Respondent has failed to demonstrate that it has suffered any antitrust injury. The allegation of a per se violation does not obviate the need to satisfy this test. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the case is remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

---

JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE WHITE joins, dissenting.

The Court today purportedly defines only the contours of antitrust injury that can result from a vertical, nonpredatory, maximum-price-fixing scheme. But much, if not all, of its reasoning about what constitutes injury actionable by a competitor would apply even if the alleged conspiracy had been joined by other major oil companies doing business in California, as well as their retail outlets.<sup>1</sup> The Court undermines the enforceability of a [**1896] substantive price-fixing violation with a flawed [****36] construction of § 4, erroneously assuming that the level of a price fixed by a § 1 conspiracy is relevant to legality and that all vertical arrangements conform to a single model.

---

<sup>1</sup> For example, the Court reasons:

[***352] I

Because so much of the Court's analysis turns on its characterization of USA's cause of action, it is appropriate to [*347] begin with a more complete description of USA's theory. As the case comes to us on review of summary judgment, we assume the truth of USA's allegation that ARCO conspired with its retail dealers to fix the price of gas at specific ARCO stations that compete directly with USA stations. It is conceded that this price-fixing conspiracy is a per [****37] se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

USA's theory can be expressed in the following hypothetical example: In a free market ARCO's advertised gas might command a price of $ 1 per gallon while USA's unadvertised gas might sell for a penny less, with retailers of both brands making an adequate profit. If, however, the ARCO stations reduce their price by a penny or two, they might divert enough business from USA stations to force them gradually to withdraw from the market.<sup>2</sup> [****38] The fixed price would be lower than the price that would obtain in a free market, but not so low as to be "predatory" in the sense that a single actor could not lawfully charge it under 15 U.S.C. § 2 or § 13a.<sup>3</sup>

This theory rests on the premise that the resources of the conspirators, combined and coordinated, are sufficient to sustain below-normal profits in selected localities long enough to force USA to shift its capital to markets where it can receive a normal return on its investment.<sup>4</sup> Thus, during the initial [*348] period of competitive struggle between the conspirators and the independents, consumers will presumably benefit from artificially low prices. If the alleged campaign is successful, however -- and as the case comes to us we must assume it will be -- in the long run there will be less competition, or potential competition, from independents such as USA, and the character of the market will be different [****39] than if the conspiracy had never taken place. USA alleges that, in fact, the independent market already has suffered significant losses.<sup>5</sup>

[****40] [***353] [**1897] II

"Low prices benefit consumers regardless of how those prices are set, and so long as they are above predatory levels, they do not threaten competition. Hence, they cannot give rise to antitrust injury." Ante, at 340.

"When prices are not predatory, any losses flowing from them cannot be said to stem from an anticompetitive aspect of the defendant's conduct." Ante, at 340-341.

<sup>2</sup> "31. Arco and its co-conspirators have engaged in limit pricing practices in which prices are deliberately set on gasoline at a level below their competitors' cost with the purpose and effect of making it impossible for plaintiff and other independents to compete. For example, Arco and its co-conspirators have sold gasoline, ex tax, at the retail pump for less than independents, such as plaintiff, can purchase gasoline at wholesale." Amended Complaint, App. 18.

<sup>3</sup> "27. Arco and its co-conspirators have organized a resale price maintenance scheme, as a direct result of which competition that would otherwise exist among Arco-branded dealers has been eliminated by agreement, and the retail price of Arco-branded gasoline has been fixed, stabilized and maintained at artificially low and uncompetitive levels. . . ." Amended Complaint, App. 17.

<sup>4</sup> It may be that ARCO could have accomplished its objectives independently, merely by reducing its own prices sufficiently to induce its retail customers to charge abnormally low prices and divert business from USA stations. See, e.g., Amended Complaint para. 30, App. 18. Such independent action by ARCO, followed by independent action by its retail customers, of course would be lawful, even if it produced the same consequences as the alleged conspiratorial program. See United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 44 (1960). Indeed, a full trial might establish that that is what happened. Nevertheless, as the case comes to us, we assume that ARCO is the architect of an illegal conspiracy.

<sup>5</sup> "18. For the last few years, there has been, and still is, a steady and continuous reduction in the competitive effectiveness of independent refiners and marketers selling in California and the western United States. During this time period, more than a dozen large independents have sold out, liquidated or drastically curtailed their operations, and many independent retail stations have been closed. The barriers to entry into this market have been high, and today such barriers are effectively insurmountable; once an independent is eliminated, it is highly unlikely that it will be replaced." Amended Complaint, App. 15.

ARCO's alleged conspiracy is a naked price restraint in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.<sup>6</sup> It is undisputed that ARCO's price-fixing arrangement, as alleged, [*349] is illegal per se under the rule against maximum price fixing, which is "grounded on faith in price competition as a market force [and not] on a policy of low selling prices at the price of eliminating competition." Rahl, Price Competition and the Price Fixing Rule -- Preface and Perspective, 57 Nw. U.L. Rev. 137, 142 (1962)." Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 348 \(1982\). At issue is only whether a maximum price, administered on a host of retail stations that are ostensibly competing with one another as well as with other retailers, may be challenged by the competitor targeted by the pricing scheme.

[****41] Section 4 of the Clayton Act allows private enforcement of the antitrust laws by "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15. See Simpson v. Union Oil Co. of California, 377 U.S. 13, 16 \(1964\) (quoting Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 454 \(1957\)) (laws allowing private enforcement of the antitrust laws by an aggrieved party "protect the victims of the forbidden practices as well as the public"). In order to invoke § 4, a plaintiff must prove that it suffered an injury that (1) is "of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent" and (2) "flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489 \(1977\). In Brunswick, the plaintiff businesses claimed that they were deprived of the benefits of the increased concentration that would have resulted had failing businesses not been acquired by petitioner, allegedly in violation of § 7. In concluding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove "antitrust injury," we found that neither condition of § [****42] 4 standing was satisfied: First, the plaintiffs sought to recover damages because the mergers had preserved businesses and competition, which is not the type of injury that the antitrust laws are designed to prevent; and second, the plaintiffs had not been harmed by any potential change in the market structure [*350] effected by the entry of the "deep pocket" parent." Id., at 487-488.

[***354] In this case, however, both conditions of standing are met. First, § 1 is intended to forbid price-fixing conspiracies that are designed to drive competitors out of the market. See Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213 \(1959\) (illegal coordination "is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that his destruction makes little difference to the economy"). USA alleges that ARCO's pricing scheme aims at forcing independent refiners and marketers out of business and has created "an immediate and growing probability that the independent [**1898] segment of the industry will be destroyed altogether."<sup>7</sup>

[****43] In Brunswick, we recognized that requiring a competitor to show that its loss is "of the type" antitrust laws were intended to prevent

---

<sup>6</sup> We have long held under the Sherman Act that "a combination for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce is illegal per se." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 222-223 \(1940\). See also Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211, 213 \(1951\) (maximum resale prices); Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761 \(1984\) (vertical resale prices); Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145 \(1968\) (vertical maximum resale prices).

<sup>7</sup> USA's Amended Complaint specifically alleges:

"39. As a direct and proximate result of the above-described combinations and conspiracy and of the acts taken in furtherance thereof:

"(a) the price of gasoline has been artificially fixed, maintained and stabilized;

"(b) independent refiners and marketers have suffered substantial losses of sales and profits and their ability to compete has been seriously impaired;

"(c) independent refiners and marketers have gone out of business or been taken over by Arco;

"(d) there is an immediate and growing probability that the independent segment of the industry will be destroyed altogether and that control of the discount market will be acquired by Arco." App. 20.

495 U.S. 328, *350; 110 S. Ct. 1884, **1898; 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, ***354; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 2543, ****43

"does not necessarily mean . . . that § 4 plaintiffs must prove an actual lessening of competition in order to recover. The short-term effect of certain anticompetitive behavior -- predatory below-cost pricing, for example -- may be to stimulate price competition. But competitors may be able to prove antitrust injury before they actually [*351] are driven from the market and competition is thereby lessened." 429 U.S., at 489, n. 14.

The pricing behavior in the Court's hypothetical example may cause actionable injury because it is "predatory." This is so because the Court assumes that a predatory price is illegal. The direct relationship between the illegality and the harm is what makes the competitor's short-term loss "antitrust injury." The fact that the illegality in the case before us today stems from the illegal conspiracy, rather than the predatory character of the price, does not change the analysis of "that which makes defendants' acts unlawful."<sup>8</sup> [****45] [***355] Thus, notwithstanding any temporary benefit [****44] to consumers, the unlawful pricing practice that is harmful in the long run to competition causes "antitrust injury" for which a competitor may seek damages.<sup>9</sup>

[*352] Second, USA is directly and immediately harmed by this price-fixing scheme, that is to say, by "that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Id., at 489. In Brunswick, the allegedly illegal conduct at issue -- the merger -- itself did not harm the plaintiffs; similarly, in Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104 \(1986\), the alleged injury arose not from the illegality of the proposed merger, but merely from possible postmerger behavior. Although the link between the illegal mergers and the alleged harms was insufficient to prove antitrust injury in either Brunswick or Cargill, both of those cases recognize that illegal pricing practices may [**1899] cause competitors "antitrust injury."<sup>10</sup>

[****46] The Court accepts that, as alleged, the vertical price-fixing scheme by ARCO is per se illegal under § 1. Nevertheless, it denies USA standing to challenge the arrangement because it is neither a consumer nor a dealer in the vertical arrangement, but only a competitor of ARCO: The "antitrust laws were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Ante, at 338 (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320 \(1962\)). This proposition -- which is often used as a test of whether a violation of law occurred -- cannot be read to deny all remedial actions by competitors. [*353] When competitors are injured by illicit agreements among their rivals rather than by the free play of market forces, the antitrust laws protect competitors precisely for the purpose of <sup>8</sup> Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489 \(1977\). The analysis in Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104 \(1986\), also supports this conclusion. There, the respondent alleged "antitrust injury" on alternative theories: first, that after the challenged merger petitioners' company would be able to lower its prices because it would be more efficient; and second, that it might attempt to drive respondent out of business by engaging in sustained predatory pricing. We rejected the first theory because independent decisions to reduce prices based on efficiencies are legal and precisely what the antitrust laws are intended to encourage. Id., at 116-117. We rejected the second theory because respondent "neither raised nor proved any claim of predatory pricing before the District Court." Id., at 119. However, in discussing the second theory, we recognized that predatory pricing "is a practice that harms both competitors and competition," and because it aims at "the elimination of competition . . . . is thus a practice 'inimical to the purposes of [the antitrust] laws,' Brunswick, 429 U.S., at 488, and one capable of inflicting antitrust injury." Id., at 117-118 (footnote omitted). Again, a competitor suffers the same "antitrust injury" from an illegal conspiracy setting prices designed to eliminate it as it would suffer from a single firm setting predatory prices.

<sup>9</sup> See also Blair & Harrison, Rethinking Antitrust Injury, 42 Vand. L. Rev. 1539, 1561-1565 \(1989\) (unsuccessful predatory efforts cause "antitrust injury" even though consumers have not suffered).

<sup>10</sup> I agree that not every loss that is causally related to an antitrust violation is "antitrust injury," ante, at 339, n. 8, but a scheme that prices the services of conspirators below those of competitors may cause injury for which the competitor may recover damages under § 4. In Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465 \(1982\), the presumed injury to competitors was strong enough to support even an indirect action by a patient of the competitor. Petitioners, a medical insurance company and an organization of psychiatrists, conspired in violation of § 1 to compensate patients for the services of psychiatrists, but not those of psychologists. We recognized that if patients had chosen to go to psychiatrists, the "antitrust injury would have been borne in the first instance by the [psychologist] competitors of the conspirators." Id., at 483. Instead, patient McCready went to a psychologist at her own expense. We held that "[a]lthough McCready was not a competitor of the conspirators, the injury she suffered was inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict on the psychologists and the psychotherapy market." Id., at 483-484.

protecting competition. The Court nevertheless interprets the proposition as categorically excluding actions by a competitor who suffers when others charge "nonpredatory prices pursuant to a vertical, maximum-price-fixing scheme." Ante, at 331. In the context of a § 1 violation, however, the distinctions both of the price level [***356] and of the vertical nature of the conspiracy [****47] are unfounded. Each of these two analytical errors merits discussion.

III

The Court limits its holding to cases in which the noncompetitive price is not "predatory," ante, at 331, 333, n. 3, 335, 339, 340, essentially assuming that any nonpredatory price set by an illegal conspiracy is lawful, see n. 1, supra. This is quite wrong. Unlike the prohibitions against monopolizing or underselling in violation of § 2 or § 13a, the gravamen of the price-fixing conspiracy condemned by § 1 is unrelated to the level of the administered price at any particular point in time. A price fixed by a single seller acting independently may be unlawful because it is predatory, but the reasonableness of the price set by an illegal conspiracy is wholly irrelevant to whether the conspirators' work product is illegal.

If any proposition is firmly settled in the law of antitrust, it is the rule that the reasonableness of the particular price agreed upon by defendants does not constitute a defense to a price-fixing charge.<sup>11</sup> [***50] In United States v. Trenton Potteries [*354] Co., 273 U.S. 392 (1927), the Court explained that "[t]he reasonable price fixed today may through economic [***48] and business changes become the unreasonable price of tomorrow," id., at 397, and cautioned that

"[**1900] in the absence of express legislation requiring it, we should hesitate to adopt a construction making the difference between legal and illegal conduct in the field of business relations depend upon so uncertain a test as whether prices are reasonable -- a determination which can be satisfactorily made only after a complete survey of our economic organization and a choice between rival philosophies." Id., at 398.

See also United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265, 281-282 (1942). This reasoning applies with equal force to a rule that provides conspirators with a defense if their agreed upon prices are nonpredatory, but no defense if their prices fall below the elusive line that defines predatory pricing.<sup>12</sup> [***357] By assuming that the level of a price is relevant to the inquiry in a § 1 conspiracy case, the Court sets sail on the "sea of doubt" that Judge Taft condemned in his classic opinion in the Addyston Pipe & Steel case:

"It is true that there are some cases in which the courts, mistaking, as we conceive, [***49] the proper limits of the relaxation of the rules for determining the unreasonableness of restraints of trade, have set sail on a sea of [*355] doubt, and have assumed the power to say, in respect to contracts which have no other purpose and no other consideration on either side than the mutual restraint of the parties, how much restraint of competition is in the public interest, and how much is not." United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271, 283-284 (CA6 1898).

<sup>11</sup> See United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 398 (1927); see also United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290 (1897); United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271, 291 (CA6 1898) ("[T]he association of the defendants, however reasonable the prices they fixed, however great the competition they had to encounter, and however great the necessity for curbing themselves by joint agreement from committing financial suicide by ill-advised competition, was void at common law, because in restraint of trade, and tending to a monopoly").

<sup>12</sup> Like the determination of a "reasonable" price, determination of what is a "predatory price" is far from certain. The Court declines to define predatory pricing for the purpose of the § 4 inquiry it creates today, ante, at 341, n. 10. Predatory pricing by a conspiracy, rather than a single actor, may result from more than pricing below an appropriate measure of cost. See Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585, n. 8 (1986). See also A.A. Poultry Farms, Inc. v. Rose Acre Farms, Inc., 881 F. 2d 1396, 1400 (CA7 1989) (describing the many considerations in a single firm case that make it difficult to infer predatory conduct from the relation of price to cost).

IV

The Court is also careful to limit its holding to cases involving "vertical" price-fixing agreements. In a thinly veiled circumscription of the substantive reach of § 1, the Court simply interprets "antitrust injury" under § 4 so that it excludes challenges by any competitor alleging a vertical conspiracy: "[A] vertical price-fixing scheme may facilitate predatory [****51] pricing . . . [b]ut because a firm always is able to challenge directly a rival's pricing as predatory, there is no reason to dispense with the antitrust injury requirement in an action by a competitor against a vertical agreement." Ante, at 339, n. 9.<sup>13</sup> This focus on the vertical character of the agreement is misleading because it incorrectly assumes that there is a sharp distinction between vertical and horizontal arrangements, and because it assumes that all vertical arrangements affect competition in the same way.

The characterization of ARCO's price-fixing arrangement as "vertical" does not limit its potential consequences to a neat category of injuries. A horizontal conspiracy among ARCO retailers administered by, for example, trade association executives instead of executives [****52] of their common supplier would generate exactly the same anticompetitive consequences. ARCO and its retail dealers all share an interest in excluding independents like USA from the market. The fact [*356] that each member of a group of price fixers may have made a separate, individual agreement with their common agent does not destroy the horizontal character of the agreement. We so held in the Masonite case:

[**1901] "[T]here can be no doubt that this is a price-fixing combination which is illegal per se under the Sherman Act. United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392 [(1927)]; Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436 [(1940)]; United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150 [(1940)]. That is true though the District Court found that, in negotiating and entering into the first agreements, each appellee, other than Masonite, acted independently [***358] of the others, negotiated only with Masonite, desired the agreement regardless of the action that might be taken by any of the others, did not require as a condition of its acceptance that Masonite make such an agreement with any of the [***53] others, and had no discussions with any of the others. . . . Prices are fixed when they are agreed upon. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., supra, p. 222. The fixing of prices by one member of a group, pursuant to express delegation, acquiescence, or understanding, is just as illegal as the fixing of prices by direct, joint action. Id."<sup>14</sup>

Differences between vertical and horizontal agreements may support an argument that the former are more reasonable, and therefore more likely to be upheld as lawful, than the latter. But such differences provide no support for the Court's contradictory reasoning that the direct and intended consequences of one form of conspiracy [****54] do not constitute "antitrust injury," while precisely the same consequences of the other form do.

[*357] Finally, the Court's treatment of vertical maximum-price-fixing arrangements necessarily assumes that all such conspiracies have the same competitive consequences. Ante, at 337, 339-340, 345. The Court is again quite wrong.<sup>15</sup> For example, a price agreement that is ancillary to an exclusive distributorship might protect consumers

<sup>13</sup> Thus, a victim of a vertical maximum-price-fixing conspiracy that is successfully driving it from the market cannot bring an action under § 1 as long as the conspirators take care to fix their prices at "nonpredatory" levels.

<sup>14</sup> United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265, 274-276 (1942). See also ante, at 336, n. 6 (suggesting a horizontal component of the maximum-price-fixing arrangement in Kiefer-Stewart); Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 744-748 (1988) (STEVENS, J., dissenting).

<sup>15</sup> Indeed, the Court elsewhere acknowledges that "[m]aximum and minimum price fixing may have different consequences in many situations." Ante, at 343, n. 13 (quoting Albrecht, 390 U.S. at 152). This is quite true. See, e.g., Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 348 (1982) (the per se rule against maximum prices guards against the elimination of competition, discouraging entry into the market, deterring experimentation, and allowing hidden price setting); Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 51, n. 18 (1977) (vertical price fixing reduces interbrand and intrabrand competition and may facilitate cartelizing). In Sylvania, the Court also recognized that "Congress recently has expressed its approval of a per se analysis of vertical price restrictions by repealing those provisions of the Miller-Tydings and McGuire Acts allowing fair-trade pricing at the option of the individual States." Ibid. See also White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 268 (1963)

495 U.S. 328, *357; 110 S. Ct. 1884, **1901; 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, ***358; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 2543, ****54

from an attempt by the distributor to exploit its limited monopoly. However, a conclusion that such an agreement would not cause any antitrust injury lends no support to the Court's holding that an illegal price arrangement designed to drive a competitor out of business is immune from challenge by its intended victim.<sup>16</sup>

[****55] [*358] [***359] [**1902] V

In a conspiracy case we should always ask ourselves why the defendants have elected to act in concert rather than independently.<sup>17</sup> Although in certain situations collective action may actually foster competition, see, e.g., National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85 (1984), we normally presume that the free market functions most effectively when individual entrepreneurs act independently. This is true with respect to both maximum and minimum pricing arrangements.

[****56] Professor Sullivan recognized that producers fixing maximum prices "are not acting from undiluted altruism," but [*359] from self-interested goals such as prevention of new entries into the market. L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 211 (1977). He described the broad policy reasons to prohibit collusive pricing:

"The policy which insists on individual decisions about price thus has at its source more than a preference for the independence of the small businessman (though that is surely there) and more than a preference for the lower prices which such a policy will usually yield to consumers (though that too is strongly present). Also at work is the theoretical conviction that the most general function of the competitive process, the allocation and reallocation of resources in a rational yet automatic manner, can be carried out only if independence by each trader is scrupulously required. Created out of the confluence of these parallel strivings, the policy has a breadth [***360] which makes it as forbidding to maximum price arrangements as to the more common ones which forestall price decreases." Id. at 212.

(BRENNAN, J., concurring) ("Resale price maintenance is not only designed to, but almost invariably does in fact, reduce price competition not only among sellers of the affected product, but quite as much between that product and competing brands").

<sup>16</sup> The Court grudgingly "assume[s], arguendo, that Albrecht correctly held that vertical, maximum price fixing is subject to the per se rule," ante, at 335, n. 5, but seeks to limit that holding to "potential effects on dealers and consumers, not . . . competitors," ante, at 336. However, in its zeal to narrow antitrust injury, the Court assumes that all vertical maximum-price-fixing arrangements mimic the circumstances present or discussed in Albrecht, in which there was monopoly power at both the production and exclusive distributorship stages. This approach is incorrect. For example, in Albrecht itself the Court identified possible injury to consumers as one basis for its per se rule, even though there was no evidence of actual consumer injury in that case. 390 U.S. at 152-153. Furthermore, the Albrecht Court did not treat Albrecht himself as a "dealer" in the conspiracy, but essentially as a "competitor" targeted by the price-fixing conspiracy between Herald Company and the new dealers that were hired "to force petitioner to conform to the advertised retail price" by selling newspapers in his territory at lower, fixed prices. Id. at 149-150, and n. 6. Although Albrecht was a potential Herald dealer -- and thus not strictly a "dealer" or a "competitor" in the Court's use of those terms -- what is critical is that he had standing to bring a § 1 action as the victim of a vertical conspiracy to underprice his sales. Finally, the Court contradicts its own contrived model when it admits that vertical maximum-price-fixing schemes may facilitate predatory pricing for which a competitor could suffer "antitrust injury" in violation of § 2. Ante, at 339, n. 9.

<sup>17</sup> Until today, the Court has clearly understood why § 1 fundamentally differs from other antitrust violations:

"The reason Congress treated concerted behavior more strictly than unilateral behavior is readily appreciated. Concerted activity inherently is fraught with anticompetitive risk. It deprives the marketplace of the independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands. In any conspiracy, two or more entities that previously pursued their own interests separately are combining to act as one for their common benefit. This not only reduces the diverse directions in which economic power is aimed but suddenly increases the economic power moving in one particular direction. Of course, such mergers of resources may well lead to efficiencies that benefit consumers, but their anticompetitive potential is sufficient to warrant scrutiny even in the absence of incipient monopoly." Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768-769 (1984).

495 U.S. 328, *359; 110 S. Ct. 1884, **1902; 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, ***360; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 2543, ****56

In carving out this exception to the enforcement of § 1, [****57] the Court has chosen to second-guess the wisdom of our per se rules and to embark on the questionable enterprise of parsing illegal conspiracies. This approach fails to heed the prudence urged in *United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596 \(1972\)*:

"The fact is that courts are of limited utility in examining difficult economic problems. Our inability to weigh, in any meaningful sense, destruction of competition in one sector of the economy against [**1903] promotion of competition in another sector is one important reason we have formulated per se rules.

"In applying these rigid rules, the Court has consistently rejected the notion that naked restraints of trade are to be tolerated because they are well intended or because they are allegedly developed to increase competition.

[*360] E.g., *United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 146-147 \(1966\)*; *United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265 \(1942\)*; *Fashion Originators' Guild v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457 \(1941\)*." Id., at 609-610.

The Court, in its haste to excuse illegal behavior in the name of efficiency,<sup>18</sup> has cast aside a century of understanding [****58] that our antitrust laws are designed to safeguard more than efficiency and consumer welfare,<sup>19</sup> and that private actions not only compensate the injured, but also deter wrongdoers.<sup>20</sup>

[****59] [*361] [***361] As we explained in *United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 183 \(1911\)*: "[I]t was the danger which it was deemed would arise to individual liberty and the public well-being from acts like those which this record exhibits, which led the legislative mind to conceive and to enact the Anti-trust Act." The conspiracy alleged in this complaint poses the kind of threat to individual liberty and the free market that the Sherman Act was enacted to prevent. In holding such a conspiracy immune from challenge by its intended victim, the Court is unfaithful to its history of [**1904] respect for this "charter of freedom."<sup>21</sup>

<sup>18</sup> See, e.g., ante, at 337-338, n. 7 ("Rivals cannot be excluded in the long run by a nonpredatory maximum-price scheme unless they are relatively inefficient"); ante, at 344 ("[I]nsofar as the per se rule permits the prohibition of efficient practices in the name of simplicity, the need for the antitrust injury requirement is underscored"). Firms may properly go out of business because they are inefficient; market inefficiencies may also create imperfections leading to some firms' demise. The Court sanctions a new force -- the super-efficiency of an illegally combined group of firms who target their resources to drive an otherwise competitive firm out of business. Cf. Note, Below-Cost Sales and the Buying of Market Share, *42 Stan. L. Rev. 695, 741 \(1990\)* (discussing long-term displacement of "otherwise efficient producers" by pricing to buy out a market share in a geographic area).

<sup>19</sup> Chief Justice Hughes regarded the Sherman Act as a "charter of freedom," *Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U.S. 344, 359 \(1933\)*. Judge Learned Hand recognized Congress' desire to strengthen small business concerns and to "put an end to great aggregations of capital because of the helplessness of the individual before them," *United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416, 428-429 \(CA2 1945\)*, and we recently reaffirmed that the Sherman Act is "the Magna Carta of free enterprise," *United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 610 \(1972\)*. See also, e.g., Handler, Is Antitrust's Centennial a Time for Obsequies or for Renewed Faith in its National Policy? 10 Cardozo L. Rev. 1933 (1989); Hovenkamp, Distributive Justice and the Antitrust Laws, 51 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 1 (1982); Flynn & Ponsoldt, Legal Reasoning and the Jurisprudence of Vertical Restraints: The Limitations of Neoclassical Economic Analysis in the Resolution of Antitrust Disputes, *62 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 1125, 1137-1141 \(1987\)* (discussing the political, social, and moral -- as well as economic -- goals motivating Congress in enacting antitrust legislation).

<sup>20</sup> See, e.g., *Simpson v. Union Oil Co. of California, 377 U.S. 13 \(1964\)*; see also Polden, Antitrust Standing and the Rule Against Resale Price Maintenance, 37 Clev. St. L. Rev. 179, 208-209, 220-221 (1989) (§ 4 furthers congressional objectives of deterrence and compensation by allowing private suits by injured competitors); Blair & Harrison, 42 Vand. L. Rev., at 1564-1565 (treating losses of firms that are targeted by unsuccessful predatory efforts as "antitrust injury" furthers private enforcement of antitrust laws and avoids "suboptimal levels of deterrence").

The Court of Appeals below observed that barring competitor standing leaves enforcement of the "vast majority of unlawful maximum resale price agreements" in the hands of "an unenthusiastic Department of Justice and, under certain circumstances, the dealers who are parties to the resale price maintenance agreement." *859 F. 2d 687, 694, n. 5 \(CA9 1988\)*.

<sup>21</sup> *Appalachian Coals, Inc., 288 U.S., at 359*.

I respectfully dissent.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices [****601 289]

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:175

12B Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:191, 48:212, 48:214, 48:218, 48:231, 48:261, 48:272

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, Forms 11, 31-35

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1, 15

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 14, 67

Index to Annotations, Dealers and Distributors; Gas and Oil; Price Fixing; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; Vertical Arrangements

Annotation References:

Standing to sue, under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) and predecessor statute, to recover treble damages for antitrust violation-- Supreme Court cases. 73 L Ed 2d 1427.

Supreme Court's views as to what constitutes per se illegal "price fixing" under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 64 L Ed 2d 997.

Vertical restraints on sales territory or location as violative of 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) [****61] --post-GTE Sylvania cases. 92 ALR Fed 436.

"Target area" doctrine as basis for determining standing to sue under 4 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) allowing treble damages for violation of antitrust laws. 70 ALR Fed 637.

Vertical territorial and customer restraints as per se violations of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1): Post-Schwinn cases. 30 ALR Fed 19.

Comment Note.--What constitutes "attempt to monopolize," within meaning of 2 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 2). 27 ALR Fed 762.

Texaco, Inc. v. Hasbrouck

Supreme Court of the United States

December 5, 1989, Argued ; June 14, 1990, Decided

No. 87-2048

Reporter

496 U.S. 543 *; 110 S. Ct. 2535 **; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492 ***; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142 ****; 58 U.S.L.W. 4807; 1990-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,056

TEXACO INC., PETITIONER v. RICKY HASBROUCK, DBA RICK'S TEXACO, ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] On petition for writ of certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Disposition: 842 F.2d 1034, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

discount, retail, customers, prices, stations, distributor, wholesalers, price discrimination, supplier, damages, purchasers, gasoline, differential, marketing, respondents', functions, seller, sales, commerce, buyer, antitrust, compete, supplied, lower price, reimbursement, Robinson-Patman Act, integrated, rigorous, savings, injure

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Contracts Law > Personal Property > Bona Fide Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Promotional Allowances & Services

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN1[ Defenses, Meeting Competition Defense

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(b\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN2[ Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

There may be a Robinson-Patman Act (Act), 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, violation even if favored and disfavored buyers do not compete, so long as the customers of a favored buyer compete with a disfavored buyer or its customers. A § 13\(a\) violation may occur if (1) a discount received is not cost-based and (2) all or a portion of it is passed on by them to customers of theirs. To hold that price discrimination between a wholesaler and a retailer could never violate the Act would leave immune from antitrust scrutiny a discriminatory pricing procedure that can effectively serve to harm competition. Such a result would be contrary to the objectives of the Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

**HN3** [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Cost Justification Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

**HN4** [] Defenses, Cost Justification Defense

The Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, contains no express reference to functional discounts. It does contain two affirmative defenses that provide protection for two categories of discounts, those that are justified by savings in a seller's cost of manufacture, delivery or sale, and those that represent a good faith response to equally low prices of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Gasoline Fuels > Gasoline Dealers & Distributors

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

**HN5** [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

In order to establish a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, respondents have the burden of proving four facts: (1) that the seller's sales were made in interstate commerce; (2) that the product or commodity sold was of the same grade and quality as that sold to respondents; (3) that seller discriminated in price as between the purchasers; and (4) that the discrimination had a prohibited effect on competition. 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

496 U.S. 543, *543; 110 S. Ct. 2535, **2535; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, ***492; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142, ****1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN6 [down] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

To recover damages under the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, a party has the burden of proving the extent of his actual injuries.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN7 [down] Price Discrimination, Defenses

A discrimination is more than a mere difference. Underlying the meaning of the word is the idea that some relationship exists between parties to the discrimination which entitles them to equal treatment, whereby the difference granted to one casts some burden or disadvantage upon the other. If two are competing in the resale of the goods concerned, that relationship exists. Where, also, a price to one is so low as to involve a sacrifice of some part of a seller's necessary costs and profit as applied to that business, it leaves that deficit inevitably to be made up in higher prices to his other customers; and there, too, a relationship may exist upon which to base the charge of discrimination. Where no such relationship exists, where goods are sold in different markets and the conditions affecting those markets set different price levels for them, a sale to different customers at those different prices would not constitute a discrimination within the meaning of 15 U.S.C.S. § 13.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Cost Justification Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

HN8 [down] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A price discrimination within the meaning of 15 U.S.C.S. § 13 is merely a price difference. Section 13 itself spells out the conditions which make a price difference illegal or legal. Were a court to read other conditions into the law by means of the nondirective phrase "discriminate in price," it would derange the integrated statutory scheme. Not only would such action be contrary to the meaning of the statute, but, perhaps because of this, it would be thoroughly undesirable. Inevitably every legal controversy over any price difference would shift from the detailed governing provisions, "injury," cost justification, and "meeting competition," over into the "discrimination" concept of ad hoc resolution divorced from specifically pertinent statutory text.

496 U.S. 543, *543; 110 S. Ct. 2535, **2535; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, ***492; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142, ****1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN9 [blue download icon] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

An injury to competition under 15 U.S.C.S. § 13 may be inferred from evidence that some purchasers had to pay their supplier substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Price Discrimination, Defenses

Suppliers granting functional discounts either to single-function or to integrated buyers should not be held responsible for any consequences of their customers' pricing tactics. Price cutting at the resale level is not in fact, and should not be held in law, "the effect of" a differential that merely accords due recognition and reimbursement for actual marketing functions. The price cutting of a customer who receives this type of differential results from his own independent decision to lower price and operate at a lower profit margin per unit. The legality or illegality of this price cutting must be judged by the usual legal tests. In any event, consequent injury or lack of injury should not be a supplier's legal concern. On the other hand, the law should tolerate no subterfuge. A distributor should be eligible for a discount corresponding to any part of the function he actually performs on that part of the goods for which he performs it under 15 U.S.C.S. § 13.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Cost Justification Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

HN11 [blue download icon] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A supplier need not satisfy the rigorous requirements of a cost justification defense in order to prove that a particular functional discount is reasonable and accordingly did not cause any substantial lessening of competition between a wholesaler's customers and a supplier's direct customers. To establish the defense a seller must show that the price reductions given did not exceed actual cost savings and this requirement of exactitude is ill-suited to the defense of discounts set by reference to legitimate, but less precisely measured, market factors. Discounters will therefore likely find it more useful to defend against claims under the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, by negating the causation element in a case against them: a legitimate functional discount will not cause any substantial lessening of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Cost Justification Defense

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > Burdens of Proof

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Rates & Tariffs

HN12 [ ] Defenses, Cost Justification Defense

Conceived as a vehicle for allowing differential pricing to reward distributive efficiencies among customers operating at the same level, a cost justification defense focuses on narrowly defined savings to a seller derived from the different method or quantities in which goods are sold or delivered to different buyers. Moreover, the burden of proof as to a cost justification defense is on a seller charged with violating the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, whereas the burden of proof remains with an enforcement agency or plaintiff in circumstances involving functional discounts since functional pricing negates the probability of competitive injury, an element of a prima facie case of violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN13 [ ] Price Discrimination, Defenses

A price differential that merely accords due recognition and reimbursement for actual marketing functions is not illegal under the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN14 [ ] Price Discrimination, Defenses

Functional discounts provide no safe harbor from the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

**HN15** [+] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Courts will not construe the Robinson-Patman Act (Act), 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, in a way that would allow price discriminators to avoid the sanctions of the Act by the simple expedient of adding an additional link to the distribution chain.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Buyer Liability

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

**HN16** [+] Price Discrimination, Buyer Liability

The competitive injury component of a Robinson-Patman Act (Act), 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, violation is not limited to an injury to competition between a favored and a disfavored purchaser; it also encompasses an injury to competition between their customers. Act language, which specifically encompasses not only the adverse effect of price discrimination on persons who either grant or knowingly receive the benefit of such discrimination, but also on customers of either of them. Such indirect competitive effects surely may not be presumed automatically in every functional discount setting, and, indeed, one would expect that most functional discounts will be legitimate discounts which do not cause harm to competition. At the least, a functional discount that constitutes a reasonable reimbursement for purchasers' actual marketing functions will not violate the Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

**HN17** [+] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A plaintiff may not recover damages merely by showing a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13; rather, a plaintiff must also make some showing of actual injury attributable to something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. However, antitrust plaintiffs are excused from an unduly rigorous standard of proving antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN18 [ ] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Damage issues in Robinson-Patman, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, cases are rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Gasoline supplier's discounts to two distributors held not legitimate functional discounts, and thus held to violate 2(a) of Clayton Act, as amended by Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)).

Summary

In general, a supplier's functional discount is said to be a discount given to a purchaser based on the purchaser's role in the supplier's distributive system, reflecting, at least in a generalized sense, the services performed by the purchaser for the supplier. A particular supplier (1) sold gasoline directly to independent retailers in Spokane, Washington at the supplier's retail tank wagon prices, and (2) granted substantial discounts to two distributors which (a) engaged in retail operations as well, and (b) increased their sales volume. Several independent retailers whose sales had suffered a decline filed an action against the supplier in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington and alleged that the supplier's distributor discounts violated 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), which makes it unlawful to discriminate in price between different purchasers, where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them. The supplier, however, contended that it had granted the distributors legitimate functional discounts, which did not violate the Act. After the case had been remanded once for a new trial, the jury in the second trial returned a verdict in favor of the independent retailers. The District Court denied the supplier's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and, in an opinion supplementing the court's oral ruling denying the supplier's motion for a directed verdict, expressed the view that any presumed legality of functional discounts had been rebutted by evidence that the amount of the discounts to the distributors was not related to the cost of any function that the distributors performed (634 F Supp 34). On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, in affirming, expressed the view that the independent retailers had presented ample evidence to demonstrate that the services performed by the distributors were insubstantial and did not justify the functional discounts (initial opinion at 830 F2d 1513, amended opinion at 842 F2d 1034).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Stevens, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and Brennan, Marshall, Blackmun, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held that, although a legitimate functional discount constituting a reasonable reimbursement for a purchaser's actual marketing functions does not violate 2(a), the record in the case at hand adequately supported a finding that the supplier's distributor discounts were not legitimate functional discounts, and thus violated 2(a), where there was evidence that (1) one distributor was separately compensated for its hauling function; (2) neither distributor maintained any significant storage facilities;

(3) both distributors received the full discount on all their purchases even though most of their volume was resold directly to consumers; (4) the extra margin on such sales enabled the distributors to price aggressively in both their retail and wholesale marketing; (5) the supplier was fully informed about the persistent and marketwide consequences of its own pricing activity; (6) the supplier's own executives recognized that the dramatic impact on the market was almost entirely attributable to the magnitude of the distributor discounts and the hauling allowance; and (7) at the same time that the supplier was affirmatively encouraging one distributor to expand its retail business and integrate downward, and was providing the distributor with a generous discount useful to such integration, the supplier was inhibiting upward integration by the independent retailers by refusing permission to two of the independent retailers to haul their own fuel using their own tank wagons.

White, J., concurring in the result, expressed the view that (1) in the absence of congressional attention to the longstanding issue as to whether legitimate functional discounts violated 2(a), he would await a case challenging a functional discount ruling by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), at which time the Supreme Court would be reviewing a construction of the Act by the FTC and the FTC's explanation of legitimate functional discount pricing; but (2) the case at hand was a private action for treble damages in which the Supreme Court ruled against the seller-discounter, since under no definition of a legitimate functional discount did the discounts extended in the case at hand qualify as a defense to a charge of price discrimination.

Scalia, J., joined by Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment, expressed the view that (1) while he agreed with the court that none of the arguments pressed by the supplier for removing the supplier's conduct from the coverage of the Robinson-Patman Act was persuasive, he could not adopt the court's reasoning, which seemed to create an exemption for functional discounts that are "reasonable" even though prohibited by the text of the Act; and (2) although there might be a plausible argument that a functional basis for differential pricing would negate the possibility of competitive injury in a market that was really functionally divided, the merits of that argument ought not to be decided by the Supreme Court in the first instance, as the argument (a) had not been raised by the parties before the court or below, and (b) called forth a number of issues that would benefit from briefing and factual development.

Headnotes

---

EVIDENCE §979 > sufficiency -- Robinson-Patman Act violation -- functional discounts -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F] [LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [1G]

In a suit by several independent retailers against a supplier which sold gasoline both to the independent retailers and to two distributors which engaged in retail operations as well, the record adequately supports the finding that the supplier's discounts to the distributors were not legitimate functional discounts, and thus violated 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\))--which makes it unlawful to discriminate in price between purchasers, where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them--where there is evidence that (1) one distributor was separately compensated for its hauling function; (2) neither distributor maintained any significant storage facilities; (3) both distributors received the full discount on all their purchases even though most of their volume was resold directly to consumers; (4) the extra margin on such sales enabled the distributors to price aggressively in both their retail and wholesale marketing; (5) the supplier was fully informed about the persistent and marketwide consequences of its own pricing activity; (6) the supplier's own executives recognized that the dramatic impact on the market was almost entirely attributable to the magnitude of the distributor discounts and the hauling allowance; and (7) at the same time that the supplier was affirmatively encouraging one distributor to expand its retail business and integrate downward, and was providing the distributor with a generous discount useful to such integration, the supplier was inhibiting upward integration by the independent retailers by refusing permission to two of the independent retailers to haul their own fuel using their own tank wagons.

496 U.S. 543, *543; 110 S. Ct. 2535, **2535; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, ***492; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142, ****1

APPEAL §1326 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §38 > discounts -- price discrimination -- defenses -- what reviewable -- denial of motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C]

With respect to 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13), even though the price-discrimination prohibition in 2(a) (15 USCS 13\(a\)) contains no express reference to functional discounts, two affirmative defenses provide protection for two categories of discounts--those discounts that (1) under 2(a), are justified by savings in the supplier's cost of manufacture, delivery, or sale, or (2) under 2(b) (15 USCS 13\(b\)), represent a good-faith response to the equally low prices of a competitor; with respect to a claim by several independent retailers in a Federal District Court suit that a gasoline supplier's discounts to two distributors violated 2(a), however, neither of those two defenses is available to the supplier as the case comes to the United States Supreme Court on certiorari--even though the supplier contended in the District Court that the special prices to the distributors were justified by cost savings, were a good-faith effort to meet competition, and were "legitimate functional discounts"--where (1) the District Court withheld the cost-justification defense from the jury on the ground that the cost-justification defense was not supported by the evidence, (2) the jury rejected the other defenses, (3) the supplier's motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, which motion was denied by the District Court, claimed that, as a matter of law, the supplier's functional discounts did not violate 2, and (4) the Supreme Court granted certiorari to consider the supplier's contention that legitimate functional discounts do not violate 2.

APPEAL §1457 > review of jury verdict -- conflicting evidence -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

On certiorari to review a gasoline supplier's liability to several independent retailers for an alleged violation of 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), the United States Supreme Court, given the jury's general verdict in favor of the independent retailers, will resolve disputed questions of fact in the independent retailers' favor.

DAMAGES §159 > injury to business -- Robinson-Patman Act -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

In a suit by several independent retailers against a gasoline supplier, which suit is based upon a claim that the supplier's discounts to two distributors constituted price discrimination in violation of 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), it is improper to award damages measured by the difference between (1) the retail tank wagon price at which the supplier sold gasoline directly to the independent retailers, and (2) the price paid by one of the distributors.

EVIDENCE §167 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > STATUTES §82 > price discrimination -- functional discounts -- assumption of legislative intent -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B] [LEdHN\[5C\]](#) [5C] [LEdHN\[5D\]](#) [5D] [LEdHN\[5E\]](#) [5E] [LEdHN\[5F\]](#) [5F]

Under a definition of a supplier's functional discount as a discount given to a purchaser based on the purchaser's role in the supplier's distributive system, reflecting, at least in a generalized sense, the services performed by the purchaser for the supplier, there is no blanket exemption for such functional discounts from 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), which makes it unlawful in certain circumstances to "discriminate in price," where the claimed exemption would be based upon the comment by a sponsor of the Act--to the effect that 2(a) price discrimination requires some relationship's existing between the parties to the discrimination which entitles them to equal treatment, whereby the difference granted to one casts some burden or disadvantage upon the other--because such an exemption is foreclosed by the text of 2(a) itself, under which price discrimination is merely a price difference; it is anomalous to assume that Congress intended the term "discriminate" to have such a limited meaning, in the context of a statute that (1) reveals a concern with competitive consequences at different levels of distribution, and (2) carefully defines specific affirmative defenses; there are no overtones of business buccaneering in the 2(a) phrase "discriminate in price"; the statute itself spells out the conditions which make a price difference legal or illegal, and it would derange the statutory scheme to read other conditions into the law by means of the nondirective phrase "discriminate in price," for such action would not only be contrary to the meaning of the statute, but also have undesirable consequences.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §38 > STATUTES

§158.8 > price discrimination -- functional discounts -- presumptions -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B] [LEdHN\[6C\]](#) [6C] [LEdHN\[6D\]](#) [6D] [LEdHN\[6E\]](#) [6E] [LEdHN\[6F\]](#) [6F] [LEdHN\[6G\]](#) [6G] [LEdHN\[6H\]](#) [6H] [LEdHN\[6I\]](#) [6I] [LEdHN\[6J\]](#) [6J] [LEdHN\[6K\]](#) [6K] [LEdHN\[6L\]](#) [6L] [LEdHN\[6M\]](#) [6M] [LEdHN\[6N\]](#) [6N]

At the least--under a definition of a supplier's functional discount as a discount given to a purchaser based on the purchaser's role in the supplier's distributive system, reflecting, at least in a generalized sense, the services performed by the purchaser for the supplier--a functional discount that constitutes a reasonable reimbursement for the purchaser's actual marketing functions does not violate 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), which makes it unlawful to discriminate in price between purchasers where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them; indirect competitive-injury effects may not be presumed automatically in a functional discount setting, and, when a functional discount is legitimate, an inference of injury to competition--which may otherwise be established by evidence that some purchasers had to pay their supplier substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay--will not arise; thus, a legitimate functional discount negates the causation element in the case against a discounter, for such a discount will not cause any substantial lessening of competition; not every functional discount is entitled to a judgment of legitimacy, however, and it will sometimes be possible to produce evidence showing that a particular functional discount caused price discrimination of the sort that 2(a) prohibits; thus, a functional discount that merely accords due recognition and reimbursement for actual marketing functions is not illegal, but 2(a) does not countenance a functional discount completely untethered to either the supplier's savings or the wholesaler's costs; such a construction of 2(a) is supported by (1) the practice of the Federal Trade Commission, which, while permitting legitimate functional discounts, has proceeded against those discounts which have appeared to be subterfuges to avoid 2(a)'s restrictions, and (2) the remarks of commentators who, while disagreeing as to the extent to which functional discounts are allowable, have agreed that, in exceptional cases, what is nominally a functional discount may be unjustifiable 2(a) price discrimination; while many cases may involve discounts made questionable because offered to complex types of distributors whose functions have become scrambled, such a general tendency does not preclude the possibility that a supplier might pursue a price-discrimination strategy despite the absence of any discrete mechanism for allocating favorable price discrepancy between secondary recipients (that is, favored and disfavored buyers) and tertiary recipients (that is, the customers of either of them). (White, Scalia, and Kennedy, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > STATUTES §145.6 > price discrimination -- functional discounts -- legislative history -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B] [LEdHN\[7C\]](#) [7C] [LEdHN\[7D\]](#) [7D]

With respect to a functional discount--that is, a discount given by a supplier to a purchaser based on the purchaser's role in the supplier's distributive system, reflecting, at least in a generalized sense, the services performed by the purchaser for the supplier--it is appropriate to begin consideration of the legal status of such a discount, under the price-discrimination prohibition in 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13), by examining the language of 2; while 2(a) of the Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)) contains no express reference to functional discounts, and while the legislative history indicates that earlier drafts to 2 did include a proviso excepting functional discounts, the deletion of the exception (1) has ambiguous significance, and (2) in any event, in no way detracts from the blunt direction of 2(a)'s statutory text, which indicates that any price discrimination substantially lessening competition will expose the discriminator to liability, regardless of whether the discriminator attempts to characterize the pricing scheme as a functional discount.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > burden of proof -- Robinson-Patman Act -- violation -- damages -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B] [LEdHN\[8C\]](#) [8C]

In an action by several independent retailers against a gasoline supplier, which action is based upon the independent retailers' claim that the supplier's discounts to two distributors violated 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), the independent retailers, in order to establish a violation of 2(a), have the burden of proving four facts--that (1) the supplier's sales to the distributors were made in interstate commerce, (2) the gasoline sold to the distributors was of the same grade and quantity of that sold to the independent retailers, (3) the supplier discriminated in price as between the distributors on the one hand and the independent retailers on the other, and (4) the discrimination had a prohibited effect on competition; moreover, for each such independent retailer to recover damages, the retailer has the burden of proving the extent of the retailer's actual damages; the independent retailers, however, do not need to show any benefit to the supplier from the price-discrimination scheme in order to establish a violation of 2(a).

EVIDENCE §211.3 > Robinson-Patman Act violation -- functional discounts -- burden of proof -- causation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9A\]](#) [9A] [LEdHN\[9B\]](#) [9B] [LEdHN\[9C\]](#) [9C] [LEdHN\[9D\]](#) [9D] [LEdHN\[9E\]](#) [9E]

With respect to the legal status of a functional discount--that is, a discount given by a supplier to a purchaser based on the purchaser's role in the supplier's distributive system, reflecting, at least in a generalized sense, the services performed by the purchaser for the supplier--under the price-discrimination prohibition in 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), while a supplier, in theory, could try to defend an allegedly legitimate functional discount by invoking 2(a)'s cost-justification defense, (1) the burden of proof with respect to the defense is on the supplier, and (2) a supplier, in order to establish the defense, must show that the price reductions given did not exceed the actual cost savings--a requirement of exactitude which is ill-suited to the defense of discounts set by reference to legitimate, but less precisely measured, market factors; however, a supplier need not satisfy the rigorous requirements of 2(a)'s cost-justification defense in order to prove that a particular functional discount is reasonable and accordingly did not cause any substantial lessening of the competition between a wholesaler's customers and the supplier's direct customers, for the concept of substantiality (1) permits the causation inquiry to accommodate a notion of economic reasonableness with respect to the pass-through effects of functional discounts, and (2) provides a latitude denied by the cost-justification defense. (White, Scalia, and Kennedy, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

496 U.S. 543, *543; 110 S. Ct. 2535, **2535; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, ***492; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142, ****1

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §38 > STATUTES §158.8 > price discrimination -- administrative construction -- functional discounts -- control of resale price -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [blue icon] [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [blue icon] [10B] [LEdHN\[10C\]](#) [blue icon] [10C] [LEdHN\[10D\]](#) [blue icon] [10D] [LEdHN\[10E\]](#) [blue icon] [10E]

Although the United States Supreme Court will cite from Federal Trade Commission (FTC) practice to support the Supreme Court's holding that--under a definition of a supplier's functional discount as a discount given to a purchaser based on the purchaser's role in the supplier's distributive system, reflecting, at least in a generalized sense, the services performed by the purchaser for the supplier--legitimate functional discounts do not violate 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), nothing in the Supreme Court's holding is to be read to condone or approve a result which rests upon a view that, under one FTC case, a supplier is charged with legal responsibility for the middlemen's pricing tactics, and hence (1) must control their resale prices lest they undercut the supplier to the unlawful detriment of the supplier's directly purchasing retailers, or (2) alternatively, may forego operational freedom by matching the supplier's quotations to retailers with the middlemen's; similarly, nothing in the Supreme Court's holding endorses a 2(a) theory so broad as the theory drawn by a commentator from that FTC case, where the theory is based on a flawed analysis which assumed that (1) seller liability for tertiary (that is, customer) implications of wholesaler discounts must follow the logic of the FTC's complaint in the case, and (2) such logic exposed to liability any seller who fails to monitor the resale prices of its wholesaler; also, the Supreme Court will reject the 2(a) requirement of exactitude which might otherwise be inferred from the dictum in another FTC case, which dictum is to the effect that the functional discount offered to a buyer should not exceed the cost of that part of the function that the buyer actually performs on that part of the goods for which the buyer performs the function. (White, Scalia, and Kennedy, JJ., dissented in part from this holding).

APPEAL §1331.5 > what reviewable -- discounts -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [blue icon] [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [blue icon] [11B] [LEdHN\[11C\]](#) [blue icon] [11C]

On certiorari to review a verdict in favor of several independent retailers whose suit was based on a claim that a gasoline supplier's discounts to two distributors violated 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), the United States Supreme Court need not address the relative merits of two Federal Trade Commission (FTC) decisions in order to resolve the case before the Supreme Court, where the FTC, in the second case, (1) expressly disavowed any dicta from the first case, which dicta suggested that functional discounts were per se legal if justified by the buyer's costs, and (2) held that such discounts were controlled instead by reasoning which referred to the value of the services to the supplier giving the discounts.

APPEAL §1662 > effect of decision on other grounds -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [blue icon] [12A] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [blue icon] [12B]

On certiorari to review a Federal Court of Appeals' decision as to liability under 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), the United States Supreme Court need not decide whether the Federal Government's interpretation, in an amicus brief, of the Court of Appeals' opinion is correct, where the Supreme Court affirms the Court of Appeals' judgment for reasons that do not entail the principles criticized by the Federal Government.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > price discrimination -- distribution links -- discounts -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13A\]](#) [13A] [LEdHN\[13B\]](#) [13B]

The United States Supreme Court will not construe 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\))--which makes it unlawful to discriminate in price between purchasers, where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them--in a way that would allow price discriminators to avoid the sanctions of 2(a) by the simple expedient of adding an additional link to the distribution chain; thus, for the purposes of determining, in a suit by several independent retailers against a supplier which sold gasoline both to the independent retailers and to two distributors which engaged in retail operations as well, whether the supplier's discounts to the distributors violated 2(a), the additional link in the distribution chain does not insulate the supplier from liability if the supplier's excessive discounts otherwise violated 2(a).

COURTS §93 > STATUTES §91 > faithfulness to intent -- rewriting -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14A\]](#) [14A] [LEdHN\[14B\]](#) [14B]

Unlike scholarly commentators, the United States Supreme Court has a duty to be faithful to congressional intent when interpreting a statute, and is not free to consider whether, or how, the statute should be rewritten.

COURTS §141 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §38 > price discrimination -- functional discounts -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15A\]](#) [15A] [LEdHN\[15B\]](#) [15B]

With respect to a supplier's functional discount--that is, a discount given to a purchaser based on the purchaser's role in the supplier's distributive system, reflecting, at least in a generalized sense, the services performed by the purchaser for the supplier--although a scholarly commentator describes the status of functional discounts under 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13), with dissatisfaction, the commentator's observations about the merits of the statute and about prosecutorial discretion are irrelevant to the United States Supreme Court's inquiry as to the legal status of such functional discounts under 2.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > presumptions -- rebuttal -- Robinson-Patman Act violation -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

For the purposes of determining, in a suit by several independent retailers against a supplier which sold gasoline both to the independent retailers and to two distributors which engaged in retail operations as well, whether the supplier's allegedly legitimate functional discounts to the distributors violated 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\))--which makes it unlawful to discriminate in price between purchasers, where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them--a presumption of an adverse effect on competition becomes all the more appropriate to the extent that the two distributors competed with the independent retailers in the retail market; the distributors' competitive advantage in the retail market constitutes evidence tending to rebut any presumption of legality that would otherwise apply to their wholesale sales.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36 > STATUTES §164 > price discrimination

-- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [▼] [17]

The competitive-injury component of a price discrimination violation of 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), is not limited to the injury to competition between the favored and the disfavored purchaser, but also encompasses the injury to competition between their customers; such a conclusion is compelled by the statutory language, which specifically encompasses the adverse effect of price discrimination on not only persons who either grant or knowingly receive the benefit of such discrimination, but also customers of either of them.

APPEAL §1092 > what reviewable -- issue not raised -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18A\]](#) [▼] [18A] [LEdHN\[18B\]](#) [▼] [18B]

On certiorari to review several independent retailers' suit against a gasoline supplier, which suit is based on a claim that the supplier's discounts to two distributors violated 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), the United States Supreme Court need not address the question whether, under 2(a), an inference of injury to competition might be negated by evidence that disfavored buyers could make purchases at a reasonable discount from favored buyers, where the parties do not raise the question.

DAMAGES §159 > JUDGMENT §314.5 > Robinson-Patman Act violation -- excessiveness of damages -- time for which awarded -- judgment notwithstanding verdict -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[19\]](#) [▼] [19]

With respect to the amount of damages awarded for the period 1972-1981 to several independent retailers in their suit against a supplier which sold gasoline both to the plaintiff retailers and to two distributors which engaged in retail operations as well--which suit is based upon a claim that the supplier's discounts to the two distributors violated 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\))--even if one of the distributors, on whose activities the plaintiffs relied in proving damages, was not also a retailer prior to 1974, a possible flaw in the jury's calculation of the amount of damages awarded is not an appropriate basis for granting the supplier's motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the theory that the award is allegedly excessive as a matter of law, where (1) the supplier's theory improperly blurs the distinction between the liability and damages issues; (2) the plaintiffs' proof established a continuing violation of 2(a) throughout the damages period; (3) the plaintiffs' proof of the specific amount of damages, although necessarily less precise, provided a sufficient basis for an acceptable estimate of the amount of damages; and (4) the supplier did not object to the instructions to the jury on the damages issue.

EVIDENCE §652 > sufficiency -- expert testimony -- Robinson-Patman Act -- injury to business -- damages -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[20\]](#) [20]

In a suit by several independent retailers against a gasoline supplier which sold gasoline both to the independent retailers and to two distributors which engaged in retail operations as well--which suit is based upon a claim that the supplier's discounts to the two distributors violated 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\))--the plaintiff retailers' proof of a continuing violation of 2(a) throughout the 9-year period of 1972-1981 is sufficient, where the plaintiffs' proof establishes that (1) the supplier's lower prices to both distributors were discriminatory throughout the entire 9-year period, (2) at least one distributor, and apparently the second distributor as well, was selling at retail during that entire period, (3) the discounts substantially affected competition throughout the entire market, and (4) the discounts injured each of the plaintiffs; under such circumstances, the plaintiffs' proof of the specific amount of their damages is necessarily less precise, and--even if the second distributor was not also a retailer prior to 1974, and even if some portion of the plaintiffs' injuries might therefore be attributable to the conduct of other independent retailers--the plaintiffs' expert testimony provides a sufficient basis, under the traditional rule excusing antitrust plaintiffs from an unduly rigorous standard of proving antitrust injury, for an acceptable estimate of the amount of damages awarded for the period 1972-1981, where (1) the plaintiffs offered no direct testimony of any diversion by the first distributor and testified that they, the plaintiffs, did not even know that the first distributor was being supplied by the supplier, (2) the plaintiffs introduced evidence describing a diversion of their customers to specific stations supplied by the second distributor, and (3) the plaintiffs' expert testimony on damages (a) focused on the diversion of trade to specific stations supplied by the second distributor, and (b) analyzed the entire damages period, including the period prior to 1974 when the second distributor was arguably not a retailer.

Syllabus

---

Between 1972 and 1981, petitioner Texaco sold gasoline at its retail tank wagon prices to respondent independent Texaco retailers but granted substantial discounts to distributors Gull and Dompier. Gull resold the gas under its own name; the fact that it was being supplied by Texaco was unknown to respondents. Dompier paid a higher price than Gull, and supplied its gas under the Texaco brand name to retail stations. With the encouragement of Texaco, Dompier entered the retail market directly. Both distributors picked up gas at the Texaco plant and delivered it directly to their retail outlets, and neither maintained any significant storage facilities. Unlike Gull, Dompier received an additional [***2] discount from Texaco for the deliveries. Texaco executives were well aware of Dompier's dramatic growth and attributed it to the magnitude of the discounts. During the relevant period, the stations supplied by the distributors increased their sales volume dramatically, while respondents' sales suffered a corresponding decline. In 1976, respondents filed suit against Texaco under the Robinson-Patman Amendments to the Clayton Act (Act), alleging that the distributor discounts violated § 2(a) of the Act, which, among other things, forbids any person to "discriminate in price" between different purchasers of commodities, where the effect of such discrimination is substantially to "injure . . . competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them." The jury awarded respondents actual damages. The District Court denied Texaco's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Texaco had claimed that, as a matter of law, its "functional discounts" -- i. e., discounts that are given to a purchaser based on its role in the supplier's distributive system and reflect, at least in a generalized sense, the [***3] services performed by the purchaser for the supplier -- did not adversely affect competition within the meaning of the Act. The District Court rejected Texaco's argument, reasoning that the "presumed legality of functional discounts" had been rebutted by evidence that the amount of Gull's and Dompier's discounts was not reasonably related to the cost of any function they performed. The Court of Appeals affirmed.

Held:

1. Respondents have satisfied their burden of proving that Texaco violated the Act. Pp. 9-26.

(a) Texaco's argument that it did not "discriminate in price" within the meaning of § 2(a) by charging different prices is rejected in light of this Court's holding in FTC v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 549, that "a price discrimination within the meaning of [§ 2(a)] is merely a price difference." Texaco's argument, which would create a blanket exemption for all functional discounts, has some support in the legislative history of the Act, but is foreclosed by the text of the Act itself, which plainly reveals a concern with competitive consequences at different levels of distribution and carefully defines two specific affirmative defenses [****4] that are unavailable. Pp. 11-13.

(b) Also rejected is Texaco's argument that, at least to the extent that Gull and Dompier acted as wholesalers, the price differentials did not "injure . . . competition" within the meaning of the Act. It is true that a legitimate functional discount that constitutes a reasonable reimbursement for the purchaser's actual marketing functions does not violate the Act. Thus, such a discount raises no inference of injury to competition under FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 46-47. However, the Act does not tolerate a functional discount that is completely untethered either to the supplier's savings or the wholesaler's costs. This conclusion is consistent with Federal Trade Commission (FTC) practice, with Perkins v. Standard Oil Co. of California, 395 U.S. 642, and with the analysis of antitrust commentators. The record here adequately supports the finding that Texaco violated the Act. There was an extraordinary absence of evidence to connect Gull's and Dompier's discounts to any savings enjoyed by Texaco. Both Gull and Dompier received the full discount on all purchases even though most of their volume was resold [****5] directly to consumers, and the extra margin on those sales obviously enabled them to price aggressively in both their retail and wholesale marketing. The Morton Salt presumption of adverse effect becomes all the more appropriate to the extent they competed with respondents in the retail market. Furthermore, the evidence indicates that Texaco was encouraging Dompier to integrate downward and was fully informed about the dramatic impact of the Dompier discount on the retail market at the same time that Texaco was inhibiting upward integration by respondents. Pp. 13-26.

2. There is no merit to Texaco's contention that the damages award must be judged excessive as a matter of law. Texaco's theory improperly blurs the distinction between the liability and damages issues. There is no doubt that respondents' proof of a continuing violation as to the discounts to both distributors throughout the 9-year damages period was sufficient. Proof of the specific amount of their damages necessarily was less precise, but the expert testimony provided a sufficient basis for an acceptable estimate of the amount of damages. Cf., e. g., J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 565-566. [****6] Pp. 26-28.

Judges: STEVENS, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and BRENNAN, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. WHITE, J., filed an opinion concurring in the result. SCALIA, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, in which KENNEDY, J., joined.

Opinion by: STEVENS

Opinion

---

[*546] [*506] [**2538] [LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [↑] [1A] [LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [↑] [2A] Petitioner (Texaco) sold gasoline directly to respondents and several other retailers in Spokane, Washington, at its retail [*547] tank wagon prices (RTW) while it granted substantial discounts to two distributors. During the period between 1972 and 1981, the stations supplied by the two distributors increased their sales volume dramatically, while respondents' sales suffered a corresponding decline. Respondents filed an action against Texaco under the Robinson-Patman Amendment to the Clayton Act (Act), 38 Stat. 730, as amended, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U.S.C. § 13, alleging that the distributor discounts violated § 2(a) of the Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13 [****7] (a). Respondents recovered treble damages, and the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed the judgment. We granted certiorari, 490 U.S. (1989), to consider Texaco's contention that legitimate functional discounts do not violate the Act because a seller is not responsible for its customers' independent resale pricing decisions. While we agree with the basic thrust of Texaco's argument, we conclude that in this case it is foreclosed by the facts of record.

I

LEdHN[3] [3] Given the jury's general verdict in favor of respondents, disputed questions of fact have been resolved in their favor. There seems, moreover, to be no serious doubt about the character of the market, Texaco's pricing practices, or the relative importance of Texaco's direct sales to retailers [*548] ("through put" business) and its sales to distributors. The principal disputes at trial related to questions of causation and damages.

Respondents are 12 independent Texaco retailers. They displayed the Texaco trademark, accepted Texaco credit cards, and bought their gasoline products directly from Texaco. Texaco delivered the gasoline [****8] to respondents' stations.

The retail gasoline market in Spokane was highly competitive throughout the damages period, which ran from 1972 to 1981. Stations marketing the nationally advertised Texaco gasoline competed with other major brands as well as with stations featuring independent brands. Moreover, although discounted prices at a nearby Texaco station would have the most obvious impact on a respondent's trade, the cross-city traffic patterns and relatively small size of Spokane produced a city-wide competitive market. See, e. g., App. 244, 283-291. Texaco's [**2539] through put sales in the Spokane market declined from a monthly volume of 569,269 gallons in 1970 to 389,557 gallons in 1975. Id., at 487-488. Texaco's independent retailers' share of the market for Texaco gas declined from 76% to 49%.<sup>1</sup> Ibid. Seven of the respondents' stations were out of business by the end of 1978. Id., at 22-23, R. 501.

[****9] [***507] The respondents tried unsuccessfully to increase their ability to compete with lower priced stations. Some tried converting from full service to self-service stations. See, e. g., App. 55-56. Two of the respondents sought to buy their own tank trucks and haul their gasoline from Texaco's supply point, but Texaco vetoed that proposal. Id., at 38-41, 59.

[*549] While the independent retailers struggled, two Spokane gasoline distributors supplied by Texaco prospered. Gull Oil Company (Gull) had its headquarters in Seattle and distributed petroleum products in four western States under its own name. Id., at 94-95. In Spokane it purchased its gas from Texaco at prices that ranged from six to four cents below Texaco's RTW price. Id., at 31-32. Gull resold that product under its own name; the fact that it was being supplied by Texaco was not known by either the public or the respondents. See, e. g., id., at 256. In Spokane, Gull supplied about 15 stations; some were "consignment stations" and some were "commission stations." In both situations Gull retained title to the gasoline until it was pumped into a motorist's tank. In the consignment stations, the station operator [****10] set the retail prices, but in the commission stations Gull set the prices and paid the operator a commission. Its policy was to price its gasoline at a penny less than the prevailing price for major brands. Gull employed two truck drivers in Spokane who picked up product at Texaco's bulk plant and delivered it to the Gull stations. It also employed one supervisor in Spokane. Apart from its trucks and investment in retail facilities, Gull apparently owned no assets in that market. App. 96-109, 504-512. At least with respect to the commission stations, Gull is fairly characterized as a retailer of gasoline throughout the relevant period.

The Dompier Oil Company (Dompier) started business in 1954 selling Quaker State Motor Oil. In 1960 it became a full line distributor of Texaco products, and by the mid-1970's its sales of gasoline represented over three-quarters of its business. App. 114-115. Dompier purchased Texaco gasoline at prices of 3.95 cents to 3.65 cents below the RTW price. Dompier thus paid a higher price than Gull, but Dompier, unlike Gull, resold its gas under the Texaco brand names. Id., at 24, 29-30. It supplied about eight to ten Spokane retail stations. In the period [****11] prior to

---

<sup>1</sup> The independent retailers' share includes not only the market share for the 12 respondents, who operated a total of 13 stations, but also the share of some independent Texaco retailers who are not parties to this action. Texaco had 27 independent dealers in the Spokane market in 1970, and 19 in 1975. App. 22, 487-488.

496 U.S. 543, *549; 110 S. Ct. 2535, **2539; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, ***507; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142, ****11

October 1974, two of those stations were owned by the president of Dompier but the others were independently [*550] operated. See, e. g., id., at 119-121, 147-148. In the early 1970's, Texaco representatives encouraged Dompier to enter the retail business directly, and in 1974 and 1975 it acquired four stations.<sup>2</sup> Id., at 114-135, 483-503. Dompier's president estimated at trial that the share of its total gasoline sales made [***508] at retail during [**2540] the middle 1970's was "probably 84 to 90 percent." Id., at 115.

[****12] Like Gull, Dompier picked up Texaco's product at the Texaco bulk plant and delivered directly to retail outlets. Unlike Gull, Dompier owned a bulk storage facility, but it was seldom used because its capacity was less than that of many retail stations. Again unlike Gull, Dompier received from Texaco the equivalent of the common carrier rate for delivering the gasoline product to the retail outlets. Thus, in addition to its discount from the RTW price, Dompier made a profit on its hauling function.<sup>3</sup> App. 123-131, 186-192, 411-413.

The stations supplied by Dompier regularly sold at retail at lower prices than respondents'. [****13] Even before Dompier directly entered the retail business in 1974, its customers were [*551] selling to consumers at prices barely above the RTW price. Id., at 329-338; Record 315, 1250-1251. Dompier's sales volume increased continuously and substantially throughout the relevant period. Between 1970 and 1975 its monthly sales volume increased from 155,152 gallons to 462,956 gallons; this represented an increase from 20.7% to almost 50% of Texaco's sales in Spokane. App. 487-488.

There was ample evidence that Texaco executives were well aware of Dompier's dramatic growth and believed that it was attributable to "the magnitude of the distributor discount and the hauling allowance."<sup>4</sup> See also, e. g., App. 213-223, 407-413. In response to complaints from individual respondents about Dompier's aggressive pricing, however, Texaco representatives professed that they "couldn't understand it." Record 401-404.

[****14] II

LEdHN[4] [4] Respondents filed suit against Texaco in July 1976. After a four week trial, the jury awarded damages measured by the difference between the RTW price and the price paid by Dompier. As we subsequently decided in J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557 (1981), this measure of damages was improper. Accordingly, although it rejected Texaco's defenses on the issue of liability,<sup>5</sup> the Court of Appeals for the <sup>2</sup> "Q. Did you have any conversations with Texaco during this period of time encouraging you to -- Dompier Oil Company to change its emphasis and to move into the retail business? A. Yes, we did.

"Q. Would you tell the jury about that? [A.] Well, at various times Texaco encouraged us to begin supplying retail service stations. In the early Seventies they did that, and then as time went on, they encouraged us to own the stations that we were supplying; in other words, to try to control our own retail business. And beginning about 1974 -- we did purchase a station in '74 and some more in '75 and we began operating those as company operations with salaried company employees." App. 116-117.

<sup>3</sup> "Q. That would have been a rate -- that if you had hired a common carrier to haul the product for you, you would have paid them to haul it? A. That's right.

"Q. And do you understand -- to your understanding does that common carrier rate have a built-in-profit? A. I am sure it does.

"Q. Did you find it to be an advantage to you to be hauling your own product? A. Yes." Id., at 126.

<sup>4</sup> At trial one of Texaco's defenses was based on its obligation to comply with certain federal regulations during periods of shortage. In one of its communications to the Federal Government, a Texaco vice president wrote, in part:

"We believe that the dramatic shift in gasoline sales from the independent retailer classes of purchaser to the independent distributor classes of purchaser can be explained almost entirely by the magnitude of the distributor discount and the hauling allowance." App. 413.

<sup>5</sup> Texaco had argued that its pricing practices were mandated by federal regulations and that its sales in the Spokane market were not "in commerce" within the meaning of the Act.

496 U.S. 543, *551; 110 S. Ct. 2535, **2540; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, ***508; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142, ****14

Ninth Circuit remanded the case for [*552] a new trial. *Hasbrouck v. Texaco, Inc., 663 F.2d 930 \(1981\)*, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 828 (1982).

[***509] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]At the second trial, Texaco contended that the special [***15] prices to Gull and Dompier were justified by cost savings,<sup>6</sup> were the product of a good faith attempt to meet competition,<sup>7</sup> [***16] and were lawful "functional discounts." The District Court withheld the cost justification [**2541] defense from the jury because it was not supported by the evidence and the jury rejected the other defenses. It awarded respondents actual damages of $ 449,900.<sup>8</sup> The jury apparently credited the testimony of respondents' expert witness who had estimated what the respondents' profits would have been if they had paid the same prices as the four stations owned by Dompier. See *634 F. Supp. 34, 43, 842 F.2d, at 1043-1044.*

In Texaco's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, it claimed as a matter of law that its functional discounts did not adversely affect competition within the meaning of the Act because any injury to respondents was attributable to decisions made independently by Dompier. The District Court denied the motion. In an opinion supplementing its oral ruling denying Texaco's motion for a directed verdict, the Court assumed, arguendo, that Dompier was entitled to a [*553] functional discount, even on the gas that was sold at retail,<sup>9</sup> [***17] but nevertheless concluded that the "presumed legality of functional discounts" had been rebutted by evidence that the amount of the discounts to Gull and Dompier was not reasonably related to the cost of any function that they performed.<sup>10</sup> *634 F. Supp., at 37-38*, and n. 4.

<sup>6</sup> Section 2(a) of the Act provides, in part:

"That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered."

<sup>7</sup> Section 2(b) of the Act provides, in part:

HN1 [↑] "Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

<sup>8</sup> The award to each particular respondent of course differed. The awards represented an average of $ 5,486.59 per year for each of the respondents.

<sup>9</sup> "While there is a serious question as to whether Dompier was entitled to a 'functional discount' on the gas it resold at retail, compare *Mueller Co., 60 F.T.C. 120 \(1962\)*, aff'd, *323 F.2d 44 \(7th Cir. 1963\)*, cert. denied, *377 U.S. 923 . . . \(1964\)* (entitlement to functional discount based on resale level) with *Doubleday and Co., 52 F.T.C. 169 \(1955\)* (entitlement to functional discount based on level of purchase), the court assumes, arguendo, that the mere fact that Dompier retailed the gas does not preclude a 'functional discount.' *634 F. Supp. 34, 37, n. 4 \(ED Wash. 1985\)* (emphasis in original).

<sup>10</sup> "Secondly, the functional discounts negatively affected competition because they were, in part, reflected in the favored purchasers' (or their customers') retail prices. In other words, the discount was not consumed or absorbed at the level of the favored buyers; rather, the amount of the discount (or a significant portion) appeared in the favored purchasers' retail price, or in the favored purchasers' price to their customers and in their customers' retail prices. Under such circumstances, the otherwise innocuous nature and presumed legality of functional discounts is rebutted, for it is universally recognized that a functional discount remains legal only to the extent it acts as compensation for the functions performed by the favored buyer. See 3 Kintner & Bauer, Federal Antitrust Law 309-10 (1983); Rill, Availability and Functional Discounts Justifying Discriminatory Pricing, 53 Antitrust L. J. 929, 939-41 (1985). The discount must 'be reasonably related to the expenses assumed by the [favored] buyer' and the discount 'should not exceed the cost of . . . the function [the favored buyer] actually performs . . .' *Doubleday and Company, 52 F.T.C. at 209*, cited in Boise Cascade Corp., Docket No. 9133, slip op. at 117 (Feb. 14, 1984) (initial decision). If the discount exceeds such costs, it cannot be justified as a functional discount, particularly where, as here, the excess has a negative effect on competition.

[****18]

[***510] The Court of Appeals affirmed. It reasoned:

[*554] "As the Supreme Court long ago made clear, and recently reaffirmed, HN2 [5A] there may be a Robinson-Patman violation even if the favored and disfavored buyers do not compete, so long as the customers of the favored buyer compete with the disfavored buyer or its customers. Morton Salt, 334 U.S. at 43-44 . . . ; Perkins v. Standard Oil Co., 395 U.S. 642, 646-47 . . . (1969); Falls City Indus., Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 434-35 (1983). Despite the fact that Dompier and Gull, at least in their capacities as wholesalers, did not compete directly with Hasbrouck, a section 2(a) violation may [**2542] occur if (1) the discount they received was not cost-based and (2) all or a portion of it was passed on by them to customers of theirs who competed with Hasbrouck. Morton Salt, 384 U.S. at 43-44, . . . ; Perkins v. Standard Oil, 395 U.S. at 648-49, . . . ; see 3 E. Kintner & J. Bauer, supra, § 22.14.

"Hasbrouck presented ample evidence to demonstrate [****19] that . . . . the services performed by Gull and Dompier were insubstantial and did not justify the functional discount." 842 F.2d, at 1039.

The Court of Appeals concluded its analysis by observing:

"To hold that price discrimination between a wholesaler and a retailer could never violate the Robinson-Patman Act would leave immune from antitrust scrutiny a discriminatory pricing procedure that can effectively serve to harm competition. We think such a result would be contrary to the objectives of the Robinson-Patman Act." Id., at 1040 (emphasis in original).

III

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [5B] [LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [5C] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [5D] It is appropriate to begin our consideration of the legal status of functional discounts <sup>11</sup> by examining the language of the Act. Section 2(a) provides in part:

[*555] HN3 [5A] "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, [***20] either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either [***511] or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\).

[LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [5C] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [5D] [LEdHN\[7C\]](#) [5E] [7B]

"In this case Texaco made no serious attempt to quantitatively justify its functional discounts. While a precise accounting of the value of the performed functions is not mandated, merely identifying some of the functions is not sufficient. There is no substantial evidence to support Texaco's position that the discounts were justified." 634 F. Supp., at 38 (footnote omitted).

<sup>11</sup> In their brief as amici curiae, the United States and the Federal Trade Commission suggest the following definition of "functional discount," which is adequate for our discussion: " A functional discount is one given to a purchaser based on its role in the supplier's distributive system, reflecting, at least in a generalized sense, the services performed by the purchaser for the supplier." Brief for United States et al. as Amici Curiae 10 (filed Aug. 3, 1989).

496 U.S. 543, *555; 110 S. Ct. 2535, **2542; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, ***511; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142, ****20

[****21] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [↑] [2C][LEdHN\[7C\]](#) [↑] [7C]HN4 [↑] The Act contains no express reference to functional discounts.<sup>12</sup> [****22] It does contain two affirmative defenses that provide protection for two categories of discounts -- those that [*556] are justified by savings in the seller's cost of manufacture, delivery or sale,<sup>13</sup> and those that represent a good faith response to the equally low prices of a competitor. Standard Oil Co. v. FTC, 340 U.S. 231, 250 \(1951\). As the case comes to us, neither of those defenses is available to Texaco.

[LEdHN\[7D\]](#) [↑] [7D]

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [↑] [8A]HN5 [↑] In order to establish a violation of the Act, respondents had the burden of proving [**2543] four facts: (1) that Texaco's sales to Gull and Dompier were made in interstate commerce; (2) that the gasoline sold to them was of the same grade and quality as that sold to respondents; (3) that Texaco discriminated in price as between Gull and Dompier on the one hand and respondents on the other; and (4) that the discrimination had a prohibited effect on competition. 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\). Moreover, for each respondent HN6 [↑] to recover damages, he had the burden of proving the extent of his actual injuries. J. Truett Payne, 451 U.S., at 562.

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B][LEdHN\[5C\]](#) [↑] [5C] The first two elements of respondents' case are not disputed in this Court,<sup>14</sup> [****23] and we do not understand Texaco to be challenging the sufficiency of respondents' proof of damages. Texaco does argue, however, that although it charged different prices, it did not "discriminate in price" within the meaning of the Act, and that, at least to the extent that Gull and Dompier acted as wholesalers, the price differentials [***512] did not injure competition. We consider the two arguments separately.

IV

[LEdHN\[5D\]](#) [↑] [5D] Texaco's first argument would create a blanket exemption for all functional discounts. Indeed, carried to its logical conclusion, it would exempt all price differentials [****24] except those given to competing purchasers. The primary basis for [*557] Texaco's argument is the following comment by Congressman Utterback, an active sponsor of the Act.

"In its meaning as simple English, HN7 [↑] a discrimination is more than a mere difference. Underlying the meaning of the word is the idea that some relationship exists between the parties to the discrimination which entitles them to equal treatment, whereby the difference granted to one casts some burden or disadvantage upon the other. If the two are competing in the resale of the goods concerned, that relationship exists. Where, also, the price to one is so low as to involve a sacrifice of some part of the seller's necessary costs and profit as applied to that business, it leaves that deficit inevitably to be made up in higher prices to his other customers; and there, too, a relationship may exist upon which to base the charge of discrimination. But where no such relationship exists, where the goods are sold in different markets and the conditions affecting those markets set different price levels for them, the sale

<sup>12</sup> The legislative history indicates that earlier drafts of the Act did include such a proviso. See, e.g., Shniderman, "The Tyranny of Labels" -- A Study of Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 60 Harv. L. Rev. 571, 583-586, and nn. 40-57 (1947). The deletion of this exception for functional discounts has ambiguous significance. It may be, as one commentator has suggested, that the circumstances of the Act's passage "must have conveyed to the congressional mind the realization that the judiciary and the FTC would view what had occurred as a narrowing of the gates through which the functional classification plan of a seller had to pass to come within the law." Id., at 588. In any event, the deletion in no way detracts from the blunt direction of the statutory text, which indicates that any price discrimination substantially lessening competition will expose the discriminator to liability, regardless of whether the discriminator attempts to characterize the pricing scheme as a functional discount.

<sup>13</sup> See n. 6, supra.

<sup>14</sup> Texaco has not contested here the proposition that branded gas and unbranded gas are of like grade and quality. See FTC v. Borden Co., 383 U.S. 637, 645-646 \(1966\) ("the economic factors inherent in brand names and national advertising should not be considered in the jurisdictional inquiry under the statutory 'like grade and quality' test").

496 U.S. 543, *557; 110 S. Ct. 2535, **2543; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, ***512; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142, ****24

to different [****25] customers at those different prices would not constitute a discrimination within the meaning of this bill." 80 Cong. Rec. 9416 (1936).

LEdHN[5E] [↑] [5E]LEdHN[6C] [↑] [6C] We have previously considered this excerpt from the legislative history, and have refused to draw from it the conclusion which Texaco proposes. FTC v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 547-551 (1960). Although the excerpt does support Texaco's argument, we remain persuaded that the argument is foreclosed by the text of the Act itself. In the context of a statute that plainly reveals a concern with competitive consequences at different levels of distribution, and carefully defines specific affirmative defenses, it would be anomalous to assume that the Congress intended the term "discriminate" to have such a limited meaning. In Anheuser-Busch we rejected an argument identical to Texaco's in the context of a claim that a seller's price differential had injured [*558] its own competitors -- a so called "primary line" claim.<sup>15</sup> The reasons we gave for our decision in [**2544] [****26] Anheuser-Busch apply here as well. After quoting Congressman Utterback's statement in full, we wrote:

"The trouble with respondent's arguments is not that they are necessarily irrelevant in a § 2(a) proceeding, but that they are misdirected when the issue under consideration is solely whether there has been a price discrimination. We are convinced that, whatever may be said with respect to the rest of §§ 2(a) and 2(b) -- and we [***513] say nothing here -- there are no overtones of business buccaneering in the § 2(a) phrase 'discriminate in price.' Rather, HN8 [↑] a price discrimination within the meaning of that provision is merely a price difference." 363 U.S., at 549.

After noting that this view was consistent with our precedents, we added:

"the statute itself spells out the conditions which make a price difference illegal or legal, and we would derange this integrated statutory scheme were we to read other conditions into the law by means of the nondirective phrase, 'discriminate in price.' Not only would such action be contrary to what we conceive to be the meaning [****27] of the statute, but, perhaps because of this, it would be thoroughly undesirable. As one commentator has succinctly put it, "Inevitably every legal controversy over any price difference would shift from the detailed governing provisions -- "injury," cost justification, "meeting competition," etc. -- over into the "discrimination" concept of ad hoc resolution divorced from specifically pertinent statutory text." Rowe, Price Differentials [*559] and Product Differentiation: The Issues Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 66 Yale L. J. 1, 38." 363 U.S., at 550-551.

LEdHN[6D] [↑] [6D]

[****28] LEdHN[5F] [↑] [5F] Since we have already decided that a price discrimination within the meaning of § 2(a) "is merely a price difference," we must reject Texaco's first argument.

V

LEdHN[6E] [↑] [6E] In FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 46-47 (1948), we held that HN9 [↑] a injury to competition may be inferred from evidence that some purchasers had to pay their supplier "substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay." See also Falls City Industries, Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 435-436 (1983). Texaco, supported by the United States and the Federal Trade Commission as amici curiae, (the Government), argues that this presumption should not apply to differences between prices charged to wholesalers and those charged to retailers. Moreover, they argue that it would be inconsistent with fundamental antitrust policies to construe the Act as requiring a seller to control his customers' resale prices. The seller [****29] should not be held liable for the independent pricing decisions of his customers. As the Government correctly notes, Brief for United States et. al. as Amici Curiae 21-22 (filed Aug. 3, 1989), this argument endorses the position

---

<sup>15</sup> It has proven useful in Robinson-Patman Act cases to distinguish among "the probable impact of the [price] discrimination on competitors of the seller (primary-line injury), on the favored and disfavored buyers (second-line injury), or on the customers of either of them (third-line injury)." See 3 E. Kintner & J. Bauer, Federal Antitrust Law § 20.9 p. 127 (1983).

496 U.S. 543, *559; 110 S. Ct. 2535, **2544; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, ***513; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142, ****29

advocated 35 years ago in the Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws (1955).

After observing that suppliers ought not to be held liable for the independent pricing decisions of their buyers,<sup>16</sup> [****31] and [*560] that without [***514] functional discounts distributors might go [**2545] uncompensated for services they performed,<sup>17</sup> the Committee wrote:

"The Committee recommends, therefore, that HN10↑ suppliers granting functional discounts either to single-function or to integrated buyers should not be held responsible for any consequences of their customers' pricing tactics. Price cutting at the resale level is not in fact, and should not be held in law, 'the effect of' a differential that merely accords due recognition and reimbursement for actual marketing functions. The price cutting of a customer who receives this type [***30] of differential results from his own independent decision to lower price and operate at a lower profit margin per unit. The legality or illegality of this price cutting must be judged by the usual legal tests. In any event, consequent injury or lack of injury should not be the supplier's legal concern.

"On the other hand, the law should tolerate no subterfuge. For instance, where a wholesaler-retailer buys only part of his goods as a wholesaler, he must not claim a functional discount on all. Only to the extent that a buyer actually performs certain functions, assuming all the risk, investment, and costs involved, should he legally [*561] qualify for a functional discount. Hence a distributor should be eligible for a discount corresponding to any part of the function he actually performs on that part of the goods for which he performs it." Id., at 208.

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#)↑ [1C] [LEdHN\[6F\]](#)↑ [6F] [LEdHN\[9A\]](#)↑ [9A] We generally agree with this description of the legal status of functional discounts. [****32] HN11↑ A supplier need not satisfy the rigorous requirements of the cost justification defense in order to prove that a particular functional discount is reasonable and accordingly did not cause any substantial lessening of competition between a wholesaler's customers and the supplier's direct customers.<sup>18</sup> The record in this case, [***515] however, adequately supports the finding that Texaco violated the Act.

<sup>16</sup> "In the Committee's view, imposing on any dual supplier a legal responsibility for the resale policies and prices of his independent distributors contradicts basic antitrust policies. Resale-price fixing is incompatible with the tenets of a free and competitive economy. What is more, the arrangements necessary for policing, detecting, and reporting price cutters may be illegal even apart from the resale-price agreement itself. And even short of such arrangements, a conscious adherence in a supplier's sales to retail customers to the price quotations by independent competing distributors is hardly feasible as a matter of business operation, or safe as a matter of law." Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 206-207 (1955) (footnotes omitted).

<sup>17</sup> "In our view, to relate discounts or prices solely to the purchaser's resale activities without recognition of his buying functions thwarts competition and efficiency in marketing. It compels affirmative discrimination against a substantial class of distributors, and hence serves as a penalty on integration. If a businessman actually fulfills the wholesale function by relieving his suppliers of risk, storage, transportation, administration, etc., his performance, his capital investment, and the saving to his suppliers, are unaffected by whether he also performs the retailing function, or any number of other functions. A legal rule disqualifying him from discounts recognizing wholesaling functions actually performed compels him to render these functions free of charge." Id., at 207.

<sup>18</sup> In theory, a supplier could try to defend a functional discount by invoking the Act's cost justification defense, but the burden of proof with respect to the defense is upon the supplier, and interposing the defense "has proven difficult, expensive, and often unsuccessful." 3 E. Kintner & J. Bauer, Federal Antitrust Law, § 23.19, pp. 366-367 (1983). Moreover, to establish the defense a "seller must show that the price reductions given did not exceed the actual cost savings," id., § 23.10, p. 345, and this requirement of exactitude is ill-suited to the defense of discounts set by reference to legitimate, but less precisely measured, market factors. Cf. Calvani, Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 17 B. C. Ind. & Com. L. Rev. 543, 546, n. 16 (1976) (distinguishing functional discounts from cost-justified price differences); Report of the Attorney General's National Committee on the Antitrust Laws, at 171 ("the cost defense has proved largely illusory in practice").

Discounters will therefore likely find it more useful to defend against claims under the Act by negating the causation element in the case against them: a legitimate functional discount will not cause any substantial lessening of competition. The concept of

[LEdHN\[9B\]](#) [↑] [9B] [LEdHN\[6G\]](#) [↑] [6G] [LEdHN\[9C\]](#) [↑] [9C]

[****33]

[*562] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [↑] [1D] [LEdHN\[6H\]](#) [↑] [6H] The hypothetical predicate for the Committee's entire discussion of functional [**2546] discounts is HN13 [↑] a price differential "that merely accords due recognition and reimbursement for actual marketing functions." Such a discount is not illegal. In this case, however, both the District Court and the Court of Appeals concluded that even without viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the respondents, there was no substantial evidence indicating that the discounts to Gull and Dompier constituted a reasonable reimbursement for the value to Texaco of their actual marketing functions. 842 F.2d, at 1039; 634 F. Supp., at 37, 38. Indeed, Dompier was separately compensated for its hauling function, and neither Gull and Dompier maintained any significant storage facilities.

Despite this extraordinary absence of evidence to connect the discount to any savings enjoyed by Texaco, Texaco contends [****34] that the decision of the Court of Appeals cannot be affirmed without departing "from established precedent, from practicality, and from Congressional intent." Brief for Petitioner 14.<sup>19</sup> This argument assumes that holding suppliers liable for a gratuitous functional discount is somehow a novel practice. That assumption is flawed.

[LEdHN\[6I\]](#) [↑] [6I] [LEdHN\[9D\]](#) [↑] [9D] [LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [↑] [10A] [LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [↑] [11A] [****35] [LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [↑] [12A] As we have already observed, the "due recognition and reimbursement" concept endorsed in the Attorney General's [*563] Committee's study would not countenance a functional discount completely untethered to either the supplier's savings or the wholesaler's costs. The longstanding principle that HN14 [↑] functional discounts provide no safe harbor from the Act is likewise evident from the practice of the Federal Trade Commission, which has, while permitting legitimate functional discounts, proceeded against those discounts which appeared to be subterfuges to avoid the Act's restrictions. See, e. g., In re Sherwin [***516] Williams Co., 36 F.T.C. 25, 70-71 (1943) (finding a violation of the Act by paint manufacturers who granted "functional or special discounts to some of their dealer-distributors on the purchases of such dealer-distributors which are resold by such dealer-distributors directly to the consumer through their retail departments or branch stores wholly owned by them"); In re the Ruberoid Co., 46 F.T.C. 379, 386, para. 5 (1950) [****36] (liability appropriate when functional designations do not always indicate accurately "the functions actually performed by such purchasers"), aff'd, 189 F.2d 893 \(CA2 1951\), rev'd on rehearing, 191 F.2d 294, aff'd, 343 U.S. 470 \(1952\).<sup>20</sup> [****38] See also, e. g., *In re Doubleday & I** [564] substantiality permits the causation inquiry to accommodate a notion of economic reasonableness with respect to the pass-through effects of functional discounts, and so provides a latitude denied by the cost-justification defense. Cf. Shniderman, 60 Harv. L. Rev., at 603-604 (substantiality defense in functional discount cases). We thus find ourselves in substantial agreement with the view that:

HN12 [↑] "Conceived as a vehicle for allowing differential pricing to reward distributive efficiencies among customers operating at the same level, the cost justification defense focuses on narrowly defined savings to the seller derived from the different method or quantities in which goods are sold or delivered to different buyers. . . . Moreover, the burden of proof as to the cost justification defense is on the seller charged with violating the Act, whereas the burden of proof remains with the enforcement agency or plaintiff in circumstances involving functional discounts since functional pricing negates the probability of competitive injury, an element of a prima facie case of violation." Rill, Availability and Functional Discounts Justifying Discriminatory Pricing, 53 Antitrust L. J. 929, 935 (1985) (footnotes omitted).

<sup>19</sup> Texaco continues the argument by summoning a parade of horribles whose march Texaco believes is at issue in this case; according to Texaco, the Court of Appeals' rule "would multiply distribution costs, rigidify and increase consumer prices, encourage resale price maintenance in violation of the Sherman Act, . . . , and jeopardize the businesses of wholesalers." Brief for Petitioner 14.

496 U.S. 543, *564; 110 S. Ct. 2535, **2546; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, ***516; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142, ****38

Co., 52 F.T.C. 169, 209 (1955) ("the Commission should tolerate no subterfuge. Only to the extent that a buyer [**2547] actually performs certain functions, assuming all the risks and costs involved, should he qualify for a compensating discount. The amount of the discount should be reasonably related to the expenses assumed by the buyer"); In re General Foods Corp., 52 F.T.C. 798, 824-825 (1956) ("a seller is not forbidden to sell at different prices to buyers in different functional classes and orders have been issued permitting lower prices to one functional class as against another, provided that injury to commerce as contemplated in the law does not result," but "to hold that the rendering of special services ipso facto [creates] a separate functional classification would be to read Section 2 (d) out of the Act"); In re Boise Cascade Corp., 107 F.T.C. 76, 212, 214-215 (1986) [****37] (regardless of whether the FTC has judged functional discounts by reference to the supplier's savings or the buyer's costs, the FTC has recognized that "functional discounts may usually be granted to customers who operate at different levels of trade, and thus do not compete with each other, without risk of secondary line competitive injury under the Act"), rev'd on other grounds, 267 U.S. App. D.C. 124, 837 F.2d 1127 (1988).<sup>21</sup> [****39] [*565] Cf. FLM Collision [***517] Parts, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 543 F.2d 1019, 1027 (CA2 1976) ("We do not suggest or imply that, if a manufacturer grants a price discount or allowance to its wholesalers (whether or not labelled 'incentive'), which has the purpose or effect of defeating the objectives of the Act, § 2(a)'s language may not be construed to defeat it"); C. Edwards, Price Discrimination Law 286-348 (1959) (analyzing cases).<sup>22</sup>

---

<sup>20</sup> See also, e. g., In re Whiting, 26 F.T.C. 312, 316, para. 3 (1938) (functional classification of customers involved unlawful price discrimination because of functional overlap); In re Standard Oil Co., 41 F.T.C. 263 (1945), modified and aff'd, 173 F.2d 210, 217 (CA7 1949) ("The petitioner should be liable if it sells to a wholesaler it knows or ought to have known . . . is using or intends to use [the wholesaler's] price advantage to undersell the petitioner in its prices made to its retailers"), rev'd and remanded on other grounds, 340 U.S. 231 (1951).

LEdHN[10B] [10B]

In the Standard Oil case, the FTC itself on remand dropped the part of its order prohibiting Standard Oil from giving functional discounts. See C. Edwards, Price Discrimination Law 309 (1959). The FTC's pre-remand theory in the Standard Oil case has of course been the subject of harsh criticism. See, e. g., Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws, at 206. Much, if not all, of this criticism rests upon the view that, under the FTC's Standard Oil ruling, a "supplier is charged with legal responsibility for the middlemen's pricing tactics, and hence must control their resale prices lest they undercut him to the unlawful detriment of his directly purchasing retailers. Alternatively, the seller may forego his operational freedom by matching his quotations to retailers with theirs." Ibid. Nothing in our opinion today should be read to condone or approve such a result.

<sup>21</sup> LEdHN[11B] [11B]

See also In re Mueller Co., 60 F.T.C. 120, 127-128 (1962) (refusing to make allowance for functional discounts in any way that would "add a defense to a prima facie violation of Section 2(a) which is not included in either Section 2(a) or Section 2(b)"), aff'd, 323 F.2d 44 (CA7 1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 923 (1964). The FTC in Mueller expressly disavowed dicta from Doubleday suggesting that functional discounts are per se legal if justified by the buyer's costs. Mueller held that the discounts were controlled instead by the reasoning propounded in General Foods, which refers to the value of the services to the supplier giving the discount. 60 F.T.C., at 127-128.

LEdHN[9E] [9E] LEdHN[10C] [10C] LEdHN[11C] [11C]

We need not address the relative merits of Mueller and Doubleday in order to resolve the case before us. We do, however, reject the requirement of exactitude which might be inferred from Doubleday's dictum that a functional discount offered to a buyer "should not exceed the cost of that part of the function he actually performs on that part of the goods for which he performs it." 52 F.T.C., at 209. As already noted, a causation defense in a functional discount case does not demand the rigorous accounting associated with a cost justification defense.

<sup>22</sup> LEdHN[12B] [12B]

The Government's position in this case does not contradict this course of decision. The Government's amicus brief on Texaco's behalf criticizes the Court of Appeals opinion on the theory that it "would require a supplier to show that a functional discount is [****40] [LEdHN\[6J\]](#) [6J] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B] Most of these cases involve discounts made questionable because offered to [**2548] "complex types of distributors" whose "functions became scrambled." Doubleday & Co., 52 F.T.C., at 208. This fact is predictable: manufacturers will more likely be able to effectuate tertiary line price discrimination through functional discounts to a secondary line buyer when [*566] the favored distributor is vertically integrated. Nevertheless, this general tendency does not preclude the possibility that a seller may pursue a price discrimination strategy despite the absence of any discrete mechanism for allocating the favorable price discrepancy between secondary and tertiary line recipients.<sup>23</sup>

[****41]

[***518] [LEdHN\[13A\]](#) [13A] Indeed, far from constituting a novel basis for liability under the Act, the fact pattern here reflects conduct similar to that which gave rise to Perkins v. Standard Oil Co of California, 395 U.S. 642 \(1969\). Perkins purchased gas from Standard, and was both a distributor and a retailer. He asserted that his retail business had been damaged through two violations of the Act by Standard: first, Standard had sold directly to its own retailers at a price below that charged to Perkins; and, second, Standard had sold to another distributor, Signal, which sold gas to Western Hyway, which in turn [*567] sold gas to Regal, a retailer in competition with Perkins.<sup>24</sup> [****43] The question presented was whether the Act -- which refers to discriminators, purchasers, and their customers -- covered injuries to competition between purchasers and the customers of customers of purchasers. Id., at 646-647. We held that a limitation excluding such "fourth level" competition would be "wholly an artificial one." Id., at 647. We reasoned that from "Perkins' point of [****42] view, the competitive harm done him by Standard is certainly no less because of the presence of an additional link in this particular distribution chain from justified by the wholesaler's costs," and that it imposed "liability for downstream competitive effects of legitimate functional discounts." Brief for United States et al. as Amici Curiae 16, 6 (filed Aug. 3, 1989). Cf. Boise Cascade Corp. v. FTC, 837 F.2d 1127, 1141-1143 \(267 U.S. App. D.C. 124 \(1988\)\) (summarizing debate about relevance of buyer's costs to defense of functional discounts). If the Court of Appeals were indeed to have endorsed either of these rules, it would have departed perceptibly from the mainstream of the FTC's reading of the Act. We need not decide whether the Government's interpretation of the Court of Appeals opinion is correct, for we affirm its judgment for reasons that do not entail the principles criticized by the Government.

---

<sup>23</sup> [LEdHN\[8C\]](#) [8C]

The seller may be willing to accept any division of the price difference so long as some significant part is passed on to the distributor's customers. Although respondents here did not need to show any benefit to Texaco from the price discrimination scheme in order to establish a violation of the Act, one possibility is indicated by the brief filed amicus curiae by the Service Station Dealers of America (SSDA), an organization representing both stations supplied by independent jobbers and stations supplied directly by sellers. See Brief for SSDA as Amicus Curiae 1-2. SSDA suggests that an indirect price discount to competitors may be used to force directly supplied franchisees out of the market, and so to circumvent federal restrictions upon the termination of franchise agreements. See 92 Stat. 324-332, 15 U.S.C. §§ 2801-2806.

One would expect that -- absent a safe harbor rule making functional discounts a useful means to engage in otherwise unlawful price discrimination -- excessive functional discounts of the sort in evidence here would be rare. As the Government correctly observes, "this case appears to reflect rather anomalous behavior on the part of the supplier." Brief for United States et al. as Amici Curiae 17, n. 15 (filed Aug. 3, 1989). See also Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 15 (filed May 16, 1989) ("market forces should tend to discourage a supplier from offering independent wholesalers discounts that would allow them to undercut the supplier's own retail customers").

<sup>24</sup> Much of Perkins's case parallels that of respondents. "There was evidence that Signal received a lower price from Standard than did Perkins, that this price advantage was passed on, at least in part, to Regal, and that Regal was thereby able to undercut Perkins' price on gasoline. Furthermore there was evidence that Perkins repeatedly complained to Standard officials that the discriminatory price advantage given Signal was being passed down to Regal and evidence that Standard Officials were aware that Perkins' business was in danger of being destroyed by Standard's discriminatory practices. This evidence is sufficient to sustain the jury's award of damages under the Robinson-Patman Act." 395 U.S., at 649.

496 U.S. 543, *567; 110 S. Ct. 2535, **2548; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, ***518; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142, ****42

the producer to the retailer.<sup>25</sup> The same may justly be said in this case. The additional link in the distribution chain does not [**2549] insulate Texaco from liability if Texaco's excessive discount otherwise violated the Act.<sup>26</sup>

[****44]

[*568] [LEdHN\[6K\]](#) [6K] [LEdHN\[10D\]](#) [10D] [LEdHN\[14A\]](#) [14A] [LEdHN\[15A\]](#) [15A] Nor should any reader of the commentary on functional discounts be much surprised by today's result. Commentators have disagreed about the extent to [***519] which functional discounts are generally or presumptively allowable under the Robinson-Patman Act. They nevertheless tend to agree that in exceptional cases what is nominally a functional discount may be an unjustifiable price discrimination entirely within the coverage of the Act.<sup>27</sup> [****46] Others, like Frederick [*569] Rowe, have asserted the legitimacy of function discounts in more sweeping terms,<sup>28</sup> but even

---

<sup>25</sup> We added: "Here Standard discriminated in price between Perkins and Signal, and there was evidence from which the jury could conclude that Perkins was harmed competitively when Signal's price advantage was passed on to Perkins' retail competitor Regal. These facts are sufficient to give rise to recoverable damages under the Robinson-Patman Act." 395 U.S., at 648.

<sup>26</sup> [LEdHN\[13B\]](#) [13B]

In fact, the principles applied in Perkins -- that we HN15 will not construe the Robinson-Patman Act in a way that "would allow price discriminators to avoid the sanctions of the Act by the simple expedient of adding an additional link to the distribution chain," 395 U.S., at 647 -- seems capable of governing this case as well. It might be possible to view Perkins as standing for a narrower proposition, either because Signal apparently exercised majority control over the intermediary, Western Hyway, and its retailer, Regal, see id., at 651 (MARSHALL, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part), or because Standard did not assert that its price to Signal reflected a "functional discount." However, as the Perkins dissent pointed out, ibid., the Perkins majority did not put any such limits on the principle it declared.

<sup>27</sup> See, e.g., Celnicker & Seaman, Functional Discounts, Trade Discounts, Economic Price Discrimination and the Robinson-Patman Act, 1989 Utah L. Rev. 813, 857 (1989) (concluding that "trade discounts often are manifestations of economic price discrimination. . . . If a trade discount violates the normal competitive disadvantage criteria used under the Act, no special devices should be employed to protect it"); Rill, 53 Antitrust L.J., at 940-941 ("Although it is entirely appropriate for the FTC and the courts to insist that some substantial services be performed in order for a buyer to earn a functional discount, a requirement of precise mathematical equivalency makes no sense"); 3 E. Kintner & J. Bauer, Federal Antitrust Law 318-320, and n. 305 (1983) ("Functional discounts . . . are usually deemed lawful," but this usual rule is subject to exception in cases, "arising in unusual circumstances," when the seller's "discrimination caused" the tertiary line injury); Calvani, 17 B. C. Ind. & Com. L. Rev., at 549, and n. 26 (1976) (discounts to wholesalers are generally held not to injure competition, but this rule is subject to qualifications, and "perhaps the most important caveat focuses on the situation where the seller sells to both resellers and the consumers and the resellers pass on to consumers all or part of the wholesaling functional discount"); C. Edwards, Price Discrimination Law 312-313 (1959) ("It is not surprising that from time to time the Commission has been unable to avoid finding injurious discrimination between direct and indirect customers nor to avoid corrective orders that sought to define the gap between prices at successive levels of distribution"); Kelley, Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 40 Cal. L. Rev. 526, 556 (1952) (concluding that the "characterization of a price differential between two purchasers as a functional or trade discount accords it no cloak of immunity from the prohibitions of the Robinson-Patman Act"); Shniderman, 60 Harv. L. Rev., at 599-600 (Commission's approach to functional discounts "may have been influenced by the possibility of subtle price discriminating techniques through the employment of wholesalers receiving more than ample discount differentials").

Professor Edwards, among others, describes the status of functional discounts under the Robinson-Patman Act with clear dissatisfaction. He complains that "The failure of the Congress to cope with the problem . . . has left the Commission an impossible job in this type of case." Price Discrimination Law, at 313. He adds that the Commission's "occasional proceedings" have been attributed to the "Commission's wrong-headedness." Id., at 312. Professor Edward's observations about the merits of the statute and about prosecutorial discretion are obviously irrelevant to our own inquiry. Unlike scholarly commentators, we have a duty to be faithful to congressional intent when interpreting statutes, and are not free to consider whether, or how, the statute should be rewritten.

496 U.S. 543, *569; 110 S. Ct. 2535, **2549; 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, ***519; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3142, ****46

Rowe concedes the existence of an "exception to the general rule." F. Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act 174, n. 7 (1962); id., at 195-205.<sup>29</sup>

[LEdHN\[14B\]](#) [↑] [14B] [LEdHN\[15B\]](#) [↑] [15B] [****45]

[LEdHN\[6L\]](#) [↑] [6L] [LEdHN\[10E\]](#) [↑] [10E]

[****47]

[***520] [**2550] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [↑] [1E] [LEdHN\[6M\]](#) [↑] [6M] [LEdHN\[16\]](#) [↑] [16] We conclude that the commentators' analysis, like the reasoning in Perkins and like the Federal Trade Commission's practice, renders implausible Texaco's contention that holding it liable here involves some departure from established understandings. Perhaps respondents' case against Texaco [*570] rests more squarely than do most functional discount cases upon direct evidence of the seller's intent to pass a price advantage through an intermediary. This difference, however, hardly cuts in Texaco's favor. In any event, the evidence produced by respondents also shows the scrambled functions which have more frequently signaled the illegitimacy under the Act of what is alleged to be a permissible functional discount. Both Gull and Dompier received the full discount on all their purchases even though most of their volume was resold directly to consumers. The extra margin on those sales obviously enabled them to price aggressively [****48] in both their retail and their wholesale marketing. To the extent that Dompier and Gull competed with respondents in the retail market, the presumption of adverse effect on competition recognized in the Morton Salt case becomes all the more appropriate. Their competitive advantage in that market also constitutes evidence tending to rebut any presumption of legality that would otherwise apply to their wholesale sales.

[LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [↑] [1F] The evidence indicates, moreover, that Texaco affirmatively encouraged Dompier to expand its retail business and that Texaco was fully informed about the persistent and marketwide consequences of its own pricing policies. Indeed, its own executives recognized that the dramatic impact on the market was almost entirely attributable to the magnitude of the distributor discount and the hauling allowance. Yet at the same time that Texaco was encouraging Dompier to integrate downward, and supplying Dompier with a generous discount useful to such integration, Texaco was inhibiting upward integration by the respondents: two of the respondents sought permission from Texaco to haul their own fuel [****49] using their own tankwagons, but Texaco refused. The special facts of this case thus make it peculiarly difficult for Texaco to claim that it is being held liable for the independent pricing decisions of Gull or Dompier.

[*571] [LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [↑] [1G] [LEdHN\[6N\]](#) [↑] [6N] [LEdHN\[17\]](#) [↑] [17] [LEdHN\[18A\]](#) [↑] [18A] As we recognized in Falls City Industries, HN16 [↑] "the competitive injury component of a Robinson-Patman Act violation is not limited to the injury to competition between the favored and the disfavored purchaser; it also encompasses the injury to competition between their customers." 460 U.S., at 436. This conclusion is compelled by the statutory language, <sup>28</sup> "In practice, the competitive effects requirement permits a supplier to quote different prices between different distributor classes -- so long as those who are higher up (nearer the supplier) on the distribution ladder pay less than those who are further down (nearer the consumer)." F. Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act 174 (1962) (footnote omitted); see also id., at 178.

<sup>29</sup> Rowe, writing prior to this Court's Perkins decision, describes the exception, which he identifies with the Standard Oil cases, as "of dubious validity today." Id., at 196. Rowe's analysis is flawed because he assumes that seller liability for tertiary line implications of wholesaler discounts must follow the logic of the Standard Oil complaint, and likewise assumes that this logic exposes to liability any seller who fails to monitor the resale prices of its wholesaler. Id., at 204. Indeed, Rowe's own discussion suggests one defect in his argument: legitimate wholesaler discounts will usually be insulated from liability by an absence of evidence on the causation issue. Id., at 203-204. In any event, nothing in our opinion today endorses a theory of liability under the Robinson-Patman Act for functional discounts so broad as the theory Rowe draws from Standard Oil.

which specifically encompasses not only the adverse effect of price discrimination on persons who either grant or knowingly receive the benefit of such discrimination, but also on "customers [***50] of either of them." Such indirect competitive effects surely may not be presumed automatically in every functional discount setting, and, indeed, [***521] one would expect that most functional discounts will be legitimate discounts which do not cause harm to competition. At the least, a functional discount that constitutes a reasonable reimbursement for the purchasers' actual marketing functions will not violate the Act. When a functional discount is legitimate, the inference of injury to competition recognized in the Morton Salt case will simply not arise. Yet it is also true that not every functional discount is entitled to a judgment of legitimacy, and that it will sometimes be possible to produce evidence showing that a particular functional discount caused a price discrimination of the [**2551] sort the Act prohibits. When such anti-competitive effects are proved -- as we believe they were in this case -- they are covered by the Act.<sup>30</sup>

LEdHN[18B][][18B]

[***51] VI

LEdHN[19][][19] LEdHN[20][][20]At the trial respondents introduced evidence describing the diversion of their customers to specific stations supplied by Dompier. Respondents' expert testimony on damages also focused on the diversion of trade to specific Dompier-supplied stations. The expert testimony analyzed the entire [*572] damages period, which ran from 1972 and 1981 and included a period prior to 1974 when Dompier did not own any retail stations (although the jury might reasonably have found that Dompier controlled the Red Carpet station from the outset of the damages period). Moreover, respondents offered no direct testimony of any diversion to Gull and testified that they did not even know that Gull was being supplied by Texaco. Texaco contends that by basing the damages award upon an extrapolation from data applicable to Dompier-supplied stations, respondents necessarily based the award upon the consequences of pricing decisions made by independent customers of Dompier. Texaco argues that the damages award must therefore be judged excessive [***52] as a matter of law.

Even if we were to agree with Texaco that Dompier was not a retailer throughout the damages period, we could not accept Texaco's argument. Texaco's theory improperly blurs the distinction between the liability and the damages issues. The proof established that Texaco's lower prices to Gull and Dompier were discriminatory throughout the entire nine-year period; that at least Gull, and apparently Dompier as well, was selling at retail during that entire period; that the discounts substantially affected competition throughout the entire market; and that they injured each of the respondents. There is no doubt that respondents' proof of a continuing violation of the Act throughout the nine-year period was sufficient. Proof of the specific amount of their damages was necessarily less precise. Even if some portion of some of respondents' injuries may be attributable to the conduct of independent retailers, the expert testimony nevertheless provided a sufficient basis for an acceptable estimate of the amount of damages. We have held that HN17[] a plaintiff may not recover damages merely [***53] by showing a violation of the Act; rather, the plaintiff must also "make [***522] some showing of actual injury attributable to something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. Perkins v. Standard Oil Co., 395 U.S. 642, 648 [*573] (1969) (plaintiff 'must, of course, be able to show a causal connection between the price discrimination in violation of the Act and the injury suffered')." J. Turett Payne v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S., at 562. At the same time, however, we reaffirmed our "traditional rule excusing antitrust plaintiffs from an unduly rigorous standard of proving antitrust injury." Id., at 565. See also Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 123-124 (1969); Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264-265 (1946).<sup>31</sup> Moreover, as we have noted, Texaco did not [**2552]

<sup>30</sup> The parties do not raise, and we therefore need not address, the question whether the inference of injury to competition might also be negated by evidence that disfavored buyers could make purchases at a reasonable discount from favored buyers.

<sup>31</sup> In J. Truett Payne, 451 U.S., at 465-566, we quoted with approval the following passage:

HN18[] "Damage issues in these cases are rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts. The Court has repeatedly held that in the absence of more precise proof, the factfinder may 'conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that object to the instructions to the jury on the damages issue. A possible flaw in the jury's calculation of the amount of damages would not be an appropriate basis for granting Texaco's motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

[****54] The judgment is affirmed.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: WHITE; SCALIA

Concur

---

JUSTICE WHITE, concurring in the result.

Texaco's first submission urging a blanket exemption for all functional discounts is rejected by the Court on the ground stated in FTC v. Anheuser Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 550 \(1960\), that the "statute itself spells out the conditions which make a price difference illegal or legal, and we would derange [*574] this integrated statutory scheme" by providing a defense not contained in the statute. In the next section of its opinion, however, the Court not only declares that a price differential that merely accords due recognition and reimbursement for actual marketing functions not only does not trigger the presumption of an injury to competition, see FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 46-47 \(1948\), but also announces that "such a discount is not illegal." Ante, at 16. There is nothing in the Act to suggest such a defense to a charge of price discrimination that "may . . . substantially . . . lessen competition . . . in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person [****55] who either [***523] grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them." 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\). Nor is there any indication in prior cases that the Act should be so construed. The Court relies heavily on the Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws (1955) and also suggests that the Federal Trade Commission permits "legitimate functional discounts" but will not countenance subterfuges. Ante, at 17.

Thus, a Texaco retailer charged a higher price than a distributor who is given what the Court would call a legitimate discount is entirely foreclosed, even though he offers to prove, and could prove, that the distributor sells to his customers at a price lower than the plaintiff retailer pays Texaco and that those customers of the distributor undersell the plaintiff and have caused plaintiff's business to fail. This kind of injury to the Texaco retailer's ability to compete is squarely covered by the language of § 13\(a\), which reaches not only injury to competition but injury to Texaco retail customers' ability to compete with the distributor's customers. The Court neither explains [****56] why this is not the case nor justifies its departure from the provisions of the Act other than by suggesting that when there is a legitimate discount, it is the distributor's decision, not the discount given by Texaco, that causes the injury, even though the latter makes possible the [*575] distributor's discount. Perhaps this is the case if the concept of a legitimate price discrimination other than those legitimated by the Act's provisions is to be implied. But that poses the question whether the Act is open to such a construction.

The Attorney General's Committee noted the difficulty. Under the construction of the Act that the FTC was then espousing and applying, see Standard Oil Co. v. FTC, 173 F.2d 210 \(CA7 1949\), rev'd on other grounds, 340 U.S. 231 \(1951\), the Committee said, "[a] supplier according functional discounts to a wholesaler and other middleman while at the same time marketing directly to retailers encounters serious legal risks." Report of Attorney General's National Committee, at 206. The Committee clearly differed with the FTC and called for an authoritative construction of the Act that would accommodate "functional [****57] discounts to the broader purposes of the Act and of antitrust policy." Id. at 208. At a later stage in the Standard Oil case, the FTC disavowed any purpose to defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs.' Bigelow v. RKO Pictures, Inc., [327 U.S.], at 264. See also Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U.S. 359, 377-379 \(1927\); Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 561-566 \(1931\)." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S., at 123-124.

---

eliminate legitimate functional pricing or to make sellers responsible for the pricing practices of its wholesalers. The reversal of its position, which the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit had affirmed, was explained on the ground of "broader antitrust policies." Reply Brief for Petitioner in FTC v. Standard Oil Co., O. T. 1957, No. 24, p. 32. The FTC has also appeared as an amicus in this case urging us to recognize and define legitimate functional discounts. Its brief, however, does not spell out the types of functional discounts that the Commission considers defensible. Nor does the FTC cite any case since the filing of its reply brief in 1957 in which it has purported to describe the contours of legitimate functional pricing. Furthermore, the FTC's argument apparently does not persuade the [***524] Court, for the Commission recommends reversal and remand, while the Court affirms the judgment.

[*576] In the absence of Congressional attention to this long-standing issue involving antitrust policy, I doubt [****58] that at this late date we should attempt to set the matter right, at least not in a case that does not require us to define what a legitimate functional discount is. If the FTC now recognizes that functional discounts given by a producer who sells both to distributors and retailers are legitimate if they reflect only proper factors and are not subterfuges, I would await a case challenging such a ruling by the FTC. We would then be reviewing a construction of the Act by the FTC and its explanation of legitimate functional discount pricing.

This is obviously not such a case. This is a private action for treble damages, and the Court rules against the seller-discounter since under no definition of a legitimate functional discount do the discounts extended here qualify as a defense to a charge of price discrimination. We need do no more than the Court did in Perkins v. Standard Oil Co. of California, 395 U.S. 642 (1969). This the Court plainly recognizes, and it should stop there. Hence, I concur in the result.

JUSTICE SCALIA, with whom JUSTICE KENNEDY joins, concurring in the judgment.

I agree with the Court that none of the arguments pressed by petitioner for removing [****59] its conduct from the coverage of the Robinson-Patman Act is persuasive. I cannot, however, adopt the Court's reasoning, which seems to create an exemption for functional discounts that are "reasonable" even though prohibited by the text of the Act.

The Act provides:

"It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent [*577] competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered." 15 U.S.C. § 13(a).

As the Court notes, ante, at 10, sales of like goods in interstate [****60] commerce violate this provision if three conditions are met: (1) the seller discriminates in price between purchasers, (2) the effect of such discrimination [**2554] may be to injure competition between the victim and beneficiaries of the discrimination or their customers, and (3) the discrimination is not cost-based. Petitioner makes three arguments, one related to each of these conditions. First, petitioner argues that a price differential between purchasers at different [***525] levels of distribution is not discrimination in price. As the Court correctly concludes, that cannot be so. As long ago as FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37 (1948), we held that the Act prohibits differentials in the prices offered to wholesalers and retailers. True, in Morton Salt the retailers were being favored over the wholesalers, the reverse of the situation here. But if that factor could make any difference, it would bear not upon whether price discrimination occurred, but upon whether it affected competition, the point I address next.

Second, petitioner argues that its practice of giving wholesalers Gull and Dompier discounts unavailable to retailer Hasbrouck could not have [****61] injured Hasbrouck's competition with retailers who purchased from Gull and Dompier. Any competitive advantage enjoyed by the competing retailers, petitioner asserts, was the product of independent decisions by Gull and Dompier to pass on the discounts to those retailers. This also is unpersuasive. The Act forbids price discrimination whose effect may be "to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who . . . knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of [that person]." 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\) (emphasis added). Obviously, that effect upon "competition with customers" occurs whether or not the beneficiary's choice to pass on the discount is his own. The existence of an implied "proximate cause" requirement that would cut off liability by reason of the voluntary act of pass-on is simply implausible. This field is laden with "voluntary acts" of third persons that do not relieve the violator of liability -- beginning with the act of the ultimate purchaser, who in the last analysis causes the injury to competition by "voluntarily" choosing to buy from the seller who offers the lower price that the price discrimination [****62] has made possible. The Act focuses not upon free will, but upon predictable commercial motivation; and it is just as predictable that a wholesaler will ordinarily increase sales (and thus profits) by passing on at least some of a price advantage, as it is that a retailer will ordinarily buy at the lower price. To say that when the Act refers to injury of competition "with customers" of the beneficiary it has in mind only those customers to whom the beneficiary is compelled to sell at the lower price is to assume that Congress focused upon the damage caused by the rare exception rather than the damage caused by the almost universal rule. The Court rightly rejects that interpretation. The independence of the pass-on decision is beside the point.

Petitioner's third point relates to the third condition of liability (i. e., lack of a cost justification for the discrimination), but does not assert that such a justification is present here. Rather, joined by the United States as amicus curiae, petitioner argues at length that even if petitioner's discounts to Gull and Dompier cannot be shown to be cost-based they should be exempted, because the "functional discount" is an efficient and legitimate [****63] commercial practice that is ordinarily cost-based, though it is all but impossible to establish [*579] cost justification in a particular case. The short answer to this argument is that it should be addressed to Congress.

The Court does not, however, provide [****526] that response, but accepts this last argument in somewhat modified form. Petitioner has violated the Act, it says, only because the discount it gave to Gull and Dompier was not a "reasonable reimbursement for the value to [petitioner] of their actual marketing functions." Ante, at 16; see also ante, at 25. Relying on a mass of extratextual materials, the Court concludes that the Act permits such "reasonable" functional discounts even if the supplier cannot satisfy the "rigorous" [**2555] requirements of the cost justification defense." Id., at 15. I find this conclusion quite puzzling. The language of the Act is straightforward: any price discrimination whose effect "may be substantially . . . to injure, destroy, or prevent completion" is prohibited, unless it is immunized by the "cost justification" defense, i. e., unless it "makes only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery [****64] resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which [the] commodities are . . . sold or delivered." 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\). There is no exception for "reasonable" functional discounts that do not meet this requirement. Indeed, I am at a loss to understand what makes a functional discount "reasonable" unless it meets this requirement. It does not have to meet it penny-for-penny, of course: The "rigorous requirements of the cost justification defense" to which the Court refers, ante, at 15, are not the rigors of mathematical precision, but the rigors of proof that the amount of the discount and the amount of the cost saving are close enough that the difference cannot produce any substantial lessening of competition. See ante, at 15, n. 18. How is one to determine that a functional discount is "reasonable" except by proving (through the normally, alas, "rigorous" means) that it meets this test? Shall we use a nationwide average?

I suppose a functional discount can be "reasonable" (in the relevant sense of being unlikely to subvert the purposes of [*580] the Act) if it is not commensurate with the supplier's costs saved (as the cost-justification defense [****65] requires), but is commensurate with the wholesaler's costs incurred in performing services for the supplier. Such a discount would not produce the proscribed effect upon competition, since if it constitutes only reimbursement for the wholesaler one would not expect him to pass it on. The relevant measure of the discount in order to determine "reasonableness" on that basis, however, is not the measure the Court applies to Texaco ("value to [the supplier] of [the distributor's] actual marketing functions," ante, at 16), but rather "cost to the distributor of the distributor's actual marketing functions" -- which is of course not necessarily the same thing. I am therefore quite unable to understand what the Court has in mind by its "reasonable" functional discount that is not cost justified.

To my mind, there is one plausible argument for the proposition that a functional basis for differential pricing ipso facto -- cost justification or not -- negates the probability of competitive injury, thus destroying an element of the plaintiff's prima facie case, see Falls City Industries, Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 434 [***527] (1983): In a market that is [****66] really functionally divided, retailers are in competition with one another, not with wholesalers. That competition among retailers cannot be injured by the supplier's giving lower prices to wholesalers -- because if the price differential is passed on, all retailers will simply purchase from wholesalers instead of from the supplier. Or, to put it differently, when the market is functionally divided all competing retailers have the opportunity of obtaining the same price from wholesalers, and the supplier's functional price discrimination alone does not cause any injury to competition. Therefore (the argument goes), if functional division of the market is established, it should be up to the complaining retailer to show that some special factor (e. g., an agreement between the supplier and the wholesaler that the latter will not sell to the former's retailer-customers) prevents this normal market [*581] mechanism from operating. As the Court notes, ante, at 26, this argument was not raised by the parties here or below, and it calls forth a number of issues that would benefit from briefing and factual development. I agree that we should not decide the merit of this argument in the [****67] first instance.

For the foregoing reasons, I concur in the judgment.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 149, 151, 153, 154, 341, 342, 344, 358

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 54:337, 54:340, 54:341

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 13\(a\)

US L Ed Digest, Evidence 979; Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 38

Index to Annotations, Dealers and Distributors; Discounts and Rebates; Gas and Oil; Prices and Pricing; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; Retail Businesses and Stores; Robinson-Patman Act

Annotation References:

Construction and application of "good faith meeting competition defense" of Clayton Act, as amended by Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(b\)). 59 L Ed 2d 810.

What issues will the Supreme Court consider ,though not, or not properly, raised by the parties. 42 L Ed 2d 946.

Supreme Court's views as to weight and effect to be given, on subsequent judicial construction, [****68] to prior administrative construction of statute. 39 L Ed 2d 942.

Construction of the cost-justification proviso of the Robinson-Patman Act. 8 L Ed 2d 1033.

Robinson-Patman Act as construed by Supreme Court. 2 L Ed 2d 1737.

Proof of injury to competition as jurisdictional requirement under 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)). 47 ALR Fed 846.

Measure and elements of damages for violation of Robinson-Patman Act. 9 ALR Fed 279.

Discounts permissible under Robinson-Patman Amendment to Clayton Act. 1 ALR2d 276.

Kansas v. Utilicorp United, Inc.

Supreme Court of the United States

April 16, 1990, Argued ; June 21, 1990, Decided

No. 88-2109

Reporter

497 U.S. 199 *; 110 S. Ct. 2807 **; 111 L. Ed. 2d 169 ***; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3293 ****; 58 U.S.L.W. 4898; 1990-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,064

KANSAS ET AL. v. UTILICORP UNITED INC.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 866 F. 2d 1286, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

overcharge, purchasers, indirect, customers, consumers, antitrust, regulators, Shoe, cases, costs, rates, anti trust law, parens patriae, damages, district court, apportionment, natural gas, passthrough, pass-on, prices, suits, public utility, cost-plus, suppliers, complicate, provable, multiple recoveries, Clayton Act, inflated, pipeline

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN2 [] Private Actions, Purchasers

The direct purchaser rule serves, in part, to eliminate the complications of apportioning overcharges between direct and indirect purchasers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN3 [] Private Actions, Purchasers

The mere fact that a price rise followed an unlawful cost increase does not show that the sufferer of the cost increase was undamaged. His customers may have been ripe for his price rise earlier; if a cost rise is merely the occasion for a price increase a businessman could have imposed absent the rise in his costs, the fact that he was earlier not enjoying the benefits of the higher price should not permit the supplier who charges an unlawful price to take those benefits from him without being liable for damages. This statement merely recognizes the usual principle that the possessor of a right can recover for its unlawful deprivation whether or not he was previously exercising it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN4 Private Actions, Purchasers

The task of disentangling overlapping damages claims is not lightly to be imposed upon potential antitrust litigants, or upon the judicial system.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN5 Private Actions, Purchasers

The Illinois Brick rule serves to eliminate multiple recoveries.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Interpretation of § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, must promote the vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN7 Private Actions, Purchasers

A court should not carve out exceptions to the direct purchaser rule for particular types of markets. The possibility of allowing an exception, even in rather meritorious circumstances, would undermine the rule.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN8 Private Actions, Purchasers

The process of classifying various market situations according to the amount of pass-on likely to be involved and its susceptibility of proof in a judicial forum would entail the very problems that the Hanover Shoe rule was meant to avoid. The litigation over where the line should be drawn in a particular class of cases would inject the same massive evidence and complicated theories into treble-damages proceedings, albeit at a somewhat higher level of generality.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN9 [down arrow] Private Actions, Purchasers

In a cost-plus contract situation, the direct purchaser is insulated from any decrease in its sales as a result of attempting to pass on the overcharge, because its customer is committed to buying a fixed quantity regardless of price. The effect of the overcharge is essentially determined in advance, without reference to the interaction of supply and demand that complicates the determination in the general case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN10 [down arrow] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15c\(a\)\(1\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN11 [down arrow] Clayton Act, Remedies

Section 4C of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, did not establish any new substantive liability. Instead, it simply created a new procedural device -- parens patriae actions by states on behalf of their citizens -- to enforce existing rights of recovery under § 4 of the Clayton Act. Section 4 affords relief only to a person injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\). State attorneys general may bring actions on behalf of consumers who have such an injury.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Utility alone, and not states on behalf of utility customers, held to have standing to bring antitrust suit under 4 of Clayton Act against natural gas suppliers allegedly overcharging utility.

Summary

Section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) authorizes "any person who shall be injured" by an antitrust violation to sue for treble damages, costs, and attorneys' fees; 4C(a)(1) of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 (15 USCS 15c\(a\)\(1\)) authorizes state attorneys general to bring parens patriae actions on behalf of natural persons residing in their states to secure monetary relief for injury sustained by such persons as a result of antitrust violations. Alleging that certain natural gas producers and a gas pipeline company had conspired to inflate gas prices in violation of the federal antitrust laws, various plaintiffs--including public utility companies which purchased gas from the pipeline company in order to service customers in Kansas and Missouri, and the states of Kansas and Missouri, acting in part as parens patriae on behalf of residential consumers who purchased gas from the utilities--brought actions under 4 against the producers and the pipeline company in the United States District Court for the District of Kansas. The producers and the pipeline company asserted that the utilities lacked standing to bring such an action under 4, because they had passed all of the allegedly illegal price increase on to their customers and thus had suffered no antitrust "injury." The District Court, however, (1) interpreted United States Supreme Court precedents as holding that direct purchasers from antitrust violators suffer injury for purposes of 4 to the full extent of an alleged overcharge even if all or part of that overcharge is passed on to customers, whereas those customers, as indirect purchasers, suffer no such injury; (2) granted the plaintiff utilities' motion for partial summary judgment disallowing the "pass-on" defense; and (3) treating the utilities' motion as a motion to dismiss the states' parens patriae claims, granted that motion (695 F Supp 1109). On the states' interlocutory appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit affirmed the dismissals (866 F2d 1286).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Kennedy, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and Stevens, O'Connor, and Scalia, JJ., it was held that (1) when suppliers overcharge a regulated public utility for natural gas, in violation of the federal antitrust laws, and the utility passes on the overcharge to its customers, only the utility has a cause of action under 4, because only the utility, as a direct purchaser, has suffered injury within the meaning of 4; (2) the direct-purchaser rule's purpose of avoiding the complications of apportioning damages is applicable in a case involving a regulated utility, even though such utilities allegedly can pass on all of an overcharge to their customers, because the utility remains an injured party and must remain in the suit, given that the utility might have been able to raise its rates in the absence of increased costs and also that the pass-on process may take time; (3) an exception to the rule may be unnecessary, as state regulators might require utilities to pass on at least some of the recovery obtained in a 4 suit; (4) even though bringing all classes of purchasers together in a single lawsuit may reduce the risk of multiple recovery which the rule was intended to eliminate, this reduction comes at too great a cost in complexity of litigation; (5) an exception to the rule in utility cases would not better secure the goal of vigorous antitrust enforcement, as (a) utilities do not lack incentive to prosecute 4 actions and in fact have a record of vigorous antitrust enforcement, whereas (b) consumers may lack the ability to detect improper pricing by suppliers, and (c) state attorneys general can bring parens patriae actions on behalf of only resident natural persons and may hesitate to bring suit in cases involving smaller and speculative harm to consumers; (6) although a possible exception to the rule has been suggested if an indirect purchaser buys under a pre-existing cost-plus contract, such an exception would not apply in the case at hand, where the utility customers made no commitment to purchase any particular quantity and the utility had no guarantee of a particular profit, and the need to inquire into the precise operation of market forces would negate the simplicity and certainty that could justify a cost-plus contract exception; and (7) 4C(a)(1) does not authorize a parens patriae action in such a case, because the utility is the injured party.

White, J., joined by Brennan, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., dissented, expressing the view that the case at hand raises none of the concerns which underlie the direct-purchaser rule, and that the rule should not be applied so as to deny the states standing to sue, because (1) the courts below assumed that there had been a perfect and provable pass-on of the allegedly illegal overcharge, and the issue should be decided on that basis; (2) where it is clear that the entire overcharge is passed through, the extent of the injury to indirect purchasers can easily be determined by examining their utility bills; (3) the problem of separating the price increase attributable to anticompetitive conduct from the price increase attributable to legitimate factors is not peculiar to indirect-purchaser suits; (4) granting standing in the case at hand would enhance enforcement of the antitrust laws, as, given that the pass-through of the overcharge is complete and easily demonstrated, the indirect purchasers--and the states in their parens patriae capacity--can readily discover their injury, whereas, though the utility could sue to recover lost profits, it has no incentive to seek a recovery of the overcharge which it has passed on; and (5) where there is a perfect and provable pass-through, there is no danger of multiple recovery of damages for the same anticompetitive conduct.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > damages suit -- direct-purchaser rule -- public utilities -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

When suppliers overcharge a regulated public utility for natural gas, in violation of the federal antitrust laws, and the utility passes on the overcharge to its customers, only the utility has a cause of action under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15)--which authorizes any person injured by an antitrust violation to sue for treble damages, costs, and attorneys' fees--because only the utility, as a direct purchaser, has suffered injury within the meaning of 4; thus, a state may not, as parens patriae, maintain an action against the suppliers on behalf of the utility's customers, who as indirect purchasers have not suffered injury for purposes of 4. (White, Brennan, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > damages suit -- public utilities -- apportionment of costs -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C]

No exception to the rule that only a direct purchaser from an alleged antitrust violator, and not the direct purchaser's customers, suffers an injury within the meaning of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15)--which authorizes any person injured by an antitrust violation to sue for treble damages, costs, and attorneys' fees--is warranted in cases where the direct purchasers are regulated public utilities, as the rule's purpose of avoiding the need to apportion overcharges between direct and indirect purchasers is applicable in such cases, despite the argument that a utility which passes on its costs pursuant to state regulation allegedly passes on the entire overcharge and thus allegedly obviates litigation over the apportionment of the overcharge, because (1) an overcharge may injure a utility, apart from lost business, even if the utility raises its rates to offset the increased costs, since the utility might have been able to raise its rates in the absence of increased costs but will not enjoy the benefit of a raise because of those costs; (2) the existence of state regulation does not simplify the problem of proving what the direct purchaser could have done in the absence of the overcharges, but instead adds another level of complexity, as a court examining such a question will have to determine what state regulators would allow, a case-by-case inquiry turning on the intricacies of state law; (3) the existence of such potential injury requires that the utility remain in the case, so that the addition of indirect purchasers would require the development of an apportionment formula; (4) apportionment may also be necessary because, even if a utility can pass on 100 percent of its costs at some point, the regulatory process and other factors may delay the passing-on process and force the utility to pay some of the increased costs in the interim; and (5) the regulation of utilities may make an exception to the direct-purchaser rule unnecessary, as state regulators might require utilities to pass on at least some of the recovery obtained in a 4 suit. (White, Brennan, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > damages suit -- public utilities -- multiple recovery -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B] [LEdHN\[3C\]](#) [3C]

No exception to the rule that only a direct purchaser from an alleged antitrust violator, and not the direct purchaser's customers, suffers an injury within the meaning of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15)--which authorizes any person injured by an antitrust violation to sue for treble damages, costs, and attorneys' fees--is warranted in cases where the direct purchasers are regulated public utilities, even though bringing all classes of direct and indirect purchasers together in a single lawsuit may reduce the risk of multiple recovery which the rule is intended to eliminate, because (1) that reduction comes at too great a cost, as expansion of the case to bring all of the potential plaintiffs together risks the confusion, cost, and error inherent in complex litigation, and (2) such expansion would serve little purpose, as state regulatory law may provide appropriate relief to consumers even if they cannot sue under 4. (White, Brennan, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > damages suit -- public utilities -- enforcement incentives -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B] [LEdHN\[4C\]](#) [4C]

Although the argument for an exception, in cases involving antitrust violations against regulated public utilities, to the rule that only a direct purchaser from an alleged antitrust violator, and not the direct purchaser's customers, suffers an injury within the meaning of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15)--which authorizes any person injured by an antitrust violation to sue for treble damages, costs, and attorneys' fees--might be stronger if it were shown that interpreting 4 so as to allow such an exception would better secure the goal of vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws, no such exception is warranted by such utilities' supposed lack of incentive to prosecute 4 actions, even though utilities allegedly can pass on their excess costs to customers and allegedly may be required to pass on damages recovered in a 4 action, since (1) utilities may bring 4 actions in some instances for fear that regulators will not allow them to shift known and avoidable overcharges onto their customers; (2) no authority has been cited to the effect that a utility winning a 4 action would have to pay the entire exemplary portion of its treble damages award to its customers; and (3) utilities have an established record of diligent antitrust enforcement, whereas (a) consumers may lack the expertise and experience necessary for detecting improper pricing by a utility's suppliers, and (b) state attorneys general, though possessing greater expertise, may hesitate to bring parens patriae actions in cases involving smaller and more speculative harm to consumers and, in any event, can bring such actions on behalf of only resident natural persons. (White, Brennan, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > damages suit -- exceptions to direct-purchaser rule -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B] [LEdHN\[5C\]](#) [5C]

Although the rationales underlying the rule that only a direct purchaser from an alleged antitrust violator suffers an injury within the meaning of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15)--which authorizes any person injured by an antitrust violation to sue for treble damages, costs, and attorneys' fees--will not apply with equal force in all cases, no exceptions to the rule should be carved out for particular types of markets, since the possibility of allowing exceptions, even in meritorious cases, would undermine the rule.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > damages suit -- public utilities -- cost-plus contracts -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

Although a departure from the rule that only a direct purchaser from an alleged antitrust violator, and not the direct purchaser's customers, suffers an injury within the meaning of 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15)--which authorizes any person injured by an antitrust violation to sue for treble damages, costs, and attorneys' fees--may be necessary with regard to a case in which an indirect purchaser buys under a pre-existing cost-plus contract, where the direct purchaser will bear no portion of an overcharge and otherwise suffer no injury, such a departure does not justify an exception to the rule in a particular case where suppliers have allegedly overcharged a regulated public utility for natural gas and states seek to bring parens patriae actions on behalf of the utility's customers, since (1) the utility customers in question made no commitment to purchase any particular quantity of gas, and the utility itself had no guarantee of any particular profit; (2) even though the utility raised its prices to cover its costs, its precise injury cannot be ascertained, because it is not known what might have happened in the absence of an overcharge; and

(3) even if the utility customers have a highly inelastic demand for gas, the need to inquire into the precise operation of market forces would negate the simplicity and certainty that could justify a cost-plus contract exception.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §67 > damages suit -- public utilities -- parens patriae -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B] [LEdHN\[7C\]](#) [7C]

State attorneys general may not maintain an action under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15)--which authorizes any person injured by an antitrust violation to sue for treble damages, costs, and attorneys' fees--on behalf of public utility customers who have allegedly borne the burden of inflated natural gas prices imposed on a utility by its suppliers, even though state attorneys general are authorized under 4C(a)(1) of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 (15 USCS 15c\(a\)\(1\)) to bring actions as parens patriae on behalf of natural persons residing in their states who have suffered antitrust injuries, and even though state attorneys general may thus bring actions on behalf of consumers who have suffered injuries within the meaning of 4, because in such a case, it is the utility that is the injured party under the antitrust laws, and the predicate for a parens patriae action has not been established. (White, Brennan, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

Syllabus

---

The respondent -- an investor-owned public utility operating in the petitioner States -- and other utilities and natural gas purchasers filed suit in the District Court against a pipeline company and five gas producers under § 4 of the Clayton Act, which authorizes any person injured by a violation of the antitrust laws to sue for treble damages. The utilities alleged that the defendants had unlawfully conspired to inflate the price of gas that they supplied to the utilities, and sought treble damages for both the amount overcharged and the decrease in sales to customers caused by the overcharge. The petitioner States filed separate § 4 actions in the District Court against the same defendants for the alleged antitrust violation, asserting, inter alia, parens [****2] patriae claims on behalf of all natural persons residing in the States who had purchased gas from any utility at inflated prices. The court consolidated all of the actions and granted the utilities partial summary judgment with respect to the defendants' defense that, since the utilities had passed through all of the alleged overcharge to their customers, the utilities lacked standing because they had suffered no antitrust injury as required by § 4. In light of its conclusion that, under Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224, and Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061, the utilities had suffered antitrust injury as direct purchasers but their customers, as indirect purchasers, had not, the court dismissed the States' parens patriae claims. The Court of Appeals affirmed the dismissals.

Held: When suppliers violate antitrust laws by overcharging a public utility for natural gas, and the utility passes on the overcharge to its customers, only the utility has a cause of action under § 4 because it alone has suffered antitrust [****3] injury. Pp. 206-219.

1. Three rationales underlie the indirect purchaser rule adopted in Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick: (1) establishing the amount of an overcharge shifted to indirect purchasers would normally prove insurmountable in light of the wide range of considerations influencing a company's pricing decisions; (2) a pass-on defense would reduce the effectiveness of § 4 actions by diminishing the recovery available to any potential plaintiff; and (3) allowing suits by indirect purchasers would risk multiple liability because the alleged antitrust violators could not use a pass-on defense in an action by the direct purchasers. Pp. 206-208.

2. The aforesaid rationales compel the conclusion that no exception to the indirect purchaser rule should be made for suits involving regulated public utilities that pass on all of their costs to their customers. Pp. 208-217.

(a) Allowing indirect suits in such cases might necessitate complex cost apportionment calculations, since a utility bears at least some portion of a passed-on overcharge to the extent that it could have sought and gained state permission to raise its rates in the absence of the overcharge, cf. [****4] *Hanover Shoe, supra, at 493*, and n.9, and since various factors, such as the need to seek regulatory approval, may delay the passing-on process and thereby require the utility, in the interim, to bear some of the overcharge's costs in the form of lower earnings. Here, the certified question leaves unclear whether the respondent could have raised its prices prior to the overcharge, whether it had passed on "most or all" of its costs at the time of its suit, and even the means by which the pass through occurred. Proof of these preliminary issues, which are irrelevant to the defendants' liability, would turn upon the intricacies of state law, and, if it were determined that respondent had borne some of the costs, would require the adoption of an apportionment formula, the very complexity that Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick sought to avoid. Moreover, creating an exception in such cases would make little sense when, in light of all its difficulty, its practical significance is diminished by the fact that some States require utilities to pass on at least some of the recovery obtained in a § 4 suit to their customers. Pp. 208-212.

(b) Even if the risk of [****5] multiple recoveries would be eliminated by allowing the petitioners to recover only the amount of the overcharge and the respondent to recover only damages for its lost sales in a single lawsuit, the additional complexity thereby introduced into a case that already has become quite complicated argues strongly for retaining the indirect purchaser rule. See *Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 731, n.11*. Pp. 212-213.

(c) Allowing indirect suits by utility customers would not better promote the goal of vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws. The petitioners' argument that utilities lack incentives to sue overcharging suppliers is unpersuasive, since utilities may bring § 4 actions in some instances for fear that regulators will not allow them to shift known and avoidable overcharges on to their customers; since there is no authority indicating that utilities, which may have to pass on § 4 damages recovered, would also have to pay the entire exemplary portion of these damages to customers; and since utilities, in fact, have an established record of diligent and successful antitrust enforcement. On the other hand, indirect purchaser actions might be ineffective because [****6] consumers may lack the expertise and experience necessary to detect improper pricing by a utility's suppliers, while state attorneys general may hesitate to exercise the parens patriae device in cases involving smaller, more speculative harm to consumers, and, in any event, may sue only on behalf of resident natural persons, leaving nonresidents and small businesses to fend for themselves. Pp. 214-216.

(d) Although the rationales of Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick may not apply with equal force in all instances, ample justifications exist for the Court's stated decision not to carve out exceptions to the indirect purchaser rule for particular types of markets. *Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 744-745*. Even assuming that any economic assumptions underlying the rule might be disproved in a specific case, it would be an unwarranted and counterproductive exercise to litigate a series of exceptions. Pp. 216-217.

3. The suggestion in *Hanover Shoe, supra, at 494*, and *Illinois Brick, supra, at 736*, that a departure from the indirect purchaser rule may be necessary when such a purchaser buys under a pre-existing cost-plus [****7] contract does not justify an exception in this case, since the respondent did not sell gas to its customers under such a contract. Even if an exception could be created for situations that merely resemble those governed by such contracts, that exception could not be applied here, since there is no certainty that the respondent has borne no portion of the overcharge and otherwise suffered no injury. Pp. 217-218.

4. Section 4C of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 -- which authorizes States to bring parens patriae actions on behalf of resident natural persons to secure monetary relief for property injury sustained by reason of certain antitrust violations -- does not authorize the petitioners to sue on behalf of consumers notwithstanding the consumers' status as indirect purchasers. Section 4C did not establish any new substantive liability, but simply created a new procedural device to enforce existing rights of recovery under § 4 of the Clayton Act, *Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 734, n.14*, which rights belong to the respondent in this case. Pp. 218-219.

497 U.S. 199, *199; 110 S. Ct. 2807, **2807; 111 L. Ed. 2d 169, ***169; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3293, ****7

Counsel: Thomas J. Greenan argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs [****8] were Robert T. Stephan, Attorney General of Kansas, James E. Hurt, William L. Webster, Attorney General of Missouri, Donald D. Barry, William E. Quirk, Russell S. Jones, Jr., and Thomas A. Sheehan.

Floyd R. Finch, Jr., argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief was Sally R. Burger.

Lawrence S. Robbins argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging affirmance. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Starr, Assistant Attorney General Rill, Deputy Solicitor General Roberts, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Boudin, Stephen J. Marzen, Catherine G. O'Sullivan, and Jay C. Shaffer. *

[****9]

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the State of Illinois by Neil F. Hartigan, Attorney General, Michael J. Hayes, Deputy Attorney General, Robert Ruiz, Solicitor General, and John W. McCaffrey and Christine Rosso, Senior Assistant Attorneys General, Bernard Nash, George Kaufmann, and Peter J. Kadzik; for the State of Maryland et al. by J. Joseph Curran, Jr., Attorney General of Maryland, and Michael F. Brockmeyer, Ellen S. Cooper, and Alan M. Barr, Assistant Attorneys General, Don Siegelman, Attorney General of Alabama, Douglas B. Baily, Attorney General of Alaska, and Thomas E. Wagner, Assistant Attorney General, Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona, Alison J. Butterfield, John Steven Clark, Attorney General of Arkansas, John K. Van de Kamp, Attorney General of California, Andrea Sheridan Ordin, Chief Assistant Attorney General, and Sanford N. Gruskin, Assistant Attorney General, Duane Woodard, Attorney General of Colorado, Clarine Nardi Riddle, Attorney General of Connecticut, and Robert M. Langer and Steven M. Rutstein, Assistant Attorneys General, Charles M. Oberly III, Attorney General of Delaware, Robert A. Butterworth, Attorney General of Florida, Michael J. Bowers, Attorney General of Georgia, and George P. Shingler, Senior Assistant Attorney General, Warren Price III, Attorney General of Hawaii, and Robert A. Marks and Ted Gamble Clause, Deputy Attorneys General, James T. Jones, Attorney General of Idaho, Linley E. Pearson, Attorney General of Indiana, and Donna S. Nichols, Deputy Attorney General, Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, and John R. Perkins, Deputy Attorney General, Frederic J. Cowan, Attorney General of Kentucky, and James M. Ringo, Assistant Attorney General, William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General of Louisiana, and Jesse James Marks and Anne F. Benoit, Assistant Attorneys General, James E. Tierney, Attorney General of Maine, and Stephen L. Wessler, Deputy Attorney General, James M. Shannon, Attorney General of Massachusetts, and George K. Weber and Thomas M. Alpert, Assistant Attorneys General, Frank Kelly, Attorney General of Michigan, Hubert H. Humphrey III, Attorney General of Minnesota, Stephen P. Kilgriff, Deputy Attorney General, and Thomas F. Pursell, Assistant Attorney General, Mike Moore, Attorney General of Mississippi, Marc Racicot, Attorney General of Montana, Robert M. Spire, Attorney General of Nebraska, and Dale A. Comer, Assistant Attorney General, Brian McKay, Attorney General of Nevada, John P. Arnold, Attorney General of New Hampshire, and Terry L. Robertson, Senior Assistant Attorney General, Robert J. Del Tufo, Attorney General of New Jersey, and Laurel A. Price, Deputy Attorney General, Robert Abrams, Attorney General of New York, O. Peter Sherwood, Solicitor General, and Lloyd A. Constantine, Assistant Attorney General, Lacy H. Thornburg, Attorney General of North Carolina, James C. Gulick, Special Deputy Attorney General, and K. D. Sturgis, Assistant Attorney General, Nicholas J. Spaeth, Attorney General of North Dakota, and David W. Huey, Assistant Attorney General, Anthony J. Celebrezze, Jr., Attorney General of Ohio, Dave Frohnmayer, Attorney General of Oregon, Ernest D. Preate, Jr., Attorney General of Pennsylvania, Eugene F. Waye, Chief Deputy Attorney General, and Carl S. Hisiro, Senior Deputy Attorney General, James E. O'Neil, Attorney General of Rhode Island, T. Travis Medlock, Attorney General of South Carolina, Roger A. Tellinghuisen, Attorney General of South Dakota, and Jeffrey P. Hallen, Assistant Attorney General, Charles W. Burson, Attorney General of Tennessee, and Barry Turner, Assistant Attorney General, Jim Mattox, Attorney General of Texas, Mary F. Keller, First Assistant Attorney General, and Allene D. Evans and Donna L. Nelson, Assistant Attorneys General, R. Paul Van Dam, Attorney General of Utah, Jeffrey L. Amestoy, Attorney General of Vermont, and Julie Brill, Assistant Attorney General, Mary Sue Terry, Attorney General of Virginia, and Frank Seales, Assistant Attorney General, Kenneth O. Eikenberry, Attorney General of Washington, and Carol A. Smith, Assistant Attorney General, Roger W. Thompkins, Attorney General of West Virginia, and Dan Huck, Deputy Attorney General, Donald J. Hanaway, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Kevin J. O'Connor, Assistant Attorney General, Joseph B. Meyer, Attorney General of Wyoming, and Robert H. Henry, Attorney General of Oklahoma; for the National Conference of State Legislatures et al. by Benna Ruth Solomon, Beate Bloch, Robert L. Wald, and Richard M. Rindler; and for Nancy Allevato et al. by Richard E. Zuckerman, David B. Jaffe, Robert S. Harrison, and David N. Zacks.

Jeffrey I. Zuckerman, Daniel J. Popeo, Paul D. Kamenar, and John C. Scully filed a brief for the Washington Legal Foundation as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

Judges: KENNEDY, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and STEVENS, O'CONNOR, and SCALIA, JJ., joined. WHITE, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which BRENNAN, MARSHALL, and BLACKMUN, JJ., joined, post, p. 219.

Opinion by: KENNEDY

Opinion

---

[*203] [***178] [**2810] JUSTICE KENNEDY delivered the opinion of the Court.

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A]Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 15, authorizes any person injured by a violation of [*204] the antitrust laws to sue for treble damages, costs, and an attorney's fee. We must decide who may sue under § 4 when, in violation of the antitrust laws, suppliers overcharge a public utility for natural gas and the utility passes on the overcharge to its customers. Consistent with Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 \(1968\), and Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 \(1977\), we hold that only the utility has the cause of action because it alone has suffered injury [****10] within the meaning of § 4.

I

The respondent, UtiliCorp United Inc., an investor-owned public utility operating in Kansas and western Missouri, purchased natural gas from a pipeline company for its own use and for resale to its commercial and [*2811] residential customers. Together with a second utility and several other gas purchasers, the respondent sued the pipeline company and five gas production companies in the United States District Court for the District of Kansas. The utilities alleged that the defendants had conspired to inflate the price of their gas in violation of the antitrust laws. They sought treble damages, pursuant to § 4 of the Clayton Act, for both the amount overcharged by the pipeline company and the decrease in sales to their customers caused by the overcharge.

The petitioners, the States of Kansas and Missouri, initiated separate § 4 actions in the District Court against the same defendants for the alleged antitrust violation. Acting as parens patriae, the petitioners asserted the claims of all natural persons residing within Kansas and Missouri who had purchased gas from any utility at inflated prices. They also [*205] asserted claims as [****11] representatives of state agencies, municipalities, and other political subdivisions that had purchased gas from the defendants. The District Court consolidated all of the actions.

The defendants, in their answer, asserted that the utilities lacked standing under § 4. They alleged that, pursuant to state and municipal regulations and tariffs filed with [*179] state regulatory agencies, the utilities had passed through the entire wholesale cost of the natural gas to their customers. As a result, the defendants contended, the utility customers had paid 100 percent of the alleged overcharge, and the utilities had suffered no antitrust injury as required by § 4.

The utilities moved for partial summary judgment with respect to this defense, and the District Court granted their motion. The court ruled that our decisions in Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick controlled its interpretation of § 4. It read these cases to hold that a direct purchaser from an antitrust violator suffers injury to the full extent of an illegal overcharge even if it passes on some or all of the overcharge to its customers. The District Court concluded that utilities, as direct purchasers, had suffered [****12] antitrust injury, but that their customers, as indirect purchasers, had not.

In light of its ruling, the District Court chose to treat the partial summary judgment motion as a motion to dismiss the petitioners' parens patriae claims. It then granted this motion but allowed the petitioners to take an interlocutory appeal under 28 U. S. C. § 1292\(b\). It certified the following question to the Court of Appeals:

"In a private antitrust action under 15 U. S. C. § 15 involving claims of price fixing against the producers of natural gas, is a State a proper plaintiff as parens patriae for its citizens who paid inflated prices for natural gas, when the lawsuit already includes as plaintiffs those public utilities who paid the inflated prices upon direct purchase from the producers and who subsequently passed on most or all of the price increase to the citizens [*206] of the State?" In re Wyoming Tight Sands Antitrust Cases, 695 F. Supp. 1109, 1120 (Kan. 1988).

497 U.S. 199, *205; 110 S. Ct. 2807, **2811; 111 L. Ed. 2d 169, ***179; 1990 U.S. LEXIS 3293, ****12

The Court of Appeals answered the question in the negative. It agreed with the District Court that Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick [****13] required dismissal of the parens patriae claims. See In re Wyoming Tight Sands Antitrust Cases, 866 F.2d 1286, 1294 (CA10 1989). We granted certiorari to resolve a conflict between this decision and Illinois ex rel. Hartigan v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co., 852 F.2d 891 (CA7 1988) (en banc). 493 U.S. 1041 (1990). We now affirm.

II

Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides in full:

HN1 [↑] "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, [**2812] and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U. S. C. § 15(a).

As noted by the District Court and the Court of Appeals, we have applied this section in two cases involving allegations that a direct purchaser had passed on an overcharge [****14] to its customers.

In Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., supra, Hanover [****180] alleged that United had monopolized the shoe manufacturing machinery industry in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 2. It sought treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act for overcharges paid in leasing certain machinery from United. United defended, in part, on the ground that Hanover had passed on the overcharge to its customers and, as a result, had suffered no injury. We rejected the defense for two reasons. First, noting that a wide range of considerations may influence a company's pricing decisions, we concluded that [*207] establishing the amount of an overcharge shifted to indirect purchasers "would normally prove insurmountable." 392 U.S. at 493. Second, we reasoned that a pass-on defense would reduce the effectiveness of § 4 actions by diminishing the recovery available to any potential plaintiff. See id. at 494.

In Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977), we applied these considerations [****15] to reach a similar result. The State of Illinois sued Illinois Brick and other concrete block manufacturers for conspiring to raise the cost of concrete blocks in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1. We ruled that the State had suffered no injury within the meaning of § 4 because Illinois Brick had not sold any concrete blocks to it. The company, instead, had sold the blocks to masonry subcontractors, who in turn had sold them to the State's general contractors. We decided that, because Illinois Brick could not use a pass-on defense in an action by direct purchasers, it would risk multiple liability to allow suits by indirect purchasers. See 431 U.S. at 730-731. We declined to overrule Hanover Shoe or to create exceptions for any particular industries. See 431 U.S. at 735-736, 744-745.

LEdHN[1B] [↑] [1B] Like the State of Illinois in Illinois Brick, the consumers in this case have the status of indirect purchasers. In the distribution chain, they are not the immediate buyers from the alleged antitrust violators. They [*208] bought their gas from the utilities, not from the suppliers said to have conspired to fix the price of the gas. Unless we create an exception to the direct purchaser rule established in Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick, any antitrust claim against the defendants is not for them, but for the utilities to assert.

LEdHN[2A] [↑] [2A] LEdHN[3A] [↑] [3A] LEdHN[4A] [↑] [4A] LEdHN[5A] [↑] [5A] LEdHN[6A] [↑] [6A] LEdHN[7A] [↑] [7A] The petitioners ask us to allow them to press the consumers' claims for three reasons. First, they assert that none of the rationales underlying Hanover Shoe or Illinois Brick exist in cases involving regulated public utilities. Second, they argue that we should apply an exception, suggested in [*208] Illinois Brick, for actions based upon cost-plus contracts. Third, they maintain that § 4C [****17] of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976, 90 Stat. 1394, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 15c, authorizes them to assert claims on behalf of utility customers even if the customers could not assert any claims themselves. Affirming the Court of Appeals, we reject each of these contentions in turn.

III

[LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [↑] [2B] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [↑] [3B] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [↑] [4B] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [↑] [5B] The petitioners assert [***181] that we should allow indirect purchaser suits in cases involving regulated public utilities that pass on 100 percent of their costs to their customers. They maintain that our concerns in Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick about the difficulties of apportionment, the risk of multiple recovery, and the diminution of incentives for private antitrust enforcement would not exist in such cases. We disagree. Although the rationales [**2813] of Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick may not apply with equal [****18] force in all instances, we find it inconsistent with precedent and imprudent in any event to create an exception for regulated public utilities.

A

[LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [↑] [2C] HN2 [↑] The direct purchaser rule serves, in part, to eliminate the complications of apportioning overcharges between direct and indirect purchasers. See Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 493; Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 740-742; Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 475, n.11, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982). The petitioners find the rule unnecessary, in this respect, when a utility passes on its costs to its customers pursuant to state regulations or tariffs filed with a utility commission. In such cases, they assert, the customers pay the entire overcharge, obviating litigation over its apportionment. They maintain that they can prove the exact injury to the residential customers whom they represent because the respondent made periodic public filings showing the volume and price of gas that it sold to these [****19] consumers. They ask us to allow them to sue for [*209] the entire amount of the overcharge and to limit the respondent's recovery to damages for its lost business.

The petitioners have oversimplified the apportionment problem in two respects. First, an overcharge may injure a utility, apart from the question of lost business, even if the utility raises its rates to offset its increased costs. As we explained in Hanover Shoe:

HN3 [↑] "The mere fact that a price rise followed an unlawful cost increase does not show that the sufferer of the cost increase was undamaged. His customers may have been ripe for his price rise earlier; if a cost rise is merely the occasion for a price increase a businessman could have imposed absent the rise in his costs, the fact that he was earlier not enjoying the benefits of the higher price should not permit the supplier who charges an unlawful price to take those benefits from him without being liable for damages. This statement merely recognizes the usual principle that the possessor of a right can recover for its unlawful deprivation whether or not [****20] he was previously exercising it." 392 U.S. at 493, n.9.

In other words, to show that a direct purchaser has borne no portion of an overcharge, the indirect purchaser would have to prove, among other things, that the direct purchaser could not have raised its rates prior to the overcharge.

In Hanover Shoe, however, we decided not to allow proof of what the direct purchaser might have done because of the "nearly insuperable difficulty" of the issue. Id., at 493. The petitioners assume that the presence [***182] of state regulation would make the proof less difficult here. We disagree. The state regulation does not simplify the problem but instead imports an additional level of complexity. To decide whether a utility has borne an overcharge, a court would have to consider not only the extent to which market conditions would have allowed the utility to raise its rates prior to the overcharge, as in the case of an unregulated business, but also what the state regulators would have allowed. In particular, [*210] to decide that an overcharge did not injure a utility, a court would have to determine that the State's regulatory schemes [****21] would have barred any rate increase except for the amount reflected by cost increases. Proof of this complex preliminary issue, one irrelevant to the liability of the defendant, would proceed on a case-by-case basis and would turn upon the intricacies of state law.

From the certified question in this case, we do not know whether the respondent could have raised its prices prior to the overcharge. Its customers may have been willing to pay a greater price, and the Kansas and Missouri regulators may have allowed a rate increase based on factors other than strict costs. See [\*\*2814] Midwest Gas Users Assn. v. State Corporation Comm'n, 5 Kan. App. 2d 653, 661, 623 P.2d 924, 931 (1981); State ex rel. Associated Natural Gas Co. v. Public Service Comm'n, 706 S.W.2d 870, 879-880 (Mo. App. 1985). To the extent that the respondent could have sought and gained permission to raise its rates in the absence of an overcharge, at least some portion of the overcharge is being borne by it; whether by overcharge or by increased rates, consumers would have been paying more for natural gas than they had been paying in the past. Because of this potential [\*\*\*\*22] injury, the respondent must remain in the suit. If we were to add indirect purchasers to the action, we would have to devise an apportionment formula. This is the very complexity that Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick sought to avoid.

Second, difficult questions of timing might necessitate apportioning overcharges if we allowed indirect suits by utility customers. Even if, at some point, a utility can pass on 100 percent of its costs to its customers, various factors may delay the passing-on process. Some utilities must seek approval from the governing regulators prior to raising their rates. Other utilities, pursuant to purchase gas adjustment clauses (PGA's) filed with state regulators, may adjust their rates to reflect changes in their wholesale costs according to prearranged formulas without seeking regulatory approval in [\*211] each instance. Yet, even utilities that use PGA's often encounter some delay. See Brief for State of Illinois as Amicus Curiae 9, n.11 (describing the various time lags under a typical PGA between the increase in a utility's wholesale costs and the rise in consumer rates). During any period in which a utility's costs rise before it may [\*\*\*\*23] adjust its rates, the utility will bear the costs in the form of lower earnings. See S. Breyer, Regulation and its Reform 48-49 (1982). Even after the utility raises its rates, moreover, the pass-through process may take time to complete. During this time, the utility and its customers each would pay for some of the increased costs.

In this case, we could not deprive the respondent of its § 4 action without first determining that the passing-on [\*\*\*183] process in fact had allowed it to shift the entire overcharge to its customers. The certified question, however, leaves unclear whether the respondent had passed on "most or all" of its costs at the time of the suit. In addition, even the means by which the passthrough occurred remain unsettled. The petitioners allege that, pursuant to formulas in PGA's filed with the Kansas Corporation Commission and the Missouri Public Service Commission, the respondent "automatically" adjusted some of its rates to reflect increases in the wholesale cost of gas. Brief for Petitioners 5, n.5. The respondent, however, maintains that PGA's did not govern all of its sales. See Brief for Respondent 17. The difficulties posed by issues of this sort [\*\*\*\*24] led us to adopt the direct purchaser rule, and we must decline to create an exception that would require their litigation. As we have stated before: HN4 "The task of disentangling overlapping damages claims is not lightly to be imposed upon potential antitrust litigants, or upon the judicial system." McCready, 457 U.S. at 475, n.11.

In addition to these complications, the regulation of utilities itself may make an exception to Illinois Brick unnecessary. Our decisions in Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick often deny relief to consumers who have paid inflated prices [\*212] because of their status as indirect purchasers. See 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law § 337e, pp. 193-194 (1978); Harris & Sullivan, Passing on the Monopoly Overcharge: A Comprehensive Policy Analysis, 128 U. Pa. L. Rev. 269, 342 (1979). Although one might criticize Illinois Brick for this consequence in other circumstances, the criticism may have less validity in the context of public utilities. Both the Court of Appeals in this case and the Seventh Circuit in Illinois ex rel. Hartigan v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co., 852 F.2d 891 (1988), [\*\*\*\*25] have suggested that state regulators [\*\*2815] would require the utilities to pass on at least some of the recovery obtained in a § 4 suit. See Wyoming Tight Sands, 866 F.2d at 1291; Panhandle Eastern, supra, at 895. State regulators have followed this approach elsewhere. See, e. g., Louisiana Power & Light Co., Ex Parte, Nos. U-17906, U-12636, U-17649, 1989 La. PUC LEXIS 3, *31-*32 (Mar. 1, 1989) (requiring Louisiana Power & Light Co., which won a $ 190 million judgment against United Gas Pipe Line Co., to flow the proceeds back to ratepayers through reduced rates over a 5-year period). If Kansas and Missouri impose similar requirements, then even if the customers cannot sue the alleged antitrust violators, they may receive some of the compensation obtained by the respondent. Creating an exception to allow apportionment in violation of Illinois Brick would make little sense when, in light of all its difficulty, its practical significance is so diminished.

B

LEdHN[3C] [↑] [3C] [****26] HN5 [↑] The Illinois Brick rule also serves to eliminate multiple recoveries. See Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 730-731; McCready, supra, at 474. The petitioners assert that no risk of multiple recovery would exist here, if we allowed them to sue, because the direct and indirect purchasers would be seeking different, not duplicative, damages; the petitioners would recover [***184] the amount of the overcharge and the utilities would recover damages for their lost sales. Leaving [*213] aside the apportionment issue, we reject the argument in this case, just as we did in Illinois Brick. Bringing all classes of direct and indirect purchasers together in a single lawsuit may reduce the risk of multiple recovery, but the reduction comes at too great a cost. See Illinois Brick, supra, at 731, n.11.

This case already has become quite complicated. It involves numerous utilities and other companies operating in several States under federal, state, and municipal regulation and, in some instances, under no rate regulation at all. Even apart from gas sold to customers, the utilities seek damages for lost sales and for gas purchased [****27] for their own use. The petitioners, in addition to their parens patriae claims, are asserting direct claims on behalf of numerous state agencies. Other direct purchasers also seek several measures of damages. Allowing the petitioners to proceed on behalf of consumers would complicate the proceedings further. Even if they could represent consumers residing in Kansas and Missouri, they could not represent industrial and commercial purchasers or consumers from other States. See 15 U. S. C. § 15c(a)(1) (extending parens patriae representation only to resident natural persons). These unrepresented consumers might seek intervention and further delay the prompt determination of the suit. The expansion of the case would risk the confusion, costs, and possibility of error inherent in complex litigation. At the same time, however, it might serve little purpose because, as noted above, state regulatory law may provide appropriate relief to consumers even if they cannot sue under § 4. As in Illinois Brick, we continue to believe that "even if ways could be found to bring all potential plaintiffs together in one huge action, the complexity thereby introduced [****28] into treble-damages proceedings argues strongly for retaining the Hanover Shoe rule." 431 U.S. at 731, n.11.

[*214] C

LEdHN[4C] [↑] [4C] We have maintained, throughout our cases, that our HN6 [↑] interpretation of § 4 must promote the vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws. See Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 493; Illinois Brick, supra, at 746; McCready, 457 U.S. at 475, n.11; California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 102, n.6, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 [**2816] (1989). If we were convinced that indirect suits would secure this goal better in cases involving utilities, the argument to interpret § 4 to create the exception sought by the petitioners might be stronger. On balance, however, we do not believe that the petitioners can prevail in this critical part of the case. The petitioners assert that utilities, such as the respondent, lack the incentive to prosecute § 4 cases for two reasons. First, they state that utilities, [****29] by law, may pass on their costs to customers. Second, they surmise that utilities might have to pass on damages recovered in a § 4 action. In other words, according to the petitioners, utilities lose nothing if they do not sue and gain nothing if they do sue. In contrast, the petitioners maintain, the large aggregate claims [***185] of residential consumers will give state attorneys general ample motivation to sue in their capacity as parens patriae.

The petitioners' argument does not persuade us that utilities will lack incentives to sue overcharging suppliers. Utilities may bring § 4 actions in some instances for fear that regulators will not allow them to shift known and avoidable overcharges on to their customers. See Kan. Stat. Ann. § 66-128a (1985) (allowing the state commission to "review and evaluate the efficiency or prudence of any actions . . . of any public utility or common carrier for the purpose of establishing fair and reasonable rates"); Mo. Rev. Stat. § 393.150 (1986) (interpreted in State ex rel. Associated Natural Gas Co. v. Public Service Comm'n, 706 S.W.2d 870, 879-880 (Mo. App. 1985), to give regulators "considerable discretion" [****30] in setting gas rates). In addition, even if state law would require a utility to reimburse its customers for recovered overcharges, a utility may seek treble damages in a § 4 action.

[*215] The petitioners have cited no authority indicating that a victorious utility would have to pay the entire exemplary portion of these damages to its customers.

Utilities, moreover, have an established record of diligent antitrust enforcement, having brought highly successful § 4 actions in many instances. The well-known group of actions from the 1960's involving overcharges for electrical generating equipment provides an excellent example. In these cases, which involved "a series of horizontal price-fixing conspiracies characterized as the most shocking in the history of the Sherman Act, plaintiff utilities . . . recovered in unprecedented sums" even though some of the utilities "passed on to their own customers whatever higher costs they incurred as a consequence of the alleged conspiracies." Pollock, Standing to Sue, Remoteness of Injury, and the Passing-On Doctrine, 32 A. B. A. Antitrust L. J. 5, 10-11 (1966). The courts in these suits, even before the Hanover Shoe and Illinois [****31] Brick decisions, considered the pass-on issue and held that the causes of action were for the utilities to assert. See, e. g., *Commonwealth Edison Co. v. Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., 335 F.2d 203, 208 \(CA7 1964\)*; *Ohio Valley Electric Corp. v. General Electric Co., 244 F. Supp. 914, 949-951 \(SDNY 1965\)*. Various factors may have prompted these and other utility actions. For example, in addition to the reasons stated above, the respondent asserts that, like any business, an investor-owned utility has an interest in protecting its market. But whatever the motivation for their § 4 suits, this history makes us quite hesitant to take from the utilities the responsibility for enforcing the antitrust laws.

Relying on indirect purchaser actions in utility cases might fail to promote antitrust enforcement for other reasons. Consumers may lack the expertise and experience necessary for detecting improper pricing by a utility's suppliers. See Landes & Posner, The Economics of Passing On: A Reply to Harris and Sullivan, 128 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1274, 1278-1279 (1980). Although state attorneys general have greater expertise, [*216] they may [****32] hesitate to exercise the parens patriae device in cases involving smaller, more speculative harm to consumers. See Landes & Posner, Should Indirect Purchasers Have Standing to Sue Under the Antitrust [***186] Laws? An Economic [**2817] Analysis of the Rule of Illinois Brick, 46 U. Chi. L. Rev. 602, 613 (1979). See also *Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 745* (stating that, in indirect actions, "the uncertainty of how much of an overcharge could be established . . . [and] the uncertainty of how that overcharge would be apportioned . . . would further reduce the incentive to sue"). And even when state attorneys general decide to bring parens patriae actions, they may sue only on behalf of resident natural persons. See *15 U. S. C. § 15c\(a\)\(1\)*. All others, including non-residents and small businesses, might fail to enforce their claims because of the insignificance of their individual recoveries. For these reasons, we remain unconvinced that the exception sought by the petitioners would promote antitrust enforcement better than the current Illinois Brick rule.

D

[LEdHN\[5C\]](#) [↑] [5C] [****33] The preceding conclusions bring us to a broader point. The rationales underlying Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick will not apply with equal force in all cases. We nonetheless believe that ample justification exists for our stated decision not to HN7 [↑] "carve out exceptions to the [direct purchaser] rule for particular types of markets." *Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 744*. The possibility of allowing an exception, even in rather meritorious circumstances, would undermine the rule. As we have stated:

HN8 [↑] "The process of classifying various market situations according to the amount of pass-on likely to be involved and its susceptibility of proof in a judicial forum would entail the very problems that the Hanover Shoe rule was meant to avoid. The litigation over where the line should be drawn in a particular class of cases would inject the same 'massive evidence and complicated theories' [*217] into treble-damages proceedings, albeit at a somewhat higher level of generality. [****34] " *Id. at 744-745*.

In sum, even assuming that any economic assumptions underlying the Illinois Brick rule might be disproved in a specific case, we think it an unwarranted and counterproductive exercise to litigate a series of exceptions. Having stated the rule in Hanover Shoe, and adhered to it in Illinois Brick, we stand by our interpretation of § 4.

IV

LEdHN[6B] [↑] [6B] The suggestion in Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick that a departure from the direct purchaser rule may be necessary when an indirect purchaser buys under a pre-existing cost-plus contract does not justify an exception in this case. In Hanover Shoe, we stated:

"We recognize that there might be situations -- for instance, when an overcharged buyer has a pre-existing 'cost-plus' contract, thus making it easy to prove that he has not been damaged -- where the considerations requiring that the passing-on defense not be permitted in this case would not be present." 392 U.S. at 494.

We observed further in Illinois Brick:

HN9 [↑] "****35] In [a cost-plus contract] situation, the [direct] purchaser is insulated from any decrease in its sales as a [***187] result of attempting to pass on the overcharge, because its customer is committed to buying a fixed quantity regardless of price. The effect of the overcharge is essentially determined in advance, without reference to the interaction of supply and demand that complicates the determination in the general case." 431 U.S. at 736.

The petitioners argue that the regulations and tariffs requiring the respondent to pass on its costs to the consumers place this case within the cost-plus contract exception. We disagree.

[*218] The respondent did not sell the gas to its customers under a pre-existing cost-plus contract. Even if we were to create an exception for situations that merely resemble those governed by such a contract, we would [**2818] not apply the exception here. Our statements above show that we might allow indirect purchasers to sue only when, by hypothesis, the direct purchaser will bear no portion of the overcharge and otherwise suffer no injury. That certainty does not exist here.

The utility customers made no commitment [***36] to purchase any particular quantity of gas, and the utility itself had no guarantee of any particular profit. Even though the respondent raised its prices to cover its costs, we cannot ascertain its precise injury because, as noted above, we do not know what might have happened in the absence of an overcharge. In addition, even if the utility customers had a highly inelastic demand for natural gas, see Panhandle Eastern, 852 F.2d at 895, the need to inquire into the precise operation of market forces would negate the simplicity and certainty that could justify a cost-plus contract exception. See Illinois Brick, supra, at 742; P. Areeda & H. Hovencamp, Antitrust Law § 337.3c, pp. 323-324 (Supp. 1988). Thus, although we do not alter our observations about the possibility of an exception for cost-plus contracts, we decline to create the general exception for utilities sought by the petitioners.

V

LEdHN[7B] [↑] [7B] The petitioners, in their final argument, contend that § 4C of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976, 90 Stat. 1394, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 15c, ****37] authorizes them to sue on behalf of consumers even though the consumers, as indirect purchasers, have no cause of action of their own. Section 4C(a)(1) provides in relevant part:

HN10 [↑] "Any attorney general of a State may bring a civil action in the name of such state as parens patriae on behalf of natural persons residing in such State . . . to secure monetary relief as provided in this section for injury sustained [*219] by such natural persons to their property by reason of any violation of sections 1 to 7 of this title." 15 U. S. C. § 15c\(a\)\(1\).

Because the Act, in their view, has the clear purpose of protecting consumers, see Kintner, Griffin, & Goldston, The Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976: An Analysis, 46 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 1, 23 (1977), the petitioners contend that it must allow the States to sue on behalf of consumers notwithstanding their status as indirect purchasers.

[***188] LEdHN[1C] [↑] [1C]LEdHN[7C] [↑] [7C] ****38] We have rejected this argument before. We stated in Illinois Brick that HN11 [↑] § 4C did not establish any new substantive liability. Instead, "it simply created a new procedural device -- parens patriae actions by States on behalf of their citizens -- to enforce existing rights of recovery under § 4 [of the Clayton Act]." 431 U.S. at 734, n.14. Section 4, as noted above, affords relief only to a person "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U. S. C. § 15\(a\). State attorneys general may bring actions on behalf of consumers who have such an injury. See, e. g., Pennsylvania v. Mid-Atlantic Toyota Distributors, Inc., 704 F.2d 125, 128 \(CA4 1983\) (suit on behalf of consumers injured by an alleged conspiracy to fix the price of cars). But here the respondent is the injured party under the antitrust laws, and the predicate for a parens patriae action has not been established. We conclude that the petitioners may not assert any claims on behalf of the customers.

Affirmed [****39] .

Dissent by: WHITE

Dissent

---

JUSTICE WHITE, with whom JUSTICE BRENNAN, JUSTICE MARSHALL, and JUSTICE BLACKMUN join, dissenting.

I dissent from the Court's opinion and judgment because it is inappropriate for the Court to deny standing to sue under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 15, to customers of a regulated utility in circumstances such as those presented in this case. By its plain language, § 4 reflects an "expansive remedial" [*220] purpose." [Blue Shield of Va. v. \[\*\*2819\] McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 472, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 \(1982\)](#) (citation omitted). It does not distinguish between classes of customers, but rather grants a cause of action to "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 15\(a\). In enacting § 4, Congress sought to ensure that victims of anticompetitive conduct receive compensation. Blue Shield, supra, at 472; Pfizer Inc. v. India, 434 U.S. 308, 314, 54 L. Ed. 2d 563, 98 S. Ct. 584 \(1978\).

In Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 \(1977\), [****40] we held that certain indirect purchasers of concrete block lacked standing to challenge the manufacturer's business practices under the antitrust laws because they could not be deemed to have suffered injury from the alleged illegal conduct. This suit, however, is very different from Illinois Brick. That case involved a competitive market where concrete block manufacturers sold to masonry contractors who in turn sold to general contractors who in turn sold to the Illinois Brick respondents; this case involves a highly regulated market where utilities possessing natural monopolies purchase gas from natural gas suppliers and then sell the gas to residential customers. Illinois Brick did not hold that, in all circumstances, indirect purchasers lack § 4 standing. Indeed, just last Term we observed that under Illinois Brick "indirect purchasers might be allowed to bring suit in cases in which it would be easy to prove the extent to which the overcharge was" [***189] passed on to them." California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 102, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661, and n.6 \(1989\). See also Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 494, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 \(1968\). [****41]

The issue in this case is whether Illinois Brick bars a suit by retail customers to whom the utilities have passed on the entire cost of the gas sold to them, including any illegal overcharge. Before the District Court, the utilities moved to dismiss the States as parens patriae, arguing that the States lacked standing because they represented indirect purchasers. [*221] In response, the States contended that the indirect purchasers were proper plaintiffs because the utilities had passed through the entire overcharge to their residential customers. The District Court found it unnecessary "to wait upon evidence establishing the degree to which the utilities passed on the overcharge," In re Wyoming Tight Sands Antitrust Cases, 695 F. Supp. 1109, 1116 \(Kan. 1988\), for even accepting the States' position that there had been a total pass-on, decisions of this Court were thought to bar the suit. Likewise, in affirming the District Court, the Court of Appeals presumed a "perfect and provable pass-on of the allegedly illegal overcharge." In re Wyoming Tight Sands Antitrust Cases, 866 F.2d 1286, 1293 \(CA10 1989\). Indeed, the vice president [****42] and general counsel of one of the respondent utilities is on record as stating that the utility's customers "pay all of any increases in the cost of natural gas [Kansas Power & Light] must purchase to serve them." Affidavit of David S. Black, Vice President and General Counsel of the Kansas Power & Light Company, Record, Doc. No. 485, Exhibit D (emphasis in original). Rather than embarking, as the Court does, on what amounts to a factfinding mission, which the courts below eschewed, about the fact and provability of this pass-on, we should decide this case on the basis that there has been a complete passthrough of the overcharge. On that basis, it is evident that the concerns underlying the decision in Illinois Brick do not support the judgment below. Rather, we should follow the plain intent of § 4 that the victims of anticompetitive conduct be allowed the remedy provided by the section.

Illinois Brick barred indirect purchaser suits chiefly because we feared that permitting the use of pass-on theories under § 4 would transform these treble-damages actions into massive and inconclusive efforts [**2820] to apportion the recovery among all potential plaintiffs [****43] that could have absorbed part of the overcharge -- from direct purchasers to middlemen to ultimate consumers. 431 U.S. at 737. As Judge Posner has [*222] written: "The optimal adjustment by an unregulated firm to the increased cost of the input will always be a price increase smaller than the increase in input cost, and this means that the increased cost will be divided between the two tiers, the direct and indirect purchasers -- but in what proportion will often be hard to determine, even by sophisticated techniques of economic analysis. This is a central insight of the Illinois Brick decision." Illinois ex rel. Hartigan v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co., 852 F.2d 891, 894 \(CA7 1988\).

[***190] In this case, however, it is regulation rather than market forces that determines the amount of overcharge that the utility passes through to its residential customers. The rates of utilities are determined by law and are set at a level designed to allow a fair return on a rate base that includes the cost of furnishing the service, plainly including in this case the cost of gas purchased from the pipelines and resold to customers. It is fanciful, [****44] at least unrealistic, to think that a utility entitled to pass on to its customers the cost of gas that it has purchased will not do so to the maximum extent permitted by law. Furthermore, petitioners assert that in this case the applicable law requires that such cost be passed on to consumers. And, as we have said, the Tenth Circuit opinion reflects the likelihood of a perfect and provable pass-on.

Of course, to recover in a case like this, the plaintiff must prove that the utility paid the pipelines an illegally high price and must demonstrate the amount of the overcharge. That amount is included in the rates charged by the utility and hence is passed through to the consumer. The result is that determining the injury inflicted on consumers involves nothing more than reading their utility bills, which reveal the amount of gas purchased by them at a price which includes the amount of the illegal overcharge passed through to them. Where it is clear that the entire overcharge is passed through, there can be no claim that indirect purchasers cannot [*223] prove the extent of their damage caused by a rate calculated on a rate base inflated by an illegal price paid for gas.

The [***45] Court contends that the apportionment problem is not so simple. It maintains that, even where a utility raises its rates to compensate for the overcharge and passes the overcharge through to the indirect purchasers, an apportionment problem still exists because "to show that a direct purchaser has borne no portion of an overcharge, the indirect purchaser would have to prove, among other things, that the direct purchaser could not have raised its rates prior to the overcharge." 497 U.S. at 209. The problem identified by the majority is not peculiar to indirect purchaser suits. In antitrust cases where suppliers increase their prices, courts frequently must separate the price increase attributable to anticompetitive conduct (i. e., the "overcharge") from the price increase attributable to legitimate factors. This type of calculation "has to be done in every case where the plaintiff claims to have lost sales because of the defendant's unlawful conduct and the defendant argues that the loss was due partly or entirely to other factors." Panhandle Eastern, supra, at 897; see Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 90 L. Ed. 652, 66 S. Ct. 574 \(1946\). [****46] The problem identified in Illinois Brick was entirely different: There, we were concerned that it would unduly complicate litigation to require courts to separate the portion of the overcharge absorbed by the direct purchaser from the portion of the overcharge passed onto the indirect purchaser. As argued above, this difficulty is not a concern in the present case. * It is at [***191] least very doubtful that a utility that is

---

* The majority also suggests that "difficult questions of timing might necessitate apportioning overcharges if we allowed indirect suits by utility customers. Even if, at some point, a utility can pass on 100 percent of its costs to its customers, various factors may delay the passing-on process." 497 U.S. at 210. This suggestion, as indicated by the words "might" and "may," is quite [*224] in position to secure a rate increase on grounds having nothing to [**2821] do with the price paid for its gas would fail to request a rate increase that included as well the entire amount paid for gas purchased from pipelines and sold to consumers.

[****47] Illinois Brick also observed that granting standing to the indirect purchasers in that case would lead to the under-enforcement of the antitrust laws. 431 U.S. at 745-747. In the cases where there is "a perfect and provable pass-through," however, the opposite is true for two reasons. First, because the passthrough of the overcharge is complete and easily demonstrated, the indirect purchasers -- and the States in their parens patriae capacity -- may readily discover their injury. Second, although the utility could sue to recover lost profits resulting from lost sales due to the illegally high price, its injury is not measured by the amount of the illegal overcharge that it has passed on, and hence the utility would have no incentive to seek such a recovery.

The majority suggests that, even where a utility passes the entire overcharge through to the indirect customers, the utility nonetheless might actively prosecute antitrust claims because the state regulatory commission may allow the utility to keep any damages that the utility recovers. But the utility commissions cannot allow an antitrust recovery forbidden by federal law. Given a passthrough, the customer, [****48] not the utility, suffers the antitrust injury, and it is the customer or the State on his behalf that is entitled to recover treble damages. In any event, it seems to me that the majority conjures up a very strange utility commission, the possible existence of which the court fails to document.

A third consideration prompting our decision in Illinois Brick was our belief that permitting indirect purchaser suits might subject antitrust defendants to multiple liability. 431 U.S. at 730-731. Again however, where there is a "perfect and provable" passthrough, there is no danger that both the utilities and the indirect purchasers will recover damages for the same anticompetitive conduct because the utilities [*225] have not suffered any overcharge damage: The petitioners will sue for the amount of the overcharge, while the utilities will sue for damages resulting from their lost sales.

The majority argues that, even "leaving aside the apportionment issue" (i. e., assuming that there is no apportionment difficulty as the Tenth Circuit did in affirming summary judgment), the multiple recovery problem identified in Illinois Brick still exists. 497 U.S. at 212-213. [****49] I disagree. Illinois Brick "focused on the risk of duplicative recovery engendered by allowing every person along a chain of distribution to claim damages arising from a single transaction that violated the antitrust laws." Blue Shield, 457 U.S. at 474-475. [***192] The danger of multiple recoveries does not exist aside from the apportionment difficulty; rather, it stems from it. If only defensive use of a pass-through defense were barred, or if it were extremely difficult to ascertain the percentage of an overcharge that the utility passed through, then the supplier of natural gas might potentially have to pay overlapping damages to successive purchasers at different levels in the distribution chain. But where there is no apportionment difficulty, there is no comparable risk.

In sum, I cannot agree with the rigid and expansive holding that in no case, even in the utility context, would it be possible to determine in a reliable way a passthrough to [**2822] consumers of an illegal overcharge that would measure the extent of their damage. There may be cases, as the Court speculates, where there would be insuperable difficulties. But we are to judge this [****50] case on the basis that the pass-through is complete and provable. There have been no findings below that this is not the fact. Instead, the decision we review is that consumers may not sue even where it is clear and provable that an illegal overcharge has been passed on to them and that they, rather than the utility, have to that extent been injured.

None of the concerns that caused us to bar the indirect purchaser's suit in Illinois Brick exist in this case. For that [*226] reason, rather than extending the Illinois Brick exception to § 4's grant of a cause of action to persons injured through anticompetitive conduct, I would hold that the petitioners in this case have standing to sue. This result would promote the twin antitrust goals of ensuring recompense for injured parties and encouraging the diligent prosecution of antitrust claims.

---

speculative. It is much more realistic to believe that sooner or later, the customer will foot the cost of overpriced gas. If timing was such a problem, the Tenth Circuit would not have assumed a "perfect and provable" passthrough.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 246, 289, 296, 300, 310, 360

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:164-54:169, 54:177, 54:191

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

[15 USCS 15 \[\*\*\*\*51\] \(a\), 15c\(a\)\(1\)](#)

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 67

Index to Annotations, Parens Patriae; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; States

Annotation References:

Standing to sue, under 4 of the Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) and predecessor statute, to recover treble damages for antitrust violation-- Supreme Court cases. 73 L Ed 2d 1427.

"Target area" doctrine as basis for determining standing to sue under 4 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 15) allowing treble damages for violation of antitrust laws. 70 ALR Fed 637.

Right of retail buyer of price-fixed product to sue manufacturer on federal antitrust claim. 55 ALR Fed 919.

Authority of state to sue as parens patriae to recover treble damages under 4 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 15). 23 ALR Fed 878.

Liability in damages for price-fixing in violation of federal antitrust laws as affected by plaintiff's passing excessive charges on to his own customers. 1 ALR Fed 500.

---

End of Document

Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Am. Train Dispatchers' Ass'n

Supreme Court of the United States

December 3, 1990, Argued ; March 19, 1991, * Decided

No. 89-1027

Reporter

499 U.S. 117 *; 111 S. Ct. 1156 **; 113 L. Ed. 2d 95 ***; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 1709 ****; 59 U.S.L.W. 4189; 118 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P10,598; 102-69 Fulton County D. Rep. 17B; 136 L.R.R.M. 2727; 91 Cal. Daily Op. Service 1970; 91 Daily Journal DAR 3215

NORFOLK & WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY et al., PETITIONERS v. AMERICAN TRAIN DISPATCHERS' ASSOCIATION et al. CSX TRANSPORTATION, INC., PETITIONER V. BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY CARMEN ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 279 U.S. App. D. C. 239, 880 F.2d 562, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

carriers, merger, exemption, collective-bargaining, conditions, consolidation, anti trust law, approving, employees, railroad, obligations, rights, carry out, arbitration, Railway, immunity provision, private contract, provisions, override, Transportation, parties, terms, collective bargaining agreement, public interest, labor-protective, liquidation, cases, impose obligation, municipal law, federal law

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

---

* Together with No. 89-1028, CSX Transportation, Inc. v. Brotherhood of Railway Carmen et al., also on certiorari to the same court.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

HN1 [down] Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

The Interstate Commerce Act (Act), 49 U.S.C.S. § 11301 et seq., grants the Interstate Commerce Commission (Commission) exclusive authority to examine, condition, and approve proposed mergers and consolidations of transportation carriers within its jurisdiction. 49 U.S.C.S. § 11343\(a\)\(1\). The Act requires the Commission to approve and authorize the transactions when they are consistent with the public interest. 49 U.S.C.S. § 11344\(c\). Among the factors the Commission must consider in making its public interest determination are the interests of carrier employees affected by the proposed transaction. § 11344\(b\)\(1\)\(D\). In authorizing a merger or consolidation, the Commission may impose conditions governing the transaction. § 11344\(c\). Once the Commission approves a transaction, a carrier is exempt from the antitrust laws and from all other law, including state and municipal law, as necessary to let it carry out the transaction. 49 U.S.C.S. § 11341\(a\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Consolidation & Merger

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

HN2 [down] Railroads & Rail Transportation, Consolidation & Merger

See 49 U.S.C.S. § 11344\(b\)\(1\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Maintenance & Safety

HN3 [down] Regulated Industries, Transportation

When a proposed merger involves rail carriers, the Act requires the Commission to impose labor-protective conditions on the transaction to safeguard the interests of adversely affected railroad employees. 49 U.S.C.S. § 11347.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Consolidation & Merger

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Business Considerations > Labor Laws

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

HN4 [down] Railroads & Rail Transportation, Consolidation & Merger

Section 2 of the New York Dock conditions provides that the rates of pay, rules, working conditions and all collective bargaining and other rights, privileges and benefits under applicable laws and/or existing collective bargaining agreements shall be preserved unless changed by future collective bargaining agreements. Section 4 sets forth negotiation and arbitration procedures for resolution of labor disputes arising from an approved railroad merger. Under § 4, a merged or consolidated railroad which plans an operational change that may cause dismissal or displacement of any employee must provide the employee and his union 90 days' written notice. If the carrier and union cannot agree on terms and conditions within 30 days, each party may submit the dispute for an expedited "final, binding and conclusive" determination by a neutral arbitrator.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

HN5 [down] Alternative Dispute Resolution, Mandatory ADR

It has long been the Interstate Commerce Commission's (Commission) view that private collective bargaining agreements and Railway Labor Act provisions must give way to the Commission-mandated procedures of section 4 of the New York Dock conditions when parties are unable to agree on changes in working conditions required to implement a transaction authorized by the Commission. 360 I. C. C. § 84.

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

HN6 [down] Transportation Law, Interstate Commerce

See 49 U.S.C.S. § 11341\(a\).

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

HN7 [down] Transportation Law, Interstate Commerce

For purposes of this decision, the court assumes, without deciding, that the Interstate Commerce Commission properly considered the public interest factors of 49 U.S.C.S. § 11344\(b\)\(1\) in approving the original transaction, that its decision to override the carrier's obligations is consistent with the labor-protective requirements of § 11347, and that the override was necessary to the implementation of the transaction within the meaning of § 11341\(a\). Under these assumptions, the court holds that the exemption from all other law in § 11341\(a\) includes the obligations imposed by the terms of a collective-bargaining agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

HN8 [down] Regulated Industries, Transportation

If the intent of Congress is clear, that is the end of the matter; for the court, as well as the agency, must give effect to the unambiguously expressed intent of Congress. The contested language in 49 U.S.C.S. § 11341\(a\), exempting carriers from the antitrust laws and all other law, including state and municipal law, is clear, broad, and unqualified.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

**HN9** Legislation, Interpretation

By itself, the phrase "all other law" indicates no limitation. The circumstance that the phrase "all other law" is in addition to coverage for "the antitrust laws" does not detract from this breadth.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN10** Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Under the principle of ejusdem generis, when a general term follows a specific one, the general term should be understood as a reference to subjects akin to the one with specific enumeration. The canon does not control, however, when the whole context dictates a different conclusion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

**HN11** Regulated Industries, Transportation

In short, the immunity provision in 49 U.S.C.S. § 11341 means what it says: A carrier is exempt from all law as necessary to carry out an Interstate Commerce Commission approved transaction.

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

**HN12** Transportation Law, Interstate Commerce

A contract has no legal force apart from the law that acknowledges its binding character. As a result, the exemption in 49 U.S.C.S. § 11341\(a\) from "all other law" effects an override of contractual obligations, as necessary to carry out an approved transaction, by suspending application of the law that makes the contract binding.

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

**HN13** Transportation Law, Interstate Commerce

As the law which gives legal and binding effect to collective agreements, the Railway Labor Act is the law that, under 49 U.S.C.S. § 11341\(a\), is superseded when an Interstate Commerce Commission approved transaction requires abrogation of collective-bargaining obligations.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Negotiable Instruments > Types of Parties > Accommodated & Accommodation Parties

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

**HN14** [ ] Types of Parties, Accommodated & Accommodation Parties

The Interstate Commerce Act (Act) requires the Interstate Commerce Commission (Commission) to approve consolidations in the public interest. 49 U.S.C.S. § 11343\(a\)\(1\). Recognizing that consolidations in the public interest will result in wholesale dismissals and extensive transfers, involving expense to transferred employees as well as the loss of seniority rights, the Act imposes a number of labor-protecting requirements to ensure that the Commission accommodates the interests of affected parties to the greatest extent possible. 49 U.S.C.S. § 11344\(b\)\(1\)\(D\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Consolidation & Merger
Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

**HN15** [ ] Railroads & Rail Transportation, Consolidation & Merger

49 U.S.C.S. § 11341\(a\) guarantees that once these interests are accounted for and once the consolidation is approved, obligations imposed by laws such as the Railway Labor Act will not prevent the efficiencies of consolidation from being achieved.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Consolidation & Merger
Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Enforcement of Bargaining Agreements
Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > Deference to Agency Statutory Interpretation
Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Interpretation of Agreements
Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

**HN16** [ ] Railroads & Rail Transportation, Consolidation & Merger

The court holds that, as necessary to carry out a transaction approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the term "all other law" in 49 U.S.C.S. § 11341\(a\) includes any obstacle imposed by law. In this case, the term "all other law" in § 11341\(a\) applies to the substantive and remedial laws respecting enforcement of collective-bargaining agreements.

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

**HN17** [ ] Transportation Law, Interstate Commerce

The immunity provision does not exempt carriers from all law, but rather from all law necessary to carry out an approved transaction.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

49 USCS 11341\(a\) held to exempt rail carriers from obligations under collective bargaining agreements as necessary to effect consolidations approved by Interstate Commerce Commission.

Summary

These two, consolidated cases presented the question whether 49 USCS 11341\(a\)--which provides that, where the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) has approved a rail carrier consolidation, a carrier in the consolidation "is exempt from the antitrust laws and from all other law, including State and municipal law, as necessary to let [the carrier] carry out the transaction"--exempts a carrier in an approved consolidation from legal obligations arising under a collective bargaining agreement. In one case, following approval by the ICC of the consolidation of two rail carriers, the newly consolidated carriers had proposed for reasons of efficiency to transfer certain employees of one carrier to another city. The labor union representing the affected employees contended that (1) the carriers' proposal involved a change in the collective bargaining agreement between the carrier and its employees that was subject to mandatory bargaining under the Railway Labor Act (RLA) (45 USCS 151 et seq.); and (2) the carriers were required to preserve the affected employees' rights under the collective bargaining agreement and their right to union representation under the RLA. After negotiations failed to resolve these issues, arbitration was sought pursuant to conditions imposed by the ICC generally upon rail carrier mergers to protect the interests of carrier employees. The arbitration committee ruled in the carriers' favor, stating that the proposed transfer of employees was an incident of the ICC-approved merger and that the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement and the RLA could be abrogated as necessary to implement the merger. On appeal, the ICC affirmed the ruling of the arbitration committee, stating that because the employee transfer was incident to the approved merger, it was by virtue of 11341(a) not subject to conflicting laws. In the second case, a carrier formed by an ICC-approved consolidation proposed to close a repair shop and transfer the shop's employees to a similar shop at a different location. The union representing the employees contended that this proposal contravened its collective bargaining agreement. An arbitration committee ruled that (1) the collective bargaining agreement could be superseded to the extent that it impeded an operational change authorized or required by the ICC's approval of the consolidation; and (2) the repair work at the shop the carrier proposed to close could be transferred, because such a transfer was necessary to the original consolidation; but (3) employees protected against transfer by the collective bargaining agreement could not be transferred. On appeal, the ICC affirmed the ruling regarding the transfer of work, and reversed the ruling regarding the transfer of employees, stating that preventing the transfer of employees would effectively prevent implementation of the consolidation (4 ICC2d 641). On appeal of both cases, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, considering the cases together, reversed and remanded the cases to the ICC, holding that 11341(a) does not authorize the ICC to relieve a party of obligations under a collective bargaining agreement, which obligations impede implementation of an approved consolidation (279 App DC 239, 880 F2d 562).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings. In an opinion by Kennedy, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and White, Blackmun, O'Connor, Scalia, and Souter, JJ., it was held that 11341(a) exempts a carrier in an ICC-approved consolidation from any legal obligations imposed by a collective bargaining agreement to the extent necessary to carry out the consolidation, because (1) the language of 11341(a), exempting carriers from "the antitrust laws and all other law, including State and municipal law," is clear, broad, and unqualified, and includes the Railway Labor Act, which gives legal and binding effect to collective bargaining agreements between rail carriers and their employees; (2) this interpretation of 11341(a) makes sense of the consolidation provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, which were designed to promote economy and efficiency in interstate transportation by the removal of the burdens of excessive expenditure; and (3) this interpretation of 11341(a) will not lead to bizarre results, inasmuch as the immunity provision does not exempt carriers from all law, but rather from all law as necessary to carry out an approved transaction.

Stevens, J., joined by Marshall, J., dissented, expressing the view that the exemption in 11341(a) does not include obligations imposed by private contracts.

Headnotes

---

COURTS §775 > INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > LABOR §41 > STATUTES §82 > consolidation of rail carriers -- exemption from other laws -- collective bargaining agreements -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [ ] [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [ ] [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [ ] [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [ ] [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [ ] [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [ ] [1F]

49 USCS 11341\(a\), a part of the Interstate Commerce Act, exempts a rail carrier in a consolidation approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission from any legal obligations imposed by a collective bargaining agreement to the extent necessary to carry out the consolidation, because (1) the language of 11341(a), exempting carriers from "the antitrust laws and all other law, including State and municipal law," is clear, broad, and unqualified, and includes the Railway Labor Act, which gives legal and binding effect to collective bargaining agreements between rail carriers and their employees; (2) the principle of ejusdem generis--which states that when a general term follows a specific one, the general term should be understood as a reference to subjects akin to the one with specific enumeration, but which does not control when the whole context dictates a different conclusion--does not require a different result, inasmuch as (a) because repeals of the antitrust laws by implication from a regulatory statute are strongly disfavored, Congress may have determined that it should make a clear and separate statement to include antitrust laws within the general exemption of 11341(a), (b) the otherwise general term "all other law" includes, but is not limited to, "State and municipal law," showing that "all other law" refers to more than laws related to antitrust, and (c) the fact that "all other law" entails more than "the antitrust laws," but is not limited to "State and municipal law," reinforces the conclusion, inherent in the word "all," that the phrase "all other law" includes federal law other than the antitrust laws; (3) this conclusion is supported by prior case law in which the United States Supreme Court, construing a statute which was the immediate precursor of 11341(a) and which was substantially identical to it, held that the contract rights under state law of minority shareholders--who contended that the terms of an ICC-approved merger diminished the value of their shares as guaranteed by the corporate charter--did not survive the merger agreement found by the ICC to be in the public interest; (4) this interpretation of 11341(a) makes sense of the consolidation provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, which were designed to promote economy and efficiency in interstate transportation by removing the burdens of excessive expenditure while also requiring the ICC to accommodate to the greatest extent possible the interests of affected carrier employees before approving a consolidation; and (5) this interpretation of 11341(a) will not lead to bizarre results, inasmuch as the immunity provision of the statute does not exempt carriers from all law, but rather from all law as necessary to carry out an approved consolidation. (Stevens and Marshall, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

APPEAL §1662 > mootness -- interpretation of statute -- alternative basis for decision on remand -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [ ] [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [ ] [2B]

On certiorari from a judgment of a United States Court of Appeals which (1) held that 49 USCS 11341\(a\)--which provides that, where the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) has approved a rail carrier consolidation, a carrier in the consolidation "is exempt from the antitrust laws and from all other law, including State and municipal law, as necessary to let [the carrier] carry out the transaction"--does not exempt a rail carrier in an approved consolidation from obligations imposed by a collective bargaining agreement; (2) reversed rulings by the ICC in two cases stating that under 11341(a), carriers in approved consolidations who proposed to implement the consolidations by taking measures which allegedly violated collective bargaining agreements, were not obligated to honor the collective bargaining agreements or to engage in procedures mandated by the Railway Labor Act (RLA) (45 USCS 151 et seq.) for the resolution of labor disputes; and (3) remanded the cases for consideration by the ICC (a) whether 11341(a) could operate to override provisions of the RLA, and (b) whether, under "labor-protective" conditions promulgated by the ICC pursuant to 49 USCS 11347 and applying to rail carrier consolidations, an arbitration committee hearing a labor dispute arising from an approved railroad merger may override provisions of a collective bargaining agreement, the United States Supreme Court--where the ICC, on remand from the United States Court of Appeals, has (1) adhered to the Court of Appeals' ruling that 11341(a) does not authorize it to override provisions of a collective bargaining agreement; (2) ruled that 11341(a) authorizes it to foreclose resort to RLA remedies for modification and enforcement of collective bargaining agreements, at least to the extent of its authority under 11347 to impose labor-protective conditions on rail carrier consolidations; (3) remanded its decision to the parties for further negotiation or arbitration; and (4) predicated the analysis in its remand order on the correctness of the Court of Appeals' interpretation of 11341(a)--will not dismiss the case as moot, because (1) the Supreme Court's definitive interpretation of 11341(a) may affect the ICC's remand order; (2) the ICC's compliance with the Court of Appeals' mandate does not affect the correctness of the Court of Appeals' decision; and (3) the alternative basis offered by the ICC for its remand order does not end the controversy between the parties, inasmuch as the parties retain an interest in the validity of the ICC's original order because the Court of Appeals may again disagree with the ICC's interpretation of 11341(a) on review of the ICC's order on remand.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §276 > judicial review -- construction of statute -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

When reviewing a federal administrative agency's interpretation of a federal statute, the United States Supreme Court begins with the language of the statute and asks whether Congress has spoken on the subject before it; if the intent of Congress is clear, that is the end of the matter, for the court, as well as the agency, must give effect to the unambiguously expressed intent of Congress.

CONTRACTS §87 > legal force -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

A contract has no legal force apart from the law that acknowledges its binding character.

Syllabus

---

Once the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) has approved a rail carrier consolidation under the conditions set forth in Chapter 113 of the Interstate Commerce Act (Act), 49 U. S. C. § 11301 et seq., a carrier in such a consolidation "is exempt from the antitrust laws and from all other law, including State and municipal law, as necessary to let [it] carry out the transaction . . .," § 11341\(a\). In these cases, the ICC issued orders exempting parties to approved railway mergers from the provisions of collective-bargaining agreements. The Court of Appeals reversed and remanded, holding that § 11341\(a\) [****2] does not authorize the ICC to relieve a party of collectively bargained obligations that impede implementation of an approved transaction. Reasoning, inter alia, that the legislative history demonstrates a congressional intent that § 11341\(a\) apply to specific types of positive laws and not to common-law rules of liability, such as those governing contracts, the court declined to decide whether the section could operate to override provisions of the Railway Labor Act (RLA) governing the formation, construction, and enforcement of the collective-bargaining agreements at issue.

Held: The § 11341\(a\) exemption "from all other law" includes a carrier's legal obligations under a collective-bargaining agreement when necessary to carry out an ICC-approved transaction. The exemption's language, as correctly interpreted by the ICC, is clear, broad, and unqualified, bespeaking an unambiguous congressional intent to include any obstacle imposed by law. That language neither admits of a distinction between positive enactments and common-law liability rules nor supports the exclusion of contractual obligations. Thus, the exemption effects an override of such obligations by superseding [****3] the law -- here, the RLA -- which makes the contract binding. Cf. Schwabacher v. United States, 334 U.S. 182, 194-195, 200-201. This determination makes sense of the Act's consolidation provisions, which were designed to promote economy and efficiency in interstate transportation by removing the burdens of excessive expenditure. Whereas § 11343(a)(1) requires the ICC to approve consolidations in the public interest, and § 11347 conditions such approval on satisfaction of certain labor-protective conditions, the § 11341(a) exemption guarantees that once employee interests are accounted for and the consolidation is approved, the RLA -- whose major disputes resolution process is virtually interminable -- will not prevent the efficiencies of consolidation from being achieved. Moreover, this reading will not, as the lower court feared, lead to bizarre results, since § 11341(a) does not exempt carriers from all law, but rather from all law necessary to carry out an approved transaction. Although it might be true that § 11341(a)'s scope is limited by § 11347, and that the breadth of the exemption is defined by the scope of the approved transaction, [****4] the conditions of approval and the standard for necessity are not at issue because the lower court did not pass on them and the parties do not challenge them here. Pp. 127-134.

Counsel: Jeffrey S. Berlin argued the cause for petitioners in both cases. With him on the briefs for petitioners in No. 89-1027 were Mark E. Martin and William P. Stallsmith, Jr. James S. Whitehead, Nicholas S. Yovanovic, and James D. Tomola filed briefs for petitioner in No. 89-1028.

Jeffrey S. Minear argued the cause for the federal respondents in support of petitioners in both cases pursuant to this Court's Rule 12.4. On the briefs were Acting Solicitor General Roberts, Deputy Solicitor General Shapiro, Lawrence S. Robbins, Robert S. Burk, Henri F. Rush, and John J. McCarthy, Jr.

William G. Mahoney argued the cause for the union respondents in both cases. With him on the brief was John O'B. Clarke, Jr. +

Judges: Kennedy, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which Rehnquist, C.J., and White, Blackmun, O'Connor, Scalia, and [****5] Souter, JJ., joined. Stevens, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which Marshall, J., joined, post, p. 134.

Opinion

---

[*119] [***101] [**1158] JUSTICE KENNEDY delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN/1A [↑] [1A]The Interstate Commerce Commission has the authority to approve rail carrier consolidations under certain conditions. 49 U. S. C. § 11301 et seq. A carrier in an approved consolidation "is exempt from the antitrust laws and from all other law, including State and municipal law, as necessary to let [it] carry out the transaction. . . ." § 11341(a). These cases require us to decide whether the carrier's exemption under § 11341(a) "from all other law" extends to its legal obligations under a collective-bargaining agreement. We hold that it does.

I

A

"Prior to 1920, competition was the desideratum of our railroad economy." St. Joe Paper Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 347 U.S. 298, 315 (1954). Following a period of Government ownership during World War I, however, "many of the railroads were in very weak condition and their [****6] continued survival was in jeopardy." Id., at 315. At that time, the Nation made a commitment to railroad carrier consolidation as a means of promoting the health and efficiency of the railroad industry. Beginning with the Transportation Act of 1920, ch. 91, 41 Stat. 456,

---

+ Richard T. Conway, Ralph J. Moore, Jr., D. Eugenia Langan, and David P. Lee filed a brief for the National Railway Labor Conference as amicus curiae urging reversal.

"consolidation of the railroads of the country, in the interest of economy and efficiency, became an established national policy . . . so intimately related to the maintenance of an adequate and efficient rail transportation system that the 'public interest' in the one cannot be dissociated from that in the other." United States v. Lowden, 308 U.S. 225, 232 \(1939\). See generally St. [**1159] Joe Paper Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., supra, at 315-321.

HN1[]

Chapter 113 of the Interstate Commerce Act, recodified in 1978 at 49 U. S. C. § 11301 et seq., contains the current statement of this national policy. The Act grants the Interstate Commerce Commission exclusive authority to examine, condition, and approve proposed mergers [****7] and consolidations of [*120] transportation carriers within its jurisdiction. § 11343\(a\)\(1\). The Act requires the Commission to "approve and authorize" the transactions when they are "consistent with the public interest." § 11344\(c\). Among the factors the Commission must consider in making its public interest determination are "the interests of carrier employees affected by the proposed transaction." § 11344\(b\)\(1\)\(D\).<sup>1</sup> In authorizing a merger or consolidation, the Commission [***102] "may impose conditions governing the transaction." § 11344\(c\). Once the Commission approves a transaction, a carrier is "exempt from the antitrust laws and from all other law, including State and municipal law, as necessary to let [it] carry out the transaction." § 11341\(a\).

[***8] HN3[]

When a proposed merger involves rail carriers, the Act requires the Commission to impose labor-protective conditions on the transaction to safeguard the interests of adversely affected railroad employees. § 11347. In New York Dock Railway -- Control -- Brooklyn Eastern Dist. Terminal, 360 I. C. C. 60, 84-90, aff'd sub nom. New York Dock Railway v. United States, 609 F.2d 83 \(CA2 1979\), the Commission announced a comprehensive set of conditions and procedures designed to meet its obligations under § 11347. Section 2 of the New York Dock conditions HN4[] provides that the "rates of pay, rules, working conditions and all collective [*121] bargaining and other rights, privileges and benefits . . . under applicable laws and/or existing collective bargaining agreements . . . shall be preserved unless changed by future collective bargaining agreements." 360 I. C. C., at 84. Section 4 sets forth negotiation and arbitration procedures for resolution [***9] of labor disputes arising from an approved railroad merger. Id., at 85. Under § 4, a merged or consolidated railroad which plans an operational change that may cause dismissal or displacement of any employee must provide the employee and his union 90 days' written notice. Ibid. If the carrier and union cannot agree on terms and conditions within 30 days, each party may submit the dispute for an expedited "final, binding and conclusive" determination by a neutral arbitrator. Ibid. Finally, the New York Dock conditions provide affected employees with up to six years of income protection, as well as reimbursements for moving costs and losses from the sale of a home. See id., at 86-89 (§§ 5-9, 12).

B

The two cases before us today involve separate ICC orders exempting parties to approved railway mergers from the provisions of collective-bargaining agreements.

1. In No. 89-1027, the Commission approved an application by NWS Enterprises, Inc., to acquire control of two previously separate rail carriers, petitioners Norfolk and Western Railway Company (N&W) and Southern Railway

<sup>1</sup> Section § 11344\(b\)\(1\) provides:

"HN2[]

In a proceeding under this section which involves the merger or control of at least two class I railroads, as defined by the Commission, the Commission shall consider at least the following:

"(A) the effect of the proposed transaction on the adequacy of transportation to the public.

"(B) the effect on the public interest of including, or failing to include, other rail carriers in the area involved in the proposed transaction.

"(C) the total fixed charges that result from the proposed transaction.

"(D) the interest of carrier employees affected by the proposed transaction.

"(E) whether the proposed transaction would have an adverse effect on competition among rail carriers in the affected region."

499 U.S. 117, *121; 111 S. Ct. 1156, **1159; 113 L. Ed. 2d 95, ***102; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 1709, ****9

Company (Southern). See Norfolk Southern Corp. -- Control -- Norfolk & W. R. Co. and Southern R. Co., 366 I. C. C. 173 [**1160] (1982). [****10] In its order approving control, the Commission imposed the standard New York Dock labor-protective conditions and noted the possibility that "further displacement [of employees] may arise as additional coordinations occur." 366 I. C. C., at 230-231.

In September 1986, this possibility became a reality. The carriers notified the American Train Dispatchers' Association, the bargaining representative for certain N&W employees, [*122] that they proposed to consolidate all "power distribution" -- the assignment of locomotives to particular trains and facilities -- for the N&W-Southern operation. To effect the efficiency move, the carriers informed the union that they would transfer work performed at the N&W power distribution center in Roanoke, Virginia, to the Southern [***103] center in Atlanta, Georgia. The carriers proposed an implementing agreement in which affected N&W employees would be made management supervisors in Atlanta, and would receive increases in wages and benefits in addition to the relocation expenses and wage protections guaranteed by the New York Dock conditions. The union contended that this proposal involved a change in the existing [****11] collective-bargaining agreement that was subject to mandatory bargaining under the Railway Labor Act (RLA), 44 Stat. 577, as amended, 45 U. S. C. § 151 et seq. The union also maintained that the carriers were required to preserve the affected employees' collective-bargaining rights, as well as their right to union representation under the RLA.

Pursuant to § 4 of the New York Dock procedures, the parties negotiated concerning the terms of the implementing agreement, but they failed to resolve their differences. As a result, the carriers invoked the New York Dock arbitration procedures. After a hearing, the arbitration committee ruled in the carriers' favor. The committee noted that the transfer of work to Atlanta was an incident of the control transaction approved by the ICC, and that it formed part of the "additional coordinations" the ICC predicted would be necessary to achieve "greater efficiencies." The committee also held it had the authority to abrogate the provisions of the collective-bargaining agreement and of the RLA as necessary to implement the merger. Finally, it held that because the application of the N&W bargaining agreement [****12] would impede the transfer, the transferred employees did not retain their collective-bargaining rights.

[*123] The union appealed to the Commission, which affirmed by a divided vote. It explained that "HNS" it has long been the Commission's view that private collective bargaining agreements and [Railway Labor Act] provisions must give way to the Commission-mandated procedures of section 4 [of the New York Dock conditions] when parties are unable to agree on changes in working conditions required to implement a transaction authorized by the Commission." App. to Pet. for Cert. in No. 89-1027, p. 33a. Accordingly, the Commission upheld the arbitration committee's determination that the "compulsory, binding arbitration required by Article I, section 4 of New York Dock, took precedence over RLA procedures whether asserted independently or based on existing collective bargaining agreements." Id., at 35a. The Commission also held that because the work transfer was incident to the approved merger, it was "immunized from conflicting laws by section 11341\(a\)." Ibid. Noting that [****13] "imposition of the collective bargaining agreement would jeopardize the transaction because the work rules it mandates are inconsistent with the carriers' underlying purpose of integrating the power distribution function," the Commission upheld the decision to override the collective-bargaining agreement and RLA provisions. Id., at 37a.

2. In No. 89-1028, the Commission approved an application by CSX Corporation to acquire control of the Chessie System, Inc., and Seaboard Coastline Industries, Inc. CSX Corp.-- Control -- Chessie System, Inc., and Seaboard Coastline Industries, Inc., [**104] 363 [**1161] I. C. C. 521 (1980). Chessie was the parent of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company and the Baltimore and Ohio Railway Company; Seaboard was the parent of the Seaboard Coast Line Railroad Company. In approving the control acquisition, the Commission imposed the New York Dock conditions and recognized that "additional coordinations may occur that could lead to further employee displacements." 363 I. C. C., at 589.

[*124] In August 1986, the consolidated carrier notified respondent Brotherhood of Railway Carmen that it planned [****14] to close Seaboard's heavy freight car repair shop at Waycross, Georgia, and transfer the Waycross employees to Chessie's similar shop in Raceland, Kentucky. The carrier informed the Brotherhood that the proposed transfer would result in a net decrease of jobs at the two shops. Pursuant to New York Dock, the carrier and the union negotiated concerning the terms of an agreement to implement the transfer. The sticking point in the negotiations involved a 1966 collective-bargaining agreement between the union and Seaboard known as the "Orange Book." The Orange Book provided that the carrier would employ each covered employee and maintain each employee's work conditions and benefits for the remainder of the employee's working life. The Brotherhood contended that the Orange Book prevented CSX from moving work or covered employees from Waycross to Raceland.

When negotiations broke down, both the union and the carrier invoked the arbitration procedures under § 4 of New York Dock. The arbitration committee ruled for the carrier. It agreed with the union that the Orange Book prohibited the proposed transfer of work and employees. It determined, however, that it could override [****15] any Orange Book or RLA provision that impeded an operational change authorized or required by the ICC's decision approving the original merger. The committee then held that the carrier could transfer the heavy repair work, which it found necessary to the original control acquisition, but could not transfer employees protected by the Orange Book, which it found would only slightly impair the original control acquisition. Both parties appealed the award to the Commission.

A divided Commission affirmed in part and reversed in part. The Commission agreed the committee possessed authority to override collective-bargaining rights and RLA rights that prevent implementation of a proposed transaction. [*125] It reasoned, however, that "imposition of an Orange Book employee exception would effectively prevent implementation of the proposed transaction." CSX Corp. -- Control -- Chessie System, Inc. and Seaboard Coast Line Industries, Inc., 41 U.S. App. D. C. 2d 641, 650 (1988). The Commission thus affirmed the arbitration committee's order permitting the transfer of work but reversed the holding that the carriers could not transfer Orange Book employees.

3. The unions appealed [****16] both cases to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The Court of Appeals considered the cases together and reversed and remanded to the Commission. Brotherhood of Railway Carmen v. ICC, 279 U.S. App. D. C. 239, 880 F. 2d 562 (1989). The court held that § 11341(a) does not authorize the Commission to relieve a party of collective-bargaining [***105] agreement obligations that impede implementation of an approved transaction. The court stated various grounds for its conclusion. First, because the court did not read the phrase "all other law" in § 11341(a) to include "all legal obstacles," it found "no support in the language of the statute" to apply the statute to obligations imposed by collective-bargaining agreements. Id., at 244, 880 F. 2d, at 567. Second, the court analyzed the Transportation Act of 1920, ch. 91, § 407, 41 Stat. 482, which contained a predecessor to § 11341(a), and found that Congress "did not intend, when it enacted the immunity provision, to override contracts." 279 U.S. App. D. C., at 247, 880 F. 2d, at 570. The court noted that Congress had "focused nearly exclusively [****17] . . . on specific [**1162] types of laws it intended to eliminate -- all of which were positive enactments, not common law rules of liability, as on a contract." Ibid. The court further noted that Congress had often revisited the immunity provision without making it clear that it included contracts or collective-bargaining agreements. Ibid. Finally, the court did not defer to the ICC's interpretation of the Act, presumably because it determined that the Commission's interpretation was belied by the contrary "unambiguously [*126] expressed intent of Congress," id., at 244, 880 F. 2d, at 567 (quoting Chevron U. S. A. Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 843 (1984)).

In ruling that § 11341(a) did not apply to collective-bargaining agreements, the court "declined to address the question" whether the section could operate to override provisions of the RLA. Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, supra, at 247-250, 880 F. 2d, at 570-573. It also declined to consider whether the labor-protective conditions required by § 11347 are exclusive, or whether § 4 of the New York Dock conditions [****18] gives an arbitration committee the right to override provisions of a collective-bargaining agreement. 279 U.S. App. D. C., at 250, 880 F. 2d, at 573. The court remanded the case to the Commission for a determination on these issues.

After the Court of Appeals denied the carriers' petitions for rehearing, the carriers in the consolidated cases filed petitions for certiorari, which we granted on March 26, 1990. 494 U.S. 1055 (1990).<sup>2</sup> We now reverse.

---

<sup>2</sup>On September 9, 1989, the Commission also filed a petition for rehearing, and requested the court to refrain from ruling on the petition until the Commission could issue a comprehensive decision on remand addressing issues that the Court of Appeals left

[****19]

[*127] [***106] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B]II

Title 49 U. S. C. § 11341\(a\) provides:

"... HN6 [↑] A carrier, corporation, or person participating in that approved or exempted transaction is exempt from the antitrust laws and from all other law, including State and municipal law, as necessary to let that person carry out the transaction, hold, maintain, and operate property, and exercise control or franchises acquired through the transaction. . . ."

We address the narrow question whether the exemption in § 11341\(a\) from "all other law" includes a carrier's legal obligations under a collective-bargaining agreement.

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [↑] [1C] [LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [↑] [2A] By its terms, the exemption applies only when necessary to carry out an approved transaction. These predicates, however, are not at issue here, for the Court of Appeals [**1163] did not pass on them and the parties [****20] do not challenge them. HNT [↑] For purposes of this decision, we assume, without deciding, that the Commission properly considered the public interest factors of § 11344\(b\)\(1\) in approving the original transaction, that its decision to override the carrier's obligations is consistent with the labor-protective requirements of § 11347, and that the override was necessary to the implementation of the transaction within the meaning of § 11341\(a\). Under these [*128] assumptions, we hold that the exemption from "all other law" in § 11341\(a\) includes the obligations imposed by the terms of a collective-bargaining agreement.<sup>3</sup> open for resolution. On September 29, 1989, the Court of Appeals issued an order stating that the Commission's petition for rehearing would be "deferred pending release of the ICC's decision on remand." App. to Pet. for Cert. in No. 89-1027, p. 54a.

On January 4, 1990, the Commission reopened proceedings in the case remanded to it. On May 21, 1990, two months after we granted the carriers' petitions for certiorari, the Commission issued its remand decision. CSX Corp. -- Control -- Chessie System, Inc. and Seaboard Coast Line Industries, Inc., 6 I. C. C. 2d 715 (1990). In its decision, the Commission adhered to the Court of Appeals' ruling that § 11341\(a\) did not authorize it to override provisions of a collective-bargaining agreement. The Commission held, however, that § 11341\(a\) authorized it to foreclose resort to RLA remedies for modification and enforcement of collective-bargaining agreements "at least to the extent of [its] authority" to impose labor-protective conditions under § 11347. Id., at 754. The Commission explained that the § 11347 limit on its § 11341\(a\) authority "reflects the consistency of the overall statutory scheme for dealing with CBA modifications required to implement Commission-approved mergers and consolidations." Id., at 722. The Commission remanded its decision to the parties for further negotiation or arbitration.

On December 4, 1990, the union respondents petitioned the Court of Appeals for review of the Commission's remand decision. The petition raises three issues: (1) whether § 11341\(a\) authorizes the ICC to foreclose employee resort to the RLA; (2) whether § 11347 authorizes the ICC to compel employees to arbitrate changes in collective-bargaining agreements; and (3) whether abrogation of employee contract rights effected a taking in violation of the Due Process and Just Compensation clauses of the Fifth Amendment.

<sup>3</sup> [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [↑] [2B]

On May 23, 1990, and again on September 19, 1990, the union respondents filed motions to dismiss the case as moot. They argued that in light of the alternative ground for decision offered by the ICC on remand from the Court of Appeals, see n. 2, supra, the meaning and scope of § 11341\(a\) was no longer material to the dispute. The union respondents reassert their mootness argument in their brief on the merits. Brief for Respondent Unions 18.

We disagree. The Commission predicated the analysis in its remand order on the correctness of the Court of Appeals' interpretation of § 11341\(a\). Thus, our definitive interpretation of § 11341\(a\) may affect the Commission's remand order. Agency compliance with the Court of Appeals' mandate does not moot the issue of the correctness of the court's decision. See, e. g., Cornelius v. NAACP Legal Defense & Educational Fund, Inc., 473 U.S. 788, 791, n. 1 (1985); Schweiker v. Gray Panthers, 453 U.S. 34, 42, n. 12 (1981); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 468-469, n. 4 (1977). In addition, the alternative basis offered by the Commission on remand does not end the controversy between the parties. The parties retain an interest in the validity of the [****21] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#)↑ [1D][LEdHN\[3\]](#)↑ [3]As always, we begin with the language of the statute and ask whether Congress has spoken on the subject before us. "HN8↑" If the intent of Congress is clear, that is the end of the matter; for the court, as well as the agency, must give effect to the unambiguously expressed intent of Congress." Chevron, 467 U.S., at 842-843. [****107] The contested language in § 11341\(a\), exempting carriers from "the antitrust laws and all other law, including State and municipal law," is clear, broad, and unqualified. It does not admit of the distinction the Court of Appeals drew, based on its analysis of legislative history, between positive enactments and common-law rules of liability. Nor does it support the Court of Appeals' conclusion that Congress did not intend the immunity clause to apply to contractual obligations.

[*129] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#)↑ [1E] [****22] HN9↑ By itself, the phrase "all other law" indicates no limitation. The circumstance that the phrase "all other law" is in addition to coverage for "the antitrust laws" does not detract from this breadth. There is a canon of statutory construction which, on first impression, might seem to dictate a different result. HN10↑ Under the principle of ejusdem generis, when a general term follows a specific one, the general term should be understood as a reference to subjects akin to the one with specific enumeration. See Arcadia v. Ohio Power Co., 498 U.S. 73, 84-85 \(1990\). The canon does not control, however, when the whole context dictates a different conclusion. Here, there are several reasons the immunity provision cannot be interpreted to apply only to antitrust laws and similar statutes. First, because "repeals of the antitrust laws by implication from a regulatory statute are strongly disfavored," United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 350 \(1963\), Congress may have determined that it should make a clear and separate statement to include antitrust laws within the general exemption of § 11341\(a\). Second, the otherwise general [****23] term "all other law" "includes" (but is not limited to) "State and municipal law." This shows that "all other law" refers to more than laws related to antitrust. Also, the fact that "all other law" entails more than "the antitrust laws," but is not limited to "State and municipal law," reinforces the conclusion, inherent in the [**1164] word "all," that the phrase "all other law" includes federal law other than the antitrust laws. HN11↑ In short, the immunity provision in § 11341 means what it says: A carrier is exempt from all law as necessary to carry out an ICC-approved transaction.

[LEdHN\[1F\]](#)↑ [1F][LEdHN\[4\]](#)↑ [4]The exemption is broad enough to include laws that govern the obligations imposed by contract. "The obligation of a contract is 'the law which binds the parties to perform their agreement.'" Home Building & Loan Assn. v. Blaisdell, 290 U.S. 398, 429 \(1934\) (quoting Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 197 \(1819\)). [****24] A contract depends on a regime [*130] of common and statutory law for its effectiveness and enforcement.

"Laws which subsist at the time and place of the making of a contract, and where it is to be performed, enter into and form a part of it, as fully as if they had been expressly referred to or incorporated in its terms. This principle embraces alike those laws which affect its construction and those which affect its enforcement or discharge." Farmers and Merchants Bank of Monroe v. Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, 262 U.S. 649, 660 \(1923\).

HN12↑ [****108] A contract has no legal force apart from the law that acknowledges its binding character. As a result, the exemption in § 11341\(a\) from "all other law" effects an override of contractual obligations, as necessary to carry out an approved transaction, by suspending application of the law that makes the contract binding.

Schwabacher v. United States, 334 U.S. 182 (1948), which construed the immediate precursor of § 11341(a), § 5(11) of the Transportation Act of [****25] 1940, ch. 722, § 7, 54 Stat. 908-909,<sup>4</sup> supports this conclusion. In Schwabacher, minority stockholders in a carrier involved in an ICC-approved merger complained that the terms of the merger diminished the value of their shares as guaranteed by the corporate charter [*131] and thus "deprived [them] of contract rights under Michigan law. . . ." 334 U.S., at 188. We explained that the Commission was charged under the Act with passing upon and approving all capital liabilities assumed or discharged by the merged company, and that once the Commission approved a merger in the public interest and on just and reasonable terms, the immunity provision relieved the parties to the merger of "restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law, Federal, State, or municipal," as necessary to carry out the transaction. Id., at 194-195, 198. We noted that before approving the merger, the Commission had a duty "to see that minority interests are protected," and emphasized that any such minority rights were, "as a matter of federal law, accorded recognition in the obligation of the Commission not to approve any plan which is not just and reasonable." Id., at 201. [****26] Once these interests were accounted for, however, "it would be inconsistent to allow state law to apply a liquidation basis [for valuation] to what federal law designates as a basis for continued public service." Id., at 200. Relying in part on the immunity provision, we held the contract [**1165] rights protected by state law did not survive the merger agreement found by the Commission to be in the public interest. Id., at 194-195, 200-201. Because the Commission had disclaimed jurisdiction to settle the shareholders' complaints, we remanded the case to the Commission to ensure that the terms of the merger were just and reasonable. Id., at 202.

[****27] Just as the obligations imposed by state contract law did not survive the merger at issue in Schwabacher, the obligations imposed by the law that gives force to the carriers' collective-bargaining agreements, the [***109] RLA, do not survive the merger in this case. The RLA governs the formation, construction, and enforcement of the labor-management contracts in issue here. It requires carriers and employees to make reasonable efforts "to make and maintain" collective-bargaining agreements, 45 U. S. C. § 152 First, and to refrain from making changes in existing agreements except in [*132] accordance with RLA procedures, 45 U. S. C. §§ 152 Seventh, 156. The Act "extends both to disputes concerning the making of collective agreements and to grievances arising under existing agreements." Slocum v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 339 U.S. 239, 242 (1950). HN13↑ As the law which gives "legal and binding effect to collective agreements," Detroit & T. S. L. R. Co. v. United Transportation Union, 396 U.S. 142, 156 (1969), [****28] the RLA is the law that, under § 11341(a), is superseded when an ICC-approved transaction requires abrogation of collective-bargaining obligations. See ICC v. Locomotive Engineers, 482 U.S. 270, 287 (1987) (Stevens, J., concurring in judgment); Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers v. Boston & Maine Corp., 788 F. 2d 794, 801 (CA1 1986); Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. United Transportation Union, 782 F. 2d 107, 111 (CA8 1986); Burlington Northern, Inc. v. American Railway Supervisors Assn., 503 F. 2d 58, 62-63 (CA7 1974); Bundy v. Penn Central Co., 455 F. 2d 277, 279-280 (CA6 1972); Nemitz v. Norfolk & Western R. Co., 436 F. 2d 841, 845 (CA6), aff'd, 404 U.S. 37 (1971); Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 314 F. 2d 424 (CA8 1963); Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, 307 F. 2d 151, 161-162 (CA5 1962); Railway Labor Executives Assn. v. Guilford Transp. Industries, Inc., 667 F. Supp. 29, 35 (Me. 1987), aff'd, 843 F. 2d 1383 (CA1 1988). [****29]

Our determination that § 11341(a) supersedes collective-bargaining obligations via the RLA as necessary to carry out an ICC-approved transaction makes sense of the consolidation provisions of the Act, which were designed to promote "economy and efficiency in interstate transportation by the removal of the burdens of excessive expenditure." Texas v. United States, 292 U.S. 522, 534-535 (1934). HN14↑ The Act requires the Commission to

---

<sup>4</sup> Section 5(11) of the Transportation Act of 1940 provided:

"Any carriers or other corporations, and their officers and employees and any other persons, participating in a transaction approved or authorized under the provisions of this section shall be and they are hereby relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws and all other restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law, Federal, State, or municipal, insofar as may be necessary to enable them to carry into effect the transaction so approved or provided for in accordance with the terms and conditions, if any, imposed by the Commission. . . ."

The recodification of this language in § 11341(a) effected no substantive change. See H. R. Rep. No. 95-1395, pp. 158-160 (1978). See also ICC v. Locomotive Engineers, 482 U.S. 270, 299, n. 12 (1987) (Stevens, J., concurring in judgment).

approve consolidations in the public interest. 49 U. S. C. § 11343\(a\)\(1\). Recognizing that consolidations in the public interest will "result in wholesale dismissals and extensive transfers, involving expense to [*133] transferred employees" as well as "the loss of seniority rights," United States v. Lowden, 308 U.S. 225, 233 \(1939\), the Act imposes a number of labor-protecting requirements to ensure that the Commission accommodates the interests of affected parties to the greatest extent possible. 49 U. S. C. §§ 11344\(b\)\(1\)\(D\), 11347; see also New York Dock Railway -- Control -- Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal, 360 I. C. C. 60 \(1979\). [****30] Section 11341\(a\) guarantees that HN15 once these interests are accounted for and once the consolidation is approved, obligations imposed by laws such as the RLA will not prevent the efficiencies of consolidation from being achieved. If § 11341\(a\) did not apply to bargaining [**110] agreements enforceable under the RLA, rail carrier consolidations [**1166] would be difficult, if not impossible, to achieve. The resolution process for major disputes under the RLA would so delay the proposed transfer of operations that any efficiencies the carriers sought would be defeated. See, e. g., Burlington Northern R. Co. v. Maintenance of Way Employees, 481 U.S. 429, 444 \(1987\) (resolution procedures for major disputes "virtually endless"); Detroit & T. S. L. R. Co. v. United Transportation Union, 396 U.S. 142, 149 \(1969\) (dispute resolution under RLA involves "an almost interminable process"); Railway Clerks v. Florida East Coast R. Co., 384 U.S. 238, 246 \(1966\) (RLA procedures are "purposely long and drawn out"). The immunity [****31] provision of § 11341\(a\) is designed to avoid this result.

HN16 We hold that, as necessary to carry out a transaction approved by the Commission, the term "all other law" in § 11341\(a\) includes any obstacle imposed by law. In this case, the term "all other law" in § 11341\(a\) applies to the substantive and remedial laws respecting enforcement of collective-bargaining agreements. Our construction of the clear statutory command confirms the interpretation of the agency charged with its administration and expert in the field of railroad mergers. We affirm the Commission's interpretation of § 11341\(a\), not out of deference in the face of an [*134] ambiguous statute, but rather because the Commission's interpretation is the correct one.

This reading of § 11341\(a\) will not, as the Court of Appeals feared, lead to bizarre results. Brotherhood of Railway Carmen v. ICC, 279 U.S. App. D. C., at 244, 880 F. 2d, at 567. HN17 The immunity provision does not exempt carriers from [****32] all law, but rather from all law necessary to carry out an approved transaction. We reiterate that neither the conditions of approval, nor the standard for necessity, is before us today. It may be, as the Commission held on remand from the Court of Appeals, that the scope of the immunity provision is limited by § 11347, which conditions approval of a transaction on satisfaction of certain labor-protective conditions. See n. 2, supra. It also might be true that "the breadth of the exemption in [§ 11341\(a\)] is defined by the scope of the approved transaction. . ." ICC v. Locomotive Engineers, supra, at 298 (Stevens, J., concurring in judgment). We express no view on these matters, as they are not before us here.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the cases are remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: STEVENS; MARSHALL

Dissent

---

JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE MARSHALL joins, dissenting.

The statutory exemption that the Court construes today had its source in § 407 of the Transportation Act of 1920 (1920 Act). 41 Stat. 482. Its wording was slightly changed in 1940, 54 Stat. 908-909, [****33] and again in 1978, 92 Stat. 1434. There is, however, no claim that either of those amendments modified the coverage [*111] of the exemption in any way. It is therefore appropriate to begin with a consideration of the purpose and the text of the 1920 Act.

[*135] Before the First World War, the railroad industry had been the prime target of antitrust enforcement.<sup>1</sup> In 1920, however, Congress adopted a new national transportation policy that expressly favored the consolidation of railroads. The policy of consolidation embodied in the 1920 Act would obviously [*1167] have been frustrated by the federal antitrust laws had Congress not chosen to exempt explicitly all approved mergers from these laws. Section 407 of that Act provided, in part:

"The carriers affected by any order made under the foregoing provisions of this section . . . shall be, and they are hereby, relieved from the operation of the 'antitrust laws,' . . . and of all other restraints or prohibitions by law, State or Federal, in so far as may be necessary to enable them to do anything authorized or required by any order made under and pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this section." 41 Stat. 482.

[****34]

Both the background and the text of § 407 make it absolutely clear that its primary focus was on federal antitrust laws. Sensibly, however, Congress wrote that section using language broad enough to cover any other federal or state law that might otherwise forbid the consummation of any approved merger or prevent the immediate operation of its properties under a new corporate owner. Not a word in the statute, or in its legislative history, contains any hint that the approval of a [****35] merger by the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) would impair the obligations of valid and otherwise enforceable private contracts.

Given the present plight of our Nation's railroads, it may be wise policy to give the ICC a power akin to, albeit greater [*136] than, that of a bankruptcy court to approve a trustee's rejection of a debtor's executory private contracts.<sup>2</sup> Through nothing short of a tour de force, however, can one find any such power in 49 U. S. C. § 11341, or in either of its predecessors. Obviously, consolidated carriers would find it useful to have the ability to disavow disadvantageous long-term leases on obsolete car repair facilities, employment contracts with high salaried executives whose services are no longer needed, as well as collective-bargaining agreements that provide costly job security to a shrinking work force. If Congress had intended to give the ICC such broad ranging power to impair contracts, it would have done so in language much clearer than anything that can be found in the present Act.

[****36] [*112] The Court's contrary conclusion rests on its reading of the "plain meaning" of the present statutory text and our decision in Schwabacher v. United States, 334 U.S. 182 \(1948\). Neither of these reasons is sufficient. Moreover, the Court's reading is inconsistent with other unambiguous provisions in the statute.

I

With or without the ejusdem generis canon, I believe that the normal reader would assume that the text of § 11341 encompasses the antitrust laws, as well as other federal or state laws, that would otherwise prohibit rail carriers from consummating approved mergers, and nothing more. See ante, at 128. That text contains no suggestion that whenever a criminal law, tort law, or any regulatory measure impedes the efficient operation of a new merged carrier, the carrier can avoid such a restriction by virtue of the ICC approval of that merger. Nor does the text of § 11341 contain any suggestion [*137] that such an approval would impair the obligation of private contracts.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290 \(1897\); United States v. Joint Traffic Assn., 171 U.S. 505 \(1898\); Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197 \(1904\); United States v. Terminal Railroad Assn. of St. Louis, 224 U.S. 383 \(1912\); United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 226 U.S. 61 \(1912\); United States v. Pacific & Arctic R. & Nav. Co., 228 U.S. 87 \(1913\).

<sup>2</sup> Section 365 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U. S. C. § 365, allows a trustee to assume or reject a debtor's executory contracts and unexpired leases subject to the subsequent approval of the bankruptcy court. Collective-bargaining agreements can be rejected only if the additional requirements of 11 U. S. C. § 1113 are met.

<sup>3</sup> As Judge D. H. Ginsburg, writing for the Court of Appeals, noted:

"We cannot sustain the ICC's position that this provision empowers it to override a [collective-bargaining agreement (CBA)]. First, and most important, the ICC's position finds no support in the language of the statute. By its terms, § 11341\(a\)

Rather, as [**1168] both an application of the ejusdem generis canon and an examination of the legislative history show, the purpose of the [****37] exemption was to relieve the carriers "from the operation of the antitrust and other restrictive or prohibitory laws." H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 650, 66th Cong., 2d Sess., 64 (1920) (emphasis added).

[****38] The Court speculates that the reason the 1920 Congress explicitly referred to the antitrust laws was simply to avoid the force of the rule that repeals of the antitrust laws by implication are not favored, citing United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 350 (1963). In that case, however, the rule was announced in the context of the industry's argument that federal regulatory approval of a transaction exempted the transaction from the antitrust laws even though the regulatory statute was entirely silent on the subject of exemption. Ibid. The authority cited in the Philadelphia [*138] decision to support this rule sheds no light on the question whether a statute creating a broad exemption for mergers would naturally be read to include all statutes that otherwise would have prohibited the consummation [***113] of a merger of large rail carriers.<sup>4</sup> contemplates exemption only from 'the antitrust laws and from all other law' to the extent necessary to carry out the transaction. Nowhere does it say that the ICC may also override contracts, nor has it ever, in any of the various iterations since its initial enactment in 1920, included even a general reference to 'contracts,' much less any specific reference to CBAs. Nor has the ICC explained how we can read the term 'other law,' as it has done, to mean 'all legal obstacles.' Dispatchers, J. A. 207. None of the Supreme Court decisions, discussed below, authorizing the ICC to abrogate an 'other law' even suggests that the term means 'all legal obstacles.' The ICC itself, prior to its 1983 decision in DRGW, recognized as much. See Gulf, Mobile & Ohio R. R. Co. - Abandonment, 282 I. C. C. 311, 335 (1952) ('None of the decisions in the [Supreme Court] cases . . . relates to private contractual rights, but refers [sic] to State laws which prohibit in some way the carrying out of the transaction authorized.')." Brotherhood of Railway Carmen v. ICC, 279 U.S. App. D. C. 239, 244, 880 F. 2d 562, 567 (1989).

[****39] Of greater importance, however, is the Court's rather remarkable assumption that an exemption "from 'all other" [*139] law" should be read to encompass the restraints created [**1169] by private contract.<sup>5</sup> [****40]

<sup>4</sup> All but two of the cases that the Court cited in the Philadelphia decision to support the rule against implicit repeals of the antitrust statutes arose under a regulatory framework in which there was no mention of exemption. United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 350, n. 28 (1963). See United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S., at 314-315; United States v. Joint Traffic Assn., 171 U.S. 505 (1898); Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S., at 343, 374-376 (plurality and dissenting opinions); United States v. Pacific & Arctic R. & Nav. Co., 228 U.S., at 105, 107; Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 161-162 (1922); Central Transfer Co. v. Terminal Railway Assn. of St. Louis, 288 U.S. 469, 474-475 (1933); Terminal Warehouse Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 297 U.S. 500, 513-515 (1936); United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 197-206 (1939); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 226-228 (1940); Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 456-457 (1945); United States Alkali Export Assn., Inc. v. United States, 325 U.S. 196, 205-206 (1945); Allen Bradley Co. v. Electrical Workers, 325 U.S. 797, 809-810 (1945); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 9 (1958); United States v. Radio Corp. of America, 358 U.S. 334 (1959); California v. FPC, 369 U.S. 482 (1962); Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341 (1963). The other two cases involve regulations with explicit exemptions from the antitrust laws, but do not support the position taken by the Court in this case. In Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Assn., Inc. v. United States, 362 U.S. 458 (1960), this Court held that § 6 of the Clayton Act's exemption of agricultural cooperatives from the antitrust law only protected the formation of those associations; once formed they could not engage in any further conduct that would violate the antitrust laws. In Pan American World Airways, Inc. v. United States, 371 U.S. 296 (1963), the Court held that the exemption relieving airlines from the operation of the antitrust laws when certain transactions were approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board did not exempt the airlines from all antitrust violations, but only exempted them from violations stemming from activity explicitly governed by the regulatory scheme.

<sup>5</sup> Again Judge Ginsburg's observation is pertinent:

"Moreover, the ICC's proposed insertion of 'all legal obstacles' into the statutory language would lead to most bizarre results. Under the ICC's reading, it could set to naught, in order to facilitate a merger, a carrier's solemn undertaking, in a bond indenture or a bank loan, to refrain from entering into any such transaction without the consent of its creditors. Cf. Gulf, Mobile & Ohio, 282 I. C. C. at 331-35 (declaring itself without power, in an abandonment context, to relieve a carrier from its 'contractual obligations for the payment of rent'). We do not think it likely that Congress would grant the ICC a power with so much potential to destabilize the railroad industry; we are confident, however, that it would not do so without so much as a word to that effect in the statute itself. Never, either in its decisions here under review or in prior cases, has the ICC offered any justification for this most unlikely reading of the Act." 279 U.S. App. D. C., at 244-245, 880 F. 2d, at 567-568.

Ante, at 129-130. Even if the text of the present Act could bear that reading, it is flatly inconsistent with the text of the 1920 Act, which relieved the participating carriers "from the operation of the 'antitrust laws' . . . and of all other restraints or prohibitions by law, State or federal. . . ." 41 Stat. 482. Moreover, given the respect that our legal system has always paid to the enforceability of private contracts -- a respect that is evidenced by express language in the [***114] Constitution itself<sup>6</sup> -- there should be a powerful presumption against finding an implied authority to impair contracts in a statute that was enacted to alleviate a legitimate concern about the antitrust laws. Had Congress intended to convey the message the Court finds in § 11341, it surely would have said expressly that the exemption was from all restraints imposed by law or by private contract.<sup>7</sup>

[*140] [***41] //

In my opinion, the Court's reliance on the decision in *Schwabacher v. United States*, 334 U.S. 182 \(1948\), is misplaced. In that case, the owners of two percent of the outstanding preferred stock of the Pere Marquette Railway brought suit in the United States District Court to set aside an ICC order approving a merger between that corporation and the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Corporation. In approving the merger, the ICC had found that the market value of plaintiffs' preferred shares ranged, at different times, from $ 87 to $ 99 per share, and that the stock that they received in exchange pursuant to the merger agreement would have realized about $ 90 and $ 111 on the same dates. Thus, the terms of the merger, as applied to the plaintiffs' class, were just and reasonable. Plaintiffs contended, however, that the exchange value of their shares amounted to $ 172.50 per share because the merger was a "liquidation" as a matter of Michigan law, and the Pere Marquette Charter provided that in the event of liquidation or dissolution, the preferred shareholders were entitled to receive full payment of par value plus all accrued unpaid dividends.

The ICC order [***42] approving the merger did not resolve the Michigan law question. The ICC considered the issue too insignificant to affect the validity of the entire transaction, and left the matter for resolution by negotiation or later litigation. On appeal from the [**1170] District Court's judgment sustaining the ICC order, this Court held that the ICC's finding that the exchange value was just and reasonable foreclosed any other claim that the dissenting shareholders might assert [*141] concerning the value of their shares. Whatever Michigan law might provide for the preferred shareholders in the event of a winding-up or liquidation could not determine the just and reasonable value of shares in the continuing enterprise. The essence of the Court's holding is set forth in this passage:

"Since the federal law clearly contemplates merger as a step in [***115] continuing the enterprise, it follows that what Michigan law might give these dissenters on a winding-up or liquidation is irrelevant, except insofar as it may be reflected in current values for which they are entitled to an equivalent. It would be inconsistent to allow state law to apply a liquidation basis to what federal [***43] law designates as a basis for continued public service. . . .

. . .

"We therefore hold that no rights alleged to have been granted to dissenting stockholders by state law provision concerning liquidation survive the merger agreement approved by the requisite number of stockholders and approved by the Commission as just and reasonable. Any such rights are, as a matter of

<sup>6</sup> "No State shall . . . pass any . . . Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts. . . ." *U.S. Const., Art. I, § 10, cl. 1*.

<sup>7</sup> After reviewing the legislative history, Judge Ginsburg concluded:

"From our review of this history, we are confident that Congress did not intend, when it enacted the immunity provision, to override contracts. First, Congress focused nearly exclusively, in the hearings and debates on the 1920 Act, on specific types of laws it intended to eliminate -- all of which were positive enactments, not common law rules of liability, as on a contract. Cf. *Association of Flight Attendants v. Delta Air Lines, Inc.*, 879 F. 2d 906, 917 \(D. C. Cir. 1989\). Indeed, Commissioner Clark, who presented the immunity idea to the House and Senate Commerce Committees in the hearings cited above, did not once suggest, over the course of several days and several hundred pages, that the proposed immunity might relieve a carrier of its obligations under negotiated agreements with third parties." *279 U.S. App. D. C., at 247, 880 F. 2d, at 570*.

federal law, accorded recognition in the obligation of the Commission not to approve any plan which is not just and reasonable." Id., at 200-201.

It is true that the effect of the Schwabacher decision was to extinguish whatever contractual rights the dissenting shareholders possessed as a matter of Michigan law. But the Court did require the ICC, on remand, to consider whatever value the Michigan law claims might have in connection with its final conclusion that the merger plan was "just and reasonable." A fair reading of the entire opinion makes it clear that the holding was based more on the ICC's "complete control of the capital structure to result from a merger," id., at 195, than on the exemption at issue in this case. Schwabacher cannot fairly be read [****44] as authorizing carriers to renounce private contracts that limit the benefits achievable through the merger.

[*142] III

There is tension between the Court's interpretation of the exemption that is now codified in 49 U. S. C. § 11341\(a\) and the labor-protection conditions set forth in 49 U. S. C. § 11347. The latter section requires an ICC order approving a railroad merger to impose conditions that are "no less protective" of the employees than those established pursuant to the Rail Passenger Service Act, 84 Stat. 1337, as amended, 45 U. S. C. § 565. One of the conditions established by the Secretary of Labor under the latter Act was essentially the same as § 2 of the New York Dock conditions described by the Court, ante, at 120-121. As the Court notes, that condition provides that the benefits protected "under applicable laws and/or existing collective bargaining agreements . . . shall be preserved unless changed by future collective bargaining agreements." Id., at 121 (citation omitted). This provision unambiguously indicates that Congress intended and expected that collective-bargaining [****45] agreements would survive any ICC approved merger.

As I noted in my separate opinion in ICC v. Locomotive Engineers, 482 U.S. 270, 298 \(1987\), the statutory immunity provision in § 11341 is self-executing and becomes effective at the time of the ICC approval. "The breadth of the exemption is defined by the scope of the approved transaction, and no explicit announcement of exemption is required to make the statute applicable." Ibid. [***116] (footnote omitted). In neither of the cases before the Court today did the ICC approval of the merger purport to modify or terminate any collective-bargaining agreement. The ICC approval orders were entered in 1980 and [**1171] 1982 and contained no mention of either of the proposed transfers of personnel that are now at issue and about which the union was first notified several years after the ICC orders were entered.<sup>8</sup>

[****46] [*143] I cannot subscribe to a late-blooming interpretation of a 71-year-old immunity statute that gives the Commission a roving power -- exercisable years after a merger has been approved and consummated -- to impair the obligations of private contracts that may "prevent the efficiencies of consolidation from being achieved." Ante, at 133. The Court's decision may represent a "better" policy choice than the one Congress actually made in 1920, cf. West Virginia University Hospitals, Inc. v. Casey, ante, at 100-101, but it is neither an accurate reading of the command that Congress issued in 1920, nor is it a just disposition of claims based on valid private contracts.

<sup>8</sup> In the ICC order approving the merger of Chessie System, Inc., and Seaboard Coastline Industries, Inc., the ICC discussed how the coordination of facilities would generate significant cost reductions and improved economic efficiency. CSX Corp. -- Control -- Chessie System, Inc., and Seaboard Coast Line Industries, Inc., 363 I. C. C. 521, 556 (1980). The ICC noted:

"These savings will spring from common-point coordination projects, mechanical and engineering department coordinations, locomotive and car utilization improvements, and internal rerouting efficiencies. Each of these projects is discussed separately below." Ibid.

In the discussion that followed, the ICC did discuss plans to expand the car production facilities at Raceland, Kentucky, in order to make cars for a member line that had been buying its cars from an independent manufacturer. The ICC found that the applicants had failed to show that the public would derive any benefit from this plan. There was no discussion of the consolidation of that facility by closing Seaboard's car repair shop in Waycross, Georgia. Nor did the ICC discuss the consolidation of locomotive works in Norfolk Southern Corp. -- Control -- Norfolk & W. R. Co. and Southern R. Co., 366 I. C. C. 173 (1982).

I respectfully dissent.

References

---

13 Am Jur 2d, Carriers 36; 48A Am Jur 2d Labor and Labor Relations 1698; Railroads 331-333

49 USCS 11341\(a\)

RIA Employment Coordinator LR-34,087

L Ed Digest, Interstate Commerce Commission 39; Labor 41

L Ed Index, Carriers; Collective Bargaining; Interstate Commerce Act or Commission, Railroads

Index to Annotations, Carriers; Collective Bargaining; Interstate Commerce Commission; [****47] Railroads

Annotation References:

Supreme Court's application of the rules of ejusdem generis and noscitur a sociis. 46 L Ed 2d 879.

When is subsequent business operation bound by existing collective bargaining agreement between labor union and predecessor employer. 88 ALR Fed 89.

Meaning of "willful" under provision of Railway Labor Act (45 USCS 152(tenth)) making willful failure or refusal to comply with Act a criminal offense. 49 ALR Fed 611.

Breach of collective bargaining agreement as unfair labor practice under National Labor Relations Act, as amended (29 USCS 158). 6 ALR Fed 589.

---

End of Document

City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising

Supreme Court of the United States

November 28, 1990, Argued ; April 1, 1991, Decided

No. 89-1671

Reporter

499 U.S. 365 *; 111 S. Ct. 1344 **; 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 ***; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 1858 ****; 59 U.S.L.W. 4259; 1991-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,378; 91 Cal. Daily Op. Service 2266; 92 Cal. Daily Op. Service 2366; 91 Daily Journal DAR 3723

CITY OF COLUMBIA et al. v. OMNI OUTDOOR ADVERTISING, INC.

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 891 F. 2d 1127, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

Sherman Act, municipal, billboard, conspiracy, regulation, anticompetitive, economic regulation, exemption, ordinance, antitrust, anti trust law, immunity, private party, sham, government action, zoning, public official, lobbying, restraint of trade, public interest, state-action, invalidating, corruption, purposes, urges, city official, authorization, Advertising, city council, articulated

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Product Promotions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 and 2, do not apply to anticompetitive restraints imposed by the states "as an act of government."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN2[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Parker immunity does not apply directly to local governments, however, that a municipality's restriction of competition may sometimes be an authorized implementation of state policy can be accorded Parker immunity where that is the case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Transportation Law > Bridges & Roads > Billboards

HN3 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In order to prevent Parker from undermining the very interests of federalism it is designed to protect, it is necessary to adopt a concept of authority broader than what is applied to determine the legality of the municipality's action under state law. Courts adopt an approach that is similar in principle, though not necessarily in precise application, elsewhere.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The Parker defense also requires authority to suppress competition, more specifically, "clear articulation of a state policy to authorize anticompetitive conduct" by the municipality in connection with its regulation. It is enough if suppression of competition is the "foreseeable result" of what the statute authorizes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Transportation Law > Bridges & Roads > Billboards

HN5 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A municipal ordinance restricting the size, location, and spacing of billboards, surely a common form of zoning, necessarily protects existing billboards against some competition from newcomers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rebates

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The rationale of Parker is that, in light of our national commitment to federalism, the general language of the Sherman Act should not be interpreted to prohibit anticompetitive actions by the states in their governmental capacities as sovereign regulators. The immunity does not necessarily obtain where the state acts not in a regulatory capacity but as a commercial participant in a given market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN7 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Where the action complained of is that of the state itself, the action is exempt from antitrust liability regardless of the state's motives in taking the action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Bribery > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Public Officials > General Overview

HN8 Sherman Act, Defenses

The approach which would consider Parker inapplicable is only if, in connection with the governmental action in question, bribery or some other violation of state or federal law is established. Such unlawful activity has no necessary relationship to whether the governmental action is in the public interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Public Officials > General Overview

HN9 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

When the regulatory body is not a single individual but a state legislature or city council, there is even less reason to believe that violation of the law by bribing a minority of the decisionmakers establishes that the regulation has no valid public purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Lands & Rights of Way

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN10 Sherman Act, Claims

Courts are to reject any interpretation of the Sherman Act that would allow plaintiffs to look behind the actions of state sovereigns to base their claims on perceived conspiracies to restrain trade. With the possible market participant exception, any action that qualifies as state action is ipso facto exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

The federal antitrust laws also do not regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from the government. This doctrine, like Parker, rests ultimately upon a recognition that the antitrust laws, "tailored as they are for the business world, are not at all appropriate for application in the political arena." That a private party's political motives are selfish is irrelevant: Noerr shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN12[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The "sham" exception to Noerr encompasses situations in which persons use the governmental process -- as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetitive weapon. A "sham" situation involves a defendant whose activities are "not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action" at all, not one "who genuinely seeks to achieve his governmental result, but does so through improper means."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN13[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

If Noerr teaches anything it is that an intent to restrain trade as a result of the government action sought does not foreclose protection.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN14[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

A "conspiracy" exception to Noerr must be rejected.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Federal antitrust laws held inapplicable to actions of (1) city which enacted billboard zoning ordinances, and (2) company which controlled relevant billboard market and which lobbied for ordinances.

Summary

In 1981, a Georgia corporation began erecting billboards in and around the city of Columbia, South Carolina. In response, a South Carolina corporation--which had been in the billboard business in Columbia since the 1940s, and which controlled more than 95 percent of the relevant market in the Columbia area--met with city officials to seek the enactment of zoning ordinances that would restrict billboard construction. The South Carolina corporation was owned by a family whose members enjoyed close relations with the city's political leaders. In 1982, the city council passed an ordinance which imposed a moratorium period on billboard construction in the city, except as specifically authorized by the council. After this ordinance was invalidated by a state court on federal and state constitutional grounds, the city council passed a new ordinance which restricted the size, location, and spacing of billboards. Two months later, the Georgia corporation filed suit in United States District Court against both the South Carolina corporation and the city. The Georgia corporation alleged that the city's billboard ordinances (1) violated (a) 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 2), and (b) South Carolina's unfair trade practices statute; and (2) were the result of an anticompetitive conspiracy between city officials and the South Carolina corporation which stripped both parties of any immunity from the federal antitrust laws which they otherwise might have enjoyed. A jury returned general verdicts against the city and the South Carolina corporation on both the federal and state claims. The city and the South Carolina corporation moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdicts, and the District Court--finding that the activities of both parties were outside the scope of the federal antitrust laws--granted the motion. On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit (1) reversed the judgment of the District Court, and (2) reinstated the jury verdicts on all counts (891 F2d 1127).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. In an opinion by Scalia, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and Blackmun, O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., it was held that (1) the ordinance restricting the size, location, and spacing of billboards was entitled to immunity from the federal antitrust laws, where state statutes (a) authorized the city, through the exercise of its zoning power, to regulate the size, location, and spacing of billboards, and (b) clearly articulated a state policy to authorize the city's anticompetitive conduct in connection with its regulation; (2) there was no "conspiracy" exception to the rule, under Parker v Brown \(1943\) 317 US 341, 87 L Ed 315, 63 S Ct 307, that the Sherman Act did not apply to anticompetitive restraints imposed by the states as an act of government, and any governmental action that qualified as state action--with the possible exception of instances where the state acts not in a regulatory capacity, but as a commercial participant in a given market--was ipso facto exempt from the operation of the federal antitrust laws; (3) the "sham" exception to the rule, under Eastern R. Presidents Conference v Noerr Motor Freight, Inc. \(1961\) 365 US 127, 5 L Ed 2d 464, 81 S Ct 523, that the federal antitrust laws do not regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from state governments--which exception applies to situations in which persons use the governmental process, as opposed to the outcome of that process, as an anticompetitive weapon--was inapplicable to the South Carolina corporation under the circumstances; (4) there was no "conspiracy" exception to the Noerr rule; and (5) the Supreme Court would remand the case for further proceedings, so that the Court of Appeals could determine (a) whether there should be a new trial with respect to only the private anticompetitive actions allegedly engaged in by the corporation, and (b) the effect of the Supreme Court's holding on the claim under the South Carolina unfair trade practices statute.

Stevens, J., joined by White and Marshall, JJ., dissenting, (1) agreed that (a) there was no "conspiracy" exception to the Parker rule when a state acted in a nonproprietary capacity, and (b) the "sham" exception to the Noerr rule did not apply to the South Carolina corporation's conduct in the case at hand; but (2) expressed the view that the Court of Appeals' judgment should be affirmed as to both the city and the South Carolina corporation, because (a) the city's economic regulation of the billboard market pursuant to a general state grant of zoning power was not exempt from antitrust scrutiny, and (b) a private party's agreement with selfishly motivated public officials was sufficient to remove the antitrust immunity that protected private lobbying under the Noerr rule.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > immunity of municipality -- billboard ordinance -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]

A municipality's enactment of an ordinance which restricts the size, location, and spacing of billboards is entitled to immunity from the federal antitrust laws, where state statutes (1) authorize the municipality, through the exercise of its zoning power, to regulate the size, location, and spacing of billboards, and (2) clearly articulate a state policy to authorize the municipality's anticompetitive conduct in connection with the municipality's regulation, since an ordinance containing such restrictions necessarily protects existing billboards against some competition from newcomers. (Stevens, White, and Marshall, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > state-action exemption -- "conspiracy" exception -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C]

There is no "conspiracy" exception to the rule that the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) does not apply to anticompetitive restraints imposed by the states as an act of government; any governmental action that qualifies as state action--with the possible exception of instances where the state acts not in a regulatory capacity, but as a commercial participant in a given market--is ipso facto exempt from the operation of the federal antitrust laws; while a state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it or by declaring that their action is lawful, the Sherman Act cannot be interpreted so as to allow plaintiffs to look behind the actions of state sovereigns in order to base claims on perceived conspiracies to restrain trade. (Stevens, White, and Marshall, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > exemption for private individuals' interaction with government -- "sham" exception -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B] [LEdHN\[3C\]](#) [3C]

The "sham" exception to the rule that the federal antitrust laws do not regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from state governments--which exception encompasses situations in which persons use the governmental process, as opposed to the outcome of that process, as an anticompetitive weapon--is inapplicable to a corporation in the billboard business which interacted with a municipality's officials for the purpose of delaying a competitor's entry into the market through the enactment of zoning ordinances, because (1) the corporation had set out to disrupt the competitor's business relationships not through the very process of lobbying, or of causing the officials to consider zoning measures, but rather through the ordinances, which were the ultimate product of that lobbying and consideration, (2) the delay in the competitor's entry into the market was not sought to be achieved by only the lobbying process itself, and (3) denial of meaningful access by the competitor to the appropriate administrative and legislative fora of the municipality--although possibly rendering the manner of lobbying improper or even unlawful--does not necessarily render the lobbying process a "sham" for purposes of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.).

499 U.S. 365, *365; 111 S. Ct. 1344, **1344; 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, ***382; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 1858, ****1

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > exemption for private individuals' interaction with government -- "conspiracy" exception -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

There is no "conspiracy" exception to the rule that the federal antitrust laws do not regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from state governments, because (1) it would be impracticable or beyond the scope of the antitrust laws to identify and invalidate lobbying by private individuals that has produced selfishly motivated agreement with public officials, and (2) if a conspiracy is limited to one that involves some element of unlawfulness beyond mere anticompetitive motivation, invalidation of the private individuals' conduct would have nothing to do with the policies of the antitrust laws. (Stevens, White, and Marshall, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > municipalities -- immunity -- determining authority under state law -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

For purposes of determining whether a municipality has acted beyond its delegated authority under state law, so as not to be immune from application of the federal antitrust laws, it is necessary to adopt a concept of authority broader than what is applied to determine the legality of the municipality's action under state law.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > municipalities -- immunity -- regulatory authority -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A] [LEdHN\[6B\]](#) [6B]

In order for a municipality to assert its immunity from application of the federal antitrust laws with respect to regulation by the municipality, there must be (1) authority to regulate under state law--although the municipality need not be able to point to a specific, detailed legislative authorization--and (2) authority to suppress competition, which requires clear articulation of a state policy to authorize anticompetitive conduct by the municipality in connection with its regulation; a state statute delegating authority to suppress competition need not explicitly permit the displacement of competition, and it is enough if such suppression is the foreseeable result of what the statute authorizes.

COURTS §95.5 > purpose of governmental action -- constitutional question -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

In cases which involve a challenge to an action taken by governmental officials, the United States Supreme Court will apply a subjective test to determine whether the officials thought that the action was in the public interest only where (1) a constitutional question is presented, and (2) the very nature of the question requires such an inquiry.

499 U.S. 365, *365; 111 S. Ct. 1344, **1344; 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, ***382; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 1858, ****1

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > state action -- motive -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

Where an action complained of is that of the state itself, the action is exempt from antitrust liability regardless of the state's motives in taking the action.

BRIBERY §1 > action in public interest -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

A mayor is guilty of accepting a bribe even if, in the public interest, the mayor would and should have taken the same action for which the bribe was paid.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > political activities -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

Insofar as the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) sets up a code of ethics at all, it is a code that condemns trade restraints, not political activity.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > exemption for private individuals' interaction with government -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [11B]

The federal antitrust laws do not regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from the government with the intent to restrain trade; such laws, tailored as they are for the business world, are not appropriate for application in the political arena, and it is irrelevant that a private party's political motives are selfish; the policing of the legitimate boundaries of procedural and other means used by lobbyists or applicants who seek to have their opponent ignored is not the role of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) when such defensive strategies are conducted in the context of a genuine attempt to influence governmental action.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > exemption for private individuals' interaction with government -- "sham" exception -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12]

A "sham" exception to the rule that the federal antitrust laws do not regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from the government exists for situations in which persons use the governmental process, as opposed to the outcome of that process, as an anticompetitive weapon, such as where a person files frivolous objections to the license application of a competitor, with no expectation of achieving denial of the license, but simply in order to impose expense and delay; for purposes of this exception, a "sham" situation involves a party whose activities are not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action, but does not involve a party who genuinely seeks to achieve a governmental result through improper means.

APPEAL §1692.2 > remand -- issue not decided -- misconception as to law -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13A\]](#) [13A] [LEdHN\[13B\]](#) [13B]

In light of the United States Supreme Court's holding that a private corporation is entitled to immunity from the federal antitrust laws for its activities relating to the enactment by a municipality of certain billboard ordinances, the United States Supreme Court--upon reversing a Federal Court of Appeals decision which had reinstated a jury's general verdict that the corporation had violated 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 2) and a state unfair trade practices statute--will remand the case for further proceedings, so that the Court of Appeals can determine (1) whether there should be a new trial with respect to only the private anticompetitive actions--such as trade libel, the setting of artificially low rates, and inducement to breach of contract--allegedly engaged in by the corporation; and (2) the effect of the Supreme Court's holding on the claim against the corporation under the state unfair trade practices statute, where the Court of Appeals had ruled that (a) the corporation had conspired to restrain competition in violation of federal antitrust law, and (b) such conspiracy was "tantamount" to a violation of the state statute.

APPEAL §1585 > NEW TRIAL §7 > reversal -- error in instructions and verdict -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

On appellate review, a jury's general verdict against a private corporation and in favor of its competitor, based on instructions that erroneously permitted the assessment of liability against the corporation, under the federal antitrust laws, for seeking the enactment by a municipality of certain billboard ordinances, cannot be permitted to stand; however, the competitor will be entitled to a new trial if (1) the evidence was sufficient to sustain a verdict solely on the basis of the corporation's private anticompetitive actions--such as trade libel, the setting of artificially low rates, and inducement to breach of contract--and (2) the theory of liability as to such other actions has been properly preserved.

Syllabus

---

After respondent Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., entered the billboard market in petitioner Columbia, South Carolina, petitioner Columbia Outdoor Advertising, Inc. (COA), which controlled more than 95% of the market and enjoyed close relations with city officials, lobbied these officials to enact zoning ordinances restricting billboard construction. After such ordinances were passed, Omni filed suit against petitioners under §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and the State's Unfair Trade Practices Act, alleging, inter alia, that the ordinances were the result of an anticompetitive conspiracy that stripped petitioners of any immunity to which they might otherwise be entitled. After Omni obtained a jury verdict on all counts, the District [****2] Court granted petitioners' motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the ground that their activities were outside the scope of the federal antitrust laws. The Court of Appeals reversed and reinstated the verdict.

Held:

1. The city's restriction of billboard construction is immune from federal antitrust liability under Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 352 -- which held that principles of federalism and state sovereignty render the Sherman Act inapplicable to anticompetitive restraints imposed by the States "as an act of government" -- and subsequent decisions according Parker immunity to municipal restriction of competition in implementation of state policy, see, e. g., *Hallie v. Eau Claire*, 471 U.S. 34, 38. Pp. 370-379.

(a) The Court of Appeals correctly concluded that the city was prima facie entitled to Parker immunity for its billboard restrictions. Although Parker immunity does not apply directly to municipalities or other political subdivisions of the States, it does apply where a municipality's restriction of competition is an authorized implementation of state policy. South Carolina's zoning statutes [****3] unquestionably authorized the city to regulate the size, location, and spacing of billboards. The additional Parker requirement that the city possess clear delegated authority to suppress competition, see, e. g., *Hallie, supra, at 40-42*, is also met here, since suppression of competition is at the very least a foreseeable result of zoning regulations. Pp. 370-373.

(b) The Court of Appeals erred, however, in applying a "conspiracy" exception to Parker, which is not supported by the language of that case. Such an exception would swallow up the Parker rule if "conspiracy" means nothing more than agreement to impose the regulation in question, since it is both inevitable and desirable that public officials agree to do what one or another group of private citizens urges upon them. It would be similarly impractical to limit "conspiracy" to instances of governmental "corruption," or governmental acts "not in the public interest"; virtually all anticompetitive regulation is open to such charges and the risk of unfavorable ex post facto judicial assessment would impair the States' ability to regulate their domestic commerce. Nor is it appropriate to limit [****4] "conspiracy" to instances in which bribery or some other violation of state or federal law has been established, since the exception would then be unrelated to the purposes of the Sherman Act, which condemns trade restraints, not political activity. With the possible exception of the situation in which the State is acting as a market participant, any action that qualifies as state action is ipso facto exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws. Pp. 374-379.

2. COA is immune from liability for its activities relating to enactment of the ordinances under *Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc.*, 365 U.S. 127, 141, which states a corollary to Parker. The federal antitrust laws do not regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from the government. The Court of Appeals erred in applying the "sham" exception to the Noerr doctrine. This exception encompasses situations in which persons use the governmental process itself -- as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetitive weapon. That is not the situation here. *California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited*, 404 U.S. 508, 512, [****5] distinguished. Omni's suggestion that this Court adopt a "conspiracy" exception to Noerr immunity is rejected for largely the same reasons that prompt the Court to reject such an exception to Parker. Pp. 379-384.

3. The Court of Appeals on remand must determine (if the theory has been properly preserved) whether the evidence was sufficient to sustain a verdict for Omni based solely on its assertions that COA engaged in private anticompetitive actions, and whether COA can be held liable to Omni on its state-law claim. P. 384.

Counsel: Joel I. Klein argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Paul M. Smith, Roy D. Bates, James S. Meggs, David W. Robinson II, and Heyward E. McDonald.

A. Camden Lewis argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief was Randall M. Chastain. *

[****6]

---

* Charles Rothfeld, Benna Ruth Solomon, and Peter J. Kalis filed a brief for the National League of Cities et al. as amici curiae urging reversal.

Steven C. McCracken, Maurice Baskin, and John R. Crews filed a brief for Associated Builders and Contractors, Inc., as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

Eric M. Rubin and Walter E. Diercks filed a brief for the Outdoor Advertising Association of America, Inc., as amicus curiae.

Judges: Scalia, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which Rehnquist, C.J., and Blackmun, O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., joined. Stevens, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which White and Marshall, JJ., joined, post, p. 385.

Opinion by: SCALIA

Opinion

---

[*367] [*389] [**1347] [LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] This case requires us to clarify the application of the Sherman Act to municipal governments and to the citizens who seek action from them.

[***390] I

Petitioner Columbia Outdoor Advertising, Inc. (COA), a South Carolina corporation, entered the billboard business in the city of Columbia, South Carolina (also a petitioner here), in the 1940's. By 1981 it controlled more than 95% of what has been conceded to be the relevant market. COA was a local business owned by a family with deep roots in the community, and enjoyed close relations with the city's political leaders. The [***7] mayor and other members of the city council were personal friends of COA's majority owner, and the company and its officers occasionally contributed funds and free billboard space to their campaigns. According to respondent Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., these beneficences were part of a "longstanding" "secret anticompetitive agreement" whereby "the City and COA would each use their [sic] respective power and resources to protect . . . COA's monopoly position," in return for which "City Council members received advantages made possible by COA's monopoly." Brief for Respondent 12, 16.

[*368] In 1981, Omni, a Georgia corporation, began erecting billboards in and around the city. COA responded to this competition in several ways. First, it redoubled its own billboard construction efforts and modernized its existing stock. Second -- according to Omni -- it took a number of anticompetitive private actions, such as offering artificially low rates, spreading untrue and malicious rumors about Omni, and attempting to induce Omni's customers to break their contracts. Finally (and this is what gives rise to the issue we address today), COA executives met with city officials [***8] to seek the enactment of zoning ordinances that would restrict billboard construction. COA was not alone in urging this course; concerned about the city's recent explosion of billboards, a number of citizens, including writers of articles [**1348] and editorials in local newspapers, advocated restrictions.

In the spring of 1982, the city council passed an ordinance requiring the council's approval for every billboard constructed in downtown Columbia. This was later amended to impose a 180-day moratorium on the construction of billboards throughout the city, except as specifically authorized by the council. A state court invalidated this ordinance on the ground that its conferral of unconstrained discretion upon the city council violated both the South Carolina and Federal Constitutions. The city then requested the State's regional planning authority to conduct a comprehensive analysis of the local billboard situation as a basis for developing a final, constitutionally valid, ordinance. In September 1982, after a series of public hearings and numerous meetings involving city officials, Omni, and COA (in all of which, according to Omni, positions contrary to COA's were not [***9] genuinely considered), the city council passed a new ordinance restricting the size, location, and spacing of billboards. These restrictions, particularly those on spacing, obviously benefited COA, which already had its billboards in place; they severely hindered Omni's ability to compete.

[*369] In November 1982, Omni filed suit against COA and the city in Federal District Court, charging that they had violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, [***391] 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2,<sup>1</sup> as well as

---

<sup>1</sup> Section 1 provides in pertinent part: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U. S. C. § 1.

South Carolina's Unfair Trade Practices Act, S. C. Code Ann. § 39-5-140 (1976). Omni contended, in particular, that the city's billboard ordinances were the result of an anticompetitive conspiracy between city officials and COA that stripped both parties of any immunity they might otherwise enjoy from the federal antitrust laws. In January 1986, after more than two weeks of trial, a jury returned general verdicts against the city and COA on both the federal and state claims. It awarded damages, before trebling, of $ 600,000 on the § 1 Sherman Act claim, and $ 400,000 on the § 2 claim.<sup>2</sup> The jury also answered two special interrogatories, finding [****10] specifically that the city and COA had conspired both to restrain trade and to monopolize the market. Petitioners moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, contending among other [*370] things that their activities were outside the scope of the federal antitrust laws. In November 1988, the District Court granted the motion.

[****11] A divided panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit reversed the judgment of the District Court and reinstated the jury verdict on all counts. 891 F. 2d 1127 \(1989\). We granted certiorari, 496 U.S. 935 \(1990\).

II

In the landmark case of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 \(1943\), we rejected the contention that a program restricting the marketing of privately produced raisins, adopted pursuant to California's Agricultural Prorate Act, violated [**1349] the Sherman Act. Relying on principles of federalism and state sovereignty, we held that HN1 [↑] the Sherman Act did not apply to anticompetitive restraints imposed by the States "as an act of government." 317 U.S., at 352.

Since Parker emphasized the role of sovereign States in a federal system, it was initially unclear whether the governmental actions of political subdivisions enjoyed similar protection. In recent years, we have held that HN2 [↑] Parker immunity [****12] does not apply directly to local governments, see Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 38 /\*\*\*3921 \(1985\); Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 50-51 \(1982\); Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 412-413 \(1978\) (plurality opinion). We have recognized, however, that a municipality's restriction of competition may sometimes be an authorized implementation of state policy, and have accorded Parker immunity where that is the case.

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B][LEdHN\[5\]](#) [↑] [5]The South Carolina statutes under which the city acted in the present case authorize municipalities to regulate the use of land and the construction of buildings and other structures within their boundaries.<sup>3</sup> It is undisputed that, as a matter [*371] of state law, these statutes authorize the city to regulate the Section 2 provides in pertinent part: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony." 15 U. S. C. § 2.

<sup>2</sup>The monetary damages in this case were assessed entirely against COA, the District Court having ruled that the city was immunized by the Local Government Antitrust Act of 1984, 98 Stat. 2750, as amended, 15 U. S. C. §§ 34-36, which exempts local governments from paying damages for violations of the federal antitrust laws. Although enacted in 1984, after the events at issue in this case, the Act specifically provides that it may be applied retroactively if "the defendant establishes and the court determines, in light of all the circumstances . . . that it would be inequitable not to apply this subsection to a pending case." 15 U. S. C. § 35\(b\). The District Court determined that it would be, and the Court of Appeals refused to disturb that judgment. Respondent has not challenged that determination in this Court, and we express no view on the matter.

<sup>3</sup>S. C. Code Ann. § 5-23-10 (1976) ("Building and zoning regulations authorized") provides that "for the purpose of promoting health, safety, morals or the general welfare of the community, the legislative body of cities and incorporated towns may by ordinance regulate and restrict the height, number of stories and size of buildings and other structures."

Section 5-23-20 ("Division of municipality into districts") provides that "for any or all of such purposes the local legislative body may divide the municipality into districts of such number, shape and area as may be deemed best suited to carry out the purposes of this article. Within such districts it may regulate and restrict the erection, construction, reconstruction, alteration, repair or use of buildings, structures or land."

size, location, and spacing of billboards. It could be argued, however, that a municipality acts beyond its delegated authority, for Parker purposes, whenever the nature of [****13] its regulation is substantively or even procedurally defective. On such an analysis it could be contended, for example, that the city's regulation in the present case was not "authorized" by S. C. Code Ann. § 5-23-10 (1976), see n. 3, supra, if it was not, as that statute requires, adopted "for the purpose of promoting health, safety, morals or the general welfare of the community." As scholarly commentary has noted, such an expansive interpretation of the Parker-defense authorization requirement would have unacceptable consequences.

[****14]

"To be sure, state law 'authorizes' only agency decisions that are substantively and procedurally correct. Errors of fact, law, or judgment by the agency are not 'authorized.' Erroneous acts or decisions are subject to [*372] reversal by superior tribunals because unauthorized. If the antitrust court demands unqualified 'authority' in this sense, it inevitably becomes the standard reviewer not only of federal agency activity but also of state and local activity whenever it is alleged that the governmental body, though possessing the power to engage in the challenged conduct, has actually exercised its [****393] power in a manner not authorized by state law. We should not [**1350] lightly assume that Lafayette's authorization requirement dictates transformation of state administrative review into a federal antitrust job. Yet that would be the consequence of making antitrust liability depend on an undiscriminating and mechanical demand for 'authority' in the full administrative law sense." P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 212.3b, p. 145 (Supp. 1989).

We agree with that assessment, and believe that [****15] HN3 in order to prevent Parker from undermining the very interests of federalism it is designed to protect, it is necessary to adopt a concept of authority broader than what is applied to determine the legality of the municipality's action under state law. We have adopted an approach that is similar in principle, though not necessarily in precise application, elsewhere. See Stump v. Sparkman, 435 U.S. 349 \(1978\). It suffices for the present to conclude that here no more is needed to establish, for Parker purposes, the city's authority to regulate than its unquestioned zoning power over the size, location, and spacing of billboards.

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C][LEdHN\[6A\]](#) [6A]Besides authority to regulate, however, HN4 the Parker defense also requires authority to suppress competition -- more specifically, "clear articulation of a state policy to authorize anticompetitive conduct" by the municipality in [****16] connection with its regulation. Hallie, 471 U.S., at 40 (internal quotation omitted). We have rejected the contention that this requirement can be met only if the delegating statute explicitly permits the displacement of competition, see id., at 41-42. [*373] It is enough, we have held, if suppression of competition is the "foreseeable result" of what the statute authorizes, id., at 42. That condition is amply met here. The very purpose of zoning regulation is to displace unfettered business freedom in a manner that regularly has the effect of preventing normal acts of competition, particularly on the part of new entrants. HN5 A municipal ordinance restricting the size, location, and spacing of billboards (surely a common form of zoning) necessarily protects existing billboards against some competition from newcomers.<sup>4</sup>

Section 6-7-710 ("Grant of power for zoning") provides that "for the purposes of guiding development in accordance with existing and future needs and in order to protect, promote and improve the public health, safety, morals, convenience, order, appearance, prosperity, and general welfare, the governing authorities of municipalities and counties may, in accordance with the conditions and procedures specified in this chapter, regulate the location, height, bulk, number of stories and size of buildings and other structures. . . . The regulations shall . . . be designed to lessen congestion in the streets; to secure safety from fire, panic, and other dangers, to promote the public health and the general welfare, to provide adequate light and air; to prevent the overcrowding of land; to avoid undue concentration of population; to protect scenic areas; to facilitate the adequate provision of transportation, water, sewage, schools, parks, and other public requirements."

<sup>4</sup>The dissent contends that, in order successfully to delegate its Parker immunity to a municipality, a State must expressly authorize the municipality to engage (1) in specifically "economic regulation," post, at 388, (2) of a specific industry, post, at 391. These dual specificities are without support in our precedents, for the good reason that they defy rational implementation.

[****17] [*374] [***394] The Court of Appeals was therefore correct in its conclusion that the city's restriction of billboard construction was prima facie entitled to Parker immunity. The [***1351] Court of Appeals upheld the jury verdict, however, by invoking a "conspiracy" exception to Parker that has been recognized by several Courts of Appeals. See, e. g., Whitworth v. Perkins, 559 F. 2d 378 (CA5 1977), vacated, 435 U.S. 992, aff'd on rehearing, 576 F. 2d 696 (1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 911 (1979). That exception is thought to be supported by two of our statements in Parker: "We have no question of the state or its municipality becoming a participant in a private agreement or combination by others for restraint of trade, cf. Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 313 U.S. 450." Parker, 317 U.S., at 351-352 (emphasis added). "The state in adopting and enforcing the prorate program made no contract or agreement and entered into no conspiracy in restraint of trade or to establish monopoly but, as sovereign, imposed the restraint as an act of government [****18] which the Sherman Act did not undertake to prohibit." Id., at 352 (emphasis added). Parker does not apply, according to the Fourth Circuit, "where politicians or political entities are involved as conspirators" with private actors in the restraint of trade. 891 F. 2d, at 1134.

LEdHN[2B] [↑] [2B] There is no such conspiracy exception. HN6 [↑] The rationale of Parker was that, in light of our national commitment to federalism, the general language of the Sherman Act should not be interpreted to prohibit anticompetitive actions by the States in their governmental capacities as sovereign regulators. The sentences from the opinion quoted above simply clarify that this immunity does not necessarily obtain where the State acts not in a regulatory capacity but as a commercial [*375] participant in a given market. That is evident from the citation of Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 313 U.S. 450 (1941), which held unlawful under the Elkins Act certain rebates and concessions [****19] made by Kansas City, Kansas, in its capacity as the owner and operator of a wholesale produce market that was integrated with railroad facilities. These sentences should not be read to suggest the general proposition that even governmental regulatory action may be deemed private -- and therefore subject to antitrust liability -- when it is taken pursuant to a conspiracy with private parties. The impracticality of such a principle is evident if, for purposes of the exception, "conspiracy" [**395] means nothing more than an agreement to impose the regulation in question. Since it is both inevitable and desirable that public officials often agree to do what one or another group of private citizens urges upon them, such an exception would virtually swallow up the Parker rule: All anticompetitive regulation would be vulnerable to a "conspiracy" charge. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 203.3b, at 34, and n. 1; Elhauge, The Scope of Antitrust Process, 104 Harv. L. Rev. 667, 704-705 (1991).<sup>5</sup>

If, by authority to engage in specifically "economic" regulation, the dissent means authority specifically to regulate competition, we squarely rejected that in Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34 (1985), as discussed in text. Seemingly, however, the dissent means only that the State authorization must specify that sort of regulation whereunder "decisions about prices and output are made not by individual firms, but rather by a public body." Post, at 387. But why is not the restriction of billboards in a city a restriction on the "output" of the local billboard industry? It assuredly is -- and that is indeed the very gravamen of Omni's complaint. It seems to us that the dissent's concession that "it is often difficult to differentiate economic regulation from municipal regulation of health, safety, and welfare," post, at 393, is a gross understatement. Loose talk about a "regulated industry" may suffice for what the dissent calls "antitrust parlance," post, at 387, but it is not a definition upon which the criminal liability of public officials ought to depend.

LEdHN[6B] [↑] [6B]

Under the dissent's second requirement for a valid delegation of Parker immunity -- that the authorization to regulate pertain to a specific industry -- the problem with the South Carolina statute is that it used the generic term "structures," instead of conferring its regulatory authority industry-by-industry (presumably "billboards," "movie houses," "mobile homes," "TV antennas," and every other conceivable object of zoning regulation that can be the subject of a relevant "market" for purposes of antitrust analysis). To describe this is to refute it. Our precedents not only fail to suggest, but positively reject, such an approach. "The municipality need not 'be able to point to a specific, detailed legislative authorization' in order to assert a successful Parker defense to an antitrust suit." Hallie, 471 U.S., at 39 (quoting Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 415 (1978)).

<sup>5</sup> The dissent is confident that a jury composed of citizens of the vicinage will be able to tell the difference between "independent municipal action and action taken for the sole purpose of carrying out an anticompetitive agreement for the private party." Post, at 395-396. No doubt. But those are merely the polar extremes, which like the geographic poles will rarely be seen by jurors of [****20] [*376] [**1352] Omni suggests, however, that "conspiracy" might be limited to instances of governmental "corruption," defined variously as "abandonment of public responsibilities to private interests," Brief for Respondent 42, "corrupt or bad faith decisions," id., at 44, and "selfish or corrupt motives," ibid. Ultimately, Omni asks us not to define "corruption" at all, but simply to leave that task to the jury: "at bottom, however, it was within the jury's province to determine what constituted corruption of the governmental process in their community." Id., at 43. Omni's amicus eschews this emphasis on "corruption," instead urging us to define the conspiracy exception as encompassing any governmental act "not in the public interest." Brief for Associated Builders and Contractors, Inc., as Amicus Curiae 5.

[*377] [LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[81\]](#) [8] A conspiracy exception narrowed [***396] along such vague lines is similarly impractical. Few governmental actions are immune from the charge that they are "not in the public [****21] interest" or in some sense "corrupt." The California marketing scheme at issue in Parker itself, for example, can readily be viewed as the result of a "conspiracy" to put the "private" interest of the State's raisin growers above the "public" interest of the State's consumers. The fact is that virtually all regulation benefits some segments of the society and harms others; and that it is not universally considered contrary to the public good if the net economic loss to the losers exceeds the net economic gain to the winners. Parker was not written in ignorance of the reality that determination of "the public interest" in the manifold areas of government regulation entails not merely economic and mathematical analysis but value judgment, and it was not meant to shift that judgment from elected officials to judges and juries. If the city of Columbia's decision to regulate what one local newspaper called "billboard jungles," Columbia Record, May 21, 1982, p. 14-A, col. 1; App. in No. 88-1388 (CA4), p. 3743, is made subject to ex post facto judicial assessment of "the public interest," with personal liability of city officials a possible consequence, we will have gone far [****22] to "compromise the States' ability to regulate their domestic commerce," Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 56 \(1985\). The situation would not be better, but arguably even worse, if the courts were to apply a subjective test: not whether the action was in the public interest, but whether the officials involved thought it to be so. This would require the sort of deconstruction of the governmental process and probing of the official "intent" that we have consistently sought to avoid.<sup>6</sup> HN7 "Where the action complained [*378] of . . . was that of the State itself, the action is exempt from the vicinage. Ordinarily the allegation will merely be (and the dissent says this is enough) that the municipal action was not prompted "exclusively by a concern for the general public interest," post, at 387 (emphasis added). Thus, the real question is whether a jury can tell the difference -- whether Solomon can tell the difference -- between municipal-action-not-entirely-independent-because-based-partly-on-agreement-with-private-parties that is lawful and municipal-action-not-entirely-independent-because-based-partly-on-agreement-with-private-parties that is unlawful. The dissent does not tell us how to put this question coherently, much less how to answer it intelligently. "Independent municipal action" is unobjectionable, "action taken for the sole purpose of carrying out an anticompetitive agreement for the private party" is unlawful, and everything else (that is, the known world between the two poles) is un-addressed.

The dissent contends, moreover, that "the instructions in this case, fairly read, told the jury that the plaintiff should not prevail unless the ordinance was enacted for the sole purpose of interfering with access to the market." Post, at 396, n. 9 (emphasis added). That is not so. The sum and substance of the jury's instructions here was that anticompetitive municipal action is not lawful when taken as part of a conspiracy, and that a conspiracy is "an agreement between two or more persons to violate the law, or to accomplish an otherwise lawful result in an unlawful manner." App. 79. Although the District Court explained that "it is perfectly lawful for any and all persons to petition their government," the court immediately added, "but they may not do so as a part or as the object of a conspiracy." Ibid. These instructions, then, are entirely circular: An anticompetitive agreement becomes unlawful if it is part of a conspiracy, and a conspiracy is an agreement to do something unlawful. The District Court's observation, upon which the dissent places so much weight, that "if by the evidence you find that [COA] procured and brought about the passage of ordinances solely for the purpose of hindering, delaying or otherwise interfering with the access of [Omni] to the marketing area involved in this case . . . and thereby conspired, then, of course, their conduct would not be excused under the antitrust laws," id., at 81, see post, at 387, n. 2, is in no way tantamount to an instruction that this was the only theory upon which the jury could find an immunity-destroying "conspiracy."

<sup>6</sup> [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

antitrust liability regardless of the State's motives in taking the action." Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 579-580 [**1353] (1984). See also Llewellyn v. Crothers, 765 F. 2d 769, 774 \(CA9 1985\) (Kennedy, J.).

[****23] [LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9] [LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10] The foregoing approach to establishing a "conspiracy" exception at least seeks (however impractically) to draw the line of impermissible action in a manner relevant to the purposes of the Sherman Act and of Parker: prohibiting the restriction of competition for private gain but permitting the restriction of competition in the public interest. Another approach is possible, which has the virtue of practicality but the vice of being unrelated to those purposes. That is HN8 [8] the approach which would consider Parker inapplicable only if, in connection with the governmental action in question, bribery or some other violation of state or federal law has been established. Such unlawful activity has no necessary relationship to whether the governmental action is in the public interest. A mayor is guilty of accepting a bribe even if he would and [***397] should have taken, in the public interest, the same action for which the bribe was [***24] paid. (That is frequently the defense asserted to a criminal bribery charge -- and though it is never valid in law, see, e. g., United States v. Jannotti, 673 F. 2d 578, 601 (CA3) (en banc), cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1106 (1982), it is often plausible in fact.) HN9 [9] When, moreover, the regulatory body is not a single individual but a state legislature or city council, there is even less reason to believe that violation of the law (by bribing a minority of the decisionmakers) establishes that the regulation has no valid public purpose. Cf. Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch 87, 130 \(1810\). To use unlawful political influence as the test of legality of state regulation undoubtedly vindicates (in a rather blunt way) principles of good government. But the statute we are construing is not directed to that end. Congress has passed other laws aimed [*379] at combating corruption in state and local governments. See, e. g., 18 U. S. C. § 1951 (Hobbs Act). "Insofar as [the Sherman Act] sets up a code of ethics at all, [****25] it is a code that condemns trade restraints, not political activity." Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 140 \(1961\).

[LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C] For these reasons, HN10 [10] we reaffirm our rejection of any interpretation of the Sherman Act that would allow plaintiffs to look behind the actions of state sovereigns to base their claims on "perceived conspiracies to restrain trade," Hoover, 466 U.S., at 580. We reiterate that, with the possible market participant exception, any action that qualifies as state action is "ipso facto . . . exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws," id. at 568. This does not mean, of course, that the States may exempt private action from the scope of the Sherman Act; we in no way qualify the well-established principle that "a state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action is lawful." Parker, 317 U.S., at 351 [****26] (citing Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 332, 344-347 \(1904\)). See also Schwegmann Brothers v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384 \(1951\).

III

[LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B] [3B] [LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [11A] [11A] While Parker recognized the States' freedom to engage in anticompetitive regulation, it did not purport to immunize from antitrust liability the private parties who urge them to engage in anticompetitive regulation. However, it is obviously peculiar in a democracy, and perhaps in derogation of the constitutional right "to petition the Government for a redress of grievances," U.S. Const., Amdt. 1, to establish a category of lawful state action that citizens are not permitted to urge. Thus, beginning with Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., supra, we have developed [**1354] a corollary to Parker: HN11 [11] The federal antitrust laws also do not regulate the conduct [****27] of private individuals in seeking [*380] anticompetitive action from the government. This doctrine, like Parker, rests ultimately upon a recognition that the antitrust laws, "tailored as they are" [***398] for the business world, are not at all appropriate for application in the political arena." Noerr, supra, at 141. That a private party's political motives are selfish is irrelevant: "Noerr shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose." Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670 \(1965\).

---

We have proceeded otherwise only in the "very limited and well-defined class of cases where the very nature of the constitutional question requires [this] inquiry." United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 383, n. 30 \(1968\) (bill of attainder). See also Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Development Corp., 429 U.S. 252, 268, n. 18 \(1977\) (race-based motivation).

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [12] Noerr recognized, however, what has come to be known as the "sham" exception to its rule: "There may be situations in which a publicity campaign, ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, is a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor and the application of the Sherman Act would be justified." 365 U.S., at 144. The Court of Appeals concluded that the jury in this [****28] case could have found that COA's activities on behalf of the restrictive billboard ordinances fell within this exception. In our view that was error.

HN12 [12] The "sham" exception to Noerr encompasses situations in which persons use the governmental process - - as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetitive weapon. A classic example is the filing of frivolous objections to the license application of a competitor, with no expectation of achieving denial of the license but simply in order to impose expense and delay. See California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508 \(1972\). A "sham" situation involves a defendant whose activities are "not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action" at all, Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 496, 500, n. 4 \(1988\), not one "who 'genuinely seeks to achieve his governmental result, but does so through improper means,'" id. at 508, n. 10 (quoting Sessions Tank Liners, Inc. v. Joor Mfg., Inc., 827 F. 2d 458, 465, n. 5 \(CA9 1987\)). [****29]

[*381] [LEdHN\[3C\]](#) [12] [3C] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [11B] Neither of the Court of Appeals' theories for application of the "sham" exception to the facts of the present case is sound. The court reasoned, first, that the jury could have concluded that COA's interaction with city officials "was actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relations [sic] of a competitor." 891 F. 2d, at 1139 (quoting Noerr, supra, at 144). This analysis relies upon language from Noerr, but ignores the import of the critical word "directly." Although COA indisputably set out to disrupt Omni's business relationships, it sought to do so not through the very process of lobbying, or of causing the city council to consider zoning measures, but rather through the ultimate product of that lobbying and consideration, viz., the zoning ordinances. The Court of Appeals' second theory was that the jury could have found "that COA's purposes were to delay Omni's entry into the market and even to deny it a meaningful access to the appropriate [****30] city administrative and legislative fora." 891 F. 2d, at 1139. But the purpose of delaying a competitor's entry into the market does not render lobbying activity a "sham," unless (as no evidence suggested was true here) the delay is sought to be [***399] achieved only by the lobbying process itself, and not by the governmental action that the lobbying seeks. HN13 [13] "If Noerr teaches anything it is that an intent to restrain trade as a result of the government action sought . . . does not foreclose protection." Sullivan, Developments in the Noerr Doctrine, 56 Antitrust L. J. 361, 362 (1987). As for "denying . . . meaningful access to the appropriate city administrative and legislative fora," that may render the manner of lobbying improper or even unlawful, [**1355] but does not necessarily render it a "sham." We did hold in California Motor Transport, supra, that a conspiracy among private parties to monopolize trade by excluding a competitor from participation in the regulatory process did not enjoy Noerr protection. But California [****31] Motor Transport involved a context in which the conspirators' participation in the governmental process was itself claimed to be a [*382] "sham," employed as a means of imposing cost and delay. ("It is alleged that petitioners 'instituted the proceedings and actions . . . with or without probable cause, and regardless of the merits of the cases.'" 404 U.S., at 512.) The holding of the case is limited to that situation. To extend it to a context in which the regulatory process is being invoked genuinely, and not in a "sham" fashion, would produce precisely that conversion of antitrust law into regulation of the political process that we have sought to avoid. Any lobbyist or applicant, in addition to getting himself heard, seeks by procedural and other means to get his opponent ignored. Policing the legitimate boundaries of such defensive strategies, when they are conducted in the context of a genuine attempt to influence governmental action, is not the role of the Sherman Act. In the present case, of course, any denial to Omni of "meaningful access to the appropriate city administrative and legislative fora" was achieved by COA in the course of an attempt to [****32] influence governmental action that, far from being a "sham," was if anything more in earnest than it should have been. If the denial was wrongful there may be other remedies, but as for the Sherman Act, the Noerr exemption applies.

Omni urges that if, as we have concluded, the "sham" exception is inapplicable, we should use this case to recognize another exception to Noerr immunity -- a "conspiracy" exception, which would apply when government officials conspire with a private party to employ government action as a means of stifling competition. We have left open the possibility of such an exception, see, e. g., Allied Tube, supra, at 502, n. 7, as have a number of Courts of Appeals. See, e. g., Oberndorf v. Denver, 900 F. 2d 1434, 1440 (CA10 1990); First American Title Co. of South Dakota v. South Dakota Land Title Assn., 714 F. 2d 1439, 1446, n. 6 (CA8 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1042 (1984). At least one Court of Appeals has affirmed the existence of such an exception in dicta, see Duke & Co. v. Foerster, 521 F. 2d 1277, 1282 (CA3 1975), and [*383] the Fifth [****33] Circuit has adopted it as holding, see Affiliated Capital Corp. v. Houston, 735 F. 2d 1555, 1566-1568 (1984) (en banc).

LEdHN[4B] [↑] [4B] Giving full consideration to this matter for the first time, we conclude that HN14 [↑] a "conspiracy" exception to Noerr must be rejected. We [***400] need not describe our reasons at length, since they are largely the same as those set forth in Part II above for rejecting a "conspiracy" exception to Parker. As we have described, Parker and Noerr are complementary expressions of the principle that the antitrust laws regulate business, not politics; the former decision protects the States' acts of governing, and the latter the citizens' participation in government. Insofar as the identification of an immunity-destroying "conspiracy" is concerned, Parker and Noerr generally present two faces of the same coin. The Noerr-invalidating conspiracy alleged here is just the Parker-invalidating conspiracy viewed from the standpoint of the private-sector [****34] participants rather than the governmental participants. The same factors which, as we have described above, make it impracticable or beyond the purpose of the antitrust laws to identify and invalidate lawmaking that has been infected by selfishly motivated agreement with private interests likewise make it impracticable or beyond that scope to identify and invalidate lobbying that has produced selfishly motivated agreement with public officials. "It would be unlikely that any effort to influence legislative action could succeed unless one or more members [**1356] of the legislative body became . . . 'co-conspirators'" in some sense with the private party urging such action, Metro Cable Co. v. CATV of Rockford, Inc., 516 F. 2d 220, 230 (CA7 1975). And if the invalidating "conspiracy" is limited to one that involves some element of unlawfulness (beyond mere anticompetitive motivation), the invalidation would have nothing to do with the policies of the antitrust laws. In Noerr itself, where the private party "deliberately deceived the public and public officials" in its successful lobbying campaign, we said that [*384] "deception, reprehensible [****35] as it is, can be of no consequence so far as the Sherman Act is concerned." 365 U.S., at 145.

IV

LEdHN[13A] [↑] [13A] LEdHN[14] [↑] [14] Under Parker and Noerr, therefore, both the city and COA are entitled to immunity from the federal antitrust laws for their activities relating to enactment of the ordinances. This determination does not entirely resolve the dispute before us, since other activities are at issue in the case with respect to COA. Omni asserts that COA engaged in private anticompetitive actions such as trade libel, the setting of artificially low rates, and inducement to breach of contract. Thus, although the jury's general verdict against COA cannot be permitted to stand (since it was based on instructions that erroneously permitted liability for seeking the ordinances, see Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Citrus Products Co., 370 U.S. 19, 29-30 (1962)), if the evidence was sufficient to sustain [****36] a verdict on the basis of these other actions alone, and if this theory of liability has been properly preserved, Omni would be entitled to a new trial.

LEdHN[13B] [↑] [13B] There also remains to be considered the effect of our judgment upon Omni's claim against COA under the South Carolina Unfair Trade Practices Act. The District Court granted judgment notwithstanding the verdict on this claim as well as the Sherman Act claims; the Court of Appeals reversed on the ground [***401] that "a finding of conspiracy to restrain competition is tantamount to a finding" that the South Carolina law had been violated, 891 F. 2d, at 1143. Given our reversal of the "conspiracy" holding, that reasoning is no longer applicable.

We leave these remaining questions for determination by the Court of Appeals on remand. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

---

[*385] Justice Stevens, with whom Justice White and Justice Marshall join, dissenting.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides [****37] in part: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U. S. C. § 1 (emphasis added). Although we have previously recognized that a completely literal interpretation of the word "every" cannot have been intended by Congress,<sup>1</sup> the Court today carries [*1357] this recognition to an extreme by deciding that agreements between municipalities, or their officials, and private parties to use the zoning power to confer exclusive privileges in a particular line of commerce are beyond the reach of § 1. History, tradition, and the facts of this case all demonstrate that the Court's attempt to create a "better" and less inclusive Sherman Act, cf. West Virginia University Hospitals, Inc. v. Casey, 499 U.S. 83, 101 (1991), is ill advised.

[****38] I

As a preface to a consideration of the "state action" and so-called "Noerr-Pennington" exemptions to the Sherman Act, it is appropriate to remind the Court that one of the classic common-law examples of a prohibited contract in restraint of trade involved an agreement between a public official and a private party. The public official -- the Queen of England -- had granted one of her [***402] subjects a monopoly in the making, importation, and sale of playing cards in order to generate revenues for the crown. A competitor challenged the grant in The Case of Monopolies, 11 Co. Rep. 84, 77 Eng. Rep. 1260 (Q. B. 1602), and prevailed. Chief Justice Popham explained on behalf of the bench:

"The Queen was . . . deceived in her grant; for the Queen . . . intended it to be for the weal public, and it will be employed for the private gain of the patentee, and for the prejudice of the weal public; moreover the Queen meant that the abuse should be taken away, which shall never be by this patent, but potius the abuse will be increased for the private benefit of the patentee, and therefore . . . this grant is void jure Regio." Id., at 87a; [****39] 77 Eng. Rep., at 1264.

---

<sup>1</sup> Construing the statute in the light of the common law concerning contracts in restraint of trade, we have concluded that only unreasonable restraints are prohibited.

"One problem presented by the language of § 1 of the Sherman Act is that it cannot mean what it says. The statute says that 'every' contract that restrains trade is unlawful. But, as Mr. Justice Brandeis perceptively noted, restraint is the very essence of every contract; read literally, § 1 would outlaw the entire body of private contract law. Yet it is that body of law that establishes the enforceability of commercial agreements and enables competitive markets -- indeed, a competitive economy -- to function effectively.

"Congress, however, did not intend the text of the Sherman Act to delineate the full meaning of the statute or its application in concrete situations. The legislative history makes it perfectly clear that it expected the courts to give shape to the statute's broad mandate by drawing on common-law tradition. The Rule of Reason, with its origins in common-law precedents long antedating the Sherman Act, has served that purpose. . . . [The Rule of Reason] focuses directly on the challenged restraint's impact on competitive conditions." National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 687-688 (1978) (footnotes omitted).

We have also confined the Sherman Act's mandate by holding that the independent actions of the sovereign States and their officials are not covered by the language of the Act. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943).

In the case before us today, respondent alleges that the city of Columbia, South Carolina, has entered into a comparable agreement to give respondent a monopoly in the sale of billboard advertising. After a 3-week trial, a jury composed of citizens of the vicinage found that, despite the city fathers' denials, there was indeed such an agreement, presumably motivated in part by past favors in the form of political advertising, in part by friendship, and in part by the expectation of a beneficial future relationship -- and in any case, not [*387] exclusively by a concern for the general public interest.<sup>2</sup> Today the Court acknowledges the anticompetitive consequences of this and similar agreements but decides that they should be exempted from the coverage of the Sherman Act because it fears that enunciating a rule that allows the motivations of public officials to be probed may mean that innocent municipal officials may be harassed with baseless charges. The holding evidences an unfortunate lack of confidence in our judicial system and will foster [**1358] the evils the Sherman Act was designed to eradicate.

[****40] II

There is a distinction between economic regulation, on the one hand, and regulation designed to protect the public health, safety, and environment. In antitrust parlance a "regulated industry" is one in which decisions about prices and output are made not by individual firms, but rather by a public body or a collective process subject to governmental approval. Economic regulation of the motor carrier and airline industries was imposed by the Federal Government in the 1930's; the "deregulation" of those industries did not eliminate all the other types of regulation that continue to protect our safety and environmental concerns.

[*388] [***403] The antitrust laws reflect a basic national policy favoring free markets over regulated markets.<sup>3</sup> In essence, the Sherman Act prohibits private unsupervised regulation of the prices and output of goods in the marketplace. That prohibition is inapplicable to specific industries which Congress has exempted from the antitrust laws and subjected to regulatory supervision over price and output decisions. Moreover, the so-called "state-action" exemption from the Sherman Act reflects the Court's understanding that Congress did [****41] not intend the statute to pre-empt a State's economic regulation of commerce within its own borders.

The contours of the state-action exemption are [****42] relatively well defined in our cases. Ever since our decision in Olsen v. Smith, 195 U.S. 332 (1904), which upheld a Texas statute fixing the rates charged by pilots operating in the Port of Galveston, it has been clear that a State's decision to displace competition with economic regulation is not prohibited by the Sherman Act. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943), the case most frequently identified with the state-action exemption, involved a decision by California to substitute sales quotas and price control -- the purest form of economic regulation -- for competition in the market for California raisins.

<sup>2</sup> The jury returned its verdict pursuant to the following instructions given by the District Court:

"So if by the evidence you find that that person involved in this case procured and brought about the passage of ordinances solely for the purpose of hindering, delaying or otherwise interfering with the access of the Plaintiff to the marketing area involved in this case . . . and thereby conspired, then, of course, their conduct would not be excused under the antitrust laws."

"So once again an entity may engage in . . . legitimate lobbying . . . to procure legislation even if the motive behind the lobbying is anticompetitive."

"If you find Defendants conspired together with the intent to foreclose the Plaintiff from meaningful access to a legitimate decision making process with regard to the ordinances in question, then your verdict would be for the Plaintiff on that issue." App. 81.

<sup>3</sup> "The Sherman Act reflects a legislative judgment that ultimately competition will produce not only lower prices, but also better goods and services. 'The heart of our national economic policy long has been faith in the value of competition.' Standard Oil Co. v. FTC, 340 U.S. 231, 248 [(1951)]. The assumption that competition is the best method of allocating resources in a free market recognizes that all elements of a bargain -- quality, service, safety, and durability -- and not just the immediate cost, are favorably affected by the free opportunity to select among alternative offers. Even assuming occasional exceptions to the presumed consequences of competition, the statutory policy precludes inquiry into the question whether competition is good or bad." National Society of Professional Engineers, 435 U.S., at 695.

499 U.S. 365, *388; 111 S. Ct. 1344, **1358; 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, ***403; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 1858, ****42

In Olsen, the State itself had made the relevant pricing decision. In Parker, the regulation of the marketing of California's [*389] 1940 crop of raisins was administered by state officials. Thus, when a state agency, or the State itself, engages in economic regulation, the Sherman Act is inapplicable. *Hoover v. Ronwin*, 466 U.S. 558, 568-569 \(1984\); *Bates v. State Bar of Arizona*, 433 U.S. 350, 360 \(1977\).

Underlying the Court's recognition of this state-action exemption [****43] has been respect for the fundamental principle of federalism. As we stated in *Parker*, 317 U.S., at 351: "In a dual system of government in which, under the Constitution, the states are sovereign, save only as Congress may constitutionally subtract from their authority, an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress."

However, this Court recognized long ago that the deference due States within our federal system does not extend fully to conduct undertaken by municipalities. Rather, all sovereign authority "within the geographical [**1359] limits of the United States" resides with "the Government of the United States, or [with] [***404] the States of the Union. There exist within the broad domain of sovereignty but these two. There may be cities, counties, and other organized bodies with limited legislative functions, but they are all derived from, or exist in, subordination to one or the other of these." *United States v. Kagama*, 118 U.S. 375, 379 \(1886\).

Unlike States, municipalities do not constitute bedrocks within our system of federalism. And also [****44] unlike States, municipalities are more apt to promote their narrow parochial interests "without regard to extraterritorial impact and regional efficiency." *Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co.*, 435 U.S. 389, 404 \(1978\); see also The Federalist No. 10 (J. Madison) (describing the greater tendency of smaller societies to promote oppressive and narrow interests above the common good). "If municipalities were free to make economic choices counseled solely by their own parochial interests [*390] and without regard to their anticompetitive effects, a serious chink in the armor of antitrust protection would be introduced at odds with the comprehensive national policy Congress established." *Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co.*, 435 U.S. at 408. Indeed, "in light of the serious economic dislocation which could result if cities were free to place their own parochial interests above the Nation's economic goals reflected in the antitrust laws, . . . we are especially unwilling to presume that Congress intended to exclude anticompetitive municipal action from their reach." *Id.*, at 412-413.<sup>4</sup>

[****45] Nevertheless, insofar as municipalities may serve to implement state policies, we have held that economic regulation administered by a municipality may also be exempt from Sherman Act coverage if it is enacted pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state directive "to replace competition with regulation." *Hoover*, 466 U.S., at 569. However, the mere fact that a municipality acts within its delegated authority is not sufficient to exclude its anticompetitive behavior from the reach of the Sherman Act. [*391] "Acceptance of such a proposition -- that the general grant of power to enact ordinances necessarily implies state authorization to enact specific [***405] anticompetitive ordinances -- would wholly eviscerate the concepts of 'clear articulation and affirmative expression' that our precedents require." *Community Communications Co. v. Boulder*, 455 U.S. 40, 56 \(1982\).

Accordingly, we have held that the critical decision to substitute economic regulation for competition is one that must be made by the State. That decision must be articulated with sufficient clarity to identify the industry in which

<sup>4</sup> In *Owen v. City of Independence*, 445 U.S. 622 \(1980\), this Court recognized that "notwithstanding [42 U. S. C.] § 1983's expansive language and the absence of any express incorporation of common-law immunities, we have, on several occasions, found that a tradition of immunity was so firmly rooted in the common law and was supported by such strong policy reasons that 'Congress would have specifically so provided had it wished to abolish the doctrine.' *Pierson v. Ray*, 386 U.S. 547, 555 \(1967\)."
*Id.*, at 637. Nevertheless, the Court refused to find a firmly established immunity enjoyed by municipal corporations at common law for the torts of their agents. "Where the immunity claimed by the defendant was well established at common law at the time [42 U. S. C.] § 1983 was enacted, and where its rationale was compatible with the purposes of the Civil Rights Act, we have construed the statute to incorporate that immunity. But there is no tradition of immunity for municipal corporations, and neither history nor policy supports a construction of § 1983 that would justify" according them such immunity. *Id.*, at 638. See also *Will v. Michigan Dept. of State Police*, 491 U.S. 58, 70 \(1989\) ("States are protected by the *Eleventh Amendment* while municipalities are not . . .").

the State [****46] intends that economic regulation shall replace competition. The terse statement of the reason why the municipality's actions in Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34 (**1360) (1985), was exempt from the Sherman Act illustrates the point: "They were taken pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy to replace competition in the provision of sewage services with regulation." Id., at 47.<sup>5</sup>

[****47] [*392] III

Today the Court adopts a significant enlargement of the state-action exemption. The South Carolina statutes that confer zoning authority on municipalities in the State do not articulate any state policy to displace competition with economic regulation in any line of commerce or in any specific industry. As the Court notes, the state statutes were expressly adopted to promote the "health, safety, morals or the general welfare of the community," see ante, at 370, n. 3. Like Colorado's grant of "home rule" powers to the city of Boulder, they are simply neutral [***406] on the question whether the municipality should displace competition with economic regulation in any industry. There is not even an arguable basis for concluding that the State authorized the city of Columbia to enter into exclusive agreements with any person, or to use the zoning power to protect favored citizens from competition.<sup>6</sup> Nevertheless, under the guise of acting [*393] pursuant to a state legislative grant to regulate health, safety, and welfare, the city of Columbia in this case enacted an ordinance that amounted to economic regulation of the billboard market; as the Court [****48] recognizes, the ordinance "obviously benefited COA, which already had its billboards in place . . . [and] severely hindered Omni's ability to compete." Ante, at 368.

Concededly, it is often difficult to differentiate economic regulation from municipal regulation of health, safety, and welfare. "Social [**1361] and safety regulation have economic impacts, and economic regulation has social and safety effects. [****49]" D. Hjelmfelt, Antitrust and Regulated Industries 3 (1985). It is nevertheless important to determine when purported general welfare regulation in fact constitutes economic regulation by its purpose and <sup>5</sup> Contrary to the Court's reading of Hallie, our opinion in that case emphasized the industry-specific character of the Wisconsin legislation in explaining why the delegation satisfied the 'clear articulation' requirement. At issue in Hallie was the town's independent decision to refuse to provide sewage treatment services to nearby towns -- a decision that had been expressly authorized by the Wisconsin legislation. 471 U.S., at 41. We wrote:

"Applying the analysis of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389 (1978), it is sufficient that the statutes authorized the City to provide sewage services and also to determine the areas to be served." Id., at 42.

"Nor do we agree with the Towns' contention that the statutes at issue here are neutral on state policy. The Towns attempt to liken the Wisconsin statutes to the Home Rule Amendment involved in Boulder, arguing that the Wisconsin statutes are neutral because they leave the City free to pursue either anticompetitive conduct or free-market competition in the field of sewage services. The analogy to the Home Rule Amendment involved in Boulder is inapposite. That Amendment to the Colorado Constitution allocated only the most general authority to municipalities to govern local affairs. We held that it was neutral and did not satisfy the 'clear articulation' component of the state action test. The Amendment simply did not address the regulation of cable television. Under home rule the municipality was to be free to decide every aspect of policy relating to cable television, as well as policy relating to any other field of regulation of local concern. Here, in contrast, the State has specifically authorized Wisconsin cities to provide sewage services and has delegated to the cities the express authority to take action that foreseeably will result in anticompetitive effects. No reasonable argument can be made that these statutes are neutral in the same way that Colorado's Home Rule Amendment was." Id., at 43.

We rejected the argument that the delegation was insufficient because it did not expressly mention the foreseeable anticompetitive consequences of the city of Eau Claire's conduct, but we surely did not hold that the mere fact that incidental anticompetitive consequences are foreseeable is sufficient to immunize otherwise unauthorized restrictive agreements between cities and private parties.

<sup>6</sup> The authority to regulate the "location, height, bulk, number of stories and size of buildings and other structures," see ante, at 371, n. 3 (citation omitted), may of course have an indirect effect on the total output in the billboard industry, see ante, at 373-374, n. 4, as well as on a number of other industries, but the Court surely misreads our cases when it implies that a general grant of zoning power represents a clearly articulated decision to authorize municipalities to enter into agreements to displace competition in every industry that is affected by zoning regulation.

effect of displacing competition. "An example of economic regulation which is disguised by another stated purpose is the limitation of advertising by lawyers for the stated purpose of protecting the public from incompetent lawyers. Also, economic regulation posing as safety regulation is often encountered in the health care industry." Id., at 3-4.

In this case, the jury found that the city's ordinance -- ostensibly one promoting health, safety, and welfare -- was in fact enacted pursuant to an agreement between city officials and a private party to restrict competition. In my opinion such a finding necessarily leads to the conclusion that the city's ordinance was fundamentally a form of economic regulation of the billboard market rather than a general welfare regulation having incidental anticompetitive effects. Because I believe our cases have wisely held that the decision to embark upon economic regulation is a nondelegable one that must expressly be made by the State [****50] in the context of a specific industry in order to qualify for state-action immunity, see, e. g., Olsen v. Smith, 195 U.S. 332 (1904) (Texas pilotage [*394] statutes expressly regulated both entry and rates in the Port of Galveston); Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943) (California statute expressly authorized the raisin market regulatory program), I would hold that the city of Columbia's economic regulation of the billboard market pursuant to a general state grant of zoning power is not exempt from antitrust scrutiny.<sup>7</sup>

[****51] [***407] Underlying the Court's reluctance to find the city of Columbia's enactment of the billboard ordinance pursuant to a private agreement to constitute unauthorized economic regulation is the Court's fear that subjecting the motivations and effects of municipal action to antitrust scrutiny will result in public decisions being "made subject to ex post facto judicial assessment of 'the public interest.'" Ante, at 377. That fear, in turn, rests on the assumption that "it is both inevitable and desirable that public officials often agree to do what one or another group of private citizens urges upon them." Ante, at 375.

The Court's assumption that an agreement between private parties and public officials is an "inevitable" precondition for official action, however, is simply wrong.<sup>8</sup> Indeed, I am [*395] persuaded that such agreements are the exception rather than the rule, and that they are, and should be, disfavored. The mere fact that an official body adopts a position that is advocated by a private lobbyist is plainly not sufficient to establish an agreement [*1362] to do so. See Fisher v. Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 266-267 (1986); [****52] cf. Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 541 (1954). Nevertheless, in many circumstances, it would seem reasonable to infer -- as the jury did in this case -- that the official action is the product of an agreement intended to elevate particular private interests over the general good.

In this [****53] case, the city took two separate actions that protected the local monopolist from threatened competition. It first declared a moratorium on any new billboard construction, despite the city attorney's advice that the city had no power to do so. When the moratorium was invalidated in state-court litigation, it was replaced with an apparently valid ordinance that clearly had the effect of creating formidable barriers to entry in the billboard market. Throughout the city's decisionmaking process in enacting the various ordinances, undisputed evidence demonstrated that Columbia Outdoor Advertising, Inc., had met with city officials privately as well as publicly. As the Court of Appeals noted: "Implicit in the jury verdict was a finding that the city was not acting pursuant to the direction or purposes [***408] of the South Carolina statutes but conspired solely to further COA's commercial purposes to the detriment of competition in the billboard industry." 891 F. 2d 1127, 1133 \(CA4 1989\).

<sup>7</sup> A number of Courts of Appeals have held that a municipality which exercises its zoning power to further a private agreement to restrain trade is not entitled to state-action immunity. See, e. g., Westborough Mall, Inc. v. Cape Girardeau, 693 F. 2d 733, 746 (CA8 1982) ("Even if zoning in general can be characterized as 'state action,' . . . a conspiracy to thwart normal zoning procedures and to directly injure the plaintiffs by illegally depriving them of their property is not in furtherance of any clearly articulated state policy"); Whitworth v. Perkins, 559 F. 2d 378, 379 (CA5 1977) ("The mere presence of the zoning ordinance does not necessarily insulate the defendants from antitrust liability where, as here, the plaintiff asserts that the enactment of the ordinance was itself a part of the alleged conspiracy to restrain trade").

<sup>8</sup> No such agreement was involved in Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34 (1985). In that case the plaintiffs challenged independent action -- the determination of the service area of the city's sewage system -- that had been expressly authorized by Wisconsin legislation. The absence of any such agreement provided the basis for our decision in Fisher v. Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 266-267 (1986) ("The distinction between unilateral and concerted action is critical here. . . . Thus, if the Berkeley Ordinance stabilizes rents without this element of concerted action, the program it establishes cannot run afoul of § 1").

Judges who are closer to the trial process than we are do not share the Court's fear that juries are not capable of recognizing the difference between independent municipal action [****54] and action taken for the sole purpose of carrying out an [*396] anticompetitive agreement for the private party.<sup>9</sup> [****55] See, e. g., In re Japanese Electronic Products Antitrust Litigation, 631 F. 2d 1069, 1079 \(CA3 1980\) ("The law presumes that a jury will find facts and reach a verdict by rational means. It does not contemplate scientific precision but does contemplate a resolution of each issue on the basis of a fair and reasonable assessment of the evidence and a fair and reasonable application of the relevant legal rules"). Indeed, the problems inherent in determining whether the actions of municipal officials are the product of an illegal agreement are substantially the same as those arising in cases in which the actions of business executives are subjected to antitrust scrutiny.<sup>10</sup>

[*397] The difficulty of proving whether an agreement motivated a course of conduct should not in itself intimidate this Court into exempting those illegal agreements that are [**1363] proved by convincing evidence. Rather, the Court [****56] should, if it must, attempt to deal with these problems of proof as it has in the past -- through heightened evidentiary standards rather than through judicial expansion of exemptions from the Sherman Act. See, e. g., Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574 \(1986\) (allowing summary judgment where a predatory pricing conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act was founded largely upon circumstantial evidence); [Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 768 \[\*\*\*409\] \(1984\)](#) (holding that a plaintiff in a vertical price-fixing case must produce evidence which "tends to exclude the possibility of independent action").

Unfortunately, the Court's decision today converts what should be nothing more than an anticompetitive agreement undertaken by a municipality that enjoys no special status in our federalist system into a lawful exercise of public decisionmaking. Although the Court correctly applies principles of federalism in refusing to find a "conspiracy exception" to the Parker state-action doctrine when a State acts in a nonproprietary capacity, it errs in extending the state-action exemption [****57] to municipalities that enter into private anticompetitive agreements under the guise of acting pursuant to a general state grant of authority to regulate health, safety, and welfare. Unlike the previous limitations this Court has imposed on Congress' sweeping mandate in § 1, which found support in our common-law traditions or our system of federalism, see n. 1, supra, the Court's wholesale exemption of municipal action from antitrust scrutiny amounts to little more than a bold and disturbing act of judicial legislation [*398] which dramatically curtails the statutory prohibition against "every" contract in restraint of trade.<sup>11</sup>

<sup>9</sup>The instructions in this case, fairly read, told the jury that the plaintiff should not prevail unless the ordinance was enacted for the sole purpose of interfering with access to the market. See n. 2, supra. Thus, this case is an example of one of the "polar extremes," see ante, at 375, n. 5, that juries -- as well as Solomon -- can readily identify. The mixed motive cases that concern the Court should present no problem if juries are given instructions comparable to those given below. When the Court describes my position as assuming that municipal action that was not prompted "exclusively by a concern for the general public interest" is enough to create antitrust liability, ibid., it simply ignores the requirement that the plaintiff must prove that the municipal action is the product of an anticompetitive agreement with private parties. Contrary to our square holding in Fisher v. Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260 \(1986\), today the Court seems to assume that municipal action which is not entirely immune from antitrust scrutiny will automatically violate the antitrust laws.

<sup>10</sup>"There are many obstacles to discovering conspiracies, but the most frequent difficulties are three. First, price-fixers and similar miscreants seldom admit their conspiracy or agree in the open. Often, we can infer the agreement only from their behavior. Second, behavior can sometimes be coordinated without any communication or other observable and reprehensible behavior. Third, the causal connection between an observable, controllable act -- such as a solicitation or meeting -- and subsequent parallel action may be obscure." 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1400, at 3-4 (1986).

See also Turner, The Definition of Agreement under the Sherman Act: Conscious Parallelism and Refusals to Deal, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 655 (1962)(discussing difficulties of condemning parallel anticompetitive action absent explicit agreement among the parties).

<sup>11</sup>As the Court previously has noted:

[****58] IV

Just as I am convinced that municipal "lawmaking that has been infected by selfishly motivated agreement with private interests," ante, at 383, is not authorized by a grant of zoning authority, and therefore not within the state-action exemption, so am I persuaded that a private party's agreement with selfishly motivated public officials is sufficient to remove the antitrust immunity that protects private lobbying under Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127 (1961), and Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657 (1965). Although I agree that the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington rule exempting lobbying activities from the antitrust laws does not apply to the private petitioner's conduct in this case for the reasons stated by the Court in Part III of its opinion, I am satisfied that the evidence in the record is sufficient to support the jury's finding that a conspiracy existed between the private party and the municipal officials in this case so as to remove the private petitioner's conduct from the scope [***410] of Noerr-Pennington antitrust immunity. Accordingly, I would [****59] affirm [*399] the judgment of the Court of Appeals as to both the city of [**1364] Columbia and Columbia Outdoor Advertising, Inc.

I respectfully dissent.

References

---

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 15, 18

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:161.5

12B Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:180

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1 et seq.

L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 9, 10

L Ed Index, Conspiracy; Municipal Corporations and Other Political Subdivisions; Noerr-Pennington Doctrine; Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices; Sherman Act

Index to Annotations, Conspiracy; Municipal Corporations; Noerr-Pennington Doctrine; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; State Action

Annotation References :

Right of petition and assembly under Federal Constitution's First Amendment--Supreme Court cases. 86 L Ed 2d 758.

What constitutes "state action" [****60] under rule exempting state and local governmental action from antitrust laws--federal cases. 70 L Ed 2d 973.

---

"In 1972, there were 62,437 different units of local government in this country. Of this number 23,885 were special districts which had a defined goal or goals for the provision of one or several services, while the remaining 38,552 represented the number of counties, municipalities, and townships, most of which have broad authority for general governance subject to limitations in one way or another imposed by the State. These units may, and do, participate in and affect the economic life of this Nation in a great number and variety of ways. When these bodies act as owners and providers of services, they are fully capable of aggrandizing other economic units with which they interrelate, with the potential of serious distortion of the rational and efficient allocation of resources, and the efficiency of free markets which the regime of competition embodied in the antitrust laws is thought to engender." Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 407-408 (1978) (footnotes omitted).

499 U.S. 365, *399; 111 S. Ct. 1344, **1364; 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, ***410; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 1858, ****60

"Sham" exception to application of Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, exempting from federal antitrust laws joint efforts to influence governmental action. 71 ALR Fed 723.

Application of doctrine exempting from federal antitrust laws joint efforts to influence legislative or executive action. 17 ALR Fed 645.

Valid governmental action as conferring immunity or exemption from private liability under the federal antitrust laws. 12 ALR Fed 329.

---

End of Document

Summit Health v. Pinhas

Supreme Court of the United States

November 26, 1990, Argued ; May 28, 1991, Decided

No. 89-1679

Reporter

500 U.S. 322 *; 111 S. Ct. 1842 **; 114 L. Ed. 2d 366 ***; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 2917 ****; 59 U.S.L.W. 4493; 1991-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,443; 91 Cal. Daily Op. Service 3844; 91 Daily Journal DAR 6166

SUMMIT HEALTH, LTD., et al., PETITIONERS v. SIMON J. PINHAS

Prior History: [****1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 894 F. 2d 1024, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

interstate commerce, conspiracy, Sherman Act, surgeon, eye surgery, commerce, boycott, peer review process, ophthalmological, out-of-state, price-fixing, antitrust, conspired, alleges, prices, nexus, alleged conspiracy, medical staff, present case, defendants', proceedings, termination, privileges, infected, patients, restrain, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN1** [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (as amended).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

**HN2** [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

When Congress passed the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, it left no area of its constitutional power over commerce unoccupied. Congress meant to deal comprehensively and effectively with the evils resulting from contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade, and to that end to exercise all the power it possessed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN3** [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Because the essence of any violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is an illegal agreement itself -- rather than the overt acts performed in furtherance of it -- proper analysis focuses, not upon actual consequences, but rather upon the potential harm that would ensue if the conspiracy were successful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN4** [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In a civil action under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, liability may be established by proof of either an unlawful purpose or an anti-competitive effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN5** [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The federal power to protect the free market may be exercised to punish conduct which threatens to impair competition even when no actual harm results.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN6** [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The competitive significance of respondent's exclusion from a market must be measured, not just by a particularized evaluation of his own practice, but rather, by a general evaluation of the impact of the restraint on other participants and potential participants in the market from which he has been excluded.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

**HN7** [] Antitrust Actions, Facilities

The Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 42 U.S.C.S. § 11101, provides for immunity from antitrust, and other, actions if the peer review process proceeds in accordance with 42 U.S.C.S. § 11112. According to the House sponsor of the bill, the immunity provisions were restricted so as not to protect illegitimate actions taken under the guise of furthering the quality of health care. Actions that are really taken for anticompetitive purposes will not be protected under this bill.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Interstate commerce requirement for jurisdiction under 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) held satisfied by allegation of conspiracy to exclude surgeon from local ophthalmological services market.

Summary

An ophthalmologist who was a member of the staff of a Los Angeles hospital filed a complaint in a Federal District Court, alleging that the hospital, the hospital's corporate owner, the hospital's medical staff, and others had violated 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1)--which prohibits conspiracies in restraint of interstate commerce--by conspiring to exclude the ophthalmologist, who was a licensed surgeon, from the market for ophthalmological services in Los Angeles because he refused to follow an unnecessarily costly procedure that was required with respect to eye surgery performed at the hospital. The ophthalmologist's complaint alleged that (1) his medical staff privileges had been summarily suspended, and subsequently terminated, as a result of peer-review proceedings that were conducted in an unfair manner by biased decisionmakers, and (2) when the ophthalmologist's action was commenced, preparations were being made for distribution--to all hospitals of which he was a member or to which he might apply--of an adverse report that would preclude him from continued competition in California, if not the United States, thus effectuating a boycott of the ophthalmologist. The District Court dismissed the complaint without leave to amend, but the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reinstated the ophthalmologist's 1 claim (894 F2d 1024). The Court of Appeals (1) rejected the argument that the Act's jurisdictional requirements had not been satisfied because there was no allegation that interstate commerce would be affected by the ophthalmologist's removal from the hospital's medical staff, and (2) held that as a matter of practical economics, the hospital's peer-review process affected interstate commerce, because the peer-review proceedings affected the entire hospital staff and thus affected the hospital's interstate commerce.

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Stevens, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and White, Marshall, and Blackmun, JJ., it was held that the interstate commerce requirement for jurisdiction under 1 was satisfied by the allegations contained in the ophthalmologist's complaint, because (1) the hospital's owner was engaged in interstate commerce; (2) the hospital was engaged in interstate commerce; (3) ophthalmological services at the hospital were regularly performed for out-of-state patients, generated revenues from out-of-state sources, and were important as part of the entire operation of the hospital; (4) the ophthalmologist did not have to allege, or prove, an actual effect on interstate commerce, since (a) proper analysis focused upon the potential harm from a successful conspiracy, and (b) liability could be established by proof of either an unlawful purpose or an anticompetitive effect; (5) the alleged conspiracy, if successful, would reduce the provision of ophthalmological services in the local market; (6) the competitive significance of the ophthalmologist's exclusion from the market had to be measured by its impact on the ophthalmologist and on other participants and potential participants in the market; (7) the alleged restraint was accomplished by an alleged misuse of a congressionally regulated peer-review process which the ophthalmologist characterized as the gateway that controlled access to the market for the ophthalmologist's services, which gateway was closed to the ophthalmologist, both at the hospital and at other hospitals, and (8) Congress had the power to regulate a peer-review process that controlled access to the local market for ophthalmological surgery.

Scalia, J., joined by O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., dissented, expressing the view that (1) the question before the court was not whether Congress could reach the activity in question, but whether it had done so via the Sherman Act, (2) because a restraint of trade must be gauged according to its effect on competition, not competitors, this question had to be answered by determining whether, in its practical economic consequences, the boycott (a) substantially affected interstate commerce by restricting competition, or (b) interrupted the flow of interstate commerce, (3) the uncontested facts precluded any inference that the conspiracy had or could have had an effect on competition in the Los Angeles market, and (4) the ophthalmologist's complaint did not suggest that the conspiracy could have even the most trivial effect on interstate commerce.

Headnotes

---

COMMERCE §81 > PLEADING §176 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES

§15 > interstate commerce -- conspiracy -- intent of parties -- interference -- hospital's peer-review proceedings -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]

The interstate commerce requirement for jurisdiction under 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), which prohibits conspiracies in restraint of interstate commerce, is satisfied by an ophthalmologist's allegation that a hospital, the hospital's corporate owner, the hospital's medical staff, and others have violated 1 by conspiring to exclude the ophthalmologist, who is a licensed surgeon, from the market for ophthalmological services in the city in which the hospital is located because he refuses to follow an unnecessarily costly procedure that is required with respect to eye surgery performed at the hospital--where the ophthalmologist's complaint alleges that the ophthalmologist's medical staff privileges at the hospital have been summarily suspended, and subsequently terminated, as a result of peer-review proceedings that were conducted in an unfair manner by biased decisionmakers--because (1) the hospital's owner, which owns several general hospitals, is engaged in interstate commerce; (2) the hospital also is engaged in interstate commerce, including purchasing out-of-state medicines and supplies and obtaining revenues from out-of-state insurance companies; (3) ophthalmological services at the hospital are regularly performed for out-of-state patients, generate revenues from out-of-state sources, and are important as part of the entire operation of the hospital; (4) the ophthalmologist need not allege, or prove, an actual effect on interstate commerce to support federal jurisdiction, since (a) given that the essence of any violation of 1 is the illegal agreement itself, proper analysis focuses upon the potential harm that would ensue if the conspiracy were successful, and (b) in a civil action under the Act, liability may be established by proof of either an unlawful purpose or an anticompetitive effect; (5) if the alleged conspiracy is successful, as a matter of practical economics there will be a reduction in the provision of ophthalmological services in the local market; (6) the competitive significance of the ophthalmologist's exclusion from the market must be measured, not just by a particularized evaluation of the ophthalmologist's practice, but rather, by a general evaluation of the impact of the restraint on other participants and potential participants in the market from which the ophthalmologist is excluded; (7) the alleged restraint is accomplished by an alleged misuse of a congressionally regulated peer-review process which the ophthalmologist characterizes as the gateway that controls access to the market for the ophthalmologist's services, which gateway is closed to the ophthalmologist, both at the hospital in question and at other hospitals, by the hospital's adherence to the unnecessarily costly procedure, and (8) Congress has the power to regulate a peer-review process that controls access to the local market for ophthalmological surgery. (Scalia, O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

APPEAL §1293 > presumptions -- allegations in complaint -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court must assume the truth of the material facts as alleged in a complaint, where a case comes before the court from the granting of a motion to dismiss on the pleadings.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §6 > Sherman Act -- purpose -- construction --> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B]

Congress, when it passed the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), left no area of Congress' constitutional power over commerce unoccupied; in passing the Act, Congress meant to deal comprehensively and effectively with the evils resulting from contracts, combinations, and conspiracies in restraint of trade, and to that end to exercise all the power that Congress possessed.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §22 > interstate commerce -- extent of interference -- indirect interference -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The interstate commerce requirement for jurisdiction under 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), which prohibits conspiracies in restraint of interstate commerce, may be satisfied by a conspiracy to prevent a general hospital which engages in interstate commerce from expanding, even though any actual impact on interstate commerce would be indirect and fortuitous, because (1) no specific purpose to restrain interstate commerce is required for coverage under the Act, and (2) the effect of such a conspiracy on the hospital's purchases of out-of-state medicines and supplies as well as its revenues from out-of-state insurance companies would establish the necessary interstate nexus.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §22 > interstate commerce -- extent of interference -- general hospital -- ophthalmological department -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

For purposes of the interstate commerce requirement for jurisdiction under 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1)--which prohibits conspiracies in restraint of interstate commerce--although a conspiracy to eliminate the entire ophthalmological department of a general hospital which engages in interstate commerce does not involve the full range of activities conducted at the hospital, such a conspiracy, like a conspiracy to destroy the hospital itself, would affect interstate commerce, where it seems clear that ophthalmological services at the hospital are regularly performed for out-of-state patients, generate revenues from out-of-state sources, and are important as part of the entire operation of the hospital.

Syllabus

---

Respondent Pinhas, an ophthalmologist on the staff of petitioner Midway Hospital Medical Center, filed a suit in the District Court, asserting a violation, inter alia, of § 1 of the Sherman Act by Midway and other petitioners, including several doctors. The amended complaint alleged, among other things, that petitioners conspired to exclude Pinhas from the Los Angeles ophthalmological services market when he refused to follow an unnecessarily costly surgical procedure used at Midway; that petitioners initiated peer review proceedings against him which did not conform to congressional requirements and which resulted in the termination of his Midway staff privileges; that at the time he filed suit, petitioners were [****2] preparing to distribute an adverse report about him based on the peer review proceedings; that the provision of ophthalmological services affects interstate commerce because both physicians and hospitals serve nonresident patients and receive reimbursement from Medicare; and that reports from peer review proceedings are routinely distributed across state lines and affect doctors' employment opportunities throughout the Nation. The District Court dismissed the amended complaint, but the Court of Appeals reversed, rejecting petitioners' argument that the Act's jurisdictional requirements were not met because there was no allegation that interstate commerce would be affected by Pinhas' removal from Midway's staff. Rather, the court found that Midway's peer review proceedings obviously affected the hospital's interstate commerce because they affected its entire staff, and that Pinhas need not make a particularized showing of the effect on interstate commerce caused by the alleged conspiracy.

Held: Pinhas' allegations satisfy the Act's jurisdictional requirements. To be successful, Pinhas need not allege an actual effect on interstate commerce. Because the essence of any § 1 [****3] violation is the illegal agreement itself, the proper analysis focuses upon the potential harm that would ensue if the conspiracy were successful, not upon actual consequences. And if the conspiracy alleged in the complaint is successful, as a matter of practical economics there will be a reduction in the provision of ophthalmological services in the Los Angeles market. Thus, petitioners erroneously contend that a boycott of a single surgeon, unlike a conspiracy to destroy a hospital department or a hospital, has no effect on interstate commerce because there remains an adequate supply of others to perform services for his patients. This case involves an alleged restraint on the practice of ophthalmological services accomplished by an alleged misuse of a congressionally regulated peer review process, which has been characterized as the gateway controlling access to the market for Pinhas' services. When the competitive significance of respondent's exclusion from the market is measured, not by a particularized evaluation of his practice, but by a general evaluation of the restraint's impact on other participants and potential participants in that market, the restraint is covered by [****4] the Act. Pp. 328-333.

Counsel: J. Mark Waxman argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs was Tami S. Smason.

Lawrence Silver argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Maxwell M. Blecher and Alicia G. Rosenberg.

Deputy Solicitor General Wallace argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging affirmance. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Starr, Assistant Attorney General Rill, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Boudin, Lawrence S. Robbins, Robert B. Nicholson, Marion L. Jetton, and James M. Spears.*

[****5]

---

* A brief of amici curiae urging affirmance was filed for the State of California et al. by John K. Van de Kamp, Attorney General of California, Andrea S. Ordin, Chief Assistant Attorney General, Sanford N. Gruskin, Assistant Attorney General, Kathleen E. Foote, Deputy Attorney General, Douglas B. Baily, Attorney General of Alaska, Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona, Alison J. Butterfield, John Steven Clark, Attorney General of Arkansas, Jeffrey A. Bell, Deputy Attorney General, Duane Woodard, Attorney General of Colorado, Richard Forman, Solicitor General, Clarine Nardi Riddle, Attorney General of Connecticut, Robert M. Langer, Assistant Attorney General, Robert A. Butterworth, Attorney General of Florida, Warren Price III, Attorney General of Hawaii, Robert A. Marks and Ted Gamble Clause, Deputy Attorneys General, Jim Jones, Attorney General of Idaho, Catherine K. Broad, Deputy Attorney General, Neil F. Hartigan, Attorney General of Illinois, Robert Ruiz, Solicitor General, Christine Rosso, Senior Assistant Attorney General, Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, John R. Perkins, Deputy Attorney General, James E. Tierney, Attorney General of Maine, Stephen L. Wessler, Deputy Attorney General, J. Joseph Curran, Jr., Attorney General of Maryland, James M. Shannon, Attorney General of Massachusetts, George K. Weber, Assistant Attorney General, Hubert H. Humphrey III, Attorney General of Minnesota, Stephen P. Kilgriff, Deputy Attorney General, Thomas F. Pursell, Assistant Attorney General, Anthony J. Celebrezze, Jr., Attorney General of Ohio, Doreen C. Johnson, Assistant Attorney General, Ernest D. Preate, Jr., Attorney General of Pennsylvania, Eugene F. Waye, Chief Deputy Attorney General, Carl S. Hisiro, Senior Deputy Attorney General, Jim Mattox, Attorney General of Texas, Mary F. Keller, First Assistant Attorney General, Lou McCreary, Executive Assistant Attorney General, Allene D. Evans, Assistant Attorney General, R. Paul Van Dam, Attorney General of Utah, Sander Mooy, Assistant Attorney General, Mary Sue Terry, Attorney General of Virginia, Kenneth O. Eikenberry, Attorney General of Washington, James M. Beaulaurier and Tina E. Kondo, Assistant Attorneys General, and Roger W. Tompkins, Attorney General of West Virginia.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed for the Arizona Hospital Association et al. by John P. Frank and Andrew S. Gordon; and for Richard A. Bolt by Clark C. Havighurst and Hal K. Litchford.

Judges: STEVENS, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and WHITE, MARSHALL, and BLACKMUN, JJ., joined. SCALIA, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which O'CONNOR, KENNEDY, and SOUTER, JJ., joined, post, p. 333.

Opinion by: STEVENS

Opinion

---

[*324] [***372] [**1844] JUSTICE STEVENS delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A]The question presented is whether the interstate commerce requirement of antitrust jurisdiction is satisfied by allegations that petitioners conspired to exclude respondent, a duly licensed and practicing physician and surgeon, from the market for ophthalmological services in Los Angeles because he refused to follow an unnecessarily costly surgical procedure.

In 1987, respondent Dr. Simon J. Pinhas filed a complaint in District Court alleging that petitioners Summit Health, Ltd. (Summit), Midway Hospital Medical Center (Midway), its medical staff, and others had entered into a conspiracy to drive him out of business "so that other ophthalmologists and eye physicians [including four of the petitioners] will have a greater share of the eye care and ophthalmic [****6] surgery in Los Angeles." App. 39. Among his allegations was a claim that the conspiracy violated § 1 of the Sherman Act.<sup>1</sup> [***7] The District Court granted defendants' (now petitioners') motion to dismiss the First Amended Complaint (complaint) without leave to amend, App. 315, but the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reinstated the antitrust claim. 894 F.2d 1024 \(1989\).<sup>2</sup> We granted certiorari, 496 U.S. 935 \(1990\), to consider petitioners' contention that the complaint fails to satisfy the jurisdictional requirements of the Sherman Act, as interpreted in McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. 232, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 \(1980\), because it does [**1845] not describe a factual nexus between the alleged boycott and interstate commerce.

|

LEdHN[2] [2]Because this case comes before us from the granting of a motion to dismiss on the pleadings, we must assume the truth of the material facts as alleged in the complaint. Respondent, a diplomate of the American Board of Ophthalmology, has earned a national and international reputation as a specialist in corneal eye problems. App. 7. Since October 1981, he has been a member of the staff of Midway in Los Angeles, and because of his special skills, has performed more eye surgical procedures, including cornea transplants and cataract removals, than any other surgeon at the hospital. Ibid.<sup>3</sup>

[***8] [*326] Prior to 1986, most eye surgeries [***373] in Los Angeles were performed by a primary surgeon with the assistance of a second surgeon. Id., at 8. This practice significantly increased the cost of eye surgery. In

---

<sup>1</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, provides in relevant part:

HN1 [1] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U. S. C. § 1.

<sup>2</sup> Although the complaint alleged five claims, only the "Fourth Claim for Relief," the antitrust claim, is before us now.

The complaint also named as a defendant the California Board of Medical Quality Assurance (BMQA). The BMQA, however, was dismissed by stipulation. See 894 F.2d at 1027, n.2.

<sup>3</sup> "One of the reasons for his success is the rapidity with which he, as distinguished from his competitors, can perform such surgeries. The speed with which such surgery can be completed benefits the patient because the exposure of cut eye tissue is drastically reduced. Some of Dr. Pinhas' competitors regularly require, on the average, six times the length of surgical time to complete the same procedures as Dr. Pinhas." App. 7.

February of that year, the administrators of the Medicare program announced that they would no longer reimburse physicians for the services of assistants, and most hospitals in southern California abolished the assistant surgeon requirement. Respondent, and certain other ophthalmologists, asked Midway to abandon the requirement, but the medical staff refused to do so. Ibid. Respondent explained that because Medicare reimbursement was no longer available, the requirement would cost him about $ 60,000 per year in payments to competing surgeons for assistance that he did not need. Id., at 9. Although respondent expressed a desire to maintain the preponderance of his practice at Midway, he nevertheless advised the hospital that he would leave if the assistant surgeon requirement were not eliminated. Ibid.

Petitioners responded to respondent's request to forgo an assistant in two ways. First, Midway and its corporate parent offered respondent a [****9] "sham" contract that provided for payments of $ 36,000 per year (later increased by oral offer to $ 60,000) for services that he would not be asked to perform. Ibid. Second, when respondent refused to sign or return the "sham" contract, petitioners initiated peer review proceedings against him and summarily suspended, and subsequently terminated, his medical staff privileges.<sup>4</sup> Id., at 10. The [*327] proceedings were conducted in an unfair manner by biased decisionmakers, and ultimately resulted in an order upholding one of seven charges against respondent, and imposing severe restrictions on his practice.<sup>5</sup> When this action was commenced, petitioners were preparing to distribute an adverse report<sup>6</sup> about respondent that would "preclude him from continued [**1846] competition in the market place, not only at defendant Midway Hospital [but also] . . . in California, if not the United States." Id., at 40. The defendants allegedly planned to disseminate the report "to all hospitals which Dr. Pinhas is a member [sic], and to all hospitals to which he may apply so as to secure similar actions by those hospitals, thus effectuating a boycott of Dr. Pinhas. [****10] " Ibid.

[****11] The complaint alleges that petitioner Summit owns and operates 19 hospitals, including Midway, and 49 other health care facilities in California, [***374] six other States, and Saudi Arabia. Id., at 3. Summit, Midway, and each of the four ophthalmic surgeons named as individual defendants, as well as respondent, are all allegedly engaged in interstate commerce. The provision of ophthalmological services affects interstate commerce because both physicians and hospitals serve nonresident patients and receive reimbursement through Medicare payments. Reports concerning peer review proceedings are routinely distributed across [*328] state lines and affect doctors' employment opportunities throughout the Nation.

In the Court of Appeals, petitioners defended the District Court's dismissal of the complaint on the ground that there was no allegation that interstate commerce would be affected by respondent's removal from the Midway medical staff. The Court of Appeals rejected this argument because "as a matter of practical economics" the hospital's "peer review process in general" obviously affected interstate commerce. 894 F.2d at 1032 (citation omitted). The [****12] court added:

"Pinhas need not, as appellees apparently believe, make the more particularized showing of the effect on interstate commerce caused by the alleged conspiracy to keep him from working. [McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. at 242-243]. He need only prove that peer-review proceedings have an effect on interstate commerce, a fact that can hardly be disputed. The proceedings affect the entire staff at Midway and

<sup>4</sup> Respondent was notified, by a letter dated April 13, 1987, that such actions were the result of a "Medical Staff review of [his] medical records, with consideration as to the questions raised regarding: indications for surgery; appropriateness of surgical procedures in light of patient's medical condition; adequacy of documentation in medical records; and ongoing pattern of identified problems." Id., at 93.

<sup>5</sup> After the Governing Board of Midway affirmed the decision of the peer review committee, but imposed even more stringent conditions on respondent than the committee had imposed, respondent filed a petition for writ of mandate, pursuant to Cal. Civ. Proc. Code Ann. § 1094.5 (West Supp. 1991). 894 F.2d 1024, 1027 \(CA9 1989\). On May 17, 1989, the Superior Court of California denied respondent's request for further relief. App. to Pet. for Cert. A30-A35.

<sup>6</sup> Petitioners had already distributed the report, a Business and Professions Code 805 Report, to Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles, which then denied respondent medical staff privileges there. App. to Brief for Respondent a-3. Cedars-Sinai, like Midway, had refused to abolish the assistant surgeon requirement. App. 8.

500 U.S. 322, *328; 111 S. Ct. 1842, **1846; 114 L. Ed. 2d 366, ***374; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 2917, ****12

thus affect the hospital's interstate commerce. Appellees' contention that Pinhas failed to allege a nexus with interstate commerce because the absence of Pinhas's services will not drastically affect the interstate commerce of Midway therefore misses the mark and must be rejected." Ibid.

II

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [↑] [3A]Congress enacted the Sherman Act in 1890.<sup>7</sup> During the past century, as the dimensions and complexity of our economy have grown, the federal power over commerce, and the concomitant coverage of the Sherman Act, have experienced [*329] similar expansion.<sup>8</sup> This history has been recounted before,<sup>9</sup> and we need not reiterate it today. [***13]<sup>10</sup>

[***14]

[***375] [**1847] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B][LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4]We therefore begin by noting certain propositions that are undisputed in this case. Petitioner Summit, the parent of Midway as well as of several other general hospitals, is unquestionably engaged in interstate commerce. Moreover, although Midway's primary activity is the provision of health care services in a local market, it also engages in interstate commerce. A conspiracy to prevent Midway from expanding would be covered by the Sherman Act, even though any actual impact on interstate commerce would be "indirect" and "fortuitous." Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 744, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976). No specific purpose to restrain interstate commerce is required. Id., at 745. As a "matter of practical economics," ibid., the effect of such a conspiracy on the hospital's "purchases of out-of-state medicines and supplies as well as its revenues from out-of-state insurance companies," id., at 744, [***15] would establish the necessary interstate nexus.

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [↑] [1C][LEdHN\[5\]](#) [↑] [5]This case does not involve the full range of activities conducted at a general hospital. Rather, this case involves the provision of ophthalmological services. It seems clear, however, that these services are regularly performed for out-of-state [*330] patients and generate revenues from out-of-state sources; their importance as part of the entire operation of the hospital is evident from the allegations of the complaint. A conspiracy to eliminate the entire ophthalmological department of the hospital, like a conspiracy to destroy the hospital itself, would unquestionably affect interstate commerce. Petitioners contend, however, that a boycott of a

<sup>7</sup> Act of July 2, 1890, ch. 647, § 1, 26 Stat. 209. The floor debates on the Sherman Act reveal, in Senator Sherman's words, an intent to "g[o] as far as the Constitution permits Congress to go . . ." 20 Cong. Rec. 1167 (1889). For views of the enacting Congress toward the Sherman Act, see 21 Cong. Rec. 2456 (1890); see also United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 555-560, 88 L. Ed. 1440, 64 S. Ct. 1162 (1944); Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 493, n.15, 84 L. Ed. 1311, 60 S. Ct. 982 (1940).

<sup>8</sup>The Court's decisions have long "permitted the reach of the Sherman Act to expand along with expanding notions of congressional power. See Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. [186,] 201-202 [(1974)]." Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 743, n.2, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976).

<sup>9</sup> See, e. g., Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 229-235, 92 L. Ed. 1328, 68 S. Ct. 996 (1948).

<sup>10</sup> [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [↑] [3B]

It is firmly settled that HN2 [↑] when Congress passed the Sherman Act, it "left no area of its constitutional power [over commerce] unoccupied." United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U.S. 293, 298, 89 L. Ed. 951, 65 S. Ct. 661 (1945). Congress "meant to deal comprehensively and effectively with the evils resulting from contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade, and to that end to exercise all the power it possessed." Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers, Inc. v. United States, 286 U.S. 427, 435, 76 L. Ed. 1204, 52 S. Ct. 607 (1932).

500 U.S. 322, *330; 111 S. Ct. 1842, **1847; 114 L. Ed. 2d 366, ***375; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 2917, ****15

single surgeon has no such obvious effect because the complaint does not deny the existence of an adequate supply of other surgeons to perform all of the services that respondent's current and future patients may ever require. Petitioners argue that respondent's complaint is insufficient because there is no factual nexus between [****16] the restraint on this one surgeon's practice and interstate commerce.

[\[EdHN1D\]](#) [1D] There are two flaws in petitioners' argument. First, HN3 because the essence of any violation of § 1 is the illegal agreement itself -- rather than the overt acts performed in furtherance of it, see United States v. Kissel, 218 U.S. 601, 54 L. Ed. 1168, 31 S. Ct. 124 \(1910\) -- proper analysis focuses, not upon actual consequences, but rather upon the potential harm that would ensue if the conspiracy were successful. As we explained in McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. 232, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 \(1980\):

"If establishing jurisdiction required a showing that the unlawful conduct itself had an effect on interstate commerce, jurisdiction would be defeated by a demonstration that the alleged restraint failed to have its intended anticompetitive effect. This is not the rule of our cases. See American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 811, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 \(1946\); [****17] United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 225, n.59, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 \(1940\). A violation may still be found in such circumstances because HN4 in a civil action under the Sherman Act, liability may be established by proof of either an unlawful purpose or an anti-competitive effect. United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 436, n.13, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 \(1978\); see United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S. 333, 337, 21 L. Ed. 2d 526, 89 S. Ct. 510 \(1969\); United States v. National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, 339 U.S. 485, 489, 94 L. Ed. 1007, 70 S. Ct. 711 \(1950\); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., supra, at 224-225, n.59. Id., at 243.

[**1848] Thus, respondent need not allege, or prove, an actual effect on interstate commerce to support federal jurisdiction.<sup>11</sup>

[****18] Second, if the conspiracy alleged in the complaint is successful, "'as a matter of practical economics'" there will be a reduction in the provision of ophthalmological services in the Los Angeles market. McLain, 444 U.S. at 246 (quoting Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. at 745). In cases involving horizontal agreements to fix prices or allocate territories within a single State, we have based jurisdiction on a general conclusion that the defendants' agreement "almost surely" had a marketwide impact and therefore an effect on interstate commerce, Burke v. Ford, 389 U.S. 320, 322, 19 L. Ed. 2d 554, 88 S. Ct. 443 \(1967\) (per curiam), or that the agreement "necessarily affected" the volume of residential sales and therefore the demand for financing and title insurance provided by out-of-state concerns. McLain, 444 U.S. at 246. In the latter case, we explained:

"To establish the jurisdictional element of a Sherman Act violation it would be sufficient for petitioners to demonstrate a substantial effect on interstate commerce generated by respondents' brokerage activity. Petitioners [****19] need not make the more particularized showing of an effect on interstate commerce caused by the alleged conspiracy to fix commission rates, or by those other aspects of respondents' activity that are alleged to be unlawful." Id., at 242-243.

[*332] Although plaintiffs in McLain were consumers of the conspirators' real estate brokerage services, and plaintiff in this case is a competing surgeon whose complaint identifies only himself as the victim of the alleged boycott, the same analysis applies. For if a violation of the Sherman Act occurred, the case is necessarily more significant than the fate of "just one merchant whose business is so small that his destruction makes little difference to the economy." Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 \(1959\) (footnote omitted). The case involves [****377] an alleged restraint on the practice of ophthalmological services. The restraint was accomplished by an alleged misuse of a congressionally regulated peer review process,<sup>12</sup> which respondent characterizes as the gateway that controls access to the market for his services. The gateway [****20] was closed to respondent, both at Midway and at other hospitals, because petitioners insisted upon adhering to an unnecessarily costly procedure. HN7<sup>12</sup> The competitive significance of respondent's exclusion from the market must be measured, not just by a particularized evaluation of his own practice, but rather, by a general evaluation of the impact of the restraint on other participants and potential participants in the market from which he has been excluded.

---

<sup>11</sup> Cf. United States v. Staszczuk, 517 F.2d 53, 60, n.17 (CA7) (en banc) ("HN5 The federal power to protect the free market may be exercised to punish conduct which threatens to impair competition even when no actual harm results"), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 837, 46 L. Ed. 2d 56, 96 S. Ct. 65 \(1975\).

[****21] We have no doubt concerning the power of Congress to regulate a peer review process controlling access to the [*333] market for ophthalmological surgery in Los Angeles. Thus, respondent's claim that members of the peer review committee conspired with [**1849] others to abuse that process and thereby deny respondent access to the market for ophthalmological services provided by general hospitals in Los Angeles has a sufficient nexus with interstate commerce to support federal jurisdiction.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: SCALIA

Dissent

---

JUSTICE SCALIA, with whom JUSTICE O'CONNOR, JUSTICE KENNEDY, and JUSTICE SOUTER join, dissenting.

The Court treats this case as involving no more than a conspiracy among eye surgeons at Midway Hospital to eliminate one of their competitors. That alone, it concludes, restrains trade or commerce among the several States within the meaning of the Sherman Act. In my judgment, the conspiracy alleged by the complaint, fairly viewed, involved somewhat more than that; but even so falls far short of what is required for Sherman Act jurisdiction. I respectfully dissent.

I

The Court has "no doubt concerning [****22] the power of Congress to regulate a peer review process controlling access to the market for ophthalmological surgery in Los Angeles," and concludes that "respondent's claim . . . has a sufficient nexus with interstate commerce to support federal jurisdiction." Ante, at 332 and this page. I agree with all that. Unfortunately, however, the question before us is not whether Congress could reach the activity before us here if it wanted to, but whether it has done so via the Sherman Act. That enactment [***378] does not prohibit all conspiracies using instrumentalities of commerce that Congress could regulate. Nor does it prohibit all conspiracies that have sufficient constitutional "nexus" to interstate commerce to be regulated. It prohibits only those conspiracies that are "in restraint of trade or commerce [*334] among the several States." 15 U. S. C. § 1. This language commands a judicial inquiry into the nature and potential effect of each particular restraint. "The jurisdictional inquiry under general prohibitions like . . . § 1 of the Sherman Act, turning as it does on the circumstances presented in each case and requiring a particularized [****23] judicial determination, differs significantly from that required when Congress itself has defined the specific persons and activities that affect <sup>12</sup> See Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 100 Stat. 3784, 42 U. S. C. § 11101 et seq. HN7<sup>12</sup> The statute provides for immunity from antitrust, and other, actions if the peer review process proceeds in accordance with § 11112. Respondent alleges that the process did not conform with the requirements set forth in § 11112, such as adequate notice, representation by an attorney, access to a transcript of the proceedings, and the right to cross-examine witnesses. According to the House sponsor of the bill, "the immunity provisions [were] restricted so as not to protect illegitimate actions taken under the guise of furthering the quality of health care. Actions . . . that are really taken for anticompetitive purposes will not be protected under this bill." 132 Cong. Rec. 30766 (1986) (remarks of Rep. Waxman).

---

500 U.S. 322, *334; 111 S. Ct. 1842, **1849; 114 L. Ed. 2d 366, ***378; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 2917, ****23

commerce and therefore require federal regulation." Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. 186, 197, n.12, 42 L. Ed. 2d 378, 95 S. Ct. 392 \(1974\).

Until 1980, the nature of this jurisdictional inquiry (with respect to alleged restraints not targeted at the very flow of interstate commerce) was clear: The question was whether the restraint at issue, if successful, would have a substantial effect on interstate commercial activity. See Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 741, 744, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 \(1976\); Burke v. Ford, 389 U.S. 320, 321-322, 19 L. Ed. 2d 554, 88 S. Ct. 443 \(1967\) \(per curiam\); Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 237, 92 L. Ed. 1328, 68 S. Ct. 996 \(1948\). See Note, The Interstate Commerce Test for Jurisdiction in Sherman Act Cases and Its Substantive Applications, 15 Ga. L. Rev. 714, 716-717 (1981). As I shall discuss in due course, that [****24] criterion would have called for reversal in the present case. See United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 96 L. Ed. 978, 72 S. Ct. 690 \(1952\).

Unfortunately, in 1980, the Court seemed to abandon this approach. McLain v. Real Estate Board of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. 232, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 \(1980\), appeared to shift the focus of the inquiry away from the effects of the restraint itself, asking instead whether the "[defendants'] activities which allegedly have been infected by a price-fixing conspiracy . . . have a not insubstantial effect on the interstate commerce involved." Id. at 246 (emphasis added). The result in McLain would [**1850] have been the same under the prior test, since the subject of the suit was an alleged massive conspiracy by all realtors in the Greater New Orleans area, involving price [*335] fixing, suppression of market information, and other anticompetitive practices. The Court's resort to the more expansive "infected activity" test was prompted by the belief that focusing upon the effects of the restraint itself would require plaintiffs to [****25] prove their case at the jurisdictional stage. See id. at 243. That belief was in error, since the prior approach had simply assumed, rather than required proof of, the success of the conspiracy.

Thus, as a dictum based upon a misconception, the "infected activities" approach was introduced into antitrust law. It was not received with enthusiasm. Most courts simply finessed the language of McLain and said that nothing had changed, i. e., that the ultimate question was still whether the unlawful conduct itself, [***379] if successful, would have a substantial effect on interstate commerce. See, e. g., Cordova & Simonpietri Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank N. A., 649 F.2d 36, 45 \(CA1 1981\); Furlong v. Long Island College Hospital, 710 F.2d 922, 925-926 \(CA2 1983\); Sarin v. Samaritan Health Center, 813 F.2d 755, 758-759 \(CA6 1987\); Seglin v. Esau, 769 F.2d 1274, 1280 \(CA7 1985\); Hayden v. Bracy, 744 F.2d 1338, 1343, n.2 \(CA8 1984\); Crane v. Intermountain Health Care, Inc., 637 F.2d 715, 724 \(CA10 1980\) (en banc); [****26] see also Thompson v. Wise General Hospital, 707 F. Supp. 849, 854-856 \(WD Va. 1989\), aff'd, 896 F.2d 547 (CA4 1990). Others, however, took McLain at face value -- and of course immediately fell into disagreement over the proper application of the new test. With respect to a restraint like the one at issue here, for example, how does one decide which "activities of the defendants" are "infected"? Are they all the activities of the hospital, Weiss v. York Hospital, 745 F.2d 786, 824-825, and n.66 \(CA3 1984\)? Only the activities of the eye surgery department, see Mitchell v. Frank R. Howard Memorial Hospital, 853 F.2d 762, 764, n.1 \(CA9 1988\)? The entire practice of eye surgeons who use the hospital, [EI Shahawy v. Harrison, 778 F.2d 636, 641 \[\*336\] \(CA11 1985\)](#)? Or, as the Ninth Circuit apparently found in this case, the peer review process itself?

Today the Court could have cleared up the confusion created by McLain, refocused the inquiry along the lines marked out by our previous cases (and still adhered to by most Circuits), and reversed the judgment below. Instead, it [****27] compounds the confusion by rejecting the two competing interpretations of McLain and adding yet a third candidate to the field, one that no court or commentator has ever suggested, let alone endorsed. To determine Sherman Act jurisdiction it looks neither to the effect on commerce of the restraint, nor to the effect on commerce of the defendants' infected activity, but rather, it seems, to the effect on commerce of the activity from which the plaintiff has been excluded. As I understand the Court's opinion, the test of Sherman Act jurisdiction is whether the entire line of commerce from which Dr. Pinhas has been excluded affects interstate commerce. Since excluding him from eye surgery at Midway Hospital effectively excluded him from the entire Los Angeles market for eye surgery (because no other Los Angeles hospital would accord him practice privileges after Midway rejected him), the jurisdictional question is simply whether that market affects interstate commerce, which of course it does.* This analysis tells us nothing about the substantiality of the impact on interstate commerce generated by the particular conduct at issue here.

[****28] Determining the "market" for a product or service, meaning the scope of other products or services against which it must [**1851] compete, is of course necessary for many purposes of antitrust analysis. But today's opinion does not identify a relevant "market" in that sense. It declares Los Angeles to be the pertinent "market" only because that is the [***380] entire scope of Dr. Pinhas' exclusion from practice. If the scope of [*337] his exclusion had been national, it would have declared the entire United States to be the "market," though it is quite unlikely that all eye surgeons in the United States are in competition. I cannot understand why "market" in the Court's peculiar sense has any bearing upon this restraint's impact on interstate commerce, and hence upon Sherman Act jurisdiction. The Court does not even attempt to provide an explanation.

The Court's focus on the Los Angeles market would make some sense if Midway was attempting to monopolize that market, or conspiring with all (or even most) of the hospitals in Los Angeles to fix prices there, cf. McLain v. Real Estate Board of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. 232, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 \(1980\). [****29] But the complaint does not mention § 2 of the Sherman Act, and Dr. Pinhas does not allege a conspiracy to affect eye surgery in the Los Angeles market. He merely alleges a conspiracy to exclude him from that market by a sort of group boycott. Since group boycotts are per se violations (not because they necessarily affect competition in the relevant market, but because they deprive at least some consumers of a preferred supplier, see R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 331-332 (1978)), Dr. Pinhas need not prove an effect on competition in the Los Angeles area to prevail, if the Sherman Act applies. But the question before us today is whether the Act does apply, and that must be answered by determining whether, in its practical economic consequences, the boycott substantially affects interstate commerce by restricting competition or, as in Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 \(1959\), interrupts the flow of interstate commerce. The Court never comes to grips with that issue. Instead, because a group boycott, like a price-fixing scheme, would be (if the Sherman Act applies) a per se [****30] violation, the Court concludes that "the same analysis applies" to this exclusion of a single competitor from the Los Angeles market as was applied in McLain to the fixing of prices by all realtors in the Greater New Orleans market. See ante, at 331-332. It [*338] seems to me obvious that the two situations are not remotely comparable. The economic effects of a price-fixing scheme are felt throughout the market in which the prices are fixed; the economic effects of "black-balling" a single supplier are felt not throughout the market from which he is theoretically excluded, but, at most, within the subportion of that market in which he was, or could be, doing business. If, for example, the alleged conspirators in the present case had decided to effectuate the ultimate exclusion of Dr. Pinhas, i. e., to have him killed, it would be absurd to think that the world market in eye surgery would thereby be affected. It is undoubtedly true, in the present case, that Dr. Pinhas has been affected throughout the Los Angeles area; but it is rudimentary that the effect of a restraint of trade must be gauged according to its effect on "competition, not competitors," [****31] "Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 \(1962\) (emphasis in original). See also, e. g., Associated General Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 539, n.40, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 [**381] (1983); Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 564-568 \(CA7 1986\) (Easterbrook, J., dissenting in part). The Court's suggestion that competition in the entire Los Angeles market was affected by this one surgeon's exclusion from that market simply ignores the "practical economics" of the matter.

II

In any case, it does not seem to me that a correct analysis of this case would treat it as [**1852] involving a conspiracy to boycott a single physician. Such boycotts rarely exist in a vacuum; they are usually the means of enforcing compliance with larger anticompetitive schemes. H. Hovenkamp, Economics and Federal Antitrust Law 275-276 (1985); R. Posner, Antitrust Law 207 (1976). Cf. Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445,

---

* Even so, I might note, it is improper for the Court to dispense with the necessary allegations to that effect. See McLain v. Real Estate Board of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. 232, 242, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 \(1980\).

448-449, 1 L. Ed. 2d 456, 77 S. Ct. 390 \(1957\) (describing blacklisting pursuant to conspiracy to monopolize [****32] professional football). Charitably read, respondent's complaint alleges just such a scheme, namely, a scheme to fix prices for some of the eye [*339] surgery performed at Midway Hospital. Instead of simply agreeing to a supercompetitive price, Midway's eye surgeons have, contrary to prevailing Los Angeles practice, allegedly "padded" the cost of certain varieties of eye surgery by requiring a useless second surgeon to be present. The so-called "sham contract" was an attempt to compensate the hyperproductive Dr. Pinhas for his participation in the scheme and the concomitant reduction in his output. When that failed, the conspirators eliminated him as a competitor by terminating his medical staff privileges through the peer review process. That termination was not the totality of the conspiracy, but merely the means used to enforce it -- just as, in Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\), the elimination of the price-cutting Spray-Rite as a distributor of Monsanto's products (via termination and a boycott) was merely the means of enforcing the alleged price-fixing conspiracy between Monsanto and its [****33] other distributors. This case, like Monsanto, involves a "termination . . . pursuant to a conspiracy . . . to set . . . prices," id. at 757-758 (emphasis added), and for purposes of determining Sherman Act jurisdiction, what counts is the impact of that entire price-fixing conspiracy.

Even when the conspiracy is viewed in this broader fashion, however, the scope of the market affected by it has nothing to do with the scope of Dr. Pinhas' exclusion from practice. If this had been a naked price-fixing conspiracy, instead of the more subtle one that it is, no one would contend that it affected prices throughout Los Angeles. Pursuant to standard antitrust analysis, the agreement itself would define the extent of the market. The market would be eye surgery at Midway (not "eye surgery in the city where Midway is located"), since the very existence of the agreement implies power over price in that defined market. FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Assn., 493 U.S. 411, 435, n.18, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, 110 S. Ct. 768 \(1990\) (citing R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 269 (1978)). It is irrational to use a different analysis, and to assume [*340] [****34] the affected market to be all of Los Angeles, simply because this more subtle price-fixing conspiracy led (incidentally) to the [***382] exclusion of Dr. Pinhas not only from Midway but from all hospitals throughout the city.

There is simply no basis for assuming that this alleged conspiracy's market power -- and its consequent effect upon competition, as opposed to its effect upon Dr. Pinhas -- extended throughout Los Angeles. It has not been alleged that the conspirators have perverted the peer review process in hospitals throughout the city; nor that the peer review process at Midway is the "gateway" to the Los Angeles market in the sense of being the only way (or even one of the few ways) to gain entry. To the contrary, it is acknowledged that every hospital in Los Angeles has its own peer review process, and the complaint itself asserts that, well before the offer of the "sham contract," "nearly all" those hospitals had abolished the featherbedding practice that is the object of this conspiracy. These uncontested facts reveal the truly local nature of the restraint and preclude any inference that the conspiracy at issue here had (or could have) an effect on [****35] competition in the Los Angeles market. Cf. Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 31, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United [**1853] States, 356 U.S. 1, 6-7, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\). Any allegations to the contrary (and there are none) would have to be dismissed as inconsistent with simple economics. See Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 593-595, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\).

III

In my view, the present case should be decided by applying to the price-fixing conspiracy at Midway Hospital the workable jurisdictional test that our cases had established before McLain confused things. On that basis, I would reverse the Court of Appeals' judgment that respondent had stated a Sherman Act claim.

[*341] The complaint does not begin to suggest that the conspiracy at Midway could have even the most trivial effect on interstate commerce. Cf. Crane v. Intermountain Health Care, Inc., 637 F.2d at 725. It literally alleges nothing more than that Dr. Pinhas, the defendant [****36] physicians, Midway Hospital, and Summit Health, Ltd., are "engaged in interstate commerce." Contrary to the Court's (undocumented) suggestion, ante, at 327 and 329-330, there is no allegation that any out-of-state patients call upon the hospital for eye surgery (or anything else) -- let alone a sufficient number that overcharging them would create a "substantial" effect on commerce among the several States. Respondent does not allege that out-of-state insurance companies or the Federal Government pays for the overcharges, cf. *Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 783, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572, 95 S. Ct. 2004 \(1975\)*; indeed, it appears on the face of the complaint that the Federal Government has stopped reimbursing featherbedded operations. He does not allege that eye surgery involves the use of implements or equipment purchased out of state, or that the restraint at issue here could have any appreciable effect on such purchases, cf. *Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. at 741, 744*. Quite simply, the complaint is entirely devoid of any attempt to show a connection between the challenged [***383] restraint [****37] and "commerce among the several States." Because "it is not sufficient merely to rely on identification of a relevant local activity and to presume an interrelationship with some unspecified aspect of interstate commerce," *McLain, 444 U.S. at 242*, I would dismiss the complaint out of hand.

In point of fact, such a dismissal seems compelled by our decision in *United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 96 L. Ed. 978, 72 S. Ct. 690 \(1952\)*. There, the state medical society, eight county medical services, and eight individual physicians conspired to restrain the business of providing prepaid medical care by, inter alia, allocating territories to be served by doctor-sponsored plans. The District Court found that the [*342] conspiracy did not restrain interstate commerce. On direct appeal, the United States argued that the interstate activities of the private associations sufficed to show the requisite interstate effect. The Court rejected this argument, holding that, in order to prevail, the Government had to show that the restraint itself (the allocation of territories), had a substantial adverse effect on interstate [****38] commerce. Such an effect had not been proven, the Court observed, because the activities of the doctor-sponsored plans were "wholly intrastate," *id. at 338*. It did not matter that the plans had made a few payments to out-of-state patients. Those payments were "few, sporadic, and incidental." *Id. at 339*. A straightforward application of this same rationale compels reversal in the present case.

* * *

If it is true, as the complaint alleges, that one hospital will ordinarily not accord privileges to a doctor who has failed the peer review process elsewhere, it may well be that Dr. Pinhas has been the victim of a business tort affecting him throughout Los Angeles -- [**1854] or perhaps even nationwide. Cf. *Hayden v. Bracy, 744 F.2d at 1343-1345* (various torts, in addition to Sherman Act violation, alleged to have arisen out of negative peer review). But the Sherman Act "does not purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or against persons engaged in interstate commerce," *Hunt v. Crumboch, 325 U.S. 821, 826, 89 L. Ed. 1954, 65 S. Ct. 1545 \(1945\)*, unless those torts restrain commerce "among [***39] the several States." The short of the matter is that Dr. Pinhas may well have a legitimate grievance, but it is not one redressed by the Sherman Act.

Disputes over the denial of hospital practice privileges are common, and most of the Circuits to which they have been presented as federal antitrust claims have rejected them on jurisdictional grounds. *Furlong v. Long Island College Hospital, 710 F.2d at 925-926*; *Thompson v. Wise General Hospital, 707 F. Supp. at 854-856*; *Seglin v. Esau, 769 F.2d at 1283-1284*; [*343] *Hayden v. Bracy, 744 F.2d at 1342-1343*. At least two other Circuits would reach that result on the particular complaint before us here. *Cordova & Simonpietri Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank N. A., 649 F.2d at 45*; *Crane v. Intermountain Health Care, Inc., 637 F.2d at 725*. I think it is a mistake to overturn this view. Federal courts are an attractive forum, and the treble damages [***384] of the Clayton Act an attractive remedy. We have today made them available for routine business torts, needlessly destroying a sensible [****40] statutory allocation of federal-state responsibility and contributing to the trivialization of the federal courts.

I respectfully dissent.

References

---

*40 Am Jur 2d, Hospitals and Asylums 10, 11; 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 7, 33, 81*

500 U.S. 322, *343; 111 S. Ct. 1842, **1854; 114 L. Ed. 2d 366, ***384; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 2917, ****40

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:197, 48:198

13A Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Hospitals, Forms 21-23; 18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, Restraints of Trade and Unfair Trade Practices, Forms 17, 31

1 Am Jur Proof of Facts 2d 65, Denial of Hospital Staff Privileges

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1

L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 22, 28

L Ed Index, Hospitals and Asylums; Physicians and Surgeons; Restraints of Trade ,Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices

Index to Annotations, Hospitals; Physicians and Surgeons; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References:

[****41] Denial by hospital of staff privileges or referrals to physician or other health care practitioner as violation of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 89 ALR Fed 419.

Opposition to construction of new hospital or expansion of existing hospital's facilities as violation of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 88 ALR Fed 478.

"Learned profession" exemption in federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 39 ALR Fed 774.

Business units or persons within single, commonly owned enterprise as conspiring with each other in violation of 1 or 3 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 3). 20 ALR Fed 682.

---

End of Document

Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs.

Supreme Court of the United States

December 10, 1991, Argued ; June 8, 1992, Decided

No. 90-1029

Reporter

504 U.S. 451 *; 112 S. Ct. 2072 **; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 ***; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405 ****; 60 U.S.L.W. 4465; 1992-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,839; 92 Cal. Daily Op. Service 4823; 92 Daily Journal DAR 7688; 6 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 331

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY, PETITIONER v. IMAGE TECHNICAL SERVICES, INC., ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 903 F.2d 612, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

prices, market power, consumers, customers, aftermarket, manufacturer, markets, summary judgment, machines, costs, interbrand, sales, anti trust law, purchasers, micrographic, products, seller, per se rule, tying arrangement, antitrust, monopoly, respondents', competitors, brand, leverage, repair, tie, single-brand, derivative, court of appeals

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN1[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

A tying arrangement violates 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 if the seller has "appreciable economic power" in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Market power is the power to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market; it has been defined as the ability of a single seller to raise price and restrict output. The existence of such power ordinarily is inferred from the seller's possession of a predominant share of the market.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

On summary judgment an appellate court may examine the record de novo without relying on the lower courts' understanding.

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN5 Evidence, Inferences & Presumptions

Legal presumptions that rest on formalistic distinctions rather than actual market realities are generally disfavored in antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In the context of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, power gained through some natural and legal advantage such as a patent, copyright, or business acumen can give rise to liability if a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Willfulness

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Scope, Monopolization Offenses

The offense of monopoly under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 has two elements: the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Summary Judgment > Standards

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN8 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Monopoly power under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 requires, of course, something greater than market power under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability. In some instances one brand of a product can constitute a separate market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In the context of 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, as a general matter a firm can refuse to deal with its competitors. But such a right is not absolute; it exists only if there are legitimate competitive reasons for the refusal.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Photocopier manufacturer held not entitled to summary judgment dismissing federal antitrust claims as to (1) tying arrangement between parts and service, and (2) monopolization of sale of service.

Summary

A company which manufactured and sold photocopiers and micrographic equipment also sold service and noncompatible replacement parts for such equipment. In the early 1980's, a number of independent service organizations (ISOs) began servicing the company's equipment. In 1985 and 1986, the company allegedly adopted a policy under which the company supposedly (1) sold parts only to buyers of the company's equipment who either used the company's service or repaired their own equipment; and (2) limited access to other sources of parts by the ISOs by forbidding entities which manufactured parts for the company to sell such parts to anyone other than the company, pressuring other entities not to sell the company's parts to the ISOs, and taking steps to restrict the availability of used equipment. In 1987, the ISOs filed an action in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California against the company. The ISOs, proffering evidence that the company controlled nearly 100 percent of the parts market and 80 to 95 percent of the service market, alleged that the company had unlawfully (1) tied the sale of service for the company's equipment to the sale of parts, in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1); and (2) monopolized and attempted to monopolize the sale of service for the company's equipment, in violation of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2). The company moved for summary judgment on both claims, and the District Court granted the company's motion. On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, reversing, expressed the view that (1) the ISOs had presented sufficient evidence, for summary judgment purposes, to disprove the company's contention that its parts policy was justified; (2) with respect to the 1 claim, (a) there were disputed issues of fact whether service and parts were distinct markets, and whether a tying arrangement existed, and (b) the ISOs had presented evidence from which a trier of fact could conclude that the company had sufficient economic power in the parts market to restrain competition in the service market; and (3) with respect to the 2 claim, sufficient evidence existed to support a finding that the company's implementation of its parts policy involved a specific intent to monopolize (903 F2d 612).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Blackmun, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and White, Stevens, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., it was held that the company had not met the requirements of Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure with respect to the company's motion for summary judgment as to either Sherman Act claim, because (1) as to the 1 claim, (a) the company did not dispute that its arrangement affected a substantial volume of interstate commerce in the parts market, (b) a reasonable trier of fact could find that the company's service and parts were two distinct products, (c) evidence of the company's policy on parts sales, along with allegations by the ISOs that the company's control over the parts market had excluded competition and boosted service prices, were sufficient to entitle the ISOs to a trial on their claim that the company had power in the parts market to force unwanted purchases of the company's service, and (d) notwithstanding the existence of competition in the equipment market, the company had failed to meet its burden of demonstrating that the inference of market power in the service and parts markets was unreasonable; and (2) as to the 2 claim, (a) the ISOs' evidence with respect to the company's control of the parts and service markets--which evidence indicated the company's possession of monopoly power--was sufficient to survive summary judgment, (b) the relevant market from the perspective of an owner of the company's equipment was composed of only those companies that serviced such equipment, and (c) none of the company's asserted business justifications for its exclusionary action was sufficient to entitle the company to a judgment as a matter of law.

Scalia, J., joined by O'Connor and Thomas, JJ., dissenting, expressed the view that (1) neither logic nor experience suggested, let alone compelled, application of the per se prohibition against tying arrangements under 1, and the monopolization doctrine under 2, to a seller's behavior in its single-brand aftermarkets, where--as it had to be assumed in the case at hand--the seller was without power at the interbrand level; (2) although the aftermarket tie alleged in the case at hand could have instead been evaluated under the rule of reason, the case's disposition did not require such examination, where the ISOs apparently had waived their rule-of-reason claim in the District Court, and, accordingly, the Court of Appeals' judgment on the 1 claim ought to have been reversed outright; and (3) an antitrust defendant which lacked the relevant market power sufficient to permit invocation of the per se prohibition against tying under 1 all the more lacked the monopoly power that warranted heightened scrutiny under 2 of such defendant's allegedly exclusionary behavior.

Headnotes

---

EVIDENCE §343.5 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §42 > SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §5 > summary judgment -- tying arrangement by equipment seller -- service and parts -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F] [LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [1G] [LEdHN\[1H\]](#) [1H] [LEdHN\[1I\]](#) [1I] [LEdHN\[1J\]](#) [1J] [LEdHN\[1K\]](#) [1K]

A company which manufactures and sells photocopiers and micrographic equipment, and which also sells service and noncompatible replacement parts for its equipment, has not met the requirements of Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure with respect to the company's motion for summary judgment on a claim by independent service organizations (ISOs), which had begun servicing the company's equipment, that the company--by allegedly adopting a policy under which the company supposedly (1) sold parts only to buyers of the company's equipment who either used the company's service or repaired their own equipment, and (2) limited access to other sources of parts by the ISOs by forbidding entities which manufactured parts for the company to sell such parts to anyone other than the company, pressuring other entities not to sell the company's parts to the ISOs, and taking steps to restrict the availability of used equipment--unlawfully tied the sale of service for the company's equipment to the sale of its parts, in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), where (1) the company does not dispute that its arrangement affects a substantial volume of interstate commerce in the parts market; (2) a reasonable trier of fact could find that the company's service and parts are two distinct products, because (a) evidence in the record indicates that service and parts had been sold separately in the past and still were sold separately to self-service equipment owners, and that the company sold parts to third parties only if the third parties agreed not to buy service from the ISOs, (b) enough doubt is cast on the company's claim of a unified market that such claim should be resolved by the trier of fact, and (c) as a factual matter, some consumers would purchase service without parts and some consumers would purchase parts without service; (3) evidence of the company's policy on parts sales, along with allegations by the ISOs that the company's control over the parts market has excluded competition and boosted service prices, are sufficient to entitle the ISOs to a trial on their claim that the company has more than sufficient power in the parts market to force unwanted purchases of the company's service; and (4) notwithstanding the existence of competition in the photocopier and micrographic equipment market, the company has failed to meet its burden of demonstrating that the inference of its market power in the service and parts markets is unreasonable, because it is reasonable to infer that the company (a) has power in those markets to raise prices and drive out competition, and (b) chose to gain immediate profits by exerting such market power where locked-in customers, high information costs, and discriminatory pricing limited--and perhaps eliminated--any long-term loss. (Scalia, O'Connor, and Thomas, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §42 > SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §5 > summary judgment -- monopoly by equipment seller -- sale of service -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [ ] [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [ ] [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [ ] [2C] [LEdHN\[2D\]](#) [ ] [2D] [LEdHN\[2E\]](#) [ ] [2E] [LEdHN\[2F\]](#) [ ] [2F]

A company which manufactures and sells photocopiers and micrographic equipment, and which also sells service and noncompatible replacement parts for its equipment, has not met the requirements of Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure with respect to the company's motion for summary judgment on a claim by independent service organizations (ISOs), which had begun servicing the company's equipment, that the company--by allegedly adopting a policy under which the company supposedly (1) sold parts only to buyers of the company's equipment who either used the company's service or repaired their own equipment, and (2) limited access to other sources of parts by the ISOs by forbidding entities which manufactured parts for the company to sell such parts to anyone other than the company, pressuring other entities not to sell the company's parts to the ISOs, and taking steps to restrict the availability of used equipment--unlawfully monopolized and attempted to monopolize the sale of service with respect to such equipment, in violation of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), where (1) the ISOs' evidence that the company controls nearly 100 percent of the parts market and 80 to 95 percent of the service market, with no readily available substitutes--and hence that the company possesses monopoly power--is sufficient to survive summary judgment; (2) the relevant market from the perspective of an owner of the company's equipment is composed of only those companies that service such equipment; and (3) none of the company's asserted business justifications for its exclusionary action--to provide quality service, to control inventory costs, and to prevent free riding on the company's capital investment--are sufficient to prove that the company is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. (Scalia, O'Connor, and Thomas, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §5 > determination -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

On a motion for summary judgment, the evidence of the nonmoving party is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in such party's favor; for purposes of deciding such motion, the nonmoving party's version of any disputed issue is presumed correct.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30.6 > tying arrangement -- elements --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

A tying arrangement--that is, an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different, or tied, product, or at least agrees not to purchase that product from any other supplier-- violates 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) if (1) the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product market, and (2) the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §42 > tying arrangement -- service and parts --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

For service and parts to be considered two distinct products for purposes of determining whether a firm selling such service and parts has engaged in an unlawful tying arrangement prohibited by 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), there must be sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for the firm to provide service separately from parts.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > presumption -- restraint of trade -- tying arrangement -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

For purposes of determining whether a firm selling service and parts has engaged in an unlawful tying arrangement prohibited by 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), the United States Supreme Court is unwilling to make the assumption that there cannot be separate markets for service and parts. (Scalia, O'Connor, and Thomas, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §5 > determination -- assertion not in record -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

The factual assertion that parts and service are not separate products--for purposes of determining, under Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, whether a firm selling parts and service has engaged in an unlawful tying arrangement prohibited by 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1)--does not entitle the firm to summary judgment on the issue whether parts and service are distinct markets where the record does not support such assertion. (Scalia, O'Connor, and Thomas, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

504 U.S. 451, *451; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2072; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***265; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****1

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §42 > refusal to deal -- service -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

With respect to a company which manufactures and sells photocopiers and micrographic equipment, and which also sells service and noncompatible replacement parts for its equipment, the company's sale of parts to third parties on condition that the third parties buy service from the company is not a unilateral refusal to deal which, as such, would not violate the federal antitrust laws.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30.6 > tying arrangement -- inference -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

A necessary feature of an unlawful tying arrangement prohibited by 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) is appreciable economic power in the tying market; market power is the power to force a purchaser to do something that the purchaser would not do in a competitive market; the existence of such power ordinarily is inferred from the seller's possession of a predominant share of the market.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30.6 > tying arrangement -- forced purchase -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

For purposes of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), the essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms; when such forcing is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and 1 is violated.

APPEAL §1477 > review of record -- antitrust -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [11A] [LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [11B]

On certiorari to review a Federal District Court's grant of summary judgment in a civil antitrust case, the United States Supreme Court may review the record de novo without relying on the lower courts' understanding.

APPEAL §1092 > certiorari -- waiver of objection -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [12A] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [12B]

504 U.S. 451, *451; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2072; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***265; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****1

On certiorari to review a Federal Court of Appeals decision, the United States Supreme Court will decide the questions presented in a certiorari petition--including the question whether a company which manufactured and sold photocopiers and micrographic equipment, and which also sold service and noncompatible replacement parts for its equipment, was entitled to summary judgment on a claim that the company had unlawfully tied the sale of service for such equipment to the sale of parts, in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1)--based on the same premise as stated by the Court of Appeals that competition exists in the equipment market, where the claimants failed to bring their objections to such premise to the attention of the Supreme Court in their opposition to the petition for certiorari.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > presumption -- antitrust -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

Legal presumptions that rest on formalistic distinctions rather than actual market realities are generally disfavored in federal antitrust law.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §4 > antitrust -- opposition -- determination -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

In order for a federal antitrust case in which a motion for summary judgment has been filed to reach the jury, the nonmoving party's inferences need only be reasonable; however, if an antitrust plaintiff's theory is economically senseless, no reasonable jury could find in the plaintiff's favor, and summary judgment should be granted.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §18 > relevant market -- market power -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15A\]](#) [15A] [LEdHN\[15B\]](#) [15B]

Defining the relevant market generally determines the result of a federal antitrust case, because market power is often inferred from market share.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §5 > restraint of trade -- question of fact -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

For purposes of determining, under Rule 56(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, whether a company which manufactures and sells photocopiers and micrographic equipment, and which also sells service and noncompatible replacement parts for its equipment, is entitled to summary judgment on a claim that the company unlawfully tied the sale of service for the company's equipment to the sale of its parts, in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), it is a question of fact whether the company's competitors in the equipment markets would provide the necessary information to satisfy customer information needs with respect to the lifecycle costs of the company's equipment. (Scalia, O'Connor, and Thomas, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

504 U.S. 451, *451; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2072; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***265; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****1

EVIDENCE §343.5 > presumption -- restraint of trade -- purchasing decision -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

For purposes of determining whether a company which manufactures and sells photocopiers and micrographic equipment, and which also sells service and noncompatible replacement parts for its equipment, is entitled to summary judgment on a claim that the company unlawfully tied the sale of service for the company's equipment to the sale of its parts, in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), it makes little sense to assume, in the absence of any evidentiary support, that equipment-purchasing decisions are based on an accurate assessment of the total cost of equipment, service, and parts over the lifetime of the equipment.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §5 > restraint of trade -- question of fact -- presumption -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18]

For purposes of determining, under Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, whether a company which manufactures and sells photocopiers and micrographic equipment, and which also sells service and noncompatible replacement parts for its equipment, is entitled to summary judgment on a claim that the company unlawfully tied the sale of service for the company's equipment to the sale of its parts, in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), there is a question of fact whether the costs of obtaining pricing information and the costs of switching to a different product foil the assumption that the equipment and service markets act as pure complements to one another.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30.6 > presumption -- tying arrangement -- market power -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[19\]](#) [19]

A company which manufactures and sells photocopiers and micrographic equipment, and which also sells service and noncompatible replacement parts for its equipment, is not entitled to a legal presumption on the company's lack of market power, for purposes of determining whether the company should be granted summary judgment on a claim that the company unlawfully tied the sale of service for the company's equipment to the sale of its parts, in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), where there is a significant risk of deterring procompetitive conduct, in that the company's alleged conduct--higher service prices and market foreclosure--is facially anticompetitive and exactly the harm that antitrust laws aim to prevent.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §32 > marketing options -- service -- equipment -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[20\]](#) [20]

The offering by a firm of various marketing options, including bundling of support and maintenance service with the sale of equipment, does not run afoul of the federal antitrust laws.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §42 > tying arrangement -- sale of service by manufacturer -- patents -- copyright -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[21A\]](#) [↓] [21A] [LEdHN\[21B\]](#) [↓] [21B]

There is no support for the view that per se immunity from 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), which prohibits unlawful tying arrangements, should be granted to manufacturers competing in the service market in either (1) the United States Supreme Court's jurisprudence, since the Supreme Court has held many times that power gained through some natural and legal advantage such as a patent, copyright, or business acumen can give rise to liability if a seller exploits its dominant position in one market to expand the seller's empire into a derivative aftermarket; or (2) the record in the case, where the record--for purposes of determining whether a manufacturer selling service and parts for its photocopiers and micrographic equipment has engaged in an unlawful tying arrangement prohibited by 1 by unlawfully tying the sale of service to the sale of parts--supports the theory that the manufacturer is able to exploit some customers who in the absence of the tie would be protected from increases in parts prices by knowledgeable customers. (Scalia, O'Connor, and Thomas, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > monopoly -- elements -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[22A\]](#) [↓] [22A] [LEdHN\[22B\]](#) [↓] [22B]

The offense of monopoly under 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2) has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of such power--as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident--to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §18 > monopoly -- market power --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[23\]](#) [↓] [23]

Monopoly power, for purposes of determining whether there has been a violation of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), requires something greater than market power for purposes of determining whether there has been a violation of 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §19 > relevant market -- commercial realities --> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[24\]](#) [↓] [24]

For purposes of determining whether there has been a violation of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.), a single brand of a product or service can constitute a separate relevant market; the proper market definition can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the commercial realities faced by consumers.

504 U.S. 451, *451; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2072; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***265; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****1

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §30.6 > refusal to deal -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[25A\]](#) [ ] [25A] [LEdHN\[25B\]](#) [ ] [25B]

As a general matter, for purposes of determining whether there has been a violation of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), a firm can refuse to deal with its competitors; however, such a right is not absolute, and it exists only if there are legitimate competitive reasons for the refusal.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §17 > monopoly -- business reasons --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[26\]](#) [ ] [26]

A firm's liability on a claim of monopoly under 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2) turns on whether valid business reasons can explain the firm's exclusionary actions.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §5 > monopoly -- determination -- quality justification --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[27\]](#) [ ] [27]

With respect to a claim by independent service organizations (ISOs) that a company which manufactures and sells photocopiers and micrographic equipment, and which also sells service and noncompatible replacement parts for its equipment, unlawfully monopolized and attempted to monopolize the sale of service with respect to such equipment, in violation of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), the ISOs have presented evidence from which a reasonable trier of fact could conclude--so as to defeat the company's motion for summary judgment under Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure--that the company's justification based on the provision of quality service is pretextual, because (1) evidence indicates that the ISOs provide quality service and are preferred by some owners of the company's equipment; and (2) the company's quality justification appears to be inconsistent with the company's (a) thesis that consumers are knowledgeable to "lifecycle price" the total cost of equipment, service, and parts, and (b) policy of allowing self-service by equipment owners.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §5 > monopoly -- determination -- inventory cost justification --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[28\]](#) [ ] [28]

With respect to a claim by independent service organizations (ISOs) that a company which manufactures and sells photocopiers and micrographic equipment, and which also sells service and noncompatible replacement parts for its equipment, unlawfully monopolized and attempted to monopolize the sale of service with respect to such equipment, in violation of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), the ISOs have presented a triable issue of fact--so as to defeat the company's motion for summary judgment under Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure--on the company's asserted justification based on controlling inventory costs, because (1) the inventory of parts needed to repair the company's equipment turns only on breakdown rates, which should be the same whether the company or the ISOs perform the repair; and (2) such justification fails to explain evidence that the company forced independent equipment manufacturers, equipment owners, and parts brokers not to sell parts to ISOs, which actions would have no effect on the company's inventory costs.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > entry barriers -- prohibition -- > Headnote: [LEdHN\[29\]](#) [29]

One of the evils proscribed by the federal antitrust laws is the creation of entry barriers to potential competitors by requiring them to enter two markets simultaneously.

Syllabus

---

After respondent independent service organizations (ISO's) began servicing copying and micrographic equipment manufactured by petitioner Eastman Kodak Co., Kodak adopted policies to limit the availability to ISO's of replacement parts for its equipment and to make it more difficult for ISO's to compete with it in servicing such equipment. Respondents then filed this action, alleging, inter alia, that Kodak had unlawfully tied the sale of service for its machines to the sale of parts, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and had unlawfully monopolized and attempted to monopolize the sale of service and parts for such machines, in violation of § 2 of that Act. The District Court granted summary judgment for Kodak, but the Court of Appeals reversed. [****2] Among other things, the appellate court found that respondents had presented sufficient evidence to raise a genuine issue concerning Kodak's market power in the service and parts markets, and rejected Kodak's contention that lack of market power in service and parts must be assumed when such power is absent in the equipment market.

Held:

1. Kodak has not met the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56\(c\) for an award of summary judgment on the § 1 claim. Pp. 461-479.

(a) A tying arrangement -- i. e., an agreement by a party to sell one product on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier -- violates § 1 only if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product market. Pp. 461-462.

(b) Respondents have presented sufficient evidence of a tying arrangement to defeat a summary judgment motion. A reasonable trier of fact could find, first, that service and parts are two distinct products in light of evidence indicating that each has been, and continues in some circumstances to be, sold separately, and, second, that Kodak [****3] has tied the sale of the two products in light of evidence indicating that it would sell parts to third parties only if they agreed not to buy service from ISO's. Pp. 462-463.

(c) For purposes of determining appreciable economic power in the tying market, this Court's precedents have defined market power as the power to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market, and have ordinarily inferred the existence of such power from the seller's possession of a predominant share of the market. P. 464.

(d) Respondents would be entitled under such precedents to a trial on their claim that Kodak has sufficient power in the parts market to force unwanted purchases of the tied service market, based on evidence indicating that Kodak has control over the availability of parts and that such control has excluded service competition, boosted service prices, and forced unwilling consumption of Kodak service. Pp. 464-465.

(e) Kodak has not satisfied its substantial burden of showing that, despite such evidence, an inference of market power is unreasonable. Kodak's theory that its lack of market power in the primary equipment market precludes -- as a matter [****4] of law -- the possibility of market power in the derivative aftermarkets rests on the factual assumption that if it raised its parts or service prices above competitive levels, potential customers would simply stop buying its equipment. Kodak's theory does not accurately describe actual market behavior, since there is no evidence or assertion that its equipment sales dropped after it raised its service prices. Respondents offer a forceful reason for this discrepancy: the existence of significant information and switching costs that could create a less responsive connection between aftermarket prices and equipment sales. It is plausible to infer from respondents' evidence that Kodak chose to gain immediate profits by exerting market power where locked-in customers, high information costs, and discriminatory pricing limited, and perhaps eliminated, any long-term loss. Pp. 465-478.

(f) Nor is this Court persuaded by Kodak's contention that it is entitled to a legal presumption on the lack of market power because there is a significant risk of deterring procompetitive conduct. Because Kodak's service and parts policy is not one that appears always, or almost always, to enhance competition, [****5] the balance tips against summary judgment. Pp. 478-479.

2. Respondents have presented genuine issues for trial as to whether Kodak has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, the service and parts markets in violation of §2. Pp. 480-486.

(a) Respondents' evidence that Kodak controls nearly 100% of the parts market and 80% to 95% of the service market, with no readily available substitutes, is sufficient to survive summary judgment on the first element of the monopoly offense, the possession of monopoly power. Kodak's contention that, as a matter of law, a single brand of a product or service can never be a relevant market contravenes cases of this Court indicating that one brand of a product can constitute a separate market in some instances. The proper market definition in this case can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the commercial realities faced by Kodak equipment owners. Pp. 481-482.

(b) As to the second element of a §2 claim, the willful use of monopoly power, respondents have presented evidence that Kodak took exclusionary action to maintain its parts monopoly and used its control over parts to strengthen its monopoly share of the service [****6] market. Thus, liability turns on whether valid business reasons can explain Kodak's actions. However, none of its asserted business justifications -- a commitment to quality service, a need to control inventory costs, and a desire to prevent ISO's from free-riding on its capital investment -- are sufficient to prove that it is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Pp. 482-486.

Counsel: Donn P. Pickett argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Daniel M. Wall, Alfred C. Pfeiffer, Jr., and Jonathan W. Romeyn.

Assistant Attorney General Rill argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae urging reversal. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Starr, Deputy Solicitor General Wallace, Christopher J. Wright, Catherine G. O'Sullivan, and Robert B. Nicholson.

James A. Hennefer argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were A. Kirk McKenzie, Douglas E. Rosenthal, Jonathan M. Jacobson, and Elinor R. Hoffmann. *

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the Computer and Business Equipment Manufacturers Association by Simon Lazarus III; for Digital Equipment Corp. et al. by Kurt W. Melchior, Robert A. Skitol, James A. Meyers, Marcia Howe Adams, Ivor Cary Armistead III, Ronald A. Stern, Stephen Wasinger, James W. Olson, Carter G. Phillips, Ralph I. Miller, and Florinda J. Lascone; for the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association of the United States, Inc., by Thomas B. Leary, William H. Crabtree, and Charles H. Lockwood II; and for the National Electrical Manufacturers Association by James S. Dittmar and James L. Messenger.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the State of Ohio et al. by Lee Fisher, Attorney General of Ohio, Simon Karas, and Elizabeth H. Watts and Marc B. Bandman, Assistant Attorneys General, James H. Evans, Attorney General of Alabama, and Marc Givhan, Assistant Attorney General, Charles E. Cole, Attorney General of Alaska, and James Forbes, Assistant Attorney General, Grant Woods, Attorney General of Arizona, and Jeri K. Auther, Assistant Attorney General, Winston Bryant, Attorney General of Arkansas, and Royce Griffin, Deputy Attorney General, Daniel E. Lungren, Attorney General of California, Roderick E. Walston, Chief Assistant Attorney General, Sanford N. Gruskin, Assistant Attorney General, and Kathleen E. Foote, Deputy Attorney General, Richard Blumenthal, Attorney General of Connecticut, and Robert M. Langer, Assistant Attorney General, Robert A. Butterworth, Attorney General of Florida, and Jerome W. Hoffman, Assistant Attorney General, Warren Price III, Attorney General of Hawaii, Robert A. Marks, Supervising Deputy Attorney General, and Ted Clause, Deputy Attorney General, Larry EchoHawk, Attorney General of Idaho, Roland W. Burris, Attorney General of Illinois, Rosalyn Kaplan,

[****7]

Judges: BLACKMUN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and WHITE, STEVENS, KENNEDY, and SOUTER, JJ., joined. SCALIA, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which O'CONNOR and THOMAS, JJ., joined, post, p. 486.

Opinion by: BLACKMUN

Opinion

---

[*454] [*276] [**2076] JUSTICE BLACKMUN delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A] LEdHN[2A] [2A] This is yet another case that concerns the standard for summary judgment in an antitrust controversy. The [*455] principal issue here is whether a defendant's lack of market power in the primary equipment market precludes -- as a matter of law -- the possibility of market power in derivative aftermarkets.

Petitioner Eastman Kodak Company manufactures and sells photocopiers and micrographic equipment. Kodak also sells service and replacement parts for its equipment. Respondents [*277] are 18 independent service organizations (ISO's) that in the early 1980's began servicing Kodak copying and micrographic equipment. Kodak subsequently adopted policies to limit the availability [****8] of parts to ISO's and to make it more difficult for ISO's to compete with Kodak in servicing Kodak equipment.

[*456] Respondents instituted this action in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, alleging that Kodak's policies were unlawful under both § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended,

---

Solicitor General, and Christine Rosso, Senior Assistant Attorney General, Bonnie J. Campbell, Attorney General of Iowa, and John R. Perkins, Deputy Attorney General, Robert T. Stephan, Attorney General of Kansas, and Mary Ann Heckman, Assistant Attorney General, Frederic J. Cowan, Attorney General of Kentucky, and James M. Ringo, Assistant Attorney General, William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General of Louisiana, and Anne F. Benoit, Assistant Attorney General, Michael E. Carpenter, Attorney General of Maine, and Stephen L. Wessler, Deputy Attorney General, J. Joseph Curran, Jr., Attorney General of Maryland, and Robert N. McDonald and Ellen S. Cooper, Assistant Attorneys General, Scott Harshbarger, Attorney General of Massachusetts, and George K. Weber, Assistant Attorney General, Frank J. Kelley, Attorney General of Michigan, Hubert H. Humphrey III, Attorney General of Minnesota, Thomas F. Pursell, Deputy Attorney General, and James P. Spencer and Susan C. Gretz, Special Assistant Attorneys General, Frankie Sue Del Pappa, Attorney General of Nevada, and Rob Kirkman, Deputy Attorney General, Robert J. Del Tufo, Attorney General of New Jersey, and Laurel A. Price, Deputy Attorney General, Robert Abrams, Attorney General of New York, O. Peter Sherwood, Solicitor General, and George W. Sampson, Assistant Attorney General, Lacy H. Thornburg, Attorney General of North Carolina, James C. Gulick, Special Deputy Attorney General, and K. D. Sturgis, Assistant Attorney General, Dan Morales, Attorney General of Texas, Will Pryor, First Assistant Attorney General, Mary F. Keller, Deputy Attorney General, and Mark Tobey, Assistant Attorney General, R. Paul Van Dam, Attorney General of Utah, and Arthur M. Strong, Assistant Attorney General, Jeffrey L. Amestoy, Attorney General of Vermont, and Geoff Yudien, Assistant Attorney General, Kenneth O. Eikenberry, Attorney General of Washington, and Carol A. Smith, Assistant Attorney General, and Mario J. Palumbo, Attorney General of West Virginia, and Donna S. Quesenberry, Assistant Attorney General; for the Automotive Warehouse Distributors Association et al. by Donald A. Randall, Louis R. Marchese, Robert J. Verdisco, and Basil J. Mezines; for Bell Atlantic Business Systems Services, Inc., by Richard G. Taranto, Joel I. Klein, and John M. Kelleher; for Grumman Corporation by Patrick O. Killian; for the National Association of State Purchasing Officials et al. by Richard D. Monkman; for the National Office Machine Dealers Association et al. by Mark P. Cohen; for the National Retail Federation by Michael J. Altier; for Public Citizen by Alan B. Morrison; for State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. et al. by Melvin Spaeth, James F. Fitzpatrick, and Melvin C. Garbow.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed for the California State Electronics Association et al. by Richard I. Fine; for Computer Service Network International by Ronald S. Katz; and for the National Electronics Sales and Service Dealers Association by Ronald S. Katz.

15 U. S. C. §§ 1 and 2 (1988 ed., Supp. II). After truncated discovery, the District Court granted summary judgment for Kodak. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed. The appellate court found that respondents had presented sufficient evidence to raise a genuine issue concerning Kodak's market power in the service and parts markets. It rejected Kodak's contention that lack of market power in service and parts must be assumed when such power is absent in the equipment market. Because of the importance of the issue, we granted certiorari. 501 U.S. 1216 (1991).

I

A

LEdHN[3]↑ [3]Because this case comes to us on petitioner Kodak's motion for summary judgment, ["**2077"] "the evidence of [respondents] is to be believed, and [****9] all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in [their] favor." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986); Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). Mindful that respondents' version of any disputed issue of fact thus is presumed correct, we begin with the factual basis of respondents' claims. See Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 339, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982).

Kodak manufactures and sells complex business machines -- as relevant here, high-volume photocopiers and micrographic equipment.<sup>1</sup> Kodak equipment is unique; micrographic [*457] software programs that operate on Kodak machines, for example, are not compatible with competitors' machines. See App. 424-425, 487-489, 537. Kodak parts are not compatible with other manufacturers' equipment, and vice versa. See id., at 432, 413-415. Kodak equipment, although expensive when new, has little resale value. See id., at 358-359, 424-425, 427-428, 467, 505-506, 519-521. [****10]

Kodak provides service and parts for its machines to its customers. It produces some of the parts itself; the rest are made to order for Kodak by independent original-equipment manufacturers (OEM's). See id., at 429, 465, 490, 496. Kodak does not sell a complete system of original [***278] equipment, lifetime service, and lifetime parts for a single price. Instead, Kodak provides service after [****11] the initial warranty period either through annual service contracts, which include all necessary parts, or on a per-call basis. See id., at 98-99; Brief for Petitioner 3. It charges, through negotiations and bidding, different prices for equipment, service, and parts for different customers. See App. 420-421, 536. Kodak provides 80% to 95% of the service for Kodak machines. See id., at 430.

Beginning in the early 1980's, ISO's began repairing and servicing Kodak equipment. They also sold parts and reconditioned and sold used Kodak equipment. Their customers were federal, state, and local government agencies, banks, insurance companies, industrial enterprises, and providers of specialized copy and microfilming services. See id., at 417, 419-421, 492-493, 499, 516, 539. ISO's provide service at a price substantially lower than Kodak does. See id., at 414, 451, 453-454, 469, 474-475, 488, 493, 536-537; Lodging 133. Some customers found that the ISO service was of higher quality. See App. 425-426, 537-538.

[*458] Some ISO customers purchase their own parts and hire ISO's only for service. See Lodging 144-147. Others choose ISO's to supply both service and parts. [****12] See id., at 133. ISO's keep an inventory of parts, purchased from Kodak or other sources, primarily the OEM's.<sup>2</sup> See App. 99, 415-416, 490.

---

<sup>1</sup> Kodak's micrographic equipment includes four different product areas. The first is capture products such as microfilmers and electronic scanners, which compact an image and capture it on microfilm. The second is equipment such as microfilm viewers and viewer/printers. This equipment is used to retrieve the images. The third is Computer Output Microform (COM) recorders, which are data-processing peripherals that record computer-generated data onto microfilm. The fourth is Computer Assisted Retrieval (CAR) systems, which utilize computers to locate and retrieve micrographic images. See App. 156-158.

<sup>2</sup> In addition to the OEM's, other sources of Kodak parts include (1) brokers who would buy parts from Kodak, or strip used Kodak equipment to obtain the useful parts and resell them, (2) customers who buy parts from Kodak and make them available to ISO's, and (3) used equipment to be stripped for parts. See id., at 419, 517; Brief for Petitioner 38.

504 U.S. 451, *458; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2077; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***278; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****12

In 1985 and 1986, Kodak implemented a policy of selling replacement parts for micrographic and copying machines only to buyers of Kodak equipment who use Kodak service or repair their own machines. See Brief for Petitioner 6; App. 91-92, 98-100, 140-141, 171-172, 190, 442-447, 455-456, 483-484.

[**2078] As part of the same policy, Kodak sought to limit ISO access to other sources of Kodak parts. Kodak and the OEM's agreed that the OEM's would not sell parts that fit Kodak equipment to anyone other than Kodak. See [***13] id., at 417, 428-429, 447, 468, 474, 496. Kodak also pressured Kodak equipment owners and independent parts distributors not to sell Kodak parts to ISO's. See id., at 419-420, 428-429, 483-484, 517-518, 589-590. In addition, Kodak took steps to restrict the availability of used machines. See id., at 427-428, 465-466, 510-511, 520.

Kodak intended, through these policies, to make it more difficult for ISO's to sell service for Kodak machines. See id., at 106-107, 171, 516. It succeeded. ISO's were unable to obtain parts from reliable sources, see id., at 429, 468, 496, and many were forced out of business, while others lost substantial revenue. See id., at 422, 458-459, 464, 468, 475-477, 482-484, 495-496, 501, 521. Customers were forced to switch to Kodak service even though they preferred ISO service. See id., at 420-422.

[*459] B

In 1987, the ISO's filed the present [**279] action in the District Court, alleging, inter alia, that Kodak had unlawfully tied the sale of service for Kodak machines to the sale of parts, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and had unlawfully monopolized and attempted to monopolize the sale of service for [****14] Kodak machines, in violation of § 2 of that Act.<sup>3</sup>

Kodak filed a motion for summary judgment before respondents had initiated [****15] discovery. The District Court permitted respondents to file one set of interrogatories and one set of requests for production of documents and to take six depositions. Without a hearing, the District Court granted summary judgment in favor of Kodak. App. to Pet. for Cert. 29B.

As to the § 1 claim, the court found that respondents had provided no evidence of a tying arrangement between Kodak equipment and service or parts. See id., at 32B-33B. The court, however, did not address respondents' § 1 claim that is at issue here. Respondents allege a tying arrangement not between Kodak equipment and service, but between Kodak parts and service. As to the § 2 claim, the District Court concluded that although Kodak had a "natural monopoly over the market for parts it sells under its name," a unilateral refusal to sell those parts to ISO's did not violate § 2.

[*460] The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, by a divided vote, reversed. 903 F.2d 612 \(1990\). With respect to the § 1 claim, the court first found that whether service and parts were distinct markets and whether a tying arrangement existed between them were disputed issues of fact. Id., at 615-616. [****16] Having found that a tying arrangement might exist, the Court of Appeals considered a question not decided by the District Court: Was there "an issue of material fact as to whether Kodak has sufficient economic power in the tying product market [parts] to restrain competition appreciably in the tied product market [service]." Id., at 616. The court agreed with Kodak that competition in the equipment market might prevent Kodak from possessing power in the parts market, but refused

<sup>3</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Act states in relevant part: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U. S. C. § 1 \(1988 ed., Supp. II\).

Section 2 of the Sherman Act states: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." 15 U. S. C. § 2 \(1988 ed., Supp. II\).

504 U.S. 451, *460; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2078; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***279; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****16

to uphold the District Court's grant of summary judgment "on this theoretical basis" because [**2079] "market imperfections can keep economic theories about how consumers will act from mirroring reality." Id., at 617. Noting that the District Court had not considered the market power issue, and that the record was not fully developed through discovery, the court declined to require respondents to conduct market analysis or to pinpoint specific imperfections in order to [***280] withstand summary judgment.<sup>4</sup> "It is enough that [respondents] have presented evidence of actual events from which a reasonable trier of fact could conclude that . . . competition in [***17] the [equipment] market does not, in reality, curb Kodak's power in the parts market." Ibid.

[*461] The court then considered the three business justifications Kodak proffered for its restrictive parts policy: (1) to guard against inadequate service, (2) to lower inventory costs, and (3) to prevent ISO's from free-riding on Kodak's investment in the copier and micrographic industry. The court concluded that the trier of fact might find the product quality and inventory [***18] reasons to be pretextual and that there was a less restrictive alternative for achieving Kodak's quality-related goals. Id., at 618-619. The court also found Kodak's third justification, preventing ISO's from profiting on Kodak's investments in the equipment markets, legally insufficient. Id., at 619.

As to the § 2 claim, the Court of Appeals concluded that sufficient evidence existed to support a finding that Kodak's implementation of its parts policy was "anticompetitive" and "exclusionary" and "involved a specific intent to monopolize." Id., at 620. It held that the ISO's had come forward with sufficient evidence, for summary judgment purposes, to disprove Kodak's business justifications. Ibid.

The dissent in the Court of Appeals, with respect to the § 1 claim, accepted Kodak's argument that evidence of competition in the equipment market "necessarily precludes power in the derivative market." Id., at 622 (emphasis in original). With respect to the § 2 monopolization claim, the dissent concluded that, entirely apart from market power considerations, Kodak was entitled to summary judgment on the [***19] basis of its first business justification because it had "submitted extensive and undisputed evidence of a marketing strategy based on high-quality service." Id., at 623.

II

LEdHN[4] [4] HN1 A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 [*4621] (1958). HN2 Such an arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act if the seller has "appreciable economic power" in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market. Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 503, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 (1969).

[***20] LEdHN[1B] [1B] Kodak did not dispute that its arrangement affects a substantial [***281] volume of interstate commerce. It, however, did challenge whether its activities constituted a "tying arrangement" and whether Kodak exercised "appreciable economic power" in the tying market. We consider these issues in turn.

A

For respondents to defeat a motion for summary judgment on their claim of a tying [**2080] arrangement, a reasonable trier of fact must be able to find, first, that service and parts are two distinct products, and, second, that Kodak has tied the sale of the two products.

<sup>4</sup> Specifically, the Court of Appeals explained that the District Court had denied the request for further discovery made by respondents in their opposition to Kodak's summary judgment motion: "For example, [respondents] requested to depose two ISO customers who allegedly would not sign accurate statements concerning Kodak's market power in the parts market. Not finding it necessary to reach the market power issue in its decision, the district court, of course, had no reason to grant this request." 903 F.2d at 617, n. 4.

504 U.S. 451, *462; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2080; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***281; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****20

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5] For service and parts to be considered two distinct products, there must be sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide service separately from parts. Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 21-22, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). Evidence in the record indicates that service and parts have been sold separately in [****21] the past and still are sold separately to self-service equipment owners.<sup>5</sup> Indeed, the development of the entire high-technology service industry is evidence of the efficiency of a separate market for service.<sup>6</sup>

[*463] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6] Kodak insists that because there [****22] is no demand for parts separate from service, there cannot be separate markets for service and parts. Brief for Petitioner 15, n. 3. By that logic, we would be forced to conclude that there can never be separate markets, for example, for cameras and film, computers and software, or automobiles and tires. That is an assumption we are unwilling to make. "We have often found arrangements involving functionally linked products at least one of which is useless without the other to be prohibited tying devices." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19, n. 30.

[LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] Kodak's assertion also appears to be incorrect as a factual matter. At least some consumers would purchase service without parts, because some service does not require parts, and some consumers, those who self-service for example, would purchase parts without service.<sup>7</sup> Enough doubt is cast on Kodak's claim of a unified market that it should be resolved by the trier of fact.

[****23] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] Finally, respondents have presented sufficient evidence of a tie between service and parts. The record indicates that Kodak would sell [***282] parts to third parties only if they agreed not to buy service from ISO's.<sup>8</sup>

[*464] B

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9] [LEdHN\[10A\]](#) [10A] [****24] Having found sufficient evidence of a tying arrangement, we consider the other necessary feature of an illegal tying arrangement: appreciable economic power in the tying market. HN3 Market power is the power "to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14.<sup>9</sup> It has been defined as "the ability of [**2081] a single

<sup>5</sup> The Court of Appeals found: "Kodak's policy of allowing customers to purchase parts on condition that they agree to service their own machines suggests that the demand for parts can be separated from the demand for service." Id., at 616.

<sup>6</sup> Amicus briefs filed by various service organizations attest to the magnitude of the service business. See, e. g., Brief for Computer Service Network International as Amicus Curiae; Brief for National Electronics Sales and Service Dealers Association as Amicus Curiae; Brief for California State Electronics Association et al. as Amici Curiae; Brief for National Office Machine Dealers et al. as Amici Curiae.

<sup>7</sup> [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

The dissent suggests that parts and service are not separate products for tying purposes because all service may involve installation of parts. Post, at 494-495, n. 2. Because the record does not support this factual assertion, under the approach of both the Court and the concurrence in Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\), Kodak is not entitled to summary judgment on whether parts and service are distinct markets.

<sup>8</sup> [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

In a footnote, Kodak contends that this practice is only a unilateral refusal to deal, which does not violate the antitrust laws. See Brief for Petitioner 15, n. 4. Assuming, arguendo, that Kodak's refusal to sell parts to any company providing service can be characterized as a unilateral refusal to deal, its alleged sale of parts to third parties on condition that they buy service from Kodak is not. See 903 F.2d at 619.

<sup>9</sup> [****25] [LEdHN\[10B\]](#) [10B]

504 U.S. 451, *464; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2081; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***282; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****25

seller to raise price and restrict output." Fortner, 394 U.S. at 503; United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 \(1956\). The existence of such power ordinarily is inferred from the seller's possession of a predominant share of the market. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 17; United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\); Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611-613, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 \(1953\).

I

[LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F] Respondents contend that Kodak has more than sufficient power in the parts market to force unwanted purchases of the tied market, service. Respondents provide evidence that certain parts are available exclusively through Kodak. Respondents also assert that Kodak has control over the availability of parts it does not manufacture. According to respondents' evidence, Kodak [****26] has prohibited independent manufacturers from selling Kodak parts to ISO's, pressured Kodak equipment owners and independent parts distributors to deny ISO's the purchase of Kodak parts, and taken steps to restrict the availability of used machines.

[*465] Respondents also allege that Kodak's control over the parts market has excluded service competition, boosted service prices, and forced unwilling consumption of Kodak service. Respondents offer evidence that consumers have switched to Kodak service even though they preferred ISO service, that Kodak service was of higher price and lower quality than the preferred ISO service, and that ISO's were driven out of business by Kodak's policies. Under our prior precedents, this evidence would be sufficient to entitle respondents to a trial on their claim of market power.

2

[LEdHN\[1G\]](#) [1G] [LEdHN\[11A\]](#) [11A] [LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [12A] Kodak counters that even if it concedes monopoly share [***283] of the relevant parts market, it cannot actually exercise [****27] the necessary market power for a Sherman Act violation. This is so, according to Kodak, because competition exists in the equipment market.<sup>10</sup> Kodak argues that it could not have [*466] the ability to raise prices of service and parts above the level that would be charged in a competitive market because any increase in profits from a higher price in the

"The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such 'forcing' is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12.

<sup>10</sup> In their brief and at oral argument, respondents argued that Kodak's market share figures for high-volume copy machines, CAR systems, and micrographic-capture equipment demonstrate Kodak's market power in the equipment market. Brief for Respondents 16-18, 32-33; Tr. of Oral Arg. 28-31.

In the Court of Appeals, however, respondents did not contest Kodak's assertion that its market shares indicated a competitive equipment market. The Court of Appeals believed that respondents "do not dispute Kodak's assertion that it lacks market power in the [equipment] markets." 903 F.2d at 616, n. 3. Nor did respondents question Kodak's asserted lack of market power in their brief in opposition to the petition for certiorari, although they acknowledged that Kodak's entire case rested on its understanding that respondents were not disputing the existence of competition in the equipment market. Brief in Opposition 8.

[LEdHN\[11B\]](#) [11B] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [12B] Recognizing that HN4 [1] on summary judgment we may examine the record de novo without relying on the lower courts' understanding, United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, 655, 8 L. Ed. 2d 176, 82 S. Ct. 993 \(1962\), respondents now ask us to decline to reach the merits of the questions presented in the petition, and instead to affirm the Ninth Circuit's judgment based on the factual dispute over market power in the equipment market. We decline respondents' invitation. We stated in Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 U.S. 808, 816, 85 L. Ed. 2d 791, 105 S. Ct. 2427 \(1985\): "Our decision to grant certiorari represents a commitment of scarce judicial resources with a view to deciding the merits of one or more of the questions presented in the petition." Because respondents failed to bring their objections to the premise underlying the questions presented to our attention in their opposition to the petition for certiorari, we decide those questions based on the same premise as the Court of Appeals, namely, that competition exists in the equipment market.

504 U.S. 451, *466; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2081; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***283; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****27

aftermarkets at least would be offset by a corresponding loss in profits from lower equipment sales [**2082] as consumers began purchasing equipment with more attractive service costs.

[****28] Kodak does not present any actual data on the equipment, service, or parts markets. Instead, it urges the adoption of a substantive legal rule that "equipment competition precludes any finding of monopoly power in derivative aftermarkets." Brief for Petitioner 33. Kodak argues that such a rule would satisfy its burden as the moving party of showing "that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact" on the market power issue.<sup>11</sup> See Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 56\(c\).

[****29] [LEdHN\[13\]](#) [↑] [13]HN5 [↑] Legal presumptions that rest on formalistic distinctions rather than actual market realities are generally [**284] disfavored [*467] in antitrust law. This Court has preferred to resolve antitrust claims on a case-by-case basis, focusing on the "particular facts disclosed by the record." Maple Flooring Manufacturers Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 563, 579, 45 S. Ct. 578, 69 L. Ed. 1093 (1925); Du Pont, 351 U.S. at 395, n. 22; Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 70, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977) (WHITE, J., concurring in judgment).<sup>12</sup> [****30] In determining the existence of market power, and specifically the "responsiveness of the sales of one product to price changes of the other," Du Pont, 351 U.S. at 400; see also id., at 394-395, and 400-401, this Court has examined closely the economic reality of the market at issue.<sup>13</sup>

Kodak contends that there is no need to examine the facts when the issue is market power in the aftermarkets. A legal presumption against a finding of market power is warranted in this situation, according to Kodak, because the existence of market power in the service and parts markets absent power in the equipment market "simply makes no economic sense," and the absence of a legal presumption would deter procompetitive [****31] behavior. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587; id., at 594-595.

Kodak analogizes this case to Matsushita, where a group of American corporations that manufactured or sold consumer electronic products alleged that their 21 Japanese counterparts were engaging in a 20-year conspiracy to price [*468] below cost in the United States in the hope of expanding their market [**2083] share sometime in the future. After several years of detailed discovery, the defendants moved for summary judgment. Id., at 577-582. Because the defendants had every incentive not to engage in the alleged conduct which required them to sustain losses for decades with no foreseeable profits, the Court found an "absence of any rational motive to conspire." Id., at 597. In that context, the Court determined that the plaintiffs' theory of predatory pricing made no practical sense, <sup>11</sup> Kodak argues that such a rule would be per se, with no opportunity for respondents to rebut the conclusion that market power is lacking in the parts market. See Brief for Petitioner 30-31 ("There is nothing that respondents could prove that would overcome Kodak's conceded lack of market power"); id., at 30 (discovery is "pointless" once the "dispositive fact" of lack of market power in the equipment market is conceded); id., at 22 (Kodak's lack of market power in the equipment market "dooms any attempt to extract monopoly profits" even in an allegedly imperfect market); id., at 25 (it is "impossible" for Kodak to make more total profit by overcharging its existing customers for service).

As an apparent second-best alternative, Kodak suggests elsewhere in its brief that the rule would permit a defendant to meet its summary judgment burden under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56\(c\); the burden would then shift to the plaintiffs to "prove . . . that there is specific reason to believe that normal economic reasoning does not apply." Brief for Petitioner 30. This is the United States' position. See Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 10-11.

<sup>12</sup> See generally Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723-726, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988); FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 458-459, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 (1986); National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 100-104, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984); Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. at 59.

<sup>13</sup> See, e. g., Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 26-29; United States v. Connecticut National Bank, 418 U.S. 656, 661-666, 41 L. Ed. 2d 1016, 94 S. Ct. 2788 (1974); United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571-576, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966); International Boxing Club of New York, Inc. v. United States, 358 U.S. 242, 250-251, 3 L. Ed. 2d 270, 79 S. Ct. 245 (1959); see also Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 37, n. 6 (O'CONNOR, J., concurring) (citing cases and describing the careful consideration the Court gives to the particular facts when determining market power).

504 U.S. 451, *468; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2083; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***284; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****31

was "speculative," and was not "reasonable." Id., at 588, 590, 593, 595, 597. Accordingly, the Court held that a reasonable jury could not return a verdict for the plaintiffs and that summary judgment would be appropriate against them unless they [****32] came forward with more persuasive evidence to support their [***285] theory. Id., at 587-588, 595-598.

LEdHN[14] [14]The Court's requirement in Matsushita that the plaintiffs' claims make economic sense did not introduce a special burden on plaintiffs facing summary judgment in antitrust cases. The Court did not hold that if the moving party enunciates any economic theory supporting its behavior, regardless of its accuracy in reflecting the actual market, it is entitled to summary judgment. Matsushita demands only that the nonmoving party's inferences be reasonable in order to reach the jury, a requirement that was not invented, but merely articulated, in that decision.<sup>14</sup> If the plaintiff's theory is economically [*469] senseless, no reasonable jury could find in its favor, and summary judgment should be granted.

[****33] LEdHN[1H] [1H]Kodak, then, bears a substantial burden in showing that it is entitled to summary judgment. It must show that despite evidence of increased prices and excluded competition, an inference of market power is unreasonable. To determine whether Kodak has met that burden, we must unravel the factual assumptions underlying its proposed rule that lack of power in the equipment market necessarily precludes power in the aftermarkets.

LEdHN[15A] [15A]The extent to which one market prevents exploitation of another market depends on the extent to which consumers will change their consumption of one product in response to a price change in another, i.e., the "cross-elasticity of demand." See Du Pont, 351 U.S. at 400; P. Areeda & L. Kaplow, Antitrust Analysis P342(c) (4th ed. 1988).<sup>15</sup> [****35] Kodak's [*470] [***286] proposed rule rests [**2084] on a factual assumption about the cross-elasticity of demand in the equipment and aftermarkets: "If Kodak raised its parts or service prices above competitive levels, potential [****34] customers would simply stop buying Kodak equipment. Perhaps Kodak would be able to increase short term profits through such a strategy, but at a devastating cost to its long term interests."<sup>16</sup> Brief for Petitioner 12. Kodak argues that the Court should accept, as a matter of law, this

<sup>14</sup> See, e. g., Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986) ("Summary judgment will not lie . . . if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party"); Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 768, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984) (to survive summary judgment there must be evidence that "reasonably tends to prove" plaintiff's theory); First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 288-289, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 88 S. Ct. 1575 (1968) (defendant meets his burden under Rule 56(c) when he "conclusively show[s] that the facts upon which [the plaintiff] relied to support his allegation were not susceptible of the interpretation which he sought to give them"); Eastman Kodak Co. of New York v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U.S. 359, 375, 71 L. Ed. 684, 47 S. Ct. 400 (1927). See also H. L. Hayden Co. of New York, Inc. v. Siemens Medical Systems, Inc., 879 F.2d 1005, 1012 (CA2 1989) ("Only reasonable inferences can be drawn from the evidence in favor of the nonmoving party") (emphasis in original); Arnold Pontiac-GMC, Inc. v. Budd Baer, Inc., 826 F.2d 1335, 1339 (CA3 1987) (Matsushita directs us "to consider whether the inference of conspiracy is reasonable"); Instructional Systems Development Corp. v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., 817 F.2d 639, 646 (CA10 1987) (summary judgment not appropriate under Matsushita when defendants "could reasonably have been economically motivated").

<sup>15</sup> What constrains the defendant's ability to raise prices in the service market is "the elasticity of demand faced by the defendant -- the degree to which its sales fall . . . as its price rises." Areeda & Kaplow P342(c), p. 576.

LEdHN[15B] [15B]Courts usually have considered the relationship between price in one market and demand in another in defining the relevant market. Because market power is often inferred from market share, market definition generally determines the result of the case. Pitofsky, New Definitions of Relevant Market and the Assault on Antitrust, 90 Colum. L. Rev. 1805, 1806-1813 (1990). Kodak chose to focus on market power directly rather than arguing that the relationship between equipment and service and parts is such that the three should be included in the same market definition. Whether considered in the conceptual category of "market definition" or "market power," the ultimate inquiry is the same -- whether competition in the equipment market will significantly restrain power in the service and parts markets.

<sup>16</sup> The United States as amicus curiae in support of Kodak echoes this argument: "The ISOs' claims are implausible because Kodak lacks market power in the markets for its copier and micrographic equipment. Buyers of such equipment regard an

"basic economic reality," id., at 24, that competition in the equipment market necessarily prevents market power in the aftermarkets.<sup>17</sup>

Even if Kodak could not raise the price of service and parts one cent without [****36] losing equipment sales, that fact would not disprove market power in the aftermarkets. The sales of even a monopolist are reduced when it sells goods at a monopoly price, but the higher price more than compensates for the loss in sales. Areeda & Kaplow PP112 and 340(a). Kodak's claim that charging more for service and parts would be "a short-run game," Brief for Petitioner 26, is based on the false dichotomy that there are only two prices [*471] that can be charged -- a competitive price or a ruinous one. But there could easily be a middle, optimum price at which the increased revenues from the higher priced sales of service and parts would more than compensate for the lower revenues from lost equipment sales. The fact that the equipment market imposes a restraint on prices in the after-markets by no means disproves the existence of power in those markets. See Areeda & Kaplow P340(b) ("The existence of significant substitution in the event of further price increases or even at the current price does not tell us whether the defendant already exercises significant market power") (emphasis in original). Thus, contrary to Kodak's assertion, there is no immutable physical [****37] law -- no "basic economic reality" -- insisting that competition in the equipment market cannot coexist with market power in the aftermarkets.

We next consider the more narrowly drawn question: Does Kodak's theory describe actual market behavior so accurately that respondents' assertion of Kodak market power in the aftermarkets, if not impossible, is at least unreasonable?<sup>18</sup> Cf. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio [*2085] Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986).

[****38] [*472] [***287] To review Kodak's theory, it contends that higher service prices will lead to a disastrous drop in equipment sales. Presumably, the theory's corollary is to the effect that low service prices lead to a dramatic increase in equipment sales. According to the theory, one would have expected Kodak to take advantage of lower priced ISO service as an opportunity to expand equipment sales. Instead, Kodak adopted a restrictive sales policy consciously designed to eliminate the lower priced ISO service, an act that would be expected to devastate either Kodak's equipment sales or Kodak's faith in its theory. Yet, according to the record, it has done neither. Service prices have risen for Kodak customers, but there is no evidence or assertion that Kodak equipment sales have dropped.

Kodak and the United States attempt to reconcile Kodak's theory with the contrary actual results by describing a "marketing strategy of spreading over time the total cost to the buyer of Kodak equipment." Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 18; see also Brief for Petitioner 18. In other words, Kodak could charge subcompetitive prices for increase in the price of parts or service as an increase in the price of the equipment, and sellers recognize that the revenues from sales of parts and service are attributable to sales of the equipment. In such circumstances, it is not apparent how an equipment manufacturer such as Kodak could exercise power in the aftermarkets for parts and service." Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 8.

<sup>17</sup> It is clearly true, as the United States claims, that Kodak "cannot set service or parts prices without regard to the impact on the market for equipment." Id., at 20. The fact that the cross-elasticity of demand is not zero proves nothing; the disputed issue is how much of an impact an increase in parts and service prices has on equipment sales and on Kodak's profits.

<sup>18</sup> Although Kodak repeatedly relies on Continental T. V. as support for its factual assertion that the equipment market will prevent exploitation of the service and parts markets, the case is inapposite. In Continental T. V., the Court found that a manufacturer's policy restricting the number of retailers that were permitted to sell its product could have a procompetitive effect. See 433 U.S. at 55. The Court also noted that any negative effect of exploitation of the intrabrand market (the competition between retailers of the same product) would be checked by competition in the interbrand market (competition over the same generic product) because consumers would substitute a different brand of the same product. Unlike Continental T. V., this case does not concern vertical relationships between parties on different levels of the same distribution chain. In the relevant market, service, Kodak and the ISO's are direct competitors; their relationship is horizontal. The interbrand competition at issue here is competition over the provision of service. Despite petitioner's best effort, repeating the mantra "interbrand competition" does not transform this case into one over an agreement the manufacturer has with its dealers that would fall under the rubric of Continental T. V.

equipment and make up the difference with [***39] supracompetitive prices for service, resulting in an overall competitive price. This pricing strategy would provide an explanation for the theory's descriptive failings -- if Kodak in fact had adopted it. But Kodak never has asserted that it prices its equipment or parts subcompetitively and recoups its profits through service. Instead, it claims that it prices its equipment comparably to its competitors and intends that both its equipment sales and service divisions be profitable. See App. 159-161, 170, 178, 188. Moreover, this hypothetical pricing strategy is inconsistent with Kodak's policy toward its self-service customers. If Kodak were underpricing its equipment, hoping to lock in customers and recover its losses in the service [*473] market, it could not afford to sell customers parts without service. In sum, Kodak's theory does not explain the actual market behavior revealed in the record.

Respondents offer a forceful reason why Kodak's theory, although perhaps intuitively appealing, may not accurately explain the behavior of the primary and derivative markets for complex durable goods: the existence of significant information and switching costs. These costs could create [***40] a less responsive connection between service and parts prices and equipment sales.

For the service-market price to [***288] affect equipment demand, consumers must inform themselves of the total cost of the "package" -- equipment, service, and parts -- at the time of purchase; that is, consumers must engage in accurate lifecycle pricing.<sup>19</sup> [***41] Life-cycle pricing of complex, durable equipment is difficult and costly. In order to arrive at an accurate price, a consumer must acquire a substantial amount of raw data and undertake sophisticated analysis. The necessary information would include data on price, quality, and availability of products needed to operate, upgrade, or enhance the initial equipment, as well as service and repair costs, including estimates of breakdown frequency, nature of repairs, price of service and parts, length of "downtime," and losses incurred from downtime.<sup>20</sup>

[**2086] Much of this information is difficult -- some of it impossible -- to acquire at the time of purchase. During the life of a product, companies may change the service and parts prices, and develop products with more advanced features, a [*474] decreased need for repair, or new warranties. In addition, the information is likely to be customer specific; lifecycle costs will vary from customer to customer with the type of equipment, degrees of equipment use, and costs of downtime.

LEdHN[16] [16]Kodak acknowledges the cost of information, but suggests, again without evidentiary support, that customer information needs will be satisfied by competitors in the equipment markets. [***42] Brief for Petitioner 26, n. 11. It is a question of fact, however, whether competitors would provide the necessary information. A competitor in the equipment market may not have reliable information about the lifecycle costs of complex equipment it does not service or the needs of customers it does not serve. Even if competitors had the relevant information, it is not clear that their interests would be advanced by providing such information to consumers. See 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law P404b1 (1978).<sup>21</sup>

<sup>19</sup> See Craswell, Tying Requirements in Competitive Markets: The Consumer Protection Issues, 62 B. U. L. Rev. 661, 676 (1982); Beales, Craswell, & Salop, The Efficient Regulation of Consumer Information, 24 J. Law & Econ. 491, 509-511 (1981); Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 15.

<sup>20</sup> In addition, of course, in order to price accurately the equipment, a consumer would need initial purchase information such as prices, features, quality, and available warranties for different machinery with different capabilities, and residual value information such as the longevity of product use and its potential resale or trade-in value.

<sup>21</sup> To inform consumers about Kodak, the competitor must be willing to forgo the opportunity to reap supracompetitive prices in its own service and parts markets. The competitor may anticipate that charging lower service and parts prices and informing consumers about Kodak in the hopes of gaining future equipment sales will cause Kodak to lower the price on its service and parts, canceling any gains in equipment sales to the competitor and leaving both worse off. Thus, in an equipment market with relatively few sellers, competitors may find it more profitable to adopt Kodak's service and parts policy than to inform the consumers. See 2 Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law P404b1; App. 177 (Kodak, Xerox, and IBM together have nearly 100% of relevant market).

[****43] Moreover, even if consumers were capable of acquiring and processing the complex body of information, they may choose not to do so. Acquiring [***289] the information is expensive. If the costs of service are small relative to the equipment price, or if consumers are more concerned about equipment capabilities than service costs, they may not find it cost efficient to [*475] compile the information. Similarly, some consumers, such as the Federal Government, have purchasing systems that make it difficult to consider the complete cost of the "package" at the time of purchase. State and local governments often treat service as an operating expense and equipment as a capital expense, delegating each to a different department. These governmental entities do not lifecycle price, but rather choose the lowest price in each market. See Brief for National Association of State Purchasing Officials et al. as Amici Curiae; Brief for State of Ohio et al. as Amici Curiae; App. 429-430.

As Kodak notes, there likely will be some large-volume, sophisticated purchasers who will undertake the comparative studies and insist, in return for their patronage, that Kodak charge them competitive [****44] lifecycle prices. Kodak contends that these knowledgeable customers will hold down the package price for all other customers. Brief for Petitioner 23, n. 9. There are reasons, however, to doubt that sophisticated purchasers will ensure that competitive prices are charged to unsophisticated purchasers, too. As an initial matter, if the number of sophisticated customers is relatively small, the amount of profits to be gained by suprareactive pricing in the service market could make it profitable to let the knowledgeable consumers take their business elsewhere. More importantly, if a company is able to price discriminate between sophisticated and unsophisticated consumers, the sophisticated will be unable to prevent the exploitation of [**2087] the uninformed. A seller could easily price discriminate by varying the equipment/parts/service package, developing different warranties, or offering price discounts on different components.

LEdHN[17] [17] Given the potentially high cost of information and the possibility that a seller may be able to price discriminate between knowledgeable and unsophisticated consumers, [***45] it makes little sense to assume, in the absence of any evidentiary support, that equipment-purchasing decisions are based [*476] on an accurate assessment of the total cost of equipment, service, and parts over the lifetime of the machine.<sup>22</sup>

Indeed, respondents have presented evidence that Kodak practices price discrimination by selling parts to customers who service their own equipment, but refusing to sell parts to customers who hire third-party service companies. Companies that have their own service staff are likely to be highvolume users, the same companies for whom it is most likely to be economically worthwhile to acquire the complex information needed for comparative [***46] lifecycle pricing.

A second factor undermining Kodak's claim that suprareactive prices in the service market lead to ruinous losses in equipment sales is [***290] the cost to current owners of switching to a different product. See Areeda & Turner P519a.<sup>23</sup> If the cost of switching is high, consumers who already have purchased the equipment, and are thus "locked in," will tolerate some level of service-price increases before changing equipment brands. Under this scenario, a seller profitably could maintain suprareactive prices in the aftermarket if the switching costs were high relative to the increase in service prices, and the number of locked-in customers were high relative to the number of new purchasers.

Moreover, if the seller can price discriminate between its locked-in customers and potential new customers, this strategy [***47] is even more likely to prove profitable. The seller could simply charge new customers below-

Even in a market with many sellers, any one competitor may not have sufficient incentive to inform consumers because the increased patronage attributable to the corrected consumer beliefs will be shared among other competitors. Beales, Craswell, & Salop, 24 J. Law & Econ., at 503-504, 506.

<sup>22</sup> See Salop & Stiglitz, Bargains and Ripoffs: A Model of Monopolistically Competitive Price Dispersion, 44 Rev. Econ. Studies 493 (1977); Salop, Information and Market Structure -- Information and Monopolistic Competition, 66 Am. Econ. Rev. 240 (1976); Stigler, The Economics of Information, 69 J. Pol. Econ. 213 (1961).

<sup>23</sup> A firm can exact leverage whenever other equipment is not a ready substitute. F. Scherer & D. Ross, Industrial Market Structure and Economic Performance 16-17 (3d ed. 1990).

marginal cost on the equipment and recoup the charges in service, or offer packages [*477] with lifetime warranties or long-term service agreements that are not available to locked-in customers.

Respondents have offered evidence that the heavy initial outlay for Kodak equipment, combined with the required support material that works only with Kodak equipment, makes switching costs very high for existing Kodak customers. And Kodak's own evidence confirms that it varies the package price of equipment/parts/service for different customers.

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18] In sum, there is a question of fact whether information costs and switching costs foil the simple assumption that the equipment and service markets act as pure complements to one another.<sup>24</sup>

[****48] [LEdHN\[11\]](#) [11] We conclude, then, that Kodak has failed to demonstrate that respondents' inference of market power in the service and parts markets is unreasonable, and that, consequently, Kodak is entitled to summary judgment. It [**2088] is clearly reasonable to infer that Kodak has market power to raise prices and drive out competition in the aftermarkets, since respondents offer direct evidence that Kodak did so.<sup>25</sup> It is also plausible, as discussed above, to infer that Kodak chose to gain immediate profits by exerting that market power where locked-in customers, high information costs, and discriminatory pricing limited and perhaps eliminated any longterm [*478] loss. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to respondents, their allegations of market power "make . . . economic sense." Cf. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587.

[****49] [***291] [LEdHN\[19\]](#) [19] Nor are we persuaded by Kodak's contention that it is entitled to a legal presumption on the lack of market power because, as in Matsushita, there is a significant risk of deterring procompetitive conduct. Plaintiffs in Matsushita attempted to prove the antitrust conspiracy "through evidence of rebates and other price-cutting activities." Id., at 594. Because cutting prices to increase business is "the very essence of competition," the Court was concerned that mistaken inferences would be "especially costly" and would "chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." Ibid. See also Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\) (permitting inference of concerted action would "deter or penalize perfectly legitimate conduct"). But the facts in this case are just the opposite. The alleged conduct -- higher service prices and market foreclosure -- is facially anticompetitive and exactly the harm that antitrust laws aim to prevent. In this situation, Matsushita does not create [****50] any presumption in favor of summary judgment for the defendant.

[LEdHN\[20\]](#) [20] Kodak contends that, despite the appearance of anticompetitiveness, its behavior actually favors competition because its ability to pursue innovative marketing plans will allow it to compete more effectively in the equipment market. Brief for Petitioner 40-41. A pricing strategy based on lower equipment prices and higher aftermarket prices could enhance equipment sales by making it easier for the buyer to finance the initial purchase.<sup>26</sup> It is undisputed that competition is enhanced when a firm is able to offer various marketing options, including bundling of support and maintenance service with the sale of equipment. Nor do such actions [*479] run afoul of

---

<sup>24</sup> The dissent disagrees based on its hypothetical case of a tie between equipment and service. "The only thing lacking" to bring this case within the hypothetical case, states the dissent, "is concrete evidence that the restrictive parts policy was . . . generally known." Post, at 492. But the dissent's "only thing lacking" is the crucial thing lacking -- evidence. Whether a tie between parts and service should be treated identically to a tie between equipment and service, as the dissent and Kodak argue, depends on whether the equipment market prevents the exertion of market power in the parts market. Far from being "anomalous," post, at 492-493, requiring Kodak to provide evidence on this factual question is completely consistent with our prior precedent. See, e.g., n. 13, supra.

<sup>25</sup> Cf. Instructional Systems, 817 F.2d at 646 (finding the conspiracy reasonable under Matsushita because its goals were in fact achieved).

<sup>26</sup> It bears repeating that in this case Kodak has never claimed that it is in fact pursuing such a pricing strategy.

504 U.S. 451, *479; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2088; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***291; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****50

the antitrust laws.<sup>27</sup> [****51] But the procompetitive effect of the specific conduct challenged here, eliminating all consumer parts and service options, is far less clear.<sup>28</sup>

We need not decide whether Kodak's behavior has any procompetitive effects and, if so, whether they outweigh the anticompetitive effects. We note only that Kodak's service and parts policy is simply not one that appears always or almost always to enhance competition, and therefore to warrant a legal presumption without any evidence of its actual economic impact. In this case, when we weigh the risk of deterring procompetitive behavior by proceeding to trial against the risk that illegal behavior will go unpunished, the balance tips against summary judgment. [***292] [**2089] Cf. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 594-595.

[LEdHN\[1J\]](#) [↑] [1J] [LEdHN\[21A\]](#) [↑] [21A] For the foregoing [****52] reasons, we hold that Kodak has not met the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c). We therefore affirm the denial of summary judgment on respondents' § 1 claim.<sup>29</sup>

---

<sup>27</sup> See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12 ("Buyers often find package sales attractive; a seller's decision to offer such packages can merely be an attempt to compete effectively -- conduct that is entirely consistent with the Sherman Act"). See also Yates & DiResta, Software Support and Hardware Maintenance Practices: Tying Considerations, The Computer Lawyer, Vol. 8, No. 6, p. 17 (1991) (describing various service and parts policies that enhance quality and sales but do not violate the antitrust laws).

<sup>28</sup> Two of the largest consumers of service and parts contend that they are worse off when the equipment manufacturer also controls service and parts. See Brief for State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. et al. as Amici Curiae; Brief for State of Ohio et al. as Amici Curiae.

<sup>29</sup> [LEdHN\[21B\]](#) [↑] [21B]

The dissent urges a radical departure in this Court's antitrust law. It argues that because Kodak has only an "inherent" monopoly in parts for its equipment, post, at 489-490, the antitrust laws do not apply to its efforts to expand that power into other markets. The dissent's proposal to grant per se immunity to manufacturers competing in the service market would exempt a vast and growing sector of the economy from antitrust laws. Leaving aside the question whether the Court has the authority to make such a policy decision, there is no support for it in our jurisprudence or the evidence in this case.

Even assuming, despite the absence of any proof from the dissent, that all manufacturers possess some inherent market power in the parts market, it is not clear why that should immunize them from the antitrust laws in another market. The Court has held many times that HN6 [↑] power gained through some natural and legal advantage such as a patent, copyright, or business acumen can give rise to liability if "a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next." Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953); see, e. g., Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958); United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 92 L. Ed. 1260, 68 S. Ct. 915 (1948); Leitch Mfg. Co. v. Barber Co., 302 U.S. 458, 463, 82 L. Ed. 371, 58 S. Ct. 288 (1938). Moreover, on the occasions when the Court has considered tying in derivative aftermarkets by manufacturers, it has not adopted any exception to the usual antitrust analysis, treating derivative aftermarkets as it has every other separate market. See International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 92 L. Ed. 20, 68 S. Ct. 12 (1947); International Business Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U.S. 131, 80 L. Ed. 1085, 56 S. Ct. 701 (1936); United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States, 258 U.S. 451, 66 L. Ed. 708, 42 S. Ct. 363 (1922). Our past decisions are reason enough to reject the dissent's proposal. See Patterson v. McLean Credit Union, 491 U.S. 164, 172-173, 105 L. Ed. 2d 132, 109 S. Ct. 2363 (1989) ("Considerations of stare decisis have special force in the area of statutory interpretation, for here, unlike in the context of constitutional interpretation, the legislative power is implicated, and Congress remains free to alter what we have done").

Nor does the record in this case support the dissent's proposed exemption for aftermarkets. The dissent urges its exemption because the tie here "does not permit the manufacturer to project power over a class of consumers distinct from that which it is already able to exploit (and fully) without the inconvenience of the tie." Post, at 498. Beyond the dissent's obvious difficulty in explaining why Kodak would adopt this expensive tying policy if it could achieve the same profits more conveniently through some other means, respondents offer an alternative theory, supported by the record, that suggests Kodak is able to exploit some customers who in the absence of the tie would be protected from increases in parts prices by knowledgeable customers. See supra, at 475-476.

[****53] [*480] III

[LEdHN\[22A\]](#) [↑] [22A] Respondents also claim that they have presented genuine issues for trial as to whether Kodak has monopolized, or attempted [*481] to monopolize, the service and parts markets in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. HN7 [↑] "The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development [***293] as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. at 570-571.

A

[LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [↑] [2B] [LEdHN\[23\]](#) [↑] [23] The existence of the first element, possession of monopoly power, is easily resolved. As has been noted, respondents have presented a triable claim that service and parts are separate markets, and that Kodak [**2090] [****54] has the "power to control prices or exclude competition" in service and parts. Du Pont, 351 U.S. at 391. HN8 [↑] Monopoly power under § 2 requires, of course, something greater than market power under § 1. See Fortner, 394 U.S. at 502. Respondents' evidence that Kodak controls nearly 100% of the parts market and 80% to 95% of the service market, with no readily available substitutes, is, however, sufficient to survive summary judgment under the more stringent monopoly standard of § 2. See National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 112, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 \(1984\). Cf. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. at 571 (87% of the market is a monopoly); American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 797, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 \(1946\) (over two-thirds of the market is a monopoly).

[LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [↑] [2C] [LEdHN\[24\]](#) [↑] [24] [****55] Kodak also contends that, as a matter of law, a single brand of a product or service can never be a relevant market under the Sherman Act. We disagree. The relevant market [*482] for antitrust purposes is determined by the choices available to Kodak equipment owners. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19. Because service and parts for Kodak equipment are not interchangeable with other manufacturers' service and parts, the relevant market from the Kodak equipment owner's perspective is composed of only those companies that service Kodak machines. See Du Pont, 351 U.S. at 404 HN9 [↑] ("The market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability").<sup>30</sup> This Court's prior cases support the proposition that in some instances one brand of a product can constitute a separate market. See National Collegiate Athletic Assn., 468 U.S. at 101-102, 111-112; International Boxing Club of New York, Inc. v. United States, 358 U.S. 242, 249-252, 3 L. Ed. 2d 270, 79 S. Ct. 245 \(1959\); International Business Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U.S. 131, 80 L. Ed. 1085, 56 S. Ct. 701 \(1936\). [****56]<sup>31</sup> The [***294] proper market definition in this case can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the "commercial realities" faced by consumers. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. at 572.

---

At bottom, whatever the ultimate merits of the dissent's theory, at this point it is mere conjecture. Neither Kodak nor the dissent have provided any evidence refuting respondents' theory of forced unwanted purchases at higher prices and price discrimination. While it may be, as the dissent predicts, that the equipment market will prevent any harms to consumers in the aftermarkets, the dissent never makes plain why the Court should accept that theory on faith rather than requiring the usual evidence needed to win a summary judgment motion.

<sup>30</sup> Kodak erroneously contends that this Court in Du Pont rejected the notion that a relevant market could be limited to one brand. Brief for Petitioner 33. The Court simply held in Du Pont that one brand does not necessarily constitute a relevant market if substitutes are available. 351 U.S. at 393. See also Boxing Club, 358 U.S. at 249-250. Here respondents contend there are no substitutes.

<sup>31</sup> Other courts have limited the market to parts for a particular brand of equipment. See, e. g., International Logistics Group, Ltd. v. Chrysler Corp., 884 F.2d 904, 905, 908 \(CA6 1989\) (parts for Chrysler cars is the relevant market), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1066, 108 L. Ed. 2d 784, 110 S. Ct. 1783 \(1990\); Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473, 1480-1481, n. 3 \(CA9 1986\), modified, 810 F.2d 1517 \(1987\) (service for Bell & Howell equipment is the relevant market); In re General Motors Corp., 99 F. T. C. 464, 554, 584 \(1982\) (crash parts for General Motors cars is the relevant market); Heattransfer Corp. v. Volkswagenwerk A.G., 553 F.2d 964 \(CA5 1977\) (air conditioners for Volkswagens is the relevant market), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1087, 55 L. Ed. 2d 792, 98 S. Ct. 1282 \(1978\).

[****57] B

[LEdHN\[22B\]](#) [↑] [22B] [LEdHN\[25A\]](#) [↑] [25A] The second element of a § 2 claim is the use of monopoly power "to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, [*483] or to destroy a competitor." United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107, 92 L. Ed. 1236, 68 S. Ct. 941 \(1948\). If Kodak adopted its parts and service policies as part of a scheme of willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power, it will have violated § 2. [Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. at 570-571; United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 432 \(CA2 1945\); Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 600-605, 86 L. Ed. 1\*\*2091\] 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 \(1985\)](#).<sup>32</sup>

[****58] [LEdHN\[2D\]](#) [↑] [2D] [LEdHN\[26\]](#) [↑] [26] As recounted at length above, respondents have presented evidence that Kodak took exclusionary action to maintain its parts monopoly and used its control over parts to strengthen its monopoly share of the Kodak service market. Liability turns, then, on whether "valid business reasons" can explain Kodak's actions. Id., at 605; United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d at 432. Kodak contends that it has three valid business justifications for its actions: "(1) to promote interbrand equipment competition by allowing Kodak to stress the quality of its service; (2) to improve asset management by reducing Kodak's inventory costs; and (3) to prevent ISOs from free-riding on Kodak's capital investment in equipment, parts and service." Brief for Petitioner 6. Factual questions exist, however, about the validity and sufficiency of each claimed justification, making summary judgment inappropriate.

[LEdHN\[27\]](#) [↑] [27] Kodak [****59] first asserts that by preventing customers from using ISO's, "it [can] best maintain high quality service for its sophisticated equipment" and avoid being "blamed for an equipment malfunction, even if the problem is the result of improper diagnosis, maintenance or repair by an ISO." Id., at 6-7. Respondents have offered evidence that ISO's provide quality service and are preferred by some Kodak equipment owners. This is sufficient to raise a genuine issue of [*484] fact. See International Business Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U.S. at 139-140 (rejecting IBM's claim that it had to control the cards used in its machines to avoid "injury to the reputation of the machines and the good will of" IBM in the absence of proof that other companies could not make quality cards); International \*\*\*295 Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 397-398, 92 L. Ed. 2d 20, 68 S. Ct. 12 \(1947\) (rejecting International Salt's claim that it had to control the supply of salt to protect its leased machines in the absence of proof that competitors could not supply salt of equal quality).

Moreover, there are other reasons to question Kodak's [****60] proffered motive of commitment to quality service; its quality justification appears inconsistent with its thesis that consumers are knowledgeable enough to lifecycle price, and its self-service policy. Kodak claims the exclusive-service contract is warranted because customers would otherwise blame Kodak equipment for breakdowns resulting from inferior ISO service. Thus, Kodak simultaneously claims that its customers are sophisticated enough to make complex and subtle lifecycle-pricing decisions, and yet too obtuse to distinguish which breakdowns are due to bad equipment and which are due to bad service. Kodak has failed to offer any reason why informational sophistication should be present in one circumstance and absent in the other. In addition, because self-service customers are just as likely as others to blame Kodak equipment for breakdowns resulting from (their own) inferior service, Kodak's willingness to allow self-service casts doubt on its quality claim. In sum, we agree with the Court of Appeals that respondents "have presented evidence from which a reasonable trier of fact could conclude that Kodak's first reason is pretextual." 903 F.2d at 618.

[****61] [LEdHN\[28\]](#) [↑] [28] There is also a triable issue of fact on Kodak's second justification -- controlling inventory costs. As respondents argue, Kodak's actions appear inconsistent with any need to control inventory costs. Presumably, the inventory of parts [*485] needed to repair Kodak machines turns only on breakdown rates, and those rates should be the same whether Kodak or ISO's perform the repair. More importantly, the justification

<sup>32</sup> [LEdHN\[25B\]](#) [↑] [25B]

It is true that HN10 [↑] as a general matter a firm can refuse to deal with its competitors. But such a right is not absolute; it exists only if there are legitimate competitive reasons for the refusal. See Aspen Skiing Co., 472 U.S. at 602-605.

fails to [**2092] explain respondents' evidence that Kodak forced OEM's, equipment owners, and parts brokers not to sell parts to ISO's, actions that would have no effect on Kodak's inventory costs.

[LEdHN\[29\]](#) [29] Nor does Kodak's final justification entitle it to summary judgment on respondents' § 2 claim. Kodak claims that its policies prevent ISO's from "exploiting the investment Kodak has made in product development, manufacturing and equipment sales in order to take away Kodak's service revenues." Brief for Petitioner 7-8. Kodak does not dispute that respondents invest substantially in the service market, with training of [****62] repair workers and investment in parts inventory. Instead, according to Kodak, the ISO's are free-riding because they have failed to enter the equipment and parts markets. This understanding of free-riding has no support in our case law.<sup>33</sup> To the contrary, as the [***296] Court of Appeals noted, one of the evils proscribed by the antitrust laws is the creation of entry barriers to potential competitors by requiring them to enter two markets simultaneously. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14; Fortner, 394 U.S. at 509.

[****63] [LEdHN\[2E\]](#) [2E] None of Kodak's asserted business justifications, then, are sufficient to prove that Kodak is "entitled to a judgment as [*486] a matter of law" on respondents' § 2 claim. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 56(c).

IV

[LEdHN\[1K\]](#) [1K] [LEdHN\[2F\]](#) [2F] In the end, of course, Kodak's arguments may prove to be correct. It may be that its parts, service, and equipment are components of one unified market, or that the equipment market does discipline the aftermarkets so that all three are priced competitively overall, or that any anticompetitive effects of Kodak's behavior are outweighed by its competitive effects. But we cannot reach these conclusions as a matter of law on a record this sparse. Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals denying summary judgment is affirmed.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: SCALIA

Dissent

---

JUSTICE SCALIA, with whom JUSTICE O'CONNOR and JUSTICE THOMAS join, dissenting.

This is not, as the Court describes it, just "another case that concerns the standard [****64] for summary judgment in an antitrust controversy." Ante, at 454. Rather, the case presents a very narrow -- but extremely important -- question of substantive antitrust law: whether, for purposes of applying our per se rule condemning "ties," and for purposes of applying our exacting rules governing the behavior of would-be monopolists, a manufacturer's conceded lack of power in the interbrand market for its equipment is somehow consistent with its possession of "market," or even "monopoly," power in wholly derivative aftermarkets for that equipment. In my view, the Court supplies an erroneous answer to this question, and I dissent.

I

---

<sup>33</sup> Kodak claims that both Continental T. V. and Monsanto support its free-rider argument. Neither is applicable. In both Continental T. V., 433 U.S. at 55, and Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 762-763, the Court accepted free-riding as a justification because without restrictions a manufacturer would not be able to induce competent and aggressive retailers to make the kind of investment of capital and labor necessary to distribute the product. In Continental T. V. the relevant market level was retail sale of televisions and in Monsanto retail sales of herbicides. Some retailers were investing in those markets; others were not, relying, instead, on the investment of the other retailers. To be applicable to this case, the ISO's would have to be relying on Kodak's investment in the service market; that, however, is not Kodak's argument.

504 U.S. 451, *486; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2092; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***296; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****64

Per se rules of antitrust illegality are reserved for those situations where logic and experience show that the risk of injury to competition from the defendant's behavior is so pronounced that it is needless and wasteful to conduct the usual judicial inquiry into the balance between the behavior's procompetitive [*487] benefits and its anticompetitive [**2093] costs. See, e. g., Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 350-351, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982). "The character of the [****65] restraint produced by [behavior to which a per se rule applies] is considered a sufficient basis for presuming unreasonableness without the necessity of any analysis of the market [***297] context in which the [behavior] may be found." Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 9, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). The per se rule against tying is just such a rule: Where the conditions precedent to application of the rule are met, i. e., where the tying arrangement is backed up by the defendant's market power in the "tying" product, the arrangement is adjudged in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1 (1988 ed., Supp. II), without any inquiry into the practice's actual effect on competition and consumer welfare. But see United States v. Jerrold Electronics Corp., 187 F. Supp. 545, 560 (ED Pa. 1960), aff'd, 365 U.S. 567, 5 L. Ed. 2d 806, 81 S. Ct. 755 (1961) (per curiam) (accepting affirmative defense to per se tying allegation).

Despite intense criticism of the tying doctrine in academic circles, see, e. g., R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 365-381 (1978), the stated rationale for our per se rule has varied little over the years. When the defendant has genuine "market power" in the tying product -- the power to raise price by reducing output -- the tie potentially enables him to extend that power into a second distinct market, enhancing barriers to entry in each. In addition:

"Tying arrangements may be used to evade price control in the tying product through clandestine transfer of the profit to the tied product; they may be used as a counting device to effect price discrimination; and they may be used to force a full line of products on the customer so as to extract more easily from him a monopoly return on one unique product in the line." Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 513-514, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 (1969) (Fortner I) (WHITE, J., dissenting) (footnotes omitted).

[*488] For these reasons, as we explained in Jefferson Parish, "the law draws a distinction between the exploitation of market power by merely enhancing the price of the tying product, on the one hand, and by attempting to impose restraints on competition [****67] in the market for a tied product, on the other." 466 U.S. at 14.

Our § 2 monopolization doctrines are similarly directed to discrete situations in which a defendant's possession of substantial market power, combined with his exclusionary or anticompetitive behavior, threatens to defeat or forestall the corrective forces of competition and thereby sustain or extend the defendant's agglomeration of power. See United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966). Where a defendant maintains substantial market power, his activities are examined through a special lens: Behavior that might otherwise not be of concern to the antitrust laws -- or that might even be viewed as procompetitive -- can take on exclusionary connotations when practiced by a monopolist. 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law P813, pp. 300-302 (1978) (hereinafter 3 Areeda & Turner).

The concerns, however, that have led the courts to heightened scrutiny both of the "exclusionary conduct" practiced by a monopolist and of tying arrangements subject to per se prohibition, are completely without force when the participants lack market [****68] power. As to the former, [*298] "the [very] definition of exclusionary conduct," as practiced by a monopolist, is "predicated on the existence of substantial market power." Id., P813, at 301; see, e. g., Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177-178, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 (1965) (fraudulent patent procurement); Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 75, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 (1911) (acquisition of competitors); 3 Areeda & Turner P724, at 195-197 (vertical integration). And with respect [**2094] to tying, we have recognized that bundling arrangements not coerced by the heavy hand of market power can serve the procompetitive functions of facilitating new entry into certain [*489] markets, see, e. g., Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 330, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962), permitting "clandestine price cutting in products which otherwise would have no price competition at all because of fear of retaliation from the few other producers dealing in the market," Fortner I, supra, at 514, n. 9 [****69] (WHITE, J., dissenting), assuring quality control, see, e. g., Standard Oil Co. of Cal. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 306, 93 L. Ed. 1371, 69 S. Ct. 1051 (1949), and, where "the tied and tying products are functionally related, . . .

504 U.S. 451, *489; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2094; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***298; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****69

reducing costs through economies of joint production and distribution." Fortner I, supra, at 514, n. 9 (WHITE, J., dissenting). "Accordingly, we have [only] condemned tying arrangements [under the per se rule] when the seller has some special ability -- usually called 'market power' -- to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Jefferson Parish, supra, at 13-14.

The Court today finds in the typical manufacturer's inherent power over its own brand of equipment -- over the sale of distinctive repair parts for that equipment, for example -- the sort of "monopoly power" sufficient to bring the sledgehammer of § 2 into play. And, not surprisingly in light of that insight, it readily labels single-brand power over aftermarket products "market power" sufficient to permit an antitrust plaintiff to invoke the per se rule against tying. In my opinion, [****70] this makes no economic sense. The holding that market power can be found on the present record causes these venerable rules of selective proscription to extend well beyond the point where the reasoning that supports them leaves off. Moreover, because the sort of power condemned by the Court today is possessed by every manufacturer of durable goods with distinctive parts, the Court's opinion threatens to release a torrent of litigation and a flood of commercial intimidation that will do much more harm than good to enforcement of the antitrust laws and to genuine competition. I shall explain, in Parts II and III, respectively, how neither logic nor experience suggests, let alone compels, application [*490] of the per se tying prohibition and monopolization doctrine to a seller's behavior in its single-brand aftermarkets, when that seller is without power at the interbrand level.

II

On appeal in the Ninth Circuit, respondents, having waived their "rule of reason" claim, were limited to arguing that the record, construed [***299] in the light most favorable to them, Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986), [****71] supported application of the per se tying prohibition to Kodak's restrictive parts and service policy. See 903 F.2d 612, 615, n. 1 (1990). As the Court observes, in order to survive Kodak's motion for summary judgment on this claim, respondents bore the burden of proffering evidence on which a reasonable trier of fact could conclude that Kodak possesses power in the market for the alleged "tying" product. See ante, at 464; Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 13-14.

A

We must assume, for purposes of deciding this case, that petitioner is without market, much less monopoly, power in the interbrand markets for its micrographic and photocopying equipment. See ante, at 465-466, n. 10; Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 U.S. 808, 816, 85 L. Ed. 2d 791, 105 S. Ct. 2427 (1985). In the District Court, respondents did, in fact, include in their complaint an allegation which posited the interbrand equipment markets as the relevant markets; in particular, [**2095] they alleged a § 1 "tie" of micrographic and photocopying equipment to the parts and service for those machines. App. 22-23. Though this allegation was apparently abandoned [****72] in pursuit of §§ 1 and 2 claims focused exclusively on the parts and service aftermarkets (about which more later), I think it helpful to analyze how that claim would have fared under the per se rule.

Had Kodak -- from the date of its entry into the micrographic and photocopying equipment markets -- included a lifetime parts and service warranty with all original equipment, [*491] or required consumers to purchase a lifetime parts and service contract with each machine, that bundling of equipment, parts, and service would no doubt constitute a tie under the tests enunciated in Jefferson Parish, supra. Nevertheless, it would be immune from per se scrutiny under the antitrust laws because the tying product would be equipment, a market in which (we assume) Kodak has no power to influence price or quantity. See id., at 13-14; United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, Inc., 429 U.S. 610, 620, 51 L. Ed. 2d 80, 97 S. Ct. 861 (1977) (Fortner II); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 6-7, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). The same result would obtain, I think, [****73] had Kodak -- from the date of its market entry -- consistently pursued an announced policy of limiting parts sales in the manner alleged in this case, so that customers bought with the knowledge that aftermarket support could be obtained only from Kodak. The foreclosure of respondents from the business of servicing Kodak's micrographic and photocopying machines in these illustrations would be undeniably complete -- as complete as the foreclosure described in respondents' complaint. Nonetheless, we would inquire no further than to ask whether Kodak's market power in the equipment market effectively forced consumers to purchase Kodak micrographic or photocopying machines [***300] subject to the company's restrictive aftermarket practices. If not, that would end the case insofar as the per se rule was concerned. See Jefferson Parish, supra, at 13-14; 9 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law P1709c5, pp. 101-102 (1991); Klein & Saft, The Law and Economics of Franchise Tying Contracts, 28 J. Law & Econ. 345, 356 (1985). The evils against which the tying prohibition is directed would simply not be presented. Interbrand competition would render Kodak powerless [****74] to gain economic power over an additional class of consumers, to price discriminate by charging each customer a "system" price equal to the system's economic value to that customer, or to raise barriers to entry in the interbrand equipment markets. See 3 Areeda & Turner P829d, at 331-332.

[*492] I have described these illustrations as hypothetical, but in fact they are not far removed from this case. The record below is consistent -- in large part -- with just this sort of bundling of equipment on the one hand, with parts and service on the other. The restrictive parts policy, with respect to micrographic equipment at least, was not even alleged to be anything but prospective. See App. 17. As respondents summarized their factual proffer below:

"Under this policy, Kodak cut off parts on new products to Kodak micrographics [independent service organizations] ISOs. The effect of this, of course, was that as customers of Kodak micrographics ISOs obtained new equipment, the ISOs were unable to service the equipment for that customer, and, service for these customers was lost by the Kodak ISOs. Additionally, as equipment became obsolete, and the equipment population became [****75] all "new equipment" (post April 1985 models), Kodak micrographics ISOs would be able to service no equipment at all." Id., at 360.

As to Kodak copiers, Kodak's restrictive parts policy had a broader foundation: Considered in the light most favorable to respondents, see Anderson, supra, at 255, the record suggests that, [*2096] from its inception, the policy was applied to new and existing copier customers alike. But at least all post-1985 purchasers of micrographic equipment, like all post-1985 purchasers of new Kodak copiers, could have been aware of Kodak's parts practices. The only thing lacking to bring all of these purchasers (accounting for the vast bulk of the commerce at issue here) squarely within the hypotheticals we have described is concrete evidence that the restrictive parts policy was announced or generally known. Thus, under the Court's approach the existence vel non of such evidence is determinative of the legal standard (the per se rule versus the rule of reason) under which the alleged tie is examined. In my judgment, this makes no sense. It is [*493] quite simply anomalous that a manufacturer functioning [****76] in a competitive equipment market should be exempt from the per se rule when it bundles equipment with parts and service, but not when it bundles parts with service. This vast difference in the treatment of what will ordinarily be economically similar phenomena is alone enough to call today's decision into question.

B

In the Court of Appeals, respondents [***301] sought to sidestep the impediment posed by interbrand competition to their invocation of the per se tying rule by zeroing in on the parts and service "aftermarkets" for Kodak equipment. By alleging a tie of parts to service, rather than of equipment to parts and service, they identified a tying product in which Kodak unquestionably held a near-monopoly share: the parts uniquely associated with Kodak's brand of machines. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 17. The Court today holds that such a facial showing of market share in a single-brand aftermarket is sufficient to invoke the per se rule. The existence of even vibrant interbrand competition is no defense. See ante, at 470-471.

I find this a curious form of market power on which to premise the application of a per se proscription. [****77] It is enjoyed by virtually every manufacturer of durable goods requiring aftermarket support with unique, or relatively unique, goods. See P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P525.1, p. 563 (Supp. 1991). "Such reasoning makes every maker of unique parts for its own product a holder of market power no matter how unimportant its product might be in the market." Ibid. (emphasis added).<sup>1</sup> [****79] Under [*494] the Court's analysis, the per se

<sup>1</sup> That there exist innumerable parts and service firms in such industries as the automobile industry, see Brief for Automotive Warehouse Distributors Association et al. as Amici Curiae 2-3, does not detract from this point. The question whether power to control an aftermarket exists is quite distinct from the question whether the power has been exercised. Manufacturers in some rule may now be applied to single-brand ties effected by the most insignificant players in fully competitive interbrand markets, as long as the arrangement forecloses aftermarket competitors from more than a de minimis amount of business, Fortner I, 394 U.S. at 501. This seems to me quite wrong. A tying arrangement "forced" through the exercise of such power no more implicates the leveraging and price discrimination concerns behind the per se tying prohibition than does a tie of the foremarket [**2097] brand to its aftermarket derivatives, which -- as I have explained -- would not be subject to per se condemnation.<sup>2</sup> As implemented, the Kodak [***302] arrangement challenged [*495] in this case may [****78] have implicated truth-in-advertising or other consumer protection concerns, but those concerns do not alone suggest an antitrust prohibition. See, e. g., Town Sound and Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468 (CA3 1992) (en banc).

504 U.S. 451, *494; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2096; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***301; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****79

[****80] In the absence of interbrand power, a seller's predominant or monopoly share of its single-brand derivative markets does not connote the power to raise derivative market prices generally by reducing quantity. As Kodak and its principal amicus, the United States, point out, a rational consumer considering the purchase of Kodak equipment will inevitably factor into his purchasing decision the expected cost of aftermarket support. "Both the price of the equipment and the price of parts and service over the life of the equipment are expenditures that are necessary to obtain copying and micrographic services." Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 13. If Kodak set generally supracompetitive prices for either spare parts or repair services without making an off-setting reduction in the price of its machines, rational consumers would simply turn to Kodak's competitors for photo-copying and micrographic systems. See, e. g., Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 796-798 (CA1 1988). True, there are -- as the Court notes, see ante, at 474-475 -- the occasional irrational consumers that consider only the hardware cost at the time [****81] of purchase (a category that regrettably includes the Federal Government, whose "purchasing system," we are told, assigns foremarket purchases and aftermarket purchases to different entities). But [*496] we have never before premised the application of antitrust doctrine on the lowest common denominator of consumer.

The Court attempts to counter this theoretical point with a theory of its own. It says that there are "information costs" -- the costs and inconvenience to the consumer of acquiring and processing life-cycle pricing data for Kodak machines -- that "could create a less responsive connection between service and parts prices and equipment sales." Ante, at 473. But this truism about the functioning of markets for sophisticated equipment cannot create "market power" of concern to the antitrust laws where otherwise there is none. "Information costs," or, more accurately, gaps in the availability and quality of consumer information, pervade real-world markets; and because consumers generally make do with "rough cut" judgments about price in such circumstances, in virtually any market markets have no doubt determined that exclusionary intrabrand conduct works to their disadvantage at the competitive interbrand level, but this in no way refutes the self-evident reality that control over unique replacement parts for single-branded goods is ordinarily available to such manufacturers for the taking. It confounds sound analysis to suggest, as respondents do, see Brief for Respondents 5, 37, that the asserted fact that Kodak manufactures only 10% of its replacement parts, and purchases the rest from original equipment manufacturers, casts doubt on Kodak's possession of an inherent advantage in the aftermarket. It does no such thing, any more than Kodak's contracting with others for the manufacture of all constituent parts included in its original equipment would alone suggest that Kodak lacks power in the interbrand micrographic and photocopying equipment markets. The suggestion implicit in respondents' analysis -- that if a seller chooses to contract for the manufacture of its branded merchandise, it must permit the contractors to compete in the sale of that merchandise -- is plainly unprecedented.

---

<sup>2</sup> Even with interbrand power, I may observe, it is unlikely that Kodak could have incrementally exploited its position through the tie of parts to service alleged here. Most of the "service" at issue is inherently associated with the parts, i. e., that service involved in incorporating the parts into Kodak equipment, and the two items tend to be demanded by customers in fixed proportions (one part with one unit of service necessary to install the part). When that situation obtains, "no revenue can be derived from setting a higher price for the tied product which could not have been made by setting the optimum price for the tying product." P. Areeda & L. Kaplow, Antitrust Analysis P426(a), p. 706 (4th ed. 1988) (quoting Bowman, Tying Arrangements and the Leverage Problem, 67 Yale L. J. 19 (1957)). These observations strongly suggest that Kodak parts and the service involved in installing them should not be treated as distinct products for antitrust tying purposes. See Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 39, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984) (O'CONNOR, J., concurring in judgment) ("For products to be treated as distinct, the tied product must, at a minimum, be one that some consumers might wish to purchase separately without also purchasing the tying product") (emphasis in original) (footnote omitted); Ross, The Single Product Issue in Antitrust Tying: A Functional Approach, 23 Emory L. J. 963, 1009-1010 (1974).

there are zones within which otherwise [***303] competitive suppliers may overprice [****82] their products without losing appreciable market share. We have never suggested that the principal players in a market with such commonplace informational deficiencies (and, thus, bands of apparent consumer pricing indifference) exercise market power in any sense relevant [**2098] to the antitrust laws. "While [such] factors may generate 'market power' in some abstract sense, they do not generate the kind of market power that justifies condemnation of tying." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 27; see, e. g., Town Sound and Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., supra.

Respondents suggest that, even if the existence of inter-brand competition prevents Kodak from raising prices generally in its single-brand aftermarkets, there remain certain consumers who are necessarily subject to abusive Kodak pricing behavior by reason of their being "locked in" to their investments in Kodak machines. The Court agrees; indeed, it goes further by suggesting that even a general policy of supracompetitive aftermarket prices might be profitable over the long run because of the "lock-in" phenomenon. "[A] [*497] seller profitably could maintain [****83] supracompetitive prices in the aftermarket," the Court explains, "if the switching costs were high relative to the increase in service prices, and the number of locked-in customers were high relative to the number of new purchasers." Ante, at 476. In speculating about this latter possibility, the Court is essentially repudiating the assumption on which we are bound to decide this case, viz., Kodak's lack of any power whatsoever in the interbrand market. If Kodak's general increase in aftermarket prices were to bring the total "system" price above competitive levels in the interbrand market, Kodak would be wholly unable to make further foremarket sales -- and would find itself exploiting an ever-dwindling aftermarket, as those Kodak micrographic and photocopying machines already in circulation passed into disuse.

The Court's narrower point, however, is undeniably true. There will be consumers who, because of their capital investment in Kodak equipment, "will tolerate some level of service-price increases before changing equipment brands," ibid.; this is necessarily true for "every maker of unique parts for its own product." Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P525.1b, [***84] at 563. But this "circumstantial" leverage created by consumer investment regularly crops up in smoothly functioning, even perfectly competitive, markets, and in most -- if not all -- of its manifestations, it is of no concern to the antitrust laws. The leverage held by the manufacturer of a malfunctioning refrigerator (which is measured by the consumer's reluctance to walk away from his initial investment in that device) is no different in kind or degree from the leverage held by the swimming pool contractor when he discovers a 5-ton boulder in his customer's backyard and demands an additional sum of money to remove it; or the leverage held by an airplane manufacturer over an airline that has "standardized" its fleet around the manufacturer's models; or the leverage held by a drill press manufacturer whose customers have built their production lines around the [*498] manufacturer's [***304] particular style of drill press; or the leverage held by an insurance company over its independent sales force that has invested in company-specific paraphernalia; or the leverage held by a mobile home park owner over his tenants, who are unable to transfer their homes to a different park [***85] except at great expense, see generally Yee v. Escondido, 503 U.S. 519, 118 L. Ed. 2d 153, 112 S. Ct. 1522 (1992). Leverage, in the form of circumstantial power, plays a role in each of these relationships; but in none of them is the leverage attributable to the dominant party's market power in any relevant sense. Though that power can plainly work to the injury of certain consumers, it produces only "a brief perturbation in competitive conditions -- not the sort of thing the antitrust laws do or should worry about." Parts & Elec. Motors, Inc. v. Sterling Elec., Inc., 866 F.2d 228, 236 (CA7 1988) (Posner, J., dissenting).

The Court correctly observes that the antitrust laws do not permit even a natural monopolist to project its monopoly power into another market, i. e., to "exploit his [**2099] dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next." Ante, at 480, n. 29 (quoting Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953)). However, when a manufacturer uses its control over single-branded parts to acquire influence in single-branded [***86] service, the monopoly "leverage" is almost invariably of no practical consequence, because of perfect identity between the consumers in each of the subject aftermarkets (those who need replacement parts for Kodak equipment and those who need servicing of Kodak equipment). When that condition exists, the tie does not permit the manufacturer to project power over a class of consumers distinct from that which it is already able to exploit (and fully) without the inconvenience of the tie. Cf., e. g., Bowman, Tying Arrangements and the Leverage Problem, 67 Yale L. J. 19, 21-27 (1957).

We have never before accepted the thesis the Court today embraces: that a seller's inherent control over the unique [*499] parts for its own brand amounts to "market power" of a character sufficient to permit invocation of the per se rule against tying. As the Court observes, ante, at 479-481, n. 29, we have applied the per se rule to manufacturer ties of foremarket equipment to aftermarket derivatives -- but only when the manufacturer's monopoly power in the equipment, coupled with the use of derivative sales as "counting devices" to measure the intensity of customer [****87] equipment usage, enabled the manufacturer to engage in price discrimination, and thereby more fully exploit its interbrand power. See *International Salt Co. v. United States*, 332 U.S. 392, 92 L. Ed. 2d, 68 S. Ct. 12 \(1947\); *International Business Machines Corp. v. United States*, 298 U.S. 131, 80 L. Ed. 1085, 56 S. Ct. 701 \(1936\); *United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States*, 258 U.S. 451, 66 L. Ed. 708, 42 S. Ct. 363 \(1922\). That sort of enduring opportunity to engage in price discrimination is unavailable to a manufacturer -- like Kodak -- that lacks power at the inter-brand level. A tie between two aftermarket derivatives does next to nothing to improve a competitive manufacturer's [***305] ability to extract monopoly rents from its consumers.<sup>3</sup>

[****88] [*500] [**2100] Nor has any court of appeals (save for the Ninth Circuit panel below) recognized single-branded aftermarket power as a basis for invoking the per se tying prohibition. See *Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc.*, 957 F.2d 1318, 1328 \(CA6 1992\) ("Defining the market by customer demand after the customer has chosen a single supplier fails to take into account that the supplier . . . must compete with other similar suppliers to be designated the [*501] sole source in the first place"); *Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc.*, 858 F.2d at 798 ("We do not see how such dealer investment [in facilities to sell Subaru products] . . . could easily translate into Subaru market power of a kind that, through tying, could ultimately lead to higher than competitive prices for consumers"); A. I. [***306] *Root Co. v. Computer/Dynamics, Inc.*, 806 F.2d 673, 675-677, and n. 3 \(CA6 1986\) (competition at "small business computer" level precluded assertion of computer

<sup>3</sup>The Court insists that the record in this case suggests otherwise, i. e., that a tie between parts and service somehow does enable Kodak to increase overall monopoly profits. See ante, at 479-481, n. 29. Although the Court does not identify the record evidence on which it relies, the suggestion, apparently, is that such a tie facilitates price discrimination between sophisticated, "high-volume" users of Kodak equipment and their unsophisticated counterparts. The sophisticated users (who, the Court presumes, invariably self-service their equipment) are permitted to buy Kodak parts without also purchasing supracompetitively priced Kodak service, while the unsophisticated are -- through the imposition of the tie -- compelled to buy both. See ante, at 475-476.

While superficially appealing, at bottom this explanation lacks coherence. Whether they self-service their equipment or not, rational foremarket consumers (those consumers who are not yet "locked in" to Kodak hardware) will be driven to Kodak's competitors if the price of Kodak equipment, together with the expected cost of aftermarket support, exceeds competitive levels. This will be true no matter how Kodak distributes the total system price among equipment, parts, and service. See *supra*, at 495. Thus, as to these consumers, Kodak's lack of interbrand power wholly prevents it from employing a tie between parts and service as a vehicle for price discrimination. Nor does a tie between parts and service offer Kodak incremental exploitative power over those consumers -- sophisticated or not -- who have the supposed misfortune of being "locked in" to Kodak equipment. If Kodak desired to exploit its circumstantial power over this wretched class by pressing them up to the point where the cost to each consumer of switching equipment brands barely exceeded the cost of retaining Kodak equipment and remaining subject to Kodak's abusive practices, it could plainly do so without the inconvenience of a tie, through supracompetitive parts pricing alone. Since the locked-in sophisticated parts purchaser is as helpless as the locked-in unsophisticated one, I see nothing to be gained by price discrimination in favor of the former. If such price discrimination were desired, however, it would not have to be accomplished indirectly, through a tie of parts to service. *Section 2\(a\)* of the Robinson-Patman Act, *15 U. S. C. § 13\(a\)*, would prevent giving lower parts prices to the sophisticated customers only "where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them . . ." Ibid.; see, e. g., *Falls City Industries, Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc.*, 460 U.S. 428, 434-435, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174, 103 S. Ct. 1282 \(1983\). That prohibited effect often occurs when price-discriminated goods are sold for resale (i. e., to purchasers who are necessarily in competition with one another). E. g., *FTC v. Morton Salt Co.*, 334 U.S. 37, 47, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 68 S. Ct. 822 \(1948\); see P. Areeda & L. Kaplow, Antitrust Analysis P600, p. 923 (1988) ("Secondary-line injury arises [under the Robinson-Patman Act] when a powerful firm buying supplies at favorable prices thereby gains a decisive advantage over its competitors that are forced to pay higher prices for their supplies"). It rarely occurs where, as would be the case here, the price-discriminated goods are sold to various businesses for consumption.

504 U.S. 451, *501; 112 S. Ct. 2072, **2100; 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, ***306; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3405, ****88

manufacturer's power over software designed for use only with manufacturer's brand of computer); General Business Systems v. North American Philips Corp., 699 F.2d 965, 977 \(CA9 1983\) [****89] ("To have attempted to impose significant pressure to buy [aftermarket hardware] by use of the tying service only would have hastened the date on which Philips surrendered to its competitors in the small business computer market"). See also Parts & Elec. Motors, Inc. v. Sterling Elec., Inc., 866 F.2d at 233 (law-of-the-case doctrine compelled finding of market power in replacement parts for single-brand engine).

We have recognized in closely related contexts that the deterrent effect of interbrand competition on the exploitation of intrabrand market power should make courts exceedingly reluctant to apply rules of per se illegality to intra-brand restraints. For instance, we have refused to apply a rule of per se illegality to vertical nonprice restraints "because of their potential for a simultaneous reduction of intra-brand competition and stimulation of interbrand competition," Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 51-52, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\), the latter of which we described as "the primary concern of antitrust law," id., at 52, n. 19. We noted, for instance, [****90] that "new manufacturers and manufacturers entering new markets can use the restrictions in order to induce competent and aggressive retailers to make the kind of investment of capital and labor that is often required in the distribution of products unknown to the consumer," and that "established manufacturers can use them [*502] to induce retailers to engage in promotional activities or to provide service and repair facilities necessary to the efficient marketing of their products." Id., at 55. See also Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 726, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 \(1988\). The same assumptions, in my opinion, should govern our analysis of ties alleged to have been "forced" solely through intrabrand market power. In the absence of interbrand power, a manufacturer's bundling of aftermarket products may serve a multitude of legitimate purposes: It may facilitate manufacturer efforts to ensure that the equipment remains operable and thus protect the seller's business reputation, see [United States v. \[\*\*2101\] Jerrold Electronics Corp., 187 F. Supp. at 560](#); it may create [****91] the conditions for implicit consumer financing of the acquisition cost of the tying equipment through supracompetitively-priced aftermarket purchases, see, e. g., A. Oxenfeldt, Industrial Pricing and Market Practices 378 (1951); and it may, through the resultant manufacturer control of aftermarket activity, "yield valuable information about component or design weaknesses that will materially contribute to product improvement," 3 Areeda & Turner P733c, at 258-259; see also id., P829d, at 331-332. Because the interbrand market will generally punish intra-brand restraints that consumers do not find in their interest, we should not -- under the guise of a per se rule -- condemn [***307] such potentially procompetitive arrangements simply because of the antitrust defendant's inherent power over the unique parts for its own brand.

I would instead evaluate the aftermarket tie alleged in this case under the rule of reason, where the tie's actual anticompetitive effect in the tied product market, together with its potential economic benefits, can be fully captured in the analysis, see, e. g., Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 41 (O'CONNOR, J., concurring in [****92] judgment). Disposition of this case does not require such an examination, however, as respondents apparently waived any rule-of-reason claim they [*503] may have had in the District Court. I would thus reverse the Ninth Circuit's judgment on the tying claim outright.

III

These considerations apply equally to respondents' § 2 claims. An antitrust defendant lacking relevant "market power" sufficient to permit invocation of the per se prohibition against tying a fortiori lacks the monopoly power that warrants heightened scrutiny of his allegedly exclusionary behavior. Without even so much as asking whether the purposes of § 2 are implicated here, the Court points to Kodak's control of "100% of the parts market and 80% to 95% of the service market," markets with "no readily available substitutes," ante, at 481, and finds that the proffer of such statistics is sufficient to fend off summary judgment. But this showing could easily be made, as I have explained, with respect to virtually any manufacturer of differentiated products requiring aftermarket support. By permitting antitrust plaintiffs to invoke § 2 simply upon the unexceptional demonstration that a manufacturer [****93] controls the supplies of its single-branded merchandise, the Court transforms § 2 from a specialized mechanism for responding to extraordinary agglomerations (or threatened agglomerations) of economic power to an all-purpose remedy against run-of-the-mill business torts.

In my view, if the interbrand market is vibrant, it is simply not necessary to enlist § 2's machinery to police a seller's intrabrand restraints. In such circumstances, the interbrand market functions as an infinitely more efficient and more precise corrective to such behavior, rewarding the seller whose intrabrand restraints enhance consumer welfare while punishing the seller whose control of the aftermarkets is viewed unfavorably by interbrand consumers. See Business Electronics Corp., supra, at 725; Continental T. V., Inc., supra, at 52, n. 19, 54. Because this case comes to us on the assumption [*504] that Kodak is without such interbrand power, I believe we are compelled to reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals. I respectfully dissent.

References

---

[54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices \[\*\*\*\*94\]](#) 34-42, 59-64, 284, 409

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:254, 54:255; 28 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Pleadings and Motions 62:624

12B Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:213, 48:215, 48:231, 48:272

5 Am Jur Trials 105, Summary Judgment Practice; 24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1, 2; USCS Court Rules, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 56\(c\)

L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 30, 42, 43; Summary Judgment and Judgment on Pleadings 5

L Ed Index, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices; Rules of Civil Procedure; Sherman Act; Tying Arrangements

Index to Annotations, Civil Procedure Rules; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; Services; Summary Judgment; Tying Arrangements

Annotation References:

What constitutes "sufficient economic power" to make tying arrangement unlawful restraint of trade violative of 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1)-- Supreme Court cases. 51 L Ed 2d 826.

What issues will the Supreme Court [****95] consider, though not, or not properly, raised by the parties. 42 L Ed 2d 946.

What constitutes separate and distinct products or services for purposes of determining whether tying arrangement violates 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) or 3 of Clayton Act (15 USCS 14). 46 ALR Fed 516 .

Refusals to deal as violations of the federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1, 2, 13). 41 ALR Fed 175.

Comment note.--What constitutes "attempt to monopolize" within meaning of 2 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 2). 27 ALR Fed 762.

FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

January 13, 1992, Argued ; June 12, 1992, Decided

No. 91-72

Reporter

504 U.S. 621 *; 112 S. Ct. 2169 **; 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 ***; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3544 ****; 60 U.S.L.W. 4515; 1992-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,847; 92 Cal. Daily Op. Service 4915; 92 Daily Journal DAR 8322; 6 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 365

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, PETITIONER v. TICOR TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY, ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] On petition for writ of certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

Disposition: 922 F.2d 1122, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

supervision, immunity, regulation, rates, rating bureau, state-action, antitrust, prices, title insurance, articulated, antitrust liability, anti trust law, state official, private party, anticompetitive, state policy, filings, anticompetitive conduct, price fixing, insured, rate increase, title search, respondents', insurance company, regulatory scheme, percent, Sherman Act, price-fixing, flexibility, undertaken

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN1 [↓] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A state law or regulatory scheme cannot be the basis for antitrust immunity unless, first, the state has articulated a clear and affirmative policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct, and second, the state provides active supervision of anticompetitive conduct undertaken by private actors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN2 [↓] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Federal antitrust laws are subject to supersession by state regulatory programs. The court's decision is grounded in principles of federalism.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN3** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A two-part test applies to instances where private parties participate in a price-fixing regime, to determine whether the restraint of trade is immune under the "state action" doctrine. First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the state itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN4** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

While a state may not confer antitrust immunity on private persons by fiat, it may displace competition with active state supervision if the displacement is both intended by the State and implemented in its specific details. Actual state involvement, not deference to private price-fixing arrangements under the general auspices of state law, is the precondition for immunity from federal law. Immunity is conferred out of respect for ongoing regulation by the state, not out of respect for the economics of price restraint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN5** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The active supervision requirement of the "state action doctrine" providing immunity to private parties engaging in a restraint of trade mandates that the state exercise ultimate control over the challenged anticompetitive conduct. The mere presence of some state involvement or monitoring does not suffice. State officials must have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and to deny approval of those that fail to accord with state policy. Absent such a program of supervision, there is no realistic assurance that a private party's anticompetitive conduct promotes state policy, rather than merely the party's individual interests.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

**HN6** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

State-action immunity is disfavored.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Copyright Law > Constitutional Copyright Protections > Federal & State Law Interrelationships > General Overview

**HN7** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Federalism serves to assign political responsibility, not to obscure it. Neither federalism nor political responsibility is well served by a rule that essential national policies are displaced by state regulations intended to achieve more limited ends. For States which do choose to displace the free market with regulation, insistence on real compliance with both parts of the Midcal test will serve to make clear that the State is responsible for the price fixing it has sanctioned and undertaken to control.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN8 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Where prices or rates are set as an initial matter by private parties, subject only to a veto if a state chooses to exercise it, a party claiming state action immunity must show that state officials have undertaken the necessary steps to determine the specifics of the price-fixing or rate-setting scheme.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Supervision by states of title-search ratesetting held not sufficiently active to give title insurance companies state-action immunity from federal antitrust liability.

Summary

Under the state-action doctrine established by United States Supreme Court precedents, a state law or regulatory scheme can be the basis for immunity from the federal antitrust laws if the state (1) has articulated a clear and affirmative policy to allow anticompetitive conduct, and (2) provides active supervision of anticompetitive conduct undertaken by private actors. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) filed an administrative complaint against various title insurance companies and charged the companies with violating 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USCS 45\(a\)\(1\)) in Arizona, Connecticut, Montana, and Wisconsin, by engaging in horizontal price fixing, through privately organized rating bureaus, of their fees for title searches, examinations, and settlements. In considering the companies' defense that their rate-fixing activities were entitled to state-action immunity, an Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) found, in part, that (1) in each of the four states, the rating bureau was licensed by the state and authorized to establish joint rates for its members, which rates would become effective unless the state rejected them within a specified period; and (2) although this system provided a theoretical mechanism for substantive state review, rate filings in the four states had in fact been subject to only minimal scrutiny by state regulators. The FTC conceded that the affirmative-policy test for state-action immunity had been met in all four states, and the ALJ concluded that the active-supervision test had been met in Arizona and Montana, but not in Connecticut or Wisconsin. On review, the FTC (1) held that none of the four states had conducted active supervision, so that the companies were not entitled to immunity in any of those states; and (2) found antitrust violations in those states (112 FTC 112). However, the FTC's order was vacated by the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, which (1) held that the existence of a state regulatory program, if staffed, funded, and empowered by law, satisfies the requirement of active supervision; and (2) concluded that the companies' conduct was entitled to state-action immunity in all four states (922 F2d 1122). The Supreme Court granted certiorari to consider the questions (1) whether the Court of Appeals was correct in its statement of law and in its application of law to fact--as to which question the parties confined their briefing to the regulatory regimes of Montana and Wisconsin--and (2) whether the Court of Appeals exceeded its authority in departing from the factual findings made by the ALJ and adopted by the FTC--as to which question the parties focussed their briefing on the regulatory regimes of Arizona and Connecticut (502 US 807, 116 L Ed 2d 25, 112 S Ct 47).

On certiorari, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeals as to the first question, and remanded for further proceedings as to the second question. In an opinion by Kennedy, J., joined by White,

Blackmun, Stevens, Scalia, and Souter, JJ., it was held that (1) both elements of the above state-action immunity test must be complied with, and not only the "clear articulation" requirement; (2) in order to satisfy the "active supervision" requirement, parties claiming state-action immunity where prices or rates are set as an initial matter by private parties, subject only to a veto if the state chooses to exercise it, must show that state officials have undertaken the necessary steps to determine the specifics of the price fixing or ratesetting scheme, and the mere potential for state supervision is not an adequate substitute for a decision by the state; (3) under this standard, there was no "active supervision" by state officials in Montana and Wisconsin, and the actions of the companies in those states were therefore not immune from antitrust liability, where (a) in both states, the applicable regulatory schemes allowed rates filed by the rating bureaus with state agencies to become effective unless they were rejected by state officials within a specified time, and (b) the potential for state supervision under this "negative option" rule was not realized in fact, as (i) rate filings in those states were at most checked for mathematical accuracy, while some were unchecked altogether, (ii) a rate filing became effective in Montana despite the failure of the rating bureau to provide additional information requested by state officials, and (iii) in Wisconsin, additional information requested by state officials was provided after a lapse of 7 years, during which time the rate filing remained in effect; and (4) the case would be remanded to give the Court of Appeals an opportunity to re-examine its determinations with respect to Arizona and Connecticut.

Scalia, J., concurred, expressing the view that, while the Supreme Court's standard of "active supervision" would be a source of uncertainty and litigation, these consequences were acceptable because (1) the standard was compelled by the "active supervision" doctrine, which had not been challenged in the case at hand; and (2) the antitrust exemption for state-programmed private collusion was dubious in the first place.

Rehnquist, Ch. J., joined by O'Connor and Thomas, JJ., dissented, expressing the view that (1) the Court of Appeals followed the correct standard in applying the "active supervision" requirement; and (2) the different conclusion reached by the Court of Appeals by reviewing the facts in light of this standard did not constitute a rejection of the FTC's factual findings.

O'Connor, J., joined by Thomas, J., dissented, expressing the view that (1) the practical effect of the majority's interpretation of the "active supervision" requirement would be to diminish states' regulatory flexibility by eliminating "negative option" regulatory schemes such as those of the states in question; (2) liability under the antitrust laws should not depend on how enthusiastically state officials carried out their statutory duties, a circumstance over which regulated entities had no control; and (3) the majority's opinion offered no guidance as to what level of supervision would suffice.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9.5 > state-action immunity -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]

A state law or regulatory scheme cannot be the basis for antitrust immunity unless (1) the state has articulated a clear and affirmative policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct, and (2) the state provides active supervision of anticompetitive conduct undertaken by private actors; thus, while a state may not confer antitrust immunity on private persons by fiat, it may displace competition with active state supervision if the displacement is both intended by the state and implemented in specific details; both elements of the above test must be complied with, and not only the "clear articulation" requirement, as (1) both elements are directed at insuring that particular anticompetitive mechanisms operate because of a deliberate and intended state policy, (2) meeting the clear articulation requirement (a) shows little more than that the state has not acted through inadvertence, and (b) cannot alone insure that particular anticompetitive conduct has been approved by the state, and (3) sole reliance on the clear articulation requirement will not allow the regulatory flexibility that states deem necessary, as states' freedom of action will be impeded if they risk triggering state-action immunity whenever they enter the realm of economic regulation.

504 U.S. 621, *621; 112 S. Ct. 2169, **2169; 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, ***410; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3544, ****1

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §37 > state-action immunity -- price fixing -- title examination rates -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B]

Parties claiming state-action immunity from the federal antitrust laws where prices or rates are set as an initial matter by private parties, and remain in effect unless the state chooses to exercise a veto, must show that state officials have undertaken the necessary steps to determine the specifics of the price fixing or ratesetting scheme, and the mere potential for state supervision is not an adequate substitute for a decision by the state; under this standard, there is no "active supervision" by state officials, as would be required for the application of state-action immunity, with respect to alleged horizontal price fixing in two states by title insurance companies which set uniform rates for title searches, examinations, and settlements through privately established rating bureaus, where (1) in both states, the applicable regulatory schemes allow rates filed by the rating bureaus with state agencies to become effective unless they are rejected by state officials within a specified time, and (2) the potential for state supervision under this "negative option" rule was not realized in fact, as (a) rate filings in those states were at most checked for mathematical accuracy, while some were unchecked altogether, (b) in one state a rate filing became effective despite the failure of the rating bureau to provide additional information requested by state officials, and (c) in the other state, additional information requested by state officials was provided after a lapse of 7 years, during which time the rate filing remained in effect; therefore, a Federal Court of Appeals errs in vacating, on state-action immunity grounds, a Federal Trade Commission order which found that the companies' conduct in the two states violated 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USCS 45\(a\)\(1\)). (Rehnquist, Ch. J., and O'Connor and Thomas, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9.5 > state-action immunity -- active supervision -- price fixing -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Under the doctrine of state-action immunity from the federal antitrust laws, the purpose of the inquiry into whether the state has actively supervised the anticompetitive conduct undertaken by private actors as to setting of rates or prices is not to determine whether the state has met some normative standard, such as efficiency, in its regulatory practices, but to determine whether the state has exercised sufficient independent judgment and control so that the details of the rates or prices have been established as a product of deliberate state intervention, not simply by agreement among private parties; the question is not how well state regulation works, but whether the anticompetitive scheme is the state's own. (Rehnquist, Ch. J., and O'Connor and Thomas, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

APPEAL §1339.5 > review of Federal Court of Appeals -- certiorari -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The United States Supreme Court--in reviewing on certiorari a Federal Court of Appeals decision which (1) ruled that title insurance companies engaging in horizontal price fixing, through privately organized rating bureaus, of their fees for title searches, examinations, and settlements, were entitled to state-action immunity from the federal antitrust laws in certain states, and therefore (2) vacated a Federal Trade Commission (FTC) order holding that the companies' conduct violated 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (FTCA) (15 USCS 45\(a\)\(1\))--need not determine whether state-action immunity applies to FTC action under 5 of the FTCA, where the FTC, though it has argued at other times that state-action immunity does not apply in such cases, has not asserted any superior pre-emption authority in the instant matter.

APPEAL §1692.3 > remand -- error of law -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The United States Supreme Court--in reviewing on certiorari a Federal Court of Appeals' judgment vacating a Federal Trade Commission (FTC) order which found that title insurance companies had violated 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USCS 45\(a\)\(1\)) in Arizona, Connecticut, Montana, and Wisconsin by setting fees for title searches, examinations, and settlements through privately established rating bureaus, as the Court of Appeals ruled that the companies were entitled to state-action immunity from federal antitrust liability in those states because the bureaus' rate filings were subject to veto by state officials--will remand the case to the Court of Appeals for re-examination of its determinations with respect to Arizona and Connecticut, where (1) the Supreme Court granted certiorari to consider the questions (a) whether the Court of Appeals was correct in its statement of law and in its application of law to fact, as to which question the parties confined their briefing to the regulatory regimes of Montana and Wisconsin, and (b) whether the Court of Appeals exceeded its authority in departing from the factual findings made by the Administrative Law Judge and adopted by the FTC as to the extent of state supervision, as to which the parties focussed on the regulatory regimes of Connecticut and Arizona; and (2) the Supreme Court held that (a) the Court of Appeals erred in its interpretation of the active-supervision element of the state-action immunity doctrine, and (b) the acts of the companies in Montana and Wisconsin were not immune from antitrust liability. (Rehnquist, Ch. J., and O'Connor and Thomas, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

Syllabus

---

Petitioner Federal Trade Commission filed an administrative complaint charging respondent title insurance companies with horizontal price fixing in setting fees for title searches and examinations in violation of § 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act. In each of the four States at issue -- Connecticut, Wisconsin, Arizona, and Montana -- uniform rates were established by a rating bureau licensed by the State and authorized to establish joint rates for its members. Rate filings were made to the state insurance office and became effective unless the State rejected them within a specified period. The Administrative Law Judge held, inter alia, that the rates had been fixed in all four States, but that, in Wisconsin and Montana, respondents' anticompetitive [****2] activities were entitled to state-action immunity, as contemplated in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307, and its progeny. Under this doctrine, a state law or regulatory scheme can be the basis for antitrust immunity if the State (1) has articulated a clear and affirmative policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct and (2) provides active supervision of anticompetitive conduct undertaken by private actors. California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937. The Commission, which conceded that the first part of the test was met, held on review that none of the States had conducted sufficient supervision to warrant immunity. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that the existence of a state regulatory program, if staffed, funded, and empowered by law, satisfied the active supervision requirement. Thus, it concluded, respondents' conduct in all the States was entitled to state-action immunity.

Held:

1. State-action immunity is not available under the regulatory schemes in Montana and Wisconsin. Pp. 632-640.

(a) Principles of federalism [****3] require that federal antitrust laws be subject to supersession by state regulatory programs. Parker, supra, at 350-352; Midcal, supra; Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83, 108 S. Ct. 1658. Midcal's two-part test confirms that States may not confer antitrust immunity on private persons by fiat. Actual state involvement is the precondition for immunity, which is conferred out of respect for the State's ongoing regulation, not the economics of price restraint. The purpose of the active supervision inquiry is to determine whether the State has exercised sufficient independent judgment and control so that the details of the rates or prices have been established as a product of deliberate state intervention. Although this immunity doctrine was developed in actions brought under the Sherman Act, the issue whether it applies to Commission action under the Federal Trade Commission Act need not be determined, since the Commission does not assert any superior preemption authority here. Pp. 632-635.

(b) Wisconsin, Montana, and 34 other States correctly contend that a broad interpretation of state-action immunity would [****4] not serve their best interests. The doctrine would impede, rather than advance, the States' freedom of action if it required them to act in the shadow of such immunity whenever they entered the realm of economic regulation. Insistence on real compliance with both parts of the Midcal test serves to make clear that the States are responsible for only the price fixing they have sanctioned and undertaken to control. Respondents' contention that such concerns are better addressed by the first part of the Midcal test misapprehends the close relation between Midcal's two elements, which are both directed at ensuring that particular anticompetitive mechanisms operate because of a deliberate and intended state policy. A clear policy statement ensures only that the State did not act through inadvertence, not that the State approved the anticompetitive conduct. Sole reliance on the clear articulation requirement would not allow the States sufficient regulatory flexibility. Pp. 635-637.

(c) Where prices or rates are initially set by private parties, subject to veto only if the State chooses, the party claiming the immunity must show that state officials have undertaken the necessary [****5] steps to determine the specifics of the price-fixing or ratesetting scheme. The mere potential for state supervision is not an adequate substitute for the State's decision. Thus, the standard relied on by the Court of Appeals in this case is insufficient to establish the requisite level of active supervision. The Commission's findings of fact demonstrate that the potential for state supervision was not realized in either Wisconsin or Montana. While most rate filings were checked for mathematical accuracy, some were unchecked altogether. Moreover, one rate filing became effective in Montana despite the rating bureau's failure to provide requested information, and additional information was provided in Wisconsin after seven years, during which time another rate filing remained in effect. Absent active supervision, there can be no state-action immunity for what were otherwise private price-fixing arrangements. And state judicial review cannot fill the void. See Patrick, supra, at 103-105. This Court's decision in Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721, which involved a similar [****6] negative option regime, is not to the contrary, since it involved the question whether the first part of the Midcal test was met. This case involves horizontal price fixing under a vague imprimatur in form and agency inaction in fact, and it should be read in light of the gravity of the antitrust offense, the involvement of private actors throughout, and the clear absence of state supervision. Pp. 637-640.

2. The Court of Appeals should have the opportunity to reexamine its determinations with respect to Connecticut and Arizona in order to address whether it accorded proper deference to the Commission's factual findings as to the extent of state supervision in those States. P. 640.

Counsel: Deputy Solicitor General Wallace argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Solicitor General Starr, Assistant Attorney General Rill, Robert A. Long, Jr., James M. Spears, Jay C. Shaffer, Ernest J. Isenstadt, Michael E. Antalics, and Ann Malester.

John C. Christie, Jr., argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were Patrick J. Roach, John F. Graybeal, and David M. Foster.*

---

* A brief of amici curiae urging reversal was filed for the State of Wisconsin et al. by James E. Doyle, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Kevin J. O'Connor, Assistant Attorney General, J. Joseph Curran, Jr., Attorney General of Maryland, and Robert N. McDonald and Ellen S. Cooper, Assistant Attorneys General, James H. Evans, Attorney General of Alabama, Charles E. Cole, Attorney General of Alaska, and James Forbes, Assistant Attorney General, Grant Woods, Attorney General of Arizona,

[****7]

Judges: KENNEDY, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which WHITE, BLACKMUN, STEVENS, SCALIA, and SOUTER, JJ., joined. SCALIA, J., filed a concurring opinion, post, p. 640. REHNQUIST, C. J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which O'CONNOR and THOMAS, JJ., joined, post, p. 641. O'CONNOR, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which THOMAS, J., joined, post, p. 646.

Opinion by: KENNEDY

Opinion

---

[*624] [***417] [**2172] JUSTICE KENNEDY delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A] LEdHN[2A] [↑] [2A] The Federal Trade Commission filed an administrative complaint against six of the Nation's largest title insurance [*625] companies, alleging horizontal price fixing in their fees for title searches and title examinations. One company settled by consent decree, while five other firms continue to contest the matter. The Commission charged the title companies with violating § 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission and Jeri K. Auther, Assistant Attorney General, Winston Bryant, Attorney General of Arkansas, and Royce Griffin, Deputy Attorney General, Charles M. Oberly III, Attorney General of Delaware, Robert A. Butterworth, Attorney General of Florida, Larry EchoHawk, Attorney General of Idaho, and Brett T. DeLange, Deputy Attorney General, Bonnie J. Campbell, Attorney General of Iowa, and John R. Perkins, Deputy Attorney General, Frederic J. Cowan, Attorney General of Kentucky, and James M. Ringo, Assistant Attorney General, William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General of Louisiana, and Jesse James Marks and Anne F. Benoit, Assistant Attorneys General, Michael E. Carpenter, Attorney General of Maine, and Stephen L. Wessler, Deputy Attorney General, Scott Harshbarger, Attorney General of Massachusetts, and George K. Weber and Thomas M. Alpert, Assistant Attorneys General, Frank J. Kelley, Attorney General of Michigan, Hubert H. Humphrey III, Attorney General of Minnesota, Mike Moore, Attorney General of Mississippi, Marc Racicot, Attorney General of Montana, Frankie Sue Del Papa, Attorney General of Nevada, John P. Arnold, Attorney General of New Hampshire, Charles T. Putnam, Senior Assistant Attorney General, and Walter L. Maroney, Assistant Attorney General, Robert J. Del Tufo, Attorney General of New Jersey, and Laurel A. Price, Deputy Attorney General, Robert Abrams, Attorney General of New York, Jerry Boone, Solicitor General, and George W. Sampson and Richard Schwartz, Assistant Attorneys General, Lacy H. Thornburg, Attorney General of North Carolina, James C. Gulick, Special Deputy Attorney General, and K. D. Sturgis, Assistant Attorney General, Nicholas J. Spaeth, Attorney General of North Dakota, and David W. Huey, Assistant Attorney General, Lee Fisher, Attorney General of Ohio, and Marc B. Bandman, Assistant Attorney General, Susan B. Loving, Attorney General of Oklahoma, and Jane F. Wheeler, Assistant Attorney General, Ernest D. Prete, Jr., Attorney General of Pennsylvania, Thomas L. Welch, Chief Deputy Attorney General, and Carl S. Hisiro, Assistant Chief Deputy Attorney General, James E. O'Neil, Attorney General of Rhode Island, and Edmund F. Murray, Jr., Special Assistant Attorney General, Charles W. Burson, Attorney General of Tennessee, John Knox Walkup, Solicitor General, and Perry A. Craft, Deputy Attorney General, Dan Morales, Attorney General of Texas, Will Pryor, First Assistant Attorney General, Mary F. Keller, Deputy Attorney General, and Mark Tobey, Assistant Attorney General, R. Paul Van Dam, Attorney General of Utah, Jeffrey L. Amestoy, Attorney General of Vermont, and Geoffrey A. Yudien, Assistant Attorney General, Mary Sue Terry, Attorney General of Virginia, Kenneth O. Eikenberry, Attorney General of Washington, and Carol A. Smith, Assistant Attorney General, Mario J. Palumbo, Attorney General of West Virginia, and Donald L. Darling, Deputy Attorney General, and Joseph B. Meyer, Attorney General of Wyoming.

---

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the State of California et al. by Daniel E. Lungren, Attorney General of California, Roderick E. Walston, Chief Assistant Attorney General, and Thomas F. Gede, Special Assistant Attorney General, Gale A. Norton, Attorney General of Colorado, Don Stenberg, Attorney General of Nebraska, and Mark W. Barnett, Attorney General of South Dakota; for the American Insurance Association et al. by John E. Nolan, Craig A. Berrington, James H. Bradner, Jr., Theresa L. Sorota, and Patrick J. McNally; for Hartford Fire Insurance Co. et al. by Stephen M. Shapiro, Mark I. Levy, Andrew J. Pincus, and Roy T. Englert, Jr.; and for the National Council on Compensation Insurance by Jerome A. Hochberg and Mark E. Solomons.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed for the American Land Title Association by Philip H. Rudolph and James R. Maher; and for the Pennsylvania Electric Association by Jeffrey H. Howard.

504 U.S. 621, *625; 112 S. Ct. 2169, **2172; 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, ***417; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3544, ****7

Act, 38 Stat. 719, 15 U. S. C. § 45\(a\)\(1\), which prohibits "unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce." One [****8] of the principal defenses the companies assert is state-action immunity from antitrust prosecution, as contemplated in the line of cases beginning with Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\). The Commission rejected this defense, In re Ticor Title Ins. Co., 112 F.T.C. 344 \(1989\), and the firms sought review in [\[\*\*2173\]](#) the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. Ruling that state-action immunity was available under the state regulatory schemes in question, the Court of Appeals reversed. 922 F.2d 1122 \(1991\). We granted certiorari. 502 U.S. 806 \(1991\).

I

Title insurance is the business of insuring the record title of real property for persons with some interest in the estate, including owners, occupiers, and lenders. A title insurance policy insures against certain losses or damages sustained by reason of a defect in title not shown on the policy or title report to which it refers. Before issuing a title insurance [*626] policy, the insurance company or one of its agents performs a title search and examination. The search produces a chronological list of the public [****9] documents in the chain of title to the real property. The examination is a critical analysis or interpretation of the condition of title revealed by the documents disclosed through this search.

The title search and examination are major components of the insurance company's services. There are certain variances from State to State and from policy to policy, but a brief summary of the functions performed by the title companies can be given. The insurance companies exclude [***418] from coverage defects uncovered during the search; that is, the insurers conduct searches in order to inform the insured and to reduce their own liability by identifying and excluding known risks. The insured is protected from some losses resulting from title defects not discoverable from a search of the public records, such as forgery, missing heirs, previous marriages, impersonation, or confusion in names. They are protected also against errors or mistakes in the search and examination. Negligence need not be proved in order to recover. Title insurance also includes the obligation to defend in the event that an insured is sued by reason of some defect within the scope of the policy's guarantee.

The [****10] title insurance industry earned $ 1.35 billion in gross revenues in 1982, and respondents accounted for 57 percent of that amount. Four of respondents are the nation's largest title insurance companies: Ticor Title Insurance Co., with 16.5 percent of the market; Chicago Title Insurance Co., with 12.8 percent; Lawyers Title Insurance Co., with 12 percent; and SAFECO Title Insurance Co. (now operating under the name Security Union Title Insurance Co.), with 10.3 percent. Stewart Title Guarantee Co., with 5.4 percent of the market, is the country's eighth largest title insurer, with a strong position in the West and Southwest. App. to Pet. for Cert. 145a.

[*627] The Commission issued an administrative complaint in 1985. Horizontal price fixing was alleged in these terms:

"Respondents have agreed on the prices to be charged for title search and examination services or settlement services through rating bureaus in various states. Examples of states in which one or more of the respondents have fixed prices with other respondents or other competitors for all or part of their search and examination services or settlement services are Arizona, Connecticut, Idaho, Louisiana, [****11] Montana, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Wyoming." 112 F.T.C. at 346.

The Commission did not challenge the insurers' practice of setting uniform rates for insurance against the risk of loss from defective titles, but only the practice of setting uniform rates for the title search, examination, and settlement, aspects of the business which, the Commission alleges, do not involve insurance.

Before the Administrative Law Judge (ALJ), respondents defended against liability on three related grounds. First, they maintained that the challenged conduct is exempt from antitrust scrutiny under the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 59 Stat. 34, 15 U. S. C. § 1012\(b\), which confers antitrust immunity [\[\*\*2174\]](#) over the "business of insurance" to the extent regulated by state law. Second, they argued that their collective ratemaking activities are exempt under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which places certain "joint efforts to influence public officials" beyond the reach of the antitrust laws. Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\); Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 136, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523

(1961). [****12] Third, respondents contended their activities are entitled to state-action immunity, which permits anticompetitive conduct if authorized [***419] and supervised by state officials. See California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 [*6281] (1980); Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943). App. to Pet. for Cert. 218a. As to one State, Ohio, respondents contended that the rates for title search, examination, and settlement had not been set by a rating bureau.

Title insurance company rates and practices in 13 States were the subject of the initial complaint. Before the matter was decided by the ALJ, the Commission declined to pursue its complaint with regard to fees in five of these States: Louisiana, New Mexico, New York, Oregon, and Wyoming. Upon the recommendation of the ALJ, the Commission did not pursue its complaint with regard to fees in two additional States, Idaho and Ohio. This left six States in which the Commission found antitrust violations, but in two of these States, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, the Commission conceded the issue on [****13] which certiorari was sought here, so the regulatory regimes in these two States are not before us. Four States remain in which violations were alleged: Connecticut, Wisconsin, Arizona, and Montana.

The ALJ held that the rates for search and examination services had been fixed in these four States. For reasons we need not pause to examine, the ALJ rejected the McCarran-Ferguson and Noerr-Pennington defenses. The ALJ then turned his attention to the question of state-action immunity. A summary of the ALJ's extensive findings on this point is necessary for a full understanding of the decisions reached at each level of the proceedings in the case.

Rating bureaus are private entities organized by title insurance companies to establish uniform rates for their members. The ALJ found no evidence that the collective setting of title insurance rates through rating bureaus is a way of pooling risk information. Indeed, he found no evidence that any title insurer sets rates according to actuarial loss experience. Instead, the ALJ found that the usual practice is for rating bureaus to set rates according to profitability studies that focus on the costs of conducting searches and examinations. [****14] Uniform rates are set notwithstanding differences in [*629] efficiencies and costs among individual members. App. to Pet. for Cert. 183a-184a.

The ALJ described the regulatory regimes for title insurance rates in the four States still at issue. In each one, the title insurance rating bureau was licensed by the State and authorized to establish joint rates for its members. Each of the four States used what has come to be called a "negative option" system to approve rate filings by the bureaus. Under a negative option system, the rating bureau filed rates for title searches and title examinations with the state insurance office. The rates became effective unless the State rejected them within a specified period, such as 30 days. Although the negative option system provided a theoretical mechanism for substantive review, the ALJ determined, after making detailed findings regarding the operation of each regulatory regime, that the rate filings were subject to minimal scrutiny by state regulators.

In Connecticut the State Insurance Department has the authority to audit the rating bureau and hold hearings regarding rates, but it has [***420] not done so. The Connecticut rating [****15] bureau filed only two major rate increases, in 1966 and in 1981. The circumstances [**2175] behind the 1966 rate increase are somewhat obscure. The ALJ found that the Insurance Department asked the rating bureau to submit additional information justifying the increase, and later approved the rate increase although there is no evidence the additional information was provided. In 1981 the Connecticut rating bureau filed for a 20 percent rate increase. The factual background for this rate increase is better developed though the testimony was somewhat inconsistent. A state insurance official testified that he reviewed the rate increase with care and discussed various components of the increase with the rating bureau. The same official testified, however, that he lacked the authority to question certain expense data he considered quite high. Id. at 189a-195a.

[*630] In Wisconsin the State Insurance Commissioner is required to examine the rating bureau at regular intervals and authorized to reject rates through a process of hearings. Neither has been done. The Wisconsin rating bureau made major rate filings in 1971, 1981, and 1982. The 1971 rate filing was approved in 1971 [****16] although supporting justification, which had been requested by the State Insurance Commissioner, was not provided until 1978. The 1981 rate filing requested an 11 percent rate increase. The increase was approved after the office of the Insurance Commissioner checked the supporting data for accuracy. No one in the agency inquired into insurer expenses, though an official testified that substantive scrutiny would not be possible without that inquiry. The 1982 rate increase received but a cursory reading at the office of the Insurance Commissioner. The supporting materials were not checked for accuracy, though in the absence of an objection by the agency, the rate increase went into effect. *Id.* at 196a-200a.

504 U.S. 621, *630; 112 S. Ct. 2169, **2175; 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, ***420; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3544, ****16

In Arizona the Insurance Director was required to examine the rating bureau at least once every five years. It was not done. In 1980 the State Insurance Department announced a comprehensive investigation of the rating bureau. It was not conducted. The rating bureau spent most of its time justifying its escrow rates. Following conclusion in 1981 of a federal civil suit challenging the joint fixing of escrow rates, the rating bureau went out of business without having made any [****17] major rate filings, though it had proposed minor rate adjustments. *Id.* at 200a-205a.

In Montana the rating bureau made its only major rate filing in 1983. In connection with it, a representative of the rating bureau met with officials of the State Insurance Department. He was told that the filed rates could go into immediate effect though further profit data would have to be provided. The ALJ found no evidence that the additional data were furnished. *Id.* at 211a-214a.

[*631] To complete the background, the ALJ observed that none of the rating bureaus are now active. The respondents abandoned them between 1981 and 1985 in response to numerous private treble-damages suits, so by the time the Commission filed its formal complaint in 1985, the rating bureaus had been dismantled. *Id.* at 195a, 200a, 205a, 208a. The ALJ held that the case is not moot, though, because nothing would preclude respondents from resuming the conduct challenged by the Commission. *Id.*, at 246a-247a. See *United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 632-633, 97 L. Ed. 1303, 73 S. Ct. 894 \(1953\)*.

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B] [****18] These factual determinations established, the ALJ addressed the two-part test that must be satisfied for state-action immunity under the antitrust laws, the test we set out in *California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 \(1980\)*. HN1 [↑] A state law or regulatory scheme cannot be the basis for antitrust immunity unless, first, the State has articulated a clear and affirmative policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct, and second, the State provides active supervision of anticompetitive conduct undertaken by private actors. *Id.* at 105. The Commission having conceded that the first part of the test was satisfied in the four States still at issue, the immunity question, beginning with the hearings before the ALJ [**2176] and in all later proceedings, has turned upon the proper interpretation and application of Midcal's active supervision requirement. The ALJ found the active supervision test was met in Arizona and Montana but not in Connecticut or Wisconsin. App. to Pet. for Cert. 248a.

On review of the ALJ's decision, the Commission held that none of the four States had conducted [****19] sufficient supervision, so that the title companies were not entitled to immunity in any of those jurisdictions. *Id.* at 47a. The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit disagreed with the Commission, adopting the approach of the First Circuit in *New England Motor Rate Bureau, Inc. v. FTC, 908 F.2d 1064 \(1990\)*, which [*632] had held that the existence of a state regulatory program, if staffed, funded, and empowered by law, satisfied the requirement of active supervision. *Id.* at 1071. Under this standard, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit ruled that the active state supervision requirement was met in all four States and held that the respondents' conduct was entitled to state-action immunity in each of them. 922 F.2d at 1140.

We granted certiorari to consider two questions: First, whether the Third Circuit was correct in its statement of the law and in its application of law to fact, and second, whether the Third Circuit exceeded its authority by departing from the factual findings entered by the ALJ and adopted by the Commission. Before this Court, the parties have confined their briefing on the first of these [****20] questions to the regulatory regimes of Wisconsin and Montana, and focused on the regulatory regimes of Connecticut and Arizona in briefing on the second question. We now reverse the Court of Appeals under the first question and remand for further proceedings under the second.

504 U.S. 621, *632; 112 S. Ct. 2169, **2176; 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, ***421; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3544, ****20

The preservation of the free market and of a system of free enterprise without price fixing or cartels is essential to economic freedom. United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 610, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515, 92 S. Ct. 1126 \(1972\). A national policy of such a pervasive and fundamental character is an essential part of the economic and legal system within which the separate States administer their own laws for the protection and advancement of their people. Continued enforcement of the national antitrust policy grants the States more freedom, not less, in deciding whether to subject discrete parts of the economy to additional [***422] regulations and controls. Against this background, in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\), we upheld a state-supervised, market sharing scheme against a Sherman Act challenge. We announced the [****21] doctrine that HN2 federal antitrust laws are subject to supersession by state regulatory [*633] programs. Our decision was grounded in principles of federalism. Id., at 350-352.

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C]The principle of freedom of action for the States, adopted to foster and preserve the federal system, explains the later evolution and application of the Parker doctrine in our decisions in Midcal, supra, and Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83, 108 S. Ct. 1658 \(1988\). In Midcal we invalidated a California statute forbidding licensees in the wine trade to sell below prices set by the producer. There we announced HN3 the two-part test applicable to instances where private parties participate in a price-fixing regime. "First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the State itself." 445 U.S. at 105 (internal quotation marks omitted). [****22] Midcal confirms that HN4 while a State may not confer antitrust immunity on private persons by fiat, it may displace competition with active state supervision if the displacement is both intended by the State and implemented in its specific details. Actual state involvement, not deference to private price-fixing arrangements under the general auspices of state law, is the precondition for immunity from federal law. Immunity is conferred out of [**2177] respect for ongoing regulation by the State, not out of respect for the economics of price restraint. In Midcal we found that the intent to restrain prices was expressed with sufficient precision so that the first part of the test was met, but that the absence of state participation in the mechanics of the price posting was so apparent that the requirement of active supervision had not been met. Ibid.

The rationale was further elaborated in Patrick v. Burget. In Patrick it had been alleged that private physicians participated in the State's peer review system in order to injure or destroy competition by denying hospital privileges to a physician who had begun a competing clinic. We referred to the purpose of [****23] preserving the State's own administrative [*634] policies, as distinct from allowing private parties to foreclose competition, in the following passage:

"The active supervision requirement stems from the recognition that where a private party is engaging in the anticompetitive activity, there is a real danger that he is acting to further his own interests, rather than the governmental interests of the State. . . . The requirement is designed to ensure that the state-action doctrine will shelter only the particular anticompetitive acts of private parties that, in the judgment of the State, actually further state regulatory policies. To accomplish this purpose, HN5 the active supervision requirement mandates that the State exercise ultimate control over the challenged anticompetitive conduct . . . . The mere presence of some state involvement or monitoring does not suffice . . . . The active supervision prong of the Midcal test requires that state [***423] officials have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that [****24] fail to accord with state policy. Absent such a program of supervision, there is no realistic assurance that a private party's anticompetitive conduct promotes state policy, rather than merely the party's individual interests." 486 U.S. at 100-101 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

Because the particular anticompetitive conduct at issue in Patrick had not been supervised by governmental actors, we decided that the actions of the peer review committee were not entitled to state-action immunity. Id., at 106.

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]Our decisions make clear that the purpose of the active supervision inquiry is not to determine whether the State has met some normative standard, such as efficiency, in its regulatory practices. Its purpose is to determine whether the State has exercised sufficient independent judgment and control so that the details of the rates or prices have been established as a product of deliberate state intervention, not [*635] simply by agreement among private parties. Much as in causation inquiries, the analysis asks whether the State has played [****25] a substantial role in determining the specifics of the economic policy. The question is not how well state regulation works but whether the anticompetitive scheme is the State's own.

504 U.S. 621, *634; 112 S. Ct. 2169, **2177; 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, ***423; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3544, ****24

LEdHN[4] [4]Although the point bears but brief mention, we observe that our prior cases considered state-action immunity against actions brought under the Sherman Act, and this case arises under the Federal Trade Commission Act. The Commission has argued at other times that state-action immunity does not apply to Commission action under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45. See U.S. Bureau of Consumer Protection, Staff Report to the Federal Trade Commission on Prescription Drug Price Disclosures, Chs. VI(B) and (C) (1975); see also Note, The State Action Exemption and Antitrust Enforcement under the Federal Trade Commission Act, 89 Harv. L. Rev. 715 (1976). A leading treatise has expressed its skepticism of this view. See 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law P218 (1978). We need not determine whether the antitrust statutes can be distinguished on this basis, because the Commission [****26] does not assert any [**2178] superior pre-emption authority in the instant matter. We apply our prior cases to the one before us.

LEdHN[1D] [1D]Respondents contend that principles of federalism justify a broad interpretation of state-action immunity, but there is a powerful refutation of their viewpoint in the briefs that were filed in this case. The State of Wisconsin, joined by Montana and 34 other States, has filed a brief as amici curiae on the precise point. These States deny that respondents' broad immunity rule would serve the States' best interests. We are in agreement with the amici submission.

If the States must act in the shadow of state-action immunity whenever they enter the realm of economic regulation, then our doctrine will impede their freedom of action, not advance it. The fact of the matter is that the States regulate [*636] [***424] their economies in many ways not inconsistent with the antitrust laws. For example, Oregon may provide for peer review by its physicians without approving anticompetitive conduct by them. See Patrick, 486 U.S. at 105. Or Michigan [****27] may regulate its public utilities without authorizing monopolization in the market for electric light bulbs. See Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 596, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 (1976). So we have held that HN6 [1] state-action immunity is disfavored, much as are repeals by implication. Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 398-399, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123 (1978). By adhering in most cases to fundamental and accepted assumptions about the benefits of competition within the framework of the antitrust laws, we increase the States' regulatory flexibility.

States must accept political responsibility for actions they intend to undertake. It is quite a different matter, however, for federal law to compel a result that the States do not intend but for which they are held to account. HN7 [1] Federalism serves to assign political responsibility, not to obscure it. Neither federalism nor political responsibility is well served by a rule that essential national policies are displaced by state regulations intended to achieve more [****28] limited ends. For States which do choose to displace the free market with regulation, our insistence on real compliance with both parts of the Midcal test will serve to make clear that the State is responsible for the price fixing it has sanctioned and undertaken to control.

Respondents contend that these concerns are better addressed by the requirement that the States articulate a clear policy to displace the antitrust laws with their own forms of economic regulation. This contention misapprehends the close relation between Midcal's two elements. Both are directed at ensuring that particular anticompetitive mechanisms operate because of a deliberate and intended state policy. See Patrick, supra, at 100. In the usual case, Midcal's requirement that the State articulate a clear policy shows little more than that the State has not acted through inadvertence; [*637] it cannot alone ensure, as required by our precedents, that particular anticompetitive conduct has been approved by the State. It seems plain, moreover, in light of the amici curiae brief to which we have referred, that sole reliance on the requirement of clear articulation will not [****29] allow the regulatory flexibility that these States deem necessary. For States whose object it is to benefit their citizens through regulation, a broad doctrine of state-action immunity may serve as nothing more than an attractive nuisance in the economic sphere. To oppose these pressures, sole reliance on the requirement of clear articulation could become a rather meaningless formal constraint.

III

In the case before us, the Court of Appeals relied upon a formulation of the active supervision requirement articulated by the First Circuit:

"Where . . . [**2179] the state's program is in place, is staffed and funded, grants to the state officials ample power and the duty to regulate pursuant to declared standards of [***425] state policy, is enforceable in the state's courts, and demonstrates some basic level of activity directed towards seeing that the private actors carry out the state's policy and not simply their own policy, more need not be established." 922 F.2d at 1136, quoting New England Motor Rate Bureau, Inc. v. FTC, 908 F.2d at 1071.

Based on this standard, the Third Circuit ruled that the active supervision requirement [***30] was met in all four States, and held that the respondents' conduct was entitled to state-action immunity from antitrust liability. 922 F.2d at 1140.

[LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [↑] [2B]While in theory the standard articulated by the First Circuit might be applied in a manner consistent with our precedents, it seems to us insufficient to establish the requisite level of active supervision. The criteria set forth by the First Circuit may have some relevance as the beginning [★638] point of the active state supervision inquiry, but the analysis cannot end there. HN8 [↑] Where prices or rates are set as an initial matter by private parties, subject only to a veto if the State chooses to exercise it, the party claiming the immunity must show that state officials have undertaken the necessary steps to determine the specifics of the price-fixing or ratesetting scheme. The mere potential for state supervision is not an adequate substitute for a decision by the State. Under these standards, we must conclude that there was no active supervision [***31] in either Wisconsin or Montana.

Respondents point out that in Wisconsin and Montana the rating bureaus filed rates with state agencies and that in both States the so-called negative option rule prevailed. The rates became effective unless they were rejected within a set time. It is said that as a matter of law in those States inaction signified substantive approval. This proposition cannot be reconciled, however, with the detailed findings, entered by the ALJ and adopted by the Commission, which demonstrate that the potential for state supervision was not realized in fact. The ALJ found, and the Commission agreed, that at most the rate filings were checked for mathematical accuracy. Some were unchecked altogether. In Montana, a rate filing became effective despite the failure of the rating bureau to provide additional requested information. In Wisconsin, additional information was provided after a lapse of seven years, during which time the rate filing remained in effect. These findings are fatal to respondents' attempts to portray the state regulatory regimes as providing the necessary component of active supervision. The findings demonstrate that, whatever the potential for state [***32] regulatory review in Wisconsin and Montana, active state supervision did not occur. In the absence of active supervision in fact, there can be no state-action immunity for what were otherwise private price-fixing arrangements. And as in Patrick, the availability of state judicial review could not fill the void. Because of the state agencies' limited role and [★639] participation, state judicial review was likewise limited. See Patrick, 486 U.S. at 103-105.

Our decision in Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 \(1985\), though it too involved a negative option [***426] regime, is not to the contrary. The question there was whether the first part of the Midcal test was met, the Government's contention being that a pricing policy is not an articulated one unless the practice is compelled. We rejected that assertion and undertook no real examination of the active supervision aspect of the case, for the Government conceded that the second part of the test had been met. Id., at 62, 66. The concession was against the background of a District Court [***33] determination that, although submitted rates could go into effect without further state activity, [**2180] the State had ordered and held ratemaking hearings on a consistent basis, using the industry submissions as the beginning point. See United States v. Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc., 467 F. Supp. 471, 476-477 \(ND Ga. 1979\). In the case before us, of course, the Commission concedes the first part of the Midcal requirement and litigates the second; and there is no finding of substantial state participation in the ratesetting scheme.

This case involves horizontal price fixing under a vague imprimatur in form and agency inaction in fact. No antitrust offense is more pernicious than price fixing. FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Assn., 493 U.S. 411, 434, n. 16,

107 L. Ed. 2d 851, 110 S. Ct. 768 (1990). In this context, we decline to formulate a rule that would lead to a finding of active state supervision where in fact there was none. Our decision should be read in light of the gravity of the antitrust offense, the involvement of private actors throughout, and the clear absence of state supervision. We do not [****34] imply that some particular form of state or local regulation is required to achieve ends other than the establishment of uniform prices. Cf. Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1991) (city billboard zoning ordinance entitled to state-action immunity). We do [*640] not have before us a case in which governmental actors made unilateral decisions without participation by private actors. Cf. Fisher v. Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206, 106 S. Ct. 1045 (1986) (private actors not liable without private action). And we do not here call into question a regulatory regime in which sampling techniques or a specified rate of return allow state regulators to provide comprehensive supervision without complete control, or in which there was an infrequent lapse of state supervision. Cf. 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 344, n. 6, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667, 107 S. Ct. 720 (1987) (a statute specifying the margin between wholesale and retail prices may satisfy the active supervision requirement). In the circumstances of this case, however, we conclude that the acts [****35] of respondents in the States of Montana and Wisconsin are not immune from antitrust liability.

IV

LEdHN[5] [5]In granting certiorari we undertook to review the further contention by the Commission that the Court of Appeals was incorrect in disregarding the Commission's findings as to the extent of state supervision. The parties have focused their briefing on this question on the regulatory schemes of Connecticut and Arizona. We think the Court of Appeals should have the opportunity to reexamine its determinations with [***427] respect to these latter two States in light of the views we have expressed.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: SCALIA

Concur

---

JUSTICE SCALIA, concurring.

The Court's standard is in my view faithful to what our cases have said about "active supervision." On the other hand, I think THE CHIEF JUSTICE and JUSTICE O'CONNOR are correct that this standard will be a fertile source of uncertainty and (hence) litigation, and will produce total abandonment [*641] of some state [****36] programs because private individuals will not take the chance of participating in them. That is true, moreover, not just in the "negative option" context, but even in a context such as that involved in Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83, 108 S. Ct. 1658 (1988): Private physicians invited to participate in a state-supervised hospital peer review system may not know until after their participation has occurred (and indeed until after their trial has been completed) whether the State's supervision will be "active" enough.

I am willing to accept these consequences because I see no alternative within the constraints [**2181] of our "active supervision" doctrine, which has not been challenged here; and because I am skeptical about the Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943), exemption for state-programmed private collusion in the first place.

Dissent by: REHNQUIST; O'CONNOR

Dissent

---

504 U.S. 621, *641; 112 S. Ct. 2169, **2181; 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, ***427; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3544, ****36

CHIEF JUSTICE REHNQUIST, with whom JUSTICE O'CONNOR and JUSTICE THOMAS join, dissenting.

The Court holds today that to satisfy the "active supervision" requirement of state-action immunity from antitrust liability, private parties [****37] acting pursuant to a regulatory scheme enacted by a state legislature must prove that "the State has played a substantial role in determining the specifics of the economic policy." Ante, at 635. Because this standard is neither supported by our prior precedent nor sound as a matter of policy, I dissent.

Immunity from antitrust liability under the state-action doctrine was first established in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943). As noted by the majority, in Parker we relied on principles of federalism in concluding that the Sherman Act did not apply to state officials administering a regulatory program enacted by the state legislature. We concluded that state action is exempt from antitrust liability, because in the Sherman Act Congress evidences no intent to "restrain state action or official action directed by a state." Id., I*6421 at 351.<sup>1</sup> "The Parker decision was premised on the assumption [***428] that Congress, in enacting the Sherman Act, did not intend to compromise the States' ability to regulate their domestic commerce." Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 56, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 (1985) [****38] (footnote omitted).

We developed our present analysis for state-action immunity for private actors in California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 (1980). We held in Midcal that our prior precedent had granted state-action immunity from antitrust liability to conduct by private actors where a program was "clearly articulated and affirmatively [****39] expressed as state policy [and] the policy [was] actively supervised by the State itself." Id., at 105 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). In Midcal, we found the active supervision requirement was not met because under the California statute at issue, which required liquor retailers to charge a certain percentage above a price "posted" by area wholesalers, "the State has no direct control over wine prices, and it does not review the reasonableness of the prices set by wine dealers." Id., at 100. We noted that the state-action defense does not allow the States to authorize what is nothing more than private price fixing. Id., at 105.

In each instance since Midcal in which we have concluded that the active supervision requirement for state-action immunity was not met, the state regulators lacked authority, under state law, to review or reject the rates or action taken [*643] by the private actors facing antitrust liability.<sup>2</sup> Our most recent formulation of the "active supervision" requirement [**2182] was announced in Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83, 108 S. Ct. 1658 (1988), [****40] where we concluded that to satisfy the "active supervision" requirement, "state officials [must] have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy." Id., at 101. Until today, therefore, we have never had occasion to determine whether a state regulatory program which gave state officials authority -- "power" -- to review and regulate prices or conduct, might still fail to meet the requirement for active state supervision because the State's regulation was not sufficiently detailed or rigorous.

[****41] Addressing this question, the Court of Appeals in this case used the following analysis:

<sup>1</sup> The Court states that "continued enforcement of the national antitrust policy grants the States more freedom, not less, in deciding whether to subject discrete parts of the economy to additional regulations and controls," ante, at 632. However, in Parker, we held that the Sherman Act simply does not apply to conduct regulated by the State. The enforcement of the national antitrust policy, as embodied in the antitrust laws, may grant individuals more freedom to compete in our free market system, but it does not implicate the freedom of the States in deciding whether to regulate.

<sup>2</sup> In 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667, 107 S. Ct. 720 (1987), we held that a New York statute failed to shelter private actors from antitrust liability because the state legislation required retailers to charge 112% of the price "posted" by wholesalers. The New York statute, like the California statute at issue in California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 (1980), gave no power to the state agency to review or establish the reasonableness of the price schedules "posted" by the wholesalers. 324 Liquor, supra, at 345.

504 U.S. 621, *643; 112 S. Ct. 2169, **2182; 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, ***428; 1992 U.S. LEXIS 3544, ****41

"Where, as here, the state's program is in place, is staffed and funded, grants to the state officials ample power and the duty to regulate pursuant to declared standards of state policy, is enforceable in the state's courts, and demonstrates some basic level of activity directed towards seeing that the [***429] private actors carry out the state's policy and not simply their own policy, more need not be established." 922 F.2d 1122, 1136 \(CA3 1991\), quoting New England Motor Rate Bureau, Inc. v. FTC, 908 F.2d 1064, 1071 \(CA1 1990\).

The Court likens this test to doing away all together with the active supervision requirement for immunity based on state action. But the test used by the Court of Appeals is [*644] much more closely attuned to our "have and exercise power" formulation in Patrick v. Burget than is the rule adopted by the Court today. The Court simply does not say just how active a State's regulators must be before the "active supervision" requirement will be satisfied. The only guidance it gives is that the inquiry [****42] should be one akin to causation in a negligence case; does the State play "a substantial role in determining the specifics of the economic policy." Ante, at 635. Any other formulation, we are told, will remove the active supervision requirement altogether as a practical matter.

I do not believe this to be the case.<sup>3</sup> In the States at issue here, the particular conduct was approved by a state agency. The agency manifested this approval by raising no objection to a required rate filing by the entity subject to regulation. This is quite consistent with our statement that the active supervision requirement serves mainly an "evidentiary function" as "one way of ensuring that the actor is engaging in the challenged conduct pursuant to state policy." Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 46, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 \(1985\).

[****43] The Court insists that its newly required "active supervision" will "increase the States' regulatory flexibility." Ante, at 636. But if private actors who participate, through a joint rate filing, in a State's "negative option" regulatory scheme may be liable for treble damages if they cannot prove that the State approved the specifics of a filing, the Court makes it highly unlikely that private actors will choose to participate in such a joint filing. This in turn lessens the States' regulatory flexibility, because as we have noted before, joint rate filings can improve the regulatory process by ensuring that the state agency has fewer filings to consider, allowing more resources to be expended on each filing. [*645] Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, supra, at 51. The view advanced by the Court of Appeals does not sanction price fixing in areas regulated by a State "not inconsistent with the antitrust laws." Ante, at 636. A State must establish, staff, and fund a program to approve [**2183] jointly set rates or prices in order for any activity undertaken by private individuals under that program to be immune [****44] under the antitrust laws.<sup>4</sup>

[***430] The Court rejects the test adopted by the Court of Appeals, stating that it cannot be the end of the inquiry. Instead, the party seeking immunity must "show that state officials have undertaken the necessary steps to determine the specifics of the price-fixing or ratesetting scheme." Ante, at 638. [****45]<sup>5</sup> Such an inquiry necessarily puts the federal court in the position of determining the efficacy of a particular State's regulatory scheme, in order to determine whether the State has met the "requisite level of active supervision." Ante, at 637. The Court maintains that the proper state-action inquiry does not determine whether a State has met some "normative standard" in its regulatory practices. Ante, at 634. But the Court's focus on the actions taken by state regulators, i. e., the way the State regulates, necessarily requires a judgment as to whether the State is sufficiently active -- surely a normative judgment.

<sup>3</sup>The state regulatory programs in Midcal, supra, Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83, 108 S. Ct. 1658 \(1988\), and 324 Liquor, supra, would all fail to provide immunity for lack of active supervision under the test adopted by the Court of Appeals.

<sup>4</sup>In neither of the examples cited by the majority as instances of state regulation not intended to authorize anticompetitive conduct would application of a less detailed active supervision test change the result. In Patrick v. Burget, supra, we concluded there was no immunity because the State did not have the authority to review the anticompetitive action undertaken by the peer review committee; in Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 \(1976\), it is unlikely that the clear articulation requirement under our current jurisprudence would be met with respect to the market for light bulbs.

<sup>5</sup>It is not clear, from the Court's formulation, whether this is a separate test applicable only to negative option regulatory schemes, or whether it applies more generally to issues of immunity under the state-action doctrine.

[*646] The Court of Appeals found -- properly, in my view -- that while the States at issue here did not regulate respondents' rates with the vigor petitioner [****46] would have liked, the States' supervision of respondents' conduct was active enough so as to provide for immunity from antitrust liability. The Court of Appeals, having concluded that the Federal Trade Commission applied an incorrect legal standard, reviewed the facts found by the Commission in light of the correct standard and reached a different conclusion. This does not constitute a rejection of the Commission's factual findings.

I would therefore affirm the judgment below.

JUSTICE O'CONNOR, with whom JUSTICE THOMAS joins, dissenting.

Notwithstanding its assertions to the contrary, the Court has diminished the States' regulatory flexibility by creating an impossible situation for those subject to state regulation. Even when a State has a "clearly articulated policy" authorizing anticompetitive behavior -- which the Federal Trade Commission concedes was the case here -- and even when the State establishes a system to supervise the implementation of that policy, the majority holds that a federal court may later find that the State's supervision was not sufficiently "substantial" in its "specifics" to insulate the anticompetitive behavior from antitrust liability. Ante, at [****47] 635. Given the threat of treble damages, regulated entities that have the option of heeding the State's anticompetitive policy would be foolhardy to do so; those that are compelled to comply are less fortunate. The practical effect of today's decision will likely be to eliminate so-called "negative option" regulation from the universe of schemes available to a [***431] State that seeks to regulate without exposing certain conduct to federal antitrust liability.

The Court does not dispute that each of the States at issue in this case could have supervised respondents' joint ratemaking; rather, it argues that "the potential for state supervision" [*647] was not realized in fact." Ante, at 638. Such an after-the-fact evaluation of a State's exercise of its supervisory [**2184] powers is extremely unfair to regulated parties. Liability under the antitrust laws should not turn on how enthusiastically a state official carried out his or her statutory duties. The regulated entity has no control over the regulator, and very likely will have no idea as to the degree of scrutiny that its filings may receive. Thus, a party could engage in exactly the same conduct in two [***48] States, each of which had exactly the same policy of allowing anticompetitive behavior and exactly the same regulatory structure, and discover afterward that its actions in one State were immune from antitrust prosecution, but that its actions in the other resulted in treble-damages liability.

Moreover, even if a regulated entity could assure itself that the State will undertake to actively supervise its rate filings, the majority does not offer any guidance as to what level of supervision will suffice. It declares only that the State must "play a substantial role in determining the specifics of the economic policy." Ante, at 635. That standard is not only ambiguous, but also runs the risk of being counterproductive. The more reasonable a filed rate, the less likely that a State will have to play any role other than simply reviewing the rate for compliance with statutory criteria. Such a vague and retrospective standard, combined with the threat of treble damages if that standard is not satisfied, makes "negative option" regulation an unattractive option for both States and the parties they regulate.

Finally, it is important to remember that antitrust actions can be brought [****49] by private parties as well as by government prosecutors. The resources of state regulators are strained enough without adding the extra burden of asking them to serve as witnesses in civil litigation and respond to allegations that they did not do their job.

For these reasons, as well as those given by THE CHIEF JUSTICE, I dissent.

References

---

Applicability of "state action" doctrine granting immunity from federal antitrust laws for activities of, or directed by, state governments--Supreme Court cases

43 Am Jur 2d, Insurance 18, 525-527; 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 15, 18, 45; 55 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 778

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 45(a)(1)

L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 9, 37

L Ed Index, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices; State Action; Title Insurance

Index to Annotations, Restraints of Trade and Monopolies: State Action; Title Examination; Title Insurance

Annotation [****50] References :

What issues will the Supreme Court consider, though not, or not properly, raised by the parties. 42 L Ed 2d 946.

Valid governmental action as conferring immunity or exemption from private liability under the federal antitrust laws.
12 ALR Fed 329.

---

End of Document

Spectrum Sports v. McQuillan

Supreme Court of the United States

November 10, 1992, Argued ; January 25, 1993, Decided

No. 91-10

Reporter

506 U.S. 447 *; 113 S. Ct. 884 **; 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 ***; 1993 U.S. LEXIS 1013 ****; 61 U.S.L.W. 4123; 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,096; 93 Cal. Daily Op. Service 529; 93 Daily Journal DAR 1069; 6 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 899

SPECTRUM SPORTS, INC., ET AL., PETITIONERS v. SHIRLEY McQUILLAN, ET VIR, DBA SORBOTURF ENTERPRISES

Prior History: [****1] ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 907 F.2d 154, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

monopolize, sorbothane, relevant market, probability, Sherman Act, attempt to monopolize, distributor, products, specific intent, equestrian, athletic, unfair, predatory conduct, violations, decisions, courts, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

HN1 [down arrow] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Fraud

A plaintiff charging attempted monopolization must prove a dangerous probability of actual monopolization, which has generally required a definition of the relevant market and examination of market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN2 [↓] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

To establish monopolization or attempt to monopolize under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, it would be necessary to appraise the exclusionary power of an illegal patent claim in terms of the relevant market for the product involved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN3 [↓] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The conduct of a single firm, governed by the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN4 [↓] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

It is generally required that to demonstrate attempted monopolization a plaintiff must prove (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. In order to determine whether there is a dangerous probability of monopolization, courts have found it necessary to consider the relevant market and the defendant's ability to lessen or destroy competition in that market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN5 [down] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The concern that the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, might be applied so as to further anticompetitive ends is plainly not met by inquiring only whether the defendant has engaged in "unfair" or "predatory" tactics. Such conduct may be sufficient to prove the necessary intent to monopolize, which is something more than an intent to compete vigorously, but demonstrating the dangerous probability of monopolization in an attempt case also requires inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN6 [down] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

A defendant is not liable for attempted monopolization under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, absent proof of a dangerous probability that they would monopolize a particular market and specific intent to monopolize.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Finding of liability for attempted monopolization under 2 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 2) held improper absent proof of dangerous probability of monopolizing relevant market.

Summary

From 1981 to 1983, a husband and wife were the southwestern United States distributors of products made with sorbothane, a patented elastic polymer, under a regional distributorship arrangement with the manufacturer of the products. The manufacturer gradually shifted away from the southwestern distributors the right to distribute various types of sorbothane products, and ultimately the manufacturer informed the southwestern distributors that their sorbothane orders would no longer be accepted. The national distributorship of one type of sorbothane product was thereupon transferred to a company that was co-owned by the son of the manufacturer's president. The southwestern distributors' business failed, and they filed suit in Federal District Court against the son's company and others for alleged violations of, among other things, 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), which makes it a felony for a person to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire to monopolize any part of interstate commerce. The District Court's jury instructions stated that if it were shown that the defendants had engaged in predatory conduct, the jury would be permitted to infer two of the elements of attempted monopolization--specific intent and dangerous probability of success--from such conduct, without any proof of the relevant market or of the defendants' market power. The jury returned a verdict in which the defendants were found to have violated 2 by "monopolizing, attempting to monopolize, and/or conspiring to monopolize." The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, affirming on appeal, held that (1) the verdict would stand if the evidence supported any one of the three possible violations of 2; and (2) a case of attempted monopolization had been established, in that (a) there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could conclude that the defendants had engaged in unfair or predatory conduct, (b) based on such evidence, the jury properly inferred specific intent and the dangerous probability of success, and (c) it was therefore not necessary to provide proof of the relevant market or of the defendants' market power.

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. In an opinion by White, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that (1) persons may not properly be held liable for attempted monopolization under 2 absent proof of (a) a dangerous probability that such persons would monopolize a particular market, and (b) specific intent to monopolize; (2) although predatory or unfair conduct might be sufficient to prove the necessary intent to monopolize, demonstrating the dangerous probability of monopolization in an attempt case requires inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the alleged offender's economic power in that market; and (3) the District Court and Court of Appeals had misconstrued 2 in permitting the defendants to be held liable for attempted monopolization without any proof of the relevant market or of a realistic probability that the defendants could achieve monopoly power in that market.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §15 > attempted monopolization -- intent -- power in relevant market -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D]

Persons may not properly be held liable for attempted monopolization under 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2) absent proof of (1) a dangerous probability that such persons would monopolize a particular market, and (2) specific intent to monopolize; although predatory or unfair conduct may be sufficient to prove the necessary intent to monopolize, demonstrating the dangerous probability of monopolization in an attempt case requires inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the alleged offender's economic power in that market; the notion that proof of unfair or predatory conduct alone--without proof of the relevant market or of the alleged offender's market power--is sufficient to make out the offense of attempted monopolization is contrary to the purpose and policy of the Sherman Act, since the courts' concern that 2 might be wrongly applied so as to further anticompetitive ends is not met by inquiring only whether the alleged offender has engaged in unfair or predatory tactics; thus, it is improper to permit liability to be imposed upon an alleged offender for attempted monopolization without any proof of the relevant market or of a realistic probability that the alleged offender could achieve monopoly power in that market.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §27 > amount of trade affected -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

Section 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), which prohibits attempts to monopolize any part of commerce, forbids attempts to monopolize any appreciable segment of interstate sales of the relevant product.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §18 > power in relevant market -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

A charge of monopolization under 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2) requires proof of the alleged monopolizer's market power in a relevant market.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §6 > purpose of Sherman Act -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The purpose of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.) is not to protect businesses from the working of the market, but rather to protect the public from the failure of the market; the Act directs itself not against conduct that is competitive, even severely so, but rather against conduct that unfairly tends to destroy competition itself; the Act does so not out of solicitude for private concerns, but out of concern for the public interest.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > acts prohibited -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

Section 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2)--which makes it a felony for a person to monopolize, attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire to monopolize any part of interstate commerce--makes the conduct of a single firm unlawful only when the firm actually monopolizes or dangerously threatens to do so.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §15 > intent -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

For purposes of 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), intent to monopolize is something more than an intent to compete vigorously.

APPEAL §1692.3 > remand -- misconception as to law -- attempt to monopolize -- > Headnote:
[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

On certiorari to review a United States Court of Appeals decision which affirmed a Federal District Court's holding that the defendants violated 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), the United States Supreme Court will reverse the Court of Appeals' judgment and remand the case for further proceedings, where (1) the defendants were charged under 2 withmonopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize; (2) the District Court's trial instructions misconstrued 2 as to the elements of attempted monopolization; (3) the jury returned a verdict in which the defendants were found to have violated 2 by "monopolizing, attempting to monopolize, and/or conspiring to monopolize"; (4) the verdict did not negate the possibility that the 2 verdict rested on the attempt-to-monopolize ground alone; and (5) the Court of Appeals' affirmance of the District Court's judgment rested solely on the legally erroneous conclusion that the defendants had attempted to monopolize.

Syllabus

---

Shortly after the manufacturer of sorbothane -- a patented elastic polymer with shock-absorbing characteristics -- informed respondents, distributors of medical, athletic, and equestrian products made with sorbothane, that it would no longer sell them the polymer, petitioner Spectrum Sports, Inc., became the national distributor of sorbothane athletic products. Respondents' business failed, and they filed suit in the District Court against petitioners and others, seeking damages for alleged violations of, inter alia, § 2 of the Sherman Act, which makes it an offense for any person to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire . . . to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several [****2] States." A jury found that the defendants violated § 2 by, in the words of the verdict sheet, "monopolizing, attempting to monopolize, and/or conspiring to monopolize." The Court of Appeals affirmed, noting that, although the jury had not specified which of the three possible § 2 violations had occurred, the verdict stood because the evidence established a case of attempted monopolization. Relying on its earlier rulings in Lessig v. Tidewater Oil Co., 327 F.2d 459, and its progeny, the court held that the jury could have inferred two of the elements of that offense -- a specific intent to achieve monopoly power and a dangerous probability of monopolization of a relevant market -- from evidence showing the defendants' unfair or predatory conduct, without any proof of relevant market or the defendants' market power, and that the jury was properly instructed that it could make such inferences.

Held: Petitioners may not be liable for attempted monopolization under § 2 absent proof of a dangerous probability that they would monopolize a relevant market and specific intent to monopolize. The conduct of a single firm, governed by § 2, is unlawful "only [****3] when it threatens actual monopolization." Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731. Consistent with this approach, Courts of Appeals other than the court below have generally required a plaintiff in an attempted monopolization case to prove that (1) the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. Unfair or predatory conduct may be sufficient to prove the necessary intent to monopolize. However, intent alone is insufficient to establish the dangerous probability of success, Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 402, 49 L. Ed. 518, 25 S. Ct. 276, which requires inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market. There is little if any support in the statute or case law for Lessig's contrary interpretation of § 2. Moreover, Lessig and its progeny are inconsistent with the Sherman Act's purpose of protecting the public from the failure of the market. The law directs itself only against conduct that [****4] unfairly tends to destroy competition, and, thus, courts have been careful to avoid constructions of § 2 which might chill competition rather than foster it. The concern that § 2 might be applied so as to further anticompetitive ends is plainly not met by inquiring only whether the defendant has engaged in "unfair" or "predatory" tactics. Since the jury's instructions and the Court of Appeals' affirmance both misconstrued § 2, and since the jury's verdict did not negate the possibility that it rested on the attempt to monopolize ground alone, the case is remanded for further proceedings. Pp. 454-460.

Counsel: James D. Vail argued the cause and filed briefs for petitioners.

Robert A. Long, Jr., argued the cause for the United States as amicus curiae in support of petitioners. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Starr, Acting Assistant Attorney General James, Deputy Solicitor General Wallace, and Catherine G. O'Sullivan.

Jeffrey M. Shohet argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief was Marcelle E. Mihaila.

Judges: WHITE, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

---

[*448] [***252] [**886] JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion [****5] of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [1A] Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 2, makes it an offense for any person to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States. . ." The [**887] jury in this case returned a verdict finding that petitioners had monopolized, attempted to monopolize, and/or conspired to monopolize. The District Court entered a judgment ruling [*449] that petitioners had violated § 2, and the Court of Appeals affirmed on the ground that petitioners had attempted to monopolize. The issue we have before us is whether the District Court and the Court of Appeals correctly defined the elements of that offense.

I

Sorbothane is a patented elastic polymer whose shockabsorbing characteristics make it useful in a variety of medical, athletic, and equestrian products. BTR, Inc. (BTR), owns the patent rights to sorbothane, and its wholly owned subsidiaries manufacture the product in the United States and Britain. Hamilton-Kent Manufacturing [****6] Company (Hamilton-Kent) and Sorbothane, Inc. (S. I.), were at all relevant times owned by BTR. S. I. was formed in 1982 to take over Hamilton-Kent's sorbothane business.<sup>1</sup> App. to Pet. for Cert. A3. Respondents [**253] Shirley and Larry McQuillan, doing business as Sorboturf Enterprises, were regional distributors of sorbothane products from 1981 to 1983. Petitioner Spectrum Sports, Inc. (Spectrum), was also a distributor of sorbothane products. Petitioner Kenneth B. Leighton, Jr., is a co-owner of Spectrum. Ibid. Kenneth Leighton, Jr., is the son of Kenneth Leighton, Sr., the president of Hamilton-Kent and S. I. at all relevant times.

In 1980, respondents Shirley and Larry McQuillan signed a letter of intent with Hamilton-Kent, which then owned all manufacturing and distribution rights to sorbothane. The letter of intent granted the McQuillans exclusive rights to purchase sorbothane for use in equestrian products. Respondents were designing [****7] a horseshoe pad using sorbothane.

In 1981, Hamilton-Kent decided to establish five regional distributorships for sorbothane. Respondents were selected to be distributors of all sorbothane products, including medical products and shoe inserts, in the Southwest. Spectrum [*450] was selected as distributor for another region. Id., at A4-A5.

In January 1982, Hamilton-Kent shifted responsibility for selling medical products from five regional distributors to a single national distributor. In April 1982, Hamilton-Kent told respondents that it wanted them to relinquish their athletic shoe distributorship as a condition for retaining the right to develop and distribute equestrian products. As of May 1982, BTR had moved the sorbothane business from Hamilton-Kent to S. I. Id., at A6. In May, the marketing manager of S. I. again made clear that respondents had to sell their athletic distributorship to keep their equestrian distribution rights. At a meeting scheduled to discuss the sale of respondents' athletic distributorship to petitioner Leighton, Jr., Leighton, Jr., informed Shirley McQuillan that if she did not come to agreement with him she would be "looking for work."<sup>2</sup> [****8] Id., at A6. Respondents refused to sell and continued to distribute athletic shoe inserts.

In the fall of 1982, Leighton, Sr., informed respondents that another concern had been appointed as the national equestrian distributor, and that they were "no longer involved in equestrian products." Id., at A7. In January 1983, S. I. began marketing through a national distributor a sorbothane horseshoe pad allegedly indistinguishable from the one designed by respondents. Ibid. In August 1983, S. I. informed respondents that it would no longer accept their orders. Ibid. Spectrum thereupon became national distributor of sorbothane athletic shoe inserts. Pet. for Cert. 6. Respondents sought to obtain sorbothane from the BTR's British subsidiary, but were informed by that subsidiary that it would not sell sorbothane in the United States. Respondents' business failed. App. to Pet. for Cert. A8.

Respondents sued [**888] petitioners seeking damages for alleged violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 [*451] and 2, 2 § 3 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, [**254] 15 U.S.C. § 14, the Racketeer Influenced [****9] and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C. § 1962, and two provisions of California business law. Respondents also alleged fraud, breach of oral contract, interference with prospective business advantage, bad-faith denial of the existence of an oral contract, and conversion.

---

<sup>1</sup> Sorbothane, Inc., was formerly called Sorbo, Inc. App. 67.

<sup>2</sup> Two violations of § 1 were alleged, resale price maintenance and division of territories. Attempted monopolization, monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize were charged under § 2. All in all, four alleged violations of federal law and seven alleged violations of state law were sent to the jury.

The case was tried to a jury, which returned a verdict against one or more of the defendants on each of the 11 alleged violations on which it was to return a verdict. All of the defendants were found to have violated § 2 by, in the words of the verdict sheet, "monopolizing, attempting to monopolize, and/or conspiring to monopolize." App. 410. Petitioners were also found to have violated civil RICO and the California [****10] unfair practices law, but not § 1 of the Sherman Act. The jury awarded $ 1,743,000 in compensatory damages on each of the violations found to have occurred.<sup>3</sup> This amount was trebled under § 4 of the Clayton Act. The District Court also awarded nearly $ 1 million in attorney's fees and denied motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial.

[****11] [*452] The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed the judgment in an unpublished opinion. Judgt. order reported at 907 F.2d 154 (1990). The court expressly ruled that the trial court had properly instructed the jury on the Sherman Act claims and found that the evidence supported the liability verdicts as well as the damages awards on these claims. The court then affirmed the judgment of the District Court, finding it unnecessary to rule on challenges to other violations found by the jury. App. to Pet. for Cert. A28. On the § 2 issue that petitioners present here, the Court of Appeals, noting that the jury had found that petitioners had violated § 2 without specifying whether they had monopolized, attempted to monopolize, or conspired to monopolize, held that the verdict would stand if the evidence supported any one of the three possible violations of § 2. Id., at A15. The court went on to conclude that a case of attempted monopolization had been established.<sup>4</sup> The court rejected petitioners' argument that attempted [**255] monopolization had not been established because respondents had failed to prove that petitioners had a specific intent [****12] to monopolize [**889] a relevant market. The court also held that in order to show that respondents' [*453] attempt to monopolize was likely to succeed it was not necessary to present evidence of the relevant market or of the defendants' market power. In so doing, the Ninth Circuit relied on Lessig v. Tidewater Oil Co., 327 F.2d 459 (CA9), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 993, 12 L. Ed. 2d 1046, 84 S. Ct. 1920 (1964), and its progeny. App. to Pet. for Cert. A18-A19. The Court of Appeals noted that these cases, in dealing with attempt to monopolize claims, had ruled that "if evidence of unfair or predatory conduct is presented, it may satisfy both the specific intent and dangerous probability elements of the offense, without any proof of relevant market or the defendant's marketpower [sic]." Id., at A19. If, however, there is insufficient evidence of unfair or predatory conduct, there must be a showing of "relevant market or the defendant's marketpower [sic]." Ibid. The court went on to find:

"There is sufficient evidence from which the jury could conclude that the S. I. Group and Spectrum Group engaged in unfair or predatory conduct [****13] and thus inferred that they had the specific intent and the dangerous probability of success and, therefore, McQuillan did not have to prove relevant market or the defendant's marketing power." Id., at A21.

<sup>3</sup> The special verdict form advised the jury as follows:

"The following pages identify the name of each defendant and the claims for which plaintiffs contend that the defendant is liable. If you find that any of the defendants are liable on any of the claims, you may award damages to the plaintiffs against those defendants. Should you decide to award damages, please assess damages for each defendant and each claim separately and without regard to whether you have already awarded the same damages on another claim or against another defendant. The court will insure that there is no double recovery. The verdict will not be totaled." App. 416.

<sup>4</sup> The District Court's jury instructions were transcribed as follows:

"In order to win on the claim of attempted monopoly, the Plaintiff must prove each of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence: first, that the Defendants had a specific intent to achieve monopoly power in the relevant market; second, that the Defendants engaged in exclusionary or restrictive conduct in furtherance of its specific intent; third, that there was a dangerous probability that Defendants could sooner or later achieve [their] goal of monopoly power in the relevant market; fourth, that the Defendants' conduct occurred in or affected interstate commerce; and, fifth, that the Plaintiff was injured in the business or property by the Defendants' exclusionary or restrictive conduct.

....

"If the Plaintiff has shown that the Defendant engaged in predatory conduct, you may infer from that evidence the specific intent and the dangerous probability element of the offense without any proof of the relevant market or the Defendants' marketing [sic] power." Id., at 251-252. See also App. to Pet. for Cert. A16, A20.

506 U.S. 447, *453; 113 S. Ct. 884, **889; 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, ***255; 1993 U.S. LEXIS 1013, ****13

[****14] The decision below, and the Lessig line of decisions on which it relies, conflicts with holdings of courts in other Circuits. Every other Court of Appeals has indicated that proving an attempt to monopolize requires proof of a dangerous probability of monopolization of a relevant market.<sup>5</sup> [****15] We [*454] granted certiorari, 503 U.S. 958 (1992), to resolve this conflict among the Circuits.<sup>6</sup> We reverse.

II

While § 1 of the Sherman Act forbids [***256] contracts or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce, § 2 addresses the actions of single firms that monopolize or attempt to monopolize, as well as conspiracies and combinations to monopolize. Section 2 does not define the elements of the offense of attempted monopolization. Nor is there much guidance to be had in the scant legislative history of that provision, which was added late in the legislative process. See 1 E. Kintner, Legislative History of the Federal Antitrust Laws and Related Statutes 23-25 (1978); 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law P617, pp. 39-41 (1978). The legislative history does indicate that much of the interpretation of the necessarily broad principles [****16] of the Act was to be left for the courts in particular cases. See, e. g., 21 Cong. Rec. 2460 (1890) (statement of Sen. Sherman). See also 1 [***890] Kintner, supra, at 19; 3 Areeda & Turner, supra, P617, at 40.

This Court first addressed the meaning of attempt to monopolize under § 2 in Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 49 L. Ed. 518, 25 S. Ct. 276 (1905). The Court's opinion, written by Justice Holmes, contained the following passage:

[*455] "Where acts are not sufficient in themselves to produce a result which the law seeks to prevent -- for instance, the monopoly -- but require further acts in addition to the mere forces of nature to bring that result to pass, an intent to bring it to pass is necessary in order to produce a dangerous probability that it will happen. Commonwealth v. Peaslee, 177 Mass. 267, 272 [59 N.E. 55, 56 (1901)]. But when that intent and the consequent dangerous probability exist, this statute, like many others and like the common law in some cases, directs itself against that dangerous probability as well as against the completed result." Id. at 396.

The Court [****17] went on to explain, however, that not every act done with intent to produce an unlawful result constitutes an attempt. "It is a question of proximity and degree." Id. at 402. Swift thus indicated that intent is necessary, but alone is not sufficient, to establish the dangerous probability of success that is the object of § 2's prohibition of attempts.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>5</sup> See, e.g., CVD, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 769 F.2d 842, 851 (CA1 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1016, 89 L. Ed. 2d 312, 106 S. Ct. 1198 (1986); Twin Laboratories, Inc. v. Weider Health & Fitness, 900 F.2d 566, 570 (CA2 1990); Harold Friedman, Inc. v. Kroger Co., 581 F.2d 1068, 1079 (CA3 1978); Abcor Corp. v. AM Int'l, Inc., 916 F.2d 924, 926, 931 (CA4 1990); C. A. T. Industrial Disposal, Inc. v. Browning-Ferris Industries, Inc., 884 F.2d 209, 210 (CA5 1989); Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S. E. Johnson Co., 917 F.2d 1413, 1431-1432 (CA6 1990), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 899, 116 L. Ed. 2d 226, 112 S. Ct. 274 (1991); Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F.2d 1409, 1413-1416 (CA7 1989); General Industries Corp. v. Hartz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d 795, 804 (CA8 1987); Colorado Interstate Gas Co. v. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America, 885 F.2d 683, 693 (CA10 1989), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 972, 112 L. Ed. 2d 424, 111 S. Ct. 441 (1990); Key Enterprises of Delaware, Inc. v. Venice Hospital, 919 F.2d 1550, 1565 (CA11 1990); Neumann v. Reinforced Earth Co., 252 U.S. App. D.C. 11, 15-16, 786 F.2d 424, 428-429, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 851, 93 L. Ed. 2d 116, 107 S. Ct. 181 (1986); Abbott Laboratories v. Brennan, 952 F.2d 1346, 1354 (CA Fed. 1991), cert. denied, 505 U.S. 1205, 120 L. Ed. 2d 870, 112 S. Ct. 2993 (1992).

<sup>6</sup> Our grant of certiorari was limited to the first question presented in the petition: "Whether a manufacturer's distributor expressly absolved of violating Section 1 of the Sherman Act can, without any evidence of market power or specific intent, be found liable for attempting to monopolize solely by virtue of a unique Ninth Circuit rule?" Pet. for Cert. i.

<sup>7</sup> Justice Holmes confirmed that this was his interpretation of Swift in Hyde v. United States, 225 U.S. 347, 56 L. Ed. 1114, 32 S. Ct. 793 (1912). In dissenting in that case on other grounds, the Justice, citing Swift, stated that an attempt may be found where the danger of harm is very great; however, "combination, intention and overt act may all be present without amounting to a criminal attempt. . . . There must be dangerous proximity to success." 225 U.S. at 387-388.

506 U.S. 447, *455; 113 S. Ct. 884, **890; 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, ***256; 1993 U.S. LEXIS 1013, ****17

The Court's decisions since Swift have reflected the view that [****18] HN1[↑] the plaintiff charging attempted monopolization must prove a dangerous probability of actual monopolization, which has generally required a definition of the relevant market and examination of market power. In Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 (1965), we found that enforcement of a fraudulently obtained patent claim could violate the Sherman Act. We stated that, HN2[↑] to establish monopolization or attempt to monopolize under § 2 of the Sherman Act, it would [*456] be necessary to [***257] appraise the exclusionary power of the illegal patent claim in terms of the relevant market for the product involved. Ibid. The reason was that "without a definition of that market there is no way to measure [the defendant's] ability to lessen or destroy competition." Ibid.

Similarly, this Court reaffirmed in Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984), that "Congress authorized Sherman Act scrutiny of single firms [***19] only when they pose a danger of monopolization. Judging unilateral conduct in this manner reduces the risk that the antitrust laws will dampen the competitive zeal of a single aggressive entrepreneur." Id., at 768. Thus, HN3[↑] the conduct of a single firm, governed by § 2, "is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization." Id., at 767. See also Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 154, 96 L. Ed. 162, 72 S. Ct. 181 (1951); United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 105-106, 92 L. Ed. 1236, 68 S. Ct. 941 (1948); American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 785, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946).

The Courts of Appeals other than the Ninth Circuit have followed this approach. Consistent with our cases, HN4[↑] it is generally required that to demonstrate attempted monopolization a plaintiff must prove (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) [****20] a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous [**891] probability of achieving monopoly power. See 3 Areeda & Turner, supra, P820, at 312. In order to determine whether there is a dangerous probability of monopolization, courts have found it necessary to consider the relevant market and the defendant's ability to lessen or destroy competition in that market.<sup>8</sup>

[*457] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#)[↑] [1B]Notwithstanding the array of authority contrary to Lessig [****21], the Court of Appeals in this case reaffirmed its prior holdings; indeed, it did not mention either this Court's decisions discussed above or the many decisions of other Courts of Appeals reaching contrary results. Respondents urge us to affirm the decision below. We are not at all inclined, however, to embrace Lessig's interpretation of § 2, for there is little, if any, support for it in the statute or the case law, and the notion that proof of unfair or predatory conduct alone is sufficient to make out the offense of attempted monopolization is contrary to the purpose and policy of the Sherman Act.

[LEdHN\[2\]](#)[↑] [2][LEdHN\[3\]](#)[↑] [3]The Lessig opinion claimed support from the language of § 2, which prohibits attempts to monopolize "any part" of commerce, and therefore forbids attempts to monopolize any appreciable segment of interstate sales of the relevant product. See United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 226, 91 L. Ed. 2010, 67 S. Ct. 1560 (1947). The "any part" clause, however, applies to charges of monopolization as [****22] well as to attempts to monopolize, and it is beyond [***258] doubt that the former requires proof of market power in a relevant market. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966); United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956).<sup>9</sup>

In support of its determination that an inference of dangerous probability was permissible from a showing of intent, the Lessig opinion cited, and added emphasis to, this Court's reference in its opinion in Swift to "intent and [****23]

<sup>8</sup>See, e. g., Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S. E. Johnson Co., 917 F.2d at 1431-1432; Twin Laboratories, Inc. v. Weider Health & Fitness, 900 F.2d at 570; Colorado Interstate Gas Co. v. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America, 885 F.2d at 693; Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F.2d at 1413-1416; General Industries Corp. v. Hartz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d at 804.

<sup>9</sup>Lessig cited United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. at 226, in support of its interpretation, but Yellow Cab relied on the "any part" language to support the proposition that it is immaterial how large an amount of interstate trade is affected, or how important that part of commerce is in relation to the entire amount of that type of commerce in the Nation.

the consequent dangerous probability."<sup>10</sup> 327 F.2d at 474, n. 46, quoting 196 U.S. at 396. But any question whether dangerous [*458] probability of success requires proof of more than intent alone should have been removed by the subsequent passage in Swift which stated that "not every act that may be done with intent to produce an unlawful result . . . constitutes an attempt. It is a question of proximity and degree." Id., at 402.

The Lessig court also relied on a footnote in Du Pont & Co., supra, at 395, n. 23, for the proposition that when the charge is attempt to monopolize, the relevant market is "not in issue." That footnote, which appeared in analysis of the relevant market issue in Du Pont, rejected the Government's reliance on several cases, noting that "the scope of the market was not in issue" in Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 75 L. Ed. 544, 51 S. Ct. 248 \(1931\). That reference merely reflected the fact that, in Story Parchment, which was not an attempt to monopolize case, the parties did not challenge the definition of the market [****24] adopted by the lower courts. Nor was Du Pont itself concerned with the issue in this case.

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [↑] [1C] [LEdHN\[4\]](#) [↑] [4] [LEdHN\[5\]](#) [↑] [5] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [↑] [6] It is also our view that Lessig and later Ninth Circuit decisions refining and applying it are inconsistent with the policy of the Sherman Act. The purpose of the Act is [*892] not to protect businesses from the working of the market; it is to protect the public from the failure of the market. The law directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself. It does so not out of solicitude for private concerns but out of concern for the public interest. See, e. g., Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\); Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 116-117, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 \(1986\); [****25] Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 \(1962\). Thus, this Court and other courts have been careful to avoid constructions of § 2 which might chill competition, rather than foster it. It is sometimes [*459] difficult to distinguish robust competition from conduct with long-term anticompetitive effects; moreover, single-firm activity is unlike concerted activity covered by § 1, which "inherently is fraught with anticompetitive risk." Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 767-769. [***259] For these reasons, § 2 makes the conduct of a single firm unlawful only when it actually monopolizes or dangerously threatens to do so. Id., at 767. HN5 [↑] The concern that § 2 might be applied so as to further anticompetitive ends is plainly not met by inquiring only whether the defendant has engaged in "unfair" or "predatory" tactics. Such conduct may be sufficient to prove the necessary intent to monopolize, which is something more than an intent to compete vigorously, but demonstrating the dangerous probability [****26] of monopolization in an attempt case also requires inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market.

III

[LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [↑] [1D] [LEdHN\[7\]](#) [↑] [7] We hold that HN6 [↑] petitioners may not be liable for attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act absent proof of a dangerous probability that they would monopolize a particular market and specific intent to monopolize. In this case, the trial instructions allowed the jury to infer specific intent and dangerous probability of success from the defendants' predatory conduct, without any proof of the relevant market or of a realistic probability that the defendants could achieve monopoly power in that market. In this respect, the instructions misconstrued § 2, as did the Court of Appeals in affirming the judgment of the District Court. Since the affirmance of the § 2 judgment against petitioners rested solely on the legally erroneous conclusion that petitioners had attempted [****27] to monopolize in violation of § 2 and since the jury's verdict did not negate the possibility that the § 2 verdict rested on the attempt to monopolize ground alone, the judgment [*460] of the Court of Appeals is reversed, Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Citrus Products Co., 370 U.S. 19, 29-30, 8 L. Ed. 2d 305, 82 S. Ct. 1130 \(1962\), and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

10

So ordered.

References

---

<sup>10</sup> Respondents conceded in their brief that the case should be remanded to the Court of Appeals if we found error in the instruction on attempt to monopolize. Brief for Respondents 45-46.

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 35- 39, 43

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:338

12B Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 194, 195, 214, 215, 217, 218, 231

18 Am Jur PI & Pr Forms (Rev), Monopolies, [****28] Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices, Form 18

12A Am Jur Legal Forms 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 178:81

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 2

L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 15, 18, 19

L Ed Index, Attempts; Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices

ALR Index, Attempt; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References:

Determining relevant market in suit where franchisee charges franchisor with monopolization, or attempt to monopolize, market in violation of 2 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 2). 56 ALR Fed 406.

Comment Note--What constitutes "attempt to monopolize," within meaning of 2 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 2). 27 ALR Fed 762.

---

End of Document

Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus.

Supreme Court of the United States

November 2, 1992, Argued ; May 3, 1993, Decided

No. 91-1043

Reporter

508 U.S. 49 *; 113 S. Ct. 1920 **; 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 ***; 1993 U.S. LEXIS 3121 ****; 26 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1641; 61 U.S.L.W. 4450; Copy. L. Rep. (CCH) P27,089; 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,207; 93 Cal. Daily Op. Service 3198; 93 Daily Journal DAR 5465; 7 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 223

PROFESSIONAL REAL ESTATE INVESTORS, INC., ET AL., PETITIONERS v. COLUMBIA PICTURES INDUSTRIES, INC., ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 944 F. 2d 1525, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

sham, lawsuit, probable cause, antitrust, competitor, immunity, baseless, sham exception, anticompetitive, genuine, merits, cases, summary judgment, infringement, motivation, objectively reasonable, government action, videodiscs, courts, copyright infringement, realistically, motion picture, Sherman Act, proceedings, repetitive, subjective intent, judicial process, anti trust law, collateral, discovery

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

**HN1** [] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Under the "sham" exception to the doctrine of antitrust immunity, as that doctrine applies in the litigation context, activity "ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action" does not qualify for Noerr immunity if it is a mere sham to cover an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

**HN2** [] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Litigation cannot be deprived of Noerr immunity as a sham unless the litigation is objectively baseless.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

HN3 [down] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits every contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States. 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 2 punishes every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States. 15 U.S.C. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Railroads

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [down] Scope, Exemptions

Those who petition government for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability. The Supreme Court first recognized in Noerr that the Sherman Act does not prohibit persons from associating together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or a monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN5 Scope, Exemptions

Immunity is withheld from "sham" activities under Noerr where application of the Sherman Act would be justified when the petitioning activity, ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, is a mere sham to cover an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr doctrine is extended to the approach of citizens to administrative agencies and to courts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN7 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

An objectively reasonable effort to litigate cannot be sham under the Noerr doctrine regardless of subjective intent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN8 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

That a sham depends on the existence of anticompetitive intent, however, does not transform the sham inquiry into a purely subjective investigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN9 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Recourse to agencies and courts should not be condemned as sham until a reviewing court has discerned and drawn the difficult line separating objectively reasonable claims from a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims which leads the factfinder to conclude that the administrative and judicial processes have been abused. The Supreme Court's recognition of a sham in California Motor Transport signifies that the institution of legal proceedings "without probable cause" will give rise to a sham if such activity effectively bars competitors from meaningful access to adjudicatory tribunals and so usurps the decisionmaking process.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN10 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The legality of objectively reasonable petitioning "directed toward obtaining governmental action" is not at all affected by any anticompetitive purpose the actor may have had.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN11[] Higher Education & Professional Associations, Colleges & Universities

Neither Noerr immunity nor its sham exception turns on subjective intent alone.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN12[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The United States Supreme Court has a two-part definition of "sham" litigation. First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. Under the second part of the definition of sham, the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor, through the use of the governmental process -- as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetitive weapon. This two-tiered process requires the plaintiff to disprove the challenged lawsuit's legal viability before the court will entertain evidence of the suit's economic viability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN13[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Even a plaintiff who defeats the defendant's claim to Noerr immunity by demonstrating both the objective and the subjective components of a sham must still prove a substantive antitrust violation. Proof of a sham merely deprives the defendant of immunity; it does not relieve the plaintiff of the obligation to establish all other elements of his claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN14[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

A winning lawsuit is by definition a reasonable effort at petitioning for redress and therefore not a sham. On the other hand, when the antitrust defendant has lost the underlying litigation, a court must resist the understandable temptation to engage in post hoc reasoning by concluding that an ultimately unsuccessful action must have been unreasonable or without foundation. The court must remember that even when the law or the facts appear questionable or unfavorable at the outset, a party may have an entirely reasonable ground for bringing suit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN15 [ ] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The word "genuine" has both objective and subjective connotations. On one hand, "genuine" means actually having the reputed or apparent qualities or character. "Genuine" in this sense governs Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, under which a "genuine issue" is one that properly can be resolved only by a finder of fact because it may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party. On the other hand, "genuine" also means sincerely and honestly felt or experienced. To be sham, therefore, litigation must fail to be "genuine" in both senses of the word.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Torts > ... > Elements > Lack of Probable Cause > Determinations of Probable Cause

HN16 [ ] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The existence of probable cause to institute legal proceedings precludes a finding that an antitrust defendant has engaged in sham litigation. The notion of probable cause, as understood and applied in the common-law tort of wrongful civil proceedings, requires the plaintiff to prove that the defendant lacked probable cause to institute an unsuccessful civil lawsuit and that the defendant pressed the action for an improper, malicious purpose. Probable cause to institute civil proceedings requires no more than a reasonable belief that there is a chance that a claim may be held valid upon adjudication. Because the absence of probable cause is an essential element of the tort, the existence of probable cause is an absolute defense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN17 [ ] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

When a court has found that an antitrust defendant claiming Noerr immunity had probable cause to sue, that finding compels the conclusion that a reasonable litigant in the defendant's position could realistically expect success on the merits of the challenged lawsuit. Therefore, a proper probable-cause determination irrefutably demonstrates that an antitrust plaintiff has not proved the objective prong of the sham exception and that the defendant is accordingly entitled to Noerr immunity.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Copyright infringement action held not to be "sham," within exception to antitrust exemption for efforts to influence government action, where copyright holders had probable cause for suit.

Summary

Several motion picture studios, alleging that the operators of a resort hotel had infringed the studios' copyrights in various films by renting videodiscs to guests for viewing in hotel rooms, filed an action against the operators in the United States District Court for the Central District of California. The operators filed a counterclaim charging the studios with violations of 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 2), based in part on the allegation that the studios' copyright action was a mere sham which cloaked underlying acts of monopolization and conspiracy to restrain trade. The District Court entered summary judgment in favor of the operators on the studios' copyright claim (228 USPQ 743), and the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed (866 F2d 278). On remand, the District Court granted the studios' motion for summary judgment on the operators' antitrust counterclaim, on the grounds that (1) the studios had clearly sought and expected a favorable judgment on the copyright claim and had had probable cause to bring such an action; and (2) the copyright action therefore was not a "sham" and was entitled to antitrust immunity under the "Noerr-Pennington" doctrine as a legitimate effort to influence governmental action (1990-1 CCH Trade Cases 68,971). The Court of Appeals, affirming, (1) characterized "sham" litigation as involving either misrepresentations in the adjudicatory process or the pursuit of a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims instituted without probable cause and regardless of the merits; and (2) noted that the operators had neither alleged that the copyright action involved misrepresentations nor challenged the District Court's finding of probable cause, but had argued only that the action was a sham because the studios had not honestly believed the action to be meritorious (944 F2d 1525).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Thomas, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and White, Blackmun, Scalia, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., it was held that (1) regardless of the subjective intent of a litigant, an objectively reasonable effort to litigate cannot be a "sham" for purposes of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine; (2) in order for litigation to be a "sham," (a) the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits, and (b) only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation to determine whether the lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor; (3) the existence of probable cause to institute legal proceedings--as understood and applied in the common-law tort of wrongful civil proceedings--precludes a finding that an antitrust defendant has engaged in sham litigation; and (4) in the case at hand, even though the studios' copyright action was unsuccessful, the studios had had probable cause to bring such an action because the law was then unclear as to whether the operators' videodisc rental activities intruded on the studios' copyrights.

Souter, J., concurred, expressing the view that the court's opinion was not intended to transplant every substantive nuance and procedural quirk of the common-law tort of wrongful civil proceedings into federal antitrust law, but used "probable cause" merely as shorthand for a reasonable litigant's realistic expectation of success on the merits.

Stevens, J., joined by O'Connor, J., concurred in the judgment, expressing the view that (1) the court correctly held that an objectively reasonable effort to litigate cannot be a "sham" regardless of subjective intent; but (2) the court's opinion was unnecessarily broad, as there might be lawsuits (a) in which a reasonable litigant could realistically expect some form of success on the merits, but (b) which would be objectively unreasonable and thus would be shams.

Headnotes

---

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9.5 > immunity -- Noerr-Pennington doctrine -- sham exception -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E]

Regardless of the subjective intent of a litigant, an objectively reasonable effort to litigate cannot be a "sham" for purposes of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine--(1) the Noerr-Pennington doctrine providing that efforts to influence governmental actions qualify for antitrust immunity, and (2) the sham exception providing that activity that is ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, but is a mere sham to cover an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor, does not qualify for antitrust immunity; the legality of objectively reasonable petitioning directed toward obtaining governmental action is not affected by any anticompetitive purpose the actor may have had; in order for litigation to be a "sham," (1) the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits, and (2) only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation to determine whether the lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor; the existence of probable cause to institute legal proceedings precludes a finding that an antitrust defendant has engaged in sham litigation, as a finding of probable cause compels the conclusion that a reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits of the challenged lawsuit and irrefutably demonstrates that the antitrust plaintiff has not proved the objective prong of the sham exception. (Stevens and O'Connor, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

COPYRIGHT AND LITERARY PROPERTY §3 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9.5 > SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS §5 > antitrust immunity -- Noerr-Pennington doctrine -- sham exception -- motion pictures -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2A\]](#) [2A] [LEdHN\[2B\]](#) [2B] [LEdHN\[2C\]](#) [2C] [LEdHN\[2D\]](#) [2D] [LEdHN\[2E\]](#) [2E]

Summary judgment is properly issued in favor of motion picture studios with regard to a counterclaim by the operators of a resort hotel, who allege that the studios violated 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2, 2) by bringing a copyright infringement action against the operators for renting videodiscs of copyrighted movies to hotel guests for in-room viewing, because (1) the studios' antitrust immunity cannot be pierced, under the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine of antitrust immunity as to efforts to influence governmental action, in the absence of proof that the copyright action was objectively baseless or frivolous; (2) even though the copyright action was unsuccessful, the studios had had probable cause to bring such an action, given that (a) under 17 USCS 106\(4\), the studios enjoyed the exclusive right to perform their copyrighted movies publicly, (b) the studios acquired this statutory right for motion pictures, as original audiovisual works of authorship fixed in a tangible medium of expression under 17 USCS 102\(a\)\(6\), regardless of whether they intended any monopolistic or predatory use, and (c) at the time a Federal District Court entered summary judgment for the operators on the copyright infringement claim, the law was unclear as to whether the operators' videodisc rental activities intruded on the studios' copyrights; and (3) the existence of probable cause eliminates any genuine issue of material fact for purposes of Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9.5 > immunity -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

Those who petition government for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9.5 > immunity -- sham exception --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The institution of legal proceedings without probable cause will give rise to a "sham," for purposes of the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine of antitrust immunity as to efforts to influence governmental action, if such activity effectively bars competitors from meaningful access to adjudicatory tribunals and so usurps the decisionmaking process.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9.5 > immunity -- sham exception --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[5B\]](#) [5B]

A winning lawsuit is by definition a reasonable effort at petitioning for redress and is therefore not a "sham," for purposes of the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine of antitrust immunity as to efforts to influence governmental action; however, an ultimately unsuccessful lawsuit is not necessarily unreasonable or without foundation for purposes of the "sham" exception.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9.5 > immunity -- sham exception --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

In a private action under the federal antitrust laws, a plaintiff who defeats a claim of antitrust immunity with respect to an allegedly anticompetitive lawsuit by the defendant, by demonstrating both the objective and the subjective components of the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine of antitrust immunity as to efforts to influence governmental action, must still prove a substantive antitrust violation, because proof of a sham merely deprives the defendant of immunity and does not relieve the plaintiff of the obligation to establish all other elements of the antitrust claim.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION §1 > probable cause -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7A\]](#) [7A] [LEdHN\[7B\]](#) [7B]

The notion of probable cause, as understood and applied in the common-law tort of wrongful civil proceedings--frequently called "malicious prosecution," which, strictly speaking, governs the malicious pursuit of criminal proceedings without probable cause--requires the plaintiff to prove that the defendant lacked probable cause to institute an unsuccessful civil lawsuit and that the defendant pressed the action for an improper, malicious purpose; because the absence of probable cause is an essential element of the tort, the existence of probable cause is an absolute defense; probable cause to institute civil proceedings requires no more than a reasonable belief that there is a chance that a claim may be held valid upon adjudication, and a showing of malice alone will neither entitle the plaintiff in a wrongful civil proceedings action to prevail nor permit the factfinder to infer the absence of probable cause; the threshold for showing probable cause is no higher in the civil context than in the criminal context.

TRIAL §92 > question of law or fact -- probable cause -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8\]](#) [8]

For purposes of determining whether there was probable cause to institute a legal proceeding, a court may decide probable cause as a matter of law where there is no dispute over the predicate facts of the legal proceeding.

DEPOSITIONS AND DISCOVERY §29 > antitrust actions -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[9] [9]

A Federal Court of Appeals--in reviewing a Federal District Court's granting of summary judgment in favor of motion picture studios with regard to a counterclaim by operators of a resort hotel, who allege that the studios violated 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1, 2) by bringing a copyright infringement action against the operators for renting videodiscs of copyrighted movies to hotel guests for in-room viewing--properly refuses the operators' request for further discovery on the economic circumstances of the underlying copyright litigation, which request was also refused by the District Court, because (1) the studios' antitrust immunity cannot be pierced, under the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine of antitrust immunity as to efforts to influence governmental action, in the absence of proof that the copyright action was objectively baseless or frivolous; and (2) the District Court thus had no occasion to inquire whether (a) the studios were indifferent to the outcome on the merits of the copyright suit, (b) any damages for infringement would be too low to justify the studios' investment in the suit, or (c) the studios had decided to sue primarily for the benefit of collateral injuries inflicted through the use of legal process.

Syllabus

---

Although those who petition government for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability, *Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523*, such immunity is withheld when petitioning activity "ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, is a mere sham to cover . . . an attempt to interfere directly" with a competitor's business relationships, *id., at 144*. Petitioner resort hotel operators (collectively, PRE) rented videodiscs to guests for use with videodisc players located in each guest's room and sought to develop a market for the sale of such players to other hotels. Respondent major motion picture studios (collectively, Columbia), [\[\*\*\*\*2\]](#) which held copyrights to the motion pictures recorded on PRE's videodiscs and licensed the transmission of those motion pictures to hotel rooms, sued PRE for alleged copyright infringement. PRE counterclaimed, alleging that Columbia's copyright action was a mere sham that cloaked underlying acts of monopolization and conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The District Court granted summary judgment to PRE on the copyright claim, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. On remand, the District Court granted Columbia's motion for summary judgment on PRE's antitrust claims. Because Columbia had probable cause to bring the infringement action, the court reasoned, the action was no sham and was entitled to Noerr immunity. The District Court also denied PRE's request for further discovery on Columbia's intent in bringing its action. The Court of Appeals affirmed. Noting that PRE's sole argument was that the lawsuit was a sham because Columbia did not honestly believe its infringement claim was meritorious, the court found that the existence of probable cause precluded the application of the sham exception as a matter of law and rendered irrelevant any [\[\*\*\*\*3\]](#) evidence of Columbia's subjective intent in bringing suit.

Held:

1. Litigation cannot be deprived of immunity as a sham unless it is objectively baseless. This Court's decisions establish that the legality of objectively reasonable petitioning "directed toward obtaining governmental action" is "not at all affected by any anticompetitive purpose [the actor] may have had." *Id., at 140*. Thus, neither Noerr immunity nor its sham exception turns on subjective intent alone. See, e.g., *Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 503, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931*. Rather, to be a "sham," litigation must meet a two-part definition. First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. Under this second part of the definition a court should focus on whether the baseless suit conceals "an attempt to interfere directly" with a competitor's business relationships, *Noerr, supra, at 144*, through the "use [\[\*\*\*\*4\]](#) [of] the governmental process -- as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetitive weapon," *Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 380, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344*. This two-tiered process requires a plaintiff to disprove the challenged lawsuit's legal viability before the court will entertain evidence of the suit's economic viability. Pp. 55-61.

2. Because PRE failed to establish the objective prong of Noerr's sham exception, summary judgment was properly granted to Columbia. A finding that an antitrust defendant claiming Noerr immunity had probable cause to sue compels the conclusion that a reasonable litigant in the defendant's position could realistically expect success on the merits of the challenged lawsuit. Here, the lower courts correctly found probable cause for Columbia's suit. Since there was no dispute over the predicate facts of the underlying legal proceedings -- Columbia had the exclusive right to show its copyrighted motion pictures publicly -- the court could decide probable cause as a matter of law. A court could reasonably conclude that Columbia's action was an objectively [****5] plausible effort to enforce rights, since, at the time the District Court entered summary judgment, there was no clear copyright law on videodisc rental activities; since Columbia might have won its copyright suit in two other Circuits; and since Columbia would have been entitled to press a novel claim, even in the absence of supporting authority, if a similarly situated reasonable litigant could have perceived some likelihood of success. Pp. 62-65.

3. The Court of Appeals properly refused PRE's request for further discovery on the economic circumstances of the underlying copyright litigation, because such matters were rendered irrelevant by the objective legal reasonableness of Columbia's infringement suit. Pp. 65-66.

Counsel: Patrick J. Coyne argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs was James R. Loftis III.

Andrew J. Pincus argued the cause for respondents. With him on the brief were Richard J. Favretto, Roy T. Englert, Jr., and Stephen A. Kroft.*

[****6]

Judges: THOMAS, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and WHITE, BLACKMUN, SCALIA, KENNEDY, and SOUTER, JJ., joined. SOUTER, J., filed a concurring opinion, post, p. 66. STEVENS, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, in which O'CONNOR, J., joined, post, p. 67.

Opinion by: THOMAS

Opinion

---

[1642] [*51] [**618] [**1923] JUSTICE THOMAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A] [↑] [1A] LEdHN[2A] [↑] [2A] This case requires us to define the "sham" exception to the doctrine of antitrust immunity first identified in Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961), as that doctrine applies in the litigation context. HN1 [↑] Under the sham exception, activity "ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action" does not qualify for Noerr immunity if it "is a mere sham to cover . . . an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships [****7] of a competitor." Id., at 144. We hold that HN2 [↑] litigation cannot be deprived of immunity as a sham unless the litigation is objectively baseless. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit refused to characterize as sham a lawsuit that the antitrust defendant admittedly had probable cause to institute. We affirm.

|

Petitioners Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc., and Kenneth F. Irwin (collectively, PRE) operated La Mancha Private Club and Villas, a resort hotel in Palm Springs, California. Having installed videodisc players in the resort's

---

* Solicitor General Starr, Acting Assistant Attorney General James, Deputy Solicitor General Wallace, Michael R. Dreeben, Catherine G. O'Sullivan, and James M. Spears filed a brief for the United States as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

hotel rooms and assembled a library of more than 200 motion picture titles, PRE rented videodiscs to guests for in-room [*52] viewing. PRE also sought to develop a market for the sale of videodisc players to other hotels wishing to offer in-room viewing of prerecorded material. Respondents, Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., and seven other major motion picture studios (collectively, Columbia), held copyrights to the motion pictures recorded on the videodiscs that PRE purchased. Columbia also licensed the transmission of copyrighted [***8] motion pictures to hotel rooms through a wired cable system called Spectradyne. PRE therefore competed with Columbia not only for the viewing market at La Mancha but also for the broader market for in-room entertainment services in hotels.

[1643] In 1983, Columbia sued PRE for alleged copyright infringement through the rental of videodiscs for viewing in hotel rooms. PRE [**1924] counterclaimed, charging Columbia with violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2,<sup>1</sup> and various state-law infractions. In particular, PRE alleged that Columbia's copyright action was a mere sham that cloaked underlying acts of monopolization and conspiracy to restrain trade.

[***9] The parties filed cross-motions for summary judgment on Columbia's copyright claim and postponed further discovery on PRE's antitrust counterclaims. Columbia did not dispute that PRE could freely sell or lease lawfully purchased videodiscs under the Copyright Act's "first sale" doctrine, see 17 U.S.C. § 109(a), [***619] and PRE conceded that the playing of videodiscs constituted "performance" of motion pictures, see 17 U.S.C. § 101 (1988 ed. and Supp. III). As a result, summary judgment depended solely on whether rental of videodiscs for in-room viewing infringed Columbia's exclusive right to [*53] "perform the copyrighted work[s] publicly." § 106(4). Ruling that such rental did not constitute public performance, the District Court entered summary judgment for PRE. 228 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 743 (CD Cal. 1986). The Court of Appeals affirmed on the grounds that a hotel room was not a "public place" and that PRE did not "transmit or otherwise communicate" Columbia's motion pictures. 866 F.2d 278 (CA9 1989). See 17 U.S.C. § 101 (1988 ed. and Supp. III).

On remand, Columbia sought [***10] summary judgment on PRE's antitrust claims, arguing that the original copyright infringement action was no sham and was therefore entitled to immunity under Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., supra. Reasoning that the infringement action "was clearly a legitimate effort and therefore not a sham," 1990-1 Trade Cases P 68,971, p. 63,242 (CD Cal. 1990), the District Court granted the motion:

"It was clear from the manner in which the case was presented that [Columbia was] seeking and expecting a favorable judgment. Although I decided against [Columbia], the case was far from easy to resolve, and it was evident from the opinion affirming my order that the Court of Appeals had trouble with it as well. I find that there was probable cause for bringing the action, regardless of whether the issue was considered a question of fact or of law." Id., at 63,243.

The court then denied PRE's request for further discovery on Columbia's intent in bringing the copyright action and dismissed PRE's state-law counterclaims without prejudice.

The Court of Appeals affirmed. 944 F.2d 1525 (CA9 1991). [***11] After rejecting PRE's other allegations of anticompetitive conduct, see id., at 1528-1529,<sup>2</sup> the court focused on [*54] PRE's contention that the copyright

<sup>1</sup> HN3 [↑] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "every contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 2 punishes "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States."

<sup>2</sup> The Court of Appeals held that Columbia's alleged refusal to grant copyright licenses was not "separate and distinct" from the prosecution of its infringement suit. 944 F.2d at 1528. The court also held that PRE had failed to establish how it could have suffered antitrust injury from Columbia's other allegedly anticompetitive acts. Id., at 1529. Thus, whatever antitrust injury Columbia inflicted must have stemmed from the attempted enforcement of copyrights, and we do not consider whether Columbia could have made a valid claim of immunity for anticompetitive conduct independent of petitioning activity. Cf. Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 707-708, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962).

action was indeed sham and that Columbia could not claim Noerr immunity. The Court of Appeals characterized "sham" litigation as one of two types of "abuse of . . . judicial processes": either "misrepresentations . . . in the adjudicatory process" or the pursuit of "a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims" instituted "without probable cause, and regardless [**1925] of the merits." 944 F.2d at 1529 (quoting California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 513, 512, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 \(1972\)). PRE neither "allege[d] that the [copyright] lawsuit involved misrepresentations" nor "challenge[d] the district court's [***620] finding that the infringement action was brought with probable cause, i.e., that the suit was not baseless." 944 F.2d at 1530. Rather, PRE opposed summary judgment solely by arguing that "the copyright infringement lawsuit [was] a sham because [Columbia] did not honestly believe that [****12] the infringement claim was meritorious." Ibid.

The Court of Appeals rejected PRE's contention that "subjective intent in bringing the suit was a question of fact precluding entry of summary judgment." Ibid. Instead, the court [***13] reasoned that the existence of probable cause "preclude[d] the application of the sham exception as a matter of law" [1644] because "a suit brought with probable cause does not fall within the sham exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine." 944 F.2d at 1531, 1532. Finally, the court observed that PRE's failure to show that "the copyright infringement action was baseless" rendered irrelevant any "evidence of [Columbia's] subjective intent." Id. at 1533. It accordingly rejected PRE's request for further discovery on Columbia's intent.

[*55] The Courts of Appeals have defined "sham" in inconsistent and contradictory ways.<sup>3</sup> We once observed that "sham" might become "no more than a label courts could apply to activity they deem unworthy of antitrust immunity." Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 508, n.10, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931 \(1988\). The array of definitions adopted by lower courts demonstrates that this observation was prescient.

[***14] //

PRE contends that "the Ninth Circuit erred in holding that an antitrust plaintiff must, as a threshold prerequisite [*56] . . . , establish that a sham lawsuit is baseless as a matter of law." Brief for Petitioners 14. It invites us to adopt an approach under [***621] which either "indifference to . . . outcome," ibid., or failure to prove that a petition for redress of grievances "would . . . have been brought but for [a] predatory motive," Tr. of Oral Arg. 10, would expose a defendant to antitrust liability [**1926] under the sham exception. We decline PRE's invitation.

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [↑] [3]HN4[↑] Those who petition government for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability. We first recognized in Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed.

<sup>3</sup> Several Courts of Appeals demand that an alleged sham be proved legally unreasonable. See McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1560, and n.12 \(CA11 1992\); Litton Systems, Inc. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 700 F.2d 785, 809-812 \(CA2 1983\), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1073, 79 L. Ed. 2d 220, 104 S. Ct. 984 \(1984\); Hydro-Tech Corp. v. Sundstrand Corp., 673 F.2d 1171, 1177 \(CA10 1982\); Federal Prescription Service, Inc. v. American Pharmaceutical Assn., 214 U.S. App. D.C. 76, 85, 89, 663 F.2d 253, 262, 266 \(1981\), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 928, 71 L. Ed. 2d 472, 102 S. Ct. 1293 \(1982\). Still other courts have held that successful litigation by definition cannot be sham. See, e.g., Eden Hannon & Co. v. Sumitomo Trust & Banking Co., 914 F.2d 556, 564-565 \(CA4 1990\), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 947, 113 L. Ed. 2d 467, 111 S. Ct. 1414 \(1991\); South Dakota v. Kansas City Southern Industries, Inc., 880 F.2d 40, 54 \(CA8 1989\), cert. denied sub nom. South Dakota v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 493 U.S. 1023, 107 L. Ed. 2d 745, 110 S. Ct. 726 \(1990\); Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. v. Redd Horne, Inc., 749 F.2d 154, 161 \(CA3 1984\).

Other Courts of Appeals would regard some meritorious litigation as sham. The Sixth Circuit treats "genuine [legal] substance" as raising merely "a rebuttable presumption" of immunity. Westmac, Inc. v. Smith, 797 F.2d 313, 318 \(1986\) (emphasis added), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1035, 93 L. Ed. 2d 838, 107 S. Ct. 885 \(1987\). The Seventh Circuit denies immunity for the pursuit of valid claims if "the stakes, discounted by the probability of winning, would be too low to repay the investment in litigation." Grip-Pak, Inc. v. Illinois Tool Works, Inc., 694 F.2d 466, 472 \(1982\), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 958, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1317, 103 S. Ct. 2430 \(1983\). Finally, in the Fifth Circuit, "success on the merits does not . . . preclude" proof of a sham if the litigation was not "significantly motivated by a genuine desire for judicial relief." In re Burlington Northern, Inc., 822 F.2d 518, 528 \(1987\), cert. denied sub nom. Union Pacific R. Co. v. Energy Transportation Systems, Inc., 484 U.S. 1007, 98 L. Ed. 2d 652, 108 S. Ct. 701 \(1988\).

2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961), that "the Sherman Act does not prohibit . . . persons from associating together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive to take particular action with [****15] respect to a law that would produce a restraint or a monopoly." Id., at 136. Accord, Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965). In light of the government's "power to act in [its] representative capacity" and "to take actions . . . that operate to restrain trade," we reasoned that the Sherman Act does not punish "political activity" through which "the people . . . freely inform the government of their wishes." Noerr, 365 U.S. at 137. Nor did we "impute to Congress an intent to invade" the First Amendment right to petition. 365 U.S. at 138.

Noerr, however, withheld HN5[↑] immunity from "sham" activities because "application of the Sherman Act would be justified" when petitioning activity, "ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, is a mere sham to cover . . . an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Id., at 144. In Noerr itself, we found that a publicity campaign by railroads seeking legislation [****16] harmful to truckers was no sham in that the "effort to influence legislation" was "not only genuine but also highly successful." Ibid.

LEdHN[1B][↑] [1B] In California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972), we elaborated on Noerr in two relevant [*57] respects. First, we extended HN6[↑] Noerr to "the approach of citizens . . . to administrative agencies . . . and to courts." 404 U.S. at 510. Second, we held that the complaint showed a sham not entitled to immunity when it contained allegations that one group of highway carriers "sought to bar . . . competitors from meaningful access to adjudicatory [1645] tribunals and so to usurp that decisionmaking process" by "institut[ing] . . . proceedings and actions . . . with or without probable cause, and regardless of the merits of the cases." Id., at 512 (internal quotation marks omitted). We left unresolved the question presented by this case -- whether litigation may [****17] be sham merely because a subjective expectation of success does not motivate the litigant. We now answer this question in the negative and hold that HN7[↑] an objectively reasonable effort to litigate cannot be sham regardless of subjective intent.<sup>4</sup>

[****18] [***622] Our original formulation of antitrust petitioning immunity required that unprotected activity lack objective reasonableness. Noerr rejected the contention that an attempt "to influence the passage and enforcement of laws" might lose immunity merely because the lobbyists' "sole purpose . . . was to destroy [their] competitors." 365 U.S. at 138. Nor were we persuaded by a showing that a publicity campaign "was intended to and did in fact injure [competitors] in their relationships with the public and with their customers," since such "direct injury" was merely "an incidental effect of the . . . campaign to influence governmental action." Id., at 143. [*58] We reasoned that "the right of the people to [**1927] inform their representatives in government of their desires with respect to the passage or enforcement of laws cannot properly be made to depend upon their intent in doing so." Id., at 139. In short, "Noerr shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose." Pennington, 381 U.S. at 670.

LEdHN[4][↑] [4] [****19] Nothing in California Motor Transport retreated from these principles. Indeed, we recognized that HN9[↑] recourse to agencies and courts should not be condemned as sham until a reviewing court has "discern[ed] and draw[n]" the "difficult line" separating objectively reasonable claims from "a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims . . . which leads the factfinder to conclude that the administrative and judicial processes have been abused." 404 U.S. at 513. Our recognition of a sham in that case signifies that the institution of legal proceedings "without probable cause" will give rise to a sham if such activity effectively "bar[s] . . . competitors from meaningful access to adjudicatory tribunals and so . . . usurp[s] the decisionmaking process." Id., at 512.

---

<sup>4</sup> California Motor Transport did refer to the antitrust defendants' "purpose to deprive . . . competitors of meaningful access to the . . . courts." 404 U.S. at 512. See also id., at 515 (noting a "purpose to eliminate . . . a competitor by denying him free and meaningful access to the agencies and courts"); id., at 518 (Stewart, J., concurring in judgment) (agreeing that the antitrust laws could punish acts intended "to discourage and ultimately to prevent [a competitor] from invoking" administrative and judicial process). HN8[↑] That a sham depends on the existence of anticompetitive intent, however, does not transform the sham inquiry into a purely subjective investigation.

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] Since California Motor Transport, we have consistently assumed that the sham exception contains an indispensable objective component. We have described a sham as "evidenced by repetitive lawsuits carrying the [****20] hallmark of insubstantial claims." Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 380, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 (1973) (emphasis added). We regard as sham "private action that is not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action," as opposed to "a valid effort to influence government action." Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. at 500, n.4. And we have explicitly observed that a successful "effort to influence governmental action . . . certainly cannot be characterized as a sham." Id., at 502. See also Vendo Co. v. Lektro-Vend Corp., 433 U.S. 623, 645, 53 L. Ed. 2d 1009, 97 S. Ct. 2881 (1977) (BLACKMUN, J., concurring [***623] in result) (describing a successful lawsuit as a "genuine attempt to use the . . . adjudicative process legitimately" [*59] rather than "a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims"). Whether applying Noerr as an antitrust doctrine or invoking it in other contexts, we have repeatedly reaffirmed that evidence of anticompetitive intent or purpose alone cannot transform otherwise legitimate activity into a sham. See, [****21] e.g., FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Assn., 493 U.S. 411, 424, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, 110 S. Ct. 768 (1990); NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886, 913-914, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1215, 102 S. Ct. 3409 (1982). Cf. Vendo, supra, at 635-636, n.6, 639, n.9 (plurality opinion of REHNQUIST, J.); id., at 644, n., 645 (BLACKMUN, J., concurring in result). Indeed, by analogy to Noerr's sham exception, we held that even an "improperly motivated" lawsuit may not be enjoined under the National Labor Relations Act as an unfair labor practice unless such litigation is "baseless." Bill Johnson's Restaurants, Inc. v. NLRB, 461 U.S. 731, 743-744, 76 L. Ed. 2d 277, 103 S. Ct. 2161 (1983). Our decisions therefore establish that HN10 the legality of objectively reasonable petitioning "directed toward obtaining governmental action" is "not at all affected by any anticompetitive purpose [the actor] may have had." Noerr, 365 U.S. at 140, quoted in Pennington, supra, at 669. [****22]

Our most recent applications of Noerr immunity further demonstrate that HN11 neither [1646] Noerr immunity nor its sham exception turns on subjective intent alone. In Allied Tube, supra, at 503, and FTC v. Trial Lawyers, supra, at 424, 427, and n.11, we refused to let antitrust defendants immunize otherwise unlawful restraints of trade by pleading a subjective intent to [**1928] seek favorable legislation or to influence governmental action. Cf. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 101, n.23, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984) ("Good motives will not validate an otherwise anticompetitive practice"). In Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1991), we similarly held that challenges to allegedly sham petitioning activity must be resolved according to objective criteria. We dispelled the notion that an antitrust plaintiff could prove a sham merely by showing that its competitor's "purposes were to [****23] delay [the [*60] plaintiff's] entry into the market and even to deny it a meaningful access to the appropriate . . . administrative and legislative fora." Id., at 381 (internal quotation marks omitted). We reasoned that such inimical intent "may render the manner of lobbying improper or even unlawful, but does not necessarily render it a 'sham.'" Ibid. Accord, id., at 398 (STEVENS, J., dissenting).

In sum, fidelity to precedent compels us to reject a purely subjective definition of "sham." The sham exception so construed would undermine, if not vitiate, Noerr. And despite whatever "superficial certainty" it might provide, a subjective standard would utterly fail to supply "real 'intelligible guidance.'" Allied Tube, supra, at 508, n.10.

[***624] III

[LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[5A\]](#) [5A] [LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6] HN12 We now outline a two-part definition [****24] of "sham" litigation. First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail.<sup>5</sup> Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's

---

<sup>5</sup> HN14 A winning lawsuit is by definition a reasonable effort at petitioning for redress and therefore not a sham. On the other hand, when the antitrust defendant has lost the underlying litigation, a court must "resist the understandable temptation to engage in post hoc reasoning by concluding" that an ultimately unsuccessful "action must have been unreasonable or without foundation." Christiansburg Garment Co. v. EEOC, 434 U.S. 412, 421-422, 54 L. Ed. 2d 648, 98 S. Ct. 694 (1978). Accord, subjective motivation. Under this second part of our definition of sham, the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals "an attempt to interfere [<sup>*61</sup>] directly with the business relationships of a competitor," Noerr, supra, at 144 (emphasis added), through the "use [of] the governmental process -- as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetitive weapon," Omni, 499 U.S. at 380 (emphasis in original). This two-tiered process requires the plaintiff to disprove the challenged lawsuit's legal viability before the court will entertain evidence of the suit's economic viability. Of course, [***25] HN13[↑] even a plaintiff who defeats the defendant's claim to Noerr immunity by demonstrating both the objective and the subjective components of a sham must still prove a substantive antitrust violation. Proof of a sham merely deprives the defendant of immunity; it does not relieve the plaintiff of the obligation to establish all other elements of his claim.

LEdHN[5B][↑] [5B]

[****26] Some of the apparent confusion over the meaning of "sham" may stem from our use of the word "genuine" to denote the opposite of "sham." See Omni, supra, at 382; Allied Tube, 486 U.S. at 500, n.4; Noerr, supra, at 144; Vendo Co. v. Lektro-Vend Corp., supra, at 645 (BLACKMUN, J., concurring in result). HN15[↑] The word "genuine" has both objective and subjective connotations. On [**1929] one hand, "genuine" means "actually having the reputed or apparent qualities or character." Webster's Third New International Dictionary 948 (1986). "Genuine" in this sense governs Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56, under which a "genuine issue" is one "that properly can be resolved only by a finder of fact because [it] may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986) (emphasis added). On the other hand, "genuine" also means "sincerely and honestly felt or experienced." Webster's Dictionary, supra, at 948. [****27] To be sham, therefore, litigation must fail to be [***625] "genuine" in both senses of the word.<sup>6</sup>

[1647] [****28] [*62] IV

LEdHN[2B][↑] [2B] We conclude that the Court of Appeals properly affirmed summary judgment for Columbia on PRE's antitrust counterclaim. Under the objective prong of the sham exception, the Court of Appeals correctly held that sham litigation must constitute the pursuit of claims so baseless that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect to secure favorable relief. See 944 F.2d at 1529.

LEdHN[1E][↑] [1E] LEdHN[7A][↑] [7A] HN16[↑] The existence of probable cause to institute legal proceedings precludes a finding that an antitrust defendant has engaged in sham litigation. The notion of probable cause, as understood and applied in the common-law tort of wrongful civil proceedings,<sup>7</sup> requires the plaintiff to prove that the defendant lacked probable cause to institute an unsuccessful civil lawsuit and that the defendant pressed the action for an improper, malicious purpose. [****29] Stewart v. Sonneborn, 98 U.S. 187, 194, 25 L. Ed. 116 (1879); Wyatt

---

Hughes v. Rowe, 449 U.S. 5, 14-15, 66 L. Ed. 2d 163, 101 S. Ct. 173 (1980) (per curiam). The court must remember that "even when the law or the facts appear questionable or unfavorable at the outset, a party may have an entirely reasonable ground for bringing suit." Christiansburg, supra, at 422.

<sup>6</sup> In surveying the "forms of illegal and reprehensible practice which may corrupt the administrative or judicial processes and which may result in antitrust violations," we have noted that "unethical conduct in the setting of the adjudicatory process often results in sanctions" and that "misrepresentations, condoned in the political arena, are not immunized when used in the adjudicatory process." California Motor Transport, 404 U.S. at 512-513. We need not decide here whether and, if so, to what extent Noerr permits the imposition of antitrust liability for a litigant's fraud or other misrepresentations. Cf. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 60(b)(3) (allowing a federal court to "relieve a party . . . from a final judgment" for "fraud . . . , misrepresentation, or other misconduct of an adverse party"); Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 176-177, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 (1965); id., at 179-180 (Harlan, J., concurring).

<sup>7</sup> This tort is frequently called "malicious prosecution," which (strictly speaking) governs the malicious pursuit of criminal proceedings without probable cause. See W. Keeton, D. Dobbs, R. Keeton, & D. Owen, Prosser and Keeton on Torts § 120, p. 892 (5th ed. 1984). The threshold for showing probable cause is no higher in the civil context than in the criminal. See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 674, Comment e, pp. 454-455 (1977).

v. Cole, 504 U.S. 158, 176, 118 L. Ed. 2d 504, 112 S. Ct. 1827 (1992) (REHNQUIST, C. J., dissenting); T. Cooley, Law of Torts *181. Cf. Wheeler v. Nesbitt, 65 U.S. 544, 549-550, 16 L. Ed. 765 (1861) (related tort for malicious prosecution of criminal charges). Probable cause to institute civil proceedings requires no more than a "reasonable belief that there is a chance that [a] claim [*63] may be held valid upon adjudication" (internal quotation marks omitted). Hubbard v. Beatty & Hyde, Inc., 343 Mass. 258, 262, 178 N.E.2d 485, 488 (1961); Restatement (Second) of Torts § 675, Comment e, pp. 454-455 (1977). Because the absence of probable cause is an essential element of the tort, the existence of probable cause is an absolute defense. See Crescent City Live Stock Co. v. Butchers' Union Slaughter-House Co., 120 U.S. 141, 149, 30 L. Ed. 614, 7 S. Ct. 472 (1887); Wheeler, supra, at 551; Liberty Loan Corp. of Gadsden v. Mizell, 410 So. 2d 45, 48 (Ala. 1982). [****30] Just as evidence of anticompetitive intent cannot affect the objective prong of Noerr's sham exception, a showing of malice alone will neither entitle the wrongful civil proceedings plaintiff to prevail nor permit the factfinder to infer the absence of probable cause. Stewart, supra, at 194; Wheeler, supra, at 551; 2 C. [**1930] Addison, Law [***626] of Torts § 1, P 853, pp. 67-68 (1876); T. Cooley, supra, at *184. HN17[] When a court has found that an antitrust defendant claiming Noerr immunity had probable cause to sue, that finding compels the conclusion that a reasonable litigant in the defendant's position could realistically expect success on the merits of the challenged lawsuit. Under our decision today, therefore, a proper probable-cause determination irrefutably demonstrates that an antitrust plaintiff has not proved the objective prong of the sham exception and that the defendant is accordingly entitled to Noerr immunity.

LEdHN[7B][] [7B]

[****31] LEdHN[2C][] [2C]LEdHN[8][] [8]The District Court and the Court of Appeals correctly found that Columbia had probable cause to sue PRE for copyright infringement. Where, as here, there is no dispute over the predicate facts of the underlying legal proceeding, a court may decide probable cause as a matter of law. Crescent, supra, at 149; Stewart, supra, at 194; Nelson v. Miller, 227 Kan. 271, 277, 607 P.2d 438, 444 (1980); Stone v. Crocker, 41 Mass. 81, 84-85 (1831); J. Bishop, Commentaries on Non-Contract Law § 240, p. 96 (1889). See also Director General of Railroads v. Kastenbaum, 263 U.S. 25, 28, 68 L. Ed. 146, 44 S. Ct. 52 (1923) ("The question is not whether [the defendant] thought the facts to [*64] constitute probable cause, but whether the court thinks they did"). Columbia enjoyed the "exclusive right . . . to perform [its] copyrighted" motion pictures "publicly." 17 U.S.C. § 106(4). Regardless of whether it intended [****32] any monopolistic or predatory use, Columbia acquired this statutory right for motion pictures as "original" audiovisual "works of authorship fixed" in a "tangible medium of expression." § 102(a)(6). Indeed, to condition a copyright upon a demonstrated lack of anticompetitive intent would upset the notion of copyright as a "limited grant" of "monopoly privileges" intended simultaneously "to motivate the creative activity of authors" and "to give the public appropriate access to their work product." Sony Corp. of America v. Universal City Studios, Inc., 464 U.S. 417, 429, 78 L. Ed. 2d 574, 104 S. Ct. 774 (1984).

LEdHN[2D][] [2D]When the District Court entered summary judgment for PRE on Columbia's copyright claim in 1986, it was by no means [1648] clear whether PRE's videodisc rental activities intruded on Columbia's copyrights. At that time, the Third Circuit and a District Court within the Third Circuit had held that the rental of video cassettes for viewing in on-site, private screening rooms infringed on the copyright owner's right of public performance. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. v. Redd Horne, Inc., 749 F.2d 154 (1984); [****33] Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. v. Aveco, Inc., 612 F. Supp. 315 (MD Pa. 1985), aff'd, 800 F.2d 59 (1986). Although the District Court and the Ninth Circuit distinguished these decisions by reasoning that hotel rooms offered a degree of privacy more akin to the home than to a video rental store, see 228 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) at 746, 866 F.2d 278, 280-281, copyright scholars criticized both the reasoning and the outcome of the Ninth Circuit's decision, see 1 P. Goldstein, Copyright: Principles, Law and Practice § 5.7.2.2, pp. 616-619 (1989); 2 M. Nimmer & D. Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 8.14[C][3], pp. 8-168 to 8-173 (1992). The Seventh Circuit expressly "decline[d] to follow" the Ninth Circuit and adopted instead [***627] the Third Circuit's definition of a "public place." Video Views, Inc. v. Studio 21, Ltd., 925 F.2d 1010, 1020, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 861 (1991). In light of the unsettled condition of the law, Columbia plainly had probable cause to sue.

Any reasonable copyright owner in Columbia's position could have believed that it had some chance of winning [****34] an infringement suit against PRE. Even though it did not survive PRE's motion for summary judgment, Columbia's copyright action was arguably "warranted by existing law" or at the very least was based on an objectively "good faith argument for the extension, modification, or [**1931] reversal of existing law." Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 11. By the time the Ninth Circuit had reviewed all claims in this litigation, it became apparent that Columbia might have won its copyright suit in either the Third or the Seventh Circuit. Even in the absence of supporting authority, Columbia would have been entitled to press a novel copyright claim as long as a similarly situated reasonable litigant could have perceived some likelihood of success. A court could reasonably conclude that Columbia's infringement action was an objectively plausible effort to enforce rights. Accordingly, we conclude that PRE failed to establish the objective prong of Noerr's sham exception.

[LEdHN\[2E\]](#) [2E] [LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]Finally, the Court of Appeals properly refused PRE's request for further [****35] discovery on the economic circumstances of the underlying copyright litigation. As we have held, PRE could not pierce Columbia's Noerr immunity without proof that Columbia's infringement action was objectively baseless or frivolous. Thus, the District Court had no occasion to inquire whether Columbia was indifferent to the outcome on the merits of the copyright suit, whether any damages for infringement would be too low to justify Columbia's investment in the suit, or whether Columbia had decided to sue primarily for the benefit of collateral injuries inflicted through the use of legal process. Contra, Grip-Pak, Inc. v. Illinois Tool Works, Inc., 694 F.2d 466, 472 \(CA7 1982\), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 958, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1317, 103 S. Ct. 2430 (1983). Such matters concern Columbia's [*66] economic motivations in bringing suit, which were rendered irrelevant by the objective legal reasonableness of the litigation. The existence of probable cause eliminated any "genuine issue as to any material fact," Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 56\(c\), and summary judgment properly issued.

We affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

So ordered.

Concur by: [****36] SOUTER; STEVENS

Concur

---

JUSTICE SOUTER, concurring.

The Court holds today that a person cannot incur antitrust liability merely by bringing a lawsuit as long as the suit is not "objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits." Ante, at 60. The Court assumes that the District Court and the Court of Appeals were finding this very test satisfied when they concluded that Columbia's suit against PRE for copyright infringement was supported by "probable [***628] cause," a standard which, as the Court explains it in this case, requires a "reasonable belief that there is a chance that [a] claim may be held valid upon adjudication." Ante, at 62-63 (internal quotation marks omitted). I agree that this term, so defined, is rightly read as expressing the same test that the Court announces today; the expectation of a reasonable litigant can be dubbed a "reasonable belief," and realistic expectation of success on the merits can be paraphrased as "a chance of being held valid upon adjudication."

Having established this identity of meaning, however, the Court proceeds to discuss the particular facts [****37] of this case, not in terms of its own formulation of objective baselessness, but in terms of "probable cause." Up to a point, this is understandable; the Court of Appeals used the term "probable cause" to represent objective reasonableness, and it [1649] seems natural to use the same term when reviewing that court's conclusions. Yet as the Court acknowledges, ante, at 63, since there is no dispute over the facts underlying the suit [*67] at issue here, the question whether that suit was objectively baseless is purely one of law, which we are obliged to consider de novo. There is therefore no need to frame the question in the Court of Appeals's terms. Accordingly, I would prefer to put the question in our own terms, and to conclude simply that, on the undisputed facts and the law as it stood when Columbia filed its suit, a reasonable litigant could realistically have expected success on the merits.

My preference stems from a concern that other courts could read today's opinion as [**1932] transplanting every substantive nuance and procedural quirk of the common-law tort of wrongful civil proceedings into federal antitrust law. I do not understand the Court to mean anything [****38] of the sort, however, any more than I understand its citation of Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, see ante, at 65, to signal the importation of every jot and tittle of the law of attorney sanctions. Rather, I take the Court's use of the term "probable cause" merely as shorthand for a reasonable litigant's realistic expectation of success on the merits, and on that understanding, I join the Court's opinion.

JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE O'CONNOR joins, concurring in the judgment.

While I agree with the Court's disposition of this case and with its holding that "an objectively reasonable effort to litigate cannot be sham regardless of subjective intent," ante, at 57, I write separately to disassociate myself from some of the unnecessarily broad dicta in the Court's opinion. Specifically, I disagree with the Court's equation of "objectively baseless" with the answer to the question whether any "reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits." <sup>1</sup> [****40] There might [****629] well be lawsuits that fit the latter definition [*68] but can be shown to be objectively unreasonable, and thus shams. It might not be objectively reasonable [****39] to bring a lawsuit just because some form of success on the merits -- no matter how insignificant -- could be expected.<sup>2</sup> With that possibility in mind, the Court should avoid an unnecessarily broad holding that it might regret when confronted with a more complicated case.

As the Court recently explained, a "sham" is the use of "the governmental process -- as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetitive weapon." Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 380, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1991). The distinction between abusing the judicial process to restrain competition and prosecuting a lawsuit that, if successful, will restrain competition must guide any court's decision whether a particular filing, or series of filings, is a sham. The label "sham" is appropriately applied to a case, or series of cases, in which the plaintiff is indifferent to the outcome of the litigation itself, but has nevertheless [****41] sought to impose a collateral harm on the defendant by, for example, impairing his credit, abusing the discovery process, or interfering with his access to governmental agencies. It might also apply to a plaintiff who had some reason to expect success on the merits but because of its tremendous cost would not bother to achieve that result without the benefit of collateral injuries [*69] imposed on its competitor by the legal process alone. Litigation filed or pursued for such collateral purposes is fundamentally different from a case in which the relief sought in the litigation itself would give the plaintiff a competitive advantage or, perhaps, exclude a potential competitor from entering a market with a product that either infringes the plaintiff's patent or copyright or violates an exclusive franchise granted by a governmental body.

[**1933] The case before us today is in the latter, obviously legitimate, category. There was no unethical or other improper use of the judicial system; instead, respondents invoked the federal court's jurisdiction to determine [1650] whether they could lawfully restrain competition with petitioners. The relief they sought in their original action, [****42] if granted, would have had the anticompetitive consequences authorized by federal copyright law. Given that the original copyright infringement action was objectively reasonable -- and the District Court, the Court of Appeals, and this Court all agree that it was -- neither the respondents' own measure of their chances of success

<sup>1</sup> Ante, at 60. See also ante, at 62: "Sham litigation must constitute the pursuit of claims so baseless that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect to secure favorable relief"; ante, at 60: "If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr . . . ." But see ante, at 62: "The existence of probable cause to institute legal proceedings precludes a finding that an antitrust defendant has engaged in sham litigation." And see ante, at 65: "Columbia's copyright action was arguably 'warranted by existing law'" under the standards of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 11. These varied restatements of the Court's new test make it unclear whether it is willing to affirm the Court of Appeals by any of these standards individually, or by all of them together.

<sup>2</sup> The Court's recent decision in Farrar v. Hobby, 506 U.S. 103, 121 L. Ed. 2d 494, 113 S. Ct. 566 (1992) makes me wonder whether "10 years of litigation and two trips to the Court of Appeals" to recover "one dollar from one defendant," id., at 116 (O'CONNOR, J., concurring), would qualify as a reasonable expectation of "favorable relief" under today's opinion.

nor an alleged goal of harming petitioners provides a sufficient basis for treating it as a [***630] sham. We may presume that every litigant intends harm to his adversary; moreover, uncertainty about the possible resolution of unsettled questions of law is characteristic of the adversary process. Access to the courts is far too precious a right for us to infer wrongdoing from nothing more than using the judicial process to seek a competitive advantage in a doubtful case. Thus, the Court's disposition of this case is unquestionably correct.

I am persuaded, however, that all, or virtually all, of the Courts of Appeals that have reviewed similar claims (involving a single action seeking to enforce a property right) would have reached the same conclusion. To an unnecessary degree, therefore, the Court has set up a straw man to justify its elaboration of [****43] a two-part test describing all potential shams. Of the 10 cases cited by the Court as evidence of [*70] widespread confusion about the scope of the "sham" exception to the doctrine of Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961), and Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965), see ante, at 55, n.3, 5 share three important characteristics with this case: The alleged injury to competition was defined by the prayer for relief in the antitrust defendant's original action; there was no unethical conduct or collateral harm "external to the litigation or to the result reached in the litigation";<sup>3</sup> [****44] and there had been no series of repetitive claims. Each of those courts concluded, as this Court does today, that allegations of subjective anticompetitive motivation do not make an otherwise reasonable lawsuit a sham.<sup>4</sup>

In each of the five other cases cited by the Court, the plaintiff alleged antitrust violations more [****45] extensive than the filing of a single anticompetitive lawsuit. In three of those cases the core of the alleged antitrust violation lay in the act of petitioning the government for relief: One involved the repetitive filing of baseless administrative claims,<sup>5</sup> [****47] another involved [*71] extensive evidence [**1934] of anticompetitive motivation [***631] behind the lawsuit that followed an elaborate and unsuccessful lobbying effort,<sup>6</sup> [****48] and in the [1651] third a

<sup>3</sup> Omni Resource Development Corp. v. Conoco, Inc., 739 F.2d 1412, 1414 (CA9 1984) (Kennedy, J.).

<sup>4</sup> See McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552 (CA11 1992) (unsuccessful action to enjoin alleged violations of Alabama's Motor Fuel Marketing Act not a sham); Hydro-Tech Corp. v. Sundstrand Corp., 673 F.2d 1171 (CA10 1982) (unsuccessful action alleging misappropriation of trade secrets not a sham); Eden Hannon & Co. v. Sumitomo Trust & Banking Co., 914 F.2d 556 (CA4 1990) (successful action imposing constructive trust on profits derived from breach of nondisclosure agreement not a sham); Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. v. Redd Horne, Inc., 749 F.2d 154 (CA3 1984) (successful copyright infringement not a sham); South Dakota v. Kansas City Southern Industries, Inc., 880 F.2d 40 (CA8 1989) (successful action to enjoin breach of contract not a sham; the court was careful to point out, however, that success does not "categorically preclude a finding of sham." Id., at 54, n.30).

<sup>5</sup> Litton Systems, Inc. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 700 F.2d 785 (CA2 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1073, 79 L. Ed. 2d 220, 104 S. Ct. 984 (1984). The Second Circuit found that AT&T's continued filing of administrative tariffs long after those claims had become objectively unreasonable supported a jury's sham finding. AT&T's anticompetitive actions were in fact so far removed from the act of petitioning the government for relief that Chief Judge Oakes and Judge Meskill also held, in reliance on Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962), and Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 (1976) (plurality opinion), that tariff filings with the Federal Communications Commission were acts of private commercial activity in the marketplace rather than requests for governmental action, and thus were not even arguably protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Litton Systems, 700 F.2d at 806-809.

<sup>6</sup> Westmac, Inc. v. Smith, 797 F.2d 313 (CA6 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1035, 93 L. Ed. 2d 838, 107 S. Ct. 885 (1987). Although the Sixth Circuit did hold that the genuine substance of an anticompetitive lawsuit creates a rebuttable presumption of objective reasonableness, given the facts of that case -- in which the antitrust plaintiff had presented strong evidence that the defendants' lawsuit, which followed a long and unsuccessful lobbying effort, had been motivated solely for the anticompetitive harm the judicial process would inflict on it -- that modest reservation was probably wise. Evidence of anticompetitive animus in Westmac was in fact so great that Chief Judge Merritt thought that the plaintiff had successfully rebutted the presumptive reasonableness of defendants' lawsuit. The delay from the defendants' combined lobbying and litigation attack had allegedly sent the plaintiff into bankruptcy, and memos from one defendant to its attorney had stated, "'If this [lobbying activity] doesn't succeed, start a lawsuit -- bonds won't sell,'" 797 F.2d at 318, and (in a statement repeated to a codefendant), "'if nothing else, collateral lawsuit was only one of the many ways in which the antitrust defendant had allegedly tried to put the plaintiff out of business.<sup>7</sup> In each [*72] of these cases the court showed appropriate deference to our opinions in Noerr and Pennington, in which we held that the act of petitioning the government (usually in the form of lobbying) deserves especially broad protection from antitrust liability. The Court can point to nothing in these three opinions that would require a different result here. The two remaining cases -- in which the Courts of Appeals did state that a successful lawsuit could be a sham -- did not involve lobbying, but did contain much broader and more complicated allegations than petitioners [****46] presented below.<sup>8</sup> Like the three opinions described above, these decisions should not be expected to offer guidance, nor be blamed for spawning confusion, in a case alleging that the filing of a single lawsuit violated the Sherman Act.

[***49] [***632] Even in this Court, more complicated cases, in which, for example, the alleged competitive injury has involved something more than the threat of an adverse outcome in a single [*73] lawsuit, have produced less definite rules. Repetitive filings, some of which are [**1935] successful and some unsuccessful, may support an inference that the process is being misused. California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972). In such a case, a rule that a single meritorious action can never constitute a sham cannot be dispositive. Moreover, a simple rule may be hard to apply when there is evidence that the judicial process has been used as part of a larger program to control a market and to interfere with a potential competitor's financing without any interest in the outcome of the lawsuit itself, see Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 379, n.9, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 (1973); Westmac, Inc. v. Smith, 797 F.2d 313, 322 (CA6 1986) (Merritt, C. J., dissenting). It is in more complex cases that courts have required a more sophisticated [***50] analysis -- one going beyond a mere evaluation of the merits of a single claim.

In one such case Judge Posner made the following observations about the subtle distinction between suing a competitor to get damages and filing a lawsuit only in the hope that the expense and burden of defending it will make the defendant abandon its competitive behavior:

"But we are not prepared to rule that the difficulty of distinguishing lawful from unlawful purpose in litigation between competitors is so acute that such litigation can never be considered an actionable restraint of trade, provided it has some, though perhaps only threadbare, basis in law. Many claims not wholly groundless would never be sued on for their own sake; the stakes, discounted by the probability of winning, would be too low to repay the investment in litigation. Suppose a monopolist brought a tort action against its single, tiny competitor; the action had a colorable basis in law; but in fact the monopolist would never have brought the suit -- its chances of winning, or the damages it could hope to get if it did win, were too small compared to what it would we'll delay sale of the bonds," id., at 322 (Merritt, C. J., dissenting) (emphasis omitted). In any event, the Sixth Circuit rule -- to the extent that it would apply in a case as simple as this one -- would result in the same conclusion we reach here.

---

<sup>7</sup> Federal Prescription Service, Inc. v. American Pharmaceutical Assn., 214 U.S. App. D.C. 76, 663 F.2d 253 (1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 928, 71 L. Ed. 2d 472, 102 S. Ct. 1293 (1982). In that case, the antitrust plaintiff alleged a 2-decade long conspiracy to lobby, boycott, and sue it (in state licensing boards, state legislatures, the marketplace, and both state and federal courts) out of existence. In spite of those allegations, the Court of Appeals found that the defendant's actions, which primarily consisted in lobbying for the abolition of plaintiff's mail-order prescription business, were immune under Noerr-Pennington.

<sup>8</sup> In Grip-Pak, Inc. v. Illinois Tool Works, Inc., 694 F.2d 466 (1982) (Posner, J.), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 958, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1317, 103 S. Ct. 2430 (1983), the antitrust defendant's alleged violations of several provisions of the Sherman and Clayton Acts included much more than the filing of a single lawsuit; they encompassed a broad scheme of monopolizing the entire relevant market by: purchasing patents; threatening to file many other, patently groundless lawsuits; acquiring a competitor; dividing markets; and filing a fraudulent patent application. In In re Burlington Northern, Inc., 822 F.2d 518 (CA5 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1007 (1988), the plaintiffs alleged, and produced evidence to support their theory, that the defendant had filed suit solely to cause them a delay of crippling expense, and the defendants had either brought or unsuccessfully defended a succession of related lawsuits involving plaintiff's right to compete. In both of these cases the Courts of Appeals ably attempted to balance strict enforcement of the antitrust laws with possible abuses of the judicial process. That they permitted some reliance on subjective motivation -- as even we have done in cases alleging abuse of judicial process, see California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 513-518, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972) -- is neither surprising nor relevant in a case involving no such allegations.

have to spend on the litigation -- except that it wanted to [****51] [*74] use pretrial discovery to discover its competitor's trade secrets; or hoped that the competitor would be required to make public disclosure of its potential liability [1652] in the suit and that this disclosure would increase the interest rate that the competitor had to pay for bank financing; or just wanted to impose heavy legal costs on the competitor in the hope of deterring entry by other firms. In these examples the plaintiff wants to hurt a competitor not by getting a judgment against him, which would be a proper objective, but just by the maintenance of the suit, regardless of its outcome. See *City of Gainesville v. Florida Power & Light Co., 488 F. Supp. 1258, 1265-66 \(S.D. Fla. 1980\).*

"Some students of antitrust law would regard all of our examples of anticompetitive litigation as fanciful, and in all the evidentiary problems of disentangling real from professed motives would be acute. Concern with the evidentiary problems may explain why [***633] some courts hold that a single lawsuit cannot provide a basis for an antitrust claim (see Fischel, Antitrust Liability for Attempts to Influence Government Action: The Basis and Limits of the Noerr-Pennington [****52] Doctrine, 45 U. Chi. L. Rev. 80, 109-10 (1977)) -- an issue we need not face here since three improper lawsuits are alleged, and it can make no difference that they were not all against Grip-Pak. Still, we think it is premature to hold that litigation, unless malicious in the tort sense, can never be actionable under the antitrust laws. The existence of a tort of abuse of process shows that it has long been thought that litigation could be used for improper purposes even when there is probable cause for the litigation; and if the improper purpose is to use litigation as a tool for suppressing competition in its antitrust sense, see, e.g., *Products Liability Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Crum & Forster Ins. Cos., 682 F.2d 660, 663-64 \(7th Cir. 1982\)*, it becomes a matter of antitrust concern. This is [*75] not to say that litigation is actionable under the antitrust laws merely because [**1936] the plaintiff is trying to get a monopoly. He is entitled to pursue such a goal through lawful means, including litigation against competitors. The line is crossed when his purpose is not to win a favorable judgment against a competitor but to harass him, [****53] and deter others, by the process itself -- regardless of outcome -- of litigating. The difficulty of determining the true purpose is great but no more so than in many other areas of antitrust law." *Grip-Pak, Inc. v. Illinois Tool Works, Inc., 694 F.2d 466, 472 \(1982\).*

It is important to remember that the distinction between "sham" litigation and genuine litigation is not always, or only, the difference between lawful and unlawful conduct; objectively reasonable lawsuits may still break the law. For example, a manufacturer's successful action enforcing resale price maintenance agreements,<sup>9</sup> restrictive provisions in a license to use a patent or a trademark,<sup>10</sup> or an equipment lease,<sup>11</sup> may evidence, or even constitute, violations of the antitrust laws. On the other hand, just because a sham lawsuit has grievously harmed a competitor does not necessarily mean that it has violated the Sherman Act. See *Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 455-459, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\)*. The rare plaintiff who successfully proves a sham must still satisfy the exacting elements of an antitrust demand. See ante, at 61. [****54]

In sum, in this case I agree with the Court's explanation of why respondents' copyright infringement action was not "objectively baseless," and why allegations of improper subjective [*76] motivation do not make such a lawsuit a "sham." I would not, however, use this easy case as a [***634] vehicle for [****55] announcing a rule that may govern the decision of difficult cases, some of which may involve abuse of the judicial process. Accordingly, I concur in the Court's judgment but not in its opinion.

References

---

<sup>9</sup> *Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 \(1911\); Schwegmann Brothers v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, 95 L. Ed. 1035, 71 S. Ct. 745 \(1951\).*

<sup>10</sup> *Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 95 L. Ed. 1199, 71 S. Ct. 971 \(1951\); Farbenfabriken Bayer A. G. v. Sterling Drug, Inc., 307 F.2d 207 \(CA3 1962\).*

<sup>11</sup> *International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 92 L. Ed. 20, 68 S. Ct. 12 \(1947\); United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States, 258 U.S. 451, 66 L. Ed. 708, 42 S. Ct. 363 \(1922\).*

Noerr-Pennington doctrine, exempting from federal antitrust laws joint efforts to influence governmental action-- Supreme Court cases

52 Am Jur 2d, Malicious Prosecution 50- 55; 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 108

9 Am Jur Trials 293, Copyright Infringement Litigation; 24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1, 2

L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 9.5

L Ed Index, Malicious Prosecution; Noerr-Pennington Doctrine; Probable Cause; Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices; Sham

ALR Index, Farce, Mockery, and Sham; Malicious Prosecution; Noerr-Pennington Doctrine; Probable Cause; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References :

"Sham" exception to application of Noerr-Pennington doctrine, exempting from federal antitrust laws joint [****56] efforts to influence governmental action. 71 ALR Fed 723.

Application of doctrine exempting from federal antitrust laws joint efforts to influence legislative or executive action. 17 ALR Fed 645.

---

End of Document

Brooke Group v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

March 29, 1993, Argued ; June 21, 1993, Decided

No. 92-466

Reporter

509 U.S. 209 *; 113 S. Ct. 2578 **; 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 ***; 1993 U.S. LEXIS 4245 ****; 61 U.S.L.W. 4699; 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,277; 93 Cal. Daily Op. Service 4562; 93 Daily Journal DAR 7770; 7 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 469

BROOKE GROUP LTD., PETITIONER v. BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO CORPORATION

Prior History: [****1] ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 964 F.2d 335, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

prices, cigarettes, generic, segment, branded, black and white, list price, predatory, consumer, supracompetitive, coordination, recoupment, rebates, losses, wholesalers, predation, oligopoly, oligopolistic, Robinson-Patman Act, profits, volume, anti trust law, discounts, tacit, firms, price discrimination, below-cost, competitor, output, injure

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN1 Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN2 Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

Although price discrimination within the meaning of 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\) is merely a price difference, the statute as a practical matter could not, and does not, ban all price differences charged to different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality.

509 U.S. 209, *209; 113 S. Ct. 2578, **2578; 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, ***168; 1993 U.S. LEXIS 4245, ****1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

HN3 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

By its terms, the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), condemns price discrimination only to the extent that it threatens to injure competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN4 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), should be construed consistently with broader policies of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Primary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN5 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Primary-line competitive injury under the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), is of the same general character as the injury inflicted by predatory pricing schemes actionable under § 2 of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Primary Line Injuries

HN6 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A plaintiff seeking to establish competitive injury resulting from a rival's low prices must prove that the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of its rival's costs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

HN7 Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

Above-cost prices that are below general market levels or the costs of a firm's competitors do not inflict injury to competition cognizable under the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

A prerequisite to holding a competitor liable under the antitrust laws for charging low prices is a demonstration that the competitor had a reasonable prospect, or, under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a dangerous probability, of recouping its investment in below-cost prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > Remedies

HN9 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Even an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

HN10 Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

Evidence of below-cost pricing is not alone sufficient to permit an inference of probable recoupment and injury to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

HN11 Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

Determining whether recoupment of predatory losses is likely requires an estimate of the cost of the alleged predation and a close analysis of both the scheme alleged by the plaintiff and the structure and conditions of the relevant market. If market circumstances or deficiencies in proof would bar a reasonable jury from finding that the scheme alleged would likely result in sustained supracompetitive pricing, the plaintiff's case has failed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The normal rule of statutory construction is that identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning.

Civil Procedure > US Supreme Court Review > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Civil Procedure, US Supreme Court Review

It is not customary for the United States Supreme Court to review the sufficiency of the evidence, but it will do so when the issue is properly before it and the benefits of providing guidance concerning the proper application of a legal standard and avoiding the systemic costs associated with further proceedings justify the required expenditure of judicial resources.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

The success of any predatory scheme depends on maintaining monopoly power for long enough both to recoup the predator's losses and to harvest some additional gain.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

Because relying on tacit coordination among oligopolists as a means of recouping losses from predatory pricing is highly speculative, competent evidence is necessary to allow a reasonable inference that it poses an authentic threat to competition.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Decision

Evidence presented in action against cigarette manufacturer held insufficient as matter of law to sustain claim of price discrimination injuring competition in violation of Robinson-Patman Act.

Summary

The plaintiff, a cigarette manufacturer which was one of six firms which dominated the cigarette manufacturing industry, increased its declining share of the market by introducing a line of unbranded "black and white" generic cigarettes at a list price about 30 percent below those of branded cigarettes, as to which there had been no significant price competition. A large part of the plaintiff's market gains came at the expense of the defendant, another cigarette manufacturer, which responded by introducing its own black and whites and other discounted cigarettes, beating the first manufacturer's prices and volume discounts and by giving wholesalers larger rebates than the plaintiff gave, both initially and throughout an ensuing rebate war. The plaintiff, alleging trademark infringement and unfair competition, filed suit against the defendant in the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina. The complaint was later amended to allege that the defendant's rebates to wholesalers violated 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), because the rebates were integral to a supposed scheme of predatory price discrimination. The plaintiff's theory of competitive injury was that (1) the defendant entered the generic market with list prices matching the plaintiff's but with massive discriminatory rebates directed at the plaintiff's biggest wholesalers, (2) the net price paid by wholesalers for the defendant's generic cigarettes would drop below the defendant's cost, (3) the plaintiff would suffer losses trying to defend its market share and wholesale customer base by matching the defendant's rebates, (4) to avoid further losses, the plaintiff would raise its list prices on generics or acquiesce in price leadership by the defendant, (5) higher list prices to consumers would shrink the percentage gap in retail price between generic and branded cigarettes, and (6) this narrowing of the gap would make generics less appealing to consumers, thus slowing the growth of the economy cigarette market and reducing loss of sales of branded cigarettes and their associated supracompetitive prices. A jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff on the price discrimination claim; but the District Court, after reviewing the record, ruled that the defendant was entitled to judgment notwithstanding the verdict, partly because (1) no slowing of the growth rate of generics, and thus no injury to competition, was possible unless there had been tacit coordination of prices among the various manufacturers in the economy cigarette market, and (2) a reasonable jury could only have found that there was no such coordination (748 F Supp 344). The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit affirmed (964 F2d 335).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Kennedy, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and O'Connor, Scalia, Souter, and Thomas, JJ., it was held that the defendant was entitled to judgment as a matter of law--even though the record contained sufficient evidence from which a reasonable jury could conclude that the defendant envisioned or intended the anticompetitive course of events alleged by the plaintiff, that the net prices charged to wholesalers by the defendant for generic cigarettes were below the defendant's cost for a period of 18 months, and that this imposed losses on the plaintiff which the plaintiff was unwilling to sustain--because the evidence was inadequate to show that the defendant had a reasonable prospect of recovering its losses from below-cost pricing through slowing the growth of generics and producing sustained supracompetitive pricing in the generic market, as the evidence neither (1) supported a reasonable inference that the defendant and the other cigarette manufacturers actually elevated prices for generic cigarettes above a competitive level, nor (2) demonstrated that the alleged scheme was likely to have brought about tacit coordination and oligopoly pricing in the generic cigarette market.

Stevens, J., joined by White and Blackmun, JJ., dissented, expressing the view that the evidence presented was sufficient to support a finding that the defendant's price discrimination plan, in which the defendant invested millions of dollars for the purpose of achieving an admittedly anticompetitive result, had a reasonable possibility of injuring competition.

Headnotes

---

509 U.S. 209, *209; 113 S. Ct. 2578, **2578; 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, ***168; 1993 U.S. LEXIS 4245, ****1

JUDGMENT §314.5 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §38 > pricing -- rebates to wholesalers -- judgment notwithstanding verdict -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [1B] [LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#) [1D] [LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E] [LEdHN\[1F\]](#) [1F]

A defendant cigarette manufacturer is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, notwithstanding a jury verdict in favor of the plaintiff, in an action by a competing cigarette manufacturer alleging that the defendant violated the price discrimination provisions of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), because no adequate basis for a finding of liability is provided by the alleged oligopolistic price coordination scheme--whereby (1) the defendant would enter the generic segment of the cigarette market, previously dominated by the plaintiff cigarette manufacturer, with list prices matching the plaintiff's but with massive discriminatory volume rebates directed at the plaintiff's biggest wholesalers, (2) the net price charged to wholesalers by the defendant for generic cigarettes would drop below the defendant's cost, (3) the plaintiff would suffer losses trying to defend its market share and wholesale customer base by matching the defendant's rebates, (4) to avoid further losses, the plaintiff would raise its list prices on generics or acquiesce in price leadership by the defendant, (5) higher list prices to consumers would shrink the percentage gap in retail price between generic and branded cigarettes, and (6) this narrowing of the gap would make generics less appealing to consumers, thus slowing the growth of the economy cigarette market and reducing loss of sales of branded cigarettes and their associated supracompetitive prices--where, although the record contains sufficient evidence from which a reasonable jury could conclude that the defendant envisioned or intended this anticompetitive course of events, that the net prices charged to wholesalers by the defendant for generic cigarettes were below the defendant's cost for a period of 18 months, and that this imposed losses on the plaintiff which the plaintiff was unwilling to sustain, the evidence is inadequate to show that the defendant manufacturer had a reasonable prospect of recovering its losses from below-cost pricing through slowing the growth of generics and producing sustained supracompetitive pricing in the generic market, as the evidence neither (1) supports a reasonable inference that the defendant and other cigarette manufacturers actually elevated prices for generic cigarettes above a competitive level, nor (2) demonstrates that the alleged scheme was likely to have brought about tacit coordination and oligopoly pricing in the generic cigarette market. (Stevens, White, and Blackmun, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36.3 > price discrimination -- purpose of statute -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

The provision of 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, condemning price discrimination (15 USCS 13\(a\)) is not intended to outlaw price differences that result from or further the forces of competition; thus, the Robinson-Patman Act should be construed consistently with broader policies of the antitrust laws.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36.5 > price discrimination -- anticompetitive effect -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#) [3A] [LEdHN\[3B\]](#) [3B]

Primary-line competitive injury, as required under the price discrimination provisions of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), is of the same general character as the injury inflicted by predatory pricing schemes actionable under 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2); there are differences between the two statutes, as, for example, the Sherman Act provision condemns predatory pricing when it poses a dangerous possibility of actual monopolization, whereas the Robinson-Patman Act requires only that there be a reasonable possibility of substantial injury to competition before that Act's protections are triggered; however, the essence of the claim under either statute is the same, namely that a business rival has priced its products in an unfair manner with an object to eliminate or retard competition and thereby gain and exercise control over prices in the relevant market; thus, under either statute, two prerequisites to recovery remain the same, requiring a plaintiff seeking to establish competitive injury resulting from a rival's low prices to prove that (1) the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of the rival's costs, and (2) the rival has a reasonable prospect--or, under the Sherman Act, a dangerous probability--of recouping the rival's investment in below-cost prices.

APPEAL §1317 > agreement of parties -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4A\]](#) [4A] [LEdHN\[4B\]](#) [4B]

The United States Supreme Court--in reviewing on certiorari lower court decisions in a case involving alleged violations by a cigarette manufacturer, with respect to the generic cigarette market, of the price discrimination provisions of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\))--will not resolve a conflict among the lower courts over the appropriate measure of cost to be used in determining whether prices complained of under 2(a) are below cost, where the parties in the case at hand agree that the relevant measure of cost is average variable cost.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §6 > purpose -- acts prohibited -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[5\]](#) [5]

The federal antitrust laws are intended for the protection of competition, not competitors; even an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws, which do not create a federal law of unfair competition or purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or against persons engaged in interstate commerce.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36.5 > price discrimination -- competitive harm -- recoupment -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[6\]](#) [6]

In order for recoupment to occur--for purposes of the rule that there is no competitive injury actionable either as price discrimination under 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), or as predatory pricing under 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 2), unless the competitor has a reasonable prospect or a dangerous probability of recouping its investment in below-cost prices--(1) below-cost pricing must be capable, as a threshold matter, of producing the intended effect on the rivals of the firm accused of such conduct, whether that effect is driving the rivals from the market or causing them to raise their prices to supracompetitive levels within a disciplined oligopoly, and (2) if circumstances indicate that below-cost pricing could likely produce its intended effect on the target, then the further question arises whether such pricing would likely injure competition in the relevant market; with respect to the first factor, determining the likelihood of recoupment requires an understanding of the extent and duration of the alleged predation, the relative financial strength of the predator and of its intended victim, and their respective incentives and will, the inquiry being whether, given the aggregate losses caused by the below-cost pricing, the intended target would likely succumb; with respect to the second factor, the plaintiff is required to demonstrate a likelihood that the alleged predatory scheme would cause a rise in prices above a competitive level that would be sufficient to compensate for the amounts expended on the predation, including the time value of the money invested in the predation, and determining whether recoupment is likely requires an estimate of the cost of the alleged predation and a close analysis of both the scheme alleged by the plaintiff and the structure and conditions of the relevant market; if market circumstances or deficiencies in proof would bar a reasonable jury from finding that the scheme alleged would likely result in sustained supracompetitive pricing, then the plaintiff's case has failed, and in certain situations--such as where the market is highly diffuse and competitive, new entry is easy, or the defendant lacks adequate excess capacity to absorb the market shares of rivals and cannot quickly create or purchase new capacity--summary disposition of the case is appropriate.

509 U.S. 209, *209; 113 S. Ct. 2578, **2578; 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, ***168; 1993 U.S. LEXIS 4245, ****1

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §37 > price control -- tacit collusion --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[7\]](#) [7]

It is not in itself unlawful for firms in a concentrated market to effectively share monopoly power through a process variously known as tacit collusion, oligopolistic price coordination, or conscious parallelism, whereby such firms set their prices at a supracompetitive, profit-maximizing level by recognizing their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions.

RERAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §36.5 > predatory pricing -- competitive harm --

> Headnote:

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [8A] [LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [8B]

The interdependent pricing of an oligopoly may provide a means for achieving recoupment, and so may form the basis of a primary-line injury claim for purposes of the price discrimination provisions of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), as a predatory pricing scheme designed to preserve or create a stable oligopoly, if successful, can injure consumers in the same way, and to the same extent, as a predatory pricing scheme designed to bring about a monopoly; however unlikely that possibility might be as a general matter, when the realities of the market and the record facts of a case indicate that the possibility has occurred and was likely to have succeeded, theory will not stand in the way of liability; there is no per se rule of nonliability for predatory price discrimination when recoupment is alleged to take place through supracompetitive oligopoly pricing.

STATUTES §170 > identical words -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[9\]](#) [9]

It is a normal rule of statutory construction that identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning.

APPEAL §1323 > sufficiency of evidence -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[10\]](#) [10]

Although it is not customary for the United States Supreme Court, on certiorari, to review the sufficiency of the evidence in a case, the court will do so when the issue is properly before the court and the benefits of providing guidance concerning the proper application of a legal standard and avoiding the systemic costs associated with further proceedings justify the required expenditure of judicial resources.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > inference -- antitrust -- restricted output -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[11\]](#) [Download] [11]

The record evidence--in a case involving alleged violations by the defendant, a cigarette manufacturer, with respect to the generic cigarette market, of the price discrimination provisions of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\))--does not permit a reasonable inference that the total industry output of generic cigarettes would have been greater but for the defendant's entry into the generic market, and thus that such entry resulted in the restriction of output which would be essential to supracompetitive pricing, where (1) the rate at which generic cigarettes were increasing their share of the overall cigarette market did not slow following the defendant's entry into the generic market, and in fact the average rate of growth doubled; (2) there is no concrete evidence that the generics' growth rate would have been even greater but for the defendant's alleged predatory price discrimination; (3) the output of generics expanded more robustly following the defendant's entry into the generic market than the defendant had previously estimated would occur if the defendant did not enter the generic market; and (4) an observation by the defendant that its entry appeared to have slowed the generic market's growth rate was made at a time when it is claimed that the defendant was selling its generics below cost and before any anticompetitive contraction in output is alleged to have occurred.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > inference -- antitrust -- supracompetitive prices -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[12\]](#) [Download] [12]

A reasonable jury--being presented, in a case involving alleged price discrimination in the generic cigarette market in violation of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), with evidence that the list prices on all types of cigarettes rose to a significant degree during the period in question, that these price increases outpaced increases in costs, taxes, and promotional expenditures, and that the list prices of generic cigarettes rose at a faster rate than the prices of branded cigarettes, thus narrowing the list price differential between the two cigarette types--cannot draw an inference that the defendant cigarette manufacturer succeeded in bringing about oligopolistic price coordination and supracompetitive prices in the generic cigarette category sufficient to slow the category's growth, preserve supracompetitive branded profits, and recoup the manufacturer's losses from alleged predatory price discrimination, where (1) there is undisputed evidence that list prices were not the actual prices paid by consumers during the period in question, and it would be unreasonable--especially in an oligopoly setting such as the cigarette industry in which price competition is most likely to take place through less observable and less regulable means than list prices--to draw conclusions about the existence of tacit coordination or supracompetitive pricing from data that reflects only list prices, and (2) the list price data as to generic and full-price branded cigarettes ignores the effect of the introduction, during the period in question, of "subgeneric" cigarettes discounted 50 percent or more from the list prices of normal branded cigarettes, expanding rather than narrowing the differential between highest and lowest cigarette prices; even if a reasonable jury could conclude that the cumulative discounts attributable to subgenerics and various consumer promotions did not cancel out the full effect of the increases in list prices, and that actual prices to consumers rose, rising prices do not themselves permit an inference of a collusive market dynamic, since when output is expanding at the same time prices are increasing, as in the case at hand, rising prices are equally consistent with growing product demand; under these conditions, a jury may not infer competitive injury from price and output data absent some evidence tending to prove that output was restricted or prices were above a competitive level. (Stevens, White, and Blackmun, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

EVIDENCE §343.5 > inference -- antitrust -- denial -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

An inference of supracompetitive pricing is particularly anomalous, in a case involving alleged price discrimination in the generic cigarette market in violation of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), where the very party alleged to have been coerced into pricing through oligopolistic coordination has denied that such coordination existed, as the officers and directors of the plaintiff cigarette manufacturer consistently denied that they or other firms in the industry priced their cigarettes through tacit collusion or reaped supracompetitive profits; an explanation that the officers and directors are businessmen who do not ascribe the same meanings to terms like "competitive" and "collusion" that an economist would is entitled to little, if any, weight where the officers and directors--having made such statements in pretrial depositions, and thereafter having claimed that they were confused by opposing counsel's questions and had not meant to contradict the testimony of the manufacturer's expert economic witness, repeated their denials as to collusion and profits at trial after having consulted extensively with the expert witness and having had adequate time to familiarize themselves with the relevant concepts.

EVIDENCE §979 > sufficiency -- restraint of trade -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

A reasonable jury--being presented, in a case involving alleged price discrimination in the generic cigarette market in violation of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), with evidence of a pricing structure whereby the defendant cigarette manufacturer maintained existing list prices while offering substantial rebates to wholesalers--cannot conclude that this pricing structure eliminated or rendered insignificant the risk that other firms in the cigarette industry might misunderstand the defendant manufacturer's entry into the generic cigarette market, supposedly intended to stifle competition and to produce oligopolistic price coordination, as a competitive move, since the likelihood that the manufacturer's rivals would have regarded the pricing structure as an important signal that the manufacturer did not intend to attract additional smokers to the generic cigarette market is low given that other firms, including the plaintiff competing manufacturer which was the purported target of the defendant manufacturer's predatory pricing, had been using similar rebates.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > inference -- sufficiency -- antitrust -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

Although some of a defendant cigarette manufacturer's corporate planning documents--introduced in evidence in a case involving alleged price discrimination in the generic cigarette market in violation of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\))--speak of a desire to slow the growth of that market, no objective evidence of the manufacturer's conduct permits a reasonable inference that the manufacturer had any real prospect of achieving such a slowdown through anticompetitive means, where (1) the manufacturer, in introducing a line of generic cigarettes, offered them to 1,000 wholesalers who had never before purchased generic cigarettes, (2) the unprecedentedly large volume rebates which the manufacturer offered to wholesalers provided substantial incentives for wholesalers to place large orders and so created strong pressure for wholesalers to sell more generic cigarettes, (3) many wholesalers stimulated demand by passing portions of the rebates on to consumers, and (4) the manufacturer provided further direct stimulus by spending $ 10 million placing discount stickers on cartons of generic cigarettes to reduce prices to the ultimate consumer; in the light of these facts, it is not reasonable to conclude that the manufacturer threatened in a serious way to restrict output, raise prices above a competitive level, and artificially slow the growth of the economy cigarette market.

EVIDENCE §874 > sufficiency -- expert testimony -- > Headnote:

LEdHN/16 [  ] [16]

When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate the opinion in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, the opinion cannot support a jury's verdict.

EVIDENCE §979 > sufficiency -- antitrust -- expert testimony -- > Headnote:

LEdHN/17 [  ] [17]

In an antitrust case, expert opinion evidence has little probative value in comparison with the economic factors that may dictate a particular conclusion; specifically, in a case involving alleged price discrimination in the generic cigarette market in violation of 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)), an expert economic witness' opinion that the defendant cigarette manufacturer had a reasonable prospect of recouping its predatory losses cannot sustain a jury verdict in favor of the plaintiff competing manufacturer, where the evidence on which the expert's opinion was based amely (1) the fact that the defendant's pricing structure maintained existing list prices while offering substantial rebates to wholesalers, (2) corporate documents showing an intent to shrink the price differential between generic and branded cigarettes, and (3) evidence that the defendant had reduced its net prices to wholesalers for generic cigarettes below the defendant's cost--is insufficient as a matter of law to support a finding, for purposes of the Robinson-Patman Act, of primary-line injury to competition.

EVIDENCE §147 > presumption -- knowledge of law and facts -- > Headnote:

LEdHN/18 [  ] [18]

A reasonable jury in an antitrust case is presumed to know and understand the law, the facts of the case, and the realities of the market.

Syllabus

---

Cigarette manufacturing is a concentrated industry dominated by only six firms, including the two parties here. In 1980, petitioner (hereinafter Liggett) pioneered the economy segment of the market by developing a line of generic cigarettes offered at a list price roughly 30% lower than that of branded cigarettes. By 1984, generics had captured 4% of the market, at the expense of branded cigarettes, and respondent Brown & Williamson entered the economy segment, beating Liggett's net price. Liggett responded in kind, precipitating a price war, which ended, according to Liggett, with Brown & Williamson selling its generics at a loss. Liggett filed this suit, alleging, inter alia, that volume rebates by Brown & Williamson to wholesalers amounted to [****2] price discrimination that had a reasonable possibility of injuring competition in violation of § 2\(a\) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. Liggett claimed that the rebates were integral to a predatory pricing scheme, in which Brown & Williamson set below-cost prices to pressure Liggett to raise list prices on its generics, thus restraining the economy segment's growth and preserving Brown & Williamson's supracompetitive profits on branded cigarettes. After a jury returned a verdict in favor of Liggett, the District Court held that Brown & Williamson was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Among other things, it found a lack of injury to competition because there had been no slowing of the generics' growth rate and no tacit coordination of prices in the economy segment by the various manufacturers. In affirming, the Court of Appeals held that the dynamic of conscious parallelism among oligopolists could not produce competitive injury in a predatory pricing setting.

Held: Brown & Williamson is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Pp. 219-243.

(a) The Robinson-Patman Act, by its terms, condemns price discrimination only to the extent that [****3] it threatens to injure competition. A claim of primary-line competitive injury under the Act, the type alleged here, is of the same general character as a predatory pricing claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act: A business rival has priced its products in an unfair manner with an object to eliminate or retard competition and thereby gain and exercise control over prices in the relevant market. *Utah Pie Co. v. Continental Baking Co., 386 U.S. 685, 18 L. Ed. 2d 406, 87 S. Ct. 1326*, distinguished. Accordingly, two prerequisites to recovery are also the same. A plaintiff must prove (1) that the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of its rival's costs and (2) that the competitor had a reasonable prospect of recouping its investment in below-cost prices. Without recoupment, even if predatory pricing causes the target painful losses, it produces lower aggregate prices in the market, and consumer welfare is enhanced. For recoupment to occur, the pricing must be capable, as a threshold matter, of producing the intended effects on the firm's rivals. This requires an understanding of the extent and duration of the alleged predation, the relative financial [****4] strength of the predator and its intended victim, and their respective incentives and will. The inquiry is whether, given the aggregate losses caused by the below-cost pricing, the intended target would likely succumb. If so, then there is the further question whether the below-cost pricing would likely injure competition in the relevant market. The plaintiff must demonstrate that there is a likelihood that the scheme alleged would cause a rise in prices above a competitive level sufficient to compensate for the amounts expended on the predation, including the time value of the money invested in it. Evidence of below-cost pricing is not alone sufficient to permit an inference of probable recoupment and injury to competition. The determination requires an estimate of the alleged predation's cost and a close analysis of both the scheme alleged and the relevant market's structure and conditions. Although not easy to establish, these prerequisites are essential components of real market injury. Pp. 219-227.

(b) An oligopoly's interdependent pricing may provide a means for achieving recoupment and thus may form the basis of a primary-line injury claim. Predatory pricing schemes, in [****5] general, are implausible, see *Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588-590, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348*, and are even more improbable when they require coordinated action among several firms, id., at 590. They are least likely to occur where, as alleged here, the cooperation among firms is tacit, since effective tacit coordination is difficult to achieve; since there is a high likelihood that any attempt by one oligopolist to discipline a rival by cutting prices will produce an outbreak of competition; and since a predator's present losses fall on it alone, while the later supracompetitive profits must be shared with every other oligopolist in proportion to its market share, including the intended victim. Nonetheless, the Robinson-Patman Act suggests no exclusion from coverage when primary-line injury occurs in an oligopoly setting, and this Court declines to create a per se rule of nonliability. In order for all of the Act's words to carry adequate meaning, competitive injury under the Act must extend beyond the monopoly setting. Pp. 227-230.

(c) The record in this case demonstrates that the [****6] scheme Liggett alleged, when judged against the market's realities, does not provide an adequate basis for a finding of liability. While a reasonable jury could conclude that Brown & Williamson envisioned or intended an anticompetitive course of events and that the price of its generics was below its costs for 18 months, the evidence is inadequate to show that in pursuing this scheme, it had a reasonable prospect of recovering its losses from below-cost pricing through slowing the growth of generics. No inference of recoupment is sustainable on this record, because no evidence suggests that Brown & Williamson was likely to obtain the power to raise the prices for generic cigarettes above a competitive level, which is an indispensable aspect of Liggett's own proffered theory. The output and price information does not indicate that oligopolistic price coordination in fact produced supracompetitive prices in the generic segment. Nor does the evidence about the market and Brown & Williamson's conduct indicate that the alleged scheme was likely to have brought about tacit coordination and oligopoly pricing in that segment. Pp. 230-243.

Counsel: Phillip Areeda argued the cause for petitioner. [****7] With him on the briefs were Charles Fried, Jean E. Sharpe, Josiah S. Murray III, James W. Dobbins, Garret G. Rasmussen, and C. Allen Foster.

Robert H. Bork argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Griffin B. Bell, Frederick M. Rowe, Michael L. Robinson, Abbott B. Lipsky, Jr., and Veronica G. Kayne.*

Judges: KENNEDY, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and O'CONNOR, SCALIA, SOUTER, and THOMAS, JJ., joined. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which WHITE and BLACKMUN, JJ., joined, post, p. 243.

Opinion by: KENNEDY

Opinion

---

[*212] [*179] [**2582] JUSTICE KENNEDY delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN/1A [↑] [1A] [****8] This case stems from a market struggle that erupted in the domestic cigarette industry in the mid-1980's. Petitioner Brooke Group Ltd., whom we, like the parties to the case, refer to as Liggett because of its former corporate name, charges that to counter its innovative development of generic cigarettes, respondent Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation introduced its own line of generic cigarettes in an unlawful effort to stifle price competition in the economy segment of the national cigarette market. Liggett contends that Brown & Williamson cut prices on generic cigarettes below cost and offered discriminatory volume rebates to wholesalers to force Liggett to raise its own generic cigarette prices and introduce oligopoly pricing in the economy segment. We hold that Brown & Williamson is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

I

In 1980, Liggett pioneered the development of the economy segment of the national cigarette market by introducing a line of "black and white" generic cigarettes. The economy segment of the market, sometimes called the generic segment, is characterized by its bargain prices and comprises a variety of different products: black and whites, which are true [****9] generics sold in plain white packages with simple black lettering describing their contents; private label generics, which carry the trade dress of a specific purchaser, usually a retail chain; branded generics, which carry a brand name but which, like black and whites and private label generics, are sold at a deep discount and with little or no advertising; and "Value-25s," packages of 25 cigarettes that are sold to the consumer some 12.5% below the cost of a normal 20-cigarette pack. By 1984, when Brown & Williamson entered the generic segment and set in motion the series of events giving rise to this suit, Liggett's black and whites represented 97% of the generic segment, which in turn accounted for a little [*213] more than 4% of domestic cigarette sales. Prior to Liggett's introduction of black and whites in 1980, sales of generic cigarettes amounted to less than 1% of the domestic cigarette market.

---

* Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for Atlantic Richfield Co. by Ronald C. Redcay, Matthew T. Heartney, Otis Pratt Pearsall, Philip H. Curtis, Francis X. McCormack, Donald A. Bright, and Edward E. Clark; and for ITT Corp. by John H. Schafer and Edwin A. Kilburn.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed for the Business Roundtable by Thomas B. Leary; and for the Grocery Manufacturers of America, Inc., by Terry Calvani, W. Todd Miller, and C. Douglas Floyd.

Because of the procedural posture [***180] of this case, we view the evidence in the light most favorable to Liggett. The parties are in basic agreement, however, regarding the central, historical facts. Cigarette manufacturing has long been one of America's most concentrated [****10] industries, see F. Scherer & D. Ross, Industrial Market Structure and Economic Performance 250 (3d ed. 1990) (hereinafter Scherer & Ross); App. 495-498, and for decades, production has been dominated by six firms: R. J. Reynolds, Philip Morris, American Brands, Lorillard, and the two litigants involved here, Liggett and Brown & Williamson. R.J. Reynolds and Philip Morris, the two industry leaders, enjoyed respective market shares of about 28% and 40% at the time of trial. Brown & Williamson ran a [**2583] distant third, its market share never exceeding 12% at any time relevant to this dispute. Liggett's share of the market was even less, from a low of just over 2% in 1980 to a high of just over 5% in 1984.

The cigarette industry also has long been one of America's most profitable, in part because for many years there was no significant price competition among the rival firms. See Scherer & Ross 250-251; R. Tennant, American Cigarette Industry 86-87 (1950); App. 128, 500-509, 531. List prices for cigarettes increased in lockstep, twice a year, for a number of years, irrespective of the rate of inflation, changes in the costs of production, or shifts in consumer demand. Substantial [****11] evidence suggests that in recent decades, the industry reaped the benefits of prices above a competitive level, though not through unlawful conduct of the type that once characterized the industry. See Tennant, supra, at 275, 342; App. 389-392, 514-519, 658-659; cf. American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946); United States [*214] v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 55 L. Ed. 663, 31 S. Ct. 632 (1911); Scherer & Ross 451.

By 1980, however, broad market trends were working against the industry. Overall demand for cigarettes in the United States was declining, and no immediate prospect of recovery existed. As industry volume shrank, all firms developed substantial excess capacity. This decline in demand, coupled with the effects of nonprice competition, had a severe negative impact on Liggett. Once a major force in the industry, with market shares in excess of 20%, Liggett's market share had declined by 1980 to a little over 2%. With this meager share of the market, Liggett was on the verge of going out of business.

At the urging of a distributor, Liggett took an unusual step to [****12] revive its prospects: It developed a line of black and white generic cigarettes. When introduced in 1980, black and whites were offered to consumers at a list price roughly 30% lower than the list price of full-priced, branded cigarettes. They were also promoted at the wholesale level by means of rebates that increased with the volume of cigarettes ordered. Black and white cigarettes thus represented a new marketing category. The category's principal competitive characteristic was low price. Liggett's black and whites were an immediate and considerable success, growing from a fraction of a percent of the market at their introduction to over 4% of the total cigarette market by early 1984.

As the market for Liggett's generic [***181] cigarettes expanded, the other cigarette companies found themselves unable to ignore the economy segment. In general, the growth of generics came at the expense of the other firms' profitable sales of branded cigarettes. Brown & Williamson was hardest hit, because many of Brown & Williamson's brands were favored by consumers who were sensitive to changes in cigarette prices. Although Brown & Williamson sold only 11.4% of the market's branded cigarettes, [****13] 20% of the converts to [*215] Liggett's black and whites had switched from a Brown & Williamson brand. Losing volume and profits in its branded products, Brown & Williamson determined to enter the generic segment of the cigarette market. In July 1983, Brown & Williamson had begun selling Value-25s, and in the spring of 1984, it introduced its own black and white cigarette.

Brown & Williamson was neither the first nor the only cigarette company to recognize the threat posed by Liggett's black and whites and to respond in the economy segment. R.J. Reynolds had also introduced a Value-25 in 1983. And before Brown & Williamson introduced its own black and whites, R.J. Reynolds had repriced its "Doral" branded cigarette at generic levels. To compete with Liggett's black and whites, R.J. Reynolds dropped its list price on Doral about 30% and used volume rebates to wholesalers as an incentive to spur orders. Doral was the first competition at Liggett's price level.

[**2584] Brown & Williamson's entry was an even graver threat to Liggett's dominance of the generic category. Unlike R. J. Reynolds' Doral, Brown & Williamson's product was also a black and white and so would be in [****14] direct competition with Liggett's product at the wholesale level and on the retail shelf. Because Liggett's and Brown & Williamson's black and whites were more or less fungible, wholesalers had little incentive to carry more than one line. And unlike R. J. Reynolds, Brown & Williamson not only matched Liggett's prices but beat them. At the retail level, the suggested list price of Brown & Williamson's black and whites was the same as Liggett's, but Brown & Williamson's volume discounts to wholesalers were larger. Brown & Williamson's rebate structure also encompassed a greater number of volume categories than Liggett's, with the highest categories carrying special rebates for orders of very substantial size. Brown & Williamson marketed its black and whites to Liggett's existing distributors as well as to its own full list of [*216] buyers, which included a thousand wholesalers who had not yet carried any generic products.

Liggett responded to Brown & Williamson's introduction of black and whites in two ways. First, Liggett increased its own wholesale rebates. This precipitated a price war at the wholesale level, in which Liggett five times attempted to beat the rebates offered [****15] by Brown & Williamson. At the end of each round, Brown & Williamson maintained a real advantage over Liggett's prices. Although it is undisputed that Brown & Williamson's original net price for its black and whites was above its costs, Liggett contends that by the end of the rebate war, Brown & Williamson was selling its black and whites at a loss. This rebate war occurred before Brown & Williamson [***182] had sold a single black and white cigarette.

Liggett's second response was to file a lawsuit. Two weeks after Brown & Williamson announced its entry into the generic segment, again before Brown & Williamson had sold any generic cigarettes, Liggett filed a complaint in the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina alleging trademark infringement and unfair competition. Liggett later amended its complaint to add an antitrust claim under § 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U.S.C. § 13(a), which alleged illegal price discrimination between Brown & Williamson's full-priced branded cigarettes and its low-priced generics. See Liggett Group, Inc. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 1989-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 68,583, p. 61,099 (MDNC 1988). [****16] These claims were either dismissed on summary judgment, see ibid., or rejected by the jury. They were not appealed.

Liggett also amended its complaint to add a second Robinson-Patman Act claim, which is the subject of the present controversy. Liggett alleged that Brown & Williamson's volume rebates to wholesalers amounted to price discrimination that had a reasonable possibility of injuring competition, [*217] in violation of § 2(a). Liggett claimed that Brown & Williamson's discriminatory volume rebates were integral to a scheme of predatory pricing, in which Brown & Williamson reduced its net prices for generic cigarettes below average variable costs. According to Liggett, these below-cost prices were not promotional but were intended to pressure it to raise its list prices on generic cigarettes, so that the percentage price difference between generic and branded cigarettes would narrow. Liggett explained that it would have been unable to reduce its wholesale rebates without losing substantial market share to Brown & Williamson; its only choice, if it wished to avoid prolonged losses on its principal product line, was to raise retail prices. The resulting reduction in [****17] the list price gap, it was said, would restrain the growth of the economy segment and preserve Brown & Williamson's supracompetitive profits on its branded cigarettes.

[**2585] The trial began in the fall of 1989. By that time, all six cigarette companies had entered the economy segment. The economy segment was the fastest growing segment of the cigarette market, having increased from about 4% of the market in 1984, when the rebate war in generics began, to about 15% in 1989. Black and white generics had declined as a force in the economy segment as consumer interest shifted toward branded generics, but Liggett's overall volume had increased steadily to 9 billion generic cigarettes sold. Overall, the 2.8 billion generic cigarettes sold in 1981 had become 80 billion by 1989.

The consumer price of generics had increased along with output. For a year, the list prices for generic cigarettes established at the end of the rebate war remained stable. But in June 1985, Liggett raised its list price, and the other firms followed several months later. The precise effect of the list price increase is difficult to assess, because all of the cigarette firms offered a variety of discounts, [****18] coupons, and other promotions directly to consumers on both [***183] generic and [*218] branded cigarettes. Nonetheless, at least some portion of the list price increase was reflected in a higher net price to the consumer.

In December 1985, Brown & Williamson attempted to increase its list prices, but retracted the announced increase when the other firms adhered to their existing prices. Thus, after Liggett's June 1985 increase, list prices on generics did not change again until the summer of 1986, when a pattern of twice yearly increases in tandem with the full-priced branded cigarettes was established. The dollar amount of these increases was the same for generic and full-priced cigarettes, which resulted in a greater percentage price increase in the less expensive generic cigarettes and a narrowing of the percentage gap between the list price of branded and black and white cigarettes, from approximately 38% at the time Brown & Williamson entered the segment to approximately 27% at the time of trial. Also by the time of trial, five of the six manufacturers, including Liggett, had introduced so-called "subgenerics," a category of branded generic cigarettes that sold at a [****19] discount of 50% or more off the list price of full-priced branded cigarettes.

After a 115-day trial involving almost 3,000 exhibits and over a score of witnesses, the jury returned a verdict in favor of Liggett, finding on the special verdict form that Brown & Williamson had engaged in price discrimination that had a reasonable possibility of injuring competition in the domestic cigarette market as a whole. The jury awarded Liggett $ 49.6 million in damages, which the District Court trebled to $ 148.8 million. After reviewing the record, however, the District Court held that Brown & Williamson was entitled to judgment as a matter of law on three separate grounds: lack of injury to competition, lack of antitrust injury to Liggett, and lack of a causal link between the discriminatory rebates and Liggett's alleged injury. Liggett Group, Inc. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 748 F. Supp. 344 (MDNC 1990). With respect to the first issue, which is the [*219] only one before us, the District Court found that no slowing of the growth rate of generics, and thus no injury to competition, was possible unless there had been tacit coordination of prices in the [****20] economy segment of the cigarette market by the various manufacturers. Id., at 354-355. The District Court held that a reasonable jury could come to but one conclusion about the existence of such coordination among the firms contending for shares of the economy segment: it did not exist, and Brown & Williamson therefore had no reasonable possibility of limiting the growth of the segment. Id., at 356-358.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit affirmed. Liggett Group, Inc. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 964 F.2d 335 (1992). The Court of Appeals held that the dynamic of conscious parallelism among oligopolists could not produce competitive injury in a predatory pricing setting, which necessarily involves a price cut by one of the oligopolists. Id., at 342. In the [**2586] Court of Appeals' view, "to rely on the characteristics of an oligopoly to assure recoupment of losses from a predatory pricing scheme after one oligopolist has made a competitive move is . . . economically irrational." Ibid.

We granted certiorari, 506 U.S. 984 (1992), and now affirm.

II

A

[****21] [LEdHN\[2\]](#) [↑] [2]Price discrimination is made unlawful by § 2\(a\) of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, which provides:

HN1 [↑] "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent [*220] competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them." 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\).

Although we have reiterated that HN2 [↑] "a price discrimination within the meaning of [this] provision is merely a price difference," Texaco Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 558, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, 110 S. Ct. 2535 (1990) [****22] (quoting FTC v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 549, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1385, 80 S. Ct. 1267 (1960)), the statute as a practical matter could not, and does not, ban all price differences charged to "different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality." Instead, the statute contains a number of important limitations, one of which is central to evaluating Liggett's claim: HN3 [↑] By its terms, the Robinson-Patman Act condemns price discrimination only to the extent that it threatens to injure competition. The availability of statutory defenses permitting price discrimination when it is based on differences in costs, § 13\(a\), "changing conditions affecting the market for or the marketability of the goods concerned," ibid., or conduct undertaken "in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor," § 13\(b\); Standard Oil Co. v. FTC, 340 U.S. 231, 250, 95 L. Ed. 239, 71 S. Ct. 240 \(1951\), confirms that Congress did not intend to outlaw price differences that result from or further the forces of competition. Thus, [****23] HN4↑ "the Robinson-Patman Act should be construed consistently with broader policies of the antitrust laws." Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. FTC, 440 U.S. 69, 80, n. 13, 59 L. Ed. 2d 153, 99 S. Ct. 925 \(1979\). See also Automatic Canteen Co. of America v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61, 63, 74, 97 L. Ed. 1454, 73 S. Ct. 1017 \(1953\).

Liggett contends that Brown & Williamson's discriminatory volume rebates to wholesalers threatened substantial competitive injury by furthering a predatory pricing scheme designed to purge competition from the economy segment of the cigarette market. This type of injury, which harms direct competitors of the discriminating seller, is known as primary-line injury. See FTC v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., supra, at 538. We last addressed primary-line injury over 25 years ago, in [Utah Pie Co. v. Continental Baking Co., \[\*221\] 386 U.S. 685, 18 L. Ed. 2d 406, 87 S. Ct. 1326 \(1967\)](#). In Utah Pie, we reviewed the sufficiency of the evidence supporting jury verdicts against three national pie companies that had engaged in a variety of [***185] [***24] predatory practices in the market for frozen pies in Salt Lake City, with the intent to drive a local pie manufacturer out of business. We reversed the Court of Appeals and held that the evidence presented was adequate to permit a jury to find a likelihood of injury to competition. Id., at 703.

[LEdHN\[3A\]](#)↑ [3A] Utah Pie has often been interpreted to permit liability for primary-line price discrimination on a mere showing that the defendant intended to harm competition or produced a declining price structure. The case [**2587] has been criticized on the ground that such low standards of competitive injury are at odds with the antitrust laws' traditional concern for consumer welfare and price competition. See Bowman, Restraint of Trade by the Supreme Court: The Utah Pie Case, 77 Yale L. J. 70 (1967); R. Posner, Antitrust Law: An Economic Perspective 193-194 (1976); L. Sullivan, Antitrust 687 (1977); 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law P720c (1978) (hereinafter Areeda & Turner); R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 386-387 (1978); H. Hovenkamp, Economics and Federal Antitrust Law 188-189 (1985). [***25] We do not regard the Utah Pie case itself as having the full significance attributed to it by its detractors. Utah Pie was an early judicial inquiry in this area and did not purport to set forth explicit, general standards for establishing a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act. As the law has been explored since Utah Pie, it has become evident that HN5↑ primary-line competitive injury under the Robinson-Patman Act is of the same general character as the injury inflicted by predatory pricing schemes actionable under § 2 of the Sherman Act. See, e.g., Henry v. Chloride, Inc., 809 F.2d 1334, 1345 \(CA8 1987\); D. E. Rogers Associates, Inc. v. Gardner-Denver Co., 718 F.2d 1431, 1439 \(CA6 1983\), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1242, 82 L. Ed. 2d 822, 104 S. Ct. 3513 (1984); William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 668 F.2d 1014, 1041 \(CA9 1981\), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 825, 74 L. Ed. 2d 61, 103 S. Ct. 57, 103 S. Ct. 58 (1982); [*222] Malcolm v. Marathon Oil Co., 642 F.2d 845, 853, n. 16 [***26] (CA5), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1125, 71 L. Ed. 2d 113, 102 S. Ct. 975 (1981); Pacific Engineering & Production Co. of Nevada v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 551 F.2d 790, 798 (CA10), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 879, 54 L. Ed. 2d 160, 98 S. Ct. 234 (1977); International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., 104 F.T.C. 280, 401-402 \(1984\); Hovenkamp, supra, at 189; 3 Areeda & Turner P720c; P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P720c (Supp. 1992) (hereinafter Areeda & Hovenkamp). There are, to be sure, differences between the two statutes. For example, we interpret § 2 of the Sherman Act to condemn predatory pricing when it poses "a dangerous probability of actual monopolization," Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 455, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\), whereas the Robinson-Patman Act requires only that there be "a reasonable possibility" of substantial injury to competition before its protections are triggered, Falls City Industries, Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 434, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174, 103 S. Ct. 1282 \(1983\). But whatever additional flexibility the Robinson-Patman [***27] Act standard may imply, the essence of the claim under either statute is the same: A business rival has priced its products in an unfair manner with an object to eliminate or retard competition and thereby gain and exercise [***186] control over prices in the relevant market.

[LEdHN\[3B\]](#)↑ [3B] [LEdHN\[4A\]](#)↑ [4A] Accordingly, whether the claim alleges predatory pricing under § 2 of the Sherman Act or primary-line price discrimination under the Robinson-Patman Act, two prerequisites to recovery

remain the same. First, HN6<sup>1</sup> a plaintiff seeking to establish competitive injury resulting from a rival's low prices must prove that the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of its rival's costs.<sup>1</sup> See, e.g., Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 117, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986); Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585, n. 8, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); [****28] Utah Pie, 386 U.S. at 698, 701, 702-703, n. 14; In re E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., 96 F.T.C. 653, 749 (1980). Cf. United States v. National Dairy Products Corp., 372 U.S. 29, 9 L. Ed. 2d 561, 83 S. Ct. 594 (1963) (holding that below-cost prices may constitute "unreasonably" [**2588] low" prices for purposes of § 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13a). Although Cargill and Matsushita reserved as a formal matter the question "whether recovery should ever be available . . . when the pricing in question is above some measure of incremental cost," Cargill, supra, at 117-118, n. 12 (quoting Matsushita, supra, at 585, n. 9), the reasoning in both opinions suggests that only below-cost prices should suffice, and we have rejected elsewhere the notion that HN7<sup>1</sup> above-cost prices that are below general market levels or the costs of a firm's competitors inflict injury to competition cognizable under the antitrust laws. See Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 340, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990). [****29] "Low prices benefit consumers regardless of how those prices are set, and so long as they are above predatory levels, they do not threaten competition. . . . We have adhered to this principle regardless of the type of antitrust claim involved." Ibid. As a general rule, the exclusionary effect of prices above a relevant measure of cost either reflects the lower cost structure of the alleged predator, and so represents competition on the merits, or is beyond the practical ability of a judicial tribunal to control without courting intolerable risks of chilling legitimate price cutting. See Areeda & Hovenkamp PP714.2, 714.3. "To hold that the antitrust laws protect competitors from the loss of profits due to such price competition would, in effect, render illegal any decision by a firm to cut prices in order to increase market share. The antitrust laws require no such perverse result." Cargill, supra, at 116.

[LEdHN\[4B\]](#)<sup>1</sup> [4B]

[****30] Even in an oligopolistic market, when a firm drops its prices to a competitive level to demonstrate to a maverick the unprofitability of straying from the group, it would be [*224] illogical to condemn the price cut: The antitrust laws then would be an obstacle to the chain of events most [***187] conducive to a breakdown of oligopoly pricing and the onset of competition. Even if the ultimate effect of the cut is to induce or reestablish supracompetitive pricing, discouraging a price cut and forcing firms to maintain supracompetitive prices, thus depriving consumers of the benefits of lower prices in the interim, does not constitute sound antitrust policy. Cf. Areeda & Hovenkamp PP714.2d, 714.2f; Areeda & Turner, Predatory Pricing and Related Practices under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 88 Harv. L. Rev. 697, 708-709 (1975); Posner, Antitrust Law: An Economic Perspective, at 195, n. 39.

HN8<sup>1</sup> The second prerequisite to holding a competitor liable under the antitrust laws for charging low prices is a demonstration that the competitor had a reasonable prospect, or, under § 1<sup>****31</sup> 2 of the Sherman Act, a dangerous probability, of recouping its investment in below-cost prices. See Matsushita, supra, at 589; Cargill, supra, at 119, n. 15. "For the investment to be rational, the [predator] must have a reasonable expectation of recovering, in the form of later monopoly profits, more than the losses suffered." Matsushita, supra, at 588-589. Recoupment is the ultimate object of an unlawful predatory pricing scheme; it is the means by which a predator profits from predation. Without it, predatory pricing produces lower aggregate prices in the market, and consumer welfare is enhanced. Although unsuccessful predatory pricing may encourage some inefficient substitution toward the product being sold at less than its cost, unsuccessful predation is in general a boon to consumers.

---

<sup>1</sup> Because the parties in this case agree that the relevant measure of cost is average variable cost, however, we again decline to resolve the conflict among the lower courts over the appropriate measure of cost. See Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 117-118, n. 12, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986); Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585, n. 8, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986).

509 U.S. 209, *224; 113 S. Ct. 2578, **2588; 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, ***187; 1993 U.S. LEXIS 4245, ****31

LEdHN[5] [5] That below-cost pricing may impose painful losses on its target is of no moment to the antitrust laws if competition is not injured: It is axiomatic that the antitrust laws were passed for "the protection of competition, not competitors." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (**2589) (1962). [****32] Earlier this Term, we held in the Sherman Act § 2 context [*225] that it was not enough to inquire "whether the defendant has engaged in 'unfair' or 'predatory' tactics"; rather, we insisted that the plaintiff prove "a dangerous probability that [the defendant] would monopolize a particular market." Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 459. Hn9 Even an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws; those laws do not create a federal law of unfair competition or "purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or against persons engaged in interstate commerce." Hunt v. Crumboch, 325 U.S. 821, 826, 89 L. Ed. 1954, 65 S. Ct. 1545 (1945).

LEdHN[6] [6] For recoupment to occur, below-cost pricing must be capable, as a threshold matter, of producing the intended effects on the firm's rivals, whether driving them from the market, or, as was alleged to be the goal here, causing them to raise their prices to supracompetitive levels within a disciplined oligopoly. This requires an understanding of [****33] the extent and duration of the alleged predation, the relative financial strength of the predator and its intended victim, and their respective incentives and will. See 3 Areeda & Turner P711b. The inquiry is whether, given the aggregate losses [***188] caused by the below-cost pricing, the intended target would likely succumb.

If circumstances indicate that below-cost pricing could likely produce its intended effect on the target, there is still the further question whether it would likely injure competition in the relevant market. The plaintiff must demonstrate that there is a likelihood that the predatory scheme alleged would cause a rise in prices above a competitive level that would be sufficient to compensate for the amounts expended on the predation, including the time value of the money invested in it. As we have observed on a prior occasion, "in order to recoup their losses, [predators] must obtain enough market power to set higher than competitive prices, and then must sustain those prices long enough to earn in excess [*226] profits what they earlier gave up in below-cost prices." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 590-591.

[****34] HN10 Evidence of below-cost pricing is not alone sufficient to permit an inference of probable recoupment and injury to competition. HN11 Determining whether recoupment of predatory losses is likely requires an estimate of the cost of the alleged predation and a close analysis of both the scheme alleged by the plaintiff and the structure and conditions of the relevant market. Cf., e.g., Elzinga & Mills, Testing for Predation: Is Recoupment Feasible?, 34 Antitrust Bull. 869 (1989) (constructing one possible model for evaluating recoupment). If market circumstances or deficiencies in proof would bar a reasonable jury from finding that the scheme alleged would likely result in sustained supracompetitive pricing, the plaintiff's case has failed. In certain situations -- for example, where the market is highly diffuse and competitive, or where new entry is easy, or the defendant lacks adequate excess capacity to absorb the market shares of his rivals and cannot quickly create or purchase new capacity -- summary disposition of the case [****35] is appropriate. See, e.g., Cargill, 479 U.S. at 119-120, n. 15.

These prerequisites to recovery are not easy to establish, but they are not artificial obstacles to recovery; rather, they are essential components of real market injury. As we have said in the Sherman Act context, "predatory pricing schemes are rarely tried, and even more rarely successful," Matsushita, supra, at 589, and the costs of an erroneous finding of liability are high. "The mechanism by which a firm engages in predatory pricing -- lowering prices -- is the same mechanism by which a firm stimulates competition; because 'cutting prices in order to increase business often is the very essence of competition . . . [:] mistaken inferences . . . are especially costly, [**2590] because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." Cargill, supra, at 122, n. 17 (quoting Matsushita, supra, at 594). It would be ironic indeed if the standards for predatory pricing liability [*227] were so low that antitrust suits themselves became a tool for keeping prices high.

B

LEdHN[7] [7] [****36] Liggett does not allege that Brown & Williamson sought to drive [***189] it from the market but that Brown & Williamson sought to preserve supracompetitive profits on branded cigarettes by pressuring Liggett to raise its generic cigarette prices through a process of tacit collusion with the other cigarette companies. Tacit collusion, sometimes called oligopolistic price coordination or conscious parallelism, describes the process, not in itself unlawful, by which firms in a concentrated market might in effect share monopoly power, setting their prices at a profit-maximizing, suprareactive level by recognizing their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions. See 2 Areeda & Turner P404; Scherer & Ross 199-208.

509 U.S. 209, *227; 113 S. Ct. 2578, **2590; 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, ***189; 1993 U.S. LEXIS 4245, ****36

In Matsushita, we remarked upon the general implausibility of predatory pricing. See 475 U.S. at 588-590. Matsushita observed that such schemes are even more improbable when they require coordinated action among several firms. Id., at 590. Matsushita involved an allegation of an express conspiracy to engage in predatory pricing. The Court noted that in addition to the usual [****37] difficulties that face a single firm attempting to recoup predatory losses, other problems render a conspiracy "incalculably more difficult to execute." Ibid. In order to succeed, the conspirators must agree on how to allocate present losses and future gains among the firms involved, and each firm must resist powerful incentives to cheat on whatever agreement is reached. Ibid.

However unlikely predatory pricing by multiple firms may be when they conspire, it is even less likely when, as here, there is no express coordination. Firms that seek to recoup predatory losses through the conscious parallelism of oligopoly must rely on uncertain and ambiguous signals to achieve concerted action. The signals are subject to misinterpretation and are a blunt and imprecise means of ensuring smooth [*228] cooperation, especially in the context of changing or unprecedented market circumstances. This anticompetitive minuet is most difficult to compose and to perform, even for a disciplined oligopoly.

From one standpoint, recoupment through oligopolistic price coordination could be thought more feasible than recoupment through monopoly: In the oligopoly setting, the victim itself has [****38] an economic incentive to acquiesce in the scheme. If forced to choose between cutting prices and sustaining losses, maintaining prices and losing market share, or raising prices and enjoying a share of suprareactive profits, a firm may yield to the last alternative. Yet on the whole, tacit cooperation among oligopolists must be considered the least likely means of recouping predatory losses. In addition to the difficulty of achieving effective tacit coordination and the high likelihood that any attempt to discipline will produce an outbreak of competition, the predator's present losses in a case like this fall on it alone, while the later suprareactive profits must be shared with every other oligopolist in proportion to its market share, including the intended victim. In this case, for example, Brown & Williamson, with its 11-12% share of the cigarette market, would have had to generate around $ 9 in suprareactive profits for each $ 1 invested in predation; the remaining [***190] $ 8 would belong to its competitors, who had taken no risk.

Liggett suggests that these considerations led the Court of Appeals to rule out its theory of recovery as a matter of law. Although [****39] [**2591] the proper interpretation of the Court of Appeals' opinion is not free from doubt, there is some indication that it held as a matter of law that the Robinson-Patman Act does not reach a primary-line injury claim in which tacit coordination among oligopolists provides the alleged basis for recoupment. The Court of Appeals' opinion does not contain the traditional apparatus of fact review; rather, it focuses on theoretical and legal arguments. The final paragraph appears to state the holding: Brown & Williamson [*229] may not be held liable because oligopoly pricing does not "provide an economically rational basis" for recouping predatory losses. 964 F.2d at 342.

[LEdHN\[8A\]](#) [↑] [8A] To the extent that the Court of Appeals may have held that the interdependent pricing of an oligopoly may never provide a means for achieving recoupment and so may not form the basis of a primary-line injury claim, we disagree. A predatory pricing scheme designed to preserve or create a stable oligopoly, if successful, can injure consumers in the same way, and to the same extent, as one designed to bring about [****40] a monopoly. However unlikely that possibility may be as a general matter, when the realities of the market and the record facts indicate that it has occurred and was likely to have succeeded, theory will not stand in the way of liability. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 466-467, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\).

[LEdHN\[8B\]](#) [↑] [8B][LEdHN\[9\]](#) [↑] [9]The Robinson-Patman Act, which amended § 2 of the original Clayton Act, suggests no exclusion from coverage when primary-line injury occurs in an oligopoly setting. Unlike the provisions of the Sherman Act, which speak only of various forms of express agreement and monopoly, see 15 U.S. C. §§ 1, 2, the Robinson-Patman Act is phrased in broader, disjunctive terms, prohibiting price discrimination "where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly," 15 U.S. C. § 13\(a\). For all the words of the Act to carry adequate meaning, competitive injury under [****41] the Act must extend beyond the monopoly setting. Cf. Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 339, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931, 99 S. Ct. 2326 \(1979\) ("Canons of construction ordinarily suggest that terms connected by a disjunctive be given separate meanings, unless the context dictates otherwise"). The language referring to a substantial lessening of competition was part of the original Clayton Act § 2, see Act of Oct. 15, 1914, ch. 322, 38 Stat. 730, and the same phrasing appears in § 7 of that Act. In the § 7 context, it has long been settled that excessive concentration, and the oligopolistic price coordination [*230] it portends, may be the injury to competition the Act prohibits. See, e.g., United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 \(1963\). We adhere to HN12 [↑] "the normal rule of statutory construction that identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning." Sullivan v. Stroop, 496 U.S. 478, 484, 110 L. Ed. 2d 438, 110 S. Ct. 2499 \(1990\) [****42] (internal quotation marks omitted). See also [J. Truett Payne Co. v. \[\*\*191\] Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 562, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 \(1981\)](#) (evaluating the competitive injury requirement of Robinson-Patman Act § 2(a) in light of analogous interpretations of Clayton Act § 7). We decline to create a per se rule of nonliability for predatory price discrimination when recoupment is alleged to take place through supracompetitive oligopoly pricing. Cf. Cargill, 479 U.S. at 121.

III

[LEdHN\[1B\]](#) [↑] [1B][LEdHN\[10\]](#) [↑] [10]Although Liggett's theory of liability, as an abstract matter, is within the reach of the statute, we agree with the Court of Appeals and the District Court that Liggett was not entitled to submit its case to the jury. HN13 [↑] It is not customary for this Court to review the sufficiency of the evidence, but we will do so when the issue is properly before us and the benefits of providing guidance [****43] [**2592] concerning the proper application of a legal standard and avoiding the systemic costs associated with further proceedings justify the required expenditure of judicial resources. See, e.g., Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 605-611, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 \(1985\); Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 765-768, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\); United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 550-552, 16 L. Ed. 2d 765, 86 S. Ct. 1665 \(1966\). The record in this case demonstrates that the anticompetitive scheme Liggett alleged, when judged against the realities of the market, does not provide an adequate basis for a finding of liability.

A

[LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [↑] [1C]Liggett's theory of competitive injury through oligopolistic price coordination depends upon a complex chain of cause [*231] and effect: Brown & Williamson would enter the generic segment with list prices matching Liggett's but with massive, discriminatory volume rebates directed at Liggett's biggest wholesalers; as a result, [****44] the net price of Brown & Williamson's generics would be below its costs; Liggett would suffer losses trying to defend its market share and wholesale customer base by matching Brown & Williamson's rebates; to avoid further losses, Liggett would raise its list prices on generics or acquiesce in price leadership by Brown & Williamson; higher list prices to consumers would shrink the percentage gap in retail price between generic and branded cigarettes; and this narrowing of the gap would make generics less appealing to the consumer, thus slowing the growth of the economy segment and reducing cannibalization of branded sales and their associated supracompetitive profits.

Although Brown & Williamson's entry into the generic segment could be regarded as procompetitive in intent as well as effect, the record contains sufficient evidence from which a reasonable jury could conclude that Brown & Williamson envisioned or intended this anticompetitive course of events. See, e.g., App. 57-58, 67-68, 89-91, 99, 112-114, 200, 241, 253, 257, 262-263, 279-280, 469-470, 664-666. There is also sufficient evidence in the record from which a reasonable jury could conclude that for a period of approximately [****45] 18 months, Brown & Williamson's prices on its generic cigarettes were below its costs, see *id.*, at 338-339, 651, 740, and that this below-cost pricing imposed losses on Liggett [***192] that Liggett was unwilling to sustain, given its corporate parent's effort to locate a buyer for the company, see *id.*, at 74, 92, 200, 253, 596-597. Liggett has failed to demonstrate competitive injury as a matter of law, however, because its proof is flawed in a critical respect: The evidence is inadequate to show that in pursuing this scheme, Brown & Williamson had a reasonable prospect of recovering its losses from below-cost pricing through slowing the growth of generics. As we have noted, **HN14**<sup>1</sup> "the success of any predatory [*232] scheme depends on maintaining monopoly power for long enough both to recoup the predator's losses and to harvest some additional gain." *Matsushita*, 475 U.S. at 589 (emphasis omitted).

No inference of recoupment is sustainable on this record, because no evidence suggests that Brown & Williamson -- whatever its intent in introducing black and whites [****46] may have been -- was likely to obtain the power to raise the prices for generic cigarettes above a competitive level. Recoupment through supracompetitive pricing in the economy segment of the cigarette market is an indispensable aspect of Liggett's own proffered theory, because a slowing of growth in the economy segment, even if it results from an increase in generic prices, is not itself anticompetitive. Only if those higher prices are a product of nonmarket forces has competition suffered. If prices rise in response to an excess of demand over supply, or segment growth slows as patterns of consumer preference become stable, the market is [**2593] functioning in a competitive manner. Consumers are not injured from the perspective of the antitrust laws by the price increases; they are in fact causing them. Thus, the linchpin of the predatory scheme alleged by Liggett is Brown & Williamson's ability, with the other oligopolists, to raise prices above a competitive level in the generic segment of the market. **HN15**<sup>1</sup> Because relying on tacit coordination among oligopolists as a means of recouping [****47] losses from predatory pricing is "highly speculative," Areeda & Hovenkamp P711.2c, at 647, competent evidence is necessary to allow a reasonable inference that it poses an authentic threat to competition. The evidence in this case is insufficient to demonstrate the danger of Brown & Williamson's alleged scheme.

B

Based on Liggett's theory of the case and the record it created, there are two means by which one might infer that [*233] Brown & Williamson had a reasonable prospect of producing sustained supracompetitive pricing in the generic segment adequate to recoup its predatory losses: first, if generic output or price information indicates that oligopolistic price coordination in fact produced supracompetitive prices in the generic segment; or second, if evidence about the market and Brown & Williamson's conduct indicate that the alleged scheme was likely to have brought about tacit coordination and oligopoly pricing in the generic segment, even if it did not actually do so.

1

[**LEdHN\[1D\]**](#)<sup>1</sup> [1D][**LEdHN\[11\]**](#)<sup>1</sup> [11]In this case, the price and output data [****48] do not support a reasonable inference that Brown & Williamson and the other cigarette companies [***193] elevated prices above a competitive level for generic cigarettes. Supracompetitive pricing entails a restriction in output. See *National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla.*, 468 U.S. 85, 104-108, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 \(1984\); *Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.*, 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 \(1979\); P. Samuelson & W. Nordhaus, Economics 516 (12th ed. 1985); Sullivan, Antitrust, at 32; Bork, The Antitrust Paradox, at 178-179; 2 Areeda & Turner P403a; Easterbrook, The Limits of Antitrust, *63 Texas L. Rev. 1, 20, 31 \(1984\)*. In the present setting, in which output expanded at a rapid rate following Brown & Williamson's alleged predation, output in the generic segment can only have been restricted in the sense that it expanded at a slower rate than it would have absent Brown & Williamson's intervention. Such a counterfactual proposition is difficult to prove in the best of circumstances; here, the record evidence does not permit a reasonable [****49] inference that output would have been greater without Brown & Williamson's entry into the generic segment.

Following Brown & Williamson's entry, the rate at which generic cigarettes were capturing market share did not slow; indeed, the average rate of growth doubled. During the [*234] four years from 1980 to 1984 in which Liggett was alone in the generic segment, the segment gained market share at an average rate of 1% of the overall market per year, from 0.4% in 1980 to slightly more than 4% of the cigarette market in 1984. In the next five years, following the alleged predation, the generic segment expanded from 4% to more than 15% of the domestic cigarette market, or greater than 2% per year.

While this evidence tends to show that Brown & Williamson's participation in the economy segment did not restrict output, it is not dispositive. One could speculate, for example, that the rate of segment growth would have tripled, instead of doubled, without Brown & Williamson's alleged predation. But there is no concrete evidence of this. Indeed, the only industry projection in the record estimating what the segment's growth would have been without Brown & Williamson's entry supports [****50] the opposite inference. In 1984, Brown & Williamson forecast in an [**2594] important planning document that the economy segment would account for 10% of the total cigarette market by 1988 if it did not enter the segment. App. 133, 135. In fact, in 1988, after what Liggett alleges was a sustained and dangerous anticompetitive campaign by Brown & Williamson, the generic segment accounted for over 12% of the total market. Id., at 354-356. Thus the segment's output expanded more robustly than Brown & Williamson had estimated it would had Brown & Williamson never entered.

Brown & Williamson did note in 1985, a year after introducing its black and whites, that its presence within the generic segment "appears to have resulted in . . . a slowing in the segment's growth rate." Id., at 257. But this statement was made in early 1985, when Liggett itself contends the below-cost pricing was still in effect and before any anticompetitive contraction in output is alleged to have occurred.

[*235] Whatever it may [***194] mean,<sup>2</sup> this statement has little value in evaluating the competitive implications of Brown & Williamson's later conduct, which was alleged to provide [***51] the basis for recouping predatory losses.

LEdHN[12] [12]In arguing that Brown & Williamson was able to exert market power and raise generic prices above a competitive level in the generic category through tacit price coordination with the other cigarette manufacturers, Liggett places its principal reliance on direct evidence of price behavior. This evidence demonstrates that the list prices on all cigarettes, generic and branded alike, rose to a significant degree during the late 1980's. Id., at 325. From 1986 to 1989, list prices on both generic and branded cigarettes increased twice a year by similar amounts. Liggett's economic expert testified that these price increases outpaced increases in costs, taxes, [****52] and promotional expenditures. Id., at 525. The list prices of generics, moreover, rose at a faster rate than the prices of branded cigarettes, thus narrowing the list price differential between branded and generic products. Id., at 325. Liggett argues that this would permit a reasonable jury to find that Brown & Williamson succeeded in bringing about oligopolistic price coordination and supracompetitive prices in the generic category sufficient to slow its growth, thereby preserving supracompetitive branded profits and recouping its predatory losses.

A reasonable jury, however, could not have drawn the inferences Liggett proposes. All of Liggett's data are based upon the list prices of various categories of cigarettes. Yet the jury had before it undisputed evidence that during the period in question, list prices were not the actual prices paid by consumers. 100 Tr. 227-229. As the market became unsettled [*236] in the mid-1980's, the cigarette companies invested substantial sums in promotional schemes, including coupons, stickers, and giveaways, that reduced the actual cost of cigarettes to consumers below list prices. 33 Tr. 206-209, 51 Tr. 130. This promotional activity [***53] accelerated as the decade progressed. App. 509, 672. Many wholesalers also passed portions of their volume rebates on to the consumer, which had the effect of further undermining the significance of the retail list prices. Id., at 672, 687-692, 761-763. Especially in an oligopoly setting, in which price competition is most likely to take place through less observable and less regulable means than list prices, it would be unreasonable to draw conclusions about the existence of tacit coordination or supracompetitive pricing from data that reflect only list prices.

---

<sup>2</sup>This statement could well have referred to the rate at which the segment was growing relative to prior years' generic volume; this "internal" rate of growth would inevitably slow as the base volume against which it was measured grew.

Even on its own terms, the list price data relied upon by Liggett to demonstrate a narrowing of the price differential between generic and full-priced branded cigarettes could not support the conclusion that supracompetitive pricing had been introduced into the generic segment. Liggett's gap data ignore the effect of "subgeneric" cigarettes, which [**2595] were priced at discounts of 50% or more from the list prices of normal branded cigarettes. See, e.g., id., at 682-686. Liggett itself, while [***195] supposedly under the sway of oligopoly power, pioneered this development in 1988 with the introduction of [****54] its "Pyramid" brand. Id., at 326. By the time of trial, five of the six major manufacturers offered a cigarette in this category at a discount from the full list price of at least 50%. Id., at 685-686; 147 Tr. 107. Thus, the price difference between the highest priced branded cigarette and the lowest price cigarettes in the economy segment, instead of narrowing over the course of the period of alleged predation as Liggett would argue, grew to a substantial extent. In June 1984, before Brown & Williamson entered the generic segment, a consumer could obtain a carton of black and white generic cigarettes from Liggett at a 38% discount from the list price of a leading brand; after the conduct Liggett [*237] complains of, consumers could obtain a branded generic from Liggett for 52% off the list price of a leading brand. See App. 325-326, 685.

It may be that a reasonable jury could conclude that the cumulative discounts attributable to subgenerics and the various consumer promotions did not cancel out the full effect of the increases in list prices, see id. at 508-509, and that actual prices to the consumer did indeed rise, but rising prices do not themselves permit [****55] an inference of a collusive market dynamic. Even in a concentrated market, the occurrence of a price increase does not in itself permit a rational inference of conscious parallelism or supracompetitive pricing. Where, as here, output is expanding at the same time prices are increasing, rising prices are equally consistent with growing product demand. Under these conditions, a jury may not infer competitive injury from price and output data absent some evidence that tends to prove that output was restricted or prices were above a competitive level. Cf. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763.

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]Quite apart from the absence of any evidence of that sort, an inference of supracompetitive pricing would be particularly anomalous in this case, as the very party alleged to have been coerced into pricing through oligopolistic coordination denied that such coordination existed: Liggett's own officers and directors consistently denied that they or other firms in the industry priced their cigarettes through tacit collusion or reaped supracompetitive profits. App. 394-399, 623-631; 11 Tr. 170-174, 64 Tr. 51-56. Liggett [****56] seeks to explain away this testimony by arguing that its officers and directors are businesspeople who do not ascribe the same meaning to words like "competitive" and "collusion" that an economist would. This explanation is entitled to little, if any, weight. As the District Court found:

"This argument was considered at the summary judgment stage since these executives gave basically the same testimony at their depositions. The court allowed [*238] the case to go to trial in part because the Liggett executives were not economists and in part because of affidavits from the Liggett executives stating that they were confused by the questions asked by B[rown] & Williamson lawyers and did not mean to contradict the testimony of [their economic expert] Burnett. However, at trial, despite having consulted extensively with Burnett and having had adequate time to familiarize themselves with concepts [***196] such as tacit collusion, oligopoly, and monopoly profits, these Liggett executives again contradicted Burnett's theory." 748 F. Supp. at 356.

2

[LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E]Not only does the evidence [****57] fail to show actual supracompetitive pricing in the generic segment, it also does not demonstrate its likelihood. At the time Brown & Williamson entered the generic segment, the cigarette industry as a whole faced declining demand and possessed substantial excess capacity. App. 82-84. These circumstances tend to [**2596] break down patterns of oligopoly pricing and produce price competition. See Scherer & Ross 294, 315; 2 Areeda & Turner P404b2, at 275-276; 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law P1430e, p. 181 (1986). The only means by which Brown & Williamson is alleged to have established oligopoly pricing in the face of these unusual competitive pressures is through tacit price coordination with the other cigarette firms.

Yet the situation facing the cigarette companies in the 1980's would have made such tacit coordination unmanageable. Tacit coordination is facilitated by a stable market environment, fungible products, and a small number of variables upon which the firms seeking to coordinate their pricing may focus. See generally Scherer & Ross 215-315; 6 P. Areeda, supra, PP1428-1430. Uncertainty is an oligopoly's greatest enemy. By 1984, however, the cigarette market was in an [****58] obvious state of flux. The introduction of generic cigarettes in 1980 represented the first serious price competition [*239] in the cigarette market since the 1930's. See Scherer & Ross 250-251; App. 128. This development was bound to unsettle previous expectations and patterns of market conduct and to reduce the cigarette firms' ability to predict each other's behavior.

The larger number of product types and pricing variables also decreased the probability of effective parallel pricing. When Brown & Williamson entered the economy segment in 1984, the segment included Value-25s, black and whites, and branded generics. With respect to each product, the net price in the market was determined not only by list prices, but also by a wide variety of discounts and promotions to consumers and by rebates to wholesalers. In order to coordinate in an effective manner and eliminate price competition, the cigarette companies would have been required, without communicating, to establish parallel practices with respect to each of these variables, many of which, like consumer stickers or coupons, were difficult to monitor. Liggett has not even alleged parallel behavior with respect to these [****59] other variables, and the inherent limitations of tacit collusion suggest that such multivariable coordination is improbable. See R. Dorfman, The Price System 99-100, and n. 10 (1964); Scherer & Ross 279.

In addition, R. J. Reynolds had incentives that, in some respects, ran counter to those of the other cigarette companies. It is implausible that without a shared interest in retarding the growth of the economy segment, Brown & Williamson and its fellow oligopolists could have engaged in parallel pricing and raised generic prices above a competitive level. "Coordination will not be possible when any significant firm [***197] chooses, for any reason, to 'go it alone.'" 2 Areeda & Turner P404b2, at 276. It is undisputed -- indeed it was conceded by Liggett's expert -- that R. J. Reynolds acted without regard to the supposed benefits of oligopolistic coordination when it repriced Doral at generic levels in the spring of 1984 and that the natural and probable consequence [*240] of its entry into the generic segment was procompetitive. 55 Tr. 15-16; 51 Tr. 128. Indeed, Reynolds' apparent objective in entering the segment was to capture a significant amount of volume in order to [****60] regain its number one sales position in the cigarette industry from Philip Morris. App. 75, 130, 209-211. There is no evidence that R. J. Reynolds accomplished this goal during the period relevant to this case, or that its commitment to achieving that goal changed. Indeed, R. J. Reynolds refused to follow Brown & Williamson's attempt to raise generic prices in June 1985. The jury thus had before it undisputed evidence that contradicts the suggestion that the major cigarette companies shared a goal of limiting the growth of the economy segment; one of the industry's two major players concededly entered the segment to expand volume and compete.

Even if all the cigarette companies were willing to participate in a scheme to restrain the growth of the generic segment, they [*2597] would not have been able to coordinate their actions and raise prices above a competitive level unless they understood that Brown & Williamson's entry into the segment was not a genuine effort to compete with Liggett. If even one other firm misinterpreted Brown & Williamson's entry as an effort to expand share, a chain reaction of competitive responses would almost certainly have resulted, and oligopoly [***61] discipline would have broken down, perhaps irretrievably. "Once the trust among rivals breaks down, it is as hard to put back together again as was Humpty-Dumpty, and non-collusive behavior is likely to take over." Samuelson & Nordhaus, Economics, at 534.

LEdHN[14] [14]Liggett argues that the means by which Brown & Williamson signaled its anticompetitive intent to its rivals was through its pricing structure. According to Liggett, maintaining existing list prices while offering substantial rebates to wholesalers was a signal to the other cigarette firms that Brown & Williamson did not intend to attract additional smokers to the generic segment by its entry. But a reasonable [*241] jury could not conclude that this pricing structure eliminated or rendered insignificant the risk that the other firms might misunderstand Brown & Williamson's entry as a competitive move. The likelihood that Brown & Williamson's rivals would have regarded its pricing structure as an important signal is low, given that Liggett itself, the purported target of the predation, was already using similar rebates, as was R. J. Reynolds in [****62] marketing its Doral branded generic. A Reynolds executive responsible for Doral testified that given its and Liggett's use of wholesaler rebates, Brown & Williamson could not have competed effectively without them. App. 756. And despite extensive discovery of the corporate records of R. J. Reynolds and Philip Morris, no documents appeared that indicated any awareness of Brown & Williamson's supposed signal by its principal rivals. Without effective signaling, it is [***198] difficult to see how the alleged predation could have had a reasonable chance of success through oligopoly pricing.

LEdHN[15] [15] Finally, although some of Brown & Williamson's corporate planning documents speak of a desire to slow the growth of the segment, no objective evidence of its conduct permits a reasonable inference that it had any real prospect of doing so through anticompetitive means. It is undisputed that when Brown & Williamson introduced its generic cigarettes, it offered them to a thousand wholesalers who had never before purchased generic cigarettes. Record, Plaintiff's Exh. No. 4079; 87 Tr. 191; 88 Tr. 143-147. The inevitable [****63] effect of this marketing effort was to expand the segment, as the new wholesalers recruited retail outlets to carry generic cigarettes. Even with respect to wholesalers already carrying generics, Brown & Williamson's unprecedented volume rebates had a similar expansionary effect. Unlike many branded cigarettes, generics came with no sales guarantee to the wholesaler; any unsold stock represented pure loss to the wholesaler. By providing substantial incentives for wholesalers to place large orders, Brown & Williamson created [*242] strong pressure for them to sell more generic cigarettes. In addition, as we have already observed, see supra, at 236, many wholesalers passed portions of the rebates about which Liggett complains on to consumers, thus dropping the retail price of generics and further stimulating demand. Brown & Williamson provided a further, direct stimulus, through some $ 10 million it spent during the period of alleged predation placing discount stickers on its generic cartons to reduce prices to the ultimate consumer. 70 Tr. 246. In light of these uncontested facts about Brown & Williamson's conduct, it is not reasonable to conclude that Brown & Williamson threatened [***64] in a serious way to restrict output, raise prices above a competitive level, and artificially slow the growth of the economy segment of the national cigarette market.

LEdHN[16] [16] LEdHN[17] [17] To be sure, Liggett's economic expert explained Liggett's theory of predatory [**2598] price discrimination and testified that he believed it created a reasonable possibility that Brown & Williamson could injure competition in the United States cigarette market as a whole. App. 600-614. But this does not alter our analysis. HN16 [18] When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict. Cf. J. Truett Payne Co., Inc., 451 U.S. at 564-565 (referring to expert economic testimony not based on "documentary evidence as to the effect of the discrimination on retail prices" as "weak" at best). [***65] Expert testimony is useful as a guide to interpreting market facts, but it is not a substitute for them. As we observed in Matsushita, "expert opinion evidence . . . has little probative value in comparison with the economic factors" that may dictate a particular conclusion. 475 U.S. at 594, n. 19. Here, Liggett's expert based his opinion that Brown & Williamson had a reasonable prospect of recouping its predatory losses on three factors: Brown & Williamson's [***199] black and white pricing structure, corporate [*243] documents showing an intent to shrink the price differential between generic and branded cigarettes, and evidence of below-cost pricing. App. 601-602. Because, as we have explained, this evidence is insufficient as a matter of law to support a finding of primary-line injury under the Robinson-Patman Act, the expert testimony cannot sustain the jury's verdict.

IV

LEdHN[1F] [1F] LEdHN[18] [18] We understand that the chain of reasoning by which we have concluded that Brown & Williamson is entitled to judgment as a [***66] matter of law is demanding. But a reasonable jury is presumed to know and understand the law, the facts of the case, and the realities of the market. We hold that the evidence cannot support a finding that Brown & Williamson's alleged scheme was likely to result in oligopolistic price coordination and sustained supracompetitive pricing in the generic segment of the national cigarette market. Without this, Brown & Williamson had no reasonable prospect of recouping its predatory losses and could not inflict the injury to competition the antitrust laws prohibit. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is

Affirmed.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

---

JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE WHITE and JUSTICE BLACKMUN join, dissenting.

For a period of 18 months in 1984 and 1985, respondent Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation (B&W) waged a price war against petitioner, known then as Liggett & Myers (Liggett). Liggett filed suit claiming that B&W's pricing practices violated the Robinson-Patman Act.<sup>1</sup> After a 115-day [*244] trial, the jury agreed, and awarded Liggett substantial damages. The Court of Appeals, however, found that Liggett could not succeed on its claim, because B&W, as an independent [****67] actor controlling only 12% of the national cigarette market, could not injure competition. Liggett Group, Inc. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 964 F.2d 335, 340-342 (CA4 1992).

Today, the Court properly rejects that holding. See ante, at 229-230. Instead of remanding the case to the Court of Appeals to resolve the other issues raised by the parties, however, the Court goes on to review portions of the [****68] voluminous trial record, and comes to the conclusion that the evidence does not support the jury's finding that B&W's price discrimination "had a reasonable [**2599] possibility of injuring competition."<sup>2</sup> [***200] In my opinion the evidence is plainly sufficient to support that finding.

[****69] [*245] I

The fact that a price war may not have accomplished its purpose as quickly or as completely as originally intended does not immunize conduct that was illegal when it occurred. A proper understanding of this case therefore requires a brief description of the situation before the war began in July 1984; the events that occurred during the period between July 1984 and the end of 1985; and, finally, the facts bearing on the predictability of competitive harm during or at the end of that period.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them . . ." 15 U.S. C. § 13\(a\).

<sup>2</sup> The jury gave an affirmative answer to the following special issue:

"1. Did Brown & Williamson engage in price discrimination that had a reasonable possibility of injuring competition in the cigarette market as a whole in the United States?" App. 27.

The jury made its finding after being instructed that "injury to competition" means "the injury to consumer welfare which results when a competitor is able to raise and to maintain prices in a market or well-defined submarket above competitive levels. In order to injure competition in the cigarette market as a whole, Brown & Williamson must be able to create a real possibility of both driving out rivals by loss-creating price cutting and then holding on to that advantage to recoup losses by raising and maintaining prices at higher than competitive levels.

"You must remember that the Robinson-Patman Act was designed to protect competition rather than just competitors and, therefore, injury to competition does not mean injury to a competitor. Liggett & Myers can not satisfy this element simply by showing that they were injured by Brown & Williamson's conduct. To satisfy this element, Liggett & Myers must show, by a preponderance of the evidence, that Brown & Williamson's conduct had a reasonable possibility of injuring competition in the cigarette market and not just a reasonable possibility of injuring a competitor in the cigarette market." Id. at 829-830.

<sup>3</sup> As the majority notes, the procedural posture of this case requires that we view the evidence in the light most favorable to Liggett. Ante, at 213. On review of a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the party against whom the judgment is entered "must be given the benefit of every legitimate inference that can be drawn from the evidence." See C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2528, pp. 563-564 (1971).

Background

B&W is the third largest firm in a highly concentrated [****70] industry. Ante, at 213. For decades, the industry has been marked by the same kind of supracompetitive pricing that is characteristic of the textbook monopoly.<sup>4</sup> Without the necessity of actual agreement among the six major manufacturers, "prices for cigarettes increased in lockstep, twice a year, for a number of years, irrespective of the rate of inflation, changes in the costs of production, or shifts in consumer demand." Ibid. Notwithstanding the controversy over the health effects of smoking and the increase in the federal excise tax, profit margins improved "handsomely" during the period between 1972 and 1983.<sup>5</sup>

[****71] [*246] [***201] The early 1980's brought two new developments to the cigarette market. First, in 1980, when its share of the market had declined to 2.3%, Liggett introduced a new line of generic cigarettes in plain black and white [**2600] packages, offered at an effective price of approximately 30% less than branded cigarettes. Ante, at 214. A B&W memorandum described this action as "the first time that a [cigarette] manufacturer has used pricing as a strategic marketing weapon in the U.S. since the depression era." App. 128. This novel tactic proved successful; by 1984, Liggett's black and whites represented about 4% of the total market and generated substantial profits. The next development came in 1984, when R.J. Reynolds (RJR), the second largest company in the industry, "repositioned" one of its established brands, Doral, by selling it at discount prices comparable to Liggett's black and whites. App. 117-118; ante, at 215.

B&W executives prepared a number of internal memoranda planning responses to these two market developments. See App. 120, 127, 157, 166. With respect to RJR, B&W decided to "follo[w] precisely the pathway" of that company, *id. I****721 , at 121*, reasoning that "introduction of a branded generic by B&W now appears to be feasible as RJR has the clout and sales force coverage to maintain the price on branded generics," id., at 145. Accordingly, B&W planned to introduce a new "branded generic" of its own, known as Hallmark, to be sold at the same prices as RJR's Doral. Id., at 124, 142-144.

[*247] B&W took a more aggressive approach to Liggett's black and whites. It decided to launch its own line of black and white cigarettes with the "same style array" and list price as Liggett's, but with "superior discounts/allowances." Id., at 124. B&W estimated that its own black and whites would generate a "trading profit" of $ 5.1 million for the second half of 1984 and $ 43.6 million for 1985. Id., at 125. At the same time, however, B&W, anticipating "competitive counterattacks," was "prepared to redistribute this entire amount in the form of additional trade allowances." Ibid. B&W's competitive stance was confined to Liggett; the memorandum outlining B&W's plans made no reference to the possibility of countermoves by RJR, or to the use of B&W's trading profits to increase allowances on any product other [****73] than black and whites.

This "dual approach" was designed to "provide B&W more influence to manage up the prices of branded generics to improve profitability," id., at 123, and also the opportunity to participate in the economy market, with a view toward "managing down generic volume," id., at 109. Notwithstanding its ultimate aim to "limit generic segment growth," id., at 113, B&W estimated an aggregate potential trading profit on black and whites of $ 342 million for <sup>4</sup> When the Court states that "substantial evidence suggests that in recent decades, the industry reaped the benefits of prices above a competitive level," ante, at 213, I assume it accepts the proposition that a reasonable jury could find abnormally high prices characteristic of this industry.

<sup>5</sup> An internal B&W memorandum, dated May 15, 1984, states in part:

"Manufacturer's price increases generally were below the rate of inflation but margins improved handsomely due to favorable leaf prices and cost reductions associated with automation. For example, Brown & Williamson's variable margin increased from $ 2.91/M in 1972 to $ 8.78/M in 1981, an increase of over 200%. In 1982, the industry became much more aggressive on the pricing front, fueled by a 100% increase in the Federal Excise Tax. Brown & Williamson's variable margin increased from $ 10.78/M in 1982 and [sic] to $ 12.61/M in 1983."

"The impact of these pricing activities on the smoking public was dramatic. The weighted average retail price of a pack of cigarettes increased 56% between 1980 and 1983 (from $.63 to $.98)." App. 127.

1984 to 1988, *id.*, at 146. Though B&W recognized that it might be required to use "some or all of this potential trading profit" to maintain its market position, it also believed that it would recoup its losses as the segment became "more profitable, \*\*\*202 particularly as it approaches maturity." Ibid.

B&W began to implement its plan even before it made its first shipment of black and whites in July 1984, with a series of price announcements in June of that year. When B&W announced its first volume discount schedule for distributors, Liggett responded by increasing its own discounts. Though Liggett's discounts remained lower than B&W's, B&W responded in turn by increasing its rebates still \*\*\*\*74 further. After four or five moves and countermoves, the dust settled \*248 with B&W's net prices to distributors lower than Liggett's.<sup>6</sup> B&W's deep discounts not only forfeited all of its $ 48.7 million in projected trading profits for the next 18 months, but actually resulted in sales below B&W's average variable cost. *Id.*, at 338-339.

\*\*2601 Assessing the pre-July 1984 evidence tending to prove that B&W was motivated by anticompetitive intent, the District Court observed that the documentary evidence was "more voluminous and detailed than any other reported case. This evidence not only indicates \*\*\*\*75 B&W wanted to injure Liggett, it also details an extensive plan to slow the growth of the generic cigarette segment." Liggett Group, Inc. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 748 F. Supp. 344, 354 \(MDNC 1990\).

The 18-Month Price War

The volume rebates offered by B&W to its wholesalers during the 18-month period from July 1984 to December 1985 unquestionably constituted price discrimination covered by § 2\(a\) of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\).<sup>7</sup> \*\*\*\*76 Nor were the discounts justified by any statutory or affirmative defense: They were not cost justified,<sup>8</sup> App. 525, were \*249 not good-faith efforts to meet the equally low price of a competitor,<sup>9</sup> and were not mere introductory or promotional discounts, 91 Tr. 42.

The rebate program was intended to harm Liggett and in fact caused it \*\*\*203 serious injury.<sup>10</sup> The jury found that Liggett had suffered actual damages of $ 49.6 million, App. 28, an amount \*\*\*\*77 close to, but slightly larger than, the $ 48.7 million trading profit B&W had indicated it would forgo in order to discipline Liggett. See supra, at

<sup>6</sup> On June 4, 1984, B&W announced a maximum rebate of $ 0.30 per carton for purchases of over 8,000 cases per quarter; a week later, Liggett announced a rebate of $ 0.20 on comparable volumes. On June 21, B&W increased its rebate to $ 0.50, and a day later, Liggett went to $ 0.43. After three more increases, B&W settled at $ 0.80 per carton, while Liggett remained at $ 0.73. See App. 327, 420-421.

<sup>7</sup> That quantity discounts are covered by the Act, and prohibited when they have the requisite effect on competition, has been firmly established since our decision in FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 42-44, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 68 S. Ct. 822 \(1948\).

<sup>8</sup> "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered." § 13\(a\).

<sup>9</sup> "Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor." § 13\(b\).

The jury gave a negative answer to the following special issue:

"3. Did Brown & Williamson engage in price discrimination in good faith with the intention to meet, but not beat, the equally low net prices of Liggett Group, Inc.?" App. 27-28.

<sup>10</sup> By offering its largest discounts to Liggett's 14 largest customers, App. 168-169, 174, B&W not only put its "money where the volume is," id., at 402, but also applied maximum pressure to Liggett at a lesser cost to itself than would have resulted from a nondiscriminatory price cut.

247. To inflict this injury, B&W sustained a substantial loss. During the full 18-month period, B&W's revenues ran consistently below its total variable costs, with an average deficiency of approximately $ 0.30 per carton and a total loss on B&W black and whites of almost $ 15 million. App. 338-339. That B&W executives were willing to accept losses of this magnitude during the entire 18 months is powerful evidence of their belief that prices ultimately could be "managed up" to a level that would allow B&W to recoup its investment.

The Aftermath

At the end of 1985, [****78] the list price of branded cigarettes was $ 33.15 per carton, and the list price of black and whites, $ 19.75 per carton. App. 325. Over the next four years, the list price on both branded and black and white cigarettes [*250] increased twice a year, by identical amounts. The June 1989 increases brought the price of branded cigarettes to $ 46.15 per carton, and the price of black and whites to $ 33.75 -- an amount even higher than the price for branded cigarettes when the war ended in December 1985. Ibid.<sup>11</sup> Because the rate of increase was higher on [**2602] black and whites than on brandeds, the price differential between the two types of cigarettes narrowed, ibid., from roughly 40% in 1985 to 27% in 1989. See 964 F.2d at 338.

[****79] The expert economist employed by Liggett testified that the post-1985 price increases were unwarranted by increases in manufacturing or other costs, taxes, or promotional expenditures. App. 525. To be sure, some portion of the volume rebates granted distributors was passed on to consumers in the form of promotional activity, so that consumers did not feel the full brunt of the price increases. Nevertheless, the record amply supports the conclusion that the post-1985 price increases in list prices produced higher consumer prices, as well as higher profits for the manufacturers.<sup>12</sup>

[****80] The legal question presented by [***204] this evidence is whether the facts as they existed during and at the close of the 18-month period, and all reasonable inferences to be drawn from [*251] those facts, see n. 3, supra, justified the finding by the jury that B&W's discriminatory pricing campaign "had a reasonable possibility of injuring competition," see supra, at 244, and n. 2.

II

The Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, enacted in 1890, the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, enacted in 1914, and the Robinson-Patman Act, which amended the Clayton Act in 1936, all serve the purpose of protecting competition. Because they have a common goal, the statutes are similar in many respects. All three prohibit the predatory practice of deliberately selling below cost to discipline a competitor, either to drive the competitor out of business or to raise prices to a level that will enable the predator to recover its losses and, in the long run, earn additional profits. Sales below cost and anticompetitive intent are elements of the violation of all three statutes. Neither of those elements, however, is at issue in this case. See ante, at 231 (record contains sufficient evidence of anticompetitive [****81] intent and below-cost pricing).

<sup>11</sup> It is also true that these same years, other major manufacturers entered the generic market and expanded their generic sales. Ante, at 217. Their entry is entirely consistent with the possibility that lockstep increases in the price of generics brought them to a level that was supra-competitive, through lower than that charged on branded cigarettes.

<sup>12</sup> "Q Does this mean that the price increases, which you testified are happening twice a year, are used up in these consumer promotions?

"A Not by any stretch of the imagination. Although there has been an increase in the use of this type of promotional activity over the last four or five years, the increase in that promotional activity has been far outstripped by the list price increases. The prices go up by a lot; the promotional activity, indeed, does go up. But the promotional activity has not gone up by anywhere near the magnitude of the list price increases. Further, those price increases are not warranted by increasing costs, since the manufacturing costs of making cigarettes have remained roughly constant over the last five years." App. 509.

509 U.S. 209, *251; 113 S. Ct. 2578, **2602; 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, ***204; 1993 U.S. LEXIS 4245, ****81

The statutes do differ significantly with respect to one element of the violation, the competitive consequences of predatory conduct. Even here, however, the three statutes have one thing in common: Not one of them requires proof that a predatory plan has actually succeeded in accomplishing its objective. Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires proof of a conspiracy. It is the joint plan to restrain trade, however, and not its success, that is prohibited by § 1. Nash v. United States, 229 U.S. 373, 378, 57 L. Ed. 1232, 33 S. Ct. 780 \(1913\). Section 2 of the Sherman Act applies to independent conduct, and may be violated when there is a "dangerous probability" that an attempt to achieve monopoly power will succeed. Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 396, 49 L. Ed. 518, 25 S. Ct. 276 \(1905\). The Clayton Act goes beyond the "dangerous probability" standard to cover price discrimination "where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." § 2, 38 Stat. 730.

[*252] The element of competitive injury as defined [****82] in the Robinson-Patman Act is broader still.<sup>13</sup> See S. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., 4 (1936) (Act substantially [**2603] broadens similar clause of Clayton Act).<sup>14</sup> The Robinson-Patman Act was designed to [***205] reach discriminations "in their incipiency, before the harm to competition is effected. It is enough that they 'may' have the prescribed effect." Corn Products Refining Co. v. FTC, 324 U.S. 726, 738, 89 L. Ed. 1320, 65 S. Ct. 961 \(1945\) (internal quotation marks omitted). Or, as the Report of the Senate Judiciary Committee on the proposed Act explained, "to catch the weed in the seed will keep it from coming to flower." S. Rep. No. 1502, at 4.

[****83] Accordingly, our leading case concerning discriminatory volume rebates described the scope of the Act as follows:

[*253] "There are specific findings that such injuries had resulted from respondent's discounts, although the statute does not require the Commission to find that injury has actually resulted. The statute requires no more than that the effect of the prohibited price discriminations 'may be substantially to lessen competition . . . or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition.' After a careful consideration of this provision of the Robinson-Patman Act, we have said that 'the statute does not require that the discrimination must in fact have harmed competition, but only that there is a reasonable possibility that they "may" have such an effect.' Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 324 U.S. 726, 742, 65 S. Ct. 961, 89 L. Ed. 1320." FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 46, 68 S. Ct. 822, 92 L. Ed. 1196 \(1948\).

See also Falls City Industries, Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 435, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174, 103 S. Ct. 1282 \(1983\) ("In keeping with the Robinson-Patman [****84] Act's prophylactic purpose, § 2\(a\) does not require that the discriminations must in fact have harmed competition" (internal quotation marks omitted)).

In this case, then, Liggett need not show any actual harm to competition, but only the reasonable possibility that such harm would flow from B&W's conduct. The evidence presented supports the conclusion that B&W's price war

<sup>13</sup> See text of statute, n. 1, supra.

<sup>14</sup> One of the purposes of broadening the Clayton Act's competitive injury language in the Robinson-Patman Act was to provide more effective protection against predatory price cutting. As the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws explained in its 1955 report:

"In some circumstances, to be sure, injury to even a single competitor should bring the Act into play. Predatory price cutting designed to eliminate a smaller business rival, for example, is a practice which inevitably frustrates competition by excluding competitors from the market or deliberately impairing their competitive strength. The invalidation of such deliberate price slashes for the purpose of destroying even a single competitor, moreover, accords distinct recognition to the narrower tests of 'injury' added to the price discrimination provisions of the Clayton Act through the 1936 Robinson-Patman amendments. The discrimination provisions in the original Clayton Act were feared by the legislators as inadequate to check the victimization of individual businessmen by predatory price cuts that nevertheless created no general impairment of competitive conditions in a wider market. To reach such destructive price cuts endangering the survival of smaller rivals of a powerful seller was an express objective of the liberalizing amendments in the 'injury' clause of the Robinson-Patman Act." Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 165-166 (1955) (footnotes omitted).

was intended to discipline Liggett for its unprecedeted use of price competition in an industry that had enjoyed handsome supracompetitive profits for about half a century. The evidence also demonstrates that B&W executives were confident enough in the feasibility of their plan that they were willing to invest millions of company dollars in its outcome. And all of this, of course, must be viewed against a back-ground of supracompetitive, parallel pricing, in which "prices for cigarettes increased in lockstep, twice a year . . . irrespective of the rate of inflation, changes in the cost of production, or shifts in consumer demand," ante, at 213, bringing with them dramatic increases in profit margins, see n. 5, supra. In this context, it is surely fair to infer that B&W's disciplinary [*254] program [****85] had a reasonable prospect of persuading Liggett to forgo its maverick price [***206] reductions and return to parallel [**2604] pricing policies, and thus to restore the same kind of supracompetitive pricing that had characterized the industry in the past. When the facts are viewed in the light most favorable to Liggett, I think it clear that there is sufficient evidence in the record that the "reasonable possibility" of competitive injury required by the statute actually existed.

III

After 115 days of trial, during which it considered 2,884 exhibits, 85 deposition excerpts, and testimony from 23 live witnesses, the jury deliberated for nine days and then returned a verdict finding that B&W engaged in price discrimination with a "reasonable possibility of injuring competition." 748 F. Supp. at 348, n. 4; n. 2, supra. The Court's contrary conclusion rests on a hodgepodge of legal, factual, and economic propositions that are insufficient, alone or together, to overcome the jury's assessment of the evidence.

First, as a matter of law, the Court reminds us that the Robinson-Patman Act is concerned with consumer welfare and competition, as opposed to protecting [****86] individual competitors from harm; "the antitrust laws were passed for the protection of competition, not competitors. " See ante, at 224 (internal quotations marks and emphasis omitted). For that reason, predatory price cutting is not unlawful unless the predator has a reasonable prospect of recouping his investment from supracompetitive profits. Ibid. The jury, of course, was so instructed, see n. 2, supra, and no one questions that proposition here.

As a matter of fact, the Court emphasizes the growth in the generic segment following B&W's entry. As the Court notes, generics' expansion to over 12% of the total market by 1988 exceeds B&W's own forecast that the segment would grow to only about 10%, assuming no entry by B&W. Ante, at 234. What these figures do not do, however, is answer the [*255] relevant question: whether the prices of generic cigarettes during the late 1980's were competitive or supracompetitive.

On this point, there is ample, uncontradicted evidence that the list prices on generic cigarettes, as well as the prices on branded cigarettes, rose regularly and significantly during the late 1980's, in a fashion remarkably similar to the price [****87] change patterns that characterized the industry in the 1970's when supracompetitive, oligopolistic pricing admittedly prevailed. See supra, at 245; ante, at 213. Given its knowledge of the industry's history of parallel pricing, I think the jury plainly was entitled to draw an inference that these increased prices were supracompetitive.

The Court responds to this evidence dismissively, suggesting that list prices have no bearing on the question because promotional activities of the cigarette manufacturers may have offset such price increases. Ante, at 235-236. That response is insufficient for three reasons. First, the promotions to which the majority refers related primarily to branded cigarettes; accordingly, while they narrowed the differential between branded prices and black and white prices, they did not reduce the consumer price of [***207] black and whites. See 33 Tr. 208-210. Second, the Court's speculation is inconsistent with record evidence that the semiannual list price increases were not offset by consumer promotions. See n. 12, supra. See also ante, at 218 ("at least some portion of the list price increase was reflected in a higher net price [****88] to the consumer"). Finally, to the extent there is a dispute regarding the effect of promotional activities on consumer prices for generics, the jury presumably resolved that dispute in Liggett's favor, and the Court's contrary speculation is an insufficient basis for setting aside that verdict.

 15

[****89] [*256] [**2605] As a matter of economics, the Court reminds us that price cutting is generally procompetitive, and hence a "boon to consumers." Ante, at 224. This is true, however, only so long as reduced prices do not fall below cost, as the cases cited by the majority make clear.<sup>16</sup> [****90] When a predator deliberately engages in below-cost pricing targeted at a particular competitor over a sustained period of time, then price cutting raises a credible inference that harm to competition [*257] is likely to ensue.<sup>17</sup> None of our cases disputes that proposition.

[****91] Also as a matter of economics, the [***208] Court insists that a predatory pricing program in an oligopoly is unlikely to succeed absent actual conspiracy. Though it has rejected a somewhat stronger version of this proposition as a rule of decision, see ante, at 229-230, the Court comes back to the same economic theory, relying on the supposition that an "anticompetitive minuet is most difficult to compose and to perform, even for a disciplined oligopoly," ante, at 228. See ante, at 238-243 (implausibility of tacit coordination among cigarette oligopolists in 1980's). I would suppose, however, that the professional performers who had danced the minuet for 40 to 50 years would be better able to predict whether their favorite partners would follow them in the future than would an outsider, who might not know the difference between Haydn and Mozart.<sup>18</sup> In any event, the jury was [*258]

<sup>15</sup> In finding an absence of actual supracOMPETITIVE pricing, the Court also relies on the testimony of Liggett executives, who stated that industry prices were fair. Illustrative is the following exchange:

"Q I want to know -- yes or no -- sir, whether or not you say that the price you charged for branded cigarettes, which is the same price you say everybody else charged, was a fair and equitable price for that product to the American consumer.

"A It's what the industry set, and based on that it's a fair price." App. 396.

The problem with this testimony, and testimony like it, is that it relates to the period before the price war, as well as after, see id. at 392, when there is no real dispute but that prices were supracOMPETITIVE. ("The profits in the cigarette industry are the best of any industry I've been associated with, very much so." Ibid.) Some of the testimony cited by the Court, for instance, is that of an outside director who served only from 1977 or 1978 until 1980, see 64 Tr. 51-56, cited ante, at 237; his belief in the competitiveness of his industry must be viewed against the "substantial evidence suggesting that in recent decades, the industry reaped the benefits of prices above a competitive level" to which the majority itself refers, ante, at 213.

The jury was, of course, entitled to discount the probative force of testimony from executives to the effect that there was no collusion among tobacco manufacturers, App. 397-398, and that they had appeared before a congressional committee to vouch for the competitive nature of their industry, id. at 623-631. The jury was also free to give greater weight to the documentary evidence presented, the inferences to be drawn therefrom, and the testimony of experts who agreed with the textbook characterization of the industry. See App. 640-645; R. Tennant, American Cigarette Industry 342 (1950).

<sup>16</sup> In Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 339-340, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990), for example, we noted that low prices benefit consumers "so long as they are above predatory levels." In Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 118, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986), we recognized that price cutting of a predatory nature is "inimical" to competition, and limited our approving comments to pricing that is "above some measure of incremental costs." Id. at 117-118, and n. 12 (internal quotation marks omitted).

<sup>17</sup> Utah Pie Co. v. Continental Baking Co., 386 U.S. 685, 696-698, 18 L. Ed. 2d 406, 87 S. Ct. 1326, and n. 12, 386 U.S. 685, 18 L. Ed. 2d 406, 87 S. Ct. 1326 (1967). See also Lamar Wholesale Grocery, Inc. v. Dieter's Gourmet Foods, Inc., 824 F.2d 582, 596 (CA8 1987) (threat to competition may be shown by predatory intent, combined with injury to competitor), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1010, 98 L. Ed. 2d 658, 108 S. Ct. 707 (1988); Double H Plastics, Inc. v. Sonoco Products Co., 732 F.2d 351, 354 (CA3) (threat to competition may be shown by evidence of predatory intent, in form of below-cost pricing), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 900, 83 L. Ed. 2d 212, 105 S. Ct. 275 (1984); D.E. Rogers Associates, Inc. v. Gardner-Denver Co., 718 F.2d 1431, 1439 (CA6 1983) (anticompetitive effect may be proven inferentially from anticompetitive intent), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1242, 82 L. Ed. 2d 822, 104 S. Ct. 3513 (1984). See generally Board of Trade of Chicago v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 (1918) (in determining whether rule violates antitrust law, "knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences").

surely entitled to [**2606] infer that at the time of the price war itself, B&W reasonably believed that it could signal its intentions to its fellow oligopolists, see App. 61, assuring their continued cooperation.

[****92] Perhaps the Court's most significant error is the assumption that seems to pervade much of the final sections of its opinion: that Liggett had the burden of proving either the actuality of supracompetitive pricing, or the actuality of tacit collusion. See ante, at 233-237 (finding absence of actual supracompetitive pricing), 238-243 (finding absence of evidence suggesting actual coordination). In my opinion, the jury was entitled to infer from the succession of price increases after 1985 -- when the prices for branded and generic cigarettes increased every six months from $ 33.15 and $ 19.75, respectively, to $ 46.15 and $ 33.75 -- that B&W's below-cost pricing actually produced supracompetitive prices, with the help of tacit collusion among the players. See supra, at 255. But even if that were not so clear, the jury would surely be entitled to infer that B&W's predatory plan, in which it invested millions of dollars for the purpose of achieving an admittedly anticompetitive result, carried a "reasonable possibility" of injuring competition.

Accordingly, I respectfully dissent.

References

---

[54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, \[\*\*\*\*93\] and Unfair Trade Practices 105, 153-159, 188](#)

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:248, 54:256

12 Am Jur Proof of Facts 345, Tobacco Hazards and Legal Liability

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 13\(a\)

L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 36.5, 38, 41.5

L Ed Index, Price Control or Discrimination; Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices; Robinson-Patman Act; Tobacco and Tobacco Products

ALR Index, Prices and Pricing; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies; Robinson-Patman Act; Tobacco and Tobacco Products

Annotation References:

Robinson-Patman Act as construed by Supreme Court. 2 L Ed 2d 1737.

Proof of injury to competition as jurisdictional requirement under 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USCS 13\(a\)). 47 ALR Fed 846.

Discounts permissible under Robinson-Patman Amendment to Clayton Act. [****94] 1 ALR2d 276.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>18</sup> Judge Easterbrook has made the same point:

"Wisdom lags far behind the market

.... "Lawyers know less about the business than the people they represent .... The judge knows even less about the business than the lawyers." Easterbrook, The Limits of Antitrust, 63 Texas L. Rev. 1, 5 \(1984\).